Canada/U.S. Relations

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The ongoing trade disputes between Canada and the U.S. have caused great hardship throughout Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. In preparation for last week's meeting between the Prime Minister and President Bush I understand that the Premiers took part in a conference call with the Prime Minister in advance of that meeting. My questions are to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. What issues of concern did Alberta put forward to be raised by the Prime Minister in this meeting with President Bush?

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, the recent meeting between President Bush and Prime Minister Martin, of course, was extremely important. Overall, it was designed to advance relationships between our two nations, especially in areas of softwood lumber, yes, the BSE crisis, security, and a number of other areas.

Now, as far as the conference call is concerned, during the conference call between first ministers in advance of the Prime Minister's U.S. visit Alberta urged Prime Minister Martin to pursue the following topics. Certainly, we were to pursue and demonstrate a new and more positive relationship towards the United States. We urged the Prime Minister to press for speedy resolution of the BSE market access issue, especially as it relates to live cattle access, and to discuss how to deal with this sort of issue in the future. Also, overall, the goal was to reinforce the United States' understanding and appreciation of Alberta as a crucial energy security source and particularly the contributions that could be made by increased U.S. investment in Alberta's oil sands.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given the wide range of discussion, were there any positive results that came out of that discussion for Albertans?

Mr. Jonson: I think that first of all, Mr. Speaker, the overall, we hope in the long run, accomplishment here is that it would appear that Canada/U.S. relationships are back on a more positive footing than before, and that, of course, is extremely important for Alberta and for all of Canada.

Now, according to media reports, President Bush stated his administration's commitment to free trade when it comes to beef and promised that the border would reopen as quickly as possible, but from what I understand, the President did not provide any firm timetable. The Prime Minister also indicated that President Bush would like to see an end to the long-standing softwood lumber dispute between Canada and the United States, although again there was no specific timetable.

However, Mr. Speaker, it is very positive that after two years of deteriorating relations between Canada and the United States, our federal government seems willing to take steps necessary to ensure that our relations with the U.S. remain strong, and Alberta certainly supports the federal government's serious, proactive approach to improving the crucial relationship between Canada and the United States.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. You mentioned the softwood lumber dispute. Can the minister indicate what impact the latest ruling in the dispute will have on Alberta?

Mr. Jonson: Well, Mr. Speaker, the recent NAFTA ruling, of course, is very positive. It's one of the strongest and most specific sets of findings that we've had thus far. We have been meeting with respect to analyzing the outcomes of this particular ruling and how it might be applied to breaking the softwood lumber impasse, but I regret that at this point in time I'm not able to quote or to report on any specific results that have come from that particular ruling. But, certainly, it is positive overall.

Automobile Insurance Reforms (continued)

Mr. MacDonald: When the government announced last summer its intentions to reform auto insurance, it promised to make the system more accessible, affordable, and fair. We now know that this is yet another broken promise by this government. My first question is to the Premier. Is there a lack of competition among private auto insurers in Alberta?

The Speaker: That's an opinion, hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Premier: do private auto insurers have a collective monopoly over the underwriting business here in Alberta?

The Speaker: It sounds like an opinion again, hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the Premier: given that members of the Insurance Bureau of Canada use very similar, if not identical, rating structures when they are asked for a policy quote, how can this be called real competition here in Alberta?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know. Quite honestly, I don't know, and I'm not that involved with the insurance industry.

Mr. MacDonald: Obviously, you're not.

Mr. Klein: No, I'm not, Mr. Speaker, nor is this individual involved. As I understand it, he was a steamfitter before he became, well, sort of a politician and a union representative. He is not by any stretch of the imagination an actuary or any other kind of official associated with the insurance industry, and to intimate that he knows about the insurance industry and has all of this knowledge – he gleans it either from newspapers or off the Internet. I can tell the public that he is no expert by any stretch of the imagination. I don't know – and I will admit it; I'll be honest and admit it – the intricacies of the insurance industry, but I do know what I pay.

Now, I'm going to do him a favour. What I'm going to do is I'm going to first of all search his bio, find out how old he is, and then I'm going to make some assumptions. The assumption is this: that he has a car, a vehicle registered in his name, that he owns his vehicle. I'm going to assume that it's a medium- to late-model vehicle. I'm going to assume that his record is good. Then I'm going to find out generally what he would pay. I don't know what insurance company he goes through.

Mr. MacDonald: I'll save you the trouble. Twelve hundred dollars.

Mr. Klein: Okay. That's for PL/PD.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is question period, not a back and forth.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Right-of-way Regulations

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all know that pipelines and transmission wires are infrastructure vital to Alberta's economy. Recently a constituent of mine who owns farmland met with me and raised an issue of a farmer who was not allowed to expand his barn because it would infringe on a pipeline right-of-way. My questions today are to the Minister of Energy. What rules are in place to fairly compensate landowners for the loss of opportunity resulting from the rights-of-way?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that that hesitation between "hon." and "minister" was just Freudian when it came to me.

Mr. Speaker, let me say that there is a robust set of regulations and a sophisticated network of process surrounding right-of-way. The government has the power of eminent domain that it can exercise with the siting of transmission, but there is a very good process with the EUB, the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, and the Surface Rights Board. I'm more than pleased to provide the member with absolute, finite detail as to how he could direct his constituent into that process.

Let me conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that the transmission process is still a regulated process in Alberta's competitive market generation model.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Who is responsible for maintaining the rights-of-way for things like weed control or overgrown branches that negatively affect the crop cultivation?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, this may require a supplement from the minister of agriculture, because his example of weed control actually is governed by the Weed Control Act of the Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development department. So should further light be shone on this noxious subject, I'm sure that there's nobody more qualified than the minister of agriculture.

But I can say that the operators of these transmission lines have a responsibility, Mr. Speaker, for safe and effective handling of transmission. Again, they apply to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board and tell the board how much this maintenance is going to cost. From that, the board works up the price that is charged to consumers for transmission rates in the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental question is to the same minister. Several companies working in the same region of Alberta could result in criss-crossing of pipelines underground. My question is: how is the siting of pipelines planned, managed, and the documentation of the network updated?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, it's a natural monopoly and, as such, controlled by the EUB.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Crossroads Program

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The forecast for this last fiscal year's victims of crime fund estimates that there will be a surplus of at least $6.2 million. Meanwhile, the Crossroads program for victims of prostitution is going under because they could not find the $350,000 to keep it running. My questions are to the Solicitor General. Given that the Solicitor General is sitting on at least a $6.2 million surplus in the victims of crime fund from the last fiscal year alone plus the operating money for this year, why will she not help this valuable program continue?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member asks a good question, and I guess the first thing I'd like to say is that this group she's referring to – I believe it's Crossroads – has not approached me. I know Crossroads very well in the work that I did in regard to child prostitution, and I have not heard from them at all.

Maybe the Minister of Children's Services would like to supplement the answer.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, currently we're looking at the incidence of children who have been in care that are adults now by virtue of the fact that they're over 18. Our Children's Services staff are talking to them and talking to the people that manage the program.

Initially last year when they served notice that if we did not fund the adults that were in that program, they would be compelled to close, we had other placements for them, but we wanted to look very carefully, because we are not in the business of serving adults that require these types of services. If they have been youth in care and we can provide mentoring and transitional supports, if we can assist them in finding housing supports, then we'll do that as well as providing counselling.

My understanding is that region 6, whom I was in discussions with today about this, are in discussions as we speak on this very topic.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Back to the Solicitor General then. Am I hearing from the Solicitor General a willingness to go the extra mile not only for prostitutes under 18 but, in this case, for prostitutes over 18, particularly those with children of their own? If they approach you, will the minister be willing to listen?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, this minister is always willing to listen, Mr. Speaker. I've always spent a lot of time listening. I think one of the things that Crossroads can look at: we have reinstated our crime prevention grants, and our restorative justice they may be able to access. If they want to talk to me, I have wonderful staff that work for me in that area, and I'm sure that I'd be pleased to meet with them, and I know my staff would be willing to listen to them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Back to the same minister. I'm specifically seeking information. Why won't this minister fund the Crossroads program out of the surplus she already has for the victims of crime fund?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's be very clear first of all: that fund is for victims of crime. If Crossroads feels that they qualify for that, they can go and apply to get some money from the victims of crime fund.

It's very, very simple. We're here to help people, and we're willing to listen. If the people at Crossroads want to talk to me, I'll certainly sit down, discuss with them, tell them what avenues there are and what resources we have within our department to help them.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday the Minister of Seniors shared a podium with the Deputy Prime Minister to announce funding for 11 new affordable housing projects. While this is positive news, the Edmonton City Centre Church Corporation announced yesterday that a lack of funding is forcing the closure of the Crossroads duplex, which provides safe and supportive housing for homeless and street-involved women. The Crossroads duplex opened only two years ago in the Boyle Street area on lots where fortified drug houses once stood. My questions are to the Minister of Seniors. Why is this government failing to provide the necessary ongoing funding to allow affordable housing like the Crossroads duplex to keep its doors open to vulnerable street-involved women?

Mr. Woloshyn: Well, it's unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that I have to explain the affordable housing program to the hon. member. The affordable housing program provides funding in partnership with municipalities, with private developers, with non-for-profit groups to build – to build – affordable housing. The operation of that comes from the proponents of the projects. We do it at a very, very economical rent, and as he indicated, very positive news.

So how our affordable housing project would come into this other situation, which seems to be unfortunate, is beyond me, since that project was funded by the federal government's initiatives, good initiatives, I might add, and those two cottages were homes that were moved from Griesbach barracks.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the government is unwilling to provide ongoing operating support for affordable housing projects after they get built, why is the government exposing vulnerable women to the risk of homelessness and forcing them back into the arms of criminals who operate the drug houses that the Crossroads duplex is built to replace?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, generally, I try to keep a composure in this Legislature, but when a question so misdirected, so vindictive, and so inaccurate comes here, it irritates me to no end. Number one, the Seniors' department was not involved in this project. The Edmonton Housing Trust Fund promised funding up until March 31 to the operators. Alberta Seniors funds at least a million dollars to the Edmonton Housing Trust Fund annually.

Mr. Speaker, that member is so far off course I don't think he realizes that he's in the Legislature.

Dr. Pannu: My last question to the Minister of Seniors: given that the Crossroads duplex supports highly vulnerable individuals overcoming addictions and past abuse, what immediate actions will this minister take to make sure that this supportive and innovative housing project is not forced to close its doors at the end of this month?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the member for a very good question. Thank you very much. That I can answer.

I think it's important to note that we invest through Seniors some $4.6 million annually into Edmonton; $1.28 million of this goes towards the Women's Emergency Accommodation Centre, which you're familiar with, and to Elizabeth House for single inner-city women.

Mr. Speaker, in direct answer to the question posed by the hon. member – what am I going to do immediately? – because this is new to me since we were not involved in this in any way, shape, or form, I'm having my staff set up meetings with the operators, with the funders to determine if, in fact, there was perhaps some support from other areas of government in here. We will be looking at what we can do. We're not in the program business, but as minister responsible for housing I would be very distressed to see shelter spaces that could be utilized go unused because of some, shall we say, problems that arise from it.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I'll call upon the first of four hon. members to participate today in Members' Statements, but in the interim might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a great honour today to be able to recognize six distinguished educational leaders from the Caribbean and northern South America who are visiting Canada and Alberta in particular today. These are people who have won the Canadian Teachers' Federation John Thompson fellowship program. They're part of that program.

We have Mr. Jerry Coipel, who's the treasurer of the Dominica Association of Teachers. We have Ms Avril Crawford, general secretary of the Guyana Teachers' Union; Mr. Cecil Hodge, president of the British Virgin Islands Teachers' Union; Ms Celestine John, president of the Anguilla Teachers' Union; Mr. Vivian Sedney, secretary-general of the Surinam teachers' organization; Mr. Anthony Wolfe, president of the Bermuda Union of Teachers. They're accompanied by Mr. Tim Johnston, the international officer of the Alberta Teachers' Association, and Ms Shelley Svidal, who is the administrative assistant at the ATA. Their mission here is to observe first-hand the operations of one of Canada's provincial teachers' organizations and in particular the Alberta Teachers' Association, and we're greatly honoured to have them in the Legislative Assembly today. I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Rolls-Royce

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to be privileged to stand today in the Assembly and make a statement concerning a very important centenary. On May 4, 1904, 100 years ago today, an engineer named Frederick Henry Royce met an aristocrat, Charles Stewart Rolls, at a luncheon in the Midland Hotel in Manchester, England. On a handshake they agreed that a company should be formed to market motor products designed and produced by Royce. The company we know as Rolls-Royce is the result, recognized around the world for excellence in engineering technology and manufacturing.

The importance of this event for our Assembly is that Rolls-Royce's efforts leading up to and during the second great war, supplying aircraft, marine, tank engines along with other machinery and armaments, are credited with giving Allied pilots, sailors, and ground forces the edge that allowed them to secure victories critical to saving Britain. The parliamentary system we have and for the most part enjoy today in all likelihood would not have survived if it had not been for this historic meeting and the subsequent superior products produced by the company.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Canadian Forces Base Cold Lake

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to honour Canadian Forces Base Cold Lake, who will be celebrating their 50th anniversary on Friday, June 18, 2004.

CFB Cold Lake is Canada's largest air force base and home of the CF-18 tactical fighter squadrons. World renowned for their ability and skills, 4 Wing pilots receive rigorous training and are deployed from either 416 or 441 squadrons. Combined with the air weapons range, which is the only tactical bombing range in Canada, 4 Wing has evolved into the best fighter-force training venue in the world.

Build it, and they will come. In 1951 an announcement was made concerning the development of the air weapons range on a tract of land 180 kilometres by 65 kilometres bridging both northeastern Alberta and Saskatchewan. CFB Cold Lake began construction in 1952, and operations commenced in 1954. Today the base, under the leadership of Wing Commander Colonel Sullivan, has over 2,000 regular and reserve personnel as well as a civilian workforce that fluctuates between 230 and 430 and is set to grow even further.

I think we can all recognize the impact of the base on the city of Cold Lake. The 4 Wing was built at Medley, between what was Cold Lake and Grande Centre, and became part of the tritown area, merging into one in 1996. What is special and unique is the joint co-operation between the base and the city of Cold Lake, and you will see this spirit of co-operation in the events planned for this summer celebrating the base's 50th anniversary.

For example, for six weeks beginning May 3 and running to June 11, the Maple Flag days will host 10 nations, arguably making this one of the biggest and best fighter-force training exercises in the world. On June 18, 4 Wing's anniversary date, a 25-year-old time capsule will be opened and restocked and a CF-18 pedestal aircraft will be unveiled. On Saturday and Sunday, July 17 and 18, the city of Cold Lake and 4 Wing are jointly hosting the Cold Lake International Air Show, which is going to be one of the best in North America this year. The Snowbirds, USAF Thunderbirds, Skyhawks, and an exclusive CF-18 multiship attack complete with pyrotechnics are all part of the show. In conjunction with the air show a Border Bash will be featuring many talented musical singers and bands. The final highlight of the summer will be the freedom of the city of Cold Lake commencing with the parade through the city of Cold Lake on Friday, August 27.

On behalf of Colonel Sullivan, wing commander of 4 Wing Cold Lake, and all of the base personnel I invite my colleagues, their families, and all Albertans to participate in celebrating CFB Cold Lake's 50th anniversary.

Happy 50th anniversary, CFB Cold Lake, and congratulations on a job well done.

Thank you.

2:40

The Speaker: That statement by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake ran a full one minute beyond the time allocated for it, but it was allowed today simply because the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky went one minute under his allocated time.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Queen Elizabeth II Golden Jubilee Citizenship Medal

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On February 26, 2002, our hon. Premier rose in this Assembly and introduced Bill I, the Queen Elizabeth II Golden Jubilee Recognition Act. This provincial legislation annually commemorates the golden jubilee of our Queen, Elizabeth II, and recognizes in her honour the very special contributions of Alberta's young people in building this province and its communities.

Everyone knows the kind of young Albertans I'm talking about. They are the ones who go way above and beyond in their communities, the ones who go out of their way to help others, give freely of their time in support of a worthy charity or cause, or through some other way find the time to give back to their community. Quite simply, they represent all that it means to be a very good citizen in this province.

There are many awards or scholarships that recognize outstanding achievement in academics or sports or perhaps even both, but with the Queen's jubilee recognition act we now have a way to recognize Alberta's young people who exemplify the best qualities in citizenship and leadership. I truly cannot think of a more meaningful award.

Every year one student from each high school in Alberta is chosen to receive the Premier's citizenship award based upon their exemplary contributions to their community and their school. From this select group the five most outstanding are recognized with the Queen's Golden Jubilee Citizenship Medal and a $5,000 award to use for further education or development.

Today I had the honour of hearing the name of an outstanding young constituent of mine, Michele Romanow from St. Mary's high school in Calgary, who was recognized in this Assembly along with the four other Queen's Golden Jubilee Citizenship Medal recipients for 2003: Samantha Saretsky from Lacombe composite high school, Laura Abday from Edmonton's Jasper Place high school, Evan Wisniewski from Two Hills high school, and Wilma Shim from Edmonton's Archbishop MacDonald high school.

Our province is very proud to celebrate the achievement of young Albertans who exemplify the qualities of citizenship, volunteerism, and community participation. Having pride in one's community and a willingness to contribute back is important because it builds upon the important foundation of compassion and respect, two characteristics that I believe are the cornerstones of a caring and safe society. These key components have made Alberta the strong, vibrant province that it is today and will allow it to remain strong in the future.

Congratulations to these five outstanding young Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Romanow and Juliet

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Romanow and Juliet, with apologies to William Shakespeare. Scene 2, New Democrats' orchard, enter Romanow.

But, soft! What light through yonder window breaks?

It is the east, and Medicare is the sun.

Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious Tory moon,

Who is already sick and pale with greed,

That thou our public system art far more fair than she:

Be not her maid, since she is envious;

Her health delivery is but sick and greedy

And none but fools do bear it; cast it off.

It is my birthright, O, it is my love!

Lady, by yonder blessed moon I swear

That tips with silver all these fruitful contracts.

O, swear not by the moon, the inconstant Tory moon,

That monthly changes in her circled orb

Lest thy coverage prove likewise variable.

Good night, good night! Privatizing is such sweet sorrow,

False savings today and Americanization on the morrow.

O, Romanow, Romanow! Wherefore art thou,

Romanow?

Deny delisting and refuse thy premiums;

Or, if that wilt not put an end to waiting lists,

Then thou no longer be a New Democrat.

'Tis but their greed that is my enemy.

Thou art thyself, though not a Pettigrew.

What's a Pettigrew? It is his foot in mouth

That reveals the Liberals' deceitful scheme.

Too early, I hope, for the election is not yet come.

What's in a name? That which we call Medicare

By any other name would smell as sweet;

So Romanow would, were he not by the Liberals and Tories ignored,

Retain that dear public system which we owe

Without that title to Tommy Douglas and the NDP.

The Speaker: That one could be in the book, hon. member.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present a petition signed by 108 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to "pass legislation that eliminates health care premiums."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Introduction of Bills

Bill 31

Highways Development and Protection Act

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce Bill 31, the Highways Development and Protection Act.

The bill will consolidate and modernize the existing Public Highways Development Act and the City Transportation Act and provide a single legislative framework for planning, developing, and protecting the provincial highway network system.

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I am tabling the requisite number of copies of all the school funding profiles for the province of Alberta, including charter schools and all the schools that are funded by us. This will enable full transparency and full disclosure for everyone involved, as was asked for by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods during estimates.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of a report showing that toll roads apparently are turning out to be as much as twice as safe as publicly built and maintained highways, clearly something worth investigating. It's called Facts and Myths About Tolls. It's prepared for the International Bridge, Tunnel and Turnpike Association, whose motto is There Are No Free Roads. Clearly, it's the sort of reading material that should keep people wide awake at night.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to table five copies of a letter from Kip Snelling, who is employed in the Ventures program at Michener Centre in Red Deer. In the letter Kip includes a petition signed by 34 residents of Michener, constituents of mine, in support of maintaining the Ventures program, which helps Michener residents to be active and employed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is a letter that I received on December 22, 2003, from Alberta Finance, and it's a partial release of the KPMG actuarial study commissioned by the government to help set the rate for basic automobile insurance in 2003 in Alberta.

The second tabling I have is a study done by KPMG. It's titled Impact of Proposed Tort Reform on Private Passenger Automobile Rates in New Brunswick, and it's dated July 28, 2003.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table a letter addressed to all MLAs from Mr. Phil Flaumitsch. Mr. Flaumitsch is a young driver and has raised serious concerns about insurance rates in Alberta. He's particularly concerned by the government's obvious inability to deliver on promises of lower insurance premiums.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of a news release from the Edmonton City Centre Church Corporation. It's dated May 3, 2004, that is yesterday. It announces the closure of the Crossroads duplex due to lack of funding. The Crossroads duplex had provided a safe and supportive home for those who had histories of emotional, physical, or sexual abuse, violence, or homelessness.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Point of Order Insulting Language

The Speaker: During question period today, hon. members, there was an interjection by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands with respect to a point of order heard very clearly by the chair. Hon. Minister of Environment, do you want to withdraw some statements, or should we proceed with the point of order?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, if I could just elaborate perhaps for . . .

The Speaker: No. Then we'll proceed. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands raised the point of order.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm raising the point of order under our Standing Orders, section 23(j), which is when a member "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder."

It's my view that when the hon. minister referred to the hon. Official Opposition House Leader as a water witch he was not particularly talking about her ability to divine moisture in the soil. I think that it was inappropriate and uncalled for, and I ask that he withdraw it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's no fun being the only woman on the front benches of the opposition, and I'm very aware that many women, perhaps most women, who might currently be considering running for political office would find the minister's comments sexist, distasteful, juvenile, and a deliberate attempt to trivialize my role as an equal member of this House.

I've gone carefully through the list of unparliamentary language that's provided in Beauchesne and by the Speaker's handout of February of 2004. Interestingly, "witch" is not found as unparliamentary language, I suspect because the amount of name-calling that has happened to people of a particular gender of whom "witch" might apply has not been as common, and that's why we're not finding it. I think the member is very uncomfortable being challenged by a woman, and his attempt to trivialize my role in this House is his way of handling that, shrinking me down to a size he can handle, if you would like, and I think it shows how far in the past he indeed is living.

It's not a compliment to his caucus or to the government that those kinds of comments would be uttered, I believe. But, Mr. Speaker, I take comfort, small comfort, in two adages. One is that they always scream the loudest when they know they're losing, and secondly, what comes around goes around.

Thank you.

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we have not so much a point of order here as, I would say, a point of misunderstanding of a rural cultural tradition. I would point out to you that water witch is not sexist. I'll explain to you what it is. First of all, in my constituency and I've since learned in a number of constituencies around the province from the number of notes that I've received, it is common terminology. What water witch refers to is one who can usually take a willow with a fork in it . . .

Mr. Cardinal: Or a crowbar.

Dr. Taylor: The hon. minister suggests a crowbar. As you walk through a certain area where you're trying to find water, that bar or that willow will move in downwards motion. People that can do this – I can't do it, Mr. Speaker; I wish I could – can actually identify the type of water and the depth that the water is at. These people are referred to as water witches.

Now, this is a terminology that is common in rural Alberta. I thought it was just southern Alberta, but apparently it is common in other parts of Alberta as well. To suggest that it is sexist is inappropriate, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Minister of Learning is in fact a water witch, and it appears to be something that is inherited. The hon. Minister of Learning has informed me that his father can witch and his brother can witch as well, so that is the cultural tradition on this.

Now, if you look at the member's comments – I don't have them in front of me, so I'm just going by memory – I believe she suggested that she knew that there was potable water in coal bed methane where we had not drilled, and we don't know if there's potable water in that. Well, the only thing somebody coming from my cultural tradition can assume is that she must be a water witch; that is, she can divine water without having to go through the scientific methodologies of drilling. As I say, it's a rare skill and a very valuable skill.

So I think, Mr. Speaker, this is a point of cultural misunderstanding as opposed to any point of order.

The Speaker: Others on this point?

Well, the chair disagrees with the hon. Minister of Environment. Here is what was said from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. "My next question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. How many applications to divert fresh water from an aquifer within a coal bed methane scene are currently before Alberta Environment?" Minister of Environment, that was the question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. The Minister of Environment after one statement says, "Now, in my constituency, Mr. Speaker, we have people we call water witches, that can test for water, and it appears that the member opposite might be considered one. I don't know."

Now, let's see what the Encyclopedia Britannica says about what a water witch is. First of all, it says that it's an "occult practice." Secondly, it says that it was "first practiced in Europe during the Middle Ages, dowsing is most often used to find water but may also be employed to locate precious metals, buried treasure, archaeological remains, or even dead bodies."

Now, I suspect, I just really suspect – I wonder if the term "water witch" would have been used if the poser of the question had been male. On that point I am going to rule that this is an actual point of order. I am going to ask the hon. Minister of Environment to withdraw his comment.

Dr. Taylor: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. In deference to you I would withdraw my comment.

The Speaker: Thank you.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2004-05

Human Resources and Employment

The Deputy Chair: As per our Standing Order the first hour will be allocated between the minister and members of the opposition, following which any other member may participate.

The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm here today to present the 2004-2005 estimates for Alberta Human Resources and Employment.

We have some folks in the gallery today, and I believe that Dan Thompson, director of budgets and forecasts, is there; Duncan Campbell, senior financial officer; James Frey, the acting assistant director of communications; and Charlene Schmidt. I see Shelby MacLeod, my executive assistant; Warren Chandler, special assistant; and it looks like some guests that are here touring. So welcome to everybody.

I wanted to talk first, Mr. Chairman, about the future of Alberta, about a future when Albertans are even less dependent on government supports, when employers can find the skilled labour they need, and when the risk of workplace injury or death is minimal.

Alberta Human Resources and Employment is looking to build a better future for Albertans, and building that better future for Alberta comes at a price. This year I'm asking for $1.148 billion to support the work of the ministry. This does not include the WCB, the Workers' Compensation Board, which is entirely financed by employer premiums so is not a part of these budget estimates.

The Alberta Ministry of Human Resources and Employment is made up of five components: the department, the Alberta Labour Relations Board, the personnel administration office, the Appeals Commission for workers' compensation, and fifth, the Workers' Compensation Board. As I said, I will not be discussing WCB in these remarks.

First, I would like to discuss the Alberta Human Resources and Employment department. Before I begin, we've all heard about the tyranny of the anecdote: how one welfare client taking advantage of the system means everyone is a cheat, how one unhappy WCB client means the system is a failure. But those anecdotes are the minority. Stories of real Albertans provide us with real examples of what government does to affect their lives every day. Today I will be including stories about real people who have accessed our services. They are just a few of the hundreds of stories I and my colleagues hear every single day. These stories reflect our priorities and the great work Alberta Human Resources and Employment has done and will continue to do over the next year.

There are five main initiatives that will be addressed by the department over this next year. First, we will continue to implement Alberta Works income support and employment training programs. Our province's record on welfare reform is a national good-news story. At 1.3 per cent we have the lowest percentage of working-age population receiving social assistance in this country. This percentage has remained stable, but population continues to grow. We also have one of the highest percentages of adults participating in the workforce, more than 74 per cent.

This year we will invest $617 million into the Alberta Works initiative as a system of income and employment supports, health and other benefits. It is a program designed to produce better results but at no additional cost to the taxpayer. It is a program not simply about giving people money; it's about giving them a future. Alberta Works will build on our success at helping people find and keep a job. It takes us even further away from old approaches where people could be trapped into dependence on government handouts instead of being given the hand up that they really need to create a better future for themselves and their family.

Under Alberta Works we help Albertans leaving financial assistance remain independent of government programs. Sometimes it means getting them into academic upgrading or skills training. Of the total Alberta Works budget nearly $280 million will help 40,000 Albertans get labour market information, academic upgrading, language courses, or job skills training to move into the workforce.

Sometimes it's supporting people so that they can flee abusive homes. Eligible clients fleeing domestic violence could receive up to $1,000 to help them set up a new household and get a fresh start. Diane is just one such woman who needed our help. This 40-year-old mother of two from Calgary fled an abusive relationship and needed to get her life back. Before he left the country, her estranged husband had destroyed her entire wardrobe and her eyeglasses. She was so distraught and fearful that she left her executive secretary position with an oil company.

We provided Diane with income supports while she attended counselling for the trauma she had experienced. She also received encouragement and support from our staff. We were also able to assist Diane to replace some of her work wardrobe and eyeglasses. She participated in life skills and career planning workshops to rebuild her shattered self-confidence. Diane is now back working full-time as an executive secretary for an engineering company. Where would Diane be if we just gave her a monthly cheque? Alberta works because we invest in people, and through Alberta Works, the program, we will see a return on that investment.

To access our services, we tell Albertans to click, call, or come in. In March 2004 there were more than 184,000 clicks to ALIS, our career, learning, and employment web site. That was our best month on record, and this is up 28 per cent from last year. We just launched two new on-line services, WAGEinfo and CERTinfo, to help job seekers find out what they can expect to earn in the Alberta job market or which occupations have special requirements. Clients can also call our new income support contact centre to get toll-free, 24/7 access to information on our financial assistance programs and services. Across the province people can come in to one of our more than 50 Alberta service centres or Canada/Alberta service centres.

Supports do not just end. For those that need it, they can continue to receive the hand up. Through the Alberta adult health benefit program health benefits will be extended to parents leaving financial assistance for work or because of an increase in Canada pension plan disability benefits. These health benefits can be renewed each year if the family earns less than the established income threshold. Alberta Works includes $86 million invested into health benefits.

Also for the first time, child support services can continue after a family leaves financial assistance to help them get child support agreements or orders. This is very important because next to earned income child support has the greatest financial impact for low-income families. We will also spend $4 million to provide child support services to help low-income parents get child support orders and agreements.

Our second initiative is the skills investment strategy and is part of our ongoing work to address labour shortages and skills deficits in Alberta. The skills investment strategy will increase opportunities for Albertans to get the skills and supports they need to find and keep a job. The skills investment strategy addresses the training needs of all Albertans including aboriginal people, immigrants, low-income Albertans, older workers, people with disabilities, and youth. The new skills investment programs provide greater flexibility and offer a better range of training, an increased number of work-related programs, greater supports for part-time learn-while-you-earn training, and an increased opportunity for providers to create training partnerships.

Our job corps office in Lac La Biche has been piloting a program for at-risk youth, meaning kids who have quit school and are hanging around with nothing constructive to do. One of these at-risk youth, Thomas, was 19 and had quit school in grade 10. He was, in his own words, hanging around smoking dope for a couple of years and not going anywhere. Job corps helped Thomas decide what he didn't want to do by assigning him to a placement commensurate with his education as a labourer. After two days of digging sand, Thomas decided he wanted to go back to school to become a pipe fitter. The story isn't over. Thomas hasn't graduated yet, but I can say that he's still in school.

This year we will help more adults get the supports and information they need to succeed in the labour market, to get academic upgrading or language courses or job skills training they need to move into the workforce sooner so people like Thomas can get through their training and into the workforce faster.

Each year the department receives approximately $120 million from the federal government for the Canada/Alberta labour market development agreement, or LMDA. The purpose of the LMDA was to recognize provincial responsibility for labour market training and to transfer delivery of employment insurance training programs to Alberta. Ours was the first LMDA signed, and now similar agreements exist between the federal government and most other provinces. The funds we receive from the federal government have been shrinking by about $1 million a year even though demand has gone up and costs have gone up. Last year we actually spent $10 million more than the LMDA services that we received from the federal government.

The department's third initiative is one mandated by legislation. This fall we will begin a review of the assured income for severely handicapped, or AISH, program to ensure that client needs are being met, the program is sustainable, and Alberta's most vulnerable people have the benefits they need. At $393 million AISH is the largest program in the ministry and is still one of the most generous programs of its kind in Canada.

This year for the AISH program we will spend $276 million for AISH's financial benefits and $118 million in medical benefits for more than 32,000 Albertans. Medical costs account for nearly one-third of the total AISH spending, an increase of 13 per cent from 2003-2004, or an additional $14 million. Medical costs for AISH recipients have increased dramatically from approximately $63 million in '99-2000 to $118 million this year. That's an increase of 87 per cent in six years, and a large portion of that is prescription drug costs.

The AISH caseload is also increasing. The number of recipients is growing by about 4 to 6 per cent per year, much more rapidly than the population. We need to understand why that's occurring. We have all heard from constituents on AISH about the challenges they face making ends meet. I wish I could do more, but first we need to get a handle on medical costs, prescription drug costs, and caseload increases.

Something must be done. The AISH program needs to be changed to ensure its long-term sustainability. We'll be talking to the people closest to the program: the workers, the advocacy groups, the service providers, and clients. Our hope is that the AISH review will bring solutions and identify ways to make the program more responsive to the people it serves.

For our department's fourth initiative we will develop partnerships to meet Alberta's human resource development needs, focusing on skills deficits, workforce planning, supporting increased workforce productivity, and improving relationships with workplaces.

Another example. David is a 21 year old who came to the youth employment centre in Calgary. He was tired of working dead-end jobs. David completed a career planning inventory with a counsellor. He was then assisted in researching his options. David decided to become an electrician. He and his counsellor completed a resume. The counsellor then connected David with the Calgary Construction Association, who put him in touch with a journeyman who was willing to take on an apprentice. Six months later David is still employed as an electrician's apprentice.

We need to continue to develop and foster partnerships with all sectors—construction, tourism, agriculture—to ensure that Albertans like David can remain part of our vibrant economy. In our six delivery regions our staff are working directly with employers, business associations, chambers of commerce, and economic development authorities to get the word out. There are people who need to work, who want to work, and we can help employers connect with them.

The department's fifth and final initiative is WorkSafe Alberta. Our goal is to reduce workplace injuries by 40 per cent, and we're almost halfway there. In 2003 the lost time claim rate was down from 3.4 to a record low of 2.8. Our goal is to have it at 2.0 by the end of 2004. Consider these statistics. Someone is injured on the job in Alberta every 3.5 minutes. Last year there were 127 work deaths in Alberta. Emergency room doctor and injury researcher Dr. Louis Francescutti described this death rate as an epidemic. I believe it is 100 per cent preventable.

We will continue to reduce workplace injury rates even further and lower the health, personal, economic, and workers' compensation costs associated with preventable incidents. The funds we put in are an investment, $13.7 million in workplace health and safety this year, a slight increase over last year. If WorkSafe Alberta is successful in meeting the 40 per cent reduction target, it could save $220 million each year in WCB claims and assessments. We have hired 19 more inspectors, we had more convictions, and we've increased fines from $150,000 to $500,000, but we still have a long way to go. Injuries are down, but they're still occurring.

The key to WorkSafe Alberta is education. We have to get new workers educated in safe practices. One of our inspectors in Medicine Hat told me about something he saw last fall. He was parked in his vehicle across from a residential construction site. Workers were on scaffolding installing siding on a new house. A young worker was attempting to reach higher to get an extra section installed before he had to climb up to the next level of scaffolding. He couldn't quite reach, so he proceeded to grab a plastic bucket to stand on. Our inspector was about to yell up to the worker to stop what he was doing when the man's supervisor told him to stop and climb up the scaffold to reach. Later the supervisor told our inspector that he couldn't afford to lose anyone off his crew due to injury. Lost productivity, lost time, and lost lives: that's what WorkSafe Alberta is trying to prevent.

I would be remiss if I failed to mention a couple of other areas within the workplace side of our department. The first is employment standards. These folks ensure that employers and employees have balanced rights and responsibilities. In employment standards and other enforcement areas of the department our approach is to educate first, then regulate. An example: our officers provide training on how to calculate overtime and holiday benefits or how to arrange shifts and compressed work weeks. This year we will be devoting $5.3 million to employment standards initiatives so that we can continue to help people and workplaces be fair.

One area of employment standards I'd like to highlight is partnerships. The Alberta Hotel & Lodging Association is working with our employment standards staff on a number of initiatives to increase their members' knowledge about the legislation and regulations.

The advice and information our staff can impart has been particularly valuable to the smaller members who do not have human resource professionals on staff.

Another component of our workplace investments is labour relations. In 2004-2005 we will spend about $2.2 million on labour relations, a relatively small part of our budget but with a large and lasting impact. Labour relations is about mediation services to help disputing parties reach a settlement. Mediators make a difference. Employers and their unionized workers need to work together to meet training and sector needs, and it is important that the negotiations about wages and benefits not undermine the working relationship that is needed for other challenges. Mediators can help make workplace relations more balanced and productive.

Labour relations is also about ensuring confidence in regulated professionals, and it's about labour relations policy development. Alberta has one of the most stable labour relations climates in the country. Between 1999 and 2003 Alberta averaged the second lowest rate of lost time due to labour dispute at 217 days lost per 10,000 person-days' work, about one-third of the national average.

That concludes the department portion of the ministry.

The second component of the ministry is the Alberta Labour Relations Board. Last year's passage of the Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act has set out a number of tasks for the board in the coming year. Previously the board concluded the runoff votes between unions as well as determinations and votes on collective agreements. This year the board will be providing mediation for those parties requiring it and adjudicating any outstanding issues from the mediation process. On a day-to-day basis the LRB will continue to resolve the issues brought before it with an emphasis on trying to settle disputes before they require formal hearings.

The third component of the ministry is the personnel administration office, the government's central human resource agency. PAO's budget of $8.7 million supports the work it does to build a strong Alberta public service. The PAO collaborates with ministries on strategies committed to attracting, engaging, developing, and retaining the best public service employees. Success of attraction and retention initiatives can be measured in many ways, but a key indicator is the 80 per cent job satisfaction reported by employees of the public service in the 2003 employee survey. [Mr. Dunford's speaking time expired] What do I do? Do I ask for unanimous consent to go on?

The Deputy Chair: You could.

Mr. Dunford: Can I have unanimous consent to go on? I've got four more pages.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There is a long list of hon. members on this side of the Assembly who have expressed an interest in questions to the Alberta Human Resources and Employment minister in the time provided. Certainly, if my experience in the past month in budget estimates has taught me anything, it's that the ministers certainly have lots of time in which to defend the programs of their respective departments, and this minister is no different.

Now, Mr. Chairman, certainly this minister has worked very, very diligently where others have been less than diligent, and the proof is in the statistics in regard to people who lose their life as a result of a workplace fatality. The minister and his department should be credited for working very hard to educate Alberta workers and employers about work safe sites.

When we look at the statistics and we recognize that fatalities are going down on the job sites, they're going up in other areas. These statistics are frightening. Last year, as we know, 127 Albertans died as a result of their work. There were 98 deaths in 2002, 106 in 2001, and the death toll in 2003 in total is the highest it's been in 17 years.

How does the minister track and record lost-time accidents and fatalities in Alberta's workplaces? Also to the minister in regard to this issue, which Alberta job sites are the safest? Those where workers are under union contract or those where the workers are not protected by a union contract? Does the department study that, and if they do study that, which are the safest job sites?

When will this government make all Alberta employers maintain the same occupational health and safety standards for workplace safety? Now, it's unfair of one employer or one group of employers to have an economic advantage over another employer or another group of employers if they know that they can avoid the occupational health and safety law and its regulations, so I would encourage the minister to make sure that we have a level playing field. Certainly, that's in the interests of everyone to make sure that there's a level playing field for all employers.

In regard to the working alone regulation that came about as a result of the passionate advocacy done by Deb Dore, who lost her daughter in a violent act of crime some years back in Calgary. This crime against Deb Dore's daughter was committed while she was working alone in a sub shop. The minister had a consultation process, and there were recommendations made.

I want to know now what sort of follow-up has been done in regard to that. What exactly is going on with this working alone regulation? Does the minister still consider it to be adequate? What sort of compliance numbers does the ministry have in regard to this? Which sector of employers are abiding by that working alone regulation, and which are not? Or have we simply left that up to voluntary compliance? What exactly is going on with this working alone regulation, and does the minister feel that it is working?

Also, before we move on to other subjects, Mr. Chairman, I understand that the department is working on regulations to govern NORM, and NORM is naturally occurring radioactive materials that are in the workplace. Naturally occurring radioactive materials show up in industrial process streams. One particular place they do show up is in fertilizer plants in the concentrated process stream that is involved in making fertilizer. Workers not only in that industry but in the petrochemical industry come in contact with what are known as NORMs.

Some individual companies, to their credit, have regulations in place to protect their employees from naturally occurring radioactive materials. I may have been incorrect, but I was left with the distinct impression that this minister and this department had a subcommittee set up to study this issue and were going to make recommendations in regard to naturally occurring radioactive materials. I would like to get an update on that. This is very, very important, particularly for workers who on a number of occasions as a result of their work have to enter a confined space or perhaps a pressure vessel doing routine maintenance and come in contact with these naturally occurring radioactive materials. So if we could get an update on that.

It's particularly important when one considers that the number of fatalities in this year's report from the ministry has increased significantly as a result of breathing contaminated air or high concentrations of smoke or high levels of dust over a period of time.

A lot of workers are developing respiratory illnesses that 10, 15 years down the road are killing them. So this is something I hope our government is working diligently on and we can report some progress to the workers who could be affected by this very soon. The death rates are going up for occupational diseases, and I think this could be one way of starting a gradual decline in the death rate.

In conclusion on this matter, certainly the good work the minister and the ministry have done could be continued if we had an education process to alert all workers and their employers about the hazards of poor ventilation on work sites and, if there is poor ventilation, the importance of providing correct respiratory protection and ensuring that the workers wear that respiratory protection, because the costs down the road are incredible.

Now, we see an increase in this minister's budget. In the 2004-05 budget there's an increase of $15 million over the 2003-04 forecast, but unfortunately there hasn't been an increase for those who need it most. Now, I don't know how this government can justify putting more and more gambling revenue into the horse racing industry. They have their own frequent flyer club, extensive travel, and there's no shortage of money for communications budgets. We can increase all those. Government spending in the years that I've been in the Assembly has increased by 50 per cent, Mr. Chairman, but we do not seem to have any money for those in this province who need it most, and those are Albertans who are living on assured income for the severely handicapped or those receiving money through supports for independence.

Now, the majority of people on those assistance programs cannot work. The minister has talked about other people, and that's wonderful. That's good news. I'm glad we have programs that can help. In a province as rich as ours we cannot forget some of the most needy and their families. We can talk about many things. We can talk about having skills investments, and we can have lots of programs, but the majority of these citizens through no fault of their own unfortunately cannot work for any length of time. Many of them have mental illnesses. Some have a disability of one sort or another. When we look at what we expect them to live on, it is simply not enough.

Now, we have as a province certainly outperformed the rest of the country in job creation. We have enormous resources, which are in global demand, and we should count our blessings. Our economic productivity was higher than other provinces, but it's interesting that real wages – real wages – have stagnated during this last decade of growth and prosperity. We have to wonder not only about the minimum wage, which hopefully I'll get an opportunity to talk about, but how are we going to convince this government that we need to increase the benefits for those on AISH and SFI? I think it is a disgrace that in a province as rich as ours we have some of the lowest benefits in the country. Why are we continuing to punish the poor?

Now, for welfare benefits and if we look at the types of households, Mr. Chairman, for a single employable in this province our rank is eighth in the amount of money that we provide; persons with a disability, ninth; single parent, one child, 10th; a couple with two children, fifth. We have to treat our poor citizens better. For a single parent and one child with a $12,000 a year income and even if you include an additional $3,000 in tax benefits from the federal government, this is very difficult to live on. I've asked members of Executive Council if they could live on that, and the question was essentially avoided.

When we look and we compare, Mr. Chairman, not only those amounts but have a quick look at the reduction in constant dollar welfare benefits in Alberta between 1992 and 2002 and if we look at the households involved, the 10-year benefit reduction, a single employable person has lost 28 per cent of their income, a person with a disability has lost 7 per cent, a single parent with one child has lost 28 per cent, and a couple with two children has lost 30 per cent. So that's in a decade, and that's deplorable. It's shameful.

When we look at utility costs, for example, and what this government has done with its energy deregulation policies and the increased use of user fees, we should be ashamed of ourselves.

We have to look after everyone, because in a caring, compassionate society it has to be recognized that not everyone is able or is up to the challenge to provide for themselves.

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

Now, the Alberta government – and this is a sensitive topic for the government – diverts some federal funds from welfare programs to other provincial programs. I think we have to have another look at this. Are we taking money off the table that could be used to provide food for children and using it for other purposes? If we're not going to look at this in any other way, I would ask the government to consider the children. Consider the children of those households where incomes are very, very modest because of this government's lack of attention on poverty-related issues.

We can divert enormous sums of money to any number of issues. I'm not saying that they're not worth while, but why can't we spend a few dollars on the most needy in this province to improve their quality of life? This is unacceptable when you consider that inflation has affected those households in a significant way.

I know that poverty lines and low-income cut-offs – that's a debate in itself. But if the government needs one more reminder, let's look at Alberta's rank among provinces for welfare benefits as a percentage of the poverty line. For a single employable, again, we rank eighth. For persons with a disability we rank 10th. For a single parent with one child we rank 10th. For a couple with two children we rank sixth.

It is clear, it is without debate that the poorest Albertans, you know, those living on welfare, those living on AISH, have taken a terrible economic hit over the last decade. There are over 12,000 families trying to survive on SFI benefits. They can no longer be used in the manner that we are treating them. If for no other reason, please think of the children in those households. We can talk about having this market-basket measure all we want – and I'm looking forward to seeing what's in that market basket – but we've got to make a commitment to put some necessary items in that market basket.

We are talking about skills investments, $10 million less for skills investments than forecast for 2003-04. What would that be and why?

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Dunford: It was good of the hon. member, despite not allowing me to continue on in my speech, to compliment us on a number of areas, and if he liked us in those areas, he should like us in the following areas as well.

I want to talk about the personnel administration office and the fact that they continue to lead a key administrative initiative across the government called the corporate human resource development strategy. This strategy has brought a concerted focus to key human resource issues facing the public service, including the need to build leadership capacity and to attract and retain talent. For example, as of January 2004 approximately 43 per cent of all executive managers have participated in the corporate executive development program.

The PAO has established ambassador and internship programs to promote the public service as a positive career choice to seek out new talent. There are currently 180 ambassadors from across the government. The internship program continues to expand. More than 214 interns attended nine networking events on a variety of development issues over the last year. A newsletter called GAIN for sharing information with and about interns is being published on a regular basis.

The PAO has been using new technologies to receive applications for government jobs. Seventy-three per cent of applications are now received on-line. This is a 40 per cent increase from 2002-2003.

A key focus this year for the PAO is assisting ministries in establishing workplace health initiatives such as reducing workplace incidents and enhancing the abilities of employees to remain healthy. Deputy ministers will be reporting on their ministries' workplace health initiatives this year.

The fourth and final component of the ministry is the Appeals Commission for Alberta workers' compensation with a budget of $6.9 million. The commission joined the ministry in September 2002. Established under the Workers' Compensation Act the Appeals Commission is a separate government entity independent from the WCB. The commission hears appeals from workers or employers on decisions of the review bodies of the Workers' Compensation Board. The operating costs of the Appeals Commission are paid from general revenue, which is reimbursed from the WCB accident fund. The accident fund is made up of the assessment contributions of employers. The Appeals Commission continues to bring about changes to make the appeals system more open, transparent, and accountable.

The Ministry of Human Resources and Employment has been an active part of thousands of Albertans' lives over the year and will continue to be over the year ahead. This year Alberta Human Resources and Employment will invest $1.148 billion, the fourth highest budget in government, for Alberta people, skills, and workplaces. These dollars come with personal stories and make a difference to people every day in many communities across the province.

So with that – we've already had some comments and some questions – I'll answer what I can this afternoon, and then, of course, we'll provide written answers.

Not to deal with Edmonton-Gold Bar's total presentation but just a couple of comments in order that wrong impressions not be left here in the House of the Assembly or for anyone who might happen to be studying Hansard. He mentioned the arrangement that we have with the federal government under the national child benefit program and how when the federal government provides additional funding in terms of income to low-income Canadians, and in our case Albertans, every jurisdiction – this includes all provinces and all territories – has the ability and the responsibility to determine whether or not there will be that increase in income and whether the situation is to be left alone or whether there are opportunities in which to maximize, then, some other support systems for welfare people.

I want to indicate to the hon. member and to members of this House that each year the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment will make a decision once we have the quantifiable number that arrives from the federal government. In every case where there has been a decision to allow the income to move forward, then of course that's been the case. There's actually been an increase in the income portion for a low-income Albertan, but in those cases where we have determined that there are more important factors than just simply income, then what this government has done is looked at the funds that would otherwise become available, and we have used them for other benefits for low-income Albertans, and we have especially focused on families with children.

I would direct the member's attention to a business plan or to any of the documentation that surrounds Alberta Human Resources and Employment, to an excellent program called the Alberta child health benefit. I don't have the number exactly in front of me – certainly, we can confirm this at a later date – but by providing for dental care, providing diabetic supplies for children, emergency services, eyeglass or sight assistance, we've been able to assist I believe the number would be 65,000 children here in Alberta. So we don't need to be hearing anything from any member of this House about how we strip funds from the welfare program in order to put them into other areas. Similar to what we have done for seniors and other programs, we move money around, but we keep it in there for the benefit, then, in this case, of low-income Albertans, low-income families and their children.

It's pretty easy to pick apart a particular program and just focus on one aspect of it, and in this particular case the member picked on the levels of income and made some comparisons with other jurisdictions. As far as income goes, that would be fine. The numbers are there. While he used the word "shame" and other inferences, I stand here without shame in this particular area because what we have done in Alberta is substituted benefits in kind for income.

For an example, if we were to look at all of the health benefits, the medical benefits, some of the work allowances, the clothing allowances that we make and if we were to gross up those benefits, then, to relate to only a comparison in terms of income, of course we would substantially move upward in that comparison.

I would caution the hon. member and all hon. members not to get totally oriented and focused on the income level. One of the things that research is showing people that have an interest in this particular area is that if the support through welfare in terms of income gets above certain levels, then what we have is the construction of what is now called the welfare wall. A welfare wall means that there is an opportunity for a person to determine whether or not they would be better off working and contributing and being productive in the general economy versus it being worth their while to stay on welfare.

So while I have some understanding of what other jurisdictions might be doing in this area, I don't know to the nth degree all of their particular policies, but the thing that I can tell you about this government that is governing Alberta is that we administer ourselves with a couple of philosophies. One of the main ones is that there is inherent and redeeming value to work.

With that belief, then, we are going to administer our programs in such a way that there will always be the incentive for those who can work so that they will seek and retain work within the workplaces here in the province. This is fundamental to understand what it is that makes up the Progressive Conservative government of Alberta in this particular era.

The other thing that is a philosophy, that is an integral part of how we think, is that we're prepared to provide people with a hand up when they are in need of support. We are not in the business of providing handouts.

So when one looks through our business plan, when you look through the estimates and you want to discuss, criticize, you must understand that we are in the business, in terms of human resources and employment, of moving people away from dependence on government and into the personal independence, the personal responsibility of being able to provide for themselves and their families and to be able to then pride themselves first of all on the work that they do, on the product that they produce, and of course on the benefits that come with responsibility and with productivity.

On that note, I think we'll wait for the next series of comments.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have some more questions for the minister in regard to his department, and I will start with the minimum wage. Certainly, it needs to be increased. I don't know if 30, 35, or even 50 cents is enough. I would think that in light of the time that has passed and the inflation that has occurred, a $7 minimum wage in this province would not be inappropriate.

At $5.90 Alberta has the lowest minimum wage in Canada, and that's almost a dollar less than the national average. So if we were to increase our minimum wage to $7, let's say, we would be just about the national average. We don't have the national average in electricity prices for domestic use. That's significantly more than the national average. If for no other reason than that, we could look at increasing the minimum wage by that much.

The minimum wage should also be reviewed annually. Our compensation packages in this Assembly are reviewed annually. If it's good enough for us, why is it not good enough for those working for the minimum wage? The minister could take a real leadership role in this and organize this annual review. Some of his crackerjack officials, students who may work in the hospitality or the service industry who work for the minimum wage could be involved. The hotel restaurant association also could be involved. It could be reviewed on an annual basis instead of this – I don't know how you could accurately describe what's done now.

You know, the policy resolutions at the Progressive Conservative convention: well, if that's what it takes to raise the minimum wage by $1.10, $1.05, so be it, but it needs to be done and it needs to be done now. Certainly, I would hope that the minister would take the advice of this side of the House and increase the minimum wage and then initiate an annual review to see if it needs to go up even further.

Now, certainly, there are other issues, and there are so many parts of this department. It's a very interesting department. I'm not saying that the others are not; for instance, the Gaming, or gambling, ministry. It's interesting also. The hon. Ministry of Human Resources and Employment is certainly an interesting department.

On Saturday I was looking through the newspaper, and there was an ad in one of the daily papers – it could have been in both of them – on recruitment for the Appeals Commission. I asked a question some time ago, Mr. Chairman, in regard to an apparent change in direction at the Appeals Commission and matters of the WCB. I for one am surprised whenever there is this argument presented, not only by this minister but by others, that they're independent from the WCB process.

This minister, as I recall, correctly stated that he was directly involved with the Appeals Commission and, certainly, the changes that have occurred there, but in light of the fact that there seems to be this decree – I don't know what else to call it – from the government that advises MLAs appearing before the Appeals Commission, that may not be in anyone's best interest. This is inappropriate.

Now, what other boards or what other quasi-judicial tribunals other than the Appeals Commission are we talking about here? Certainly, there are appeals boards for AISH, and there are appeals boards for SFI, and seniors' benefits would certainly be another one.

Are those quasi-judicial tribunals also affected by this order, however it works? I wasn't informed of this. Government MLAs, obviously, were informed of this, but I wasn't.

Mr. Dunford: What are you talking about?

Mr. MacDonald: I'm talking about government MLAs appearing before the Appeals Commission on behalf of constituents. We had a question in the Assembly about this, oh, a month ago, Mr. Chairman, and this was information. I tabled it for public view.

This would be dated December 16, 2002, from the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment to the chief appeals commissioner, Mr. Pheasey, on MLAs appearing before quasi-judicial boards or tribunals, and I can read it for the members' interest.

Following our conversation, I have attached a copy of a memo from the Honourable . . . Minister of Justice and Attorney General regarding the concern of MLAs appearing before quasi-judicial boards and tribunals.

[The MLA from] Airdrie-Rocky View and Caucus Whip also sent this memo to all Government MLAs explaining why it is inappropriate for MLAs and Minister's to appear on behalf of constituents. I am confident the concern is perceptual that an MLA or Minister would be intervening in a quasi-judicial matter. You may want to share this information with your staff.

Signed, recognizing that we're in the Assembly, the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

That's essentially what that memorandum stated. There are others. There's another one dated October 25, 2002, from the Minister of Justice to the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

I don't know what sort of problem there is with this. Does this also apply to, as I said before, other boards where a person representing a constituent may appear on behalf of a seniors' benefits appeal, an AISH appeal, or an SFI appeal? I don't know how many boards would be affected by this. I don't even know why and how all this happened. If the minister could not only enlighten this member on this but also the House, I would be very grateful. There are documents. I'm sure I tabled them, but if I haven't, Mr. Chairman, I apologize to the minister and to the House. I thought that I did after that question.

I think this is a very important matter. If it was all MLAs, I certainly wasn't informed. I've polled my colleagues, and they haven't been informed. What would the need for this be in the first place? I got a book, for instance, whenever I signed on, and it was a book basically dedicated to MLAs to make them understand the complex system of the WCB and how it all works and the old appeals process and the new appeals process. Why go to the time and effort of producing such a document if people are encouraged not to go before the Appeals Commission? I would just like to know where we're coming from on that.

On the Appeals Commission as well, while we're there, Mr. Chairman, I have some concern. I have received recent correspondence in regard to the Appeals Commission and a perceived apprehension of bias by a party that deals with the Appeals Commission on a routine basis. This party would be an advocate. Certainly, in section 11 of the WCB act "the Minister is responsible for the Appeals Commission." That was acknowledged in question period about a month ago in the House. But I'm concerned about the issue of confidence in the whole appeals process. This issue I don't believe is isolated. Other advocates are also expressing the same concerns. They maintain that there are errors in jurisdiction and/or application of policies, and these always occur to the detriment of the injured worker.

There's one specific Appeals Commission hearing chair mentioned here, and that would be Mr. Otterdahl. This is of huge concern, and I'm quoting again here from this correspondence: on several occasions we have objected to Bruce Otterdahl chairing a hearing; we believe that there is a body of evidence which shows that a panel chaired by Bruce Otterdahl issues decisions that contain errors in justice and/or application of policies; as a result reconsideration panels granted new hearings; a number of these new hearings resulted in the new panel issuing a total opposite decision, end of quote. Now, this is quite a serious issue, and I wonder what the minister is doing about it.

One solution to this matter that has been suggested in this correspondence would be to have the Ombudsman's office conduct a review and issue a report. They go on to say in here that there's a precedent for this type of action as a result of an incident at a Calgary WCB office. The minister at that time, in 1992, had the Ombudsman conduct a review and a public report on that matter. I'm wondering, in light of these allegations and to improve the confidence in the whole appeals process, if this minister at this time would not consider taking the initiative that was used by a former minister of labour in 1992.

I don't know how this whole appeals process is going to work out. I don't know if there are going to be any changes in the future on how we're going to appoint appeals commissioners and other individuals to the Appeals Commission. Certainly, there are restrictions and limitations in the WCB act in regard to those appointments. I have brought up that issue in the past with the minister, and I would like to know if we are going to be looking at any changes in how we appoint individuals to the Appeals Commission. It has been brought to my attention that previous employees of the WCB have gone on to work for the Appeals Commission, and I am of the understanding that that was not to happen because of the WCB act.

Now, with those questions I will take my seat and wait for the hon. minister's response. Thank you.

Mr. Dunford: I just want to address a couple of things that are coming out this afternoon. First of all, on the minimum wage I don't know if I've had an opportunity to put some of my thoughts into Hansard. Perhaps through question period I have, but this would be an excellent opportunity to of course do that.

I want to assure all of the members of this Assembly that I view minimum wage as a tool of economic policy, and as a tool of economic policy, then, I believe that what is inherently important are levels of unemployment. That being the case, there are some interesting situations that start to arise as one analyzes the material and especially when one looks at unemployment rates amongst young workers, and the definition of young worker would be between 15 and 24.

I think that as an answer to a question in question period I indicated that the correlation wasn't perfect, wasn't a 1.00, but there were indications that it would probably end up close to that. If you make a list just on a piece of paper and start at the top of the page, plug in British Columbia, for an example, with the highest minimum wage, and just go all the way down till finally you find Alberta down there at the bottom at $5.90, then what you should do is get the most recent Stats Canada numbers and start up at the top of the list with the province or territory that has the highest number of unemployed and just go right down the list. Then look at a third list and look at what province has the highest unemployment rate amongst youth, and you'll find B.C. would be right at the top, and just list it right down.

As you go across, you're going to find a tremendous correlation of those provinces, and I would indicate, then, to the hon. member that based on that evidence alone, I would rest a case on the minimum wage.

The anecdotes that people provide me with: oh, this person's been working at minimum wage for six months, five years, whatever it is. Just advise them: go down the street. There are all kinds of for-hire signs on the windows and the doors of Albertans. Have them look at newspapers. Have them understand that 80 per cent of the jobs that are available never show up in newspapers. Have them go knock on some doors. No reason for anyone to be working at minimum wage in Alberta. The fact of the matter is that if we look at the numbers of people that are on minimum wage in Alberta, at 1.1 per cent, I mean, we can scoop up those folks in a heartbeat into other areas and, might I say, more productive areas.

Now, I'm not here trying to preach that people leave the mom-and-pop shop at the corner to go and find other work if they like working at the mom-and-pop shop. But if they like working at the mom-and-pop shop for the $5.90 an hour, don't come and whine to me and have me try to give them an increase on the backs of the mom-and-pop shop. You know what? We're not going to do it that way.

Now, I don't disagree with some sort of mechanism to be put into place to review this on a periodic or even on an ongoing basis, but that'll have to be determined at another time. As indicated in my opening comments, currently as I stand here in front of you today there is no initiative that we have on our books right now to look at the minimum wage.

4:10

On the Appeals Commission side we have worked very hard to try to provide not only an independent tribunal, because many would argue, and I think successfully, that even before our ministry took the Appeals Commission inside our own shop, they were working in an independent fashion, but certainly the perception was not there. When you had an Appeals Commission that was tied so closely to the Workers' Compensation Board, whatever the reality was, it was being hampered by the very perception that an Appeals Commission constructed that way would not have the independence required for a modern and effective Workers' Compensation Board system.

So we made those changes. We took them into our shop to try to provide a better perception, then, of independence, and I think we're achieving that. We've got a way to go, but I think we're headed in the right direction. Some of our severest critics have now started to I think recognize, you know, that we're working very hard in trying to resolve those particular issues.

Now, I'm absolutely sure that the hon. member tabled the documents that he's referring to regarding MLAs appearing at quasi-judicial boards. I'm advised by colleagues of mine that perhaps there are some issues around natural justice as to whether a person that holds a political position in fact should be doing that. To my knowledge, even though there have been concerns that have been expressed – and perhaps coming out of this discussion today there's going to have to be some kind of a determination made by the government – I do not believe that I have instructed any of the quasi-judicial boards that are under my responsibility not to hear a situation if, you know, an MLA shows up to represent their constituent. I don't think I agree with it, but I don't know that I've ever said that an MLA cannot do that.

I think it's unwise. I think there are all kinds of ramifications that can happen, especially for the MLA, especially if the appeal that they're making is turned down. I mean, how does he live with that constituent? But, in any event, I believe that to be a decision until further definition from the people that I report to. Again, while I don't like it, I don't know that I've ever said that they couldn't appear. I don't know why they would listen to me anyway.

Appointments to WCB Appeals Commission. Now, this is one area where I have to admit to the hon. member that I consider myself to have failed. When we started to try to revise and modernize and streamline and all that other stuff the WCB system in appeals, I tried to remove the notion that appeal commissioners would have to be representatives of either employees or employers. I wanted the best people that were available, and if we needed 10 appeal commissioners, I cared less whether they all came from union ranks or they all came from teachers or business people or, you know, where they came from. I wanted the best people that were available.

We found that as we went around and discussed these proposed changes with stakeholders, we just could not get through on this particular point. There is still mistrust in the system. The employee representatives want to make sure they have their employee representatives on the Appeals Commission, and employers want to make sure they have employer representatives on the Appeals Commission. So we've proceeded in that fashion.

I don't like it. I think that all it does is perpetuate a confrontational type of arrangement within these quasi-judicial boards. I think it puts undue hardship on the person that has been appointed. Where are the loyalties? Sure, I can be appointed as an employee representative and I'm there to keep the interests of the employees in mind, but if the employee has no case, the utmost responsibility should be on a good decision on that particular case. Yet if there's somebody back somewhere in an employee group or an employer group that's simply adding up wins and losses, you know – I think it's a situation that could be done a lot better.

In any event, what we are doing as far as appointments are concerned is that I've instructed the chief appeals commissioner to develop a set of competencies, and we will publicly advertise positions for appeals commissioners. Those that qualify under those competencies will be further screened and prioritized and sent to me as the minister so that I can do my job in taking those pending appointments through the orders in council to then provide them with the authority to sit on an appeals commission board.

With that, Mr. Chair, I'll be ready for the next set of questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for the opportunity to join the debate on the budget of the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment. Before I begin, I would put on record that this minister and his ministry have done an outstanding job to provide service for many, many Albertans, especially for underprivileged Albertans, and for that I would like to thank him.

If I am going to stand here and list all the good things the minister and his ministry have done, I don't think there is enough time. I just want to make sure that that is on the record because next I'm going to focus on two weak areas of your ministry, and that doesn't mean that reflects badly on you or your ministry at all.

The first area I want to focus on is the WCB. This area is still a very troublesome area judging by the number of constituents who come and see me every week about their problems. For me it is a very, very complicated issue because we have a system where there is absolutely no accountability at all on the part of the WCB. When it comes to dealing with long-term injured workers, the WCB still follows a practice that they help these people for about two years and then they kick everybody off, and all of these workers have to try to prove their way back into the system.

4:20

For the small percentage of people who are successfully able to find their way back into the system, WCB just gives them back the money that they owed them in the first place. So there's nothing there to encourage the WCB to do the right thing. There's every incentive for the WCB to force everybody off to save money.

Very few people in our society realize that the WCB may be the only organization in our society that is not under the control of the government, that is not under the control of the employers, and that certainly is not subject to any court challenge at all. When you have that kind of power and you have nobody as your direct boss, it can easily lead to abuse.

I have helped many workers dealing with the WCB, and what I found was a very frustrating experience. One case that comes to mind was last year. I brought it to the minister's attention. I helped that injured worker for 15 months to deal with the WCB. When he first came to my office, he brought with him the medical discharge report from the Columbia rehab centre. On that report it said clearly that this injured worker couldn't stand for more than one minute, could not walk for more than one minute, and could not sit for more than six minutes.

At first I thought that it was a mistake by the WCB, so I assured my constituent that it could be taken care of. I wrote to the case manager, and the case manager wrote me back, and then we took that case through the first level of appeal. At that time it was the Claims Services Review Committee. The Claims Services Review Committee reviewed all the documents I sent to them, and then wrote on their decision paper that they deemed this person fit and able to return to work. They also put on there, knowing the restriction, that this man cannot stand for more than one minute, cannot walk for more than one minute, and cannot sit for more than six minutes. It was so unbelievable.

I took the case directly to the CEO of the WCB. I sat across the table from him discussing that case with him for two hours. He gave me a written response still quoting these numbers and then saying that this man was fit and able to return to work. Nobody in their right mind could come to that conclusion with those restrictions.

Because of that, I talked to the minister and decided to bring the question to the floor of the Legislature. Miraculously, only after that did the WCB bother to correct the record and send out a note saying that: we have checked it out; his restrictions are 10 minutes for standing, 10 minutes for walking, and 60 minutes for sitting.

That proves a very, very important point. Through those 15 months, regardless of this person's condition, the WCB was under the belief that his restriction was one minute sitting, one minute walking, one minute standing, but they ruled against him anyway. That's systematic right from the top, from the CEO down to the case manager. The restrictions that we had there did not have any influence at all on their decision. Because of that, more and more people today are coming to us and saying that when the WCB has a monopoly and is unaccountable, it equates to a disaster, that injured workers, especially long-term injured workers, have nowhere to go.

A few years ago I brought to the House, to the Legislature, a piece of legislation, a private member's bill, and I believed it could solve the problem. We have to open up the system. We have to allow competition there to ensure that injured workers have a choice, that the workers have a choice of who they want to take their insurance with. That is the only way we can take that out of our hands. Today, even though we say it's arm's length from us, we're still morally responsible for it because we gave the WCB the monopoly, and the injured workers in our society have nowhere to go.

This ties very neatly into the second subject I'm going to discuss today; that is, the area of AISH. As we all know, AISH is a program that we set up in 1994, the assured income for the severely handicapped of Alberta. This program is there to provide financial and health benefits for the small percentage of our population who are severely handicapped and cannot work.

We haven't seen any increase to the financial benefit paid to these people since 1994. This is almost 10 years ago. This bothers me greatly because over the last 10 years inflation has gone up. The cost of living has gone up. The cost of housing especially in Calgary, where I come from, has gone up significantly over the last 10 years. So the financial assistance that was okay 10 years ago becomes relatively inadequate today.

However, if you look at the total budget, the total amount that we do spend on AISH, there is a significant increase each and every year. The problem that the minister mentioned earlier is that the rapid growth rate of the AISH program is much faster than the population growth rate in Alberta. Part of that, I suspect, is because there are many of those people who are on AISH today who should be on WCB. Some of the long-term injured workers who were denied WCB benefits in fact ended up on AISH, and this poses a very interesting dilemma because under the same watch of the same minister we have one person who is classified as fit and able to return to work by WCB and at the same time that same person is deemed as severely handicapped by his ministry.

Under one minister, under one ministry, should we allow this kind of conflicting information to exist? Can we say that both agencies are correct? Can we say that AISH is correct in deeming this person severely handicapped or that WCB is correct when saying that this person is fit and able to return to work? You know, one of them has to be wrong.

If we can get those people who theoretically speaking should be looked after by the WCB back to the WCB and stop the WCB from off-loading their responsibility onto the backs of the taxpayers of Alberta, maybe we can free up the resources to help the people who are on AISH today to see their benefits go up.

Mr. Chairman, when I raise these issues, I realize that they are very, very complicated issues, and this minister has tried to do more than many other people that I have seen in the past. So I feel that it's a little bit unfair to sound like I'm criticizing him, but it is not. These are just the facts, and these are very, very important facts because they affect the people who are the most vulnerable in our society, the long-term injured workers, those people who are on the verge of losing everything that they have: their family, their house, their own health, and sometimes even their own lives. So I feel obliged to speak out on their behalf because without people doing that, who will look after these people?

The same thing for AISH clients. These are people who are severely handicapped. They cannot go out and find employment. They are not bums; they are not lazy. I would applaud any effort we can make to find more money to help these people

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Dunford: Well, thank you very much, and thank you to the member. This type of government style that we have would not work if we didn't have constructive criticism, constructive coaching coming from wherever it should arise. Certainly, I acknowledge the difficulties that the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose has had, especially in the anecdotal evidence that was presented on that particular case. I don't know whether anybody would be consoled by this, but perhaps he will be to some extent. I don't know how many hours we have spent on that particular case. It's one of those that just doesn't seem to fit into some sort of easy resolution, so it will be ongoing.

I'm pleased to report to not only the hon. member but to others here in the House that those kinds of cases really are reducing. Ten and 11 years ago, when many of the members here in the House were first elected and came up here and started to deal with constituent concerns, there was a real serious issue around workers' compensation in this province. There were huge bodies, advocacy groups that were being formed working against the Meredith principle of workers' compensation, on which the Alberta compensation system is based, and I think it was in jeopardy. I think it really was.

There were calls then for privatizing a compensation system. Periodically there still is support, but with some of the recent situations that have happened in jurisdictions where workers' compensation has been privatized, there would be a cause, then, to question that support.

There's no question about the WCB system being a monopoly situation, but in most cases, by most standards of measurement I believe that you could call it a benevolent monopoly, and one that is truly working in terms of the provisions of WCB. They were simply that in place of the ability to sue an employer when a workplace incident happened that led to an injury or to a fatality, employers would collectively provide, then, a system that would do two things: one, it would take care of the injury, and then, secondly, it would provide rehabilitation to get the worker back to work or back into the workplace if they were no longer able to do their previous work.

One of the psychological issues that we deal with on a constant basis in this area is that when a worker suffers severe trauma and then once they're over that and they're in the rehabilitation area, quite often we run into cases where they want to make whole again. They want to be back to, you know, where they were previous to the incident, when they were 10 feet tall and bulletproof. With some of these injuries, Mr. Chairman, that's just not going to happen. They will never ever, ever be the same again, so the relationship then becomes a very delicate one as to what is the meaning of that Meredith principle in terms of getting them back into the workplace.

I mean, there are people there that are hired and trained and all that type of thing to do that, and it's not my position to make those kinds of decisions. But in terms of questioning the accountability, I have to be held accountable to some extent. I can't off-load the responsibility that the minister has to see that an act, you know, is being administered, so there's some accountability that way.

Certainly, the Lieutenant Governor in Council appoints the actual members of the board of directors of WCB. Now, here again we get into one of these areas where there shall be members representing employers, there will be members representing employees, and there will be members representing the public, so we have this confrontational kind of situation that could develop with the appointments. But as far as I can tell, with the tremendous job that the previous minister did in this portfolio and the job that I've tried to emulate, you know, we have a board that is functioning as a board of directors should be.

They've tightened up some of the financials. They've moved away from subsidizing employer assessments just because we had a bull market, as we did through the late '90s, when injury assessments were allowed to fall below the actual level that they should have been based on injury, so it was hiding the true fact here in Alberta that Alberta was a more dangerous place to work in than what one would ordinarily think in comparing WCB assessment rates. That has all changed. We no longer allow subsidization by an investment portfolio to impact on the WCB assessment. An industrial sector, you know, a sector that's covered by WCB, must pay the assessments that are indicated by the injury rates within that sector.

This is another reason, by the way, that every member in this House should be supportive of health reform. Not only Progressive Conservatives but Liberals and representatives of the NDP should be supportive of this area because the injury rate is clogging up the system.

Part of the difficulty we're having with increasing WCB costs in a time when the injury rate is actually going down is – well, there are two reasons for it. The primary reason is, first of all, an incredible increase in the cost of drugs that are used to work on the injuries and, secondly, the wait times. People cannot get into the system without WCB starting to take, now, extraordinary methods to provide for treatment of injury and rehabilitation. As a matter of fact, they now contract for time in operating suites in the Leduc hospital and have had a tremendous improvement in reducing the time it takes for a WCB claimant to receive the kind of orthopaedic attention that they're requiring.

One thing that intuitively one would believe, just as the Member for Calgary-Montrose does, is that if you have people that are being kicked off WCB, they're going to end up on AISH, and that's probably quite true if it turns into a severe handicap. I want to indicate to the hon. member that I, as a matter of fact, in my first term and the first couple of years in my second term was quite public about how I thought that inaccurate decisions on injuries within WCB were in fact off-loading the situation onto taxpayers, that we were then supporting income through our AISH program.

So when I became the minister, I had the opportunity to try to do something about it. One of the things that we did, then, is that we commissioned a study to try to track as best we could the names – and there were some privacy issues, but we had to try to work around those, and I don't think we violated anybody's privacy. In any event, we tried to use what information we had through AISH and correlate that with the information that was available to us through WCB.

Again, not having the study in front of me, after the study of an incredible number of cases in the databases that were available to us, it was a very small percentage of AISH cases that we could relate back to work injury. Even if we could relate it back to the fact that the person may at one time have been on WCB, we then immediately ran into that clash of jurisdiction: you know, was this disabling condition now a result of a previous work injury, or was something else involved? So we weren't able to draw any clear conclusions on that, but that's something that with the health information now as we advance in technology, it will be worth while to take a look again on a periodic basis.

I do agree with the member in that sense. If a person is unable to work and the reason for it is because of an incident that happened in the workplace leading to that injury and that disability, then it ought to be the employers of this province that are funding that person, you know, back to work or for the rest of their lives, if that's what the case is, and not off-loading to the backs of taxpayers through either Alberta Works or AISH.

To gently correct the member if I can – because after all he did say extremely nice things about me, and I want to maintain that level of co-operation – AISH was formed in 1982. It's gone through some revisions and that sort of thing over that period of time, and I believe that the last increase in the AISH program was 1999. In any event, he's quite right. It's been a long time since we've increased the income levels in AISH, and it's something now that under the legislation we have to do this fall.

You know what? I think there's justification for looking at income levels in this area. Many of the 32,000 people that we have on AISH do not have assets. They don't own a car. They don't own a house. They're in shelter situations and sometimes shared accommodation. They're trying as best they can to get by. Yes, the question is there: can you get by on $850 a month? Unfortunately, as the member pointed out, we've had tremendous increases, actually, in the AISH budget line item. We're now up to $393 million that we're spending in that area, but again to reaffirm what the member has said, we have found in the past and currently it's still happening that the AISH caseload is increasing faster than the demographics.

Now, in case people reading Hansard wonder what the demographic is, basically it's increasing faster than the normal growth that we're seeing within the population. So something is happening there, and we have to find out what that is.

The other thing, and again the reason for NDP and Liberal support for health reforms with the government, is that tremendous increase in medical costs. That's what's eating the lunch of the AISH budget, and that's what's holding us back from looking at various things that we could do within the AISH program.

Before I leave it and just in case AISH doesn't come up again this afternoon, I want to say that the other thing we need to look at with AISH is whether or not we've got it right. What happens now is a person comes and applies for AISH funding, and of course there are all kinds of criteria, and I'm not going to object to the criteria. They actually have to become eligible from an income standpoint for AISH, and then, even if it's just a dollar or something, they'll get a medical card. But many benefit plans are indexed to a consumer price index or something, so we have many, many people in Alberta that are actually not eligible for AISH even though they're severely handicapped because their income might be a dollar or $5 or a hundred dollars over the allowed AISH income entry level. It's a rhetorical question here in the Assembly today, but it's going to be a question that will be put on the agenda when we have our formal AISH review this fall.

We've got it the wrong way around. What we should be looking at is: does a severely handicapped person need help with the medical issues that they have, having access to a medical health plan? Once that's stabilized, then let's look and see: well, now, what do they need for income? So I think there's a major, major revision that we need to at least analyze in this review this fall.

I think I got myself off on a small digression, and I want to come back to it in case AISH doesn't come up again. I talked about the people that really had nothing and that they probably needed some more income support. A good way to pay for that, ladies and gentlemen of the House, would be to look at the basic unfairness of the income support program under AISH. When you have somebody that can own a house, can own a vehicle, can own a second vehicle if it's been remodified to fit the disability of that person and when they could have $99,999.99 of cash in a mattress where they're not getting any income from it, basically, then, they could stand side by side with that person who has nothing – has nothing – and the two of them are going to get the same income. There's a basic unfairness to this program, and we need to get that resolved.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Rising as I am at nearly the end of the debate, there are advantages to it. Most of the questions have been asked, and the minister has addressed some of them at greater length than others. So there are advantages to it, and the disadvantage, of course, is that the time remaining is short. The minister may not have the time to answer the questions that I will have, and I'll have to work hard to frame questions that don't run the risk of repeating what has already been asked.

Since the minister was, before he just sat down, talking at some length about the AISH program – and he did that just in case, he said, questions about AISH don't come up again – I am going to ask some questions about AISH.

The minister has now been in charge of this program and with the current responsibilities associated with his portfolio for over three years, since 2001. I have heard the minister several times, and I've asked him questions and other members in the House have asked him questions about the need to revise upwards the AISH income component of the assistance that needy Albertans receive. He's returned to this basic unfairness of the system.

It really boggles the mind to see a minister who has been in charge of this portfolio, who has the responsibility for this particular program for the last three years, repeat at the end of three years and three months, perhaps, that the system is unfair. It's just amazing. Is the minister unable to or is he simply not willing to act on it? My fear is that he is using this argument, which really is a fiction, it seems to me, to justify his procrastination on taking action on something that he really needs to take action on and take responsibility for it.

I'm not going to be engaging in, you know, back and forth just for the sake of it, but I do want to raise some questions about it. The minister recognized and said that the last time some increase in the income component of AISH assistance was made was in '99, and it was a very small one. Over the last 11 years the amount of money has remained more or less the same.

I just want to ask the minister to perhaps have his department do some calculating and examine the amount in real dollars – real dollars – let's say since '99. In '99 $855 was the amount that recipients were getting as part of their income assistance. Now, if $855 was barely enough in '99 to meet the subsistence needs of AISH recipients, what amount would be needed now given the inflationary costs to what this $855 is targeted for at this point? Or what's the real value of $855 in 2004 dollar terms? That's what I would ask the minister to perhaps think about, and if he knows the numbers, maybe he can share them with us.

Given the fact that $855 in '99 was there to meet the very basic minimum subsistence needs, how does he expect the same Albertans to wait perhaps another year or more before the minister's review, which he now says will start some time in October, is concluded – I don't know when, how long, what timelines he's giving for this review to happen – and then for him to again consider taking action following the report being received and due consideration has been given to its recommendations?

Given the tone of the minister's comments on the unfairness of the system that he's talking about, I frankly worry about what this review is going to be about. Is it going to in fact bring in new standards with respect to the AISH income entry levels? The minister said that they're already very strict, that not everyone who applies for qualifying for the AISH program does in fact get accepted in the program. So there are standards. The standards seem to be quite strict according to the minister himself.

Can I get some assurance from the minister that these standards will not be sort of tempered in a way in order to exclude people who need that assistance in terms of the standards currently in place? That's something that I would like the minister to please address if he can.

I listened to the appeal and the comments that the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose made, and I just want to encourage the minister to pay attention to it and not delay without any firm timelines his readiness to take action to provide added income assistance to people who are on AISH and who we know are the most vulnerable citizens among us. They're not volunteers. They're not people who can get in and out as they please. Before they enter, they do have to meet some very strict standards, as is the case now.

The minister did say, I think, in response to the question from the Member for Calgary-Montrose that very few WCB cases that are in limbo qualify for the AISH program or in fact are AISH recipients. The minister did say that it's a very small percentage. I wonder if the minister has any sort of general idea about what percentage they might be and if it's been declining. My impression from what the minister said was that people who may be injured at work and are awaiting the WCB decision – and in the meantime some of them become AISH recipients – their numbers in proportion as part of the total AISH recipients has been going down. I wonder if the minister would want to clarify that a bit to say at what proportion they might be at this time as we talk about it.

So if the minister would please give us some assessment of the real dollar value today of $855 compared to the '99 costs and dollar value at the time.

My second question to the minister is a simple one, an easy one. As part of the government's report, the MLA committee considering a review of the Labour Relations Code, the minister decided to reject one of the recommendations which had to do with bringing agricultural workers under the labour code. The minister has decided to reject that particular recommendation at a time when in fact there's a great deal of emphasis in the government to transform our agriculture in a way so that we add value to most of the things that we produce on a farm or on a ranch, which would mean, therefore, that more and more people who may not be covered currently by the labour code but need that coverage will be working in agricultural production and processing. WCB is one area, particularly for people who work in ILOs, intensive livestock operations. Their numbers, I guess, are increasing. I'm sure that most of them are not necessarily full-time workers, but regardless there are increasing numbers, perhaps, of Albertans particularly from rural areas who seek and find work in intensive livestock operations around the province.

The size and number and intensity of this kind of agriculture activity is growing. In fact, it's one of the key policies of the government to encourage and help in the growth of this sector of the agricultural production. Why is it, then, that in spite of the fact that the numbers of people who work in ILOs or in agricultural operations in general is growing – these are wage workers; these are not just workers who work as part of their family operations – we deny them coverage under the Labour Relations Code? Therefore, also, they're denied coverage under the Workers' Compensation Board.

So if the minister would please make some comments on the real reasons as to why he has decided to reject what I thought was a very reasonable recommendation made by a committee that he himself appointed from his colleagues in the backbenches of the government caucus.

My third question to the minister is with respect to the salting and MERFing issue. The minister did make a few comments on it a couple of days ago, I guess, in question period. I have here a news release from July of last year from the minister's office which draws attention to the MLA report, and the minister knows that the building trades are strongly opposed to any changes to present practices. The minister has received the report from the committee studying these issues. My question to him: what actions does the minister plan to take and, if so, within what kind of timelines?

A few other questions for the minister. The minister has also of course resisted any suggestions for an increase in minimum wage rates. I think that even last week or 10 days ago when he was in Banff, he continued to reject any suggestions coming in from some friendly sources to him that there's a need for Alberta to move forward on this. I just yesterday tabled a letter from three churches on the south side in Edmonton, churches representing more than 14,000 parishioners who are urging the government to take action to increase the minimum wage.

So there is a whole spectrum of voices urging the minister to change his position on the minimum wage. It's not just the New Democrats. It's not just the opposition side of the House that is calling on him to take action on this. People who are not engaged in partisan politics are the ones who are in fact in very large numbers convinced of the need to increase the minimum wage in order for the government to do its part so that the Albertan who works at the lower end of the wage levels can make a living wage.

The minister says that he is not going to listen to me on this.

Mr. MacDonald: The Minister of Energy says that this is dogma.

Dr. Pannu: Oh, the Minister of Energy – it doesn't surprise me – sees it as dogma. In Banff I guess he must have put some plugs in his ears when some of his own friends were calling for a similar increase, when social justice groups such as the people who have concerns about poverty, people who have concerns about the growing number of working poor in Alberta are asking the minister to do something so that those people who are willing to work and work hard should at least at the end of the week, at the end of two weeks, at the end of the month bring home a wage cheque that helps them pay their electricity bills and pay their gas bills, that thanks to the government's policies have gone up, and pay their health care premiums, which thanks to the government have gone up. In order to do that, the minister has to take action.

I don't know why he is digging in his heels. It's not a partisan issue. It's not something that New Democrats are the only ones asking the minister to act on and do some rethinking on. It is Albertans at large, from all walks of life who see problems with the minister's position on this minimum wage. It's the lowest in the country. It's the lowest in the country, and the people who spend most of their money, most of their wages, on basic needs – that is, shelter, food, housing, clothing – are the ones who are hit hard by this.

People who work at the minimum wage level or close to the minimum wage level are young people, are recent immigrants, immigrant women in particular. They are a very specific social segment of our working population who are disadvantaged by the minister's intransigent position in refusing to change the minimum wage. These are the people who need help. These are the people who would be helped. They would love to be independent. They don't want the government to supplement their low incomes. They want to be able to earn on their own and have pride in their independence.

The minister's policy, in my view, directly or indirectly in effect creates the dependence on government handouts to top up their incomes in order for them to survive, in order to pay their bills. The minister needs to see the reasonableness of the requests that are coming to him, the pressure on him on the need to change the wage.

So that's my question on the minimum wage. I urge the minister to rethink his position in light of what he's hearing, not only from me as leader of the New Democrat opposition but what he's hearing from church leaders, what he's hearing from community leaders, what he's hearing from people across party lines, including his own party.

One other question the minister would certainly like to, I think, answer as well. The minister some time ago promised that there would be an independent review of the long-standing, contentious WCB claims, and those outstanding claims pushed some people over to AISH, I must say. The minister is concerned about the pressures on the budget in the AISH area because the costs are going up and the numbers are increasing. One way in which you can perhaps stop that pressure is by resolving these contentious WCB claims so people get their claims settled and they can return to their lives which don't require turning to AISH.

My question to the minister: why has the minister not acted on this? Why has he changed his mind on establishing an independent review for the long-standing, contentious WCB claims?

I will conclude with this, Mr. Chairman. The minister has, I'm afraid, only a few minutes, but he can answer the questions in writing.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and ask a few questions as well. I realize that we're running out of time, so I'll try and be quite brief on this. I'll go through them quite quickly for the minister if he could answer some of these questions. If he can't answer them today, perhaps at a later time.

My first question, of course, is on the earned income tax credit, EITC, the alternative to raising the minimum wage that we keep hearing about today. As anyone who has studied the issue thoroughly knows, raising the minimum wage not only does not cure poverty; it may in fact increase it. Anyone who takes a responsible position and does their due diligence would not be recommending increases to the minimum wage, but they may well look at the idea of earned income tax credits.

I'm wondering if the minister's department has had a chance to look at the EITC concept, which basically takes the approach of reducing clawbacks for people who do go out and get employment and, in fact, reverses the flow there. It tops up their paycheques if they do work.

It's also known as the incentive to work program and is credited with lifting millions of people out of poverty in the United States, unlike raising the minimum wage, which we all know raises the unemployment rate among youth and helps bankrupt small business owners and does a whole bunch of other damage in society that we are aware of. I wonder if the minister could speak to that as well.

The AISH program I have some questions about. I know from my research that in 1980, when it was started, we had about 5,000 people on it. It cost about $25 million a year for that program. We've seen almost stratospheric growth in that program. It now has, as I understand, some 33,000. That's 5,000 to 33,000 people in that system. It's gone from $25 million, as I understand it, to something like $349 million. So the amount of money that this government has put into the AISH program has been almost perpendicular in terms of its growth, but because of the larger number of people getting onto the system, individuals are unable to see the increases that they need.

I'm wondering if you can talk about some of the explanation of this phenomenal increase in funding that we're putting into the AISH program and why it isn't trickling down to individuals. Maybe we have to look at screening the growth of the population of people on that program, and perhaps we have to look at some of the front-line people and how difficult it is for them to say no sometimes to people who maybe are not severely handicapped and what incentives and what performance benchmarks we might have in place of that.

The main thrust of my questions today, Mr. Chairman, is I'm really wondering – it's called Human Resources and Employment, and all the focus is on employees and employment, in my view, and I'm a little concerned about the human resources side and, in particular, a group of individuals in this province who I think are one of our greatest human resources, but they're not employees. They're in fact owners of small businesses. They are people who decided one day for whatever reason – perhaps they could not find employment; perhaps they could not get a job – to get off their duffs, go out there, and try and create a job for themselves, try and create a little business. So they started their own small businesses only to find out just how incredibly difficult it is to succeed in a small business. To me, those are some of our best and brightest people. They're self-reliant; they're trying to stand on their own two feet.

What do we do to help them? What do we do to help reduce the risks of failure when we have 4 out of 5 of them failing within five years? What are we doing to help them in terms of a social safety net when they do fail? I mean, the reality is that they don't qualify for unemployment insurance. They don't qualify for any of these programs, in fact, if their small business goes broke and they find themselves again unemployed, where they started. I'm just really concerned about what we do to help small business owners.

Just along that line, I recognize the tough job that the minister has here. I mean, there's just never enough money, way more demands than resources, and of course, you know, so many – I characterize them as socialist – kind of concepts looking at short-term gain and forgetting about the long-term pain attached to that, just so much focus on trying to solve short-term problems and what I call treating symptoms instead of the disease. Frankly, it makes it virtually impossible to focus on the cause and the cure of some of these problems when there's just so much demand to alleviate the short-term pain instead of solving the disease, as I say.

I recognize the tough job that the minister has on this, but I do want to kind of stress that if we're really going to solve some of these poverty problems in our society and some of these issues, we really do need to focus on helping people that maybe can't find a job: help them create a job, help them start their own small business.

We all know that most new jobs and most new wealth in our society comes from small businesses. In fact, almost all business is small businesses. Most new wealth and most new jobs come from small business, and we have 4 out of 5 of them failing – failing even in this province, the very best province in the country – in the first five years. I look at that and say: well, that's a success rate of 1 out of 5. What could we do if we could get that success rate up to 2 out of 5? Would that not double the new wealth creation in this province and double the new job creation in this province? What would that do towards solving poverty in this province as opposed to just handing out lots of money and paying people to sit home and taking away their incentives while at the same time some of our best and brightest are facing huge barriers and huge obstructions and huge risk in trying to succeed with their tiny little business, one-person companies that may then become two or three. It's really a terrible situation.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 p.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoons, I must now put the question.

After consideration of the business plan and the proposed estimates for the Department of Human Resources and Employment for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 4, 2004

8:00 p.m.

Date: 04/05/04

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

head: Committee of Supply

The Chair: I'd call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2004-05

Gaming

The Chair: I wonder if there are any comments or questions to be offered with respect to these estimates? The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to start the evening by introducing members of the Ministry of Gaming who are with me this evening and watching the proceedings. Norm Peterson is the deputy of the ministry, Marilyn Carlyle-Helms is the communications director, Lana Lougheed is the strategic services director, and Jeremy Chorney is my executive assistant. I would like to point out to the Assembly that what I lack in numbers is more than made up in quality. So four is really all I need for this evening.

I'm glad to be able to provide some information on Gaming estimates this evening, but, first, to put them into perspective, I'd like to take a moment to give the committee some context regarding what my ministry is responsible for. The Ministry of Gaming is made up of three essential areas: the Department of Gaming, the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, and the Alberta Gaming Research Council.

The Department of Gaming provides communication and strategic services support to the ministry and manages a number of lottery-funded programs. The Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, or AGLC, licenses, regulates, and monitors all gaming and liquor activities in the province. Finally, the Alberta Gaming Research Council is a broad-based group that provides advice on gaming matters both to the minister and to the Alberta Gaming Research Institute. I also have responsibility for the Horse Racing Alberta Act, and my ministry administers the Alberta lottery fund.

As has been my pleasure for the past three years, I'll review in detail with you today the Department of Gaming's estimates for 2004-2005, which total $165 million and which can be found starting at page 165 of the government and lottery fund estimates. Four per cent of this budget goes towards the costs to administer the department and the lottery-funded programs. The lion's share, 96 per cent, or nearly $160 million, to be precise, goes towards lottery-funded initiatives. This shows that we've got our priorities right.

The fact of the matter is that these numbers show only one thing, that Alberta's gaming and liquor industries are very well managed and continue to return tremendous benefits to Albertans. I'm sure that even the opposition would be able to agree with that.

I'd like to begin by highlighting some of the key areas for Gaming in the '04-05 year. The first and perhaps the most important is the Alberta lottery fund, which can be found both at page 165 and page 173. This year's lottery fund estimates quite clearly indicate that we've listened carefully to the priorities of Albertans and have directed lottery revenues towards those priorities.

Revenues from the Alberta lottery fund make a difference in the lives of all Albertans in two ways: through allocations to 13 specific ministries in support of public initiatives and through two of those ministries to foundations and grant programs to support volunteer and community-based initiatives. What this means is that lottery funds allocated to individual ministries are most often the responsibility of my colleagues to disburse according to the plans presented in this Assembly.

So you should have already heard how the ministers of Community Development and Infrastructure plan to invest lottery revenue into centennial initiatives, how the Minister of Innovation and Science plans to build the Alberta SuperNet, and how the Minister of Health and Wellness has put lottery dollars to good work by supporting AADAC. My job will be to discuss my ministry's lottery fund allocations, which total $160 million, and highlight some of the significant changes.

What hasn't changed in Gaming's lottery fund allocations is our request for continued funding for the ministry's two key grant programs: the community initiatives program and the community facility enhancement program. In the past these two programs have put millions of dollars of lottery revenue to good work in hundreds of communities throughout Alberta.

A few examples. Thanks to the Alberta lottery fund the Canadian Breast Cancer Foundation has $75,000 more to conduct breast cancer research. The Cardston district public library got a $125,000 contribution towards a new library, and the residents in Alberta Beach have a better playground for their children thanks to a $17,000 grant to their community league. If you want further details, of course, you can look at albertalotteryfund.ca for all of the excellent volunteer projects that received funding through these two programs.

We need to be able to continue funding projects of this nature and many others, Mr. Chairman. We plan to put $38.5 million into the community facility enhancement program and $30 million into the community initiatives program to do just that this year. I can't imagine any member here contesting that.

This budget indicates that $7 million is estimated to go to the charities that assist in the conduct of electronic bingo, or digi-bingo, and keno. First of all, I'd like to point out that all benefiting charities have been properly registered and their use of proceeds is thoroughly scrutinized to ensure that the funds are going to worthy causes. Secondly and most importantly, the $7 million allocated here is the money that we estimate the charities and the bingo halls will themselves earn through digi-bingo and keno. As such, these proceeds are generated through the commitment of the charities to fund-raise, and the proceeds just flow through the lottery fund and directly back to those groups. This is the first of four flow-through initiatives that I will describe this evening.

The second flow-through initiative is the racing industry renewal initiative. This initiative provides the support to the horse racing and breeding industry by returning to the industry a portion of the net proceeds from slot machines at racetracks. The other portion of the net proceeds is directed to other lottery-funded programs.

This initiative benefits the horse breeding industry specifically as well as the agriculture sector, and it brings good jobs to cities like Edmonton. For example, Northlands Park directly employs over 700 people each year through horse racing. These people, real people like Kim Dressler, a harness trainer and driver at Northlands Park, are helping to build strong urban communities by buying houses and paying taxes. Kim has said: I wouldn't have been able to buy my house last year if it wasn't for the slot machines helping to increase the purses.

Let's be clear. This is not a government handout. It's an arrangement that benefits the agricultural community, strengthens our urban communities, and along the way raises funds that assist local groups in their many worthwhile endeavours.

As you see in this year's estimates, the budget for this initiative is set to increase from $37 million to $45 million. Why? It's partly due to the possibility that a racing entertainment centre in Calgary could be licensed this year. It's also because revenues at existing racetracks have increased. As in all these flow-through arrangements if revenues are projected to increase, then the flow-through amounts go up as well.

8:10

The third flow-through is the NHL lottery tickets. Again, in case you need help reading the budget, this line item doesn't mean that we're giving away a $1.3 million taxpayer handout to the two professional hockey teams in Alberta. Albertans told us that they didn't want us to do that. What it does mean is that those Albertans who choose to play are able to buy lottery tickets to support their favourite NHL team. My favourite team, of course, is the one that made the playoffs and, I'm pleased to say, as we speak, the only Canadian team that is still very much there. The amount shown in these estimates, a total of $2.7 million, is the final amount of revenue expected to be payable to the teams from the sale of the last NHL lottery tickets.

I'd like to remind all the members that our commitment through this initiative was to offer Albertans this unique scratch-and-win ticket through to the end of this year's hockey season. The five tickets offered under this commitment has so far generated a combined total of over $5 million for the two teams. I'm pleased that we were able to support Alberta's teams in this unique way.

The final flow-through initiative in Gaming's estimates is the First Nations development fund. This program was transferred to Gaming from Community Development in October of '03. It's part of the First Nations gaming policy that was announced in January 2001 in support of the government's aboriginal policy framework. First Nations casinos are expected to provide direct economic and social benefits for First Nation people.

Under the policy 40 per cent of the slot machine proceeds from First Nation casinos is to be allocated for social, economic, and community development projects. This includes addiction programs, education, health, and infrastructure within First Nation communities. These funds cannot be used for capital, operations, or financing costs of gaming facilities or activities. The $4 million included in Gaming's 2004-2005 estimates is directly linked to the operation of one or more First Nation casinos. Just like the other flow-through arrangements the revenue has to be generated before the flow-through grants can be provided.

The last item in Gaming's estimates that I'll elaborate on is the increase in FTEs, full-time equivalents, for the upcoming year. Gaming's FTEs will increase from 39 to 42 this year. This increase reflects the additional staff needed to administer the First Nations development fund. Of course, these individuals will only be brought on board when we actually are required to administer and disburse funds throughout the First Nations development fund.

The final item I'd like to mention before taking questions is the statement of operations for the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission. The AGLC is treated like a commercial operation and, as such, is included in the government's fiscal reporting as a revenue item, which is net of operating costs. The AGLC does a tremendous job in its role of licensing, regulating, and monitoring the province's gaming and liquor industries. As a commercial operation they're able to do so in an uninterrupted fashion.

Lottery revenue from VLTs, slot machines, and ticket lotteries is expected to increase $104 million this year to over $1.1 billion. This reflects casinos and racing entertainment centres being built and expanded. It also reflects the expected growth in ticket lotteries. Again, this revenue is put entirely in the Alberta lottery fund. This reflects our commitment to Albertans to be transparent in how these funds are used.

Liquor revenue is expected to increase slightly to $560 million.

As you've heard, Mr. Chairman, our funding request is reasonable. We're simply trying to continue to operate in a straightforward, transparent, and fiscally prudent fashion and to play our part in making Alberta the best place to live, work, and visit. Albertans expect and deserve well-managed and regulated gaming and liquor industries. It's a simple request, and I'd encourage the hon. members to support it.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Thanks for the opening remarks from the minister. I join the minister in welcoming members of his staff who have appeared here tonight to assist him.

I will start by looking at page 166 of the estimates. I notice that under vote 1 the ministry support services is up by it looks like a little under 7 per cent to me, and the lottery fund programs are also up by a similar percentage. Now, this is higher than inflation or a cost-of-living increase, if you'd prefer to think of it that way, so I'm seeking an explanation from the minister as to why those costs are above what we'd be expecting for cost of living. For example, we have a 3.5 per cent settlement, I think, with the unions. Sometimes that figures into it. So what's the explanation for the increase there?

On page 167 under vote 1.0.3, strategic services, we have an increase there from $1.226 million to $1.326 million, so $100,000. My understanding is that strategic services is responsible for policy, business planning, performance measurements, financial planning and co-ordination for the department. This $100,000 is an over 8 per cent increase from the previous year. So, again, I'm seeking an explanation and some detail on what that extra money is being used for or why the request has come through.

Next, I'm looking at page 169, vote 3.0.7, which, indeed, is the racing industry renewal, and it's up $8 million from last year. The minister has already explained that that's anticipated revenues from possibly a new racing entertainment centre opening in Calgary. Could we get some details on that, please? When I inquired back a bit – I guess it would be in January – I had some trouble getting information about where this is anticipated to be; whether it's a new facility or, if attached to an existing facility, which facility; how many machines are expected to be in it; what's the amount of money that's expected to be generated from it; et cetera. Are you expecting the entire $8 million to come from that one location, or are you expecting that to break down with some increases from the other racing entertainment centres and then the largest chunk of it to come from this potential Calgary site?

I'm also interested in this racing industry renewal. That's flowing from the June 2001 requests. When I look at what's coming out of I guess it's the 2002 report, the most recent one from Horse Racing Alberta, what's expected as revenue here just continues to increase and increase and increase. I'm wondering how far the ministry or strategic services or whoever does the planning here is expecting this to increase.

We've watched it go from $13.2 million in 2002; in 2003, $33.6 million; in 2004, $40 million, depending on whose numbers you're looking at. One of them is on calendar year; one is on fiscal year, so they're always a little bit different, which I asked about in a written question the other day, saying that these numbers are hard to figure out when they're always coming to us completely separate. But obviously they're continuing to increase to a healthy amount. Is there a ceiling expected? Is there some point at which the department will step in and go: okay; that was as far as I expected you to get; you've now gone over that?

For example, in 2004 it goes well above the, again, fiscal year, $37 million, calendar year, $40.2 million. What if it goes to $50 million? Does the department step in and go: okay; that's enough? Or it goes to $55 million, which is exceeding even what is anticipated for 2006. Is there any point at which the department says: "Okay; that's it. That's all we agreed to give you. You've exceeded that. We're going to take that money and do something else with it"?

What is the planning over that initiative? Is there a top limit, and if there is, what is it, and how much more do you expect this to increase? I'm looking at $53.3 million in 2006 having gone in essentially five years from $13.3 million. It's a substantial amount of money for that one industry.

Okay. Still on page 169. The other initiatives, which is vote 3.0.12: last year, $13.088 million, this year $15.088 million. The minister, when I questioned him in Public Accounts, noted that this is the fund where you can't apply to it. There are no criteria for successful recipients or no criteria that are available anyway. It dispenses larger amounts of money than are available to be dispensed through the other two benefit programs in this ministry, which are the CFEP grant – top amount there is $125,000 – and CIP, $75,000, so we're looking at substantial amounts of money. It's larger than $125,000.

The minister also mentioned that often there's a multiyear commitment here for very large projects. So could we get a list, please, of the multiyear projects that are falling into this funding of $15 million? What projects are carrying over, and where are they? Are we in year 2 or year 3; are we beginning them, starting them, or in the middle? Also, how much those are anticipated to be.

Now, part of what the minister was saying when we looked at this other initiatives or discretionary fund was that how much money might be required couldn't be anticipated. So I'm wondering how much is already committed coming into this year from those other multiyear projects. Then second to that are other projects that are not multiyear, but you know that you are going to pay that money out.

I'm also interested in whether this other initiative fund breaks down by constituency. You know, is there an allocation that each constituency has access to X amount of money? If so, I certainly never had that information passed on to me. Is that information passed on to anyone else? How do people know? To approach the minister, one presumes. Again, during Public Accounts I had asked for what was the decision-making process? Who makes the decision that X group gets a certain amount of money?

You know, one of my favourite theatres, Vertigo Theatre in Calgary, was a recipient of a series of grants through this. Who decided that they literally won the lottery and they were going to get support for their project there? Who brought that forward, and how did they know to bring it forward under that initiative, or did they just come to the minister and say: I'm looking for help; where would it be? The minister says: this is the place; apply here. Well, you can't apply, so how does that work? I'm thinking of some initiatives in my constituency that I'd like to bring forward, and I'd like to do it properly, and I'd like to be successful, obviously, so how do I do that?

On page 178 of the estimates under Revenue, the video lottery revenue. When we looked at the budget for '03-04, it was $603.244 million, and in fact the comparable forecast is less at $584 million. I'm wondering: it's going back up again in this budget year to $598.62 million. What were the reasons for the drop between the budget and the forecast in those VLT revenues? Is there something happening there? Is there a wave? Is there a trend that needs to be watched? Does the ministry know why that happened? Do they have an opinion on whether it may happen again this year?

Or maybe here's the answer. On the same page, then, page 178 of the estimates, the casino gaming terminals lottery revenue is up. The forecast was $461 million, which was in fact above what the budgeted amount was at $455 million, and it's being put in the budget for '04-05 at $509.487 million. That's a healthy increase. That's about $53.8 million. I'm wondering if the horse racing slots are in here or what money that is in particular and what opinion the department has on the $50 million increase. What's that ascribed to?

I did have a question indeed about the FTEs, and the minister has answered it, explaining that the staff would administer the First Nations fund. Now, that's interesting because my impression of the money coming out of the aboriginal casinos was that a lot of it was going to be sort of set off to the side and distributed by going into the various funds that were being established and for the use and good works of the aboriginal people in Alberta. I'm interested that the staff would come through the Department of Gaming and not be paid out of the profits, in effect, of what's coming out of the casino. Could the minister comment on that?

Perhaps that is going to happen. There was a particular formula, and maybe I could get the minister to repeat it because it broke down differently than usual. It used to be 15 per cent to the proprietor and 15 per cent to the group and 70 per cent back to the government, and the breakdown with the aboriginal casinos is quite different. There's a fair amount that, in fact, stays with the casino, so I'm interested whether these FTEs will be paid out of that fund or whether they're paid out of the administration for the department.

I'm just going to switch to the business plan book, strategic priorities on page 220. Priority 5 is dealing with the First Nation casinos and "opportunities for gaming facilities on First Nations land and benefits for First Nations communities." I've asked this next question a number of years in a row. What efforts or what steps has the ministry taken to protect itself or inoculate itself from the situation that developed in Ontario, where there was an agreement negotiated between the provincial government and the aboriginal peoples around casino proceeds? When push came to shove, the monies were not turned over to the province, and they all ended up in court.

I believe that court case has now worked its way through the system and the province did lose the gaming revenue when the First Nation decided to keep it. I know that the government has gone to some efforts here to negotiate an agreement, but what else? Is there anything else in place to so-called protect the investment? I mean, strictly speaking they're on aboriginal lands, and we don't really have much to say about what goes on there. So we're entirely at the goodwill, if you will, of the First Nations upon which the casino is situated.

I'd like an update on that situation and what other plans or steps have been taken there. In fact, what is the interpretation by the Gaming minister of the – I'm actually not remembering a specific ruling, but that court case has been up so long there must have been a ruling. So if it hasn't happened, let me know, and if it has, what's the opinion there?

Priority 6 on page 220 is talking about "managing the Alberta Lottery Fund and increase awareness so that Albertans understand how the Fund benefits volunteer groups and public and community-based initiatives." What I'm noticing here is that when I start to add the numbers up, in fact it looks like $85.8 million go to volunteer and community-based programs in the entire Ministry of Community Development and $68.5 million go to CFEP and the community initiatives program. Then when I look at the amount of money that is distributed through the rest of the lottery fund, well, I mean it totals $1.17 billion dollars. So a significant amount of money is going into the departments

Part of my question here is: who decides? For example, I note – and I'm switching back and forth; I'm on pages 172 and 173 of the estimates book – that under Agriculture, item 2, agriculture initiatives, they're getting $11.62 million. Who requests that, or who decides that they get that amount of money?

Surely all things that government does are public good or public benefit. So how is the minister – what were the words he used? Allocated to ministries to support public initiatives. Who's deeming that something is not a public initiative and therefore doesn't get lottery dollars? Or, indeed, are there private initiatives that the government is involved in that would not be eligible for lottery funds?

You know, the minister and I have had this tug-of-war of words over a number of years now, but I still find it very interesting, and I know why the government did it. The amount of money that's essentially paying for regular government programs – in fact, the very first year that it happened, I spent a lot of time pointing out that the program was paid for out of general revenue previously, but now it's been transferred over and paid for under the lottery fund. So it wasn't a new program that was created at all. It's just a matter of transferring where it's being paid from. But this interesting definition that the minister always uses of public and private and what goes on his list that adds up to the numbers that he says are most interesting to me, and I'm always interested in seeing exactly what the details are on that.

In the annual report on page 45 performance measurement 4 under this core business establishes the "percentage of Albertans who are satisfied with how the Alberta Lottery Fund revenue is being used." It looks like it slipped from 73 per cent to 70 per cent, and I'm wondering if the minister has a comment on that.

We also have under the AGLC – and again this is the Auditor General's report on page 131. The "AGLC staff use contract management policies developed in 1992 under the Alberta Liquor Control Board . . . policies are outdated and not sufficiently comprehensive for the AGLC's current business operations." For example, the Auditor General indicated that there's no "formal process to ensure contractors comply with the terms and conditions of the agreement" and that the "AGLC did not sign contracts for . . . consulting services," nor did they "require consultants to confirm that their interests . . . do not conflict with the interests of the AGLC."

I'll have to return later. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks very much. The hon. member has asked for some detail with respect to support services information contained at page 167 of the estimates. The manpower budget associated with this is $1.3 million, which is 58 per cent of the program budget of $2.3 million. There are 17 FTEs associated with this particular item. Supplies and services and other costs are budgeted at $952,000, which is 42 per cent of the program budget. There's a $145,000 increase. The 7 per cent increase reflects salary increases and increased support costs associated with increased program delivery. Although this program provides overall support and direction to the ministry, it uses about 1 per cent of the budget.

With respect to strategic services, also at page 167, I can advise the hon. member that the budget of $1.3 million is about 59 per cent of the program's budget of $2.3 million. The manpower budget is $507,000 for salaries and benefits, 38 per cent of the office's budget of $1.3 million. It has 8 FTEs: the director, four managers, a research assistant, and two support staff. The balance of $819,000 is budgeted for normal office costs and supplies, contracting of professional services, service agreements, which are the ACSC, and the department's share of common government-wide information management systems, which are IMAGIS and ARTS, AGent, and ExClaim, all of which comprise 62 per cent of this element's budget.

The hon. member asked a question with respect to the racing industry renewal initiative at page 169. The principal increase that has been built into this item reflects the prospect of a racing entertainment centre being created and operational in Calgary in this budget year. Calgary does not have a racing entertainment centre at this particular point in time. The arrangement relative to Calgary is in connection with the casino located at the Stampede grounds, and it has 206 slots. A proposed new racing entertainment centre in Calgary, which would be contiguous with and part of a race track, would have 500 slots and would involve 51 and two-thirds per cent going to Horse Racing Alberta under the terms of the racing industry renewal initiative agreement.

The arrangement relative to the casino sees only 36 and two-thirds per cent go to the racing industry renewal initiative because the casino is a charitable casino, and the other 15 per cent that would otherwise make up the 51 and two-thirds goes to the charities.

