Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know that to be true. I have not heard from enforcement officers in the commission that feel that they were not able to provide information. As I indicated, the investigation, as I understand it, first dealt with the complaints that were raised primarily by staff in the commission. Secondly, the investigation included discussions with persons who would have been named in the initial investigation, and that report was brought forward as well. So I have no knowledge of that.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back to the Premier: given the vital importance of the Alberta Securities Commission to the economy of this province and the nature of this controversy, has the Premier personally inquired into the operations and the concerns at the Alberta Securities Commission?

Mr. Klein: The answer to that question is no, Mr. Speaker. It's in the good hands of the Minister of Finance.

The Speaker: The second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Infrastructure Needs in Fort McMurray

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Rod Love is a lucky man. He draws paycheques from private companies while flying high on Alberta government planes. He pockets salary from a company proposing a doomed rail link to Fort McMurray and consulting fees from the government's million dollar study of the same pricey railway scheme trumpeted by the Premier. My first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. What was Rod Love, a private consultant, doing on a government plane to Fort McMurray last summer?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think probably the best way I could answer that is that you can talk to Rod Love and ask him.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: what portion of the government's million dollar rail study did Mr. Love receive in fees for service?

Mr. Klein: It's my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that Rod Love, a consultant at the time, consulted with the consortium that proposed the rail on communications, and it was limited to that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: will the Premier abandon further royalty reductions in the form of roads for royalties and admit that building and paying for public roads is the government's responsibility?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is alluding to Fort McMurray, we are looking for various ways to accommodate needed infrastructure in that area. That's what recent meetings have been all about, to find ways in which government and industry can work together to provide that infrastructure.

The Speaker: The third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Human Resources and Employment and the Premier announced the minimum wage increase some months ago. It still isn't happening. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Will this government guarantee that this basic increase to $7 will occur within our Alberta centennial year?

Mr. Cardinal: I can say yes, Mr. Speaker, but in addition to that I want to clarify for the member because it is an important question. It's a good question. The fact is that we advised the House here about three weeks ago that we would spend a bit of time consulting with the foods industry, in particular, that may be impacted in this particular change. We've done that. We've completed that. We've received close to 2,000 different recommendations. We are assessing, and we will announce the results in the very near future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A question to the same minister. With industry lobbyists pushing for this, will the government consider that servers in fast-food establishments and restaurants are not worthy of the full minimum wage?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, that's exactly who we are consulting: the food industry. They have responded. There are 2,000 submissions that have come in. We just finished that process. I am now in the process of tabulating the stuff and then reviewing, and then I'll go forward through the normal process we do to change policy.

Mr. Backs: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. The lobbyists are also pushing for youth to have a lesser rate. Will the government consider that youth saving for their education and helping their families should get a lesser minimum wage than other Albertans?

Mr. Cardinal: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, like I said, we announced that the minimum wage is going to be $7. We said that we will announce later as to how that may be implemented. That is still in place. We're always open to look at other options. We will continue monitoring the situation, and if there are future changes that need to take place, of course this government always listens, and we'll make the changes.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Protection for Persons in Long-term Care

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today Elder Advocates of Alberta held a public forum at which over 50 people, including family members of seniors in care, told heart-rending stories about the appalling conditions that elderly residents in long-term care are forced to endure. While seniors are being routinely overmedicated and neglected, family members are often intimidated into silence. Two years ago Alberta's Ombudsman outlined serious systematic failures in government oversight, yet the neglect and abuse continue. Mr. Speaker, I'll table that at the appropriate time. My question is to the Premier. Given that two years ago the Ombudsman report said that the responsible department takes the position that "it is exempt from the rules of natural justice," why has the government still not acted to protect seniors against abuse and neglect in long-term care facilities?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I take exception to the preamble, but I will have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness respond.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I too take exception to the preamble.

There's a generalization there that is not appropriate. Let me make a couple of remarks and then remind the Assembly that the Protection for Persons in Care Act, should anybody choose to make a complaint or file a complaint about it, resides with Aids to Daily Living in Seniors and Community Supports.

Over the past year we have increased funding. There have been some modest increases. Over the next three years we hope to provide assistance for further funding for long-term care. In terms of the drugs and the overmedication, as I've responded earlier in the House, it's appropriate, if people have concerns about that, to file them either with a physician or with the facility themselves or, in fact, let the minister know. We would be pleased to follow up on those cases.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that the Ombudsman two years ago clearly substantiated the complaints of residents, why has the government still failed to implement a proper process for investigating abuse and neglect in long-term care?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe that there is in place a proper process, and I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we have been launching a number of initiatives, among those a comprehensive front-line staff training program. We'll have over 7,000 front-line staff trained by the end of June 2005. Should there in fact be circumstances where staff or administration in these facilities do not have the capacity to administer proper care, then those staff members should be reported.

Mr. Speaker, I think that at the time that we are able to talk about our new budget, we'll be able to talk about more supports still to long-term care facilities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Ombudsman found that the department responsible for protecting persons in care failed to investigate complaints, why is the government allowing these dreadful failures to continue?

[Two ministers rose]

Ms Evans: We're all eager to tell you that, first of all, if there are complaints, very specific complaints, they could be tabled. The legislation currently resides with the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

But may I just invite the hon. member – and I like him a lot – to just sit with me and talk to me about it, and I'll do what I can to resolve the problem? [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's true that we do have a 45-second guide, but sometimes too much information.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Live Hog Exports

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the U.S. International Trade Commission determined that Canadian live hog exports to the United States are not causing material injury to American producers. My first question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Does this mean the end of trade action against our producers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been very good news, the ruling by the United States International Trade Commission, on a 5-0 vote, indicating that there is no harm done to American producers. Because the vote itself was unanimous, we anticipate that there probably won't be an appeal, but we have to wait a further 30 days to see if there will be one because that's within the regulations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. What will this ruling mean for Alberta's hog producers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I would like to reiterate what my colleague has said: this is great news for Alberta's hog producers. While the $25 million in tariffs is going to be returned, it's unclear as to how much our producers will receive of that.

More importantly, Mr. Speaker, where do we go from here? The concept of dumping is questionable, especially when it's applied to industries such as agriculture, which is subject to production cycles and those sorts of things. In that light, we've proposed that antidumping rules be modified to take into account the cyclical nature of the industry, and that's going to make things a lot more equitable for our producers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Long-term Care Standards

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have just returned from that very disturbing press conference held by the Elder Advocates of Alberta, and to me it was very clear that the Protection for Persons in Care Act has shamefully failed Albertans. My question would be to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Has this government established who is ultimately accountable, not just has the authority to make recommendations but actually accountable, for the quality of life of vulnerable residents in long-term care?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, I inherited the responsibility for the Protection for Persons in Care Act when I became minister of this portfolio. As you know, this act was proclaimed in 1998. It was the first of its kind in Canada, and it has led the way. It's a model for the rest of Canada.

Hon. member, I am currently reviewing the 13 recommendations that were in the legislative review report, but this is not a matter of just amending the act to do an amendment. I'm also working with the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Health and Wellness, and the Minister of Children's Services in order to develop a comprehensive, co-ordinated approach to the Protection for Persons in Care Act.

I want to say this, and it's based on the earlier question as well. We take allegations of abuse very seriously. It is really important.

It is. It is important that persons that are living and being cared for in our public facilities are safe, that they're treated with dignity and respect. I can tell you this, Mr. Speaker: if this legislation does not meet those goals, I will make the necessary amendments to ensure that the act does.

Ms Pastoor: I certainly thank you for that answer. It is encouraging to hear that there are multimistries involved with this. However, my question would be: is there going to be a single ministry and I mean really accountable not only for the staffing but for the way these institutions are run?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've said in the Assembly before that the Minister of Health and Wellness and I are working very closely on long-term care standards, which, hon. member, you're familiar with. The way those standards are now, there are a number of very good organizations in the province that are assisting us with those standards, and that would include the Alberta Senior Citizens' Housing Association, the Long Term Care Association, regional health authorities, our departments, and we are going to come forward with those standards together. But you know, hon. member, in that term "long-term care" there is care, but there is the board and room and housing part of it that is in my portfolio.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Yes, I'm very aware of how far reaching this problem is.

I guess my third question, please, if I might, is: when will the government be strengthening the Nursing Homes Act? Again, hopefully we'll have those province-wide standards that you're referring to.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in terms of the Nursing Homes Act we have currently got a review of all of the standards pertaining to our long-term care facilities, including the Nursing Homes Act, and we will provide that information accordingly. I've got a number of pieces of it, but at this time I think we've covered the topic with the comments made earlier in response to the second question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Photoradar

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are some very disturbing rumours flying around that Alberta's picturesque highways may soon become Alberta's picture-risk highways; in other words, that photoradar may soon be coming to provincial highways. Can the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation either substantiate or put the lens cover on this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For the sake of brevity the answer to that question is no, absolutely not.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you very much. Given that recent news articles have also talked about adding demerit points to photoradar tickets, can the minister point out if that rumour has any merit?

Dr. Oberg: Again, Mr. Speaker, very, very quickly, the answer is no, we will not be giving demerits. For those of us who have teenage children who drive our vehicles, we certainly do not want demerits put on photoradar.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Oil Well Drilling on Crown Land

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently members of the Lubicon First Nation confronted construction crews clearing bush for oil and gas development in areas designated as buffer zones according to the Grimshaw agreement. According to the Lubicon chief, the oil companies in question, with deep connections to this government, did not consult the band prior to the crews moving into the area. My first question to the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development: given that your ministry was given $6 million to enable consultation with First Nations for these purposes, what are you doing about this failure?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, let me discuss the whole issue of consultation. We started in about June 2003 to be able to start developing a consultation process. Since that time, we've had a lot of different meetings with the various First Nations and, as well, with industry, and we're at the point now of making sure that we do a number of things.

One is that with the money that was given to us – each different ministry was given the money so that we could begin to build a capacity within government. We've been able to do that, and that has helped us to be able to work with the First Nations on building their own capacity. Since that time, we've also received money to be able to ensure that that capacity within First Nations would be also dealt with, and we have put money into what we call traditional land-use studies. Those traditional land-use studies are to be able to map where the First Nations have traditionally done their work, traditionally done their traditional activities.

The Speaker: I'll turn it over to the hon. member for a supplementary.

Dr. Swann: To the Minister of Environment: will you, sir, support an environmental impact assessment before the projected 512 wells are drilled in areas in and around the Lubicon nation?

2:00

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I want to say that EIAs, as they're referred to, environmental impact assessments, are very important tools to ensure the environmental standards that we enjoy here in Alberta. Certainly, when they are used with the parameters and conditions to make that determination, we are certainly not afraid in any way, shape, or form of having an environmental impact assessment if the parameters warrant such. What I would do is ask the Minister of Energy to supplement relative to the EUB process on that point.

The Speaker: Well, we'll proceed to the third supplementary.

Dr. Swann: To the Minister of Energy: given the disregard for Lubicon rights in these developments, will your ministry stop these particular developments in the area until these issues have been addressed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to be able to respond to that. In this case I have been informed that the company has moved some pipe and has done some clearing around a well site. That is very standard procedure. This is in anticipation of the spring thaw. They have not yet gone forward to the Energy and Utilities Board, which is a requirement, but they will. That will come forward in due course. That does require public consultation, so there will be a process of public consultation before any licence is actually issued for drilling, as is the normal procedure.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Métis Hunting Rights

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like many members I am hearing constituents' concerns about the impact of the interim Métis harvesting agreement on the conservation of Alberta's fisheries and wildlife. Their message has been clear and in my opinion accurate. Good policy should be based not on the rights inherited from ancestors of some Albertans to harvest wildlife, rather good public policy should be based on the responsibility of all Albertans to conserve our wildlife for our children. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. If a lake or river has size and number limits on the fish that can be taken or if a lake or river is open only for catch-and-release fishing, do these limits apply to Métis fishermen, and specifically does the IMHA allow Métis netting of rainbow and brown trout on the Bow River?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If Métis are fishing with a rod and reel, then a licence is required, and all the provisions under legislation and regulations and the rules that are set out do apply. When Métis are wanting to use nets for subsistence fishing, then they require a domestic fishing licence – they do require a domestic fishing licence – and they must comply with conservation measures and provisions such as lake closures. There is no domestic – no domestic – fishing allowed on the Bow River. Domestic fishing is only allowed on a limited number of lakes and rivers such as the Peace and the lower Athabasca rivers in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental question is to the same minister. Can the minister tell us how many new gill net licences have been issued to Métis since the interim Métis harvesting agreement was signed? I have been sent a document circulated . . .

The Speaker: I think the hon. member has asked the question already.

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, I can reassure the hon. member – I have some stats – that over the past five years there have been some changes in the numbers of domestic fishing licences. In the year 2000 we issued 2,194 licences, in 2001 we issued 1,919 licences, in 2002 we issued 2,003 licences, in 2003 we issued 1,941 licences, and in the year 2004, which was last year, we issued 2,139 licences overall. That's just an example of the total number of licences over the past four years since before this interim agreement came into place, and you'll see that there's not a great variance.

Dr. Morton: My second supplemental is to the same minister. Can you clarify, please, for the House: are those individual fishing licences, or are those netting licences?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, we have limits in place and records in place to make sure that we know what kind of limits individuals holding licences have. They can apply for one body of water, or if they need to go for three bodies of water, then they have to have three different licences. There are also limits on setting mesh sizes and limits on the number of nets that are allowed, and we have records on that as well. You can be assured that we will be tracking the conditions on net checks as well as surveys and voluntary reporting. Our job in Sustainable Resource Development is to abide by the Supreme Court decision.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Security in Seniors' Apartment Buildings

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. About a year ago it came to light that hundreds of legitimate residents of two subsidized seniors' buildings in Calgary's East Village were being terrorized and intimidated by drug dealers, crack addicts, and sex trade workers who were getting into and in some cases even living in the buildings. Murdoch Manor and the George C. King Tower are owned by the province. Despite assurances by the seniors minister at the time that action was being taken, residents are still complaining that things have not improved. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: when is the government going to do something about these appalling living conditions?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, I haven't heard of this incident at all. That's news to me, hon. member, and I'd look into it for you, but in the meantime I'd ask that the Solicitor General reply regarding the justice issues that you raised.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. In fact, my constituency assistant attended there this past Sunday and had breakfast with the seniors at the facility. There are a number of issues that we're dealing with there. One of the greatest issues is the fact that some of the residents, as well, that reside in the premises are allowing for the side doors to be opened, which is allowing some of the street people and/or the drug traffickers and the prostitutes to enter into the building. So we're working with the management company, Trinity Foundation, to look at ways that we can ensure the security of the residences there, but as well ensure that some of those issues regarding safety of the building itself are going to be there in the future.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, to the Solicitor General then: how does the government ensure that regulations regarding safety, upkeep, and residency in the seniors' buildings it owns are enforced?

Mr. Cenaiko: Another very good question, Mr. Speaker. Again, the safety and security of residents in any building, whether it's a government building or whether it's in their own residence or whether a condo or an apartment building, the residents themselves have to ensure that they all keep a watchful eye out for their neighbours and other residents and the facility that they're living in. The police are there to assist them in reporting any incidents that are of a suspicious nature. As well, the crime prevention units of the police services throughout the province are there to assist in developing plans and action plans with regard to ensuring that their residences are safe.

Mr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, then to the Solicitor General: with all of that in place, will he explain why seniors in these two buildings apparently cannot be protected from the criminals getting inside?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, I think I answered that the first time, Mr. Speaker, in the fact that if we can ensure that the residents that reside in the buildings don't allow those doors to remain open, then we'll be able to ensure that that premises is secure. One of the things that they're going to be looking at is the exit doors and that, but if the residents inside are allowing those doors to be open, we have to have a clear message to them not to open those doors.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Private/Public Partnerships

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year's budget foolishly committed $1.2 billion over three years to finance provincial infrastructure through P3s. Since then skyrocketing costs forced the government to abandon two flagship P3s, the Calgary courthouse and the southeast Calgary hospital, which are now being built the old way through public financing. The third P3, the southeast Edmonton ring road, is only going ahead because the government misled the public when it said that it would be slightly cheaper to build a P3 when, in fact, it's going to cost tens of millions more. My question is to the Minister of Finance. In light of this dismal track record and the Auditor General's scathing criticisms, will the government do Alberta taxpayers a favour and abandon its failed P3 strategy in next week's provincial budget?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, of course, Mr. Speaker, you would not nor would the member expect me to elucidate to this House at this time about next week's budget. However, I am prepared to make a brief comment on P3s. What I understand from the Auditor General is not that you abandon P3s, but that you use a very rigorous process when you're determining whether a P3 is the appropriate vehicle. I will certainly say that we take that advice, and that is the process we use.

Mr. Stevens: Point of order.

The Speaker: Okay.
The hon. member.

Mr. Martin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. My question is a follow-up to the minister. Why does the government stubbornly cling to the faint hope that somewhere, somehow P3s will work when the overwhelming evidence both here and elsewhere is that P3s cost more and make government less accountable to taxpayers?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think we cling to P3s. However, we have said that they may be – may be – an option in some projects. What is important is that you have a very rigorous process to determine if, in fact, that is an instrument you would use. I would suggest by the number that have gone forward that the process is rigorous and that we are not entering into a great number of them, but there may be advantages in entering into a P3.

If there was time in the 45 seconds, I would ask the minister of infrastructure to elaborate on the reasons for using a P3 on the Anthony Henday.

The Speaker: But this is question period, not debate period.
The hon. member.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that this rigorous process is going to cost us $40 million in Edmonton, how can the minister say that this is a process that's good for the taxpayers of Alberta?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the question that I would like to ask the minister of infrastructure to speak to.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the hon. member has misled this Assembly on two different occasions on this question, and quite frankly I'm tired of it. He said that we've got $40 million more. Sorry, that is just not true. He also stated that we misled the public. There has not been a more rigorous process on P3s in the world than what we went through on the particular P3 for the Anthony Henday. It's time that these people came clean and actually stated the truth in this House.

The Speaker: Well, we have another point of order here, so this should be quite interesting later when we debate this.

But at the moment we're moving on to the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Self-managed Care for Seniors

Mr. Shariff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have been approached by two seniors experiencing very similar concerns. Today my question pertains to an 81-year-old senior who has been wheelchair bound for the past eight years, is diabetic, suffers from high blood pressure, and has kidney problems. In 1999 Alberta health care paid $2,053 per month to provide care for this senior in a nursing care facility. In 2000, after nine months of stay in the nursing home, she opted to move out into a seniors' apartment, accessing self-managed care funding. She received $912 per month for that service. In 2002 this amount was reduced to $847, and now it's been reduced to $331 a month.

My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister shed some light on the self-managed care program and advise this House on how the department determines the appropriate and adequate amount of self-managed care resources for seniors who opt to live on their own instead of in a nursing home?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, since the Broda report the conclusions led us to try and provide options for seniors, either within home-care settings or within other facilities. Self-managed care, when it is perceived that either the guardian or the person is capable of undertaking that care, is done through an assessment by the health authority and funding through the health authority. It differs from home care in that the health authority funds and manages and provides it, but self-managed care is done when the seniors themselves purchase that type of care.

In the case of this particular senior, like other seniors that may be mentioned in this Assembly, with private details on a confidential basis I will follow up.

Mr. Shariff: Given that the example I gave is not an isolated incident, will the minister conduct a review of the self-managed care program to determine if Albertans receive adequate self-managed care funding for their conditions?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, all Alberta regions have self-managed care, and advanced home-care systems in Canada include Albertans as among the best. We have an appeal process in Calgary through the Calgary health region, and the client may wish to appeal that following the review that I would assure would be conducted. Other than that, to conduct a blanket review of self-managed care would do a disservice to some of those care facilities and the self-managed care that is going on in an exceptional fashion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Missing Health Records

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The last annual report for the Ministry of Health and Wellness shows the department blew its health information and accountability budget by $4 million, bringing the total spending on health information and accountability to $53 million. This year they plan to spend about the same. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. How could the ministry spend over $50 million in the name of protecting health information and still lose data on 670,000 personal health records?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, at Public Accounts when we talked about the risks of IT and the assessment of how we manage risks in IT, there is a plethora of systems that help support over $8 billion worth of health circumstances. The link with this tape is totally unfair in that the tape has been managed by a contractor. Internally how we manage data and collect data and store data and look after patient records is quite a different circumstance.

Ms Blakeman: Still in your department.

Again to the same minister: given that this ministry alone, not including regional health authorities, Government Services, and other departments, has handed out $99 million to IBM over the last four years, what penalties will IBM face for losing the confidential information of 670,000 Albertans?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, as yet the investigation by the Privacy Commissioner has not been completed, and whether or not they have been the persons or the corporation that has effectively lost the tape, I cannot make that determination. But we will provide details at such time as it's appropriate.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. My final question, to the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency: when can we expect the report determining the effectiveness and reliability of outsourcing critical health management issues, such as the handling of personal health records?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I can't tell you exactly when there would be a report done on that. The Privacy Commissioner is investigating all of these records missing right now, and I can assure you that our ministry is internally looking at everything right now, at whether or not all of our policies are being followed on protecting how all of these records are transferred or moved around. If any improvements need to be made, I assure the hon. member that they will be.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Battle River Water Strategy

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Battle River runs through my constituency, and along with many other Albertans my constituents rely on the Battle River for their water and livelihood. In recent years lack of moisture has compromised water levels of the Battle River, and as such there must be a better way to manage water levels in the Battle River to ensure the availability of water in the future. My question is to the Minister of Environment. If water is truly a shared resource, as we've heard, what steps are being taken to protect the economic interests of Battle River users?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is absolutely correct in terms of this resource, which I've referred to in the past as blue gold. Presently we are working on the Battle River water management plan. I want to say to the hon. member that this plan is very important, where we are having all of the affected parties involved so that when we are doing the correct work in managing this important resource, we do it right the first time.

Mr. Johnson: My second question is to the same minister. What will be done in the field this year to address our immediate concerns over water availability?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, again another important point. An immediate impact of the water strategy is the decision to raise the weir which is called Driedmeat Lake, which I know the hon. member is familiar with, by about 60 centimetres this fall. Now, this is going to improve the water storage available to the city and to the county of Camrose. So it is an example of where we're working together with the management plan but also with the important stakeholders so that we can balance the economic, the social, and the environmental needs in this particular region.

Mr. Johnson: My final question to the same minister: why hasn't the department acted on requests from some groups in the river basin to simply divert water from the North Saskatchewan River to the Battle River?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, diversion is costly, and environmentally it is a complicated solution, but it doesn't mean that we will rule out any option in terms of doing this right, as I mentioned. Staff from the ministry will continue to work with the Battle River watershed advisory group. I want to assure the hon. member and this House that in terms of analyzing the options available, we'll ensure that we continue to conserve this blue gold that's important to all of us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Room and Board for Forest Firefighters

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Department of Sustainable Resource Development has stated that they will be charging men and women who fight forest fires $450 a month for room and board. These men and women provide an extremely valuable service to the people of Alberta, risking their lives to protect public forests but, more importantly, human lives and communities. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: given that this policy will result in a substantial decrease in pay for firefighters to perform the same job as last year, how can this government justify the reduction to the men and women who risk their lives to get the job done?

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Department of Sustainable Resource Development about a year and a half ago had discussions with staff regarding an increase for meals and accommodations that would put us more in line with other Canadian provinces. We manage our firefighting resources to provide the best possible firefighting situation for Albertans and to protect Albertans' livelihood, protect Albertans' property. Changes to the department's meals and accommodation have been addressed so that there is equity among staff at this particular time, and a consultation was done over the last year and a half to bring that in line.

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Speaker, given that the camp conditions have been compared to Third World conditions, will this minister implement standards for living conditions with the extra money from the supplemental request that he's asked for?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, staff can choose to be accommodated in whatever way they wish. They can choose to be in a department staffing situation or bring their own accommodation. For department staffing situations we charge $150 a month, or $5 a day, and to have meals provided, we look at $300 a month, or $15 a day. These are seen as reasonable rates.

In terms of the accommodation we try to make improvements to that, being that these are mobile accommodations, and keep them to standards that are acceptable.

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Speaker, given that this policy will no doubt have an effect of chasing away the most experienced firefighters, how can this government assure Albertans that their lives and communities will not be at risk?

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's the ultimate objective of Sustainable Resource Development in our firefighting efforts: to make sure that property and people's livelihoods are not at risk. We have emergency firefighters that are well trained, and the staff are dedicated to making sure that the policy of preserving people's livelihoods is definitely a priority for them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Application Process for Seniors' Benefits

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When Albertans become seniors at the age of 65, they are entitled to assistance from many programs, both provincial and federal, but it is necessary for them to complete a large amount of paperwork. The necessary forms are confusing, and often it is necessary to contact the governments in order to get details to complete the form to send to the government. Making an error somewhere within these forms could easily result in a loss of benefits. My question today is to the hon. minister responsible for seniors. Given that all this information is already on file with either the provincial or federal government, why is it necessary for the senior to provide it again when applying for benefits?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can understand the hon. member's concern that some seniors may be challenged when they're filling out our seniors' benefit forms, but I want to assure you that we work very hard to make certain that those forms are streamlined, that they're easily accessible and usable for our seniors. Having said that, though, hon. member, we do require a consent to be signed by our seniors, and that's so that we can use the information for the benefit program as well as protect the privacy of the information that the senior has given us.

Also, Mr. Speaker, once a senior applies to our program – and in answer to your question, hon. member, we do keep the name and address and personal information – if they make reapplication for a form, we do not require that they resubmit that information.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pham: My second question is again to the same minister. Is there any place that the elderly may go for one-stop assistance to help them through all these forms that they find themselves faced with?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, just very easily said, we do have a seniors' information line, hon. member. There are approximately 13,000 calls per month to that line. When a senior does call, they will receive information such as where the one-stop offices are located throughout Alberta. There is one here on Jasper Avenue in Edmonton, for example, and one in the Kerby Centre that you may refer your constituents to, hon. member. There's also a directory of organizations on our ministry website. But I'd like to leave you with that number for the seniors' information line, and it's 1-800-642-3853.

Thank you.

Mr. Pham: My third question is again to the same minister. Do we have plans to work with the federal government to try to streamline the process and get rid of duplication by providing a one-stop service centre for the elderly?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do have one of the most generous packages of seniors' benefits in Canada, yet we also know the importance of maintaining the confidentiality of the applicants' information. Having said that, hon. member, we do provide basic information to other ministries. We do provide that information as well to the federal government. If a senior applies for old age security, for example, through the federal government, the federal government lets us know that about the senior, and then that senior receives an information package about our benefits.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to invite the hon. member, who I know, my friend from Calgary-Montrose – he graduated at the top of his class at the University of Calgary in computer sciences – to meet with me . . .

Some Hon. Members: Time.

Mrs. Fritz: . . . and I'd work with you, hon. member, if you can think of another way to streamline the database.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Government Contracts

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General reacted in his last annual report to instances of sole sourcing and noncompliance with policies for some of the $210 million worth of contracts entered into and managed by the Alberta Corporate Service Centre. To the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency: does the Alberta Corporate Service Centre now comply with the Auditor General's recommendations for all contracts?

Mr. Ouellette: That's a very good question, Mr. Speaker. We take any Auditor General recommendations very seriously, and at this time we are working very hard on adhering to all recommendations that the Auditor General has given us.

Mr. Elsalhy: Okay. To the same minister, then: how did the process for awarding contracts become so lax in the first place? Why weren't the rules followed to the extent that the Auditor General had to react?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I think the last instance that I heard from the Auditor General is that he was very happy with how we adhered to responding to what he had stated.

Mr. Elsalhy: Okay. To the same minister, then: will an audit be done for all contracts that are still in effect to ensure that this centre and the ministry are not exposed to the implications and the risk stemming from the recommendations not being met?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I think we'll leave that up to the Auditor General at the time. We will adhere to his recommendations, and if he gives us any more, we'll follow them.

The Speaker: Hon. members, thank you very much. Today we were able to get 17 different members into the question period. From time to time there were some interjections from hon. members saying "time." Well, just let me go through this as an elucidation, particularly for those members who said "time."

The first set of questions, initiated by the Leader of the Official Opposition, 3.5 minutes; the second set, 2.5 minutes; the third set, 2.5 minutes; the fourth set, initiated by the leader of the ND opposition, four-plus minutes; question set number 5, the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, two minutes; question 6, 3.5; question 7, 1.5 minutes; question 8, Calgary-Mountain View, 3.5; question 9, four minutes; question 10, Calgary-Currie, was three minutes; question 11, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, 4.5 minutes; question 12, Calgary-McCall, 2.5 minutes. There seemed to be a lot of interjections at that one, yet it was 2.5 minutes in all. Question 13, Edmonton-Centre, two minutes; Wetaskiwin-Camrose not quite four minutes; question 15, Edmonton-Decore, three minutes; question 16, Calgary-Montrose, 3.5 minutes; and Edmonton-McClung, well, it was about three minutes maximum in all.

So actually there was pretty good brevity. But it just seems that the correlation between the interjections for time is disproportionate to the amount of time used in the question period. This is a strange revelation.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, would you like to clarify something for all your colleagues in the House?

Mr. Backs: I'd like to apologize, Mr. Speaker, for distributing a letter during the order. I wasn't aware that that shouldn't happen during Routine.

The Speaker: Hon. members, just in a few seconds from now we'll call on, first of all, five introductions, and then we'll deal with Members' Statements.

Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly an exceptional group, what I consider some of the finest resources here in Alberta, and that's our students and our teachers. They've come here from Magrath high school. They left early this morning to participate and see what goes on here at the Legislative Assembly. Their goal as the Magrath high school Zeniths is to always strive and reach for the highest point, which is done both by their teachers and the students. Their academic and sports awards over the years, I believe, would be second to none in comparison to other high schools by number. I'd like them to please stand and receive the warm welcome from this Assembly, the students from Magrath high school, including my son Tanner Hinman.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier I tried to introduce my group, and I'm pretty sure they're now here in the public gallery. So once again I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very eager and interested social studies 10 class from NorQuest College. There are 11 students here today, and they're accompanied by their instructor Michelle Tracy. I will be going back out to talk to this group tomorrow, so I'm sure that they're looking forward to the discussion then and that they've enjoyed question period and will enjoy the few minutes more they have to stay in the Assembly. I'd ask them now to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, did you actually tell the whole world your wife's age today?

Dr. Oberg: No, I didn't, Mr. Speaker. I did invoke legislative immunity, but I did not say her age. Legislative immunity will only go so far.

Mr. Speaker, every once in awhile there's someone who moves to Alberta who's really going to make a true difference in our lives here. The introduction that I have to make today is one of these individuals. About a year ago we had the absolute pleasure of having Mr. Lance Carlson, the president of the Alberta College of Art and Design, move here, and he is now in the members' gallery. I would ask him to rise to receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. While question period was ongoing, I noticed some gentlemen come into the members' gallery who I'd like to introduce. They are representatives of the Canadian Wheat Board, led by their chairman, Mr. Ritter. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

U of A Sports Achievements

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to recognize the great achievements in sport accomplished this year at the University of Alberta. There were countless examples of athletic success, but I'd like to point out a few in particular. The University of Alberta Golden Bears basketball team led by coach Don Horwood completed their season with an impressive record. They were tough to beat at the 2005 Canada West Championships, capturing the title with a convincing 72-54 victory over the University of Victoria.

The Pandas women's hockey team also had an incredible season with a record 28 wins and only one loss, sadly in the final championship game. For years they have been the number one women's hockey team in the Canadian Interuniversity Sport league.

The top-ranked Golden Bears volleyball team captured their fourth CIS title in March of this year with a 3-2 win over the Trinity Western Spartans. This was the closest national final in recent history.

Finally, on March 28 the number one seeded Golden Bears hockey team took the 2005 CIS Telus University Cup in Edmonton. In a nail-biter the team came from behind to overcome a two-goal third-period deficit to defeat the Saskatchewan Huskies. This ended a stellar year for the Bears hockey team. Led by coach Rob Daum, the team creamed the competition with 38 wins and only five losses.

Mr. Speaker, it's my honour today to rise and congratulate the many athletes, coaches, and support staff at the University of Alberta. I'm proud to say that my constituency of Edmonton-Riverview is home to these great teams. Their dedication to sport and athleticism truly makes Edmonton the city of champions. Congratulations again to the University of Alberta for achieving such success in sports.

Thank you.

Sue Moleski

Mrs. Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise today in the Legislature and recognize a very outstanding individual who has touched the lives of hundreds of young Albertans. Sue Moleski, a teacher with Banff elementary school in the town of Banff, was named one of the best teachers in Canada when she recently received a Prime Minister's award for teaching excellence. This award honours achievements of exceptional educators who instill in their students the love of learning. Sue was chosen from among 236 nominees for her leadership, innovative teaching styles, and her impressive dedication to youth.

As a parent who was fortunate to have children in her classroom several years ago, I have seen first-hand Sue's commitment to the education of her students and her positive influence on their learning environment. Very simply, she loves kids, and she loves teaching.

Teachers have an incredible impact on the lives of children they instruct. They can shape minds, stretch imaginations, and challenge their thinking. We can all think of a specific teacher, a special mentor who had a dramatic impact on our own lives and is partly responsible for who we are today. For many students of Sue Moleski she will be that teacher. She knows how to inspire students as they embrace math, music, and the fine arts while also encouraging an appreciation and understanding of the cultural and ecological richness of their surroundings. Like all great teachers, Sue has that ability to bring out the best in her students and get them to believe in themselves and their own abilities. Much of a teacher's success is measured by the number of young lives they touch. In winning this award, it is evident that Sue has touched many, and we are fortunate to have her in a classroom in our province.

Please join me in congratulating one of Alberta's and Canada's exceptional educators, Sue Moleski.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

2:40 Teen Drug Addiction

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, there are two ways to fight the growing drug problems that exist in our society. One is through education and prevention, and another way is through drug treatment. Drug abuse is a growing problem and is worse than what we experienced in the '80s. Two facts to prove this point: in 1992 6.5 kilograms were confiscated going across the Mexican/U.S. border; in 2001 1,360 kilograms of methamphetamine were confiscated. That's 6.5 and 10 years later 1,360 kilograms. This is a growing problem.

In a truck wash that my family runs, we were told about the problem of getting young men to drive trucks or just to get truck drivers. In one company 27 men applied for the job and went through a drug test. Of the 27 none passed the drug test. Only the 28th applicant was suitable for driving trucks.

Teens from a decade ago knew more about drugs than teens today, who think they are smarter than the drugs and that they can control them. We must increase the antidrug messages to our youth that include visual shock treatment. We must increase our drug abuse prevention efforts. And for those youth whose bodies and souls are already trapped by drug addiction, we need to give authority to caring parents to be able to step in and help their drug-addicted children when they see that their child who is abusing drugs is creating significant physical, psychological, or social harm to themselves.

Mr. Speaker, a parent has written to me pleading for help. You probably heard about the recent youth in Vancouver that killed a 32-year-old victim by swerving out of control behind the wheel of a stolen SUV. His desperate father was on TV last night begging the judge to help him with a stiff sentence so that his son might get professional help with his five-year-long heroin and crack cocaine addiction. The youth also expressed his remorse and apologized to the victim's family, saying that he didn't mean to kill that person but he has a $200 a day drug problem.

Mr. Speaker, the whole purpose of society is to allow each individual an opportunity to have a healthy and happy life. We need to address the problem of drug addiction through prevention, education, and necessary drug treatment. This is our responsibility and our duty towards our children.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

National Child Care Strategy

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Investment in quality child care and development is a smart investment, especially at the beginning of the 21st century. However, Alberta's child care system, particularly in the for-profit sector, is among the worst in Canada. Alberta has the lowest number of regulated spaces in Canada, and waiting lists for nonprofit child care programs grow longer by the day. Child care workers earn less than $10 an hour after two years of postsecondary education. Special needs care and services for aboriginal people and rural communities are lacking.

These problems stem from Alberta's policy to leave child care to commercial operators. Early education development services availability must not be contingent on one's ability to purchase the services. Rather, it must be viewed as a public good and available to all those families who choose to take advantage of it.

A national child care strategy would go a long way toward better nonprofit quality child care in Alberta families. But this government chose to walk away from a national program because they do not want to be accountable for how the funds are spent and want to funnel the money to for-profit child care operators. The care and development of young children, Mr. Speaker, is too important to leave to the marketplace.

One argument this government has used against a national child care initiative is that it would penalize parents who want to stay at home. However, a national child care strategy does not mean that Alberta cannot develop its own policy for supporting parents who stay at home. We could support stay-at-home parents with community playgrounds, nursery schools, and other such services. But the fact is that 70 per cent of families with children under five have both parents in the workplace. These families need and deserve a quality and affordable child care system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition from a number of good Albertans from the communities of Lamont, Tofield, Stony Plain, Sherwood Park, Spruce Grove, and other communities which reads:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been assessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

There are 100 in total.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a petition of approximately 101 residents that says that "We the undersigned residents of Alberta" urge the Assembly to "prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following" Canadians are considered: "Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to submit a petition that I received from 105 concerned Albertans. The petition reads as follows:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been assessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youths under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday I will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Fair Trading (Telemarketing) Amendment Act, 2005

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Fair Trading (Telemarketing) Amendment Act, 2005.

The goal of this bill is to provide Albertans with some relief from telemarketing, especially during their family dinnertime, by limiting the hours that telemarketers can call.

[Motion carried; Bill 205 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Bill Pr. 2

Camrose Lutheran College Corporation Act

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Camrose Lutheran College Corporation Act.

The bill addresses some necessary changes that result from the merger of Augustana University College, formerly Camrose Lutheran College, with the University of Alberta.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 2 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Medicine Hat Community Foundation Amendment Act, 2005

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Medicine Hat Community Foundation Amendment Act, 2005.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 3 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Bill Pr. 4

Brooklynn Hannah George Rewega
Right of Civil Action Act

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Brooklynn Hannah George Rewega Right of Civil Action Act.

Mr. Speaker, a family in need has turned to us for help. I look forward to the debate, the careful consideration, and hopefully the support as this bill moves through the approval process.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 4 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table today the annual report for the year ended December 31, 2004, for the Credit Union Deposit Guarantee Corporation.

Further, Mr. Speaker, I am tabling responses to questions raised during supplementary estimates on March 16, 2005. The responses have been provided to the appropriate members.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Dunford: I have two tablings today. First, I'd like to table the required number of copies of the 2003-2004 Alberta Economic Development Authority activity report.

The second tabling is the 2003-2004 International Offices annual report.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I wish to table two letters from Calgary-Varsity constituent Dr. Irene Kyle that were sent to the provincial Minister of Children's Services and the federal Minister of Social Development in which Dr. Kyle expresses concerns about the Alberta government's lack of support for the national child care system as many of Alberta's daycares are underfunded and of poor quality.

Similarly, constituent Allison Wagner has called upon the government to re-evaluate their position and direct more funding to child care in this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table for the information of the Legislative Assembly a letter that I wrote on April 4, 2005, to the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. It is asking the question: "When did the Edmonton Public School Board apply for capital funds to purchase and set up portables at Kenilworth Jr. High?"

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of the labour force survey from Stats Canada for the months of January 2004 to February 2005 showing extensive employment in the construction industry in Canada over that period of time; also, five copies of five letters from central Alberta communities from concerned Albertans protesting the use of temporary foreign workers in the oil sands.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the following document on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. The document is the appropriate number of copies of the prebudget document prepared by the Parkland Institute. The report lays out a framework for building a socially sustainable and equitable economy.

I'd like to table copies of a letter dated April 22, 2003, from G.G. Scott Sutton, who at the time was the Ombudsman of Alberta. In the letter Mr. Sutton cites several incidences of administrative unfairness in Alberta Community Development and raises concerns that “the Department believes it is exempt from the rules of natural justice.”

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of an article from the Observer-Dispatch in the state of New York outlining the story of a white-tailed deer recently diagnosed with chronic wasting disease that was served and consumed at the Verona fire department at its annual sportsmen's feast on March 13.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Hancock, Minister of Advanced Education, public postsecondary institutions' audited financial statements, public colleges and technical institutes for the year ended June 30, 2003, and universities and Banff Centre for Continuing Education for the year ended March 31, 2004; pursuant to the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Act the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board 2003-2004 annual report. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Horner, Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, pursuant to the Farm Implement Act the Farm Implement Board 2004 annual report.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the appropriate standing order I'm requesting that the government share with us the projected government business for the week of April 11 to 14.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to provide an outline of the projected government business for the week of April 11, 2005. On Monday, April 11, in the afternoon there will be private members' business: Written Questions, Motions for Returns, and Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders. From 8 to 9 o'clock that evening there would be private members' motions. At 9 p.m. second reading will continue on Bill 16, Bill 23, Bill 24, Bill 36, Bill 15, Bill 38, and Committee of the Whole on Bill 8 and Bill 12.

On Tuesday, April 12, in the afternoon there will be second reading on Bill 23, Bill 24, Bill 36, Bill 15, Bill 38, and Committee of the Whole on Bill 22, Bill 8, Bill 12, and Bill 15. On the evening of Tuesday, April 12, commencing at 8 p.m., there will be Committee of the Whole on Bill 1, Bill 5, Bill 23, Bill 8, Bill 15, Bill 25, and Bill 24.

On Wednesday, April 13, following question period there will be a recess till about 3 p.m., when the Budget Address will proceed. On the evening of Wednesday, April 13, at 8 p.m. there will be under Government Motions the main estimates supply motions and day 1 of 24 of Committee of Supply, commencing with Restructuring and Government Efficiency.

On Thursday, April 14, in the afternoon there will be Committee of Supply with the opposition leaders' response to the budget.

The Speaker: Thank you. Just to the House leaders, if you project this time frame today and in the outline of the agenda next Wednesday afternoon say that there would be a recess to 3 p.m., we still have two orders of business to conclude this afternoon. I think we'll be beyond 3 p.m. You might just consider how this will work in this possibility next Wednesday afternoon.

First point of order, the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Parliamentary Language

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The point of order is under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), and Beauchesne paragraph 484(3) and relates to the first question posed by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, wherein he used the words “misled the public” in relation to a description surrounding the P3 relating to the Anthony Henday project. Beauchesne at the citation given says that members are not to “impute to any Member or Members unworthy motives for their actions in a particular case.” This particular matter clearly falls into that category, and on behalf of the government I wish to say that the imputation is wholly untrue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It looks like we'll have two points of order that will be somewhat similar.

Mr. Speaker, it was my understanding in looking through 23, if I follow what the hon. minister is saying, and my understanding in looking at the unparliamentary language that the Speaker was kind enough to hand out to us, that misleading the public was not ruled unparliamentary. That seems to be the words that we have. I thought misleading the public – I could have said it in different ways, but we believe that this is what happened.

I'll just quote why I said this, Mr. Speaker. In a question-and-answer background, and this was at the time given exclusively to government MLAs, this is what it says. The question-and-answer document states that the cost of building the southeast ring road conventionally is between $452 million and $497 million compared to the $493 million P3 cost. By contrast, another document given to the public and the media on January 25 said that the cost of building the southeast ring road conveniently is up to $497 million. Now, it seems to me that that's misleading the public, and it's there in black and white.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there additional comments on this point of order?

Now, hon. leader of the third party, you rose on a point of order, too, which is almost identical. I can deal with these both at the same time or deal with them separately.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, it was the same term. The difference being in respect to the use by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, it was misleading the public, which is clearly not unparliamentary, and in the case of the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation it was misleading the Assembly, which we believe was unparliamentary.

Mr. Stevens: On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation I would like to withdraw his comments made that are the subject of this.

The Speaker: Additional comments?

Hon. members, this is the first opportunity that we've had this session to have to deal with these words misled, mislead, misleading, or what have you, and unfortunately – and unfortunately – it depends on the context pretty much. Beauchesne 489 says that it is unparliamentary to use words like mislead. The very next section, Beauchesne 490, says that it has been ruled parliamentary to use the words misled, misleading at various times. I provided all members of this Assembly a large document of all the words and all the rulings since 1905 that have applied in this House with respect to this matter.

Then we have our own Standing Orders and our Standing Order 23, which has already been quoted today:

- (h) makes allegations against another member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another member.

Those two both specifically have “another member.” So we go back to the context in which it was used, how it was used in order to arrive at our conclusion in dealing with this today.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview said the following, which led to the interjection from the hon. Deputy Government House Leader:

The third P3, the southeast Edmonton ring road, is only going ahead because the government misled the public when it said that it would be slightly cheaper to build a P3 when, in fact, it’s going to cost tens of millions more.

At that point that led to the interjection.

Well, if we want to then refer to House of Commons Procedure and Practice, Marleau and Monpetit, and if you want to refer to page 526:

Although an expression may be found to be acceptable, the Speaker has cautioned that any language which leads to disorder in the House should not be used. Expressions which are considered unparliamentary when applied to an individual Member have not always been considered so when applied “in a generic sense” or to a party.

In the case of this first interjection the statement used by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview was, “The government misled.” There’s nothing in the quotation that I can see that says that it’s applied to an individual member. So from that wide-ranging interpretation, we would not view this as a point of order.

On the second point, then, utilization of the words by the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, my understanding is that they have been withdrawn, and that would be the appropriate conclusion because those words, in fact, were addressed to an hon. member.

So there would have been a one-for-two or a one-for-one saw-off with respect to this, but the key thing is the utilization of the language in the context. I just really encourage all members to even try and avoid using words like that because that means we just would have saved eight minutes of time by not having used them.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Amendments to Standing Orders

17. Mr. Stevens moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:

Be it resolved that the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta be amended as follows:

 1. Standing Order 7 is amended
 - (a) in suborder (1)
 - (i) by striking out “Recognitions (Monday and Wednesday)”;
 - (ii) by striking out “(Tuesday and Thursday)” after “Members’ Statements”;
 - (b) in suborder (4)
 - (i) by striking out “on Tuesdays and Thursdays”;
 - (ii) by striking out “four” and substituting “six”;

- (c) by adding the following after suborder (4):
 - (4.1) Members’ Statements shall be allocated in proportion to the number of members other than members of the Executive Council in each party represented in the Assembly or as agreed to by House Leaders or, failing agreement, as determined by the Speaker.
 - (d) by striking out suborder (6).
2. Standing Order 8 is amended
 - (a) by striking out suborder (2) and substituting the following:
 - (2) On Monday evening, from 8 p.m. until the vote is called pursuant to suborder (4), the order of business for consideration of the Assembly shall be as follows:
 - Motions other than Government Motions
 - (b) in suborder (3) by striking out “on Monday evening commencing at 9 p.m.” and substituting “on Monday evening after the vote is called under suborder (4),”;
 - (c) in suborder (4) by striking out “shall retain its place on the Order Paper” and substituting “shall be considered”.
 - (d) by adding the following after suborder (4.1):
 - (4.2) Only one motion other than Government motion shall be considered on Monday evening.
 3. The amendments to the Standing Orders in this motion shall take effect on Monday, April 11, 2005.

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader. This is a debatable motion, hon. members.

Ms Blakeman: Yes, it is debatable.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I am rising in support of the government motion. This, in fact, was agreed upon between the three House leaders: the Government House Leader, the Official Opposition House Leader, and the House leader from the third party. I think that what is proposed in the standing order will be of benefit to all members.

Very briefly, what we are coming to is an amalgamation of what we knew as Recognitions, which appeared in one-minute form on Mondays and Wednesdays, and Members’ Statements, which appeared as two minutes on Tuesdays and Thursdays. There seemed to be some confusion over that, so we have negotiated and agreed between us that we would make them all private members’ statements, with the understanding of private members’ statements and the importance of preserving a member’s ability to speak on any topic they felt they needed to express within the boundaries of decorum. We have some Speaker’s rulings and precedents to rely upon if we wish to check exactly what that means. So we will end up having – I can’t remember how many each week – six a day. That’s all been divided out, and there’s a chart that’s accompanying the standing order that lays that all out.

Secondly, to help us to better organize the Monday evenings, when we have private members’ motions debated between 8 o’clock and 9 o’clock and we ended up with a situation where we could have two motions or even three up, we’ve decided to do one motion each night, and if we finish early, the agreement here is that we would go on to the government business, which usually follows at 9.

There were a number of other issues, Mr. Speaker, that we as House leaders were not able to get to. I want to be clear that that is not because in any way did we regard or certainly I did not regard the issues as being any less important than the ones that we are looking at in this standing order change, but simply times being what they were and particularly the availability of certain members, we just couldn't meet often enough to negotiate all of the things that our members had requested us to negotiate.

In particular, I've been requested by one of my members, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, to underline that he had submitted and, in fact, has tabled in this House on a previous occasion his proposals for changing the Public Accounts Committee, which appears as Standing Order 50. I would refer all members that are interested in pursuing this – and, indeed, it is very much worth pursuing – that he has tabled that as a sessional paper, and it would be available through the usual channels.

There have been many discussions over the years about Standing Order 50, which sets out the parameters for the Public Accounts Committee. I want to reassure the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and, indeed, all members of the Public Accounts Committee that the House leaders' inability to have the time to meet on this is not a reflection on the importance of the committee. Certainly, it is on our list to return to it and to negotiate and carefully consider that.

There were a number of things we were looking at. Starting and end times – off the top of my head, I'm sorry, I can't remember all the other things that are on our shopping list still to be returned to and discussed, but just to reassure all members, there is every intention that we do get to that. More difficult for us to do while we're in session, obviously, but perhaps once the spring sitting has risen, we may have a bit more time to arrange the schedules of the three House leaders to meet.

Some of the things that were being proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar were around the ability to meet outside of session, the ability to call witnesses before the committee, the ability to charge the Auditor General to make special investigations and for him to call witnesses, the ability to report directly to the House and to comment on various reports that have come through the Legislative Assembly, and that the committee cannot currently entertain questions relating to the public policies or programs of the government but simply to the numbers that appear in the annual reports. There's also a suggestion that the committee have a budget for research or investigative staff.

So those are some of the issues that have been put before us by that member and, indeed, my reassurance that the report is still in front of us. In the meantime, I urge all members to support Government Motion 17, in which the content is dealing with the harmonization of recognitions and private members' statements and moving to one motion being debated each Monday evening.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak in support of Government Motion 17, and I look forward to its swift passage.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are times in politics – people don't believe this – when we sometimes can agree on some minor things, and hopefully it adds to the House and makes the House sometimes, I suppose, more efficient, although that shouldn't be the prime requisite. Also, we should work sometimes to make it more democratic. So, certainly, all of us as House leaders got together on one day and did this. I would suggest that it would have been helpful if the House leaders could have had more meetings ahead of this session to look at other aspects of what's going on.

The hon. Official Opposition House Leader alluded to Public Accounts, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we would agree that Public Accounts should be changed. I look at the House of Commons and I see the good work that has been done by that Public Accounts outside of the House with all members of all political parties participating in it, and I think that we could learn something from that, where the Public Accounts becomes not as toothless as it is now and when even government members and opposition members can bring issues forward, as they do in the House of Commons. As we know, Mr. Williams, the chairman of Public Accounts, today was issuing a report that flowed from there to do with the particular scandal that's going on. I think we need to do more of that sort of thing, where all members, not just the opposition but all members, can participate in a much more direct way in democracy.

I think we should be looking, Mr. Speaker, down the way if we can get these sorts of agreements on other things, perhaps how we handle question period, perhaps how we do other things in this House, with the goal to be efficient where it makes sense. Right? So we're not just talking that there is some efficiency there but also where it can be more democratic and more democratic for individual members. We believe somewhat that sometimes there is a democratic deficit here for ordinary members. Hopefully, as the Legislature becomes a little more balanced, we can begin to look at some ways that we can add to the power, if you like, of ordinary members.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Government Motion 17 carried]

The Speaker: Now, the three House leaders, just one little bit of clarification – okay? – now that this was done. On Motion 17 that you have on the Order Paper, under item 1(c) can you just sort of verify for me if there is agreement with respect to the allocation of these members, that the three of you have agreed to the allocation of who speaks on what day over a great length of period? Can you shake your head “yes” if you've agreed on that? Okay. So there's no reason for myself and others to spend the weekend trying to figure out the apportionment. Okay. Thank you very much. I appreciate that.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Securities Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate March 23: Mr. Knight]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I concluded my remarks on second reading when I adjourned. What I'm expecting is some pretty constructive debate on this bill given the importance of the Securities Exchange to all Albertans, and I look forward to that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm thankful to have the opportunity to open debate on behalf of the Official Opposition on Bill 19, the Securities Amendment Act, 2005.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, in the government's press release they talk about how this particular piece of legislation will harmonize Alberta's securities regulation with other provinces and territories, what is largely being referred to as a passport system. It will be my representation today that that might be along the lines of some of the comments that were made about the smoking bill the other day when we passed it. In this particular case it might be better to get something rather than nothing at all.

In the research that I've done over the last week or so in regard to the passport system, it appears to me more and more as if really we should have seriously considered the idea of one overarching national commission as opposed to proceeding with the idea of a passport system. I'll speak to that further as we get into the debate this afternoon.

The bill is designed to strengthen various areas in terms of enforcement, and given some of the news, Mr. Speaker, over the last week or so regarding the allegations that have been made at the Alberta Securities Commission as it refers to enforcement and the various reports that we've discussed in this House, certainly I think there is probably a need for some stronger enforcement than what is in the current legislation and perhaps in the current rules and regulations.

It was interesting, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance did make staff available to myself and my researcher when this bill was first introduced, and I would like to thank her for that again. The minister has always been very helpful in that regard, and we do certainly appreciate it. The staff indicated to us at the time that the feedback that they had been getting in developing the legislation was that there was a need for stronger enforcement. In fact, when we were speaking to various stakeholders, including a number of stockbrokers, some staff at the Alberta Securities Commission, various traders, and individual shareholders who buy and sell stocks in this province, there was continually sort of an allusion to the fact that perhaps we needed stronger regulation.

At the time I didn't pay an awful lot of attention to that when we were first doing our consulting. Then as the allegations and the information came forth that, in fact, these allegations were in place and that the minister had asked for reports, everything just sort of seemed to fall into place in my mind in terms of the fact that we had sort of heard these murmurings about a need for stronger enforcement. At the time I wasn't really sure why or where that was coming from, and now it all sort of seems to make a little more sense to me.

So I'm pleased to see that we have in this piece of legislation moved towards some stronger enforcement, and I think that's a good thing. I will be questioning, as we get into the debate at committee stage, whether or not, in fact, the stronger enforcement allows the Securities Commission to address more areas or if it gives them more jurisdiction, more bite, as it were, in the areas that they do now cover. I think that that comes, again, out of some of the comments that we've heard from the various stakeholders as we were consulting in preparation for debating this bill.

Mr. Speaker, the third point that I'm going to refer to – and I've apologized in the past and I will again for sounding somewhat like a broken record although I think it speaks to a pattern that we see with this government – is the whole issue of continually moving more and more items out of legislation and into regulation. When we met, in fact, with the minister's staff, they were quite open that this is something that the Securities Commission has been asking for.

I spoke to some people at the Ontario Securities Commission, and an interesting comment came out of that conversation. They indicated that they had absolutely no difficulty leaving in legislation items such as we're moving here into regulation or rules. They had no difficulty leaving those things in legislation in Ontario.

The reason that she gave was quite interesting, Mr. Speaker. She indicated that in Ontario the Legislature sits far more days than it does in Alberta, and as a result they have not a lot of difficulty in having changes made to legislation when something arises that would be mandating a change. She suggested that perhaps the reason the Alberta commission might be looking to have more items moved into rules and regulations may have something to do with the fact that we don't necessarily sit as many days in this Assembly as the corresponding Legislature does in Ontario.

I found that quite interesting because I've indicated several times that certainly I would like to see us sit more days and longer and deal with as much legislation as possible in the interests of democracy and transparency and accountability as it relates to government. So that was an interesting revelation to me, Mr. Speaker.

Now, if I could just go back to the issue of the passport as opposed to one overriding commission, Mr. Speaker. I know that it's Ontario that was pushing for one single commission, but at this point only a very few provinces have actually signed on to the passport although all of the others, I understand, have signed a memorandum of understanding that they will be proceeding with that. I'm concerned that it doesn't really address the issues that arose when the federal government's Wise Persons' Committee first recommended an overriding commission. In fact, there seems to be an awful lot of support for a commission right here in Alberta from some rather influential people.

So that makes me wonder if perhaps this isn't another example of this government – I'm not going to say picking a fight because I don't think that's quite appropriate. But certainly there's a history over the last 12 years or so, Mr. Speaker, of this government pulling the Ottawa versus Alberta card out of their hat. In fact, the previous Finance minister correlated the idea of a national securities commission to the national energy program and tried to suggest that, in fact, the two were similar in terms of the impact they would have on Alberta. I don't think that was fair at all given the fact that right now Alberta is second to Ontario in terms of the amount of trading that is done in our commission. So I think we have an awful lot of influence in Alberta over what happens nationally.

I'm going to quote from some of the concerns that were raised by people, including some of the ones that I mentioned are Albertans, and I think we should be heeding some of their advice. David Dodge, the governor of the Bank of Canada, has indicated that Canada's international reputation may in fact be at stake in international financial markets, making it difficult for us to attract foreign companies investing here because of the fact that there is at times the belief out there that maybe differing sets of rules across the provinces make for loopholes. Certainly, the idea of the passport is to address that, and I appreciate that.

Now, the Investment Dealers Association, again a rather respected group of people, argued as well in favour of a national securities regulator to replace the various 13 provincial and territorial agencies. Again, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the passport plan that is contemplated by this bill will go some ways toward addressing that but not necessarily all the way.

Now, I mentioned some Albertans, and I would just like to refer to quotes from those people. In fact, Mr. Speaker, it was Gwynn Morgan from EnCana who publicly endorsed the proposal from the Wise Persons' Committee. EnCana, as you know, is one of the largest players in the oil and gas industry, particularly natural gas, and generates billions of dollars of business in this province. I would say that when Gwynn Morgan suggests that we should have looked more closely at a national commission, we perhaps should have been paying some very careful attention to what Mr. Morgan had to say.

Mr. Speaker, Scotia Capital is one of the largest investment banks in Canada. David Wilson says that he thinks we should carefully “consider the need to meet global best practices, investor protection and economic efficiency.” He says that “the case for a single regulator has never been stronger.” Scotiabank, he says, “see the passport model as a substitute for a single regulator,” and in fact he thinks that the provinces “are settling for second-best.” Now, this government time and again talks about doing what is best for Albertans. If we have Scotiabank, one of the very largest investment banks in the country, suggesting that Albertans are settling for second best, that causes me concern, Mr. Speaker, and when we get to committee, I certainly will be asking the Finance minister what her thoughts are on that.

There’s another one here, Mr. Speaker, that I want to refer to. It actually comes from Barbara Stymiest, the chief executor officer of the TSX at the time. This is a year ago now. She’s saying that they have long wanted a single regulator to reduce concern about investing in Canadian markets. She says that “a regulatory system whose rules, regulations and actions are shaped by the needs of all Canadians – because it is accountable to all Canadians – is absolutely vital to shaping an economic future in which all can share equally.”

Now, Mr. Speaker, in this age where free trade is a bigger issue all the time, where the world is literally becoming smaller all the time through technology, where people in Alberta invest not just in Alberta but across the country and indeed across the continent and even around the world, and in fact people from around the world certainly are looking to invest in Canada and, thankfully, in Alberta, I believe we should be taking every step possible to ensure investor confidence.

As I said, it’s been in the news a lot lately, and the minister has assured us that in fact we do only have one set of regulatory investigative techniques used in this province. I certainly have to take her word for that. I unfortunately don’t have the opportunity to see the report that she cites to guarantee me that. If I don’t get to see it, of course that means that investors don’t get to see it, and I’m not completely convinced that it has removed suspicions in the minds of investors. I certainly hope that it will, but I’m not convinced at this point that it has.