So the assumptions that were built into this particular budget contemplate, one, a racing entertainment centre for a portion of the year that would have more slots and which would generate a higher percentage. There may be other assumptions associated with that, and to the extent that there are, we'll respond in writing to that point. Generally speaking, I can advise the hon. member and other hon. members that questions which are asked which I do not respond to verbally will receive the courtesy of response in writing.

There was a portion of the questions with respect to the racing industry renewal initiative that related to: where's the end point in all of this? At this time I can tell the hon. member that there's a racing entertainment centre in Edmonton and Lethbridge and Grande Prairie. Horse Racing Alberta wishes to establish a long-term 10-year racing licence for Calgary, which would see a racing entertainment centre go in there.

There has been discussion by Horse Racing Alberta of another B track. B tracks are located at Lethbridge and Grande Prairie. At some other location in Alberta they've talked to, for example Red Deer, and ultimately weren't successful in proceeding, but there may be one, perhaps two other B tracks, according to Horse Racing Alberta, that might make sense from a horse racing perspective in the province. So that is the extent of the plans as I understand them.

The agreement relative to horse racing is that the Calgary and Edmonton racing entertainment centres would each have 500 slots if they proceeded, and the B track racing entertainment centres, if they perform, can have a maximum of 99. Lethbridge has 99; Grande Prairie has 35. It is something that is earned, so if another B track were granted, one would have to determine the market, but they might start at something less than 99 and proceed to 99 if, in fact, they can demonstrate that there is a demand for an increased number of machines.

That essentially is the environment in which racing entertainment centres would proceed, and what is required from the horse racing perspective is that a long-term racing licence is granted. Either an A or a B track are the two types of licences at this point in time that I'm aware of that are associated with this.

Government's commitment to the horse racing industry is to provide them with funds with a view to allowing them to stabilize and grow horse racing in Alberta. They have a commitment to prepare and file through this ministry in this Assembly their business plan on an annual basis so that we can determine what their plans are relative to the industry.

That business plan, like business plans of government, will have key performance indicators built into it that will assist us in determining what are appropriate measures of success within horse racing and breeding and, as time goes on, measure whether or not the money which is part of this particular program is in fact achieving the results. So the object is to over time determine that the Horse Racing Alberta folks are in fact doing the job given that they have been provided the tools of financing through this particular initiative.

There were some questions with respect to other initiatives, and we'll provide you with the specifics that you asked for relative to carry-overs from year to year and so on and so forth. But just to recap and as I've indicated to this hon. member previously, the initiative is one which allows us to react to unplanned or new initiatives that are identified during the year and which are priorities within the communities and within the regions of the province and often which are of amounts of money that cannot be accommodated within the scope of any of the programs that we fund, whether it be within Gaming or Community Development or elsewhere in the provincial government.

So that is the general gist of this particular program. You can do a search at albertalotteryfund.ca, and you will find under other lottery-funded programs those groups which have received funding, so the information is available at that web site. I can tell the hon. member that, so she can do a search.

Using the Vertigo example of process, Vertigo, like many groups, approached the government because they're looking for provincial funding. Most groups are familiar with CFEP and familiar with CIP, but they come and talk to government because they have a large ask. It's a logical place to come. Whether they have any understanding of the limitations of funding or not, I can't say. But they tend to end up in government, and as Minister of Gaming I end up seeing many of them because ultimately they are referred to me by people for reasons which I can only guess, but I assume that it's because there are lottery dollars and they assume that there's some money available within the ministry. The only money that's ever available, really, outside of programs is this particular initiative.

Vertigo, as you will recall, was in the process of becoming homeless. They had a very well-developed option for a new home, they had plans that were very far along as far as architectural concept, they had a firm commitment from the landlord, and they had significant individual funding in place when they approached us relative to what they were doing. What they said was something to the effect that it was essential for them to be successful that someone stand up and make a commitment of a substantial amount of money. Today, admittedly, I don't remember the numbers, but it might have been a couple of million dollars or $3 million or $2 million.

In funding, my experience is that most groups will tell you that somebody has to go first, and if somebody goes first, it really makes it very helpful for them to approach others. So they can approach the federal government and the city and private members of our community for additional funding saying that the province is behind us. In any event, that was the situation with respect to Vertigo.

I can say at the outset that I'm responsible in the end result for all of the decisions. I'm the one that signs off the approval. Because this particular initiative is under my ministry, I'm responsible for everything that happens within that particular program.

It was something that had an urgency to it but had incredible leverage in terms of the money that was met by other governments – I think the federal government came up with a similar amount of money, and the people of Calgary came up with a large sum of money also – and they were able to go forward quickly to spend that money and create a home for themselves and do a very good job in adding to the arts and culture life of downtown Calgary.

That is a typical situation. They come up, and if we didn't have a program like this, we wouldn't be able to address any of those particular asks at all. As I've indicated to the hon. member previously, there are far more asks than there is money available, but that is a typical situation. Most of them are one-off like that, and each of them will be slightly different than the next as a result.

Some questions were asked with respect to VLT revenue on page 178. It was specifically with respect to the year '02-03. I think what I'll do is I'll have a written response. I don't remember that year as clearly as I should relative to the reasons for the decrease, but we had an older system at that particular point in time that was more prone to downtime as a result of repair. It was around 10 years old. I'll provide you with the detail on that, hon. member.

With respect to the casino gaming terminals or slot machine lottery revenue line, the increase there has something to do with the increased number of machines. Yes, it would include the racing entertainment centre slot machines; it would include the casino slot machines. We have certain casinos which are expanding or have expanded, and that is built into this. That's existing casinos, and it would also include new casinos that are contemplated in this particular budget. So that would be the principle reasons for an increase.

There were some questions with respect to the First Nations development fund and the First Nations gaming policy. The First Nations gaming policy included an agreement with respect to split, which essentially had 40 per cent of the slot revenue flow through the Alberta lottery fund into the First Nations development fund, and that was to go to the host First Nation, 30 per cent, and to other First Nations, 10 per cent. The First Nations development fund agreement, which has now been transferred to Gaming, is the vehicle through which that will be managed, and further particulars with respect to that we'll provide in writing.

With respect to our relationship from a jurisdictional point of view with the First Nations and Gaming, our position is that the province has total jurisdiction with respect to gaming on First Nations lands. I believe there's a Supreme Court of Canada case which supports that position. The name of the case I don't remember, but we'll provide particulars of that for you. We have a situation where the First Nations have accepted that. We have our licensing process that is being followed by First Nations that are pursuing licences.

With respect to protection, all of the slot machines are controlled through a centralized system, and we control that centralized system, so, you know, if there is a problem, then the machines don't operate.

The other thing is that all of the money ultimately finds its way into specific accounts.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. And thank you for the responses and the promise to provide further detail that the minister provided.

If I can just go back to the racing renewal initiative, looking at page 58 from the Alberta Horse Racing Industry Review, the minister talked about some, you know, people and gave examples of individuals who were directly benefiting from this, and I'm wondering if he can provide us with a firm number; for example, the number of individuals who are able to take advantage of the breeders' incentives that are listed. For this year they're listed at $1.8 million, and it goes up to $2.5 million in 2005, $2.7 million, et cetera.

There's also an additional program that says that there's a breeders' $1,000 incentive program. I'm presuming that the linkage is obvious here, but I shouldn't presume, so I'll ask: how many breeders are involved in that program and are able to take advantage of it or are expected to take advantage of it? Again, that one is increasing. Last year, 2003, was $1.03 million, this year is $1.19 million, and then that particular program disappears off the map.

I would also like to get a breakdown, please, of Horse Racing Alberta. Purses, track/ATN operations and infrastructures I think is what's being listed there. "Horse Racing Alberta expenditures on purses, racetrack infrastructure . . . racetrack operations/minor capital and share of VLT revenues from ATN/OTBs." So if I could get specifics. It's giving me some numbers here, but this document was written some time ago, and I'm looking for updated numbers on how that happens.

And I have not been able to get the synchronization of numbers that I referred to in the written question a couple of days ago, so I'm looking to the minister, who, I expect, can get this sort of information, to help me break it down. The main problem, of course, is that these numbers are always different when I look at them. Horse Racing Alberta always produces by the calendar year. The most recent one that's out is the 2002 annual review. Well, we're now in the fifth month of 2004, so I'm expecting that there will be a 2003 that comes out soon, but the numbers never work because what is in the department numbers, which is a fiscal year, and what turns up in Horse Racing Alberta never jive, which is the information I've been looking for from the minister.

I can't make these numbers work because I don't know how they're breaking down by month. If I knew that, then I could add on January, February, March, and I'd be able to do this, but I can't. You know, I don't think that that obfuscation is deliberate. Nonetheless, it is troublesome for me, so I'm looking for the minister to provide that.

Can the minister give me the figure on how much is allocated for operations for Horse Racing Alberta as well? We're in the fifth month now of 2004, but when can we be expecting the 2003 report from Horse Racing Alberta?

Now the community initiatives program. I'm referencing again the estimates book, page 169, vote 3.0.3. We are now in the third year. It was announced in June of 2002. It indicated then that the program was $30 million a year for three years. I'm presuming that we are coming to the end of the program. The third year ends next summer. Do we have any plans to renew this? Would it be renewed at the same amount of money? Is there any possibility of returning to the community lottery board structure, in which the decision-making was more localized or regional? I think I also asked whether there would be considered an increase or any changes in the way the program has been structured.

Vote 2, page 168, Alberta Gaming Research Institute, Alberta Gaming Research Council. What studies are going to be conducted this year to examine the relationship between gambling addictions and the criminal acts to feed those addictions? I keep coming back to the minister with this one. We know that there's a connection, but we don't know how there's a connection. So where is the minister and the ministry in examining this?

I know that he's going to say, well, these two groups operate at arm's length, and whatever they do, they do. Is the ministry itself doing any additional research along these lines? Are they requesting that the research be done by either of these two groups or looked at by either of these two groups?

I'm also interested in how much is enough. We've already examined a number of programs in which there continues to be a significant increase in the amount of revenue that's being generated, and it's being generated through gambling activities. So once again I ask the minister: has he done any work to determine – or perhaps he's made an arbitrary decision – how much gambling is enough in the province? Is there a dollar figure that he wishes to see achieved and that's enough? Or is there a level of activity? What is the market for this? Has the market been clearly identified? Does he look at it and say, "When there are 10,000 slot machines out there, then we've reached it; that's enough," or "That's the beginning; we want to see 20,000 slot machines out there"? How much is enough?

What studies has he done to support the level of activity that he's at currently? Perhaps he hasn't done any. Fine; tell me that. What's supporting the decisions that the minister is making up to this point?

I also continue to be interested in the lack of connection between the amount of revenue that this ministry brings in through gambling activities and the amount that is spent on treatment for problem gambling, and there is no direct correlation. There's a flat amount that is expended here, which actually now shows up under AADAC, I think, because there is a growing body of work that is starting to indicate that there is a direct correlation, and I'll come to some of the studies that I've looked at.

In particular, the one that's been pointed out to me is by Professor Earl Grinols, who just published Gambling in America: Costs and Benefits. Now, he's an economist, and his conclusions are that gambling in general is net costly, contrary to what has been much touted up until now. His point is that jurisdictions should be doing socioeconomic cost-benefit analyses, and those should be giving you a net cost or a net benefit, but his point is that you're going to find out that there's a net cost. We are getting huge revenues certainly, but it may well be that in the end the benefits are in fact outweighed by the social costs. So I'm looking to see whether there are plans to undertake any kind of extensive socioeconomic cost-benefit analysis about the use of gambling and how that affects our society.

How does the ministry know that they currently have the right mix of VLTs, bingos, slot machines, racing entertainment centres, casinos? There's been a significant change in the mix that we've had up until now. While I've been working as an MLA, I've not had as much volunteer time to put into the communities that I've been used to volunteering with, so I was a little surprised, going into a casino sometime within the last year, at the change that I saw: the number of slot machines that were now in place, and the tables were almost gone. The blackjack and the roulette and all the rest of those, that used to make up 80 per cent of the business, were down to 20 per cent. And the slots: there were just banks and banks and banks of them. Actually, the casino I was in had been renovated to accommodate the slot machines that were in there. So how does the ministry decide, what factors do they use to decide that they have the right mix of all of those various components of revenue-generating machines?

What expansion plans does the ministry have in place? These are all sort of a continuum of questions here about how much is enough. What are the expansion plans that the ministry has? He did list for me what was expected to go into the First Nations casinos but also into the racing entertainment centre in Calgary, so I'm presuming that he knows. So please share that.

Interestingly, right now in the lower mainland of B.C. there is a request out for proposals to do an impact assessment on that cost-benefit analysis and net costliness or net benefit of gaming and gambling to the community. Ontario, I note, has also done one.

Around First Nations gaming – and I suppose this could be extrapolated to any of the new ones – I'm wondering whether the claims of job creation have been examined and whether, in fact, these are jobs created or whether in any given community what we have is I think it's been termed cannibalization, where you have somebody working in a fast-food outlet in a particular community, say Stony Plain for example, and we have a casino open, and what happens is that the casino goes looking and hires the fast-food worker away from the fast-food outlet in Stony Plain, and they end up working at the casino of the First Nations. We didn't actually particularly create any jobs there; we cannibalized staff members from one place to the next. Now the community businessperson has to go out and try and find a new worker there. So how are the arguments of job creation versus redistribution of jobs working out here?

Now the VLT report that was done by the Gaming Research Institute and released in January of 2004. They very clearly started to make a connection between problem gambling and an increase in crime. I've already asked the minister this question earlier. How is the minister responding specifically to the issues that were raised in this report? How does he respond to that particular issue?

How does he respond to the issues raised around problem gambling treatment? I notice that Dr. Hunter is the pioneer on problem gambling treatment and the director of the Nevada Psychological Associates, so you may well have visited him when you went down there on one of your trips to check out gambling. He's concluding that "if you don't think gambling is a serious problem for society, consider that no alcoholic has ever drank away four generations of money in a weekend – which I know that gamblers can and do."

I know that the minister hasn't been particularly willing to make changes based on the research that's been done thus far, and I'm wondering how he is responding to issues like that, that are increasingly coming forward. You know, we have gambling being blamed in suicides. Some medical examiners are now starting to record gambling as a factor.

The other issue that I like to ask about every year is the connection between gambling addiction and fuelling crime. I've mentioned this once already, but specifically I'm wanting to know what work the department has done in tracking that. We certainly know, for example, that where we have other addicts – in other words, alcoholics or drug addicts – they commit crimes to produce money to be able to buy what they need for their fix. We know that this happens, and it only makes sense that that's what's happening when you've got a gambling addict, that they're committing some kind of crime.

Certainly, the government has experience in their own departments. There's one that's running in the paper today, yesterday, the day before of a government employee who committed crimes to fuel a gambling addiction and in fact got a business associate or a friend or somebody else involved in the same thing, and together they were both involved in committing a crime, perpetrating fraud against the government to feed their addiction.

Where is the government in tracking this, and how much attention are they paying to it? Are they investigating particular kinds of crime or just not worrying about this at all? Or are they looking at incidents of property crime, for example, or only looking at white-collar or fraud, embezzlement? What is being looked at and examined here? Has the minister requested the Gaming Research Institute to do any of that work on his behalf?

Have there been any thoughts of having changes made to legislation so that those people who do steal from, for example, the government as an employer or from other employers to finance a gambling addiction be responsible for paying the money back?

The other question that I'd like to get on the record is: where are we with Internet gambling? What has been explored? What studies has the minister looked at? What's being considered? Perhaps there's been the decision that we're not considering it. Once or twice a year I hear from some advocates that say: "We're missing the boat on this one. We could be making a lot of money if we got involved in it. We could control it more if we got involved." It's the same arguments that I believe led to our getting involved in VLTs to begin with, some 10 years ago now. So where are we both with government involvement or government regulation of gambling on-line and also any kind of cyberattack? You know, it's both sides of this. It's one thing to be involved in gambling on-line, but there's also what comes from on-line that can be causing your own machines trouble if they're hooked up in any way or that could come through the tools that are used to upgrade the machines or however that works.

Do we have any idea of a criminal organization association with gambling here in Alberta? Are you tracking any criminal organization Internet gambling happening in Alberta?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member has asked a question with respect to plans for the community initiative program. Yes, this is the third year of a three-year program. It's been very successful, and as minister I certainly will be advocating a renewal of the program just as we have been advocating a renewal of CFEP, which started in 1988. So I anticipate that that will be part of the business plan process going forward. As far as increases, that has a lot to do with budget issues, but certainly as far as the future of the plan is concerned, I will be advocating that it continue because it has been very successful.

With respect to the issue of our plans on gaming in the province, I would refer back to the licensing policy review, the recommendations that were made there which were accepted by this government. That is the model that we are using at this point in time, and the commitment was that it would be reviewed again five years out or so. So in '06 or somewhere in that vicinity there will be a review of the rules that we're currently using.

The process that we have with respect to VLTs is that they're capped at 6,000, that we are in the process of reducing the number of locations and, in fact, have been successful over the last couple of years in reducing the number of locations by about 12 per cent. The recommendation was to try and reduce it by 15 per cent, and we are marching as we speak toward that particular number.

The issue of expansion of casinos is based very much on the eight-step process that we have. It has to be initiated by members of the public. It's not a matter of this government initiating anything. This government doesn't have a specific plan relative to any casinos per se, but we do have a process which is outlined for members of the community. We have seen over the course of the last couple of years in a number of regions throughout the province those rules put into practice.

One of the salient features of the eight-step process is that there has to be viability within a market in order for the matter to proceed. For example, applications were made in the Lethbridge area for new casinos. The AGLC, that is responsible for application of those rules, determined that there was not a market for an additional casino in that area at that time. As such, the applications were declined.

Another aspect of the eight-step process is that it requires a comment from the community. So one of the stages has a letter going to the municipality or the city or the county, wherever the proposal is located, asking whether or not the government in that locale are supportive or not supportive of a casino. There are examples where municipalities have said yes. Examples of that would be Leduc, Leduc county. There are examples where communities have said no, although it has not been in the context of a specific application but rather as a pre-emptive matter. Examples of that would be Lloydminster and Strathcona county. There are examples where communities have taken a neutral position, which is something that they asked to be able to do. A neutral position allows the application to go forward. Examples of that would be Edmonton and Calgary. But the short of it is that municipalities have an opportunity to say if they don't wish to have a casino in their community, and that expression of interest would be honoured by the AGLC.

The hon. member has asked about some research issues. I think it's fair to say that my views with respect to research have grown and crystallized over the three years that I've been in this ministry. Some of the more recent events which have been very helpful for me were, first of all, a gaming research conference that I went to in Las Vegas last December, where a paper was referred to at some length which put forward the concept of the Reno model. It's a paper that was prepared by Dr. Ladouceur, who is Canadian, Dr. Shaffer, who's at the Harvard Medical School, and Dr. Blaszczynski, who is with the University of Sydney in Australia. What they do is put forward a model which talks about the way one should, among other things, develop research that will be meaningful in the gaming context.

I think it's fair to say that gaming research is relatively new, and people obviously have been thinking about how best to go forward and create some kind of parameters which you can work within and rely upon to measure and make research meaningful. So I found that very, very useful.

There was a book by a fellow, Peter Collins, which was titled something like Gambling in the Public Interest. I met with Mr. Collins. He is the director of a group that deals with public policy and research in South Africa. It is a very, very good book because it really covers all of the issues, the morality issues, the research issues, that relate to gambling. I wouldn't call it a primer – it's more than a primer – but it's a very good book, and it's the best book that I've come across which outlines the considerations which one should have in place.

The Alberta Gaming Research Institute, of course, has been doing research funded through the Alberta lottery fund since 1999, and the arrangement that we have with that institute is that they are arm's length from government. They determine how they spend their money and what research projects they have. I have come to the conclusion that the research to date has been useful, and the reputation that they have garnered is useful because in a relatively short period of time they have gained a reputation for what they have done, bearing in mind that there are virtually no other jurisdictions that have taken the proactive initiative that we have to fund in a sustained way gambling research.

What we have failed to arrange for to date, simply because of the way that research is determined, is research that has been particularly useful in developing policy regarding gaming. So I think it's fair to say that over the months ahead we will be reviewing exactly how the research has been done and what models might better provide the kind of research that would be useful in developing public policy with respect to the gaming in this province. That's definitely something that we will be looking at going forward.

We have developed a social responsibility division within the ministry, and there is a new director of that. The purpose of developing the division is so that we can focus on social responsibility issues. Research issues are included in that. So I would anticipate that as the months unfold, we will be able to provide a better direction with respect to what we want to do in that area, once again recognizing that compared to other jurisdictions at this point in time, I understand that we are doing very well indeed.

With respect to job creation and casinos I have absolutely no doubt that they are net job creators. The fact that somebody has a job before they go to a casino does not detract from the fact that it's a job creator. I think one can take a look at the First Nations' experience in some of the other jurisdictions for perhaps the most obvious job creation opportunities.

If you go to Casino Rama at Orillia, Ontario, and talk to the First Nations there and ask them the question, "What benefit has this casino been to your people?" they will without hesitation say that it has been tremendous. They were a reserve of massive unemployment, without social services, without electricity, running water, and what we would consider to be the basic minimum necessities of life. Today they have those services, they have employment, and they attribute it to the opportunity that was afforded to them by that casino. But I would encourage you to talk to them because they can speak far better than I ever will as to how that has impacted their people.

If you go to Saskatchewan and any of the First Nation or Indian casinos, as they call them there, you will find that they have employment on the floor somewhere in the vicinity of 70 to 85 per cent First Nation. That includes the management. In fact, I think I saw all of the casinos in Saskatchewan, and I believe that all of the management at that time were in fact First Nation. That's a very impressive thing from where I stand, and that was impressive from their point of view because those in large number are people who were previously unemployed or unemployed a great portion of the time. So we have demonstrated in our next-door neighbour after a five-year period – and that's roughly how long it had been from the start of those casinos to the time that I visited them – a very successful job creator for the First Nations people within the casino environment.

The last question I'll comment on is Internet gambling. That is a matter that we continue to follow because it's something that is occurring on a global basis. There's absolutely no doubt that Internet gambling occurs globally. The laws in Canada are such that Internet gambling outside the boundaries of a province is illegal. So if we could construct Internet gambling solely for the purposes of gambling within the province of Alberta and no more than that, that would be legal, but of course Internet gambling by its very nature is global.

There is a recent case involving I think it was a P.E.I. Internet gambling project of some description which went outside of their borders, and it determined that you can't do that. So, practically speaking, Internet gambling under the current laws makes no sense from where I sit in Canada, but laws can always be changed. So we continue to monitor it both from a view of understanding how it may impact the market that we currently have and also seeing what the trends are. I'll provide you with further detail as might be available, but the short of it is that it's not something that legally makes sense in Canada at this point in time.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to make a few remarks and ask a couple of very minor questions. First, I ought to tell the minister that my experience in my constituency with respect to his department staff and himself has been very, very pleasant. I've never heard a community in my constituency complain about the way that they've been treated by your department, and I think that that's great because community associations sometimes don't always do everything one hundred per cent correct. From what I understand from my communities, those minor errors and so on are met with a lot of understanding and a lot of help, and I just wanted to thank the minister and his department for doing that.

The question I have, though, is on page 172, line 14. There's an item there called centennial legacy grants of $13 million, and then on the next page at line 46 we have another centennial legacy grants of $12.5 million, and then on line 47, centennial projects, $20 million. So I guess what I would like the minister to do – and he can probably do this later in writing if he wishes – is explain to me what the difference in these three centennial programs is and what the criteria might be for those three in particular.

Those are all my questions, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Stevens: I'll provide the details to the hon. member regarding the question.

With respect to the kudos for the staff, you're absolutely right. The pleasure of being in this ministry is that you receive letters of thanks, and the reason that occurs is because the staff that manage the various programs are consumer oriented. They go out of their way to ensure that the applicants are assisted in their applications, and they work with them to make sure that the program works for the applicant. We don't get complaints very often, and we get a great number of kudos, and that's all as a result of the incredible committed staff that we have, not only in the program area but throughout all of Alberta Gaming and the AGLC.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to ask some questions of the minister with respect to his estimates, and I appreciate his comments and responses so far.

I'd like to start by asking about the province's NHL lottery ticket funds. It appears that the funds were underdisbursed to the tune of about $2.4 million, and now this year the amount is reduced to about half of what it was the year before. So I'd like to find out from the minister what's going on, how that lottery is working, if it's being successful, and if it is going to generate sufficient revenues to support NHL hockey in Alberta and how that compares to the projections at the outset of the lottery ticket fund program.

Now, I want to ask about casinos and particularly casinos on First Nations. I appreciate that the minister was responding to questions on that from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, and if some of the questions were asked while I was not present, maybe the minister can just tell me, and I'll look it up in Hansard.

It was my understanding a couple of years ago that the Enoch First Nation was essentially taking the position that they rejected the government's ability to determine whether or not a casino could be approved for that site, and I think there were some negotiations. As far as I, you know, am able to understand the situation, the government more or less went along with that, but there's a sort of a situation where the government has approved it and agreed to disagree, type of thing.

So my questions have to do with how this is going to be put in place and whether or not the revenue-sharing arrangements are standard or have been set differently, what impact the case in Ontario has on that issue, whether or not the First Nations have accepted the government's right and responsibility to regulate the casino in any way, send inspectors, that sort of thing. So, you know, if the minister could expand on the situation there and the arrangements between Alberta Gaming and the First Nations.

I don't know if there are any other outstanding issues with respect to some of the issues raised by the city of Edmonton in connection to this. I don't know if the minister is in a position to comment on that, but if he can, I would very much appreciate it.

We've seen that bingo associations have an increase of about $3 million, or 75 per cent, over the last year. I'd like to know what's happening with bingo. Is bingo continuing to grow and be a real success and support the community organizations relative to VLTs and that sort of thing? If the minister could just elaborate a little bit on the state of bingo and what he sees in the future for that segment of the gaming industry.

I think I'd also like to get some information with respect to the horse racing subsidy program. Has this got a sunset clause? Is there a finite point at which the funding to the horse racing industry is successful? Has the program been successful in stabilizing horse racing, or is it continuing to be a declining industry? What can the minister tell us about the benefits of this funding program for the horse racing industry in terms of continued employment creation, economic benefit, and so on?

So those are my questions, Mr. Chairman. I look forward to the minister's reply.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I just had one more administrative issue that I wanted to raise with the minister, and that was around choices that were made, and I guess I'm searching to find out whether this is department policy or AGLC policy. I've been in correspondence with the deputy minister and the minister over a particular situation that arose in downtown Edmonton around the granting of a liquor licence to a location that was a nightclub that was renovated by a new group but not soundproofed. The problems that had caused concern for the neighbours, which include a seniors' residence called Cathedral Close and an apartment hotel called Alberta Place, had not been addressed. There was a sort of long-running series of applications from the new group to AGLC and sort of protests back from the community organizations.

One thing caused me a little bit of concern, and I just wondered if this was a policy or whether there was a misunderstanding or something. I did send an e-mail to the deputy minister, and it was never responded to by anybody, and that raises some eyebrows with me. I would have expected that correspondence from an MLA, particularly the local MLA, about an issue that was controversial, got into the newspaper, would have merited a response. I did check to see if there was a bounce back on my e-mail, and there wasn't. I checked for months to see if there was a bounce back on my e-mail, and there wasn't. So I'm curious as to why the decision was made not respond to me about this.

In particular, I was questioning whether there was a policy of being very aggressive in pursuing the neighbours to bring them onside with what the businesses wanted to do. In fact, what I'd had were a couple of complaints from the managers of the seniors' residence and the hotel over the staff who were pursuing very aggressive conduct around: well, you know, you really need to withdraw your objections to this new location and fall into line with this; you could end up talking to their lawyer a lot. Finally, these individuals – I don't know if the gender matters here, but maybe it was a factor; I don't know – were quite uncomfortable about what was being done, and I raised that point in the e-mail, and that was the e-mail that was never responded to.

So two issues for me: one, why wasn't the e-mail responded to when it came from the local MLA, and two, why didn't I ever hear anything? Maybe it is the policy to be quite aggressive in trying to get surrounding neighbours to withdraw their objections and fall into line with the granting of a liquor licence by AGLC, but this one just ain't sitting right with me. This just does not reflect what I have seen of the minister's integrity. I don't want to have to raise it in this situation, but I kind of feel like I got backed into a corner about doing that. Obviously, the minister will probably want to go and investigate this and respond in writing to me about it, but I'm interested in how this all plays out. If he needs the information again, I've got a file folder here with all of the correspondence back and forth from the various parties.

I was really uncomfortable with what happened to those organizations. It's a long-running problem there, and they were left quite high and dry. They really feel that the AGLC did an end run around them in granting a class A licence in a situation where the city of Edmonton had been very careful to try and work their way through this snakes' nest, this land mine filled course. There were real concerns about how this all happened. Anyway, I don't need to go into it any further than that.

The city of Edmonton had worked hard to try and put in place something that was going to keep this lower key and not let it grow to the extent that it had. They had been very careful to grant a private licence and recommended against or tried to set it up so that there wouldn't be a class A licence granted.

In fact, the AGLC granted a class A licence and didn't hold the public hearing that these two parties were expecting. They expected to be able to appear at a public hearing and make all of their concerns known. They believed that they had asked to be informed of a public hearing, and they were never informed of it. So I think there are a number of issues that arose from this situation that should cause the minister some concern, and I'd like to hear back from him on that.

I've used up about 45 or 50 minutes worth of questioning time in this session with the minister. I appreciate his willingness to share information and to provide missing information in writing. I look forward to receiving that, and I thank the Assembly for the opportunity to question the minister.

Thank you.

Mr. Stevens: Just briefly. On the last point, to the Member for Edmonton-Centre, it is not the policy of Alberta Gaming or the AGLC not to respond to communications from the public or from MLAs, so I can start out by saying that. Our policy is to be responsive to the questions that are asked.

With respect to the details of that particular matter I believe that we know what you're talking about because I think I've heard something about this somewhere along the line. If we need further clarification as to the e-mail and whatnot, we will be in touch with you. Otherwise, the response to you will address the e-mail and the various points that you've raised here this evening.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. The NHL lottery ticket program was set up so that the NHL teams had the option as each ticket stage came along to say, yes, we'd like to proceed, or no. From my vantage point they got into the first one without any experience, and then they had the experience of the first one, which was a good experience, so they went to the second and so on and so forth.

What I can tell the hon. member is that they optioned each opportunity as it came along, including this last one, which will be ending this month. So it has been a positive experience for the NHL teams in a net monetary way. I can also tell the hon. member that as time has gone on, those particular products have declined in sales, so perhaps the first one was the most successful. That's the general line of it, but each of the teams will have made a substantial amount of money as a result of that particular initiative.

On the First Nation casinos I think a great deal was addressed in my response to the Member for Edmonton-Centre, but if there's something additional, we'll provide that in writing.

The First Nations policy was as a result of negotiations between this government and the First Nations people here in Alberta and was ultimately ratified at an all-chiefs meeting of all of the Alberta First Nations. So, from my perspective, that is the starting point for the current arrangement that we have relative to gaming in the province. I think you will find that from time to time there are members of the First Nations community who will say or write something that indicates that they think there is an inherent right, sovereign rights if you will, for them to control gaming. But, as I indicated to the Member for Edmonton-Centre, there is a Supreme Court of Canada decision which we say determines the matter in favour of the province, and certainly the arrangement that we have with the First Nations, which was ratified at that meeting I referred to, says that we do. So to me the issue is settled indeed.

We'll give you an update on bingo.

Many of my comments regarding horse racing I think would apply to your questions, but we'll provide you with some additional information if it wasn't otherwise answered.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Just a quick supplementary on the NHL lottery ticket program. Has the ministry determined whether or not they need to reassess the product that they're selling in light of declining sales? I wonder if he can provide, perhaps in writing, the financial contributions that have been made to the two NHL teams over the different issues of the lottery tickets and whether or not the minister feels that there is adequate marketing and advertising of these tickets and whether or not the absence of such might be a contributing factor and, as well, whether or not the minister feels that in the long run this particular program is going to be of continuing value in supporting NHL hockey in the province.

Thank you.

Mr. Stevens: Very briefly, the program is at an end. Our commitment to the NHL teams ends with this particular ticket. We said that we would provide them with support in this fashion up till the end of this particular year, so it does not extend beyond. Our commitment ends this month, if you will, with the close-off of the current ticket.

Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2004

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, I'd like to just make a couple of comments with respect to some questions that were raised in second reading.

As we've gone through second reading, some of the questions probably still raise or highlight the fact that there may be some differences in preference of tax structures, and I don't know how to necessarily state otherwise. It is still the stated policy of the government to reduce corporate income taxes, the general rate, to 11 and a half per cent and, as affordable, to 8 per cent – that has been the government policy expressly – and then with the small business rate to go down to 3 per cent. This one does actually get the small business rate down to 3 per cent, and the threshold is at $400,000 from last year.

So our small business reductions have been the first of the priorities that we've pushed and encouraged, that we would ensure that the small business income would go up, that we would capture a greater number of businesses into now a $400,000 threshold.

As to potential loss of revenue, I know it is talked about. The rate reductions will save Alberta businesses about $142 million. Yet as we've seen, even in the past years as we've reduced rates, the absolute dollars that we're collecting are still holding strong. It's still at about similar numbers that we had before the rate reductions.

As to whether we keep those savings in Alberta, what is actually happening, on the converse, is that many of the companies around the country are trying to put more of their income in Alberta precisely because they do retain their income. In fact, there is a formula where they have to allocate the corporate income among all the provinces, and they have to go through an allocation of how much business. There are standards such as employees and offices and a number of things that are used to judge how much of the apportionment of income should be in one province or another.

The challenge we actually have is that the other provinces are more anxious to ensure that they have their share of that income whereas the corporate entities, for the large part, because we do set the right structures in place for them, are looking to locate more of their offices, more of their personnel, and more of their business in Alberta. It's precisely for that that this tax structure was developed.

I think I'll leave it there and answer any further questions that people might have at committee stage.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I know that our Finance and Revenue critic had spoken to this bill at second reading, and the minister has just answered some of the concerns that he was raising, specifically that we're putting ourselves in a situation that's not fiscally sustainable. You know, we're in an oil boom-and-bust economy, and we're in a boom right now, and eventually that will end. Meanwhile, we will have cut income taxes and business taxes to the point where we've created a situation that's not sustainable. [interjection] The minister is responding to that. I have to say that I think we disagree with what the likely outcome is going to be.

There are other considerations in stimulating a strong economy. Again, that's something that this government, you know, in the more than 30 years they've been in power now – it was Premier Lougheed's originating mantra to diversify the economy. Here we are 35-plus years later, and we're still overwhelmingly dependent on the oil and gas sector. Given the choices that this government has made, we may well be able to be in a situation with the debt, but we've created a huge infrastructure debt that will also cost us significant amounts of money to pay down, whether that has to be done through cash or through whatever.

So we just feel that the management of the province's wealth, the choices that this government makes in the way they do it, is questionable, because we think that over the long term it's not in fact sustainable. Now, maybe they're not the ones that are going to be in power when they have to start increasing the income taxes to make up for the drop in oil and gas revenues. Then I guess that's a problem I'm going to have to deal with rather than the minister is going to have to deal with, but the situation will have been created by him.

I think that when I thought about what other kinds of taxes could be cut if we were looking to give people a break, well, the obvious one is to eliminate the health care premium tax. If we're really looking to put some money back in people's pockets or make it easier for businesses, particularly small businesses, to operate, there's the one. Eliminate the health care premium tax. That'll certainly help small businesses as well.

Another one that came to me just recently was dropping some of the user fees that the government has increased and increased and increased certainly over the time that I've been elected. The one that I just had to experience again – and I think we're up for another challenge under the Eurig decision – is around vehicle registration.

The government has never been able to explain to me why I'm paying a different rate for car registration and registering my snowmobiles when in fact the fee is to cover the administration, the paperwork, the paper shuffling of those two registrations. Well, there's no difference in paper shuffling that paper. I'm registering a vehicle. It shouldn't make any difference. The amount of work that the staff person has to do walking from here to there and picking up the licence plate or picking up the computer code really is no different, yet I'm charged different amounts of money. So that tells me we're still not dealing with something that in fact is just covering user fees.

I think there's also an issue that I do not see this government coming to terms with – the federal government is starting to deal with it – around income tax and property tax and the relationship with the municipal governments. The federal government is making that overture. The province is not.

We have a situation where every time people earn more money or get a raise or get a job and they get income tax deducted, the province and the federal government without doing a thing make more money. But the municipalities don't, and the municipalities have taken up a huge load in terms of helping the government get rid of the debt and deficit created by the Tory government in power.

The municipalities have gone a long way in reducing that deficit, but they are the ones that always look like the villains because no matter how much money somebody is earning, it's not really affecting their property tax. So they look like the villains in increasing the property tax all the time, and they have to actually increase the property tax, whereas the moves made by the federal and provincial governments result in an increase without them lifting a finger.

I think that also flows through in the kinds of things we're talking about here with the general corporate income tax rate and the small business income tax rate. Both of them are based on income, but the federal government has started to recognize that the municipalities need some relief, and the federal government has started to deal directly with the municipalities. I think that's going to cause a problem for the provinces, if they don't start to figure out where their role in all of this is and start to look for more concrete ways to work in a partnership with the municipalities. So a related issue.

Essentially we're willing to support this at this stage, but I think there are a number of unanswered policy decisions that we question in the way this government is conducting business. We have been supportive about providing relief for small businesspeople. Certainly, I'm very interested in that. I've got a lot of small businesspeople in downtown Edmonton, and they're the ones whose money stays in the community. You know, a lot of those huge office towers that are named after particular companies, their profits go south. They leave the province. But the profits from the dry cleaner and the grocer and the local Mac's store and all of those other small businesses that exist and thrive in downtown Edmonton, their money stays here and helps our economy go around. So I like to see them being able to thrive.

So those are the issues that I wanted to raise during Committee of the Whole. I have some reservations about this, and I know that my colleague the critic for Revenue and Finance, the MLA for Edmonton-Riverview, was willing to support this. I'm willing to support the small business part. I'm not so sure about the other part, and I'm still questioning why this is the only route that the government seems to know how to take and why they won't consider and steadfastly won't consider things like relief on the health care premium tax.

Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I'm just going to rise and ask a few fast questions as well of the minister. I don't know if he'll have the answers handy, but perhaps he can make a few comments about it.

Really, I was just wondering about some comments that we heard earlier today about taxes and corporate taxes. In my view, the taxes that we collect are expected to be passed on to the consumer. I mean, people don't really realize that when you put a tax on a corporation or a business, at best it's just passed on to the consumer, and therefore by definition it's a sales tax by proxy, and I would suggest a hidden sales tax by proxy. It begs the question, then, of what benefit are any corporate taxes if they're just expected to be passed on to the same consumer?

In that regard, we heard about a request to raise the minimum wage. Well, it seems to me that if you're raising the cost of the business to do business by ordering it to pay higher minimum wages, isn't that just another tax on the business, just another hidden sales tax on the business? I'm wondering if the minister could perhaps comment on that.

You know, it may sound fine to do it, but take for example the case of a bookstore owner trying to compete in the world against amazon.com on-line, et cetera, and we impose higher costs here in the province through minimum wage increases or other tax increases. Well, how do they compete against virtual bookstores, for example?

Along this line I'm wondering if the minister has the numbers or the percentage of small businesses that actually pay corporate income tax. What percentage of small businesses actually pay any corporate taxes, which gets at the question of how many small businesses actually have a profit? How many small businesses are actually going broke instead of showing a profit? Is that 1 per cent, 5 per cent, or more like 30 or 40 or 50 per cent of small businesses that actually don't even pay any taxes because they don't have a profit to pay them with? Of course, that would be the group we'd be asking to pay more wages now if we raised the minimum wage. So I wonder if the minister could comment on that.

The last question is whether or not the minister could comment about municipal property taxes that require businesses to pay large amounts of taxes when they have zero profit at all – they have no income at all – a class of Canadians being expected to pay large amounts of taxes when they have zero income and are in fact going broke and whether or not that impacts the province's revenues if we are killing these small businesses before they ever get to first base through municipal property taxation crowding out potential revenue for the province in the longer term.

So those would be my questions, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I had a few questions for the hon. minister. The comments of the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, however, have piqued my interest in perhaps debating some of these points.

Now, just a moment ago, Mr. Chairman, he asked the rhetorical question: aren't taxes on business just another sales tax because they get passed on directly to the consumer? You know, we need to take a look at economics a little bit. In setting prices, businesses have to make some calculations and they cannot just set the price anywhere they want. They can't just raise their prices because somebody down the road won't raise their prices and they'll lose business, so they have to set it at a certain point where the rate of return is maximized.

The market doesn't let them set their price anywhere they want.

Sometimes when costs are increased, the consumers are not willing to pay all of that, so they have to take it out of their bottom line. So the idea that in a nonmonopolistic situation you can somehow fix the price is not the case. Sometimes it comes out of the profits of the company and not out of the pockets of the consumer, and there is a difference.

The hon. member also talked about minimum wages being a tax, but my understanding of a tax is that it's something that's taken and goes to government and is spent, then, by government on various programs. But in the case of the minimum wage it actually goes to low-income workers directly, and then it may possibly be taxed, but that's at a much lower rate. So I don't accept that argument at all.

My question to the minister is: what evidence does the government have that increased investment in this province or increased economic activity is attributable to this program of cutting taxes? I want to distinguish the lower corporate tax rate because I am supportive of the cut to the small business tax rate; it's the corporate tax rate that I have a concern about. The reason I ask that question is that I believe that much of that investment has to do with the strength of the oil industry and the high prices for oil and natural gas and not necessarily changes in the corporate tax rate. As an example, Mr. Chairman, there was a tremendous rate of investment in this province before this tax reduction was approved. The question is: has that change in tax rate increased in some way the investment that's happening in the province?

A second question: does the government offset increases in investment in the province with outflows of capital as a result of profit-taking and dividends and that sort of thing? In other words, when they talk about how much the net inflow of capital there is to this province, do they calculate and offset the amount of capital that is flowing outside the province as a result of profit-taking or management fees and so on, that sort of thing?

Those are my questions for the minister, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Chairman, I'll just state that I don't have some of the stats right here anyway with respect to what percentage small businesses pay in corporate income tax. I can get that. Certainly all taxes are a cost to business, as was stated.

With respect to the one question asked about the evidence, for the same reasons that there seems to be support that this is beneficial to small businesses, it's equally beneficial to the broader business community. There's not a difference in economic policy. Part of the challenge we have, actually, in Canada is to encourage more growth beyond small business. In comparison to the world we have a very large percentage that are small and micro companies. In fact, sometimes even the preferential treatment of the small business rates that everybody seems to say we're supportive of gets punitive to actually encouraging the growth to get beyond that. We need more companies to become mid and large and very large companies. We obviously need a healthy climate for small business. So that's why the rate reduction for small business activity.

What we do know is that taxes and the incremental tax rates are very much focused on. When they look at what is the combined federal/provincial rate of tax, those are key focus points known, examined, or otherwise for the incremental profit that you could earn and how much could be retained. We do know that the economic activity – I don't have specific, identifiable. Because of last year's rate reduction, there are these X number of new businesses in here. I do know that what continues to happen is that we have had an increase in businesses in registration, the numbers of businesses that are here. We do know that there is an increase in the number of companies paying taxes. I don't have the specific numbers in front of me. We do know that the amount of absolute dollars that we collect remains at about the same level despite our rate cuts. We're still collecting the same absolute amounts in dollars. We do know that clearly when you're talking about – you're right – inflows and outflows of profits, we've got to track the right inflows, investments. That's why you want companies to come and set up here in Alberta. You want them to also incorporate in Alberta. You want them to do more of their business in Alberta so that they thereby can retain more of the profits in a low-tax jurisdiction. That is what's happening.

We can certainly provide lots of evidence of what economic activity is happening in Alberta. It's not just because of oil and gas prices. Many of the sectors, the forest industry – we could go down all the industries and show economic activity that's beneficial because of economic structures, of which tax policies are a fundamental part. They're not the only, but they are one main component of government policy that impacts business decisions and sets a climate.

We do know that even if there are outflows to shareholders' profits, we do get the tax base right here. We collect it. Maybe not all the profits are retained because maybe some of the investments are coming from around the world and their shareholders around the world are getting dividends, but we retain that tax on corporate income that was based here, earned in Alberta, and taxed in Alberta. We have benefited substantially from the money from people throughout the world that's invested right here. We collect our share through the corporate income tax structure, so we are really main beneficiaries of that, whether or not there are outflow profits to shareholders around the world. I'll be happy to chase down some more specifics of that question asked, though.

Northwest Bible College Amendment Act, 2004

Mr. Masyk: I'd like to take this opportunity to move third reading of the Northwest Bible College Amendment Act, 2004.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 4 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move Bill 22, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, for third reading.

We've had quite a bit of discussion on the act, that really details a number of administrative changes primarily requested by the Chief Electoral Officer in terms of modernizing the way in which he and his staff conduct elections in the province. It also of course increases the contribution limit for contributions that can be made to candidates and constituency associations and the corollary tax deductions that can be made. It clarifies better for candidates and enumerators the ability to have access to multifamily and gated dwellings. The Election Act in the past referred to apartment buildings, and of course we have so many more multifamily dwellings and multidwelling buildings, so we need to have the ability to have access to them.

The Election Statutes Amendment Act provides, really, a modernization of most of those areas, and I would ask the House to consider it for third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I thank the government for its co-operation in allowing this bill to spend some time waiting for members of the public to catch up with it. We've passed a number of bills with a great deal of speed in the House this spring session, and I was campaigning to have this one slow down a bit so that the public could catch up with us, and in fact that happened. I finally heard from a member of the public, so it was worth it. [interjection] One. One member of the public.

I was disappointed that others weren't sharing my incredible interest in the parliamentary process. Nonetheless, we did hear from one individual. They raised a number of issues, and I agreed that I would raise them in the House. Now, some of these were issues that had already been raised by the Liberal opposition and, I think, in one case a combination or concerted effort from the Official Opposition and the third party in moving amendments to try to deal with some of the concerns that had been raised with Bill 22, Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004. I'll identify those as I go through.

This individual is a member of one of the now small parties – what goes around comes around; eh? – which was at one time one of the governing parties. As a matter of fact, for many, many years it was the governing party in Alberta, that being the Social Credit Party.

This individual was very concerned with four different sections. Section 116.1 of the original bill is appearing in our amending bill here as sections 59 and 60, and they are both amending section 116 in the original act. This is around secure ballots and special ballots.

In section 116 the concern was that in being able to use electronic mail to request secure special ballots or special ballots, it could be difficult to authenticate the person who is making the request. As well, the e-mails are generally difficult to trace.

So there was a concern there that if people were trying to achieve nefarious ends, they could in fact be generating a number of e-mail requests for special ballots, which if they were followed through and mailed out to particular addresses or something, there could be some skewing of the results. There was a real concern that the ability to authenticate with an e-mail is very difficult, because that's the point: it's cyberspace. It really is just going to a computer, but the computer can move around. I think that there can be some controls that could be put in place on that, but perhaps we'll get an opportunity to get some input from the member sponsoring the bill or perhaps from the Chief Electoral Officer after the fact as to how this could be addressed.

The second issue that was raised by this individual is section 116.1, which is a new section being added, and it's around a secure special ballot. Now, this was to try and address those individuals who really believe that their personal safety is at risk if their name or an address appears in a polling book or if they, in fact, appeared in person. Certainly, I can understand that from the amount of work that I've done in trying to protect women that are in a danger of being harmed by an intimate partner. I'm very alive to this issue.

The issue being raised by my Social Credit Party friend is that allowing the Chief Electoral Officer to conceal information about who requested a special secure ballot voids transparency, and he feels that possibly impartiality is at stake. His concern around this was that by keeping somebody's name and identifying information completely off the voters' list, it would be quite possible that no one would be able to know that there was a voter out there and to access them and try and give them information about a candidate. It gets particularly hard for those candidates of smaller parties that have less resources to be able to track this kind of thing. Possibly with larger parties and candidates with more resources they could spend more time trying to figure this all out, but that was the issue being raised there.

I have to say that in trying to balance off the personal safety of women that are fleeing abusive situations or being stalked by individuals – actually, that could pertain to men as well – against whether or not somebody's name is appearing on the list, I'm going to have to come down on the side of protecting the individual's safety and believe that, you know, if they're interested enough to be trying to be involved in the democratic process when they're really feeling that their life is at stake, good on them. Any assistance that we can give them to complete that process by using a secure ballot or a secure special ballot is to be applauded and moved along.

This individual did raise the hardship that they expected to be created by the increased candidacy fees. I think that was one of the issues that was raised jointly by the opposition and the third parties with concerns about the effect on the smaller parties. That may not be that much of an issue to see the fee increase from $200 to $500 for the three leading parties in the province but certainly could be a tremendous hardship for a smaller party that was fielding perhaps only 10 candidates. That could be a significant amount of money. When you multiplied that $300 by 10 candidates, that might be enough to make them only field nine candidates because they couldn't cover the costs otherwise. We certainly agreed with that and supported an amendment to strike that change and remain at the $200 level.

The final issue that the individual was raising was around the decertification if there were no candidates running representing a particular party. They outlined a situation that happened to their particular party in 1986 whereby there was some support for, I think, what would have become the predecessor for the Reform Party but some generations back. In trying to nurture this new party along, there was an agreement from the Social Credit Party that they would not run candidates, to allow this smaller party to get going.

So in that year, 1986, the Social Credit Party showed no candidates at all running, and according to this new rule that then would have decertified them. They had concerns because there's an example in their collective history as a political party where these new rules would have in fact caused them to cease existing. They just didn't see why that was necessary and wanted that issue raised and put on the record. Perhaps I can get a response from the sponsoring member to address the concerns that have been raised.

On balance, despite my disappointment with a lack of a citizenship initiative or reform process with what I feel are some undemocratic moves, an erosion of democracy around making it more difficult for the smaller parties – I had less trouble with the unique identifier numbers because I thought it might lead us to more inclusion of younger people that are very keyed into or hooked into electronic communications.

But I was very pleased to see the changes that are made around ensuring that there's a very clear understanding that candidates are to have access to every voter, and that includes voters who are living in secure access buildings or secure access compounds. That's very important. The voter can decide not to open the door and talk to the candidate, but, boy, the candidate sure needs to be able to get to the door. I've talked about that quite a bit in the past; I don't need to talk about it any more here.

I'm glad that we were able to have repeated discussions on this act. I think that on balance there are some good things and some bad things in it, but I'm certainly happy to support it at this point. I'm glad that we were able to hold it over long enough that we did have other political parties that could join into the discussion and even other individuals who actually took the time to come down to the Assembly and flag people down and present their comments to me. I'm happy to be able to put them on the record on their behalf.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak in third reading, and I will leave the floor to others. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to third reading, and I want to indicate to the Assembly that, unfortunately, I will not be supporting third reading of Bill 22, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004.

I made a number of specific comments during the committee stage, Mr. Speaker, and I won't repeat them here except to indicate the one particular aspect that causes me the most concern, and that is the increase in deposits for candidates. The government's position, expressed in a news release, is that this would provide a check on frivolous candidates. I asked the question in committee: in a democracy what exactly is a frivolous candidate? Is that someone who is not affiliated with the three parties here or not affiliated with the one party there or not affiliated with any party or a party that we disagree with? You know, there are many candidates that may not be taken terribly seriously by significant numbers of voters, but that doesn't make them frivolous. So that's a concern. Nearly two-thirds of the candidates in the 2001 election lost their deposit. That is a substantial amount of money when it's spread across 83 constituencies, so it is a significant barrier to small parties' participation in elections, and I think that's a problem.

Mr. Speaker, in principle what we have here is just a minor administrative tinkering with the basic electoral system in this province, and the New Democrats feel that a major reform is needed of the electoral bill on a broad scale. I think that's partly the reason why, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has said, there has been little interest in this, and that's because it's just a few tweaks, not necessarily positive tweaks in all cases, a few tweaks to the existing system which clearly has served this government, or the party that's now in power, very well. But we believe that a more fundamental process needs to be undertaken that engages Albertans on a broad scale and asks them exactly what it is they want to see in terms of an electoral system in this province and asks whether or not what we have now is really the most in keeping with their democratic aspirations, something like but not necessarily exactly the same as the process that's been undertaken in British Columbia, which has been a very, very interesting exercise in public democracy and takes it out of the politician's hands.

You know, in a sense we have a built-in conflict of interest in our political system, Mr. Speaker. The politicians are in charge of the political system that elected them, and we all pretend that we don't have a vested interest in that system, but we do. What B.C. has done, I think, is to a degree recognize that and actually put nonelected nonpoliticians in charge of reforming the electoral system. I think there's lots of merit in doing that.

There are three elements that we would propose if such a process were put in place that we believe are fundamental to democratizing the electoral system in our province. The first of these is proportional representation, Mr. Speaker, and I don't intend to go on with that in great depth. I know that people feel that we don't want to just be voting for a list of party candidates. We want to have some constituency representation. We want to have geographical and community representation.

It is possible. There are systems that are in place in some of the European countries, for example, called mixed-member proportional representation which do make sure that the balance in the Legislature equals the balance of popular vote but does apportion the seats geographically according to where the strengths geographically of the political parties are, so people are able to vote for a member in their area. I think that this is something whose time has come. Sooner or later in this country one or more provinces are going to break with the first past the post system, which is in fact very much an archaic system and is rapidly diminishing in the world as a method of electing people in democracies.

The second one is electoral finance reform, and I think that that's critical in this province. You know, it's interesting, Mr. Speaker, that two-thirds of the $4 million war chest of the Progressive Conservative Party to fight the next election comes from corporate donations. I know that members here don't see anything wrong with that, but I think the typical Albertan would wonder why our governing political party is not supported by grassroots political donations of individual citizens. In terms of personal political donations, individual donations, the New Democratic Party of Alberta raises more money than the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta, so I think that maybe says quite a lot. So that's something that needs to be done.

The last thing, Mr. Speaker, that we would propose as part of an electoral reform package is fixed election dates. The archaic notion that the Premier or Prime Minister in a British parliamentary system can call an election when they want to is, you know, a real slap in the face to equality amongst political parties, and it gives the incumbent government a tremendous advantage.

We're seeing that now with the federal election. You know, you have this scandal about the sponsorship program, and the Prime Minister is completely within his powers and it's accepted that he can just wait until the scandal dies down, public anger dies down, and then he can call the election when the polls are in his favour. Now, who benefits by that other than the federal Liberal Party?

That's just not how we should be running a system. Dates should be fixed unless the government falls. I will say to the credit of this government that it has kept fairly regular election dates. Every four years: I think that's how it should be. But, you know, if the government found an advantage in calling a snap election or felt that it had to delay an election because it wasn't doing that well in the polls, I fully expect that it would do that. I just don't think that it should be allowed to do that, Mr. Speaker.

Those are the main elements of an electoral reform. I think that the bill fails because it doesn't really address any of the broader, meaningful questions about our electoral system and our democratic system in this province. It trivializes the issue and is not what I think would benefit Albertans. As a result, Mr. Speaker, I'll be voting against the bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to close debate on third reading?

Any questions or comments?

[Motion carried; Bill 22 read a third time]

Feeder Associations Guarantee Amendment Act, 2004

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 28, the Feeder Associations Guarantee Amendment Act, 2004.

Mr. Speaker, the feeder associations in Alberta have been very successful for everyone involved, and we wish to extend this option to our hog feeders. I want to commend the House for the support this bill has received, and I ask for its continued support.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will try to keep my comments brief, but we have been known to speak longer if we get heckled. [interjection] Good. We'll do our best here.

It is a pleasure to rise this evening and speak to Bill 28, the Feeder Associations Guarantee Amendment Act, 2004. I'd certainly like to commend the Member for Dunvegan, who sponsored this particular bill, on the hard work he did in order to get it this far. Its purpose, certainly, is to expand the mandate of the act by allowing feeder pigs to be included under the act. It allows Alberta's hog producers to take advantage of Alberta's feeder association structures. It is a producer-driven process; they bear much of the cost of this program. So, again, some very strong points for Bill 28.

As well, we had some concerns about how this would affect CAIS, and since there are no actual dollars delivered to producers and members of the feeder associations, the feeder association program does not affect producers when it comes to their CAIS claims.

So, again, a bill where there's been a lot of debate. Any questions that arose out of the bill have been answered. I would urge all members to support this very good bill.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:45 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 5, 2004

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2004/05/05

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As Canadians and as Albertans we give thanks for the precious gifts of freedom and peace which we enjoy. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we rededicate ourselves to the valued traditions of parliamentary democracy as a means of serving our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a group of seniors from the Boyle Wildrose Villa in my constituency. They are seated in the members' gallery. I'd like them to rise or wave and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am privileged on behalf of the hon. Minister of Learning, who is in the air and plans to land any moment but was not able to be here, to introduce a delegation that is here today to meet both the Minister of Learning and the Minister of Community Development. The mayor of the town of Brooks, Don Weisbeck, and the reeve of the county of Newell, Cory Baksa, are accompanied by two councillors, Clayton Johnson and Kerry Crapo. Would they please rise, and would we all give them a wonderful and warm welcome.

Thank you so very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly one of the key members of a fabulous group of young Alberta Liberals who's very involved, very interested in politics and is an eager supporter of ours. She is in the public gallery today. Her name is Jennifer Krauskopf. I'd ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome of all MLAs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to stand and introduce to you and through you to Members of this Legislative Assembly a friend of mine and a friend of many of us here. His name is Pete Davis, and I'd ask that he stand in the gallery and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce Mr. Lorne Olsvik, former deputy mayor of Onoway and former president of the AUMA. Mr. Olsvik is a resident of Onoway and currently with TrackFlow, an international software company. He's seated in your gallery. I'd ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you a very remarkable young man, Kyle Lillo, who used his own experience with disability to help him have a true impact on disabled children in the community and has done it remarkably well. I met Kyle when I was a director of the Glenrose Rehabilitation Hospital Foundation. He came to me with the idea of making the hospital a much brighter place to be as a child. Our foundation agreed to match any funds Kyle raised.

Kyle Lillo is the founder and chief promoter and operator of Kyle's Toy Cart, a vehicle he uses to bring toys to the children on pediatric unit 201 at the Glenrose rehab hospital. In doing so, he brings joy, friendship, and a sense of inclusion to the lives of children who are recovering from or adjusting to a significant disability. Kyle's Toy Cart makes monthly trips to the unit and inspires children with new toys, games, and books. There is a noticeable stir when Kyle arrives and it is announced to the children that Kyle is in the building. Kyle is also a recipient of the Alberta Great Kids award.

I would ask you all to please recognize Kyle and his caregiver, Lillian Koch, and accord them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Legislature 81 visitors from Graminia school. Graminia school is one of the original community schools in this province, a very fine school in my own neighbourhood. They are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Gloria Wolff, Mrs. Lorraine Hennig – Mrs. Lorraine Hennig is a very special person; she used to be my student, was my colleague in teaching, and is now a teacher in the area – and Miss Michelle Pernisch along with parents Mrs. Lussier, Mrs. Carefoot, Mrs. Mailman, Mrs. Franks, Mrs. Skocylas, Mrs. Nurani, Mrs. Weiland, Mrs. Zuidema, Mrs. Champoux, Mrs. Krawchuk, Mrs. Nonay, and Mrs. Gibson. I'd ask the students and the parents to rise and receive the welcome of the Assembly. They're in the public gallery.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure to rise on this glorious Alberta day. Actually, I'm rising on an occasion of an innovation of your own, and that is the idea to bring in seniors to visit the Legislature. Today I have my very first seniors' group ever, visiting the Legislature from Drayton Valley. They are led by group leader Norma Wall. There are 39 of them, and they had a long bus ride here today. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It certainly is a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly 19 bright students from the Rich Valley school in the riding of Grande Prairie-Smoky. They are accompanied today by their teacher, Ms Susan Thomson, and by parents and helpers Kevin Thompson, Brent Minni, Danny Scott, Jodi Danielson, Julie Zenner, and Shelley Lenes. I would ask them to rise now and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my distinct pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly Mrs. Sonia Varela. Mrs. Varela is a highly respected leader in the Chilean community of Edmonton. She is a passionate advocate of human rights and social justice and regularly volunteers with Edmonton's Food Bank. She is here this afternoon to observe the proceedings of the Assembly. Sonia is seated in the public gallery, and I would now ask her to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Automobile Insurance Reform

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The auto insurance reform plan currently before government MLAs will not save any money for 80 per cent of good, experienced drivers. That contradicts promises from the Premier himself and his Finance minister. To the Premier: given the contradictions, what are Albertans supposed to believe?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, what Albertans are to believe is precisely this. The regulations surrounding the government's auto insurance reforms are still working through the process. That Albertans can believe. No decisions have been made, so I can't comment on speculative media reports or speculative Liberal reports about what will or won't be approved. No decisions have been made about the detailed regulations, so it's premature to be talking about the government breaking its promise. No decision has been made.

Our basic goal with auto insurance – and I'm sure the Liberals will agree with this – is to have premiums that reward good drivers and penalize poor drivers and to fairly compensate accident victims. That makes a lot of sense. My commitment that rates in Alberta will be comparable to those in other provinces still stands. Now, I don't know if it's going to be lower or higher than in Saskatchewan, but it will be comparable within, I said, $5, $10, $15, $20, and that's not unreasonable. I would add that the reforms are based on personal responsibility, and good drivers will pay competitive rates, and bad drivers will pay more.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Can Albertans have any faith in this government's auto insurance plan when the government is now trying to claim that the premium rate freeze was actually a rate decrease?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't recall that claim ever being made, but I'll have the hon. Minister of Finance respond.

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, the actions that we took in the fall as a government to protect Albertans and consumers of automobile insurance were clearly in an effort to stop the continual spiralling costs from being passed on to consumers. We put a freeze in place for those people whose premiums were being renewed from October 30 onward at the previous year's rate, so they saved dollars from the current rate that they otherwise would have had. That was the first step in protecting Albertans from the increases. Now, we weren't able to do it for those that had already had their rate increases, but they will receive a benefit this summer as the new plan comes in place.

Clearly, putting the freeze in stopped the massive increases that were taking place, and those were passed on to consumers. In fact, if some were in the mix and already had received their bill, they have since received a cheque back from their insurance company or they have received a credit on their statement or their policy was rewritten and a new one sent out to reflect the previous year's rates. So they've already experienced those savings.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. What exactly is preventing this government from introducing public auto insurance now?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, no one is asking for it. Secondly, I would remind the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition that it was this government that took the initiative to address the whole problem of insurance premiums. In that regard the hon. Member for Medicine Hat was assigned to do a survey and to investigate the situation and prepare a report as to what could be done without going into a socialist system, which the NDs and the Liberals so admire, and at the same time still protect consumers under a regulated system. It's as simple as that. As I said previously, we are now working through the regulations.

Executive Council Travel

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, the Premier said that part of the trip to Fox Harb'r golf resort was reimbursed by the Tory party. A receipt provided by the Premier in the Public Accounts Committee is labelled by hand for some costs associated with Fox Harb'r. While no details are provided on what was covered, it does show almost $1,200 being paid. My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier now provide details and receipts for the government portion of this trip?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, fine. Someone, please, take the question under advisement and provide the hon. member with whatever she wants if we can find it. Please, you know, get it off my back. I mean, as I said, they're talking about Executive Council travel: 1/10,000 of 1 per cent. You would need a computer the size of this Legislative Assembly to compute what $800 means in the scheme of the overall provincial budget, I think.

Mrs. Nelson: Twenty-three billion.

Mr. Klein: Well, $23 billion, $800 – I don't know. I have no idea how to calculate that. But, my God, if all they want, if all they can think about is $800 and that receipt, then, please, whoever is out there listening, help me with this and provide them with the information. Get them off my back.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Again to the Premier: did the Tory party reimburse any expenses for the India trip taken in January of '04 by the Premier, the Minister of Community Development, some government MLAs, and others? Were any of those reimbursed?

Mr. Klein: I'm sorry. The question was: did the party pay? No. That was one hundred per cent.

Mr. Speaker, just to go back to the Fox Harb'r trip, I said earlier that that trip was part business and part vacation. I was invited to the event by Ron Joyce, the former CEO of Tim Hortons, and attended in my role as Premier. Other Premiers were invited as well. I don't know if any others attended. I can't recall. I had the chance to meet with business leaders, as I say, from around North America and promote Alberta.

I also used the trip to play some golf. That's why roughly half of the $2,500 tab was paid back by the party on my behalf. Right? It didn't cost taxpayers. That's the $1,200, roughly, that the hon. member refers to. Peter Elzinga, my former chief of staff, paid approximately $1,200 personally and then obtained reimbursement from the party. A record of that payment is available from my communications staff, and I understand that they do have a record of that payment.

I know that previously it had been reported that the party paid up to $2,000 of the $2,500 tab. That's what I was advised. However, unfortunately, that was an error that wasn't noticed until last week when we went back to the 2002 financial records. But I believe that overall the half-and-half payment set-up accurately reflects the mixed business/personal nature of the Fox Harb'r trip.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will say this as well. As I was travelling to Nova Scotia anyway for a Premiers' Conference, there were no additional airplane costs incurred as a result of the Fox Harb'r stopover in that it's on the way to Halifax. It's about, I think, one hour by car and maybe 15 minutes by airplane from Halifax, so it was on the way. We flew over it, so we stopped. There might have been additional costs relative to landing the plane and the gas used in taking off. Now, if they want that, we'll try and figure that out too.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Premier: did the Tory party reimburse any expenses for the trip to Mexico in September of 2002 taken by various members of Executive Council?

Mr. Klein: No.

The Speaker: The third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Requests for Information

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday the Liberal opposition made an appointment for the next day to view publicly available flight manifests for government aircraft for 2000 to 2003. The Premier has since admitted that he was phoned by his staff that Thursday evening and informed of our appointment. The next morning our appointment was cancelled on us, and the manifests were suddenly classified under the so-called freedom of information laws. To the Premier: will the Premier admit that this is blatant political interference in the due process of government?

Mr. Klein: No. What I will admit is that the approach the Liberals took was blatant political grandstanding. Was blatant political grandstanding.

Mr. Speaker, as I said in the media scrum yesterday – and this hon. member knows because he was there. He attends every scrum along with his little researcher.

Mr. MacDonald: He's bigger than you.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier has the floor. He can continue.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out yesterday in the scrum, Mr. and Mrs. Grundy or Martha and Henry, normal Albertans, don't appear at the government hangar requesting 10 years' worth of documents, manifests, some 12,000 different documents, don't request the use and the tying up of over 50 hours of public service employee or employees' time, doesn't arrive decorated with a microphone, with a bevy of media. So I suspect that there was some media grandstanding going on.

Dr. Taft: To the Premier: is the Premier routinely informed by his staff of information requests from the Liberal opposition and the media?

Mr. Klein: Not routinely. Sometimes. Although I suspect that many FOIP requests are from the Liberals or from the media, FOIP requests are kept confidential. You can tell by the questions that are being asked that Martha and Henry or Mr. and Mrs. Grundy are not asking those questions, because when you listen to the questions and the kind of information they're seeking, you say: "Gosh, this sounds like a request from the Liberals or the media. I wonder who's trolling, who's casting. I'm sure it's not Martha and Henry."

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is informing the Premier of information requests from the opposition and the media part of this government's surveillance system of information requests?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, we are not spooky. No. This is a democracy, and we don't set up surveillance systems. Maybe the Libs do – I don't know – but we don't have a snoop squad. No. The answer is no.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Education Funding

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two weeks ago during estimates debates I urged the Minister of Learning to make public the funding profile for all school boards and charter schools in the province. Now that that has happened, school board after school board is saying that these numbers can mean no new teachers, zero reduction in class sizes; in other words, no implementation of the Learning Commission's recommendations. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Given that school boards like Edmonton public, Red Deer public, and Elk Island are all saying that the increases are much smaller than claimed and won't allow them to hire more teachers or reduce class sizes, what actions will the minister take to address these concerns?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just for the record I do want to put in what Edmonton public received. Edmonton public received a 5 per cent increase from last budget to this budget. They received $22 million more this budget over last budget. When it comes to the interim funding that was put in in November, we added in another $7 million. In this budget alone – this budget alone – $16 million more went to Edmonton public. We have to recognize that Edmonton public is predicting a decline in their enrolment. They have $16 million more to spend for fewer students.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what does the minister have to say to the trustees of Red Deer public when they state in a resolution adopted unanimously that the increase in next year's budget will make it difficult to maintain existing programs and staffing, let alone implement the recommendations of the Learning Commission?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Assuming that there is no enrolment change in Red Deer public, their budget will have gone up 4.8 per cent last year to this year. Their budget will have gone up about $2.6 million. Given that $1.1 million was given to them in November of this year, they will have $1.6 million on top of the $1.1 million to hire teachers, to do what that school board sees as their priorities. Red Deer public, for example, has decided that they will go to full-day kindergarten, so they have put their funds into full-day kindergarten. They have gone up $2.6 million. On this side of the House $2.6 million is still a lot of money.

Dr. Pannu: My final supplemental, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: how can the school boards honour the minister's own commitment and implement the Learning Commission's recommendations by reducing class sizes when the budget increases they are getting will be barely enough to cover inflation, let alone improve classroom conditions by reducing class size?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the day when $250 million is not enough, the day when $250 million is just seen as a drop in the bucket is a sad day for Alberta. Two hundred and fifty million dollars, taxpayers' dollars, is still a tremendous amount of money, and that's something that everyone in this Legislature needs to remember.

Access to Motor Vehicle Information Database

Mr. Lord: Mr. Speaker, my constituents and indeed many Albertans are very concerned about reports that the War Amps organization is going to be denied access to motor vehicle information. My questions are for the Minister of Government Services. Could the minister inform this Assembly what his department is doing to ensure that the War Amps organization is going to be able to continue their very worthwhile operations in Alberta?

Mr. Coutts: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, let us say one thing. The War Amps organization is a very credible organization that really helps and assists young people not only in this province but across this great nation of ours with prostheses, and they do that by getting donations for the very valuable key tag service that they've provided for a number of years.

Charitable organizations have not been able to get access to the motor vehicle database, but about a year ago I met with War Amps, and they were able to convince me that they were a special case from the service that they provided.

What we did at that particular time was we made a special exemption, which was basically a compromise, for War Amps to gain access and retain access to the motor vehicle database for a period of two years. They can take the names and the addresses of Albertans who have successful drivers' licences and people who would benefit from the key tag service that War Amps has, and they would be able to put that in their database for the next two years. As a matter of fact, we're working today with War Amps on developing a form of consent. The form of consent would then be added to their database after the year 2006. We're staying within the privacy concerns of Albertans and protecting that.

Mr. Speaker, War Amps has not been denied access to the motor vehicle database.

Mr. Lord: Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister: could the minister explain why Impark and other private-sector parking companies will be allowed access to the motor vehicle information database?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, I want to clarify that Impark will continue to be denied access to the driver information because of customer complaints, and an investigation continues into those customer complaints and the practices that Impark used in violating the Fair Trading Act. Other private parking companies will be granted motor vehicle information only on the basis of implied consent, and that is by posting clear parking lot signage on the consequences of illegal parking. Names and addresses will only be released if – if – proof of payment is not displayed in accordance with the posted instructions. These restrictions will ensure that consumers, customers who park in those lots, are clear on the terms and the conditions on the parking there. If they agree to park there, they are consenting to those consequences if they do not abide by those terms. We will continue to audit private parking companies and to make sure that their requests for information comply with the terms of the contract.

Mr. Lord: My final question, Mr. Speaker, again for the same minister. I'm wondering if he could explain to this Assembly what his department is doing to address concerns by private investigators who are also concerned that they'll be put out of business if they can't access this database.

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, it's not only War Amps and not only private parking companies and public parking companies that get this kind of information, but we're working with all stakeholders across this province to make this transition easier and to ensure that there's compliance with these new, tougher regulations that were asked for by the Privacy Commissioner and the Auditor General.

Private investigators do a great deal of work for clients, such as banks and lawyers and insurance companies, and all they'll need to do is get consent from their customers in the event that their motor vehicle information is needed. That's the operative word. We're only going to give out information for purposes of that company to do business.

Banks and insurance companies who hire private investigators will have to ensure that the investigator has been approved by my department and licensed by the Alberta Solicitor General. We have made arrangements to release information to the bank or to the insurance company for use by that investigator working on their behalf.

To conclude, these scenarios are as much of the information that is available and needed for the motor vehicle related incident or if it is needed for a court proceeding.

Mr. MacDonald: Because this government would rather fly than drive, they are completely out of touch with Alberta drivers. The backgrounder released with last November's announcement about auto insurance reform stated that "age, sex and marital status will no longer be factors in setting premiums." My first question is to the Premier. Is it true that this government is going to break this commitment and will in fact allow discrimination to continue on the basis of age, sex, and marital status when setting auto insurance premiums?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, quite the contrary. I'll have the hon. Minister of Finance respond.

My directions and certainly caucus's agreement were quite clear relative to the fundamental policy surrounding this issue, and that is that we want to end the discrimination for young good drivers who happen to be male and older male drivers. We want to end that discrimination – that's what the legislation is all about – and at the same time to make sure that those who are injured are fairly compensated.

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, the only discrimination that will be brought into play in this new reform package, quite frankly, is the difference between a good driver and a bad driver. Then there will be discrimination. If you're a good driver, you're rewarded. If you're a bad driver, you're going to be penalized.

Mr. MacDonald: Edmonton drivers are going to be discriminated against.

Now to the Minister of Finance: is the government planning on setting maximum base premiums so high that insurance companies will be able to continue to use all the discriminating factors they use now?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, the actuarial assessment that has been in place for a long time has been based on regions within the province. Clearly, under this package it has shown that there has been a difference between the rural communities and the two major centres. That has been based on experience, the driving experience and the claims experience, within those jurisdictions. As the major centres become more equal, their driving experience, we assume, will follow suit, and we will see parity between them.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Premier: will the Premier admit that, yet again, this government's auto insurance plan or their proposals will have so many loopholes that once it's introduced, most Alberta drivers will be no better off than they are today, that in fact many will be worse off as a result of your tinkering with our auto insurance premiums?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again, I would remind the hon. member that they wouldn't even have an issue had we not created the issue to address a serious problem that involved discrimination against young male good drivers and older male good drivers. We want to end that discrimination.

I can't for the life of me see what they are upset about or why they are questioning these motives. These motives are good. You know, there's always difficulty with regulations and to make them as tight and as firm as we possibly can. What we're working through right now is the regulatory aspect of the legislation and the policy.

Mr. Speaker, I don't know; maybe the hon. member can answer this question. In areas where they do have state or socialist insurance, I don't know if one area, Regina for instance, pays the same as a driver in Saskatoon. I don't know that for sure. Perhaps the hon. member can enlighten me, or maybe I'll find it on the web, hopefully. Maybe he can enlighten me too. I don't know.

Animal Disease Surveillance

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, much attention has been given to the border opening for products from livestock under 30 months of age.

Most producers are able to provide documentation as to the birthdate of their animals, some as accurately as purebred registration certificates, only to find that the 30-month age criteria is irrelevant and that the actual benchmark is the appearance of the animal's third tooth. Many animals develop this tooth as early as 24 months. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Was the Alberta government involved in the determination of this criteria, and why do they continue to use the 30-month terminology?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the use of the third tooth to determine the approximate age of the animal is an international agreement, part of animal disease surveillance. It is accepted internationally and endorsed in Canada by the Canadian Food Inspection Agency, so directly we did not have any input into developing this. However, we have accepted it as an international standard.

One of the difficulties is that you have differing standards around the world. You have different ways of documenting age of animals, and this is seen as consistent. There's a second method you can use, and it's called ossification, but in that case the animal has to be slaughtered or dead.

Mr. Speaker, there's no question that this tooth can vary in its eruption in different ages of animal, but it is the most practical method we have. We call it denturing or mouting of animals. It's not new.

I just want to point out to the hon. member and to all hon. members that there are two reasons that you use this. One is that under that age you do not have to remove the specified risk materials, so you want to know the age of the animal because over 30 months there is a removal of SRMs. The second thing is that we cannot export the meat from an animal over 30 months, so we have to have a way of determining an age that is accepted by our international buyers.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that many producers find after the fact that their product has been hugely discounted by the packers under the premise of the mature designation, even in cases where the meat is sold in Canada and grades triple A, what process is available to the producers to guarantee that the packing houses are not simply using the mature designation to rip off the producer and, ultimately, the consumer?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, every producer that brings an animal into the market wants to make sure that they're getting the most value out of that animal, but grade of that animal and dentition, or the third tooth, are not related in any way. Although it's unlikely that you would get an over-30-month animal grading triple A, it is not that age that determines the grade of the carcass. The packer uses that, if they are a federally inspected packer, to do two things, as I indicated. They know they can export that meat into the international marketplace, and they also know that they do not have to remove the specified risk materials.

Mr. Speaker, it's important to understand that the seller and the buyer will determine what you get back. I mean, if you take an animal in to market and you're dissatisfied with the grade or the price, you take that up with the person who's purchasing it. But there is no question that some processors, especially large packers that are killing many animals a day, may charge a producer for bringing in an animal that's over 30 months in a group because they have to segregate that animal, and there can be additional costs.

Mr. Speaker, the grading of that carcass and the dentition work that's done to determine the age of the animal for removal of SRMs or export are not related in any way.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Education Funding

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For many school boards there will be no reduction in class sizes and there'll be no progress on the Learning Commission recommendations with respect to class size this September. In fact, in some urban and suburban districts class size will likely increase. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. How much money was allocated in the budget specifically for the commission's class size recommendations?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, this is déjà vu all over again. In the Commission on Learning there were two issues that were looked at, and, as I've said in this House before, they were essentially contradicting ideas. One idea was the whole issue of class size where they put in class size numbers that we have agreed to. What they said on the second side of things is that we should institute the funding formula.

The funding formula gives the school boards the ultimate flexibility. In all fairness, the school boards have the ability to use 95 per cent of the dollars that they will receive as they see fit. There is 5 per cent that is left over that is targeted for the Alberta initiative for school improvement, the SuperNet, and student health.

Mr. Speaker, in direct response to the hon. member's question, as you can tell by my explanation, there was no money that was put directly to class size. There was, however, $250 million that was given to schools, basic K to 12 education. Of that, $192 million went directly to school boards. The majority of the other $58 million went for increases in teachers' pensions, and the second thing was increases to the curriculum, where we're working on bigger and better curriculums.

So in direct response to that, there has been the potential for $192 million to go to class size if that's the school board's priority.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's absolutely wrong.

The question is to the minister. Given salary grid cost increases close to 2 per cent, inflation, and the arbitrated settlement, how with an average 5 per cent increase does the government expect urban and suburban school boards to begin reducing class sizes?

Dr. Oberg: This is quite unbelievable. A 5 per cent increase in education in Alberta is not heard of anywhere else in Canada. British Columbia: zero – zero – per cent for three years. Saskatchewan: probably looking at a decrease in education funding. Mr. Speaker, in this province our government gave $250 million to the K to 12 education system, which is an absolutely huge amount. Not only did we give $250 million; we have budgeted $650 million over three years for the basic K to 12 education system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the money is adequate, why has this minister in this letter made a crude attempt to muzzle school boards should they speak out on this issue?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of what letter the hon. member was talking about. I would assume that it is a letter that went to school boards clarifying the actual amount of dollars that they received, and I will give you an example. In the Assembly this week the hon. Member for Red Deer-West, I believe – Red Deer-North; directions were never my strong point – asked me a specific question about this, and what the school board had done is stated that, yes, there was $330,000 or thereabouts put into aboriginal education. There was another $230,000 or $240,000 that was put into special-needs education.

Mr. Speaker, what the school board forgot to say is that those funds are flexible. There is nothing tied to those funds. In essence, they can use those funds however they see fit, and that's what we expect school boards to do.

Global Telehealth Technology

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, health care is being reformed already by rapid changes in telecommunications. I understand that a respectable hospital in Boston is sending its X-rays and radiological films to India for reading and diagnosis. I also understand that that cost is approximately $10 U.S. in India as compared to $150 U.S. in Boston to read that same film. Apparently, this saves not only money but time for the patient. So my question today is for the minister of health. Is your department giving consideration to using telecommunication to access services outside of Canada for radiological diagnosis in order to save time and cost in patient care?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's health system already does make effective and efficient use of information technology in sending and reading radiology images from remote locations. We have one of the most extensive telehealth systems in the world. We have some 25 teleradiology sites here in the province, and through that, we are able to send X-rays and ultrasounds and other diagnostic images from remote locations in the province for reading in major centres such as here in the city of Edmonton or in the city of Calgary.

Mr. Speaker, we do not send any of these out of province at this time, but I think that in looking at the applications, the hon. member raises an issue that ought to be looked at. I think that the key issue, though, is that we must ensure that the standard of care, in this case the standards of reading films or X-rays, would have to be maintained. I'm not familiar enough with what the results of those readings would be in other jurisdictions. I've tried my best to verify the place where this practice takes place. I've been advised of it, but I cannot confirm which facility in Massachusetts is using this, nor can I confirm the price differential between the reading of films in Boston versus reading them in another jurisdiction.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Further to that, then, I'm wondering if the minister's department is using health care providers outside of Canada for any patient services.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we do spend a small amount of money in seeking services that are not available here in Alberta and in some cases not available in Canada. There are certain lab results that are very sophisticated that we do not have the volumes with which we can do them here in this province. Certain genetic tests, for example, we do send out of country to the United States. The total cost of that is in the magnitude of $100,000.

We do send Albertans out of province to other parts of Canada sometimes when we don't have a particular service here in Alberta. Last year, Mr. Speaker, we spent $4.3 million on out-of-country hospital care, mostly in the United States, although on occasion we do send people to jurisdictions other than the U.S.

So the answer is yes. We do rely upon out-of-country services, practitioners. We always need to satisfy ourselves that the service is not available in Alberta and that it is of a recognized high-quality calibre of service.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is to the same minister. Does your department or any of the RHAs have policies in place to ensure – and not just to consider but to ensure – that Canadian standards are met when buying patient services in a global market where the costs are lower?

2:20

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I think it is of primary consideration that we maintain very high standards in our delivery of service. So if a service is available through some other means that is less expensive, we would not do that at the cost of decreased quality of service.

Calgary Ring Road

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, on more than one occasion the Premier has suggested that tolls might be implemented to cover the cost of the future southwest leg of the Calgary ring road. The Alberta Transportation news release, however, makes no mention of any tolls. My questions today are to the Minister of Transportation. Can Calgarians look forward to paying a toll on a future southwest Calgary ring road?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is referring to a question that came from the media at the signing of the agreement in principle that will eventually transfer land from Tsuu T'ina nation to the Crown of Alberta for the purpose of a ring road. The question was: will this road be tolled? The reply by the Premier was: we're looking at all kinds of options. There are some policies tied to tolls, and with a toll you must have an alternate route. If you are going to toll a new road, you must have another road that provides the same type of service. That was further to the Premier's comments at that particular time.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that this ministry is considering implementing tolls for this ring road, is it also considering making this a P3 project?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in this Assembly I did mention that if our inaugural project, being the southeast leg of the Anthony Henday in the city of Edmonton, works well, if it brings savings to the provincial taxpayer, we will certainly look at that option for further development of the ring roads in Alberta.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister: has the government shifted its policy on tolls, and will it now begin to implement tolls on new highways constructed in the province?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, no. There have been no policy changes. We always had a policy, as long as I was minister of this department, that tolls could not be implemented unless there was an alternate route.

Also, tolls on roads don't particularly work in every instance and every application. There has to be a significant amount of traffic on that particular road to pay for the construction and the maintenance of that road in the future. I don't know how much traffic will be in the southwest, but on the other roads that we're looking at in terms of the ring road, we'd probably only cover about a third of the cost, and then once you subtract the collection costs, it decreases the revenue even further.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Health Care Reform

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As set out in an Ottawa speech by the Minister of Health and Wellness yesterday, the Tory government's vision is a bleak one of a stripped-down public health care system that only protects Albertans against catastrophic health costs. This is the very opposite of our national vision of a comprehensive public health insurance system that covers all health services. Far from being a Cadillac, this government's vision is one of an old beater sitting up on blocks in the yard. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why is the minister outlining a vision of health reform that, far from being the original vision of medicare, takes us back to the bad old days before medicare?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I wish to correct the hon. member on most if not all of the content of his preamble. The reality is that when medicare was first introduced in the province of Saskatchewan, Tommy Douglas – and I know that he has read extensively on matters that Premier Douglas had spoken about – contemplated that medicare would be about hospital care and physician care.

I don't want anybody to be left with the impression that the hon. member would leave, that we're trying to strip down medicare to its bare basics, but we do have to return to what its original roots were and what the original principles were. The reality is that many of the things that we do in the health care system today could never have been contemplated by the founders of medicare 40 years ago. There are things that we can do today that were not even available five or 10 years ago.

Our point as a government is that we need to reform our system because it's not sustainable. There are those who will say that it's sustainable because expressed as a percentage of gross domestic product, it hasn't really changed. Well, gross domestic product isn't like money in the bank that you can spend; revenue is.

Mr. Speaker, here is the stark reality across Canada: 8 to 10 per cent is how much health care has been increasing in provinces across this country each year for the last 10 years. Revenues over the same period of time have grown 2 to 4 per cent. So something has got to give. That's why it's not just the provincial government of Alberta that's interested in reform of the health care system. It's the reason why a New Democrat government in Saskatchewan would commission Ken Fyke to do a report for them. It's the reason why the Claire report was produced in the province of Quebec. It's why similar reports have been done in British Columbia and Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Speaker, we're doing our very, very best to ensure that we remain true to the original principles set out in medicare and still reform the system. We don't deliver health care the same way that we did 40 years ago. Our public policy and the structures in which we deliver it must therefore change. It must keep pace with medical technology and drugs and other things that are being done today that were never even contemplated 40 years ago.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the minister's speech says, "It will be a system that provides core services in the original spirit of medicare," will the minister now define for this House very broadly what core services he has in mind?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, that is the subject matter of our discussions right now in preparing a document that we can place before the Alberta public before the end of June. That's been the commitment of the Premier of this province and ours. I think that looking at how services are delivered in other jurisdictions will provide us with some demonstration of how things might be different and how they can change effectively.

I think that the hon. member would be well served to learn about health care systems in other parts of the world, and I think that one of the great difficulties is that he and other people like his supporters would only look to the United States and say: our choices are the United States or Canada. Our choices are not nearly so stark. We have a broad range of choices.

So we will look at other health care systems throughout the world, and we will come back with the best solutions that we can find that would be applicable to Alberta within the spirit and the principles of the Canada Health Act and its original principles.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the minister's speech says, "No one should face financial hardship because of catastrophic illness or injury," can the minister tell the House just when people should face financial hardship in our health care system?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I think it's very rare that an NDP member of the Legislature would quote a Conservative minister of health. But I think the principle would be well understood by most Albertans that there should not be catastrophic health suffered by an individual that results in a catastrophic financial burden. That's exactly what Tommy Douglas talked about on the floor of the Saskatchewan Legislature in 1961. I doubt if anybody asked Mr. Douglas at that time: what does that mean? I think it's well understood, the driving force of the principle. I think that's understood well by Albertans.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I'll call upon the first of seven hon. members to participate in Recognitions.

Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: 2:30      Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 36 participants in the Forum for Young Albertans. They are accompanied today by Tanya Dyer, Erin Smith, Richard Fix, Aurthur Lee, and Selena Craig. These fine young people come from a number of high schools across Alberta and are spending the week learning about the Legislature, the inner workings of the government, and will participate in a model parliament. Many of our members have met with these students, which has offered both parties an excellent opportunity to discuss the traditions and procedures of this Assembly and the role of the MLA. I would ask that our honoured guests, who are seated in the members' gallery, do rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Recognitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Robert Dixon

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to recognize today a very special young man from my constituency, Mr. Robert Dixon from Mannville, who was named this year's recipient of the 4-H Premier's award. He was selected out of 129 candidates during the annual 4-H selections program held in Olds last weekend.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier's award is the highest honour the Alberta 4-H program bestows on a member. The award recognizes young Albertans that demonstrate strong project management, leadership, and communication skills plus dedication to their community.

Robert embodies all of the above-mentioned traits and most certainly exemplifies the can-do spirit of 4-H. I'm extremely proud that this talented young man will be representing our province and our 4-H program as he travels to numerous events across Alberta during the next 12 months.

As the Premier's award winner Robert also takes on the role of 4-H ambassador. He will be joined by 13 4-H'ers who were also chosen during the selections weekend based on their leadership skills, their enthusiasm and commitment to their communities and rural Alberta.

A great deal of credit should be awarded to his mother, Barbara. As well, this achievement will also rekindle with fondness the memory of his late father, Bruce Dixon, himself an accomplished 4-H'er.

Please join me in congratulating Robert and all of the ambassadors and young 4-H members on their wonderful achievements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Liberation of Holland by Canadian Soldiers

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today marks a very special anniversary for both the Member for Edmonton-Manning and for me. Fifty-nine years ago today Canadian soldiers liberated my family and millions of other Dutch citizens from the German occupation in Holland. Also on that date members of my family that were incarcerated in German work camps were freed and started their journey back to the Netherlands.

Mr. Speaker, the Dutch people both here in Canada and in the Netherlands have not forgotten this historic day and the Canadian soldiers who freed them. Growing up as the son of Dutch immigrants, I learned at a very early age the importance of May 5, 1945. My parents would proudly fly both the Dutch and the Canadian flags to remind the people in Whitecourt that the VanderBurg household had not forgotten.

Thank you.

D-Day Commemoration

The Speaker: Hon. members, on that note just given by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, in the next few days all hon. members of the Assembly will receive an invitation from me about a very, very significant and major event that we will have on the grounds of the Legislature on June 6 of this year. That will be the 60th anniversary of the D-Day landings, and we're inviting as many of the veterans who actually participated in that landing on June 6, 1944, to be present. We will have a flyover with F-18s and helicopters and the whole thing, and it will be a huge, huge event. So when you get the memo, please read it.

The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

United Farmers of Alberta

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the United Farmers of Alberta, who recently opened a brand new 18,000 square foot state-of-the-art facility in Camrose. Designed to be a one-stop shopping facility for area farmers and ranchers, this new store reaffirms UFA's commitment to rural communities not only in my constituency but throughout Alberta. Since 1909 the UFA has helped build this province, advocating for farmers and rural Alberta through its influence on provincial politics, and its stamp on Alberta remains to this day.

In the early years of Alberta the UFA was integral in campaigning for the rights of the family and equality for women. As well, they took up the challenge of promoting equal access to education and health care for rural communities, and because of their efforts the province of Alberta created a department of health and a system of public health nurses to help deal with rural health issues.

Currently the UFA is travelling around the province with a history in motion display reminding Albertans about the 95-year history of the UFA in action. The launch of this display occurred in Camrose at the opening of their new regional service facilities.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

International Midwives Day

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise in recognition of the 14th annual International Midwives Day. The concept of having a day to honour midwives was born at the 1987 International Confederation of Midwives conference in the Netherlands, and the first International Midwives Day was celebrated on May 5, 1991. It is now observed in more than 50 countries.

Unfortunately, I make this recognition in support of fewer midwives in Alberta each year. This is due mainly, I think, to a lack of funding. A decade ago the Alberta Association of Midwives had 150 members who were hoping that midwifery would become publicly funded. The profession lost some members when official registration of midwives began in 1998 and additional government fees added to their costs. More midwives have been driven away by the continuing lack of coverage under Alberta health care.

B.C., Ontario, Quebec, and Manitoba all publicly fund midwifery services under their health care plans, and Alberta must consider going this route, especially in light of a severe shortage of obstetrical doctors in Alberta.

My congratulations to those midwives who continue to practise. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Hope Foundation of Alberta

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I had the privilege of attending the Hope Foundation auction gala this past weekend. This year's event raised funds for the Hope Kids, that provides personal growth for individuals, families, and professional caregivers.

I want to recognize the honorary chair of the event, our Minister of Children's Services, who was auctioned off for a considerable amount of money. I'd also like to acknowledge the Minister of Health and Wellness, who performed at the event as Elvis and Don Ho.

It was a Hawaiian event, Mr. Speaker, and I participated in the live auction and had the shirt off my back auctioned, and this lovely Hawaiian shirt was purchased by Dennis Erker from FE Advisory Group with the caveat that I wear it in the House today. So, Dennis, here it is.

Thank you and congratulations to the Hope Foundation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, I appreciate that explanation because I thought it was the Hutton tartan.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: How do I follow that?

European Union

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, this past weekend Hungary, Poland, Czech Republic, Slovakia, Slovenia, Estonia, Lithuania, Latvia, Malta, and Cyprus joined the European Union. These states of central Europe and Mediterranean countries joined 15 existing members to make the EU one of the strongest trading units in the world.

Membership in the European Union inspires political stability, economic openness, and fiscal responsibility. The expanded EU helps the countries gain a stronger economic footing to compete in the global economy.

The expansion also creates the largest internal market, accounting for some 450 million citizens and based on a single set of trade rules and an open economy with a high standard of rules. The EU negotiates major trade and aid agreements with other countries while at the same time allowing free transfer of goods and freedom to provide services among the member countries.

Alberta's Minister of Economic Development is always looking for new and emerging markets throughout the world. Alberta should be prominently featured in the expanded EU to take advantage of business opportunities and importing and exporting agreements.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Code of Silence Award

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize and congratulate this government for being one of five finalists for the code of silence award. This award recognizes only the most secretive governments and government agencies in Canada, and I'm sure the Alberta government feels that it is an honour just to be nominated.

The government won this distinction by the way it handled a FOIP request related to the Stockwell Day lawsuit. When Justice McMahon ruled on the matter he stated, "Access to information legislation is a means by which people get that information from sometimes reluctant government hands." He also said, "The right of the people to require that government account to them is fundamental to a strong democracy."

In conclusion, I'd like to say to the Premier and his government: congratulations for being nominated for this great honour, and best of luck winning the code of silence award on Saturday. First prize will not be a surprise.

head: 2:40 Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition here that I'd like to present signed by 80 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to not rescind the tax exempt status of Alberta Blue Cross because such taxing will significantly increase the premiums of the Canadian National Railways Pensioners' Group Health Benefit Plan and will have an adverse effect on all Alberta Seniors because the Alberta Seniors' Benefit which is administered by Alberta Blue Cross will be faced with increased costs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. First of all, I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter sent by David Lock, Blood Tribe deputy chief, Inspector Graham Abela from the Taber Police Service, and Chief Marshall Chalmers, president of the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police. Each of the letters expresses support from these associations for Bill 204, the Blood Samples Act.

Mr. Speaker, my second tabling is a letter from Michael Rennich, chair of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees local 003, representing correctional officers and correctional service workers. The letter talks about the need for legislation requiring persons in custody who have assaulted police officers or correctional officers to submit blood samples. The letter also states that the union local supports the bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would table the required number of copies of a letter from the Minister of Learning to the chair of the Red Deer public school board and copied to a variety of educational organizations across the province chastising that board for going public with its financial concerns.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of an Edmonton school board publication, a document called KeyNotes, showing that the board was disheartened to learn that it would not receive any provincial funding for the construction of new schools.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2004-05

Infrastructure

The Deputy Chair: As per our Standing Orders the first hour will be dedicated between the hon. minister and members of the opposition, following which any other member may participate. The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Before I begin, I would like to introduce staff that we have in the gallery, starting with my executive assistant, Jeff Paruk; then the assistant deputy minister in charge of capital projects, Malcolm Johnson; our director of finance, Jim Bauer; and the communications director, Mark Cooper.

Infrastructure's three-year business plan and the 2004-05 estimates indicate how we plan to contribute to the delivery of government programs by carrying out our core businesses. I know that all of you are very familiar with the responsibilities of Alberta Infrastructure, so I thought I would just give you a very high-level overview of our core businesses.

Infrastructure's core responsibilities are, one, to provide policy direction, planning, and expertise and capital funding for schools, postsecondary institutions, health care facilities, and seniors' lodges; two, administer the school plant operations and maintenance funding; three, build and maintain nearly 2,200 owned and leased facilities that support government operations, including the Swan Hills treatment plant; four, to provide accommodation, leasing, and realty services for government; five, manage the government's air transportation and vehicle fleets; and six, administer the natural gas rebate program.

Before I get into the specifics of our '04-05 estimates, I would like to outline the new and ongoing capital initiatives. The capital plan for Alberta Infrastructure will see levels reaching $2.64 billion over the next three years in areas such as health, school, and postsecondary facilities as well as numerous centennial projects to celebrate Alberta's centennial year. Of that amount, $1 billion of spending will occur during the '04-05 fiscal year. The following will highlight areas of spending from the perspective of the capital plan as well as the business plan.

[Mr. VanderBurg in the chair]

First of all, health facilities. New funding of $71 million for health facilities has been allocated in '04-05 to begin new projects such as the expansion of the main building, redevelopment of the emergency department and the intensive care unit at the Foothills hospital in Calgary. In addition to funding for upgrades, new space in the Capital health region will accommodate 170 new acute care beds. In '04-05 $273.1 million has also been allocated to continue work on 52 major health facility capital projects across the province. These include such projects as the redevelopment of the Royal Alexandra hospital in Edmonton, the Children's hospital in Calgary as well as a large number of ongoing maintenance projects.

School facilities. New funding of $42.2 million for school facilities has been allocated in '04-05 to begin 17 new projects such as school replacements in Onoway, Drayton Valley, and Peace River and new schools in Calgary. In addition, $178.6 million has been allocated in '04-05 to continue work on 647 major school facility capital and maintenance projects in communities throughout Alberta which were previously approved in the capital plan.

Postsecondary facilities. New funding of $53 million for postsecondary facilities has been allocated in '04-05 to begin new capital projects to accommodate major new programs such as the Augustana/University of Alberta merger in Camrose, the NAIT apprenticeship project in Edmonton and Grande Prairie, and the University of Calgary bachelor of science project.

In addition, some $161.8 million has been allocated in '04-05 to continue work on major postsecondary projects such as the health research and innovation centres at the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary and the natural resources engineering facility in Edmonton and many other maintenance projects.

Now I'd like to share with you the specifics of our '04-05 estimates, $1.6 billion targeted for '04-05. Alberta Infrastructure's total budget increases by 29 per cent, from $1.25 billion to over $1.61 billion, enhancing funding for Alberta's new and aging infrastructure.

Of the $1.61 billion, $1.54 billion was allocated to our operations and equipment and inventory purchases budget with the balance of $73.5 million going to capital investment; $598 million is for lights-on costs and includes caretaking, grounds maintenance, utilities, and routine repairs. [interjections] Right; lots of money. Of the $598 million, $349.5 million will support the day-to-day facilities operations of some 1,470 schools. To keep more than 1,900 government-owned buildings open, $125.8 million; lease funding of some $101 million for 1,766 leases to accommodate government programs in 290 leased facilities; $21.6 million to continue the operation of the Swan Hills treatment plant.

The budget for preserving infrastructure across the province is some $298.3 million, of which $107.7 million is for preserving health care facilities, $123.1 million for school facilities, $38.8 million for postsecondary facilities, and $21 million for government facilities, with the balance of $7.7 million going to seniors' lodges and environmental services for site remediation and servicing.

To expand, replace, or add to the existing infrastructure, we have some $527.6 million, of which $236.5 million is allocated for health care facilities expansion, $97.7 million for school facilities, $176 million for postsecondary facilities, $12.5 million going to centennial legacy grants – the legacy grants program will provide funding for municipalities and not-for-profit groups who wish to undertake major public accessible capital projects in commemoration of Alberta's 100th anniversary – with the balance of $4.9 million going to government facilities and the land services program.

The remainder of the operating budget is going to address ongoing commitments which total some 108.2 million dollars. The ongoing commitments include the day-to-day administration costs, program support costs, and noncash items such as amortization and consumption of inventories. Fifty-five per cent of the $60 million is for noncash items such as amortization and consumption of inventories, with the balance designated for support services and air and vehicle transport services.

The equipment and inventory budget of some 4.9 million dollars will go towards purchases of the Swan Hills treatment plant as well as vehicle and air transportation services.

The capital investment portion of our budget is approximately $73.5 million. Of this amount, $63 million will go towards funding such projects as the level 3 biocontainment lab, the Leduc business incubator facility, the refurbishing of the north and south Jubilee auditoria, as well as the many centennial projects that are planned or underway. The remaining $10 million will primarily be used to purchase land required for the transportation and utilities corridor.

I believe that the budget estimates for this year will allow us to meet our business plan's goals and help maintain the government's commitment to financial responsibility. So I would be happy to take questions that you may have. If we can't answer them this afternoon, we will get you the answers in writing in the near future. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to start off by thanking the minister and his staff for being here today and for their input into the debate on Infrastructure and also thanking the minister for his opening comments. I look forward to his responses. If some of the questions are technical in nature, require further time, if he would provide those answers in a written form and answer those questions that he has the information here today.

In looking at the core business section of Infrastructure and particularly as the minister outlined them today, core business 1, "Partner with health regions, school boards, post-secondary institutions and seniors' lodge foundations to support the delivery of government programs." Now, in goal 1, "Provide leadership and funding for the development and preservation of health care facilities and the preservation of seniors' lodges," I notice that one of the words here that is extremely important to me is the "funding."

When we go to goal 2 in core business plan 1, we go on to say, "Provide leadership to preserve and deliver effective and efficient facilities in support of life-long learning." Now, no mention in here of funding for facilities in support of lifelong learning. So my question to the minister would be: is this a significant shift from what we've enjoyed in this province since 1905 when it comes to government funding of public schools, or does the delivery of "effective and efficient facilities in support of life-long learning" also include the funding for the building of those facilities? That was one thing that caught my eye just as you were outlining your core business section.

As well, Mr. Chairman, we have in this province somewhere between a $6 billion to $9 billion infrastructure deficit, and this indicates that there are already many serious infrastructure issues in Alberta that highlight the steep price to be paid for not addressing repair, rehabilitation, and replacement of existing infrastructure, let alone addressing the needs that this province has for its rapid growth and the growth that we expect to have in the future. The Canadian Society for Civil Engineering through their technology road map project estimates that municipal infrastructure in Canada is a $1.6 trillion asset. So in order to protect our infrastructure assets here in the province of Alberta, I'm wondering: what additional price do Alberta taxpayers have to pay for neglecting our assets over the past decade?

The minister in his opening comments indicated that Alberta's infrastructure budget is increasing by 6.6 per cent to over $1.6 billion in 2004-2005. The minister's capital investment in 2004-2005 will be $205 million, an increase of $142 million over 2003-2004. The highlights include funding of $598 million for operations, $298 million for preservation, and $528 million for expansion.

In looking at page 223, operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, the ministry support services rose by almost $975,000 over 2003-2004. If the minister could please indicate what reasons there were for these increases to occur.

When we look at infrastructure operations, preservation, and expansion, it rose by over $93.5 million. Which projects will this money be going toward? Given that in 2003-2004 the ministry was over budget by $232 million in this area, can the minister indicate reasons why this will not happen again in 2004-2005?

Meanwhile, equipment/inventory purchases for infrastructure operations, preservation, and expansion have gone down by almost $16 million. What was the reason for overspending in 2003-2004, and if the reason for this is because of the use of P3s, how much more is it costing them in the questions above? The capital investment in infrastructure operations, preservation, and expansion has risen by over $32 million. What projects will these additional funds be going toward?

In program 1, ministry support services, the operating expenses for the minister's office rose by $5,000, while those for the deputy minister's office rose by $11,000. Could the minister please indicate why these additional funds were required? The operating expenses for strategic services rose by $79,000. Again, if the minister could please outline why these additional dollars were required.

The operating expenses for information management also rose by $809,000. If he could please indicate why there was such a great increase in the operating expenses for information management.

The operating expenses for shared support services rose by $71,000. If the minister could please outline to us: what are the shared support services, and why the increase?

As well, why were there information management expenses in 2003-2004 related to equipment/inventory purchases and none for 2004-2005?

Program 2, infrastructure operations, preservation, and expansion. Why have the infrastructure expansion expenses for seniors' lodges decreased by almost $3 million given the aging demographics of our population? It would seem that as we have an increase in aging in the demographics of our population, we would require more expansion of what is presently there.

As well, if the minister could please indicate why there are no operating expenses for energy rebates in 2004-2005? Has the program ended? Will there not be any more energy rebates? Just what has happened to that program, please?

The expenses for program services have increased by over $600,000. Once again, if the minister could please outline why there is an increase of $600,000 for program services.

Why have expenses for the amortization of financial transactions increased by over $2 million in this particular reporting period? I would have expected that as we pay down the amortization on various projects, this would be an area where we would expect this particular amortization to be less. As well, with the fact that interest rates have been relatively stable over the past year, why would there be an increase and not a decrease?

Also, if the minister could outline which capital and accommodation projects account for the over $24 million increase in infrastructure capital investment in 2004-2005. As well, if the minister could please indicate why the capital investment for land services is decreasing by over $10 million in 2004-2005.

When we look at the statutory program, it indicates that almost $127 million in capital investment has been earmarked for alternatively financed projects when this method of financing hasn't even been proven to be cost-effective to the taxpayers. We can talk more about this as we go along, but I think the prime example of why this is such a great concern to us is the fact that, initially, when the Calgary courthouse was announced, it started out to be a project that was going to be in the $170 million range.

Under capital projects in the province, which was put out by the Ministry of Economic Development as late as March 31, 2004, it indicated that the cost of the new courthouse was going to be $170 million. Then we saw that the cost of the courthouse had increased to $300 million, and then in the latest estimates this has soared to approximately half a billion dollars. So, again, there is great concern in the province over the cost-effectiveness for alternatively financed projects.

I will get into that a little bit more, but this particular question refers to the $127 million in capital investment that has been earmarked for alternatively financed projects. If the minister could also indicate why there are no specifics on these projects such as what they are and how they've proved to be cost-effective. Again, we want to get away from this whole attitude that a P3 is simply nothing more than a credit card where government charges today and taxpayers pay over the next 30 years. It is a question that continues to bear heavy certainly on the minds of Alberta taxpayers, who are looking at having to pay for these projects over the next 30 years.

As well, what Albertans are very, very concerned about with P3 projects, particularly if we're looking at the P3 model to build the southwest Calgary hospital, is: what guarantees of service are going to be provided to the patients in those hospitals, particularly as we move down the road and the costs of the hospital increase as they have under whatever model we use, to ensure that there's going to be a level of service in that hospital and that that service to the patients will not be compromised to keep the profit margins of the private provider in place? Again, people are very concerned about the quality of the services that will continue over the life of a P3.

I also would like to ask the minister a question regarding the change in capital assets. New capital investment in centennial projects has increased by over $20 million. Which projects will this money be going toward?

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

In the 2004-2007 Infrastructure business plan the mission is "Through leadership and technical expertise, provide effective, efficient, innovative and timely infrastructure and services." This comes from page 278. Alberta Infrastructure's vision is also to provide Albertans with "innovative, quality, and sustainable public facilities." Of course, with our current situation where we have a huge infrastructure debt, the ministry isn't there yet.

Students at Bow Valley high school in Cochrane have had to go without water and sewer facilities for over four years now. That and a number of other safety issues in and around the school have been the result of disputes between private developers and the town. The province certainly hasn't stepped in to make sure that the students are getting the services they need so that they can focus on their studies and do well in school.

Certainly, when we look at the minister's definition of "effective, efficient, innovative and timely infrastructure services," if the minister could tell us how this situation that is presently occurring in Bow Valley high school, where water has to be hauled into the school and the waste products removed in the same manner – how can we say that we have effective, efficient, innovative, and timely infrastructure services when after four years we still have not been able to hook up the sewer lines between the school and the lines that are there? I would urge the minister to certainly make this a priority situation to get those lines hooked up so that this particular school will not have to experience any more delays in being able to use city water and, as well, to have their sewer services hooked up so that they can be operational.

The other situation that this has certainly led to is that Bow Valley school for four years now has not been able to water any of its fields, and certainly the grass that was growing there at one time has died because of the lack of water. It is essential that somebody step in and solve this problem. We cannot allow students to go to school under these types of conditions. Would the minister look at the possibility of intervening in this situation, getting the sewers hooked up, getting the city water so it can be used, and work out between all parties involved how the issues at hand are going to be resolved?

As well, another issue is the access road to the school. The plans had indicated that it would be paved, and it has not been paved. I would like to know what steps the minister will commit to to ensure that this school's infrastructure and services are improved so that they at the very least have permanent water and sewer services, adequate playing fields, and a safe access road.

Under core business 3, goal 6: "Efficiently manage the government's air and vehicle fleets to provide safe, reliable and responsive services in a fiscally responsible way." We find this on page 278. Can the minister explain how the billing-back process works when departments book flights on government planes?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll have to apologize to the member, but I was having difficulty following him as he was going through asking very specific questions in different areas. Of course, when you start talking about projects, I don't have that in front of me, so we'll have to get back to you in writing in the future.

I didn't catch all of what you were saying about if there was a shift in the prioritization of schools and the amount of money that we're spending, and I take it that's new versus preservation. No, there's not a shift. I just want to make sure that we understand that.

As far as the infrastructure debt that has built up, yes, we acknowledge that and we have talked about it. Of course, doing the audits on all of the buildings that we're responsible for – the K to 12 schools, the postsecondary, the health facilities – we've got now a very good understanding of the condition of the buildings and what has to be done. We've advocated all along that we need to make sure that we're preserving what we have – it doesn't make a lot of sense to let that go into disrepair – but since the province is so dynamic and growing so fast, we're also faced with having to build new on the school side.

Of course, as you can appreciate, part of the problem we're running into is the fact that a lot of schools now are in the wrong place, and you can't just up and move them. We have to make that balance, and of course one of the things that anybody that's served on any school board recognizes is the fact that it's not easy to close a school. So we're looking at how perhaps we could work our way to see fit to give school boards more latitude in the closure of schools and things like allowing them to plan a number of years ahead so that they could let their parents know that this school is going to be closed. I don't think it would be nearly as dramatic when the time would come.