There are a number of other really interesting comments made here about political will, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the comment that I am going to refer to comes from the former Minister of Finance. He talks about whether or not one regulatory commission would be the best thing for Albertans and people looking to invest in Alberta. He says that the political will just is not there, and that causes me concern. If, again, it’s been identified that, in fact, a single regulator would be the best thing and political will is the only thing that’s standing in our way, then I think we’re missing the boat by accepting a second-rate system in the passport system. I’m wondering whether or not we shouldn’t in fact be pursuing that single system regardless of political will.

The former minister said, and here’s the exact quote: regardless of whether a single regulator would be good for the country or good for investors, even those from Alberta. This is where he was indicating that Albertans are still sore about the NEP of the 1970s. Now, I’m sorry, but correlating the debate over the way a Securities Commission should be run in the year 2005 really has nothing, if anything, to do with the NEP of the 1970s. Again, if it’s political will that’s getting in the way of what would be best for Albertans and best for investors wishing to put money into Alberta, I think maybe we’re just not working hard enough at that.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to address a couple of items that come out of my reading of the bill, and again I know that when we get into committee, I’ll be looking at this a little more closely. A couple of ideas come out of it. In section 6 we talk about allowing the Lieutenant Governor in Council to “designate one of the members of the Commission as the lead independent member.” It doesn’t really refer to just how much power or what powers that lead independent member might have. I’ll be looking forward to hearing the comments from the minister as far as that is concerned in terms of defining just exactly what the role of a lead independent member would be and just how much power that member would have and who they would report to and so forth.

Another one that catches my eye is section 8 in light of the current situation with the ASC. Section 14.1(1) says that if a member of the Commission resigns or a member’s appointment expires, the Chair may authorize that individual to continue to exercise powers as a member of the Commission in any proceeding over which that member had jurisdiction immediately before the end of that member’s term.

Now, this is opening up all sorts of possibilities in my mind in light of the current situation because, of course, we have a member of the commission who is about to leave early next month, a month today if I remember the date correctly. This clause, if it’s passed, would in fact allow a future chairman to appoint that commission member to carry on in his or her duties until whatever particular jurisdiction that member was working on is completed. It could be years.

In fact, at this point we’re not sure which particular items that member might have been working on. There have been suggestions that that member may have been working on the reports that were forwarded to the minister. In light of the current situation I’m really curious to see how that particular clause might play out, and when we get to committee stage, I will certainly be asking the minister about that one in detail.

Now, I also talked a little bit about the fact that we’re moving more and more legislation into rules, Mr. Speaker. My question will be to the minister, and she can either make note of it at this time and respond later, or when we get to committee stage, perhaps we can debate it. I’d like to know why we can’t harmonize our legislation with other jurisdictions as opposed to moving everything into rules and regulations and then harmonizing rules and regulations with other jurisdictions. If Ontario is comfortable leaving things in their legislation, we could certainly look at the Ontario legislation and harmonize our legislation with Ontario’s legislation as opposed to moving it into rules and regulations.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s with mixed feelings that we talk about this bill. I believe probably, all other things being considered, it’s a step in the right direction, but I think we have some very serious problems with the Securities Commission generally.

I used to work under the Securities Commission with Investors Group as a financial consultant. I can tell you that even back then – that’s five to 10 years ago – there was a lot of dissatisfaction, a lot of people complaining, getting complaints from clients, others, people within the industry that the Securities Commission was basically a toothless tiger, that the Securities Commission just did not do its job. I’m talking specifically, of course, about enforcement.

This has led us to where we’re at today, Mr. Speaker, in regard to the serious allegations that have come forward from the former enforcement director. Mr. Alford has said that there’s a two-tier regulatory system. I know that the minister has said that in her study, their internal investigation, that's not the case. But the reality is that there are a lot of people that know something about the Securities Commission – and I'm sure the minister is aware of this – that believe that's not the case. They're still not satisfied. That's why I think, perhaps, of some sort of public inquiry.

What's happening across Canada – and I'll come to that – is that people are seeing the Securities Commission in Alberta as a bit of a joke, and that hurts all of us when that happens. It hurts investors that might want to come from outside the province to do some investing, and it hurts the small investors here in Alberta. Now, whether that's true or not, if that perception is out there, this is a very, very serious matter, Mr. Speaker. Perception is everything in this business, and the reality is that especially when these rumours are floating around for a number of years and then the enforcement director comes public and says this, this just adds to the fire.

The point that I'm making – and we've had a number of phone calls and e-mails over this; I'm sure the minister has too – is that people are concerned, especially the small investors. The bigger ones will get by. They know how to work the system no matter what security system you have. But a small investor – let's say it's a fledgling company that's going on the securities market, wants to get some capital, and some small investors are interested in it. If all of a sudden they don't believe that there's a level playing field, that the rules are being enforced – and, again, that's the perception out there – they're probably not going to invest. That may be an economic stimulus, that small company in some small town or whatever.

I think that we should take this much more seriously than we have. Sure it's all right for the Securities Commission, you know, to investigate themselves and say, "Well, no, there's nothing to it," but it just begs, just cries out. Then people say: "Well, who is investigating who here? How do we know this is the case? How does the minister know?" As I say, I think that we should take this much more seriously than we have in the past.

Again, the problem with an internal investigation when people are working there: there's that sense of intimidation, Mr. Speaker. If they have a job that's paying pretty well, there are not many brave people that are going to throw that job away and come out if they feel that there's intimidation occurring there. That's just the reality. So if it's some sort of public – and I hate to use the term public inquiry because that's overused – investigation, and the public investigation comes back and it says virtually what the internal report has said, then great. All the small investors are going to say: "Well, I guess it is okay. I can have some confidence in the Securities Commission."

I want to say to the minister that this has not just happened. For 10 years there have been rumours about the Securities Commission in Alberta. You know, we've mentioned the names Bre-X, the Boyle brothers. There's a whole list that have gone through. Part of it is that even when they catch them, they can't get them to the courts. They take off. There are a number of examples of that. So it becomes really toothless there.

For example, Mr. Alford had said at the time – and this is where it becomes dangerous too, not only in the province, but this is going across the country. I'm quoting here from a group that hands out a business magazine in Ontario. It's called Business Edge: Ontario Business News, With An Edge. So this is what's going out right now in Ontario. Mr. Alford says, "The people who are the subject of a (securities) arrest warrant pretty much have to stumble into the police." In other words, even if the force was lax, even if we find them guilty, we never get them to court because there's no way to catch up to them.

He goes on and talks about the Boyle brothers. He talks about Zelitt's absence at a trial in Calgary in March. He didn't show up. He's probably in Czechoslovakia. This is going out across the country about the Alberta Securities Commission, Mr. Speaker, and that's a serious matter.

Regardless of what is happening at the Securities Commission, we have people across the country who believe that the Securities Commission in Alberta is a joke. We have small investors in Alberta starting to believe that. If that's the case, again perception is very important here, and I think the minister would agree. So we have to do something about that perception at the very minimum, Mr. Speaker.

To come to the bill, I think the mover of the bill is correct. When you have 13 different organizations trying to regulate across this country, it becomes very confusing, and it just doesn't make a lot of sense. I believe that there's an attempt in this bill to at least move in the direction of a passport, to simplify it somewhat. Again, that's probably worth doing, but I guess I would say that I'd be for some sort of national securities regulator. I know Alberta has not been for that.

It's not the federal government. They don't want to be there. But surely there could be agreement among provinces. I've had some problems with this, having been here under the Alberta Securities Commission and having clients in B.C. or whatever when I was in that business. It seems to me that it would make a lot of sense if the provinces could get together and work out a national system that works for everybody. I don't know why we would not want to do that.

It's not the federal government. I know we have an aversion here to the federal government being involved in these things, Mr. Speaker, but it does not have to be the federal government. It should be 13 jurisdictions that could get together to set up a national program.

The advantages to this, Mr. Speaker, are sort of four, as I see them. The first one is the obvious one, the complexity. Thirteen authorities each pursuing their own regulatory agenda, you know, is mind-boggling, frankly, with the complexity of the costs, the direct costs of delays and inconvenience when dealing with the regulators, and the cost of accessing the Canadian capital markets is not worth the bother for foreign issuers and gives an incentive to Canadian issuers to expand by accessing the capital markets. So the complexity is a problem, I believe.

Then – I've alluded to it already – inconsistent enforcement. The perception is again, at least, that the enforcement in some jurisdictions is seen as quite diligent, while in others, like Alberta, it is seen to be nonexistent. To the extent that investor protection depends on enforcement, investor protection is inconsistent across the country. Again, another reason, I believe, for a national regulatory debate.

The other thing – it's part of the complexity – is when you have 13 different authorities. We're changing our policies here; maybe in the Legislature in Manitoba they're changing theirs. They may be complementary; they may not. We have no control over it. So, again, how does an investor keep up with this? Which regulations are you're working under, Mr. Speaker? As I said, it becomes very complex.

The other, of course, is infrastructure costs. To have 13 different organizations costs all of us more money than it would if we had one regulatory board.

Now, in saying that, Mr. Speaker, I recognize that there's an attempt here with the passport system to deal with some of these problems, but I think it would be simpler and easier not to worry about the passport system but to have 13 people sit down and have one regulatory system. I think that it begs out. Then we would not have to worry, as we are, about Alberta's Securities Commission being seen as sort of the weak link and a joke among the rest of Canada and getting articles like I talked about right across Canada. We know it's happened in the National Post. All of these things have a very negative impact, and one of the ways then, I think the best way, would be to go to a national securities regulator with all the provinces involved.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. If I've got this right, Bill 19 is trying to make amendments to the Securities Act. The province is increasing the Alberta Securities Commission's enforcement for the legislation for a number of reasons. The province had been proposing that passport securities systems allow companies to apply for approval in just one province. Instead, the passport system allows market participants to enter multiple points at a single point as well, and the passport system for businesses approved by one province would be approved by several provinces then.

In the wake of the numerous corporate scandals that we've seen in the country not just this year, many years before, this bill attempts to increase the enforcement of the Alberta Securities Commission. While it strengthens on one end, it does nothing to encourage actual enforcement. This bill actually doesn't have much teeth, and I would have a problem supporting it.

The legislation removes public debate for changes involving the Securities Commission. In moving the procedures behind closed doors, there's even less public transparency and accountability for that.

When we go to page 7, the record keeping, here's part of the problem as well. "This section applies to every recognized exchange, recognized self-regulatory organization, recognized clearing agency, recognized quotation and trade reporting system," but it talks about the company with regard to maintaining and keeping orderly books. A lot of that can be the stem of the problem, as we've seen in a lot of cases. "The books and records that are necessary to record properly its business transactions and financial affairs and the transactions that it executes on behalf of others." I think that, again, if this has no ability to go in and take apart the books of a third party, then what's the point of this particular piece? Like I said, it doesn't do much to enforce the bill there. So I would have a problem, Mr. Speaker, in fact supporting this because it's far removed from where it was actually meant to be.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions, comments, if any. No one else wishes to speak?

Seeing none, does the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky wish to close?

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I think that we have had an indication here this afternoon of how important this piece of legislation is for Albertans. I do think that perhaps it might be prudent for me to again just outline in a very broad way what it is that we're attempting to do here.

What the Securities Amendment Act, 2005, does, Mr. Speaker, under three rather broad and key themes is facilitate the establishment of an innovative single-access passport system. There has been some mention that this particular passport system is not across Canada, and that is true. There are a couple of provinces that will be taking it to their cabinets shortly, and we expect that they will be involved, although the province of Ontario certainly is not at this point in time.

The second thing that's, I think, important here that has been a timely topic is enhanced enforcement and compliance powers that strengthen investor protection. Certainly, I don't believe that any of us would argue that those particular points with respect to the bill here before us are not a good thing.

The other thing that this will do, of course, is harmonize the provisions of the Alberta Securities Act with those of other jurisdictions across the country, and this does, by the way, include Ontario. It will replace some provisions of our act and standardize them with national rules that are applicable across Canada, such as the new prospectus and registration exemption rules.

So, Mr. Speaker, with that, I think that what I would like to say is that we recognize the importance of the questions that we've had today, and certainly there are a number. The ones that we will deal with in committee will be done at that point in time.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a second time]

Police Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to move that Bill 36, the Police Amendment Act, 2005, be moved to second reading.

Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendment to the Police Act covers many aspects of policing in Alberta, ranging from how policing is funded to how police commissions and police committees operate to how complaints against the police are monitored. Bill 36 ensures fair and objective investigations into complaints against police and enhances the credibility of the complaint review process.

The proposed changes to the act, the most comprehensive since 1988, also clarify how municipal police commissions and police committees in areas served by the RCMP are appointed and function. The amendments follow recommendations from the report of the Alberta MLA Policing Review Committee, released in 2002, and are the result of extensive public consultation.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I would like to go through this bill and speak to selected sections. In section 6 we have changed the population threshold that determines which municipalities are responsible for providing their own policing and those that are not. Towns with populations of not more than 5,000 will not have to pay for police services. We have raised the threshold from 2,500.

Section 8 enhances the role of the director of law enforcement. This amendment makes the appointment of the director of law enforcement mandatory, whereas today it's optional. This director of law enforcement will monitor how police chiefs and commissions handle complaints against the police. Other duties of the director of law enforcement will include monitoring police services to ensure that adequate and effective policing levels are maintained, developing and promoting professional practices and standards, and training for police services as well as police commissions and police committees.

Mr. Speaker in section 23 we are proposing changes to the role of policing committees and how they are structured. Generally, the amendments make the terms and roles of police commissions and committees similar to each other.

In section 14 we have set a maximum of six consecutive years for any commission member. Expiry dates of appointments are staggered, and terms are no less than two years to promote stability and consistency. As with police committees, the chair and vice-chair cannot be council members or municipal employees.

Mr. Speaker, a new section is added after section 28 of the Police Act concerning the public complaint director. This section states that each police commission or committee "shall designate a person as a Public Complaint Director," who will either be a committee or a commission member; an employee of the commission, committee, or municipality; or some other qualified person.

In sections 17 and 20 we are proposing changes to the way complaints against police are overseen. The primary goal, Mr. Speaker, is to establish a process that will assure the public that investigations are fair, objective, and complete. The objective is to enhance the credibility of the process and to assure the public that there is proper review of police service complaints. The chief of police will be responsible for providing progress reports to the complainant with copies to the commission on any complaint investigation, not just the results when the complaint is resolved.

This section also facilitates the informal resolution of complaints. The amendments will allow police from outside the province to be used for investigations or for disciplinary hearings. At the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, I think we all agree that the process of investigating public complaints against the police must be a transparent process, where justice is not just done, but it is seen to be done.

Section 23 of the bill deals with serious incidents and deaths involving the police. A police chief must notify the police commission and the minister as soon as possible. Upon hearing about the incident, the minister may request or direct another police service to investigate, may appoint members of the public to monitor the process, or both. The external investigator or monitor will provide reports to the minister.

Those are my comments regarding Bill 36. The Police Act is a cornerstone of public security in Alberta. These amendments reflect Albertans' views on how the police should be overseen and the leadership role of the provincial government. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

As per discussion with the opposition I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 38 Pharmacy and Drug Amendment Act, 2005

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I take leave to introduce second reading of Bill 38, the Pharmacy and Drug Amendment Act, 2005.

The act was passed in 1999 but was not proclaimed on the understanding that it would be reviewed and amended before it came into force. This act will replace the provisions in the Pharmaceutical Profession Act that regulate pharmacies and drugs, while pharmacists' regulations under the Health Professions Act are intended to replace provisions in the Pharmaceutical Profession Act that regulate pharmacists.

The proposed amendments in Bill 38 will make a series of adjustments to reflect current pharmacy practice and clarify regulatory requirements for pharmacies and drugs in Alberta. The amendments will further support the Alberta College of Pharmacists in regulating pharmacies and how drugs are prepared and distributed. The amendments will also strengthen the rules that govern the operation of pharmacies and the practice of pharmacists who work in those operations.

Mr. Speaker, the definition of the term "prescription" will be amended through this bill to remove the requirement that a certain amount of a drug be specified. Pharmacists will still be required to comply with the terms of the prescription as it is written. However, doctors, pharmacists, and patients will be allowed to work collaboratively to tailor drug therapy to patient needs.

The definitions of pharmacy, institution pharmacy, and patient will be revised through the amendments. The pharmacy definition will more accurately reflect the restricted activities that take place in pharmacies by expanding the definition to include compounding and selling or providing for sale as well as dispensing drugs.

The definition of institution pharmacy will be revised to include all publicly funded pharmacies, including those operating within federal institutions in Alberta. Pharmacies operating as a part of the public health system should be exempt from the licensing requirements. Clarification will also be added respecting the activities institutional pharmacies may carry out. The proposed changes will clarify the circumstances in which institutional pharmacies may sell drugs to the public, which in all other cases requires a community pharmacy licence.

The definition of patient will be amended to differentiate between the person for whom the drug is intended and the patient's agent, who may pick up the drug for them at a pharmacy. In order to protect the public, it is proposed that drug wholesalers and distributors be required to maintain and provide records to the college in accordance with the regulations.

An amendment is being proposed to clarify that only health professionals authorized by this act or another enactment may dispense drugs to the public and to clarify that such authorization through another enactment is not authority to operate a pharmacy.

Bill 38 will articulate new licence categories, which will recognize specific types of pharmacy practices, including licences for compounding and repackaging pharmacies, mail order pharmacies, and satellite pharmacies. Detailed operating standards for each type of licence will be specified in regulations. These changes recognize the broad scope of current pharmacy practice, and it allows the Alberta College of Pharmacists to set specific standards in regulation for various types of service delivery.

The licensing structure proposed in these amendments will require a licensee to hold a community pharmacy licence before they can apply for a satellite pharmacy licence or a mail order pharmacy licence. A satellite pharmacy licence will enable a licensee to operate a satellite pharmacy at a distance from the primary pharmacy. Satellite pharmacies will be allowed in communities that are currently not served by pharmacies. For example, a satellite pharmacy may operate one day a week in a rural community or on a reserve where there isn't a pharmacy. The licensee will be responsible for ensuring that the community pharmacy and the satellite pharmacy are both under the supervision of a pharmacist and that they operate in accordance with the act, regulations, and operating standards.

When an application for a licence is made, it is proposed that applicants show that they are able to and will comply with the code of ethics and standards for the operation of pharmacies.

Mr. Speaker, it is proposed that the new provisions address licence refusals and that checking is done for both pharmacists and proprietors. If the licensee or proprietor has been convicted of an indictable offence related to misconduct under the act, the registrar of the Alberta College of Pharmacists would be authorized to refuse to license an applicant or to renew a licence. This refusal could also come if the licensee or proprietor has been convicted of an indictable offence related to misconduct, fraud, or commercial matters.

In order to add a greater degree of fairness to the licence decision process, decisions respecting licensing issues made by the registrar will be allowed to be appealed to the college's council or to a body appointed by the council. It is proposed that a clause add prohibiting pharmacy owners from directing, influencing, or attempting to influence the management or the operation of a licensed pharmacy. This change will directly prohibit an owner from directing a pharmacy to contravene legislation, regulation, code of ethics, and standards for the operation of pharmacies.

In the event of a bankruptcy, receivership, or when a pharmacy ceases to operate without plans for an orderly succession, a provision in the bill will allow the Alberta College of Pharmacists to apply to the Court of Queen's Bench for an order to appoint a custodian. This provision will help ensure that drugs are protected and patient records are available as required in order to meet patient needs in these types of cases.

The bill proposes to add a requirement that following a pharmacy inspection, a field officer must provide a report to the pharmacy owner in addition to the current requirement to give it to the college registrar and the licensee. The report will indicate findings of the inspection and any specific action required by the licensee and the pharmacy owner. If the report is unsatisfactory, it is proposed that the field officer direct the licensee or proprietor to take specific action to comply with the act, regulation, code of ethics, or standards for the operation of the pharmacy.

An amendment will be added to provide for an appeal of a field officer's directions resulting from a pharmacy inspection. A provision is being proposed to require a licensee and proprietor to accommodate practice visits under the Health Professions Act. Practice visits are an important component of ensuring professional competence. In situations where there's a clear risk to the public sector to proceedings against a licensee or pharmacy owner being completed, amendments will allow for conditions of suspension of a pharmacy licence. The licensee or proprietor may apply to the Court of Queen's Bench to stay this decision.

Mr. Speaker, to help protect the public, an amendment is proposed requiring a pharmacist to be in attendance in a pharmacy at all times that the pharmacy is open to the public. The exception would be when it is otherwise authorized in regulations. So if it's open, the pharmacist must be there.

Other amendments include providing authority for the college to ensure pharmacists have the necessary technology for good pharmacy practice, providing authority to create regulation governing where drugs and medicines may be stored, and expanding liability protection to licensees who make a report to the Alberta College of Pharmacists in good faith regarding proprietor misconduct.

Mr. Speaker, this is an overview of the proposed amendments, and having understood that this House is so agreeable, not only have I moved the second reading of Bill 38, I request adjournment.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2005

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to talk about Bill 28, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2005. I believe it was last year that the Premier announced that there was $3 billion for municipal infrastructure. These investments in municipal infrastructure come at a crucial time. Many Albertan communities are experiencing unprecedented growth. All municipal governments face major infrastructure deficits and have access to only limited revenues to address them.

During this bill we were hoping that it would have, in fact, addressed many of the concerns that councillors and municipal leaders had. There was a short period that there was consultation. Consultation, in fact, did include the AUMA, the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, which I think was good, but it might have missed a few of them. I raised this before in the past about the members of Edmonton city council not being aware of this on a number of particular occasions. These investments in the municipal infrastructure are very much needed, and there needs to be much consultation.

The AUMA has been engaged for several months in discussions about the allocation of the new provincial funds, and, like I said, every elected reeve and councillor needs to be included. The outlying areas could have been affected by a downgrowth in the economy, such as in Hines Creek, where they lost some 100 jobs and it's pulling $6 million out of the economy. They, in fact, might be a perfect example as to how a rural town could be included within the discussions here. There, like I said: the loss of 100 jobs and $6 million to the economy. They might be experiencing a downward trend of people going to those areas and wanting to set up stakes. That affects the school's viability in there. That would be a perfect example. I'm not sure if they were included.

Fort McMurray, which is on the other end of it, is experiencing huge growth within the economy. In fact, they're the ones that this bill could certainly benefit as well with providing affordable housing, which is certainly one of the concerns with regard to that.

How does one define infrastructure in the bill? Well, it's defined with all capital assets required to create and maintain a safe, secure, and sustainable community. But it shouldn't be limited to transportation infrastructure, which is roads, bridges, or public transportation, as well as utilities, environmental infrastructure, water delivery systems, which are certainly a topic in everyone's mind with regard to water basin transferring and certain areas of the communities drying up. That's certainly a concern when you've got people worrying if they're going to be buying a property in an area where there is no available water with regard to the decreased amount of rainfall. In fact, the rivers are running lower every year with regard to the environment. Does that have a particular piece with it? But, again, with the water is the delivery of the sewage systems, raw sewage treatment systems, recycling systems, and landfills.

We also talked about the sewage system up there for Fort McMurray, which was designed, I believe, to handle approximately 40,000 people, but it's boomed to over 50,000 to 55,000 people. I know that people up there in Fort McMurray were consulted. Calgary was certainly consulted because the idea was hatched down in Calgary with the mayor asking for an approximate $70 million to be able to rebuild some of the depressed areas in Calgary and attract, in fact, more investments. Investments, obviously, would bring greater property values within the region and encourage more development, and again you would encourage more people to take up roots within that particular area.

Property values. If oil and gas companies move in that might pose certain other health risks and might have people, in fact, not wanting to move into the areas with the potential development of those areas. We've also had a number of cases – take Calgary, for instance – where there is back to talk of sour gas wells, and about eight of them in the surrounding southeast area. There needs to be consultation, certainly, into that because there are definite health risks associated with the blowouts or with the sour gas wells in particular.

Going back to the property values, again. If oil and gas companies move into the area, certainly I, myself, wouldn't want to be raising a family or moving into the area, not to mention the sight, the sound of the continuous 24 hours of the pumps churning. But the smells. Perhaps they do some of the purging of the burn-offs. I know that some of the time they do have the ability to in fact have the odd time that they do need to do burn-offs. But what are the health risks? We've never actually gone there and investigated that.

Those are just a couple of the particular pieces when we discuss property values, Mr. Chairman, that I think this committee should certainly be looking at.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 28, Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2005. The purpose of this amendment act is to give municipalities additional tools for revenue generation to assist them in addressing the needs of their residents. The bill proposes a series of four amendments, that include a community revitalization levy, a community aggregate payment levy, Crown lease, and the assessment of linear properties.

Mr. Chairman, the municipalities in Alberta have been pressing the government for years and years to assist them in revenue generation by amending the Municipal Government Act to allow them new tools. This position has been endorsed and brought forth to the government by the two main organizations that represent municipalities in their dealings with the provincial government, the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and the Alberta association of rural districts and counties. Additionally, the Federation of Canadian Municipalities has also been a proponent of increasing municipal tax tools to create sustained revenue sources.

The rationale for this is that traditionally municipalities have been reliant on provincial government transfers and property taxes for revenue generation. However, the last decade has seen a dramatic decrease in government transfers, forcing municipalities to rely on the property tax base, which is generally narrow in scope. The results of this are seen in the massive infrastructure deficit not only in Alberta but across Canada.

If municipalities are to avoid infrastructure deficits in the future, they will require new revenue sources that go beyond property taxes and user fees. Such tools could also serve a more general purpose by ensuring that municipalities have greater self-reliance and that they have autonomous fiscal capacity to respond creatively to the needs and aspirations of their electorates. In order for this to occur, the MGA would need to be amended to allow municipalities to employ such new tax tools should they choose to do so, thereby providing a flexible sphere of taxation authority analogous to the existing sphere of municipal responsibilities.

Amendments would give municipal governments greater capacity to raise their own source of revenue through a larger and more diversified basket of tax tools. This would enhance community control and electoral accountability. Two of the proposed amendments to the MGA have been introduced to give municipalities two new tools for revenue generation: the community revitalization levy and the community aggregate payment levy.

Mr. Chairman, more discussion is needed on this bill around the community revitalization levy. This is a tool that can have benefits for the revitalization of a stressed community such as Calgary's East Village, but there need to be discussions around the freezing of property taxes. Specifically, how does this affect the province's portion of the education property tax? This amendment will allow municipalities to retain the education property tax increment for tax increment equivalent financing as well as the municipal increment currently being used.

However, this exemption only applies to the incremental financing. This allows municipalities to retain this part of the property tax assessment to help pay off their loan for the redevelopment project. There are critics who say that this type of scheme amounts to a developer subsidy. There is also the issue of the impact on the taxpayers in the municipality. It seems that there is a question of fairness if one person's property tax is frozen for 20 years while on the next street over, out of the development zone, that resident is being forced to pay increased property tax. These issues need to be debated before support can be given to this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I receive many phone calls from my constituents regarding their property tax assessments. They want help to pay off their loans for the redevelopment project. They are happy in regard to the intent of this bill, but they are not so happy with the actual implementation of the bill. The provision says that the property assessments will be fixed and that the council can impose a levy on the incremental assessment value on property, increased since the assessment was fixed. The increase in the assessed value will not be included in the calculation of equalized assessments. For example, the municipality may spend a large amount of money on infrastructure to make the area more desirable. This may cause the value to increase, but what about the vacant land or vacant lot where the owner decides to construct in the future? The assessment went up because of new construction, not just because of the cost of new infrastructure. Why should this new building's assessment not be added to the equalized assessment when a similar building in another neighbourhood or even another municipality does?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have already spoken to this bill, Bill 28, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2005, and today I promise not to take too much time during this stage of debate. I have mainly expressed my understanding of having a proposed levy to help municipalities cope with the expenses that they're faced with and the decisions that they have to make in carrying out their duties as needed by their citizens.

Today I am just going to further comment on minor things with this bill with respect to the community revitalization levy because the way I understand it, it appears to be some sort of a tax increment financing scheme, which is really the buzzword now in municipal taxation protocols, whereas the government agrees to finance improvements for private development in a district or in a zone that definitely and urgently needs maintenance and upgrading and then hopes to recover some of that cost when the value of those properties goes up. Then hopefully the taxation goes up, and that kind of offsets the initial cost.

I don't disagree with this mechanism as such, but I think we should always have to view it in a bigger picture of fairness. You know, I have discussed this before. Anything we do should be approached from a fairness standpoint so citizens don't get burdened with extra taxes that could have been allocated differently from the provincial government. The hon. colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie has commented on what difference it might make to be living on this side of the street or one block over. So, again, we have to take into account any decision that might affect people's taxation and people's pocketbooks.

Also, many different city officials and municipal leaders in Edmonton and elsewhere approached us as the Official Opposition and approached me personally and indicated that they really can't decide whether this is an excellent deal or not too good. They agree that the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association has been consulted, and they have faith in that organization, but their concern mainly was that the lack of detail regarding the administration of this bill is not making them comfortable. They see the merit and they see the positive side to it, and they appreciate the tool that is being given to them to deal with their financial questions; however, they're just not sure about the administration component. I think clarification would be advisable so that these municipal officials and local leaders would have the peace of mind that, yes, in fact we're empowering you with a tool, and we're also facilitating the administration and the usage of that tool so that they know what they're doing, and they can offer that same clarity to their constituents and their citizens.

Also, some of the concerns that were raised by those municipal officials rotated around or touched on the fact that this new revenue-generating tool is also based on property value. So I think they would much rather have seen it tied to other mechanisms for taxation like income tax or maybe a hotel tax or a share in government gaming revenues or something like that because it just adds extra burdens and extra pressures on homeowners, who are, I think, to some extent overtaxed as it is.

Also, on the idea of consultation I commend the government on involving the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association. However, I think they should just expand more. Now that we're talking about regulations – it seems to be the favourite way of doing government business now – the city of Edmonton, the city of Calgary, the urban municipalities, the smaller towns and villages should all be involved in the drafting and implementation of those regulations so, in fact, they can get that satisfaction that they participated, and then the likelihood of their accepting the new law would probably rise because now they have been involved and they had a say in it. I think it would follow naturally, you know, if this government is really willing to involve them and get them to participate.

With that, I would voice my support for the bill and the intention and the direction that's it's going, and I will take my seat and, hopefully, listen to some more debate. Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 28 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? It's carried.

Family Law Amendment Act, 2005

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: We are considering an amendment under that, amendment A1.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you very much for the reminder. Yes, I am speaking on the amendment.

I will note that the government has gotten into the habit of giving us government amendments which, in fact, are amending multiple sections. I respect the guidance of the Official Opposition critic on this bill, who did not insist on a severance, to have these separated out so that each one required a vote on it, but I express my concerns when I see two pages' worth of amendments amending some six different sections, which are clearly six different amendments because six completely different issues. But our critic didn't ask for a severance, and therefore I will follow their lead, but I will express my concerns about what I see.

Now, I've read the opening remarks from the sponsoring Minister of Justice and Attorney General, and I've also read his remarks on tabling these amendments. The first section, section 4.1, is amending section 12(5)(b) in the original act. I know that what's being suggested here is around those legal definitions and the impact and import that particular words have, but I'm also noting that we continue to perpetuate what I see as a Charter challenge here. Once again we are specifically setting out gender roles here, which I think is problematic. That is – I'm sorry, I'm really struggling with these different sections – around the surrogacy and the guardianship, which I'm reading as section 8(1)(d). The original act was that "on a balance of probabilities, a male person is presumed to be the biological father of a child in any of the following circumstances" and then lists them. But, again, we are listing specific gender roles here because we are putting into the legislation male persons and female persons, and in other cases we're talking about mothers and fathers. We have got to watch this language.

I argued long and hard about this back on November 27, 2003, when we were looking at the original debates on the Family Law Act. Anyone that wants to see the amendments that I brought forward then and the arguments I made, please refer to Hansard pages around 1950. But I'm seeing the same thing happen here. I know that the minister is talking about establishing the circumstances in which a male is presumed to be the father of the child. The language is being changed to reflect a similar change to the language that's going to be used in section 20(2)(d), which is establishing automatic guardianship.

I still think this is problematic. If I were able to vote against this particular amendment as a separate amendment, I would be doing so because I think we have to move away from these gender-specific and sex-specific roles. The Charter is telling us that we have to stop looking at it that way, and I believe that, and I certainly have a number of constituents who are affected by that. I think we have to start thinking about parents rather than defining these roles according to sex.

That flows over into section B, as it appears in the amendment, which is amending section 20, which is setting up the guardianship sections. Again, we have the same thing here, Mr. Chairman, because we are specifically setting out the mother and the father, and elsewhere we are referring to male persons being fathers and female persons being mothers. You know, we have to get away – I heard somebody else in here saying: well, under the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act there were two sisters that were adopting a child. Well, now, they get into the same sort of complexities. Which one of them is supposed to be the mother, and which one is supposed to be the father? Well, they can't, obviously, because one of them is not a male person. So, you know, I think we have to move away from this kind of laden language and open it up so that we're talking about parents.

So that's my number one concern with the section B amendments, which are amending section 20, that there is, again, that laden language and that specific language that I think gets us in trouble. I still believe there's going to be a Charter challenge come back on us, and then we'll be in here amending it again.

My second concern around the guardianship is to make sure that the safeguards are still in place around the concept of coercion because I am supportive of moving towards the concept of equal parenting. I would like to see more men involved in strong and equal positions in raising their families. I think that's important for modern society, and I would like to see more and stronger involvement from men in family life. I also still feel it incumbent upon me to raise the issues of those women out there that find it difficult to raise their voice, and that is around any kind of coercion.

I agree with what's being said here, that there's an assumption of equal guardianship and equal parenting responsibility and equal parenting powers and all the rest of what the minister has laid out and what I read in the legislation here. I still have to put it on the record and make sure that there are protections against coercion because it's allowing that there can be a written agreement between the parents of the child regarding guardianship. I want to make sure that we're guarding against any kind of coercion, whether that would be, you know, physical or mental intimidation or financial incentives or disincentives that put people, usually women, that are coming from a position of unequal power in a position where they feel they might have to sign something. You know, women still make less money, although that's improving. We still have an imbalance there, and I think we need to ensure that that imbalance is not institutionalized and reinstitutionalized every time we open up legislation like this.

I mean, the point, after all, of section 15(2) of the Charter was to ameliorate those conditions of discrimination and to take action to ameliorate those conditions of systemic discrimination and inequity. I'm always going to raise in this House and question to make sure that we have not trod on that concept of addressing that inequity and of trying to ameliorate it and banish it, in effect. So while I agree with the concept that is being established through this amendment, I still disagree with the specificity of the language that's in it. If this were severed out, I honestly don't know how I would vote. I'd have to think much longer on it.

Section B(b), which is section 5 and amending proposed 20, I'm okay with as long as we have dealt with the coercion factor.

Amendment C, which is again back to the prescribed and designated language, I'm fine with.

Again, same thing with language around amendment D, which is, if I've got this straight, section 8, which is fine.

Again, the same kind of language in E, where we're striking "prescribed" and substituting "provided for."

The final amendment, F, amending section 12, regulation-making authority to define "party."

So, clearly, many of the sections that are included in this multiple amendment package are housekeeping, as the minister outlined. My two concerns are those issues that I've already raised around the guardianship and the use of language because I think it gets us into trouble. Again, I know the minister feels that this isn't affected, and he's a lawyer, and I'm not. But I have still found it worthwhile putting this on the record because years later I find out that in the end I was right, so I'm still going to do it.

Overall I'm supportive of most of the amendments that are brought forward here. I still think we are not addressing the gender specificity here, and that remains a huge problem for me.

I will look forward to others speaking on this and will consider carefully how I will proceed in the final votes in Committee of the Whole and consider it further for the vote on the third reading. I thank you for the opportunity to outline my concerns here. I'm happy to hear from anyone on the government side that wants to speak to this.

With that, I will take my seat. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathcona. Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you. I've been confused a few times by that term.

I rise to speak on amendment A1, which is before the House in the debate on the Family Law Amendment Act, 2005, Bill 5. We have looked very carefully through the amendments. I must put on record the fact that we've been in touch with the minister and his office with respect to our concerns, and he has been responding quite expeditiously to the questions that I posed to him. So I want to express my appreciation for that.

While the amendments contained in A1 go some way in addressing some of the concerns that we had, I don't think they go far enough. I will try to put some of those concerns on record and then propose a subamendment to A1 in the hope that if that subamendment gets the support of the House, then the concerns that we have will have been addressed in a satisfactory manner, although I'm not holding my breath that that's what will happen.

Mr. Chairman, some of the concerns about this bill have been communicated to the minister by concerned citizens and some legal experts, so the minister is well aware of those. But here are a few things that I think are worth the attention of the House and perhaps worth reiteration so that they are on the record here. I want to express a concern that I share with a sort of submission that was made to the minister with respect to changes to section 20 of the existing act.

I understand that the motivation for the changes is to better reflect the equality provisions of the Charter, which the NDP caucus would generally support. However, as the Charter itself stresses, there have to be reasonable limits on the equality guarantees which can be imposed by government, and we think that this is an area where these limits perhaps should be given careful consideration.

The Family Law Amendment Act, Bill 5, by not restricting the 12 months of cohabitation during which the baby was born to the 12-month period prior to the birth of the child, already included as a joint guardian many putative fathers who were previously not recognized as joint guardians without obtaining a court order. The proposed section 20(2)(c), (d), and (e) further expand the detail of the legislation and may cause troubles for unaware men who will find themselves joint guardians, with all the responsibilities that may entail, to children who they know are not their progeny. No longer will they have to acknowledge a child as their own before the responsibilities are imposed on them. However, although this may cause some problems in some cases, it is likely that on balance it will give more protection to a child who will be disentitled from claiming support against a short-term partner who married or lived with his or her mother but failed to expressly acknowledge that he was the father of the child.

The real concern, then, is with subsection (3) of section 20, and there I think the concerns have to do with cases where people who have not been in a long-term relationship are in an equal position as the mother of a child in terms of guardianship. There is a problem of children born out this kind of a relationship, say, in a hospital. If the child is born in a hospital, then a man who may have only had a passing relationship with the mother may go to court to claim guardianship of the child. This child would be stuck in the hospital until the court decides guardianship.

Similarly, if the mother of a child from a one-night stand decides to have the child at home and not in a hospital, then there is no question as to who is the guardian. The child is already at her home, and thus she is the guardian. This section in the view of family law experts – and we agree with them – is perhaps an overresponse to the notion of equality as guaranteed in the Charter, and the amendments in A1 do not address this concern.

There seems to be a circle of logic here in the provisions of Bill 5 before us. Where the child lives, for example, determines who the guardian is, that is section 20(3)(a), and who the guardian is determines where the child lives, section 21(6)(c). So there are problems with sub (3) of section 20 of the bill, and the main substantive amendment that I have to amendment A addresses that concern and the difficulty that we find with section 20(3)(a).

So, Mr. Chairman, I have a subamendment here that I'd like to now introduce. I have it available for distribution. I'll wait for a minute or two.

The Chair: We will call that subamendment SA1.

Dr. Pannu: I'll wait for the green light from you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: It will be distributed momentarily.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am ready to proceed then. I move that the government amendment A1 to Bill 5, Family Law Amendment Act, 2005, be amended in section B as follows: by adding the following after clause (a) – it reads as (a.1). The (a.1) reads as follows: in subsection (3) by striking out “and the father are both the guardians” and substituting the words “is the guardian.” So to make it clear again, the (a.1) in subsection (3): by striking out “and the father are both the guardians” and substituting “is the guardian.”

Subamendment (b) simply seeks to make a minor change in wording in clause (b) in the proposed subsection (5) by striking out “continue to be” and substituting “are.”

So these are the two amendments. The first one, clearly, the first portion of it, the (a) portion, is more substantive. The second portion simply, I think, cleans up the language.

I ask for our serious consideration of this amendment, both by the hon. minister and the hon. members of the House, and I seek their support for this amendment. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on subamendment SA1.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a few comments, and I'd like to start out by thanking the hon. member for his interest in the matter and bringing the concern forward. There's no doubt in my mind that the amendment offers clarity. I appreciate what the hon. member is attempting to do, but I will urge the members of the House not to support the subamendment.

The amendments that we're dealing with generally have been predicated upon some court decisions criticizing the current situation that we're dealing with. Currently, the Family Law Act provision, that is based on the Domestic Relations Act, provides an arrangement which effectively the courts have said is contrary to the equality provisions of the Charter. So what we have done in bringing forward the new legislation, these amendments, is to address three considerations.

Firstly, we're trying to comply with the equality provisions of the Charter. Either the legislation had to treat the parents equally or differences in treatment had to be justifiable. The new legislation had to be as clear as possible so that there will always be a guardian of the child who could make decisions for the child, and the new legislation should be in the best interests of the child.

Now, there's no doubt that this particular subamendment provides clarity, but where I believe it falls down, or I am advised by Justice officials that it falls down, is in the area of being able to comply with the equality provision of the Charter to withstand what we would see as a subsequent Charter challenge. The government amendment that is subject of this subamendment we believe meets the criteria because the default is to both parties until residence defines otherwise, and therefore there is equality.

The provision that is put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona would disadvantage fathers who wanted to be involved in the child's life and who have not established guardianship by virtue of the relationship provisions of the legislation. Unless they would be able to reach agreement with the mother, they would be required to obtain guardianship by way of court process. This would not be a level playing field between mothers and fathers and, as I said, in our opinion would create a Charter risk.

I do appreciate the interest of the member. I appreciate the intent of the subamendment to make the legislation better, but we have what I would consider to be a fundamental concern which we are attempting to address in the amendments we brought forward, so I would urge members of the Assembly to vote against the subamendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on subamendment SA1.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you. I'm sorry. I'm looking for clarity from the minister if he would be so kind as to assist here. Where it's talking about “where the mother and the father . . . are not the guardians of the child,” does that not also cover situations where the child, for example, might be a temporary guardian of the state? No. This subsection (3) is strictly on residency. I'm going to take my seat and let the minister clarify that because I must have misread earlier statements.

Mr. Stevens: There are other pieces of legislation which deal with guardianship. The child welfare legislation I believe deals with guardianship when we're talking about children who are subject of a state intervention. With respect to adoption, you look to the adoption legislation to determine the guardianship. So there are other acts. This particular provision will not deal with the incident that the hon. member has mentioned; that is, where the child is subject to a state intervention.

Ms Blakeman: For clarification, then, we're really just looking at residency and the fact that the child may not be currently resident with either of the parents. That's what it's trying to set out, that if the child is not currently resident with either of the parents, one presumes grandparents, for example, or extended family possibly, that this clause is allowing that both mother and father would be considered guardians of the child until the child resides with them because this is around decision-making over other parts of the child's life. Are they going to take piano lessons or ballet lessons or soccer? With that, of course, are the far more serious concerns around medical treatment, for example.

So what the originating amendment act is really talking about is making sure that the parents are both regarded as guardians even if the child is not with them currently. The amendment, then, would make only the mother the guardian. If that is the case, Mr. Chairman, I'm going to speak against this amendment because part of what I'm interested in is creating a less adversarial system here and one in which there is a stronger societal expectation that both parents would be involved equally and enthusiastically and vigorously in the upbringing and decision-making and guardianship of a child.

Therefore, to separate it out and to say, "No, we're not going to take one of the parents," in this case specifically the father, is I think running against the grain of what we're trying to move towards in Canada, which is to set up much more equal parenting and to try and take this out of that boxing match, that adversarial and hostile arena that we tend to force people into when we have parents who are not necessarily together and are trying to jointly make decisions and raise a child.

If I have understood that correctly, then I would be speaking against this amendment. I look forward to continued elucidation on this one.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on subamendment SA1.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yes. I would like to clarify or address the point that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has raised. I think that the concern about 20(3) arises with respect to situations where the father does not have a continuing relationship with the mother. I use the example of a one-night stand, a child born of that kind of relationship, or where cohabitation has been so short that there is no relationship of any consequence between the two parents or where the relationship of the father to the child cannot be claimed based on that virtually nonexistent period of cohabitation.

In those cases, I think that 20(3) muddies the water. It gives equal rights to the mother and the more or less nonexistent father, or the virtual father, if you wish, where parentage has arisen out of an accidental, you know, getting-together or relationship or whatever you want to call it. So that's the problem with 20(3), and that's why I propose changes to it, so the mother becomes, in fact, the guardian in such situations and only in such situations. The bill is not clear about this.

On the other matter, addressing the minister's concern with respect to a court challenge that might arise if 20(3) is dropped or changed in the form in which SA1 – is it called? I think I just want to simply read a section here from a letter that was addressed to the minister by a family law lawyer, a person who has been involved in the development of this bill and similar bills related to family law. She says this:

The provision takes away certainty from the law. A court hearing will be required to obtain the release of the child to one parent or the other. The removal of the automatic provision whereby if none of the provisions of s. (2) apply, the mother is the sole guardian of the child is a failure to recognize the basic facts of biology. It ranks with the failure of the Supreme Court of Canada in its first judgment on discrimination based on pregnancy to recognize that only women get pregnant, an error which the Justices subsequently recognized in a later decision when they changed the law.

So the matter that concerns the minister has already been addressed by the Supreme Court of Canada, and the provision of equality has been interpreted in a manner that is more reasonable and responds to the realities of biology as well as parentage.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ms DeLong: I'd like to weigh in on this just a little bit. There is one strong overriding characteristic or input that a child could have in terms of what will make that child successful, and that is the involvement of both parents in that child's life. What is most important to that child and I think what should be most important to us as a society is that we do whatever we can to encourage both parents to be involved in their children's lives. Whenever there is a piece of legislation which could possibly limit that involvement, I think it's something we should look at very carefully. I urge everyone to please vote against this.

Thank you.

[Motion on subamendment SA1 lost]

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

[The clauses of Bill 5 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much Mr. Chairman. I move that we rise and report bills 28 and 5.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 28. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 5. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Renner: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 28.

Mr. Speaker, there was some discussion in committee at which I was able and happy to respond to a number of members. There was some further discussion today, and I'd like to have an opportunity to review Hansard and familiarize myself a little bit better with some of the comments and questions that may have arisen. I intend to do that over the weekend, and for that reason I move that we adjourn debate on Bill 28.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Railway (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Bill 13 is a bill that does a couple of things. It basically lays out that the compensation when there is a dispute will be handled by a specific board. It also lays out the appeal process when there is a dispute. It is a very short bill. It is something that will expedite rail traffic in Alberta, and I truly believe it is something that will help Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, this is a wonderful bill, and we should pass it. With that, I'll certainly take my seat.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll speak to Bill 13. Being an old railroader's son, my father used to tell me: you never build a railroad on muskeg because of maintenance and high operation costs.

Anyway, Bill 13 appears rather innocuous, much like the barely exposed tip of the iceberg. It seems to me that one of the questions we have to look at – the road authority and the Land Compensation Board result. It says here that Bill 13 changes appear to be of a grammatical variety as well as spelling out the powers of the operator of the railroad, the road authority, and Land Compensation Board to resolve disputes arising from land acquisition rights where railroads cross roads. This resolution is to take place within 30 days.

My concerns lie primarily with section 30 on the second page, which outlines the minister of transportation's role in making regulations affecting the Surface Rights Board and the Expropriation Act. Viewed in isolation, this Act appears to facilitate land disputes. The other side of the coin has to do with the government-sanctioned potential land grab. So, then, I'm suggesting that whether given this season of Easter or my jokes of opposition infrastructure watchdog, I'm going to play the role of a doubting Thomas and enter into speculation of a land variety. If my speculation comes even close to the truth, then the value of this has some questionable approaches.

My second point, the unanswered question in number 2, has to do with another floated trial balloon. Is this an extension of the roads for royalties type of railroad where there are a lot of spinoffs?

Those are my two reservations, and I'll sit, Mr. Speaker, after mentioning them to you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have questions. With regard to Bill 13, Railway (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2005, in section 2 we talk about what steps this government is taking to address the road authority and the way P3s might be involved then. Who is the road authority when a road is within the contract period of a P3 in particular? Part of section 2, as well: if a private contractor is the road authority, what steps are being taken to ensure that taxpayers' interests are being protected? How do private contractors as road authorities affect the dispute resolution process? Would the minister please define some of those particular stages as well?

If I go to section 3 . . .

An Hon. Member: Tell us what page it is.

Mr. Bonko: I will, yes.

How will the board members that are selected to sit on the Land Compensation Board and a board neutral to all the participating parties – how are these people selected to sit on this? Will the Land Compensation Board need to make any adjustments to accommodate any new road authorities? That's particular to section 3 because it clarifies and notes that when the operator of the railroad and a road authority can't agree regarding a cost, either side may apply to the Land Compensation Board to apportion the costs. Again, how are the board members chosen in this particular area?

When one moves to section 4, maintenance costs of highway crossings, again, what measures to the landowners near the highway and what role will they have in this particular process, Mr. Speaker? [interjection] To the effect of the bill, yes. Thank you, Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Those are just a couple of quick particular concerns that I'd have with regard to the couple of sections that I'd mentioned there, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a third time]

Health Statutes Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to bring forward third reading of Bill 7, the Health Statutes Amendment Act.

As you know, this bill makes minor technical amendments to three existing pieces of legislation in order to address issues related to health professionals. These issues have been brought forward by the respective professional associations and colleges in Alberta. The proposed amendments in Bill 7 will protect the term "specialist" for health practitioners, will refine definitions of restricted activities, and prepare for the regulation of registered nurses under the Health Professions Act.

I do appreciate the comments and support for Bill 7 that have been received from members of this Assembly to date and ask for your further support of third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to this bill in third reading. I had commented on the bill at other stages. As the sponsoring member has pointed out, it is essentially clarifying definitions and recognizing name changes of colleges.

I will point out that it does amend several different health statutes, and it is an omnibus bill in my opinion. I have had ample opportunity to go through it. We have been able to do a feedback loop with our stakeholders. They did give us a few concerns, which we raised. I think I was talking around workforce planning, and overall around planning. This also contains some amendments that were asked for by some members of the health professions community.

So at this point I'm prepared to support the bill in third reading. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had the opportunity to speak on this bill I think at second reading. I concur that most of the amendments that this bill seeks to make are of a technical nature.

They're either requests by professional organizations to make changes in nomenclature relative to the changes that have taken place in the professions themselves as to designations of specializations or additions of new titles resulting from subspecializations.

So if my assumption is correct, that it's essentially an attempt to introduce new terms to bring up to date the language of the existing legislation, and there's no substantive change being sought to existing legislation, then I'm happy to support the bill at third reading.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to close?

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a third time]

Alberta Science and Research Authority Amendment Act, 2005

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 4, the Alberta Science and Research Authority Amendment Act, 2005.

This bill sets in place the ICT and Life Sciences institutes, which are important to the innovation agenda. I thank all the members for their participation in second reading and committee.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to again emphasize my support for Bill 4, the Alberta Science and Research Authority Amendment Act, as I have previously indicated. Now that it has reached this stage, I agree that it now stands read a third time and that it passes.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have consulted with members of the scientific community on this, and I want to just outline a few concerns that we have received or heard. As the saying goes, the devil is in the details, Mr. Speaker. The information dissemination and review of grant proposals sound useful and in the public interest.

However, a concern has been expressed, and I agree with it, about the fact that these would be chaired by members of the House, MLAs. Undoubtedly, these would be members from the opposite side. It's highly improbable that anyone from this area would be on such review committees unless the minister can make a statement to the contrary and give an undertaking that that's not the case. So that's the concern. If that is the case, then the issues of transparency and objective judgment coming out of these reviews I think become a matter of concern.

Also, membership by ministerial appointment usually translates into membership of people who support the party in power and are exchanged as favours in the form of these appointments. You know, these appointments are really exchanges between those who strongly support the party and the party in power rewarding them for their support. So are environmental groups going to be invited to do the reviews here, or are some academic scientists with international reputations going to be on these review boards, people not necessarily with organic and institutional links with the party in power?

The reference to life sciences seems to be a bit too broad. This would cover everything from submolecular biology to ecology. And as one scientist who wrote to me said, "I don't know anyone with the expertise to cover this broad area." This gentleman himself is a very, very respected, internationally recognized scientist, and this is what his concern is. Having come from academia myself, I know that in these fields that are so broad and so complex, to look for expertise in all the areas that this team may cover in one person who is on such review boards is highly questionable.

The institutes are a good idea. They can be good, but they should be totally at sort of arm's length from government. They should disseminate reports directly to the taxpayers, who sponsor them, not through a political filter. This doesn't mean that the ministers have to follow the institutes' recommendations but that when they do not, they must give good reasons. This sort of transparency, I would agree and I'm sure all members of the House would agree, is necessary for democracies such as ours to work and work well.

One such independent institute that's desperately needed is one on environment and wildlife. This province I think desperately needs such an institute that's independent of the government, is at arm's length, and gives government and this House the advice that's so badly needed given the state in which we find our water and soil and other resources at the moment.

So that said, I wanted to put on record, Mr. Speaker, very briefly some of the concerns that we have heard and which I strongly share. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science to close debate.

Mr. Doerksen: Just briefly, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the foregoing comments I would just point out that these institutes are set up in the same way as the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute, the Alberta Energy Research Institute, and the Alberta Forestry Research Institute, and they all have MLA co-chairs. This is consistent with that. The work of those three institutes I think you would find to be very good work and based on good science by good scientific people in the life sciences area. One of the persons that's working very strongly in that area is Dr. Lorne Tyrell, who of course is a very well-known, internationally reputable individual. So I don't think that the people we have on this has anything to do with it.

So I would continue to move third reading, and thank you for the support of the bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a third time]

Alberta Order of Excellence Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to move third reading of Bill 18.

This bill offers the opportunity to award an additional five exceptional Albertans the Alberta Order of Excellence.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise again and speak to Bill 18, the Alberta Order of Excellence Amendment Act. This is an excellent bill. I commend the hon. minister for proposing this bill. There are many, many great people in this province that deserve to be honoured by this award. Doubling the number of recipients is a wonderful idea. I'm delighted to support this bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: I'm pleased to rise and move that we call it 5:30 and reconvene at 1:30 p.m. next Monday, the business of the House on the agenda having been completed this afternoon, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; at 5:28 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Title: Monday, April 11, 2005

1:30 p.m.

Date: 05/04/11

[The Speaker in the chair]

head:

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. At the beginning of this week we ask for renewed strength in the awareness of our duty and privilege as members of the Legislature. We ask for the protection of this Assembly and also the province we are elected to serve. Amen.

Hon. members, would you now participate in the singing of our national anthem. We'll be led today by Mr. Paul Lorieau. Please participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

head:

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Mr. Jeffrey Parker, the Canadian consul general, based in Seattle, Washington, and appointed in September 2004. Mr. Parker and his team are responsible for the four-state region of Alaska, Oregon, Idaho, and Washington.

These four states' economies combined are equal to one-third of Canada's entire domestic economy. They are important partners for Alberta trade, investment, technology, and tourism. Along with my fellow cabinet ministers and provincial government colleagues I had the pleasure of meeting with Mr. Parker today. We had a good, wide-ranging discussion. I would ask that our honoured guest, seated in your gallery, rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head:

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had the pleasure of having lunch with two generous Calgarians today, and it's now my honour to introduce them to you and through you to all members of the Legislature. Every year the Calgary Homeless Foundation raises money by making fun of me. This year its annual Premier's roast was called Rootin Tootin Ralph, and part of the evening was a live auction. The gentlemen here today were the successful bidders on lunch with the Premier.

My guests are two members of the Calgary Homeless Foundation's board of directors: Sam Kolias, president and CEO of Boardwalk rental properties, and David McIlveen, Boardwalk's director of community development and social services. As an aside, Mr. Speaker, Boardwalk is one of few if any private-sector companies that offers rental subsidies to low-income people. I see that our special guests are already standing. I'd ask that they receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has just designated two new occupations in apprenticeship and industry training: oil and gas transportation services and well testing services supervisors. These new designations mean that there will now be provincially recognized industry standards in these careers, giving people in these occupations a clear picture of the skills they need to succeed in these fields.

Today I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a number of people who have made this possible, beginning with my congratulations to the first five recipients of certificates under the new well testing supervisor designation, and who are in the members' gallery today. From Pure Energy we have Jason Tremblay and Mark Wohlgemuth, and from Lonkar Well Testing we have Kevin Peterson, Ryan White, and Allen Townsend.

Also with us today to celebrate this success are a number of other guests who work hard to ensure that Alberta has the skilled workers it needs for the future. Roger Soucy of the Petroleum Services Association of Canada is also in the members' gallery today. Seated in the public gallery we have Brian Bickley, chair of the Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board; Cheryl Knight, from the Petroleum Human Resources Council of Canada; Elizabeth Aquin, from the Petroleum Services Association of Canada; and Kim Dingwall, from the Petroleum Industry Training Service.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we have representatives from the two companies who are currently employing our first five certificate recipients: Ed Klein and Glenn Berry, from Lonkar Well Testing, and Scott Dancey, from Pure Energy. I would like them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome and in the case of our certificate recipients the congratulations of all members of this Assembly.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, today it gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly some very special students who come from a community called Wabasca-Desmarais. They've travelled many, many miles. They're from the Mistassiny school, 26 visitors, and are seated in both the public and the members' galleries. They're led by teacher Edgar Bailey as well as parent helpers Don Tessier, Jennifer MacDonald, and Alvina Cardinal. I'd ask that they stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you 23 visitors to the Legislature from the Rockyview Christian school in Pincher Creek. I understand that maybe some of them are in the members' gallery, and some of them are in the public gallery. These 23 folks are accompanied today by teachers Jeff Blosser and Lance Giesbrecht and parent helpers Galen and Gwen Toews, Jerry and Wendy Toews, Merle Unruh, Lavonne Blosser, and Karen Regehr, all from the beautiful, breathtaking constituency of Livingstone-Macleod. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce 10 energetic and young-at-heart seniors from my church, Christ community church. We call them the Diamond Club because they sparkle with energy and enthusiasm. They are led today by Mrs. Shirley Wedman, who is the group leader. They are in the public gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 13 grade 6 students from Killam public school, who are the future of rural Alberta and this province. They are accompanied by their group leader, Ginette Dammann, and one of Alberta's many fine, outstanding, and quality teachers, Karin Brussé, who wrote a proposal for an Access Network contest, which means that these students are all going to be in our fine capital city for a week. They're seated in the public gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you I'd like to introduce to this Legislative Assembly a fine group of students from Dunluce elementary school. They're accompanied today by three teachers, Irene Huk, Lori Whalen, and Krista Penno, and also a student teacher who is about to begin teaching, hopefully, next year, Mr. Cunningham. Along with them are two parents, Mrs. Morris and Miss Turpin. Today their tour has been led by one of our employees from visitor services, who actually was my junior high school teacher perhaps some five, 10 years ago, Mr. Chuck Grelli. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two individuals who are not only visiting the Assembly but are also visiting our country. Nina Limacher and Baptiste PouBlang are two Rotary exchange students who have been going to school in High River since September 2004. Nina hails from Lucerne, Switzerland, and will be graduating from grade 12 this year. Baptiste is from Dunkirk, France, and is in grade 11. These two young people are accompanied by their Rotarian counsellor, Irv Cherneski, and his wife, Kaye. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three individuals. In the members' gallery today we have Dorothy Pacquette. Dorothy is the first female pipefitter accepted to the United Association of Plumbers and Pipefitters in northern Alberta. Randy Beaudry is her beau and accompanied her on her recent trek from Fort McMurray, the long walk to protest the use of temporary foreign workers. Jack Hubler is a long-time leader in Alberta's construction and pipeline industry and is with the United Association of Plumbers and Pipefitters.