The rebate program. The gas rebate program is the one that I believe you're referring to, the fact that there's nothing in the budget. The way the sustainability fund is set up, that funding – and it occurred this past fiscal year – is where the money came from, out of the sustainability fund. It wasn't a budgeted item. So that's what would happen coming up in the next fiscal year. If in fact the formula is triggered, then the money will come out of the sustainability fund. So it's not a budgeted item as far as the year coming up.

The amortization – and I think you touched on the $2 million increase – is because of the increase in the value of the capital that we're responsible for. It's a percentage of the total value of the capital. So it's got nothing to do with the interest rate. That's got nothing to do with it. It's simply that we've added more capital; therefore, our amortization is higher.

The courthouse. As I've mentioned before in the House in answers to questions, the $170 million was just for a provincial courthouse. That was not for a structure that would put all three courts together in one location. That was for just the provincial. So don't confuse that number with what we were dealing with later on.

Yes, the costs did increase as we were going along. The fact is that the cost per square metre was going up. You've got to appreciate that building a courthouse is not a normal thing that we're into all the time, so we did underestimate some of those costs. But when you go to the last number that you refer to – I think you said almost half a billion dollars; well, the number that was kicking around out there was even slightly higher – that is not the cost of the structure. That's the net present value when you take it over the 30 years and back it up to net present value.

One of the unfortunate things that we do in government is if we finance something ourselves, pay cash for it, we never show net present value. We never do that. So it's very, very misleading when you try to compare that number with the actual cost. What I tell you we will be doing is that we will be showing that number regardless of how the courthouse is financed. I know that it's a tough one for people to get their minds around, but that $530 million is not cash. That's not money spent; that is a book value of the asset, net present value. You've got to take it out over the 30 years and then back it up. That's it on the courthouse.

Your comments about the P3s. I don't believe for one minute that any patient going into a hospital – and I want to talk about hospitals because that's the one you referred to – is going to ask the question: now, who owns the bricks and mortar? They don't care about that. They don't care who owns the bricks and mortar. They don't care how the bricks and mortar were financed. What they care about is the health services in that structure, and we've never talked about doing anything but maintaining the current system with the delivery of service in that structure.

I think you were concerned about the maintenance of the structure and the cleanliness and those types of things and that they would be somehow below standard, and the reason that the operator would do that would be to make money. Well, when you write the contract, you clearly describe the standard that has to be met. If there's a default, if in fact the operator would be not living up to that contract, then, of course, there would be penalty clauses, and the easiest thing to do is simply withhold payment. If you have to in order to accomplish what is necessary and what's in the contract, you would put in your own operator. I don't get a bit worried about that bogeyman because that's easily covered off.

As far as the cost of the money, we have found through our work on the Calgary courthouse that, yes, the private sector can't borrow the money quite as cheaply as we can, but it's only 40 to 80 points above. If government is backing it, they're able to get that kind of a rate. Well, I can tell you that the risk that you transfer over there to the owner, designer, builder, operator is well worth those few points.

Of course, the process that we have established is, first, there has to be a business case for the project. Then if that is approved, if it's a P3, it will come to our department, and the expertise that we have internally – if it's a health facility, then we involve Health; if it's schools or learning, we involve Learning people; plus Treasury; they're all involved – has to be satisfied that it's good for Albertans. Then we move it outside to a totally private-sector committee, and they scrutinize it. They have to approve it, and they have to be able to show that, in fact, this is a good thing for Albertans. It's got to be efficient; it's got to be cost-effective. We insist on having the full lifetime cost of that structure and the operations. So when you look at the whole operation, I believe that with the safeguards we've got in place, you won't see any of them going ahead that aren't good for the public.

Now, you talked about the Bow Valley school in Cochrane, and we agree with the comments you made that it seems very difficult to understand how a school could go four years without having water or sewer, and of course the paved road is, I think, not as large a concern as the fact that they don't have water and sewer. Unfortunately, that school was built when there was a fight going on between municipalities and the developer. One of the things that we're putting in place now to try to prevent this kind of thing from ever happening again: before we will give a school board the money, we have to approve the site, and approving the site means that the services will either be to the site or there will be a commitment from the municipality to put them to the site.

The ground. We will insist on testing having been done so that we don't run into the situation like we had at Edson where over $400,000 had to be spent to satisfy the ground after they had decided where the building was going to be built. I can give you other instances where we've run into those problems. Even right here in the city of Edmonton there was an overrun in excess of $100,000 because they found when they went to start testing the soil that in fact they had to put pillars down to bedrock. Well, we need to know those things before the advancement of the money, so they'll be taken care of.

But it's not the Department of Infrastructure's responsibility to provide any services outside of the lot. We provide the services from the property line to the structure but not outside of the property line. While some might say that has changed, no, it isn't a change. What has changed is that years back if a school board decided to build a school in a certain location and the services weren't to the property, they simply went ahead and built it and then requisitioned the municipality. That's how it used to work. I mean, I was there; I've done that, so I know how it worked.

Now, of course, the province is responsible for the school, so what we've said is, "We provide the services from the property line to the building; end of story," and I'm adamant that we stick with that.

You asked what we might do. I've been in discussion with the Minister of Municipal Affairs and with the Minister of Learning to talk about the Cochrane situation, and we will hopefully find a resolution to it, because it's very unfortunate that the students in that school are the ones that are paying for this squabble that was there before that had nothing to do with us.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's an honour for me today to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly some students from the grade 9 class at Mountain View school and some of their teachers and leaders. Many of my colleagues have stood to recognize students from their schools in their constituency, and they have said that their schools were probably the brightest, smartest kids to ever come here and so on and so forth. I won't say that my students aren't, but what I can honestly say about these students is that they probably travelled from the most southerly school of any group that's ever come to this Assembly. It's a school that's right on the Montana border. I welcome them here today, and I would like to acknowledge their principal, Mr. Ken Peterson, and a teacher, Mr. Jamie Quinton; parents Mrs. Connie Quinton, Mr. Royce Leavitt, Mrs. Marina Leavitt; and their class president, Kaleen Roe. I would invite them to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

Infrastructure (continued)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of comments before I continue with my questions for the minister. Again, getting back to, first of all, Bow Valley school, I certainly wasn't asking the department to put those services in, but after four years some type of mediation process has to occur in order for what has remained to be done. It would appear with what is taking place in that particular area that the parties involved who are responsible are not getting anywhere.

I think it's incumbent, whether it be Infrastructure, Municipal Affairs, whoever it may be, that maybe it might be a co-operative effort among ministries to rectify this problem, because four years to operate a school without running water is unbelievable, absolutely unbelievable. So I would certainly urge the minister to see what he can do in order to fulfill the role as mediator or see that somebody does to get this completed.

As well, when we are getting back to the Calgary courthouse, just a couple of comments there. I'm looking at an article in this magazine called Open Mind. The title of the article is Pursuing P3 Potential. In the last paragraph they talk about the three companies who were invited to participate in the request for proposal stage.

It took three months to receive the [request for proposal] submissions, which included detailed architectural designs as well as financial and operating proposals. The submissions were carefully assessed during a three-month period, between June and August 2003. In September, negotiations ensued with two teams in order to assess which would become the preferred proponent. In October, GCK was declared the preferred proponent and it has been negotiating ever since with the provincial government to reach financial close.

This to me almost seems backwards in the way we do business in that we got to this stage and we didn't have a commitment on finances. So when we get to that situation, then, certainly, I think we can continue to look at cost overruns or at least increases in prices. I don't know what the ministry has in its procedures which eliminates people who are bidding on a P3 project and lowballing their bids in order to get to this stage and then, once they are accepted, to have to incur the cost overruns, as we have seen in this particular situation.

I want to thank the minister, as well, for his explanations on the questions that I had presented to him in the first section of the debate. As my first set of questions was ending, I was asking the minister: can the minister explain how the billing back process works when departments book flights on government planes? How much has the Department of Infrastructure billed other departments for the use of the government aircraft?

As well, in 2003 there were 1,600 flights taken on government planes. Who was responsible for approving all those flights? What is their position in the ministry? Do other government departments play any role in approving flights, or is it all done through the Ministry of Infrastructure?

Does the Ministry of Infrastructure make the determination of what value there is in flying a government plane compared to commercial, or does the requesting department make that determination, or is the determination made at all?

On page 75 in the Alberta Infrastructure annual report 2002-2003 why were there authorized dedicated revenues of $1.7 million but actual revenues were only $887,000? Will the minister provide a detailed breakdown of where this $887,000 in revenues for air transportation services came from in 2002-2003? As well, can the minister tell us whether any of this $887,000 in revenue was from individuals or corporations outside of government? In other words, was the total of $887,000 all paid from other government departments, or was some of it from other outside sources?

As well, if the minister could please indicate to us in dollars how much the government aircraft are expected to depreciate over the next five years. I think that, particularly in one or two cases, the planes are getting to be fairly old. Are there any plans with the ministry to replace any of the aging aircraft?

On page 81 of Alberta Infrastructure's annual report there's a line item for revenue for air transportation. This line item is for $1.991 million. In Executive Council's annual report for 2002-2003 there's also a corresponding line item for expenses incurred by others for air transportation. That number is also $1.991 million. Can the minister explain this $1.991 million? Is this for Executive Council flights? If the minister also could, please, tell us who pays for Executive Council flights. Also, is there a different process followed for Executive Council compared to other government departments in paying for their flights?

I would also like to take the opportunity, Mr. Chairman, to make some comments and ask some questions in regard to infrastructure debt. This is found on page 279 of the business plan. While the ministry has recognized the challenges facing its department with regard to growth and an aging infrastructure, it has not identified effective solutions that will not place Albertans' essential buildings and services at risk. Its capital plan addresses only a small number of priority needs, realized primarily on the risky funding scheme of public/private partnerships, or P3s. On page 279 P3s are identified as a reality here in Alberta. However, it remains very much an experiment, particularly when it comes to private companies building, maintaining, and operating normally public facilities.

The department itself states that it is "challenged with determining the merit of each proposal. Each partnership . . . requires extensive evaluation and expert analysis." We find this on page 279 of the business plan. This certainly is an interesting statement because it recognizes the challenge of assessing whether a P3 proposal brings value for money to taxpayers.

We believe that this is particularly true for essential public services, which have traditionally required the protection of the government to ensure that their integrity is upheld. Schools, hospitals, courthouses, and highways are crucial infrastructure that directly impact the quality of life in Alberta. These facilities require stringent quality controls to maintain and enhance services, accessibility, and accountability. In such cases the government is accountable to the taxpayer whereas the private sector is not.

This begs the question as to why the government has decided to pursue P3s for priority needs when this government has failed to produce any evidence that P3s are cost-effective for Albertans, when there are so many apparent downfalls to using a private/public partnership to build, maintain, and sometimes operate a traditionally public facility. So my question to the minister is: what studies has the Ministry of Infrastructure conducted or consulted to ensure that P3s could provide value for money here in Alberta? If the minister would please not only name the studies but, as well, table them here in the Assembly.

Could the minister please explain how P3s save taxpayers' money given that the Alberta government can finance public capital much cheaper than any private corporation?

As well, in the building of P3s, private corporations have to protect themselves against sudden cost increases, so certainly there is a level of protection that is built into their bids. I think the best example we have today – and it's been mentioned many times in this House – is how you can't even get a price for steel which will be held to for much more than seven days as things currently exist in the world today. Certainly, I think one of the reasons that we have the situation that has arisen is the massive explosion of infrastructure projects in China that are galloping along at an unprecedented rate.

My next question to the minister: is he concerned that there is private control of public buildings and how there is going to be a reduction in the public's control of its own buildings and services? Certainly, when we look at, for example, if a P3 model were to be used to construct a hospital, such as the examples we've had in England, which were dismal failures by the way, what is this particular ministry going to do differently in order to make certain that we don't fall into the same pitfalls that England experienced in their P3 hospitals? I believe there was a P3 hospital in Surrey, British Columbia, that certainly fell victim to the lack of controls of the government in its operations. If the minister could expand on that, please.

How do P3s provide any savings for taxpayers when the private sector also builds a profit into the final cost and consultation and legal fees can reach phenomenal rates?

As well, along the same lines, if the minister could please provide us with the cost for consultation and legal fees that have presently occurred in the proposal for the Calgary courthouse.

Given the profit factor with regard to private companies involved in P3s, can this not result in lower overall quality on projects when firms try to maximize profit margins by cutting corners? I think of our example of the Hamptons school in Calgary, which was constructed with residential grade building materials and not commercial grade. Less than three years after its completion the school board was required to spend $150,000 on upgrades and repairs because of a lower standard of building materials.

As well, I think the Calgary courthouse, again, is a prime example of how P3s can be plagued by cost overruns at taxpayers' expense when projects are poorly managed and contracts are poorly framed. How can the Alberta taxpayer be assured by the government that there is an effective and efficient way of evaluating costs to Alberta taxpayers?

The government has an advisory committee on alternative financing, and a number of these people on that committee are from the private sector, so certainly there has to be some type of evaluation used by the department to make certain that there isn't a bias in choosing a P3 over the traditional way of doing business. If the minister could please indicate how this decision is made as to whether there is a benefit to doing the project either through the traditional methods that we have followed in this province for many, many years or whether we choose the P3 model.

How do we know that where P3 projects do demonstrate savings, it is not due to staff cuts and layoffs, service cuts, new or augmented user fees, and lower quality of services?

I think that if we want to look at an example where I certainly get many questions from people, it's where we have moved to a private company for road maintenance and particularly on highway 2. We know that highway 2 is a much-used highway in this province, that the amount of traffic and the amount of heavier loads that travel that route have certainly increased over the last decade, yet there is great concern that the condition of the highway is not being maintained, that the condition of the highway has been compromised. So certainly with a P3 model there is great concern, as I indicated. There are a number of different things, whether they be staff cuts or service cuts or whatever, that people are very, very concerned with.

Again, when we look at P3s, by handing over essential public services to the private sector, the government will lose in-house expertise, effectively diminishing its capacity to provide this service again. We thus become more vulnerable to private-sector interests or more dependent on P3 schemes.

I think that probably the great example we did have, not only in this province but world-wide, was when we had a tremendous downturn in the economy in the '80s, and everybody was downsizing. One of the strategies companies like GM and IBM used to combat this downturn was to lay off management. What both of those companies found was that they had lost their corporate knowledge when they did this, and both of the companies indicated that it probably took them in the neighbourhood of 10 years in order to get that corporate knowledge back. Because of the loss of that, there were great inefficiencies in those companies.

It is certainly one of those situations that we want to avoid, because I know that over the years in our departments here in the government of Alberta we've I think been blessed with civil servants who were extremely good in their particular areas, and I think that as we move more and more to a P3 model, as I indicated earlier, we do stand a risk of losing those experts from government.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, I could spend the rest of the afternoon on P3s, but I guess it probably would not resonate in the minds of the opposition, so I won't for the rest of the people that clearly understand them. [interjections] Oh, you want to hear more? Okay.

It's interesting to note, Mr. Chairman, that their kissin' cousins in Ottawa have done something that's kind of interesting. They've appointed Liberal MP John McKay as the Prime Minister's point man on P3s. He just recently made a comment about government operations and the need to bring the whole system into the 21st century. Mr. McKay went on to describe those opposing modernization – namely, public/private partnerships – the public-sector unions and the NDP, as being locked in a Marxist-Leninist dialogue of the 1960s: strong rhetoric from a government about to call an election. He then went on about the federal government's preferred method of private-sector involvement being through P3s, public/private partnerships. So that's what came out of the federal government.

It's also interesting to note that the new Liberal government in Ontario, when they were in opposition, of course denounced what the government was doing about setting up any kind of P3. They called it something different when they came into office, but they proceeded with the same process.

Then our friends over on the other side of the country in B.C., when a number of us met with a number of their cabinet ministers, were very anxious that we work together with their minister of public works in order to promote P3s, and this is coming from another Liberal government.

So I guess it's fair to say that some of them have seen the light; others don't.

The member talked about the process. Well, let me describe the process as far as the Calgary courthouse is concerned. The first thing we did is we called for an expression of interest, and there were some 125 individuals, groups that responded to that. From that, then, we put out a request for qualifications, and there were – I don't remember – nine or 10 that responded to that request. Out of those, we narrowed it down and determined that there were four firms that were qualified to enter the race as far as the request for proposal was concerned.

We got the request for proposals in, and there were three companies that responded to that. Then we broke the projects into seven different components. Seven different components. We had people assigned from the outside as well as people from the departments that looked at each one of those components. But, Mr. Chairman, it's really important to understand that the different proponents were not identified. They had A, B, and C. That's how the proponents were identified.

We had all these different groups. For example, the group that was looking at the design: that's all they looked at in the three projects. They scored each project, and we went on down the line. That clearly showed two that were better than the one, so the one was dropped. Then there were negotiations started with those other two. Out of that, finally one was chosen.

In this whole process we had appointed a very, very honourable and outstanding individual by the name of George Cornish, who was at one time the commissioner of the city of Calgary, a very outstanding individual, and he and a couple of other people were charged with making sure that this was fair, that it was open, and that everything was above-board. He came back with a report and said that it was squeaky clean, that there was nothing untoward about the whole process, and that everybody was treated fairly. As a matter of fact, it was interesting because we got comments back from people that didn't get into the last round, and they admitted that the process was fair and it was open, and they were not concerned about that.

The opposition continually talks about the increased price of the structure as we went along. The fact is that the cost per square metre did not go up from the choice of the – actually, after we had chosen the two to stay in the race, those prices did not change. There were a number of other things that changed that ended up boosting the price, but it was not the construction costs. Of course, as I explained earlier today, the number that the opposition keeps referring to, over half a billion dollars, is the net present value, which is not a cash outlay.

So I hope that we've got something a little clearer on that whole process. I'll get back into this P3 thing a little later on, but because he raised the Calgary courthouse – I'll just leave it at that at this time.

The billing that you referred to on the aircraft – I think you talked about the approval and who flies on the planes. The way the system works is that Infrastructure is responsible for the aircraft. When the Premier books a plane, his department books it, and we don't get involved except that the manifest comes over to us. If a member of Executive Council wants to use the aircraft, then it comes to us for our approval. If a department wants to use the aircraft, the deputy minister has to approve it. That's how the approval system works.

Internally, then, when it's a department that books, we charge back to the department. That's where the $887,000 that you talked about for revenue came from, other departments paying us back.

The breakdown that you see, the $1.99 million – I'm sorry; I didn't follow exactly where it is. That number rings a bell for me, and $1.9 million was the cost last year for the aircraft for Executive Council. Okay? Executive Council. There are a number of other items in there, amortization and capital, bringing it up to the $3.4 million. So there's about $1.5 million left over that is departments, and the $887,000, I believe, is the number from the other departments.

Who flies on the government planes? Well, we've got those guidelines, and I know that we gave them to – I guess it was maybe the press, but I thought you had a copy of those. First of all, all MLAs can fly on those aircraft. Certainly, the opposition has availed themselves of that, maybe not lately. You don't have any members outside of Edmonton, so you don't have the same reason. But when you had an MLA in Calgary, he flew on those planes. When you had a member from Fort McMurray, he flew on the plane. So it's open to MLAs.

4:00

Who else can fly? Well, spouses can fly if there's room, only if there's room. If a spouse flies with a member to a function that they've been invited to and it turns out that on the way back there's another government member, then no, they can't fly back. We'll get you the whole detail on that, but that's basically the way it works.

You asked about the age of the aircraft, and you asked about depreciation over the next five years. Let's just get you that number. I don't know it off the top of my head. Airplanes depreciate very fast, and they kind of level off, and then they take another dip. I happen to know because I owned one. The age of the aircraft, the 200s: one is an '80; one is an '81 model. Then, of course, the 350 is a '97 model, and the Dash is somewhere in between there. I don't know the age right off of my head.

You asked about the replacement. Well, that's a tough one because, like I just finished telling you, the depreciation is rapid, levels off, then rapid. Unfortunately, we're getting to that rapid stage again. One of the things that happens when you get so many hours and so many years is you have to do what's called a vessel test. That means they've got to strip the whole plane down, pressurize it, and test the skin. Of course, metal testing goes on in the whole structure of the aircraft to make sure that there are no cracks or weak spots. So once you get to that level, that's fairly expensive, and it's costly to us because, of course, then we have to charter while the plane is down. We try to book it when it's not in, like, a firefighting season or that sort of thing, but it's not always that easy to do that.

Now, you talked at length once again about P3s. You were so worried about that horrible, horrible word "profit." Well, what do you think that a contractor that bids on a project – do you think he's doing it out of the goodness of his heart? No. How about the architect? Did they do it for the goodness of the heart? No. They've all got profit built in even if we are going to pay for it and we put out a bid. There's profit in all of those, and you have to have profit. People have to have profit. They can't operate if they don't have profit. So to be all bent out of shape about profit being in a P3 – well, yeah, sure there's profit. But there is if you do it in any other way too.

The profit that I think you pretend you're worried about is the profit on the money that they borrow. Well, not necessarily. You mentioned steel, which is a very good one. I was glad you mentioned that because the fact is, like with the courthouse, the prices go back to September, I think, before the steel went way up, and those prices are still holding. Well, guess what? That risk is all being transferred over to the private sector. If we were now putting out the tender, we would be faced with those increased prices.

So what's difficult to assess in these projects is: what is the value of off-loading risk? I've asked the Auditor General. I think we've discussed it in Public Accounts more than once. What is the value of off-loading risk? That's a tough one to quantify.

Also, another one that's tough to quantify is if you get a structure built, say, two years earlier than you would if you were waiting for government financing. What's that worth? Well, that depends on the structure. It depends on a whole number of things, and those have to come into the calculation when you're assessing: is this a good deal for Albertans?

You mentioned some of the projects that have gone sour. How would we do things differently? Well, I think I've described numerous times the process – and I won't go through it again – but the fact is that all of those safeguards are built in there, and at the end of the day we've got to be able to show that it's good for Albertans.

The quality of the structure. That's easy to monitor. There are different classifications of materials and structures. You write that into the contract. Very simple. Of course, if you find that they're not living up to the contract – it's lovely when you ask for some equity in the contract. That would be one way of ensuring right up front that: okay, you put some cash on the table, and if there's a problem, we dip into the cash and we rectify it. There are just so many ways that we can make sure that we're getting the quality of structure that we demand and that it would be similar to what we would build ourselves.

I think you're not giving nearly enough credit to the private sector in their innovation and the ways that they can do things that maybe are something that we can't access. What I'm thinking of is larger companies, particularly. When you talk about this steel thing, don't you think that a lot of them had already contracted a lot of steel? You bet they had. A lot of them had because they know they're going to use a lot this summer. They contracted that way back last year. Can we access that when we go out to a bid? Not likely. But we could access it where we were into like a P3.

I really take exception to your comments about the outside committee, because on that committee we have outstanding individuals. They are leaders in their communities, they're very strong on the financial side, and they understand business. To say that they somehow would be biased, that some would be not capable – I'm not sure what areas you were describing, but let me tell you that we have total confidence in those people that are on that alternate finance committee. They're there only because of their outstanding abilities, so I really feel bad that you would take a run at them.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A couple of things. First and foremost, I want to thank the minister and his department for recognizing the need for a new facility in Onoway. The facility that is going to be replaced was built in 1921 for a cost of $11,500. The Onoway community serves about a thousand students. So I'd like to thank you for recognizing the need in that community.

The second point that I wanted to raise – and I haven't heard it in the presentation that you made – is related to the federal building just down the street. What's the plan that your department has to dispose of or sell this building?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Chairman, it's kind of a perennial question that the member asks annually, and I want to thank him for that because we don't want to forget.

An Hon. Member: It keeps you on your toes.

Mr. Lund: Exactly. As one hon. member said, it keeps me on my toes, and that's good.

We are currently trying to assess all of our options and what we might be able to do with that building. It's a cost to us to maintain it and keep it, so I can assure the member that we haven't forgotten it, but it's difficult to really get something moving on it. I guess I can just advise him to stay tuned.

4:10

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I also want to thank the minister for his introductory comments and thank the department staff who are present in the gallery and taking notes.

I want to just shift the focus for a moment slightly in the questions that I ask the minister. Minister, I was looking at the 2004-2007 fiscal plan, and under the Auditor General's Recommendations there's the Infrastructure department mentioned on pages 148 and 149. For the sake of convenience and for reference I draw your attention to it, recommendations 26 and 27, and the response of the government, the department, to the recommendations.

Let me first, for the benefit of the other members in the House, read the Auditor General's recommendations. Recommendation 26 deals with terms and conditions of construction grants, and the Auditor General's report says that we recommend that the Ministry of Infrastructure communicate, and require grant recipients to formally accept, the terms and conditions of construction grants. The terms and conditions should include:

- an accountability framework, including roles and responsibilities
- the consequences of failing to adhere to the terms and conditions
- reporting requirements
- the Ministry's right to audit.

Then on the right-hand side column opposite that recommendation of the AG is the response of the department. It accepts the recommendation, but it's the language of the acceptance section that I have some questions about. To me the language is tentative, and I would like the minister to clarify therefore what's stated there. "The Ministry does have grant agreements in place for grant funding for lodges." It specifically refers to lodges here and then says, "The Ministry will look at implementing similar agreements for all grant programs for 2004-05." So I take it that with the exception of lodges such arrangements have not been in place in the past.

The ministry says that it will look at implementing rather than saying that it will implement. I wonder if the words are used deliberately, and if so, what's behind that deliberate use of the words just "look at" rather than making a commitment to implement and if there are reservations what those reservations are. I'd appreciate knowing.

Then in the next sentence the statement says, "The Ministry will also look towards harmonizing its reporting requirements across all programs, recognizing that varying levels of reporting currently exist." So that's, I think, fine.

Mr. Lund: What page are you on?

Dr. Pannu: Page 148 in the capital plan 2004-2007, the smaller booklet of the three related to the budget. I'll certainly be happy to wait for a minute if we can locate it for you. The Deputy Premier has it? Yeah, that's the one. It's page 148 when you get him a copy.

The Deputy Chair: You may proceed, hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: I'll just give another few seconds to the minister.

Mr. Lund: Okay.

Dr. Pannu: Well, Mr. Minister, I find it amusing that you and I are on the same page for a change.

It's the right-hand side, the response of the ministry and the department. The tentativeness of the language is what I'm asking you to comment on. The second sentence in the response is that "the Ministry will look at implementing similar agreements" rather than saying: will implement those recommendations. Then later on in the latter part, the last sentence related to recommendation 26, is that "management will consider implementing an audit requirement for major projects where this requirement does not already exist." There's a difference between considering and doing. Again, is there some problem that's in fact anticipated in making a commitment that it will happen? So clarification, primarily.

Let me go to the next recommendation as well, 27. Again I'll read into the record the recommendation itself. This deals with the monitoring of construction grants. The Auditor General's report says:

We recommend that the Ministry of Infrastructure strengthen its monitoring processes for construction grants.

We also recommend that the Ministry make all construction grant payments through the Consolidated Cash Investment Trust Fund (CCITF) bank account.

The response from the ministry, again reading just the last sentence, is: "The ministry is also currently assessing the use of CCITF accounts."

My questions. At what stage is the assessment process with respect to the recommended use of that particular account? Is the ministry proceeding with using that fund as recommended by the minister?

I would prefer if we go back and forth this way with a small set of questions and then answers.

Mr. Lund: Just because we say that we're looking at it doesn't mean that we're not doing it. The fact is that we believe in working with the Auditor General to make sure that whatever we do meets with what the Auditor General feels is required.

You have to also appreciate that there's another partner in this. In number 26 it was primarily talking about the lodges and how they were handled. So we are working with the Auditor General, and just because we don't say that we're doing it – we're not exactly sure. Maybe there's a better way of accomplishing the same thing. That's all that means.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise to ask a few questions.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Chairman, we had an agreement to go back and forth.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Did you want to just go back and forth for maybe five minutes or so? Is that okay?

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Now, the minister has spoken a fair bit on P3s as one of the central pillars, it seems, of the policy of the government. My specific questions. It has come to my notice that a P3 route is recommended by the government to various SIOs, supported infrastructure organizations. That's the term that is used, I guess, in the documents.

The west Lethbridge school construction case is an interesting one. There appears to be pressure coming from the government for the school board to proceed with a P3 route for the construction of that while there is broad-based opposition in the community of Lethbridge. The minister, I'm sure, is familiar with that. That raises the larger general question of: is there more or less a mandatory set of requirements now, or near mandatory, for all SIOs to do a certain percentage if not all of their new projects to the P3 model? If there is a mandatory requirement or at least a strong expectation from the Infrastructure department or from the side of the government?

My next question is: does the government use funding decisions as leverage to make sure that the party, the SIO, involved on the other side says yes to the P3 route, even though there may be opposition either on the board or, certainly, in the wider community that the board represents, such as the school board in this case in west Lethbridge? So that's one question. Maybe I should ask a couple others too.

My next question is on P3 evaluations. When the proposals are evaluated and then one proceeds with them, are there specific policies which guarantee a certain margin of profit to investors? I'm not at all worried about whether profit is a dirty word. That's not the question. The question is: does the government oblige itself, does the government commit Alberta taxpayers to a certain minimum return on the investment? If that is the case, what is that? You know, these things are not public. People don't have access to that information, and there are concerns all around. Why go that route if it's going to cost more?

One of the questions that's always asked is that a private investor would expect a certain return on the investment which is market based, I guess. Investment project A expects to get 16 per cent. If they then decide to go to project B, which is a P3, would they not expect at least the same kind of return? My question to you is not about what the rate of profit is that's built into the decision-making from the Infrastructure side. First of all, is there a policy of guaranteeing a certain minimum profit rate, and if that is so, then what is it? If it's not there, then what's in the P3 route for a private investor to come along and invest in this and accept some of the conditions and limitations that a P3 project would entail for the private investor?

So perhaps we can get some answers to those two questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. To say that there's a percentage that we're going to demand be built with P3s: no; not at all. We never ever indicated that that would be the case. Each one will be assessed on its own merit as it comes along, because it's got the process that it's got to go through internally, and then the outside committee will have to evaluate it. It has to show that there's a benefit to the Alberta taxpayer to go that route.

I think that there's a great misunderstanding about P3s. The west Lethbridge is going to be a P3 because the city has said that they're going to put a library with those two schools. So that's a P3. Okay? The city is going to finance their own. We might be financing the schools. What I have said to the schools is that there are investors that are interested in being a part of this whole thing, so don't discard them. Maybe that's part of the process, that there be outside financing. That might be part of the process. But remember that it's a P3 because the city is there.

Another prime example: in Drayton Valley there's going to be a public and a Catholic school, and the town is putting a facility in the middle. That's a P3. We may very well be financing; we don't know. We're telling the school boards to go ahead and look at the options. We're not saying that that has to happen, but in the case of Drayton Valley they're working very hard to make it happen.

It just dawned on me that maybe where you're getting really hung up is the difference between equity and financing. Equity: if a contractor or someone is putting money into a project, yes, they expect to have a rate of return, no question. But remember that when equity is put in there, that's also an area that we can access if, in fact, there's some kind of default. It also works as a contingency in the whole project, because any time that we build a project, we have to have a contingency. Well, over in the private sector it's called equity.

Now, the other, financing. They go out and they buy a bond. So we have access to that money through the proponent of the project. That's how it works. As far as making a profit on that money they borrow, no, that's not what it's about. That's what it will cost us to repay the bond, whatever that interest rate is. Yeah, somebody's making money on the interest rate, but that's no different than if we invested.

One of the things that we need to do is get our head around: what is money worth? I would be very interested to go back now and look at the heritage trust fund. Go back 10 years and look at the rate of return on those dollars, even though we had a disaster in 2002. I suspect that you will find that the rate of return on those dollars was even greater than the 5.5 or 5.4 per cent that you can currently buy a 30-year bond for. I suspect it's more than that, that we made more.

So, really, does it make sense that we then would take money that could go into the heritage trust fund or take money out of the heritage trust fund to pay for a structure when, in fact, you can go to the marketplace and get the money cheaper? You know, I think we've got to really look at those kinds of things when we're talking about this financing. If you doubt my word about what it costs for bonds, you can go to the marketplace today and find out what it costs for a 30-year bond. It's around that 5.5 per cent. Check and see what the heritage trust fund made. I suspect it made more.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to ask a few questions of the minister as well. He's certainly taken quite a few of them today, so he can get back to me later if he's not able to answer all of them.

My first question. I guess I'm kind of wondering about – and the minister and people may recall – the School Construction and Operating Costs Committee that the minister put together. I was very pleased to be on that as the chair along with my colleagues the members for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne and Edmonton-Meadowlark, and the Member for Calgary-Shaw also helped out quite a bit on that committee. We did quite a bit of work and analysis on that committee some years ago and submitted our report a couple of years ago to the minister.

There were a number of recommendations in that report that I'm curious about. I guess the main one was that we sort of identified savings of potentially up to 25 per cent on costs of building new public schools, obviously something very desirable. At the time, and with the new century school program, we were quite excited with the notion that we might be able to save $250 million on new schools. Of course, I'm aware that the minister does not actually build the new schools. We don't build them; it's up to local school boards whether or not to actually build the schools. I know that the minister was very, very supportive of that report and its recommendations and asked his staff to send it to the school symposium and incorporate the results into the school symposium.

I have not really heard anything back from that report ever since. I haven't seen recommendations moving forward, and the results of the school symposium which I read made no reference whatsoever to any of the recommendations that we sort of came up with.

So I'm wondering if the staff in the minister's department perhaps had some issues or problems with that report that found it too difficult to implement. I'm wondering if the minister could perhaps give our committee some advice or recommendations on how we might move some of the recommendations in that report forward. If the problem is getting local school boards to actually act and implement some of those potential recommendations, perhaps we can do some more work on that.

The second question I'm wondering about, of course – in that report we did talk about partnerships with developers, particularly in new subdivisions, to get new schools built in new subdivisions and how that might be envisioned. Of course, when we talk about public/private partnerships, in my mind at least, from my studies on the issue the most beneficial area to look at in terms of potential partnerships was in fact with developers building new schools in new subdivisions.

I mean, there are many, many partnerships proposed within and without government. Of every hundred that are proposed, probably only five or 10 may ultimately ever be put together. But, ultimately, they work when each partner is able to bring something to the table that the other partner cannot bring or has no ability to bring. In other words, there's added value from each partner in the proposal.

Certainly, in a new subdivision where a developer finds that the people buying his houses are anxious to see a school in the subdivision and are willing to pay more for the houses in that subdivision if there were a school, clearly the developer is in a position to bring cash, money to the table that the government has no ability to collect otherwise. That's what makes that type of partnership so potentially beneficial to study in terms of a public/private partnership that would really work on behalf of everybody. That was one of the things that we explored.

I know that in Calgary it met resistance from the schools boards. They hadn't really been in favour of looking at this proposal in the past. They were quite resistant to it. But I did notice that as more and more discussion came out publicly about this kind of approach, they seemed to be slightly warming to the idea at least, and they did come forward with a number of sort of obstacles they'd identified in terms of legislation and shared responsibilities between our department and their department, et cetera, that seemed to be creating some obstacles.

I'm wondering if the minister could maybe speak to that, whether there's been any movement or updating. Have we cleared all the obstacles away such that local school boards could in fact enter into partnerships with developers in new subdivisions, you know, legislatively? I understand that there are still political issues and other friction, but I just wanted to see if the minister knows that we've cleared the legal hurdles to allow it.

The third question I'm kind of wondering if the minister could speak to is the use of old schools and schools that have been closed down or ordered as surplus by local school boards where there have been expressions of interest by alternative organizations, charter schools, other organizations. It appears that there's considerable resistance to local school boards actually allowing that. They tend to perceive them as competitors.

I guess my perspective is that those are public assets, public property, and not to be used, I think, in a negative competitive manner by public school boards that are just trying to prevent the use of these public assets in a manner that would be much more beneficial to our children. So, you know, I'm a little concerned about some of the directions I've seen there.

The final question I'm wondering about – I've been asked, because of the publicity around airplane flights and so on, how much money I am spending, et cetera, or costing the taxpayers, and I've sort of looked at it and said: well, if not one single MLA flew at all in a given year, clearly we'd still have to pay for the plane, the hangar, the pilots, all the rest of it. So there's an operating and a fixed cost on this. I'm curious what the fixed cost component of any particular flight might be. In other words, if only one person flew one flight in a whole year, what would the cost of that flight be? You know, if one person flies on a plane, it costs X number of dollars, but if 20 people fly on the same plane, it seems to me that the other 19 are flying for free. There is no incremental additional cost.

I'm wondering if the minister has done any breakdown or thought about, you know, breaking down the incremental, the marginal additional costs of more people flying or less people flying and the fact that I don't think it really costs the taxpayers much, if anything, to have more people flying than less if, in fact, most of the costs are really just the fixed costs of keeping an airplane fleet in the first place.

I'm wondering if the minister could maybe speak to those four questions if possible.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you. The hon. member and his committee did very good work. Actually, we fed the report and the recommendations into the school symposium, and then out of the school symposium we had four subcommittees that worked on all of the recommendations that came out of the symposium. I have to admit that I couldn't go back and identify a recommendation that came out of the symposium that came directly out of the hon. member's committee's work. We'll commit to having another look and see if we can't find some of that.

You talked about the new schools in new subdivisions, and we're on the same wavelength. As a matter of fact, when we first talked about P3s, when I met with the developers, I suggested that this would be the ultimate P3 if we could get it accomplished.

Some of the problems we've run into – and you alluded to some of it with the school boards. They're really, really concerned about so-called queue jumping. I don't agree with them. I try to point out to them that, really, what that means is that if you could get a school built by a developer in a subdivision that doesn't cost us money, we could do something over here that actually speeds up in a different area to accomplish their priority list.

That was one bit of the problem, and it still is there. Although credit to the Calgary public board, of course they've gone out now and seem to have embraced the P3 concept. So I'd be very, very anxious if we could get one working.

One of the other difficulties – and the developers raised this right away. The urban municipalities seem to still insist on taking the 10 per cent. That's what the act says that they can do, and that's what they want. I have talked to them and suggested that, well, really, all we need to do is take out the footprint of the school so that you can allow that for another use down the way. If you're going to build, say, a K to 4 school, 25 years out you probably aren't going to have enough people to fill it, so then you convert it to another use.

Unfortunately, we're having some difficulty with getting that kind of agreement. They want to have that 10 per cent either be designated as recreational or school and owned by the city. They don't want to have this part that would be left out of the 10 per cent owned by the developer. Of course, then that would mean that it could be redesignated as something else other than school or recreation or park, those designations.

We haven't got by that hurdle, and that's a problem. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and I have had numerous discussions about this and how we might try to move that agenda forward.

The closed schools are a tough one for us because we do not own the school. While I don't like doing it, I've on two occasions basically directed that certain things would happen with a closed school. It's something we don't like doing, because we like to work with our partners as opposed to enforcing things, but hopefully we'll get a better understanding. I don't disagree with you that it's public money. I think that we need to look at the best use for that facility and forget about who owns it or who happens to have the say on it.

I'll have to get back to you with those numbers as far as the breakdown of the fixed cost. We've got those numbers, and I just didn't have a chance to go through this enough to pick them out for you right off the bat. But we'll get them for you.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Very pleased to be able to have the opportunity to ask a few questions on this afternoon's estimate debates. First of all, Mr. Minister, I'll ask you about the Jubilee renovations both in Calgary and Edmonton. We understand that there have been a number of cost overruns there and that originally, as I understand it, your share of the contribution was $32.8 million. It looks like now the project on the provincial side is going to cost $50 million. So that's a 53 per cent increase between the two Jubilees.

We'd like you to tell us why such a high cost overrun and why those overruns are still occurring and what you're doing to sign off on any of the contracts to try and minimize the costs involved there?

Mr. Bonner: Will they be completed on time?

Ms Carlson: Yes. Will they be completed on time? So if you could answer that too.

That ties into my next line of questioning, which is on the Auditor General's report. The recommendation that we saw from the Auditor General was that "the Ministry should strengthen its processes for managing construction grants." This directly relates to what has happened with the Jubilee. So if you could comment on what steps you've taken to strengthen that process and how many more cost overrun surprises we may be seeing in the next year.

My colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona talked about recommendation 26, where the recommendation was that the ministry "communicate, and require grant recipients to formally accept, the terms and conditions of construction grants," and it included a list of what that should include. The part that my colleague didn't talk about that is of concern to us is whether or not you've established an accountability framework for regional health authority grant recipients, tying it into this particular recommendation? Are you going to specify consequences for noncompliance? Do your approval processes now contain compliance reporting and auditing requirements?

We're looking for you to be able to fully evaluate whether or not you're receiving value on the capital projects, and that would be a worthwhile exercise to make public so that the people of the province can see that too. Do you make those evaluations consistently, and if so, will you make them public?

Recommendation 27 in the Auditor General's report is recommending that the "Ministry of Infrastructure strengthen its monitoring processes for construction grants." Have you standardized the accountability and involvement for every type of capital project, and can you demonstrate value for money on fast-tracked capital projects? What kind of criteria have you developed to determine whether or not a project should be fast-tracked? Is there a ceiling on cost overruns in that particular case?

Are you documenting the review of the grants that you give? Can you tell us how the ministry is ensuring that its approval is sought for every contract greater than $100,000? Does the ministry make all construction grant payments through the consolidated cash investment trust fund bank account to protect the grant from any losses?

Another recommendation that we saw in the report was that "the Ministry of Infrastructure implement a process to ensure that contracts with construction managers protect the Ministry's interests as a funder and are cost-effective." If you can give us an update on what you've done to comply with that recommendation. Particularly, I'm interested in whether or not you have a framework for contract management and accountability now built in where risks, roles, and responsibilities are laid out and any contract revisions are in writing and signed off by both parties.

Recommendation 28 was also to do with the Ministry of Infrastructure, and it recommended that "the Ministry of Infrastructure, working with other ministries, improve the security of government buildings and the safety of people who use them" and then listed a series of things that they would like to see enacted such as identifying resources and implementing increased levels of security on buildings determined at risk, monitoring compliance, stuff like that. So if you can tell us what you've done to establish minimum security standards for all of the buildings and communicate with those in the buildings – are you doing a risk assessment on those buildings? – and any other information you have with regard to that, it would be helpful for us. I know that you must be working in conjunction with other ministries on this, and if you can tell us what your role and responsibilities are and essentially what their responsibilities are, that would be helpful.

Of course, I couldn't end my line of questioning without asking an environmental question, so if you could just update us on what you're doing to green up the buildings. I know that you have some projects underway to make sure that buildings are retrofitted, and if you can give us an update on what's happening there.

My last question has to do with the building just north of here on 107th Street and I believe it's 99th Avenue. I think it was called the federal building at one time. If you could give us an update on what's happening there. I understand that it's still vacant. Are there any plans for you to sell it or retrofit it or whatever you might be planning?

Those are my questions. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm not sure where you're getting the information on the Jubilee auditoria, that there have been consistent overruns, because that's not the case. What happened is we did an estimate and then went out for tender, and the tenders came back, and they were 47 per cent or something like that over what we estimated. So, of course, right away that raised a whole bunch of questions. How on earth could it be that far over?

You don't modernize or renovate facilities like the Jubilee auditoria every day, so we underestimated the cost of a lot of what was going to go on there. You must recognize that to get the proper acoustics in a building like that, there are only a few people in Canada that are contractors that are capable of doing it. Those curtains, for example, are hung at an angle. They've got to have the right angle; they've got to have the right tension; they've got to be the right material. That's just one example. The lighting gets to be extremely expensive. For the seating the plan was to redo the whole interior and take out all of those seats and put in new ones. We were short on that. The list of areas goes on, but it was not that it was a creeping increase. It's just that when we put out the tenders, yes, there was a big increase.

We're going ahead with the project. We're going to find the funds to do it because we committed to the project some time back. Before we put out the tender, we had committed. The reason that we had to commit quite a while ago to doing it was because, as you know, there are a number of organizations that have programs that operate in those facilities, and they're booked years ahead. They had to go and find alternate venues at a big cost, so for us not to go ahead would have put many of them in a very difficult position. Quite frankly, those buildings have been there and served us well for a number of years, so it's time, and no better time than when we're coming to our centennial, to upgrade them. So we will be going ahead with that.

You asked a lot of questions about the Auditor General, and rather than trying to go through them all – you were asking them as fast as you could read them, and I couldn't write that fast – what we'll do is get the answers back to you in writing.

You talked about what we are doing to green up. Well, when you get to Ottawa, you can tell them how the Alberta government was the one that went out and got contracts for green power so that 90 per cent of our power, starting in 2005, will be green. Incidentally, we didn't have to pay an exorbitant price for it as well. So that's one thing we're doing.

The retrofit program that you referred to is still ongoing, and as you know, this building last year completed the retrofit. I don't have the number of projects that we've completed right in front of me, but we'll get them to you. It's been a very good program and has accomplished a lot.

I commented on the federal building earlier. Now, I'd like you to tell me: do you want us to sell it? What do you want us to do with it? We'd love your input.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of questions for the minister. The procedures surrounding building of schools is of some interest to me and, definitely, my constituents. As the minister may appreciate, many individuals make decisions on where to purchase property or where to move based on an assumption that a school will be built in a given neighbourhood. Using a case in point of Edmonton-Castle Downs, residents have been moving into that particular neighbourhood for some 20 years now under the assumption that a high school will be built in Edmonton-Castle Downs at one point or another. Well, two decades of development have passed by and not a sign of a high school at this point.

I know that the minister has been meeting with the school boards and is in continuous contact with the school boards. I'm wondering: what is the procedure? How are the decisions made on where and when we're building schools? How does the minister's office interact with school boards on the issue of making decisions where and when schools are built? How do we deal with constituents who have made decisions on where to purchase properties and where to raise their children relative to a school being built? How do we interact with those requests?

Thank you.

Mr. Lund: I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. Yes, we have been meeting with the boards of education in the city of Edmonton. The whole process as far as when a school is going to be built: first of all, the boards of education every year give us their three- and five-year capital plans. Of course, we require that they prioritize their list. Then we take that information, internally go through all of the projects, and scale them according to a very rigorous criterion, and they come out with a number. Then, of course, that gives us the ability to prioritize them on a provincial basis. So we come down as far as the money will work and build and approve those projects.

I meant to mention this earlier and just now thought of it again. I think it was the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry that had asked about the preservation issue. I've asked the staff to do an inventory of all of the preservation projects and what it would cost us to not only just do the preservation – in both Calgary and Edmonton we've got quite a few schools that are very low utilization – but what it would cost us to in five years do the modernization and rightsize these schools. So we get our utilization up; we get our operating costs down.

I raise that now because that kind of fits into one of the problems like the Edmonton public board has as it relates to another high school in Castle Downs. In the north part of the city they've got Queen Elizabeth that's running. Even though they closed off half of it, I believe it's still only in around 60-some per cent. Then they've got M.E. LaZerte, that is running well above the hundred per cent, and these two schools are not that far apart. Then in the south sector of the city they've got huge demand down in the southwest, and the schools down in that area are very full. So it's a difficult situation that they've got. They recognize the need for a high school in that very north part of the city in the Castle Downs area. They recognize that, but we'll have to work our way through it.

The Catholic separate board, too, has a situation where their utilization is still below the 85 per cent that we're asking for, and of course they'll be opening their new high school over in the western part of the city very shortly. As a matter of fact, I believe it's next fall that it starts taking students.

What is going on now is that the Edmonton Catholic separate board is very close to needing another school in the north part of the city. As a matter of fact, I wouldn't be surprised, when we see their three-year plan come back, that they may very well have that as number 1 or 2.

We also know that the Capital health authority is interested in doing something over in that area, and to me this picture is starting to really look very attractive. If you could have a separate and a public and a health facility in the middle, it would really go a long way to accomplishing a number of things, including the cross-ministry initiative that we're going to be pushing even harder for the benefit of students: Children's Services, because we need to have the health facility or health component, mental health and other health. We need to have the Solicitor General's department be involved, the Attorney General's department, and then of course the educational component on either side of it. So that's where we're at as far as the situation in the north part of the city.

I know that the hon. member, while he didn't mention it right now, was asking me the other day about funding for private schools. Well, we do not fund the capital or operating and maintenance of private schools. They get some Learning funding – I believe it's 60 per cent of the instructional – but we don't have a part of that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, and then I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Just a few more questions. The federal building just north of the Annex was mentioned earlier. It would be very expensive to clear the asbestos out of that building, and it certainly has very, very old mechanical systems in it for air circulation and heating and whatever. Could the minister please tell us if he's had any proposals at all for perhaps even a P3 project where people would come in and renovate the building and the province would lease that space back from those particular people or enter into the P3 in some type of arrangement whereby that office space could be used by government?

When I'm looking at the annual report for Infrastructure, I see that we are currently leasing 290 buildings and roughly 5.5 million square feet of facility space. So if there were a P3 in that particular situation, would it be possible for the cost savings – I think we pay somewhere in the neighbourhood of a million dollars a year right now just to maintain that building and pay the heating and costs. Those are certainly costs that could be saved by the government owning the building. We could be saving dollars in the cost of leased facilities that we now use in the 290 buildings.

Has there been an analysis done as to whether this type of arrangement could possibly work so that we could make that building operational again? I do realize that it would be a very expensive process, but in the end would it be beneficial to us to enter into this type of agreement?

As well, along the lines of government-owned properties, we have over 1,900 buildings that are owned. Could the minister please indicate: what is the value of those assets to the citizens of Alberta?

Another question that came up when I was talking to people – I was looking as well in KeyNotes. It's a publication put out by the Edmonton public school board. In here it goes on to say:

"We respect and recognize that Calgary has a need for new schools," explains Board Chairman Svend Hansen. "But our students need and deserve new schools as well, particularly in emerging neighborhoods. Frankly, we were surprised by this decision."

Of course, the decision that they're referring to is the dollars that Calgary received for seven new schools and that Edmonton public did not receive any monies for new schools in this current budget.

I think we all recognize what a leader Edmonton public is in education, that they've done, I think, a very good job at trying to become efficient. They certainly realize the strain it puts on their transportation costs when they have to bus students from the suburbs to existing schools rather than building new schools in communities as the city expands.

They receive a tremendous amount of calls regarding: "Why aren't there schools in this new area? When we moved in, there were provisions and land set aside for new schools. We were assured that these new schools would be built, and now we've been here a number of years and still no schools." Certainly, it is a huge problem.

I know that they are trying to the best of their ability to make efficient use of the existing schools. They also see the disruption it causes families and communities when they have to bus students out of the community. They also view schools in their communities as community centres, and they're used for many different purposes. They have gone into the whole idea of sharing resources, of looking at clusters. They've been very creative.

Getting back to the quote from KeyNotes: Partners in Education, how is it that Edmonton public, for one example, received nothing in the year, yet Calgary received funding for seven new schools. Certainly, what they look at is reliable, sustainable, consistent funding so that they can have their business plans and complete their business plans as well.

I do have a few questions on performance measures for core businesses, and I'm referring to core business 1 on page 281. Only 64 per cent of health facilities are targeted to be in good condition from 2004 through to 2005. Why is this ministry not targeting an increase for that particular measure?

As well, those schools that are in good condition are targeted to decrease in 2006-2007. Why is the percentage of schools in good condition so low, at only 51 and 55 per cent, and why the decrease in 2006?

Performance measures for postsecondary institutions are the most disturbing of all. In 2004-2005 only 39 per cent that were built before 1988 and 45 per cent of all facilities are targeted to be in good condition, and those institutions built before 1988 which are slated as being in good condition are targeted to decrease through to 2007. Page 283 is where I got those figures.

My first question is: why are those percentages so low? Why haven't postsecondary institutions been prioritized given their sorry state? Why are those institutions built before 1988 which are slated as being in good condition targeted to decrease through to 2007? As well, why isn't the percentage of all facilities in good condition targeted to increase through to 2007?

As well, when we are speaking about facilities, why are government-owned and -operated facilities that are rated as being in good condition targeted to decrease through to 2007 to a low of 42 per cent. Again, why are the utilization and functional adequacy performance measures for all these facilities targeted to decrease in 2004-2005 and then remain constant through to 2007? Those figures are from page 284.

When we look at energy consumption, why is the energy consumption in government-owned and -operated facilities targeted to remain the same from 2004 through 2006? Is there no way that we can look at making these facilities more energy efficient? As well, why does the ministry not rate the cost-effectiveness of the air transportation services it provides through performance measures along with the ones that we find on page 286?

Finally, Mr. Chairman, to the minister: why are the performance measures for the client satisfaction survey on service delivery not targeted to increase through to 2007? I got this information from page 287.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to thank the minister and his department certainly for providing us with the information on these many questions today, and I look forward to his answers.

Thank you.

5:10

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The federal building doesn't cost us a million dollars. Probably less than half of that a year is what it costs us to keep that building. We don't know for sure exactly how much asbestos is in that building, but we do know that the cost of renovating would be very substantial.

Have there been proposals? We've never called for any proposals. There have been some come to me unsolicited, and quite frankly they were so costly that we couldn't even consider them.

For anybody who thinks that we're just hung up on P3s, that they're going to work in every situation, there's an example that we didn't even take forward because I don't think they would have passed the test quite frankly. We don't have a need for that building at this point. You know, it's easy to justify it when there's a need for something, but when you don't really have the need for it, it's tougher to spend the money on it.

I didn't keep my notes well enough here, but I do know that you were talking about the decrease in good condition to fair condition. We look at our three-year business plan, and we look at the numbers that we have in our budget, and this is the result. This is what's going to happen. We're being very honest, straightforward. Because of the age of the buildings we know that if we don't spend more money, this is the result. We're being very honest that that will be the result unless we spend more money on them.

As far as the efficiency is concerned, you have to remember that as old buildings deteriorate, the cost goes up. So when you don't see a decrease in the cost of operating those buildings, that's directly related to the age and the condition of the building. You know that from your own experience in operating your house, and these buildings are no different. I really commend the department for being very honest and straightforward, and that's why I signed off on this. This is the result unless we spend more money on preservation.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Infrastructure, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 p.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoons, I must now put the question. After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Infrastructure for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$1,537,000,000
Capital Investment	$73,489,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that the Committee of Supply rise and report the estimates of the Department of Infrastructure and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, '05, for the following department.

Infrastructure: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $1,537,000,000; capital investment, $73,489,000.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 31
Highways Development and Protection Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 31, the Highways Development and Protection Act.

This act will consolidate and modernize the existing Public Highways Development Act and the City Transportation Act and provide a single legislative framework for the planning, development, and protection of the provincial highway network.

Alberta highways are vital to our economy. They are key to the safe and efficient shipping and receiving of goods, and they also connect to all other modes of transportation: air, marine, and land.

Why is this act needed? The current legislation which governs highways, the Public Highways Development Act and the City Transportation Act, date back to the 1970s and have not been reviewed or updated in a long time. Many things have changed since these acts were established. Our population has almost doubled and has put enormous pressure on provincial highways. With greater population growth comes the need to manage development near highways as well as to manage access to the highway.

This act is also needed to address the fact that the province now has jurisdiction and control over the former secondary highways, so the transfer of these highways from municipal to provincial jurisdiction will be included in this act. It's also taking over the responsibility for key route highways through cities such as Deerfoot in Calgary and Anthony Henday in Edmonton.

Another reason, of course, is to clarify and consolidate legislation which pertains to highways and development adjacent to highways. Clarification is needed for municipalities, developers, and others about which legislation to use under which circumstance for road closure or access removals on highways. This act will define which act governs each particular situation.

As well, because of population growth and motor carrier industry demands we needed a higher classification of highway, roads called freeways, which are similar to the U.S. interstate system. These are high-speed and high-volume routes which are the only way on and off the freeway via interchanges. We have to protect these freeways. The routes, of course, are more efficient for long-distance travel because we can travel at a steady speed without having to stop for traffic lights. But, of course, we need the space to build all the accompanying interchanges, and the new legislation will protect what property owners or utility companies may do on land located 115 metres from the centre of the highway.

Alberta Transportation knows the importance of planning for highway development. One example is the extreme cost of buying out an established business or a home to make way for a road or interchange, and that is why we are moving to freeway classification. Those will be highway 1 from one end of the province to the other, highway 2 from Fort Macleod to Edmonton, and highway 4 from Coutts to Lethbridge, and highways 43 and 16. We want to make these routes free flow in the future, and we need legislation to preserve and protect the provincial highway network.

I'd like to say that we have consulted with urban and rural municipalities, utility companies, land development and real estate associations, home builder associations, and short-line railways. There was an advisory committee set up between AAMD and C, AUMA, and Alberta Municipal Affairs. We certainly raised and discussed many issues, and these issues were taken back to their memberships and brought back for discussion. Their input was extremely valuable and helped shape the legislation that you have before you.

As I mentioned before, the act will provide clarity and consistency in the legislation governing the administration and protection of provincial highways, establish a new classification of highways called freeway, and there is one situation, Mr. Speaker, and that is that for noncompliance there will be an increase in fines if someone builds something on the highway/freeway.

As well, closure of a highway. At the moment a highway can only be temporarily closed to accommodate construction and maintenance. With us taking over the jurisdiction of many of the secondary highways – many of these secondary highways run through small municipalities and, as a result, to close them for a parade or perhaps some other event like a 10-kilometre run, et cetera, we need special permission, and they're not addressed in current legislation.

With that, Mr. Speaker, other than designating and clarifying highways in cities, which will have to be done through agreement with the city and the department, I'm sure that there will be numerous questions coming forward as this legislation proceeds, but it is timely, and again our goal in Alberta Transportation is to consolidate as many of the acts as necessary and bring them up to date.

Thank you.

I also move to adjourn debate on this bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn until 8 this evening, at which time we reconvene in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:22 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 5, 2004 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 04/05/05
 head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: Good evening. I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order. Again, we'll observe the usual, only one person talking at a time.

head: Main Estimates 2004-05

Executive Council

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or ideas to be offered with respect to this? The hon. Premier.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Chairman, thank you so very much. Hon. members, I'm pleased to appear before this committee to discuss the 2004-2007 Executive Council business plan and, of course, the estimates for the fiscal year.

Programs under Executive Council include the office of the Premier and Executive Council, which includes all of cabinet, of course; the office of the chief internal auditor; and the Public Affairs Bureau.

Before I make any mention of the chief internal auditor, I would like to note that after I mentioned today that we had a chief internal auditor in the office of Executive Council, a media member finally phoned him to find out what was going on.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to provide a brief fiscal overview for 2004-2005, and then I'll offer some details on upcoming initiatives. Executive Council's spending for 2004-2005 is forecast at $24.4 million. Now, that compares to $20.8 million in 2003-2004, but the increase of roughly $3.6 million can be attributed to three items. The first, of course, is the creation of the office of the chief internal auditor, which, by the way, is the only office of its kind, I understand, in Canada. That office accounts for approximately $2.5 million of the increase. The second is $535,000 to cover a 3.5 per cent increase in salaries. The third is $450,000 for the Queen's Printer to produce updated occupational health and safety materials, but we anticipate that sales will offset the increase, making it a cost-neutral item.

Turning now to staffing. There will be an increase of 20 FTEs, full-time employees, for the chief internal auditor's office, and this will bring the total FTEs for Executive Council to 231. That's up from 211 last year.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer an overview of Executive Council's program areas and overarching goals for the coming year. Programs under Executive Council include secretarial support to cabinet and, of course, to all the cabinet committees, the standing policy committees. It includes, also, my offices here in the Legislature and in McDougall Centre in Calgary. It includes the protocol office, which will be extremely important next year especially with the visit of Her Majesty the Queen. It includes also administrative support for the office of the Lieutenant Governor and the Alberta Order of Excellence Council and the deputy minister's office, which includes support for policy co-ordination and business and strategic long-term planning for the government as a whole.

A key activity for Executive Council staff has been the co-ordination of a long-term, 20-year strategic plan for Alberta – in other words, Mr. Chairman, the big picture, not a $27.50 jug of orange juice, not an $800 expense, but the big picture – the 20-year strategic plan, the plan that was officially launched in March of 2004. And it's a good plan. It's a plan that builds on pillars, and it's a plan that will bring about a strong, strong Alberta, an Alberta so strong that it builds on such a strong foundation that, God forbid, not even the Liberals if they're elected could begin to tear it down.

In the coming year, in addition to co-ordinating activities related to the government's 2004 to 2007 business plan, Executive Council staff will work with ministries on strategies set out in the 20-year strategic plan. The ultimate vision of the plan – and this is a vision – is a vibrant and prosperous province where Albertans enjoy a superior quality of life and are confident and proud about the future for themselves and their children. Mr. Chairman, I should point out that although government ministries make important contributions to that vision, such a far-reaching goal could never be achieved by government alone. It can only be achieved if all Albertans work in partnership, and that means government, public sector, and not-for-profit partners, the private sector, of course, and individual Albertans all working to create the province's future success.

Part of co-ordinating that work involves making sure Albertans understand the road ahead and are able to judge government's progress in achieving its stated goals. That's why Executive Council holds a strong commitment to open and accountable government, to make sure Albertans can fully assess government actions and form their own opinions, not the opinions of the Liberals or the Edmonton Journal or the other media but their own opinions about the issues of the day. Interestingly enough, I was asked today if I'm fazed by the hammering of the Liberals on this expense issue, and I said no. What interests me is what Mr. and Mrs. Grundy are saying and Martha and Henry, and I am not getting any cards and letters on this issue.

This government has been a leader in public-sector accountability through its comprehensive business planning and performance measures work and its quarterly fiscal reports. By the way, no other jurisdiction in this country, no other legislative body, provides quarterly reports to its citizens. But there's always room for improvement, and my government remains committed to refining and strengthening the way business is done on behalf of Alberta taxpayers. That commitment is reflected in the recent creation of a new chief internal auditor for government. As I mentioned, this is an office that is unique in Canada.

The office of the chief internal auditor came about in response to a fall 2002 recommendation from the Auditor General to centralize existing internal audit functions across government, and he wanted it assigned to Executive Council and not to his office. Previously some ministries had internal auditors assigned through the Alberta Corporate Service Centre, but there wasn't one central auditor to fully co-ordinate internal audit work across government. So with the creation of the chief internal auditor government has a more efficient and comprehensive process in place.

Mr. Nick Shandro, who I believe is in the audience, who was formerly principal auditor in the Auditor General's office, was appointed chief internal auditor in mid-July of 2003, and only today did the media discover that we had an internal auditor for Executive Council. That is speed. Since then he has been working to establish the structure, processes, and methodology for the office.

8:10

The new office moved into full operation on April 1 when internal audit staff transferred from the Alberta corporate service office. The office is now responsible for the internal audits of all government departments and agencies, boards, and commissions. The written mandate of the office covers a range of assurances and advisory services, including compliance audits; internal control audits, including financial controls; program audits; information technology audits; and special investigations. The ultimate goal of the office is to help government managers and employees be more productive and effective in their jobs while ensuring that Alberta taxpayers get maximum value for every dollar spent.

The charter for the chief internal auditor calls for the office to be overseen by an internal audit committee. It will also work in concert with the office of the Auditor General to ensure maximum accountability with a minimum of overlap or duplication between the two offices. The Auditor General will have some discretion in terms of sharing the internal auditor's findings with Albertans as appropriate.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to now touch on the protocol office and the office of the Lieutenant Governor. As members of the committee will know, the protocol office is responsible for provincial government ceremonial events and visits from senior international dignitaries, and the most senior of those dignitaries, of course, will visit this province next year. Although the province's centennial doesn't take place until next year, protocol staff have already begun preparing for ceremonial events expected to take place in 2005. A highlight of that event is the anticipated royal visit from Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, and although a specific date has not been confirmed, we are hopeful that Her Majesty will be able to celebrate the province's 100th birthday. It's expected now that she will attend sometime in May.

In anticipation of that visit I wrote to the Prime Minister asking him to extend the term of Alberta's current Lieutenant Governor, Her Honour the Honourable Lois Hole. While Her Honour is not here, I can say that she has done a remarkable job as the Queen's representative in Alberta, and I personally can't think of a better ambassador to welcome Her Majesty or a person more deserving of recognition for her outstanding service. Well, the Prime Minister obviously agrees as he has extended Her Honour's term through 2005, and that is good news.

Mr. Chairman, I would now like to touch on strategies listed in the business plan for the Public Affairs Bureau. The three core businesses of the bureau are helping government ministries communicate with Albertans, providing Albertans with two-way access to government, and publishing and selling Alberta's laws and other materials.

The first of these includes ensuring open, timely, and accurate communications with Albertans on the wide range of government programs and services that impact their daily lives. Bureau communicators work with the ministry staff across government to make sure Albertans have the information they need on the curriculum their children are covering in school, on infrastructure and road improvements taking place in their community, on how they can live healthier and more active lives and on the health system improvements that impact their health and well-being, on efforts to preserve Alberta's water, forests, public lands, fish, and wildlife so these resources can be enjoyed by their grandchildren and great-grandchildren, on how the government is spending their hard-earned tax dollars, on progress and work to reopen the U.S. border to live cattle or how they can access farm safety net programs, on ways they can stay safe behind the wheel and keep accidents from occurring on Alberta's roads, and on how we can all work together to reduce the impact of family violence in Alberta communities.

Mr. Chairman, this is just a handful of examples. The complete roster of government communications programs is too long and too diverse for me to list in full detail, and while the list is diverse, what these communications programs all have in common is a commitment to making sure Albertans get the information they need quickly and efficiently.

The focus of the second core business of the Public Affairs Bureau is to make sure Albertans are able to access that information. The bureau maintains a number of key avenues for Albertans to do just that.

One of those is the Service Alberta call centre, formerly known as the RITE number. Mr. Chairman, I think the members of the committee will agree with me when I say that the staff who answer calls at the Service Alberta centre perform a key front-line service. In the past year alone they answered close to 1 million calls, and on average each operator handles about 70,000 calls a year. Despite call volumes staff maintain a high level of customer service. Over the years call centre users have consistently shown satisfaction ratings of 95 per cent or better. Work will continue in the coming year to further refine this service and to ensure that call centre technology is able to keep pace with staff answering the calls.

Another popular information resource is the Alberta government web site. User statistics for 2003-2004 tell us that the government home page was accessed approximately 19.5 million times, or more than three times more than in 2001-2002. Statistics also show that the site users are very happy with this resource. Again, bureau staff have worked this year to further improve this already effective and popular information resource for Albertans. That includes refining the public consultation listings that were recently added to the web site and increasing public awareness of the resource. Work will also be ongoing so that the visually impaired Albertans are better able to access all government web sites.

Mr. Chairman, I would now like to turn briefly to the Queen's Printer. As I mentioned earlier, the Queen's Printer will receive an additional $450,000 this year to produce new occupational health and safety materials. The updates are part of the government's WorkSafe Alberta initiative, which is designed to reduce the number of workplace accidents and fatalities in the province. The increase will allow the Queen's Printer to reprint enough materials to satisfy what has turned out to be a strong demand for a very popular product.

Mr. Chairman, I would like now to end my introductory comments here so that members of the committee may enjoy ample opportunity to ask whatever questions they might have, and I do hope that members of the committee will confine their questions to the estimates. Thank you.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciated the Premier's comments, and I will try to limit mine to issues relating to the estimates, although you never know where these things go.

I understand here that Executive Council, as the Premier indicated, is requesting $24.399 million, and it is an increase over last year. I did listen to the Premier's explanations for that increase, and as I understood it, the largest cause of that was through creation of the office of the chief internal auditor.

In the spirit of back and forth, if we can work that out, I guess my first question would be a request of the Premier to just elaborate a bit on the work of the chief internal auditor in some more detail, and I'm sure the media will appreciate this. What's the detailed mandate of the chief internal auditor? What is his focus? Is it the Executive Council? Is it within the government? How is his office going to relate to that of the Auditor General? What are some of those issues? I'd like the Premier to elaborate.

Thanks.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Chairman, I thought that I covered it fairly well. Basically, the office of the chief internal auditor, which now exists within Executive Council, is to provide compliance audits, which should be of extreme interest to members of the opposition, to make sure that all members of Executive Council, all boards, authorities, agencies, and committees comply with accepted accounting principles vis-à-vis expenses, operations, programs, and so on.

He is to provide internal control audits, including financial controls, program audits; in other words, to make sure that programs by various ministries, by members of Executive Council, various MLA committees are properly carried out, and that programs that have been assigned to the administration by Executive Council are being properly carried out.

He is to perform information communications technology audits to make sure that all of the communication systems within Executive Council and all the related activities are being used properly and are functioning properly.

He is mandated to conduct special investigations if, indeed, there is a need for a special investigation into any matter.

He is mandated to identify and recommend improvements to risk mitigation processes designed to prevent such things as failed initiatives, financial mismanagement – that's why I mentioned the internal auditor to the media, because he is charged with looking at that, and there's some suggestion through innuendo that that is taking place when it's not – or reputation damage, which the Liberals are trying so desperately to do.

His function was transferred from the provincial internal audit services mainly to three ministries. I mentioned the increase in funding to expand provision of internal audit services to all departments as well as agencies, boards, and commissions. Of the $4.6 million in increased spending $3.6 million is to be recovered from ministries and other users.

Now, I don't know how many other ministries have done their estimates, but in the estimates of the individual ministries – mainly there are three ministries, and I'm not sure which ones they are – virtually all ministries will show as an expense their contribution to the function and the costs incurred by the internal auditor.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's not clear to me why that work couldn't be done by the Auditor General, but we'll pursue that.

Anyway, my primary interest with the budget presented tonight is with the Public Affairs Bureau, which is a very effective organization, I must say. It's a large and powerful organization and well financed. I think it is this government's secret weapon in its success in relating to the public over the last 10 years, and I say that as a compliment. So they're a force to be reckoned with.

One of the questions I have is on the role of the Public Affairs Bureau in relation to other government departments. As you go through the estimates for other government departments and add up their total amount spent on communications, it's some $8.4 million. So in addition to what's presented in the budget tonight for Executive Council, there's another $8.4 million scattered throughout the other departments for work on communications.

I'm wondering if the minister responsible for the Public Affairs Bureau, the Premier, could elaborate some on how the Public Affairs Bureau works with the other departments and how this $8.4 million gets accounted for. In particular, does the Public Affairs Bureau bill out to other government departments for its services? Is there some interdepartmental transfer of accounting mechanisms when the Public Affairs Bureau works in a particular department, if that made sense?

Thank you.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Chairman, I will take that question under advisement. I'm sure that my officials heard the question.

Relative to how other ministries, other departments bill the Public Affairs Bureau for services, if indeed they do, that information will be provided to the hon. member.

Mr. Chairman, just to clarify part of the preamble that didn't relate to any questions about the Public Affairs Bureau but did mention the role of the internal auditor, the internal auditor came about for Executive Council as the result of a recommendation of the Auditor General, and it has been a policy of this government to take his recommendations very seriously and implement them. As a matter of fact, over the course of this government's mandate and previous mandates we have paid very careful attention to the recommendations of the Auditor General and have virtually implemented all of his recommendations, and this was one of the recommendations that we implemented.

Relative to the Public Affairs Bureau I take exception to the – I know that the hon. member said that he meant this as a compliment, but it didn't really sound like a compliment. I think his term was an effective weapon. [interjections] Well, a secret weapon and a very effective weapon, he said. Well, it's not a weapon; it is a device and a well-managed device to get myriad information out on just a phenomenal number of government services and what is happening in government. All one needs to do is key up the government web site and look at what is on the web site relative to the multitude of activities that are taking place within government.

You know, I sometimes wonder why the media doesn't use the web site. There are so many good stories. It reminds me of when I was a reporter. I used to go after the unusual. One day I did a sewer tour. I wanted to know: what's underground; what makes sewers tick? It's a phenomenal story. You get a bit of a scoop that way because no one else would go into the sewers; I'm telling you that for sure.

I don't want to give anyone a clinic in journalism, but this story a day keeps the editor away attitude seems to prevail here in the Legislature: wow, did the Premier ever give us a juicy 15-second bite. Well, today it went 90 seconds. So, you know, it was really juicy.

There are so many things. The Public Affairs Bureau disseminates information relative to the myriad activities that take place within government. The bureau involves 131 full-time employees. The budget breakdown is thus. There are 78 full-time employees helping government ministries to communicate with Albertans, to communicate that multitude of services I talked about, supplying professionals to government departments to develop and implement communications programs, providing communications planning and consulting support to government, co-ordinating government communications to and from Albertans on priority areas for government initiatives and during public emergencies, providing specialized writing and editing services to government, creating and implementing a corporate communications strategy to ensure that public information programs are co-ordinated across government and that Albertans are getting the information they need in the most cost-effective way possible. That involves 78 full-time employees doing just that function.

There are 34 full-time employees who are charged with the responsibility of providing Albertans with two-way access to government. That means managing the Service Alberta call centre, formerly the RITE centre, as I mentioned, to give Albertans toll-free access to government, providing Alberta Connects call centre support for comments and information on major government initiatives – and I indicated how many calls they received last year – managing the two-way flow of information through the Alberta government web site, providing technical support for major government news conferences and announcements, providing communications technology support to Executive Council and Internet consultation to departments – and believe me, that comes in very handy, especially for those who might be computer illiterate – managing the province-wide distribution of news releases.

Then there are 11 full-time employees charged with publishing and selling Alberta's laws and other government materials. These are people who work in the Queen's Printer's office. They are charged with publishing and selling Alberta's laws and other government materials and operating the Queen's Printer's bookstore.

There are three full-time employees assigned to the managing director's office, and the responsibility of these three people is the overall management of the Public Affairs Bureau.

There are five full-time employees responsible for human resources and administration. Their functions are to manage the human resources finance needs of the Public Affairs Bureau, to develop business plans and budget preparations, to do performance measurement co-ordination, to prepare annual reports and develop annual reports, and to administer five FTEs to administer FOIP. That in itself should involve about 55 FTEs considering the multitude of requests that come from the Liberals.

So, Mr. Chairman, that pretty well covers the functions and the operations and explains the employee functions, at least of those involved with the Public Affairs Bureau.

The Chair: Before I recognize any further members at this time, I wonder if the committee would agree to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thanks to everybody for agreeing to this. We have unexpected visitors tonight, the parents and sister of one of our pages, who are seated in the public gallery. I will ask them to rise. They are Gerard Zentner and Maureen Zentner, who are dad and mom, and Emilie, who is a sister to our page, Matthew Zentner, who might as well rise as well. I would ask them all to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Executive Council (continued)

The Chair: The chair would also ask the indulgence of those who wish to speak if they would try and speak into the microphone. That way Hansard will be able to hear better what they're saying.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Now I'd like to draw the Premier's attention to page 202 of the ministry business plans, core business goal 1 of Executive Council, and under Strategies it says, "develop advertising guidelines and best practices to help ministries maximize the clarity, consistency, cost-effectiveness, accessibility and reach of their advertising programs."

So my questions to the Premier are really an elaboration of that point that is going to be funded through this budget. What kind of advertising guidelines are going to be developed? Could we get a bit more detail on that?

Given that guidelines are being developed for future use, what kind of guidelines are being used now or have been used until this point? Are there guidelines in place historically, or are we starting from scratch? Perhaps each advertising contract has been handled on a one-off basis. I don't know. But if there are guidelines historically, perhaps he could even provide a copy of the guidelines to us. That would be most helpful. Are ministries each using their own guidelines? Is this an attempt, then, to perhaps consolidate all the advertising contracts into a single standardized approach?

How much money from the budget is being spent on modernizing the Alberta government corporate identity? That's a significant initiative. Large, large organization like that: it's a big process. So it would be interesting to get an update on how that is proceeding, including a listing of which outside firms have been hired to help – perhaps we should think of it as rebranding the government or changing its corporate identity, updating its corporate identity.

I don't know if the Premier wants to respond to those now or would prefer to respond in writing at a later time.

8:40

Mr. Klein: Mr. Chairman, relative to the second issue as it relates to the corporate identity across government, I would prefer to provide the hon. member with a detailed reply as to what we hope to achieve by developing a corporate identity. Quite generally, it would expand on the 20-year strategic plan and identify Alberta as we have identified Alberta over the past 10 years through phrases such as the Alberta advantage, such as the stylized logo. But it involves much more detail than that, and I will have our department people undertake to prepare a detailed reply for the hon. member.

On the advertising policy. The Public Affairs Bureau provides consultation and co-ordination support for all government advertising, and the cost of the work is covered by the government ministries responsible. In 2002-2003, for instance, government spending on advertising by departments totalled $7.2 million. I'll have to go back into my budget to find out – and maybe the hon. member has it at his fingertips – what it is this year. I would imagine that it would be the normal increase.

Mr. Chairman, increasing communications with Albertans in areas that they identify as top priorities is a key goal of the Public Affairs Bureau, and part of this, of course, is advertising. Having a corporate approach to communication and advertising helps to ensure that Albertans receive the information that they need in the most co-ordinated and effective manner possible. So objectives of the strategy would include making sure that Alberta government messages are clear and reach the appropriate audience.

Sometimes, unfortunately, we have to resort to advertising in order to communicate properly and accurately the programs that have been undertaken. A case in point relative to misinformation . . .

Mrs. Forsyth: Bill 11?

Mr. Klein: Well, Bill 11 was a good example. The massive misinformation campaign that was conducted by the Liberals prompted the provincial government to publish ads to explain to the Alberta public exactly what we were intending.

An Hon. Member: Kyoto.

Mr. Klein: One hon. member is mentioning the whole situation relative to Kyoto, why we opposed the accord but not the reduction of greenhouse gases and what steps we were taking to achieve a reduction in greenhouse gases when the general media portrayed Alberta as being anti greenhouse gas reduction, and we weren't. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Mr. Chairman, a more recent instance of miscommunication – and I've instructed the appropriate minister to respond – was a recent column in the Calgary Sun on War Amps. It wasn't prompted by the Liberals, but it was prompted by someone. Nothing could be further from the truth than the rantings and ravings of this misinformed, uninformed columnist. The War Amps program will continue. The department is working very diligently to make sure that we protect the legislation that is in place and was supported by the Liberals relative to protection of privacy and at the same time provide some means of access for the War Amps to licence plates. It's a good program, and everyone is working co-operatively to my understanding, but that's not what the column would indicate, and unfortunately sometimes we have to advertise to make clear the government's position and exactly what we are doing in regard to various programs.

So I reiterate: objectives of the strategy include making sure Alberta government messages are clear and reach the appropriate audience; secondly, identifying government advertising in a consistent way so Albertans know who the message is from and where they can go for more information; for example, by placing the Alberta signature and key contact information in a consistent format for all government advertising. The strategy also involves giving government advertising a unified, creative look and tone. Most importantly, it involves getting maximum value and effectiveness for the dollars spent.

The strategy does not change the way government advertising is funded, and ministries will continue to fund advertising campaigns out of their respective budgets. The Public Affairs Bureau simply provides advertising expertise and assistance, particularly for major campaigns.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to express my appreciation to the Premier for his taking the time to go through some of these plans and numbers with us. Today during Public Accounts the Premier, I guess, tried to put a question to me, which wasn't really allowed by the chair, and it had to do with some numbers that I quoted in terms of communications' people or so-called spin doctors – I don't really think that's an insulting term; it's not meant that way – and wanted to know why the numbers I had were at variance with his. I've got that information for him, and I'd like to ask him about it as well.

The FTEs of the Public Affairs Bureau have been fairly constant, and they've varied, I guess, between about 127 and 131, in there, but we've looked at it in a different way, and the Premier asked the source. Well, what we did is took the government of Alberta telephone directory. It's not very scientific, but it tells a little bit of a different story. So I'll just share that with the Premier if he wants to comment.

We included the Premier's Office, the Public Affairs Bureau. It excludes communications support staff, excludes Crown corporations, and excludes regional health authorities, but includes provincial health authorities, associations, and AADAC. We broke it down by public affairs officers and directors. In 2001 there were 85 public affairs officers and 48 directors for a total of 133; in 2003 there were 56 directors, 98 public affairs officers for a total of 154; and in 2004 there were 60 directors, 103 public affairs officers for a total of 163. If you compare that to the 1993 numbers, there were 30 directors, 17 public affairs officers for a total of 47. So according to this approach it's tripled.

They grow in a number of different ways. Since 1993 the number of ministries has gone from 17 to 24, each of which has its own communications staff. More ministries have added assistant communication directors as well as communication directors. For example, Municipal Affairs and Transportation have added assistant directors in the past year. Finally, when a new office is created within a ministry, they'll sometimes have their own communications staff, and a good example is the Utilities Consumer Advocate office within Government Services, which has its own communications director and no less than two public information officers.

The question really is: do the FTEs contained in the Premier's office tell the whole story, and what public affairs professionals are excluded from that number, and what's the organizational relationship between those people and the Public Affairs Bureau?

The second question. I also raised this with the Premier today, and it's a document which we tabled in the House from Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development communications branch which gives speaking points for the minister or her officials, I guess, basically trashing the New Democrats. [interjections] We aren't sensitive, Mr. Chairman. I want to make it clear. We're not thin-skinned people. We couldn't be and still survive in this place. But it raises a question. It raises a question about the independence of the professional civil service in this province. There is a distinction to be drawn between caucus staff – we have five, and they have an enormous number of people. [interjections]

Chair's Ruling Decorum

The Chair: Hon. members, there's really only one person that's supposed to be talking and asking questions at this time, and that happens to be the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. The other members that are offering their opinions right now can well do so after the hour has passed, and they will come in their turn and one at a time. The Premier can't possibly answer questions from 20 different people at the same time. I know that he's able to answer questions but not 20.

So right now it's the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Debate Continued

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Mr. Chairman, I'm not trying to make the point that they have too many. Indeed, sometimes we think they could use more. But the point is that they have a large number of political staff who are entitled to write partisan political material. I'm not saying that we don't do it. I'm not saying that the Liberals don't do it. Certainly the Conservatives do it, Mr. Chairman, but the question is . . . [interjections]

The Chair: I wasn't signalling to you, hon. member. I was signalling to the hon. minister and the hon. member who is not sitting in his seat but sitting next to her that they might be named. Anyway, please continue, and hopefully they will cease and desist.

Mr. Mason: It must be Wednesday night, Mr. Chairman.

Okay. So, you know, Mr. Chairman, this is the question: whether or not the professional civil servants of this province ought to be engaged in partisan activity. I'm trying to say that I don't make that distinction for caucus staff, because that's political staff, but professionals in the Public Affairs Bureau, in my view, ought not to be producing this kind of material. I'd like the Premier's comments on that, and I'd like to inquire further about what other activities they might be involved in that might be of a partisan nature.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Chairman, I think I clearly outlined the function of the Public Affairs Bureau. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands alluded to many offices that indeed do have communications people working in them but have nothing to do with Executive Council and do not report to Executive Council. They might report to various ministries, or there might be other mechanisms within government for the reporting.

The ATB, for instance, has its own communications officer. I would imagine that the tire board, which is a designated administrative organization, would have its own communications director. I would imagine that AADAC – I don't know. The MLA who formerly chaired AADAC is not here, but I'm sure that AADAC had its own communications director. It did; I received a nod in the affirmative.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is right: they do. But they have nothing to do with Executive Council and are not part of the Public Affairs Bureau, as I understand it.

The information that I have is the information that is contained in the budget documents, and that is that the Public Affairs Bureau has 131 FTEs, and I broke down those FTEs for the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition: 78 to help government ministries to communicate with Alberta, 34 FTEs to provide Albertans with two-way access to government, 11 FTEs to publish and sell Alberta's laws and other government materials, 3 FTEs to manage the director's office, and FTEs to provide human resource and administrative services.

The note that I have is that the member is also right that the number of PAB FTEs has remained constant, and I'm advised that departments sometimes complement PAB staff with their own staff, and that is the department's decision not the PAB's decision. If a minister feels that he needs assistance, then he can contact the PAB, and the PAB will provide whatever assistance is necessary. These staff will assist with tasks such as web site management, handling calls from the public, writing tasks. These would include news releases.

I apologize – well, no, I don't apologize, because I don't think that government news releases are generally provocative and confrontational, unlike the news releases that are produced by the NDs. I'm inundated by news releases from the NDs that are very provocative, very confrontational, and often misleading and full of misinformation. So . . .

Mr. Mason: Oh, come on.

Mr. Klein: No. I am coming on, and I'm telling it like it is. I wish I had an example of a government news release and an ND news release. Perhaps someone up there can get me one because I would be very glad to read from a government news release.

9:00

Okay. This is a government news release.

Alberta 2003 Athletes of the Year announced.

Four outstanding Alberta athletes are being recognized as Alberta Athletes of the Year for their significant achievements, performances and contributions as amateur athletes at the international level during 2003.

Then it goes on to explain who's in the junior category, the open category.

These awards acknowledge the commitment, dedication, skill and character of each of the recipients who inspire athletes all across . . .

This is a very, very good news story, and it doesn't subscribe, of course, to the fundamentals that make for journalism. It doesn't subscribe to controversy, conflict, confusion, chaos, and confrontation. That is a government news release, and that is a good example of a government news release.

Now, here is an example of a New Democrat news release. I'm going to read it unemotionally.

Political connections are likely behind the 67% cost overruns in the Calgary courthouse project.

New Democrat MLA Brian Mason released figures today showing that the partners in BPC realty holdings, the consortium selected to build the courthouse, contributed over $21,000 to the Alberta Conservative party over the last three years.

Oh, yeah, and it goes on. I mean, this is a controversial, confrontational press release.

Mrs. McClellan: Here's an industry news release in response.

Mr. Klein: An industry news release. You know . . .

Mrs. McClellan: In response to an ND news release.

Mr. Klein: Right.

But, Mr. Chairman, here is the tale of two news releases, one written in a positive manner. I don't think that it got an inch of ink, by the way, in the newspapers. Maybe in the rural newspapers. This got a whole bunch of ink. You know why, Tom? You know why? Because it's controversial, it's conflict, it's confusion, it's chaos, and it comes from the NDs. Anything from the NDs is good according to the media, the Edmonton Journal anyway. Anything that's written by the Conservatives in a very nonconfrontational manner gets about, well, luckily, an inch or maybe two. So don't tell me about confrontational press releases by the government. [interjections] Do you have some more? Send them over because I'll be glad to table them.

So communication staff do not do political work. They write well-thought-out press releases that state the facts, and communications do brief ministers on issues related to government business. That's what my briefings are for when I meet the media every day. They are straightforward briefings. Sometimes they allude to questions that may be asked, or were asked, if the briefing is after question period, and will say that Liberals mentioned this, this, or that, and here is a suggested response.

That is the way briefings are prepared, and I'm sure that the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition has his researchers and his people do the same thing. If I make a statement in the Legislature and it's anticipated that the media will ask the hon. leader for his response, then he will have prepared for him a suggested response. That's the way it works.

Relative to press releases it is reasonable, it is responsible, and, Mr. Chairman, above all and unlike the NDs, it is nonconfrontational.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise this evening to ask a few questions of our Premier in regard to the budget and the business plan, and frankly I appreciate the opportunity to do so. Now, normally during these questions you'd expect to hear questions on the budget intended to challenge expenditures with an eye to reducing them or justifying them. That's all well and good, but I expect that our opposition with their usual competence will overdo that this evening without my help. So my concern and my questions are slightly different, taking a different approach.

I'm wondering a bit about false economy. I'm wondering if we're spending enough, perhaps, in this very critical area to provide the best level of services that Albertans really want to see, services that are, frankly, worth every penny at this very critical level.

Now, our tendency as a government and certainly the Premier's tendencies are to lead by example and to keep our expenses to an absolute, bare-bones minimum. Of course, I totally support that direction as well, but sometimes I wonder, especially at this critical level, whether or not we're perhaps penny-pinching a bit and looking at false economy in our zeal to keep expenditures and taxes down.

Specifically, I'm going to refer to two areas that I'm wondering about. I'm wondering about staff working in the Premier's office. I mean these are people that get crabbed at, complained at, castigated continually – and I know it's a very, very tough, thankless, and demanding job – probably more so than almost anyone in our government. Whatever they're getting paid, frankly, I'm sure that they're more than worth it. In fact, I have the same views of our own constituency staff and assistant. So I question if they're perhaps getting paid enough to put up with all the abuse and keep a smile on their face and a chipper, cheerful attitude. You know, are their paycheques big enough to keep that inspired? After all, they are our front-line staff, our first interface with the public, and I'm wondering if the Premier is confident that they're earning enough and will be earning enough in coming years to keep them really happy.

My second area of concern with our expenditures is actually our public relations department. We've heard a lot of comments about it tonight, people in opposition talking about how big it is and so on. Frankly, I'm a little worried – you know, I'm seeing occasionally in the media, in our e-mails, et cetera, articles and comments that are very critical, misleading, misrepresenting, malicious accusations and so on – that many times there is no official response to those articles, none at all from our side to clarify the situation. In fact, I've collected a number of these, and I do try to answer them, but I can't. There are just not enough hours in the day.

So my concern is that if there is no response at all to such negative statements and columns and articles, maybe it has the tendency to create some doubt in the public's mind, doubt that perhaps we're afraid to answer or have no answers or that perhaps we aren't listening or that we don't care, didn't notice, et cetera. Because if we were or if we did have good answers and responses – and of course from my position I know that we do have excellent responses and answers – why wouldn't we want to set the record straight? Not for our benefit, not so that we look good, but for our citizens' benefit, for their peace of mind.

Frankly, I don't think that our citizens want to believe that this is an incompetent government that squanders their tax dollars on unnecessary plane flights and so on. I think that for their peace of mind it's important that we respond to these negative articles and set the record straight. So I'm wondering: are we perhaps a little short-staffed in our public relations department? We're not getting our good stories told so that people can be less stressed and sleep better at night knowing that their tax dollars and their governance really is in good hands, despite what they might be seeing or hearing from media and e-mails.

So the fact is, you know, that there is a whole other side to all these accusations and criticisms that our opponents are simply not going to be telling them, and as I said, it's for our citizens' peace of mind. You know, I'm specifically wondering: are we perhaps being lulled into complacency when we hear that our public relations department is a great secret weapon? Well, frankly, it shouldn't be a secret weapon. It's a public relations department. It should be high profile, very public, front and centre. So my question is: are we funding it enough to make sure that our side of the story gets out?

With that I thank you, Mr. Chairman, and look forward to the responses.

Mr. Klein: The questions and the statement made are somewhat subjective, Mr. Chairman, in that if you were to ask, maybe, the PAB staff if there are enough of them and if they are being paid enough, they would say no, maybe. I don't know. If you asked the Liberals, they would probably say that there are too many and they are getting paid too much, and the NDs . . .

Mr. Mason: No. We'd just say that they're biased.

Mr. Klein: Oh, well, there is another. So the question is subjective.

Really, the manager of the Public Affairs Bureau, who is in the audience, makes a determination as to what is appropriate relative to the day-to-day operations of the bureau and also what is appropriate in terms of salaries. The salaries paid to PAB staff would be consistent with the salaries paid to any other person of the same level in any other component of the public service. So we try to be fair to all employees, and we do have a grid that categorizes an employee at a particular level. Within that level that an employee receives payment in the way of salary, either to the bottom of that grid or to the top of that grid.

An example would be a grid for ADMs, assistant deputy ministers, or division managers or people with particular expertise: lawyers, engineers, doctors, who all work in the public service. Basically, we try to treat everyone fairly. Now, if I were to ask Mr. Turtle, who's the head of the PAB, he would say: yeah, I'm worth more. Maybe he is. I'm sure that Gordon, if he went out into the private sector – and I'm not suggesting he do so, because he's doing a fantastic job – could make a lot more money than he's making here in government.

Relative to my own staff too, I guess, the question is somewhat subjective. If you were to ask members of my staff, although they wouldn't say it to me, they might say it to someone else: I deserve more money.

[Ms Graham in the chair]

I think that they are worth every penny that they earn because, as you pointed out, from Lynn Hall and Yolanta, who man the phones at the front office – you know, the front-line workers take a lot of unnecessary abuse, really – to Nargis and Colleen in my office; and Debby, who handles my scheduling; and Cathy; now Steve West and Jim Kiss, indeed, they deal with a lot of issues. Julian Nowicki, our deputy of Executive Council, I know for a fact could earn much, much more in the private sector. He knows it as well, but he is a dedicated public service employee, and he appreciates and understands what service to the public means.

So, yes, I would like to pay them all more, but unfortunately we are limited by the conventions of government and by the rules of government. We have to pay them what is deemed to be fair in relationship to what we pay other employees, but they do work very hard.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, please.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Madam Chairman. In the spirit of the comments from the Member for Calgary-Currie and the response from the Premier, thinking back to when the Premier first took his position – I think memory serves me correctly here – he publicly listed the public servants in the province who were earning $100,000 or more, which I thought was actually an effective thing to do.

So I have a couple of questions along these lines. Could the Premier provide a list of the employees of the Public Affairs Bureau who make over $100,000? Since there's actually, I think, a line item in the budget for bonuses – or certainly there was in the annual report – could the Premier also provide a listing of the number of bonuses paid out to Public Affairs Bureau staff last year and the size of each of those bonuses and the basis on which they're calculated so that we might have a sense of how that'll play out during this budget year?

Mr. Klein: Madam Chair, I don't have that information at my fingerprints as it is not detailed or itemized in the budget, but certainly our officials heard the question and will be happy to provide the information.

Having said that, you know, things have progressed since 1992. I know that my salary has increased somewhat.

Mrs. McClellan: Not much.

Mr. Klein: Not much, but salaries have increased generally. I'm sure that the manager of the department, who is ostensibly at a deputy minister's level, would earn well in excess of $100,000, not $200,000 but in the mid-range, $150,000, and that would be consistent with generally what DMs are paid, and I don't know exactly what they are paid. I don't know if an assistant director would be at the $100,000 mark. I'm just looking for a nod. I'm getting a shaking of the head in the negative. But I will try and provide you the detailed information.

The Acting Chair: Leader of the Opposition, are you finished?

Yes, Madam Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: I do want to just make a couple of comments about the estimates of Executive Council, and there's been a lot talked about tonight about the Public Affairs Bureau. I want to certainly put on record the importance of the function that they provide in providing information to the people of the province, and I can assure you, Premier, that we have known that first-hand in the past 11 and a half months with the incident of BSE that has rocked the agriculture industry in such a dramatic way.

Probably any success of getting through that is a good communication plan, and it was necessary that the communication plan come through government as to what we were doing. The Public Affairs Bureau played a very strong role in that, whether it was the members of the Public Affairs Bureau that are located with Executive Council or the person that is assigned to Agriculture through the Public Affairs Bureau to help with that communication. It was imperative that the 38,000 producers in our province were kept abreast as well as possible as to anything that was happening, positively or negatively. It was most important, I think, to the consuming public of Alberta that they be kept abreast of those issues, and I use that as an example.

We were talking about news releases earlier, Mr. Premier, and the importance of them being factual. I looked at a news release that was presented by government when we made a trip to Washington to make a case for the border reopening and talked about the importance of that exercise of ensuring that key leaders in Washington understood clearly our position and the fact that we were going to base our evidence on science and not on emotion or hysteria or politics, and that was important.

Then I looked at a couple of news releases that the beef industry, in fact, put out in early March in response to a rather inflammatory and inaccurate news release put out by the opposition third party. This is the industry's; this is not mine. This represents four of the cattle-producing organizations: the Western Stock Growers, the feeders council, the Feeder Associations. Their quote is this: "The real shame from this entire episode of finger-pointing is that the needs of the province's beef industry are being ignored by the provincial opposition parties." That's a shame. But that was from inflammatory news releases and again stems from the comment that the hon. ND House leader has raised on Agriculture staff. All they said – and I'll paraphrase it – was that particular comment showed clearly how little the NDs knew about the cattle industry. That wasn't political. That was a fact that was raised by some information that was put out that was incorrect.

So, you know, you can get into this, but I say again how important the Public Affairs Bureau work is, how important it is that you have the opportunity to put factual information out, and I think that all of us, Mr. Premier, as members of Executive Council stand behind the factual material that is in the news releases that are put out through the Public Affairs Bureau to the people of Alberta. If we are not factual, we should be called to account. When we aren't factual, it should be based on fact, not innuendo, and that's the real harmful thing.

Mr. Chairman, I could go on and read excerpts from the Alberta Beef Producers letter, which is lengthy, which is a response to that same news release, and it really just shows the productivity deficit when you do things like that, and it causes a reaction and takes away from the important issues.

There is another area, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to ask a specific question of the Premier on the office of the Auditor General. As the Auditor General is an independent officer of the Legislature with the responsibility to audit the expenses of government ministries, I would like to ask the Premier to explain the Auditor General's role in reviewing Executive Council's expenses. I think that would be a point that we would all be interested in hearing.

Thank you.

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Chairman, I don't know if the hon. Deputy Premier has opened the door on this whole issue of expenses, but I'd be very happy to respond.

While much has been made about government expenses and particularly my expenses and the expenses of other ministers, there is a process. You know, today, for instance, in the Public Accounts Committee the Member for Edmonton-Centre was waving around a document and made the allegation that Peter Elzinga, my former chief of staff, was approving his own expense accounts. In fact, after the process was explained to me, he looks at it and then he puts a stamp on it and says, "This is basically what I spent," and that then goes to the Deputy Minister of Executive Council, who reviews that. Then it goes to the Finance department, and they do a further review, and of course it all becomes a part of the annual audit of the Auditor General.

So the Auditor General conducts an annual audit of Executive Council, and that includes all expense claims. It also involves the auditing of the financial statements and all transactions underlying these financial statements.

As I mentioned, the audit includes ensuring that expenses are authorized, complete, and accurate and have gone through the process; in other words, have been looked at by the employee or the government representative incurring the expense, have been properly examined by – I forget the name of the officer, but in this case the Deputy Minister of Executive Council; we'll call it the examining officer – and then have gone through Treasury Board as well. The Auditor General, then, will look at the expenses overall to ensure that the expenses are authorized, that they are complete, and that they are accurate.

I understand that the Auditor General, as part of his mandate, in conducting his audits must get sufficient evidence to support his conclusions, and that, as I understand it, is what auditing is all about: the collection of evidence to support conclusions and recommendations. During the course of his audits the Auditor General has full and open access to our staff and full and open access to all financial information necessary to conduct his audits.

I can say that this government since 1993 adopted a policy of not shelving the Auditor General's reports but paying careful attention to the Auditor General's report and adopting his recommendations because his recommendations are based on evidence that something is not working right, and we want to make it work right. So we take very seriously the recommendations of the Auditor General, unlike the Liberals in Ottawa, at least under the former leader, who somehow seemed to ignore and pooh-pooh and disregard the recommendations of the Auditor General. At least this new leader, although he's being hoisted on his own petard, nonetheless is taking heed of what the Auditor General said about Ad-scum and is conducting an inquiry. Of course, the inquiry inflames controversy, and the media are having a heyday with it.

I would like to point out that the Auditor General is a very sincere individual who takes his job very seriously indeed, as did previous Auditor Generals.

In that regard, I would like to point out that in his 2002-2003 annual report, which is a public document, of course, the Auditor General has reported that the transactions and activities he examined in the financial statement audits, which include Executive Council – and in that audit would be all the expenses incurred by members of Executive Council – complied with the relevant legislative requirements. He never, never, never, never has reported any instances of noncompliance for Executive Council. That, unfortunately, has never been reported. Never been reported. I am not talking about in Hansard but by the media. I am confident that the Auditor General is reporting fairly, and if there were any reasons for concern with respect to Executive Council, he would have raised it in his annual report, and he didn't because he found nothing – absolutely nothing – wrong.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have a few more questions for the Premier. Before beginning, though, I'd like to correct something that the hon. Deputy Premier said. She created the impression that the document, which we did table in the House, written by her professional bureaucrats and attacking the New Democrats was somehow in response to a really nasty news release that we wrote, and nothing could be further from the truth.

This Key Messages deals with the NDs' Public Accounts motion. The issue, it says, is that the NDs made a motion at the Public Accounts Committee calling for Alberta's Auditor General to conduct a value-for-money audit of the way BSE compensation was spent. This document was an attempt to discredit the New Democrats for asking for the Auditor General to get involved, something which the Deputy Premier herself changed her position on just a few days later and stood in the House asking for.

Now, I want to ask the Premier. I notice that the Executive Council is basically the cabinet, and I know that the Premier is interested in keeping the size of government down. In fact, he's made his reputation on this. What's interesting to me is that since 1993 when this Premier took office, the number of ministries has gone from 17 to 24. That is a 41 per cent increase over about 10 years, Mr. Chairman, and I don't think the province has grown that much in 10 years, although I could be wrong. Certainly, I would ask the Premier why we have had this expansion of ministries. Why, for example, do we need a Solicitor General and an Attorney General? Why do we need a Finance minister and a Minister of Revenue, and so on and so on? Could the Premier talk about that?

Does he have any plans to try and shrink government again before the next election? One way to do that would be to reduce the number of ministries in the government. Each ministry has to have a deputy, has to have in most cases ADMs, needs to have communications staff, needs to have administrators, so there's a tremendous duplication of bureaucracy as a result of the expansion that has taken place in the number of ministries during the period that the Premier has been in office. I would ask him to comment on that and whether or not he has any plans to reduce the number of ministries again.

The Chair: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Klein: Yes, Mr. Chairman. To answer the hon. member's question, prior to 1992, when I became the Premier, I think there were 27 – I stand to be corrected – members in cabinet, and the size of the caucus was 53. I don't know how many MLAs there were, probably in the area of 80 or 83. I don't know whether that has changed that much, Mr. Chairman. You were around then. So was I, but I can't remember completely. But there were 27 ministries.

When our government was re-elected in 1993, I reduced the size of cabinet to I believe it was about 17 at that time, and we had 51 members. The Liberals had 32. The NDs were decimated; they were wiped out. They were the opposition. We increased our majority between 1993 and 1997 when two members of the Liberal Party and one member of the NDs . . . [interjection] Oh, I'm sorry. You didn't cross the floor. You ran for us. Two members of the Liberal Party – was it two?

Mr. Woloshyn: Three.

Mr. Klein: Three members of the Liberal Party crossed the floor and joined our caucus. I can't remember what the size of the cabinet was at that time. I believe it was around 20. Then in 2001, of course, we increased our majority again to 74 and, coincidental with that, increased the size of cabinet.

It remains to be seen – and that's a matter for ongoing examination. Certainly, it is the prerogative of the Premier to decide the size of cabinet, what he thinks is needed to run an efficient organization and provide accountability, and that decision will be made after the next election. I don't hear any opposition to that from the other side, so obviously they assume that we're going to win.

Mr. Mason: Don't assume anything.

Mr. Klein: Well, I will assume some things, and I'll bet you. I'll bet you right now. You want to put $10 on it? [interjections] Yeah. Okay. Next time. Right. Anyway, we will do our best.

Mr. Chairman, the size of cabinet in some respects is in relationship to the size of the caucus. We are cognizant and we're well aware of the need to have as little government as we possibly can and to economize where we can, but we also have to understand that elected people are elected to be accountable to the public and that they expect to receive services from various ministries, various departments. They would like to talk to a political figure who has been elected in his or her constituency, who is responsible for either a department or a standing policy committee or a government committee headed by an MLA as opposed to a public service employee. That is the nature of government.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to point out something, because it's bothered me, relative to what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands alluded to, and that is the politicizing of the public service. I've been in politics now for 24 years and in the Alberta government now for 15 years, and I'm said to be the longest serving Premier in Canada. During the course of my tenure I've had the opportunity to be involved with various Premiers from British Columbia. I think I've gone through about seven. Many of them have been ND Premiers. We'll start with Mike Harcourt, then go to whoever was the interim, Miller, then Clark, then Ujjal Dosanjh. Right? Okay. So there are four. I got to know a little bit about them.

The one thing that the Liberal Premier there now, Gordon Campbell, said is that the most difficult thing to do is to reorganize government and rout out all of the senior posts right down to mid-management level that were filled by ND party hacks. They recruited from around the country and called in all of the NDs they could possibly find to fill all of the public service jobs.

You want to talk about the politicization of a public service? You need to look no further than what the NDs did in British Columbia. I have to say that they were masterful at doing it. As a matter of fact, one of his former colleagues, who used to be my critic, ended up in the public service in British Columbia. I think others did. Anyone with an ounce of political smarts became a bureaucrat in the ND public service in British Columbia. They were masters at it. Absolute masters.

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert. [interjections] St. Albert is the only one that's recognized.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to extend my appreciation, too, to you, Mr. Premier, for the opportunity this evening to hear you explain the organization and the various responsibilities through your office.

I would like to take this opportunity also, because I do have the honour of being the chair of a standing policy committee, to say thank you to and recognize the two fine women from Executive Council who assist us, Doris Porter and Kristine Oberg, who provide us with some very excellent advice and assistance and help us to correspond with Albertans in order that they can present to us and inform us of those issues and items that are very relevant to Albertans. Indeed, through your office we're able to service them and to respond to them and to articulate policy so that, we believe, through your leadership we can, again, as I say, serve Albertans.

You also mentioned, Mr. Premier, at the beginning of this evening's presentation that within your jurisdiction of office you have the Alberta Order of Excellence. I do notice that recently those who are responsible for that specific honour and Order of Excellence awards did make the most recent announcements to very deserving Albertans who have served our communities extremely well. So I would like to ask you if you could please, Mr. Premier, explain to us actually how it does work, where it does fall within your office and ministry, and if you could also provide us with your thoughts on the Alberta Order of Excellence, please.

Mr. Klein: You know, the question pertains somewhat to what I said earlier, and that is that there are so many interesting things and wonderful things going on in this province that aren't reported, and the Alberta Order of Excellence is one of them. It's Alberta's equivalent to the Order of Canada, and many distinguished Albertans have received this award: ordinary citizens, doctors, lawyers, plumbers, pipefitters. Anyone who has made an outstanding contribution to his or her community has been honoured. It's the highest honour the province of Alberta can bestow upon a citizen. Quite basically, the Order of Excellence is to accord recognition to Albertans who have rendered service of the greatest distinction and to recognize them for singular excellence on behalf of all the residents of Alberta.

The ceremony is a very simple ceremony at Government House. The Lieutenant Governor presides and presents the recipient with the Order of Excellence, which is an emblem that is worn proudly by the recipients below their OCs, the floral pin. Many of them are also OCs, Orders of Canada.

As I said before, members of the Alberta Order of Excellence come from all walks of life, and their careers cover a wide range of things all the way from medicine, as I said, to plumbing, to the arts. The only thing that all members have in common is that they have made an outstanding contribution to their province or they've had an impact on the international scene. The Alberta Order of Excellence is about more than simply doing one's job well. It's about recognizing Albertans who have made a difference and who have served Albertans with excellence and distinction and whose contributions will stand the test of time.

The Alberta Order of Excellence Council considers the nomination of candidates to the Alberta Order of Excellence, and that council is made up of prominent volunteer representatives appointed by order in council from across Alberta. So there is a very thorough adjudication of the worthiness of potential recipients for the Order of Excellence. I can tell you that last year I think that there were about 300 nominated, and I believe that only three or four are selected from all the nominees. I'm sorry; it's five. Five Albertans are honoured each year for their outstanding contribution.

Mrs. McClellan: Up to five.

Mr. Klein: It's up to five.

As I said before, unfortunately the Alberta Order of Excellence, although it's been around for many years, has had a relatively low profile. I would like to see an expanded profile for the Alberta Order of Excellence where more Albertans know about it and know about the people who have received it and then have the ability to nominate potential candidates or recipients. So I would encourage Members of the Legislative Assembly and all others interested to spread the message about the order and to encourage their constituents to nominate Albertans who are deserving of this great honour.

The Acting Chair: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Executive Council for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense

$24,399,000

The Acting Chair: Shall the vote be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Chair: Any opposed? The motion is carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

9:50

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I'd move that the Committee of Supply rise and report the estimates of the Executive Council and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Ms Graham in the chair]

Mr. Tannas: Madam Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, as requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, for the following department.

Executive Council: operating expense, $24,399,000.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.
Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Any opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading
Bill 27
Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2004

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like tonight to certainly move third reading of Bill 27, Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2004.

As mentioned previously, this act is to incorporate changes to the corporate income tax rates: 11 and a half per cent general rate and from 4 per cent to 3 per cent for the small business rate.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Ultimately, I would like to at least make one statement, I think, when we're asked about trying to make sure that we have the right structures for economic activity. I would like to actually quote something from the C.D. Howe Institute. There are many others with similar statements that we could quote. They said that the central cause of Canada's poor investment performance and the stagnant growth of the living standard is Ottawa's and the provinces' business taxation policies.

As C.D. Howe Institute studies have shown over the past five years, Canada's effective tax rate on capital remains one of the highest in the world and actually rose from 1987 to 2000. Businesses have been given some relief in the past three years, but Canada's competitors have been reducing business taxes even faster. A recent report showed that Canada's effective tax rate on capital has actually risen relative to the OECD average. Even high-tax countries like Sweden and the Netherlands have lower effective tax rates than Canada because they keep corporate taxes low.

So it is true that our averages have been high. It is true that when we go, certainly as I've said before, and talk specifically to the investment community in New York, when they are comparing effective tax rates and return on investment, business taxes are a very critical part of retooling investment, both machinery and equipment, creating jobs, taking the risk, attracting capital for high capital-intensive industries that we have in Alberta. It's very fundamental that we have the right structures that will attract the capital to create the jobs for all of us to have opportunities to live and work here in Alberta.

In that respect our GDP growth, our own estimates of creation, continues to show this province – it's not just because of price factors. Industries beyond oil and gas are growing here in Alberta. Both small businesses and large businesses are coming here. People continue to move here. We get the GDP growth. Our investment per capita is highest among all of the provinces.

These are all factors that when you ask in surveys point to – when CEOs are asked about some of their policies about where they're going to locate, the facts do come back to support Alberta being known and recognized for being a more conductive business friendly environment to come and locate. Even the banks will acknowledge that themselves when you talk to them about how they structure internally and even put some of their business in Alberta, Alberta being their western financial centre much because of this being the right place to invest. Tax structures are very fundamental to it.

So I would recommend that everybody give strong support to third reading of Bill 27.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I've spoken to this bill earlier, so I don't feel any need to prolong the debate this evening.
Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to not really prolong debate at all, but just to put on the record for one final time the opposition of the New Democrat caucus to the corporate tax cut plan of the government. This is a plan of moving corporate income tax down from 15 per cent to 8 per cent over what was originally four years. We take some credit for delaying it in one year when the Treasurer got nervous. So it's going to take them five years.

They have provided no evidence that this is necessary or will produce the types of results that they expect. The Auditor General has called for measures to determine what exactly is going to be achieved by this policy and a way to measure results against expectations. The government has not provided that, and we see it merely as part of their corporate mindset and acting on behalf of the corporate sector in this province to reduce the tax level on corporations, which will have a strong negative effect on the government's ability to continuously provide necessary services to the citizens of this province and make the province even more dependent on natural resource revenue and gambling revenue as an alternative to a solid and justifiable tax base, including corporate income tax, in this province.

So we want to go on the record once again, Mr. Speaker, as opposing this bill and want to indicate as well that we support the portions of the bill dealing with reductions to small business, but we can't vote for the bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Revenue to close debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a third time]

Bill 29

Agriculture Financial Services Amendment Act, 2004

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 29, the Agriculture Financial Services Amendment Act, 2004.

Mr. Speaker, this is an important bill, and the proposed amendments will go a long way to help those in the agriculture industry and those in rural Alberta in particular, although not confined to them, to develop more business investment in their product and in their communities.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will allow individual farmers as investors to each borrow money from Ag Financial Services and then collectively invest in a project. Of course, as has been indicated through some of the debate on this bill, there is a strong interest in the communities – mainly rural I will admit, but obviously urban investors as well – to invest in more capacity in our slaughter area.

Through this bill individual shareholders will be able to access loans of up to $2 million, which they could before, and be subject of course to the financing terms. None of that has changed or the requirements as they're set out. What this does is allow more than one investor to borrow up to $2 million. It's a clarification of what the intention of the original program was.

10:00

Mr. Speaker, we do want to make it possible for entrepreneurs to invest in value-added opportunities in our province. There is no question that Ag Financial Services and now incorporated into it Alberta Opportunity Company have an outstanding record on loan losses of under 1 per cent, which I don't think anyone would really debate or argue is a bad figure.

Mr. Speaker, let me just conclude by taking the opportunity to say one more time that we grow a wonderful agricultural product and products here in the province of Alberta, whether it's barley or beef or potatoes, sugar beets, lentils, and of course our emerging and growing small fruit industry, and we believe that our producers do deserve the opportunity to value add their product right here at home and keep the jobs right here at home.

I want to thank all members on all sides of the House for their support of this bill, and of course we'll urge all members to vote in favour of it in third reading. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. If the effect of this bill is to increase the productive capacity of the agricultural industry in Alberta, that's fantastic. I really hope that's how it plays out. There are of course risks with this, but we manage the risks. We take our risks. In many ways perhaps the risks are greater in doing nothing than endeavouring to put in place the mechanisms for Alberta's agricultural industry to expand here at home.

If we are able to increase the slaughtering capacity at home, the spinoffs of that are marvellous. I mean, every live animal we ship out of the country takes with it jobs, and if we can keep those jobs here, expand them here, develop them here, good for us. Let's hope it works out.

I'll certainly be supporting this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister to close debate?

Mrs. McClellan: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:03 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, May 6, 2004

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2004/05/06

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Renew us with Your strength. Focus us in our deliberations. Challenge us in our service to the people of this great province. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some 20 bright-eyed grades 4, 5, and 6 students from New Bridgen school. They are accompanied by parent helpers and drivers Twighla Christianson, Nicky Beynon, Delbert Pratt, Darren Simpson, and, if the House would indulge me some motherly pride, their teacher, my daughter Tami Cox. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly five very special guests. Nicolas Mancuso is a 13-year-old junior high student from Lyons, France. He's here as part of an education program where travel to other countries facilitates their studies in foreign languages. Nicolas is attending D.S. MacKenzie junior high school in Edmonton for three weeks. He's made the trip along with 24 other students, 16 of whom are in Edmonton and eight in Calgary. He's here today with his host family, who I'm proud to say are constituents in Edmonton-Whitemud, Ron and Karen Henderson, along with their children Lindsay and Thomas. In Lindsay's past she was an excellent ringette player; I'm sure she still is.

I might add that the Hendersons are ensuring that Nicolas will be taking some unique souvenirs back with him such as saskatoon jam and peanut butter and, of course, maple syrup, just to name a few. They will be going to Drumheller to the Royal Tyrrell Museum in the Deputy Premier's constituency. They'll be going to Lake Louise over the weekend. Nicolas's visit to Edmonton and to Canada is fast coming to a close, and I understand that Thomas is hoping to go back to France to do a reciprocal visit. I'd ask the five visitors to stand and please accept the warm traditional welcome of our Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I also have other guests today, and I'm pleased to introduce them to you and through you to members of the Assembly. They're here today to observe the estimates of the Department of Seniors. They're folks who are with the Elder Advocates, and my colleague from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview introduced them earlier this week and had a member's statement with respect to Lou and Ruth Adria, members of my constituency and people who constantly keep me apprised of issues in the community with respect to seniors and seniors' care.

Also, with them today are Anne Pavelich, Joe Green, Kathryn Kutt, Sam Francis, and Kay Reid. As I said, they're here to observe the estimates for the Department of Seniors. I'd ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly family members of one of our Legislature pages, Vanessa Pillay. I would like to introduce her brother, Patrick Pillay, a grade 8 student at Kenilworth junior high school; her mother, Barbara Pillay, who works at the Northern Alberta Brain Injury Society; and her father, Joe Pillay, who works at the Boyle Street Co-op as a work experience co-ordinator. They are all very proud of Vanessa, as are all members in the Assembly. I would ask the family members to now please rise – they are in your gallery – and receive the warm welcome of everyone. Welcome.

It's also my pleasure to introduce four constituents of mine from the Edmonton-Mill Creek area who also are here this afternoon to observe the proceedings of the House and, in particular, estimates related to the Department of Seniors. We have with us Thomas Kennedy, Kathleen Kennedy, Henry Palindat, and Barbara Palindat. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome. Thank you all very much for coming as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly two constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar. They are Frank and Joan Baer, and they live in the community of Forest Heights. Mr. Baer was born and raised in Edmonton. He's a retired plumber who worked for AGT, now Telus. Mrs. Baer at one time worked for the provincial department of agriculture. Together they raised two sons and two daughters, who all graduated from the University of Alberta and went on to complete their master's degrees as well. They now have nine grandchildren, six of whom live in Edmonton and three in Ottawa, and they are the proud grandparents of Legislature page Vanessa Pillay. They're in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. I would now ask them to rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today on behalf of the Member for Livingstone-Macleod to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 14 bright, young, smart students from Glenwood, Alberta. They told me that that's true and that they would prove it by hard work and through their marks, so we'll hold them to that. They're accompanied today by their principal and teacher, Kelly Thomas, and his wife, Kathy. I would ask them to rise and please receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc.

Mr. Klapstein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have an introduction to make on behalf of the Minister of Learning. They are employees of Alberta Learning's corporate services division, and they are Mrs. Linda Warren, Miss Jenese Derby, Miss Tammy Embree, Mrs. Nadine Schrader, Miss Rita Craveiro, Mrs. Tasha Fadish, Mrs. Melanie White, Miss Erin Murray. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 17 very enthusiastic students from Kneehill Christian school, which is just outside Linden, Alberta, and as you know, it's not very far from my place. They're here today accompanied by 10 adults, and I'll read their names off: Miss Terri Miller, their teacher; Miss Becky Baerg, another teacher; and parent helpers Mr. and Mrs. Virgil Unruh, Mr. and Mrs. Gary Klassen, Mr. and Mrs. Ron Isaac, as well as Mrs. Wanda Unruh and Mrs. Rosalie Unruh. I would ask them all to rise in the public gallery and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 21 very bright students from the Islamic school of Calgary. Among the students is my own niece, Samar Amery. The students are accompanied today by four adults: Rychelle Gibson, teacher; Chrefie Charanek, Hassan Ahmed, and Ryan Katchur. I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly students from the Anne Fitzgerald school located in my constituency. They are of course studying politics as part of their curriculum and are here to observe the political process first-hand. I'd like to ask them to stand at this time. They're seated in the members' gallery. Along with the students are teacher Mr. Zenari and parents and helpers Mr. Ford and Mrs. Klassen. They should be standing, and I'd like the House to give them a very warm welcome at this time.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to introduce to you and to Members of the Legislative Assembly two guests from Tourism Medicine Hat. Tourism Medicine Hat operates two visitor information centres in southeastern Alberta, a year-round operation in Medicine Hat, as well as the Travel Alberta visitor information centre at Walsh on the Saskatchewan border. Serving as the gateway to Alberta, Canada's sunniest city welcomes travellers from across the continent and, indeed, around the world. Last year the Medicine Hat centre alone served nearly 50,000 visitors. In Edmonton to participate in training sessions to prepare for the upcoming tourist season, they are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask Dominique Hirsch, general manager, and Jennifer McKim, marketing manager, to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of all members.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you to members of the Assembly it's my great pleasure to introduce Luke Wilson. Luke attends Avalon junior high school in the city. He plays in the school band, he's a computer whiz, he's an honours and distinction student, and he is the brother of our page Natalie Wilson, who is profoundly proud of her younger brother. So we'd ask Luke to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Mrs. Gordon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to introduce to you and through you four special guests that are with us today. As indicated by the carnation that is on your desk, May is MS Awareness Month, and I have several people connected with the Multiple Sclerosis Society, Alberta division, Edmonton chapter, that are with us today.

Before I introduce them, they asked me what the best way was to extend an invitation to all Members of the Legislative Assembly to get involved in a Super Cities Walk or the bike tours that will be held through the months of May and June to raise needed funds for research and programs for MS. I'm that conduit, so I am inviting you, my colleagues, to get involved. Please participate.

With us today is Mr. David Andrews, who is a board member with the MS Society, Alberta division; Joan Ozirny, who is the vice-chair on the board of the MS Edmonton chapter. Joan went to school with the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster and was telling me some very interesting facts prior to question period. Marie Iwanow is the communications manager, Alberta division, and is responsible for the many hundreds and hundreds of carnations that will go out across the province this month, and Alison Hagan is the director of development, Alberta division. I would ask my guests to rise and please receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a gentleman I have come to know well, particularly through his very fast typing fingers on the e-mail. I would like to ask Kevan Rhead to rise, please. He's in the public gallery today. Mr. Rhead is a seniors' advocate, and I'm sure that many of you have heard from him. So please join me in welcoming Mr. Rhead.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise this afternoon and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mario Molinari and Teresa Molinari. They are seated in the public gallery, and with your permission I'd ask both of them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to all of my colleagues in the Assembly a number of seniors. They are here today to observe the debate on the Seniors' budget estimates and to take part in the seniors' rally outside on the Legislature steps this afternoon. My guests are seated in the public gallery. I'll identify them by their names and ask them to rise and wait until they receive the warm welcome of the Assembly: Alan Dane, Nadine Hooper, Geraldine Ennis, Gordon Steele. Would you please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a constituent of mine who has been doing business in and has resided in Edmonton-Highlands for over 25 years. He is here today to observe the proceedings of the Legislature. I would ask Mr. Leslie Sax to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of seniors who are in the public gallery today. They are here to observe the debate on the estimates for the Department of Seniors, and I would ask them to rise as I read their names and then receive the warm welcome of the Assembly: Pauline Ricard, who is a constituent of mine, Olive Thorne, and Irene Krasowski. I'd ask them to please rise if they're here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two individuals from Toronto, Ontario, that are very special to our page Maya Gordon, who is also a constituent of mine. They are her aunt and uncle. I would ask Barbara Gordon, who is an actress in Ontario, and Doug Rodger, who is a playwright, to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Automobile Insurance Reform

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week the Premier challenged me to compare my auto insurance costs in Alberta to those in other provinces and table the results. Well, consider it done, Mr. Premier, and the proof is clear. For coverage equivalent to my family's, auto insurance is $1,200 to $2,000 a year cheaper in provinces with public auto insurance than it is here in Alberta. To the Premier: will this government finally consider public auto insurance given that it could save countless Alberta families thousands of dollars a year?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, to address the preamble and the news release that was issued by the Liberals, the news release states, if you don't mind me using names, "Taft was challenged by Premier Klein yesterday in the legislature to prove that public auto insurance would reduce his premiums." That's not what I said at all, and if I recall, the challenge wasn't to this hon. member. It was to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. So that is not true and it's misleading.

Mr. Speaker, we are working through the process. No, we don't plan to go to socialized insurance like they have in Saskatchewan, the kind of insurance that the Liberals so adore. Our goals with auto insurance reform remain unchanged, and we're going to live up to our commitments. I'm not going to speculate about what the detailed regulations will involve and how they will impact drivers other than to say that we will fulfill our commitment that rates in Alberta will be comparable to those in other provinces. For the majority of drivers, including most members of the opposition, I'm sure that will be the case if it's not already the case.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I won't answer right now because I'm sure that there will be ample opportunity during the supplementaries to get into some of the details relative to his press release and his claims.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, does the Premier expect Albertans to be satisfied that under his government's plan premiums won't go up when under a public auto insurance plan like we're advocating, premiums could go down by thousands of dollars a year?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, maybe the hon. member will explain to the media outside the House – I know he won't here – how he plans to dismantle all of the insurance companies that exist here in Alberta and say: with the great hand of government the Liberals will now socialize all insurance.

It sounds like Allende in Chile, you know, when he took over all the copper mines and said: the Americans are out; the government now owns all the copper mines, all the minerals, all the resources, all the mining, all the newspapers. Pinochet came in, Mr. Speaker – and I'm not saying that Pinochet was any better, but because of the only elected communist in Chile, Allende, and the socialist reforms he put in, Pinochet was forced, I would say, to mount a coup. As a dictator he was no better than Allende. Of course, the debate still goes on. All you need to do is to go to the web site. As a matter of fact, I did a paper on it, and I'll give it to you.

The Speaker: Thank you very much.

Speaker's Ruling

Oral Question Period Rules

The Speaker: You know, answers in this Assembly are oftentimes the result of the question. Can I just again repeat Beauchesne 409. Beauchesne 409(3) says,

The question ought to seek information and, therefore, cannot be based upon a hypothesis, cannot seek an opinion, either legal or otherwise, and must not suggest its own answer, be argumentative or make representations." Now, these are the rules.

The hon. leader.

Automobile Insurance Reform

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll draw the Premier's attention to page 1210 in Hansard and the debate there.

My question: why won't the Premier concede that his current plan has gone way off the road and simply give Albertans public auto insurance now?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition can't understand or simply won't understand, refuses to listen. As I've said, the caucus of this government is currently developing regulations associated with this plan. Nothing has been finalized yet, but we do have some broad policy objectives to achieve. We want to make sure that good young male drivers are not penalized simply because they are male and between the ages of 16 and 25, we want to make sure that male seniors 65 years of age and over are not penalized simply because they are male and they are older, and we want to make sure that those in the mid-range are paying comparable rates.

Now, as much as the hon. Leader of the Opposition is trying to make a great deal out of this, there are all kinds of things that he misses in his press release. First of all, he fails to mention that there was a disclaimer on all three web sites from Manitoba, British Columbia, and Saskatchewan that his researchers researched, and those disclaimers clearly show that the figures may not be accurate and are provided as estimates only. In his news release he failed to mention that his wife had a speeding ticket and she is designated as a driver. We don't know if that information was included in the Saskatchewan, B.C., and Manitoba scenario.

The Speaker: I think we'll just go on to the second question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Education Funding

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to send mixed messages about the actual dollars it allocates to public education, mixing past funding commitments with present and future commitments and leaving Albertans with the impression that the recommendations of the Learning Commission will be fully funded. Well, that's just not the case. Early indications show that school boards across the province will be carrying deficits this fall. My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier fully fund the arbitrated teachers' settlement so that school boards like Calgary, Red Deer, and Edmonton do not have to start the school year this fall in the red?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Learning, as you notice, is not here. I will take the question under advisement.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, again to the Premier: why haven't school boards like Edmonton public been able to hire back all the teachers that were laid off last year if not for the lack of government funding?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that there was an increase in the budget of some $284 million. That is not peanuts. We're talking about a lot more money than a $27.50 jug of orange juice, which they like to talk about.

Relative to the question I will take it under advisement for the hon. minister.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that teachers in Calgary are on the verge of striking over classroom conditions, will the Premier admit that he's not keeping his promise to fully fund the recommendations of the Learning Commission?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we're working through the recommendations of the Learning Commission.

Again, relative to the specifics I'll take the question under advisement.

The Speaker: The third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Gasoline Prices

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is very hard for the Premier to understand the impact on motorists of high gasoline prices when seven days a week, 24 hours a day an airplane taxi paid for by taxpayers is a phone call away. With gasoline prices around 80 cents a litre the Premier is now considering pre-election gasoline rebates, but in 2001 when gasoline was around 75 cents a litre, the Official Opposition called for an all-party committee from this House to study high retail gasoline prices and the Premier again waffled on the issue. My first question is to the Premier. After dropping the ball in 2001, will the Premier now immediately strike an all-party committee to investigate high retail gasoline prices here in this province?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, to address the preamble, the airplanes are not a taxi service. The Liberal opposition, of course, save for one, won't know about the use of aircraft or anything else because they're all from Edmonton. But I'll tell you that had the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar used taxicabs instead of his own vehicle, he would have saved the taxpayers probably thousands of dollars travelling around his constituency, incurring a cost last year of over $10,000 to travel around a constituency that you could spit across.

Mr. Speaker, we will be visiting the whole situation of gasoline prices. You have to understand that this is not a phenomenon that is common to Alberta. I've just been advised by one of my colleagues that a friend of hers in British Columbia, in Nanaimo, was paying $1.02 a litre. I'm advised by another colleague that of the price of gasoline approximately $10, $11 is in taxes, and almost $7 of that goes to their federal cousins in Ottawa.

Having said all that, Mr. Speaker, we will be examining the whole issue of gasoline prices, and, no, we are not going to strike an all-party committee.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the Premier: given that the Premier has struck committees on high electricity prices and high insurance rates – this hon. member travels across the province trying to find solutions to the problems you created – why won't you now strike an all-party committee to study high gasoline prices? What are you afraid of?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that's very interesting. I'm wondering if during the course of his investigations he charged mileage to the government, if he used his own vehicle, at 37 cents a kilometre, or did he by chance use a government aircraft from time to time? I don't know. You know, maybe he can respond to that.

Mr. Speaker, we're going to look at this situation.

You know, it's amazing. I have to commend the Edmonton Sun because really it was a suggestion of one of the columnists, Neil Waugh. Of course, the Liberals either steal it from the NDs – right? – or they steal it from the Edmonton Sun or they do their research in the Edmonton Journal. In this case, they're following up on an Edmonton Sun story that was initiated by one of their columns. This is a good example for all Albertans to observe of how the Liberals do their research and how they develop policy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: instead of throwing pre-election money at the problem, why not deal with sky-high gasoline prices directly? Why are you refusing to tackle the problem?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, to say that we are refusing to tackle the problem is not telling the truth again. I have indicated to the hon. member that we will be having a caucus, cabinet, perhaps Treasury Board discussion relative to this issue. I indicated to the columnist that while it may sound like a good idea, and certainly all Albertans would like to receive some money, we would have to examine the downsides as well. Like everything else, you weigh the pros and the cons. All the Liberals do is stand up and spout off and say whatever is politically right. In other words, they find out which way the wind is blowing one day, hold their finger up, and, well, if the wind changes the next day, they change their tune.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Health Care Reforms

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the past few years the Tory government has hiked seniors' health care premiums 30 per cent, long-term care fees by over 50 per cent, and eliminated universal eye care and dental benefits, but this is small change compared to what the government has in store for seniors in its still-secret health care plan. At the recent Tory party convention the health minister unveiled a proposal to cap or eliminate provincial drug coverage outside of hospitals, a change that would take more than $300 million out of the pockets of the province's seniors each year. My questions are to the Premier. Given that the government has already hiked copayments on the seniors' drug plan by 30 per cent, why would the government add to the financial misery of seniors by hatching a secret plan to either cap or even eliminate seniors' prescription drug coverage?

Speaker's Ruling Anticipation

The Speaker: The hon. leader knows that the tradition in the House is that the day on which certain estimates are before the Assembly, questions will not be asked in the question period about the estimates of that particular department. As I understand, on the Order Paper, notice of which was given at least one week ago, this afternoon the main estimates consideration is the Department of Seniors. So if questions are dealing with that that will impact the budget or be a part of the budget, our tradition has been not to deal with it. If it's a question dealing with general policy, that's another matter.

If the Premier wishes to deal with this question, he can.

Mr. Mason: It's health care, Mr. Premier. It's health care. Nice dodge.

The Speaker: No, no, no. Please. Sit down.

To the third party House leader: that last interjection is totally out of order. There is no dodge. We are dealing with the rules of this Assembly, rules which the member himself has agreed to and has been an author of. You cannot play the game both ways, hon. member. That was an unnecessary statement.

I'm prepared to accept and recognize the leader of the alternate party to proceed with his second question now.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions relate to health care. The second question to the Premier: given that seniors receive three-quarters of the $400 million in provincially paid drug benefits, why won't the Premier admit that drug benefits can't be capped or eliminated without hurting seniors?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, this whole question relates to health and health reform although it does relate in some ways to seniors. As you know, we are working through the health reform package right now, and it will be tabled sometime in June for all to see. There will be a public consultation process, and vis-à-vis drug costs as they relate to seniors or any other segment of society, the hon. member will have ample opportunity at that time to comment on what the plan says.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplementary to the Premier. I'll be certainly happy to wait for the Premier's unveiling of a new plan. In the meantime when will the government accept the New Democratic opposition's proposal to eliminate seniors' health care premiums, thereby saving seniors living on fixed incomes $90 million?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister of health may wish to supplement, and with your permission I'll ask him to do that, but I want to point out that approximately 165,000 seniors, or 50 per cent of the total seniors population, those over 65 years of age in this province, pay absolutely no health insurance premiums at all. Another 6 per cent of the seniors pay partial premiums. I would say that the estimated forgone revenue of health care premium exemptions for low-income seniors in Alberta is approximately $100 million annually.

Mr. Speaker, when we dealt with this issue, we had some difficulty. It's always difficult to deal with seniors' issues, but we as a government have a fundamental policy and philosophy that we offer a hand up rather than a handout and that those who can truly care for themselves in society shall do so, whether they're young people, middle-aged people, or elderly people. Those seniors who have high incomes and can afford to pay premiums pay premiums. Those seniors who are in the low-income range – and I mentioned that 50 per cent fall into that range – pay no premiums at all. People in the mid-range who have not reached the peak and are somewhere in between pay partial payments relative to their premiums.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Gasoline Pricing

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Residents of St. Albert recently and in particular in this past week were shocked, surprised, and somewhat alarmed to see the rising high price of gas at the pumps. I'd include myself in that. The argument and the question that has been posed to me by my constituents and which I pose to the Minister of Energy in this Assembly: if we provincially own the oil and gas rights here in this province, why is the price of gas at the pump not lower in Alberta than other places in Canada?

Mr. Smith: Well, in fact, Alberta does average the lowest price per litre of gas in Canada over an average piece of time. A barrel of oil goes into the refinery, and roughly around 160 litres of gas are produced from each barrel. That is then distributed throughout Alberta, western Canada. We ship gasoline as far east as Winnipeg and as far west as the island.

There are certain market factors that do impact on the price of gasoline. Those are switching over from winter stocks and moving to a different octane rating in the summer. There is also the increased demand. Any time there's such tremendous economic growth in a province like Alberta, it strains the supply lines. Mr. Speaker, as you well know, there have been no new refineries announced to refine more gasoline and bring it to the marketplace.

So our gasoline is a function of supply and demand. There have been countless studies put forward through the Competition Bureau, through federal bodies. They have found no collusion, no interference from the industries.

If you look at the price of gas, you can see a substantial amount of tax attached to the gas, Mr. Speaker. I have, for example, a Petro-Canada receipt in my hand here. It says: provincial fuel tax, $4.06. But then I go on: federal excise tax, $4.51, and GST, tax on a tax,

$2.43. Total taxes on a $37 purchase: $11. That's outrageous from a federal Liberal perspective.

Mrs. O'Neill: My one and only supplemental to the same minister: could you please tell this Assembly what the government has forecasted for the price of oil for the remainder of the current fiscal year and what assumptions the department has made for the price of oil for the remainder of this budget year?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I would direct the member to pages 98 through 100 of the business plans and the document Economic Outlook: Budget 2004, which points out the process by which the Department of Energy makes its forecast, to find out that in fact we're on the low side. It's a conservative forecast yet still progressive in nature. I think that I would much rather be on the low side of the forecast than the high side. We do take a number of experts' forecasts into play, and then we do make the calculation.

But we have to remember, Mr. Speaker, that today there are terrorist threats against the major supplier on the North American continent. Eastern Canada buys its oil to refine into gasoline on the high seas. So as much as we can control prices here with the production in Alberta, it's a very small part of the overall cost of gasoline that's added across Canada and across North America, and that in itself leads to the pricing of a commodity in a fair market competitive situation.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for St. Albert, are you finished?

Mrs. O'Neill: No. I'd like to have a second supplemental. My question, then, zeroes in on the question of assumptions that were made by the department. I'll maybe even rephrase it into predictions or the future of the price of oil or gas.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that the beaches are littered with those who have tried to make accurate oil forecasts. As early as three or four years ago oil was $23 a barrel, and it stopped a great deal of exploration. The assumptions are that we try to forecast the orderly flow of supply from the Middle East. We try to forecast the demand, the amount that would go through refineries from the increased refinery base, and then, I guess, you stir it all together and you try to come up with an answer that fits the circumstances and world events of the day. Frankly, to see gasoline rise at this rate during the year of a presidential election is quite surprising. So there are a number of factors that go into it, some scientific and some just art.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

SuperNet

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Innovation and Science's analogy comparing the SuperNet to a firehose and regular Internet to a garden hose can also describe the flow of dollars from the taxpayers' pocket. With the garden hose taxpayers paid one charge for the Internet. The firehose, or SuperNet, involves a hookup charge, a service charge, and a separate Internet provider charge. What started as a trickle has now become a flood. My questions are to the Minister of Innovation and Science. Given that the minister hasn't been able to tell us what the SuperNet is going to cost over the next 10 years, how do we know that taxpayers aren't going to be on the hook for another NovAtel?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, as I've discussed many times in this Assembly, the SuperNet is an infrastructure development that takes a data transmission network right across Alberta. Bell West as part of their commitment is investing a minimum of $100 million into the base network. The Alberta government is investing $193 million into the extended network, which completes the infrastructure build. That number has been the number that we've used when the contract was signed, has been used when we gave our estimates, and continues to be used today.

Ms Blakeman: Can the minister tell us who is going to pay for the equipment needed, such as new computers, video cameras, software, et cetera, for libraries and others to take advantage of the SuperNet and perform high-speed data transfers? Who's supposed to pay for that?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, businesses, companies, governments, and individuals have been buying computer equipment, software for years and years. That's no change from today. With the advent of technology – and I'm sure the hon. member would not want to go back to the days of eight-track – we can deliver more bandwidth, better services at efficient prices.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: when will the service contract between Axia and the government end? Is it 10 years after the 2002 signing or 10 years after the build is complete?

Mr. Doerksen: Well, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the specifics of that question I don't know the exact answer. It is a 10-year contract, and we can provide more of the exact details that she has asked for in writing to the hon. member, and we will do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Peace River/Fort McMurray Connector Highway

Mr. Friedel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Transportation. We've heard a lot in the past months about using the P3 concept to facilitate capital projects in this province. A group of municipalities and industry stakeholders and consultants have expressed an interest in developing an east/west connector highway between Fort McMurray and Peace River using this concept. These folks have met with the minister on several occasions and have been received with interest and even some encouragement. They tell me, however, that when they approach department officials on this project, the responses are somewhat vague and that they feel they're getting a mixed message. I'm wondering if the minister could advise us whether this east/west connector highway is a reasonable candidate for a P3 project.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This particular stretch of road was studied this past year. The anticipated cost is about $90 million. It is an important stretch of road to shorten trips to Fort McMurray from Peace River by many hours. In discussing whether the proposal of a P3 would be applicable to this particular project, I would say that the kind of public/private partnership that would apply to this will be similar to the Brazeau bridge, where a number of private-sector companies, mostly oil and gas, some forestry, came together and said, "You know, we will share in the cost of this road; it will certainly reduce our operational costs over X number of years," and they'll do sort of a net present value calculation and come forward in a partnership of that sort. This would certainly move the project up on the general capital plan, especially when a number of private-sector companies come forward and offer some assistance.

Mr. Friedel: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker, and following up on his last remark: could he tell us more specifically, maybe, what this group could do to advance this project to a higher priority within the department and the overall capital budget?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should use an example of what's presently happening on highway 2. There's a new interchange being built at Airdrie, and it's to deal with an ever-increasing amount of traffic because of a new subdivision. It would have been some time before a new interchange or an enhanced interchange would have been done on our capital plan, but with the developer coming forward and offering a million dollars toward the total construction of the enhancement of this interchange, certainly that moved it up significantly on the capital plan.

My suggestion is that we work together with private-sector companies and move this project on that kind of basis.

Mr. Friedel: My final supplemental to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: considering that P3s are somewhat innovative and depend on the private sector for a significant financial contribution, could the minister tell us what he's doing to ensure that the private sector is adequately involved in the development of the procedural guidelines for P3s?

Mr. Stelmach: The only project that we are proceeding with in a public/private partnership is the southeast leg of Anthony Henday Drive. Certainly, in developing the request for qualification, the request for a proposal, all those companies involved, whether it be in design, financing, maintenance, were involved in developing the proposal. I would suggest that the same holds true here.

This road would be not only good for industry but also an opportunity for the people living in that part of the province, the Peace River area, to get to Fort McMurray much sooner and, of course, participate in the excellent job opportunities that exist there today.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Prescription Drug Coverage

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Today Albertans learned about Kiernan Lang, a 22-year-old Alberta university student who is struggling with paying out of pocket for expensive cancer treatment drugs. It is this government's policy of making middle-income Albertans pay for medically necessary drugs that may leave Kiernan without enough money to attend university next year. This is not universal coverage. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is this minister prepared to do to help Albertans like Kiernan Lang who are being burdened by paying out of pocket for expensive, medically necessary drugs?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I can advise the hon. member, although he probably does know already, that eligible drugs that are used in the direct treatment of cancer are provided by the Alberta Cancer Board at no cost to the patient. However, Albertans are responsible for the costs of prescription drugs that are used outside of hospitals.

Now, I'm not going to comment on the particular circumstances surrounding this individual. However, one of the things that is not covered entirely is the types of drugs that are associated with nausea, for example, while getting treatment for cancer, and as a result, Mr. Speaker, people who have the need for such drugs are generally covered by a person's supplementary health coverage.

Now, for Albertans without supplementary health coverage, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government does offer nongroup coverage through Alberta Blue Cross to make sure that Albertans have access to an economical supplementary health benefits program. For a relatively modest monthly premium plan subscribers are covered for 3,700 different drugs under the Alberta drug benefit list. For individuals who are at lower incomes, there are subsidies for nongroup coverage available to those groups of people as well.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why is this government continuing with a policy that too often drives middle-income Albertans into poverty simply because they need medically necessary medication?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I've already outlined for the hon. member what program is in place for coverage of drugs. Those individuals that are subscribers under Alberta Blue Cross only pay 30 per cent of any eligible drug's cost up to a maximum payment of $25 per prescription. That strikes me as being very good value indeed, sir.

Dr. Taft: To the same minister: can the minister indicate whether that plan is available to people who are diagnosed with a condition before they have the plan? Can they then get on the plan or not?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I'll take that question under advice.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Beef Exports to the United States

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. All cattle producers were very pleased and relieved to hear about the April 19, 2004, USDA announcement that removed all restrictions on the import of beef from cattle less than 30 months of age. However, that relief was short-lived after R-CALF, a U.S. protectionist lobbyist organization, filed a court challenge and received a temporary restraining order against the April 16 decision. Recent stories claim that the USDA and R-CALF have reached a decision to keep the restraining order in place. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Can she explain how this decision affects Alberta's beef trade with the United States?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, the April 19 announcement would have allowed bone-in beef and ground beef to move into the U.S. market. In fact, an easy way to identify what could move would be all edible parts, in essence, with the April 19 announcement.

The R-CALF request for an injunction, which was granted, was a huge disappointment to I think cattlemen on both sides of the border. R-CALF is a cattlemen's organization. They tended to be a litigious organization. Their name is cattlemen's legal defence fund, and we've experienced their litigation practices in the past. I think the largest disappointment is that this does nothing to further the economic interests of the industry on either side of the border. However, having said that, Mr. Speaker, we live with the fact that this has happened.

The USDA apparently has come to an agreement with this group that they will not continue the plan to move bone-in beef into the U.S. Having said that, the USDA has also committed to putting out the final rule on the movement of live cattle and product from over-30-month cattle as soon as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can the minister tell us what the trade experts in her department are telling her about why and how R-CALF was able to get a temporary restraining order?

The Speaker: Well, hon. member and hon. Deputy Premier, this is an item that occurred before, I guess, a quasi-judicial grouping in the United States. What we're talking about now is a very subjective view about something here. So if the hon. Deputy Premier has a specific answer, give one, but if not, we'll move on.

Mrs. McClellan: Yes. Well, Mr. Speaker, all I would say is that R-CALF successfully argued that the USDA did not follow its own administrative procedures. That was the argument.

Of course, what the USDA have told us repeatedly in our quest to have the border opened was that it was important through this rule-making process that they do follow their administrative procedures, which I believe is why they've been very careful to go through the comment period and to review the comments and follow those procedures to avoid this happening again. Of course, Mr. Speaker, that rule is what we're all very anxiously waiting for.

We've had some optimistic comments from the visit of our Prime Minister with the President. The President has said that they want to see the border open as quickly as possible. The President has stated publicly that the opening of the border will be based on sound science, and, Mr. Speaker, we are confident from our analysis that sound science would dictate that that border should open to live cattle immediately.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: Madam Minister, can you tell us what the next steps would be or how we as a government can help our producers to overcome this last hurdle?

2:30

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the temporary restraining order will stay in place until the U.S. publishes the final rule. We're working with our federal government, with the Canadian Food Inspection Agency, with the Canadian embassy to resolve, of course, this troubling issue and to clarify how this restraining order affects our facilities in Canada, our slaughterhouses. But the ultimate answer in this is a final publication of a rule of a border opening based on science, and we hope that that'll happen very soon.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Ophthalmology Services in Calgary

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2002 the Minister of Health and Wellness approved an order to bring a pediatric ophthalmologist from Colombia to work in Calgary because there were no Canadian pediatric ophthalmologists available. However, the Liberal opposition has learned that not only were Canadians available; at least one of these pediatric ophthalmologists actually approached the Calgary health region to work in Calgary. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. How does the minister explain approving a part 5 designation to bring in Dr. Castro and her husband to work in Calgary when not only were Canadian pediatric ophthalmologists available; they were actually approaching, writing letters to the Calgary health region to work in Calgary?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I did answer this question in some detail on an earlier occasion with respect to the process of how part 5 designations are approved. If regional health authorities, through their heads of various departments, believe that there is a need to hire a physician with particular qualifications or a specialist designation, they give their best effort to go through a process by which they come up with the best person available for the job. They do seek to fill that position from among other Canadians, but should they not find a suitable candidate, then they make their best effort to find that individual from elsewhere.

In this case, Mr. Speaker, details elude me at this time. I'm caught by surprise by this hon. member's question, he having asked it before so long ago. Dr. Castro has come through a part 5 designation to provide important services to the regional health authority. Dr. Castro is also married to another Dr. Castro, who is also providing services to our public health system. I would refer the hon. member to my earlier responses, which provide more detail, he having advised me that he was going to ask the question in advance. I'd refer him to Hansard for a review of a more complete answer.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the minister's answer.

Will the minister investigate the potential conflict of interest that exists when foreign ophthalmologists are brought in to work at a private facility owned by the chief of ophthalmology for the Calgary health region while Canadian ophthalmologists are turned away?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, that's virtually the same question that he asked before, and I refer him to the same source of Hansard.

Dr. Taft: It's not at all the same question. We'll try differently. To the same minister: given that the minister has said in this House, quote, I have heard nothing but praise for the work that is being done by doctors Maria and Alberto Castro, end quote, will the minister release the results of a review undertaken by the health region into the work of Dr. Alberto Castro at the Holy Cross facility?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of any such report.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Beef Industry

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today the House of Commons standing committee on agriculture recommended to the Canadian Parliament that Cargill foods and Lakeside Packers, as well as another packer, be found in contempt of Parliament for failing to open their books so that Canadians would know whether or not they profited unfairly from the BSE crisis at the same time that cattle producers were going broke. My question is to the Deputy Premier and Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Does the minister still believe, as she reported on March 11, 2004, that Alberta meat packers did not profit unfairly from the bovine spongiform encephalopathy crisis? If she does not, why not?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we reported in the release of a document which was a review of pricing was that we did not find evidence that would suggest that there were undue profits made.

However, if the hon. member will just take his recollection a little bit further, what we did do and say was that the Auditor General was reviewing all of the programs that we provided, the $400 million, 90 per cent of which went directly to producers, to ensure that those funds were indeed put out to the people that the program intended them for.

I was surprised this morning to hear on one of the newscasts that we had avoided telling people where the $400 million went. I mean, nothing could be further from the truth. We have said consistently since the beginning of this that there will be a record of every cheque that was written to every recipient with the amount on it. However, I have resisted doing this before the program was completed, and as soon as that is completed, that will be delivered. Then people can see the facts and draw their conclusions.

As far as the issue with the packers and their information before the House of Commons committee, that is clearly outside of my jurisdiction and none of my business.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If the packers indeed refuse to open their books for the Auditor General in his investigation, will the government support the Auditor General and take action to force the packers to open their books?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, you know, that is the difficulty with questions from this hon. member. That's speculative, hypothetical. There is absolutely no indication at all that the Auditor General has had any concern about getting information.

You know, it's bad enough when you raise questions about issues that you have some basis for knowledge, but to put that out there is totally, totally wrong and unfair. If the hon. member can show me that the Auditor General has said or indicated in any way that he is having difficulty in obtaining information and that that is hampering his investigation, bring it to this House. But to put that suggestion out there in the public with no basis in fact is absolutely wrong. It's irresponsible. However, it is in the manner that I have become accustomed to from that hon. member.

Mr. Speaker, this does no service to this Legislature or to the industry that is suffering from the worst devastation it has ever experienced in its history.

The Speaker: I'm going to recognize the hon. member for his third question, but it should be noted as well that the Auditor General is a servant of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta, not the government.

The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker.

Will the minister or will the minister not commit to encouraging meat packers like Lakeside and Cargill to open their books so that Albertans can find out whether or not they have unduly profited by the BSE crisis?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, as you have clearly laid out, the Auditor General is an officer of this Assembly. The Auditor General is quite capable of managing his affairs, and he does not need interference, interjection, or assistance from me. If he does, if by chance he would want something, he would contact me, which he has not done. I am astounded by this line of questioning unless the Auditor General has contacted the hon. House leader for the third party. If he has, bring it forward. I'd be happy to deal with it.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General is an officer of this Assembly. He will conduct the investigation in the manner that he should, and we will co-operate with him in any way we can to move this forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness to supplement an answer given earlier. Our rules are that once you do that, there's an opportunity for the individual who raised the question to you to ask another one.

Mr. Mar: Yes, sir.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Prescription Drug Coverage

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I took an earlier question from the hon. Leader of the Opposition. To the best of my recollection his question was: is this Blue Cross coverage available to individuals with a pre-existing condition? I'm advised that the answer is yes.

In further supplement, Mr. Speaker, with respect to copayment for nonhospital pharmaceuticals, I wish to indicate that there are copayments in the following countries for nonhospital pharmaceuticals: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Korea, Luxembourg, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Slovak republic, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, and also the United Kingdom, sir.

Dr. Taft: That's fine. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call on the first of four hon. members to participate today, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to Members of the Assembly a family visiting from Botswana, Africa. Their names are Virendra and Poonam Miglani and their daughter Paawan. They're accompanied by Mrs. Prem Khurana, a friend of the family. I would now ask these guests, who are seated in the public gallery, to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MS Awareness Month

Mrs. Gordon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May is MS Awareness Month. In 1998, much to my chagrin, I was diagnosed as having MS. Family history, none. However, MS is very prevalent in certain areas or pockets within the province. Two come to mind, one being Lacombe, the other Barrhead, and I happen to live in Lacombe.

Known as the mystery disease, MS manifests itself differently in each and every person. The cause is still unknown. As such, finding a cure remains our number one goal.

I am more fortunate than some as I have what is referred to as relapsing/remitting MS; 97.8 per cent of the time with medication my disease is manageable. However, on occasion, when I least expect it or want it to happen, I wake up knowing that today is going to be an MS day or days. This is a time when I very much need the support, understanding, and co-operation of family, friends, and my employer. Not giving in only worsens the condition.

I have long been an advocate for those with MS or those living with someone who has MS. Presently I'm honoured to be serving as a member on the MS Society of Canada, Alberta division board.

I would like to praise the good work of the MS Society, Alberta division and the many local chapters, and I extend a huge bouquet to my wonderful, knowledgeable, hard-working neurologist, Dr. Mary Lou Myles, for all her good work related to MS and MS research.

Also, special thanks and kudos to our Minister of Health and Wellness as this will be year 3 that Gary, Nancy, and wee Mackenzie have willingly participated. Our minister will once again be biking on June 13 from Lacombe to Sylvan Lake for those with MS. All pledges on his behalf will be gratefully accepted.

This month and next there will be numerous Super Cities walks for MS as well as bike tours throughout the province. As honorary spokesperson for the Red Deer Cities Walk I urge you to participate. Monies raised will go to needed research and programs.

Like the increase in incidence of diabetes, the numbers for MS are also on the rise. Please help us in the fight against multiple sclerosis. Only by working together can we make a difference.

Thank you.

The Speaker: As the hon. member had mentioned the name Barrhead in her particular statement, I would like to advise all Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta that the volunteers in the Barrhead area have an annual horse ride and in recent years have raised over $250,000.

Energy Deregulation

Mr. MacDonald: Energy deregulation has been an absolute and catastrophic failure. Not only has it cost Albertans $8 billion; it has also deprived children of swimming pools, left seniors out in the cold, and robbed many small business owners of their livelihoods.

The indoor pool in Ryley was forced to close its doors to children in September because utility costs soared by 175 per cent. Two Hills closed its pool in August because its energy bills rose from $1,500 per month to $5,000. Fortunately, the pool has since reopened.

The Caslan community hall is on the verge of closing because sky-high utility bills have zapped all of the hall's extra funds. The Lac La Biche Regional Recreational Board posted a deficit of $30,000 last year, 80 per cent of which was directly due to huge energy costs. The curling club in Elmworth was forced to close after its utility bills skyrocketed from $4,000 per year to $12,000. The same worries have plagued a twin hockey arena in Edmonton whose power bills have doubled to $2,400 thanks to electricity deregulation.

An employee at the Grande Prairie Salvation Army has publicly stated that there are seniors who are, quote, sitting out there right now who have had their gas and power cut off because they can't afford to pay the high rates, end of quote.

A business owner from Vulcan had to close one of his two businesses because he couldn't afford the $1,200 utility bill each month.

A number of businesses in Pincher Creek have closed their doors because they could not meet the cost of lighting and heating their stores. Several of these owners found a lawyer to discuss the idea of a class-action lawsuit against the Alberta government. Their lawyer believes such a lawsuit may have merit, stating, quote: this whole deregulation has been such a disaster, and people have suffered, end of quote.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

New School Initiative

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past five years intense residential development has been occurring in my constituency of Calgary-West, as in many periphery areas of Calgary and other locations in Alberta. The schools in the western new growth area of Calgary-West are and were very overcrowded while many in the eastern older part were very underutilized, resulting in a low utilization rate for my sector, far below the 85 per cent average required before new capital funding would be granted by the province for the construction of new schools. Sixty per cent of K to 12 students were and are daily leaving the new growth area to attend schools in the underutilized area and beyond.

Feeling the frustration of many parents, I started the New Schools Initiative, or NSI, Committee in October 2002, inviting key stakeholders – my alderman, CBE trustee, Calgary Catholic trustee, parents, the private sector, and the Department of Infrastructure – and they all attended regularly. They came because they cared about the needs of students.

All the committee work was focused on how to acquire many new schools as soon as possible using approaches other than the traditional. It focused on all sources of funding, the minimum physical infrastructure to ensure a quality learning environment, life cycle of infrastructure, public/private partnerships, and the model school as a cornerstone of the community, incorporating compatible facilities and services.

Mr. Speaker, there were many learnings because of NSI: that key stakeholders need to work with each other, that each key stakeholder brings a valid perspective to the table, that we all need to acknowledge roadblocks we create, and that we need to be flexible to bring about good change. The NSI has recently concluded its formal life, but its learnings and new relationships will carry on with each member of the committee.

Thank you to the Premier and the ministers of Infrastructure and Learning for their support and to the committee members, being Shelley Allchurch, Doug Balsden, Lawrence Bortoluzzi, Ellen Breen, Guy Buchanan, Lois Burke-Gaffney, Craig Burrows, Barry Day, Mike Irving, Mary Lou Mendyk, Dave Michie, Darlene Nyegaard, Carole Oliver, Stephen Stewart, and Lisa Hofmeister, my assistant in the Calgary-West office.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Comprehensive Arts Ticketing Service

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to recognize a new initiative for not-for-profit arts groups developed by Pump-house Theatres Society in Calgary. What started as a way to improve Pumphouse's own ticketing service grew into a bigger vision for the Calgary arts community.

Making use of traditional ticketing providers has always been too expensive for small and medium-sized arts groups. Pumphouse was able to strike a deal with RepeatSeat, a Calgary-based global entertainment company, to implement a comprehensive ticketing service system for the benefit of the arts community at large. As part of the free service groups will also enjoy 35 hours per week of telephone sales and 24/7 Internet sales as well as full event reporting and data management.

Traditional ticket services frequently charge both the patron and the presenting group a fee for their services. Pumphouse Theatres will provide this service on a cost recovery basis with the cost passed down to the arts patron in a reasonable per ticket service fee.

The program developed by Pumphouse is a way for arts organizations to invest their limited financial resources into their art, where it belongs. We applaud the leadership and spirit of community demonstrated by Pumphouse Theatres.

Thank you.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition signed by 76 members from the Lethbridge Firefighters Union No. 237 petitioning this Legislative Assembly to support Bill 204, the Blood Samples Act.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm presenting today a petition signed by 116 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to "pass legislation that eliminates health care premiums."
Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday I will move that written questions 67, 70, 74, 82 through 88 be dealt with on that day. There being no further written questions at this time, there are none to stand and retain their places.

Secondly, I'm also giving notice that on Monday I will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 88 through 105, 108 through 123, 128, 134 through 143, 146 through 162, 164 through 168, 174 through 180, 183 through 205, and 207 through 210.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

Bill 33 Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2004

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave today to introduce Bill 33, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2004.

[Motion carried; Bill 33 read a first time]

Bill 34 Income Trusts Liability Act

Mr. Hlady: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 34, the Income Trusts Liability Act.

In the past few years there's been significant growth in the area of income trusts. As this type of investment becomes increasingly popular, the need to protect investors also grows.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is leading the way with providing legislation that will protect investors of income trusts. Without this legislation there is the potential for an investor in an income trust to be held personally liable beyond their initial investment. This makes it a particular challenge for income trusts to attract smaller investors and some institutional investors that have restrictions relating to liability.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will help stimulate further investment in income trusts in our province and will have a positive effect on our economic growth.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 34 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 34 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Bill 35 Companies Amendment Act, 2004

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 35, being the Companies Amendment Act, 2004.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 35 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 35 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table today responses to written questions 1, 4, 5, 15, and motions for returns 21 and 43.

Additionally, it is a pleasure to table responses to questions raised during Agriculture, Food and Rural Development's budget estimates in Committee of Supply on April 21, 2004. Mr. Speaker, I have forwarded those responses to the individual members prior to this tabling.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly today the requisite copies of the special areas trust account audited financial statements as of December 31, 2003.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Today I have to table five copies of the 2003 Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal's annual report. The Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal is an effective dispute resolution mechanism for the Métis settlements of Alberta, and this annual report demonstrates the good work the board accomplished in 2003.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to table the required number of copies of the agendas and summaries of discussions from the meetings of the New Schools Initiative Committee for Calgary-West for the period of November 4, 2002, to April 8, 2004. The committee was comprised of many key stakeholders including my alderman, public and Catholic school board trustees and their planning representatives, parents, private-sector developers, and Infrastructure officials, all committed to addressing the need for new schools in high-growth areas.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two tablings today. The requisite number of copies of results of studies of 19 million U.S. teleworkers in the teleworking industry. Two quick highlights include AT & T savings of $550 million due to reduced office expenses while seeing major productivity increases. Also, a finding important to Albertans, every single day now 590,000 tons of carbon monoxide, 31,000 tons of nitrogen oxide, and 39,000 tons of hydrocarbons are kept out of the air by telecommuters not driving to work any more in the U.S. That much every single day.

My second tabling is the requisite number of copies of a parking ticket which I got last Sunday. The parking rate was $2 an hour from a machine. I was a few minutes late. The ticket is for $37.45 if paid within seven days but $69.55 if paid on the eighth day or thereafter, which strikes me as just under 100 per cent interest per week. I'm not sure if these parking tickets are legally enforceable or not, but they are being handed out to Alberta citizens.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Further to the questions asked in question period by the Leader of the Official Opposition, I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies of automobile insurance quotes for a 1997 Dodge and a 2002 Volkswagen owned by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview and his family. This includes quotes from a private company in Alberta and also from the Manitoba, ICBC, and Saskatchewan public auto insurance schemes.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table for the information of all hon. members of the Assembly The King's University College graduation program from May 1 of 2004. This is The King's University College's annual graduation ceremony. It is a vital institution in the community of Edmonton-Gold Bar. This year's convocation address was delivered by Dr. S. Keith Ward, vice-president academic, who in two-months' time is retiring after 25 years teaching there.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? Well, then, hon. members, let's sit back, relax, and enjoy the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is truly an historic day today. I'm very pleased to stand before you and, as required by the Alberta Official Song Act, table with you and all members of the Assembly the report of the Alberta Official Song Committee.

Before I make the tabling of that report, which includes the committee's recommendation, I wish to introduce the composer of the song that has been selected. May I therefore ask you, Mr. Speaker, to ask for unanimous consent to . . .

The Speaker: Just proceed.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, sir. I am very excited to introduce to you and through you, Mr. Speaker, to all members of the Assembly the composer extraordinaire from Rivière Qui Barre, Alberta, Mary Kieftenbeld. If she would please stand. Mary, of course, has the honour of being the composer of the song that has been selected by the Official Song Committee. She's joined today by her husband, Ed, and by their children Jeremy, age 10; Kagen, age 8; Haley, age 6; and Emma, age 5, who are probably just as excited as Mom. I would ask all of them to please rise and receive our warm thanks. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, as part of this historic tabling all members should be reminded that we had 335 entries for the Alberta official song contest, and that represented over 100 communities throughout the province of Alberta.

Our Official Song Committee members need to be briefly thanked. In particular, I'd like to thank the MLA for Calgary-Fort, whose idea it was to have an official song. Also, I'd like to thank other members who served on the committee: the MLA for Edmonton-Centre, the MLA for Calgary-Bow, the MLA for Edmonton-Meadowlark, and the MLA for Barrhead-Westlock, that being yourself, Mr. Speaker, who was an ex officio member of the committee.

Other members included Barry Allen from the Alberta Recording Industries Association; Carol Dand from the Arts Touring Alliance of Alberta; Kelly Jerrott from Music Alberta; Neil MacGonigill from the Society of Composers, Authors and Music Publishers of Canada; Gary McDonall from the Alberta Recording Industries Association; Gladys Odegard from Music Alberta; Judy Reeds from Arts Touring Alliance of Alberta; and Wayne Saunders from the Society of Composers, Authors and Music Publishers of Canada. They did a great job and a very difficult task indeed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the act requires me to table the lyrics and music of the song recommended by this illustrious committee. The lyrics, of course, are contained in the report, but the music only exists on a CD as submitted by the composer. Therefore, I'd like permission to play that CD, which is of course the demo version of the song as submitted by the composer. I need to remind individuals that this is not necessarily the final version, obviously; it is the demo version only. Other forms of the song will be professionally produced and made available in sheet music to suit a variety of purposes including choirs and bands and orchestras and small combos, reflecting different genres and styles. Nonetheless, today with the kind agreement and permission of the song's composer I'm privileged to play for you an excerpt from the song selected by the Alberta Official Song Committee.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all Albertans may I say thank you to the committee, and congratulations to the composer, once again. Here now is a sample of a song called Alberta, as recommended by the committee and which the Legislative Assembly will be asked to endorse as Alberta's official song to be used in conjunction with centennial celebrations in 2005.

[An excerpt was played from the song Alberta, recommended to become Alberta's official song]

Mr. Zwozdesky: And there's just a brief sample.

[Applause]

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order. Before we proceed, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm delighted to see the turnout of people that has joined us in the public and the members' galleries today. There are a few people representing organizations that I would like to introduce. I'm assuming that they've joined us. If they have, please rise when I say your name. Otherwise, I know that they'll be joining us within minutes.

Pat Brownlee is here representing COSA, the Coalition of Seniors Advocates. Pat would have come from Calgary. I see her standing. Sandy Reid is here from the Alberta Council on Aging. If she could please rise. I believe Ron Ellis, who is the new chairperson of SUN, Seniors United Now, is also here. Albert Opstad, who is the former chairperson of SUN, Seniors United Now, is here, and I think that Hilda Campbell, chairperson of the Seniors' Committee of the Canadian Hard of Hearing Association, Edmonton branch, is also joining us. I would ask the Assembly to please welcome those people representing those organizations.

Thank you very much.

head: Main Estimates 2004-05

Seniors

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, as per our Standing Orders the first hour will be dedicated between the hon. minister and members of the opposition, following which any other member may participate.

The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm extremely pleased to be here doing the estimates on the last day of estimates and very pleased to see the galleries full. We haven't had that for any department yet, so thank you very much, each and every one of you, for attending. On that note, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask all of the seniors who are here for the estimates to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly so that the members can have a good chance to have a look at you folks who are interested enough in the estimates. Could you all please rise and receive the welcome of the Assembly. Thank you very much for coming.

I have some department staff here also whom I would like to publicly thank, but I won't go through the process of introducing them individually. They, as we all know, are responsible for the functioning and the good management of the government.

The 2004-07 business plan will see the ministry continue to develop and deliver services, programs, and information that contribute to the well-being and independence of low-income seniors, persons in need of housing supports, and clients of the office of the Public Guardian. Last year, Mr. Chairman, Alberta Seniors' mandate was expanded to include the office of the Public Guardian, homeless shelters, and the room-and-board and housekeeping portion of long-term care facilities. Our 2004-07 business plan reflects the full integration.

In 2004-05 our ministry business plan budget is $470 million. That's an increase of $73 million from 2003-04. This includes funding for the Seniors department and the Alberta Social Housing Corporation. This increase will enable us to enhance benefits for low-income seniors and accelerate the development of more affordable housing in the province. I'll go into more detail on these initiatives later in the presentation.

The 2004-05 operating budget for the Seniors department is $406 million; $377 million, representing 93 per cent of the department's budget, is being targeted in the form of grants and programs to assist low-income seniors and low-income Albertans in need of housing supports.

My ministry's business plan supports the fourth pillar of the government's strategic plan: "Making Alberta the best place to live, work and visit." We work to achieve this by providing supports to those people who are in greatest need, including low-income seniors, people in need of housing supports, homeless people, and people who are unable to make their own decisions. By doing so, we can ensure that Albertans will be self-reliant to the greatest possible extent and that those unable to provide for their basic needs will receive help.

As we work towards that vision for Albertans, my ministry will ensure that the programs, services, and planning initiatives we deliver are effective and, most importantly, sustainable. We envision a vibrant province where Albertans live with dignity as full participants in society and experience the best possible well-being and independence.

We're working towards fulfilling this vision through the administration of three core businesses: firstly, providing services, programs, and planning for seniors and the aging population; supporting the provision and ongoing management of basic housing and emergency shelter for lower income Albertans; and thirdly, providing programs, services, and supports to enable appropriate substitute decision-making. For each core business we have identified several goals to ensure effective and sustainable program delivery.

Our 2004-05 budget identifies the resources to deliver the programs. Under our first core business $245 million has been identified to provide services, programs, and planning for seniors and the aging population. We have three goals. The first is to ensure that "seniors in need have access to financial supports that enable them to live in a secure and dignified way." The ministry has two major financial assistance programs that support this goal: the Alberta seniors' benefits and the special-needs assistance for seniors.

The Alberta seniors' benefit is an income-based program that provides low-income seniors with monthly financial benefits and calculates Alberta health care insurance exemptions. Approximately 185,000 seniors, or 56 per cent of the 331,000 seniors, receive benefits under the Alberta seniors' benefit program. Of those seniors, cash benefits are paid out to over 126,000. Approximately 165,000 seniors in Alberta, or roughly half, pay no health insurance premiums, and 20,000 pay partial health premiums. The average annual cash benefit through Alberta seniors' benefit is $1,248 per senior and $1,512 per couple.

The budget for Alberta's seniors' benefit program has been increased from $155.6 million in 2003-04 to $198.8 million in 2004-05, an increase of some $43.2 million. This increase will be used to assist low-income seniors residing in long-term care facilities and to address volume increases in our program. Ten million dollars of the increased funding will be used to provide further assistance to seniors most in need. We're finalizing details on how this funding will be used. An announcement will be made prior to commencement of the new seniors' benefit year on July 1.

The special needs assistance for seniors program is an income-tested program that provides lump sum cash payments to help low-income seniors who do not have the financial resources to fund one-time or extraordinary expenses. The program helps seniors meet the costs associated with special needs such as medical, optical, dental, and the cost of essential minor home repairs. Last year this program provided assistance to some 36,000 seniors. In 2004-05 the special needs assistance budget totals $33 million and includes a $6 million base budget increase.

The reality is that we are committed to ensuring that the financial needs of Alberta's low-income seniors are met. Our maximum Alberta seniors' cash benefit of $2,820 is available to seniors living in apartments and lodges and is the highest in Canada. We provided funding in addition to this to seniors living in long-term care facilities. Our income eligibility thresholds for single seniors and senior couples are also the highest in Canada. The special needs assistance program for seniors is the only one of its kind in Canada.

Mr. Chairman, my ministry's second goal is to ensure that information on our programs, services, and initiatives for seniors is accessible, accurate, and consistent. This information is provided in several ways, including telephone information services, the seniors' information services offices, publications, and the ministry web site. In 2003-04 the Alberta Seniors web site received almost 1.1 million visitors, almost 300,000 more than in the previous year.

An information package is mailed to all Albertans three months before their 65th birthday. This package includes an application form for the ASB program and informs the senior of the availability of the Programs for Seniors information booklet. This booklet contains information on all programs that are available to seniors. In addition, if seniors have not applied for the ASB program by the third month after their 65th birthday, we follow up to ensure that they are aware of their eligibility to apply.

Last year the seniors division responded to approximately 153,000 calls, and the eight program support officers had more than 55,000 personal visits. Information is also provided through publications such as the Seniors Programs and Services Information Guide as well as through participation in cross-ministry and external planning and program initiatives. Seniors already contribute significantly to the Alberta economy. As this sector of the population continues to grow, seniors' contributions will become even more important to the provincial economy.

The third goal of our business is to ensure that "government policies, programs, and plans effectively anticipate and respond to the needs of current and future seniors." As noted earlier, my ministry is now responsible for the accommodations component of long-term care. Since taking over this responsibility, we have established good working relationships with long-term care operators, regional health authorities, and Alberta Health and Wellness to ensure that operators remain accountable for the services that they are providing. We are also working towards the development of a fair spectrum of room and board support options ranging from lodges through supportive living to long-term care. This will help ensure a balanced distribution of financial support throughout the system.

Our second core business is housing services. Two hundred and twenty million dollars have been identified to fund the ministry's second core business, which is to "support the provision and ongoing management of basic housing and emergency shelter for lower-income Albertans." This $220 million is used for programs and services such as the lodge assistance program at $15.7 million; grants to seniors and community housing providers, $16.9 million; rent supplement, $15 million; the Canada affordable housing agreement, $51.2 million; special needs housing and home adaptation program, $5.9 million; support to the homeless, $17.1 million; operation of the Gunn centre, $2 million; and debt servicing costs of the mortgages we have on our portfolio applied about $41.3 million.

Our housing portfolio provides emergency shelter for the homeless and subsidized housing for low-income families and individuals and persons with special needs as well as affordable housing. For low-income seniors we offer affordable and appropriate apartments and supportive housing facilities that provide additional services such as meals and laundry.

Currently the ministry supports 40,000 housing units that house approximately 68,000 Albertans who need assistance in accessing appropriate and affordable housing. As our first goal we work to ensure that our housing portfolio is efficiently and effectively managed and appropriately utilized. To achieve that, we are working on a number of initiatives, which include targeting our systems to those in greatest need and fostering community-based solutions.

Alberta Seniors provides support to over 10,000 community housing units that provide low-income families with safe and affordable housing. In recent years operators have been faced with increasing operating deficits due to increased costs associated with utilities, taxes, maintenance, operations, and administration. In 2004-05 we're allocating an additional $1.9 million to community housing providers and seniors housing providers to assist with the increasing costs. With these funding increases a total budget for community and seniors housing providers will be some $16.9 million.

Last year we introduced a new way of allocating the funding for the lodge assistance program. The new formula provides management bodies with a per diem grant of $5.50 for each low- and moderate-income resident in a lodge unit. An additional subsidy of $7 per unit per day is provided to existing lodges with 33 or fewer units. This new formula enables us to more effectively target and increase our assistance to low-income seniors in need of housing supports. At this time about 87 per cent of the 8,800 lodge units are occupied by lower income seniors. We're allocating an additional $1.5 million to the lodge assistance program to accommodate an increasing number of low-income seniors in the lodge system. The additional dollars will bring the total budget for lodge assistance grants to $15.7 million.

As I mentioned earlier, my ministry now provides grants to assist homeless shelters. In 1997-98 provincial funding to homeless shelters amounted to $6.9 million. Provincial funding now totals $17.1 million for homeless shelters and homeless initiatives. An additional $2 million is allocated to the Gunn centre shelter for men with mental health/addiction problems. Yet, even with an increase of almost 150 per cent in funding over the last six years, capacity pressures on the homeless shelters continue to increase. We are undertaking a review of the emergency homeless shelter system to ensure that our shelter system is most appropriately and effectively targeted. We're also working to foster independence among homeless people by creating long-term solutions such as transitional and affordable housing.

The second goal of this core business is to ensure that the "development of a range of housing for lower-income Albertans is supported by the ministry." To address Albertans in need of housing, my ministry works in partnership with housing organizations, community organizations, and other levels of government to identify local housing solutions.

Alberta Seniors signed a bilateral agreement with the federal government in 2002 to fund the development of affordable housing in Alberta. We are currently on track to provide $134 million in total funding under the Canada/Alberta affordable housing agreement. To date $58 million has been allocated by the provincial and federal governments for development of approximately 1,300 affordable housing units in Edmonton, Calgary, Fort McMurray, Fort Chipewyan, Grande Prairie, Lethbridge, Red Deer, Cochrane, Brooks, Leduc, Rocky Mountain House, and other northern remote communities.

An Hon. Member: Rocky is not a remote community.

Mr. Woloshyn: Rocky is not remote, but it's one of the ones we helped.

Some of these units, Mr. Chairman, are directed at seniors. For 2004-05 provincial and federal governments have committed a further $51.2 million. With that I can assure you that Alberta's commitment to the creation of affordable housing for low-income people is unparalleled anywhere in Canada. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, I understand that we are the first province to have units occupied under that program.

We are also recognized for our efforts to direct our program at a broad range of Albertans in need. The federal government has announced an extension of their support for the affordable housing program. We're currently having discussions with the federal government about extending the Canada/Alberta affordable housing agreement and providing additional funding beyond 2005-06. Mr. Chairman, if you can believe it, we are doing such a job of this that the federal government actually approached us to extend that agreement.

The third and final core business is to provide services and supports to enable appropriate substitute decision-making for those unable to do so for themselves. We do this through the Public Guardian program. Over $5 million has been allocated to support this goal to ensure that the best interests and well-being of Albertans unable to make decisions are served through appropriate and timely substitute decision-making.

In carrying out my ministry's mandate in 2004-05, I can assure you that my ministry will continue to do an excellent job, and we will ensure that anything we can do will result in programs that will be efficient, effective, and sustainable in the future.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will entertain questions regarding the budget estimates, and if I don't answer all of the questions – the ones that are relevant to the budget – I will have staff reply to them from Hansard in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I don't know that anyone has noted it, but today there has been accommodation made in the members' gallery for captioning for those that are hard of hearing, also called hearing impaired. I wanted to particularly note the assistance of one of my staff members, who went to work on trying to organize this when it was brought to her attention, and that's my constituency manager, Penny Craig. Penny, at my suggestion, contacted the Speaker's office and the Clerk's office, and it went from there. When I walked in today, the Clerk informed me that in fact it was all happening, and I can see them joining us in the gallery. So thank you to the Speaker's office and to the Clerk's office, and, I'm sure, visitor services. I wanted to make special note of my staff's effort to accommodate. In fact, it was possible to do, and I'm glad to see it.

Now, I have a number of issues that have been brought to my attention by various seniors' organizations in the province, Mr. Minister. What I'd like to do is sort of go through those comments and get your reaction to them, and in some cases I have specific questions that are arising from that. I also have a series of very specific financial questions and then some more general questions, and then I'd like to go on to the homeless and housing section at the end. So I'll probably have to get two or maybe three at-bats to get this all in, and hopefully I'm pitching strikes.

The first group that I have on my list here is CARP, the Canadian Association of Retired Persons. What I did was send an e-mail out to all of the seniors' groups, and I said: "This is the day that the debates are going to take place. Please come if you would like to hear them, and if you have questions you would like me to raise or concerns you want to put on the record through me, please correspond.” They did. So that’s where this is coming from. They’re fairly recent concerns that are being raised for the minister, just so he doesn’t think I’ve dug back into my dusty files to two or three years ago. This should all be within about the last six weeks.

The issues raised by CARP in particular were around health care premiums and when they could expect to see the elimination of health care premiums for seniors. Of course, the minister is well aware that the Liberal opposition’s stance on that has been to eliminate health care premiums for seniors and indeed for all Albertans; that’s an unnecessary tax for us.

I’m aware that the minister has been on the record saying that he’s in favour of that as well, and a number of the organizations and I are wondering what we can do to assist the minister. Are there particular ones among his colleagues that could do with some helpful phone calls to move them down the path of supporting this initiative to eliminate health care premiums? Would a letter or cards or e-mails be helpful? What could we do to help move your more recalcitrant colleagues along? The minister is on record as saying that he’d like to see it, but we don’t see any movement. So it’s not him; it must be somebody else. Who can we lean on here?

Also raised was the elimination of the seniors’ extended health care. Now, the minister will respond that, in fact, for low-income seniors they did move some money from that program into the special-needs benefit, and I will come back to some more specific questions on that a little later on.

There were issues raised around long-term health care costs. Of course, we all know that last June, just about a month after the House rose, there was an announcement that long-term care rates would increase between 42 and 48 per cent. This has in fact caused hardship to a number of seniors. I’m interested in whether the government has done any studies or follow-through to determine whether in fact this did, as the minister claimed, turn out not to be harmful to people. I’m seeing the opposite, and I’m wondering if the minister, with his larger resources, has done anything to study this in a way that we could have a look at. So if he could share that with us.

Also, concerns raised about threats to Blue Cross benefits. Now, over 65 there is a special Blue Cross package which is provided to seniors, but for those senior couples where one spouse is under 65, then you have one of them paying, usually cash, for their Blue Cross coverage, but the partner who is over 65 is not. So eliminating the nonprofit tax exemption for Blue Cross and having those rates go up is going to affect senior couples because it’s going to affect the one that isn’t a senior. What’s the minister’s comment to that? Has he looked at it? Does he understand what the repercussions of that could be for seniors in Alberta?

SALT is the Seniors’ Action and Liaison Team, a very active seniors’ advocacy group, and their mandate flows beyond seniors. They have a reaction to the budget that was announced in late March. Just a couple of their concerns are around the government continuing to say that health care is not sustainable. They quote a number of other studies back, noting that spending on health care has actually decreased over the past 10 years: 5.3 per cent of GDP in ’93-94 and 4.9 per cent of GDP in ’03-04. They’re using information from the Canadian Institute for Health Information and information from the government of Alberta.

They continue to be concerned about using the pretence of unsustainability to argue for curtailment of services and for greater public-sector involvement. They have concerns around private, for-profit surgical facilities, P3s to build hospitals and other public facilities, and private, for-profit insurance companies.

They also raised the issue of automobile insurance and its effect on seniors. I would like to have the minister comment on what work his department has done. What was his presentation to the all-party government committee that looked at automobile insurance rates and setting that grid? What was his input on behalf of seniors in Alberta to that committee? What effect of the institution of the government’s policy on automobile insurance does he expect to flow back to seniors? I’ll come later to some more pointed statements about that, but I’d like to know what work his department did.

SALT also raises the issue about failing to eliminate health care premiums. They also raise some social justice issues.

Seniors United Now raises the concern about exemption from health care premiums.

They also raise the loss of the program that seniors used to be able to apply for around a credit or a reduction in school property taxes. That continues to be a real concern for seniors that are trying to stay in their own homes. With the increase in electricity rates and other utility rates, including telephone costs and the increase in the property tax rate, more and more seniors are finding it difficult to age in place, which is supposedly one of the goals or aims of the government, to facilitate that. So the government appears to be working against itself in helping seniors or creating conditions where seniors can stay in their own homes and continue to have independent lifestyles.

Seniors United Now also raises the concerns around reimbursements for prescription drugs, eyeglasses, hearing aids, and the cost of dental. Again, that’s around the extended health benefit program, particularly optical and dental benefits.

They also raise the loss of the renters’ assistance program, which essentially was the other side of the coin, the equivalent to the property tax rebate available for homeowners. The renters’ assistance applied to those that were renting their accommodation.

SUN notes that the cost of living since ’93-94 has gone up by 25 per cent and that the cost of health care premiums has increased by 37.5 per cent. They also raise the question of what we can do to help the minister lobby his colleagues to get them on-line.

In ’92-93 seniors’ benefits paid by the government were 7.7 per cent of total revenue collected by the government. Eleven years later the seniors’ benefits paid by the government were 5.9 per cent of total revenue collected. That’s significant because we’re doing significantly better than we were then, but they note that seniors are worse off in the actual dollars and the value of those dollars has decreased. So it’s a double whammy for them.

They raise concerns about seniors liquidating their assets to be able to have enough money to continue. So that’s part of that issue around: they can’t stay in their own home because of all of the costs.

3:40

Now, the Alberta Council on Aging is not specifically an advocacy organization. Well, they’re not an advocacy organization; they provide information and programs and services to seniors. But they did do a very good study which was released on March 8, 2004 – International Women’s Day, I might note – and that survey looked at a number of things including the cost of utilities and what people were paying, how many of them were paying more, less, or the same, and raised the issue of insurance and also long-term care and caregiving.

What really struck me was the section about what was affected. In order, starting from the most to the least, of the things that seniors had to forgo, the most was social activities. So at the very time in their lives when they think they might be able to have more leisure time and more fun and catch a movie, maybe go on a trip and visit the grandkids, treat themselves to a round of golf or a facial or whatever, the very first thing they’ve got to cut out is social activities, and a significant number of the people responding did in fact drop their memberships in various social clubs and that kind of thing.

The second thing affected was transportation, followed by food, followed by health care. Now, what does that mean? Well, it means that where there were supplements that had been recommended by a doctor that are not prescription and therefore aren't covered, those would be taken out. Maybe somebody delays getting newer, better-fitting dentures or getting their prescription for their eyeglasses updated. Well, what does that matter? That's just good thinking to put that kind of stuff off.

Well, I would argue that it isn't, in fact, and that it has a long-term cost effect on our health care system. People that can't see as well are more likely to trip or misstep and fall and cause injuries which would end them up in the hospital. If you don't have properly fitting dentures or your teeth aren't good, you're not going to be eating the kind of healthy fresh fruit and vegetables that we are told every day we should be eating. Well, all of a sudden you're not; you're looking at day after day after day of oatmeal and things like that because you can't handle the other kinds of food any more. So this is not contributing to an independent lifestyle that's full of choices and health.

Another thing that I found very useful from the survey from the Alberta Council on Aging was the comments that came back from people that were recorded. I'm not going to mention any of them, but I just did pull out a couple of them where they're talking about accommodations. Comments made: "My house needs repairs but I can't afford it." "Sharing a house with family." "Older home, needs insulation. Very cold in winter." "The cost of utilities is going to limit our time in our own home."

Why does this matter? Because eventually they're likely to end up in a facility that is subsidized or completely paid for by the government's budget, so we're better off all the way around keeping people independent and in their own homes. Having comments like, "This is going to limit their time in their own home," is not a positive mood.

Here's one about the property taxes: "A $400 school tax increase in one year with no one in school. These tax increases will cause many seniors to lose their homes."

Around the utilities they say, "Privatization of utilities affects low-income pensioners the most." "It's a shame that we have to bundle up in our own homes and live in dread of the utility bills." "The cost of power itself is not so bad; it's . . . the extra charges they put on." Someone else has taken in a boarder to help reduce the costs.

Car insurance. This is where I was asking: what was the minister's contribution to the automobile insurance debate? Was he advocating for senior drivers, and how was he advocating for senior drivers? This is one of the issues where I'm getting maybe a phone call a month from a senior – but that's representing a lot more seniors that aren't calling – that are saying: "You know, I had one little accident, and now I'm cut off. What gives here? I was a perfect driver. I'm in good health. I've got a car in good repair that isn't too old. One fender-bender in the shopping mall and that's it; I'm out." So there's a question here of what's happening with insurance companies that are looking, I think, to dump older drivers, and that's why I'm interested in what the minister has done to advocate here.

This jeopardizes in a couple of ways. I think it jeopardizes seniors' independence. You know, they're using their vehicle to go out and go shopping, to get to doctors' appointments, but a few other things, Mr. Minister, things like volunteering in the community, from which we all benefit. Maybe they're going out and looking after a neighbour or a friend. Again, we all benefit from that.

There is a cost to giving up that transportation and having to rely on others. Perhaps they have to change doctors that they've had for a long time because they have now got to get one on a bus route. It's different choices like that that you don't want to have to be making in your senior years. Not that seniors aren't vital and able to make all of these decisions, but it's not what they were expecting when they got to retirement.

Here are comments on car insurance. "Don't know why, I have a clean driving record, never any claim or traffic ticket." "Can't really afford it but need my car for shopping and doctor's appointments." "Have no choice; I need my car to go to work." "Have to pay it – there is no other transportation in rural areas." "They are punishing us seniors – give us a break!" So those are the issues raised around that.

Long-term care. "The 40% increase in the cost of [long-term care] is too much – our pension has gone up only 2 or 3%." This is another comment: "[Long-term care] is a big burden. My husband has Alzheimer's and I do not get any pension for 2 more years." So there's an example of a couple with one senior in care and one who's not a senior yet.

Can he update us, please, on the status of involuntary separation? The federal government was very up front. It was on their web site what the deal was to qualify for that. In other words, that's a program where you point out your circumstances, that one of the couple is now in care somewhere and that it's not voluntary, that you didn't want to be separated, that the other one is still at home, and that's going to cause a financial burden, especially if they continue to be considered as a couple with the limits that are in place for a couple's income rather than looking at it as one person's income.

I'm also interested in how someone in Alberta finds out about that program or whether they can apply and have effect through Alberta? I know that the feds were very up front about it. It was easy to find the information. I haven't found that so, but I'll admit that the last time I looked would have been in the fall, so six months ago. Can he give us an update on where we're at with that involuntary separation program?

I'll note that at the minister's party's convention there were resolutions to take actions on seniors. Do we have any indication from the minister on how that resolution from his party is going to flow through into government policy, whether we can expect to see any action that's taken in the fiscal year that's been presented to us as a result of those resolutions?

As an update from last year's estimates, Mr. Minister . . . [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired] I'll have to come back. I'm sorry.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'll try as best I can to answer these concerns. I'll start with long-term care. I'd like to point out that when the long-term care rates were reviewed and changed, at about that same time, the housing portion that we're dealing with, what portion the individual pays, was transferred over to my department. We agreed on the rates, and, yes, they were significant increases.

However, as part of the process there were some things that were made mandatory by the providers as a part of these rates. One was cable television, another one was wander bracelets, a third one was all incontinent supplies, and the fourth one was bathing as required. The hon. member I'm sure at one time would have had concerns in these areas. As a part of it we didn't get into the discussion of whether it was health or housekeeping, if you will. We said that these things must be done, and that was a part of the whole process.

Along with that – and I think this is extremely significant – two or three other things happened that improved it for all folks in long-term care. Number one, seniors on the seniors' benefits program for the most part – I'd like to say each and every one, but there's always an exception somewhere. Not only was the increase in the cost absorbed by our increase in supports to them, but we also ensured that they would have $265 of income left, the same as if they were in a lodge. The rate at $42 a day may sound excessive, but it fits us in at about the second lowest or third lowest in the country. That's significant.

The significant thing about how we operate the programs is that they are all income tested as opposed to asset tested. So if a person owns a home or has other properties, we don't ask to delve into that. That is not the case in Atlantic Canada, where it's all asset based.

However, there is the concern that was identified by some of the comments, and that is when you have couples split between the two facilities. We do within our program whatever we can to treat them as singles to maximize their benefits, but in addition to that, we have had very good success by having the people with problems go directly to the operators, and then we'd work out solutions, and very frequently Alberta Seniors staff would get involved.

There are some that we haven't been able to capture that weren't necessarily seniors. You pointed out the one there, for example, not on pension yet. If that particular individual has not contacted Seniors, please have them do so. We may be able to help them, and if we can, we certainly will. That's just a comment. I can't tell you where that will go.

What has happened in there is that we've ensured that the people know what they're getting and we know what the rates are. What I think we have to keep in mind is that what the tenant pays is only a portion of the cost. The average care cost, I believe, in addition to this is some $95 to $100, which is paid for by Alberta Health, and it flows through, obviously, the various health authorities.

That number in and of itself, I believe, translates into some $650 million annually for health care for people in these facilities. As you know, even though they have the same residual income as in a lodge, they get all their drugs and whatnot covered while they're in the facility. But, again, we do have a concern over the people who on an individual basis don't meet the system, and those we want to hear about to see what we can do to assist them.

The long-term care one I think has worked out extremely well. We are also putting in a monitoring process, working with other departments, to ensure that we can get some consistency, as I indicated in my comments, in the overall operations.

The other part. To avoid a catch-up jump – and that's what this was. We can quote percentages wherever we want, but this increase was necessary as a matter of catch-up. We were having some not-for-profits, if you will, that were on the verge of closing their doors if they weren't able to access some funding from somewhere, and the majority of that funding flowed from my department through to the individuals. It also goes to our philosophy of helping the individuals as opposed to doing the block dumping into the building. So as it shakes down, that will work out I think very well.

The whole area of insurance is one of concern. It's a concern on liabilities, it's a concern on volunteer groups, it's a concern on minor hockey groups, and it's a big concern in car insurance. I will say this much to you: the seniors as they pertain to that and as you heard in question period here earlier, when the Premier made a reference to seniors and that whole insurance package – I don't want to comment on that too much until it plays its way through. We'll see what we have. At that time we'll go.

Certainly, my people have been working with them to identify the needs of seniors, and there are other things to do with seniors. How often should they have medical tests? How do you get a disability sticker? All these other things that work into a part of being a senior and a driver. I certainly advocate very strongly on behalf of all seniors, and we want the ones who are able to and can to drive for as long as possible for the very concerns that you listed there.

One of the other themes that you brought forward was property taxes. That certainly is a concern. If you add up the 2 and 3 per cent a year over 10 years, there has been a significant jump, far more perhaps than what the program before could be.

We are currently looking at – and I don't know our outcome because we have to get some co-operation from the municipalities. I want to look at some way of stabilizing, freezing, looking at assistance for senior homeowners, and that would be applicable across the board. So that's in the works, if you will.

With respect to some of the other assertions, I have to point out something here. I'm sure you're familiar with our card on the programs that we have. When you look at a renter or person in a long-term care centre and in a lodge, one is supplemented far beyond what shows on the card here. A couple that is renting a home, if they are at the bottom end of the income and the maximum seniors' benefits, could get somewhere in the neighbourhood of $4,200 a year plus their premium exemption plus they have, if they are eligible, special-needs assistance.

I think it's important to note that Alberta seniors do not pay for Blue Cross premiums – it's premium-free – and in that you have drug coverage. People quickly say, "Oh, it's 30 per cent," but I think it's important to note that that 30 per cent is a maximum of $25 per prescription. Some of the prescriptions are in the hundreds of dollars. People on low incomes can also apply for assistance through special needs if they can't afford these $25 ones, if you know what I mean. Also, there are a couple of other little coverages in there.

The cost to Alberta Health, I believe, on Blue Cross payouts, on the premium-free portion last year was some $365 million. That doesn't show up in my budget. That would show up in the health line as one of the supports for seniors. You add to that the $650 million that is paid for long-term care and then the home care and the others.

On the health side of it, yes, we'd like to see improvements. I'm certainly a strong advocate for it. We're tossing ideas around in the department on how we can address the issue of glasses and dental specifically. What you pointed out in your comments with respect to having good dentures and having good eyeglasses is a health issue; I certainly agree with you one hundred per cent. That's something that we would want to see happen, and we'll be working on these kinds of things. Whether it will come to fruition or not, I don't know.

I think the important thing to note in here is that we do focus on the people who are most in need, which brings us to the whole idea of thresholds and where they cut in. Would I like to see them go higher? Yes. We've been able since I've been in charge of this portfolio to lift them quite significantly from time to time, but if you look at where we cut in, for example, for a partial premium exemption, a senior couple, if you will, who earn less than $37,881 pay no health care premium. That's quite generous if you compare it to other parts of society where we deal with thresholds and whatnot.

The other comments that you made with respect to sustainability of health care and that. As you well know, we're looking at that, and hopefully we can make it sustainable. We're not going to go after and wholesale hurt seniors' programs. I don't think any of my colleagues would be willing to support anything like that.

I believe, for the most part, that answers, in general terms, most of the issues that you brought forward. If I have missed some there, you may repeat them.

The thing that I'd like all people to understand: our programs are income, not asset, based, and that's very significant. That means that we're not asking people who have the hard assets to liquidate in order to pay their way. So I would say that, overall, if we can deal with things like property taxes, utilities, insurance rates – yes, those are problems. We're trying to address all those issues. Hopefully, with respect to the seniors end of it, I'll be able to do something more with respect to the property tax issue as it comes.

Certainly, you're right: I'm advocating on behalf of the seniors with respect to health care premiums. We have a process that we have to go through, and I'm just going to keep on pushing, and if you can help me push, I'll thank you for it.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Thanks very much. Thanks, Mr. Minister. I'm going to just launch into the next round of questions.

Is there sufficient information now available to establish a baseline for the percentage of eligible seniors receiving Alberta seniors' benefits? That was what the minister put in a letter in response to a question from me during last year's debate, and the reasoning was that there wasn't sufficient information that had been gathered to establish the baseline. Do you now have it? And has the ministry been able to assess the extent to which Albertans in need of low-cost housing are able to access it?

I'd like to look at some specific questions about line items in the budget, so I'll refer the minister to page 322 of the estimates book, vote 2.2.3. The special needs assistance grants have dropped this year. They're almost $6 million less. Can the minister give us a reason as to why that's happened? Are there fewer people requesting it, or was there something being offered that's no longer being offered? Could I have the details, please, on what's been reduced or what's been eliminated?

Under vote 3.5.2, which is on page 323, there's a million dollars less for homeless support there. Again, could I get the details on why that's dropped from $18.134 million to $17.109 million? A million dollars less. Why? I think the minister has heard from me enough that there needs to be more support for the homeless. Maybe he's moving money between line items. I don't know, but I'd like the explanation, please.

Still on page 323, vote 3.5.3, could I get an explanation about what the other grants are. They're receiving $7 million less than they were last year. What are those other grants that are no longer there? It just says "other grants" and doesn't give us any description, but that program is basically gone. It has gone from $7,860,000 down to $410,000, so it's gone. What was it? Could I get the details on that, please?

Vote 3.5.5, still on page 323. There's a quarter of a million dollars less for the home adaptation program. Now, this is one, I'm assuming, that seniors could have accessed specifically. Could I get some details, please, on why money has been reduced there? It was $1,025,000, and it's gone to $765,000, so a quarter of a million is gone. Why? I would've thought that that program would be in even greater demand these days, not less demand, so why have those gone down?

On page 330 in the estimates book I note that we've got six more full-time equivalents, six more staff in the department. Could the minister tell me what those staff are doing, please, and describe which program they're allocated to?

I also would like to look now at the business plan, page 377, the performance measurements. This is part of the question that I started with. Under the performance measurements we've got a new baseline, and then the targets for everything, '04-05, '05-06, are to be determined. So how is this a useful performance measurement?

You know, I'm getting frustrated. The government actually did do a good thing with their financial program and particularly with the performance measurements. This is the eighth budget that I've now debated. What I see is that the departments tend to not build upon their performance measurements so that they're a useful management tool and a useful tool for the opposition and for members of the public in evaluating the performance of the department. What happens is that either we've got satisfaction polls that are used as performance measurements, which are not useful at all; we get performance measurements that are a hundred per cent achievable, which aren't useful; or we get what I'm seeing here, which is a constant renewal – or a constant jettisoning is more accurate – of the performance measurements.

So it's always: well, we're working on a new baseline, and we haven't established the targets yet. Then the next time I look, well, now they're developing a new one. So you hardly get it into place before it's been dumped. Its usefulness as the tool it's meant to be is not there. That one is specific to the "percentage of seniors provided with the opportunity to apply for Alberta Seniors Benefit." What are you trying to achieve there, and when is it going to be a useful measurement for us?

You know, with the performance measurement further under goal 2, "satisfaction with information services," you're at 90 per cent right across the board, so is that giving you useful management information?

A couple of other things that arose out of comments that the minister made, one that came from a note that has come into my hands, a reminder to remember Jennie Nelson's death in continuing care. Now, that doesn't fall under the minister's jurisdiction except that she was a senior and he is the delegated minister in charge of seniors. What programs or changes has the minister's department looked at as a result of the death of Jennie Nelson in care?

There were also some issues around the facilities review committee of Bethany care in Calgary. I acknowledge that this is not the minister's responsibility; nonetheless, I'm expecting that the minister is doing some work with his staff to look at what can be done to make it safer. Or how is he advising his colleagues? There are always intergovernmental, interministry committees that are all working together on something, so what work is this minister doing to try to address the care of seniors in nursing homes and long-term care facilities?

I've got some rebuttal for the minister. I always find it interesting because the minister gets up and goes, "we've got the best program in Canada." But I've heard from others that go, "we've got the best program in Canada," particularly in the north. So I'm wondering if the minister has ever done an apples-to-apples comparison of exactly what programs and services are offered and done a direct comparison between those things, and if they're not the same, then they get cut out of the mix. I suspect that Alberta may well do some things better or offer more benefits but that they may not be offering the whole package that others are offering.

4:10

Some things to make note of. Seniors' benefits in British Columbia, for example – they have a property tax reduction: $450 for those under age 65, $745 for those over age 65. Although B.C. is the only other province that charges health care premiums – tsk, tsk; for shame, for shame – their health care premiums are lower. Finally, a senior's driver's licence: in British Columbia, again, $17 for five years; in Alberta, $64 for five years. That was brought to my attention by Mr. Nykiel from COSA, so thank you, Mr. Nykiel, for those notes. I'm interested, of course, in the minister's response to that.

This was in your opening comments, Mr. Minister. You talked about that you were looking at room and board situations and trying to be balanced and fair. I'm wondering: could you give us some more details on what you are working toward here or what you're looking at? I'm hoping that I'm not going to have to deal with another summer where there's a whopping increase in rates somewhere. It certainly made my summer more exciting than I was expecting it to be; let me put it to you that way. I'm looking for the details on what that statement you made actually means and how it shakes down.

I have a question as well on specific funding for shelters for abused seniors. Now, there's a specific shelter attached to the Kerby Centre in Calgary. I'm checking on whether their funding is remaining the same, going up, or going down. Can I get an answer on that? Also, in Edmonton I believe the Society for the Retired and Semi-Retired funds some spaces. It's not a specific shelter; it's some apartments, I think, or spaces where abused seniors can find temporary shelter. That funding always seems to be in jeopardy or comes up when they've run out and they're looking for assistance again. Can I get something from the minister that indicates that that funding is secure and that that group doesn't have to keep going to the media to try to get assistance?

Can I get a specific breakdown, please, on the $134 million that he mentioned regarding the new housing? He said $134 million. Then he talked about $58 million that has already been allocated, and it gave us 1,300 units. The $58 million: is that both pieces, the feds and the province together? He's saying yes to me. So the province's piece of that is actually $29 million. He's talking about another $51.2 million in '04-05, so I'm assuming then that the province's piece of that is going to be about 25 and a half million dollars. If I can just get confirmation on that.

Finally, the issue around property taxes. I think this has put seniors in a difficult position. There are two issues here: one is the property tax issue, and one is the school tax issue. I hear from a lot of seniors that talk about: why are we paying a school tax when we don't have any kids any more? I will argue back against them and go: because it's a societal responsibility. If we want, you know, children in our society and if we want people to have families, we all pitch in on that; we all accept some responsibility, particularly around educating children. I'm more than happy to pay my school property tax in order to have children well educated in this province.

But the property taxes themselves put the municipalities in a squeeze because they're the only ones that have to keep actually raising their property taxes to get enough money to cover what they need. There's a huge infrastructure deficit that's been created by this government, the provincial government, in reducing all of the grants that went to the municipalities in the last 10 years. That created that infrastructure deficit that the cities are now left with, so they have to raise their property taxes. The school property tax is the provincial government's piece of that. I'm aware that it puts the squeeze on seniors, but I also have to point out that the municipalities are doing the best they can there with a rather lousy hand that they've been dealt by the province, plus the school property taxes are entirely flowing through from the province, so it's a squeeze, but it's not the municipalities' fault.

The increase to the Alberta seniors' benefits. We went from $177.4 million to $198.8 for Alberta seniors' benefits. I think that this is a volume increase, that you're expecting more people to be subscribing to this. He's shaking his head. Okay. He's going to give me the numbers then. I would also like to know how many seniors the ministry is forecasting will receive a partial health care premium subsidy, how many seniors the ministry is forecasting will receive a full health care premium subsidy, and how many seniors the ministry is forecasting will receive full health care and the cash? So how does that break down by the numbers? I'd like to get that information, please.

I'm going to move on to the homeless shelter questions. Last year the minister initiated a shelter intake form for homeless shelters to track people using their facilities. Now, the forms were taken out of use very quickly, but I'm wondering: how much did the development and introduction of these forms cost, and what is happening with the project? I note that I do have a written question on this, but I'm trying all possible avenues open to me, and this one came open first, so I'm going to ask it through this venue.

The minister admitted at a government standing policy committee meeting last year that the progress the province has made to address remote housing issues wasn't as good as he would have liked. On February 18 of this year the province allocated $2.5 million to remote housing. Does this contribution fully address the problem as the minister would have liked, or is there additional work that can be done here, and what is it specifically?

I'd like to know how much the ministry has paid for its department to be hooked up to the SuperNet or any other SuperNet fees, connections, hookup services, Internet provider service fees that this ministry has been involved in paying. I'm also interested in how much the ministry is going to pay to the SuperNet service provider, Axia, to maintain any connections that they have.

Last fall the Minister of Seniors proposed charging homeless people a fee of up to one-third of their income, if they had one, to stay at a homeless shelter. The proposal also suggested that money would be saved for the client in order to pay for a damage deposit on an apartment down the road. Well, my question to the minister is: what made the minister believe that withholding funds from an individual would magically create skills and abilities that they did not previously possess? The minister was quoted at the time as saying that this was going to encourage responsibility, and a few other things were on the list. I'm wondering: what made him think that? What had you looked at that made you believe that this was going to help these people achieve these things? Was there a study he looked at? What?

Also, the minister released on July 6 last summer a news release about the Sunalta Shelter. He talked about an accountability component for shelter operators and clients. Can the minister please expand on what he was talking about there? I believe that the Sunalta Shelter is again slated for closure. Can I get some background on that, please? Why is it closing? Can we get a cost-benefit analysis? Why is the province choosing to close that down?

Finally, what is the minister doing with regard to housing mentally ill people? I know that there are some that receive some accommodation, but I'm wondering whether there's anything upcoming that we can look forward to for housing of the mentally ill.

I think I've just about used up my second 20 minutes. I appreciate the opportunity, and I look forward to the responses from the minister.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you very much. Again, I'm going to have a hard time getting all this in, but I'll do the best I can. I'll start at the back and work upwards.

With respect to Sunalta Shelter, that thing is going to close whether I like it or not. There's a permit from the city that expires in about a year or so. The shelter, in my mind, is not appropriate. It's an emergency shelter. It's not appropriate because it's a room this size. It's got good showers, and they treat the people well there, but there are mats on the floor; lines and lines of mats. It is indeed what it's called, an emergency shelter.

I still believe – and I was hoping that I would get better cooperation from shelter operators – that if you want to get an individual to become self-sufficient, one of the pitfalls they run into on leaving a shelter, if they have some small source of income, is that they go from paying zero for room and board to having to hit a damage deposit and the first month's rent. That becomes a big impediment.

Remember this: that suggestion is not novel. Mustard Seed in Calgary charges; the Salvation Army charges. So the idea isn't novel, and I'm saying to the operators: where people have the money, why shouldn't all the operators charge it? Not to cut down our costs but to help the individual in some way, to move them through. At the same time, as you're aware, through our programs we've been working with the federal government on transitional housing. Some of it has been successful; some not so successful.

Moving now to the accountability of the shelters. We have to determine how much support should be coming for a shelter and who should be paying for program support. If you look at the variety of services provided and the variety of costs, it's virtually everywhere. What we want to get is something that we can put a finger on. We have not been successful in lowering the demand. I was pleased last winter that in Edmonton we never hit a crisis point. In Calgary we didn't, but Calgary went ahead and contracted a few more temporary spaces.

One of the problems we have is that every time there are spaces that are temporary, suddenly people want to make them permanent. There would be no end to the number of spots we would have. We have to work some way to get these people out of the shelters. Maybe some will never be able to leave – I don't know – and we'll have to deal with those differently. Certainly, that whole business of the shelters is something we're going to continue to look at.

With respect to the form that was there, it was a good form. It was run by FOIP and everybody. The only reason I cancelled it is because we were getting the information in an alternate way. The cost of it was staff time. The actual cost was zero. A couple of staff put it together and ran it by the proper processes. So whatever the staff time would have been in terms of a portion of their day: I don't know what that is. I couldn't even give you an answer. The actual cost expended to develop a form out of a budget line is zero. Did some staff work on it? Yes. It was just a simple kind of thing, because a lot of the questions asked were already being asked. It wasn't a great big revelation. So the cost of the form was quite frankly a bit of staff time and not very much at that. Remember, we got into these shelters April 1, and that form issue was in May, June.

One of the issues surrounding the shelters, from the minister's point of view, was simply the reporting back to government. Some operators were reluctant to do so. They chose to try to give us numbers three months old through other bodies that dealt with them. I felt that if we were going to be responsible, we had to ensure that we knew what we were doing. I was very pleased this year. Virtually all of the shelters have been very good on their daily reporting, as I indicated to you a couple of times in the House in question period. So we'll continue to work on that.

There wasn't actually a decrease in the allocation for the homeless shelters; a slight increase, as a matter of fact. What you're seeing, the difference in the spending: we had Westgate; we had a couple of other costs in there that I hope won't be there. I'll be very honest with you. I don't intend on increasing the homeless shelter budget. I don't intend an increase in the budget. Whether I will be able to stick with that or not, I don't know, but when we're spending more on homeless shelters within a five- or six-year period than we are on our whole lodge assistance program, there's something out of balance socially here. We want to find out what it is, and we want to find a way to help these folks end up in homes so that they aren't in the shelters.

Part of the affordable housing program is now being directed more and more at getting sizes of rooms that people on low incomes can afford and are happy with. As you're probably aware, there's one converted restaurant for sure that was done on 95th Street, I believe, that was targeted at very, very low income. So that's sort of more or less what's happening there.

The low-cost housing accessibility is variable. We've worked the program, and it seems to be working very well to where the communities determine. For example, an affordable level of rent may be different in Fort McMurray than it is in Brooks.

The projects have been going very well. I gave you the numbers of what they were, but I would like to point out something that's rather interesting. Edmonton has had the most projects and the most amount of money by far. That wasn't because of any kind of effort from the department's or the minister's side. They came forward with the projects, and I have to commend the various groups that did that. As you know, some of those were directed at people who needed extra help, and whether the programming came from the Mental Health Association or somewhere else, the whole idea is that we want to get a housing stock there that becomes, as I said, sustainable.

What I didn't mention in my opening comments was the fact that the federal program is a 10-year program for affordability. Alberta's program is 20 years. We are double the timeline on it, in other words, before any kind of funding goes into these projects, whether it be municipal, not-for-profit, or private developers, some of which are doing a very good job, incidentally. Some of the lowest rents coming up in the next cut of Edmonton projects are with a private developer. But those things must remain affordable for 20 years. I think that that's reasonable. By then properties depreciate, and you have a lot of other things to look at.

What we're trying to do with the room and board – you have a variety of levels of need. You have your basic lodge, and you have supportive housing, assisted living, designated assisted living, long-term care facilities. We want to establish a room and board pattern that makes sense, that doesn't arbitrarily go here, there, or elsewhere. The Alberta Senior Citizens' Housing Association, ASCHA, has done quite a bit of work with us on that. We'll see. There may be some little variances in rent depending upon the services you get.

Then it opens up the debate of how much an individual is responsible for. One of the ways we're addressing that, as I indicated in my comments, is that we've switched our funding from bricks and mortar to individuals, which means that the support follows the individuals, so depending on where they go, the money goes with them, which is also looking to the future. Hopefully the day comes, as more people with private incomes come on the market and less support is required, if you will, when these lodges will then be able to rent at whatever is a reasonable rate and the government would not be supplementing in lodges people who don't need supplements. I don't think anybody can argue with that.

You made reference to performance measures. I'm frankly of the mind that if you have a performance measure, you should make it work. We were having difficulty with those, so rather than trying to put a smoke and mirrors thing, my staff put the facts down. We haven't figured it out yet. When we figure out a good measure that will work, we'll have it down there. Until then, I'm not going to have something on there just for the sake of having it there.

With percentages it gets to be difficult. Some things measure themselves, if you will, and there are some areas that are very difficult. Satisfaction: if it's under a hundred per cent, I'm not happy. Am I ever going to get to a hundred per cent? No. But the idea is to push and push and push as close as you can get.

So when you see that the performance measures are not in there, we're not slacking off; we're just trying to find a better system. When the better system comes in, it will be brought through there. I would imagine that you could go with that one.

You made reference to the tragedy in the nursing home, and I'd say this. In any private home, institution of any kind, whether it be a senior or nonsenior, a person with a disability, there's no defensible excuse for something like that happening. I wouldn't ever want by that statement to intimate that there was any kind of criminal intent. Somebody did something wrong.

One of the suggestions that has been coming forward – and the Capital health authority I think has moved a little bit on this one – is that the water that goes into these tubs should be on what they call a blender, where you can't go above a particular temperature no matter how hard you try. That's a very good first step.

Another suggestion which I would have is that they have a floating thermometer that doesn't have numbers on it but has visual colours – if the needle's in the red, you don't touch it; if it's in the green, it's safe – in addition to blenders and so on to make sure that an error can't happen, because if it's mechanical, it can happen. That's one of those tragedies that's there.

We're trying to work with the operators on best practices. I don't like to comment too much because I'm not privy to all of the circumstances surrounding how that happened. I will only stand by the statement I'm making here and now: it should not have happened. We certainly will be looking at ways to ensure that it doesn't reoccur anywhere else, and Alberta Health I'm sure would be just as adamant about that as I am.

Remote housing: that's an interesting one. We have a real challenge there, a real challenge – and we're working on it – and that's to make the thing accessible and also sustainable, and we're making progress there. Am I happy with the progress to date? I'm happy that we've got some good initiatives going, and we've got I believe an allocation there yet, that we'll have more money going in. Hopefully, we'll get a system going that has a higher degree of sustainability in it than some of the remote housing currently has. There are a lot of issues surrounding that one that make it awkward to go for. One of them is even the ability to pay rent, if you will.

The increase to seniors' benefits – you were right. I shook my head, but you were right. Part of it is a volume increase; part of it is picking up of the difference that we received and allocated for the support for seniors in long-term care. Part of that will go there. Ten million of that has not been designated. That was what I was referring to. We will be targeting that into the special-needs program to a specific area. We've got some particular things in mind but have to work it through the system. That will be announced prior to July 1, a $10 million infusion somewhere in the special-needs program. But the way I am, I won't fudge it. We've got some good ideas of where it should go, and it's going to help a specific group somewhere in the special needs that need the help.

Your comments with respect to taxes. I don't accept your side comments about how terrible the provincial government has been to the municipalities, but I suppose we can agree to disagree on that.

However, the basic issue that we share is that rising taxes, whether it be education or municipal, are becoming too burdensome on fixed-income people, whether they be seniors or not. On that, I'm totally in concert with you. We're trying to work out some sort of a program that will address that very issue. How successful we'll be I guess time will tell.

The whole idea of property taxes impacting people's ability to stay in their homes is a concern for me, and you will see things like market value assessment, all these things enter into it. So we have to find some mechanism that is workable and ensures that people can in fact stay in their own homes and that taxes aren't the driver for them to get out.

Axia. I understand that we don't give Axia anything. I'll give you a bit of expansion on that answer. If I'm wrong, I apologize, but I believe that we don't have anything going into Axia, and we're not really into that whole business. We'll try in the written answers to give you an explanation because, quite frankly, I don't know all of the answers on that particular question to do with the Internet, and I'd just have to get it for you anyhow. But I'm pretty dam sure Axia is not a part of it.

I think that's most of the things that you asked me, hon. member. We'll be looking at Hansard, and if there are relevant budget items that we've missed, we'll be glad to give them to you in writing.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I know that in estimates members of the government don't often participate in the debate, but from time to time I think it's really important that we do and that we also put our thoughts on the record.

I understand perhaps more than many in this room what the role of opposition is in a parliamentary democracy and how they have the obligation and the responsibility to oppose because it's that opposition that strengthens the legislation that the government will impose. It's often said that the opposition will have its say and the government will have its way, and that's the way the parliamentary system works. So from time to time we just have to sort of sit here and bite our tongue and say: gosh, that's just not fair. But that's the way life is, and that's the way it works.

I first want to recognize the work that this minister has done in this portfolio and, reflected in this ministry, the good work that's being done at the service level by this ministry. Generally speaking, when people are in need and address this ministry, the need is very often acute. People are frightened, concerned, very, very vulnerable. When these people connect with the government, to whom they are looking for comfort and security and direction, that has to be done with sensitivity, and from everything I've heard, this department has met that obligation and met it well. Thank you.

Now, unlike the opposition, who are able and capable and very good at hooking up with a specific interest group in order to promote a specific cause, which is the way it's done, and a specific group who may or may not have a specific interest, in this case seniors, who have been represented by various seniors' organizations here, ensuring that their voices are heard, that their interests are heard – they know that this Legislature listens not only to their voice but must listen to every other voice in society and then aggregate interests. That's what our responsibility is: it's to aggregate interests in the common good. So that's what we're charged with doing. It's not as if there is an infinite amount of resources available. We have to do with what we have, and we have to make the best choices long term.

That brings me to the heart of the comments that I wanted to put on record, Minister, and that is this. Next month I'll be 62.

An Hon. Member: How old?

Mr. McClelland: Sixty-two. In three years I'll be 65. So the question is: do I become entitled because I'm 65? That's the elemental question. Does entitlement come as a result of age, or should public funds go where they're needed? Is want the determination or is need the determination?

4:40

Let me illustrate it this way. The opposition has made mention and seniors' groups and seniors individually have made representation to me with regard to the extended health care program in which every senior because they were 65 years of age was eligible for a hundred dollars for glasses, dentures, whatever it might be. This was a nice program, but if seniors had independent health care insurance or if they had other insurance, that insurance paid net of the hundred dollars which was to be paid out of the common tax base. So there we were paying our premiums to get the insurance to cover it, and the insurance company would pay, as they're wont to do, net of the hundred dollars that they would get.

Now, what about the senior that didn't have any coverage at all? That senior would get the hundred dollars, but what happened if the senior didn't have the other $400 to get the dentures? They'd have the hundred but not the $400 and would be nowhere.

So the point is that if we make the distinction for public benefit based on need not want, then what has happened will happen, and that is that the senior that needs the $500 will get the $500, get the service they require. It's a question, then, of ensuring that we get the best results for the money spent or the money that's available.

That brings me to the notion of health care premiums based on age. Now, I'm on record as suggesting that health care premiums are a tax. They're a regressive tax, and I don't think that we should have health care premiums for anybody in Alberta. We have to pay it. We all know that we have to pay it. But do people somehow because they are age 65 all of a sudden become unable to pay? Wouldn't it make more sense that the capacity to pay health care premiums, as long as we've got them, is based on need, not on age? Doesn't it make sense that a young family trying to get by have just as much need of support as someone that is post-65 but better off, substantially better off?

I suspect that intuitively seniors understand that as well because many people that are seniors have grandchildren. Somehow we who are grandparents know that there's a magical transformation that takes place. There's a concern for our grandchildren that seems to transcend the concern that we have for our children. It's entirely different. I think it's fair to say that the majority of seniors are just as concerned with the ability of their grandchildren and other grandchildren to have the same opportunities in life that they have enjoyed and that the transfer of wealth is not intergenerationally from one generation to another.

That's the problem with the Canada pension plan. It's not interprovincially unfair; it's intergenerationally unfair. Someone in my age group would have paid into the Canada pension plan something in the nature of 80 cents for every dollar I'll get out of it if I live to an actuarial age. Someone 20 years older than me would have paid something in the order of 50 to 60 cents. Someone starting off today would pay into the Canada pension plan a great deal more, 10 per cent of their income, 5 per cent from them, 5 per cent from their employer, unless, of course, they were self-employed, and then it would be 10 per cent, or around $3,500 a year, for which after 40 years they would get something in the order of 80 cents for every dollar they put in, with not one cent appreciation of capital. Not one cent. That is a great proportion of the amount of money that young people can put away for their own futures.

We have a societal responsibility to do what's fair. We absolutely must in my view do something to ensure that seniors are able to stay in their homes and not be inflated out of being able to stay in their homes. People who have done everything right in their lives – they've put their kids through school; they belong to the community leagues; they've built the community – find themselves, because we're living longer and healthier, living beyond their capacity to survive on what they've put away.

It's kind of like having your boat tied to the jetty, and the water's coming up, and you're going to be swamped. We've got to be thinking about how we can hold seniors harmless from the numbers that eventually will get them because of inflation, and maybe it means freezing property taxes on seniors. We've talked about that often because that would be a good way to ensure that seniors can stay in their homes, and the property taxes would catch up when the home is sold, just like they do in California.

I don't think that most seniors, or seniors that have the resources, begrudge the school tax that goes into paying for future generations. It's part of our social responsibility to each other. Even if we don't have children, even if we don't have grandchildren, our social contract one to another is for our society, and that includes educating future generations because it's future generations that build the country for the future. It's how we renew ourselves. That's why families and children are so important, and that's why we have community.

I know that there are other people that want to join in this debate, and I know that there are not many questions to the ministry in my comments, but I thought it was really important that we put this on the record, Mr. Chairman, because I am often contacted by seniors full of umbrage. They think: my God, look how we're getting screwed, and you're doing it to us; look how badly off we are. But when I explain what is actually taking place, I have yet to have hear one single individual say, "Hey, wait a minute; I didn't understand that. Well, of course I agree." You know something? It doesn't matter whether we're younger or middle or seniors, we've all got a stake in our society. I really do think that what we are doing together is going to result in the kind of society that we want.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Before I call on the minister to perhaps reply, I wonder if we might have consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have the honour this afternoon to introduce to all members of this Assembly someone who is seated in the public gallery, whose son perhaps is better known to us than he, but we are very honoured because he is here in Edmonton to be the guest speaker tomorrow evening at a fundraising gala for early literacy and intervention programs in conjunction with Capital health and with the school boards in Edmonton. He's going to speak at the Magic Moments Gala tomorrow evening. He has been accompanied here at the Legislature by our Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms, Mr. Ed Richard. He is also accompanied by his friend Mr. John Wilson, who was a neighbour of his in Brantford, Ontario, and who now resides just north of Spruce Grove. So I would ask everybody in this Assembly to extend the warm welcome to Mr. Walter Gretzky, who is seated in the public gallery. Please rise, Mr. Gretzky.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to the estimates on the Seniors ministry. I want to acknowledge the presence of seniors throughout the afternoon on both sides of the House, the members' gallery and the public gallery. It's nice to see citizens taking interest in debates which deal with their tax dollars and their benefits and their well-being.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to quickly make a few observations on the business plan I looked through. I remember that several years ago, a little over three years ago, when this ministry was established following the last election, the minister spoke with high hopes about his ability to advocate on behalf of seniors. I just notice that the word "advocacy" or the responsibility of this department to advocate on behalf of seniors has simply disappeared from the text of the business plan for the Ministry of Seniors. I want to make note of it, and I suppose the minister will perhaps respond as to why it is that the advocacy role of the department is not only perhaps downgraded but simply is no longer spoken of in the business plan.