In the building here today Dorothy was awarded a centennial medal for her efforts to act as a role model for young women in our province seeking apprenticeship, for young aboriginals, and for all her efforts over the many years she's been working in the industry. I ask that they rise and that you all give the warm welcome of this Assembly to them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to everyone in this Assembly a constituent of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, seated in the members' gallery, Mr. Glenn Hennig, who is also the manager of the Lakeland REA and who will be watching the proceedings of the House. I'd ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

My other introduction, Mr. Speaker, is a very distinguished Albertan, seated in your gallery, and through you I wish to introduce him to all members of this Assembly. This guest played football for the Huskies for three years, became the general manager and recruited players from Rocky Mountain House, Ponoka, Camrose, Wetaskiwin. It was the team that was the Canadian champion for 1962, '63, and '64. No other junior team won three consecutive titles. On May 27 the whole team and this gentleman, Mr. Don Hamilton, will be inducted into the Alberta Sports Hall of Fame. I'd ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a young man from my constituency, Troy McDonald. Troy is seated in the members' gallery. Troy is a smart young man. He's a Tory. He said that he wants my job about 10 years from now. I'd like you to rise, Troy, and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Kelley Charlebois Consulting Ltd.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not just in Quebec where governing parties channel money to their friends. The list of government contracts in Alberta going to friends of the PC Party with taxpayers getting nothing to show for it is long indeed. The former minister of health handed $400,000 of Albertans' money to his friend Kelley Charlebois, yet not one page of work exists, not a memo, not a letter, apparently not even an e-mail. The Auditor General of Alberta, lacking the teeth of his federal counterpart, refuses to launch a special investigation. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: can she tell us what Kelley Charlebois did for $400,000 of taxpayers' money?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the amount referenced was over a three-year period. There was advice provided to the minister. I know that there were appropriate receipts for the travel expenditures. This was discussed at Public Accounts, and at that time I made a commitment that the procedures were being followed. We are working very hard to make sure that staff are trained in appropriate ways so that this won't happen again.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Will this minister request that the Auditor General launch a full special investigation into what the $400,000 was used for?

Ms Evans: No, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General has conducted his audit, and we have had a discussion about that in the context of a meeting with the executive committee, and I don't know that any more needs to be said. He has in fact examined those books. He has spoken out at the time of Public Accounts, and I'm not sure what more we would uncover.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: don't the taxpayers of Alberta deserve to know what that $400,000 was spent on?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that that advice was provided to the minister. There were several issues that the minister was facing. I am told that the advice related to things such as the changes in the regional health boundaries, among others. I don't think more needs to be added.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Rod Love Consulting Inc.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, the list of government contracts going to friends of the government, of the PC Party is long indeed. This government sank over a million dollars into a study quarterbacked by a group led by the Premier's friend and now chief of staff, Rod Love, only to learn, as many people predicted, that government money for a railroad to Fort McMurray is not justified. To the Premier: how many tax dollars of the 1 and a quarter million this government sank into this study went personally to the Premier's chief of staff?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know, and I say that quite frankly. I really don't know. I do know that Rod Love was hired as a consultant, when he was in the consulting business, to advise the consortium on communications. As to the amount he was paid, I don't know, but I'd be happy to find out.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Exactly when and where – exactly – will the Premier make this information public?

Mr. Klein: I don't know where, and I don't know when, but I can make this commitment. I will do it as soon as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking of making things public, will the Premier instruct his chief of staff to make public the directives given to him by the Ethics Commissioner regarding his private lobbying business, as Mr. Love promised to do?

Mr. Klein: I don't have any problems, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week during question period, when pressed about the development of well sites on disputed Lubicon land, the Energy minister candidly stated that oil companies who had already commenced construction "have not yet gone forward to the Energy and Utilities Board, which is a requirement, but they will." This is "standard procedure." To the Energy minister: is it standard procedure for well site development and surface disturbance to proceed without the prior approval of the EUB?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, it is standard in the sense that they can move pipe and equipment onto a site prior to the application being granted. No work can then be undertaken. No application, no drilling can occur. That has to go before the EUB.

Dr. Swann: Again to the same minister: how many leases are under construction across Alberta without the approval of the EUB?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, no licences go forth and there's no drilling activity that occurs without the complete and thorough review by the Energy and Utilities Board. They do an excellent job in respect to approving the 20 some odd thousand wells that are drilled annually in this province.

Dr. Swann: Again to the same minister: will this government order Deep Well Oil & Gas and Welwyn Resources to halt any and all construction in the disputed areas until the appropriate consultations can occur and environmental permits and approvals considered?

Mr. Melchin: That is part of the very normal procedure that the companies in that area are required to do. They have not commenced any operations. They have not gone forward at this stage to ask for a licence. That licence, when coming forward, is subject to public consultation.

In this case I would like to point out, though, that even the site where the pipes were put on, that the Lubicon had mentioned, is actually miles away from the territory that is expected to be included in the Lubicon reserve. It's even outside of that area. But that said, even with this public consultation is a requirement in granting a licence.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Health Resource Centre Joint Replacements

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday, nine months after it was first announced, the Ministry of Health and Wellness reannounced a centralized intake registry for Edmonton, Red Deer, and Calgary and an additional $20 million to fund 1,200 more hip and knee replacements in the coming year. Long delayed but still welcome. But this Tory government couldn't resist using this otherwise fine initiative to further its agenda of expanding private, for-profit health care delivery in this province. My question is to the Premier. Why has the government opted to pad the bottom line of its friends at the private, for-profit Health Resource Centre by paying them a premium of at least 10 per cent over and above the cost of doing the same surgeries at a public hospital?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the issue here is not so much how much; the issue is alleviating pain and suffering. The people who suffer from joint problems, whether they're hips or knees or elbows or shoulders, suffer severe, crucial, excruciating pain. We want to find ways to alleviate that pain and suffering, that the NDs would have go on and on and on for years simply because of ideology.

Mr. Mason: It's the pain and suffering of the taxpayers we're worried about, Mr. Premier.

How can the government cling to the claim that improved access justifies the higher cost of doing joint replacements at a private facility when the government's own wait list registry shows that HRC has longer wait times than any of Calgary's public hospitals? Talk about pain and suffering, Mr. Premier.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know, and I don't believe that to be true. I know that many more operations relative to joint problems are being performed because of HRC and its ability to contract with the Calgary regional health authority. Again, it comes down to alleviating pain and suffering.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that the public system can deliver the services more cheaply and sooner, why is the Premier going on about pain and suffering when it's the pain and suffering of the taxpayers he should be worried about?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness supplement. But the simple fact is – and the hon. member knows it – you can't build operating rooms just like that. You can't build them overnight. Space is limited in the public system. That's why . . . [interjections] Am I going to be allowed to answer, or are we going to have to put up with this nonsense from the other side?

Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. minister supplement that question.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, this is very good news, done in concert with 13 orthopedic surgeons, three health regions, very good news because this year we'll accommodate 1,200 more hip and joint replacements than last year. Last year we had 5,300.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Softwood Lumber Trade Dispute

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The forest industry has been paying duty and dumping for years now on softwood lumber exports to the United States, even though they have won negotiations with the World Trade Organization on the North American free trade agreement. Can the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations tell the House when Alberta's forest industry will have a resolution on this trade dispute?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, according to the Alberta Forest Products Association, the figures they've given us indicate that the industry that we're talking about is really Alberta's third largest manufacturing exporter. We are working hand in hand with the industry and the federal government. We met a few months ago in Ottawa, we had meetings in Washington, and a group just recently met in Chicago. We share a common goal on both sides of the border and both governments, and that is trying to get free access and a durable solution to the lumber industry.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the Minister of Economic Development. With your value-added strategy do you also have a marketing strategy for other markets for softwood lumber to the world?

Mr. Dunford: We have, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, we are continually looking for new places to utilize the softwood products that we have. This past February we attended an aspen exhibition in Japan. The purpose of that exposition, of course, was to promote aspen for cabinetry and millwork applications such as doors, windows, panelling, that sort of thing. Right now, we have a study under way, again, looking at opportunities closer to home. We expect the results sometime in June, and the task of that study, of course, is to identify product opportunities for secondary manufacturing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the Minister of Finance. Since this is a disaster in the forest industry, would this qualify for funding under the sustainability fund?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, the sustainability fund is there for unexpected situations that might occur throughout the year or could be natural disasters or if resource revenue dropped considerably. In order to trigger that, you'd have a disaster or an emergency declared. Cabinet would evaluate the information to see whether it applied or if, indeed, other options were available. One concern, of course, would be whether it would be considered by another country to be a subsidy and thus cause a problem with countervailing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Hospital Space in Calgary

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The city of Calgary is woefully short of acute-care hospital beds, and even under the best case scenario the bed shortage will continue until 2010. Last week the minister of health talked about what the department is doing about the shortage, but I note that the work so far is best described as preliminary. My questions are to the minister of health. When will the government approve and fund the plans it is now reviewing so that the Calgary health region can get on with the job of expanding the Rocky View, the Peter Lougheed, and the Foothills?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, the budget comes out on the 13th. We'll be discussing the capital planning at that time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister: can the minister assure the people of Calgary that the department has a contingency plan for coping with any disaster or epidemic that might hit Calgary during the next five years? Specifically, where will the sick and injured go?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, throughout Alberta our regional health authorities work very hard to provide the due diligence. If there was any pandemic or disaster of a regional nature, I'm sure that they would look at all of their contingency plans for just those circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, what I'm finding somewhat amusing is that on the heels of the question across the aisle about the hip and joint work that we're doing to try and accommodate other options with public dollars, there is concern now that we won't have space in public hospitals that we have, and we're trying every innovative approach to look at ways to facilitate the people that are sick and injured to get the best possible treatment.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: could the minister please explain how her department allowed this chronic shortage of hospital space in Calgary to develop under its watch? Did you blow up all the hospitals?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, today in Alberta we hold no apology for being the best-funded health care system in Canada, the very best. We are doing everything possible to be responsible in cost-effective patient delivery. Where we've had rapid growth of Alberta, where the Alberta advantage has attracted many people, whom the Premier often reminds us don't bring their hospitals and schools, we are coping as well as we can. Should there be an emergency, we would do our best to look after them in that contingency.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Centennial Hockey Challenge

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 17 it was announced by the commissioner of the Western Hockey League that a challenge hockey game will be played as part of a joint centennial celebration with the province of Saskatchewan. I'm sure that our solid team of right wingers will prevail over those Saskatchewan lefties, but my question is to the Minister of Community Development. Could he tell us how this unusual competition came about?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the Western Hockey League is planning and organizing this game, which will take place on the 14th of April, and it will feature the Western Hockey League's very best players playing on Team Alberta and Team Saskatchewan. It'll be played in the border town of Lloydminster. The idea was conceived by the CBC in collaboration with the centennial offices of Alberta and Saskatchewan and the Western Hockey League. Fellow Albertan and well-known hockey authority Ron MacLean will be the emcee of the broadcast, that'll take place in both Alberta and Saskatchewan. This event is going to be a day-long celebration of the hockey history of this province and the history of our provinces, and it'll also be a prelude to the Allan Cup, which, of course, is emblematic of supremacy in senior hockey.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, just to simply say this: hockey has helped shape our communities in Alberta and Saskatchewan. It's a Canadian passion. It's a way of life.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental is also to the same minister. Although a trip to Lloydminster is normally priceless, how much money did the Alberta government put toward this event?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, both centennial offices of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta have each contributed $35,000 in support of this game. The game is sold out, and proceeds from the game will be distributed to the Western Hockey League's education fund as well as Hockey Alberta, Saskatchewan Hockey Association, and the city of Lloydminster.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Private/Public Partnerships

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government is slow to learn from other governments' mistakes. Although Sir Roger Douglas's draconian New Zealand budget slashing was discredited, the Alberta government applied his philosophy with devastating effects to Alberta's public institutions. The Alberta government also thought it could escape the costly California deregulation fiasco. It didn't. My first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Given that P3s represent strike three in a list of previously imported failures, will the minister abandon this private, for-profit, at public taxpayers' expense scheme?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, the first answer to that is obviously no. When it comes to P3s, they're an important adjunct to what we do in Alberta. Certainly, each and every one of the P3 projects are looked at extensively. There has to be an advantage to Alberta. Quite simply, that's why we don't necessarily approve every one.

It's quite interesting. The hon. member put out a press release last week and the interesting line that he put it out with is: Friends of Medicare is a "non-partisan [provincial] organization." So I found that quite interesting in the press release.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is also to the same minister. With a projected royalty surplus revenue approaching $10 billion, would the minister explain the need to borrow money privately?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, we have not to this date borrowed money privately per se. We do have a P3 project going on the Anthony Henday in Edmonton, and certainly the members of this Assembly have heard me talk numerous times about the advantages of what that P3 has done and more importantly what that P3 has done for Edmonton. The whole idea of actually getting a road two years early is certainly extremely important. The idea of the 30-year guarantee, so to speak, is also incredibly important for the citizens of Edmonton. Quite frankly, I find it quite shocking that the Liberal Party would talk against something that provides service to the city of Edmonton.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that Calgarians will have waited for over 12 years for the southeast replacement hospital to be built, will this government commit to public funding, transparent bids, and public administration of this much-needed resource?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe that that question is about the how to, which, in fact, would be the Minister of Infrastructure, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Alberta/U.S. Border Crossings

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has three times the population of our neighbouring province Saskatchewan and does billions of dollars of export trade with the United States with twice the amount of truck traffic. However, Alberta has five border crossings, with only one that is open for 24 hours, while Saskatchewan has 13 crossings, with two being open for 24 hours. My question is to the Minister of Economic Development. Does the minister recognize how this arrangement is restricting the flow of goods and people into and out of Alberta?

Mr. Dunford: Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker. If we look at it on the tourism side, for an example, when we use that wonderful interstate highway system in the United States, it's pretty clear traffic from Detroit, Chicago through Minneapolis. As they move west on the interstate 94, when they enter the Montana border, if they want to stay on the interstate system, then they have to dip quite a ways south through Billings and then back up out through the western part of the state. If they were heading our way, they would have to perhaps come through Coultts, and it has added a tremendous amount to that particular journey.

Just think: if on the highway maps we could put and show a 24-hour border system at Wild Horse, all they have to do as they enter the Montana border is just make their way up to the number 2 in the United States and then, of course, onto 41, and I believe the rubber-tired traffic for tourism would increase exponentially.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplement is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. What is he prepared to do to ensure that southeast Alberta will benefit from better border service by helping establish another 24-hour crossing at Wild Horse down in the southeast corner of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier on this year when I met with the Medicine Hat city council, it became very apparent that this was one of their top priorities. Having a 24-hour border crossing at Wild Horse I think is absolutely essential. I heard a lot of anecdotes about issues that they had getting to the border quite simply two or three minutes too late and being shut down and having to go back.

So, Mr. Speaker, I entirely agree with the hon. member that this is incredibly important and, subsequently, have written letters to the immigration minister, the CIC minister, as well as my counterpart, the transportation minister. I think from a transportation and an economic route, Wild Horse is absolutely essential to southeast Alberta, and we all know the good things that happen in southeast Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Group Homes

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on a constituency question. An unlicensed group home funded by the government recently opened for business in my constituency. It rented a house directly across from the entrance to an elementary school. A short time later a 46-year-old developmentally disabled man from the home exposed himself as the kids came to school. The company shut the home in a week after some pressure, but at a public meeting last Thursday it was further reported that a child sex offender was also resident in the home. His chair in the picture window facing the entrance to the school is now empty, thank God. My question is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Are there provincial contract guidelines to ensure that all group home businesses have the sense to not rent homes for child sex offenders next to elementary schools?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not familiar with the circumstances surrounding this case, but, hon. member, I'd more than welcome the opportunity to discuss this further with you as it is in your constituency.

Mr. Speaker, you know that we have a Persons with Developmental Disabilities Provincial Board, and there are six regional boards. The funding is that there is a flow through of funding through budgets, through our provincial budget, through the provincial board, to the regional boards. The regional boards – I can tell you this, hon. member, whether this group home was licensed or not licensed – do have a policy called Creating Excellence Together, which sets standards for their service providers, and they work very hard to ensure that those policies are in place. But, as I said, I'm not familiar with this incident.

Mr. Backs: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: where does this government draw the line between community safety and security for seniors and children and funding placement of dangerous and sexually deviant individuals in our communities?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a very difficult question to answer, hon. member. As you know, we guarantee individuals who are persons with developmental disabilities that they are safe, that they are secure, that they're treated with dignity and respect, and that we, through our provincial boards, our regional boards, have the funding that's allocated. As I indicated to you, those service providers that have facilities within the community are governed through standards, through the creating of excellent standards.

Also, we have through Children's Services, Mr. Speaker, an act, the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act, that would license group homes. I'm not familiar with this home, as this hon. member is indicating, so I'd be pleased to look into it.

Mr. Backs: A supplementary to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: can the minister ensure that this government will make every effort to inform neighbouring parents and at least school principals and day home operators that homes for deviants are being placed nearby them?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, I would like to discuss this further with this hon. member. Hon. member, I can tell you this, too, that neighbours will certainly voice their concerns to the appropriate ministry. I'm not sure in this case if it's the Solicitor General or if it's the Minister of Children's Services or a combination of all three ministries, but I would look into this further for you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Horizon Oil Sands Project

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Shortly before Christmas the provincial cabinet unilaterally invoked a rarely used provision of the Labour Relations Code called division 8. This was done for Horizon oil so that they could move ahead in the tar sands. Now, this provision opens to the door to dismantling collective agreements by using the nonunion Merit Contractors Association and the company-friendly Christian Labour Association [some applause] – well, we'll see if they want to clap – to drive down wages and benefits in the oil sands. To the Premier: is it acceptable in a modern industrial society that purports to be democratic to cancel on a whim the collective bargaining rights of hard-working Alberta tradespeople, as has been done through the division 8 designation?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it was not done specifically for that reason. It was done because CNRL Horizon desperately needed workers. We are very much aware of the situation relative to labour. We somewhat disagree that there are adequate tradespeople, skilled tradespeople, trained tradespeople in the province to fulfill the requirements of the companies. That is why that company asked that division 8 be proceeded with, so that they could get on with the job of hiring needed personnel to get their project on stream.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Martin: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the unemployment rate across Canada is high in these areas, why is the government risking decades of labour peace by bringing in or invoking such an odious and undemocratic part of this labour code?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, relative to the unemployment rate – and I would like to address this – we have an unemployment rate in this province of 3.5 per cent. It's the lowest it has been in 25 years. This is fact.

In the oil and mining industry – and we'll refer to mining as the operation used, ostensibly, in the oil sands – the unemployment rate is 2.6 per cent. Mr. Speaker, this clearly indicates that there are more jobs being created than there are people to fill those jobs in that particular sector. Two point six in anyone's language, even the NDs' language, is virtually no unemployment because you take into account seniors and those who are unemployable, and they represent probably the 2.6. So virtually there is no unemployment in that sector, and we need to recruit skilled people from wherever we can.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Martin: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the seniors will be interested to know that they're in the unemployment rates.

My question is simply this: given that this could lead to a major confrontation with the building trades after years and years of labour peace, does the Premier not see that this heavy-handed approach by his government could actually hinder development in the tar sands?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, to qualify, I meant retired seniors, seniors who no longer wish to work and have fulfilled their duty to society.

Mr. Speaker, again, I would remind the hon. member that Alberta has the hottest economy in the country and an extremely heightened demand for thousands, literally thousands, of workers. Speak to any employer – any employer – in the oil sands, and they will tell you there are labour shortages. There are extreme shortages of skilled people, and at peak times there are simply not enough Albertans and Canadians to fill the jobs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Regulated Rate Option for Electricity

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Small residential electrical customers, farmers, and small businesses are currently not required to go shopping for a power provider. In July of 2006, however, that may have to change. The regulated rate option, considering the lack of competition, is definitely the preferred method of choosing a power provider. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Will your department consider extending the July 6 expiry date for the regulated rate option?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The regulated rate option, as anticipated, was planned to go till June of 2006, and as such we have been reviewing the options of going forward past June 2006. It's important that those things are set in place well in advance. Our department has been reviewing both the wholesale and retail markets to ensure that we have the best options for all residential and small commercial, and in that light those options will be reviewed over the next few months.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: given that contracts offered to these consumers to date are not as attractive as the regulated rate option, can you tell us how many Albertans have signed an electrical contract in the past year?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, one of the main reasons why the long-term contracts aren't yet as attractive as the regulated rate option is not unlike your mortgage, where your long-term interest rate is higher. There's a premium for a long-term, stable, predictable, guaranteed rate versus the short-term rate. But in that light there's been very good progress being made by the retailers to all residential and small commercial. Many are starting to sign on, though it's early on. Only about 7 per cent of residential consumers have signed long-term contracts at this stage, about 37 per cent of the small commercial market.

Mr. Lindsay: Again to the same minister: if the regulated rate option is not extended and considering the lack of competition among retailers, how can these consumers be assured that they will be able to negotiate a fair contract for their electrical service?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, under all models, even if the regulated rate option continued or did not, if there was a flow-through rate as one of the options, customers are not required to actually negotiate or sign a contract with a retailer. There is and will continue to be a default provision so that they won't be compelled to sign a contract if that's not their wish.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Highwood.

Provincial Achievement Tests

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Standardized testing for every student in grades 3, 6, and 9 and now imposed on supposedly underachieving grade 4 students is costly and bureaucratic. It is also unnecessarily stressful on students, encourages invalid conclusions on the effectiveness of teachers and schools, and reinforces an outmoded, narrow view of teaching and learning. My question to the Minister of Education: when will the minister begin consulting with teachers to reform these exams so that the full range of student aptitudes and creative abilities is properly encouraged and recognized by this government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, in fact, began talking with teachers about this last year. Those discussions have continued, albeit on an informal sort of basis. Nonetheless, the member does raise an interesting question about students who did not fare too well in the grade 3 provincial achievement test and will therefore not be retested until the grade 6 provincial achievement test comes around. So in the interim it was thought advisable to perhaps introduce a provincial achievement test at the grade 4 level. We're just evaluating the implications and results of that particular program of testing to see if it's one that should be continued or if perhaps more diagnostic testing should come in in its place. I'll have some answers very shortly on that.

Mr. Flaherty: Will the minister commit today to abandon his plan to retest underperforming grade 3 students, students that began grade 4, particularly given that the government has no serious plan to provide these students with remedial help?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are all kinds of help available. The question really is identifying what the particular students' needs are in terms of literacy, numeracy, and basic problem-solving skills. Obviously, some students do better at those particular skills than others. Those who have demonstrated the need for more help are getting some of that, and through the diagnostic testing approach that I just indicated, perhaps we could take a look at it over a longer period of time to help students really achieve to the maximum of their abilities. That's what we're committed to doing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the students' aptitudes and abilities need to be assessed much earlier in the educational years, will the minister examine the possibility of introducing a screening process in the first year of a child's education with a commitment to fund the focused remedial programs, formally developed, that the child needs to succeed in school?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, one of the issues that we're studying very closely and have been for some time is the whole issue of children at risk. Now, we have significant programs with tens of millions of dollars going to help address students who have learning difficulties. That is not to say that we should be replacing the home environment. Those students coming from home environments where perhaps they have the benefit of more nurturing, caring, loving environments seem to do fairly well, but those who are so-called at risk – and there are a variety of circumstances we could describe here as to what we mean by at risk – are the ones that we are trying to zoom in on and help the most. In fact, that's part of our class size reduction initiative and one of the reasons why we just rolled out 89 million new dollars in class size reduction funding this past year. I'm optimistic that on Wednesday perhaps we'll see some of that good news continued.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Integrated Land Management

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Alberta's growth has led to a steady increase in public land use by the oil and gas and forest industries, tourism, and people enjoying the great outdoors. What is the government doing to respond to these increasing land-use pressures on our landscape so that there's not a free-for-all?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you. This is a very good question in view of the fact that in Alberta approximately 60 per cent of the land is public land, and of course wise use of that land continues to be a priority for the government, particularly because of our growing population and the demands on the land. That's why the government has committed itself to a provincial land-use framework that is consistent with the throne speech and our 20-year plan.

I'm currently working, Mr. Speaker, with other colleagues and other ministries to determine what that framework will look like, and the goal is to create a sustainable land legacy where Albertans can continue to live on the land, labour on the land, and leisure on the land.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you. Again to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: is the Alberta government talking to Albertans about its approach to access management on public land?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's an important component. Not only do we have to talk to our colleagues, but we also have to talk to our stakeholders, including industry, on our approach to access to the land. We must involve the public in informing them of our shared values and our stewardship of the land as well.

One of the ways that we can do this is to encourage education and outreach and, particularly, to let people know about something that comes through SRD, our respect the land program. We want to build on the previous successes with land access and land management that we've had in the past, and we'd like to make sure that we have achieved local participation, like we did in the Bighorn backcountry area, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Groeneveld: To the Minister of Energy. Mr. Speaker, everyone knows that the energy sector is booming in Alberta. Can the Minister of Energy please tell the House what his department is doing to supplement integrated land management?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all know that the activity is very substantial in this province, not just what we've heard about the oil sands but throughout the province: natural gas and coal, coal development itself, conventional oil and gas. All of the industry supports very much a very sustainable life cycle, environmental stewardship of the land. It is very important when we develop that we can return the lands to their original state. It is important also to see that we can disturb the land for temporary times but also return it to a very original state of environment.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Affordability of Postsecondary Education

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Each time this Conservative government conducts an affordability study or reviews its tuition policy, it ends up further entrenching its ideology of user-pay. Those determined to watch the forthcoming international infomercial on the third way would do well to take note. Equitable access to public services, as it turns out, is a slippery concept. To the Minister of Advanced Education: will the minister assure Alberta students and their parents that the forthcoming affordability review will result in every qualified student, regardless of their background, being able to afford to go to the program of their choice?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have made it perfectly clear that as Minister of Advanced Education and with the support of this government we believe that finances should not be a barrier to any student getting an education. I think that answers the hon. member's question.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: if this government is truly committed to equal access to educational opportunities, why has the money available to students from the Alberta student loan program not kept pace with the dramatic tuition increases we've seen over the last dozen years?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we provide student loans on a demand basis. In calculating the amount that's given out on a student's loan, it takes into account the tuition fee for the programs that the student is accessing. It puts forward a budget with respect to the cost of living. Those are adjusted on an annual basis. So to the best of my knowledge the student loan program does take into account the tuition fees that students have to pay.

Mr. Taylor: Interesting, Mr. Speaker.

To the same minister: if the loan program, then, really does provide students with the dollars they need, why did students at the U of A through their students' union this year alone need to provide over $1.1 million in financial aid to their fellow students precisely because they had needs not being met by the Alberta student loans program?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is misdirecting rather badly by suggesting that because there are other forms of student finance such as bursaries or loans or scholarships or any other form, including loans or grants that may be available from a students' union, that means that the Students Finance Board is not doing its job. We have the best student finance program in the country in this province. I served on that Students Finance Board, as did a member of the opposition caucus, and we served well together in making sure that the Students Finance Board served Alberta students well.

The Students Finance Board has reviewed programs on an ongoing basis and continues to do that. The affordability review will make sure that as we go into the future, finance is not a barrier to a student getting an education in this province.

There will always be a role for supplementary finance and supplementary assistance to students on an emergency basis. Most of the funds, as I understand it, that the students' union provides to students are funds that are needed by students on an emergency basis. That will happen from time to time, and there will always be other opportunities for students to help each other support their programs and support them financially. But the student finance system that we have in this province is a great system, and it will become greater.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Transmission Line Capacity

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Throughout the province a construction boom in electrical generation is occurring. In the past four years close to 3,000 megawatts have been added to the grid, and many great projects, including wind generation and other green power projects, are about to be announced. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that these projects are boosting our province's power supply, can the minister tell us if our present transmission system can handle all of the power being generated?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to assure all Albertans that our transmission lines and system can handle the power and the growth. That is also why we are looking long term into making sure that it can continue to sustain that growth. We are fortunate to have that challenge in Alberta with all of the growth in load and consumers in this economy providing that challenge, but we are also looking further into the future to ensure that it will be reliable for decades and centuries to come.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. To the same minister: does his department intend to create a formal long-range plan to address potential transmission shortfalls?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, in respect to the long-term plan, the independent system operator has already developed a 10-year plan for transmission. There are some applications before the Energy and Utilities Board at this stage in light of that 10-year plan. Those are very instrumental to ensuring that that reliability is there. The independent system operator is also currently working on developing a 20-year plan.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: can the minister tell us if an upgrade to the transmission system between British Columbia and Alberta or even in Montana and British Columbia could benefit Alberta's small consumers?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, adding transmission capacity and tie-lines – we already have one with British Columbia, a very small one with Saskatchewan, and there are other projects being announced or contemplated at this stage with tie-lines through to Montana – adds, really, another generator at another end. That's really all that it's doing: adding another source of reliable power that can be brought into our system in times of need. If there are any capacity constraints of a generator going down, it would just provide us greater reliability for our own consumers here in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Exports

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week Calpine Energy applied for authorization to export up to 250 megawatts of electricity generated in Alberta to the United States. Increasing electricity exports from Alberta means that others will benefit while the only things Albertans will get are higher power prices and even more and more air pollution. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Why does this Progressive Conservative government continue to encourage electricity exports from Alberta to the United States when it will only lead to higher and more volatile power prices here in Alberta?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I think there are some assumptions in there that are entirely false. It would only increase the reliability of our system to have more opportunity to bring power into this province when it's needed for what we need. Furthermore, we've never taken the view that we should be an island unto ourselves. There are opportunities to supply good, reliable source power to our neighbours and friends in the neighbouring provinces or even to the United States.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that Powerex and Enron made a good job of importing electricity into this province, how and why can we allow electricity exports when Alberta's own electricity regulator has stated that electricity demand will exceed supply by 2006? Again, why is this government adding to the problem by encouraging electricity exports to the United States?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, we won't be lacking supply by 2006. Those aren't the forecasts. Furthermore, increasing transmission tie-lines, be it through British Columbia, be it through Saskatchewan, be it through the United States, will only increase the reliability and supply of power and reduce the volatility in price spikes that come by having a shortage of supply in any one market.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: how can the hon. minister assure Alberta consumers that the $1.5 billion that they'll pay to enhance the backbone transmission system is not simply prebuilding for electricity exports, where they will receive no economic benefit?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, the $1.5 billion referenced in transmission is part of the independent system operator's 10-year review of transmission needs in this province. They do form part of the backbone. It is very important that we do have reliable transmission lines to get the power to the customers when it's needed at the appropriate time, and customers have always borne and paid for that cost to ensure that they have reliable power. It's the best thing that we could do.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I'll call upon the first of six members to participate under Members' Statements today, but in the interim might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour for me today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a very distinguished individual who is the chair of the region 7 health authority's board. Region 7 is a model for the rest of the province and very much leads by example. If I could please ask the Assembly to acknowledge Mr. Don Schultz.

Team Ferbey

Mr. Ducharme: Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise to recognize a very fabulous Alberta team. Yesterday Team Ferbey did Canada, Alberta, and Edmonton proud by winning their third world championship as a team. The win gave Randy his fourth world championship.

This year's Ford world championship of curling is being heralded as the greatest curling competition ever held, this win providing a fitting conclusion to what has been an outstanding season for curling's greatest team. Yesterday's win was even sweeter given that the past week had not been easy for Randy and the boys. At times they struggled, leaving themselves facing possible elimination in each of their last six games. Undaunted by adversity, Team Ferbey saved their best for last, curling 90 per cent as a team, easily defeating a stunned Scottish squad. When the going gets tough, the tough get going.

This year the Ferbey foursome played 148 games, winning nearly 80 per cent of the time. During the provincial, national, and world championships Team Ferbey amassed a record of 30 wins and five losses. This team has all the talent in the world. Randy Ferbey calls an outstanding game, Scott Pfeifer and Marcel Rocque are the best sweepers ever seen, and Dave Nedohin makes shots that other curlers are afraid to play look routine.

However, you cannot be successful on skill alone. Mr. Speaker, every team relies on their sponsors to help support them. Team Ferbey is blessed to have many wonderful sponsors. I am especially proud of Denmar Energy Services Ltd. of Bonnyville and owners Roger Fortier and Garry Lapointe. Roger and Garry have contributed to the success of the Ferbey foursome through sponsoring the team over the past four years. Both Denmar Energy Services Ltd. and Team Ferbey are Alberta success stories, and together they showcase all that is good about Alberta.

After a well-deserved summer break, Randy Ferbey and company will be headed for Halifax in quest of a spot on Canada's Olympic team en route to Torino, Italy, in 2006.

I know that all the members of this Assembly will join me in congratulating Randy Ferbey, Dave Nedohin, Scott Pfeifer, Marcel Rocque, Dan Holowaychuk, and coach Brian Moore on their win yesterday. Congratulations, and good luck in Halifax.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Value of Education

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over 2,500 years ago Confucius taught the rulers of ancient China: "To make a society prosperous, give it education." Society is still going strong today. In our modern times, reflecting on the importance of learning, the naturalist Charles Darwin said, "It's not the strongest of the species that survive, nor the most intelligent, but the one most responsive to change."

I read a recent research report on the value of education by Stanford University. With global evidence it shows that education contributes to national productivity as well as to individual earnings and quality of life. Countries with strong institutions and infrastructure and effective governments arrange to provide their citizens with substantial amounts of education. The accumulation of human capital is one of the three important benefits that flow from good education infrastructure. The others are the accumulation of plant and equipment and the development of efficient production.

This research also shows that the countries of the world having achieved high levels of education for the average person have done so in varying combinations of self-reliance, government subsidy, and direct provision of education. One of the few favourable characteristics of the discredited socialist governments of eastern Europe was the provision of high levels of education. As the relative cost of education continues to rise in relation to other goods and services, the pressure of financing high levels of education is increasing.

Education is important. Learning and teaching are integral parts of education. As Alberta has many excellent student learners, we also have excellent teachers. I want to thank and congratulate teachers who are among the nominees and finalists for the Alberta 2005 excellence in teaching awards.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Pride Rainbow Project

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Pride Rainbow project was conceived in the fall of 2003 by four youth of the Unitarian Church of Calgary. The aim of the project was and is to show support for same-sex marriage in Canada and elsewhere.

The physical manifestation of this support is found in a perpetually growing fabric banner approximately five feet wide. Frequent sewing bees undertaken by a diverse and expanding number of dedicated volunteers have increased the length of the banner dramatically, from a mere six feet in the summer of 2004 to its most recent official measurement of 468 feet, 11 inches. The goal is to make it eventually 3.2 kilometres, or two miles, long in order to break the current record of one and a quarter miles set by a group in Florida. The banner, as the project name implies, contains the six colours of the Pride flag: red, orange, yellow, green, blue, and purple.

This past Saturday the Pride Rainbow project celebrated the laudable milestone of its banner reaching 500 feet in length at a party in Calgary's Winston Heights, Mountview community hall. In addition to the guest of honour, the 500-foot-long pride banner itself, the event featured a number of speakers, booths, and displays dedicated to promoting tolerance and diversity in the province of Alberta.

The Alberta Liberal opposition applauds the participants in the Pride Rainbow project on their convictions and their perseverance and stands with them in support. The Alberta Liberal opposition understands that same-sex couples who seek to get married, far from undermining the mainstream of society, are in fact asking us all to let them join the larger community as full participants with all the responsibilities as well as the rights that attach thereto.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Progressive Conservative Convention

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend people interested in participating in and shaping the political future of our province travelled from across Alberta to attend the Progressive Conservative Association annual general meeting. It was one of the largest of such gatherings ever held, with over 1,500 registered delegates representing a diversity of ages, professions, and interests.

It's my distinct honour, Mr. Speaker, to point out that the rural constituency sending the most delegates to the convention was also the constituency farthest away from Edmonton. Yes, my constituency of Peace River registered 54 delegates to the convention. We sent delegates from the town of Peace River in the south, from High Level in the north, Rainbow Lake in the west, and Fort Vermilion and La Crête in the east. Some of the delegates travelled close to a thousand kilometres to be here, and I want to express my intense pride for being able to represent such committed and dedicated constituents.

Mr. Speaker, I particularly want to recognize the extraordinary efforts of Gary Friedel, our former MLA, Sylvia Kennedy, our constituency association president, John Watt, the mayor of Rainbow Lake, Ray and Al Toews from Fort Vermilion, Robin Erickson and Amy Murphy from Peace River, and all the delegates from La Crête that so honourably represented their community. I would also like to extend my personal thanks and my congratulations to all of the delegates.

Maybe we didn't exactly put the Peace River constituency on the map, Mr. Speaker – I think it was already there – but we sure highlighted it and were very proud to do so.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Team Ferbey

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to congratulate the Ferbey foursome on winning their third world championship in the past five years. I'd also like to congratulate them on winning the 22nd world championship for Canada since 1968.

Ferbey's team was the talk of the Sherwood Park trade show this past weekend as three of the four members reside in Sherwood Park. Skip Randy Ferbey and second Scott Pfeifer both live in my constituency of Strathcona, and David Nedohin, the team's third, lives in the neighbouring constituency of Sherwood Park. The lead, Marcel Rocque, currently lives in Edmonton but grew up in Sherwood Park and was a graduate of Archbishop Jordan high school.

Sherwood Park resident Ed Thomlinson, possibly the Ferbey rink's number one fan, was so confident of their victory after the Brier that he suggested there would be plenty of opportunity to recognize the team after they won the world championship. But Ed and many fans around Strathcona county were a little worried about their chances when they lost three of their first seven games. In order for the Ferbey rink to dig themselves out of the hole they were in, they had to win eight straight games in order to take home the championship.

The Ferbey rink did exactly what all Albertans do and what all people from Strathcona county do: dug deep, worked hard, and never gave up. They won the rest of their round robin games, won the tie-breaking game, won the three-four playoff game, the semifinal, and took it to the rink from Scotland in the final, winning 11 to 4.

Mr. Speaker, the Ferbey rink had two five-enders in the final game. Never in the history of the world championship has a five-ender been scored, let alone two of them. In fact, the Ferbey rink has never before scored two of them in the same game. They certainly knew when to turn it on.

I would like to congratulate the entire Ferbey rink for an outstanding Brier victory and for a memorable world championship win. I'd particularly like to congratulate my constituents, Randy Ferbey and Scott Pfeifer. This weekend's win gives Randy his fourth world championship and his third as skip of this team. Only two other skips have led their teams to three world championships, and I believe Ferbey's rink is the first to do so with the same four members.

Marcel Rocque, Scott Pfeifer, Dave Nedohin, and Randy Ferbey are truly fine Albertans. Join me in congratulating the members of this team, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Dorothy Pacquette

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise here today to speak just a few minutes on the importance of Dorothy Pacquette's journey from Fort McMurray. Her trek took almost two weeks. She arrived in Edmonton on Saturday and was greeted by hundreds of people here at the front of the Legislature while many of the people across the way were at their convention.

What she was trying to underline are the issues of aboriginal training, the issues of training the youth in our province, and the accessibility of other Canadians to the important jobs in the tar sands. The oil sands and the issues of labour availability, training, and infrastructure have been important issues in our body politic as we work through the biggest construction boom in Canadian history.

We have had an awful lot of studies on the demand for workers. We've had an awful lot of press and media on these studies, and all the rest of it, but we've had very little and very rarely studies on supply. These studies on demand come from many associations. Some of them have been very good and add to the knowledge in the area very well. But, for example, to go on a survey of all the associations that hire tradesmen for the oil sands is comparable to surveying all the grade 2 students and asking them how much candy they want in three months. Well, you might get the answer that there's never enough.

The supply side, however – and we see some great problems in the supply side in that it doesn't lend itself so much to the same types of studies. There are hiring halls, there's word of mouth, there's the foreman calling the crews that have been out of work. That's the way the industry works. It doesn't work very much through want ads. It doesn't work very much through these types of things that are being measured and sometimes reported, and that is why it's difficult to use these . . . [Mr. Backs' speaking time expired] I'm through already? Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Speaker's Ruling

Brevity in Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, might I thank the two hon. members today who understand the value of two minutes, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie and the hon. Member for Peace River. We've had a change in the rules today because members in the past have said that they couldn't participate within one minute. Well, four today conveniently found that they couldn't participate in two minutes either. So congratulations to them.

Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: On this day, from a historical point of view, in 1950 His Royal Highness the Duke of Windsor and Wallis the Duchess of Windsor arrived in Calgary, and among the visits they made on this day in Calgary was to Alberta's first Legion branch, the Calgary No. 1 branch of the Royal Canadian Legion. Interestingly enough, His Royal Highness had turned the sod for the Legion building in 1919, 31 years prior to his arrival.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a petition signed by Albertans who are very concerned about the dangerous driving conditions faced by many workers in northern Alberta. In particular, the 522 people who signed are urging the government to "increase infrastructure development funding for Highway 63." This brings the total for this petition to 1,718 signatures.

The Speaker: We're on petitions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm presenting a petition from 102 residents of Alberta asking the government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition with 100 names that would urge the government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with a petition from 117 Albertans from the fine Alberta communities of Bruderheim, St. Albert, Lamont, Evansburg, Ardrossan, and Edmonton. It reads: We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am presenting a petition signed by 405 Albertans from Edmonton, Sherwood Park, Bonnyville, Lac La Biche, St. Paul, Ardrossan, Leduc, Calgary, and Canmore urging the government of Alberta to “introduce legislation allowing parents the authority to place their [addicted] children into mandatory drug treatment and to fund urgently required . . . drug treatment centres.”

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise to present a petition from Onoway, Calgary, Alberta Beach, Gunn, Edmonton, and Spruce Grove, which reads: the people below signed urge the Government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

Bill Pr. 1

Bow Valley Community Foundation Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce Bill Pr. 1, Bow Valley Community Foundation Act.
Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 1 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. I would like to table the executive summary of an interim report by the Wait Time Alliance entitled No More Time to Wait. Alberta's wait times are embarrassingly far behind the benchmarks set out in this report.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to table copies of government news releases from June 30, 2004, and April 8, 2005. The second appears to be an announcement of a previous announcement.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate amount of copies of a brochure being distributed by Direct Energy currently. The brochure boasts of Direct Energy's ability to protect consumers from volatile and unstable energy rates. Of course, consumers wouldn't need such protection if our electric system had not been so disastrously deregulated in the first place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today, two of which are from University Heights residents. The first is a copy of an e-mail from Bill and Norma Crooks, and the second is a letter from Mary Abel. These Calgary-Varsity constituents express their grave concerns regarding the impact on their community of the expansion of 16th Avenue to create access between the Foothills and Children's hospitals. They feel strongly that there has not been adequate opportunity for meaningful community input concerning this project.

The third tabling is a copy of the nonpartisan Friends of Medicare document released last Thursday to all parties entitled Flawed, Failed, Abandoned: 100 P3s, Canadian & International Evidence.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table this submission with the required copies from Bev McKay, the founder of FAIRE, Families Allied to Influence Responsible Eldercare. It's regarding incidents of horrific elder abuse in care, with the accompanying photographs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Premier I wish to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter the Premier sent earlier today to skip Randy Ferbey congratulating Team Alberta on winning the 2005 World Men's Curling Championship.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, April 7, I will now move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 1 through 11 inclusive.

[Motion carried]

Student Loan Defaults

Q1. Dr. Pannu moved that the following question be accepted.
For each of the fiscal years 2000-2001, 2001-2002, 2002-2003, and 2003-2004 what was the total number of student loan defaults broken down by the last postsecondary institution or private vocational school attended by the student?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move an amendment to Written Question 1. I believe the amendment has been circulated. It would amend Written Question 1 by striking out “fiscal” and substituting “academic” in reference to the years; by adding “and” before “2002-2003”; striking out “and 2003-2004”; adding “Alberta” before “student loan defaults”; adding “for those students who have completed their studies” after “defaults”; and striking out “institution or private vocational school” and substituting “sector.”

With those amendments the written question would read:

For the academic years 2000-2001, 2001-2002, and 2002-2003 what was the total number of Alberta student loan defaults for those students who have completed their studies broken down by the last postsecondary sector attended by the student?

With those amendments, I would be able to accept the question, Mr. Speaker. I could speak to the amendment now, if you prefer, to the reasons why those amendments are considered to be necessary, and there are a number of them.

First of all, while institution-specific data are available, such loan default information is currently not shared publicly. Each Alberta institution is provided with its own specific data. Institutions outside the province attended by Albertans do not get their data unless there is a problem with consistently high default rates. For example, Harvard, just to pick one, has never received a student loan default report from us. Information at the sector level, such as the university sector, is however available for public information.

Legal services has advised me that there are potential issues with providing information about individual institutions pursuant to section 16 and section 25 of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. It may be harmful to the business interest of a private institution as per section 16 or to the economic interest or other interest of a public body under section 25.

Legal services has also advised that we would be wise to consult with the institutions before we consider releasing this sort of specific data. Students with Alberta student loans are attending approximately 1,900 institutions world-wide, which would be an onerous task of consultation. It would require approximately three months' worth of work, and it would be also a considerable amount of work to generate sector-level data, such as universities and colleges. If we even received permission from the institutions to release the data, I'm advised that the resulting report would be likely in excess of 5,700 pages in length.

Default information is tracked based on people who have completed their studies in a specific year in question. Information for 2003-2004 is not available because students would have graduated in May 2004. They would have had a six-month grace period and then another six months before we would consider them delinquent, and that's the reason why we've asked to remove that year from the information.

Default information provided should only include Alberta student loans and not federal loans or other loans, obviously, obtained by students. Management reports associated with defaults are based on school leavers from the May 1 to April 30 period, therefore the academic year rather than the fiscal year.

It's for those reasons, Mr. Speaker, that we're proposing the amendments, to put the question into a context where we can provide as much information as we reasonably can provide and hopefully help satisfy some of the interests of the hon. member in asking the question but without putting an undue amount of work on the department to canvass fully the 1,900 institutions that might be involved to seek their permission to release the institution-specific information and, rather, grouping it by sector, which hopefully will provide at least some of the information that the hon. member requires.

The Speaker: We're on the amendment. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the amendment.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have carefully looked at the amendments that the minister has proposed to my question, which seeks information, I think, that's in the public interest. It's not just the curiosity of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that has led to the asking of the question in the first place. I think public interest is involved here. Public resources are involved here. Alberta's students need to know how different institutions perform, why students going into particular institutions default. They also need to know what percentage of students graduate and complete programs and what don't and yet get the loans from these institutions.

So while I would agree that part (a) of the amendment, which changes "academic" to "fiscal," may make sense because the minister's records, I suppose, are by fiscal year rather than by academic year, if I understand the rationale behind part (a) of the amendment – it's striking out "fiscal" and substituting "academic" – Mr. Speaker, I would certainly appreciate the explanation on this, on the minister changing it from "fiscal" to "academic." Is it because he is willing to provide information for the programs that have been completed? Is that the reason for it, for "fiscal" to "academic"?

Part (b) of the amendment seeks to limit the release of the information to the end of the 2002-2003 academic year, I understand. Again, we are now into 2005. We're more than a year away, a year past the completed academic 2002-2003 year. The minister argued that the reason he can't provide that information is because it takes six months for the first report to come, another six months after that, and I'd suggest to the minister that this still allows the minister to have had enough time to have the information for 2003-2004. [interjection] Okay. Then part (c) of the amendment strikes out for that reason "2003-2004." I understand that the minister is giving me the facts as he has been advised from his department on the availability of this information, so I understand that one.

I do have concerns, however, with respect particularly to parts (e) and (f) of the amendment, Mr. Speaker. Under (e) the minister wants to add "for those students who have completed their studies." If the information to be made available as a response to this question goes back two years, then I don't understand why the minister would want to report only on programs that are completed and not on studies not completed. Lots of the defaults are related to students not completing the programs and quitting altogether.

I think it's important for us to have the information for each institution on how many students who do get the loans do in fact not only default but default as well as fail to complete the programs. Some of the institutions, as I understand it, have really quite miserable records on the completion rates. Default rates are not the only issue. The issue is default rates related to the failure rates, students failing to complete those programs by many of the private, for-profit institutions, and we've asked questions in the House before on that.

The last point here. Part (f) of the amendment is quite troubling. The minister is unwilling to provide this information by institution. We are not asking for information for every student. Information is objectified, impersonalized when you ask for information by institution, and I don't see why the minister should not in fact be ready to provide the information by institution regardless of whether or not the institution is private, for-profit and therefore business interests are involved, whether or not the institution is public and therefore can provide the information without raising any concerns about the protection of privacy of information for individual students or individual faculty or other employees of the institution.

I find it quite puzzling and, in fact, dismaying that the minister has sought to decline my request for information by institution, which in my view would be very, very important information for students to have, for their families to have. Families are supposed to supplement the studies of their children when they go to school. The loan program allows for that, in fact requires that. Families have an interest in knowing the record of completion, the record of default by institution, not just by sector, so that they can make intelligent decisions. If they are going to be treated as consumers in the marketplace of academic institutions, then the government, I think, will serve the public interest better, will serve the interests of parents and families and students better if it, in fact, decided to be transparent and provide information by each institution so that appropriate judgments can be made by families and by students before making decisions on which institutions they would prefer to enrol in and pursue their studies in.

So I hope that the minister will change his mind on some of the parts of the amendments that he is proposing. I don't see any reason why he should stick to the amendments as proposed because not to have this information available, not to be transparent about the information that I've sought – certainly, amendment (f) will make information less transparent and more opaque, therefore taking away from parents, families, students the ability to make the right decisions given that they don't have the right information. Why would he withhold information that's critical to making intelligent, smart decisions with respect to enrolment and pursuit of studies in particular institutions based on a record of success or failure?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: Now we have before us a written question that has been amended. Does the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona want to close the debate?

Dr. Pannu: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to conclude the debate. During the interregnum that we waited for this latest vote to happen, I had some opportunity to talk with the Minister of Advanced Education. I appreciate his expression of some concern that he didn't give me advance notice on it. I appreciate that. If we'd had an opportunity to talk, perhaps I would have been able to convince the minister to take out some of the more dismaying parts of this amendment proposed here, especially replacing "institution or private vocational school" with the term "sector." I think that's the most serious flaw in the amendment, in my view.

I want to make clear that my interest in seeking this information was specific to those institutions, private and public, that operate in Alberta, not all the 1,000 and some institutions all over the world that are accessed by our students one way or the other when they're pursuing their postsecondary studies. Perhaps that wasn't entirely clear in my question, but had the minister's staff contacted me, I would certainly have readily modified my question and made it more specific by suggesting that we seek information primarily on institutions that are located in Alberta and operate out of Alberta under government authorization in one form or another to which our postsecondary students go and, in order to go there, get student loans, and some of them default on them.

We do know that the rate at which students default on their loans has a great deal to do with whether or not they complete their programs at many of the institutions, and the rates of completion are highly variable from one institution to the other. Somehow, I sense that there's a correlation between high rates of default and low rates of success in some of these institutions.

That's why having that information is exceedingly important for students and families to be able to make an appropriate decision and for us as legislators to make sure that the monies that we provide in the form of student loans are appropriately invested, get properly used, and students get the needed protection. Then this increasingly market model of postsecondary education that this government has been encouraging to develop in this province they have to work with. As consumers in the so-called marketplace they need this information, and that's why I asked the question.

So having said this, Mr. Speaker, I am not happy with the question as amended, but I would simply hope that the minister can provide as much information as he possibly can in spite of his amendments so that students are served and the interests of students and families are served just as much as the public interest in the province is served by getting this information, making this information public, getting it into the hands of the citizens of this province, particularly the families and the students who go to postsecondary institutions in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Written Question 1 as amended carried]

Student Loan Defaults

Q2. Dr. Pannu moved that the following question be accepted. For each of the fiscal years 2000-2001, 2001-2002, 2002-2003, and 2003-2004 what was the total dollar value of student loan defaults broken down by the last postsecondary institution or private vocational school attended by the student?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to provide information as much as possible and, therefore, would be willing to accept this question if amended as I proposed by amendment which has been circulated. Essentially, this question is exactly the same as the previous question, except that it asks for the total dollar value rather than the total number, so the same amendments would pertain.

I would move that Written Question 2 be amended by striking out "fiscal" and substituting "academic"; adding "and" before "2002-2003"; striking out "and 2003-2004"; adding "Alberta" before "student loan defaults"; adding "for those students who have completed their studies" after "defaults"; and by striking out "institution or private vocational school" and substituting "sector." The written question as amended would then read:

For each of the academic years 2000-2001, 2001-2002, and 2002-2003 what was the total dollar value of Alberta student loan defaults for those students who have completed their studies broken down by the last postsecondary sector attended by the student?

Mr. Speaker, I won't repeat the rationale that I gave on Written Question 1 for the need for those changes. Suffice to say that the advice that I have from legal services indicates that there are FOIP issues surrounding the release of the information without having a discussion with each of the institutions involved. While it would be our hope and in discussion with the hon. member who raised the question my intention to make sure that there are appropriate levels of information available to students to make appropriate decisions with respect to whether they should attend courses or attend institutions, and we'll certainly work to try and make sure that students and their families have all the necessary information, the rationale used for making the amendment for Written Question 1 still stands with respect to Written Question 2.

Therefore, I'd ask the House to support the amendments so that I can provide as much information as is possible in the current situation to the hon. member and to the House, and we will then take a look further outside the process of Written Questions and Motions for Returns to see how we can enhance the availability of necessary or important information to students and their families.

The Speaker: On the amendments, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister is absolutely right. The amendments proposed to Written Question 2 are almost identical to those that the minister proposed for Written Question 1, and I have the exact same objections to the amendments proposed to Written Question 2 in the same way I had those objections to the amendments proposed to Written Question 1.

Mr. Speaker, I still find it difficult to accept the minister's argument that he is constrained by the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act when it comes to making public information on default rates on loans by institutions. The FOIP Act, as I understand it, simply does not protect institutions from providing information that is public, that should be public, that is not about individuals, either individuals who are employees of those institutions or individuals who are students at these institutions. So I cannot accept the argument – it's simply not persuasive – that FOIP legislation constrains the minister from offering that information. There must be other reasons, and I can only wonder what those reasons are. Replacing "institution or private vocational school" with "sector" makes lots of information unavailable. It makes the whole information opaque.

This House is about transparency; it's about making information public. It's making institutions adhere to standards of openness and transparency that the public interest in this province demands and requires. To exempt them from releasing such information is to give them licence to hide the information that, if made public, would certainly serve the interests of families and students, who have lots at stake in going to postsecondary schools or sending their children to postsecondary schools. They spend lots of money and resources in enabling these people to be able to go there, and to deny them this critical piece of information is to really deny them a service that they, I think, merit, have the right to have.

Mr. Speaker, in light of the conversation that the Minister of Advanced Education and I had, I'm not going to spend all of my time and ask the House to again spend time on taking a standing vote on it, but I cannot support these amendments because they defeat the very intention and the purposes that lie behind the asking of the question in the first place.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion on amendment carried]

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, there's very little to be said about the amended question. I know that the minister will proceed to provide some very general information, which I'm convinced will not be of great use to the students and families whose interests are at stake here. But you get what you get, and I'm therefore willing to let the matter proceed to the next stage.

3:40 Student Loan Numbers

Q3. Dr. Pannu moved that the following question be accepted. For each of the fiscal years 2001-2002, 2002-2003, and 2003-2004 what was the total number of students who received student loans while attending a postsecondary institution or private vocational school in Alberta broken down by institution?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again with Written Question 3 I would indicate that we're prepared to accept the question if it were amended so that it could be responded to in an appropriate way. In this case the amendments aren't as extensive because we can provide, in fact, information with respect to the 2003-2004 fiscal year in respect of the total number of students who received loans, so that amendment isn't necessary in this one.

I would ask and I would move that Written Question 3 be amended by adding "Alberta" after "received" and by striking out "by institution" and substituting "by the last postsecondary sector attended by the student." Written Question 3 will then read as follows:

For each of the fiscal years 2001-2002, 2002-2003, and 2003-2004 what was the total number of students who received Alberta student loans while attending a postsecondary institution or private vocational school in Alberta broken down by the last postsecondary sector attended by the student.

Again, the reasons for the changes are straightforward. Institution levels of numbers of students receiving loans are not currently shared, but information at a sector level is available to be made public. Legislative services have indicated again, as I indicated with respect to the other question – I won't go through the whole thing – that it could be a violation of sections 16 or 25 if we agreed to release the information without having prior discussions with the institutions, the private institutions under section 16 or the public institutions under section 25.

Approximately 200 to 250 of the 1,900 institutions attended by Albertans are within the province, so that answers the previous question that the hon. member raised. There are 200 to 250 in the province, and we'd need to consult with those institutions prior to releasing these data, which would be an incredibly time-consuming process. Our standard student loan reports by institutions also include other student assistance received, i.e. benefits and grants, and to provide an institution-level breakdown of loans would also require those reports to be manually severed to exclude the other assistance information.

So, again, while I always have the interest in providing as much information as is appropriate and possible without unduly taking away from the time that staff have to devote to the interests of students in the postsecondary institution system, it is appropriate to make this amendment so that we can provide as much information as may be reasonably available while recognizing the FOIP requirements and making sure that we don't violate that particular act either knowingly or unknowingly and, also, of course, to limit the information we provide with respect to Alberta student loans as opposed to Canada student loans or loans from family, friends, or other financial institutions.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the House agree to the amendment so that we might provide the hon. member with information on an appropriate basis.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The amendment proposed by the Minister of Advanced Education is in two parts. Part (a) simply refers to Alberta students, and I have no objection to part (a) of the amendment. I accept that amendment.

My concern remains with part (b), where the word "sector" will replace the words "by institution" in Written Question 3. Mr. Speaker, I regret to say that I find that FOIP, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, is serving here more as a fig leaf to cover information, to refuse to release information which I see as important, which has nothing to do with the privacy of individuals. It has to do with the performance of institutions. Institutions must be judged based on their performance, and there's no reason for this minister or this government or this House to provide protection against the ability of these institutions to deliver the goods which they're there to offer to students if they are willing to undergo huge student debt and take out loans to seek those qualifications, seek those educational experiences that the educational institutions offer.

I think it's always important if you, particularly a government that regrettably seems intent upon the private, for-profit sector to grow within our public postsecondary education system, then turn around and protect those very institutions that in my view have very little useful role to play within the public postsecondary system, to provide them the protection that they neither deserve nor need to have. If they are going to be players within the postsecondary education system, then they ought to be held accountable for the record that they produce in terms of the success and failure of the students that enrol in them.

It's that information that will then be useful for future students to use to make decisions on whether they want to take loans from the government or public resources to go to the institutions which they know will not deliver on the promised goods. So why, for goodness' sake, keep this information from being available to students and families who have to make these critical decisions? We have heard in this Assembly time and again, year after year about the massive debt loads that our postsecondary students have. They have to have these in order to get to these institutions in the first place.

Well, if that is the case, if we are forcing students to take such high risks with respect to their own financial security present and future and encourage them to invest in their own future from their own resources, then I think we as a government, as a Legislature have a responsibility to stand up for them and call on the institutions to make the information public that would be absolutely necessary for these students to be able to say: yes, I want to go to this institution because of their good academic record, performance record, and no to that institution because I know that the government has provided me with the information that tells me that I shouldn't be seeking admission to this institution based on its past record.

It is that information that's being denied by way of this amendment, and that's why, Mr. Speaker, I again find myself opposing very strongly the part (b) of the amendment as proposed by the minister. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion on amendment carried]

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, I would simply say that my question, Question 3 as amended, won't provide the information that's critical for students to have, for families to have. Regardless, whatever information the minister is willing to provide I will receive and then make a judgment, based on that, on whether or not to continue to persist in my attempts to have information made public that I think is in the interest of students and families to have.