Another quick observation on the business plan, Mr. Chairman, that I want to make has to do with the issue of long-term care and the radical increases, ranging from 40 to 50 per cent, that were introduced some time ago and have hit seniors very hard. They were introduced, I guess, in last October or September. We've been hearing with increasing frequency the hardships that seniors who use long-term care facilities have been forced to endure as a result of this, but one justification that was made when this massive change in long-term health care payments was introduced – this justification was used both by the private providers of this care and also by this ministry – was that additional charges are justified to guarantee and to deliver enhanced quality of long-term care.

I find in the business plan absolutely no mention specific to any performance measure that is specially designed to deliver on this promise that the ministry made, that it is committed to making sure that the additional funds that will be raised, although they would result in economic hardship will also deliver, in turn, enhanced quality of health care to seniors who use long-term care facilities. Where is the performance measure indicated in the business plan which reaffirms the commitment of this government and this ministry to follow up on that undertaking that it gave and the justification that was offered by you to increase those very, very unjustified and unpopular huge long-term care charges at the time? So that's the second question related to the business plan.

I want to now return to this afternoon's question period, Mr. Chairman. When I asked the first question, I was advised that the question that I asked is appropriately to be asked of the Minister of Seniors, so he might want to take an opportunity to answer the question. I'm going to read into the record the preamble and then the question that was put to the Premier, but on the advice of the Speaker the Premier did not rise to address this question. Here was the language of the question, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Speaker, in the past few years the Tory government has hiked seniors' health care premiums 30 per cent, long-term care fees by [close to] 50 per cent, and eliminated universal eye care and dental benefits, but this is small change compared to what the government has in store for seniors in its still secret health care plan. At the recent Tory Party convention the health minister unveiled a proposal to cap or eliminate provincial drug coverage outside of hospitals, a change [in policy] that would take more than $300 million out of the pockets of the province's seniors each year.

That was the preamble, Mr. Chairman.

My question that didn't get answered because of the intervention from the chair was:

Given that the government has already hiked co-payments on the [provincial] seniors' drug plan by 30 per cent, why would the government add to the financial misery of seniors by hatching a secret plan to either cap or even eliminate seniors' prescription drug coverage?

So the Minister of Seniors does have the opportunity to heed the advice of the Speaker to address this question that I raised during question period, Mr. Chairman.

Following up on this question of the potential threat that was implied in the Minister of Health and Wellness's proposal at the time of the Tory convention in Banff, that the coverage may be removed or under consideration to be removed, I want to draw attention to the fact that the 30 per cent copayment that seniors are responsible for for their prescription drugs was increased by 5 per cent. It increased from 25 to 30 per cent some years ago. Although the percentage of 30 per cent has remained stable now for a few years, we do know that the actual drug costs have been rising at a much faster rate than any other item in the health care costs category.

Even though 30 per cent has remained 30 per cent, the cost of drugs has been increasing at a rate of about 17 per cent. So actual costs, even at 30 per cent, to a senior who uses medication on a regular basis have been going up. They have not been stable. They have not been static. There has been an increase in the cost to seniors on an annual basis with respect to the amount of dollars that they have to pay in order to get necessary medication, medications that are prescribed for them to remain reasonably healthy or to recover from illnesses and chronic problems of health that they experience.

I wanted to just draw the attention of the House and of the minister to the various ways which are not really visible and noticeable to us in which seniors get hit by other increasing costs and to dollar amounts that they have to find somewhere to pay for these increasing costs. They have limited incomes and stagnant incomes in many cases, incomes that grow, if they grow at all, at a very, very small, minuscule rate.

Issues have been raised with respect to how various other living costs, you know, resulting from the deregulated electricity plan of this government, the property tax hikes for seniors and others, and many other sources of the costs to seniors are increasing. That point has been made, so I don't want to belabour this. Given that we're hearing from seniors ever more frequently about their sense of economic insecurity, about their fear of not being able to pay their costs, I don't hear from the government benches or from the ministry any serious attempts to address these concerns.

I was looking at a document here where the minister makes an assertion that the low-income seniors are better now than they were five, six years ago. Well, insofar as the minister's statements are correct – and I question this statement in itself – I think the rest of the seniors, those who are not considered by the minister as low income, are the ones who are feeling worse off. So it's they who are being asked by the minister to pay for the marginal improvements that he claims have happened in the plight of the low-income seniors.

It's strange, straight off, if the non low-income seniors have to pay and have to feel impoverished to pay for the improvements that the minister claims are being experienced by low-income seniors. Seniors do pay taxes. Seniors do pay property taxes, income taxes, and many other service taxes which are indirect and invisible, just as anyone else pays, so they're not trying to get a free ride. They're doing their bit, and they have done so all their lives. They built this province, and to be told what they're told here is, I think, unfair to them.

On the long-term care issue I have one quick question for the minister. I was looking at Extendicare's business report that I think our staff took off the Internet, in which Extendicare, which is one of the private, for-profit providers—not the major one, perhaps, but one of the for-profit providers of long-term care—claims that its revenues have gone up by 50, 60 per cent. They say that out of this some money will be used for improvement of quality. The rest, they say, will be used of course to help the shareholders of the company. I ask the minister: has the minister got any real performance measures that will hold such companies and such providers to account for their undertaking to improve the quality of care for seniors?

One other matter that I want to raise, Mr. Chairman, very quickly—time is running out—has to do with the management authorities that deal with seniors' housing. I have been receiving complaints from within my own constituency from residents in some of these housing complexes which are managed by these authorities, and the complaints are serious.

When they make these complaints and put them on paper, some of them have been threatened with eviction if they don't stop doing this. I find it a matter of a great deal of concern. I think it's disturbing to see this happen. When seniors living in these places are already vulnerable, they then come under pressure from these management authorities and are threatened with eviction if they open their mouths and complain about the quality of care or don't get explanations for the questions that they have, questions that are quite legitimate.

I have been hearing from my constituents who use these facilities on a regular basis, and in fact I've got a letter on my table which threatens eviction unless these people who complain stop the complaints, and I would like the minister to do something about it.

In that regard, the findings of the Auditor General I think are germane. I was looking at the findings reported in the 2002-2003 Auditor General's report, and they say:

We found that:

- the Ministry did not receive business plans for 4 management organizations, and another 4 of the business plans were not current—out of 11 management organizations we tested.

There are hundreds of those management organizations looking after these facilities, Mr. Chairman, and 4 out of 11 means about 40 per cent of the facilities do not simply have business plans which are clear enough or current enough based on which they can be held to account. That's why, I guess, the problems with seniors arise.

"The management of the operational reviews had the following deficiencies," and there are several of them listed. I'm sure the minister knows about them.

I looked at the department's response to these recommendations and findings of the AG's department. I don't find a very satisfactory response to these very serious concerns that the AG has expressed and which certainly translate into the concerns that my constituents have drawn to my attention with respect to the difficulties that they are faced with when they are dealing with these management authorities.

So these are some of the observations and questions. My time has run out for the moment. I will take another opportunity later. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm very distressed by the extremely misleading comments that were brought forward by the questioner. Very misleading.

Number one, the prescriptions. I don't want these comments to go uncorrected, because I don't want seniors here or perhaps hearing this outside the House to be unduly concerned. The copayment is 30 per cent, but you forget to mention up to a maximum of $25 even if their prescription is $500. So if it went up 17 per cent, that money came out of the Health budget, not out of the senior's pocket, so please put all the facts on the table.

I find your comments with respect to long-term care rates very interesting, very exorbitant, extremely exorbitant. Maximum cost in Alberta for a private room, $48. Maximum cost in British Columbia, $66.30; Saskatchewan, $53; Ontario, $66; Northwest Territories, $23; Yukon, $21. Quebec is 2 cents cheaper than us, $48.28. So we're second lowest. They're the lowest. Nova Scotia, $208.19, asset tested; New Brunswick, $134, asset tested; Prince Edward Island, $117 for the government's and $150 for the privates, asset tested; Newfoundland, $92, asset tested.

Now, you're going to sit there and tell me that to have the lowest rates in this country is exorbitant. Where do you get that from? I just find that totally, totally shameful. You talk about advocacy. Under my tutelage of the seniors the thresholds have gone up, the benefits have gone up when we have expanded programs, and we have taken care of the low-income seniors very, very well, thank you very much.

I'm on the public record, as well as some of my colleagues, although it's not government policy and I don't advocate premium supports, but I work within a team system, and as long as I'm the bottom end, I will accept that. But I will continue to advocate for it, and I feel very comfortable advocating in a democratic caucus that respects my views. If I can't convince my colleagues, I guess I'll accept the responsibility for that.

I'd like to know where you get your crazy notions of what happened at our convention in a session that I didn't have the opportunity to attend, but here you are getting information about how the minister of health is going to do these terrible things to people when we haven't even had the meeting. We don't even know what you're talking about, but you've got all the facts.

With respect to management bodies in the Auditor General's report, I've had discussions with the Auditor General off and on and will continue to have them. I find it difficult for us to list assets as a part of government that aren't a part of government, although they manage some of our assets and some of theirs.

If there are any written complaints on any management body in this province that some individual is being unfairly treated, I want those things in my office because they'll go to the department and they will be looked into to see if in fact there's validity to it. [interjection] Well, bring them over. You haven't sent me a single complaint, yet you stand here and say that you've got a desk full. Bring them over. I don't appreciate that kind of nonsense going on in here when you don't have facts. You haven't contacted me, you haven't contacted the staff, and you're making allegations against people who are doing a service not only to seniors but to low-income people, to folks who are in need, and you're sitting there telling me that they are terrible folks. I just don't accept that, thank you very much.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the members, especially the Member for Edmonton-Centre, who went through the budget, had legitimate questions. I hope I've been able to answer the majority of those. The ones that we can't answer, we'll forward to you. You had reviewed that, and I appreciate the fact that you took the trouble to go through it and find questions. I don't hesitate to give credit where credit is due, and you did a good job of that.

5:10

To the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, I appreciated his comments, because one of the things that I'm very proud of is the fact that the people in the Seniors department, when they deal with the public, are very sensitive. They do try to help. They do go the extra mile. No, we can't fix everybody's situation. Certainly, I guess it would be nice if we could. But when they are recognized publicly, I certainly endorse that, and I appreciate that being noticed.

Getting back to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I don't know what Extencicare's bottom lines are. I do know this much: they are a cross-Canada operation, and I believe beyond Canada. Where they get their profits from I'm not too terribly sure.

What I do know is that I had a visit with the Caritas group in the Edmonton General hospital at the request of the residents. They were feeling the pinch there also with the lack of funds. So what is going to happen with the extra money that the Caritas group is collecting at the Edmonton General? This was said to all the residents. They had two major concerns. One was the menu; they wanted it enhanced. The commitment was made in front of me that that menu was going to be enhanced. The other thing was that they had a concern with not sufficient staff to meet their needs. I was told that they were going to try to enhance their staff too. So I'm very comfortable that that particular group is sincere, that they've directed their efforts to it, and I'm very pleased that we were somehow able to get some money into the mix for them to in fact do that.

The rates went up effective August 1, I believe it was. There hasn't been the opportunity in three or four or five months to suddenly make all of these hundreds of millions of dollars. It's going to take time for them to accumulate a bit in there. We expect in every single facility in this province appropriate, proper, safe care for every senior, not only seniors but everybody in an extended care facility, because, quite frankly, it's not all seniors. I believe it's 8,800, and a few thousand over that are nonseniors.

We are, I think, looking at situations that arise, whether they be through Health, whether they be through the Seniors end of it, but we make sure that we address the issues and approach them as best we can with appropriate solutions, ones that have meaning and, if it comes to money, ones that have sustainability.

The Chair: I regret that I must interrupt the hon. Minister of Seniors, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 on a Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoon, and this being Thursday afternoon, I must now put the question after consideration of the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Seniors for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005.

Agreed to:

Operating Expenses and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$406,422,000
---	---------------

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the Committee of Supply now rise and report the estimates for the Ministry of Seniors.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Klapstein: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, for the following department.

Seniors: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases,	$406,422,000.
---	----------------

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? The motion is carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On that note I would move that we now call it 5:30 and get out and enjoy some of that beautiful landscape and spirit which the song so well reflected, the song Alberta, a little bit of which was played earlier today.

Let's call it 5:30, Mr. Speaker, and adjourn until Monday, May 10, at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; at 5:16 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly eight seniors from the Riverside Lions Village from my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. I had an opportunity to meet with them a little bit earlier today. They're here in the members' gallery: Mr. and Mrs. Bill and Margaret Manning, Mrs. Ella Ozubko, Mrs. Natalie Kuch, Mr. and Mrs. Doug and Jean Whyte, Mrs. Vickie Deagle, and Mrs. Norma Johnston. They're accompanied by Mrs. Michelle Kraeling, who is their recreation/leisure consultant. I'd ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, today it is my pleasure to be able to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 27 students from the Rimbey elementary school. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Jim Moore, and parent helpers Mr. Dallas Mannix, Mrs. Marnie Bland, and Mrs. Laureen Morton. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to other members of the Assembly Katie Hobday. Katie will be assisting me in the Calgary-Glenmore office this summer.

Mr. Norris: A huge challenge.

Mr. Stevens: A huge challenge indeed.

Katie, Mr. Speaker, is just finishing her third year at U of C in a five-year, double degree program in economics and political science. When she's not studying, she's writing for the university newspaper, The Gauntlet, and working on a variety of clubs. If Katie could please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really very excited and proud to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly one of two very special men in my life in Calgary: my son, Mike Kryczka. Mike truly represents Alberta's entrepreneurial spirit. Years ago now, he ran his own landscaping company while attending the University of Calgary in the petroleum land management program. He has successfully built and sold two junior oil and gas companies in southern Alberta and has launched his third, Bowood Energy. He's not as old as you're thinking he is. He loves masters badminton, skiing, and golf and even fly-fishing, but most importantly Mike is a wonderful husband to Sarah and father to Emily, Jacob, and Joshua. I would ask Mike to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly 72 visitors from Webber Academy, 63 grade 5 students and nine adults. Webber Academy is a private school in the constituency of Calgary-West, and their goal is to prepare students for university and beyond as leaders in the community and in society.

I would just like to say a few words about Dr. Neil Webber, their president. As many of you may or may not know, Neil was an MLA and minister for 14 years in this Legislature, from 1975 to 1989, for the constituency of Calgary-Bow. He held four portfolios, and I told him that I'd only mention two at this time, Energy and Education.

He also has with him teachers Ms Janice Chan, Ms Janet Wushke, Mr. Daniel Mondaca, and parent helpers Ms Virginia Hughes and Mrs. Carol Celli. I would ask the Webber Academy students – I believe they're in the public gallery – to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and other members of the Assembly three members of my family who are visiting today from Red Deer. Actually, they belong to the Red Deer-North constituency. They are seated in your gallery. They are my sister, Audrey Graham-Thievin, her husband, Tom Thievin, and my niece, Kayla Thievin. Audrey is a jazz musician and a music teacher. Tom is a piano tuner. Actually, they're all musicians. Kayla was a member of the Red Deer Royals for many years, and she just finished her first year at NAIT in business. So I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a real privilege for me to be able to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of very dedicated people. I'm honoured that they are under contract through my office as the government caucus whip to look after the needs of the private members on the government side.

Mr. Speaker, in my office there are three young people working: Mr. Jason Zwart, our director of caucus; Mr. Bartek Kienc, the whip's administrative assistant; and Gerald Proctor, the whip's legislative assistant.

Going to the research branch, our senior researcher is Mr. Jason Ennis. Our researchers are Matthew Steppan, Greg McFarlane, Frank Ostlinger, who's leaving us right away to move over to Government Services – we wish him all the best over there – Jordon Copping, Emir Mehinagic, Richard Westlund, Andrea Hennig, Dan Hanson, Mike Simpson, and David Williams, who will be starting with them next week.

The legislative assistants are, in alphabetical order, Jan Aldous, Deb Arcand, Darlene Beckstrand, Chris Brookes, Jon Buck, Darla Cowdell, Daryn Fersovich, Carmen Frebrowski, Gladys Gammon, Mike Gladstone, Brenda Goebel, Phyllis Hennig, Cheryl Koss, Donna Krasowski, June Lam, Cheryl Lees, Stacey Leighton, Barb Letendre, Brendalee Loveseth, Bethany MacGillivray, Marie Martin, Shelly McCrae, Leah Ritz, Diane Todoruk, and Joanne Williamson.

These are the people who keep us on track year-round, Mr. Speaker, not just when question period is on, as we're all up here working with them all the time. They work with our constituency assistants as well, and they keep us well informed. I'm very grateful to them for their dedicated duties to us. I would ask them all to rise – they are in both galleries – and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce – and I'm not sure that they are here, but they'll be joining us very shortly if they're not – a group of students from Lloyd Garrison school in Berwyn. Berwyn is between Fairview and Peace River, about five and a half hours' drive from here, so it's quite an effort for them and quite a pleasure for me to get a school group to visit the Legislature. They're accompanied by teachers Mr. Rob Hoban and Ms Shaunna Regal and parent helpers Suzie Reyda, Bruce Warren, Mrs. Sandra Eastman, Mrs. Greit Heimstra, Mrs. Kim Alexander, and Mrs. Gwen Sukeroff. I don't believe they are here, but I'd ask the Assembly nonetheless to wish them a warm welcome. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've got two introductions today. I'll start with the first one. I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Mary Elizabeth Archer, who has been working as sessional support for the New Democrat opposition during the current session of this Assembly. Mary Elizabeth has an exceptional work ethic and brings an enormous amount of energy and cheerfulness to her work. So I take this opportunity now to thank her for her valued work and contribution to the work of the caucus. She is seated in the public gallery. I would now request her to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure as well to introduce to you and through you to the House Ms Elena Napora. Elena Napora is a member of the Edmonton Friends of the North Environmental Society. She is here this afternoon to observe the proceedings of the Assembly. Ms Napora is seated in the public gallery, and I would now ask her to rise to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Hlady: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce four people to you today. The first one is my summer student. She is visiting us here to spend a couple of days to see how business works between the Legislature and constituency offices. Her name is Melanie Fic, and I would ask her to please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, the other three that I have to introduce today I'm truly honoured and humbled to introduce to you. These three gentlemen are here to observe, hopefully, with any luck, the passing of Bill 206 today in the Legislature. These three gentlemen actually have felt the wrath of our federal government and, unfortunately, were thrown in jail. They served a total of 90 days in jail for nothing more than the crime of selling their wheat to someone other than the Canadian Wheat Board. I would ask Jim Chatenay of Red Deer, Bill Moore of Red Deer, and Ron Duffy of Lacombe to please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a couple of introductions today. I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a bright young woman who has come to work for us for the summer as part of the summer temporary employment program. She's an honours graduate from the University of Alberta with a bachelor's degree in cultural anthropology. She's also a committed community volunteer. She's currently working with the World University Service of Canada and the Edmonton Immigrant Services Association, and we're very pleased to have her working with us for the summer. I would ask Ms Janina Strudwick to rise and receive the warm recognition of the Assembly.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, is to introduce to you and through you to other members of the Assembly Héctor González and Leo Campos, two well-respected leaders of the Chilean community in Edmonton. Like thousands of Canadians of Chilean ancestry they were forced to flee their homeland because of the brutality and oppression of the Pinochet dictatorship. These two gentlemen are seated in the public gallery. I would ask Héctor González and Leo Campos to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a bit of a surprise to see the students from Webber Academy here today as I was talking to one yesterday and she failed to advise me that they were going to be here. It's a pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly my granddaughter Mackenzie Symonds. Mackenzie, if you would rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Automobile Insurance Reform

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government's auto insurance plan is seen as a failure even by government MLAs. One of them said about the plan this weekend, quote, there's nothing in it for the average Albertan, end quote, and, quote, this is a long way from what the Premier promised Albertans, end quote. My questions are to the Premier. The Premier's own backbenchers say that the government's auto insurance plan is a failure, so why won't the Premier himself admit it?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the government's ultimate goal is to establish a system of fair and affordable premiums that rewards good drivers with low premiums and doesn't penalize drivers based on age, gender, or factors that don't relate to your driving record.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we've taken steps to address immediate concerns such as freezing insurance rates, and we continue to work through the rest of the reforms. We continue to work through the rest of the reforms. Auto insurance, needless to say, is a very complex subject and very individual, and the government is still discussing the details of insurance reform. Bottom line: the strength of the system is that it's based on personal responsibility to be a good driver. Good drivers will pay fair and affordable premiums, and bad drivers will pay surcharges.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, an all-day standing policy committee meeting is scheduled on May 27 to finalize the reforms, and I would think it would be appropriate to comment at that time.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that public auto insurance plans in other provinces don't collect information on age and gender when you're applying for policies, as I discovered, will this government make it illegal for auto insurance companies in Alberta to collect this information, specifically age and gender information, from auto insurance policyholders?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what the policies are of the various insurance companies operating in the province, but certainly since one component of automobile insurance is compulsory – and that is the public liability and property damage component – we are in a position to regulate that component only.

Relative to the information that they seek, I don't know if that will be moot or not, because what we are saying is that we want to end the discrimination that insurance companies might gather relative to age and gender. Mr. Speaker, it stands to reason that they would gather information relative to driving records because a bad driver should be penalized.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, given the Premier's comments that so offended the Chilean-Canadian community made in response to a question on auto insurance last week, will he apologize for his remarks?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I will have more to say on that later. I understand that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands will probably be asking a question.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Achievement Testing

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Information has come out in the last couple of days that young students who do not pass their grade 3 achievement tests will be retested in grade 4. This has been widely condemned by educators, and various school jurisdictions in the province have said that they will not co-operate on this matter unless they're forced to. My questions are to the Premier. Can the Premier tell us if the tests being proposed for grade 4 were developed in Alberta specific to the Alberta curriculum, or are they being imported from out of province?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as the minister responsible is not here, I'll take the question under advisement.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll look for the answer tomorrow.

Can the Premier tell the Assembly if the government is also planning to retest in grades 7 and 10 students who do not pass their achievement tests in grades 6 and 9?

Mr. Klein: Same answer, Mr. Speaker. I'll take the question under advisement.

Dr. Taft: And once again I'll look for the answer tomorrow.

Can the Premier tell this Assembly what the costs of this testing scheme will be?

Mr. Klein: Again, Mr. Speaker, I'll take the question under advisement.

Government Travel Expenses

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, in October 2001 this government announced an immediate hiring freeze and made announcements to reduce government spending. Last week at the Public Accounts Committee meeting taxpayers were advised that all hosting expenses incurred by the government exceeding $600 are listed publicly in the Alberta Gazette. My first question is to the Minister of Economic Development. How much money did the Department of Economic Development save when in October 2001 it was announced that international travel would be deferred to reduce government spending?

Mr. Norris: Well, I think some clarity, Mr. Speaker, should be brought to the question the hon. member is asking. As I recall, in the fall of 2001 there was a fairly catastrophic event that caused us to review the safety of ministerial travel. I don't believe it had anything to do with the cost of the travel, so the question is I think twofold.

In answer to his original question, I will get him dollar figures, but in actual fact – and the hon. minister of international and government affairs may want to comment as well – it was seen as a safety measure primarily. Once it was deemed that it was safe to travel again, we did so because Alberta is a remarkably strong exporting province, Mr. Speaker. We have to sell our message around the world, and we're going to continue doing it.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister and this time regarding dollar figures: why did the Economic Development department spend close to $20,000 on a lunch and a reception in Mexico City on September 23, 2002, when this government was telling Albertans back home to reduce their expectations and make do with less?

Mr. Norris: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect the question has no relevance to what he's asking. Our job as Economic Development is to sell the best economic model in the world, which is Alberta. It's a very simple equation. We have the lowest tax regime, we have the best employment, and we have opportunities in forestry and agriculture and oil and gas, so our job, quite frankly, is to get out there and sell it. One of our largest trading partners – I believe it's number 3 in the list of the top five – is Mexico, so clearly, as any businessman would, it behooves us go get in front of our clients.

With reference to the specific lunch I don't know if there were 50 people or 500, but I can tell you one thing. [interjection] Our trade with Mexico – and I'm hoping you'll be silent long enough to hear this – has gone up approximately 500 per cent in the last four years, Mr. Speaker, from about $600 million to about $1.2 billion. I know that the hon. members who are very, very passionate about the agriculture industry will be pleased to know that our border is open to Mexico, and the agriculture minister may want to supplement as well. But I don't understand; if the reference is that we spent money promoting the province of Alberta to create more jobs, I'll never ever stop doing that.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, this time to the Premier: given that all other government departments must list hosting expenses over $600, why is the Premier exempt from the credit card policy directive issued under the Financial Administration Act, which is one of the rules regarding documentation to support ministry-related business expenses? Why are you exempt?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I think that names on credit cards are pretty well exempt under the FOIP legislation, which was supported by the Liberals.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Automobile Insurance Reform

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last October the Premier promised Albertans that all good drivers would see reductions in their insurance premiums. He subsequently modified this position to promise that most drivers would see reductions, then more recently that a few drivers would see reductions. Martha and Henry could be forgiven for wondering why Jackie and Ron in Saskatchewan or Mary and Tom in B.C. are allowed to enjoy cheaper public auto insurance while Albertans are left lining the pockets of profitable auto insurance companies. This is to the Premier. Given that Gordon Campbell, Grant Devine, and Gary Filmon, none of whom are strangers to the Premier's own Conservative ideology, have each recognized that public auto insurance is the best way to deliver lower rates to drivers, why won't this Premier?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, our goal, as I pointed out to the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, is to establish a system of fair and affordable premiums using the free enterprise and entrepreneurial system, at least that portion of the system that is regulated by government as it relates to public liability and property damage insurance, which is mandatory in this province. We want to arrive at a system that rewards good drivers with low premiums and doesn't penalize based on age, gender, or other factors that don't relate to driving records.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that B.C., Manitoba, and Saskatchewan have all developed public auto insurance programs without being threatened with bloody coups, how can the Premier continue to dismiss the Consumers' Association of Canada report that showed that public auto insurance delivers the cheapest and best product for drivers?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, historically and traditionally we've had private insurance in this province, and there hasn't been a problem with it until this government identified the problem. [interjections] This government identified the problem. It wasn't the opposition parties that identified the problem; it wasn't the third party NDs that identified the problem.

It was this government and the hon. Minister of Finance who brought the matter to caucus and said – and I'm paraphrasing right now – we have a problem, and the problem is that it's hurting the economy where young drivers, because they are male between the ages of 16 and 25, cannot be employed because of high insurance rates, nor can they afford to drive a personal car because of high insurance rates. She also pointed out that older males, males over 65 years of age, were being discriminated against because of their age and because of their gender. She said that we have to deal with this problem, and that's precisely what is happening right now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier apologize to Alberta's Chilean community for trying to conceal his government's bungled insurance reforms behind praise for ruthless and murderous dictators?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, you know, they say, "Bite your tongue," and I plan to do just that, because I am not hiding behind a ruthless killer.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to clarify my remarks about the Pinochet regime in Chile. I'm not an historian, nor is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, but I recently completed a paper for one of my university courses on some aspects on Chilean history. It was entitled Allende, Pinochet and the Chilean Media. I received a mark of 77 per cent, not great but not bad.

My research for that paper made me very aware that the Pinochet government was responsible for an untold number of deaths and for the destruction of the lives and hopes of many, many Chileans. I've since had the opportunity to visit Chile and have seen that things have stabilized there tremendously. I know that many people of Chilean origin living in Alberta still bear the scars and painful memories of that dark period in Chilean history, a history that lasted until 1989, if my memory serves me right, when free elections were held again.

2:00

My comments last week were not meant in any way to suggest personal support or admiration for the Pinochet regime. Quite the contrary. Again, I'll be glad to table the paper, that points out that Salvador Allende was elected president in 1970, the first communist ever to be elected in a democratic vote. The paper sets out the moves he made to nationalize a number of industries in Chile and the wrath that he incurred from the CIA and the Americans, ostensibly over the socialization of the copper mines.

My only purpose for making those remarks was to point out that socialism can often lead to unintended and negative repercussions in societies, and unfortunately that's what happened in Chile. It did. The remarks were made in the context of a discussion about the merits of socialism.

However, let me be clear. I had no intention of appearing to argue that the Pinochet government was in any way preferable to its predecessor. As a matter of fact, it was a brutal government.

I very much appreciate the contributions and the integrity of Chilean communities in Alberta and want them and all Albertans to know that I am aware that the mere mention of the name Pinochet can resurrect great sorrow. For that reason I will endeavour to be more appreciative of those concerns even as we debate important and timely issues in this Legislature.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'd be glad to table my term paper. The Chilean community and members of the opposition can read it and assess it, and maybe my learned friend across the way will give me a better mark.

Addictions Treatment for Youth

Ms Graham: Mr. Speaker, late last year I was appointed chair of the board of the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission. Since that time I have gained an appreciation for the excellent programs that AADAC sponsors and the very good people that are delivering these services to Albertans who suffer from alcohol and other substance abuse as well as gambling problems. However, it has come to my attention that we do have a gap in our continuum of services in that we lack detoxification and residential treatment services for the youth of our province. I was surprised to learn of this, because we do provide this for adults in the province at several locations. This is the number one unfunded priority for AADAC. My questions this afternoon are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Is the minister in support of AADAC's plans to develop these services for the youth of our province?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I share the concern expressed by the hon. member, and I would suspect that we could speak on behalf of all Albertans when we talk about concerns for addiction, whether those addictions are caused by gambling or alcohol or drugs. It is a problem that can be significant to individuals. It's a cost that is borne by all of society.

We are working very hard, Mr. Speaker, at coming up with comprehensive, integrated, and balanced programs that can help deal with these. AADAC has been involved not only by itself but working in collaboration with Alberta Children's Services and the Department of the Solicitor General. Youth services are important, and I know that AADAC does consider this to be a great priority. The priorities of AADAC have changed over time.

Mr. Speaker, I can say that I'm supportive of AADAC moving forward in making sure that its top priorities are dealt with. If AADAC believes and if the hon. member in her capacity as chair believes that this is a top priority, then I presume that it will come through as a top priority in future business plans for the operations of AADAC.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one other question to the same minister. In the face of growing substance abuse problems, including the use of the very destructive crystal meth drug, and given that there is a growing demand from the community, from parents, from child advocates, from a resolution at our PC conference two weeks ago, where it was unanimously supported that we do this, I'm wondering if the minister is prepared to act quickly to establish at least one detox and residential treatment centre in the province for children.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, it's difficult for me to answer as an individual expressing my support for such a program. I can say, though, that through the process of business plans we do fund the top priorities put forward by agencies of government like AADAC.

I think it's worth noting, Mr. Speaker, that in the year 2003-2004 AADAC did receive an increase in the magnitude of 25 per cent. A large portion of that increase was dedicated towards a tobacco reduction strategy, which was also considered to be a very high priority. For the 2004-2005 year a 10.3 per cent increase was tabled in the budget.

We do of course need to maintain the important services that AADAC provides, and it's a question of priorities. If AADAC were able to find within its budget the ability to move forward on a residential treatment facility for youth and they view it to be a priority, then I would certainly support it.

Electoral Reform

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, Alberta is the birthplace of many of the major democratic reform initiatives in Canada, including recall and citizens' initiatives, but now the government of Alberta just points a blaming finger at other jurisdictions while it lags behind in implementing democratic reform. One way the government could improve its democratic record would be to implement a citizens' assembly. My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier follow the lead of other provincial governments and look at alternative electoral systems to replace the outdated first past the post system?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the system has served us quite well over the course of history. Other than the question raised by the hon. member, I must say that I don't get a lot of cards and letters on this particular issue. Mind you, there is a small portion of the population who become involved in democratic reform, so to speak.

Quite frankly, I've spoken on this subject in the past, and I've said that this is precisely the kind of thing that the Alliance and the Conservatives had to put aside in order to focus on the big-picture items and the matters that are of concern to most Canadians and, I would say, most Albertans. Those are health, education, good infrastructure, safe communities, protection of the environment, responsibility for those less fortunate in society, and all of the other core services that government offers.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Premier: what plans does the government have to increase voter participation in provincial elections by people under 30?

Mr. Klein: That's an interesting question, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't aware that there was a problem relative to voters under 30 years of age. I would say to the hon. member, as I would say to anyone: "Get out there and vote. It's your democratic right. If you're over 18 years of age and a Canadian citizen, get out and vote. Vote for the party or the person of your choice, but please vote."

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Again to the Premier: what are the reasons that this government won't put a citizens' assembly on electoral reform in place?

2:10

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, nobody is asking. I guess it's a fundamental policy of this government that if it's not broke, don't fix it. Traditionally and historically we have operated a system here that has served the people of this province quite well.

If I can get political just for a moment, it's no wonder that the Liberals are upset with the system the way it is, because the majority of Albertans prefer a Conservative government. That's why there are 74 of us and seven of them.

Oil Sands Tailings Ponds

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The oil sands are in many ways the economic heart of this province, but the environmental impact of these megaprojects is a consideration. Potentially even more significant, however, is the environmental damage that might result should any of the safeguards that protect the environment from the waste generated by the oil sands fail. Ponds that hold the hazardous by-product, or tailings, of the oil sands are often built right next to rivers, separated from them by only a small earth dam. My questions are all to the Minister of Environment. What safeguards are companies required to have in place to ensure that these tailings ponds will not fail?

Dr. Taylor: Well, first of all, let me assure the member that the tailings ponds are built only when absolutely necessary, and as the technology improves, we will need fewer and fewer of these tailings ponds. So that's the first thing.

Secondly, before any tailing pond can be built, it has to receive the approval of Alberta Environment, has to receive the approval of my colleague's ministry, Sustainable Resource Development, and it has to receive the approval of the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. All of these hearings are public, so people can participate in these hearings and present their objections to this if they have any. It's a very open and public process. These tailings ponds are designed by experts, engineers that can do these things. So it's, as I say, a very open, public process only done when necessary and under the strictest regulations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell this Assembly who would be responsible for the damage that would result should one of these tailings ponds fail or leak and destroy the surrounding environment?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, it would be the responsibility of the people that built the tailing pond. As part of the construction of any tailings pond or a big plant like that, the company that builds it is required to put up a security deposit of some sort. It may be a bond. It may be a letter of credit, whatever is appropriate. As we move forward, if that company were to fail or didn't have enough money for whatever reason to reclaim a tailings pond if it needed to be reclaimed or in the unlikely event of some failure, then the bond or the letter of credit would be called into effect, and that bond or letter of credit would cover the cost.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: who is responsible for reclaiming these ponds back to a healthy state so that they don't leave a legacy of toxic waste for our children like the Sydney tar ponds?

Dr. Taylor: Well, once again, Mr. Speaker, under the act it's the oil companies' responsibility. We're talking about oil companies right here. If it were a chemical company and they had to reclaim something in the area of the chemical company, it would be the chemical company's responsibility. Remember that whether it's a chemical company or an oil company, we do have the bond, we do have the security deposit, and if they were not able to pay for it, that bond or that security deposit would pay for it. It would not come out of Alberta taxpayers' pockets.

Ophthalmology Services in Calgary

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the Liberal opposition has obtained a copy of a letter sent from Dr. Megran, chair of the Medical Advisory Board of the Calgary health region, to a group of medical specialists in Calgary who have continually raised concerns over the current chief of ophthalmology in the Calgary health region. These physicians have raised their concerns several times that the current chief of ophthalmology is putting his and his family's business interests ahead of his duties as chief of ophthalmology for the region, and I will table the letter. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Has the minister taken any action to resolve concerns raised by physicians over the current chief of ophthalmology for the Calgary health region?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition was good enough to provide me with a copy of the letter to which he refers, which, I understand, he will be tabling at the appropriate time. It was difficult to read because he I think highlighted all of the pertinent, most important portions of it, and by doing so, when he photocopied it, he blacked out much of the portions that I think he wanted to bring to my attention.

But let me say this, Mr. Speaker. I recognize the issue of the bylaws of the regional health authority as it relates to conflict of interest. The regional health authority is in the process of revising their conflict-of-interest bylaws, and I think that has been largely because of the Medical Advisory Board supporting the need to do this, and I think that that's appropriate for the regional health authority to do.

Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is making allegations about the allocations of surgery time, allocation of surgery time at the regional health authority is really done by the chiefs and department heads of surgery, who once a year meet, and over the last two years they have discussed the block allocation process, and they've determined to keep it as it is.

So, Mr. Speaker, I have looked into this matter, and if the regional health authority thinks that it should change its conflict-of-interest bylaws, I think that's an appropriate step.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister ensure that someone from outside the Calgary health region and preferably outside the province investigates conflict-of-interest allegations surrounding the current chief of ophthalmology?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I haven't seen any need to do that. I think the regional health authority is doing an appropriate set of steps right now to deal with the issue.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Given that new conflict-of-interest guidelines for the Calgary health region have been sent to the minister in the past, fairly recently, and more than once for approval, can the minister explain why it is taking him so long to approve them?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we've had reviews of conflict-of-interest bylaws and bylaws from throughout all of the health regions. One can appreciate the magnitude and size of such a job. We take the care to go through it in some fine detail. That's the reason. It's as simple as that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

WorldSkills Trades Competition

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Skills Canada announced today some great news, that Calgary has been chosen as the host city for the 2009 WorldSkills competition. Great work by the bid committee. Now, Mr. Minister, I understand that WorldSkills brings together youth from around the world to compete and demonstrate the skills of their various trades and technologies against some very demanding international standards, but how will hosting this event benefit Albertans?

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, this has been a good week for Calgary: lacrosse with the Calgary Roughnecks and, of course, the "Go, Flames, go" that we're all so enthused and thrilled about.

In terms of benefits there are at least two that we could talk about immediately from WorldSkills. It would be estimated at this time that there would be something around 750 competitors – they're going to bring families; there will be coaches; of course, there will be judges – that will come from other countries and have to be housed and fed and all of that in Calgary during those competitions. I'm briefed, Mr. Speaker, that it's likely to be a benefit of something in the order of $46 million to Alberta and then, of course, more specifically Calgary.

The biggest thing is the attention that skilled trades will get through this competition. I attended the WorldSkills in Montreal in 1999, and if you want to see an Olympic-like event or perhaps even an Oscar-like event, I mean, this is it. They have the parade with the flags. They have at the end the gold, silver, and medal presentations. I mean, this is a big deal. We've been trying for many, many years to find a way to show young people in Alberta that there's great money, there's a great career, there's great work in the skilled trades in this province, and we hope that this will take us a long way down the road to proving that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister. I understand that the provincial Skills Canada Alberta competition is currently taking place in Edmonton. How is this event related to the WorldSkills program?

Mr. Dunford: Well, again, I think it might be obvious. We're trying to draw the similarities in the skills competitions to the way they deal with athletics. You know, you have local competitions, then you move on to provincial competitions, to national competitions, and then of course to world competitions.

So really what's happening in Edmonton – I think it starts tomorrow, and I would encourage all members to write it into their little agendas to try and get over there, especially members here in Edmonton, that would have perhaps a little better access. In any event, again, it's the idea that we spread the skills competition into the high schools and into first-year apprenticeships right across this province, give them a provincial competition to work toward, and then the winners will move on to Winnipeg later this year for the nationals.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Captive Wildlife Standards

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Near Three Hills, Alberta, the GuZoo animal farm continues to operate despite significant animal welfare and human safety concerns, which were exposed as long as five years ago. The permit for this farm continues to be renewed on a temporary basis year after year despite the fact that it has not complied with the majority of recommendations that were issued to it by an Alberta Environment assessment team back in 1999. My first question is to the Minister of Environment. Why has the government renewed the permit for this establishment when it has failed for five years to comply with the recommendations from the Alberta Environment assessment team?

Dr. Taylor: I think that when we changed the ministries, that has been moved from my ministry to the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development. If it hasn't, I'll give you your answer, certainly, tomorrow.

But I'll ask the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development to supplement.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am aware of the situation that the member is bringing forward, and within two weeks I plan to tour the facility personally and personally inspect it to see what the issue is. In fact, the opposition members are welcome to come with me on a tour if they want. We have nothing to hide. It's an issue that's out there, and if it needs to be dealt with, we'll deal with it at that time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: will the minister now finalize the updated captive wildlife standards manual before any further zoo permits are issued in the province of Alberta?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, again, that's a good question. As a minister that is responsible for a ministry, we always on an ongoing basis review our policies as we move forward as a government, and I'll look at this policy. If there is a need for change, of course we always do that.

Ms Blakeman: I'll try that again, Mr. Speaker. The question to the minister was about finalizing the updated captive wildlife standards manual, not a sort of constant review. When do we get a final version of this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Again, you know, when this process is finalized, then of course it will be available to the opposition also.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Government Accountability

Dr. Pannu: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, when does a government choose to become accountable? Is it when, after 33 years in power, it becomes secretive, arrogant, and out of touch, or is it when it repeatedly fails to deliver on its promises like cheaper auto insurance, lower power costs, or smaller class sizes? My questions are to the Premier. When will the government choose to become accountable for its failure to deliver auto insurance rates on par with public systems in the rest of western Canada?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as I said previously, we have not finished the exercise. There is an all-day standing policy committee meeting scheduled for the 27th of May to finalize the reforms. We will then require cabinet and caucus approval, and then we can begin communicating the entire package to the public. All we're getting now are bits and pieces and dribs and drabs, I guess, that are being unfortunately leaked or somehow obtained outside of SPC meetings that indicate to the media that this is going to be government policy when in fact there is no government policy relative to the regulations surrounding insurance at this time.

I would say to the injury lawyers and the insurance companies who are running ads battling each other and battling the government and to the NDs and the Liberals to stay cool and stay calm and stay tuned, because we will deal with this issue and we will come out with a policy paper relative to the regulations shortly after the 27th of May.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When will the government choose to become accountable for the failure of its deregulation policy to deliver lower electricity costs to homeowners and businesses?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I forget how the question was framed, but immediately we'll become accountable for deregulation.

As to why we will be and are accountable, I'll have the hon. minister explain.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question, because in fact accountability always starts at the onset. In 1994 when the first discussion about deregulation or creating a competitive market for electrical generation came through, it was estimated that we would not need the power that we're using today until 2014. So it's a record of this Premier's policies on balanced budgets and reduced debt coupled with the ability to deliver a fundamental underpinning for economic growth called electricity which is the reason why we're the most prosperous province in the dominion of Canada today.

Dr. Pannu: My final supplementary to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: when will the government choose to take responsibility for failing to fund the Learning Commission recommendations for reducing class sizes?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I will take most of that question under advisement and have the hon. minister respond in more detail when he is present in the Legislature, but I can tell the hon. member that we have begun the process of undertaking the recommendations of the Learning Commission. I'm not sure how many were rejected.

Mr. Hancock: Two were rejected.

Mr. Klein: Two recommendations were rejected. I think that they referred to administration more than anything else. But all of the other recommendations and particularly those recommendations as they affect the classroom, classroom size and so on, have been adopted, Mr. Speaker. It's just a matter of implementing those recommendations over a period of time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Innovation Strategy

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has launched four pillars that provide a plan for this province to guide it for the next 20 years. One of these pillars is "unleashing innovation," and it's no secret that our advantage above all and other jurisdictions rests upon us unleashing innovation to its greatest potential. As chair of the Alberta Research Council I find it extremely important that this province develop the components of an integrated, province-wide innovation system, identify specific value-added opportunities, and align its policies to support this strategy. My questions are to the Minister of Economic Development. What is the minister doing to develop such a strategy?

Mr. Norris: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. member for not only his question but his involvement in ASRA. As he knows, we had a joint meeting in Calgary recently with the board of directors of AEDA, the Alberta Economic Development Authority, and ASRA to talk about specifically these kinds of issues. It was determined with the hon. Minister of Innovation and Science that we do need a go-forward plan, and as such we've released the value-added strategy. That was done about a week and a half ago.

What it calls for primarily, Mr. Speaker, is to seize the opportunity that we have right now with a remarkable economy and to look at how we will work with industry, clearly not telling them how to do it, because that's not the way we operate in this government, to understand and identify what the barriers are to value added and unleashing innovation. To that end, of course, as I said, the strategy was released about a week and a half ago. I am sure the hon. member has a copy, and I would be happy to discuss it further with him at any time, as I would with any member of the House.

Mr. Johnson: Securing Tomorrow's Promise I believe is the name of this plan that you talk about. How does it further the opportunities available for rural Albertans such as those in my constituency?

Mr. Norris: Well, I mean, this is really the remarkable part of the program, Mr. Speaker, in that we have a rural development strategy that was co-chaired by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and the hon. Member for Wainwright, and it talks about some remarkable opportunities. The agriculture department, quite frankly, under the current minister has done a remarkable job identifying their particular program, which is called 20-10 by 2010, which refers to $20 billion in manufactured products and $10 billion in primary products by the year 2010. Very, very aggressive targets but it does look at it.

What we are trying to do, to answer the hon. member's question, with rural Alberta leaders and industry is understand what their barriers are to value adding specifically in agriculture but also in forestry. To that end, the hon. Member for Dunvegan and I the other day went up to a forestry conference to talk about value-added strategies in their particular industry. I know that the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View has a very significant value-added forestry opportunity.

So the long and short of it is, Mr. Speaker, that what we are doing is what we've always done, which is consult with industry. Whether it's located in rural or urban Alberta does not matter to us one iota. It's about jobs for Albertans, and it's about where the opportunities are, and we will continue to work with rural Alberta and the leaders to find out what the opportunities are.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Pure Lean Inc.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The now-closed Pure Lean plant near Oyen did not go through all the steps of inspection. An NRCB decision report completed on August 28, 2003, illustrates that the NRCB and Alberta Environment decisions were fast-tracked. My first question is to the Minister of Environment. Given that the report states, quote, this proposal was exempt from the Alberta Environment provisions related to the design of facilities, approvals, and notifications, end of quote, can the minister please explain why?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, Pure Lean was coming with new technology. Most hog farms have technology that puts hogs in a real tight space and real small pens, and Pure Lean was coming with some new technology. There were big pens, and they handled manure in a different fashion. In fact, the fellow, Bob Notenbomer, that developed the Pure Lean technology is a constituent of mine. It was new technology, so some of the old regulations didn't necessarily fit the new technology. As the program moves forward, of course, it's ultimately the NRCB that decides, and Alberta Environment works closely with NRCB as it moves forward.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister: is it common practice to fast-track applications for intensive livestock operations by not having Alberta Environment studies completed at the time of an NRCB decision?

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, really the only thing we're involved with is the water decisions around the approvals of intensive livestock. With any intensive livestock decision they have to apply for a water licence, and there's a full approval process, and on a water licence there is an appeal process as well. That's a decision that's made by a director, and there is the Environmental Appeal Board that people can appeal to. The one that's got the most press recently certainly is the Capstone one in Red Deer, where a director made a decision that was appealed.

With the intensive livestock we are only involved at the water licensing level. There is a process for the water licence, and that process is appealable to the Environmental Appeal Board.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I want to just make a clarification so that there is an understanding in the House that this project began prior to the new Agricultural Operation Practices Act being introduced and the NRCB taking over the handling of intensive livestock. The development permit for that project was provided by the municipality, and Alberta Agriculture was involved to some extent at that time. The NRCB came into the picture on this particular project over an issue on composting some time down the road. I don't want to leave the impression that this was approved under the present legislation and operation of the NRCB.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. This time to the minister of agriculture if she's willing: what role did Alberta Agriculture play in the development, then, of the Pure Lean plant near Oyen. What exactly was their role?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my earlier supplemental answer, it was the municipality who granted the approval for this operation, as was the practice at that time. Any support that Alberta Agriculture would have would be of a technical nature to provide technical assistance to, one, the municipality, if it was asked for, and/or to the proponents and to look at different aspects of the operation.

Again, Mr. Speaker, this was prior to the NRCB assuming responsibility for the Agricultural Operation Practices Act.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we participate in Recognitions, there are a number of items that I'd like all members to observe. First of all, let me call on the hon. Deputy Speaker.

Legislative Assembly Pages

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Chairman and I would like to draw to the attention of all hon. members that we are going to lose five of our wonderful pages when this spring session ends. They are Maya Gordon, Greg Andrews, Andrea Balon, Natalie Wilson, and Lara Kinkartz. These fine young people will be leaving their duties in this Assembly following the close of the spring session, whenever that might occur. I ask all hon. members to join me in recognizing the great efforts of our pages, who daily showed patience and understanding of our many demands. They carry out their tasks with attention to duty and in good humour. Oh behalf of all hon. members I would ask our head page, Maya Gordon, to give each retiring page our gift and with it our best wishes to each and everyone. We are honoured to have had you work with us in the Alberta Legislature.

2:40

The Speaker: Hon. members, these are remarkable young people. They sent me a letter dated May 10, 2004. The subject is retiring pages, and it's addressed to me, but it's addressed to all of you. I'd like to read it to you. It says:

Mr. Speaker,

The Page Recruitment posters state "Get More Than a Job", and nothing could be more true. We can say, without a doubt, we all received more than a job. To us, our time at the Legislature is also a lesson in life and politics that no university, however well funded, could provide. It could also be thought of as a social life for a busy student, meeting like-minded peers that we shall hopefully keep in contact with for years to come. Even when nothing else, our time here was entertaining, and perhaps it is a pity that Question Period is not broadcast during prime time.

We believe there is a popular misconception within the public that politicians are to be superhuman, and as Pages, this misconception was corrected quite fast. Indeed, the members of the House are very much real people; real people with real gifts, flaws, and quirks. By observing them, we see that it is quite possible for real people to do great things with their lives, and stands as an inspiration for ourselves to aim higher than we might have previously thought possible.

There is no amount of thanks that would truly express our gratitude to you, the Sergeant at Arms, and all members of the Assembly for the opportunity to work among the honourable people of this prestigious building. Indeed, being a Page is an invaluable experience that will hold worthwhile throughout our entire lives. If every citizen of this province was as informed as we are now, parliamentary democracy in Alberta would certainly be better served. Although such is impossible, it is now our duty to use our knowledge of the political process to improve society in whatever path we chose.

For nearly a century, the laughter and footsteps of Pages has crisscrossed through this building, and we truly are blessed to have been able to experience every moment in the Alberta Legislature. Thank you, and everyone, for this unique and wonderful opportunity.

Farewell, and please don't forget about us!

[applause]

Hon. members, I'd also draw to your attention that in the latter part of the 20th century, the very, very late part of the 20th century, the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane came into the world. Happy birthday.

Now might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: Then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the request of one of our soon to be departing pages, Natalie Wilson, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to other members of the House two constituents who are seated in the members' gallery. Angela Bentley and Felicia Mathison are both attending the University of Alberta, Faculty of Science. They both received academic excellence awards and Rutherford scholarships. We'd ask them to stand and receive the recognition of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's my pleasure to reintroduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly our group from Lloyd Garrison school at Berwyn who are here observing the workings of the Legislature. It's my pleasure to welcome Rob Hoban, the teacher, and Ms Shaunna Regal, a teacher that's accompanying the group, as well as parent helpers Mrs. Suzie Reyda, Mr. Bruce Warren, Mrs. Sandra Eastman, Mrs. Greit Heimstra, Mrs. Kim Alexander, and Mrs. Gwen Sukeroff. Certainly, they've travelled a long way to be with us today, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, and then would you carry right on with your recognition.

Ms Blakeman: Happy to. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a great teacher and artist who is largely responsible for the strong reputation of the theatre design section of the University of Alberta fine arts department, David Lovett. You will hear more about him directly. With him is one of his students and an award-winning designer in his own right, Robert Shannon. I would ask them both to please rise and accept the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

head: Recognitions
David Lovett

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, it is my very great pleasure to recognize David Lovett for his contribution to Edmonton's and Alberta's theatres, opera, and ballet. As we anticipate his retirement from the renowned University of Alberta fine arts theatre design program, we can be thankful that David chose in 1969 to emigrate and take a job teaching here.

He went off to UBC in 1972, but Tom Peacocke, then department chair, wooed him back in 1976 to teach theatre design. David has also designed for Theatre 3 and Phoenix Theatre in Edmonton, designed the production of Romeo and Juliet which opened the new Citadel Theatre in 1976, and designed numerous productions at the Banff Centre for the opera and ballet sections and for Alberta Ballet's first Nutcracker and Firebird. We even loaned him to Stratford Festival.

David also designed the first production of South Pacific for Edmonton Opera. The second production was recently designed by his student Robert Shannon. "More, better, faster, grow," was David's favourite instruction.

Thank you, Mr. Lovett, for bringing us such fabulous designs. You enriched your students, the artists, and the fans of theatre, opera, and ballet. Thank you so much for your contribution.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

National Nursing Week

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize Nursing Week, which will be celebrated May 10 to May 16, 2004, across Canada as well as internationally. The theme for this year is Nursing: Knowledge and Commitment at Work, which is reflective of the fact that care provided by nurses is knowledge-based and that nurses deal with increasingly complex cases and issues in the workplace.

Registered nurses make a difference. They play an important role in our health and in our communities. They are dedicated, compassionate, caring, and make a very important contribution to our health care system.

Nurses are appreciated, and I hope that by my rising today in the Legislature, the people of Alberta will take a moment to thank nurses for the job they do 365 days a year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Leaders of Tomorrow Awards

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the recipients of the leaders of tomorrow awards handed out in my constituency recently. The awards are designed to honour young people in the community that stand out in their efforts to make a difference by volunteerism and service to individuals in their community in general.

Awards were handed out in both Camrose and Wetaskiwin, and the recipients were well deserving. Out of 33 outstanding nominees from the Camrose ceremony the leaders of tomorrow were Ryan Koehli, Jen Ross, Jarett Rude, and Kelsey Symyck. In Wetaskiwin there were 22 nominees, and the winners of the awards were Katrine Maygard, Rachael King, and Melissa Henke.

It gives me great pleasure to congratulate the nominees and award recipients for the contributions they make to our communities and for the important work they do as volunteers. They are the leaders of today, and their services and generosity will surely make them leaders of tomorrow. It is with great pride that I recognize my young constituents today and wish them continuing success on their way to a promising future.

Thank you.

Alberta Summer Games

Mr. Tannas: Mr. Speaker, today it is my pleasure to recognize the great efforts of volunteers in High River, Okotoks, and the MD of Foothills who are hosting Alberta's 2004 Summer Games from July 22 to July 25. Volunteer committee members Diane, Ellen, Carol, Shawn, Doug, Lee, Marg, Traci, and countless others are eagerly preparing to host teams and visitors from across Alberta. Teams will compete in events as diverse as badminton, baseball, BMX, canoeing, golf, basketball, football, soccer, softball, rugby, swimming, athletics, field hockey, and many more sporting endeavours.

Mr. Speaker, all Albertans are invited to attend. Information and details are available by calling (403) 652-3005 or through the web site www.albertagames.com. I hope to see you all there.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

National Nursing Week

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. From May 10 to May 16 Canadians across the country are getting together to celebrate National Nursing Week. Nurses are the front-line workers in our health care system and are dedicated to restoring, maintaining, and improving the quality of life for all Canadians. From delivering community health programs to providing life-saving care in hospital situations, nurses are involved in many aspects of their patients' well-being.

In 1985 the Canadian Minister of Health established National Nursing Week to recognize the many contributions of the nursing profession to the health of Canadians. Every year National Nursing Week falls on the second week in May to coincide with Florence Nightingale's birthday on May 12.

This year the theme for National Nursing Week is Nursing: Knowledge and Commitment at Work. Nurses are working in an increasingly complex environment, and to best serve their patients, nurses need to stay up to date on the latest research and technology. The theme this year recognizes the commitment of nurses to provide the best care possible by combining new information with more traditional best practices and lessons learned.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Wamer.

Apex Youth Awards

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to rise in this Assembly to recognize four outstanding young individuals from my constituency. On Wednesday, April 7, Melissa Krizsan, Gloria Layton, Virginia Layton, and Kristen Reti were honoured as winners at the third annual Apex youth awards. These awards were created to recognize remarkable young citizens and are hosted each year by the Rotary Club of Taber and the Taber Times.

The Apex awards are unique because they do not focus on athletics or academics but rather acknowledge extraordinary individuals who illustrate dedication and commitment to serving their communities. These are exceptional individuals that unselfishly dedicate their time and effort to helping others.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that members of the Assembly join with me in congratulating the four winners of the Apex youth awards and the 21 nominees for their exceptional service and dedication to their communities.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Art from the Heart

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday, on May 7, the Rotary Club of Calgary Sarcee hosted its sixth annual Art from the Heart dinner and auction at the Red & White Club at McMahon Stadium. Over 400 people attended the very successful, fun event.

What is amazing about Rotary Sarcee Club is that it is one of the youngest and smallest in Calgary, but the 25 members are confident that if they indeed raise their goal of $40,000, they will have raised $235,000 in total to benefit many worthwhile projects, including Salvation Army Children's Village, Closer to Home Community Services, and Rotary Challenger Park.

This year the money raised will provide the YWCA's Mary Dover House, an emergency residence for women and children in need, with an urgently needed community kitchen. In 2002 Mary Dover House provided shelter for 1,800 women and 422 children who required crisis or transitional accommodation.

First Calgary Savings, the YWCA, and Ernest Manning high school volunteer club also provided support to the fundraiser.

My husband, Gord May, and I are proud to be members of the Rotary Sarcee Club, and I heartily congratulate this Little Club That Could and did and continues to do so.

Thank you.

It gives me great pleasure to introduce this bill. Its purpose is to amend the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act by introducing a nonrefundable tax credit to help parents pay for additional costs associated with education worth 50 per cent of the costs to a maximum of $3,000 which would be available to parents with children enrolled within a primary or secondary school. The credit could be used whether children are attending public, separate, or independent schools. Parents who home-school would also be eligible for the credit, and it could also be used for tutoring expenses.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 212, the Alberta Association of Former M.L.A.s Act.

Low-cost Electricity for Alberta Act

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. I request leave to please introduce a bill being the Low-cost Electricity for Alberta Act. This bill will be known as Bill 216.

It will recognize that electricity should be treated as an essential service and not a commodity subject to radical price swings, and it will implement a manner in which we can once and for all unplug this province from electricity deregulation.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 216 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Bill 217

Government Accountability (Identification of Expenditures) Amendment Act, 2004

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In recent years Albertans have seen continuous rising in our public expenditure. However, myself and my constituents are concerned with the creeping effect of budget increases. Bill 217, that I'm introducing today, is to provide a mechanism for the government departments to improve their accountability for each budget increase over the prior year. Each budget increase should be justified, account for its purpose, and be tracked and reported for its results.

The Speaker: I would sincerely ask the hon. member to move first reading.

Mr. Cao: Yes. I request leave to introduce this bill being Bill 217, the Government Accountability (Identification of Expenditures) Amendment Act, 2004.

[Motion carried; Bill 217 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two quick tablings. My first is a tabling of a letter to Mr. Bob Nicholson, president of Hockey Canada, congratulating him and all members of Hockey Canada for a second straight gold medal win at the 2004 World Hockey Championships in Prague, Czechoslovakia. I might note that Team Canada has done its part for the country, and we all wish the same for the Flames: to do their part for the province in the Stanley Cup. I'm sure they will.

My second tabling is to Mr. Brad Banister, president and general manager of the Calgary Roughnecks lacrosse club, congratulating them on winning the 2004 Champion's Cup.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. the Premier, who indicated in question period the other day and again today that he would table the appropriate number of copies of his paper Allende, Pinochet and the Chilean Media in response particularly to the misapprehension of what was said in Hansard, which was that as a dictator he, meaning Pinochet, was no better than Allende.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on behalf of.

Ms Blakeman: I have two tablings, and one is on behalf of. Thank you. The one on behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview is the appropriate number of copies of the letter that he referred to, which is on the issues of conflict of interest in the ophthalmology department and the Calgary regional health authority.

The second is documents that I referred to during one of my questions, that being five copies of concerns raised by Zoocheck Canada on the GuZoo facility, including some very distressing photographs of how animals are being treated.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table the appropriate number of copies on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar – this is under the Financial Administration Act – of Treasury Board directive 14/98, and it was dated at Edmonton, Alberta, the 16th day of December 1998.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you very much. I would like on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to table the appropriate number of copies of a memo outlining all the concerns the Auditor General raised regarding the need for detailed documentation to support ministers' expense reimbursements. This came from a deputy minister to cabinet ministers.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Highlands to table two letters. The first letter is addressed to the Premier from hundreds of members of the Chilean community expressing their outrage at the "offensive, disrespectful, and inaccurate remarks" made here in the Assembly the other day by the Premier concerning the terrible events in Chile in 1973.

Mr. Speaker, the second tabling is a letter dated May 7, 2004, written by Leo Campos Aldunez to the Edmonton Journal. The letter again is asking the Premier to apologize to the thousands of Canadians of Chilean ancestry who fled their homeland because of the brutality of Pinochet's dictatorship.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings, annual reports. The first is the annual report for 2003 of APEGGA, the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists and Geophysicists of Alberta.

The second tabling is the financial statements dated June 30, 2003, for the Certified Management Accountants of Alberta.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, proper notice having been given on Thursday, May 6, it's my pleasure to move that written questions 67, 70, 74, and 82 through 88 be dealt with today. There being no further written questions, there are none to stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

Trade Director's Dinner

Q67. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that the following question be accepted.

What was the government purpose that resulted in the trade director for Mexico, Central America, and Caribbean charging $226 to the Alberta taxpayer at the Four Seasons restaurant on September 30, 2002?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Economic Development I'm pleased to indicate that we are prepared to accept Written Question 67.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to close the debate.

Ms Carlson: Thank you. We thank the minister for that and wish that that could happen with all of the written questions we've asked.

[Written Question 67 carried]

Utilities Service Quality Plans

Q70. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that the following question be accepted.

What established service quality benchmarks is the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board using to ensure quality customer service following its December 19, 2003, announcement to implement service quality plans for regulated gas and electric rate providers and electric-wire owners effective January 1, 2004, and how were these benchmarks determined?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Although this ministry is responsible for the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, it of course does not direct the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. In that light, there has been discussion between the ministry and the utilities board. Of course, it is well known that the bulk of this information is found in abundance in the public domain. Recognizing the reduced assets of a party that's moving from seven to five, we will be very pleased to ensure that the EUB can provide this information for them.

Mr. Bonner: Well, I'd like to thank the minister for his co-operation in providing that information and certainly inform him that the five that are here plus the other person that I think he referred to is here as well to keep him accountable.

Thank you.

[Written Question 70 carried]

Utility Companies' Performance Reports

Q74. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that the following question be accepted.

How often are utility companies in Alberta required to submit performance reports?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not going to spend a great deal of time talking about the inadequacy of the question; in fact, what type of performance report? What factors should it cover? How would they define the word "performance"? How would they define the word "report"? But to be extremely, as usual, charitable and transparent and accountable, I will answer the question by saying that the utility companies provide the Energy and Utilities Board with quarterly reports once every three months on their customer quality of service plans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Yes. On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar I'd like to thank the minister for his response.

[Written Question 74 carried]

3:10 Tuition Fee Policy

Q82. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Dr. Massey that the following question be accepted.

What measures has the government taken to implement the Auditor General's recommendation contained in his 2002-2003 annual report that the Department of Learning measure whether the tuition fee policy and its related programs are effective in making postsecondary education affordable to students?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm privileged to respond on behalf of the hon. Minister of Learning and indicate that the government is prepared to accept Written Question 82.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Yes. I'd like to thank the Minister of Learning for that response.

Thank you.

[Written Question 82 carried]

Tuition Fee Policy

Q83. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Dr. Massey that the following question be accepted.

What measures has the government taken to implement the Auditor General's recommendation contained in his 2002-2003 annual report that the Department of Learning require public postsecondary institutions to comply with the tuition fee policy?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you. Once again on behalf of the Minister of Learning I'm prepared to respond, indicating the government's willingness to accept Written Question 83.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Yes. Once again I'd like to thank the minister for his co-operation.

[Written Question 83 carried]

Department of Learning Grant Processes

Q84. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Dr. Massey that the following question be accepted.

What measures has the government taken to implement the Auditor General's recommendation contained in his 2002-2003 annual report that the Department of Learning improve its grant processes by not approving the money before defining the nature and extent of the grant commitment or establishing accountability criteria?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you. I'll respond and indicate that the government is willing and prepared to accept Written Question 84.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry to close the debate.

Mr. Bonner: Once again we'd like to thank the minister for his co-operation on this particular issue.

[Written Question 84 carried]

Management of Parks and Protected Areas

Q85. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that the following question be accepted.

What measures has the Ministry of Community Development taken to conduct an evaluation of the cost effectiveness of "service delivery alternatives" to managing parks and protected areas to correct serious flaws in its implementation as indicated in the Auditor General's 2002-2003 annual report?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to indicate that I'm prepared to accept this question with amendments, which I'll get into shortly. Those amendments, of course, were shared with the opposition prior to 11 this morning as per procedures.

Now, as to the amendment, Mr. Speaker, I have reviewed this question quite carefully, and in the interest of trying to respond to it accurately, I'm proposing that we do amend the question to more accurately reflect the specific recommendations made by the Auditor General. I believe those amendments have been circulated.

I should also take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to briefly explain the rationale for these minor changes to the question in order to better reflect the exact wording used specifically by the Auditor General as opposed to the wording used by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, which I think will be helpful in considering the question.

The change in wording from "to managing" to read "for operating" reflects what we are considering here as better ways to operate our sites and not alternatives to parks and protected areas management altogether.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, nowhere in the Auditor General's report is it suggested that there are serious flaws, as the Member for Edmonton-Centre has indicated in the original wording. In fact, the parks agency is merely looking at better ways to evaluate the cost effectiveness of service delivery alternatives and to get the best possible service for Albertans.

That having been said, I'm pleased to amend Written Question 85, and it would now read as follows:

What measures has the Ministry of Community Development taken to conduct an evaluation of the cost effectiveness of "service delivery alternatives" for operating parks and protected areas as recommended in the Auditor General's 2002-2003 annual report?

Thank you.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It comes as no surprise to us that the minister wouldn't accept a written question that indicated that his department had serious flaws in it, so we are not surprised at the amendment but, in fact, are pleased that he would at least consider this written question. So we are in support of the written question as he has amended it.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to close the debate.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We appreciate it whenever we can get information from this government, so we thank the minister for this.

[Written Question 85 as amended carried]

Park Management Contracts

Q86. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that the following question be accepted.

What measures has the Ministry of Community Development taken to implement the changes to the process for awarding and monitoring park management contracts to private operators as recommended in the Auditor General's 2002-2003 annual report to ensure that taxpayers' dollars are not being wasted?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will accept Written Question 86 with amendments. I would just indicate to the House that the amendment, as I will read shortly, was shared with the opposition prior to 11 a.m. today as required by procedures of the House.

Now, specifically to Written Question 86 I should just point out again that in order to fairly and accurately represent what the Auditor General's recommendations were and in particular as they relate to the question here before us, I need to explain briefly the rationale for the changes that I'm suggesting for the House's consideration to the original motion.

Again, what we're talking about here, hon. members, is making improvements, not making dramatic changes, hence the need for the question to be amended.

Secondly, once again for all members' ears, I would ask people in the House to please choose their words as carefully as possible, because in fact no taxpayer dollars are being wasted anywhere in our provincial parks or our protected areas. Those dollars that come from taxpayers that are allocated to those areas, Mr. Speaker, are being stretched to the max, and they certainly are not being wasted.

That having been said, we are looking to improve some of the processes, and therefore I would move that Written Question 86 be amended to now read as follows:

What measures has the Ministry of Community Development taken to improve the process for awarding and monitoring park management contracts to private operators as recommended in the Auditor General's 2002-2003 annual report?

Thank you.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, this minister and I are never going to agree on whether or not this government is responsible for wasting taxpayer dollars, but we will accept the amendments.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to close the debate.

3:20

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, we'd like to thank the minister for providing the information to us.

[Written Question 86 as amended carried]

Commission on Learning Class-size Recommendations

Q87. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Dr. Massey that the following question be accepted.

What progress has the government made and what measures have been put in place to implement all the class-size recommendations of the Alberta Commission on Learning?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will respond and indicate that the government is prepared to accept Written Question 87.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry to close the debate.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you. We appreciate the information being supplied by the minister.

[Written Question 87 carried]

Utilities Disconnections

Q88. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that the following question be accepted.

How much money has the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board distributed to energy customers whose utilities were disconnected in error between January 1, 2004, and March 9, 2004?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I just feel this afternoon that my life is an open book, and as such and in the spirit of such transparency we'll of course accept again the question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to inform the minister that we certainly appreciate his co-operation.

[Written Question 88 carried]

The Speaker: Well, that clears that section of the Order Paper.

Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been served on Thursday, May 6, it's my pleasure to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions 88 through 105, 108 through 123, 128, 134 through 143, 146 through 162, 164 through 168, 174 through 180, 183 through 205, 207, 208, 209, and 210.

Thank you.

[Motion carried]

Capital Plan Transfer of Funds

M88. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount broken down by transaction of funds transferred into and out of the capital plan between April 1, 2003, and February 17, 2004.

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, the answer is nil, and therefore we have to reject. I think the hon. member is referring to something else. We don't transfer money in and out of the capital plan at all. If she is talking about something else, maybe the capital accounts, then she might want to phone me and I'd be delighted to give her the summary, but we would have to reject this motion as it's written.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to conclude the debate.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will request that information from you. Thank you for that. We stand corrected.
Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 88 lost]

Fiscal Stability Fund Transfers

M89. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount broken down by transaction of funds transferred into and out of the Alberta fiscal stability fund between April 1, 2003, and February 17, 2004.

Mrs. Nelson: Again, Mr. Speaker, I think we're onto a different track. We don't have a stability fund in the province of Alberta, so we're going to have to reject the motion for a return. I'm gathering – and I'm making an assumption – that she's probably referring to the sustainability fund. Again I'll make the same offer. If that's what you're looking for, just give me a call and I'll provide the information. But we have to reject the motion as it's written.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to close the debate.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will reword that motion and forward it to you. Thank you for agreeing to provide the information.

Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development IT Initiatives

M90. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent on information technology initiatives within the Department and Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development broken down by initiative for the fiscal year 2002-2003.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Deputy Premier I accept Motion for a Return 90.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're very pleased to get the answer to this question. I believe I asked a similar question to other ministries last week and was denied, so thank you very much.

[Motion for a Return 90 carried]

Drilling in Parks and Protected Areas

M91. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total number of oil and gas wells drilled within 25 kilometres of a park or protected area in Alberta between January 1, 1985, and February 17, 2004, broken down by the type of well and the number of wells drilled for each year.

Ms Carlson: This becomes quite critical information when we're talking about managing the wild and protected areas of our province and particularly in terms of managing wildlife corridors and habitat. So I am hoping that the government will provide this information to us.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, we'll not be able to provide that information; therefore, we're accepting the rejection mode of questioning here. In fact, the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board information service collection offers a huge, huge amount of data on oil, gas, and oil sands drilling and well information.

We're rejecting the request not, certainly, out of a mean heart or more work; we're just rejecting it in the fact that we don't think the question is in fact answerable, because we cannot be sure that the exact information the member is seeking is available from the board in the form she desires. For example, the number and the size of parks and protected areas have changed considerably since 1985 as this government has moved forward to fulfill its commitment of protecting well over 12 per cent of the available land base.

I know that after the next elected event in which she participates, the member is going to have ample time to be able to do a great deal of research in finding the answer to this question.

Ms Carlson: Well, Mr. Speaker, the sarcasm does not become him. That information is available. We know that it is. We will put another motion for a return on the Order Paper, then, asking for that information by specific year, and perhaps he could answer the question at that point in time.

Drilling in Urban Areas

M92. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total number of oil and gas wells drilled within 50 kilometres of an urban area in Alberta between January 1, 1985, and February 17, 2004, broken down by the type of well and the number of wells drilled for each year.

Ms Carlson: Now, perhaps the urban areas have not been quite so movable as the park boundaries have and this information will be more readily available.

Mr. Smith: Well, in fact, Mr. Speaker, the urban boundaries are extremely movable. I think that any administration that has seen since 1992 the explosive growth in Alberta coupled with the creation of almost a half a million jobs, balanced budgets, orderly debt paydown – we've seen a tremendous infusion of welcome people from across Canada. Of course, well over 600,000 people have moved to this province, and that has created tremendous changes in the urban makeup of this great province and, in effect, would make it again extremely difficult if not impossible to reflect on the member's question.

So I would have to refer to my previous answer and again reject the motion.

3:30

Ms Carlson: Well, Mr. Speaker, if I believed that this minister was acting in good faith – some other ministers have this afternoon – we would have seen at least an amendment where he would have given some information for one or two or three years past. In fact, anyone who thinks of the kind of growth that we've had in this province, it hasn't changed the urban boundary such that this information would be impossible or even hard to provide. Once again, he is trying to deny information to Albertans.

Premier's Office Bonuses

M93. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total amount of each bonus and aggregate amount of all bonuses awarded to senior officials within the office of the Premier over the 2002-2003 fiscal year broken down by position and amount paid to each official.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Motion for a Return 93 you may recall, as I hope other members here will as well, that we did deal with this matter when we discussed Motion for a Return 34. Subsequent to that discussion we of course approved an amendment for Motion for a Return 34 and tried to list all departments as being covered under the amendment. So the amended Motion for a Return 34 as passed currently reads:

A breakdown of the aggregate amount of all bonuses awarded to employees within the government of Alberta listed by department over the 2002-2003 fiscal year broken down by the range of bonus dollar amounts and the number of employees who received a bonus within that range.

That having been said, Mr. Speaker, Motion for a Return 93 is addressed through the amended Motion for a Return 34 because, of course, issues in this regard that pertain to the office of the Premier are in fact included under that amended motion. With that having been said, there is no need for Motion for a Return 93 to be pursued any further since the essence of it is covered in the amended Motion for a Return 34, as I've indicated. So we'll be rejecting this one.

Thank you.

Executive Council Bonuses

M94. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total amount of each bonus and aggregate amount of all bonuses awarded to senior officials within Executive Council over the 2002-2003 fiscal year broken down by position and amount paid to each official.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the same reasons that I just indicated regarding Motion for a Return 93, it is not necessary to have Motion for a Return 94. It is already covered under the amended Motion for a Return 34, that I spoke to just moments ago. So, on that basis, we're able to reject Motion for a Return 94 since it is essentially covered also under Motion for a Return 34 as amended.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 94 lost]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Natural Gas Pipelines

M95. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the number of natural gas pipeline ruptures, bursts, breaches, and leaks that have occurred in Alberta in the calendar years 2002 and 2003 broken down by location and level of environmental damage.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would direct the member to the Energy and Utilities Board's information service that includes information such as a field surveillance inspection incident list and the annual field surveillance report. Information is available on incidents from as far back as 1975, including information on pipeline hits. It is available for viewing at no charge, or the member can get information by annual subscription updated monthly and pay for the service, as does everyone else.

Therefore, with that abundant amount of public information in the domain today we are compelled to reject the motion.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to conclude the debate.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my understanding that the environmental damage is not listed there and/or any moves that they have made to repair such damage. So what he's suggesting isn't adequate information.

Department of Economic Development Bonuses

M96. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total amount of each bonus and aggregate amount of all bonuses awarded to senior officials within the Ministry and Department of Economic Development over the 2002-2003 fiscal year broken down by position and amount paid to each official.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Economic Development I'm going to indicate that the essence of this motion for a return is already addressed through amended Motion for a Return 34, that was accepted by this House. I won't bother to go into all the explanation in that regard, because I covered it, I think, adequately a few minutes ago when we were talking about MR 93 and 94. On that basis, MR 96 is not required, because it's already taken care of through MR 34 as amended. So we can reject it, in other words.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie?

Ms Carlson: No. Thank you. Question.

Department of Environment Bonuses

M97. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total amount of each bonus and aggregate amount of all bonuses awarded to senior officials within the Ministry and Department of Environment over the 2002-2003 fiscal year broken down by position and amount paid to each official.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, the essence of Motion for a Return 97 is covered under Motion for a Return 34 as amended. We'll just be reminded of the comments I made earlier this afternoon when addressing motions for returns 93 and 94, which make MR 97 essentially covered by MR 34 as amended. So, on that basis, on behalf of the Minister of Environment we are able to reject MR 97.

Department of Sustainable Resource Development Bonuses

M98. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total amount of each bonus and aggregate amount of all bonuses awarded to senior officials within the Ministry and Department of Sustainable Resource Development over the 2002-2003 fiscal year broken down by position and amount paid to each official.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Motion for a Return 98 it, too, is covered under MR 34 as amended and approved by this House earlier this year wherein all departments of government will be responding and addressing the issue of bonus dollar amounts and numbers of employees and so on. So, on that basis, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development I can indicate that MR 98 is not required and can therefore be rejected since its essence is also covered under MR 34 as amended.

Thank you.

3:40 Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations Bonuses

M99. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total amount of each bonus and aggregate amount of all bonuses awarded to senior officials within the Ministry and Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations over the 2002-2003 fiscal year broken down by position and amount paid to each official.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations I'm going to indicate that MR 99 is also covered under MR 34 as amended and approved by this House, and it will provide for a breakdown of the aggregate amount of all bonuses awarded to employees. It'll be listed by department and so on. So, on that basis, MR 99 is not required and can be rejected accordingly.

Thank you.

Business Credit Card Statements for Municipal Affairs Department

M100. Mr. Bonner moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the deputy minister, all assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders for the Department of Municipal Affairs.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs I just want to indicate that this particular motion for a return is of course addressed specifically to the Department of Municipal Affairs, as you've just heard from the hon. member opposite, but in fact amended Motion for a Return 24, that was approved and accepted by this House earlier this year, opens up that particular motion to include all government departments. As such, we do not need to address them individually as each MR is suggesting here. They are going to all be addressed under MR 24 as amended, and as such we are able to reject Motion for a Return 100 on that basis.

I'll just quickly read this once, Mr. Speaker. MR 24 as amended indicates the following:

A statement of all credit card expenses for the fiscal year 2002-2003 incurred by all deputy ministers, all assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders in aggregate for each government department categorized by accommodation, travel, hosting, and miscellaneous expenses.

So that information will come forward under MR 24, as I've indicated.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member to conclude debate?

Business Credit Card Statements for Revenue Department

M101. Mr. Bonner moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the deputy minister, all assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders for the Department of Revenue.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of the hon. Minister of Revenue to indicate that Motion for a Return 101 is also essentially covered under Motion for a Return 24 as amended. So for the reasons that I just put on record a couple of minutes ago regarding the information requested, we are able to reject MR 101 since, again, its essence is covered under MR 24 that was amended and approved by this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member to conclude debate? No?

[Motion for a Return 101 lost]

Business Credit Card Statements for Transportation Department

M102. Mr. Bonner moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the deputy minister, all assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders for the Department of Transportation.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Transportation I can indicate that MR 102 can also be rejected since it is essentially also covered under MR 24 as amended and approved by this Assembly, wherein a statement of all credit card expenses, et cetera, will in fact be provided through that particular MR as amended. Transportation is of course one of the many ministries within government, so it is going to be reflected therein. Therefore, we can reject MR 102.

[Motion for a Return 102 lost]

Department of Transportation IT Contracts

M103. Mr. Bonner moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Ministry of Transportation on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Motion for a Return 103 I can indicate on behalf of the hon. Minister of Transportation that this motion is essentially covered under MR 10 as amended and approved earlier by this Assembly, wherein it was amended to read as follows:

An order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the government of Alberta on contracts for information technology services and a listing of vendors providing these services for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

That having been said, the information is going to be provided under Motion for a Return 10 since the Department of Transportation is of course going to be reflected therein. So, on that basis, we are able to reject Motion for a Return 103.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 103 lost]

Calgary Courthouse Public/Private Project

M104. Mr. Bonner moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all correspondence received by the Premier between January 1, 2002, and November 18, 2003, regarding potential conflicts of interest over the usage of a private/public partnership to build the Calgary courthouse.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, I have to advise the House that on behalf of the Premier and the government I'm rejecting the question. There are a number of reasons for rejecting the question.

First of all, under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, all members of the House should be aware, correspondence that's written to the government is not necessarily public and can only be made public in certain circumstances if the writer of the letter agrees. So it wouldn't be within our purview to accept a question under an order of the Legislature to deliver documents which might otherwise not be deliverable under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and, in fact, without the permission of the writer of the letter.

Secondly, the question is far too broad and ambiguous. It's not clear from the question what conflicts of interest they might be talking about. There are a number of different areas. I don't want to make their case for them, but one might look at some of the questions which arose earlier in the project relative to the concern of the judiciary with the possibility of there being conflicts that might arise if other businesses were collocated in a courthouse with them, the conflicts of interest that might come out from that perspective.

Or they might be asking for letters which refer to a potential conflict of interest with respect to somebody who might be bidding on the process. If it is the process, then I can assure the hon. members that the process has been open and transparent in every way. There was a request for information which went out, and as the Minister of Infrastructure has said in this House on numerous occasions, many parties responded to the request. The next time it went out, it was a request for qualifications, and there were some 15 organizations, groups that responded to the request for qualifications. Then that was narrowed down to a request for proposals, to which four groups responded, and those were narrowed down to three groups and then ultimately to two groups before, finally, the final group.

With respect to all of that process, there was a fairness commissioner put in place precisely to deal with the issue of potential conflict of interest and to ensure that everybody bidding on the process had the same information and the same opportunity to participate.

So if they're talking about conflict of interest with respect to the process itself, again FOIP wouldn't allow the release of the letter automatically, if there was one. I'm not aware that there are any, but if there were letters, they wouldn't be releasable, because you'd have to get the permission of the person that wrote them. In order to answer this question, you'd have to explore the full gamut of what they were talking about in terms of potential conflicts.

Then, finally, Mr. Speaker, the process is still underway. The Minister of Infrastructure and his department in conjunction with Justice and Finance are working as we speak with the parties involved to finalize the contract with respect to building the courthouse.

So for all those reasons, Mr. Speaker, the question is not appropriately framed and can't be answered appropriately, and I'd ask the House to reject it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry to close debate.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I thank the minister for his comments, but I think as well, when we've seen how this whole process for the building of the Calgary courthouse is unfolding, that it is even more important that this information be shared with all members of this Assembly and with the public.

It is my understanding that we've had comments from some members of the judiciary who have expressed the potential conflict of interest that can occur if the Calgary courthouse were run under a P3 model. As well, we also have seen tremendous cost overruns that have occurred. When we start talking here about conflicts of interest, I think there were also some concerns that one of the companies that would be involved in the private/public partnership also has a number of court proceedings that are taking place right now.

This is a very timely question. It is also a question of openness and transparency, that certainly has not occurred. This is certainly the reason that this motion for a return was put forward. If there ever was a time when this government could be open and transparent, this is it, and I would urge all members of the Assembly to support Motion for a Return 104.

Thank you.

Public/Private Partnerships for Infrastructure Development

M105. Mr. Bonner moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all reports in the possession of the government detailing a cost analysis for the use of private/public partnerships for infrastructure development.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I've outlined many times in this House to the member the process that a proposal goes through. They all have to present a business case for the proposal. There's a very detailed analysis of that done, and any project that is found to be in the public interest can move forward, but until they get to that point, then in fact they can't.

The information that we are given is very much in confidence and proprietary, and as the members quite well know because they served on the all-party committee dealing with freedom of information and protection of privacy, that kind of confidential information just simply cannot be released.

So for those reasons we find it necessary to reject this particular question.

Region 1 Child and Family Services Authority IT Contracts

M108. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Dr. Massey that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the region 1, southwest Alberta, child and family services authority on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much. Well, it's a pleasure to respond and indicate that the government is prepared to accept MR 108 with amendments, specifically moving that the amendment include "and each of the child and family services authorities or their predecessors, referred to in motions for returns 108 to 116 inclusive and 121," after "region 1, southwest Alberta, child and family services authority."

Mr. Speaker, the rationale for that is fairly obvious. It will enable us to be more effective in moving the motions for returns. It will encompass the intent of 108 and all of the motions that follow, up to and including 116 and 121. Also, we have shared this information with the opposition colleagues prior to 11 this morning, and I believe it was circulated to all of the members today.

The Deputy Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is in fact a very, very helpful amendment, and we thank the minister for providing it and taking the request for information seriously when it was in fact a serious request. So we will be supporting this amendment and once again thank her.

[Motion for a Return 108 as amended carried]

Public/Private Partnership for Calgary Hospital

M117. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Mr. Bonner that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the business and cost analysis for the proposed private/public partnership for the hospital in south Calgary including any analysis of the savings accrued by using a private/public partnership over a public model.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that we don't have much information on the south Calgary hospital. It's in its infancy. Therefore, we have to reject this motion.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member to conclude debate.

Ms Carlson: Thank you. It would seem that there are some costs or some projections that should be available to share. We would at least anticipate a future commitment for you to provide that information as it is available.

Premier's Travel to Asia

M118. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount of and a copy of all receipts for the Premier's trip to Asia between January 11, 2004, and January 21, 2004, broken down by travel costs, dining costs, costs for hosting events, entertainment costs, accommodation costs, and miscellaneous costs.

Ms Carlson: We think that these kinds of trips definitely should be scrutinized by taxpayers and hope that they provide this information.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to indicate on behalf of the Premier that he has obviously said in this House that he'll be making information available very shortly with respect to this matter. So I believe the issue being requested in MR 118 will be addressed through that process, and I understand it will be very soon. Therefore, Motion for a Return 118 can be rejected at this time on that basis.

The Deputy Speaker: To conclude debate?

Community Development Minister's Travel to India

M119. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount of and a copy of all receipts for the Minister of Community Development's trip to India between January 11, 2004, and January 21, 2004, broken down by travel costs, dining costs, costs for hosting events, entertainment costs, accommodation costs, and miscellaneous costs.

Ms Carlson: In fact, it's not just our caucus who's interested in these receipts. As the minister knows, his own constituents would like to see them.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated in response to MR 118, there will be more information coming out very, very soon regarding international trips. This was a trip which, for the most part, was also one I made on behalf of the ministry and in conjunction with the Premier, so that will be addressed in that information release that is coming out very soon. That having been said, I won't take up more of the House's time other than to say that Motion for a Return 119 can be rejected on that basis at this time.

Treasury Board Minutes

M120. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all minutes taken at meetings of the Treasury Board between January 1, 1994, and February 17, 2004.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Motion for a Return 120 requests copies of all the minutes taken at meetings of the Treasury Board between January 1, 1994, and February 17, 2004. The deliberations of Treasury Board are in fact confidential. They allow fiscal directions to be determined and options to be evaluated before finalizing their budget. Now, the culmination of the decisions from the Treasury Board are very obvious within the budget documents that get presented in this House and that in fact are debated in this House by ministry.

Further, I would refer hon. members to Beauchesne 428(gg) for reference to this that actually reaffirms the position to reject this motion for a return.

[Motion for a Return 120 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: We have a request that I would like you to hear. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity. I would like to ask for unanimous consent of this Assembly to revert to private members' bills at 5 o'clock this afternoon.

Thank you.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Ministry of Solicitor General IT Contracts

M122. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Ministry of Solicitor General on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. Solicitor General I would just indicate that the essence of MR 122 is also covered under MR 10 as amended and approved by this Assembly earlier this year, wherein it reads that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the government of Alberta on contracts for information technology services and a listing of vendors providing these services for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

That having been said and because the Ministry of Solicitor General is one of our government departments, it will be reported on through Motion for a Return 10 as amended. Therefore, Motion for a Return 122 can be rejected at this time.

The Deputy Speaker: To conclude debate?

Ministry of Infrastructure IT Contracts

M123. Mr. Bonner moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Ministry of Infrastructure on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Infrastructure I just want to indicate that MR 123 is also covered under MR 10 as amended and approved by this House. I won't repeat everything I said just three minutes ago, but on the same basis as what I said, Motion for a Return 123 can be rejected at this time since it's already covered under MR 10 as amended.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: To conclude debate?

4:10 Personnel Administration Office IT Contract Tendering Policy

M128. Mr. Bonner moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the current information technology services contract tendering policy and process for the Personnel Administration Office.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, thank you. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment I just want to indicate that Motion for a Return 128 has essentially already been addressed and covered by Motion for a Return 16, and we may refer back to that as a precedent if you wish. That having been said, we can at this time reject Motion for a Return 128 on that same basis.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member to conclude debate?

[Motion for a Return 128 lost]

Business Credit Card Statements for Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Department

M134. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the deputy minister, all assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders for the Department of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I've already indicated that previous motions for returns are able to be rejected on the basis that they are covered under other motions. This particular one is covered under Motion for a Return 24 as amended, and a statement of all credit card expenses, et cetera, will be provided for each government department. Therefore, since Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development is one of our departments, it will be addressed under MR 24 as amended, and as such we're able to reject MR 134 before us at this time.

The Deputy Speaker: To conclude debate?

[Motion for a Return 134 lost]

Business Credit Card Statements for Justice and Attorney General Department

M135. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the deputy minister, all assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders for the Department of Justice and Attorney General.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General I can indicate that MR 135 as requested will be addressed through the amendment to Motion for a Return 24, wherein each government department will report. As such, Motion for a Return 135 is not needed and is able to be rejected at this time since the Department of Justice and Attorney General will be covered under MR 24 as amended and approved by this House earlier.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: To conclude debate?

[Motion for a Return 135 lost]

Business Credit Card Statements for Children's Services Department

M136. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Dr. Massey that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the deputy minister, all assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders for the Department of Children's Services.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, with respect to Motion for a Return 136, again, the essence of this one is already referred to and covered under MR 24 as amended. For the same reasons I've indicated earlier regarding other motions for returns, this one can be rejected at this time because the information essentially will be provided under MR 24 as amended and approved by this House earlier.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: To conclude debate?

[Motion for a Return 136 lost]

Business Credit Card Statements for Learning Department

M137. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Dr. Massey that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the deputy minister, all assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders for the Department of Learning.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Learning I can indicate that MR 137 is also being addressed through MR 24 as amended, wherein a statement of all credit card expenses, et cetera, will be provided for all the positions and titles for each government department, and that includes the Department of Learning, of course. So on that basis we can reject Motion for a Return 137 at this time.

The Deputy Speaker: To conclude debate?

[Motion for a Return 137 lost]

Business Credit Card Statements for Innovation and Science Department

M138. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Dr. Massey that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the deputy minister, all assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders for the Department of Innovation and Science.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Innovation and Science may I just indicate that MR 138 is also going to be addressed under MR 24 as amended and approved by this House earlier this year. That having been said, Motion for a Return 138, regarding the provision of credit card expenses and so on, is not required at this time, and we are able to reject it.

Arigato.

The Deputy Speaker: To conclude debate?

[Motion for a Return 138 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: May we have consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have with us today in the members' gallery a group of 20 elementary school teachers from the Seoul metropolitan office of education in Seoul, South Korea. This is a public school district in Seoul, and they serve approximately 1.6 million students from kindergarten to grade 12.

The Korean teachers are here for a month-long teacher development program, the fifth such program provided under contract to Edmonton public schools. These teachers will study in 14 different elementary schools where they will observe western teaching methodologies, practise teach in classrooms, and share lessons about Korean education and culture with district students. They will reside in homestays with staff at Edmonton public schools. We welcome this sort of collaborative, crosscultural education program, which speaks to the quality of programming available in our schools and the competence of Alberta teachers.

They're accompanied today by Ann Calverley, Nina Brown, Caroline Letourneau, and Sharon Lougheed, in whose class a couple will be observing later this week. I'd ask them to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Business Credit Card Statements for Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development

M139. Mr. Bonner moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and the minister's executive assistant.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development may I just indicate that Motion for a Return 139 is also essentially addressed under Motion for a Return 26 as amended and approved by this Assembly earlier this year. That having been said, of course, that particular ministry is one of the government departments that will be reporting a statement of credit card expenses, et cetera, as outlined, and therefore Motion for a Return 139 can be rejected at this time, as I said, on that basis.

To our guests in the gallery may I just say: anyo hasayon. Kamsam hamnida. [As submitted]

The Deputy Speaker: To conclude debate?

[Motion for a Return 139 lost]

Business Credit Card Statements for Minister of Energy

M140. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the Minister of Energy and the minister's executive assistant.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Energy with respect to Motion for a Return 140 I can indicate that this is also going to be addressed through Motion for a Return 26 as amended and approved by the House. That having been said, MR 140 can be rejected on that basis.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: To conclude debate?

[Motion for a Return 140 lost]

Business Credit Card Statements for Minister of Children's Services

M141. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Dr. Massey that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the Minister of Children's Services and the minister's executive assistant.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Children's Services I can indicate that Motion for a Return 141 will also be addressed through Motion for a Return 26 as amended and approved by this House earlier this year. Therefore, Motion for a Return 141 is able to be looked at through that particular mechanism, and we are on that basis able to reject Motion 141 at this time.

Kamsam hamnida. [As submitted]

[Motion for a Return 141 lost]

Business Credit Card Statements for Minister of Innovation and Science

M142. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Dr. Massey that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the Minister of Innovation and Science and the minister's executive assistant.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Innovation and Science I can indicate that Motion for a Return 142 will be addressed through Motion for a Return 26 as amended and approved earlier this year by the House. Therefore, a statement of all credit card expenses related to members of Executive Council, their executive assistants, and so on with the breakdowns provided for will be addressed. So on that basis MR 142 can be rejected at this time.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: To close debate?

[Motion for a Return 142 lost]

Business Credit Card Statements for Minister of Learning

M143. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Dr. Massey that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the Minister of Learning and the minister's executive assistant.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Learning I just want to indicate that Motion for a Return 26 as amended and approved by this House earlier this year will address this matter. As such, Motion for a Return 143, before us at the moment, can be rejected on that basis.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: To conclude debate?

Ministry of Children's Services IT Contracts

M146. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Dr. Massey that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Ministry of Children's Services on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Children's Services I just want to say that Motion for a Return 146 is not required since the issue of information technology services, the contracts and the vendors and so on, has been addressed through Motion for a Return 10 as amended and approved by this House earlier this year. As such and on that basis, we are able to recommend rejection of Motion for a Return 146.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: To conclude debate?

Utilities Consumer Advocate

M147. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents, correspondence, and recommendations from the Utilities Consumer Advocate to the government regarding consumer utilities issues between September 22, 2003, and February 17, 2004.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This request would involve hundreds of documents that contain personal billing, consumption, and other information entrusted to us in confidence by Alberta's electricity and natural gas consumers. It would also contain sensitive business intelligence entrusted to us by Alberta's electricity and natural gas utilities under a similar protection of privacy. Therefore, Government Services is prepared to reject this Motion for a Return 147.

The Deputy Speaker: To conclude debate?

[Motion for a Return 147 lost]

Utilities Consumer Advocate

M148. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents, including but not limited to correspondence, business plans, budgets, and contracts, related to the creation of the Utilities Consumer Advocate office between September 22, 2003, and February 17, 2004.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We'll be accepting Motion for a Return 148.

The Deputy Speaker: To conclude debate, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Yes. Mr. Speaker, we would like to thank the minister for his openness in providing us with that information.

[Motion for a Return 148 carried]

Shut-in Natural Gas Wells

M149. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents regarding government compensation to companies whose natural gas wells in the Athabasca-Wabasca-McMurray region have been ordered shut in by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board.

Mr. Smith: We'll reject that.

The Deputy Speaker: To conclude debate, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If he isn't going to give us any information, he could at least tell us why he won't give us any information.

Coal Bed Methane

M150. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents regarding the development of regulations and/or guidelines for the development of natural gas in coal, or coal bed methane, between January 1, 2001, and February 17, 2004.

Mr. Smith: We'll reject that, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on the motion.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, it's my view that the minister, in rejecting a legitimate request from the opposition to table this thing . . .

Mr. Norris: Can't hear you.

Mr. Mason: I'm sorry. I'll start over. Thank you very much, hon. minister.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Energy, when he rejects a legitimate request for information from the opposition, ought to at least have the courtesy for members of the House to stand up and explain why that might be. You know, in this particular case the whole issue of coal bed methane is a very, very serious issue facing the future of this province. We've seen in other parts of the continent – particularly I think it's Wyoming if I'm not mistaken – that there has been tremendous damage to the environment by this process.

The minister has on a number of occasions talked about how much different Alberta's situation is, yet the fact of the matter is that the process of drilling for coal bed methane is going ahead and without adequate consideration, without adequate testing or research to determine what is going to be the effect on the environment and on the water table and all kinds of things. Many, many people are concerned about this.

Such a cavalier approach on the part of the minister to these kinds of matters and showing a lack of respect for members of the Assembly by just saying, "Stand up, all you trained seals, and vote this down because I tell you so," is not just showing a lack of respect for the opposition but showing a lack of respect for the government members in particular, and I don't think they should stand for it, Mr. Speaker.

We'll wait and see if the minister has anything to add to this before we have further debate on the matter and on subsequent motions that might be addressed by that minister this afternoon.

With that comment, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat for now.

The Deputy Speaker: The chair would observe that the hon. member is asking for something that's an impossibility. By the rules of our House, to which all sides have agreed, the minister is not allowed to reply to your comments.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to conclude debate.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very disappointed that this minister would refuse to share any information with us about what is going to be the largest new industry in this particular province in the future. Now, it's going to be critical in terms of the balance between business and energy sector development and environmental needs for the province and for the people that this information be public, be open, and be open for debate.

The kind of arrogance we see reflected not only by this minister's rejection of the questions but rejection of any reason for not disclosing information is indicative of how he intends to proceed in the future, and that does not bode well for the future of this province.

I would request that he reconsider his answer and provide some level of detail in writing to us in the very near future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 150 lost]

Coal Bed Methane

M151. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents, including but not limited to correspondence, meeting agendas, and meeting minutes, of the natural gas in coal multistakeholder advisory committee between January 1, 2003, and February 17, 2004.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will be rejecting this motion as well and feel compelled to reply to the earlier comments of the member. I will do it briefly and succinctly out of respect for the private members of this Assembly, whose precious time we are taking answering these questions that they know full well how to get answers to. I'm trying to move quickly through this so that private members' business, particularly important ones of the Canadian Wheat Board, can proceed. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Whoa. We're in Motions for Returns, right now, hon. members.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on Motion for a Return 151.

Mr. Mason: The minister started by saying that he was going to answer the question and do it succinctly, and all he did was attack the opposition for asking the question and say that the opposition was trying to hold up the private member's bills. [interjections]

4:40

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the House has a level of courtesy, which I'd hoped a number of people would return to; that is, we have one person speaking at a time. Right now, the only person . . .

Mr. Lukaszuk: Why would we revert to that?

The Deputy Speaker: That doesn't invite a comment, hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands is the one that's been recognized.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. All the minister has to do is give three or four sentences explaining why the information is not going to be forthcoming. That's all that is asked. You know, if he showed as much respect for the opposition's role in this place as he claims to do for the backbenchers and their private members' bills, maybe we could get on with both today.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to conclude debate.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have for the past three weeks given unanimous consent to this House to revert to private members' business, putting aside our questions. We have had to revert to Written Questions and Motions for Returns because this government refuses to provide information, refuses to be open and accountable, and refuses to share any information about their future developments with the people of this province. This is in fact the only recourse left open to us, which they are once again denying us access to.

We have had some cases of extreme co-operation here this afternoon from ministers other than the Minister of Energy. We have had several ministers here provide excellent information to us. The Minister of Children's Services agreed to provide detailed information and consolidate a number of motions for returns, which we also agreed to in order to speed up this process. So I would say that we in the opposition are acting in extreme good faith, and this government, particularly the Minister of Energy, is acting in extreme bad faith.

Crude Oil Royalty Marketing Process

M152. Mr Bonner moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all economic reviews and evaluations of the Alberta crude oil royalty marketing process between January 1, 2003, and February 17, 2004.

Mr. Smith: A report is being done, Mr. Speaker, that in the fullness of time will direct an answer to this question. Therefore, we are compelled to reject.

The Deputy Speaker: To reject?

Mr. Smith: To reject.

Electricity Transmission Development

M153. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents, business plans, and correspondence regarding the government's electricity transmission development policy between January 1, 2001, and February 17, 2004.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, we'll reject this motion and direct the member to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, where it can be dealt with more appropriately.

Mr. Bonner: Once again, for the minister who more often than anybody else in this House tells us that his government is open and transparent, that type of a reply to Motion for a Return 153 is certainly unacceptable, Mr. Speaker.

We have not had such a boondoggle in this province since we went to electricity deregulation, that has cost Albertans somewhere in excess of $8 billion to this point, and it is continuing to soar. Certainly, as the price of oil and natural gas continue to rise at rapid rates, the cost of electricity generation is going to increase as well. So for the minister not to be open and accountable and not to share these documents with all of us in the Assembly and all Albertans is unforgivable.

Redwood Energy Well Blowout

M154. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents, reports, statistical data, and correspondence regarding the blowout of a Redwood Energy well located near Edson between June 7, 2001, and February 17, 2004.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the process compels us to reject this motion and would direct the member to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, that can provide any interested person with extensive information about this and other events.

Electricity Deregulation

M155. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents, business plans, performance measures, and statistical data regarding the government's deregulation of electricity between January 1, 1992, and January 1, 2001.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I would direct the member to business plans and performance measures all readily available in the public domain and, therefore, am compelled to reject Motion for a Return 155.

Mr. Mason: I'm compelled to rise on this one, Mr. Speaker, because it was more than just the business plans and the performance measures contained in them that was asked for here. Now, this is probably one of the central requests before the Assembly today. Here is the paper trail on electricity deregulation. I commend the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for asking this question because he's basically asking: what has the government been doing on electricity deregulation? Why did they do it? What's happened? What have they been doing to monitor and analyze the situation as it progressed? You know, the public of Alberta and certainly the opposition parties really are perplexed about why it is the government has stuck with electricity deregulation all along.

In the face of it, it would seem that it would be almost an irrational course of action given the dramatic increase in electricity prices and the growth of bureaucracy, which the government claims to be opposed to. It's far more complex than it used to be. There's a lot more bureaucracy. There are more bodies running it. More people have to be assembled and documents kept and so on. This is a critical piece of the package of information that we need in this Assembly in order to analyze whether or not there's some rationale behind the government's actions in essentially doubling the cost of power in this province. Why would a government do that and persist in that course of action in the face of all the evidence to the contrary, Mr. Speaker?

So I would urge members of the Assembly to vote aye for this particular motion for a return because this is probably one of the key ones of the entire session.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:50

Mr. Snelgrove: As we carefully weigh the extreme relevance of this motion, could the minister tell us before we cast our vote on this, considering this goes back up to 12 years, how much time and how much cost this might actually be in his department to consider answering this motion?

The Deputy Speaker: That's probably a very good question, but under our rules that all sides have agreed to, the minister can only reply once, and he's already had his crack at it. The proposer may have a response to conclude.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, in support of the comments made by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, the cost of providing this information compared to the eight billion dollars plus that it's cost Albertans through the whole deregulation process of electricity is minuscule. It is very, very small, so I would think that's a very good question and that the minister should reconsider very quickly about allowing everybody in this Assembly and all Albertans access to this very important information.

Electricity Deregulation

M156. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all correspondence between TransAlta Corporation, including any subsidiaries, and the government regarding electricity deregulation between January 1, 1990, and February 17, 2004.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm trying to move quickly out of deference to important matters of private members in the House. Again, we'll reject this motion. Anybody who has been in this House for any length of time, which the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has, knows full well the details surrounding the freedom of information act, knows full well that that's third party information, and knows full well that that is prohibited by law to be released.

Electricity Deregulation

M157. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all performance measures and statistical data regarding the effect of the government's deregulation of electricity on residential and small- and medium-business customers between January 1, 2001, and February 17, 2004.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, there are no documents available to respond to this motion; therefore, we could accept it and say that there are no documents available to this motion, or we can in fact reject it because there are no documents responsive to this motion. I leave it in the hands of the Assembly.

Electricity Deregulation

M158. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total cost of all reports commissioned by the government regarding electricity deregulation between January 1, 1990, and February 17, 2004, broken down by the cost for each report.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, there's no evidence that I know of that any reports addressing the wide-ranging subject of electricity deregulation exist in the department. So again I leave it to the good minds of the members of the Assembly to make this decision.

Business Credit Card Statements for Minister of Finance

M159. Mr. Bonner moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the Minister of Finance and the minister's executive assistant.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance I can indicate that Motion for a Return 26 as amended and approved by this House earlier this session in fact addresses this issue, and a statement of all the credit card expenses et cetera for the minister and for executive assistants and so on for all government departments will be provided pursuant to MR 26 as amended. On that basis MR 159 can be rejected at this time.

Business Credit Card Statements for Minister of Infrastructure

M160. Mr. Bonner moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the Minister of Infrastructure and the minister's executive assistant.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Infrastructure I just want to indicate again that Motion for a Return 26 as amended and approved earlier by this House does address this matter, and the statement of all credit card expenses will be provided, including the Ministry of Infrastructure, which, of course, is part of government. On that basis MR 160 can be rejected at this time.

Electricity Deregulation

M161. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all business plans or business models prepared by the government regarding electricity deregulation between January 1, 1995, and March 16, 2004.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister will be rejecting that motion.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 161 lost]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I understand that earlier this afternoon unanimous consent was granted in the Assembly that we'd now move from this particular order of business on to an additional order of business.

head: 5:00 Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 203 Canada Pension Plan Credits Statutes Amendment Act, 2004

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've already heard substantial debate surrounding Bill 203, and I would like to thank all my colleagues for their support and for their comments.

To summarize Bill 203 very briefly, Bill 203 provides ex-spouses and separated couples a choice in how best to divide their assets pertinent to their individual circumstances. The current problem in Alberta is that when a signed agreement between ex-spouses or ex-partners waives the right to future claim on each other's CPP credits or pension, this contract agreement is not enforceable. This does happen because we don't have provincial legislation in place to ensure that an ex-spouse will not renege on the waiver in the agreement already agreed to.

Bill 203 prevents an ex-spouse from applying for a credit split without the other ex's knowledge and especially after both had mutually signed a divorce agreement to waive future claims to each other's CPP benefits. Bill 203 prevents the effect of creating a future entitlement for an ex-spouse. Only one of the ex-spouses or ex-partners needs to apply for this split, with the consent of the other individual not being necessary. An appeal can be made that can only challenge the information provided on the application such as the time the couple spent together. One of the exes could make an application to split the other ex's CPP credits many years after the original agreement was signed, up to 10, 15 years later.

The Canada pension plan allows for the provinces to opt out of the credit-splitting program through section 55.2. However, the provinces must enact legislation allowing for spousal agreement. This legislation must make specific reference to the CPP. Without provincial legislation spousal waivers with respect to CPP credits may not be upheld. Bill 203 provides the provincial legislation necessary to legitimize spousal agreements. Section 55.2 of the CPP act grants provinces authority to opt out of CPP credit splitting.

Bill 203, as I said, would provide that legislation. Agreements back to June 1986 will be honoured. Bill 203 allows both parties to make sure that they resolve all assets when divorce or separation proceedings are done, even CPP benefits. Bill 203 brings closure to a divorce or separation.

An important point regarding splitting CPP benefits: a credit-split decision is never changed or returned to an ex regardless of a change in circumstances. An ex who discovers later that he or she didn't receive any CPP benefits is still entitled to those benefits as long as he or she did not sign an agreement that stated no future division of CPP credits.

Other jurisdictions have recognized the importance of choice. British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and Quebec all have legislation to opt out of the CPP credit-splitting program. Manitoba plans to introduce a pilot project this year.

Mr. Speaker, I move third reading of Bill 203, the Canada Pension Plan Credits Statutes Amendment Act, 2004.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a third time]

Bill 204 Blood Samples Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. It's an honour to begin debate in third reading of Bill 204. Before I comment on the bill, I would like the record to show my gratitude to my researcher, Mr. Matthew Stepan, who has worked tirelessly on this bill, Barb Letendre and Cherry Robinson in my respective offices, and definitely Ms Diane Paltzat from the Edmonton Police Service, who has provided us with a great deal of technical information.

Mr. Speaker, the concept of taking blood samples to help infected and injured health and emergency workers was formally presented by the Alberta federation of police chiefs. Although they are big supporters of this legislation, they are not the only professionals that will benefit from this bill. I have presented petitions from the Edmonton, Calgary, Lethbridge, Taber, and Camrose police services; also the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police. The Blood Tribe police have also sent a letter and a petition urging this Assembly to support Bill 204.

This bill is a necessary response to the trend by some people to use the threat of disease as a weapon. The deputy chief of the Blood Tribe police has stated that some police officers have been exposed to bodily fluids in the past and that this bill could have helped them access the appropriate information to assess the severity of their injury.

The Alberta Fire Fighters Association and the Lethbridge Firefighters Union have also voiced their support for Bill 204. Firefighters, as we know, are often the first to arrive at the scene of an accident. As a result, they also face the same dangers as police officers.

I have also tabled supports from the Alberta correctional officers and the correctional services workers as a great deal of debate has focused on police officers, firefighters, and health care providers; however, the chair of the AUPE Local 003 has expressed gratitude for this bill because it will help create safer working conditions for those people who work in Alberta's prisons.

The bill will also assist in the treatment of correctional staff victimized by inmates with blood that could be contaminated with a blood-borne disease. Correctional workers are often engaged in hostile and violent situations with inmates. This bill will help workers understand the extent of their injury when they are bitten, scratched, or spat at by an inmate.

Emergency workers in Calgary and the Alberta College of Paramedics are also supportive of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, all of these groups are faced with the growing problem of people using blood or the fear of potentially fatal disease to torment these workers. It is true that most of the support for this bill comes from personal experiences of emergency workers; however, this bill will help infected workers understand the severity of the exposure. I am confident that most reasonable, caring Albertans will support this bill.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is also before this House because of the growing danger of people using the threat of disease to abuse or torment the men and women who keep all Albertans safe and healthy. The order for taking a mandatory blood sample is not a knee-jerk response to a few isolated cases. This bill is part of a co-ordinated response to the danger of blood-borne diseases. The order is one of the most important pieces of a system that effectively addresses the danger of these diseases.

There are those who believe that this bill is an infringement on the privacy or the rights of anyone who comes into contact with an emergency or health professional. Mr. Speaker, nothing is stopping someone from challenging this legislation in court; however, before proceeding, they should realize that the taking of a blood sample to help health care or emergency workers understand the significance of their exposure is within the parameters of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It is worth repeating that the Charter of Rights is not absolute. It is not above the law, and it cannot be used as protection after harming another person.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will help ensure that exposed persons and their medical staff are given enough information to assess the severity of their exposure. I encourage all members to support Bill 204, and I look forward to the debate on this floor.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to third reading of Bill 204.