[Written Question 3 as amended carried]

Student Loan Dollar Value

- Q4. Dr. Pannu moved that the following question be accepted.
For each of the fiscal years 2001-2002 and 2002-2003 what was the total dollar value of student loans received by students in Alberta broken down by postsecondary institution or private vocational school attended by the student?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As with written questions 1, 2, and 3, Written Question 4 could be accepted if it was amended. Again, the amendments would be made in order to align with the type of information which we feel we can legally provide without having to do the thorough review under the FOIP Act.

So I would move that Written Question 4 be amended by adding "Alberta" before "student loans," adding "while attending a postsecondary institution or private vocational school" before "in," adding "the last" before "postsecondary," and striking out "institution or private vocational school" and substituting "sector." The amended written question will then read as follows:

For each of the fiscal years 2001-2002 and 2002-2003 what was the total dollar value of Alberta student loans received by students while attending a postsecondary institution or private vocational school in Alberta broken down by the last postsecondary sector attended by the student?

Again, Mr. Speaker, I won't go through and repeat the arguments in detail, but essentially these amendments are perceived to be necessary as we could not agree to release information of that nature without doing a thorough FOIP review, particularly under section 16 and section 25 of the FOIP Act.

I have every interest, as the hon. member does, in making sure that the students have appropriate information in making determinations as to what institutions they might attend or what value they can get, but there is no value, Mr. Speaker, in giving people information which is not in a context or at an appropriate level. Certainly, there's no good reason for us to perhaps go to an extent where we might be violating our own laws with respect to protection of privacy.

I must say that the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act extends privacy not just to individuals but also to institutions under section 25 and to private-sector companies, which would include for-profit, private-sector schools, under section 16. We would not be able to release these data without doing a consultation with each of those institutions. While that might be a valuable thing to do, doing it now in the context of the types of information that we have and agreeing to do it now would not in our view be legal. Therefore, we must decline to do that, and that's why we ask for the amendments.

What we do going forward to ensure that we look at how we collect data and how we work with institutions and what information might be available to be provided to students in making their decisions is something that I think is worthy of discussion, and I would certainly appreciate any input from the hon. member or other members of the House with respect to those questions.

Regretfully, we must ask for these amendments to this question at this time in order that we can abide by the laws of this House's past and ensure that we don't make undue use of the taxpayers' money using civil servants' time to gather information which is not being collected in the way in which it's being asked for.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the amendment.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise regretfully to oppose the amendment for the reasons that I would be repeating the fourth time around in the House if I spoke at length about why I am opposed to the amendment. The amendment simply defeats the very purpose of asking the question. Clearly, now, it seems to me that there are two facts here. One, the minister's inability or lack of readiness to supply information by institution calls into question the commitment of this government to hold institutions to account whether they are for profit, whether they have business interest or academic interest.

I think that this House and this government must hold all institutions accountable for the taxpayers' money that they receive. In this case we are asking for information that students receive to go to these institutions. It is not their money directly given to institutions – I would recognize and acknowledge that fact – but the point is that these are public dollars. Many students who take these loans go to some of these institutions of questionable repute and, in fact, never complete the programs. They fail the programs, and then they default on the loans that they have taken.

That default on student loans means that public dollars are being lost. Then the government calls on some collection agencies to get after these students to recover these loans and in the process loses goodness knows how much, 30 per cent to 70 per cent, whatever the take is of collection agencies, of the money that they're able to collect at the end of this arduous process after they have really harassed families and students for years.

So all we are doing here is drawing attention to the serious flaw in the decision of the government to make whatever information it makes public and perhaps some gaps in the information that ought to be collected that it presently does not collect. There's no reason to be complacent in the manner in which we account for public dollars and tax dollars that we spend either by way of loans or by way of some subsidy or grant to institutions. The answer in the question that I have raised here today would have helped us to account for every dollar that we spend on postsecondary education whether by way of student loans or through some other shape or form. Unfortunately, the minister has refused to do this.

The last point I want to make, Mr. Speaker, is the what I consider inappropriate use of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. To use this act to withhold information which has nothing to do with the protection of privacy of individuals – all we are seeking is institutional records and information related to institutions, not to individuals – is to bring the efficacy and usefulness of this piece of legislation into question. When you use a piece of legislation for purposes for which it is not supposed to be used, you risk putting the credit of the piece of legislation into question, into disrepute.

That is my additional concern, Mr. Speaker, that I must make sure gets on the record. We shouldn't be using pieces of legislation which are not designed to deny people the information that's legitimately due to citizens, that's legitimately due to people who use these institutions: families, students, faculty, and taxpayers in general. My fear is that here FOIP is being used to do precisely that, and that's deeply regrettable.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I would respectfully request that we move to private members' business with unanimous consent from the House, please.

The Speaker: We've just approved the amendment to Written Question 4. We still have to deal with Written Question 4 as amended. Now, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, do you want to conclude the debate?

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, I just want to say on Written Question 4, eviscerated and emasculated as it is by the amendment proposed by the minister and voted for by this House, I am willing to receive the information that the minister will be providing with reference to Written Question 4.

[Written Question 4 as amended carried]

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I would request that we move to private members' business with unanimous consent of the House.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Ground Ambulance Services

Q5. Mr. MacDonald moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that the following question be accepted. Which reports, consultation groups, and stakeholder reviews have indicated to the government that $55 million is the total amount needed to fully fund the provincial takeover of ground ambulance services on April 1, 2005?

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think this question is self-explanatory, certainly, but there has been a significant increase in the amount of money that is reported to be required to implement this ground ambulance service. There are some municipalities that are still scratching their heads as to how all this came about. Some municipalities feel that they have been left in the dark and possibly could be left holding a significant bill at the end of this. All these reports, consultation groups that have had discussions with the government, and the reviews from stakeholders: it would be very interesting to see what they had to say initially. It is a matter of public interest because of the significant cost overruns from the initial estimate.

Thank you.

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm so delighted to rise. In a spirit of transparency and co-operation, we are prepared to accept Written Question 5.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I would like to express on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview and other members of our caucus the acceptance of Written Question 5 and look forward to receiving all of the information in a timely fashion.

Thank you.

Alberta's Representative in Washington

Q6. Mr. MacDonald moved on behalf of Ms Pastoor that the following question be accepted.

How much money is being spent on leasing accommodation for the Alberta representative in Washington, D.C., for the 2004-05 fiscal year?

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. Now, certainly all members of this Assembly and the taxpayers know how much the Alberta representative – in some circles it is called the Alberta envoy, and in some other circles it's called the Alberta ambassador – is receiving in wages and benefits. I'm sure this accommodation has a thermostat on it, so if the honourable ambassador would like to put on a sweater and turn down the thermostat in that accommodation, he would be able to do so. But, certainly, in light of the costs of this office to date and the set-up for wages and benefits, it's in the taxpayers' interests that we know how much, if any, the leasing accommodation costs would be to the taxpayers for the fiscal year 2004-2005.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on behalf of the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations to indicate his desire to accept this particular question as presented.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on behalf of the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East to close the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East I would like to thank the hon. Minister of Education. We look forward to receiving that information, again in a timely manner. Thanks.

[Written Question 6 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Coal-bed Methane Wells

Q7. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

Of the total number of coal-bed methane wells drilled in Alberta in 2004, how many produced either saline or non-saline water?

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. All the information that is circulating around this province at the very moment about coal-bed methane production and the amount of salty water that is or is not coming from those wells is interesting because of the different views that are being expressed by landowners. Some landowners are all for this coal-bed methane well drilling; others are not. This written question has provoked a significant amount of debate on that side.

Mr. Mar: Just your pronunciation. That's all.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I can assure the hon. Minister of Community Development that where I grew up, there are yet to be any coal-bed methane wells, and this is an interesting problem.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a lot of misinformation out there in regard to . . .

An Hon. Member: Mispronunciation.

Mr. MacDonald: There may be that too.

There's a lot of misinformation out there that needs to be corrected. This could be a very good industry for Alberta, the coal-bed methane industry, for a form of natural gas production. But I'm quite concerned, and the research that I have done indicates that there is significantly less produced water that is salty in the Alberta coal formations than there is, for instance, in the Powder River basin formations. Significantly less. I would like that verified: just exactly how much produced water is coming up with the gas, and what kind of produced water it is.

Written Question 7 is seeking that information, and hopefully this information would be shared with Albertans who are interested in this, and we could find out precisely what we're dealing with here. If we're dealing with a lot of produced water that is salty in some formations, then we can work at ways of disposing this water. Perhaps it could be used for enhanced oil recovery. Who knows? But I certainly hope that I can receive this information from the government.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to indicate at this time our unfortunate position, being one of having to reject this, but I'd like to present an explanation and also give an undertaking. The hon. Minister of Energy has asked me on his behalf to communicate to the hon. questioner and to all members of the House that it's important to note first of all that most oil and gas wells drilled in Alberta, and most anywhere else for that matter, produce water, be it saline or non-saline. Coal-bed methane wells are not unique in this regard.

In specific response to Written Question 7, the hon. Minister of Energy wishes it to be noted that the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board has not yet finished compiling final coal-bed methane well figures and information for 2004. As a result, neither he nor I would be able to commit to providing the hon. member opposite with the requested information within the time period specified by our House process. However, the Minister of Energy did wish the questioner and all members here to know that he would undertake to provide the information as requested as soon as it becomes available.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. In regard to Written Question 7 one will have to wait. I certainly thought that three months into the year that information would be readily available, but if it is not, I will wait. Hopefully, I will be pleasantly surprised. Someday, Mr. Speaker, I'll come in to my desk before question period, and the information will be presented.

In conclusion, I would like to remind the hon. Minister of Education that I was specifically asking for coal-bed methane wells and their produced water records. It had nothing to do with oil and gas wells. Certainly, that is a separate issue. But I'm confident that if we share this information with the citizens, with the landowners, I think that we will avoid a lot of the misrepresentation that is currently circulating among some landowners. I find it disturbing that the information in regard to the benefits of this potential industry is not being circulated, because I think that we could stop a lot of potential problems.

Thank you.

Automobile Insurance Rebates

Q8. Mr. Taylor moved on behalf of Mr. R. Miller that the following question be accepted.

Of the Albertans who received an automobile insurance rebate between October 1, 2004, and February 28, 2005, what percentage of these received less than $50?

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that I'd have to put myself into that category, the percentage that received less than $50. I think I got about $12 back, in fact. And for those dates mentioned in the Written Question, I've yet to speak to a single individual who got a bigger rebate than that. So we're of course very interested in finding out how we're doing given this government's earlier undertaking that it would deliver a reformed automobile insurance system in this province that would deliver the cheapest automobile insurance in western Canada.

So thank you for that, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, again I need to reject this motion as phrased, and I'd like to provide an explanation on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance. Just by way of background, briefly, there are approximately 1.7 million private passenger vehicles registered and insured in the province of Alberta through more than 70 automobile insurers. Insurance companies annually report their business written and claims paid to an appointed statistical agency.

Now, the Department of Finance does not receive the type of information requested in this particular question that has just been read into Hansard from the automobile insurers licensed in Alberta. That is to say that the Department of Finance does not get that information from those insurers. Therefore, it's unfortunate, but the Minister of Finance needs to advise through me to all members of the House that neither she nor the government are in a position to accept this particular question as presented, and so we will have to reject it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to get up on this one because, you know, I'm appalled at the answer that we just received by the minister. This was a government program. This was a program that the government established in order to try and control automobile insurance rates in this province, which were sky-high. Now they tell us that they don't have the information to determine whether or not this program had any effect at all. They don't collect it.

What was the point of the exercise, then, Mr. Speaker? If the government is introducing a program creating great turmoil in the insurance industry on the one hand, great expectations on the part of people who have to pay through the nose for their car insurance, and they can't even tell us whether or not a majority of people got any meaningful benefit from this program at all. That is a disgrace, and I think that the government should be ashamed.

Mr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, just to close with some measure of disgust, I'm afraid. I don't know how a government that makes a promise that it will deliver the cheapest, most affordable automobile insurance system in western Canada can ever hope to keep that promise and be accountable not only to this Legislature but to the people of Alberta, the registered owners of those 1.7 million vehicles, if it doesn't keep these statistics and if it's not even prepared to make any effort to seek these statistics from the insurance industry. Why make a promise in the first place if you're not going to follow through with it?

So I have to close by saying that I think this is a most unacceptable answer from the government, and I'm disappointed. I'm deeply disappointed. I think an awful lot of Albertans will be deeply disappointed as well.

AISH Benefits

Q9. Mr. MacDonald moved on behalf of Ms Pastoor that the following question be accepted.

What is the breakdown of the total dollar value of cash, medical, and other benefits provided monthly to AISH, assured income for the severely handicapped, recipients in 2004 by the government?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, certainly there have been a lot of questions around the entire monthly AISH benefit package. There were a large number of Albertans urging the government to increase the monthly benefit package. It was an issue during the past provincial election. Many people have felt very, very strongly that AISH benefits should have been increased. The government in the meantime has been arguing that it has been unaffordable, but this information would go a long way toward providing information in detail not only to the AISH community but to taxpayers.

Certainly, I was surprised and delighted as well to read in one of the papers today of a budget leak and hear that we're going to see a much-needed increase in AISH benefits. We're not going to get into the whole debate on budget leaks in this province. I think it would be an inappropriate place to have that debate, but certainly I would look forward to the information that we are requesting with Written Question 9 on this side of the House on behalf of the Member for Lethbridge-East.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to indicate that I'd be able to accept the written question if it was amended and also to let you know that this amendment was previously shared with my opposition colleague and circulated to members of the House, as the protocol with these written questions.

I'd like to move that Written Question 9 be amended by striking out the word "medical" and the word "other" and substituting for them the words "and health." The amended question would read as follows. "What is the breakdown of the total dollar value of cash and health benefits provided monthly to AISH, assured income for the severely handicapped, recipients in 2003-04 by the government?"

Mr. Speaker, if it's all right with you, I'd like to share the rationale for making that change. The rationale for amending Written Question 9 is that the AISH program currently provides two types of benefits. First, it provides a living allowance, which is also referred to as a cash benefit, and that is $850 per month that we provide to Albertans with severe disabilities to meet their basic needs. Following an MLA review of the AISH program, we committed to increasing the amount of the monthly living allowance, and I am looking forward to announcing details of that increase and other enhancements to the AISH program later this week.

But the AISH benefit also includes a comprehensive health benefit package, which includes free Alberta health care insurance, prescription drugs, eye care, dental care, emergency ambulance services, and essential diabetic supplies. The word "health" is the terminology used by the AISH program instead of the word "medical." These are minor word amendments – I recognize that, Mr. Speaker – which clarify the specific information that we are able to provide.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. minister of seniors has answered one of my questions, and that was in regard to the definition of health benefit. I was pleased to hear that it does include prescription drug costs and that there is no ceiling on the amount of those prescription drug costs. So on behalf of the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East I would like to say thank you. We on this side of the Assembly look forward to receiving that information, again, in a timely fashion.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate on the question as amended.

Mr. MacDonald: Just in conclusion, Mr. Speaker – and I'll be very brief – I thank the hon. minister and look forward to receiving the information.

[Written Question 9 as amended carried]

Student Loan Program

Q10. Mr. Taylor moved that the following question be accepted.
What is the dollar value of all Alberta student loan program relief benefits and completion payments provided to students attending public postsecondary educational institutions, broken down by institution, in each of the 2000-01 to 2003-04 fiscal years?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would be very pleased to accept Written Question 10 if it were amended so that we could provide the information in a manner in which it's available to us appropriately. Therefore, I would move that Written Question 10 be amended by striking out "provided" and substituting "awarded" and by striking out "institution" and substituting "sector." So the amended question would read as follows.

What is the dollar value of all Alberta student loan program relief benefits and completion payments awarded to students attending public postsecondary educational institutions, broken down by sector, in each of the 2000-01 to 2003-04 fiscal years?

Mr. Speaker, in changing it to "sector" as opposed to "institution," I would just refer to the comments that were made in debate under written questions 1, 2, 3, and 4 relative to the provisions of sections 16 and 25 of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and the advice that I've had from legal services with respect to the fact that providing information based on an institution-by-institution basis may, unless we've consulted with those institutions first, be offensive to the act.

I had committed to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that I would pursue that issue further, and I will make the same commitment to this member, that I will pursue that information further, because I am interested in providing students and families and all Albertans with information, if it's appropriate information, to allow them to make good decisions and good judgments about where to attend and if it's information that's relevant to the decision-making process. However, I'm very, very reluctant, as you may well agree, to have this Legislature order the production of information if by virtue of the FOIP Act we've put some process in place to determine what information should be released and how it should be released. So I would just raise that issue.

Then, of course, what appears to be a rather strange change from "provided" to "awarded." We're merely doing that because reports identify the amounts that are awarded but not necessarily cashed in a fiscal year. The question needs to be rephrased to include amounts awarded to students because our student assistance tracking distinguishes between awarded, issued, cashed. "Provided" is not one of the terms that we use. So in order to be certain as to what type of information we are giving out, we just ask that the word be changed so it's clear that that's what's being asked for and not something that's not within the terms that we use in that area. But I can assure the hon. member that if he intended to get different information, I'll work with him on that and make sure that we provide, where it's possible and appropriate, the information that he needs.

So I would ask the House to amend Written Question 10 as I have moved.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, my grandmother used to say that half a loaf is better than none, especially when there's the tantalizing promise that the other half of the loaf may come in the fullness of time. I'll certainly accept the hon. minister's explanation for the need to strike out "institution" and substitute "sector." It would be nice to know institution by institution the provision or, I should say, awarding, I guess, of relief benefits and completion payments. It may be that I have to come back in subsequent sessions of this Legislature and propose much the same written question, substituting the word "issued" for "awarded" and then, again, substituting the word "cashied" for "awarded."

But as it stands, I'm satisfied with the amendments that the minister has proposed, and I'd be pleased to accept them and get that much information at least.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie to close the debate, or should I just call the question?

Mr. Taylor: Just call the question, Mr. Speaker.

[Written Question 10 as amended carried]

4:40 Student Loan Program

Q11. Mr. Taylor moved that the following question be accepted.
What is the dollar value of all Alberta student loan program relief benefits and completion payments provided to students attending private, for-profit educational or training institutions, broken down by institution, in each of the 2000-01 to 2003-04 fiscal years?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I would be happy to accept Written Question 11 if it were amended in the manner in which I would propose in order that I can give the information that we have in an appropriate way. I therefore would move that Written Question 11 be amended by striking out "provided" and substituting "awarded," by adding "the" after "attending," and by striking out "for-profit educational or training institutions, broken down by institution," and substituting "vocational school sector."

The amended written question will read, then, as follows. "What is the dollar value of all Alberta student loan program relief benefits and completion payments awarded to students attending the private vocational school sector in each of the 2000-01 to 2003-04 fiscal years?"

Mr. Speaker, again, the explanation is similar to that provided for Written Question 10 with respect to the need to go to a sector-based reporting rather than an institution-based reporting. Also, we do not use the terminology "private, for-profit educational or training institutions," but we do use the terminology "private vocational schools." It essentially means the same thing, but it's more consistent with the terminology we use. Just to make sure that there's no question about what information we're providing and for what schools we're providing it, we would request that the amendment be made so that we can clearly comply with the direction of this House.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Well, I have no problem with the first two points under the amendment that the hon. minister is proposing: striking out "provided" and substituting "awarded" and adding "the" after "attending." I do, however, have a problem this time with substituting "vocational school sector" for "for-profit educational or training institutions, broken down by institution."

Mr. Speaker, we've been down this road now several times today on several different written questions. I understand under current law, current rules the minister's need to substitute "sector" for "institution." I understand that we have to do it on a sectoral basis, that we cannot do it institution by institution at this time. I appreciate the minister's undertaking that he would explore this further and hopefully, if I understood him correctly in earlier exchanges, get us to the point eventually where we can get this information institution by institution.

The reason why I have a problem in this particular instance is that in the private vocational training regulation, under Exemptions section 3(c) says that the act does not apply to "any program leading to the granting of a degree under the Universities Act." There are some other exemptions, too, but that's the one that really stands out for me. I think, Mr. Speaker, that this allows – and again I'm looking at a specific institution or, you know, in the future at perhaps more than one – at least one institution which has degree-granting status, although in many other respects you would think that it would fall into, as we phrased the question originally, the "for-profit educational or training institution" description. It lets that particular institution, I think, fall through the cracks, and for that reason I cannot support this part of the minister's proposed amendment.

The Speaker: On the main question as amended, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie to close the debate.

Mr. Taylor: Very quickly. I've made my points during the amendment. The amendment has now passed, so although my objections still stand to it, let's call the question, Mr. Speaker.

[Written Question 11 as amended carried]

head: Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given back on Thursday, April 7, I would now move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions 2, 3, and 5 through 18 inclusive.

[Motion carried]

University of Phoenix

M2. Mr. Martin moved on behalf of Dr. Pannu that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the ministerial order authorizing the University of Phoenix to operate in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd be pleased to indicate to the House that we could accept and encourage the House to vote for Motion for a Return 2 provided that it was amended so that we can most appropriately comply with it. Therefore, I would move an amendment to Motion for a Return 2, as has been provided to the hon. member moving it and is now being circulated, by striking out "a copy" and substituting "copies," by striking out "ministerial order" and substituting "letters of approval," and by striking out "operate" and substituting "offer specific degree programs."

The amended motion for a return would then read as follows: "copies of the letters of approval authorizing the University of Phoenix to offer specific degree programs in Alberta."

Mr. Speaker, we're requesting that the amendment be made to indicate that the approvals were provided through letters of approval rather than by ministerial order and pertain to specific degree programs rather than as moved in terms of authorizing it to operate. The amended motion for a return will more accurately reflect what actually was done.

Approval apparently was granted to the University of Phoenix to offer specific degree programs in Alberta in 1999, and an extension of this approval was granted in September, I believe it was, of 2004. The approvals were granted through letters of approval, not ministerial orders. The relevant legislation at these times provided that approval be provided in accordance with regulation. As there were no regulations in place, the departmental approvals were issued using the letters rather than a ministerial order process. Again, the approval is not for them to operate but with respect to the offering of specific programs and therefore the need for the amendment in order to appropriately respond.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview on the amendment.

Mr. Martin: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the explanation from the House leader we would accept the amendment.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

[Motion for a Return 2 as amended carried]

4:50 University of Phoenix

M3. Mr. Martin moved on behalf of Dr. Pannu that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all documents including but not limited to memos, faxes, reports, letters, applications, and responses related to the approval of the University of Phoenix to operate as a postsecondary institution in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, I would rise to accept Motion for a Return 3 on behalf of the government if it could be amended in order to allow us to comply appropriately. Therefore, I would move that Motion for a Return 3 be amended by adding "relied upon by the government of Alberta" after "documents," striking out "related to the approval of" and substituting "in approving," and striking out "operate as a postsecondary institution" and substituting "offer specific degree programs."

Again, in making those amendments or proposing those amendments, the amended motion would then read:

A copy of all documents relied upon by the government of Alberta including but not limited to memos, faxes, reports, letters, applications, and responses in approving the University of Phoenix to offer specific degree programs in Alberta.

The material referenced in this motion includes documents that are regarded as proprietary information; for example, the full curriculum for each of the degree programs as well as information submitted by third parties, including correspondence from the accrediting body. Although the release of this type of information is restricted by the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, release of the information specifically used by the department to determine that the University of Phoenix meets the criteria for approving nonresident institutions to offer degree programs in the province would not be so restricted. Therefore, by amending it, we can comply, I believe, with the request being made by giving the information that was relied upon for the approval process while still adhering to the requirements of the freedom of information act otherwise.

I would encourage the House to accept the amendments so that we can provide as much information as is reasonably and legally possible to the House in response to the motion for a return.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview on the amendment.

Mr. Martin: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It seems, in a quick perusal here of the amendment we've just received now, that this limits what we can see in terms of the approval process. I'm thinking mainly in (b), where it says striking out "related to the approval of" and substituting "in approving." Well, this is a private institution, and I think the people of the province have a right to know how these private institutions all of a sudden come into the province and are set up and start offering specific degree programs. I think it's important that we actually have some idea how this happens. All of a sudden we hear down the way that, hey, the University of Phoenix is here.

I might relate, Mr. Speaker, that there are some problems – it's been documented on national television in the United States – dealing with this specific institution, some problems that were created by this institution in terms of funding and extra money coming in to them. So they don't have a lily-white record here, and all of a sudden they're here in Alberta, and some of the same problems that the Americans are talking about could be occurring here. It seems to us that we should be up front about this. How is it that after the problems they've had in the United States, we have this particular university coming here all of a sudden accredited?

What the minister is suggesting is just substituting "in approving." Well, that tells us nothing. It tells us absolutely nothing. We know that they're approved, and we're not going to get any more documentation. What we're interested in is finding out how they got approved, especially in view of – the minister must be well aware – their record in the United States, where there is some controversy with this specific institution. All of a sudden now they're here in Alberta.

It seems to me that due diligence would have suggested that before we allow them to offer specific degree programs in Alberta, with some of the problems they've had in the United States, we'd want to know that. I think that it's only reasonable, in view of their track record, that we know this information, Mr. Speaker, and with all due respect to the minister, we're not getting much here. This is very, very narrow, and as a result I don't think it's what we want in the motion, and for that reason I certainly would oppose it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to conclude debate on the motion as amended.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess it's nice that we'll find a small document that they've approved the University of Phoenix, but it won't lead us any closer to why and how and, as I say, the record of this university. But I guess anything is better than nothing.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 3 as amended carried]

Coal-bed Methane Well Applications

M5. Mr. Eggen moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing for each of the fiscal years 2001-2002, 2002-2003, and 2003-2004 a list of applications to drill coal-bed methane wells that were denied by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Motion for a Return 5 I rise on behalf of the hon. Minister of Energy to indicate that, unfortunately, the information in the form requested by the hon. member opposite is not able to be provided as asked for because the information being sought is neither collected nor organized in the fashion represented by fiscal year. However, if it's acceptable to the hon. member and other members of the House, I would indicate on behalf of the hon. Minister of Energy that he would reorganize the question somewhat and make the information available by calendar year as opposed to by fiscal year, which is how it's now worded.

That having been said, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Energy he has indicated through me to you that he would provide as much of the relevant information as possible by calendar year. As such, we will have to reject this motion for a return as currently worded.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder to close the debate.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Well, I find it unfortunate that the hon. minister representing the Minister of Energy is unable to offer an amendment to this motion for a return then. I think we've seen a number of times here this afternoon that small amendments have been brought forward and that thus we're able to receive this information in a timely way.

I think it's absolutely essential that we do in fact receive more accurate information in regard to coal-bed methane exploration in this province. I think that everyone is recognizing the potential importance of coal-bed methane in the immediate future for our energy needs and export energy needs in this province, yet we're unable to perhaps evaluate it in a reasonable way without this information. You know, my understanding is that there are 3,000 coal-bed methane drilling wells in place at this time and thousands more being approved. It would be a simple matter of tabulating those things for us and getting a whole range of potential evaluations. It's just a matter of putting it on a spreadsheet.

So, yes, I would be happy, in fact, to amend my Motion for a Return 5, changing from fiscal to calendar, but as I don't see an amendment coming forward. Excuse me if I'm missing something here. Otherwise, it's impossible for us to go forward on it. Is that correct?

The Speaker: Well, actually, what the hon. member was doing was concluding the debate on the motion that he was putting forward too.

5:00 Coal-bed Methane Well Applications

M6. Mr. Eggen moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing for each of the fiscal years 2001-2002, 2002-2003, and 2003-2004 a list of applications to drill coal-bed methane wells that were approved by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Energy I need to indicate to the hon. questioner and to all members of the House that the information being sought is not collected nor organized nor available by fiscal year. Therefore, we will find ourselves in a position of having to reject this motion as worded, but I would give the undertaking, as I did with the previous motion for a return, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Energy that he will provide you with as much relevant information as possible organized by calendar year since that's how that information derives.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder to conclude the debate.

Mr. Eggen: It's becoming more clear now. Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am certainly looking forward to receiving this information. As I said with my previous motion for a return, you know, if we are able to evaluate in a substantive way the applications that are being both denied and accepted by the Energy and Utilities Board, then we're in a position to make the balanced and weighted decision that is incumbent on this Legislature.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 6 lost]

Sour Gas Blowout Ignition Study

M7. Mr. Eggen moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents including but not limited to contracts, proposals, memos, and reports, including interim reports, relating to the P2406 sour gas blowout ignition study in the possession of the Ministry of Energy prepared by the Bercha Group of Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the hon. Minister of Energy has asked me to convey some thoughts in respect to this particular motion. I think, as hon. members would know, the motions for returns process is not intended to be used to circumvent any of the processes and/or protections afforded by Alberta's protection of privacy rules. Some of the information requested in this motion for a return does relate to contracts, to proposals, to memos, and to other related documents. I think the hon. member posing the question is likely aware of the requirement to ensure the protection of privacy of any potentially affected individuals or entities such as may be inferred or referred to by this particular motion.

For the wide-ranging information being sought through this motion for a return, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should be using that process that exists under the Alberta Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy legislation. This would allow any potentially affected third party an opportunity to review the request and to respond to that request. That is an undertaking that we should all heed and abide by.

That having been said, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Energy we will have to reject this motion for a return.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder to conclude the debate.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am somewhat surprised at this rejection of offering this information. As everyone here in this Legislature knows, the sour gas blowout situation is all on our minds. In fact, we did have an incident here just to the west of this city before Christmas, and then, you know, it's an ongoing problem throughout the province.

As the conventional sources of natural gas are depleted in this province, it's obvious that companies are going after less safe sources of natural gas, where the hydrogen sulphide content is increased and the pressure is increased. Thus, the danger to people both drilling these wells as well as living in the immediate area, be it a rural or an urban area, is also increasing, the danger to those citizens as well.