This is the third time I've risen to address the bill. In the second reading debate I indicated that I would be opposing the bill. Then, during the discussion in committee stage I indicated that I was undertaking some contact with some of the groups that were in support of the bill and was, I guess, in a position of being undecided based on some of the things that I've heard.

I can tell the House, Mr. Speaker, that I have had discussions with the police association of Alberta. I have discussed this with the Local 003 leadership of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, which represents correctional staff in provincial facilities, and I have discussed this with the Edmonton Fire Fighters' Union local president over the weekend.

It's clear to me, Mr. Speaker, that all of those groups support this approach, and all of them have indicated to me that this is not a theoretical problem for them. This is a real and recurring issue that their members face on a regular basis, that is extremely difficult for their members to deal with – for police officers, firefighters, and correctional officers – that it has a serious impact on their personal life, and that it is indeed an issue that warrants some serious measure.

5:10

Now, the concern, of course, Mr. Speaker, is that some of the other groups that have contacted us are opposed, and certainly HIV Edmonton is one of those organizations. There is a real concern that people's civil liberties may be infringed upon or that particular groups in society, particularly low-income people, people on the street, people of aboriginal descent, and people from the gay community, may in fact be unfairly targeted under the provisions of this bill. That is the dilemma that I find myself in today.

I will be paying very close attention to whether or not this bill, which is clearly going to be passed today, does in fact infringe upon those groups. I think all members of the Assembly need to monitor that situation, and if those types of things occur on a frequent basis, if there are patterns of abuse that exist under this legislation, then I think we have a duty to amend or rescind the legislation.

However, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced for the moment that this bill is in fact necessary, so I will be prepared to support the bill at third reading. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort has risen.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege for me to join in the debate in support of Bill 204. Most of the time the potential carrier of blood-borne disease who infects a worker with their bodily fluids will agree to a voluntary blood sample. They may take time to prolong the intimidation and taunting, that was mentioned. Most of them agree eventually.

The intent of this bill is for the relatively few occasions where the suspect absolutely refuses to agree to a blood sample. In these cases the reason for not submitting a blood sample has nothing to do with the Charter of Rights or privacy violation. The reason they refuse is to make life difficult for the potentially infected person.

As I see it, there is a process for taking and analyzing a blood sample already existing in Alberta in the health care system. The process for issuing a court order at any time also already exists in Alberta's justice system. The circumstances for forcing a blood sample from someone, as explained in section 4, will hopefully never need to be used. On the other hand, the mere presence of this bill will help convince people who are not co-operating to agree to provide a blood sample.

I say that this bill's intent is to address new dangers to these professional workers on a daily basis. We know for a fact that criminal suspects or inmates currently use biting or spitting on police officers, law enforcement officers, correctional officers as a form of intimidation. This isn't something that the average Albertan would deal with in their normal workday, but for the professions defined in section 4(2), this is becoming an area of constant concern.

So looking at this, I want to express my support and call on other members to vote for this bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to make a few comments with regard to this bill. I have listened intently to both sides of the argument: why we should pass this legislation and why we shouldn't. While I, too, certainly respect the concerns that those who are opposed to this bill have, I have to say that on the whole at this particular time I'm going to be supporting this legislation.

It seems to me that our first area of concern has to be for those people in the services that are protecting us. If they are spat on or bitten or have needle punctures or are helping individuals who are covered in blood, they have the right to know as soon as possible whether or not they are infected with any particular diseases. In fact, AIDS doesn't concern me as much as hepatitis C does, and that's a real concern for us in this day and age. So not only should those people who are serving Albertans know quickly but their other family members as well – their spouses and their children and those who might otherwise be infected – so that they can take the proper precautions as soon as possible.

I, too, have some concerns about how this bill may unfold, and we'll be watching intently to see that it is not abused in any capacity. I'm expecting that it won't be, and I'm hoping that it won't be, and certainly there will be a huge outcry of concern if it is. So at this point after due consideration I will be supporting this bill at third reading.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to make a few brief comments, as well, to Bill 204, the Blood Samples Act. I want to commend the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs for the amount of work he put into this bill and certainly commend the great efforts that our police officers, our peace officers, our firefighters, our emergency workers, and even good Samaritans do in order to assist people that are injured, people that are in violation of the law. This bill shows that we in this Legislature have a strong support for families. With the increase in the incidence of hepatitis C, with the increase in other communicable diseases this is a bill that's certainly going to give confidence to those families, particularly when one of the members in that family has been exposed to bodily fluids, which could potentially cause the spread of AIDS.

I do think it is a very good bill. I'm certainly glad to have heard the input that others in the Assembly have given in regard to the comments made by those particular organizations that have members who are involved in these types of situations.

In closing, I think it's an extremely good bill. I would certainly hope that all members of the Assembly would support this particular bill and that those emergency workers or police officers or firefighters or whoever is exposed to these types of situations will definitely be able to have some confidence that when they return to their families, their families will not be infected with these diseases. So, once again, thank you very much for the opportunity to make some comments.

[Adjourned debate May 3: Mr. Hlady]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. I believe there are about two minutes left.

Mr. Hlady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be quick.

Mr. Speaker, I want to speak because we can implement this bill with no change to the Canadian Wheat Board Act. This is about getting our farmers an export licence. Today our farmers are forced to buy back their grain before they can get an export licence. Farmers in the designated area, which is Alberta, must sell their grain to the board at an initial price. Then they have to buy their own grain back at a board-set price. Well, the board sets the price at an international price or the best market price out there, so any value-added money that the farmer could have made actually goes to the board. They don't get that.

Mr. Speaker, I want to speak quickly to what I did last week, which was the $85 million deficit that the board had last year. That is just the tip of the iceberg. That deficit was created because they missed a marketing opportunity when the highest prices in history were not taken advantage of at the time. Our farmers, too, lost at that time: $60 per tonne on 5 million tonnes across this country, $300 million that the farmers did not receive last year because of the poor marketing of the Canadian Wheat Board. That's the fundamental. Then they come back asking us for money or needing money because they can't make it because of the poor marketing happening out there.

Mr. Speaker, marketing choice is the only choice to allow us to get to the $20 billion in farm receipts, which is a target of this government, and see value-added increased in Alberta. I sure hope we get a chance to have a vote on second reading today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to have an opportunity, at least for a couple of minutes, to speak on this bill. It is an important issue. It's incredibly important to me just as an individual. I spent time not only in agribusiness but in the actual grain business.

One of the things that I want to say is that the Wheat Board has been problematic for a very long time, and anybody that has spent any time in the grain business knows that. The reality is that I'm not sure that this bill will get us where we want to be or where we should be, and that's what concerns me, not the intent of it but just the legality or the constitutionality of it. There isn't anybody more willing to want to take a chance to try and do the right thing by our grain farmers than I am, but I want to make sure that I don't end up being responsible for having somebody sitting in a jail. I think that what happened to our barley growers and our wheat farmers was horrendous, and I don't want to see a repeat of that.

The truth is that a couple of years ago we passed a bill called Bill 207, and the sponsor was the sponsor for that one. It's an outstanding bill. What it did was it said that our minister was to go to eastern Canada to meet with her federal counterparts to try and get us marketing choice, and she has been working on that. Mr. Speaker, it's really unfortunate that we got a little bit sidetracked by an issue called BSE for the last year, trying to sort that out and hopefully get our border reopened for our cattle to be able to be exported, but that doesn't mean that the work for this has not been going on. Marketing choice is something that does matter.

One of the things I wanted to say, Mr. Speaker, was that a number of years ago when I was involved with Palliser Grain, we worked very hard with the farming community to get oats out of the Canadian Wheat Board. One of the reasons we were successful in getting oats out from under the board and keeping canola out from under the board, which they were also trying to take control of, was because we had thousands of farmers in this province writing letters not only to us but to our federal counterparts saying that this had to change. In fact, the Wheat Board didn't have much interest in oats, so that was a great thing. They finally let it go, and oats now is a great crop in Alberta again.

On the other side of this my hope would be that if we can move further down the marketing choice train, we could in fact get our domestic barley and our domestic wheat use out from under the Wheat Board, if not all of it out from under the Wheat Board at least select something that we could possibly work on. My understanding is that the federal ministers have agreed to continue to meet with our minister on this issue in the hopes of developing a marketing option plan, a trial market for 10 years. Yes, I agree that a bill like this puts pressure on them, and I'm not averse to putting pressure on them, but I have to caution my colleague across the way that I am very much averse to passing a bill that might see some of my fellow ranchers and farmers going to jail because we did something that led them to believe that it would be legal when, in fact, we can't implement it this way.

So, hon. member, I'm very concerned about that, and I do not think it should be downplayed in any way, shape, or form. I'm not afraid of a good fight with the feds or the Wheat Board. I am afraid of leading anybody in this province down a path that indicates that it's okay for them to do something when, in fact, it might not be.

On that, Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to address this bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 206, the Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Amendment Act, 2004. I think that the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View has put her finger on something that's seriously flawed with the bill, and I urge her to live to fight on another day. Don't do yourself in just because you find me agreeing with you, hon. member. It's really just not worth it.

Mr. Speaker, I don't know if there's any guidance that any member of this Assembly can provide, yourself or anyone else, about what to do when you feel that a bill before the Assembly is ultra vires. If you feel that it is unconstitutional and it is outside the powers of the provincial Legislature, what do you do? Do you just let them pass it and then wait for the courts to overturn it? I don't know what the appropriate approach is.

I would say that I believe that this bill is outside the constitutional powers of the province to enact and outside this Assembly's area of responsibility. I also know that the provincial government takes great exception to the federal government when they intrude on areas of provincial jurisdiction. They are always talking about that. They talk about firewalls. They talk about different things. Former Premier Lougheed used to talk about moving them off the porch, you know, get them out of the living room, onto the porch, and then say good night and go in and lock the door. Here we have the provincial Legislature of this province being asked to do something very much the same, and I think that that's not correct.

Now, I also have another problem with the bill, and that is that I fundamentally don't agree with the approach. Members always talk about the Wheat Board and how it enforces, you know, a whole set of requirements on farmers and interferes with their rights and their choice and so on, and I don't think anything could be further from the truth, Mr. Speaker. The Wheat Board imposes this type of situation in order to support wheat farmers, and it does so as an organization that is democratically elected by wheat farmers, and despite the government's propaganda to the contrary those districts of the Canadian Wheat Board that overlap Alberta have in the majority returned pro single-desk Wheat Board directors in the last election and before that as well. If the wheat farmers were to elect directors that were against the single-desk in a majority, then the Wheat Board could change the policy. What people are asking to do here is to be able to undercut their fellow wheat farmers and sell their wheat into the United States on their own, and the result would naturally be a decline in the amount that the other farmers, the majority of the farmers, were able to receive for their wheat.

For example, when oats dropped out of the Canadian Wheat Board single-desk selling in 1989, the value plummeted by 47 per cent, Mr. Speaker, in the first year alone, while over the same period barley values jumped 61 per cent. Statistics . . .

Legal Drinking Age

508. Mr. McFarland moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to raise the legal drinking age in Alberta to 19, as is the current requirement in the neighbouring provinces of British Columbia and Saskatchewan.

[Debate adjourned May 3: Mr. Maskell speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to say that I believe this government should take a serious look at raising the legal drinking age as part of its strategy. I believe that raising the drinking age would fit in well with other initiatives designed to prevent drinking and driving not only by youth but also as a whole. Also, I believe that having an age that is consistent with what our neighbours are doing would further reduce the number of drunk drivers on our collective roadways.

I would like to once again thank the Member for Little Bow for putting forth this interesting idea and thus allowing us the opportunity to speak to this issue.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow to close debate.

Mr. McFarland: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I just want to very briefly thank everyone who has taken part in the debate. I wanted to thank the Member for Calgary-Bow, who, I think, made a very important distinction, one that kind of counters the arguments that I've had, and that being: if you're old enough to vote and go to war and enter into a contract at 18, why shouldn't you be allowed to drink? The Member for Calgary-Bow enunciated it very well when she reminded us that things like drinking, things like driving, are not rights; they're privileges and subject to arbitrary dates and different ages.

I will refer everyone to maybe an old adage. It's a toast, Mr. Speaker, that some people after they had had a few used to say, and it went like this: I drink to you because I love you, my steadiness to improve; last night I got so steady, I couldn't even move.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that has always been meant in jest, when you're having a good time sitting around the bar, but I do really hope and I honestly want young people especially to not end up being the literal stiff. Be careful. I do accept that there are many, many of the young folks that I'm trying to appeal to here with this motion that are very responsible, but I still think this one small step would very much supplement some of the other regulations and laws that we currently have in place.

I thank you for the opportunity of being able to present this to the Assembly. I'd like to call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion Other than Government Motion 508 carried]

Complementary and Alternative Medicine

509. Ms Graham moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to take measures to establish a dedicated fund for the purpose of conducting research to develop scientifically credible information about the safety and effectiveness of complementary and alternative medicine, CAM, that will assist health care professionals, health policy-makers, and the public in making informed decisions.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this evening to rise and speak to Motion 509, which I am sponsoring. I am going to use the acronym CAM, standing for complementary and alternative medicine, just to shorten things.

Before I talk about the purpose and intent of this motion, I would like to describe what is included in CAM, and this will not be an exhaustive list. Generally speaking, CAM therapies are divided into five categories including alternative medical systems such as homeopathic medicine and naturopathic medicine, which I am sure we are all familiar with.

The second category is mind/body interventions of the like of meditation, prayer, mental healing, yoga, as examples.

The third category is biologically based therapies, which include substances found in nature such as herbs, foods, and vitamins. Some examples include dietary supplements, herbal products, and the use of other so-called natural but as yet unproven therapies; for example, using shark cartilage to treat cancer.

The fourth category is manipulative and body-based methods, which include chiropractic, osteopathic manipulation, and massage.

The fifth category, energy therapies, involves the use of energy fields, and they includes such things as reiki, therapeutic touch, and chi gung, which are probably areas that are familiar to members.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I would then like to answer why I have brought this motion, and it is because currently there is very little scientific evidence existing to evaluate CAM therapies. For the most part, there are very key questions that have yet to be answered through well-designed scientific studies, questions such as whether these therapies are safe and whether they actually work for the diseases or medical conditions for which they are used.

The big problem underpinning this lack of scientific evidence, Mr. Speaker, is that public funders of medical research tend not to fund this type of research, so there's no body of scientific knowledge existing.

Just by way of background, Mr. Speaker, in Canada our Canadian government does provide some funding for research into the effectiveness and safety of natural health products, a whole $1 million for the country, but it does not specifically earmark any funds for research into the effectiveness and safety of CAM therapies, and that's primarily what I am aiming at.

Some of the reasons that might exist for this reluctance of funding organizations to give money to alternative medicine research is that there is the difficulty for CAM researchers to compete with researchers who have an established publication and funding track record in conventional medical research, and these are the kinds of researchers that the CAM researchers are up against when promoting their projects. There are also difficulties meeting the standards of conventional medical research in the CAM setting. So this is the reason for my motion, Mr. Speaker.

We need a designated research fund devoted to CAM therapies to provide a necessary kick-start or a leg up for these CAM research projects so that we can see develop a reliable body of knowledge to help ascertain the usefulness and safety of a wide range of CAM products and therapies that are already in use.

Mr. Speaker, you might ask: who will be assisted by this research? Well, it will be Albertans like you and me. There are different estimates existing as to the numbers of Canadians that actually use CAM therapies, and it is suggested as a result of some surveys that have been done in this area that approximately 21 million Canadians are using CAM therapies and that we spend, it is estimated, as Canadians some $2.4 billion per year compared to Americans, whose population is much, much bigger than ours, spending $2.7 billion U.S. So this means that per CAM user Canadians spend over five times more on CAM than do their American counterparts and over 12 times more than Australian users, as an example.

While Canada has the largest proportion of CAM users and spends more per capita than any other western nation, CAM in Canada has developed largely without official government support or sanction. Mr. Speaker, I think this is quite remarkable considering how technologically and scientifically oriented our society is now, that we as Canadians in the absence of hard scientific evidence do go ahead and use these therapies, but maybe that's because they really do work and we receive messages from our friends and relatives on an anecdotal basis, or maybe we just intuitively know that they work. But the evidence does not exist in significant amounts to really support our decisions. I think it's also remarkable that policy-makers, of which we are a part, aren't apparently concerned about this when we are faced with the knowledge that so many people are using these therapies.

So I can only think, Mr. Speaker, that with the creation of a fund such as I am suggesting, resulting in good scientific evidence to support the effectiveness and efficiency of these therapies, this can only support the health and well-being of Albertans in a very positive way.

Obviously, another group that will benefit from this research will be policy-makers like ourselves in health care, either elected or those that work in the bureaucracy, and this is particularly important in view of the tremendous pressures on our health care system in Alberta and elsewhere to be more effective and efficient. We've heard many times from our minister of health that costs are rising in the health care system 8 to 10 per cent per year while revenues are averaging 4 per cent, and even with the increases that we provide in the health care budget, we're still not keeping pace with the costs.

I do believe, Mr. Speaker, that there's a great potential for cost savings to our health system if we incorporate these CAM therapies to in some cases replace traditional medicine therapies or to support them. I think it does behoove government to start paying attention to the high usage and the fact that people are gravitating to these therapies, and we must investigate them by funding research. So it's in the public interest that we do this both from a health perspective and from a cost-savings perspective.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that ultimately what makes sense is integrative medicine, integrating conventional medicine with CAM therapies. We shouldn't use either one to the exclusion of the other, but we should use what makes sense in the particular situation for the particular patient.

I will conclude my remarks later.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, it's a pleasure at this time to participate in the debate on Motion 509, and certainly it is an interesting proposal. The hon. member talked about the changes that are occurring in health care, and we have to always be mindful of the public interest, the public safety, and certainly consumer protection when we're talking about alternative medicines and different health practices.

There are cases where this has not happened, and with some of the remedies that one can find on the Internet, I think this is a very good idea. Some of the remedies and some of the snake oil salespeople who are peddling these remedies on the Internet have to be controlled. I'm not saying that this is the way to do it, but it is reason enough to support this motion.

There seems to be a need for more scientifically credible information on complementary and alternative medicines, CAM, as the hon. member has said, but the friends that we have south of the border put this idea through Congress six years ago. The Americans have the National Center for Complementary and Alternative Medicine, that is charged with exploring complementary and alternative healing practices within the scope of science. There does not appear to be an equivalent centre or institute in Canada, and perhaps there is need for one.

Now, a great deal of discussion is currently occurring on the issue of health care and health care reform. It's going on in this province, perhaps not on the floor of this Legislative Assembly as it should be, but it's certainly going on in the province. It is the number one issue of debate, and it should be. For reasons unknown to this member the notion of public health care is under siege.

8:30

Now, it would be an important part of the debate if we could better explore the safety and the effectiveness of complementary and alternative medicine to determine what it can add to our present public health care system. Perhaps there's a potential, as the hon. member across stated, to lower costs and improve patients' health if we can scientifically prove the benefits of some complementary and alternative medicines. However, Mr. Speaker, we must be careful not to treat complementary and alternative medicines as a panacea. Complementary and alternative medicines have the potential to play a positive role in our public health care system, but it is far from the solution for some of the challenges facing our public health care system today.

It is important and, I would remind all hon. members across the way, perhaps more effective if the Alberta government explored options of working more closely with the federal government in setting up a fund similar to the one that is being proposed in this motion. In the United States the centre exploring complementary and alternative medicine is a national one. The research coming out of the fund proposed under this motion would be a benefit to all Canadians. Perhaps we should look at pooling our resources with other provinces and the federal government to create an institute similar to the National Center for Complementary and Alternative Medicine in the United States.

There is already a great deal of existing research going on. There are bodies and institutes set up both provincially and federally that may be interested in funding research on these topics. In fact, many of these groups may already have, and perhaps some hon. member can explain not only to this member but to the entire House what role the following organizations could play in this proposed research: the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, the Canadian Institutes of Health Research, and the Alberta Science and Research Authority. I wonder how they would feel about this.

Is there a need for a whole new fund at the provincial level to explore complementary and alternative medicine? I think it is difficult at this time to say, but there is definitely a need to explore the safety and effectiveness of complementary and alternative medicine. Whether that is done through existing institutions or in co-operation with other provinces and the federal government is the question at this time that needs to be addressed.

Overall, I think this motion is a sound one, and it is certainly one that I would support for those reasons. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity. It's a pleasure to speak to and in support of Motion 509. What are now often called complementary and alternative therapies here in North America are in fact practices, methods, and therapies that have been used for hundreds and even thousands of years in other parts of the world. They include acupuncture, reflexology, aromatherapy, reiki, chi gong, to mention only a few. Today many people rely on these therapies for relief from chronic and debilitating health problems. Following such treatment many individuals around the world have reported significant improvements of their health.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, what is not entirely clear is what exactly is the range of benefits offered by these therapies, nor do we always know about any potential hazards. By establishing a mechanism to fund research in this field, I believe that we would be in a position to better assess the usefulness and safety of these alternative therapies. As the chairman of the Alberta Research Council I see no reason why the Alberta government would not want to delve further into researching complementary and alternative therapies. After all, the possibility does exist that doing so may very well ease the strain on our health care system.

The fact that there is no established fund in our province for research on complementary and alternative medicine provides the strongest rationale for taking Motion 509 to heart. There is a clear need for more qualitative and quantitative research in complementary and alternative medicine here in Alberta as well as in the rest of the country because there is so little research that is being done presently. Alberta could really emerge as a leader in advancing and promoting increased and improved knowledge in this field.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, I believe that Motion 509 presents the Alberta government with a tremendous opportunity to show both leadership and commitment to health and well-being. The Alberta government has shown its commitment to take Albertans into the 21st century through its support of the Alberta Research Council. Scientists and researchers there have carried out groundbreaking work in the discovery and production of carbohydrate-based pharmaceuticals which have the potential to provide new treatments for diseases such as asthma, arthritis, cancer, and AIDS.

Establishing research funds for complementary and alternative medicine would therefore only further the already long-standing history of high-level research in this province. It would, I believe, further solidify Alberta's status as a leader in medical and scientific research. What's more, a solid body of evidence of the efficacy and safety of complementary and alternative medical therapies could pave the way for integrating conventional medicine with complementary and alternative therapies.

In 2002 the U.S. National Center for Complementary and Alternative Medicine, NCCAM, suggested that public and private resources be increased to strengthen the infrastructure for alternative medical research. Currently, NCCAM's research priorities cover an extensive array of research projects that range from alternative therapy approaches to the treatment and prevention of asthma and allergies to the study of antimicrobial and analgesic effects of complementary and medical therapies on infectious disease, especially HIV/AIDS.

In Great Britain, like the United States, the integration of complementary and alternative therapies is progressing steadily. Britain's increasing reliance on alternative therapies represents a reversal of opinion in British attitudes towards the medical establishment. A number of British hospitals make available various complementary and alternative therapies in addition to conventional therapies.

These patterns are repeated elsewhere. In Australia 57 per cent of the population now use some form of alternative medicine. Meanwhile, 46 per cent of Germans find complementary and alternative therapies helpful, and in France 49 per cent of the population use complementary and alternative therapies of one kind or another. Considering the research efforts already underway in the United States and Great Britain, I believe that Alberta may be left behind if we don't take action to start conducting our own research in alternative and complementary medicine.

So, Mr. Speaker, I join my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed in urging the government of Alberta to provide funds for the express purpose of researching the efficacy and safety of complementary and alternative therapies.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lord: Good evening, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to have the opportunity to speak to the merits of Motion 509 tonight as well. I'd like to begin my remarks by congratulating the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed for having the vision and foresight to introduce this motion. The intended purpose of Motion 509 is I think quite consistent with the notion that we need to develop new and innovative approaches towards health care in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, ours is a time, it seems, when so much of what we do revolves around science and technology. A look around us can be very revealing when it comes to making clear just how prevalent and ubiquitous all manner of gadgets have become as well as how so much of what we do is tied to science and technology. We have cellphones that enable others to talk to us most anywhere, and there's the Internet, which allows us to reach most others almost anywhere as well. As I speak, spacecraft are preparing to leave our solar system, making them not only the first spacecraft ever to do so but also the most well-travelled man-made objects ever.

Closer to home, scientists have already cloned sheep and monkeys, and with some regularity we hear how a new and revolutionary cure or treatment procedure is being pioneered. Personally, Mr. Speaker, I'm in favour of cloning because I could use three or four of myself just to keep up. Anyway, such is progress. Yet for all our scientific advancement and our technological prowess there seems to be a resurgence of complementary and alternative medicine, much of which involves methods that have been practised for hundreds or even thousands of years, such as acupuncture or homeopathy. In addition, many people in our society use various herbal remedies on a regular basis. Names like echinacea, St. John's wort, and ginkgo biloba are if not names of products that we use certainly names with which many of us are quite familiar if for no other reason than that they are mentioned in the news or because we have seen commercials and advertisements for them.

What I find so interesting about this, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that even though there's so much science and technology around us, there's nevertheless a large number of people in our society who prefer complementary and alternative medicine over conventional medicine. For whatever reason, they find that there are some definite benefits to be had by relying on these decidedly nontechnological therapies rather than on what we may call mainstream or conventional medicine.

But, Mr. Speaker, how do they know that the therapies they receive work? How do they know that the herbal food supplements that they take do not cause harm or have adverse side effects, especially if taken in conjunction with other products, with other herbal remedies, or modern medicines? I get the impression that much of the clout of these complementary and alternative therapies is anecdotal in nature. I don't use the word anecdotal in a pejorative sense; rather, what I'm getting at is that in the absence of what we might call hard and empirical data derived through clinical and scientific trials, personal testimonials make up the bulk of the evidence, for lack of a better word.

In some cases, the evidence has a bit more heft than just personal testimony. Take acupuncture, for instance. This ancient form of healing predates recorded history, and as a philosophy it is rooted in the Taoist tradition, which goes back over 8,000 years. Aside from that, most people seem to know that acupuncture involves needles and needles being inserted at specific points on a person's body. Among the illnesses and predicaments for which acupuncture is said to have benefits, we find migraine headaches, depression, and heart disease, and people have also been known to use acupuncture as part of smoking cessation. Aside from personal testimonials and in some cases long histories of use, however, there is very little in the way of scientific evidence to back up the claims that this or that complementary and alternative form of medical treatment actually works.

Quite often what seems to be entirely absent are rational explanations that show why or how these therapies work. In other words, if you use a particular nonconventional therapy, then this particular effect will be had, which in turn will yield a particular desirable result. Even in cases where such data is said to exist, it is often questioned at best or even considered fraudulent at worst, yet people keep using these products and treatments. Do they know something that we don't know? Do they know something that advocates of modern medicine don't know? It would almost seem like it, wouldn't it?

For most of us proof merits greater attention than do personal anecdotes. If someone says to us, "Here, this is a really good car," I would say that we'd be less inclined to buy that car than a car that had been subjected to extensive testing whose results were subsequently published in some sort of car buyers' guide.

Now, that's why Motion 509 is so important. There is a large number of people in our society who find health benefits in using various complementary and alternative medical therapies, but there is little evidence to show why or how they work or if indeed they work at all. By establishing a fund whose sole purpose would be to facilitate research on the utility and safety of complementary and alternative medical therapies, we would incur several benefits. First and foremost, Mr. Speaker, the public, health care professionals, and makers of health care policy would really know what if any benefits complementary and alternative medicine has to yield. By the same token, we would also learn what harm could possibly come from these therapies.

Another advantage to having a dedicated fund for this purpose is that it could help in the efforts to broaden the scientific body of knowledge. As any other medical research does, research on complementary and alternative medical therapies would add to our knowledge base. This would not be limited to knowing if a particular therapy is safe or if it causes more harm than it does good. For example, other information to be gleaned may involve how a particular nonconventional therapy interacts with a conventional therapy. Are there side effects when combined? Does one cancel out the benefits of the other? Do they amplify each other's benefits? Without a doubt, having such knowledge would be of considerable assistance to health care professionals, health policy-makers, and the public in attempting to make informed decisions.

Yet another benefit to be had from this kind of research fund is that it could actually facilitate a dialogue between what now quite often appears to be two rather adversarial camps. Many proponents of modern medicine have little use for complementary and alternative forms of medicine and use a wide range of epithets to characterize them and those who provide them. In the absence of scientifically credible data these therapies have at best marginal results, most often a placebo effect, and at worst they make their users sicker rather than healthier. On the other hand, advocates of nonconventional medicine often take the approach that modern medicine has become too specific and relies too much on chemicals whose long-term impact is not yet known. They argue that rather than treating the whole person, modern medicine treats symptoms in isolation, therefore causing perhaps greater problems.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it does seem quite reasonable to suggest that having a scientifically credible body of knowledge in the area of conventional and alternative medicine could very well increase the availability of qualified and knowledgeable practitioners of conventional medicine and of nonconventional medicine alike. Ideally, this would also enhance collaboration among them, which would expand the range of care and treatment options available to Albertans.

With this in mind, Mr. Speaker, I offer the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed my wholehearted support for Motion 509, and I urge all members of this House to do the same. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure to be able to speak to Motion 509 in the Assembly this evening. Tonight I'm going to focus my comments on the need for correct health information and the concerns that many Albertans have regarding the information that does or does not exist surrounding complementary medicine.

This motion will go a significant way towards including alternative medicine treatments and techniques within our health care system. As such it is an important motion to discuss and debate this evening, because it is clear that the jury is still out on the benefits of these alternative treatments.

There exists a bit of a rift between complementary health practitioners and the medical community. To a degree this rift is based on legitimate concerns from one side or the other regarding the dangers of both new, untested techniques or complementary health practitioners and concerns of overmedication by the traditional medical practitioners. Other parts of this rift are caused by financial concerns each side has. Each side wants to make the money, and each wants to ensure that they will not lose business. So there are two sides to this conflict, Mr. Speaker.

That being said, we need to move beyond whatever squabbling does exist and look out for the best interests of Albertans. Given that Albertans are looking to complementary medicine, we need to know what the bright spots are and where the dangers are. If we can prove that a medicine works or that a treatment works, then we've passed phase 1 of deciding whether or not it's justifiable to fund that medicine or treatment.

That's the problem with alternative therapies. Most of the proof that these treatments work is anecdotal. If a person takes vitamin therapy and then their health improves, then it's said to work. On the other hand, the stories which raise red flags surrounding alternative therapies are also anecdotal. If someone takes St. John's wort for depression and then goes into a deeper depression, the St. John's wort might be blamed for the depression.

We in this Assembly have to take into account that many Albertans are turning to alternative therapies and for a variety of reasons. Some Albertans have had little luck treating certain problems with the traditional health care system so will try other avenues to see if they'll do better. Other Albertans are beginning to become more and more concerned about the degree to which the health care system relies on pharmaceuticals. These sorts of Albertans are somewhat leery of using pharmaceuticals to a large degree; therefore, if they can avoid it, they're not willing to seek treatment within the traditional health care system.

Alberta is now home to many immigrants who have grown up with what we call alternative therapies in their countries of origin and continue to want to receive treatment that's in accord with what they're used to using. This is a part of the debate that we often forget. While alternative medicine is new and alternative to us, it's been a regular part of life in many countries in which the various treatments originate.

If Albertans are using these treatments, it does make sense that as a government we would position ourselves to provide valuable health information on the effectiveness of these products. It makes sense that we would move beyond anecdotes and provide some solid figures and recommendations regarding the use of these products. Mr. Speaker, this is reason number one for developing this fund. If we operate under the premise that health care is one of the most important undertakings of individual Albertans and of this government, then we need to provide the best health information possible to Albertans.

Our minister of health has taken great steps in the areas of wellness and health information and ought to be commended. It's my belief that passing this motion puts one more tool in his belt as he works to inform Albertans about the various health choices that do exist. In this light I think it's important that we pass Motion 509. It's our duty to ensure that Albertans have the opportunity to know more about these products.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to join debate on Motion 509 urging the government to establish a dedicated fund for researching complementary and alternative medicine. I would first like to thank my colleague from Calgary-Lougheed for having the vision to sponsor this motion.

Some alternative medical procedures are centuries older than conventional medicine. It's ironic how western societies depend on manufactured pharmaceutical drugs to cure pain when acupuncture has been used very successfully by numerous cultures for centuries. The majority of Albertans turn to conventional medical procedures to recover from illness or injury. Therefore, the majority of medical research grants are awarded to projects that address conventional medical questions.

Some Albertans already use alternative medicine and know that it works. Whether this is mind over matter, which can be more powerful than medication or treatment at times, scientific evidence is still very important. Alternative medicine is not seen as relevant as other health research that addresses common health problems such as obesity, diabetes, and cancers. That is why the vast majority of grants from the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research go toward conventional medical projects.

Mr. Speaker, alternative medicine may be more easily accepted as safe and effective by the medical community if there is formal research in place. Funding targeted for alternative medicine is not without precedent. Canada, Great Britain, and the United States, among others, have set up funds in an effort to promote alternative medicine.

Motion 509 proposes an interesting policy decision for the provincial government. If passed, a fund dedicated to alternative medicine could set several precedents. First of all, many in the conventional medical community view alternative medicine with a great deal of suspicion because of the void of scientific research, so this fund may not be viewed as an appropriate investment of public dollars. It is regretful that alternative techniques that can heal and promote wellness, faster in some cases than conventional techniques, are ignored and denigrated by the medical community.

In 2003 the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research awarded grants for projects dealing with kidney disease, home care, mental illness, and improving the health of Albertans. Although it would be difficult to argue that alternative medicine is more pressing than these issues, those who have benefited from alternative health care feel that these areas would also benefit from the savings that would be generated by using alternative medicine in the right places.

I personally know of a young person who could not be helped through conventional medicine. He was examined by the best doctors in Alberta and Spokane, Washington, and was unable to walk without pain in his knees. He was treated by a touch-for-health therapist and went from walking with constant pain in his knees to dancing up and down long staircases without pain.

A dedicated fund for alternative medicine would likely fall under the scope of the Auditor General. In the event that research projects were unclear and the peer review process continued to award grants to these people, it would be brought to the attention of the Alberta government.

As the sponsor mentioned earlier, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research has funded projects that test the effectiveness of some alternative medical procedures. However, the deck seems to be stacked against people who seek grants to investigate alternative medicine. Medical research is very important, and it's also very expensive. Since the fund was created, over $750 million has been granted to support health research in Alberta. However, over the past six years only approximately $310,000 has been granted to four proposals related to alternative therapies. I believe that a dedicated fund is necessary. A dedicated fund, separate from the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, would elevate some complementary procedures to mainstream medicine.

The Alberta government has talked about looking at the best practices from other health care systems to improve health care delivery and stabilize funding. Alternative medicine may be able to improve the health care system by achieving better results faster and cheaper in some cases than the conventional health care system. A research fund dedicated to alternative therapies may be an opportunity to spend money on research that could provide savings to Alberta's health care system and improve the health of Albertans.

I believe that this idea merits more debate and consideration by the Alberta government. There are many factors that can be influenced by the fund proposed in Motion 509. A new health procedure has to be effective, reasonably priced, and above all safe for the patient. The fund proposed in Motion 509 could help other alternative therapies gain credibility.

After experiencing the benefits of alternative health care and with the intent of having others experience these benefits, I wholeheartedly support Motion 509, and I would ask that my colleagues also support this motion. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a pleasure to join debate in support of Motion 509 sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Health care and healthy living are important issues in North America. This Assembly is aware of the incredible cost of pharmaceutical drugs and the success of drug companies who research and develop their product.

I've been a consumer of natural medicine for many years. However, sometimes I wonder if current sources of information provide reliable and safe advice about natural medical products. I wonder if consumers are buying the right medicines for their health problems or throwing their money away on products that don't work. There is a great deal of information on natural medicine available on the Internet, in magazines, and from health food clerks, but how accurate or reliable is this information?

A research fund could give people using natural medicine at least some direction about the necessary product. Research dedicated to natural medicine could also verify which products are the most effective.

Mr. Speaker, this motion calls for research to develop scientifically credible information about the safety and effectiveness of complementary, natural medicine to assist health professionals, policy-makers, and the public in making informed decisions. I think a dedicated fund for this research is long overdue, and I urge all members to support Motion 509.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed to close debate.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the observations and comments by members who have spoken in support of this, and I thank them very much for their good comments.

I think it's pretty clear, Mr. Speaker, that it is in the public interest that we pass this motion and do this kind of research both for the health and safety of Albertans who do use CAM therapies or who would like to and also for the potential cost savings to the health system. If we are going to move to integrative health, combining traditional medicine with CAM, then we need this research to be done. Otherwise, we can't rely on what we are doing.

Before I call for the question, I would like to acknowledge Dr. Bud Rickhi and his institute in Calgary, the Canadian Institute for Natural and Integrative Medicine. He did not solicit me to do this, but I am very interested in what he is doing. It's very important work. I think he is a visionary, and he is highly regarded across North America and beyond. He established his clinic in Calgary 11 years ago with the encouragement of the department of health, which was then wanting to go in this direction, but cutbacks occurred. He hasn't really had any help since, and he has persevered. He wants Alberta to be number one in integrative health, and he wants to do outcome studies linked to cost.

I'd now call for the question.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: 9:00      Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 31
Highways Development and Protection Act

[Adjourned debate May 5: Mr. Stelmach]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do have a few comments on Bill 31, the Highways Development and Protection Act. I'd first of all like to thank the minister for the opportunity that he afforded my researcher and me to meet with him and his people in the department and for the briefing that we got on this particular bill. At the briefing it was indicated that there was much consultation that went on before this bill was brought forward.

It is a bill that amalgamates the Public Highways Development Act and the City Transportation Act, and it also consolidates the minister's powers over controlled roads into one act. As well, in amalgamating these two acts, there are some changes that do occur. One of the changes is the definition of a provincial highway to include all designated primary highways. The act also defines freeway as "a multi-lane controlled highway or controlled street." This bill allows for any existing or future highway to be designated as a freeway, almost the same as a highway, and it removes secondary roads from the designation section.

The bill also allows the minister to decide a fair and just amount to be paid for reparation of the roads, and this is no change from the previous act. It also places the highway authorities in charge of maintenance instead of the minister, who was directly responsible in the previous act.

As well, Mr. Speaker, it adds a freeway size of 115 metres from the centre line to the regulation controlling highways, and it adds telecommunications to the act: prohibitions of 30 metres from controlled highways, which were formerly our secondary highways, and 60 metres from a highway and 115 metres from a freeway.

This act also gives the right to the minister to remove access roads made by citizens onto controlled highways. This, I think, is a very important point because particularly in areas where there are freeways and highways where the speed limit is up to 110 kilometres per hour, certainly we have to have stringent controls on how traffic is entering these particular highways.

What this act will also do is provide compensation for citizens' loss of access. I think of a situation just in the last couple of years where access to a set of businesses was cut off. This was right on the boundary of the constituency of Edmonton-Mill Creek and the county of Strathcona. It certainly had a great deal of impact on those businesses when that access was cut off, yet where there were overpasses within a few kilometres in each direction, from a safety standpoint it was a good decision. So we do have some strengthening of rules for the highways with this particular act. It also allows no person to create an access onto a highway without a permit, again another very good point because it does allow us to control that access onto highways and certainly do it in the safest possible way.

As well, the act allows bylaws from city council to be sent to the minister and "the Minister may approve the bylaw in whole or in part."

Now, then, also in Bill 31 section 38 says that the province takes ownership of any road plans that it cancels within municipalities that connect with highways. Certainly, one of the questions that I think is of concern to larger urban areas is the question: is this the way the province is going to gain control of ring roads? What control does this give the minister over future development of highways in cities?

As well, under the act the minister may make regulations on highway use for exploration under the Mines and Minerals Act. I think this relates back to questions that were asked in the House earlier of the minister on how this would, for example, affect the highway 3 development in order to get the magnetite mines going in southern Alberta.

So, certainly, a number of good points. This bill, the Highways Development and Protection Act, will also modernize and amalgamate the City Transportation Act and the Public Highways Development Act.

I don't see anything too contentious in here at all, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I will have no trouble supporting this bill. Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a second time]

Bill 33

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2004

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure on behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to move Bill 33, Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, at second reading.

As has long been the practice in this Assembly, this bill comes to the floor of the House only after all parties have agreed to its contents. So, in that light, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that we move on with second reading of Bill 33.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Certainly, I will be brief. In regard to the miscellaneous statutes I appreciate the comments from the hon. Minister of Community Development and Deputy Government House Leader. The consultation process has been getting quite vigorous in regard to the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, Bill 33, to say the least. There seems to be more and more legislation incorporated into it. I think the more discussions we have in this Assembly in regard to legislation the better off the province and the citizens are.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development to close debate.

Mr. Zwozdesky: I just want to say thank you to all members of the House on all sides for agreeing to this particular bill.

Thank you.

Bill 34

Income Trusts Liability Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Hlady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand and move second reading of Bill 34, the Income Trusts Liability Act.

In the past few years income trusts have grown considerably as another investment vehicle for many Albertans. Right now there are approximately 150 trusts listed on the TSX, with a market value of nearly $90 billion.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Hlady: Ninety billion dollars.

Mr. Speaker, the main purposes of this bill are to deal with issues around personal liability and investor protection that maybe limiting the participation of certain investors in this type of investment. No matter what the entrepreneurial spirit of an individual might be, most people are uncomfortable with the risk, however remote, of being held personally liable for more than their initial investment when investing in a company or an income trust.

This bill defines an Alberta income trust as one that was created in Alberta and is governed by Alberta laws. It also provides that an investor in an income trust cannot be required to cover the liability of a trust in the event that the trust's assets are insufficient to cover that debt. It is similar to the protection that is already afforded to investors in corporations or limited partnerships, and it makes sense to put this in place.

The other key area that is addressed in the legislation is that of investor protection. This bill contains consequential amendments to the Securities Act to ensure that regardless of the way the income trust is organized, investors will receive the information they need to make informed decisions by strengthening existing disclosure rules as they apply to income trusts.

The bill also provides that all those who may be in possession of material, nonpublic information, are caught by the definition of "insider" so that they are prevented from using their privileged position or knowledge in the trading of income trust units.

Investor protection is closely tied to governance-related issues. I understand that the government plans to release a discussion paper in June on additional governance issues relating to income trusts to receive further input from key stakeholders, and over the summer Alberta government officials will consult with stakeholders on additional issues relating to income trusts, including the rights of investors.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I would like to point out that this bill does not mean that these investment vehicles are without risk. Potential investors in income trusts need to research and understand all potential risks before making an investment decision, much like any other investment. This legislation simply puts the investor in income trusts in a similar position to that of shareholders in corporations with respect to investor protections under the Securities Act and limited liability under the Business Corporations Act.

I urge all members of this Legislature to give support to Bill 34. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is legislation that certainly on the surface looks like it is worthy of support. The first idea I had that this legislation would be coming during this sitting was of course during the hon. Minister of Finance's budget. It was mentioned in the fiscal plan on page 25 that income trusts and unlimited liability corporations "are becoming a significant part of Alberta's business sector and another source of investment in Alberta." It notes here also that income trusts were long established in the resource sector, becoming increasingly popular, and are now being used in other sectors of the economy, and that by transforming themselves into income trusts, companies can significantly reduce, or entirely eliminate, their corporate income taxes. Instead, they flow their income directly to investors, who then may pay personal income taxes on the income.

Now, it goes on to say here in the budget:

Market opportunities for income trusts have increased and the industry is growing throughout Canada. Income trusts provide for the distribution of the available cash flow to the investor while retaining liability in the operating entity. The trust sector has asked several provincial governments to pass legislation explicitly confirming the limited liability provided to investors . . . Nova Scotia is currently the only jurisdiction in Canada where an unlimited liability corporation can be incorporated.

There have been various reports that have been slightly different than that in the news media, but to see this legislation introduced now is quite interesting.

Now, there can be significant reductions in corporate income taxes, as stated in the budget document here. They can be significantly reduced. If we go, Mr. Speaker, a little further along in the budget to page 33, to the page concerning tax revenue, to the third paragraph down, after we're talking about total tax revenue and personal income tax revenue, which is expected to grow strongly in the next three years, the hon. minister gets to corporate income tax revenue. It states here:

Corporate income tax revenue is also forecast to decline in [fiscal year] 2003-04, due to about $200 million in refunds for 2002 and prior tax years that were paid in 2003-04. After adjusting for this, corporate income tax revenue is expected to grow only modestly over the next three years to $2.1 billion by 2006-07. Corporate income tax cuts in 2004-05 and assumed declines in energy prices are expected to mostly offset growth from Alberta's strong economy.

We can cut corporate income taxes. This side of the Assembly has supported those measures, but we have to be careful here. I would like to know how much money will be saved in the corporate sector with the use of income trusts. Now, if we see that there have been about $200 million in refunds for the year 2002 and prior tax years that were paid out, how will this bill change that? Will there be more refunds? Will there be less refunds?

Two hundred million dollars is a significant amount of money. We could build a lot of schools in Calgary. We could repair a lot of schools in Edmonton. We could maybe go a long way to building a new hospital or maybe the Victoria school of arts, the new one, the $60 million school that hasn't been built. You know, if there's a shortage of cash, we should have a look at this. I would like to know who is going to benefit and how much before we consider supporting this legislation. If there is going to be a significant reduction in the amount of money that corporations are going to pay in tax, who's going to pick up that amount? What other sectors of the economy are going to have to pay?

Now, certainly, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View – I always think of Bridgeland, but it's Mountain View. I don't know why I want to call it Calgary-Bridgeland, Mr. Speaker, but I do. It's Calgary-Mountain View. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has talked about the income trust unit holders being personally liable for defaults or other legal measures, such as paying for an environmental disaster, for instance.

Ray Turchansky, who is a freelance writer and income tax preparer – I wish I had got him to do my income taxes this year actually – writes:

R. Malcolm Gilroy, an expert in global capital [funds], wrote in this month's issue of The FundLetter: "Many legal experts believe that the possibility of personal liability ever taking effect is almost nil."

He goes on to write:

Regardless, concern over liability was a major reason why income trusts were not included in the S&P/TSX Composite Index, after S&P committee deliberations in the fall of 2002.

So there has been an interest in pursuing this from various parties, and I believe the Ontario provincial government is going to address the issue. The Canadian securities commission, an umbrella group of the 13 provincial and territorial securities regulators – it says 13 here – proposed a policy to govern the income trust industry. So this is certainly fitting. Whenever you look at other jurisdictions, there is a need for this bill.

Mr. Speaker, when we look at providing limited liability for unit holders of Alberta income trusts, I think this bill is also going to improve the transparency of income trust operations and strengthen controls on insider trading, which the hon. member has mentioned, and by improving investor protection, it is notable that the government aims to increase investment in income trusts. There is certainly, as the hon. member has stated, a market value of close to $90 billion, if not a little greater, and income trusts are a significant part of Alberta's business sector.

Now, is this legislation going to be held over for the summer until this consultation process takes place, or are we going to pass this legislation through the Assembly this week? Hopefully, we can come back next week and have some more discussions and hold the government accountable, but if not, I would like to reserve judgment on this bill until the consultation process is complete. In light of the fact that there don't seem to be many examples, if any, of personal liability by investors in the cases of income trusts to date, I don't think there's a sense of urgency here. Hopefully, the consultation process that the hon. member has discussed will take place and we can hear from any parties over the summer and early in the fall, and we could conclude debate on this bill at that time, Mr. Speaker.

With those remarks, I will cede the floor to another member of the Assembly. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just would like to enter debate for a few brief moments to compliment the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View for bringing forward an important bill at an important time. I think the urgency of the bill is also duly noted given the state of the industry and the progress being made to date.

Some elementary history, Mr. Speaker. Some years ago, in about 1996, 1995, this industry, the oil and gas industry in Alberta, was somewhat starved for capital. Generally, it takes about 120 per cent of cash flow to keep growing in the oil and gas business, and people were looking for increased rates of cash flow. The industry traditionally returned about 3 to 4 per cent return on capital. So a number of companies went to Wall Street, to the New York investment bankers and dealers there, and they had some short but curt advice given to them by the New York banking community, and that was: go big or go home.

So at that time some grew big, and I think we saw the amalgamation of PanCanadian and Alberta Energy Company into a very, very successful Canadian industrial called EnCana. We also saw what usually occurs in Alberta, a unique entrepreneurial solution to a difficult issue, and that unique solution became the capitalizing on the existing income trust rules. That grew, Mr. Speaker, to the point where today that represents over 12 and a half per cent of total activity in the oil and gas industry. That trust mechanism is critical, and it's very important to the onward and continued growth of this industry as we continue to supply important reserves to our biggest customer, the United States, and also as we continue to keep people in Toronto working on Bay Street and in other areas.

In fact, if you look at Canada from an exporting perspective, Mr. Speaker, the number one product that is exported in Canada is energy, and in fact the number one investment product in Canada is the oil and gas sector, at some 27 billion dollars plus. We have an opportunity to make something that is good even better, and I think that we want to take advantage of this time, to move with both alacrity and dispatch to deliver an appropriate amendment at an appropriate time.

I can say to those who have followed the work of the Minister of Environment and looked at those liability restrictions that are necessary for reclamation, site reclamation and reclamation in that perspective, I think that that matter is appropriately covered there.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, to those who feel that there is a leakage or that we have either a tax abatement or tax leaving Alberta, I would say that I think we have seen the benefit in some studies that indicate that the return, the investment, the growth, the productivity, the economic turn that that money takes in Alberta far outweigh any type of tax leakage that we would see. In fact, limiting this liability, as is proposed by the member, would in fact expose trust units to a much broader investment community, that being the United States, where they can hold these trust units for appreciation and not be so concerned about the tax implications.

So I think it meets an important test of legislation. It's appropriate to the marketplace, and it's extremely timely that this bill be passed. I commend the member for bringing it forward at this time.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I certainly listened with interest this evening to comments by numerous members that have participated in the debate on Bill 34, the Income Trusts Liability Act. I do it with a lot of interest because like so many people, I think, in this Assembly we really don't understand all about income trust liabilities.

I think, as well, that our responsibility here is not only to supply capital for oil companies. I think it's also an excellent opportunity, when things are going right, for people to invest and get a very good return on their money compared to what you can get in a savings account or even the mutual funds, especially after today. So there is an opportunity here.

Again, what we are dealing with in the energy sector is a sector that has over the history of its existence here in the province had a boom and bust type of activity. If we go back to the early '80s, when things were not too rosy in the energy sector and the price of a barrel of oil dropped dramatically, then what I have to question and what I have to certainly get some answers for as we move further into the debate and get into Committee of the Whole and whatever is: what happens to these income trusts if, for example, we do have OPEC deciding that they aren't going to have quotas on oil production, that we are going to have unlimited oil production, if we do again get into a situation where the price of crude drops dramatically in the world, where we have a glut on the market, where we have perhaps some companies folding because they don't have enough capital? What sort of protection is the average Albertan that invests in these income trusts going to have?

I think those are very serious questions. We have to realize here in this Assembly that we are not only here for big business that requires capital to do business – and I think that's a very valid point that the minister brought out – but as well we have to as legislators provide a certain degree of protection for the average investor. I don't know how many times all of us have sat in this Assembly and heard discussions as to how people have to take care of themselves in the future, that they have to plan for the future, that we have to do more than just a pension plan, if we're fortunate enough to have it, because we will not have adequate funds for retirement. So if we have people that are putting a great deal of the money that they are banking on for retirement into an income trust, then certainly there has to be a certain level of protection for them so that they do have some security when they are investing this money.

We have seen the disastrous results when people aren't protected. I think that all we have to do is look at Enron, I believe it was.

Mr. MacDonald: One of many.

Mr. Bonner: One of many, definitely, where many people had their life savings wiped out by accounting irregularities. I'm not suggesting that that would happen here, Mr. Speaker, but certainly in a bust part of the cycle in the energy sector we could have a situation arise where many people could lose their life savings.

With those comments, I will take my seat and listen to more comments on Bill 34, the Income Trusts Liability Act, and certainly hope that I can get some answers to my questions. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29. Anybody else wish to participate in the debate?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View to close debate.

Mr. Hlady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the members for Edmonton-Gold Bar and Edmonton-Glengarry for their questions this evening, and I would like to thank the Minister of Energy for his excellent comments, adding value and explaining and letting people understand how this works inside our number one industry of energy.

To add just a couple of quick comments to that, Mr. Speaker, it's understanding the cycles. In the last 20 years we've seen at least three cycles happen, seeing the investment money and the circle that goes on about seeing new companies start up again. It's been pretty historic in the last couple of years when the income trusts come in and buy up some of the assets that are here to allow the flow of cash. They've been paying some premium prices, paying very good prices.

Well, that money goes to our smaller and our medium-sized oil and gas companies. Those oil and gas companies in turn reinvest that money back into Alberta, which creates the jobs in Alberta that everybody wants, the high-paying jobs in the oil and gas sector. It's a very, very exciting piece, and it's a part of the cycle that will continue. By seeing that external money from all over the globe investing through income trusts back into Alberta, we'll continue to see our economy grow and see us be able to have the revenues that we do have in this province through royalties and other ways. So that's a main piece of what I hope helps the hon. members understand where we're at.

I hope to get into Committee of the Whole tomorrow, and I will answer the other questions that they had today at the beginning of tomorrow. Let us move forward with the question for this evening.

[Motion carried; Bill 34 read a second time]

Bill 35 Companies Amendment Act, 2004

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to move second reading of Bill 35, the Companies Amendment Act, 2004.

This is a very simple and small modification to the act. The Companies Act allows not-for-profit companies to incorporate under part 9. At least 50 per cent of the board members of every company must be Alberta residents, and business cannot be transacted at a meeting unless 50 per cent of the board of directors present at the meeting are Alberta residents.

What's transpired to bring forward Bill 35 is that an Edmonton company, an Alberta company, technically is breaking the law. In 1999 the Cancer International Research Group incorporated under part 9 of the Companies Act, and since then CIRG, as they are known, has grown into an international research organization and has a board that has grown to reflect the international community. We've grown into quite a global marketplace and community, Mr. Speaker, and it is very important that we make this slight adjustment to the act.

I saw a case when I was at the Glenrose rehab hospital where one of the doctors had several million dollars worth of research money, and he was enticed away from our city, our province, and the money went with him. In the case of CIRG they are advising the province that unless we make changes to the residency requirements in the Companies Act, they are going to have to leave. So that's jobs and dollars for Edmontonians and Albertans, and we certainly don't want to see that happen.

So that they will remain within the law, we're making this slight adjustment to the Companies Act to give the Lieutenant Governor in Council the authority to exempt companies from the application of the Alberta residency and meeting requirements. We certainly do want to have this company stay. This isn't carte blanche. We are leaving it up to the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make this exception. If there should be any others after this, we don't know, but at the present time we certainly want this company to stay and continue to do their research. Therefore, I would like to see this moved in second reading.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to get an opportunity to speak to Bill 35, the Companies Amendment Act, 2004. This is legislation that originally had been discussed as part of the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, Bill 33. I am pleased to see that it is legislation that is being brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, and all members of the Assembly will have an opportunity, if they so wish, to discuss this bill. Certainly, we have to do everything we can to facilitate research into, hopefully, a cure for one of the most horrible diseases that affects pretty well every family in the province and in the country and probably around the globe.

Now, when we are going to allow the Lieutenant Governor in Council, in this case upon the recommendation of the Minister of Government Services, to exempt a nonprofit organization from certain provisions of the Companies Act, particularly the requirement that at least 50 per cent of its board members be residents of Alberta, this is not a one-time deal, as I understand it. This amendment could affect many different organizations, and I think that's why it's important that it stands as a bill on its own.

Certainly, the hon. member talked about this bill and how it relates to one Edmonton company. In fact, I believe a researcher from this city started this company, and now as a result of an expansion of those efforts there are 450 people doing cancer research around the world. Fifty of them are here in Edmonton. Some are in Los Angeles. Some, I understand, are in France, but there are contracts from different industries, large industries, to do research. The pharmaceutical industry, I believe, finances a lot of this research. I hope it continues, and I hope it continues in Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, with those comments I think it's important that all members have a close look at this legislation. We've been told by Government Services representatives that, you know, there's a chance this medical research organization could move to as far away as France or to Los Angeles and that without this amendment Alberta would definitely lose a very vital organization. The city of Edmonton would lose an important research facility as would the University of Alberta. But when we're having a look here at amending the Companies Act, we have to recognize that this is more than just housekeeping, because we are leaving the door wide open for ministerial discretion at a future date for there to be other changes.

I would have to remind all hon. members of this Assembly of this member's reluctance to support this bill in the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, because sometimes, if you can imagine, this government acts in very secretive ways. [interjection] I hear, "Oh, no, it doesn't," but I had to work very diligently to find a ministerial order from last December that set up the Utilities Consumer Advocate, and that was at the discretion of the minister. I was naive I guess, Mr. Speaker. I thought all ministerial orders were public knowledge, but to my amazement they are not. Anything could happen with this current government, so I think the more we discuss initiatives like this in the Assembly, the better off all Albertans are.

There's certainly no sense of urgency on this side of the Assembly to have an end to the session. We have a role to play, and that's to hold the government accountable. If the government is open and as transparent as they claim, well, then our job certainly would be easier.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would urge acceptance of this bill,

Bill 35, but let's be very, very careful about how we use this legislation in the future.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora to close debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 35 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It has indeed been a very electrifying evening of debate and discussion. We've all been hugely impressed. On that note I would move that the Assembly stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 9:44 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to have the opportunity to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two staff members. Leanne Smalley is with the ministerial correspondence area, and Dan Paquette is a student in public relations from Grant MacEwan College. I would ask the members to give them the cordial welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly special visitors in both the members' and the public galleries. I have 160 students from Percy Baxter school in Whitecourt. I think that's the largest delegation we've ever had from one school in this Assembly, half of which are here now, and the other half I'd like to introduce at 2:30: teachers/group leaders Leslee Jodry, Kirsty Greenshields, Jacob VanVliet, parent helpers Cindy Brook, Virginia Kipling, Michelle Vandenhouten, and a lifelong friend of mine, Lynn Starman. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to be able to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the hon. members of this Legislature my mother, Stella Bell. My mother is one of those remarkable Alberta pioneers who along with countless others did so much to create this province we're so proud of. She retired just before her 80th birthday, and that was only because her husband and business partner, Woody Bell, died suddenly. They were successful people in the village of Sangudo and area and just couldn't retire. Did I say that already? I'm worried about the Speaker here.

Mom reluctantly left Sangudo and now resides in Edmonton to be closer to three of her children. She has had a couple of hip replacements and may be a little slower, but she's as feisty as ever. When she's told to be careful and slow down, her favourite response is, "Don't put me in a rocking chair."

Mr. Speaker, as we approach our centennial, I want members to know that Mom is from one of Alberta's oldest families and from one of North America's oldest families. Her grandmother, Florence Mowat, is recorded in the 1891 Edmonton section of the Alberta census and her uncle in the 1881 census. On her father's side her family arrived in Massachusetts in 1651.

Accompanying my mother is my sister, Kathy Korol, one of the best door-knocking partners and recruiters of new PC members one could ever want. She's also a very successful businesswoman. They're seated in the public gallery. Mom and Kathy, would you please rise – and, Mom, carefully – and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: I think the hon. member should be more concerned about what his mother thinks than what the Speaker thinks.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members in the House a young lady who is joining my staff at the constituency office to work as a summer STEP student. Her name is Katharine Julien. She's a native Edmontonian, she's an honours graduate from Old Scona academic high school, and she's currently studying public affairs and policy management at Carleton University. She has brought some experience from Parliament Hill with her, and I want to welcome her to the beautiful Edmonton-Mill Creek constituency office. I would ask all members here to join me in that welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hon. members, today I'd like to acknowledge the service of two employees who have served the Legislative Assembly Office with integrity, dedication, and who have recently announced their impending retirement.

Vivian Loosemore has built a career with Alberta Hansard. She joined us in 1977, became managing editor of Hansard in 1991 and manager of the public information branch in 2002. In developing and changing with Alberta Hansard, Mrs. Loosemore has been witness to the political views and debates of hundreds of MLAs that have shaped the laws in Alberta for close to 30 years. Vivian has recently overseen the transition to the use of digital recording in the production of Hansard, ensuring that our operation continues to utilize the most up-to-date technology.

Bill Gano began his career with the public service in 1974, initially working as a programmer in the formative years of the computer age. His career progressed and brought him to the Legislative Assembly Office in 1989 to oversee the development of our computer systems. Bill is the director of two branches: information systems services and financial management and administrative services. He also serves as a senior financial officer and has responsibility for records management, freedom of information and protection of privacy issues. Bill is a founding member of the Canadian Association of Parliamentary Administrators.

I would ask that Vivian and Bill rise in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and receive the recognition and thanks of all members of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. First of all, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly on behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview Anna Lund. Anna will be the summer constituency assistant for the Edmonton-Riverview constituency office and has received many awards including the Louise McKinney postsecondary scholarship, the Edmonton Journal/dean of arts award of excellence, the dean's list, and these repeatedly. Quite accomplished. She has just completed her fourth-year honours in political science at the University of Alberta, and this fall she's enrolling in her first year of law. Anna is seated in the public gallery. I would ask her to please rise and accept the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the staff that support me in the Edmonton-Centre constituency office. We have Penny Craig. Penny, if you'd rise. She is the constituency manager. For those of you that have phoned and heard her voice, you would recognize her as an on-air radio personality from a few years back with Edmonton radio stations. Jim Draginda is our outreach worker. He originally started with the Edmonton Journal and then changed careers into arts administration and marketing. Lisa Claire Lakaparampil is our summer student this year. Lisa, please rise. Lisa has also worked with me on getting out the youth vote, and she's involved with the women's vote as well.

So I would ask them all to please rise again and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mrs. K. Hryciw, who travelled here today from Thorhild, Alberta. She is the grandmother of our page Andrea Balon and is an avid watcher of the proceedings of the House. Mrs. Hryciw is accompanied by her granddaughter Kristin Balon, Andrea's sister. Kristin is currently entering her third year of nursing at the University of Alberta and resides in the constituency of Edmonton-Glenarry. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I'd ask both Mrs. Hryciw and Kristin to please rise – they are seated in the members' gallery – and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two guests this afternoon. The first is a good friend and supporter, Judith Axelson. Judith is a distinguished educator who now has a position at the University of Alberta, but she is also the president of the Edmonton-Mill Woods constituency association and has been since 1993, where she's gearing up for another successful election when it's called provincially.

The second guest, sitting with Judith, is Weslyn Mather. The Mather name is well known and very prominent in Edmonton-Mill Woods, Mr. Speaker. Weslyn is the assistant principal at J. Percy Page high school, where she's been very instrumental in developing the telelearning centre. She's also the nominated Liberal candidate in Edmonton-Mill Woods, where we are working very hard to ensure that she succeeds me in the Legislature. I'd ask Weslyn to wave and I'd ask Judith to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through to members of the Assembly two very special guests visiting the Legislature today. They are from Singleton, Australia. Steve Hamson has come to Edmonton as the new head coach of the Edmonton Gold rugby team. Steve's advanced international coaching experience should prove beneficial for this team, which will be vying for the Canadian Super League national rugby championship this summer. Simon Lewis is accompanying Steve and hopes to play at an elite level of rugby here in Canada. This being his first trip to Canada and especially to Alberta, I'm sure he will never want to go back to Australia, unless it starts to snow again later today.

I'd like to wish both Steve and Simon and the rest of the Edmonton Gold rugby team, where my legislative assistant, Gerald Proctor, also plays, the best of luck this season as they compete with Calgary in yet another battle of Alberta. That's not quite what Gerald had written in here, but I'm not going to say that I'm hoping Edmonton beats Calgary.

They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you five employees of Alberta Innovation and Science. Among the duties that these individuals do very well in their areas of responsibility is the development of the highly acclaimed Innovation and Science web site. I'd like to introduce to you Lisa Tsen, Cory Payne, Kim Sawada, Zoran Mijajlovic, and Anita Moorey. If they'd please rise and receive the traditional warm greetings of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and to all members of this House two very hard-working young men who have joined us today to observe the proceedings of this House. They're seated in the public gallery. One of them is my constituency assistant, who keeps my office in Edmonton-Strathcona running smoothly. His name is Doug Bailie. Assisting him this summer with the operations of the office thanks to the summer temporary employment program is Roland Schmidt. Mr. Schmidt is in his fourth-year bachelor of arts with a double major in history and philosophy at the University of Alberta. I would like to ask both of them to rise and receive my warm thanks for providing excellent assistance to me and also great services to the constituents of Edmonton-Strathcona. Now I'll ask that my colleagues join with me in welcoming them to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to introduce to you with a great deal of pleasure some members of the Edmonton committee on the National Day of Healing and Reconciliation. They are Shirley Armstrong, Maggie Hodgson, Yi Yi Datar and her daughter Nisha Datar, Maggie Mercredi, Iris Wara, and Geraldine Wardman. They're seated in the public gallery, and I would like to ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly two very hard-working young women who have joined us today. One is my constituency assistant, who helps keep everything on an even keel in Edmonton-Highlands, Ms Mary MacKinnon. Assisting her this summer with the operations of the office thanks to the STEP program is Suzanne MacLeod. Miss MacLeod is going into her final year at the University of Alberta. She's on the dean's list and is completing her bachelor of arts degree with a major in anthropology. She is also an accomplished flutist, performing with the Edmonton Youth Orchestra for the past seven years. I would ask them both to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly. Thank you.

My second introduction of the day, Mr. Speaker, is Mr. Mike Fekete and his grade 5 class. It gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you this grade 5 class from Rundle school in my constituency of Edmonton-Highlands. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Mike Fekete, and a parent volunteer.

Mr. Fekete's class is currently learning about the democratic system first-hand, Mr. Speaker. They're launching a campaign to push for mandatory seat belts in school buses. They have developed a petition that they will be taking through the community, and they've written letters to me outlining the reasons why they would like to see seat belts in school buses. I will be tabling these letters later today in the Legislature.

As they move up to grade 6 in the fall, Mr. Fekete will be moving up with them, and they will continue their campaign, their goal being the presentation of a private member's bill in the Legislature, and I have indicated that I am prepared to co-operate with them on that. I'm very proud of their involvement in the democratic process and very pleased to have them rise today and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Appointment of Returning Officers

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is the government's democratic duty to appoint returning officers who will oversee provincial elections in a fair, impartial way to ensure a credible result. Unfortunately, this government has chosen to appoint returning officers with political party connections, throwing the integrity of the next election into doubt, especially in constituencies such as the new Edmonton-Decore, formerly Edmonton-Glengarry, where a recount was required in 2001. My questions are to the Attorney General. Why is this government jeopardizing the integrity of the next election by appointing the former Tory constituency president of Edmonton-Glengarry to be the returning officer for the same constituency, now called Edmonton-Decore?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I wouldn't suggest for a moment that it imperils the democratic process. Returning officers are people who have experience in the democratic process, understand the democratic process, and understand what it takes to deal with an election.

Ms Blakeman: To the Attorney General: will this government investigate whether it violated its own code of ethics for public service employees by appointing returning officers who have a conflict of interest?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, returning officers are not public employees. They are employees of the Chief Electoral Officer and by definition employees of the Legislature because the Chief Electoral Officer is an officer of this Legislature, not an employee of the government. So a returning officer is not a public employee in that sense and isn't a part of that code.

Secondly, a person taking an oath of office as a returning officer takes an oath of office of neutrality and drops any political involvement that they have at that stage. There are examples across this country of people who've been appointed returning officers. In most cases I would suggest that they've had involvement on one side or the other of the political spectrum. There would be, I would hazard a guess, a number of Liberals who've been appointed as returning officers in this province, perhaps federally, perhaps provincially. I don't know. I don't ask people's political affiliation before I bring forward an order in council appointing someone as a returning officer. I never have, never will. What's important is that they understand the process, that they're prepared to be neutral in the process, and that they're prepared to take direction from the Chief Electoral Officer, not from the government or anyone else.

Ms Blakeman: They're actually covered under section 5 of the Election Act.

My third question to the Attorney General: will the minister review the appointments of all the returning officers in light of their Tory party connections?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, by definition, when somebody is appointed a returning officer, they do not have Tory party connections. If they have been involved with political parties, they at that point drop their involvement with the political parties. They work with the Chief Electoral Officer, and they are neutral and cannot have political party involvement. So by definition they are not in conflict of interest or in any other way partisan.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Automobile Insurance Reform

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. From the beginning auto insurance reform has been one closed-door meeting after another, with the public, those paying the highest insurance rates in the west, being shut out of the debate. Yesterday, after rifts amongst the government's own members became too apparent to ignore, the Premier mused about consulting with his colleagues on the finance standing policy committee to see about making an important May 27 meeting on auto insurance reforms open to the public. My first question is to the Minister of Finance. Is it a policy of this government to hide from public scrutiny when debating contentious issues such as auto insurance reform?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, we've gone through a very lengthy process on this change and reform of insurance within the province of Alberta, and we've had lengthy consultations with stakeholder groups over the last year. We have shared that information I think quite well with the people in this Assembly and with the public. We're in a process right now, since we have passed the legislative framework to put the new structure in place, of pulling together the regulations that back up that legislative package. It's a lengthy process, and we have had a number of very well-attended standing policy committee meetings where our caucus members have been debating the regulations and the recommendations of these regulations, and they've had excellent input.

I can tell you that the process that we follow through our standing policy committees has been very, very successful. Our members have the ability to have that open debate and dialogue back and forth and bring the views of the people that they represent to the table and put them on the table. So the process is governed through our standing policy chairs and our whip's office, and we will continue on with the process that we've used to date. It's been most successful.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: how many times have insurance company representatives attended finance standing policy committees compared to representatives of consumers' groups?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, there again, Mr. Speaker, the member obviously hasn't heard or followed the process for our standing policy committees. We have a number of groups for all of the standing policy committees that approach the chairs and ask to make representations to those committees. Quite often those are made in the open. Members of the opposition have even attended those meetings; at least your researchers have. So there have been a number of times when a number of groups have made representation and have been given the opportunity to appear before the standing policy committees. The insurance industry is just one of those many, many hundreds of groups.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that public scrutiny of the government auto insurance reform policy to date is sadly lacking, will this minister now commit to making the May 27 meeting public, not only for members on this side of the House but for members at large?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, we have a process that we follow, but let me make one thing clear. We are a work-in-progress right now. We have not finalized the regulations for this new structure. We have not done a final approval on this new structure. So until such time as our caucus, through our standing policy process, reaches a conclusion that is a recommendation to go to the cabinet and to the caucus, we will not be going out into the public and debating this out there, because we haven't come to a conclusion in our own caucus. So when that happens, we will be delighted to talk to people.

In fact, up to now I've had thousands of letters and phone calls that we have responded to with information, as people have asked us questions on the process of the renewal of the insurance industry within the province and the renewal of the new structure. So we have been responding up to now, Mr. Speaker, and we will continue with that. But no – no – decisions have been made or finalized.

Hamelin Creek Culvert Project

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, when referring to the Hamelin Creek culvert project, there are a number of inconsistencies between the information found in the print version of the Alberta Gazette versus the on-line version of the Alberta Gazette. The print version documents a cost overrun of 60.45 per cent, whereas the on-line version documents a cost overrun of 60.61 per cent, a difference of almost $53,000. The date of approval for this cost overrun is also inconsistent, listed as September 30, 2003, in print versus December 8, 2003, on-line, a difference of over two months. My questions are to the Minister of Transportation. Why are there inconsistencies in cost overrun amounts for the Hamelin Creek culvert project?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman obviously pays a lot of attention to all of the information that we put out, and I will take his question under advisement and get back to him tomorrow with the answer in terms of the difference between the two information pieces.

Mr. Bonner: Then at the same time could the minister also find out why there are inconsistencies in the date of the approval for the cost overruns for this project?

Mr. Stelmach: I will undertake to do so.

Mr. Bonner: Also to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that there were ongoing problems with the Hamelin Creek culvert, why did preliminary engineering reports fail to identify the factors that have led to the current cost overruns?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I can't answer that question at this particular time, but I do know that there are other parties involved. Whenever there is a creek crossing, we have to involve the federal Department of Fisheries and Oceans, and also the coastguard gets involved under the navigable waters act. So there are a number of parties we have to consult with before the final decision is made.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Highwood.

BSE Compensation Payments

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development promised over two months ago to provide a detailed accounting of who got what in the $400 million in provincial BSE compensation payments, yet here we are a day or two away from the end of the spring sitting and the minister has still not kept her promise. The government seems to share the same interest as the big U.S. meat-packing companies in hiding the facts from Albertans. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. If the BSE payouts were already 97 per cent complete two months ago, why is the government deliberately delaying the release of the detailed accounting of BSE monies until after the adjournment of the spring sitting of this Legislature?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, the timing of the spring session has absolutely nothing to do with the timing of the release, and obviously this member has some information on the ending date of this Legislature that I don't have. I assume that the House will conclude when the House business is finished.

However, Mr. Speaker, it's a timely question. I asked my department yesterday when we would be ready to release this information. We are on target. We had thought it would take us till late May, early June to conclude it. We still have perhaps a half a dozen accounts that have some work left to be done on them.

I have made one thing clear, and I will stand by that. These accounts will be released when they are complete. I have said that consistently. I was not putting out a partial list. I do not think that that is appropriate, Mr. Speaker.

I will remind the hon. member that on the one program I did bring an update that some 1,564 claims had been settled. I would remind the hon. member, also, that we had five programs that dealt with BSE recovery. It is my intention to release all of them with the exception of the market cow/bull program, which will not conclude until later this year.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the minister promised two months ago that these would be released soon, and I quote, why should anyone accept that she's doing anything other than stalling until the Legislature is finished?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not stalling. I have said consistently that we will provide those documents when they're complete, and we will. We have absolutely nothing to hide. Every cheque was made out and is being made out to the owner of the cattle. Every cheque is going to a person who qualifies under the program guidelines. I will remind the hon. member that we have moved 1.2 million head of fat cattle through the system with those programs.

I will remind the hon. member, with much regret as I do, that we are approaching the anniversary of one of the most devastating – devastating – incidents that has ever occurred in the agricultural community in Canada, and our industry today remains hurting but in business. That was the objective of these programs, Mr. Speaker, and I am proud of the fact that the industry in this province played a leadership role in the design and implementation of these programs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister, then, tell the House how many cheques remain to go out and for how much money?

Mrs. McClellan: I think I explained to the hon. member in my last answer that we had I believe about half a dozen accounts that were not completed. Mr. Speaker, we have done a random audit throughout this process. That took a little bit longer, but I think it was necessary. I can't give him the exact number of dollars that remain, because of course with each account it varies. They could be large; they could be minimal.

What I can tell him, again, is that I am proud of the beef industry in this province, who designed the programs to assist the industry. I will remind the hon. member that the people who designed all programs were some 65 individuals from small and large packers, from small and large feedlots, from the five organizations that represent the total beef industry in this province, including the retail industry and, at times, the people who convey these animals. Mr. Speaker, this was truly an industry/government partnership, and it was successful.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Sports and Fitness Strategy

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the excitement of the current NHL hockey playoffs, Canada's gold medal victory at world hockey, the 2004 Olympics in Athens, and numerous local sporting initiatives, we're reminded of the important role played in our everyday lives and the personal benefits that accrue from active participation in sports and fitness activities. My questions today are to the Minister of Community Development. What positive outcomes can we expect for Alberta arising out of the recent meeting of federal, provincial, and territorial ministers who are responsible for sport?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much for the question. Mr. Speaker, I was privileged to attend on behalf of the province of Alberta the recent federal/provincial/territorial ministers of sport meeting in Quebec. At that meeting we made some very significant progress.

The first thing we did was endorsed a new Canadian policy against doping in sports, which affects all of our young athletes.

Secondly, we developed a strategy to increase sport, fitness, and activity levels among all Canadians. Having increased that by about 10 per cent last time, we set a similar target for this year.

Thirdly, we discussed and developed a framework that would advance the cause of new infrastructure that is needed both indoors and outdoors.

Fourthly, we also talked about a new strategic framework, which we're just finishing off now, regarding our Canadian and in turn our provincial international sports hosting policy so that all bids going forward for these larger events have a fair chance in that they'll be regionally balanced without penalizing provinces, such as Alberta, who have a great reputation for doing the same.

So those are just some of the highlights, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you. My supplemental is to the same minister. What policies and plans do you and your department have to encourage more young Albertans to become more involved in sports and fitness activities?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're very engaged as a department and a ministry with the promotion of programs such as SummerActive, which is going on right now, launched in Calgary by myself just last week.

We also provide about $5.8 million through our Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation specifically towards 77 of our provincial umbrella organizations in sport, most of whom are very much targeted at youth.

Thirdly, I just recently signed a bilateral agreement with the government of Canada that will see $1.2 million flowing out to some of the underrepresented groups, which include young girls and youth in general. Aboriginals, of course, are included.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we are investing a great deal in projects such as our Alberta Summer Games, which this year will be occurring in High River and Okotoks and the MD of Foothills in July. I believe it's July 22 to July 25. Those Summer Games provide a tremendous showcase for our youth. They function as stepping stones, and we're very proud to sponsor them. I look forward to being down there to unveil them later this summer.

Thank you.

Twinning of Highway 4

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, the change from the eastern route to the western route on the twinning of highway 4 as it goes through Milk River is a bad decision both monetarily and for children's safety. The new western route will close farms, move businesses, and move a portion of the CPR right-of-way. The eastern route does not have nearly the same problems. To the Minister of Transportation: why did the government choose to change the route from the east side of town to the west side when the cost of this change could be up to $10 million more?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The issue that the hon. member is referring to was one of the first decisions that as a minister I had to make with respect to routing of the north/south trade corridor. There were tons of information that went into making the final decision. There was a second engineering review by a third party to give us additional information, and we made the decision based on the best evidence available at that particular time.

Just further with respect to the proposed additional cost, Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of the additional cost running into the $10 million. They looked at the topography of the land. They looked at issues cited around Milk River with their sewage lagoon. There is also an intersection crossing on a secondary road. All of that information was put together, and that decision was made many years ago.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that the western route will force highway 501 to go through town, what will be the cost to protect the children from the newly planned route of highway 501, that will go right past their school?

Mr. Stelmach: All of the safety evaluations were made by a number of consultants on that particular project. The information coming back is that the road is safe and that it's going to protect the integrity of the north/south trade corridor, the purpose of which, of course, is to move goods and services as efficiently and as safely as possible.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that in a private survey done by the residents of Milk River 63 per cent of the residents wanted the east route and only 29 per cent wanted the west route, why is this government choosing to ignore the town's citizens and develop the costly western route?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I personally attended a public meeting. That was probably four years ago, maybe more, when we had made that particular decision. Like I mentioned before, it was one of the first decisions made as I was appointed Minister of Infrastructure, and it was a difficult decision. But, again, it was based on the best information and evidence delivered by professionals in the field that they professed to be professional in.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

2:10 Calgary Ring Road

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few weeks ago there was a historical announcement in the city of Calgary.

Mr. Norris: The Flames made the playoffs.

Mrs. Ady: Beyond the playoffs, Mr. Speaker.

The Premier, the Minister of Transportation, and the chief of the Tsuu T'ina nation signed an agreement that begins negotiations for a major piece of the ring road around the southeast side of the city of Calgary. Some say that this particular negotiation began some 50 years ago, and for many years this was just a dotted line on the map and called the missing link. While my constituents recognize that this is just the beginning of the process, they have some questions. My questions are for the Minister of Transportation. Can the minister let my constituents know what this request for proposal means? Will we be leasing the land, purchasing the land? Who will have control of this roadway?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the agreement in principle signed by the Premier and the chief of the Tsuu T'ina nation . . . [Several members hummed Happy Birthday] It's a good thing we're not going to have 53 questions today.

But getting back to the question, the agreement in principle was reached after considerable negotiation, really, amongst three parties: the city of Calgary, which of course brings its own needs to the table; the First Nations, the Tsuu T'ina nation; and of course the province of Alberta.

What Calgarians and Albertans have told us is that they want total access and control of the right-of-way. Whenever the road is built, at the end of the day we want total control and access to the road, and this first agreement has given us that. The next step, of course, is to go through the engineering design and to proceed with further negotiations.

The Speaker: For all hon. members, those watching, those listening, and those in the gallery, something happened two seconds ago that perhaps needs an explanation. On this day at a date in the early part of the 20th century the hon. Minister of Transportation was born.

Mrs. Ady: I'd also like to offer the hon. minister a happy birthday.

For my final supplemental. There has been some question about whether this road will be tolled or not. Can the minister let me know whether this is being considered?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, till today I still feel sorry for my mom.

The question about tolls has come up a number of times. This came up as a result of questions posed by the media in the signing ceremony. All the Premier had mentioned at that time – and we support this – is that we're open to all options. It could be a public/private partnership. It could be funded directly by the province. It could be even a capital bond.

One of the issues tied to a toll, of course, would be the existence of an alternative route available to Calgarians to use. They would make the decision whether they want to pay a toll on a new road or use an existing route. The question is: is there a suitable existing route?

That is a question, perhaps, that we'll leave to later in terms of how we fund. There are months and months of negotiations. We anticipate that the detailed engineering study will take about 18 months because, again, we have three balls to balance here. Those are the city, the province, and the First Nations, and the First Nations have certain needs as well. So we'll wait until such time as the preliminary design is done. We'll have a better appreciation of the cost and then proceed from there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Wainwright.

Alberta SuperNet

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Innovation and Science likes to refer to the SuperNet as a highway, but actually the highway that Albertans paid for is more like a P3 toll road. Albertans don't own all of the SuperNet and can't use it without continually paying the companies that are building and servicing it. It's a true government P3: a poorly planned project. My questions are to the Minister of Innovation and Science. Given that the minister has signed a 10-year deal with Axia for all the departments in the government but can't tell us when it begins, can he provide the total on the amount that will be paid to Axia to service the SuperNet for the entire government of Alberta?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, it's always good to get up and talk about the positive benefits that the Alberta SuperNet is going to bring to every region of Alberta.

There are really two elements to the SuperNet project. One, of course, we've talked about at length, and that is the construction of the infrastructure, which would be similar to when you pick up the telephone to talk to somebody. Your voice has to travel over infrastructure. When you log a computer onto the Internet, your data has to travel over an infrastructure, Mr. Speaker. So the Alberta

SuperNet infrastructure is being built across this entire province to provide that infrastructure to every Albertan.

The second element relates to the operation of the network. Mr. Speaker, with that, the government of Alberta has granted a licence to Axia SuperNet Ltd. to operate and maintain the Alberta SuperNet. The term of the agreement – and I couldn't provide this specific information on Thursday when she asked this question last, so I'm glad that she gave me the opportunity today. The contract is effective July 2001, but the 10-year term actually doesn't begin until 33 per cent of the network is finalized and signed over to Axia. That is when the 10-year term begins and goes forward from there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister: given that the government owns the extended network, not the core or the edge devices that are required for this network to work, what contingency plan does your ministry have if one of these contracted companies goes under?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, the entire network is under an operating agreement with Axia SuperNet Ltd. It's their responsibility to manage the network. As part of that contract, particularly in the early years as the revenues from the network may not be sufficient to cover the operating cost, Bell West is in fact obligated to provide the operating cost to make sure that we get through the interim period.

So, Mr. Speaker, we have done a very thorough job in signing this contract to make sure that we have all of the possibilities, whatever events might happen – and that's pure speculation – covered. I do commend our department for doing a thorough job on the contract.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister: given that your ministry will have to continue to pay Axia millions of dollars each year to run the SuperNet, will the minister now admit that the $192 million paid for the initial set-up of the SuperNet is in no way a reflection of its total cost to the taxpayer?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, as we've mentioned many times, the infrastructure cost of the contract is $193 million, and we've explained that before. For illustration on the operating side, currently in our budget estimates we've talked about the $14 million that the government currently spends on access to data networks. As we move from the AGNpac over to SuperNet, at the same price we'll have more connections, greater bandwidth, and better service.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Reliable Water Supplies for Rural Alberta

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents are worried that this is going to be a very dry summer and that they may not have enough water. In recent consultations on rural development my colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and I heard that reliable water supplies for agricultural, industrial, and household use are vital to sustain rural development. My questions are for the Minister of Environment. What is Alberta Environment doing to ensure that reliable water supplies exist in rural Alberta and that our rivers and economies of our smaller communities don't dry up?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, he raises a very interesting question.

The Speaker: Which one could spend four days on, but to the point, please.

Dr. Taylor: I was going to ask you how much time you would allow me, but obviously not four days.

We do have, as you are aware, Mr. Speaker, a very unpredictable water supply in Alberta. It has to do with the nature of our runoff in the spring. Early in the spring we get the supplies rushing down the rivers, and we have an agreement with Saskatchewan that commands us to pass on 50 per cent of the natural flow. Most years we would pass on probably 80 per cent, in the 70 to 90 per cent range. We have to conserve water both on the demand side and the supply side. On the supply side conserving water means building storage so that we can in the spring collect some of that runoff that is legitimately ours. So we need to build more storage. What form that will take, we don't know. But to answer some of the member's questions, we need to build more storage.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you. Given that the Battle River is facing increased demands and lower supplies of water, how will the minister ensure that the many groups competing for water supply from this river will have their voices heard?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we're doing in our water for life strategy is recommending a watershed policy, watershed committees. So on each basin we will establish and we will help fund a watershed committee. On those watershed committees all members of the community will be involved. You'll have industry involved. You'll have the public involved. You'll have the aquatic groups that are interested in aquatic health involved.

A good example of what is done, Mr. Speaker, is the Bow River Basin Council, and that council is made up of a broad spectrum of groups: municipalities, industry, rural municipalities, First Nations. Everybody that has an interest in the Bow River is on that council. Because of that, because of the job that council has done, the Bow River is now one of the healthiest rivers in the world. That's how we see these watershed councils operating: everybody contributing, everybody making decisions, and those decisions coming forward to the government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister consider piping water from the underutilized North Saskatchewan basin to the Battle River basin for the benefit of the people and the economy in that area? [interjections]

Dr. Taylor: Well, the members opposite are just saying no. Mr. Speaker, I will very clearly not just say no. Right now we have the first phase of the Battle River management plan just starting. We expect that it will probably take a year or 18 months to look at a plan, a watershed management plan around the Battle River. To do that, we need to understand the current needs of the Battle River and the aquatic needs and the economic needs of the Battle River. We also need to understand the future aquatic needs and the future needs for economic growth in that Battle River area. Once we understand that, we will look at all options, including piping water from the North Saskatchewan.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, followed by the hon. leader of the third party.

Access to Rituximab

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Government efforts to end age discrimination in auto insurance are out of step with its current policy of age discrimination with regard to funding the cancer drug rituximab. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why is the Human Rights Commission and not the Department of Health and Wellness or the Alberta Cancer Board ending up charged with determining whether or not cancer patients regardless of age be funded for treatment associated with the drug rituximab?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, it's the Alberta Cancer Board that is charged with such a responsibility. The Cancer Board is made up of a number of people whose expertise we rely upon to determine what drugs make the most sense for particular age categories of individuals. There may be drugs that are effective for people that are older, and there may be drugs or different therapies that may be available for people who are younger, even though they might suffer from the same kind of diagnosis of a particular type of cancer.

The Alberta Cancer Board tomorrow is going to be dealing with the issue of its current policy of providing rituximab for those over the age of 60, and they are giving consideration to whether or not it should be provided to people under the age of 60. I can assure the hon. member that it is not the government that decides the original policy that rituximab be given to those only over the age of 60. It is based on the best clinical evidence that the Alberta Cancer Board has available to it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that rituximab has been proven to increase life expectancy in virtually all patients and has been prescribed to patients under 60, what action will this government take to ensure that Albertans have universal access to this life-saving treatment?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I just want to remind members of the Assembly that the Leader of the Opposition's doctorate is not in the matter of medicine. I just want to point that out.

We do rely upon the Alberta Cancer Board to provide their best advice on what drugs should be covered and in what circumstances. For the hon. member to leave the impression here that all of the evidence suggests that rituximab is universally the best thing for all people with cancer I think is not entirely supportable. I again say that we do rely on the expertise of the Alberta Cancer Board to make such decisions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me rephrase that question then. What action will this government be taking to ensure that Albertans have access to this drug when it is prescribed regardless of their age?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, again the issue is not one's age. The question is: what therapies are best for individuals regardless of their age and regardless of their sex? The fact is that there's no discrimination with respect to this. We rely, again, on the best clinical evidence that's available to the Alberta Cancer Board.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Automobile Insurance Reform (continued)

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After almost a year of trying, the government caucus remains hopelessly divided on its so-called auto insurance reforms. Even government MLAs are admitting now what Albertans have long suspected, that the government will break its promise to deliver premiums for all Alberta drivers on a par with those in provinces with public auto insurance. My question is to the Minister of Finance. Given that successive small "c" conservative governments in other western provinces promised to dismantle public auto only to reverse themselves when confronted by the resulting high premiums, why does this Conservative government stubbornly cling to a private insurance model that will not deliver lower premiums for most drivers?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, when we had the debate on the options a year ago as a caucus and we assessed where we were going, we made the determination that we felt that we wanted the private sector to continue to offer automobile insurance within the province, and we're confident that they can do that job quite effectively.

Now, has it been an easy road? No. Are we completed? No. We're still a work in process, but we are on target for the timetable that we set as a caucus for implementation of a new insurance program within this province. It has been a difficult road. It would be more helpful if the leader of the third party would read the information that we have given through numerous dialogues back and forth and through letters back and forth and help with this process instead of always being on the negative, because it is a process that I believe will be successful, that will meet the goals of having affordable, accessible, available, and comparably priced insurance in the province of Alberta for the consumers.

Dr. Pannu: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: what will it take for the government to admit that its so-called auto insurance reforms will inevitably fail to deliver on the government's promise and instead adopt a public insurance model that has delivered lower and more stable premium rates for all drivers in other western provinces?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, when we have come to the completion of our deliberations and we present the package to the people of Alberta, I'm sure that they will agree with our caucus that we have delivered on our promises and we've delivered a package that, again, meets the overall objectives that we've laid out: to have an affordable, accessible, comparably priced insurance package available to all Albertans. That has been our focus.

Dr. Pannu: My final supplementary to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: why is the government waiting till after the adjournment of the spring sitting before making public so-called auto insurance reforms that will not provide rate relief for 80 per cent of Alberta drivers?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, I've made it abundantly clear that we were going to need about 90 days to debate the regulations attached to the legislation that we have passed, and we are on target in that debate. It's a work in progress. We didn't gear it towards when the session may or may not be in. We geared it to the reality of bringing forward a reform package that we could implement by this summer, and we are on target for doing that. If it's not convenient for the leader of the third party, that's unfortunate.

We have worked very hard on this program, and we will not be rushed into completing it to meet his agenda. We are going to do it right, so we're going to take the time and make sure that we have the right regulations to back up the legislation that we've put in place. If that takes 90 days, it takes 90 days. I'm not going to hurry it up to satisfy that hon. member's agenda.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

2:30 Farm Assessment and Taxation Report

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At a recent annual meeting that was well attended by hundreds of Albertans many of the delegates asked about the status of the farm assessment and taxation report recommendations. More recently the mayor of Calgary was questioning the inequity of the current system and how it deals with urban versus rural farmlands. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: could the minister tell me if and when the recommendations of the farm assessment and taxation report will be implemented?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to say clearly to the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and also to the hon. members for Little Bow and Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan that they played an important role in terms of collecting data from stakeholders relative to the input of this final report.

Now, it's interesting to know that we wanted to ensure that the taxation process recognized current practice in agriculture, and that's clearly what we heard from the hon. member and his committee. The final report, though, came back. What happened was that as we were ready to take it into the government process, something called BSE occurred, and as we all know, the agriculture industry over the past year has gone through a lot. So at this particular point in time, to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, we are reviewing the status of it, but certainly we are allowing the dust to settle relative to what the agriculture industry has just gone through in this past year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: would the minister be willing to implement the recommendations as a pilot project in two or three municipalities on a volunteer basis to evaluate the effects of it before implementing it province-wide?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member again, with the information that he's collected, raises a very good point that, certainly, I'll give serious review on relative to the potential of a pilot example to see how this can work in a particular area. I also ask the hon. member if, in fact, he has suggestions on where stakeholders think perhaps this pilot should first start.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Taxation Policy

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A recent PricewaterhouseCoopers study called Tax Facts and Figures shows that average income earners in Alberta pay more taxes than those in B.C. and Ontario. In fact, the only Albertans who pay the lowest taxes of the provinces are those who make more than $80,000 a year. To the Minister of Revenue: why does the Alberta tax advantage only exist for those who make over $80,000 a year?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, when you look at our business plan, one of the objectives is that the overall personal taxes remain the lowest in this country. It is true that when you look at all the personal tax loads, not just personal income tax itself but all of the taxes that individuals pay, we still remain the lowest among all of the provinces in this country.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will this government drop its flat tax fairy tale and admit that flat taxes unfairly discriminate against middle-income earners?

Mr. Melchin: Well, we're glad, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition is reading his fairy tale books in the evening. This government is not going to stop with respect to having the objective of having the best environment to attract highly skilled people and individuals and all people to come to Alberta for a good place to work and find jobs. It is important that we maintain tax policies that do that. There's no reason why we should penalize those that want to work hard and be industrious and earn income, that just because they make more income, they should be penalized. That's a particular aspect of this tax structure that I'm pleased to say that we will retain.

Dr. Taft: Given that average earners, severely normal people in B.C. and Ontario, pay the lowest taxes because of progressive tax rates, will the Revenue minister return Alberta to a fair, progressive tax rate?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I've just said that it is fair to have a single, simple, fair, uniform tax applied to all. All Albertans should have the opportunity to contribute to the services they receive. In that respect, why should one be penalized, as viewed progressive, by paying more at a higher rate just because they make more money? The Alberta advantage is alive and it's well and it exists in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Small Business

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the province released a report called Securing Tomorrow's Prosperity, which talks about a plan to increase Alberta's GDP by upwards of a hundred billion dollars by 2010, which is clearly very exciting news. My question for the Minister of Economic Development is: given that small business is often credited with creating most new jobs and most new wealth and that almost all business is small business, will this plan create a lot more focus on small-business issues and obstacles in order to help more small businesses succeed?

Mr. Norris: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, who I know is a former small businessman like myself and is vitally concerned with the success of small business. Unbeknownst to a lot of members, it might amaze you that some 95 per cent of businesses in Alberta qualify as small businesses. So it is obviously of vital concern in the value-added plan that we look at this, and we have in a number of different ways.

Some of the things the strategy calls for, in specific answer to the member's questions, are to increase management and leadership capacity through training courses, support mentoring and monitoring for small enterprises. We do that through the Business Link here in Edmonton and the Business Link in Calgary. We want to of course continue with our regional economic alliances, Mr. Speaker, which are regional economic alliances throughout the province that focus on small business. Of course, we want to continue working on access to capital, which continues to be one of the concerns brought forward by small businesses, and to that end the Minister of Science and Innovation, the Minister of Revenue, and myself are working on a report to bring back to government. All of these things meant specifically to help small businesses succeed.

Mr. Lord: Again for the same minister: what performance benchmarks and objective measurements such as monitoring small-business success and failure rates will be put in place in coming years to ascertain whether the plan is working or not?

Mr. Norris: Well, let me say this about that, Mr. Speaker: I'm a big fan of benchmarks, as you can well imagine. [interjections] This is a very tough crowd. A tough crowd.

With respect to the hon. member's questions, clearly we wouldn't enter into any government program without having some kind of benchmark, and of course with this program we do, not only in relation to the growth which we've set, taking our target from $150 billion in GDP to some $250 billion over the next 10 years, but also in the success rates of small business.

There are a number of ways we can monitor that. Obviously, the number of business bankruptcies, which I'm very pleased to report is down this year over last and down last year over the previous year. Furthermore, the number of business start-ups is a way to monitor this.

Of course, on a microlevel we want to make sure that industry-specific sectors are being targeted and looked at. I would ask the hon. member and all members present to pick up a copy of this wonderful and very helpful government publication called Securing Tomorrow's Prosperity. On page 12 you will see outlined what our benchmarks are by industry. They're highlighted for my reference but not for yours, so page 12. If you look at that, Mr. Speaker, you will see that we have set out some very specific benchmarks, which we will endeavour to monitor in the fullness of time, the rigours of the process, and with attention to detail.

Mr. Lord: My final question, Mr. Speaker, is for the Minister of Innovation and Science. Given that small business is often credited with creating most new innovation, what will your department be doing differently for small business in order to secure tomorrow's prosperity?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most of us are familiar with stories where individuals have started out in their garage and built very successful large companies. That kind of innovation we expect out of Alberta and we anticipate will continue to happen.

In Innovation and Science our basic approach is to make sure that we create the right climate for an innovation culture, and that can be around anything from in terms of finding mechanisms that encourage access to capital to helping find mechanisms for companies to commercialize their technology. Mr. Speaker, the strategic plan that the Minister of Economic Development referred to contains strategic directions that show us how we're going to get there.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we go on, let me just say thank you to you, to all of you, for your co-operation both yesterday and today. Yesterday we were able to go through 13 sets of questions. Today we went through 14. That concluded my whole agenda, so that's very, very positive.

A few seconds from now we'll call upon the first of several members. Might we first, though, revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I'm very honoured to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a group of young adults who have served as members of the Youth Advisory Panel of Alberta. These are very special young people who have dedicated many long weekends over the past few years towards helping to improve the lives of youth in Alberta. I would ask them all to stand and remain standing as I call their names: Trevor Brown, Jeeshan Chowdhury, Chris Kooistra, Daniel Lee, Victoria Molnar, Julie Spatz, Jessica Tanghe, Kimberly Wagner, Mathew Wildcat, Myron Wolf Child.

With them are members of the YAP support team: Cynthia Farmer, Harriet Switzer, Dionne Nobrega, Robin Danyluk, David French, Graeme MacDonald, and Ross Mitchell, and from the Calgary and Edmonton offices of the Children's Advocate, Sherry Wheeler and Donna Servetnyk. I ask that the members of the Assembly join me in extending the traditional warm welcome of this Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly special visitors in the members' and public galleries. The second half of the students from Percy Baxter school in Whitecourt have joined us, and with them are their group leaders Tammy Lee, Louise Reid, Shirley Bennett, James Muir, Donna Buchanan, Amy and Chris Spink. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Medicine Hat Tigers Hockey Team

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you can plainly see, I rise today confident that my attire in no way contravenes any Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly. That confidence is because unlike last year, or in the case of another hon. member earlier this year, I am not required to wear the jersey of another team because I lost a hockey bet. For you see, this year I won every bet I made thanks to the outstanding success of the Medicine Hat Tigers.

After finishing first in their division during the regular season the Tigers swept through the playoffs with a record of 16 wins and only four losses, including a final round four-game sweep of the Everett Silvertips to capture their first Western Hockey League championship since 1988.

Next week the Tigers will represent the WHL in the Memorial Cup being held this year in Kelowna. The Memorial Cup is emblematic of major junior hockey supremacy in Canada. The Tigers are proud to have qualified for the fourth time in team history and look forward to bringing home their third cup.

I would like to extend my sincere best wishes to the players and staff as well as the owners, Darrell and Brent Maser; the general manager, Rick Carriere; and the head coach, Willie Desjardins.

What a team they are, Mr. Speaker. This is a team that led the league in scoring. They had seven 20-goal scorers as well as another with 19. All four lines are capable of scoring, and their power play is the most productive in the league. Their aggressive forechecking strikes fear in the hearts of every team they meet, but the Tigers can play defence too. In the playoffs goalie Kevin Nastiuk recorded four shutouts and a goals-against average under two.

Mr. Speaker, this team has shown the rest of the league and will soon show the rest of the country why Medicine Hat fans have supported them with nearly 60 consecutive sellouts. The Medicine Hat Arena is probably the most intimidating place to play hockey in Canada and is without a doubt the loudest barn in the dub. The people of Kelowna are about to experience what it's like to feel the noise of the orange and black.

Go, Tigers, go.

The Speaker: I should also remind the House before I call on the hon. Member for Red Deer-North that there was a unanimous decision of the House compelling the hon. Member for Red Deer-North to undertake a certain gifting to all members in this Assembly. To my knowledge this has not transpired yet.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's still on its way.

Alberta Youth Advisory Panel

Mrs. Jablonski: Today I rise to honour the work and dedication of some very special young people who have served as members of the Youth Advisory Panel, also known as YAP. YAP, formed in June 2000, is a group of youth selected from across Alberta that meets six times annually to provide feedback on proposed recommendations and findings and to suggest improvements to enhance the quality of services to youth. Its key role is to ensure a solid youth perspective on all work done by the Youth Secretariat, of which I am the chairperson.

The members of YAP have played a very important role in a number of critical issues and policy changes for the government of Alberta. They have invested their time and effort on a volunteer basis into the planning and implementation of some very important events related to youth and children for the province.

Some of the discussions and activities that YAP members have participated in over the last few years include children and youth forums and the Future Summit, review of Alberta mental health's report on services for children and youth, review of the Child Welfare Act, review of the youth in transition policy framework, alcohol and drug use among Alberta's youth, FASD, teen pregnancy, the CALM curriculum, and much more.

Today we presented these members with a coat of arms plaque and a special clock to remind them of the time that we spent working together on issues for Alberta's youth. I would like to sincerely thank the following YAP members for their dedication, their honesty, and their hard work: Trevor Brown from Lethbridge, Jeeshan Chowdhury from Edmonton, Jade Humphrey from Grande Prairie, Chris Kooistra from Calgary, Daniel Lee from Calgary, Jen McKinley also from Calgary, Victoria Molnar from Edmonton, Shauna Parks from Calgary, Julie Spatz from Innisfail, Jessica Tanghe from Slave Lake, Kimberly Wagner from Edmonton, Mathew Wildcat from Hobbema, Myron Wolf Child from Lethbridge.

Mr. Speaker, it has been an honour and a great pleasure for me to have worked with these special YAP members. I ask the members of this Assembly to join me in thanking them for their efforts and wishing each one of them a happy, healthy, and successful future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

International Revenues

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I have said before in the House, I have a dream or rather a vision of Alberta as an enterprise: Alberta Inc. History has proven many times over that jurisdictions, even small in population and landscape, become strong and influential when they go beyond their borders. For the benefit of Albertans Alberta needs to grow beyond its borders and go beyond its modest population.

So let's look at public revenue development, for example. Our publicly funded institutions should be allowed, encouraged to look for revenues from international sources to make profits from them in order to fund services inside Alberta.

Let's explore some options here. Let's open our services to the world. When people in the world are attracted to come here and pay for the services Alberta provides, we know that Alberta is the best. Doing so, we increase our capacity and earn good revenues for Alberta. We can also establish our Alberta services in other countries to earn revenues for Albertans. The profit from these free enterprising activities help with Alberta's public expenditures.

For this, I would like to recommend, for example, that the economic development/international trade area capitalize on Alberta's overseas connections to represent and develop more Alberta overseas trade at low cost. We need to market Alberta products and services overseas more aggressively through this yet-to-be-tapped connection.

Thank you.

Twinning of Highway 4

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, the decision to move the development of the twinned highway 4 from the east side to the west side has many consequences for the small town of Milk River. The government has provided no solid reasoning for this change, and the residents have been fighting this change since it was introduced.

Over the past five years citizens of this town have been trying to get the attention of this government to change its plans for the west side. They have met with the Minister of Transportation, commissioned the redraw of the east side option, taken a survey, and signed petitions to show that this is not what the citizens of the town want. These actions have had no effect on the decision of the government to switch to the west side, a switch that seemed to have occurred suddenly after a visit by the Premier when he met with a few lobbyists in town.

There will be drastic changes to the physical landscape of Milk River because of the highway being built on the west side. There are three farms, and other farm sites will have to be changed. The riverbank will have to be built up against erosion. The railroad lines will have to be moved at a cost of approximately $1 million per kilometre, plus there will be the additional cost of a new railway bridge. There will have to be the development of secondary roads to replace the old routes, and a private airstrip will have to close. These are just a few examples of the problems that this new route will cause.

The cost of this upgrading will be $10 million more than the design prepared by O'Brien Engineering in August of 2000. This design has far less changes to the landscape in the area. By bypassing the town to the east, there would be none of these changes that I mentioned earlier.

The west side proposal will affect the safety of the citizens in town. By moving highway 501 to travel right past the school, it is not safe for the children. This highway will have to cross a four-lane freeway, making it unsafe for drivers that frequently use it to go to town. This is at a time, Mr. Speaker, when the Department of Transportation is eliminating all such crossings that it can in the province.

Before this government finishes developing this section of the highway, it should take a second look at the extra cost it will have to pay for the development. The majority of people of Milk River don't want this development. In a 2001 survey only 29 per cent of the citizens supported this development. It's time the government listened to the citizens of Milk River and the surrounding communities and made the right cost-effective choice of the eastern development for highway 4.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've got two petitions. I table a petition signed by 689 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to "introduce legislation declaring a moratorium on any future expansion of Confined Feeding Operations, with a view to phasing out existing operations within the next three years."

Mr. Speaker, the second petition that I table is signed by 90 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to "invest a portion of the multi-Billion dollar budget surplus to properly fund education, thereby avoiding layoffs of teachers and staff, ballooning class sizes, program cuts, and closure of schools."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege today to rise and table, first of all, the first tabling of Alberta's Promise Partners' Report, a report that summarizes the first year of activities, highlights the achievements of the partners, and profiles organizations and businesses in Alberta that are in support of our children.

Mr. Speaker, I have yet another tabling, if I may, and that is a letter to Today's Parent, a response to the questions that arose from other members of this House, a response, in fact, that we're forwarding to the editor of Today's Parent magazine pointing out some of the good things that are happening in child care in Alberta and clarifying some factors that were not taken into account.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, as a subsequent follow-up to the Committee of Supply, April 20, 2004, and the debate on Children's Services estimates I am providing for the benefit of the members the suitable number of copies of answers to questions raised in the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Jonson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following a commitment the Premier made last week before the Public Accounts Committee, I would like to table on his behalf the summary of expenses for the Premier's mission to India and Hong Kong in January of 2004. I'm providing the requisite five copies of this report.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a letter addressed to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre which is in response to Motion for a Return 80 as amended.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in the House today to table the appropriate number of copies of 250 letters written by seniors in Red Deer asking that the government of Alberta restore the seniors' exemption from paying Alberta health care premiums, restore the seniors' exemption from paying education tax, restore reasonable costs for long-term care facilities, and restore medical and dental benefits.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of four brief tablings. The first is called The Influence of the Social Pricing of Insurance on Road Safety in British Columbia. It's extensively indexed in terms of references from numerous studies and provides evidence to the effect that government insurance in B.C. has led to 15,000 more injuries statistically than what might have been expected otherwise.

The second tabling is a document outlining the 10 most common myths as to the so-called benefits of government insurance.

The third tabling is a communication regarding yet another study indicating the much higher vehicle collision rates in provinces that have government insurance versus those that don't; for example, 18 per cent more deaths per capita and 59 per cent more hospital admissions by young males in provinces that have government insurance.

The final tabling is an article by Lawrence Solomon discussing the international experiences of countries that have government insurance versus those that don't.

Suffice to say that based on these reports it seems to me that a vote for government insurance is a vote to see many more of our citizens killed and maimed on our highways.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. With your permission I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a report entitled Milk River Hwy 4 Alternate Route Survey dated March 10, 2001, compiled by Peter McCormick, a professor of political science from Lethbridge.

My second tabling is a tabling of 700 signatures on a petition to urge the government of Alberta to choose "an easterly Milk River bypass route, and abandon the west bypass plan because of increased hazards and delays caused by intersecting rail lines with Highway 4."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings. The first one is the appropriate number of copies of a document providing details of the events being held on May 25, 2004, to celebrate the National Day of Healing and Reconciliation at city hall, Edmonton.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, I'm doing on behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands, who has received letters from 18 students from a school in his constituency. Under the guidance of their teacher, Mr. Fekete, the students from Rundle school are becoming active citizens and taking part in the democratic process. Their goal is to have mandatory seat belts installed in school buses. It's with delight that I table these letters from these students for mandatory school bus seat belt legislation.

Thank you.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk on behalf of the hon. Mrs. Nelson, Minister of Finance: Credit Union Deposit Guarantee Corporation 2003 annual report and a report entitled General Revenue Fund, Details of Grants, Supplies and Services, Capital Assets and Other, by Payee for the year ended March 31, 2003.

Alberta's Official Song

17. Mr. Zwozdesky moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to the Alberta Official Song Act, section 8(1), the Legislative Assembly concur in the report of the Alberta Official Song Committee, tabled by the Minister of Community Development in the Assembly May 6, 2004, and recommend to the Lieutenant Governor in Council that a composition entitled Alberta by Mary Kieftenbeld of Rivière Qui Barre, Alberta, be proclaimed as the official song for Alberta in conjunction with the province's celebration of its centennial year, 2005.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Before I proceed and actually play the song, Mr. Speaker, and make a few comments of my own, I would like to briefly introduce, if I might, some very special guests who are here in the gallery this afternoon. You've already met her, but I'd like you to meet her again. The composer of Alberta, Mary Kieftenbeld, is here with her husband, Ed, and their children Jeremy, Kagen, Haley, and Emma. Also joining us today are Mary's parents, Henry and Kay Colesar, from Calahoo, Alberta, and Mary's two brothers and sister-in-law, also from Calahoo. They are Paul Colesar and Perry Colesar and his wife, Lise.

They are joined today by some hard-working members of my staff who've had an integral role to play in the development of this particular process. I would like to introduce and thank the head of our communications, Kathy Telfer, who is here; Beryl Cullum, who is working specifically on the centennial aspect of our communications; and my ever-faithful and hard-working assistant, Pam Boutilier.

Now, Mary, if you and all of your guests would please rise one more time and accept our very sincere thanks and welcome to the Assembly, I would appreciate it. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, Mary Kieftenbeld is a local singer/songwriter who was born and raised right here in Alberta; in fact, just about 20 minutes northwest of St. Albert toward Morinville, on the west side there, somewhere near Calahoo. She was born into a very musical family, and at the age of six she began her musical journey in the local church. By age 10 she had picked up a guitar and has been singing and playing ever since. She's become a very popular performer not only with her own family but at special graduations, weddings, anniversaries, local festivals, and conferences. She's also performed live on CBC Radio, on A-Channel, and on stage for the CJCA-hosted Kids Kottage radiothon. She's also still involved in music at two churches in the area.

Last year Mary released her debut CD, takin' time, an eclectic mix of songs which she personally composed. It covers many genres, including folk, gospel, country, and easy listening, and I'm so pleased that she's continuing in that vein.

She, of course, does reside near Rivière Qui Barre, and I neglected to mention that she lives there on a farm and puts in her fair share of the family work, I'm sure. So thank you very much, Mary, to you, to your husband, Ed, and to your children, Jeremy, Kagen, Haley, and Emma, for allowing Mom to spend some time saluting this great province.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is fitting now for me to play the entire song so that everyone can hear what it is that they're expected to vote on, and I'll make some closing comments thereafter.

Flatlands, rollin' plains
Clear blue skies, prairie rains;
A tapestry of colours in the fall.
Snow covered mountain tops,
Wheat fields, canola crops;
Alberta has it all.

Alberta is calling me.
Home sweet home, it's where I'm proud to be.
Alberta is calling me.
I'm livin' right and I'm feelin' free.

The fur trade and native men
Started it all, way back when.
We've come a long way since that.
Agriculture, lumberjacks,
Oil derricks, natural gas;
There is no turnin' back.

Alberta is calling me.
Home sweet home, it's where I'm proud to be.
Alberta is calling me.
I'm livin' right and I'm feelin' free.

A culture diverse as it can be.
This is the land of opportunity.
Welcoming friends, night and day.
I pray that that's the way Alberta stays.

Alberta is calling me.
Home sweet home, it's where I'm proud to be.
Alberta is calling me.
I'm livin' right and I'm feelin' free.

In Alberta.

[As recorded by Mary Kieftenbeld]

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, there you have it: Alberta by Mary Kieftenbeld.

I want to just point out a few things to all hon. members before we proceed to other speakers and the final vote, if I might very briefly. What we've just listened to, Mr. Speaker, is referred to as a demo version. There's nothing wrong with demo versions; some people spend a lot of time and a lot of money producing them. But I think it needs to be pointed out to everyone that this may or may not be one of the final versions of this song should the Assembly pass it. It's very well produced, and I know Mary spent a lot of time with her musicians doing that, but I wanted to point out that, assuming the Assembly concurs in the selection of the committee, this particular song would become available in several other formats and genres and styles, be it folk or ballad or set for choirs in the church or school bands or whatever. So that's important to keep in mind.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, we all know how difficult it must have been to have tried to encapsulate all of Alberta's wonders in the space of one page in the time frame of about three minutes. In my view, Mary has done that. I'm so glad that the committee that reviewed all of the entries concurred in a unanimous decision on this one particular song.

So I'd like to thank that committee, and I'd like to begin by thanking – I'd sure like to say his name, Mr. Speaker. I know the rules forbid it if I were to say Wayne Cao, the MLA from Calgary-Fort. This is a historic moment, and he's the fellow who introduced a private member's bill in the spring 2001 sitting of this Legislature. It was an idea he had to adopt some type of official song for Alberta in time for our centennial celebrations next year, which of course will mark Alberta's proud entry into the Canadian Confederation. The Alberta Official Song Act then was passed into law in November 2001 as sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort. Thereafter, I was privileged to appoint a committee to oversee the process and to select the song that you have just heard and make a recommendation to me for an official song to be adopted.

I want to reiterate my thanks not only to the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, who chaired that committee, but I'd also like to sincerely thank the members of his committee, beginning with yourself, Mr. Speaker. You sat as an ex officio member on this committee. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre was a member, the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow was a member, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark was a member. They were all joined by Barry Allen from the Alberta Recording Industries Association; Carol Dand of the Arts Touring Alliance of Alberta; Kelly Jerrott from Music Alberta; Neil MacGonigill from the Society of Composers, Authors and Music Publishers of Canada; Gary McDonall from the Alberta Recording Industries Association; Gladys Odegard from Music Alberta; Judy Reeds, Arts Touring Alliance of Alberta; and Wayne Saunders, Society of Composers, Authors and Music Publishers of Canada, more commonly known as SOCAN. They were of course enhanced in their work by many members of my staff.

In addition to the individuals I've just mentioned, I'd also like to sincerely thank Al Chapman from our Alberta arts area, who worked very diligently in the preparation and presentation of all of this material. To all the members who are working in the centennial office and elsewhere throughout the department and also with our Alberta Foundation for the Arts, thank you to each and every one of them for their support.

3:10

In the end, Mr. Speaker, a contest was established. You've just heard the selection that came out of that. As Minister of Community Development I also offered a cash prize to the composer of the winning entry and committed to having this song, should it be accepted today, professionally recorded, professionally arranged, and disseminated in a professional manner to many, many other groups and individuals to use throughout this province beginning in 2005.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, what we've just heard today came about after 335 total submissions were reviewed. Those submissions came to us from over 100 different communities in the province of Alberta. I think it tells you and tells me and everyone here how much pride individuals feel in this great province and how much time they were willing to spend to do whatever it took to reflect that in song. No easy task. I want to thank every single person who entered the contest. At another time the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort and I will be discussing some special commemorative way of thanking those particular entrants for their work.

Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude just by saying that this song in my view is a wonderful tribute. It's a tremendous way to show our love, our respect, and our real feelings about the greatest province in Canadian Confederation, one of the best places in the world you could ever be. Mary, you said it all.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, as the chair of the Alberta song committee and on behalf of the committee I want to thank each and every member of the Assembly for the honour that the Assembly entrusted in us to select an official song for Alberta. Most of all, our sincere thanks go to 335 song authors who submitted their creative musical work and over 4,000 Albertans who made inquiries and 12,000 hits on the Internet. My personal thanks go to every member of the Alberta Official Song Committee and the staff in Community Development who worked on this song selection project. Personally, I'd really like to thank the minister for tabling the report today and expressing his enthusiastic feelings for Alberta.

Credits are given to each and every enthusiastic entrant, the members of the Alberta Official Song Committee, the staff of Alberta Community Development, and the music industry representatives who were involved throughout the process. All have contributed to the success of this endeavour.

As I have just said, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta official song centennial selection initiative has drawn large interest from many communities across Alberta. Following the openly publicized process, all entries were adjudicated on the rigorous analysis of lyrics, theme, melody, originality, and composition. The selection process involved a committee that consisted of many highly qualified people from the music industry as well as a few opposition and government MLAs who also qualified.

It was not an easy task, but the Alberta Official Song Committee did its best. The Alberta official song contest presented a unique opportunity through a labour of love for our province to capture Albertans' affection for Alberta. We are grateful for the generosity of Albertans who shared their creations and for the help we received from the music industries, that enabled us to be part of this celebratory and historical effort. I hope to hear all Albertans, our children and our children's children, singing and whistling it one day. It will be delightful to hear Albertans singing Alberta's song outside Alberta as well.

Mr. Speaker and all hon. members, I also have another plan as the minister just mentioned. It's the Alberta centennial songbook. I'm working on a plan to publish in 2005 the Alberta centennial songbook to recognize all authors who have submitted their songs. But due to legal and confidentiality requirements any authors of songs, even already submitted to the contest or not taking part in the contest, need to contact me or their local MLA's office if they wish their song included in this proposed Alberta centennial songbook. I'm also looking for corporate sponsorship for such publication to commemorate and celebrate Alberta's 100th anniversary.

Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to congratulate Mary Kieftenbeld, whose song was selected. Last week outside this Chamber I briefly saw her happy family, a typical Albertan family of a caring mother, four beautiful young children, and a hard-working father. Like any other author she expresses her feeling for Alberta and Albertans in her song. Her song covers the magnificent, natural landscape of Alberta, its historical roots up to the present time, and the characteristics and feelings of its people.

Mr. Speaker, it is said that the proof of the pudding is in the eating, so with your permission the proof of a song is in the singing.

I want to conclude this speech by trying to imitate Mary. My style of the song may be different. It goes – I'm trying to catch on a bit here:

Flatlands, rollin' plains
Clear blue skies, prairie rains;
A tapestry of colours in the fall.
Snow covers mountain tops,
Wheat fields, canola crops;
Alberta has it all.

Alberta is calling me.
Home sweet home, it's where I'm proud to be.
Alberta is calling me.
I'm livin' right and feelin' free.

With that I conclude my speech. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to say a few words of personal thanks for being involved in this committee. It was a very interesting experience to be involved. I also have to thank the Department of Community Development for the calibre of the private citizens that they got involved on this committee. It was a real honour to be able to work with them.

I also wanted to put in a word of support for the Member for Calgary-Fort in terms of a book of songs. There were fantastic songs that we looked at as part of this committee, and I would like to just give you an idea of the kinds of flavours that were presented to us. There was one that I really enjoyed that was a First World War-type style of song that was really a beautiful lyrical song. There was also another one that had a native motif which was really a fascinating song that had, you know, quite a breadth to it.

Most of all, I would like to thank Mary for her song. It is a song that expresses the incredible beauty of this land that's Alberta, and it also expresses the spirit of Albertans. I want to just thank her very much and encourage you all to support this song.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and no, hon. member, I'm not going to sing. I do want to rise today also and thank the hon. member for his great idea and the creation of an Alberta song. One of the most enjoyable activities I've experienced while in this Assembly is being on the committee that looked at and listened to all of those wonderful songs that we heard.

You know, this song is not an anthem. Somebody, when they heard it the first time – in fact it was the hon. Member for Medicine Hat – said to me: this isn't an anthem that we're looking at; this song is something that's supposed to be fun, that anybody can sing. Anybody that has ever been to Disneyland and has listened to It's a Small World knows that you were singing It's a Small World for days afterwards. Well, this is what this song is about. By the time the committee heard it the second time, we were all humming and singing, and it was quite a sound to hear, I can assure you, except for our hon. member here who has operatic training. It was a wonderful experience.

It's the kind of song that is so singable. It doesn't matter whether it's a children's choir or you're in the car with the family on a holiday or whatever. It's such wonderful music. It was an interesting decision we had to make, but I think we absolutely made the right decision.

The people who were on the committee, the people in the business of music, were a fantastic group. The hon. minister in his selection of this committee of people from the entertainment community certainly made some good ones. For any of you who are a little longer in the tooth, when you have people like Barry Allan from The Rebels and The Nomads and people who are songwriters and producers and all the rest of it – this just wasn't a few private citizens who didn't know a whole lot about the music world. These are the professionals, the leaders in the Alberta arts community and still are very active in the entertainment business.

In the end we were absolutely unanimous in that choice of song. You know, in Alberta we tend to be so reluctant to brag and sing our praises and so on, so that's what this song is all about. I know we've worked on a tartan and flower and grass and a gemstone and all the rest of it, and those are all worthy, I'm sure, but for me the fun one was the Alberta song. You're all going to be humming it this summer when you're driving down that Alberta highway going to one of those great Alberta vacation spots like Barrhead. I'm sure you will be absolutely thrilled to death to sing this.

There are going to be some changes. I know the hon. minister told people that there's the odd bit in the lyrics that made some people a little anxious, but what you saw in the handout isn't the final bid in terms of the lyrics. There's going to be a little alteration, I think. Am I right, hon. minister? No. Okay. I thought I was.

An Hon. Member: Tell us about Barrhead.

Mr. Maskell: About Barrhead? Well, there are Maskells in Barrhead. So, I mean, sensible people there and in Sangudo and so on.

Anyway, I want to thank the hon. member again for his great idea. I'm proud to have been a part of it, and I know that you're all excited about it and are all going to be humming it. It has unanimous support in this Assembly, I'm sure.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. minister to conclude the debate.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you. If there are no other speakers, I'd be happy to do that. I want to just reiterate a couple of things in the two- to three-minute wrap-up that I have.

First of all, thank you to the people who have just spoken, all of whom were members of the committee.

I just want to clarify the comments from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. What I indicated was that there would likely be different lengths and different versions available, some in a 30-second format, some in a one-minute format, and, of course, the main format, because there will be many different uses and applications. Some people will want one verse and one chorus for a certain type of function. All of that we're going to work out with the composer so that she's happy and we're happy, but the main item will be to create the full song in its entirety in many different genres. The others will be one-off applications on a one-off request, but we're not anywhere near that yet.

Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude by simply saying thank you to all the members of this Assembly for their anticipated support. In particular, I want to congratulate the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert for representing the lovely constituency where Mary and her family live. I'm sure he's very thrilled and honoured as was evidenced when we all met together last week.

As a composer and professional musician myself for many, many years, Mr. Speaker, I know how difficult it is to compose to theme, to compose to a specific set of criteria, and to compose to certain length restrictions, but I know that in this particular case the committee couldn't have made a better choice in having found someone's song that suited all of those tight pressures.

In that regard, I hope that you will all support this historic motion and look forward to it coming out in the final produced professional versions very soon, all of which will be very much a centrepiece of our Alberta centennial celebrations.

With that, Mr. Speaker, assuming the support of the house, Alberta would become only the second province in Canada to have its very own official song, as penned by Mary Kieftenbeld of Rivière Qui Barre: Alberta.

Thank you again. I look forward to the vote of the House, Mr. Speaker.

[Government Motion 17 carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 32
Appropriation Act, 2004

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After listening to that wonderful song, I'd like to follow through with some of the business of the House and move second reading of Bill 32, the Appropriation Act, 2004.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Yes, I'd like to speak on this. Mr. Speaker and members, I have some concerns about this particular bill. There are some funding areas that have not been taken care of, I don't think, in this particular budget. I think that we should have had more time to debate some of those issues and some of those particular budget areas where we ran out of time during debate. Particularly, I'd like to talk about seniors and seniors' funding.

As most members in this Assembly know, for the past month I've been door-knocking. Over that period of time I have knocked on just over 4,000 doors and I have visited 17 seniors' centres and lodges, and what I've heard from seniors is that they are mad, very angry, and they are scared about their future. They are very mad because they believed 10 years ago, when the cuts started on seniors' funding, that their funding would, too, be reinstated like many other program funding has for other organizations and people and groups, including MLAs, who had their salaries reinstated. But the group that has been completely abandoned by this government, as they feel, are seniors.

When we have heard repeatedly that seniors, including – the Member for Red Deer-North tabled this afternoon some documentation where seniors were asking for reinstatement of many of the funding costs that they used to get, such as eyeglasses, dentures, health care premiums, property tax. When all of that was cut, seniors believed it would be reinstated at some point when this province had the budget, and none of it has been. They have faithfully waited, budget after budget, announcement after announcement, to see when they, too, were going to get their fair share of the wealth of this province only to find out that that hasn't been the case and won't be the case.

We heard the Seniors minister speaking last week on the budget, when he talked about thresholds. Well, what seniors are most concerned about is that seniors will not be paying a higher cost and that the threshold for what they have to cover won't be lowered beyond what it is, because their incomes have not increased.

The minister talked about the catch-up jump for nursing home costs. Well, what about the catch-up jump for those seniors who are living on pensions that have not significantly increased over the years? He talked about things like incontinence supplies now being a necessary part of the funding for long-term care, but what about the funding for Aids to Daily Living, such as supplies that one senior pays for? Because his housing costs have increased and the Aids to Daily Living has not – he has had a colostomy, and he needs to buy the supplies for that – this fellow is rewashing his bags because he can't afford to buy new ones all the time.

Dr. Massey: It's shameful.

Ms Carlson: It's shameful; it is. As my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods says: it's shameful. It's absolutely reprehensible that we'd be treating seniors like this.

So what is the solution? I have two excellent solutions for this government, and this is my parting gift to this government, actually, these two excellent ideas. [some applause] I hear some clapping about that. Some of you will be glad to see that I'm gone. But these are two great ideas that I'm going to give you that you would be smart to follow up on, as you did with the stability fund that was a great idea that a few of my colleagues and I came up with some years ago.

Here's the first one. [interjection] Edmonton-Highlands, that was an excellent comment.

Here's the first of the great ideas, and that is to establish a seniors' cost-of-living index. Now, I know that this government likes to hide behind the skirts of the federal government whenever they can, whenever they have to make choices that they don't like, but this is a time when you could take the bull by the horns and actually move forward on an issue and take the credit for it, and it would be a very good idea. When you are putting together the Alberta seniors' supplements and the different benefit programs, instead of using the general cost-of-living index calculated by the feds, establish one that would be a seniors' cost-of-living index.

Seniors for the most part have different living expenses than the general population. They're buying one and two potatoes, not 10 pounds of potatoes. They're looking at different kinds of transportation costs. Instead of running their own vehicles, many of them are looking at using taxis, at using the bus service, at using transportation systems like DATS. They have a higher percentage of prescription costs that they have to cover than the general public. Their housing costs are not as flexible as what they are for the rest of the general public. They're fixed by government agencies when they go to live in nursing homes or other kinds of lodges. They buy their groceries in single-serving packages rather than in bulk. It's impossible for them to buy them in bulk because often they're physically incapable of packing those groceries home. So this is the kind of thing that we need to take a look at when we're calculating the cost increases to supplementary programs that this province pays for seniors.

I would respectfully request that they take a look at this, because instead of the very insulting cost-of-living increases that seniors have been given in the past 10 years in comparison to what their living costs have gone up, particularly in terms of housing and prescriptions, instead of thumbing our nose at a whole society who spent their lives working to build this province up, this government could take the initiative and develop a cost-of-living index that was reflective of what the actual costs were for seniors who are living in poverty or very close to poverty in this province right now.

If there is a community that we should be thanking, it is this community. That is the way that we can do this, by ensuring that they have adequate monies to live on, not at 40 per cent of what their former wages would have been, not a below-the-poverty-line kind of existence, not $265 a month, which is all they have left over off their pension cheques, which one might think is a lot of money, but when you think about the small percentage that Blue Cross pays for their prescriptions and the pieces that they have to pick up after that – I'm talking to seniors who are never able to buy a present for a grandchild, who have to save for six months to buy a new pair of shoes, who sometimes can't even do that in six months if they have some kind of a chronic disease that requires massive prescriptions month after month, particularly if they're on some of these new drugs and are not covered by any kind of medical package. They are living in dire poverty. They cannot scrape two nickels together at the end of the month. It is abysmal that we as a province have allowed this to happen, and this government can make some changes in that regard.

That brings me to my second excellent suggestion that this government should take up. This is going to be a bonus year for this province. Forty-dollar-a-barrel oil means that you're going to be wallowing in cash very quickly, particularly when we saw the Finance minister come in with a budget that estimated oil revenues very, very low. You're going to have a huge injection of money that you weren't anticipating. Even above what you had coyly put aside to pay off the provincial debt, there's still going to be a huge injection of capital.

I suggest to this government that you take some of that money and set up an endowment fund for seniors so that you can start to pay out on an annual basis some of these costs that you've taken away over the years. If you want these very angry seniors to consider voting for you in the next election, then this is something that you must figure out how to do, how to get the money for those costs like prescription eyeglasses back in their hands. This would be a way to do it.

An endowment fund for seniors has a lot of cachet; it's very marketable. Instead of just one-off funding, which we have criticized so often in this government with the surpluses you have, establish a fund that would be perpetuated year after year to cover these kinds of costs. It would be a very smart way for this government to go, to recognize the importance that seniors have in our community and as a part of our history and to bring their level of living up to just a reasonable standard, not an excessive standard but above poverty lines. That would be a very small thing for this government to do.

I think they should seriously consider doing it because it's not just seniors who are worried about this. It's people my age who are taking care of aging parents. It's families with small children, some without children, who are taking care of aging parents. It's people who are worried about what's going to happen on this slippery slope of seniors' funding in the future for themselves as they age.

If this government doesn't stand up and take notice, the people who are talking to seniors and working with seniors and see the fear in their eyes on a daily basis in terms of trying to understand how they're going to pay for their next prescription or be able to buy their groceries until the end of the month – when they see that fear, they get angry. For the seniors who are angry now, those people are going to use their vote to record that anger, and this government is going to be the recipient of that.

While I don't like to give this government great ideas because I don't think they particularly deserve them, I think that good ideas that put forward the interests of the people of this province should be brought forward as soon as possible, and I think that those are two potential ideas that would go a long way to re-establishing some faith in government that seniors don't have now. And they're not blaming the feds for this. They're blaming this Conservative government and their actions over the past 10 years.

I say to you, "Ignore them at your peril," because they're angry. For the first time ever when I walk to their door, they talk about how mad they are with this level of government and how they will do anything to change this government because they have seen absolutely no payoff or return of any funding that they previously had as a result of actions over the past 10 years. They've had enough, they're completely fed up, and they're going to be voting unless they see some changes being made.

I was very surprised when we had the Seniors minister up here last Thursday that he talked four times for nearly 20 minutes each time and all during that whole discussion talked about how he wasn't responsible for any of these services being reinstated, that, you know, he did the best he could as the minister and it was not approved by cabinet.

Well, I say that that's not good enough. If that's the best you can do, then you shouldn't be the minister. You should be replaced. We need a minister there who will stand up for seniors and fight for what they need and fight for what they want and fight for them to have their rightful place in this society.

Mr. Speaker, thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 32, the Appropriation Act, 2004, and I want to start with a few general comments about the bill.

It is interesting that the total revenues are estimated at just below $23 billion for 2004-05, which seems to be a serious underestimate. This is $2.3 billion less than forecast revenues of $25.3 billion in fiscal year '03-04.

Oil and gas revenues in fiscal year '04-05 are estimated to be $2.7 billion below what they're forecast to be in '03-04. Given the upward movement on oil and gas prices, Mr. Speaker, this is completely misleading.

The government is reducing the general corporate tax rate from 12.5 to 11.5, which is a 9 per cent cut, permanently reducing government revenues by $142 million. Alberta already has the lowest corporate taxes of any province, and this is a giveaway, Mr. Speaker, pure and simple.

Contrary to some media reports provincial revenue from school property taxes will go up by 5.7 per cent in '04-05. The 2.3 reduction in the mill rate will be more than offset by increases in the value of the assessment base. This is the third straight year that the Provincial Treasurer has broken her 2002 promise to freeze school property taxes at $1.2 billion.

Surprisingly, Mr. Speaker, in a pre-election budget there are 25 new user fees for such things as outdoor recreation, parks programs, and the maintenance enforcement program; 11 other fees for parks activities; and insurance services are being significantly increased. While the new fees and fee hikes for things like cross-country skiing in Kananaskis Country and provincial parks programs most hit average Albertans, the insurance levies are puzzling given the concerns about the affordability of coverage.

There is mention of some royalty giveaway programs which may be reviewed in light of recent federal government changes, but no specific measures are announced in this budget.

Health care premiums are maintained at current levels for seniors and everyone else. In other words, corporations get tax breaks; seniors and middle-class families get nothing.

Mr. Speaker, I would like at this time to introduce an amendment to the budget, and I'll ask the pages to bring it to the table and distribute it to members.

The Speaker: The hon. member may sit down for a moment. I have not seen this amendment yet.

On the amendment, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 32, Appropriation Act, 2004, be amended by striking out all of the words after “that” and substituting the following. “Bill 32, Appropriation Act, 2004, be not now read a second time because the bill does not adequately provide for the following: a reduction in classroom sizes, comprehensive health care benefits for seniors, and relief for utility consumers.”

Mr. Speaker, this amendment, which would have the effect of defeating the budget that’s been introduced by the Provincial Treasurer, is in effect a nonconfidence motion in the government. If this motion is passed, the government will fall.

Now, Mr. Speaker, hon. members may realize that given the government’s massive majority at the present time, that is unlikely to happen. So, then, why bring forward a nonconfidence motion in the government? Well, based upon the budget and based upon the government’s performance during this session, we felt that it was appropriate to at least put this forward so that even if it were not given adequate consideration by the government members, it would hopefully be considered by the citizens of this province, and the motives behind the amendment would be considered.

What the amendment says is that the bill does not provide for a reduction in classroom sizes, first of all. Now, we know, Mr. Speaker, that the government has committed to implement the commission on education recommendations and that these include adequate funding to bring down the size of classes in the province of Alberta. The Learning Commission document, I think, on balance, was a very well-thought-out and balanced document and could have provided a blueprint for the government to restore some of the damage that it has inflicted on our educational system. Unfortunately, this budget doesn’t deal with that.

What the budget has resulted in is the imminent threat of strike action for the second time in two years by teachers in this province. Far from reducing classroom sizes, far from giving school boards an adequate amount of money to deal with teachers’ issues, contract issues, as well as classroom sizes and to restore the programs that have been cut in the last few years as a result of the government’s programs, the budget brings us back to the brink of labour unrest in the public school system of this province, Mr. Speaker. As such, it completely fails Albertans, and it fails to deliver on the promise of this government to implement the recommendations of the Learning Commission.

Secondly, the question of comprehensive health care benefits for seniors, which have been eliminated by the government. There’s a need, Mr. Speaker, to not only restore those health care benefits which have been cut but to expand them. I note, as well, that the leader of the Conservative Party of Canada, Mr. Harper, has now weighed in to the federal campaign with a proposal for benefits for a national drug program. It’s not exactly the kind of national drug program that we would like to see, but it does indicate a direction that ought to be followed.

There can be an improvement in the health benefits which we provide for all Albertans, but in particular seniors ought not to be singled out for cuts as they have been. I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has talked quite eloquently this afternoon about the situation facing seniors and the anger among seniors, and much of that goes back to actions of the government, cutting comprehensive programs for dental and eyeglasses as well as their approval of increases for long-term care.

Now, Mr. Speaker, members might be interested to know that the corporations that provide long-term care in this province are already showing improved bottom lines, and they are attributing that in their annual reports to the generosity of this government in increasing the amount that they can charge for long-term care by about 50 per cent. If the government would like seniors to believe or children of seniors in long-term care to believe that this was necessary in order to improve the care of their parents, they are whistling past the graveyard. Those people in long-term care and their children know that the money has primarily gone towards the bottom lines of the corporations that run nursing homes and other long-term care facilities.

This perhaps is a model of what the government intends for health care in general, Mr. Speaker, because they have certainly talked about the need to increase the role of private health care corporations in the delivery of general health care, and I think this gives a good example of what we can expect to see should they manage to get away with that particular direction.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I last want to come to the third point in the amendment, and that has to do with relief for utility consumers. We saw before the last election a massive series of programs allegedly to help people deal with the high natural gas and high electricity prices that they were facing. What it was in fact was a massive program to make very serious problems of the government’s own making go away until the government was safely re-elected.

Now, the Premier and other ministers have floated the balloon that we might be looking at more rebate programs again as the election approaches, in this case probably primarily for gasoline. That’s not what we’re talking about. We’re not talking about bribing the voters with their own money. We’re not talking about implementing Bill 1, the first bill of this term that was passed, sponsored by the Premier, that gives the cabinet the authority to give utility rebates or energy rebates of any kind at any time without reference to the Legislature. This bill was in our view an abomination. It’s a bill that we strongly disagree with. We’re not talking about that kind of electoral use of taxpayers’ money to ease the government back into yet another mandate. What we’re talking about are actual steps that should be taken to reduce the prices of electricity and provide some protection for people on the natural gas side as well.

You know, Mr. Speaker, there are many failures of this government. The whole term can be judged a failure, in my view. It’s a litany of broken promises. When electricity deregulation was brought in, the promise was that competition would actually bring down prices. In fact, we’ve seen that the opposite has happened, and the government has taken no steps to reverse that direction. They actually have deepened their commitment to electricity deregulation and have brought in disreputable companies like Direct Energy to replace existing Alberta companies under the guise of providing more choice. Consumers know that it’s not more choice; it’s just a different same choice. Electricity deregulation is one.

The government has failed to bring in anything reasonable in terms of car insurance reductions. In fact, they’ve postponed the freeze until after the projected time for the next provincial election, so Albertans may not know until the election is out of the way that the government is unable to deliver comparable rates to those provinces that have public auto insurance. According to our calculations, by capping personal injury claims at $4,000, they are able to save about 8 per cent of the cost of insurance, whereas eliminating the profits of private companies would allow savings of up to 35 per cent. So public auto insurance can produce savings.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I really am reluctant to do this, but relevancy is very important with respect to amendments. There's nothing in here about automobile insurance. Let's move on.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was trying to generalize about broken promises of the government. I accept your advice and will restrict myself to these particular broken promises of the government. There are many.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate that it's very clear that the government has failed, and failed miserably, to meet many of the obligations that it itself has undertaken in a broad range of policy areas. I can't think of one major accomplishment of this government that affects the lives of Albertans broadly during this entire term. This budget reflects that. This budget reflects a lack of vision, it reflects a lack of accomplishment, and it represents broken promises on one area of policy after another.

I believe that this government has been here too long. It's time that this government was thrown out, was defeated. I think that even if members opposite aren't going to be persuaded of that at this particular time, the voters will be. The citizens of Alberta are eventually going to say, "Enough is enough. We've had far too much personality. We've had far too many zany antics from the Premier, but we haven't had any real results," and they'll throw the government out.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available, a five-minute question and comment period, should they wish to be directed toward anything said by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. None?

Then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods on the amendment, please.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking in favour of the amendment and with respect to not having adequately provided the reduction in classroom sizes, this is a particularly sore point with parent groups in this city and I suspect with parent groups across the province.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

There was a sequence of events that I think really had parents encouraged. The outcome of the strike resulted in the Learning Commission being appointed. The commission listened to parents, sent out workbooks, and I think parents were generally encouraged that if they took the time to deliberate and to put their ideas down on paper, to appear before the commission, to fill out the commission's workbook, they would get the kinds of recommendations out of the commission that they thought were in the best interests of their children. I think most of them were pleasantly surprised that the document that was produced by the government did reflect their wishes, and in one area in particular that's been a bother to parents and that's with respect to class size.

If you go back to the commission, Mr. Speaker – and this is speaking directly to not adequately providing for a reduction in class size – when the commission report came out, one of the recommendations was that they implement class size guidelines for kindergarten to grade 3. The estimated cost for that over the first three-year phase of the Learning Commission was to be $111.4 million, and there was to be an estimated one-time cost of $47 million.

There was a sequence of recommendations: establishing parenting centres, $10.5 million; implement full-day junior kindergarten programs for children at risk, $42 million, and that would have implications for class size and what goes on in classrooms; implement full-day regular kindergarten programs for children at risk, $21 million; and then there were further recommendations with respect to First Nations and Métis and home liaison workers for them. Again, the program was to provide opportunities for students to learn second languages. The phase-in implementation of technology standards was to be another $20 million. The total for phase 1 was to be $224.4 million. The expectation, I think, roughly was that we would see in this budget $70 million dedicated to putting the recommendations from phase 1 into practice.

The day that the budget was released, Mr. Speaker, there were a number of parents here in the building, and to say that they were disappointed would be an understatement. They expected that they would be able to go to this budget and look at the business plan and there on the business plan would be the itemization of these items from the Learning Commission's report with a commitment alongside each item as to how far the government was going to go towards implementing those specific items. We talked to a number of those groups, and I can't tell you how disappointed they were at that time that that didn't happen. They were looking for the money, and they were looking for the money to be earmarked for the recommendations from the Learning Commission.

Now, since that has happened, the government's response by the Minister of Learning to the criticism that that didn't happen has been that there has been an increase of $289 million. If you go through the budget, Mr. Speaker, you can't find an increase of $289 million because, in fact, $60 million of that was money that had already previously been announced. So parents who were scrambling through the budget looking for the $289 million won't and can't find it because it's not there.

More importantly, then, if you take away the $60 million and end up with a $230 million increase, they would like to see, because the minister says that the money is there, that $70 million that was to be earmarked for implementing the Learning Commission's recommendations.

In fact, there isn't $70 million in that budget. As the allocations to specific boards were put out last week, we saw that there just isn't that kind of money there. For the large urban boards and the large suburban boards, in fact, when you take into account the money that they need for salary grid increases, when you take into account the money that they need because of increased costs, there is very, very little left to implement the recommendations of the Learning Commission. For a number of those boards who had to release teachers last year, class sizes this coming September are going to be the same, or in some cases – and this is particularly true of the large boards – there's going to be an increase in class sizes.

So the budget, I think, has literally failed those parents who were looking and looking hopefully, Mr. Speaker, for a September when there would not only have been the number of teachers hired back that they had been forced to lay off in the previous year, but there would also be a number of extra teachers hired to work towards the reduction of class sizes, as outlined in the Learning Commission's recommendations.

The budget as an instrument of progress with respect to the Learning Commission is a great disappointment, Mr. Speaker, and it's for that reason that I think the amendment has to be supported.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to have a few minutes to get up and address this amendment to our appropriation bill. I don't know; I can't begin to express the level of disappointment I have that you've brought in this ridiculous amendment on what is in fact a really great budget in a really incredibly great place to live. We have absolutely everything in this province, and I despair sometimes that no matter how much we do, it's never enough, it's never right, and everybody can sit back and just take shots at it. I'm just stunned by it.

When you talk about the Learning Commission, which we've really just completed in the last – what? – six or eight months, they came forward with a massive number of recommendations. It's a great study. It's the first time that education had been studied that way in 30 years. I think it was an incredible report that told us that a lot of things are really very good in this system and that there are areas we need to improve on. They suggested – and it was their suggestion, hon. member – that we in fact have five years to try and deal with the implementation of their recommendations, and that is what is happening. Yet here you are saying: well, it didn't all happen at once; it didn't happen fast enough.

You know what? In my riding, through the Speaker, you couldn't even implement this. You cannot because I do not have enough physical infrastructure to deal with the growth that is occurring. In my constituency we have between 7 and 18 per cent growth, and I'm talking about actual population growth. In areas like Langdon, for example, in many portions of Airdrie they've tried very hard to bring in starter homes. We have many, many young families coming in. When you go through some of these neighbourhoods, as I do, I'm just constantly astounded at the number of really tiny little children that aren't even in school yet, let alone that my schools are absolutely packed to the rafters. We opened a brand new school with 12 portables already attached.

I do believe that this is a really important recommendation from the Learning Commission, that we get to a point where the classrooms are smaller. Right now I'm just really happy to have a classroom, you know, and I'm very grateful to my colleagues that I was able to have some funding allocated to my constituency for new schools because we desperately need them. We can't build them fast enough to keep up with the kind of growth rates we're dealing with.

Why do we have growth like this? We have growth like this because we have the single best, most vibrant place in this country to live. That is not a negative. It's just a reality of the fact that we have a booming economy. We're blessed with oil and gas. We're blessed with coal. We're blessed with forest reserves. We've got great farmers. We've struggled with drought and BSE, but we've got all of these other things, the gifts that we've been given in this province, and we cannot just squander them all because we have a surplus. People talk about a surplus like it's a bad thing. A surplus is a gift. It's just a gift.

We have the best health care in Canada. We have the best-paid nurses in Canada. We have the best education system anywhere in the world, and stats bear that out. We have the best-paid teachers anywhere in this country. In Ontario right now the new Ontario Liberal government is in fact trying to figure out how to break all of the campaign promises that they just made a few months ago, the Liberal Party in Ontario that made all these great, grandiose, sweeping promises on how they were just going to show everybody that you can actually spend money you don't have. Well, you can't.

Dr. Massey: It sounds like insurance here.

Ms Haley: You know what? If you want to get up and talk again, you do it, but you don't interrupt me.

Moving right along. [interjections] Yeah? Really? Free insurance?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View has the floor. When she finishes, Standing Order 29 prevails, and you will have an opportunity to ask questions of her. She has the floor, and the chair recognizes her.

The hon. member.

Ms Haley: Thank you. You know, when we talk about everything that we have in Alberta, not only do we no longer have a deficit – and I'm grateful for that – but our debt is almost paid off. We are no longer squandering billions of dollars on interest, which doesn't create any jobs or do anything good for anybody anywhere.

We have the best programs, including the best programs for our seniors. Would I like to see whether we can raise the thresholds for our seniors? Yes, ultimately I would like to see that, but I am also not reluctant to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I believe that our seniors' programs are pre-eminent anywhere in Canada.

When I talk to my mother, who is 76, and prior to my step-father's death last year – he was a very proud, very right-wing, very strong Albertan who believed that they had been given great opportunities in their life. They didn't have much. They had a small house, you know, that my mom still lives in today. It's a 50-year-old house, and she's happy in this house. She believes that she's never had it so good in her whole life. She is grateful that there is a thing like a co-pay with a $25 cap on a prescription for the prescriptions that she needs. She and her husband, Bob, needed the health care system in the last couple of years in a big way, and it was there for them. So you will not find a person like my mom talking about how seniors have been taken advantage of or brutalized in some way. She's very proud of this province, living in this province, being a strong member of her community. She volunteers everywhere that she is physically and mentally capable of doing so.

I cannot believe that I have to sit here, knowing that my mother lives on a very small pension, and listen to how I would somehow abuse my own mother because I'm a government member, that I don't care about senior citizens, that I don't care about children. I mean, it's absolutely ludicrous. You do not have a market on compassion just because you're in a left-wing party, and just because you're in a right-wing party doesn't mean that you don't care about people. It's just ludicrous, the innuendo and the insulting comment that you make about things like that.

Utility relief. Let's talk about utility relief. Please name one other jurisdiction in North America that even has a rebate on anything – on anything – on any kind of gas or oil or coal or wood product.

Ms Carlson: You're gouging our seniors.

Ms Haley: Nobody's gouging anybody.

These resources belong to the people of this province, and they capture all of the royalties on it. It is why we have the lowest income taxes anywhere in this country, and compared to most U.S. states, we're better off. We do not have a sales tax, which most places in North America do in fact have. We have a natural gas rebate that kicks in at $5.50, which takes some of the pain out of it. Is it perfect? No. But, then, who knew 10 years ago that natural gas would be this high? I think a lot of these things are incredibly important.

We have the best economy in Canada. We have the highest growth rate. We have the lowest unemployment rate. We have the lowest overall taxes. We have in fact an enormous advantage in living here, yet all I hear is the negative, the doom and gloom, the sky is falling. You know, it's like, wow, I must be living in a whole other place. I leave this place; I go to Airdrie where people are happy. They're working; they've got jobs. Their kids are in school. They can drive on the road. They can go shopping. They've got jobs.

Eleven years ago we had 11.75 per cent unemployment in this province. Airdrie at 16,000 people had over 500 empty homes just sitting there that nobody wanted to buy. That's over. People have moved back to Alberta. They're moving in. We have the highest growth rate of any province in this country. We netted an extra 12,000 people from other provinces across this country last year, yet here we are in the doom and gloom scenario of the opposition. I'm staggered by it. I can't believe it, and I would urge my colleagues to please vote against this ridiculous amendment.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Mason: I have a question, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, the chair did make reference to Standing Order 29, but that applies to the debate. We are dealing with a reasoned amendment, and there is no provision in our Standing Orders right now for your questions.

The chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There was some confusion on this. The Speaker, before you came in, in fact said that there was room to ask questions.

I would like to speak, Mr. Speaker, in favour of the amendment. We're not naive to think that an amendment like this would pass this House. We were very clear when we debated among ourselves the appropriateness of bringing forward this amendment. We aren't doing it based on the premise that somehow the amendment will be passed and, therefore, the government will be defeated and we will have an election. We knew all that wouldn't happen.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, on the issue of a budget, a budget that in fact is a statement about the commitments of a government in power with respect to its vision, with respect to its policies, with respect to its commitments to the people of Alberta, it is exceedingly important that this budget be taken seriously, that the government be held to account for . . .

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Acting Speaker: I regret to interject. Hon. members, we are currently in the Assembly and not in committee stage. Members who wish to have a conversation may leave the Assembly and have a conversation outside or take their seats, please. Sorry for the interruption.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Debate Continued

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was speaking to the reason for this reasoned amendment. It's an opportunity to hold this government to account for what this budget contains, what this budget reveals to Albertans about the failure of this government to keep its commitments, to respect its own promises, and to deliver on its own undertakings.

The Minister of Finance has failed the third time in her term as minister by bringing in a budget which fails to deliver to Albertans, Alberta's children first and foremost in this case, class sizes which are affordable, smaller class sizes. This government fully accepted the vast majority of the recommendations of the Learning Commission, which itself, I must say, was the result of a crisis in education that had been created by this government's own policies previous to the establishment of that commission. But once the commission came up with the recommendation to reduce the class size and start doing that right away, forthwith, the government said: yes, we agree. What do we see in the budget? No money for following down that road.

It's outrageous that a government on the one hand accepts the recommendations of a commission that it appointed itself to reduce class size and then turns around and gives $142 million in tax cuts to big corporations and says that there's no money to start reducing class size. It says that we need to wait for another year or two or three. We have another four years before we can begin to implement that particular commitment on the part of the government. It's shameful, Mr. Speaker, that the government should be renegeing on its own commitments, on its promises to the children of this province.

Similarly, Mr. Speaker, the motion draws attention to the failure of this government to restore to Alberta seniors the benefits that they have earned through their hard work, through lifelong commitment to building this province, to continuing to pay their taxes. Seniors are not people who don't pay their taxes – they pay taxes even now – yet when it comes to the benefits that they so strongly deserve, this government has failed them.

I raised this question during the debate on the estimates, both when we were talking about the Department of Learning estimates and the Department of Seniors estimates, and I was quite astounded to hear the reactions from the government side on this. The minister responsible for Seniors, the minister responsible for Learning, the minister responsible for Government Services, and the minister responsible for utility rates and deregulation of utilities have all failed and failed our seniors, failed our businesses, failed our householders, failed our renters.

When you deregulate and the result is an increase in utility costs for heating, for electricity, you know, it affects everybody. It affects businesses negatively, it affects homeowners, it affects the seniors who live in their own homes and live on stagnant incomes, and it hurts renters. The vast majority of Albertans live in rented accommodations. Their rents are going up thanks to the failed deregulation policies on utilities in this province.

So this government boasts about making this province the best place in the country to live. Yes, Albertans work hard. They are proud to have built this province the way it has been built. What this government is doing is failing them in their expectations. It spends more time in dampening expectations of Albertans rather than meeting those expectations, delivering on those expectations of Albertans. By setting the bar low, any government can of course boast that they've done these things, but this government is guilty of setting the bar so low in a province where people work so hard, where they're so proud of their accomplishments.

It tells them that you've got to live at a level which our neighbouring provinces, who don't have these resources, who don't have the opportunities, have had to accept because they didn't have the choices. We do have choices, Mr. Speaker, and this bill denies those choices to Albertans. That's why this amendment is one that I support, that's why we in the New Democrat caucus brought this amendment forward, and that's why we ask my colleagues in the House to support this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, before I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour today to look up in the gallery and see a very good friend of mine. This gentleman participates in actually two southern Alberta constituencies. His MLA is the hon. Member for Highwood, and this gentleman has a business in my constituency of Livingstone-Macleod. Soon the two constituencies will come together, so George Gaschler, who actually lives in Nanton and has a business in Fort Macleod, will all be in Livingstone-Macleod.

In both of these southern Alberta communities, Mr. Speaker, this gentleman is a community leader, very much involved in chamber of commerce. He's had a successful law practice for over 28 years. He is the chair of the Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump advisory committee under the Minister of Community Development. He's a proud father of three wonderful children all still in university and a family that really, really enjoys and appreciates the Alberta advantage.

Mr. Gaschler is seated in the members' gallery, and I would have him please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Second Reading

Bill 32
Appropriation Act, 2004

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can depend on the third party in the House to come up occasionally with these Hail Mary passes, so to speak, and I think with a 74-seat majority, that's certainly what this motion is in trying to bring down the government or give a nonconfidence vote in the budget, but it did generate some back and forth discussion, which is very unusual in this House. I always greatly enjoy it when we're able to engage members of the government in debate.

She raised some interesting points, but I would counter some of the attitudes raised by the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View in that her attitude seems to be: well, in Alberta because everything's so great, you should never strive for anything better. I would think that's exactly what we're supposed to do, is strive for better.

It is about a political ideology that comes underneath and shapes the government's policy. Of course that's what it does. The government has a particular ideology, they're going to follow through on it, and it's going to show up in their policies, including things like the budget. So we're going to have choices made there and priorities placed on things that we in the opposition parties disagree with. That's exactly why you have these kinds of debate in the House.

Do I think it's wrong to bring forward an amendment like this in trying to strive to create conditions that we know Albertans are asking for? No, I don't think there's anything wrong with that. I think that's exactly what should be happening, and for that I commend the Member for Edmonton-Highlands for bringing forward this reasoned amendment.

I think that for my constituents there are certainly two out of three of the issues that are raised in this motion that are of intense interest to them. One is what has happened around utility costs. Of course, with a lot of renters and a lot of low-income renters that's of very immediate assistance to my constituents. Essentially what we did was go from the most stable, reliable, and cost-effective, cheapest in other words, electricity prices in Alberta through the government's plan for electrical deregulation to some form of ongoing chaos.

The Member for Airdrie-Rocky View said, you know: isn't the province wonderful for offering rebates? I guess that I have to say: why do we have to have rebates? Well, we have to have them because the government got into electrical deregulation and also started to mess around with what was happening with the gas prices. That's why we have to have rebates, and frankly they've got enough money that they can give the rebates.

Now, I would question whether that in the long run is effective wealth management. Are these good management choices in the long run for the future of Albertans?

I note that the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake is getting engaged behind me here and I'm sure will be joining in the discussion soon, aside from just heckling me from two rows back there. That's what's exciting about an amendment like this: it does generate that kind of discussion.

I think some of the other issues and the reason that I would support this amendment is the comprehensive health care benefits for seniors. I have to say that if there were one thing that seniors from all the seniors' groups that I've met with and talked to in the last year have said most consistently – and as the Official Opposition critic for Seniors I've certainly been to a lot of meetings on this – it is the loss of the extended health care benefits, particularly the original loss of the universal benefit program, that is most consistently brought up by seniors as really getting under their skin and irking them these days.

Again, you know, with the choices that the government has made, the seniors feel that they are not coming forward as a priority of the government. The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie spoke eloquently about that, and she's been most recently of all of us in here on the doors. I think we could say that a lot of us after three month or four months in here are getting dome disease, but she's actually been on the doors, and that's what they're saying, and I believe her.

So for my constituents in Edmonton-Centre I have to say that two of the three things that are listed in here are of immediate, pressing, and ongoing concern. That is the comprehensive health care benefits for seniors and the relief for utility customers.

The classroom sizes is a different issue for me. My schools are covered under the city centre school program. That was a special program that Edmonton public and Catholic got together on in recognizing what was happening to those inner-city schools and the kind of work that we had to do if we were going to have those kids enjoy the Alberta advantage, let me put it that way. So in many ways my schools have had the advantage of smaller classrooms because so many of the kids that are attending these schools are in need of very specialized individual attention and very small classes. We have been able, through reaching out into the community and partnerships with businesses and a variety of grant programs available through the government, to patch together a fairly extensive program. I don't want to see the day when these grants are all withdrawn.

That in itself is indicative of choices that this government has made, where you have the school system and the hospital system, two public institutions, I'll note, as the biggest competitors in the fundraising sector, competing for dollars against all of those other organizations that were traditionally fundraising for dollars to support their endeavours. The social service agencies and the youth agencies and the sports and recreation agencies and the arts and cultural agencies: all of those were the traditional entrants, and religious and charitable groups as well were all there before. Now our biggest competitors are schools and hospitals, all competing for that fundraising dollar from the private sector and from individuals' pockets.

You know, budgets are about choices and priorities, and this government brings forward a budget that very much reflects their priorities. We have things like an emphasis on income trusts, which is very clearly going to allow corporations to pay less corporate income tax. One assumes that there's supposed to be a shift to individual income tax, but when you look at the numbers, you don't see a dollar-for-dollar replacement there.

Choices like a flat tax, a choice of the government. I would argue again that that benefits those that are in the $80,000-plus range and not those that are middle and lower income. It's a choice the government has made. I would argue that I would make different choices, and I think that they should make different choices. Part of those choices that I would like to see are not reflected in what the government has done and are reflected in this motion that we're talking about.

This budget had no increase for people that are on assured income for the severely handicapped, known as AISH, or on SFI, which I think is now being reworked to be called Alberta Works. No increases there. So no increases for the very low income but much benefit accruing to those with very high income.

One of the other notes I quickly jotted down here was: no restoration of services and programs to the seniors, and I've already talked about the comprehensive health care benefits there.

You know, should we simply stay mum in the opposition because there's a lot of wealth in Alberta? Should we not push forward and push for the things that we hear people telling us they want? And I know that members in the government are hearing it from people. I'm not the only one that these people are speaking to. I see members out at other public rallies that I'm at. I know that they're hearing it from other people.

So I disagree with the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View. I think that's exactly what our job is, to continue to press for improvement in those areas. In doing so, I am willing to support this amendment brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands because it makes those points and because it pushes that envelope, as it should.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I won't be long, but I did want to speak briefly to the amendment because the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, by bringing this amendment in, has specifically addressed items such as the reduction in class sizes, comprehensive health care benefits, and relief for utility consumers. I'm just going to speak to the first, the reduction in class sizes, because in talking about that, there was comment about the Learning Commission report and I think also from Edmonton-Mill Woods extensive comments about the Learning Commission report.

The Learning Commission was one of the best things that we've done in a long time. The learning system hadn't been looked at comprehensively for some 20 years, since the Walter Worth report, I believe. There weren't a lot of surprises in there. There were lots of things that came up in the Learning Commission report that we had talked about with our constituents over time. What was beneficial about the Learning Commission report was the comprehensive look and bringing in experts and that.

There were some 98 recommendations in that report, and they were very good recommendations. Not everybody agreed with all of those recommendations, but I think the speed with which this government moved to accept most of the recommendations, to only reject two recommendations – and then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre says without money. She obviously can't read, because as I read the budget and the three-year business plan, there's some $650 million more in the education budget over the next three years. Six hundred and fifty million dollars. Now, that's a lot of money.

The Learning Commission did not say that class sizes should be changed in one year. They recognized that every time you make a significant change in the education system, given the size that it is, that costs money and it costs a lot of money, so they suggested phasing those changes in.

We started before this budget phasing those changes in with money put into the learning system back in November, and those changes in November – and school boards will acknowledge this – allowed schools to move this January to put people in classrooms, either more teachers or more aides or more help, and the money in this budget will sustain that change.

Now, will it improve that in a significant amount? Probably not, because there are other issues that have to be addressed. There are issues of negotiations for salaries and things still to be addressed, but the change that was made in January will be sustained by this budget. That change in January was very significant, Mr. Speaker, in my view. We need to move forward with the Learning Commission, and we need to move forward with the funding of the Learning Commission, but it has to be done in a manner which is consistent with sustainability and consistent with balancing the budget.

Six hundred and fifty million dollars over three years for learning is no small change. It's a very significant indication of the priority that has been put on learning in this province, the priority that was stated in our strategic plan, the priority that was stated by our Premier last fall in the Legislature in answer to a question, saying that learning is our number one priority. I'm very proud of that statement. I'm very proud of that statement in our strategic plan that leading in learning is the number one priority because in every study that we've done and every time we've consulted Albertans, they have said that in order to move to the future economy, to build stability in the economy of this province, we need to have all of our children have the opportunity to get an education to build the tools that they will need to seize the opportunities of the future.

This government is committed to that. The budget reflects that. The business plans out three years reflect that in spades. The amount of money that's being put into the plan now is not insignificant. It's a major contribution towards that step forward. What I would ask members to do is don't build unrealistic expectations about what can be done overnight but help build the future by building on the commitments that this government has made to make learning our number one priority and to commit the resources to do so.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands is gesturing to me hoping that there is a provision to close debate. Unfortunately, according to Standing Order 25(2), there is no such provision.

Anybody else wish to speak on the amendment?

[Motion on amendment lost]

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else wish to participate in the debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 32 read a second time]

Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Bill 31
Highways Development and Protection Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I read Hansard for second reading of Bill 31. Obviously, the minister was very generous in offering briefings to members of the opposition, and my colleague took advantage of that. He makes it clear from his comments that he doesn't have any concerns.

One of the things that's bothering me about this – and maybe I could just get the minister to respond – is that it is allowing the province to take ownership of a number of different roadways in different ways and at different times. Part of what is coming back to me is this sort of ongoing discussion that has been happening between the municipalities and the government around funding of infrastructure.

Certainly, we've seen in the past – I'm going to have to generalize on some of these statements because I just don't have the backup documentation in front of me here, Mr. Chairman. You know, I can remember things like the mayor of Calgary making quite a stink about infrastructure money and then being successful in prying some additional funds, probably one-time only surplus dollars, out of the government to work on some of the ring roads around the province, which seems to be particularly where the province and the municipalities intersect, if you will, on shared routes.

Here's my worst-case scenario. Let me put it that way. Do we get to a position with the new authorities that are being granted to the minister here to take control or have control or be allocated new control over various roadways and highway systems for the minister to be taking over some of these ring roads and then be denying funding to the cities? So we could end up with a situation where Deerfoot Trail in Calgary, for example, or Anthony Henday here or the Whitemud or the Yellowhead Trail in Edmonton end up being under the control of the government, and they then refuse to allocate money and the municipalities can't do it either because they've lost control over it.

I guess that's my fear because I'm sensing increasing agitation happening between the municipalities and the province. As I follow this in the media, which is where it tends to turn up, the municipalities continue to press the province, saying: "There has been an infrastructure deficit created. We need the money from you the province to help address this." The province is reluctant to allocate the money to that. Then we get into a discussion about who gave up what to get rid of the deficit or contribute to the surplus, and on it goes. There are various sorts of name-calling and downloading accusations on both sides here.

As a city of Edmonton MLA I'm more concerned that we could end up with a situation in my city where my own municipality doesn't have enough money right now and could continue to not have enough money to make sure that its roadways are in good repair. That affects not only people moving around the city but also things like transportation routes in and out of the city to supply the city, the manufacturing sector, and others that have their goods and services leaving through the transportation routes and coming back in through those routes. That's part of what occurred to me as I looked at what was being anticipated here.

There are other things that don't seem to be any issue at all. They're allowing the telecommunications poles or the underground lines to be laid closer to the roadways. I don't think that that's an issue, and certainly my colleague has made it clear that it wasn't an issue.

The minister is given the right to remove the access road. Bylaws from city council are sent to the minister, and the minister may approve the bylaw in whole or in part. The province can take ownership of any road plans that it cancels within the municipalities that connect with the highways. That's part of what piqued my interest in all of this.

Regulations on highway use for exploration of the Mines and Minerals Act. Changes control of pipelines and other infrastructure surrounding highways into the Minister of Transportation's hands.

That's what I'm seeing here, and that's the question that I put to the Minister of Transportation. I'd like to hear something back from him before I can support the Committee of the Whole or third reading passage of this bill. So if he can speak to that, that would be very helpful.

Thank you.

Ms Evans: Mr. Chairman, I cannot resist responding in part to the concerns raised by the hon. member opposite. In the absence of the legislation in front of me, under the terms of the Municipal Government Act, passed in 1995, the control of the infrastructure within the boundaries of a municipality are at the discretion of the municipality and could not be interfered with. In terms of accountability for a ring road that is, for example, in this capital region, that is shared jurisdictionally between many members.

At one point in 1998 we provided the sum of $10 million, voted on by every member of the ring road municipalities. Over 20 municipalities, I believe 24, voted the allocation of those funds to that at that time. Albeit the province has been involved in the design of major roads, highways, et cetera, at this point within that context there is a recognition that local authorities clearly have jurisdictional support with the legislation.

So I do not fear any municipal authority having the encroachment of any other level of government on the planning or the direction, if you will, of resources allocated to roads within those boundaries.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak on Bill 31, the Highways Development and Protection Act, in its study in Committee of the Whole. It's a comprehensive bill. It came toward the end of the session, and I was hoping that it would be circulated after it was introduced so that it would provide enough time for careful study of the bill by all parties concerned. That being said, we're proceeding with debate on it in committee. I just wanted to make a few observations, Mr. Chairman.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, Bill 31, really combines two acts, the Public Highways Development Act and the City Transportation Act, into a single framework. This fusion of the two bills into one is I think perhaps guided by considerations with respect to planning, development, and protection of provincial highways and rationalizing, I guess, transportation routes in the province. It makes sense to perhaps bring these acts together in general if it assists in planning.

The concerns that have been expressed – and I think the previous speakers have spoken to the concerns on both sides of the issue, particularly how the provisions of this act will encroach upon the powers of municipalities and AMDs and whether or not full consultation has been undertaken to ensure that there is a broad-based consensus with respect to the changes that are incorporated in this act. I'm not aware of the extent of those consultations, Mr. Chairman, but I trust that some of those have taken place and that due attention has been paid to the concerns of other levels of government whose decisions may be impacted and affected or encroached upon by the provisions of this bill.

This bill is certainly quite ambitious. It will probably increase the kilometres of highway that are under the Minister of Transportation in the province. Already I think that we have 32,000 kilometres of highways for which the provincial government is responsible. The question that I have is: what amount if any in terms of kilometres will be added to the provincial responsibility for roads as a result of this bill being passed?

One of the provisions of the bill gives the government the ability to designate highways in urban areas as provincial highways. So I guess the net effect of that would be an increase in the total number of kilometres which become the responsibility of the provincial government. Does that mean, therefore, that once certain highways in urban areas are designated as provincial highways, the total cost of building them and maintaining them and operating them also then becomes the responsibility of the government? It's not clear to me from my reading of the bill that that is the case. So that's a question that I have.

Some other questions. It looks like some new fees may be introduced as a result of the legislation. If so, what might those fees be; what might they be about? What will be the effect of this bill on agreements with municipalities under which some ring roads or other highways and portions thereof are already under construction? I presume that they won't be affected but, again, a question.

How would this bill affect the completion of the Canamex highway? I understand that progress on that particular highway is presently stalled around Milk River. Would this bill have any direct impact on that impasse, on that stalled construction?

What kind of impact would it have on the proposed Fort McMurray rail link? Is that going to be covered under this act, or does it fall outside?

Those are some of the questions that I have, Mr. Chairman.

Another provision which has caught my attention is that any commercial site that ceases to be used as such for one year must apply to the minister for a permit to resume operation. The bill gives the minister the authority to demolish and/or dispose of unsightly, unsafe structures within a certain distance of a controlled highway. Likewise, the minister may remove unauthorized developments. The provisions and the powers that this bill will give the minister all seem to be interesting and in some ways perhaps justifiable, but they also raise questions about the degree to which the parties that are likely to be affected by these new powers being sought by way of this bill by the minister are onside with the changes or not.

Those are some of the questions that I have, Mr. Chairman, and that said, I'll take my seat.

Bill 34

Income Trusts Liability Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Chairman, on behalf of my colleague the Member for Calgary-Mountain View I would like to offer a few comments on the questions that were brought forward at second reading of Bill 34, the Income Trusts Liability Act. If any of the opposition members have any questions that they'd like followed up, I have a written copy that I'd be happy to provide them with if it would help speed up the debate.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to have an opportunity to speak to Bill 34, the Income Trusts Liability Act. We've seen this legislation come forward in other provinces. I think that for the most part it's a good idea to start to look at limiting liability for unit holders in income trusts.

We're seeing the income trust sector growing throughout Canada. There are now more than 150 listed on the TSX, and they've got a huge market value, over $90 billion. They're a significant part of Alberta's business sector, particularly the resource sector, and by companies transforming themselves into income trusts, they can significantly reduce or eliminate their corporate income taxes. They flow through the income directly to the investor, who then pays personal income taxes on that income.

So why is that good? Well, it enables companies to grow their asset base so that they can do more research and development; they can take on larger projects. The benefit for the individual is that as a small individual, a small investor, or as a large investor you have the ability to invest in these companies that you might not otherwise have access to.

Personally, as an investor what do I want to know? I want to know that my liability is limited in that company. So I could buy shares or I could buy a piece of an income trust, and I want to know that if something goes wrong in that company, the liability isn't going to follow me as an investor. That's exactly what happens here.

It doesn't matter to me if the company is paying taxes as long as I'm getting my share of the income, and it comes much faster in an income trust than it would as a shareholder in a company. The income flows right to you in the year that it's earned as opposed to you having to wait for an asset increase as a shareholder in a company and then you have to sell your shares in order to gain any benefits. This way the money flows right through.

We've seen that this industry has grown, but the regulations haven't kept pace with it. So the need to protect investors is real, and I think it's appropriate for us to see this legislation.

Certainly, the income trust sector has been asking provincial governments to pass legislation confirming that the limited liability flows through to the investors, and that will happen here. The legislation removes the concern that investors could be liable to cover the debts of an insolvent corporation in which they owned income trust units. It puts the income trust unit holders on an equal footing with common share holders, whose liability is limited. So we think that this is a positive place to be, where we strengthen investor protection in Alberta and work toward a more open and accountable reporting mechanism for publicly traded income trusts.

We support the legislation, but we do have a few questions, Mr. Chairman. This bill is being pushed through the Legislative Assembly before the government consults with stakeholders over the summer. They've made the commitment that they're going to consult, so why wouldn't you hold the legislation over in case we need some changes to be made to it that fall in line with what people are asking for? I would like that question answered before we vote on this bill. Why aren't you having that consultation as you have done in many other cases? Just hold it over the summer, and let's see what falls out of the consultations so that we can do the amendments prior to the bill becoming law. That would be I think a very good idea.

We've seen that the income trust sector has called for this type of legislation. What have investors' rights groups been saying? I haven't seen any documentation from people. We need to know who the government consulted with on the investor side. I would also like to know who has been meeting with the government on this legislation. Have you been meeting with income trust companies, and if so, who are those? What does the Revenue minister expect his participation to be in income trusts over the next 10 to 20 years, and what impact does he believe income trusts will have in this province over that same time period? What could we imagine the future to be with income trusts here in Alberta?

At the very least, I would like to know what the outcomes of the consultations will be. There must be some protocol you've established for getting more information. Are you going to have meetings? Are you just going to put out notices and ask for input? Will the information be available on-line? Will people be able to give their feedback and express their concerns and questions? I think that that would be very good.

This is a move, I think, overall, after those questions are answered, to improve openness and transparency in the stockmarket in Alberta. It's a good move for the government to make. Let's hope that they can include openness and transparency in more of their actions. That would be good.

Mostly what we're seeing here is investor protection, I think, so unless any concerns fall out from the consultations, we're prepared to support it. Once again the consultations happen after the bill passes, but generally speaking I don't think that there are going to be any huge concerns falling out of this. Of course, this government will change everything by regulation if there are, so it doesn't really matter what we have to say about it.

This is one area where we have to start thinking about other investment opportunities for Alberta companies who want to build and grow. Income trusts are one option. Venture capital is another option and one that so far the government has stalled on. So I would like to take this opportunity to talk about the other ways that we can look beyond providing income to Albertans that is simply based on raw resources. This is the kind of thing we need to think about doing for the future and long-term viability of this province if we want to stay as a leader in Canada and for our part in the global economy.

Mostly it's a step in the right direction. Of course, this government always does things in terms of putting the cart before the horse. We see that here. It would have been really nice to see it after the stakeholder consultations, but having said that, Mr. Chairman, I will be voting for this bill.

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill 35

Companies Amendment Act, 2004

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to get up and say a few words about the amendment that we are making. I'm assuming that the members across the way did not allow us to put this through in miscellaneous statutes because they want to open the act and support the Minister of Government Services now and in the future with regard to having an amendment that allows increased research and increased global participation with regard to part 9 of the Companies Act.

There is one other thing. Last night the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar said: well, this will mean, perhaps, that a lot more companies will come forward. But it's through the discretion of Executive Council. I would assume it would be an order in council. This minister, I know, would use great discretion, but I'm sure any minister of the Crown would. It would be brought to cabinet and reviewed on its merit. In this case, this company was prepared to leave the province, and it would have meant a number of jobs lost, and anybody who knows the research community knows that this has a tendency to have a snowball effect.

By CIRG staying here, other scientists and other researchers, particularly in the cancer area, will come to where the great research is happening and where the money is. In the case of this company, we certainly didn't want to lose them in Edmonton. To have to open an act to do this, so be it. We've done it, and I'm sure that in the future Executive Council and the minister of the Crown, whichever portfolio it falls under at this present time, the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, the Minister of Government Services, will use discretion.

I encourage all members to support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. In response to the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, yeah, I'm one of the people that objected to this being in miscellaneous statutes and asked that it be pulled out. He's right. There is a situation that occurred with a company, the Cancer International Research Group. I think that all members involved and on both sides of the House recognized the importance of that group to Edmonton, to the world in fact, and certainly to the area, the sector of cancer research. We all wanted to make sure that this company was able to stay in Edmonton and in Alberta and wanted to work to facilitate that.

My concern was that what the government was proposing to do and in fact is continuing to propose to do wasn't to open a window briefly to allow this company to come through and change the requirements so that it could stay in Alberta, but in fact this is constructing a door through which nonprofit companies that are established under part 9 of the Companies Act can continue to walk. That was my concern.

I went back to both the sponsoring minister and the Minister of Justice and said: okay; what this really needed to have been was a private bill, because that's the parliamentary process that's available to us in this Assembly in Alberta to deal with one-offs. If the issue is a one-off, a special case that we really need to deal with, private bills is the process that's available to us. The problem was that by the time the company realized what it needed to do, it had missed the deadline for the private bills process. It's got a shopping list of criteria that you have to meet in order to bring that private bill before the Assembly, and they had missed the deadlines on that.

I said: no problem. The Official Opposition – we had the agreement of the third party as well – are more than willing to give unanimous consent to facilitate the private bill process for this company. If this one company was what we were trying to do and we were all agreed that we wanted to keep them here, then that was the parliamentary process that was appropriate. I didn't feel that it was appropriate to open the door for everybody else to come if we were really just trying to deal with one company, so I asked that it be pulled out of the miscellaneous statutes.

In fact, I was very surprised to see exactly the same wording that was in miscellaneous statutes now turn up as the bill. What that signalled to me was in fact that this wasn't about that one company. This wasn't about Cancer International Research Group. It wasn't, because the government did not take advantage of the offer from the Official Opposition to assist it in using the parliamentary process that was available.

What this is really about is that the government wants to have that doorway built forever to allow it to continue behind closed doors through the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make those decisions about what other part 9 companies they will exempt from meeting the residency requirements. That's what it's really about. So I'm glad that I insisted that the bill come forward separately, which, in fact, it has as Bill 35, the Companies Amendment Act, 2004, because it allows us to put all of this on the record here.

I was more than willing to bend over backwards to facilitate the Cancer International Research Group, but that's not what this bill's about. This bill is about making sure that the Lieutenant Governor in Council, which is cabinet, without it bringing it before the Legislative Assembly ever again can continue behind closed doors to make those decisions about exempting residency requirements.

I question that. I've been told, "Oh, everybody's doing it, and residency requirements are a thing of the past, and we're a global community now, and nobody's interested in that any more; we're all changing." Well, I haven't seen the all. I haven't seen the hundreds of other provinces and states and countries that are supposedly getting involved in this. I'm just looking at Alberta and going: well, as an Alberta MLA am I safeguarding the assets and our processes and structures for other Albertans and for other Alberta companies that are nonprofits incorporated under section 9 here? I think that's not happening.

I'm aware that my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona wants to speak to this, and I will give way for him to get some comments on the record, but my ultimate concern was that this government was being disingenuous about this. It wasn't about this one group. This is about changing things forevermore, and that was my concern with what was being proposed here.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak on Bill 35 in this meeting of the Committee of the Whole. I want to I guess reiterate what's just been said by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

I'm a member of the Private Bills Committee, and I was called by the Member for Edmonton-Centre to seek my consent to waive the time conditions on a party being able to bring a private bill before that committee. I said, "No problem; we'll go out of our way to make it possible for this particular company, this being a nonprofit company doing some important work in the area of research on cancer drugs." I said that we'd do this. Yet that route was not chosen by the government. That would've been the appropriate route.

The act now, it seems to me, will give the government broad powers, without consulting the Legislature, to bring about a major change in the existing legislation, which will now make it possible for companies not to have to meet the 50 per cent condition for membership on its board of directors and residency condition.

So I am not happy for this bill to come forward this way. The appropriate route would have been the Private Bills Committee, and that would have certainly helped this company to come into Alberta to do the research that it needs to do without us opening up the floodgates.

But it seems that the intention behind the request from the government to put it through the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, was quite different. It was in fact to amend the existing legislation in quite dramatic form but do it through the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act. That's not what we've been asked to do, and that's why we turned that particular request down. This bill, in my view, really raises all kinds of questions with respect to general direction change in policy, and therefore I'm going to have to vote against it, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report bills 31, 33, 34, and 35.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Klapstein: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: Bill 31, Bill 33, Bill 34, and Bill 35.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 12, 2004

1:30 p.m.

Date: 04/05/12

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Grant us daily awareness of the precious gift of life which has been given to us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today in your gallery are a couple of eminent gentlemen. Not to single out anyone by starting first, I'll start with Jim Horsman, who sat in one of these places along here at one time. Jim Horsman is here today representing the University of Lethbridge, and I want to indicate to him that all of us in Lethbridge and southern Alberta appreciate his efforts.

With him today is Bill Cade, the president of the University of Lethbridge. Bill has shown to now be a great asset to the university, a great asset to southern Alberta and, actually, to Alberta generally.

We thank both of them for coming today, and we would like the Legislative Assembly to show them an appropriate applause for their visit today.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly four very special guests. Colleen Quartly joined my office recently and provides a warm smile and greeting at our door as well as over our telephone in addition to all of the other workload that she shares in our office, but her most important job, of course, is her role as mother to Sydney. Sydney will be one on Friday, so it's important that she be at the Legislature early to start her career learning about government.

With Colleen and Sydney are Colleen's mother, Rose Desjardins, a retired psychiatric nurse with more than 30 years of service residing in London, Ontario, and Colleen's aunt, Elaine Arcand, a retired schoolteacher with more than 30 years of service residing in Sturgeon Falls, Ontario. Both her mother and aunt arrived in Edmonton today and have plans to visit Banff national park, Fort Edmonton, the Muttart Conservatory, and all the wonders that are Alberta.

All three have now risen, and I'd like them to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of the House 14 visitors from Spruce Grove from the Living Waters Christian Academy, which is a private school in my riding that does a great job and is currently undergoing some expansion. The students are accompanied by teacher Mr. Mike Janzen and parent helpers Carole Ibsen and Ross Hogg. I would like them to rise in the public gallery and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 22 members of the Redwater seniors' association. I'd like to recognize their team leader, Mrs. Mable Cook, and driver Mr. Burt McNeil. For some it's their first time in this Legislature, and I had the opportunity of having lunch with them this afternoon. This group of seniors are great supporters of mine and of this government, and I truly appreciate all that they have done for this province and for their own communities. The commitment that they put in is greatly appreciated. I'd also like to thank their tour guide, who has done a splendid job on the tour with them this afternoon. I'd like to ask them now to rise – they're seated in the members' gallery – and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My group isn't in yet, but I would like to acknowledge them. It is indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a group of 47 constituents that are going to come in from Glen Avon school in St. Paul. With them we will have Mrs. O'Neill, Miss Penno, Mr. Doonanco, and Mr. Levasseur. I would like to thank you for allowing me the opportunity for that introduction, maybe a belated introduction. I would ask the members of the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature very special visitors from Viking school. They are of course very enthusiastic. The school has a history of tremendous scholastic achievement, and probably just as important given the NHL finals, it's also the home of the very famous Sutter hockey family. You can see where the hard work comes from given the students we are about to introduce today. They are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Marlene Taylor, Mrs. Muriel Hill, and Mrs. Debbie Snider, a teacher assistant; parent helpers Ms Christine Ruzicka, Mrs. Trish Hollar, Mrs. Jeannette Andraszewski, Mrs. Cindy Severson, and Ms Trish Friend. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly two of our staff members who are seated in the public gallery. Aaron Roth has been a researcher with the Alberta Liberal caucus office since 2002. Prior to joining the caucus, Aaron worked in the Lethbridge-East constituency office for three years. He's a dedicated researcher and has served both the caucus and the Member for Lethbridge-East very well for five years. I regret to say that Aaron will be leaving us at the end of this summer to pursue what I'm sure most would think of as a more noble calling. He will be entering the seminary to pursue a life in the priesthood.

The second staff member I wish to introduce is Steven Rowe. Steven will be working in the Alberta Liberal caucus office for the summer under the STEP program. He's currently enrolled at the U of A and is working toward his bachelor of arts degree in political science, specializing in Middle Eastern and African studies. Before going to university, Steven spent several years working in the oil field and, before that, a few years working in Israel as a farm labourer.

I would ask them both to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to rise today and to introduce two outstanding guests, both from the village of Breton, where I resided for 12 years. The first one I've introduced before. He's the mayor of Breton, also the vice-president of the AUMA, and today he was discussing the rural development initiative. I'll ask Darren Aldous to stand.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, formerly of Breton but who has now moved to this fine city, a very good friend of mine, one of Alberta's great volunteers. In fact, he helped me get elected. Let's give a big round of applause and welcome also to Ben Haluszka.

I'd ask them both to rise and receive the welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure of mine today to rise to introduce Mayor Barb Sjoquist and CAO Terry Tiffen, both from the village of Edgerton within my constituency. Edgerton is a small community, but they think big, and they're a model for rural development in this province. They're seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to stand and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly an excellent Calgarian who has just moved to Edmonton, Stephen Addo. Stephen is now working as registrar of the Alberta Society of Engineering Technologists. Stephen came to Canada from Ghana, West Africa, with an engineering degree and then worked in New Brunswick. He is also a reservist officer in the Canadian armed forces, and he is now settling here in Edmonton. I want him to stand and receive the warm applause from the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly three members of the policy development team of my department. They are seated in the members' gallery: Leanne Connell, Darrell Hemery, and Graham Statt. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two good friends of mine, Héctor González, who is one of my constituents and thus my boss and also a former graduate student of mine, and Leo Campos, a well-respected and well-known community activist. Like thousands of other Canadians of Chilean ancestry they were forced to flee their homeland because of the brutality and oppression of the Pinochet dictatorship. Both of these gentlemen are sitting in the public gallery. I will now request them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly another two well-respected leaders of the Chilean community, Ramon Antipan and Sandra Azocar. Ramon Antipan is representing the Chilean-Canadian Community Association of Edmonton and Sandra Azocar the Chilean Canadian Cultural Society. Like thousands of other Canadians of Chilean ancestry they were forced to flee their homeland because of the brutality and oppression of the Pinochet dictatorship. Ramon and Sandra are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Taxation Policy

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to a tax system that's fair for everyone, Alberta has fallen behind British Columbia and Ontario. Albertans earning $80,000 or less pay more in personal income taxes than people in B.C., and Albertans earning $70,000 or less pay more in personal income taxes than people in Ontario. My questions are to the Minister of Revenue. Why does this government charge middle-income earners more in income taxes than our competitors in Ontario and B.C.?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to repeat an answer to the same question asked yesterday actually. With respect to the Alberta government's policy on taxation we have gone for some time, as we know, to a single rate for simplicity's sake to avoid a whole bunch of problems that are actually punitive to those that are in family situations, income between husband and wife. When you look at the levels of who earns what income, there are varying amounts at various ranges between $20,000 to $80,000, whether you're single, whether you're two parents, whether you have a family.

In many of the categories Alberta rates are still lower than all the provinces, but in all of the categories our rates wouldn't necessarily be the lowest. What is true and what continues to be true is that our overall tax load on persons remains the lowest in all provinces, throughout the country.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. To the same minister: how does the minister justify the unfair policy that under Alberta's flat tax a cabinet minister pays the same tax rate as a Wal-Mart employee?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, let's take that example, then, and understand that. First off, we have the highest exemption of taxes at the low rate. Our exemption rate started at $13,000 and is indexed, growing every year. Approximately $15,000 of income that an individual earns is with no taxes paid at all. So if you want to take the person at the low rate, the Wal-Mart worker, they paid nothing, virtually no taxes because $15,000 of it is exempt.

Dr. Taft: To the same minister: how does the minister justify the unfair policy that health care premiums take a bigger percentage of income from an Albertan earning $50,000 than from an Albertan earning $150,000?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, with respect, the person that earns the $150,000 still pays more taxes than the person at $50,000. They are always paying more taxes in absolute dollars.

When we say unfair and punitive, why is it that there should be an approach to penalize income? Just because you want to destroy the initiative to work overtime, do you want to destroy the initiative to attract people here that want to take the risk and earn money? No, we're not going to penalize those people that want to take the initiative and earn income.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Automobile Insurance Reforms

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Finance minister in an astonishing display of mismanagement admitted to the Public Accounts Committee this morning that she fumbled the ball on skyrocketing auto insurance rates when she indicated that she didn't know her department was rubber-stamping rate increases that led to a record high 59 per cent rise in auto insurance premiums for average Albertans. Adding insult to injury, the minister tried to paint herself as a heroine by stating that she had stepped in after the fact with a freeze that effectively locked in those rates until 2005, permanent high prices for auto insurance. My first question is to the Minister of Finance. Why did you stand by and do nothing when Albertans were facing unprecedented auto insurance rate increases?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to clarify something. For a chairman of a Public Accounts Committee to come in here and tell barefaced lies to this House – I did not say that at that committee this morning, and I am very upset with that coming in here to this House, and I'll deal with that later.

Let's get on to the insurance issue, Mr. Speaker. When it was raised in the activity and annual report of the Department of Finance that this was an issue that had to be dealt with, clearly that's exactly what we did. I have to say that when we raised this issue and realized that Albertans were being jeopardized and penalized from abiding by the law in this province by having available affordable and accessible insurance, we took action and we didn't wait.

We put together a team to come forward with recommendations. That was co-chaired by the Member for Medicine Hat, who took copious months and hours to gather information to bring forward to our caucus so that we could make some rational, logical, straightforward decisions that would be to the benefit of Albertans, and we did that last summer. We further put together an implementation team to carry forward the recommendations from our July caucus meeting to put in a new structure for Albertans that would benefit them, and I take great exception to you, sir, indicating anything different than that.

I believe that we are on a path that this summer will bring to Albertans an insurance plan that will serve them well, that will serve their needs and will be there for them. That's what we're aiming for, and we are on target to deliver just that, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Do I take it that the Minister of Finance will be rising later on a point of order or privilege?

Mrs. Nelson: Yes, I will.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the same minister: why did you stand by and do nothing while the auto insurance industry was racking up record profits totalling $2.6 billion, some of that on the backs of Alberta consumers?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I don't know where the hon. member has been, but we've been debating this issue for a whole year in this House and before that, and I can tell you that we have not sat back. We have done consultation. We have done work. We've brought two pieces of legislation forward in this House that have been debated in this House and passed in this House to put a structure forward that will give Albertans an insurance program that will work. We are in the process of finalizing those regulations, and they will be up and running this summer.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: when will you show us proof that of the 155 of the 157 applications for rate increases that were rubber-stamped by your department – where is the justification for this, and if not, will you roll rates back to pre March 2002 levels?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, the Department of Finance does not rubber-stamp applications for rate increases. There is an Automobile Insurance Board, that receives applications from the industry. They look at the prudence of those applications. If they feel that they were not correct, they would send them back.

Was it a good enough scrutiny? Probably. At the time it might have been. I don't think it is for the future. That's why under our new regulations we will be regulating insurance premiums, and we will be regulating them in the best interests of Albertans.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Public Insurance Model

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Revenue to the province of Alberta from crop and hail insurance premiums is estimated to total $153 million in this budget year. My first question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. How much is estimated by the government to be paid out to farmers in crop and hail insurance this year?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I am by tradition a very . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier has the floor.

Mrs. McClellan: I am by tradition, I think, a calm and reasoned person in this House, and I always take the questions that I receive from hon. members most seriously. But I want to say that if the hon. member believes that I can today describe what the crop conditions of this province are going to be this year, if I had those talents, Mr. Speaker, there probably would be another place for me.

Mr. MacDonald: To the Minister of Finance: given that we have over $400 million set aside for that program, why is the government involved in crop and hail insurance programs and will not consider public automobile insurance in this province?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I have a real problem here looking at the rules and understanding how that question fits in. There are two sides to that question; take whichever one you choose, if you wish.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows full well that the crop insurance program, that has over 40 years of successful history in this province, is a tripartite program that has been developed by and shared by the producers, the government of Canada, and the government of Alberta. He should also know – if he were to research this, it's not hard to find this information – that this program is actuarially sound in the entirety of the program. So it is a completely different matter. It is a risk-management tool that has been accepted on a national basis.

Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member should also know that agriculture is a 50-50 shared jurisdiction with the government of Canada, one of the only departments that is, and all of the programs that we develop on a national basis, such as crop insurance, any of the risk-management tools, the agricultural policy framework, are developed in consensus with the 10 provinces, the territories, and the federal government. To compare that to auto insurance, I can't go there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This time to the Minister of Finance: given that close to 60 per cent of Albertans indicated via a government poll that they want public auto insurance, why is that not debated at the standing policy committee? Why can't we have public auto insurance in this province?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, when we as a caucus went through the process of evaluation just about a year ago, we made the decision that our policy would be to go with the private sector delivering automobile insurance in the province of Alberta for a number of reasons. One, we saw no direct advantage for a change, and we had a structure here that in fact could very well deliver the product.

Now, as everyone knows, the path to delivering that product has been a difficult one because – let's be very honest – to accomplish our goal of lowering our rates so that they're affordable and accessible, money has had to come out of the system, and that's been on the side of the premiums that have been paid. Clearly, that hasn't always been accepted with warm feelings from the industry. However, they have come to the table and are prepared to continue on, and that would be the preference from going out and creating a government entity to do the same function. So we chose to go with the private sector and have them continue on operating in this province.

Let's be very honest. There are roughly 70 insurance companies in the province, and they have branch offices throughout Alberta with a number of people who are perfectly capable of delivering this service to Albertans as they have in the past but at a reasonably priced cost.

Speaker's Ruling

Oral Question Period Rules

The Speaker: Hon. members, I feel that I must make a clarification. Beauchesne 409, dealing with questions in question period, says that in order for a question to be in order, "It must be a question, not an expression of an opinion, representation, argumentation, nor debate."

Now, there's also a tradition we follow here that if an hon. member is recognized, they raise a first question and then they're allowed two supplementals. It has always been understood that supplementals must have something to do with the first question. I'm sorry; I just cannot find the connection between crop insurance and automobile insurance.

The hon. leader of the third party.

Supplementary Prescription Drug Benefit Program

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A young mother fighting cancer recently approached my office. She was turned down for the government supplementary drug benefit plan because she owes $401 in health care premium arrears even though she's paying back the arrears at the rate of $50 per month. To withhold health benefits from someone with a life-threatening illness as a collection tactic is deplorable. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: why does this government have a policy of denying access to the supplementary prescription drug program to cancer patients who are in arrears on their health care premiums even when an agreement is in place and is being honoured to pay these arrears?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, it is the policy of this government that individuals are not restricted from accessing the health care system regardless of their ability to pay, first off. I would be concerned about this circumstance as outlined by the hon. member. I don't have any details. He's not provided me with the advantage of any material before me. But if the hon. member would like to provide me with the details, I would certainly be pleased to look into this matter.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will provide the minister with the details.

However, given that this question is about the policy, not just one individual, how can the government justify an uncaring policy that uses eligibility for supplementary health benefits as a coercive tool for collecting past health care premium debts?

Mr. Mar: I've already indicated what the policy of the government is, Mr. Speaker. So, again, I'll look forward to the individual details of this particular case.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, I have the policy here.

Why does the minister consider it acceptable that a cancer patient meeting the terms of an agreement to repay their Alberta health care premiums is denied access to the modest benefits provided by the government's supplementary drug benefit plan?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mar: Thank you. I believe, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has asked the same question three times.

Health Care Reforms

Mr. Lord: Mr. Speaker, last week we had a town hall forum in my constituency on the future of health care, which overall went very well. Questions were asked as to what areas we might be looking at changing and why there was any need for it. My first question is for the Minister of Health and Wellness. I am wondering if high-profile special events, such as last night's Calgary Flames/San Jose hockey game, generally have had any noticeable impact on the number and type of emergency room visits to local emergency rooms.

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me say right off the top that I can't think of very many emergencies that would have kept me away from the television set last night.

There have been media reports, Mr. Speaker, that there have been a reduced number of calls for fire, for police, and for ambulance services when a Flames game is underway. In fact, there's a media report – and I've been advised of this personally – that the games may in fact result in people reporting their illnesses differently. A man who was undergoing a heart attack was asked a standard question in the triage as to when these symptoms started. He said: between the second and the third periods.

That I'm aware of, Mr. Speaker, the regional health authorities in their emergency rooms do not record the impact that such special events may have on their emergency room visits. They do, however, schedule emergency staff in accordance with what their historical data has been with respect to when they are busy, such as on weekends.

Mr. Lord: To the same minister: given that the Fraser Institute report indicates that Canada is experiencing a much greater shortage of physicians and specialists per capita than any other OECD country, could the minister explain what Alberta is doing to solve the current doctor shortage?

The Speaker: I gave a little caution here a little earlier to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar about consistency in questions. Once again, I am having a real difficult time finding the connection between emergency room visitations and an OECD report. Do you have another one?

Mr. Lord: My final supplemental question for the same minister along the line of health care reform areas that we might be looking at is: is it the case that there is evidence to indicate that people may be doing or not doing things that might impact their overall health in terms of their lifestyle? What would the minister be proposing to do if that is the case?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, indeed, there are many examples of people who are taking responsibility for their own health in this province – we applaud that – but there are of course many examples where individuals are not.

We are in the business of promoting wellness. We think that this is an underlying theme that must move forward as we try to reform and renew the health care system. We believe in the importance of investing in promotion and prevention. We think that there are frankly many, many areas where people could be doing better. We do have a tobacco reduction strategy. We have a Healthy U campaign that's underway. We've worked in collaboration with other portfolios, such as the hon. Minister of Learning, who has put forward mandatory daily physical education.

Mr. Speaker, regions throughout this province are committed to wellness programs. We are setting targets such as a 10-year target for diabetes, and we are moving in a strategy to help promote better exercise and better eating habits so that we can actually make those targets happen 10 years from now.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Charlebois Consulting Ltd.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to public accounts tabled yesterday, the Department of Health and Wellness awarded almost $120,000 in contracts to Charlebois Consulting, a company 100 per cent owned by the minister of health's former executive assistant Kelley Charlebois. In fact, in the two years since Kelley Charlebois left his position with the minister, the Minister of Health and Wellness has awarded a total of over $250,000 in contracts. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. How does the minister explain giving over a quarter of a million dollars in government contracts to a PR firm owned by his former executive assistant?

Mr. Mar: Let me say first of all that that would include the expenses that were incurred in the conduct of this business, but most of all, Mr. Speaker, we get very, very good value and excellent advice from Mr. Charlebois.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell us what reports Charlebois Consulting has completed for Health and Wellness, and would he table them, please?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, there are no reports as such.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell us whether Charlebois Consulting won these contracts through a competitive process?

Mr. Mar: No, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Alcohol Ban in Provincial Parks

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the past few years about this time of year I've stood in my place and asked questions of the responsible minister regarding an issue of concern to me and to others in my constituency with respect to a rite-of-passage party, so to speak, in the Cypress Hills and the increasing amount of violence and dangerous conditions that seem to be progressing each year. The minister indicated each time I've asked the question that he is intending to take the situation seriously and will be putting into place a number of reforms. Well, this year the minister certainly has taken the situation seriously and, some would argue, has maybe even overreacted to the situation by announcing that there will be a pilot project instituted in a number of parks that involves an outright ban of alcohol in provincial parks. My questions are to the Minister of Community Development. I would like to ask the Community Development minister how it is that he came to choose the three locations for his pilot project that will be running on the long weekend in May?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the hon. member is exactly correct in that preamble with respect to the sudden and very sharp increase we have seen in liquor-related offences in our provincial parks. I want to say that we are prompted by the fact that 240 liquor-related offences occurred on the May long weekend a year or so ago, and over 50 per cent of those were attributable to three provincial campgrounds: Aspen Beach, Miquelon Lake, and Cypress Hills. As a result, we chose to do a pilot in those three provincial parks only to try and ensure that visitors and Albertans alike have a more enjoyable and a safer weekend there. So it's a total temporary liquor ban project on a pilot basis.

Mr. Renner: Can the minister tell us how this ban will be enforced?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we're undertaking an extensive advertising and promotion campaign, if you will, so that potential visitors will be apprised of what is happening with respect to the liquor ban enforcement in those three provincial campground areas. We'll be putting signage on main roads. We'll be putting signage at the entrances, at the campground facilities, and distributing leaflets and brochures and so on to make sure that it's well understood.

Secondly, the enforcement side will be handled by our parks conservation officers and working in tandem with other enforcement agencies so that we will see, potentially, fines, if necessary, up to $100, perhaps court appearances. Some people will be asked to leave for that weekend if they violate the law. In a general sense, we're hoping for compliance from visitors who might be thinking of carrying alcohol into those three provincial parks only to please not do that or it will be confiscated or they'll just be turned away.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. Given that this is a pilot project, can the minister tell us how the results of this pilot will be evaluated, and does he expect that this kind of liquor ban would be extended to other provincial parks and campgrounds as a result?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we'll be doing the usual things that we do with respect to satisfaction surveys of the individuals who visited those sites over that long weekend in those three locations and seeing whether or not the main objective of creating a more enjoyable and a safer May long weekend did occur. Were there fewer problems? Was there less vandalism? Was there less rowdiness? Were there fewer complaints and so on? Those will be some of the benchmarks.

To the second part of the question the answer is: no, not at this time. We're waiting to evaluate the pilot results, and then we'll go from there, but we have no intention of expanding this temporary liquor ban into other parks whatsoever, unless something really dramatic happens and it were to become necessary to look at that possibility.

Thank you.

Twining of Highway 4

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transportation has suggested that the plans for the eastern route of highway 4 through Milk River had many problems, but he fails to recognize a third design that was presented to him to keep the route on the east side. To the Minister of Transportation: given that in the design provided by O'Brien Engineering & Surveys Ltd. created in August of 2000, the survey solves the problems that the minister brought up about the sewage pond and the secondary road crossing, why has the government not considered this design?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned yesterday, this decision was made five years ago. Later today, at a very appropriate time in our schedule, I will be tabling quite detailed responses to the questions raised by the hon. member yesterday that not only will answer this question but others that he may have with respect to this project.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that the reeve of the county brought this new design to you expressing the county's support behind it, will this government consider the redesign?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there are many, many contributors to a final decision made given the new location of the highway. They, of course, do include input from the municipality but also from numerous engineering consultants that might have been hired either by Alberta Transportation or by another party with interest as to the location of the highway. We look at all the information that comes before us, and we make the best decision possible.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: why is this government content with spending so much more money on a western route when a more economically viable and environmentally friendly solution for the eastern route has been found?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is making his own opinion on what is cheaper and what is not cheaper. In five years a lot has happened in that particular area, and I would ask him to wait for the answers that I will table. He can review them, and then he can bring anything else forward that he may like with respect to that project.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Wheat and Barley Marketing

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It appears that Bill 206, introduced in the Legislature by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, may be held over until the fall sitting of the Alberta Legislature. Many Alberta farmers were hopeful that passage of Bill 206 would pressure the Canadian Wheat Board and the federal government to work with the province in setting up a test open market for Alberta over the summer. My question is for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Can the minister tell us what the plans are and what she will be doing in the interim of the summer, between the sessions, on Bill 206?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly, Bill 206 is one approach to the attempt to offer marketing choice to the producers in our province.

We will continue with our Choice Matters campaign. That has been circulated and, I must say, very well received and I think well received because it's factual. I have invited people who take exception to the campaign to identify to me any errors or weaknesses in this document. Difficult for them to do because it is a document submitted from the Ontario Wheat Marketing Board and others, and it's difficult for people to find fault. So we'll continue to do that.

I'm going to continue to negotiate with Minister Speller and Minister Alcock, because I truly believe that when they fully understand what the farmers of this province are asking for, they will be hard-pressed to deny it to them on the basis of fairness and equality and choice. This is a democracy. These people own their product. They did not have the opportunity to vote to come into this board, as other marketing boards have. It is my anticipation that those ministers will see that and, clearly, provide the legislative changes that are necessary.

I am also hopeful that the members of the Canadian Wheat Board will recognize the value of their own corporation and understand that they could operate in a world of choice and of a competitive nature.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the minister's response, am I to take it that the Canadian Wheat Board has not responded to our efforts for marketing choice?

Mrs. McClellan: They have responded in a number of ways. One, they've taken exception to our campaign, called it undemocratic. I actually call the opportunity to market your own product democratic, but that's something, I guess, we disagree on.

Mr. Speaker, we had hoped that they would consider it a proposal. We had hoped that they would look at it in that way and that if there were need for improvement in this test market proposal, they would offer those to us, that if they saw ways that it could be strengthened or improved or how it could work, they would come back to us. In fact, what they have done is opt to give not one ounce of consideration even though 83 per cent of the producers in our province have asked for choice. As I understand it, they continue to tell anyone in our government that they will not consider any proposal that they see as a threat to their existence.

Mr. Horner: A final supplemental, Mr. Speaker. The minister mentioned the Choice Matters campaign in her answers to me. I'm wondering if she has heard from Alberta producers that would indicate to her that support is lessening or growing for our choice campaign.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the indications we have from producers are that they like the information. It's factual; it's straightforward; it's easily understood.

I recently met with the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, of which many producers in this province are members. That organization in fact found that 91 per cent of its members supported choice. So we're not going to give up. It's obviously what the producers in this province want. This government has a responsibility to represent their views, not those of a monopoly.

I will end with this one more time: this is not a threat to the Canadian Wheat Board. This government has never advocated the end of the Wheat Board, and if the Wheat Board is as good as they say they are – and they have told me that on repeated occasions – they are under no threat from offering marketing choice to the producers in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Water Storage

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Environment said that we needed to build more water storage. My questions today are to the Minister of Environment. Can the minister clarify what methods of water storage he is considering?

Thank you.

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was talking and looking out into the future for Alberta. My point was that as we move into the future, we need to have a sustainable supply of water for Alberta: for Albertans in their homes, for Alberta industry, for Alberta agriculture, and for the aquatic habitats. Let me start by saying that we're looking at the future.

The way the Alberta supply comes is in the spring. We get the runoff, and it comes, and we pass on, depending on the river basin, anywhere from 70 to 85 per cent into Saskatchewan. What we need to do and what I very clearly said yesterday is to look at ways we can capture more of that water. We haven't done that yet, but I hope that in the future as a government we will actually look at ways that we can capture more of that water.

Ms Blakeman: The quote was actually, "Conserving water means building storage."

Given that evaporation would make water storage useless in curbing the shortages that are taking place, why is the minister considering this kind of thing?

Dr. Taylor: Well, obviously, Mr. Speaker, the people that write her questions have no idea about water storage.

Let me give you the example of the Oldman dam. It doesn't all evaporate. There's lots of water in the Oldman dam, and it controls the water that flows through Medicine Hat and Lethbridge. I can tell you that in 2001 if it wasn't for the Oldman dam, Medicine Hat probably would not have had water. There was enough storage in the Oldman dam that we could keep the water flowing through the Medicine Hat area. Certainly, there's an evaporation issue, but we can store lots of water, and it's a minimal problem.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that groundwater reservoirs are by far the better way to store water, why is the minister not considering long-term solutions such as moving flood dykes away from flood plains so that wetlands can be restored, thus feeding groundwater sources?

Dr. Taylor: I'd better be a bit careful here, Mr. Speaker. We need to look at all sources of storage – and that's the point I was making – as we move forward. We do not have a plan to store more water, but we need to develop a plan. We need to look into the future, determine the needs of Albertans, and then figure out how we're going to store more of that water that passes on to Saskatchewan to meet the future needs of this growing province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

2:20 International Air Services

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Economic Development bragged in a news release that the government had snagged another direct international flight for the Calgary airport. However, the minister neglected to mention the fact that his government and the Edmonton Tory caucus have said to Edmontonians who are frustrated by the lack of international flights out of Edmonton: hasta la vista, baby. While the government ministers are ferried about in the government's own private Air Farce, severely normal Edmontonians have only 12 international flights per day as compared to 39 for Calgary. My questions are to the Minister of Economic Development. Why is it that an Edmonton-based minister is not making it a priority to increase service from the Edmonton International Airport, instead choosing to follow the long-standing Tory policy of ignoring Edmonton?

Mr. Norris: Oh, where to begin, Mr. Speaker? I just don't know. First of all, I would like to say, with all due respect to the hon. member opposite, that I'm a minister of the Crown in the province of Alberta. I am not a minister for the city of Edmonton in any way, shape, or form. We are very well represented in Edmonton after the last election with the hon. members surrounding me, but the judgments that I make as a Minister of Economic Development are for the province of Alberta.

Clearly, the City Centre Airport, which the hon. member alluded to, is a vital piece of development for not only Edmonton, for which we should be very grateful to northern Alberta, but for all the north, where we book about $50 billion or $60 billion worth of projects right now. Access into Edmonton is clearly one of the big concerns and one of big reasons they choose to come to Edmonton. So on that particular issue I believe that the hon. member should be very clear that our job as a government is to help promote economic development in any region of the province. It doesn't matter if it's Calgary or Edmonton or rural Alberta. It just matters that it makes good economic sense. In this case it does.

I think I'd like to correct the hon. member and say, respectfully, that I was not quoted as saying that we got another flight for Calgary, nor did we. We are very, very pleased that the tour operator out of Britain decided to extend their season. It used to end in October, Mr. Speaker. They've now decided to go year-round. That was the work of – get this – one of our missions that we took where we may have bought some orange juice, but we also secured new flights into Calgary, and this is a direct result of it.

I'll conclude by saying that the bottom line about any new charters, whether they come into Calgary or Edmonton, is beneficial for all of Alberta because then Travel Alberta kicks into gear to spread the word and get to see the whole province of Alberta. So we're very happy. It's a great, positive situation, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Why is it that this minister's priority has been to secure access to Edmonton's municipal airport for the government air fleet while ignoring the needs of regular Edmontonians who need international air service?

Mr. Norris: I almost think that the hon. member is getting his questions from our own members. So I'll say thank you for that question.

I'm not trying to secure anything, nor have I ever tried to secure anything. The Edmonton Regional Airports Authority, which runs both the International Airport in Leduc and the City Centre Airport, has always recommended that scheduled flights to a limited degree will stay. But charter flights were never in question. Private operators, of which the government of Alberta is one, were never in question, nor was medevac ever in question. So I think it would behoove the hon. member to do some research. I was never suggesting to keep that airport open for the Alberta government, Mr. Speaker. I was asking to keep it open for the flights that come from the north with their bags of money and their contracts and their engineering works.

Mr. Mason: I'm not sure the mayor would agree with the minister, Mr. Speaker.

Why did the government promise Edmontonians a seat at the table if they voted Conservative only to prove that 11 Tory MLAs equals zilch when it comes to Edmonton?

The Speaker: That has nothing to do with the first two.

Union Organizing Practices

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. The issue of salting, whereby a union certification vote takes place in part because of the instigation of union members in a nonunion workplace with no long-term attachment to the employer, is of concern to many nonunion Alberta employers. Recently at an Alberta Building Trades Council function I learned from union leaders that, in fairness, a continuing attachment to an employer should be a condition of continuing or of certification. Will the minister consider continuing attachment to an employer to be a precondition of union certification?

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying: go, Flames, go. Everybody is wearing these nice little decals, but we're not hearing it on the floor of the House, so now it's in the record for today.

In terms of the question I think that the suggestion made to him at the trades council function, as I understand it, seems to be very fair and the sort of thing that should be considered in normal practice.

What I want to say to the hon. member is that salting exists today and that it is the responsibility of my department now to deal directly with the salting. We, of course, plan to do that. Now, if that takes care of the other suggestion that has been made – and I believe that it will – then of course we've resolved the issue.

Many of us have been around here a long time. The salting is not a new issue. This has come up before, and I guess the intent this time is to put salting to bed by defining it clearly and making it an unfair labour practice.

Alberta SuperNet

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Innovation and Science. Is Axia using computers owned by the Alberta government to run the SuperNet?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure how to answer that question. I'm presuming that Axia supplies their own equipment and operates the network using their own equipment, which may have been part of the contract to get the network established. But, again, on that specific question, I'd be happy to do more work on that and provide her an answer tomorrow.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Then further to that, if the minister can also find out what department oversight is in place for Axia to ensure that billing and usage of government-owned equipment is coming forth according to the contract that has been signed.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, Axia SuperNet Ltd. does operate under a licence agreement from the government of Alberta and manages a network, and it does come under the purview of Innovation and Science.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that companies do go under, what business continuity plans are in place if Axia cannot or will not fulfill the terms of their contract?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, that question is pure speculation. We have built-in provisions in the contract that contemplate any action with respect to – for instance, on the infrastructure build that we have with Bell West, to ensure that that infrastructure build gets completed, we have a $100 million bond to ensure that completion. Similar kinds of instruments have been provided throughout the entire contract, whether it be on the access management or whether it be on the infrastructure build.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Tourism Opportunities

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've been approached by a number of groups as we are celebrating our hundredth anniversary. We are hosting the Churchill Cup in Edmonton and the Canadian championships in Edmonton, and I believe we are also hosting the world triathlon championships in the province this summer. My questions are to the Minister of Economic Development, responsible for tourism. What efforts is his department making to promote these very important and special events?

Mr. Norris: Well, I'd like to thank the hon. member for the question, and I'll maybe ask the hon. Minister of Community Development to supplement. What the department does, Mr. Speaker, quite simply is try to identify opportunities throughout the province in the summer and the winter for people to come and visit the province and expand their tourism opportunities.

To that end, we have worked very diligently with a number of the opportunities, most specifically the Churchill Cup, Mr. Speaker, which is a world rugby sanctioned function coming up in Calgary and Edmonton, and I would encourage all members to get more information. It'll be great for their communities. The world triathlon is indeed happening in Edmonton in July, and the World Masters Games are coming.

What we do in conjunction with Travel Alberta is work with those groups to partner and promote those events throughout the province, and you'll find them on the centennial web site. You'll also find them on the Travel Alberta web site. They're great opportunities when people choose to visit Alberta for other activities.

Recognitions

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I'll call upon the first of several members to participate.

Calgary Flames Team Canada Calgary Roughnecks

Mr. Lord: Mr. Speaker, how about those Flames? And how about Team Canada while we're at it?

Mr. Speaker, the temperature is rising, and our entire country is going hockey nuts right now as that red-hot Flames fever spreads right across the nation. It's no longer just the Calgary Flames any more, no longer the Alberta Flames; it's the Canadian Flames. And with last night's decisive butt-kicking of the San Jose Sharks, we're all holding our breath now just waiting for that Stanley Cup victory, which we all know is so very close now.

Mr. Speaker, it is amazing to see the incredible competition in hockey games we've seen over the past few weeks. It's not just the Flames that have been doing the butt-kicking either. We have the gold medal performance by Team Canada at the World Hockey Championships in Prague as well, the second victory in just two years.

And, hey, how about those Calgary Roughnecks while we're at it? With their North American NLL championship last Friday at the Saddledome in our official national game of lacrosse clearly Calgarians, Albertans, and Canadians are definitely back at the top of the world, on top of our games again, both official and unofficial, and may I say "finally."

So where is Stompin' Tom Connors? We need him to rework his song from "the good old hockey game" to "the great new hockey games."

Go, Flames, go.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Tim Cooper

Mr. Horner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I take great pleasure in rising today to recognize the extraordinary efforts and achievements of a young man from my constituency. Tim Cooper is a 17-year-old double-A hockey player who attends St. Albert high school.

Not only does Tim participate in athletics; he also excels in his academic endeavours, as well. Tim is one of only seven students to be awarded the prestigious University of Alberta president's citation. To be considered for this scholarship, a student must have attained an average above 95 per cent for all three grades of high school. This young man has met this mark and exceeded it, maintaining an average of no less than 98 per cent throughout high school. He has also been awarded the Alexander Rutherford scholarships for grades 10, 11, and 12. In addition to this, Tim has been appointed as the valedictorian of his graduating class.

He plans to study the sciences at the U of A, and I am certain, Mr. Speaker, that we will be hearing more about this gifted student in the future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Warner Hockey School

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and recognize an innovative and forward-thinking initiative which was established in my constituency: the Warner girls hockey school. This institute offers a year-round hockey program which is aimed at attracting young women from all over Canada, Alberta, and abroad.

Mr. Speaker, school enrolments were beginning to decline in Warner to a low level which threatened the existence of the school. To ensure its survival, the town of Warner developed a unique plan to revitalize both the community and the school and established the Warner hockey school.

This endeavour was truly a collective accomplishment by the people of Warner. It took the community over 10,000 hours of volunteer time and over $340,000 in funds raised. However, the school and the collaborative efforts have proven successful. This initiative is a testament to what can happen when a community works together for a common goal. But more than that, this project illustrates the perseverance, drive, and forward thinking of Albertans which has proven to make our province so successful.

I ask all members of the Assembly to join with me in commending the Warner hockey school and the town of Warner for their innovation and visionary approach to establishing a now thriving hockey program in order to save their school and an important part of their community.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Sandra Woitas

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure for me to rise and recognize a truly great Albertan. Ms Sandra Woitas is a lady who has spent a great deal of her life bettering the lives of our children. With a master's degree in education policy from the University of Alberta, she has spent her career as an educator.

Sandra has been a teacher at some of Edmonton's poorest schools and is a former principal at Edmonton's Norwood school, where presently my son, Brett, attends. She also spent six years at the central office of the Edmonton public school board as a consultant. She possesses a deep knowledge of Edmonton's social and economic challenges and a commitment to the downtown. She has also built a strong working relationship with the city's business community and with all levels of government in her efforts to better the lives of inner-city children.

In 2001 Sandra faced the challenge of leading the city centre education project, which led to the consolidation of Delton, Eastwood, John A. McDougall, McCauley, Norwood, Parkdale, and Spruce Avenue schools into one education community that resulted in an enriched, first-class education for almost 2,000 disadvantaged children, an extraordinary challenge that Sandra made happen with dedication and a special talent.

Sandra has established Partners for Kids, is the past president of Big Brothers Big Sisters, is an honorary member of the Riverview Rotary Club, and she also is a member of the Edmonton Police Commission. It's easy to see why Sandra is well known across Alberta as a speaker on a variety of educational topics.

And just last week, Mr. Speaker, Ms Sandra Woitas was included in the Edmonton Journal's top 100 Edmontonians of the century, truly a special honour for this special Albertan.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Asian Heritage Month

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the reasons Alberta continues to be such a great place to live, work, and raise a family is Albertans' respect for cultural diversity established so many years ago. Each of us is part of our diverse, vibrant, and enthusiastic landscape of communities that share a strong commitment to the quality of life we all enjoy.

May is the month to recognize and celebrate the many ways in which Canadians of Asian heritage contribute to the cultural richness and prosperity of the province of Alberta. As Albertans celebrate the heritage of Asian culture, the old will remember, the young will discover the importance of Asian-Canadian contributions to Alberta and Canada.

I wish to thank each and every member of the organizing committee for the Asian Heritage Month's events in Calgary. Myself, the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, and the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Creek had the honour to be on the advisory board.

Through co-operation and community spirit we can all do it together.

Best wishes for the month of celebration.

Chilean Community

Mr. MacDonald: It is my pleasure to rise today to recognize Chilean Canadians who overcame hardship and oppression to come to Canada and build a better life for themselves and their families. Many members of Alberta's Chilean community proved their commitment to democracy Monday by exercising their right to peaceful protest outside this Legislature.

Fortunately, all Canadians have the right to express opposition to the government without the danger of reprisal. Many Chileans came to Alberta to escape torture, oppression, and even death for having political views contrary to those of a brutal dictator. Sadly, many Albertans don't recognize how fortunate we are to live in a country where our rights are respected and protected.

The Chilean Canadians who responded to the inflammatory remarks with a protest reminded many Canadians how lucky we are to have never experienced such atrocities. I'm proud of the protesters for speaking out, and I'm proud that they now call Alberta, Canada, home.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

2:40

Martha and Henry

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to recognize two Albertans whose feelings of betrayal by a series of promises broken by this government are making them seriously reconsider their political allegiance. Martha and Henry were told in 2001 that deregulating our electricity industry would give them demonstrably lower bills. Instead they got rate riders and bills that were as much as double what they were paying under a regulated system.

Then they were promised compensation for the BSE crisis. Instead, they saw their hard-earned tax dollars being funnelled into the pockets of American packing houses.

Martha and Henry were promised smaller class sizes, but their children remain packed into overcrowded schoolrooms. Martha and Henry were promised lower auto insurance, yet their rates remain 35 per cent higher than what their cousins in Saskatchewan and British Columbia are paying.

Martha and Henry can be forgiven if they are wondering what went wrong. Mr. Speaker, it's time the Premier and the government stop taking Martha and Henry for granted.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Stelmach: I have two tablings, and they are in response to questions raised yesterday by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have several tablings today. It's a great pleasure for me to table letters from 18 students from my constituency. Under the guidance of their teacher, Mr. Fekete, these students from Rundle school are becoming active citizens and taking part in the democratic process. Their goal is to have mandatory seat belts installed on school buses. It's my privilege to table letters these students have written asking for mandatory seat belts so that their views may become part of the public record.

I have a couple of other tablings. The first includes two petitions signed by 90 Canadians of Chilean ancestry asking the Premier to apologize to the Chilean community for his remarks on the Pinochet military dictatorship.

The second is a letter from Adolfo Silva of Milton, Ontario, dated May 11, 2004, addressed to the Premier regarding his recent remarks on the Pinochet military dictatorship. He's deeply concerned with the Premier's philosophical thinking and its serious ramifications threatening the civil and democratic rights of the people.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is a notice of power bills increasing up to 20 per cent from May 11, 2004, in the Daily Express in England as there's work needed to improve their national electricity grid.

The second tabling I have is a notice for a public forum that's to occur Wednesday, May 19, 2004, at Kilkenny Hall. The special guest will be Ken Gosling, a member of B.C.'s Citizens' Assembly on Electoral Reform.

Thank you.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Mar, Minister of Health and Wellness, pursuant to the Nursing Profession Act, Alberta Association of Registered Nurses annual report 2002-2003 and the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses financial statements for the year ended September 30, 2003; on behalf of the hon. member Mr. Griffiths, hon. Member for Wainwright, e-mail petition signed by 204 Albertans opposing the exclusion of financial support for infertility treatments under the Canada Health Act.

The Speaker: On a point of clarification the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. Make it brief because I'm going to make a comment on this.

Point of Order
Clarification of Acting Speaker's Ruling

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to get clarification of a ruling made yesterday by the Acting Speaker during debate on second reading of the Appropriation Act. When I rose to ask a question under the clause allowing the five-minute period, 29(2), I was denied the right to do so despite the fact that you provided an opportunity to other members to pose questions to me after I'd completed my remarks on the amendment. This was the reasoned amendment to the Appropriation Act. So I would like clarification on the rules of that for all members.

The Speaker: Yes. I'd be happy to provide that.

A great deal of energy and activity was spent by the table officers yesterday looking at the historical basis for reasoned amendments and the like, and I think that many of them perhaps had their minds fixed on that rather than what then did happen in the House.

It's absolutely correct that during the debate that occurred yesterday afternoon on the amendment when I was in the chair, I invited members to participate in the five-minute exchange period that's provided for under Standing Order 29(2), and that was done by me. Then later in the afternoon, when I was not in the chair, a similar situation came up, and it's my understanding that the Deputy Chair of Committees basically did not afford that opportunity to the hon. members. The Deputy Chair of Committees has discussed this matter with me, and it should be very, very clear to all members that that provision is available even during debate on amendments in second reading. So it should have been made available yesterday.

That's just a clarification, I think, that is important, and it's clear in all intents that there's absolutely nothing in Standing Order 29 that would suggest that that would not be available.

Speaker's Ruling
Member's Apology

The Speaker: Now, hon. members, the other day I did something in the House when we had a question of a point of order and notice had already been provided to the House and to the chair that the hon. Minister of Finance wanted to rise on either a point of order or a point of privilege. What I did the other day was that when a particular member did it, I looked at the individual I knew that it was going to come to and I afforded that person an opportunity to, quote, do the right thing. That may be a bit abnormal.

I received some notification that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar would rise now and offer some . . . [interjection] Just a second. In the parliamentary tradition, depending on what will transpire here, there's a way of us dealing with these matters in the tradition of our thing. I don't know what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is going to say. It would not mean that the Minister of Finance would not have an opportunity to say something, but I'm going to provide the hon. member . . . I did it the other day, and in fairness I'm going to do it again today for the decorum in the House. I'm going to afford this opportunity to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I don't know what the hon. member is going to say. It doesn't mean that – the hon. Minister of Finance will still have a chance.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to withdraw my remarks from earlier today in question period and apologize to the Minister of Finance.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there is a tradition we have that once an apology is provided and if the feeling is that it's a sincere apology, it would be accepted. It doesn't have to be, so we can continue this.

So I now offer the floor to the hon. Minister of Finance.

Point of Order
Inflammatory Language

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, while an attempt to get out of this has been made, I find, quite frankly, that when the chairman of a select committee of this Legislature stands up and makes a comment to a minister of the Crown who has appeared before that committee in public, in Hansard, and indicates that I have said one thing or another at a meeting that only took place this morning and reports that wrongly in this Legislature, the damage is irreparable. I find it unconscionable that a chairman would in fact do that in this Legislature.

I would refer to our Standing Orders 15, 22, and 23. There is an honour, when you talk about honour, Mr. Speaker, in that when you are made the chairman of a select committee of this Legislature, you are given the responsibility and the privilege to head up that committee, not only to report the actions and findings of that committee within this Assembly but an obligation to report them accurately and honestly not only to this Assembly but to the people of Alberta.

Now, as the cameras were rolling and the accusation was made in the preamble to that question, I was most insulted. I have not received the Blues from question period today. I have looked at the Blues from this morning from the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. I believe that there were some serious accusations made against me or attributed to comments from my deliberations this morning in that committee, and I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that I have the option to come down with a case of privilege on this member tomorrow after I have the chance to review those Blues from question period today because I feel that my integrity, my honesty, and my openness have been put in question.

I'll tell you one thing further, Mr. Speaker. At 5 minutes to 1 today, before coming to question period, I realized that I had given an incorrect answer to a question at Public Accounts this morning. I phoned this chairman and said that I want to set the record straight, that my controller had indicated that the blue book that I had filed with the Clerk yesterday was for records of $25,000 and above; I had said $5,000, and he corrected me. It really was $5,000, and I didn't want him to have that incorrect information even before we came into the House. So I was being open and up front with him, and then he came around with this other game. I find that dishonest, and I pride myself that if I make a mistake, I'll stand up and say that I've made a mistake. But that kind of representation I find unconscionable.

So I'd ask your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, to allow me the latitude to come back after I review the Blues of both question period and Public Accounts to have a prima facie case of privilege.

The Speaker: Such a request is in order.

head: Orders of the Day
 head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading
Bill 31
Highways Development and Protection Act

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm prepared to move Bill 31 in third reading.

Just momentarily I kind of had my head buried in the Hansard looking at some of the questions that were raised by members of the opposition, and I'd like to reiterate a number of items. One, the bill allows for taking over the jurisdiction of the 15,000 kilometres of secondary highway, which we did a number of years ago, and including that in the provincial highway network system. They will no longer be called secondary highways. They will just be provincial highways, and they will be planned, designed, and co-ordinated in the same way as any other highways in the province of Alberta.

Now, while taking over the jurisdiction of secondaries and while they were in the jurisdiction of municipalities, Mr. Speaker, a municipality had the right to close the road for some community event, like a parade, but when we assumed full jurisdiction of the secondaries, of course, legally we couldn't really do that. So this bill gives us permission to close a road temporarily for other than an emergency event, and as you know, parades are quite important in rural Alberta, and of course there are certain standards and rules we must follow in closing the road briefly for a parade.

With respect to access roads, many years ago the province of Alberta did pave a number of access roads into smaller communities, which gave these small communities paved access from the municipality to the main highway. We have indicated that we will maintain those access roads, but in some cases we have to be careful with the kind of development that occurs and also be very cognizant of the kind of maintenance that occurs on those access roads, again.

There were a number of questions with respect to the ring roads in Edmonton and Calgary. The province always had jurisdiction over those particular roads. In fact, the land was acquired back during the previous administration, under Premier Lougheed. That was a very visionary move on their part, and now we're following up by finally building the roads in those particular areas.

I believe we've covered pretty well everything other than that there was a question raised with respect to removal of some developments along a highway that may lead to the distraction of the driver. This was raised by the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry. What this does is allows us to serve notice to those individuals that might have parked, for instance, a truck with a sign on it in the highway right-of-way or perhaps parked it in an intersection, where it's not only distracting the driver but also impedes the vision for the drivers. We have consulted, of course, with all municipalities, AUMA, AAMD and C, the Urban Development Institute, engineering firms, all groups that may have interest in roads and public roadways in the province.

I believe I've answered most of the questions. The bill does consolidate the two acts, and it will clarify a lot of the differences, let's say, between the Municipal Government Act and the old Public Highways Development Act and City Transportation Act.

I look forward to this bill being approved in the Legislature.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. I appreciate the answers that were furnished to my questions yesterday through the Minister of Children's Services. She later checked with the Minister of Transportation and brought me additional information, and I appreciate that.

It appears that the government has done due diligence here. They're completing a number of things that they had set out previously. They did a good job of briefing my colleague, the transportation critic, and they appear also to have done a good stakeholder feedback loop.

So at this point I'm happy to support third reading of Bill 31, the Highways Development and Protection Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a third time]

Bill 33
Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2004

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to move Bill 33, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, for third reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 33 read a third time]

Bill 34
Income Trusts Liability Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Revenue on behalf of.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Calgary-Mountain View I'd like to move third reading of Bill 34, Income Trusts Liability Act.

This act, as was probably mentioned in previous stages, is to clarify that those unit holders of income trusts are actually protected by limited liability. Their structures are actually established that way, but it's to help ensure that there's no doubt in debate of law as to that point. It's not to attempt to address other aspects of income trust taxation or anything else. It's just to help clarify the liability.

There will be some further consultation to continue this summer with respect to other income trust governance kinds of questions that might relate to the securities legislation, and we'll be following that up after consultation and be happy to report back to this House later, but I'd like to move third reading of Bill 34.

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to comment in third reading of Bill 34, the Income Trusts Liability Act. I know that a number of my colleagues have spoken in other readings of this. In particular I think we were looking for answers to the questions that had been brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry. I'm also noting in Hansard that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar put a number of questions on the record. I hear the minister speaking on behalf of the sponsoring member, saying that there will be additional consultation, but I was hoping for the record to get some of those questions answered.

This is an interesting one. I've read what the government has put out; I've read a number of the articles that are dealing with it. Everybody seems cheerful and happy.

Mr. Mason: But not Laurie?

Ms Blakeman: Not me. No. I have concerns here about what the government is doing around management of revenue. Considering how lucky we've been to be located on enormous gas and oil reserves, my feeling on this is that we should have a lot more money than we do, so I continue to question some of the financial decisions that the government makes around tax policy for instance.

A number of times I've questioned the Minister of Revenue on forgone revenue. What are the performance measurements for a number of these schemes where we're giving people tax credits or whatever and we're not bringing in money that we expected to be bringing in?

What's bothering me about this is that it's about a reduction in the corporate income tax that's paid. Now, it's good for attracting investment dollars. There's been some discussion and argument about whether the money stays in Alberta or leaves Alberta. I'm more concerned about a reduction in the corporate tax level just given that we have a cyclical economy that is through moves like this one increasingly reliant on a high dollar-per-barrel amount of money, and if that tanks, we're at a point where we've now reduced and continue to look at schemes that reduce corporate income tax, for example, to a level that's not sustainable. If that dollar per barrel goes down to I don't know what – any level that it's gone down to in the past: $13 a barrel, $10 a barrel, $8 a barrel – we're sitting here with not very much that's flowing in through other income tax schemes that the government has in place.

Of course, you know, if you're going to have that kind of downturn in the economy – and we do here in Alberta; it's no use pretending we don't – companies go under, so there are even fewer that are paying this kind of income tax. So I always question these schemes, and I want to see the documentation that shows that in the long run this is a great idea and, frankly, that it's sustainable. Increasingly I'm questioning the government on the choices they make about managing our wealth.

So this one just doesn't sit as well with me as it does with some of my colleagues. That's why I enjoy being with the colleagues I'm with, because we can agree to disagree on things like this. I note that my other colleagues have been more supportive of it. I also note that we did put questions on the record to which we were expecting answers before we were going to be in a position of having to vote for or against the bill. It is my understanding that those answers have not been put on the record, and I've put my brief concerns on the record as well. I remain unconvinced that this is the great idea that everyone else seems to think it is.

Thank you for the opportunity.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to make a few brief remarks with respect to this bill. As Minister of Justice I meet from time to time with members of the legal community, mainly in Edmonton and Calgary. If I'm in Calgary, I'll arrange to go to a law firm and sit down with lawyers and talk to them about what they find to be impediments to growth or impediments to success in the province in terms of building our economic base and those sorts of things. In almost every one of those meetings I can tell you that one of the things that I've been advised of is the need for upgrading some of our business law in this province.

They've mentioned unlimited liability companies, they've mentioned limited liability partnerships, but most of all they've mentioned income trusts and the need for us to be as current as other jurisdictions and ahead of other jurisdictions with respect to income trusts, the question of limited liability for income trusts where most people believe it actually exists, but there's not a degree of certainty necessary for investors to be comfortable. That has been an issue that's been raised with me over and over again.

So I rise today in the House to say that I'm really pleased that this bill was brought forward in the spring session, that the Minister of Revenue and the Member for Calgary-Mountain View brought this bill to the floor of the House because it satisfies one of those areas that over and over again people who have worked with businesses in this province and who have worked on making sure that business works have made comments on.

Now, I also wanted to rise because the Member for Edmonton-Centre indicated, I think for the first time that I've heard her in the House, an acknowledgment that revenues are cyclical and that sometimes prices go up and sometimes prices go down and that we have in the past seen oil prices around $10 a barrel. In fact, she even said $8 a barrel. I think that's an important comment to note and that there is understanding on that side of the House of sustainability and the prudent course of action that this government has taken with respect to revenues and expenditures to maintain sustainability and to ensure that we don't build program spending to a level that we can't afford.

That's the first I've seen of any understanding of that concept. I may be overblowing the point. Maybe it's not understood as well as I heard it expressed, but for the record I just wanted to congratulate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre for acknowledging the severe volatility of oil and gas revenues and natural resource revenues that we have in this province that we have to address from time to time and to ensure for Albertans that we have a prudent expenditure pattern and that we don't overextend ourselves on program spending. I wanted to thank her for acknowledging that on the record.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Is this what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands is participating under?

Mr. Mason: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Mason: I'd like to ask the hon. Attorney General and Government House Leader whether or not, given his concern for the cyclical nature of resource revenue in the province, he thinks that it's prudent for the government to be cutting corporate income tax in half.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure how that pertains to the bill that we're debating, but I'd be happy to answer the question. I think it's the aggressive approach that this government has taken to making Alberta a good place to do business that has provided economic opportunity and good income levels for most Albertans, and we're working on that for all Albertans. One of the ways to do that is to make sure that this is a great place to do business.

One of the ways to make sure that it's a great place to do business is to ensure that taxation levels are fair and reasonable, and I think the policies that have been undertaken with respect to reducing taxes and corporate taxes can demonstrably be shown to have improved the economic climate of the province and therefore improved the economic status of Alberta citizens. We know that when your economic status is good, there's a high correlation to your health care and to all those other things that make quality of life important.

The Speaker: Other questions, comments? Next speaker?

An Hon. Member: Question.

The Speaker: Question having been called, does the hon. Minister of Revenue want to conclude the debate?

3:10

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to clarify two points actually, one with respect to investors. This is about investor protection more than it is even just about the income trust organizations and entities. Investors are purchasing these represented, and certainly by structure, that they have limited liability protection.

There is a structure in existence with these income trusts where they lend the money to corporate entities who buy the assets, and therefore limited liability is held inside that corporate entity. But because it's not clear potentially in a debate of law, this is just to express the state and clarify what is actually the structure of income trusts. It's not a creation of a new structure. It's not even a creation of a new entity. Income trusts exist. It's not a creation of a new vehicle. They exist. It's to help clarify our business laws and reflect what is actually represented and purchased by the investors so that they know with more certainty what it is that they're buying and are not subject to potentially even a minute fraction of risk that they are liable because the structure doesn't have the risk flowing back to them on limited liability.

Consultation: that is the key question, and that's why we're seeking the passage of the bill at this time. There are broader questions with respect to governance with the Securities Act that we are reviewing, not just with income trusts but more broadly. Those are the ones that are not specifically related that we will be consulting on over the summer months.

As such, we'd like to close debate for third reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 34 read a third time]

Bill 35

Companies Amendment Act, 2004

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General on behalf of.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Glenora I'd like to move Bill 35, the Companies Amendment Act, 2004, for third reading.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very simple and straightforward act. It amends the Companies Act with respect to allowing the Lieutenant Governor in Council discretion to exempt a company that's incorporated under that act from the residency requirements for directors.

Now, I think the purpose of the act had been explained to the House earlier. There is a company which is resident in Edmonton which is a not-for-profit corporation, which of course are the only companies which are now alive under the Companies Act. Members will know that the Business Corporations Act was passed subsequent to the Companies Act, so all for-profit companies, all other companies are incorporated or continued under the Business Corporations Act. So the only companies that are under the Companies Act are part 9 companies, or not-for-profit companies. We have about 2,000 not-for-profit companies registered under part 9 in Alberta.

We have the situation where we have a part 9 company – CIRG has been referred to in the House earlier – which has come out of the research and the work at the Alberta Cancer Board and which engages primarily in breast cancer research, as I understand it, but has experts from all over the world who are a part of this company which is headquartered in Edmonton and registered in Alberta under part 9 of our Companies Act. But they have international expertise, international directors and offices, as I understand it, in California and Paris, France.

Our Companies Act requires that 50 per cent of the directors of a company be resident Albertans. I believe that the Business Corporations Act has been changed to have 50 per cent Canadians, but the old Companies Act, because it still just applies to part 9 companies, probably wasn't amended, so the residency requirement is 50 per cent Albertans.

If this particular company was to be made to adhere to those rules, they would have two choices. They could either ask their international directors, the pre-eminent research scientists from around the world, to leave their board and lose that talent on their board, or they could take the company out of Alberta and reregister it in some other jurisdiction, presumably California or Paris. Neither of those are good options.

This is a very good case for Edmonton and Alberta to maintain a company that makes a great contribution, to bring that talent into this centre and keep it in this centre to do good things for Edmonton and for Alberta, and the residency requirement does not make a significant difference if it makes any difference at all with respect to this company. So it is certainly a good situation to provide an exemption from the residency requirements.

Now, we brought that forward as a miscellaneous statute proposal because it makes such pre-eminent sense. The opposition quite rightly identified that there's a broader policy question at play, because the way you bring that forward in the Companies Act, which is an act of general application, is to allow an exemption which not just in theory but in actuality could allow the minister responsible to bring forward to the Lieutenant Governor in Council a proposal for an exemption for another company.

But there is no other company for which that type of proposal is being made, and the assurances have been given that this was intended. It was being brought forward for this particular circumstance, which is not to say that there couldn't be another circumstance where it might be appropriate. It was also indicated that broader public policy discussion with respect to the residency requirement for directors was being undertaken by the Department of Government Services as they undertook to review the Business Corporations Act in its entirety and, presumably at the same time, the Companies Act.

I was a little discouraged. I wasn't discouraged by the opposition not agreeing to it going to miscellaneous statutes, because you could always have a debate. I was discouraged by the suggestion that there was somehow a disingenuous motive or intention, and I was discouraged by the failure of the opposition and the third party to leap forward to help a company that's doing such good work, to allow it to continue to stay with Edmonton as its head office. I was particularly discouraged by the comments that were made on the record in debate in Committee of the Whole, particularly where we're talking about: this could have been done as a private member's bill.

Mr. Speaker, if you can call this a violation of the process, it would have been a much worse violation of the process to ask a standing committee of this House, the Private Bills Committee, to waive all of the requirements for a private bill in terms of the advertising requirements, in terms of the petition requirements and all the time frame requirements, ask them to give cursory consent to a hearing, which the Private Bills Committee usually has, and to prejudge what that standing committee of the House would determine in terms of such a hearing. The time frames in terms of having the bill brought to the House, referred to the committee, reported back to the House: to waive all of those process steps would have been a much larger breach of any process than bringing forward this simple amendment, which will allow on appropriate review the Lieutenant Governor in Council to grant an exemption.

So this is by far the better methodology than abrogating that private bills process. Abrogating that private bills process in that way, Mr. Speaker, would have then set a precedent for anyone else who missed the time frames and who had a matter of an urgent nature to again request that process to be abrogated, and we would have, I would suggest, faced far more possibilities of requests on an urgent basis for changes to be made in that manner than we're going to have from the concern that's been raised about opening the floodgates to one of the 2,000 part 9 companies in this province coming forward and asking for a director's exemption. Clearly, in granting any form of an exemption to any other applicant, it'll have to be reviewed, and there will have to be a conscious and rational reason for an exemption to be granted.

Let me also state, Mr. Speaker, that this is not a unique circumstance. We do this all the time with respect to the foreign ownership of land regulation. I believe it's in the Land Titles Act or the Law of Property Act, where there are foreign ownership of land regulations and requirements with respect to citizenship or residency relative to the ownership of land. There is a provision that you can go to the Lieutenant Governor in Council for an exemption from those regulations in appropriate circumstances. Two or three times a year, maybe more often, those types of exemptions are granted.

Now, that's not the type of thing that needs the scrutiny of the Legislature. Usually it involves a specific incident, a specific circumstance where the criteria are brought forward in terms of the applicant for the exemption, and they have to show that the exemption is required for a valid reason. That's presumably the same process that would be in place with respect to this limited area of part 9 companies under the Companies Act. It's not a floodgate. There are only 2,000 of those companies. There's no guarantee that any other company would be granted an exemption.

I do grant that in passing this particular bill, it opens the door for someone else to ask for the exemption, and presumably in similar circumstances that request should be examined. This is not a disingenuous way of opening the door or floodgate for any other purpose. The sole purpose for bringing this bill forward, as I indicated to both opposition parties in the past when we raised this issue, was to deal with this circumstance, which is of an urgent nature and needed to be dealt with immediately or we risked losing a very important not-for-profit research company from this city of Edmonton.

For people who seem to believe that they're the only people who ever speak for this city, I can tell you that they're not. In fact, this hon. member and members in this government other than members in the capital region caucus were very keen to move quickly to ensure that we retained this jewel.

So I'd ask all members to vote for this bill in third reading.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I've been prompted to enter the discussion again. I was just going to let this go to a vote, but the remarks of the minister encouraged me to get to my feet again. I think that we have to be very careful here, because there's an interesting little exchange going on. I have to be very clear, and I also have to look to the minister to be able to put the fullness of the discussion before the Assembly.

I was very clear, when I spoke on this bill yesterday, on the support that was coming from the Official Opposition, and I included the third party opposition as well because their support was equal in our eagerness to assist the organization that was listed, the cancer research group. We were very concerned. We were very supportive of this organization. We did our due diligence. We contacted them. We spoke to the university. Phone calls flew back and forth between myself and the minister's office as we tried to make suggestions on how to accomplish what this group was seeking.

My concern about this debate is that it is removing yet another legislative opening, legislative process, legislative opportunity from this Assembly, never to come on this floor again. So one more opportunity to have this debated in the open, in public, covered by Hansard with members of the public able to come and listen to it has been removed from this House, and I see that happening too many times, Mr. Speaker.

My conversations back and forth with the minister and with his staff were about: "Yes, we want to help this company stay here. We want those jobs to stay here. We're proud of what they bring to our city. We would like to assist them."

What was being proposed in miscellaneous statutes is now exactly repeated in what we see before us in Bill 35. It is not being done for this one company. This is not a window to help one company. This is a door through which all others may forever march if they so choose. My point is that they don't march through this Assembly any more, Mr. Speaker. They march through the cabinet and behind closed doors, and all we ever hear about it is if people are monitoring the Gazette and see the order in council spit out on the other side. That's my concern with what was going on here, and it's why I insisted that it get removed from miscellaneous statutes, as is the opportunity that is afforded to the opposition with miscellaneous statutes.

So, you know, I'm interested in the selected excerpts that the minister was sharing with us during his debates, in which he put my concerns about the process on the record but neglected to share the rest of my 15- or 20-minute debate from yesterday on how important it was to assist this company.

My concerns with what was originally proposed are still here, as you can see, Mr. Speaker. Why do I think it's important that we hang onto those residency requirements? People are saying, "Oh, come on. It's a global marketplace. We're all going to be global now, and we shouldn't be restricting directors to being 50 per cent Albertans. You're not getting with the swing of the new economy here, Laurie." And I say: well, yeah, I understand that. But I still say that we are talking about a situation where these part 9 nonprofit companies are eligible for grants from the Alberta government, and those grants come through taxpayers' money. Some of them have charitable status, and that has repercussions under the tax act, and that is in effect forgone revenue for the people of Alberta.

Do I have concerns when I'm watching money from the people of Alberta potentially flow through to a group and leave Alberta? Yeah, I do, and I'm not ashamed of that. I'm not ashamed of saying that I want to see that under scrutiny on the floor of the Assembly when that's going to happen. That won't happen with the passage of this bill now. Any of those 2,000 part 9 nonprofit companies can now approach the government, and it can go through the Lieutenant Governor in Council, which is cabinet – they're in cabinet meetings – and they can get their residency requirements waived. If they pop, and nobody knows unless they happen to be an avid reader of the Gazette, which I don't think many people are.

That is what my concern is all about, that ultimately there's another process moving behind closed doors. I think there's the potential here for Alberta taxpayers' money, which I think should be for the most part for the benefit of Albertans, to now be going elsewhere, that they may not realize that that's where it is, and they don't have any say in how that happens.

So those were my concerns around this. In refusing it to go through miscellaneous statutes, we do have the opportunity to put these remarks on the record. The Minister of Justice has done so, I have done so, and we will now have a vote on third reading of this act.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Before I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 15 students from the Innisfree Delnorte school. They are accompanied today by two supervisors, Deanna Ford and Joyce Baker. Innisfree may not be the biggest school in Alberta, and it certainly, as I pointed out to the Minister of Infrastructure, is not the newest. However, it has continually produced some of the best students in Alberta, and from its small numbers they have achieved incredible success. I was honoured to have them in our office and try and answer some of their questions that the Minister of Transportation may have been more suitable to answer. It would be an honour, I think, for the Assembly to recognize these people. I'd ask the students and supervisors to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 35
Companies Amendment Act, 2004

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm also pleased to rise to speak to third reading of Bill 35. I, also, wish to express my disagreement with the comments of the hon. Attorney General and Government House Leader with respect to the rationale of this bill. Certainly, I think the minister was persuaded that the provisions contained in this bill ought to have been removed from the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act because they represent a broad policy rather than just a routine administrative change. The question is whether or not the bill ought to provide the opportunity for all companies to be exempted from this provision.

I also would like to indicate that I would have been prepared to support a specific provision in the case of this company. What the government has chosen to do is take this authority to make an exemption from the nonprofit corporations requirement that at least 50 per cent of the members of the board of every company shall be resident Albertans and give the cabinet the authority to exempt any company that they choose.

The question for us, then, is: do we trust this government with this particular power that this bill is going to give to them? You know, certainly for the part of the New Democrat opposition, we do not.

Mr. Speaker, this is a continentalist government, and they have been doing whatever they can to erase the border between Canada and the United States. I hear thumping opposite, so obviously some members at least of this government are admitting through their thumping that they agree with this. Otherwise, they would not be applauding the statement that I made, which in any other Assembly would have provoked howls of outrage. Here they just applaud. So we see the government through its actions on the Canadian Wheat Board, through its actions in dealing with BSE working for ever-greater harmonization with the United States.

We had the spectacle of the Premier and the government at the outset of the Gulf War eager to support the United States' invasion of Iraq. Again there's applause around the Chamber, Mr. Speaker. Thank God we don't have Canadian young men and women in that quagmire over there. If it had been up to this government, we would have had dozens of Canadian young people killed by now in a useless war fighting for control of the world's oil supplies. Systematically the government chooses every opportunity it can to attack the federal government of Canada and to support the American government of George W. Bush.

Now, the question is: given that political reality are we going to trust this government to eliminate the residency requirements for nonprofit corporations operating in Alberta? I say no, Mr. Speaker. I don't trust this government on this matter, and I think that they'll use the opportunity to approve at every stage the elimination of the residency requirements. In my view this is equivalent to just taking out the residency requirement altogether, because anybody that asks for it is going to get it. I think the record speaks for itself.

I happen to believe that it's very important that we retain residency requirements for boards of directors operating in this province and in this country. We ought to stand up and defend our sovereignty in this respect. So the New Democrat opposition will not be supporting this particular provision. The government could have made an exceptional bill that would have dealt with the specific case, and they ought to have done so. We will not support this. We want to make absolutely clear that we are not saying that we don't support the change for the particular company in the circumstances that have been provided. It can be supported in this particular case, but it ought to be the Legislature as a whole that makes that decision and not this government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View on the Standing Order provision.

Ms Haley: I guess I just wanted some clarification from the hon. member on his comments about having young Canadians killed over there because of something that this government would have done. The fact is that we were supporting an ally, who I happen to believe may not be totally wrong here after watching what I saw yesterday on television of a young person having his head removed by terrorists. I'm a little concerned that you're not aware that we are in fact in Afghanistan, that we have our young men and women over there trying to help them establish some kind of democratic life not just for the men of that country but for the women of that country, that were totally and completely done under by a group of religious fanatics.

I just want to know, hon. member: are you aware of the gravity of that situation? Do you have to inject innuendo and allegations against people's motivations in here on a never-ending basis? Do you have to somehow find a way to tie something as innocuous as this bill back into a global conflict that we're all in and that we should all be paying attention to?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I want to indicate to the hon. member that I am indeed conscious and aware of what's going on. My remarks were related to this government's support, which was aborted at the last minute, for the illegal American invasion of Iraq, and I want to indicate that that would have been a grave mistake. Had this government had its way, Canada would have been in there participating in this illegal invasion and abuse of the Iraqi people.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available.

Then the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to conclude the debate.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll just conclude with a few remarks in response to Edmonton-Centre and Edmonton-Highlands.

First of all, Edmonton-Centre indicated that I hadn't quoted all of her remarks, and of course that would be unnecessary because they are printed for time immemorial in Hansard. So everybody can read Hansard and know what it was that she said in Committee of the Whole.

I was particularly concerned, though, about the comments that were made about the government, and presumably, then, she's referring to me because I've been the one who's been shepherding this. Even though it falls within Government Services and is sponsored by Edmonton-Glenora, I was talking to her about this one. To suggest that I was somehow trying for a broader purpose – I just wanted to have on the record that that was wrong, that the sole purpose for which I was bringing this forward and pursuing this option was to deal with this company.

The fact that the appropriate amendment to the Companies Act to allow that to happen might make it available to some others of the 2,000 part 9 companies is in fact correct, and I've acknowledged that. But that's not the purpose for bringing it forward, that's not the intention to use it, and this is not some great government conspiracy to take all of our part 9 companies abroad and dissipate the government's and, therefore, the people's wealth somewhere else but this province. I just wanted to put that on the record and make that perfectly clear.

This doesn't always have to be about some hidden agenda. The opposition can take some of these things at face value and understand that people try to do good things on a day-to-day basis to ensure that this province gets to continually move ahead and the people of this province get to have a quality of life and health status which they deserve. That's the purpose. That's the agenda. I always feel that one has to get up and correct the record all the time, because for every time you try and move forward, there's someone in the opposition, sometimes the Member for Edmonton-Centre, who's suggesting that you're being disingenuous or that there's some ulterior motive or some other reason for doing this.

Now, the reasons for this bill being brought forward in the format it is. I've talked about how inappropriate it would have been to disembowel the private members' process for the purpose of this one-off issue. It would also be inappropriate to bring into a broad-based act a specific reference to an individual company. It wouldn't be appropriate to do that in the act. One of the things we ought to do is make sure that our legislation is written appropriately and consistently. So this, in my view, is the best way possible to achieve the aim that we want to achieve without changing the public policy in any dramatic way, and because it's a part 9 act and not all companies under the Business Corporations Act, it is, in my view, appropriate to do it this way.

The hon. member indicated in debate that she was concerned about taxes or public money somehow going abroad. Well, she's surely aware, because of her involvement with not-for-profit organizations, that there are many not-for-profit organizations incorporated in many different ways. Societies and others can have access to grants from the Wild Rose Foundation or others. People can raise money in this province through casinos, and those monies go offshore to communities in India to support schools and all sorts of other good works. We do that; we ought to do that; we ought to continue to do that.

The question of residency of directors is not the issue with respect to taxes or public money, whether it's here or whether it's going offshore. It's a question of whether there's an appropriate accountability process in place for that public money and how it is handed out. I would say to the hon. member that there is an appropriate accountability process for all the money that's given out by organizations like the Wild Rose Foundation and the Ministry of Gaming and others.

With respect to the comments from Edmonton-Highlands about trust, that's about what I would expect from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. Of course he doesn't trust this government. It's his sworn duty to defeat this government. But this government has a very good record of appropriate consideration of issues; for example, under the foreign ownership of land regulations. Albertans trust this government, and this government is going to make sure that the right decisions are made in appropriate circumstances. Right now it's the right decision to make to keep this company an Alberta company and an Edmonton company doing good things for this city, and I'm just sorry that you won't help us do it.

[Motion carried; Bill 35 read a third time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 32
Appropriation Act, 2004

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? Okay. I seem to have three or four. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to take the opportunity to continue some comments about Bill 32, the Appropriation Act, 2004. I had the opportunity earlier in debate to hear from the minister, and we talked about a lot of things. One of the things that we didn't explore was the lack of any provisions in the budget to deal with the tuition problem and, in fact, the postsecondary programs in the province.

I was reviewing the work of the Auditor General with respect to the Department of Learning and the performance measures that they have with respect to public satisfaction and with the affordability of the learning system and the report where they indicate that they are making progress in delivering high-quality learning experiences and opportunities for Alberta students. The Auditor General has taken issue with the policies of the government in this area. He comments in a number of areas, and I'd like to point them out this afternoon because I think it really is unfortunate that the budget has not taken the complaints of students, their parents, and the concerns of a number of Albertans very seriously with respect to postsecondary learning in the province.

In the survey that they conducted indicating that fewer Albertans think that the learning system is affordable, the drop in the numbers is quite dramatic, Mr. Chairman. Seventy-five per cent of the people surveyed in 2001 thought that the system was affordable. That was down to 63 per cent in 2002, and that's down to 52 per cent in 2003. So almost a 25 per cent drop in the number of people who feel that the postsecondary system is affordable. The Auditor General comments on that. Well, he relates it to the policy later in the report.

One of the things that he indicated was that there's some difficulty with the measures that they're using: that they're trying to measure too much at once, that they're trying to measure students, taxpayers, and different components – basic education, postsecondary apprenticeship – all at the same time, that you can't really tell what's caused the decrease in the results. I think that for students and for people who are interested in the postsecondary institutions, the reason is really very obvious, and that's the dramatic rise in tuition and the lack of any real program to address it other than to make possible larger and larger student loans.

The Auditor General also took issue with the income levels that were used in the survey to indicate at what income level the financial barrier seems to kick in with respect to participation in learning opportunities. The study that the government uses and quotes from all the time uses the thresholds of $40,000 and under and $70,000 and more as income levels in looking at categories for determining reasons for not attending postsecondary education. The Auditor General makes the remark that there seems to be no justification for either number and, really, that the numbers that are produced are rendered useless without that kind of specification. We really don't know from the surveys given by the government the effect of rising tuition fees on participation in postsecondary education of eligible students at different income levels, at least as interpreted by the government.

A further complication for the Auditor General was that the participation rates for students eligible for colleges or technical institutions weren't measured, so they concentrated on universities but ignored a large part of the postsecondary programs of the province. Again, the admonishment from the Auditor General was that they should measure those other institutions and they should measure the impact of fees on the other institutions to see what kind of effect they're having on participation rates, the number of students that end up in these institutions.

He concludes in this section of the report, "Without periodically measuring the effectiveness of the tuition fee policy and related programs, the Department may not achieve its intended outcome." I think that that's a very important statement and one that the government has not taken seriously thus far. We didn't see the provisions in the budget, again, to address the matter of tuition and its effect on students in this province.

A second area that we didn't see addressed in the budget was the whole area of the cap, the 30 per cent cap. The Auditor General went through and indicated in a number of places that the government has relied heavily on this 30 per cent cap, yet he found that the policy itself needed clarifying. It wasn't clear, he observed, what that 30 per cent cap actually meant. He went on to indicate, for example, that "universities are not deducting all of the sponsored research costs in the calculation of . . . operating expenditures" and that "tuition fee revenues in the first year of a new program are not . . . included in the cap calculation." The government assured them that they were, but that wasn't apparent from what the department had reported.

The period that was used to adjust the figures used in the cap and the allowable increase calculations is not included in the policy. He indicated that while the policy exempts certain fees, it doesn't make allowances for situations where the fee for an exempt service is included in the overall tuition fee. This results in institutions that don't charge separate fees having a higher cap . . . than those that charge the separate fee.

So in his findings a number of policy problems with the tuition cap.

He also indicated that the policy is too difficult to administer, and then went on to give some examples. "The Policy requires that the annual increase in fees for instruction cannot exceed average amount per student prescribed by the Department," and "as the calculation of the actual annual allowable increase per student is done approximately 18 months after the institutions have approved the fees, the calculation is [certainly] not timely enough for prompt action" to be taken.

The final area that he had concern with – again, it goes back to this business of timing – was that one college in the province had actually exceeded the cap for three years and that because of the timing and the reporting and when the institutions make decisions about tuition, this could happen under the policy that we have before us.

So the concerns about tuition and tuition policy have been raised by the Auditor General, and they weren't, Mr. Chairman, addressed in the budget. We have yet to have what I think is absolutely necessary, and that's a long, hard look at how we finance and support postsecondary education in this province.

That's not just an Alberta problem. It's a problem that's felt across the country, and it involves the federal government. I think the time is long overdue when we should have had this province and the federal government sitting down and looking at how we can sustain our institutions, make them affordable and accessible to students, and make sure that they are of the high quality that we all want and to do that in the long term and to look at the next 20 years and to see how we can sustain this system, not only just sustain it but actually have it grow and flourish. I think it's a dereliction of duty for provinces not to take that seriously and put in place a plan for, first of all, dealing with the problem that would result in a plan for financing those schools in the future.

I don't think we can go along the way we are, ad hoc, adding 2 per cent here, 5 per cent there, and hope that that's going to solve the problem, particularly with respect to tuition. When you look at the dramatic increases, Mr. Chairman, it's frightening for those of us who have children or grandchildren and look to trying to put in place financial resources that will see them through in the future. As I said, it's frightening. I think the need to put in place a plan for financing of postsecondary schools is long overdue.

I think, Mr. Chairman, I'll conclude with those remarks. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. I'm pleased to get the opportunity to speak in Committee of the Whole to the appropriation bill, because there were things that I didn't get a chance to speak to during the debate in some of the five ministries that I am the critic for. So I'm delighted to get additional opportunities.

I'll also note at this point that we're now debating the appropriation bill, expected to vote on it. Well, I debated the Community Development budget on March 30, the Solicitor General on April 27, the Department of Justice on April 28, Gaming on May 4, and Seniors on May 6. Now, I wouldn't have expected to get a turn-around on answers on the last two, but I was kind of hoping that I might have got some kind of response back to my questions on at least the first one or the first couple. I always struggle with voting on the appropriation bill when I've got questions that are out there that haven't been answered, because that influences my support or lack of it for the budget.

At this point perhaps I'll get all of those things in by tomorrow, and I'll have a chance to read through them all and be able to vote on the budget. I don't think those kinds of fairy tales really come true any more, but it is a problem with the timing of the way we go through this process. I note that, you know, there are a lot more of the ministerial staff than there is of me, so I was kind of hoping I might get some answers there.

One of the issues that I had raised in a couple of different departments and, again, I think is one of those sort of orphan issues because it doesn't sit wholly and permanently with any one ministry – in fact, a couple of the ministers to whom I raised this issue said:

well, wait until the regional Roundtable on Family Violence and Bullying, and all will be revealed; all will happen. I was happy to attend that regional Roundtable on Family Violence and Bullying, which took place in Calgary this past Thursday and Friday and maybe even Saturday. I was there on Friday, anyway. My concerns about this particular issue, which is the funding of sexual assault centres, was reinforced as I went through that day.

I think that really my concerns are that the funding of these centres falls under Children's Services at this point, who actually is doing some funding, the Solicitor General, who is doing some funding. It should also include Justice, I think, because Justice and the Solicitor General end up so closely tied together and are dealing with victims of crime but also the Minister of Health and Wellness and, you know, Community Development, which looks after sort of the human rights aspect. If there is a minister that's charged with responsibility for women's issues, it still falls under that portfolio. So a lot of the portfolios that I'm responsible for.

My concern about this is that the funding and responsibility for the sexual assault centres are not completely falling under any one of the ministries that I have mentioned. What happens is that as a result nobody is responsible, and this group of agencies is constantly falling through the cracks. They are spending so much of their time scrambling for funds and applying to all of these different ministries trying to scratch together enough, peg together enough, sew a patchwork of project funding to fund their agencies and keep going. I really think that that's a problem. When I say to people, "Did you know that sexual assault centres don't get operating funding?" people are amazed. They're shocked. "You're kidding." "No. Really." "You don't mean that." "Yes, I do."

There is no one that is providing operating funding for this. They get a little bit of funding around court counselling from the Solicitor General, but there are fairly narrow parameters for that program. You know, you might have one person whose salary is partly paid through the project grant that's available under the Solicitor General for that court counselling piece. The Minister of Children's Services has also picked up a piece around counselling for children, but not all victims of sexual violence are children.

What are you supposed to do when you're dealing with people who have, as often happens, experienced their real trauma as adults? They're adult survivors of child sexual abuse. Well, they're not falling under the Minister of Children's Services purview any more. So now where do they go? Health and Wellness? Well, Health and Wellness doesn't deal with that. They punt them back to Justice or Solicitor General, and occasionally we get the minister of women's issues involved in this one as well.

So that's what I'm trying to get the government to understand, that this is so fractured, and I'm looking to this government for someone to take responsibility to put together whatever interdepartmental agency you need to make sure that this issue is addressed and these agencies are looked to.

The concern that had been raised with me and that I had as I read through the documents that were a preparation for the regional Roundtable on Family Violence and Bullying was that the language about sexual violence didn't even turn up. Every time there was the phrase "family violence and bullying." That appeared I don't know how many times in the documents, but I was 20 pages into the document before sexual violence or sexual assault showed up the first time. That's part of the problem. It was not top of mind for people, so when you get into these breakout groups and they all start trying to describe what the problem is or the issue is or to find solutions, that section was not being discussed. Why? Because what was constantly in front of people? Family violence and bullying. What was talked about? Family violence and bullying. Did we get the sexual violence, sexual assault included in that? No.

I went through all but one of the breakout groups. There were 16, I think, and as far as I know I went to all of them except for the one that was a special breakout group for aboriginal people. I was in one of the aboriginal ones but not the special breakout one. That issue came up once, and that's because I know a staff person was in that particular group.

When I questioned a little bit more during the coffee breaks and the lunch hour and things, what I was told was: well, that voice wasn't heard very loud in the community consultations. Well, no, because we don't have a lot of sexual assault centres in Alberta. Frankly, their staff are trying to do the job, struggling to find the funding. I mean, they're incredibly underresourced. How were they supposed to be getting out to all of these community consultations and getting their agenda up at the top of the list? You don't have that many centres. I think there are less than a dozen in Alberta to start with, so even if you took every executive director and sent them out there, you're still not going to have a loud voice to get you on top of the list.

I know that I've spent a lot of time on this, and you've been very patient, Mr. Chairman, but, you know, somebody has got to champion this. This is the problem. Everybody keeps, sort of: well, nice idea; yeah, gee, we sure need to be concerned about that. Then they punt it off to somebody else. So, yes, I spent 20 minutes talking about it during the Children's Services debate, and I've probably spent another 20 minutes here, but if I'm the only one, then I'm the only one. I've identified this issue clearly now. I've explained to you why it's happened. I'm looking for the government to take charge of this. For heaven's sake, you are far more resourced than I am, and I've spent 40 minutes on it. If each of you spent 40 minutes on it, this would be done.

Mr. Hancock: For 40 minutes you want to spend $40 million.

Ms Blakeman: No, it doesn't need $40 million. As a matter of fact, there was an article in the Edmonton Sun on Tuesday, I think. I was talking about the surplus that is in the victims of crime fund, and they said to me: what would you do with that? I said: well, for starters you could fund these sexual assault centres for operating money. They did talk to Deb Tomlinson, who is their executive director or something, and she said: well, yeah, this is how much money we could use. The amount of money she said was $5 million.

So it's not $40 million, Mr. Attorney General. I understand the play on words there, but I'm just going to keep pitching those strikes to you, sir. What we really need is 5 million bucks, and that's not a lot of money in the scheme of things. So see what we can do about that one because I sure hope I don't have to give the same 40-minute speech next year. I'm sure we can deal with that.

Now, I'm going to go back, and I've brought with me the notes that I made when I was debating various budgets. The one that I was most short on time for was the Solicitor General's debate, so I'd like to complete the rest of the concerns and questions that I had, and I know that the minister will respond in writing to me, sooner rather than later I hope, with the answers on some of these.

The integrated crime. The Solicitor General set up the integrated organized crime and gang enforcement unit, which I think is referred to as IROC. I think it turns up on page 385 of the estimates. It's not mentioned specifically there, but I'm wondering what's going on with this IROC organization or with this agency. What is the funding for it? What are the operations that it's now involved in? I mean, I'm not talking secrets here, but what exactly is the unit now doing?

It was set up, and then we sort of hear it referred to but not with a great deal of detail. So on the record then, Madam Minister, if I could get what the operations are. What's going on here? What is the effectiveness of it? We heard an awful lot about it last June, and now it's not turning up in either the business plans or the estimates. So where is it? Where's the funding for it? Has the funding stopped? Is it not in this budget, or has it been turned over to the local police agencies to fund themselves? What's the deal here?

The sexual offender registry was much talked about by the Solicitor General a year or two ago I guess. I'm wondering: could we get an update on that? You know, how much is it used? How many hits on the site? How many people have been captured as a result of that?

The reason I'm asking is that it looks like a recent U.S. Department of Justice report of 10,000 sexual offenders in the States shows that 43 per cent of sexual offenders had been rearrested for any offence. That included sexual offences but also things like robbery, drug trafficking, highway violations I'm assuming, anything. That compares with a 68 per cent recommit rate for other criminals. So the recommit rate for sexual offenders is actually lower, and I thought: oh, that's not at all what I expected to see. That was a surprising statistic.

That brought to mind: okay; well, then, how is our registry doing? How many hits? How many people did it bring down? What is the effectiveness rating happening there?

On the MLA policing review we ended up with some things that were not really dealt with in the final report, and I'm just wondering if we can get a bit more detail. At one point there was a recommendation to look at unstaffed aerial drones, kind of little spy plane things out there flying around spying on those cows and chickens. [interjection] It is. It is too much fun that one. I had a great deal of fun with it the first time it was recommended, but it sort of dropped off the radar screen, if you will forgive the pun. I'm just wondering what happened with that. It was sort of not mentioned again, so I'm looking for the update status report, so to speak, on that one.

Another thing. The whole photoradar issue was just kind of slid off to the side of the table but left on the table. So where are we with that? Is it going to be followed through or not? Yes? No? Who's going to be responsible? More of it? Less of it? What's happening?

The deputy constables were given a nod in the final report, but that's the last we heard. We are looking to have how many of them put in place? Where? By when? What kind of training standards? And I'm particularly interested in the details about the training standards compared to what the training standards are for what I would call a regular police officer. If I could also maybe get this on a grid with comparisons to the kind of training and criteria that the special constables have. If I could get that information, that would be helpful.

Centralized training facility. Now, we were looking for that. Is there going to be some sort of sod-turning on that this year or the taking over of an existing building? Are we going to see a centralized training facility in Alberta in this fiscal year? If we're not, where does it come in the three-year rolling plan? Where does it come in the 20-year plan? I'd like to get a detailed update on what expectations, timing, and budget allocations are for a central police training facility.

Finally, the Amber Alert. Now, the last time the Amber Alert was used, two of the media outlets are adamant they did not receive the information. The minister must have done an investigation on that. I asked a question in the House. She, in fact, denied that that happened, but the Premier later confirmed in media statements that there were glitches. So what has been looked at? What's been done to the program to try and address the concerns that came there? There was something that happened. I'm trying to remember what the media outlets were. I know that there were two of them. Maybe they're both radio stations. If we could hear the details on that one, that would be helpful, please.

I think those are my comments for the Solicitor General.

Now I'm going to move to the Department of Justice and Attorney General. The area that I was not able to fully explore with the minister was around mediation and restorative justice, and I very quickly in the last couple of minutes made a slapdash plea for funding rates for mediators that are used by the department. My concern was that we are trying to develop a professional layer of people here that provide services. We want the mediation and restorative justice services to be used. The minister is quite a leader in this. In some cases I think he gets ahead of everyone, and they're kind of scrambling to catch up there. He's a leader in implementing things like alternatives to the court system that still provide justice, things like mediation services and restorative justice techniques.

There are two issues here. One is around the funding of the Edmonton restorative justice centre. They have been struggling along for some time, and it seems that they were in for some funding. Somebody was supposed to take responsibility for it, and then something happened. The minister turned over or something, and they never got the grant. It never came through.

I do note that they were very quick to tell me that the current minister's office did find space for them – and they're very grateful for that – but that really they have no stability in their programming right now because they don't have operating funding. They recently shut down their victim/offender mediation program, and that program had been running from '94 to '04, so 11 years actually, and they just had to shut it down. They work on the UN principles of restorative justice.

They originally had seed funding from the Muttart, from the Rotary, from the Edmonton Community Foundation, and they needed to move into stable, predictable, long-term funding from the government, and that seems to have stumbled somewhere.

So if I can put in the plea to the minister – I mean, we know that this works, and we know that victims and the court system and offenders and everybody seem to be very happy with the justice of the results. It doesn't take up court time. [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired]

I will get another opportunity, I hope, later to put more comments on the record. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just briefly to comment on some of the issues related to Justice and particularly to say thank you for the very nice comments you made with respect to the mediation processes. It is indeed one of the areas that we are trying to move forward on to make sure that the spectrum of dispute resolution in the province is as broad as it can be and that people have the opportunity to have their disputes resolved in a fair, effective way that's accessible on a timely basis and that is very affordable, obviously collaborative law processes in family law, mediative processes in other civil dispute areas, expanding the jurisdiction of the Provincial Court and then putting in the mediation processes there. There are, I would acknowledge, areas that we need to expand on. It's difficult to find resources always in a tight system, but we have to find better ways to resource the mediation process.

In comments in committee you raised the question of increasing the honorariums. We're finding that we have a significant number of people who agree to put their names forward on the list because it's a good training process as well. It gives them good experience, and they can then take that experience and market it. So there's not a shortage of mediators, but I would acknowledge that the honorarium of $100 for a two-hour session, possibly split between two mediators, is modest in the extreme.

By the same token, we have DSROs and DROs in Edmonton and Calgary. These are senior family law practitioners who volunteer their time to act, in essence, in the mediation process so that disputing parties can come forward. Instead of going to court, they can sit down with a DRO and have that DRO help them work through what a court would award and then come to a consent order basis. Those are done on a volunteer basis. They're pilot projects, but they've proved very successful.

I just wanted to mention that on the record and again say thank you on the record to the senior members of the family bar in Edmonton and Calgary who volunteer their time for those projects. It's very nice that they volunteer their time. It's a wonderful project, but I don't know how long we'll be able to expect that they will continue once we've determined how effective the process is, and it is very effective both at helping people get good answers and helping people get good resolution to their problems, helping them to participate in their own resolution. That's very important.

I've also been very supportive of the restorative justice processes. I think that they are ways in which people can actually get some finality, some closure, particularly in the criminal justice area, to their events, groups such as the Community Conferencing society in Edmonton and other groups that have come forward have engaged in a very meaningful way in the system to help people with dispute resolution in those cases with resolution of problems of a criminal nature and the work that the conferencing society has done with, for example, the Edmonton public school board with respect to working in the schools and helping resolve bullying matters in a restorative justice context, in bringing that all together – very good work.

Of course, one of the problems always is that there are a number of community organizations of people who are prepared to put their time and effort forward, but they get always held up on the basis of proper resourcing. That's an issue that we have to deal with. We have to find a way to bring similar type groups together so that we can provide adequate resourcing to do the administrative functions and leave them to explore their passion with respect to making communities a safer place. That's not a finished project by any stretch of the imagination. That needs more work.

There are some good things on the forefront. In Calgary, for example, coming out of the domestic violence project there is a group that is bringing together a family violence resource centre – that's not the right name for it – a place where all of the agencies, the police, the health services people, the counselling people can be collocated and not lose any of their independence with respect to what they're doing but share some of the administrative burden in terms of the operational side and provide a place where people know they can go to get assistance and a fast response.

So there are very, very good things happening in the community, and one of the things we have to be certain we don't do as a government is get in the way of those good things happening. But one of the things we ought to do is find better ways to support administratively and to encourage those groups so that they are not using their efforts on fundraising and on administration but that they are using their efforts in the community doing the work that they have chosen to come forward and do to make their communities a safer and better place.

So I appreciate the comments from the hon. member which allowed me to put those comments on the record.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. I'm just going to continue in the same vein there because I think this is important. The minister is right. There's the opportunity here to create that partnership and, more importantly, the facilitation of a process. We've built ourselves into a society that's sort of lost the ability to resolve our own disputes, and we tend to immediately turn to either the police or the courts and say: okay; somebody else decide this and fix it. What we've ended up with is absolutely, you know, packing the courts with a lot of disputes that really as human beings and good citizens and decent people we should be able to figure out ourselves. It also takes a huge cost burden off that justice system and often the police resources as well. Frankly, taxpayers end up paying for all of this, so if we can figure out a way to do this that accomplishes the same end or a better end for less money, then I think we should be doing it.

The issue here – and it's the issue that the minister touched on at the very end – is really about capacity of the agencies to support the work. When I talk about a partnership, I'm talking about, you know, the nonprofit agencies that exist, like the restorative justice centre in Edmonton, who administers the program, organizes the people, trains them, certifies them, tests them, schedules everybody to go out and be where they're supposed to be, does the intake on who's requesting mediation or restorative justice services, all of that sort of thing that, frankly, can be done very efficiently by a nonprofit organization, but that organization needs support. They need the capacity to be able to do that. The minister is right and I'm right about having that agency run around trying to find money all the time, and then they're not doing all the rest of those things that I listed, and that's what's missing here.

So I'm going to continue to press the minister because I think he's the one that needs to take the lead on this, and I know that there's often confusion between: where does this one fall? Solicitor General? Attorney General? I think it's going to have to fall under the Attorney General, and we need him to take the lead on this one and charge ahead with it, because I think it's probably going to fall most under him, and to make sure that that proper resourcing, his words there, is available so that those organizations have the capacity to actually go forward and do this work.

We all win at the end of this. We don't have those, you know, time-consuming and difficult cases in the courts when we could be learning how to resolve them better outside the court system and still achieve the justice and the punishment sometimes and the redemption that we're seeking here.

The other part of this – and I disagree with the minister more here, and I'm going to press him more on it – is around the honorarium for the mediators. He's saying: well, we've got no lack of people that are lining up to do this. But, you know, the process that's in place is that mediators have to do 10 free mediations before they're even considered to go on the list to be eligible to do this mediation for a hundred dollars for two hours. Mediators almost always work in tandem, so you really are talking fifty bucks apiece for two people to do two hours of work. That's a very poor showing.

If we are trying to create a group of people who are professionals and who will develop professional standards, have an organization that makes sure that they are properly trained and that there is a professional standard that they meet and that there's certification and that they're retested and all of those things that society has come to expect, then we are looking at a profession there. That's not to say that there aren't very good people who do this as a volunteer, and it's not to say that they shouldn't be allowed to volunteer to do that if they choose.

The problem here is that we're sort of getting engaged in compulsive revoluting and saying that this is a needed thing. We're recognizing the talent or the ability or the training of people in the community to do it, and then we're saying: well, we want you to do this all to a very high standard, but we're going to pay you almost no money to do this.

While the minister is saying that he's got a lineup of people to take on these 10 free ones before they start getting paid $50, I'm also hearing from others. They won't go there. They don't want to get caught in that loop where they would end up being paid 25 bucks basically to do this. So he's missing out on a group of equally trained and talented people who just don't want to get in his system, and I think that's a problem. That's a warning signal to me. If we are serious about this, if we want to move more people into this system, then I think we need to take it seriously and we need to value it. I think that putting a hundred bucks on two people for two hours is not valuing this system.

The last point I want to make to that is the two-hour time limit, and I referred to this some time ago, I think, when I first talked about it. Expecting that you're going to close a mediation in two hours flies in the face of everything that mediation is to be about. It's to allow people to come to those agreements in their own time. Putting two hours on it says that you've got to solve this problem in two hours. It's an anathema to the way this process works.

I'm not saying that you set it up so everybody just, you know, sits around with their feet up and drinks coffee forever. That's not the point. You are trying to resolve this situation, but judging the success of it by either the number of cases that you've closed or by saying, "You've got a time limit of only two hours and then it's done," is not the way that this particular process should be judged at all. It's the antithesis of it, and I think it gets us into trouble.

Those were the issues I wanted to bring up around the mediation and restorative justice.

From the Justice department – just let me check the rest of my notes here. Oh, yeah, just at the very end there. On page 35 of his annual report I notice that 4,121 more people received legal aid services than was the eligible number. I'm sorry; I didn't explain that very well. Can the minister explain why 4,121 people more than the eligible number of people received legal aid services? I'm wondering: why does he identify it as the demand for it? Why is that so much higher, and who is it that's receiving these legal aid services? Who are the extra people here?

I'm just going backwards through my notes. Oh, yeah, that is it. Okay. So I managed to get the rest of those on the record, or it looks like some of my colleagues also asked questions that covered that stuff. That's good.

The Gaming ministry is the other one that I have here. The only issue outstanding on the Gaming ministry was the disagreement between the minister and the Alberta Gaming Research Institute, which produced a study on VLT gambling and the lack of resources to support or to treat problem gamblers. The minister came out very quickly saying: oh, well, this was a very small sample; I think there were 206 that were involved in the study, and that makes it too small to take seriously.

In fact, if the minister looks at the study, they were interviewing people who actually were addicts, so this wasn't just going out and finding 206 people – I hope I've got that number right – on the street and questioning them about attitudes towards problem VLT gambling. They were actually interviewing people in places where gambling takes place and talking directly to people who were either actively engaged in it or were self-identifying. From the reading I've done on this, that's indicating that you were actually working in the pool of people that you're talking about, and it makes that number much more valid.

I'm wondering why the minister sort of continues to attempt to trivialize the work that was done in that study because of the numbers there. I'm assuming he would know this. Actually, that was quite a valid number of people that they were working with. So if I could get his comments on that.

In the Community Development debates I was remiss in not asking questions about the human rights cases. Every year I like to get an update on the number of cases that were new, the number of cases that went on to the commission, which is always sort of the highest level there, and the number of cases that were resolved. Then that gives us a number on how many are sort of sitting in the middle of the process somehow.

I'd also be interested, if the commission keeps the statistics, in what number of cases were recommended to be resolved. In a case where the complainant wants some sort of resolution, the human rights staff usually go to the company and say: there's a complaint against you; are you willing to work with them or apologize or offer money as compensation or whatever? Then that counteroffer will be brought back to the individual. I'm wondering if there are any numbers kept on how many individuals accept that counteroffer from the company? I'm just interested in that for other reasons.

Those were the outstanding comments that I had from the original debates. I was able to get everything on the Seniors' budget. Thank you very much for the opportunity to get the rest of those on the record, and I look forward to receiving responses in writing to them.

Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, May 13, 2004

1:30 p.m.

Date: 04/05/13

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Give to each member of this Legislature a strong and abiding sense of the great responsibilities laid upon us. Give us a deep and thorough understanding of the needs of the people we serve. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature Anita Singh. Anita is a summer STEP student who is working in my office at McDougall Centre in Calgary. She is in Edmonton to meet some of the staff and officials in my office, who I'm sure she'll be regularly working with over the phone and through e-mail.

Anita is an energetic University of Calgary student who will be starting a master's degree in political science this fall. This past year she spent some time travelling in Japan, and a few years ago she spent a term studying in India as part of her undergraduate degree in political science. It's a pleasure to have this fine young Albertan join my staff for the summer, and I know that she will find the experience both rewarding and challenging.

I would ask that our honoured guest rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly an enthusiastic group of young Albertans visiting us today from Millarville community school. They are accompanied by their teacher Mr. Hoffart and by parent volunteers and driver Mr. Shukster, Mrs. Robertson, Mrs. Higgin, and Mr. Brown. They're seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, and I'd ask them now to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week it was my pleasure to rise and advise you of Medicine Hat being home to the best hockey team in the country, and today it's my pleasure to advise all members that we're also the home of some of the best schools in the country, one of which is represented in our Legislature today. Crestwood school is joining us for about the 15th consecutive year. Every year that I have served as the MLA, I've had the pleasure of introducing Crestwood school and their grade 6 students, and this year it is a distinct pleasure for me to do so again.

So if I could introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly a group of 99 visitors, that consists of the grade 6 students from Crestwood school along with their principal, David George; vice-principal Al Tisnic; their teachers Karen Irwin, Bev Slater, Wade Lawson, Kathy Western, and Gary Ziel. They've also been joined on this trip by parent helpers Vince Wong, Danette Heintz, Garth Knight, Jeff Thompson, Theresa Wilde, and Laurel Hill. Mr. Speaker, if I could ask them to rise – they're in both the members' and visitors' galleries – and receive the warm recognition of all.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I'd like to introduce 17 grades 5 and 6 students from the Busby school, which is located in the Barrhead-Westlock constituency. They're accompanied this afternoon by teachers and group leaders Nancy Zeise, Tilly Yagos, Kyle Beattie, and parent helpers Dan Vandeborn, Rhonda Breadon, and Keith Bidne. They are seated in the gallery this afternoon, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My guests won't be here until 2 o'clock, and I would ask to introduce them at that time.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise on this great Alberta day to introduce to you and through you to the House two gentlemen who are very special to me. They work very hard at keeping me out of trouble in my constituency, and I can assure you that that's a full-time job. I would like to introduce Mr. Shawn Jorgensen, who is our constituency office manager, and our STEP student for the third summer in a row, Mr. Jonah Mozeson. Would you gentlemen please stand up and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a very special visitor. Kristopher Knowles is sitting in our members' gallery. Kristopher has a wish, and that is to walk across Canada and spread the message: Don't Take Your Organs to Heaven; Heaven Knows We Need Them Here on Earth. Kristopher has been waiting for a liver for the last 13 years. He is raising awareness about organ donation. He's on day 127 of a 345-day walk that began in his hometown of Sarnia, Ontario. He will be in the city of Edmonton until the 16th of May. He is accompanied by his father, Kelly, and George Marcello, founder of the Step by Step Organ Transplant Association. I would ask that Kristopher, Kelly, and George please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly the mother and the grandmother of one of our pages, Whitney Haynes. Whitney's grandmother is from Rossland, British Columbia, and is here for Whitney's grade 12 graduation from Austin O'Brien high school. Our guests are seated in your gallery, and I would like to ask them to please stand and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly as I call out their names: Whitney's grandmother, Lois Haynes, and Whitney's mother, Brenda Haynes.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a truly remarkable woman, Mrs. Lesley Miller. On November 21, 2000, Mrs. Miller's husband, Dougald, was severely beaten and left for dead at the bottom of the stairs in an apartment building in Edmonton. Since that time Dougald has been in need of 24-hour care, unable to move or communicate. Mrs. Miller has been by her husband's side providing comfort and fighting for his rights to fair compensation. I cannot imagine what she has gone through, and I wouldn't dare to even pretend to understand the hardships that she and her husband have faced. What I do know is that she is an amazing woman with an amazing spirit. She's in the public gallery. I'd ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome of the entire Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly some individuals that are visiting through a Rotary International exchange program. Both as a member of the Assembly and as a Rotarian and someone who has benefited from the Rotary exchange, it certainly brings home the importance of it. I want to apologize in advance for how their names may come out as opposed to how their parents thought. Will you please join me in welcoming Marcos Chait, Viviana Olivares, Raul Fuentes Howes, Ximena Aguirre, and Christian Lopez. Would they please stand and receive the Assembly's applause.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to introduce Stella Varvis, Erin Miller, Tricia Waddell, and Kim Van Vliet, who are accompanying them as members of the Rotary Club of Edmonton.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to introduce to you and through you my nephew Kirk Hansen, who arrived about an hour ago from High Prairie in the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake's constituency. I'd ask Cricket – that's his alias – to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Leg. Assembly three wonderful people seated in the members' gallery. Originally from Grouard, my hometown, Mr. Albert Brule attends the U of A, has just finished, and is looking forward to working for the summer and going back in the fall. Also, two individuals originally from Gift Lake, Esther Laderoute and her son, Bryce Cunningham. She's attending the Academy of Learning and making sure that she gets an education. Her young son, Bryce, is just truly quite a bright young kid at six years old. I'd like the members of this Assembly to welcome them with a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On what's highly likely to be the last day of the spring session, I'm pleased to have this opportunity to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of the House four very special guests who are seated in the public gallery. Three of them are visiting from British Columbia, from a very small town south of Nakusp called Fauquier. One of my guests, Denise Douglas, recently took on the Campbell Liberals in a long fight to keep free ferry services to her small town. Ms Douglas and her community were successful, and the ferries are running free of tolls. She is here with her children Nadine Douglas and Gareth Douglas and her mother, Nadine Hooper. Nadine Hooper is the mother of Marilyn Hooper, who is our outreach coordinator, and Denise is her sister. I would now ask my guests to please rise to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly three Edmontonians from the Chilean community: Sonia Varela, Maria Luisa Kobek, and Carlos Parraguez. Like thousands of other Canadians of Chilean ancestry they were forced to flee their homeland because of the brutality and oppression of the Pinochet dictatorship. These three guests are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Yes. Mr. Speaker, to you and through you to the House I'd like to introduce a constituent of mine who has joined us in the gallery, Mr. Don Clarke. Attributing it to the Alberta advantage, Don and his wife recently have opened a business in the constituency of Edmonton-McClung, and I'm told it's going extremely well. Don is no stranger to anybody in the House here, but I would like to have him stand and receive the warm welcome of this House.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Contract Tendering Policy

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are wondering if this government is looking out for taxpayers or looking out for its own friends. In the past two years the health minister awarded over $250,000 in contracts to the consulting firm of his own former executive assistant, Kelley Charlebois, without going through any competitive tendering process. To the minister of health: what role did the minister play in approving over $250,000 for these contracts?

Mr. Mar: A very integral one, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister admitted yesterday that there was no competitive tendering process on these contracts, how do Albertans know that they got value for their money?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I'll be happy to talk about that right now. An RFP is not required for contracts under $100,000. At the beginning of a contract year we try our very best to estimate what we will require in terms of consulting advice and so on. I can assure the hon. member that when the contract was signed at the beginning of the year, it was for less than $100,000, but as you can understand and appreciate – and I think most people who operate large enterprises would – the value of a consultant over a period of time may result in them spending a great deal of time on a particular issue in one week and then perhaps no time the following week, but we can't exactly estimate the value of what the total contract plus expenses will be for an entire year.

I can say, Mr. Speaker, that Kelley Charlebois has had many years of experience in government and outside of government. You don't get that kind of training anywhere else, and government doesn't get the kind of advice that we get from this individual from people who have never worked inside government.

An example of a job that would have been given to Kelley Charlebois would be that all of the provinces of the country were asked to put forward a name as a representative to serve as a liaison with the Romanow commission. Now, no report is produced per se by the individual consultants, but I can assure hon. members of this House and Albertans that every province put forward the names of people that they thought would serve well in their capacity as a liaison with the Romanow commission. Other examples exist, Mr. Speaker, of work that he's done. I'm happy to outline it in more detail.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I can assure hon. members that the 250,000 approximate dollars that were spent over a two-year period – it's a lot of money. I acknowledge that. But consider that in the next 15 minutes we'll spend approximately $250,000 on our health care system, which costs $8 billion, and if I can improve the quality of the health care system, if I can improve the relationships with our health care providers, if I can improve our relationships with our regional health authorities by spending money on a consultant, I can assure you that I will continue to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. To the same minister. He's described the work of this person. Why not use one of the hundreds – hundreds – of staff in his own department if not simply to reward a friend and supporter?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we do in fact have many people in our department that work with outside groups, and let me say that we've accomplished a great deal in terms of renewal and reform of our health care system over the period of the last four years. Many people deserve credit, and some of the people that deserve credit work within our own civil service. We pay them credit for the work that's been done.

We also acknowledge, Mr. Speaker, that the work is being done by regional health authority chairs, chief executive officers, health professionals, physicians, nurses. There are many people who deserve the credit for the kind of high-quality health care system that we have today. But we also acknowledge that there's a role for outsiders, people from outside of government, to also give us a fresh perspective on some of the policy issues that we may be working on within government.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: can the Premier tell us if other departments follow the same practice as Health and Wellness of awarding untendered contracts over a hundred thousand dollars to former government officials?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I would imagine that all departments of government follow the rules.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Again to the Premier: can he tell us whether in 2003 the $129,000 in contracts awarded to his former chief of staff, Rod Love, went through the proper tendering process, or did Mr. Love get the same free ride as Mr. Charlebois?

Mr. Klein: Well, first of all, I don't know if Mr. Charlebois got a free ride. I don't think he did. As the hon. minister pointed out, Mr. Charlebois is tremendously knowledgeable in government and in matters related to health. Mr. Love is also very knowledgeable in government matters, Mr. Speaker, and I would imagine that any consulting fees paid to Mr. Love were paid in accordance with the rules set by this Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Can the Premier tell us what reports Rod Love Consulting has completed for government, and will he table them?

Mr. Klein: I can't tell you offhand, Mr. Speaker, but if the hon. member will provide a written question, we'll be glad to provide the answers.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Energy Deregulation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the EUB approved Direct Energy's application to buy the customers of ATCO, the Minister of Energy said, quote: finally the consumer is going to see some benefit. End of quote. But the only thing the consumer is going to see is even higher prices. Direct Energy's preferred one-year dual contract will charge Albertans 49 per cent more for natural gas and 36 per cent more for electricity than the current regulated rates. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Where are the cheaper prices that this government promised energy deregulation would create?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, despite the member's anticompetitive attitude it's very clear that the more entrants that enter into a marketplace, the truer you get to a real price. It's also true that only a blind man would've not read events from The Economist and newspaper journals all over the world that talk about the changing price of the commodities which Albertans use in the form of electricity and natural gas.

What we do know, unlike other administrations, is that, one, there is no debt associated with this province associated with the prices of either natural gas or electricity; two, providers can provide electricity and natural gas to Albertans across Alberta; three, we do not run the peril of blacking out and we have an adequate supply of electricity across this province; and four, the price of these commodities also benefits Alberta in the terms of royalty income and jobs and unprecedented economic growth.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that even Direct Energy's preferred five-year contract charges 38 per cent more for natural gas and 21 per cent more for electricity than the regulated rate, what happens to Alberta consumers when the regulated rate option expires on July 1, 2006?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, his first question says that there is no choice. Then he provides two alternatives, which were not there in the prior world. In fact, I think there's ample evidence that the government has made the right decision in terms of making the private sector accountable, and the private sector is going to find out how appropriate those prices are by the uptake by Albertans on each particular rate offering. That information is fully in the public domain, governed carefully – carefully – by the consumer affairs department, the Government Services department, and the Fair Trading Act. We're going to see what in fact will occur in this market, and we will watch this market very carefully over the period between now and July 2006.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: is locking in to permanent high prices with energy contracts the only way Alberta consumers can guarantee themselves some stability in this whole energy deregulation boondoggle?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the preamble of the question makes it hypothetical in nature because it is so riddled with errors, but I shall attempt to sort and filter out an area where we can provide information. In fact, we are living on a continent where we've seen higher gas prices, but higher gas prices have also brought unprecedented prosperity and royalty revenue to this province. As natural gas is used by Albertans in the most highly consuming months, there is a program that rebates some of the government royalties back to individual Albertans.

Also, we see in the electricity market, Mr. Speaker, that Albertans enjoy very competitive if not the lowest priced electricity rates across Canada. That's particularly true in jurisdictions where there is not hydro power, that of course has an overwhelming corporate debt guaranteed by each province.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Supplementary Prescription Drug Benefit Program

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I shared a podium with Janet Buterman, a young mother fighting cancer who was turned down for the government supplementary drug benefit plan because she owes $401 in health care premium arrears, which she is duly paying down. Yesterday the minister denied that such a policy exists, yet there it is in black and white on the minister's department web site, which says that only those without health care premium arrears qualify for drug coverage. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that the minister said yesterday that it's policy that individuals are not denied access to the health care system because of an inability to pay, then why does government policy dictate that individuals with health care premium debts don't qualify for prescription drug benefits under this plan?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, as has been my practice being minister of health for almost four years, I will not engage in the particular debate of the circumstances of an individual on the floor of this Assembly. I did ask the hon. member yesterday if he would provide me the name and the details of the particular individual that he was trying to help. He has still not done so. If he was interested in helping this individual, he has wasted a day in doing so.

Fortunately, I have asked the officials in my department to find out the circumstances of this particular case. I'm committed to helping this individual get on supplementary health insurance, Alberta Blue Cross, for drug coverage. But beyond saying that we are committed to helping this individual, I will simply say that I will not deal with individual cases on the floor of this Assembly. It is not parliamentary.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why can't the minister see that this isn't a problem that can be addressed on a case-by-case basis given that there may be many more Janet Butermans out there suffering in silence?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member has more cases he'd like to bring forward, if he provides me with the names of such people, then I'd be happy to deal with it. Otherwise, it strikes me as being an entirely hypothetical question.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the minister: will the government change its coercive policy of denying Albertans like Janet Buterman access to needed prescription drug coverage unless they first pay their health care premium debts in full, and if so, when?

Mr. Mason: That's a question. Answer that question.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, making it louder doesn't make it a question.

Canmore Nordic Centre

Mrs. Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, the Canmore Nordic Centre in my constituency hosted a number of skiing events during the 1988 Winter Olympic Games, but these facilities, the equipment, and the trails have worn, and there have been no substantial improvements since the centre's construction in 1986. In addition, international standards for cross-country skiing and biathlon have changed, which means that the Canmore Nordic Centre no longer qualifies to host international competitions. Can the Minister of Community Development, whose ministry owns and operates this centre, tell us what he is doing to address this very important issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. There's no doubt about it that the Canmore Nordic Centre has provided tremendous value to Albertans and to visitors and other tourists for the past many years. In fact, the economic impact of that has been very significant, as have the health benefits to all of the users.

However, she's quite correct. The equipment and the trails and the buildings and so on have come to the point where they do need to be visited and repaired and/or replaced in order to make the necessary improvements. Therefore, I did appoint a committee of senior managers from Community Development and I had co-operation from Economic Development and from Alberta Infrastructure to prepare what we call a business case scenario.

The long and short of it all, Mr. Speaker, is that they have now reviewed every piece of equipment, every trail, every building and provided that business case scenario to us to have a look at, and I'm doing that. It does talk about the need for millions of dollars to replace and upgrade, so we will take some time to review that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this centre is so important to Albertans, to tourists, to the development of high-performance athletes and the hosting of international ski competitions, can we get a more specific answer on how long it'll take to get these much-needed upgrades?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I would like to think that we can probably get that done in a reasonable period of time. I have indicated to some of the people that are putting a bid forward, in fact, to host the World Cup in 2005 that in a perfect world we'd have some answer by the end of June, although I cannot guarantee what the results of the answer will be, because we're talking about potentially upwards of probably $20 million to achieve what is necessary to elevate the Canmore Nordic Centre back to international standards. As we put that business case forward, it of course has to be balanced in the overall context of other government priorities. So as soon as possible we'll get an answer out.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

2:00 Victims' Assistance Programs

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In November 2000 Lesley Miller's husband, Dougald, was brutally beaten and left in 24-hour care for the rest of his life, unable to move or communicate. While the man who beat Dougald gets free room and board in prison, Mrs. Miller continues to struggle with bills for room and board and physiotherapy for her husband. Despite meeting with the Minister of Justice in February of this year, Mrs. Miller has received no word on what this government is prepared to do for her or her husband. My question is to the Minister of Justice. Can the minister explain what he is going to do to help out Mr. and Mrs. Miller?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is truly a tragic situation, and as the member said in his preamble, we have here a situation where a person who is an innocent victim of crime is in a long-term care facility and the person who committed the crime is in jail at the public's expense.

I did meet with Mrs. Miller, as the opposition leader indicated, and I indicated to her that I would conduct a review across government of what we might be able to do, because this is truly one of those situations which does not fit into any of the programs that are available. There isn't a program for this sort of situation. There's the victims of crime fund, which can engage and I believe has engaged. When you talk to the health authorities, the health authorities have some ability to provide coverage for a period of time, and I understand that's been reviewed. Depending on income levels, a person in this position might be able to access AISH. But those are all the things that one has to look at to see whether there's any other way that we can as a government deal with a person in this instance.

As I say, they don't come along very often, thank goodness.

They're tragic when they do. We have to make every effort to see what we can do about it. I've committed to Mrs. Miller that I will conduct that search. I've got a request signed so that I can access those files, which are private files and cannot be accessed. I certainly can't share the results of what I've received, because I don't have permission to do that and wouldn't in any event, but I can indicate that I'm doing everything I can to find a solution to this particular problem.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: exactly what does Mrs. Miller have to do from here on to the end of the process to gain fair and adequate compensation for her husband, who is the victim of such a terrible crime? Exactly what does she have to do?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, I'm not at liberty to discuss particular situations. I understand that there is the victims of crime fund, which is available and has been accessed, as I understand it, and that goes some way but doesn't go, perhaps, far enough. We have to look at whether there are ways – and I have to talk with the Solicitor General about that – that we can deal with the victims of crime fund parameters to see whether they can be extended. At present it doesn't look like that's possible without changes to legislation or regulations. So we have to review that.

I do know, Mr. Speaker, that while Mrs. Miller is receiving bills with respect to care on an ongoing basis, there is no pressure being put on with respect to the payment of those bills. So while the fact that she's receiving the bills will weigh heavily on a person's psyche, she I think does have some comfort in knowing that there is nobody actually pursuing payment of those bills at this time.

I need the time to continue to see what we can do, because whether we should or not, we do not have a program in place to deal with the unique circumstances of this particular tragic incident.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then my question will be to the Premier. Will the Premier take it on to make this particular case a priority for his government to resolve as soon as possible?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. Government House Leader and Attorney General has indicated that he is investigating this case, plans to give it his utmost attention. It is a matter that certainly is of priority to the wife of the victim involved and, I would suspect, a matter of priority for the Attorney General. I would suggest to the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition: let the Attorney General do his work. Let us deal with it as government, and we will make sure – this is an undertaking – that the wife of the victim will be treated fairly, and the victim will be treated fairly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Commercial Fishing Industry

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Commercial fishing is very important on some lakes in my constituency. I've been hearing from fishing operators about the compensation program and other changes to the commercial fishing industry. This seems to have taken a long time to develop, so I wonder if the minister can tell us whether real progress is being made on this program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is a very good question, a very important question. In fact, like the hon. member says, the process has been around for a long time. I know that in 1990-91 the process started. The commercial fishing industry itself is a very important industry in Alberta for a lot of fishermen, although it's a reasonably small industry. It's about $5 million. On the other hand, the sport-fishing industry is about a $350 million industry. So we always have to keep the balance.

What we are proposing here, Mr. Speaker, is to reduce the number of commercial fishing licences. Presently there are over 800 commercial fishing licences, access to 34,000 100-yard nets. What we'd like to do in Alberta to keep the balance is reduce that to about 200 licences, which would hold approximately 18,000 100-yard nets, so that we reduce the pressure on our lakes.

We commenced the program in April. To date over 340 individuals have applied for the compensation package. This process will take three to five years to process, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is for the same minister. What steps are being taken to allow commercial fishing operators to appeal decisions that they feel are unfair or biased with regard to the compensation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is a very good question and very important for those people involved in the process. The whole package was developed jointly with the commercial fishing industry. One of the things that they identified as the process moved forward was: will there be an appeal system? It's such a complicated process. Will there be an appeal system for those people that may fall through the cracks in the process? We did put an appeal system in place.

Rev. Abbott: My last supplemental is also for the same minister. How is his department going to ensure that our fisheries benefit from this initiative?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Like I said, the number of lakes that we have in Alberta to start with is about 800 to a thousand. It's not like Saskatchewan and Manitoba, where they have a lot more lakes to do commercial fishing and sport fishing. Therefore, we have to be very proactive in managing our lakes.

In fact, this spring we introduced the barbless hooks, as one example. We increased the commercial fishing licence to try and reduce, through the compensation program, the number of commercial fishermen. We ran some pilot projects and other projects like, for an example, improving the spawning areas of the fish by removing some beaver dams. It's working very well.

Hamelin Creek Culvert Project

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, the Hamelin Creek culvert project had $2.8 million in cost overruns. My questions today are to the Minister of Transportation. Will the minister table in the Assembly supporting documentation for the cost overruns?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we'll provide the hon. member whatever information he requires on this particular project, whatever he requests.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: did the minister consult an engineering firm other than the original firm after the slide to the site occurred?

Mr. Stelmach: The process is that not only is there a consultant assigned to a particular project, but it's also reviewed by our department officials. In this case, Mr. Speaker, it was a geotechnical issue. Once the earth was opened up in placing the culvert, there was additional remedial work that had to be done, and we had to follow up on it to ensure that the culvert was placed correctly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: are members of the Treasury Board required to remove themselves from the approval process for projects that have cost overruns originating from their departments?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, every department is issued a budget, and we operate within those budgets, and at the end of the year the spending of those budgets is also reviewed by the Auditor General. So there are very significant processes in place. The policies are followed by not only cabinet but government as a whole.

Achievement Testing

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Learning. Recently the Department of Learning announced the intention of retesting at grade 4 certain students who did not do well at provincial achievement exams at the grade 3 level. My question: if this is such a necessary and good idea, why was the initiative so poorly received by school boards and teachers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, in answering this question, I believe the hon. member should have the rationale as to why we're considering doing this. The reason, quite simply, is because there are grade 3 students who, when they do the achievement tests, do not pass the achievement tests, who are not up to grade level, who are not to grade standard.

Mr. Speaker, included in the Learning Commission is a recommendation that all students shall succeed, that all students should learn. What we're attempting to do is to ensure through remediation that this 10 or 15 per cent of students that are not up to grade level are up to grade level by the end of grade 4. So it is extremely important for us first of all to have in place a remediation package so that we can work directly with these students, and that will be done with the particular school boards. Subsequently they need to have an exit exam to ensure that at the end of grade 4 they are up to grade level.

The reason, Mr. Speaker, why it was so poorly received, I believe, is because of the way it was put out. It was put out in a leak from my department. It was something that was not ready to be put out at that particular time. It's very unfortunate when these leaks do occur.

As the hon. member fully well knows, this is an optional exam this year. The way we introduce all curriculum is optional first. We test it out there. We will be field testing it this year to see if this is the actual exam that is going to benefit, if it's the actual exam that is going to work to help improve the learning of students who did not learn in kindergarten to grade 3.

Mr. McClelland: Well, given that there was a leak that got it out in the first place, what is the department doing to get teachers and educators onside so that this worthwhile and good initiative is well received and does what it's intended to achieve?

Dr. Oberg: That's an excellent question, Mr. Speaker. What we will be doing over the next year is working with school boards, working with teachers to evaluate exactly how successful this initiative has been and will be. I feel very strongly and I think all government members here feel very strongly that every child must succeed in our school system. This is one way that we can ensure that we can show that our children will succeed.

Access to Motor Vehicle Information Database

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The War Amps isn't getting co-operation from private registries to meet the requirements set out by Government Services to allow them to continue accessing driver information for the key tag program. While the War Amps charity struggles to access registry information beyond 2006, the province is allowing most parking lot companies access to that very information. My questions are to the Minister of Government Services. Why is the bar being set so high for a proven charity that raises money for amputees, particularly child amputees?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, this question came forward in the House a couple of weeks ago, and we have worked with War Amps over the years to provide access to the motor vehicle database for their very valuable charitable fundraising purposes. We know the benefits that it gives to young people across this province in terms of making sure that their prosthesis is funded by that particular organization.

Nonprofit groups have been denied access to the motor vehicle database because there are about 8,000 of them across this province, and all fundraisers would love to have access to this. Because of War Amps and their very worthwhile project, keeping in mind the protection of privacy that is required by Albertans and is required in law, we made a special exemption for War Amps. We developed that exemption to give them access to the database until the year 2006, and in between now and 2006 we will work on a consent-based approach so that Albertans can consent to having their names and addresses added to that database that will be developed by War Amps. So we're not denying War Amps anything. As a matter of fact, if anything we are making a special exemption to accommodate War Amps at this time.

It's unfortunate that today I got a letter from War Amps saying that they were going to walk away from the discussions about consent. I have sent them a letter as of this morning asking them to reconsider that. We are still going to appear at the table to try and work this situation out with War Amps, but between now and 2006 they get total access so that they can put their database in place.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister: given that the department is accepting signs in parking lots as implied consent, will it accept a sign at registry offices or a statement on vehicle registration forms as implied consent for the War Amps key tag program?

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have a partner in this, and it's called the Alberta association of registries. We have 226 registry offices across this province. Part of the negotiation that we would work through with War Amps and that association, because this kind of initiative would involve registry agents' offices, is one of the things that we had hoped to put on the table. It's going to be very difficult to put that on the table if War Amps is not at the table working with us.

I'm hoping that my letter to them today will convince them to come back to the table and work these kinds of arrangements out. The consent-based form that we're looking at would have to be agreed to by all parties. It's not our initiative. This is an initiative where Albertans can participate in a charity of their choice.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: will the minister instruct registry offices to co-operate with the War Amps in order for the charity to meet the department's requirements to obtain registry information? Will they put the sign up?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, when you go to park your car in somebody's parking lot that is owned by them, they have an investment into the land, they have an investment into the equipment, they have an investment into the parking arrangement, and they have a fee to be paid for you parking in that particular lot. That is considered a private parking lot in this province. When you go there and you decide to park in that parking lot, you do so based on their rules, and we want to make sure under these new regulations that the rules are very, very well laid out before you gain access. By gaining access and going into a parking lot, then you have given consent that you go into a parking lot knowing the rules and the regulations by which you're parking.

The reverse of that is the situation with War Amps and getting Albertans' consent to have their names put on their database. They're completely different issues, although they are both based on consent: consent to go in to park your car based on the rules and the regulations, consent to have your name and address given to a charity based on the fact that you know that the charity is going to have your name in their database. So it's consent based, Mr. Speaker.

Labour Relations

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For many years the Merit Contractors Association has been lobbying the Tory government to further tilt the playing field in their favour when bidding on construction contracts in competition with unionized contractors. [some applause] Something obviously supported by many here. A particular target of the Merit Contractors are market enhancement recovery funds, or MERFs. For the past year a Tory-dominated committee has been studying the issue, and this report has now been submitted to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: given that nonunion contractors are only looking for an advantage vis-à-vis unionized contractors when bidding on construction projects, why is the minister allowing nonunion contractors to dictate changes to the Labour Relations Code?

Mr. Dunford: Well, I think he's just a bit premature with his comments, and it might indicate more than that. Yes, I have received the report. Yes, we are looking at issues of both salting and MERFing. Yes, we will have the government response in the fullness of time.

Mr. Mason: Same old answer, Mr. Speaker.

Why would the minister even consider interfering in the marketplace by ruling out MERF funds, thereby giving an unfair advantage to nonunionized contractors bidding on construction projects?

Mr. Dunford: One of the . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Dunford: I think that one of the key notes of this government, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that we respond to issues that are brought forward. We take a look at them, we analyze them, and then we make a response. Sometimes it's: hey, this is not an issue, and we're not going to deal with it. Sometimes we say: hey, this is an issue, and we will deal with it, and here's how we'll deal with it. We're currently in that area of the process right now where we're still looking at recommendations, and we will make a public announcement at the time the government response is ready. It is not ready right now. So scream and holler all you want; you look good on TV.

Mr. Mason: I'd like to thank the hon. minister.

Given that this is the last day this Assembly will sit for nearly six months, can the minister outline the process and the timeline he plans to use before finalizing the changes, if any, to rules around MERFing and salting in the construction trades?

Mr. Dunford: Way too early to make that kind of commitment. We still have to deal with the government response.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Calgary Regional Partnership

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The city of Calgary has taken the initiative to join with other municipalities in the area to form a regional partnership, which will be formally announced tomorrow. My first question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Can the minister please explain the benefits of this partnership and what he's doing to support it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is exactly right. The Calgary Regional Partnership is made up of actually 15 municipalities. As I see the young students here today where they work together hand in hand with each other, really this regional partnership is about working together, coming together, collaborating, co-operating to eliminate duplication, and at the same time stretching the tax dollars at the municipal order of government in a way that best serves them. I want to say that tomorrow we're going to be announcing 700,000 Alberta tax dollars going towards this regional partnership, because it is a very good initiative in stretching that dollar further and helping those municipalities that are involved.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can he tell us if he's prepared to fund other partnerships outside the Calgary region?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's important to say that we want to avoid duplication in terms of what is taking place. I also want to say that there are so many municipalities involved in this initiative. I failed to mention that the cities of Airdrie, Calgary, Bighorn, the Tsuu T'ina First Nation, Chestermere, Cochrane, and the MD of Foothills are involved. You may ask me: who else is involved? Strathmore, Turner Valley, Redwood Meadows, Canmore, Black Diamond, the MD of Rocky View. They're all involved.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that the capital region, here in Edmonton, also has an important initiative. The central region also has an initiative. They're coming together, working together, collaborating together to eliminate inefficiency so that we can stretch that dollar to best serve our citizens at the municipal order of government.

Achievement Testing

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government's proposal to test grade 3 students who fail to meet a satisfactory standard again at the end of the fourth grade has parents and teachers upset. The pedagogical reasons are lost on almost everyone. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Why, if the government wants to help these children, do they not put in place a diagnostic test at the start of grade 4 that could then be used to plan instruction?

Dr. Oberg: That is part of our strategy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. If you stay here long enough, good things happen.

My next question is to the same minister, Mr. Speaker. Why, when only 28 per cent of Learning Commission workbook respondents supported testing at grade 3, has the government added another test at grade 4?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the issues, I think, that every MLA has heard about, that every person in Alberta has heard about and certainly wants, is that they want all children to succeed. Indeed, the Learning Commission's report is Every Child Learns; Every Child Succeeds.

Some of the people, Mr. Speaker, who are not succeeding are those people in kindergarten to grade 3 who are not at grade level by the end of grade 3. Typically in a provincial achievement test about 10 per cent – 10 to 12 to 15 per cent – of these kids are not there.

It's our job, as the people who control the learning system, as society controls the learning system, to ensure that these kids have the ability to read.

Quite simply, as the hon. member stated, there needs to be a diagnostic test to find out the question: why are these students not learning? Why are they not at grade level at the end of grade 3? Then there needs to be an exit exam at the end of grade 4 which will determine exactly: have they come up to grade level? Have they gained the skills that are necessary in order to compete in the world? Have they gained the necessary skills?

Mr. Speaker, one of the most important things that is shown is that a lot of those people who have problems later on in life, whether it's in school, whether it's in life in general after graduation, are people who did not pick up the basic skills in kindergarten to grade 3. That's what this test is about, and quite simply that's the rationale behind doing it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister: is this the first step in a move to have an achievement test at the end of every elementary grade?

Dr. Oberg: No, Mr. Speaker, it isn't. Quite simply, what we are doing here is we are attempting to identify a specific population that has had problems that is not at grade level, and we're attempting to do something about it. I think everyone in Alberta wants every child to learn, every child to succeed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Centennial Project Funding

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Community Development recently announced new centennial funding for municipalities and community-owned legacy projects. While this is welcome news for communities in my constituency, I've heard concerns about the short timelines to apply for the funding. My questions are to the Minister of Community Development. Given that the municipalities and not-for-profit groups were only notified a few weeks ago about this new funding, why wasn't more time given for the application deadlines?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, thank you, hon. member, for the question. Mr. Speaker, I think the fact is that not-for-profit organizations in the province and in municipalities have been waiting since March 2 of 2001 for the next phase of the centennial program to come around. During the past three years of that window we have heard from about 1,200 potential applicants and informed them that at an appropriate time we will announce phase 3 of the Alberta centennial legacies grant program. We have stayed in touch with them, so it's not as if those particular groups for that program haven't been informed along the way that we were expecting to make progress quickly. That particular program carries about $16 million, and it has an application deadline of June 15.

The other program, very briefly, is the centennial municipal per capita grant program. That one is almost an automatic grant program that will go out to every incorporated municipality in the province of Alberta, and it has an application deadline of June 30.

Now, all of these figures were contained in the budget announced back in March. We've done the best we can to get it out there quickly. The centennial is coming quickly, and we wanted to respond as quickly as possible.

Mr. Broda: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: what process will the minister use to determine which projects will receive centennial funding?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, all projects will be evaluated against the same criteria of merit and ability to accomplish the project, the ability to attract the necessary matching requirement of funds. We're looking for applicants to provide two-thirds, and we will consider up to one-third to a normal maximum of about $2 million under the centennial legacies phase 3 grant program. Other than that, we will also look at those areas of the province that have not yet received any of these centennial legacy grant funds, and then other related criteria will apply. In a nutshell, that's basically how the process will work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Court Interpretation Services

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ensuring access to court is important to all Albertans. For some men and women whose primary language is not English having access to a language interpreter is critical to ensuring them a fair trial and clear understanding of the laws of our land. I have raised a concern before with the Minister of Justice and Attorney General about the unchanging 20-year-old funding rate paid for language interpreters by Alberta Justice. So my question today: will the minister please provide members of the Assembly with an update on what his department has done to review the current fee structure for the Provincial Court interpreters?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Access to justice is a very, very important part of our business in the Department of Justice, and making sure that people understand the process and understand what's happening in court is integral to that. I agree that interpreters play an important and essential role in the courts by ensuring that language barriers do not impair the court's ability to take all relevant testimony and evidence into account and, also, that language barriers do not bar an individual from understanding what's happening to them or for them in a court of law.

This hon. member has raised this question with me a number of times, both in the House and in estimates, and I can say to him that we try very hard to make the resources that we have in the Department of Justice go as far as we possibly can. We continually try and bring on new initiatives, but continuing the provision of the infrastructure and the operation of the court system and the rest of the process does take up a lot of resources.

We're constantly reviewing those. We have a committee which is looking at witness management practices. We've asked that committee to look at the issue relative to interpreters, and we hope that we will get from that a recommendation as to what the highest priorities are to ensure that Albertans have access to justice and that language is not a barrier to access to justice.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can the minister advise if there is anything that can be done now within the current fee structure to address the concerns of interpreters?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We try to make sure that we have competent interpreters in court. If there's a concern about the availability of a competent interpreter based on the monies that we have available to pay, we can adjust the remuneration on a case-by-case basis, and we do that analysis and make that adjustment.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

Hon. members, before I call on the first of four for Members' Statements, let me just say wow. That was very, very good this week, assisting the chair in allowing hon. members to participate. On Monday we had 13 members that could participate; Tuesday, 14; Wednesday, 14; and today, 15. That's an average of 14 a day, or 56 members that could participate. That's really very, very good.

Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour and privilege to introduce some guests that I have here today from Brooks. These ladies and gentlemen are from the Holy Family Academy. The teachers that are present are Wayne Lorenz, Mike Fleck, Reg Orich, and Shannon Hurley. The parent helpers, who give an incredible amount of support especially in this particular school, are Denise Amundson, Moe Bell, Rob Bartusek, Caroline Tilley, Theresa Paproski, Debbie LaRocque, Stan Waddell, my neighbour Treena Ramsay, Tracey Waddell, Mrs. Peeters, and Elsie and Robert Craig. The total number of visitors that are here today from Brooks is 70. They're the ones wearing the brilliant orange shirts in the gallery. I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of our Legislative Assembly.

Chestermere Lake Middle School EarthKAM Project

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to be able to rise today and offer my sincere congratulations to a group of 36 enthusiastic students from Chestermere Lake middle school and their five staff advisors led by their teacher, Mr. Brian Jackson.

Chestermere Lake middle school is the first school in Canada to participate in the International Space Station's EarthKAM project. EarthKAM is a unique educational initiative that allows students the opportunity to control an on-board camera mounted on the International Space Station. The initiative is sponsored by NASA's Johnson Space Center, the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, the University of California in San Diego, and Dr. Sally Ride, the first American woman in the space program.

The week-long International Space Station EarthKAM missions occur about once every three months, and during each mission participating schools arrange their own mission operation centre, which consists of student teams involved in taking photographs every hour of the mission, charting, recording, and verifying photos of Earth as seen from the International Space Station.

The program helps students learn to recognize and conduct research on features of the Earth in addition to locating the exact geographical location of the images used in maps and atlases. The student requests are collected, compiled, and up-linked to a computer aboard the space station, and the EarthKAM digital camera takes the photos, sends the images back to the computer, and then back to the International Space Station EarthKAM computers on the ground. These photographs are then made available on the web site to the schools as well as to the general public.

Mr. Speaker, I'm so proud of this group of students, their teachers, and the entire Rockyview school division for making science come to life and want to recognize them in the Assembly today for being accepted as a participating school in this great educational opportunity. I wish all the students good luck today in their endeavours as they're doing this while the rest of us earthbound mortals continue to do our work down below the space station.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Canmore IceCats Atom A Hockey Team

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take this opportunity today to recognize a tenacious and talented group of young constituents who have proven that hard work is often rewarded. The Canmore IceCats cleared the benches and mauled their goalie when they captured the provincial atom A championship on home ice recently.

It was the first time in 22 years that Canmore was chosen as a venue for a provincial hockey championship, and the local team didn't disappoint us. They skated away with an 8-2 win over the Morinville Snipers in the championship game.

Curtis Azevedo, Landis Burr, Alex Cartwright, Owen Ferguson, Davis Fleischer, Marcus Messier, Nils Moser, Ken Naito, David Norris, Jordan Pauls, Luke Philip, Simon Philip, Tanner Sautner, Luke Simpson, and John Stevens exhibited much skill as a team as the IceCats outscored their opponents 58 to 18 during the five games they needed to capture the provincial crown. The team was coached by Peter Philip, Luke Azevedo, Ron Sautner, and Mitch Messier, while David Fleischer was the team's manager.

The five-game winning streak capped an amazing run that the team experienced leading up to the provincials. The IceCats strung together 27 wins in a row before competing for the Alberta title. The last time the team experienced a defeat was in November 2003.

This team deserves to be congratulated for their team effort and their ability to focus on a common goal. Undoubtedly, it was the focus that was a major contributor to this amazing achievement.

In addition to the IceCats team I would also like to congratulate and commend the Canmore Minor Hockey Association and its volunteers for the fantastic work they did in making sure the tournament was a first-class one.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

2:40 Government Accountability

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This spring session of the Legislature has made one point very clear: it's time for more accountability from this government. The Alberta Liberals have responded with some guidelines for the government to follow. I'll call it six steps toward greater accountability.

One, the government should bring in a lobbyist registry so the public knows who is meeting and getting the ear of the Premier, his ministers, and staff.

Two, bring in rules on how taxpayers' money is spent on hosting. Alberta should introduce rules like Ontario's, which set guidelines and define appropriate spending and prohibit lavish dinners and spending on alcohol.

Three, Alberta has a freedom of information act. It's time to use it properly. Taxpayers and their representatives, such as the Official Opposition, should be able to obtain information from the government without the artificial barriers of delay, costs, and omissions from the Premier, his ministers, or staff.

Four, the government should be more accountable for how it spends taxpayers' money on travel. Most Albertans are careful with their own money. They expect the same caution from government.

Five, all information on government expenses should be accessible, detailed, and released in a timely manner. We suggest posting on the Internet.

Six, don't mix government business, party business, and pleasure. The government must clearly account for what source of money it uses for what activity.

An Alberta Liberal government would follow these six simple steps. Will the current government?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Democracy in Alberta

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In this House I've often spoken about the need to strengthen democracy in this province through such means as all-party policy committees and proportional representation. In light of the events over the last few weeks and days I think democracy needs a lot more to be done in this province now.

A week ago the Premier made comments that seemed to many to support Pinochet's bloody 1973 coup, which ended a long tradition of democratic rule and governance in Chile. This week the Premier deepened the insult when he said that Chilean socialists had brought the unintended consequences upon themselves. The implication was that supporters of the democratically elected President Allende had brought Pinochet's brutality upon themselves and that the victims of torture and abuse deserved retribution for electing a government committed to democracy and social justice.

One thing the Premier could have learned but didn't from his recent trip to India, Mr. Speaker, is unconditional respect, respect without reservation for the electoral choices citizens make in a democracy. This week's comments show a chilling lack of respect for democratic processes, and Albertans must wonder what other ways of avoiding or submerging democracy are supported by the Premier.

Mr. Speaker, this week a local radio station played a harmless prank on the Premier. Within a day the station had not only apologized but had produced $1,000 for a charity of the Premier's choosing. This timely act of contrition stands in stark contrast to the Premier's belligerent refusal to offer a sincere apology to the thousands of Chileans who fled their homeland because of fears of disappearances, torture, and murder at the hands of Pinochet's regime.

On behalf of the New Democrat opposition I would like to echo and amplify calls for a sincere and full apology to Alberta's Chilean community by the Premier. I would also suggest that the Premier consider making his own thousand dollar contribution to a charity of the Chilean community's choice. It is the least he can do to show regret for his affront to democracy in general, to Chilean democracy in particular, and for his apparent approval of Pinochet's brutal coup.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, today I rise to table responses to questions raised during Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development budget estimates in Committee of Supply on April 19. These were questions that I was unable to respond to at the time. Therefore, I'm ensuring that they get the answers, and I've forwarded these responses to the Leader of the Opposition as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the great pleasure of tabling copies of a letter congratulating Kent Gigliuk, Paul Waisman, Josh Cockburn, Adam Peter, and Jordie Weich, all members of the Red Deer Heritage Lanes junior boys team for winning the YBC five-pin national championship in St. John's, Newfoundland, on May 3, 2004. This Alberta junior boys team is coached by Greg Gigliuk. They will display their gold medals at their home club, Heritage Lanes, in Red Deer. I know that we are all very proud of the accomplishments of Alberta's junior boys team.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling this afternoon, and it is documentation from the Alberta Construction Association in regard to MERFs, or market enhancement recovery funds.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of a special report from the British publication Guardian Weekly's internet edition called Guardian Unlimited, published on March 3, 2000. The document entitled Victims of a Brutal Regime bears witness to the 3,197 people who were tortured, murdered, or simply disappeared in Chile during Pinochet's 17-year regime.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies of an open letter dated May 11, 2004, from Patricia Pasten addressed to the Premier regarding his recent remarks on Pinochet. Ms Pasten states that the Premier has insulted the Chilean community and she is awaiting a public apology.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

2:50

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a letter from Kim Robinson, who is a tourist from Ontario who visited the GuZoo Animal Farm in Three Hills and noted that "the overall state of the facility was one of disorder," that animals didn't have potable water, and a number of other observations while she was there.

Thank you very much.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk on behalf of the hon. Mr. Norris, Minister of Economic Development, the report entitled Securing Tomorrow's Prosperity: Sustaining the Alberta Advantage.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. In accordance with Standing Order 7(5) I would ask the Government House Leader to please share the projected government business for the upcoming week.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is no projected government business for the upcoming week. We anticipate that this might be the last day of the session. The Order Paper is clean.

Privilege Inflammatory Language

The Speaker: Hon. members, yesterday at the conclusion of the Routine just prior to Orders of the Day there was an exchange between hon. members, and at that point in time the hon. Minister of Finance indicated to the House that she would be rising today on a question of privilege.

Standing Order 15(2) indicates that a member wishing to raise such shall give notice. I view that as notice given, so it meets the intent if the hon. Minister of Finance wants to proceed.

Mrs. Nelson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise under Standing Order 15(1) to raise a point of privilege pertaining to comments made in this Assembly yesterday afternoon, May 12, 2004, by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I refer to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, sixth edition, page 25, and Erskine May, 21st edition, page 69. Both of these authorities clearly confirm that a member should never feel harassed in the performance of their duties.

Yesterday I was harassed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Mr. Speaker, during the publicly televised question period in this House the member opposite questioned my performance as a minister of the Crown. In posing his question, he referred to a statement allegedly made by me during my appearance before the Public Accounts Committee earlier in the day.

As chair of that select standing committee of the Legislature the member opposite has a special responsibility to report to this House on the actions and activities of the committee. A member of the Assembly who is appointed chair of a select committee is held to a high standard of truth and integrity because of their position of privilege. Furthermore, there is an expectation that he will report on those activities in a manner that is fair and accurate. In fact, Mr. Speaker, it is his obligation to do so.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday in his question the member opposite failed to fulfill any of those expectations or obligations. In deliberately doing what he did, he has inferred and compromised my abilities to function as a minister of the Crown and, as a result, deliberately misled this House and the viewing public about my statements earlier in the day in Public Accounts.

I refer you, Mr. Speaker, to page 1389 of Hansard, dated May 12, 2004. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar stated:

The Finance minister in an astonishing display of mismanagement admitted to the Public Accounts Committee this morning that she fumbled the ball on skyrocketing auto insurance rates when she indicated that she didn't know her department was rubber-stamping rate increases that led to a record high 59 per cent rise in auto insurance premiums for average Albertans.

Now, I refer to the Hansard from the Public Accounts meeting of May 12, 2004, at 9:05 a.m. In response to a question from the Member for Edmonton-Centre about the number of insurance rate increases approved by the Automobile Insurance Board in 2002 I replied:

That's why I brought the issue forward, and that's why we're making a change. That's not acceptable. That's why you saw in here that we already identified that we had a problem. We've got to make a change because that's not an acceptable process, watching those kinds of increases occur without challenge. So we're going to have to regulate. When I saw this happen, we started to make the correction at that point.

That's the Hansard Blues transcript of my comments to the Public Accounts Committee, Mr. Speaker.

Clearly, there's absolutely no similarity between the Hansard Blues record of what transpired in Public Accounts earlier in the day and the misleading and inaccurate portrayal uttered by the member opposite during question period yesterday. Not only did the member opposite distort the comments I made during Public Accounts, but he misled this House by providing erroneous information that clearly is not on the record from that meeting. Further, Mr. Speaker, that erroneous and misleading information was broadcast live on television throughout the province.

There can be no doubt that this was deliberate and premeditated. Yesterday as he rose in this House, the hon. member clearly read from his prepared script as he proceeded to misrepresent my earlier statement. He didn't just ad lib from the top of his head; he had it written down in advance. By his deliberate actions, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite has breached my privileges as a member of this House.

During the normal give-and-take of a question period it's not uncommon for the debate to become heated and for words to fly across the Chamber that question the performance of a minister. However, it is entirely a different matter for the chair of a select standing committee to rise in this House and report that a minister has made self-incriminating comments to that committee. It is also a different matter when the chair of that committee declares to this House that statements were made during a meeting of the select committee that clearly were not.

Mr. Speaker, you have pointed out to all members of this Assembly that when a transgression occurs, a sincere apology from the member responsible is traditionally accepted by the offended party, and that is certainly the practice of this House. But I would submit that the words offered by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar fell well short of what could be considered sincere.

This chair of the select committee made his allegations on live television for all to hear, not to mention the school groups watching from the galleries. His meagre words of contrite apology came well after the televised question period, only when the members of the House and a few gallery guests were gathered to see that the record was set straight.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that the chair of a select standing committee of the Legislative Assembly should be held to a higher standard of conduct than this. Therefore, I hope that you will find that a prima facie case of privilege does exist in this matter and that I may proceed to have the Assembly assist me in clearing my name of this accusation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my role as the House leader for the Official Opposition I have to say that I am surprised to hear that the minister is bringing a case of privilege given that the remarks from Edmonton-Gold Bar were clearly withdrawn and an apology was offered at the first opportunity to do so. That appears in the Hansard for May 12, 2004, on page 1397. So as a student of parliamentary process my interest is piqued on how a point of privilege can be called on comments that have been withdrawn and an apology offered.

Additionally, I was expecting that should a privilege case be brought by the minister, notice according to 15(2) of the Standing Orders of this Assembly would be followed. I understand that the Speaker has already made comments on that, but I will, begging the indulgence of the Speaker, note that 15(2) says

A member wishing to raise a question of privilege shall give written notice containing a brief statement of the question to the Speaker and, if practicable, to any person whose conduct may be called into question, at least two hours before the opening of the sitting and, before the Orders of the Day.

I expected to see some sharing of that notice in a written form with the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

In fact, I note that this was upheld during a case of privilege that was brought in April of 2003. If I refer to the pages in Hansard between 1240 and 1244, the Speaker in fact reprimands a member of the opposition for not having provided that written notice to the person that was involved and named in the privilege. So I would argue that proper notice was not extended according to the intent of Standing Order 15(2).

Now, I did my best to take notes while I listened to the case that was presented by the Minister of Finance, but as this is the first time I've been able to hear the full content of the accusation, I would refer to Standing Order 15(3) and 15(4) and ask that the response on behalf of the member be heard on the next sitting day of the Assembly. I cite two examples of precedents for the Speaker in delaying the response on behalf of the member, those being the 29th of April, 2003, appearing on page 1288 of Hansard, and also one from the 19th of November, 2002, appearing on page 1387 of Hansard. That will allow me time to review the citations that have been brought forward by the Minister of Finance and to be able to vigorously answer and respond on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I would ask the Speaker's support in delaying that response to the next sitting day.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Anyone else want to participate or offer anything today? Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I would like to participate, but if it's to be put over, I would prefer to participate after we've heard the response.

The Speaker: My statement was: anybody else today?

Well, our privilege rules are very, very clear, and Standing Order 15(6) indicates that the Speaker may allow such debate as he deems appropriate in order to determine whether a case is before us. It would seem to me that the hon. Minister of Finance has moved today on the matter in which she has chosen to move and has presented that document to the Assembly to be added to the words issued in the Assembly yesterday, and on the next occasion on which this Assembly shall meet, opportunity will be offered to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to present his case. This matter will be dealt with by the chair.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 32

Appropriation Act, 2004

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to move third reading of Bill 32, the Appropriation Act, 2004.

[Motion carried; Bill 32 read a third time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Much earlier than I had anticipated. However, pursuant to Government Motion 7 agreed to February 18, 2004, I move that the Assembly stand adjourned.

The Speaker: Hon. members, just a bit of information for you before we declare that motion in place. With the private members' bills having been passed this spring, under our rules of democratic reform established in September of 1993, we now have arrived at an extremely unique situation anywhere in the parliamentary world in that this Assembly has now provided that 37 private members' public bills will receive royal assent. That is incredible.

It's approximately 97 minutes after 1:30 o'clock today. So in this session, the Fourth Session of the 25th Legislature, we will have now sat for approximately 12,225 minutes, and this will be the third time since 1971 – only the third time since 1971 – that all government bills appearing on the Order Paper have actually been dealt with, the other two years being 1996 and 2001.

So, hon. members, pursuant to Government Motion 7 agreed to on February 18, 2004, the House stands adjourned.

I'd like to take this opportunity to wish you all a very safe, safe summer.

[Pursuant to Government Motion 7 the Assembly adjourned at 3:07 p.m.]