What we're looking for from this side, and I think most citizens of Alberta are looking for, is a comprehensive way to deal with both the application for drilling sour gas wells in this province as well as more rigorous standards by which to look at the safety of drilling sour gas wells in this province. I don't think, once again, that many members of this Legislature will be unknowledgeable about the gas wells that are being proposed for the southeast of Calgary. You know, this has been an issue that has been brought up to the forefront by many thousands of Albertans. At the end of the day we want to have a prosperous Alberta, but we also want to have a safe province for our citizens.

I know that some information that I have received in regard to this, the sour gas blowout ignition study in the possession of the Ministry of Energy currently, is very illuminating, and there are a number of other models that will describe the potential effects of a gas blowout in close proximity to an urban area. Quite frankly, the ones that I've seen are very much a doomsday scenario for people living in the immediate area, not just living in the safety control area of a potential blowout close to an urban area but many kilometres beyond that. So, you know, I think that in the interests of safety for citizens living in proximity to sour gas wells, it would be very revealing and very helpful to people to actually have this information. So I am very disappointed with this refusal.

I'd like to move the motion, nonetheless, and take a vote on it. Thank you.

Sour Gas Blowout Ignition Study

M8. Mr. Eggen moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the P2406 sour gas blowout ignition study, or a copy of the most recent draft of the study, prepared by the Bercha Group of Calgary for the Department of Energy.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This question, being worded slightly differently and obviously having a very specific focus to it, does not appear to infringe on FOIP concerns, so on behalf of the hon. Minister of Energy I'm pleased to indicate that he is willing to accept this Motion for a Return 8 as presented on the Order Paper.

[Motion for a Return 8 carried]

Gas Well Applications

M9. Mr. Eggen moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing for each of the fiscal years 2001-2002, 2002-2003, and 2003-2004 a list of applications to drill critical gas wells that were denied by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Motion for a Return 9, this is a similar situation to the one I enunciated earlier with respect to motions for returns 5, 6, and so on. That is simply to state to the hon. member: thank you for the question. Unfortunately, it'll have to be rejected as worded only because the information is not collected, organized, nor available by fiscal year. However, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Energy I would communicate to this questioner opposite that the minister will provide as much relevant information as he possibly can organized by calendar year, and I hope that's acceptable to the hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder to conclude the debate.

Mr. Eggen: Yes, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, as per, I believe, motions 5 and 6, I'm certainly willing to peruse and look at the information. I'm looking forward to the information in regard to critical gas wells. I think that I'm not the only one who would be interested in seeing this information, and I look forward to it at its earliest possible convenience to be released to the public.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 9 lost]

Gas Well Applications

M10. Mr. Eggen moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing for each of the fiscal years 2001-2002, 2002-2003, and 2003-2004 a list of applications to drill critical gas wells that were approved by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board.

The Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Motion for a Return 10 the answer is the same as for Motion for a Return 9, that is simply to say that the information the hon. member is seeking is not collected nor organized nor available by fiscal year. However, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Energy, he has asked me to communicate to the members opposite that as much of the relevant information as possible and organized by calendar year will be provided to the questioner as soon as possible. As such, we will have to reject Motion 10 as currently worded on that understanding.

Minister of Sustainable Resource Development Business Expenses

M11. Mr. Bonko moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a breakdown of the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development's business expenses including but not limited to airfare, food, accommodation, and conference fees from February 18, 2003, to November 22, 2004.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Motion for a Return 11 and on behalf of the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development I would indicate that we would be pleased to accept this motion for a return if it were amended. I believe the amendment has been circulated in its totality to all members here in the House, or it currently is being circulated. In any event, the opposition colleagues were provided with the proposed amendment prior to 11 o'clock this morning as per protocol and procedures governing the House.

That having been said, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to just indicate to the hon. questioner and to all members of the House that for ease in reporting matters such as this, the categories that we have listed in the amended motion reflect the government's adopted procedures when reporting these kinds of credit card expenses. I would also point out that the specific reference to conference fees in the original motion is included under incidental and miscellaneous expenses, which I will read out shortly, and will be provided as a separate category under this particular subtitle when the response gets tabled.

So to accommodate accounting practices, we would like to propose an amendment to this motion. That amendment, in fact, would go as follows. We would strike out "but not limited to airfare, food, accommodation, and conference fees" and then substitute "travel, accommodation, meals, receptions and hosting, and incidental and miscellaneous expenses, including conference fees." Then we would propose to strike out "February 18, 2003, to November 22, 2004," and in place of those words, Mr. Speaker, we would substitute "February 1, 2003, to November 30, 2004," which of course would have the net effect of giving the hon. member more information than he's actually asking for. But from our point of view it gets it down to a monthly basis, the first of the month to the end of the month. So it helps us to provide the information in a form that it is already being collected.

So the final amended motion, Mr. Speaker, very briefly, would simply read:

that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a breakdown of the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development's expenses including travel, accommodation, meals, receptions and hosting, and incidental and miscellaneous expenses, including conference fees, from February 1, 2003 to November 30, 2004.

I would like to move that motion as amended.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore on the amendment.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can accept the amendment as a friendly amendment, and we'll live with the results and look forward to receiving the information.

[Motion on amendment carried]

[Motion for a Return 11 as amended carried]

Minister of Sustainable Resource Development Business Credit Card Statements

M12. Mr. Bonko moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2003-2004 issued to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development and the minister's executive assistant.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Motion for a Return 12, I would again indicate on behalf of the government and, in particular, on behalf of the hon. Minister for Sustainable Resource Development that this particular motion as worded would be acceptable to the minister and to the government provided there were some amendments made to it, friendly amendments, I hope the hon. questioner would agree.

In any event, the rationale behind that, Mr. Speaker, would simply be to indicate that the issue of reporting is something we take very seriously, obviously. Now, for ease in reporting, the categories that we have listed in the amended motion, which I will read shortly, actually reflect the government's adopted procedures when reporting these kinds of credit card expenses, as I indicated in the response to Motion for a Return 11 as well.

I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that a considerable amount of time and effort would be required to prepare the document under the original motion's intent. I think members here would recognize that our provincial civil service is an extremely dedicated group of individuals who are doing an excellent job, doing excellent work on behalf of all Albertans. [some applause] Yes. Thank you for the applause, hon. members. I guess it becomes a question of understanding how best that time gets spent by our civil service and what the best use of their time, in particular, might be when you look at questions such as this one in its current form. Therefore, some good amendments have been put forward, and as I said, I'll get to them in just a second.

My final comment would simply be this, Mr. Speaker. Each department, as all members here know, is audited annually by the most professional and thorough of processes as conducted and convened by our own Auditor General, and he would have drawn out to our attention any anomalies that he may have found during his reviews in the past years. Of course, that has not been done. So we're offering these amendments in the spirit of at least trying to provide information in a form that it is currently collected. That having been said, we would propose, then, to strike out "a copy of all monthly business credit card statements" and substitute the words "a statement of all credit card expenses categorized by travel, accommodation, meals, receptions and hosting, and incidental and miscellaneous expenses” and, finally, strike out the words “issued to” and substitute the words “incurred by.”

In the end, Mr. Speaker, the amended Motion for a Return 12 would be worded as follows:

that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a statement of all credit card expenses categorized by travel, accommodation, meals, receptions and hosting, and incidental and miscellaneous expenses for the fiscal year 2003-2004 incurred by the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development and the minister’s executive assistant.

I would move that Motion for a Return 12 be accepted as amended.

The Speaker: On the amendments, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I accept the hon. member’s reasons for the revisions there, and I’m pleased to accept the information as it does come forward.

[Motion on amendment carried]

[Motion for a Return 12 as amended carried]

Department of Sustainable Resource Development Business Credit Card Statements

M13. Mr. Bonko moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2003-2004 issued to the deputy minister, all assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders for the Department of Sustainable Resource Development.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, as with the previous two occasions, I’m going to indicate on behalf of the hon. minister and government our desire to accept this particular motion if it were to have some amendments, which I will read very shortly for the benefit of all members present.

Before I do that, though, Mr. Speaker, I want to indicate that in the amended motion we have again categorized expenses under those nomenclatures that the information is collected under: travel, accommodation, meals, receptions and hosting, and incidental and miscellaneous expenses. The reason for this is as a result of a decision by the government last fall to use these specific categories and these specific accounting codes within these categories for the purpose of delineating specific expenses, and those particular categories are used throughout government now. So there’s been a tremendous amount of standardization that has gone on here in the interest of openness, accountability, and organization. It’s our belief that by using these categories, we’ll be able to provide the response to the motion for a return and hopefully to the satisfaction of the questioner.

The second area of comment I’d like to make, Mr. Speaker, is just to provide information to the deputy minister level and not to the other positions listed in the original motion for a return; that being, assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, unit leaders, et cetera. I think there are some others rolled in.

So I want to just explain what the rationale for the wording is then. I indicated earlier that the Auditor General does an extremely good and thorough job in analyzing all provincial department expenses on an annual basis, and he provides that report and any concerns he might have not only to this Assembly but to the general public of the province. To the best of my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, he hasn’t highlighted any senior department official’s expenses as being a concern at this point.

So I just want to indicate again that a considerable amount of time and effort has gone into preparing the response to this motion, and it would take literally dozens and dozens of hours to compile all the information in a form different than what I’m going to propose. So I hope that will be acceptable to the hon. questioner.

Our well-established process is in place through these annual reviews by the Auditor General that I’ve mentioned, and I think the hon. member and others present are well aware of other avenues that can be used to access even more information should they wish to do that.

That being the case, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest, then, that the amendment simply go as follows: that we strike out “a copy of all monthly business credit card statements” and substitute the words “a statement of all credit card expenses categorized by travel, accommodation, meals, receptions and hosting, and incidental and miscellaneous expenses”; further, that we strike out “issued to” and substitute “incurred by”; and, finally, that we strike out “all assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders” such that the final amended motion would be worded as follows:

that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a statement of all credit card expenses categorized by travel, accommodation, meals, receptions and hosting, and incidental and miscellaneous expenses for the fiscal year 2003-2004 incurred by the Deputy Minister for the Department of Sustainable Resource Development.

I would move the motion as amended.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m just a little disappointed with regard to the striking out of the following: “all assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders” for the Department of Sustainable Resource Development. When they are in fact hired by the department and they carry out any duties that incur costs, they are acting on behalf of the minister and/or his executive assistant. So I thought it would be pertinent and relevant to ask for the specifics with regard to the following members. Again, I’m a little disappointed that they are not going to be included, that the motion does, in fact, exclude them, then.

[Motion on amendment carried]

[Motion for a Return 13 as amended carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I’m thinking that in view of the hour we may wish to call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 instead of getting started on something and getting stopped in the middle of it.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:28 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, April 11, 2005

8:00 p.m.

Date: 05/04/11

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Good evening. Please be seated.

Before we start, may we get consent to revert to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 22 young visitors from the Redwater & District Pioneer Club. They are seated in the members' gallery this evening. They have just completed a tour and took a picture, and I'd like to thank them for that. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Cleaner Energy Incentive

504. Dr. Swann moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to implement a royalty reduction program to provide incentives for industry to develop new technologies for cleaner energy.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This was developed early in our time as new MLAs, and royalty reduction was one of many issues that we talked about in relation to incentives for energy efficiency, cleaner energy, and renewable energy development. In fact, we don't support royalty reduction as the key approach to be taken in this approach to cleaner energy. We, in fact, want to make an amendment to the title of this motion, and my hon. colleague will be doing just that in the ensuing discussion.

The rationale for the amendment is in another way related to the Auditor General's report in 2003-2004. There was a recognition that the royalty reduction program to industry to provide incentives for the development of new technology is problematic. The Auditor General stated clearly that the Department of Energy needed to assess whether the royalty reduction programs are in fact "achieving their intended objectives" and, indeed, concluded:

The Department's initial objectives were broad and did not have targets for the performance indicators . . . Without targets for performance measures and timely reviews, the Department cannot adequately assess whether program objectives, that is, royalty reduction incentives, are being met, if the programs need to be changed, or if there is still a need for the programs [at all].

Indeed, there is a tremendous opportunity and a tremendous need at this time for incentives for renewable energy, for increased energy efficiency, for renewables. Climate change has created the context in which all of us feel a sense of urgency about the environment and about our dependence on fossil fuel resources for energy and the need, then, to shift and create the kind of opportunities and incentives that would be a win-win-win: a win for the environment, a win for human health, and a win for the economy, with new jobs and new technologies developing.

The traditional approach clearly has resided in systems of regulation and permits and enforcement, where government sets the minimum standards. But under this system, Mr. Speaker, there is no incentive for industry to improve its environmental performance beyond the minimum standards. Clearly, the stick approach has to be complemented with a carrot approach and applied in relation to, particularly, our interest in preserving natural capital.

By natural capital I'm really referring to one of four types of capital that has been described across the country: natural capital in relation to economic capital, in relation to human capital, and in contradistinction to manufactured capital. Natural capital is really those resources such as minerals, timber, oil, and gas which provide the raw materials used in the production of manufactured goods.

Natural capital also includes the land and water resources that provide our quality of life and support the economic activity that we enjoy. It refers to living ecosystems that cleanse our air and water, reinvigorate our soil, and contribute to a predictable, stable climate. Wetlands, for example, are among the most fertile and productive ecosystems among the natural capitals. They're an integral part of the hydrologic cycle and contribute to storing and recharging and discharging of groundwater.

Natural capital is the subject of deterioration, and this motion is designed to try to balance the needs of the economy with the need to protect natural capital. What is absolutely crucial in this argument is to realize that environmental prosperity is a prerequisite, an essential precondition for economic prosperity. Without managing our natural capital in a way that ensures long-term sustainability, we not only threaten the viability of our land and water, our air and health; we also threaten our long-term economic well-being. So to ensure this goal, it's necessary to integrate our economic growth with the stewardship of our natural capital.

We're recommending, then, that government and industry look beyond short-term interests to consider the impact on Alberta and industry beyond the immediate future, to look 20, 50, 100 years in advance and examine ways of increasing efficiency, increasing our investment in renewables, reducing our dependency on fossil fuels, and increasing the creative potential in our natural capital.

Currently, Alberta has benefited economically tremendously from the fossil fuel industry. These are nonrenewable. They draw from finite resources and are dwindling, becoming too expensive and too environmentally and health costly. In contrast, renewables such as wind, solar, biomass, geothermal, and others are constantly replenished and will never be used up. Expanding our reliance on these clean technologies will allow future generations to have reliable and affordable energy supplies. By promoting their development, we decrease pollution, combat climate change, increase our health, and create jobs, Mr. Speaker. It's imperative, then, to move towards this.

The Alberta strategy we would recommend would focus on these four areas: first, energy efficiency; secondly, deregulated power markets that do not provide sufficient incentives for substantial investment in energy efficiency; third, a strong energy-efficiency strategy that can transform the market to one with an increased percentage of energy-efficient strategies; and fourth, recognition that not having an energy-efficiency strategy impedes our economic competitiveness.

The policy challenge, then, is that, ideally, government policy is based on innovation and will create pilot projects, use economic incentives and information campaigns to spread the adoption of policy to the population. The policy challenge will also look at the order for the demonstration projects to become economy-wide and require funding for those incentives that encourage innovation to become mainstream. Thirdly, this is necessary to promote the long-term strategy for technological innovation and climate change control.

Some of the suggestions that we're going to make have been used across the country. B.C., for example, implemented a 10 per cent research and experimental tax credit in 1999. The government could commit to consulting with all stakeholders, first of all, to develop what would work and what wouldn't work in the Alberta context. A venture capital fund could generate an industry in Alberta directly bound to the development of new technologies for cleaner energy.

In summary, then, Mr. Speaker, the policy we're trying to promote through this motion would set to guide the development of cleaner energy and renewable energy in Alberta. The policy would direct both research and commercialization for cleaner energy and renewable energy. It would encourage new investment in Alberta and result in new manufacturing facilities with new technology and more jobs with economic growth.

Leadership is needed in order to protect our environment from the demands placed on natural capital from resource extraction. During regional workshops conducted across this country through Western Economic Diversification, stakeholders called for refundable tax credits and incentives for capital investment in eco-efficient technologies to overcome known structural weaknesses in environmental technologies industries and to spur the development and survival of new firms.

This I leave for discussion and look forward to some debate. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise and speak to Motion 504, which urges the government "to implement a royalty reduction program to provide incentives for industry to develop new technologies for cleaner energy." I was actually a little surprised when I first saw this motion because for as long as I can remember, the Official Opposition has continually been insisting that Alberta's oil and gas royalty regime is much too low. I guess they finally realize that Alberta's royalty regime is actually pretty good. We've been telling them that for a long time and been showing them the billions of dollars of investment and hundreds of thousands of jobs that are supported directly and indirectly through the energy sector.

Our royalty regimes have been a primary driver for the successful development and massive growth of the energy sector in this province. Our policies have encouraged growth. We have a commitment by our Minister of Energy that he will be continually monitoring and evaluating our royalty tax and bonus system structure to ensure that it remains competitive and to ensure that Albertans receive a fair share of the resource revenue.

Growth, jobs, and revenue are only one side of the energy development equation, Mr. Speaker. Encouraging the development and implementation of more efficient extraction and environmentally friendly technologies provides a long-term economic benefit not only to Albertans but to the environment as a whole.

More efficient extraction techniques result in more usable oil and natural gas being pumped from our wells, resulting in more oil and natural gas having royalty taxes being applied for an extended time. We end up leaving a much smaller percentage of oil and natural gas in the ground, maximizing the return on our resources to Albertans.

The Alberta government has already put in place a royalty credit program for companies that demonstrate the use of carbon dioxide in the development of Alberta's oil and gas resources. By injecting carbon dioxide into wells, higher yields of oil and gas can be obtained from the wells in addition to reducing Alberta's carbon dioxide emissions through storage of carbon dioxide gases in oil and gas reservoirs. The use of this technology in Alberta's energy sector can be attributed in part to the carbon dioxide royalty credit program we currently have in place. I thank the Department of Energy for having such a forward-thinking program in place.

When looking into this issue, we also come across the innovative energy technologies program, which has made available about $200 million in royalty adjustments to energy companies that implement innovative technologies. I would like to again thank the Department of Energy for having such a forward-thinking program already in place. This government takes an active role in ensuring that our energy sector is utilizing the most leading-edge technologies when extracting our resources.

Alberta also provides a great deal of funding through partnerships in the Alberta Research Council to initiate, develop, and commercialize a large variety of technologies that maximize the extraction efficiency of our resources, reduce water consumption, and cut down on various emissions. The Alberta Research Council in partnership with a variety of partners has been at the forefront of carbon dioxide research, enhanced oil and gas recovery, and environment-protecting technologies.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government and the Department of Energy already have in place excellent programs and initiatives that help push forward new and innovative energy-sector technologies. I'm quite certain that the Minister of Energy will be very open to hearing the ideas that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View and the Liberal caucus have on building upon our very successful programs. I just don't feel that it's necessary to pass this motion to urge the government to implement a royalty reduction program that will "provide incentives for industry to develop new technologies for cleaner energy" when we already have programs in place to do this very thing.

I would like to thank the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for bringing this motion forward because it has helped to educate all members of this House about the wonderful programs the government already has in place and has implemented regarding technology innovation in the energy sector.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Motion 504 as it stands urges the government to reduce royalties in order to provide incentives for industry to develop clean energy technologies. Now, I heard in the opening comments from the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View that, in fact, there was something like an error that was coming along with this resolution. I do want to give the benefit of the doubt to the hon. member since I have heard him speaking out against royalty reductions on a number of different occasions. You know, in fact, the royalty reduction program that we do have in place here, I believe, in this province now fails to serve to create meaningful incentives for companies to reduce their carbon output, especially for large final emitters. So, you know, with that in mind, I'm sure that the hon. member meant something quite different, and in fact I think he's intending to amend it.

However, I still would like to speak with some criticism over the concept of providing tax relief for large oil companies at this moment in our history, Mr. Speaker. There's a definite need to develop clean energy technologies in this province, and there's a definite lack of government leadership in this area. But far from getting us closer to the goal, the idea of tax incentives or royalty reductions really does quite the opposite. I would believe that, and my caucus does too.

I would like to remind members that the prices for oil and natural gas at this juncture are at all-time highs. Crude oil has recently been trading above $55 a barrel U.S., and some analysts are predicting that prices could go as high as $105 U.S. per barrel in the very near future. While there has been some increase in the amount of Crown royalties as a result of record high oil and natural gas prices, I would remind members that for every one additional dollar in royalties, three to four additional dollars flow directly into energy industry coffers. If anything, this situation, Mr. Speaker, would call for something that would resemble a royalty windfall tax just to balance out the massive, quite literally, movement of capital across the planet from various consumer industries and individuals to oil companies at this point in time.

Corporate profits for oil and gas producing companies are at an all-time high, and good for them. For example, Calgary-based EnCana had made a staggering $2.6 billion profit in its most recent quarter on top of an annual profit of $3.5 billion for its 2004 year. Do companies like EnCana need more royalty or tax breaks? I really don't think so, Mr. Speaker, and I'm sure that most consumers here in this province and across the country would agree with that point.

I would also like to point out to members that the province's Auditor General, our own Auditor General, has been critical of existing royalty giveaway programs, and in the 2003-2004 fiscal year the province gave away over half a billion dollars – and that's with a "b," not an "m," Mr. Speaker – in a witch's brew of royalty reduction and giveaway programs. In light of a rather, let's say, liberal way of being rewarded here in this province for, you know, extracting oil, I think that if anything, we could stand to collect more of that money and not less of it. The Auditor General has criticized the Conservative government for not only failing to provide an account for these royalty giveaways but also for failing to prove that they even serve a useful purpose.

I think that we could go beyond the royalty regime and also look at a tax regime, as I said before; you know, something like an increased tax for sort of this bonanza season that the oil and gas companies are having at this juncture. I think the oil companies would be quite happy with that, and we would collect more of the money that otherwise belongs to the people of Alberta, Mr. Speaker. Let's just remember that the royalties that we collect are not a tax on the oil and gas companies who are extracting that resource from the ground, but it's just a small portion of the money that belongs to all of us. Every single Albertan has some ownership in that. Isn't it time that every single Albertan received their fair share of what bonanza of money is being produced in this province here in 2005?

I'm definitely speaking in opposition to the royalty and the tax regimes to fall. Moreover, I think that, you know, the idea of a royalty decrease is built on an essential fallacy. This idea of the invisible hand that somehow will allow people, if you give them less royalty rates, to naturally fold the money back into something benevolent I think is a little bit naive, Mr. Speaker. How does giving even more royalty revenue away to energy producing companies at a time of record energy prices help those forward-looking companies not in the fossil fuel extraction business do what they want to invest in clean energy technology? In fact, it doesn't. In fact, it gets in the way. It's quite a backwards thing.

We have several large corporations in this province who have recognized the need to reduce carbon emissions, and, you know, they have done it without any special, extra things. In fact, they can just read the writing on the wall, Mr. Speaker, and that's sufficient for them to realize that our climate is in the midst of change and that it could be catastrophic change without some absolutely categorical change in our own ways of doing things. Number two, those large corporations such as Suncor and BP realize as well that there's plenty of money to be made by switching over to Kyoto-friendly targets and practices.

I would encourage all members to read two excellent reports by two Alberta-based research institutes: the Parkland Institute, based here in Edmonton, and the Pembina Institute, based in Drayton Valley. Both reports reach the same conclusion. Compared to other energy producing jurisdictions, such as Norway and Alaska, the province of Alberta is capturing a much lower percentage of the economic rents in the form of oil and gas royalties than these other jurisdictions, particularly in years when energy prices are high.

If Motion 504 is in fact dealing with royalty rates, then certainly we don't want to do that, and I would suggest that some tax benefits would be meeting the same defeat if we look at them in the most judicious and accurate way, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise this evening to move an amendment, as was suggested, to Motion 504, and I've supplied the appropriate copies to the table, so I assume that the members will be receiving them shortly.

Mr. Speaker, my amendment would strike out in the motion as it sits now the words "to implement a royalty reduction program." If it were to be received favourably by this Assembly, the motion would then read: "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to provide incentives for industry to develop new technologies for cleaner energy." Now, I'm hopeful that this amendment will serve to clarify for the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka and also the Member for Edmonton-Calder, who questioned whether or not the motion as it now stands might be somewhat at odds with Liberal opposition policy.

Mr. Speaker, as the mover of the bill, my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View, indicated, at the time that this particular position as it sits now was written, we were, quite frankly, to tell the truth, all raw rookies, and we had been informed that we had to write a number of motions for returns and a number of written questions in a rather short period of time, right around the Christmas break. So this motion was written, and quite frankly we got caught up in all of the other things we had to do to prepare ourselves for functioning in this Legislative Assembly as new members.

When it came to light recently that this motion in its current form was going to be coming forward, there was a recognition by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, who had originally drafted it, that it didn't clearly indicate his intent in that although royalty reductions might not necessarily be at odds with Liberal opposition policy if, in fact, those reductions were particular to providing incentives for the industry to develop new technologies for cleaner energy, in fact that one idea may be only a small nugget in terms of the overall picture as to what the Liberal opposition would like to see and believes should be done in the way of incentives for industry. To tie it specifically just to the idea of further royalty reductions was not really capturing the scope that my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View had intended when it was first contemplated to bring this motion forward.

So with that background, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to expand a little bit upon some of the other ideas. I think my colleague from Edmonton-Calder suggested that it may have been drafted in error, and I hope that I've clarified that it was not, in fact, an error at all but perhaps just part of a rather large learning curve that we were all undergoing and, as I indicated, did not necessarily capture the full intent of the mover when it was first drafted.

Mr. Speaker, there are several ideas, in fact, that the Liberal opposition would like to see promoted in and around the area of energy and environmental protection that would go a lot further than simply royalty reductions. We have talked in the past an awful lot about how this entire issue is going to require an aggressive approach in terms of developing renewable resource energies such as wind, biomass, and solar power, all of which there's great potential for in this province. If this motion were to go ahead specific to the way it's currently worded, without the amendment, then we might in fact not be looking at some of those other ideas that the Alberta opposition has promoted in the past and would like this Legislature to have a serious look at if the motion in its amended form were to be accepted.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Liberal Party, as I suggested, supports aggressive energy research that would serve to protect health and the environment. In fact, providing incentives to the industry to develop cleaner uses of nonrenewable resources as well as encouraging the new technologies during the extraction phase, that were referred to in the original motion, are all part of what we believe the province should be looking at.

The other thing I would like to say before I take my seat is that my colleague from Edmonton-Calder also mentioned the fact that he believes Albertans should be benefiting from this tremendous wealth that we're experiencing right now, especially with high oil prices, which are expected by a number of industry analysts to continue to climb for the next 18 months to two years, likewise with natural gas.

I would just like to point out – and again this ties into the fact that the amendment that I'm moving broadens the scope of the motion – that the Official Opposition has outlined a very innovative and exciting plan to deal with future surpluses, which of course are contributed to greatly by the royalty revenue that is collected right now. In that plan, in fact, 35 per cent of any surplus would go into the heritage fund to cause it to grow; 35 per cent into the postsecondary fund that we've talked about, similar to Bill 1 right now with its $3 billion cap except that we wouldn't have the cap, of course; 25 per cent into the capital account to deal with what we believe to be an $8 billion infrastructure debt; and as well 5 per cent into an endowment for the humanities, social sciences, and the arts.

Certainly, to address the concerns from the Member for Edmonton-Calder, I think the Liberal opposition has a very good policy that would deal with those surpluses and would ensure that Albertans benefit not only from the revenues that are generated currently by royalties from oil and natural gas but, in fact, from the overall strong economy that Alberta is currently experiencing.

I hope as well that I've addressed the question raised by the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka in terms of the royalty reduction aspect of the motion as it sits right now in clarifying that although, as I suggested, a royalty reduction in and of itself, were it to be tied to the development of cleaner energy, wouldn't necessarily be a bad thing, it does not capture the scope of the intent that was planned by the mover of the motion.

So, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat and look forward to debate on the amendment as it applies to the greater vision of the mover and the Liberal Official Opposition. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster on the amendment.

Mr. Snelgrove: Yes, on the amendment. I want to kind of give a little bit of a backhanded slap here. The hon. member has certainly done a good job in identifying the weakness in his original motion, but his amendment would have carried a little bit of credibility if it had said something to the effect: we would like to commend the Alberta government for the incentives it has already provided to the industry because, in fact, they have provided an enormous amount. In all fairness, many of the hon. members haven't been here long enough to really understand, and many on probably both sides of the House and, certainly, the general public in Alberta don't know the commitment and the extent of the investment into new clean technologies. That's somewhat why there is extreme frustration from the government as we deal with Kyoto. We believe and we have done so much ahead of the federal government in just doing exactly what the intent of your amended motion would be.

Particularly, I would like to talk a little bit about the innovative energies technology strategy. This is a major component of Alberta's energy innovation strategy. Its purpose was to respond to future energy needs by investing in results that focused on research and technology and innovation and helped create the highest commercial value with the highest standards of environmental performance. That represented a $200 million commitment, and over the lifetime of its commitment the royalty returns are in the neighbourhood of $660 million.

I don't want to say that I could have ever supported their first motion, and I quite honestly can't support the amended motion because we're light-years ahead. So with that, Mr. Speaker, I would urge us to very carefully consider what we're saying and maybe take even longer next time when we're drafting motions. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I'd like to remind everyone that we're not speaking on the motion or the motion as amended. We're speaking on the amendment.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to the amendment to Motion 504, which stands on the Order Paper under the name of the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. The amendment and the motion that it proposes to amend should both be considered in the context of the challenge that we face as part of the global community that's coming to us from rapid global warming. I hope all members of this House acknowledge the validity of the science of global warming and see that as an important challenge that we need to address most seriously.

The motion that's being amended and the amendment itself speak to the concerns that arise out of the scientific knowledge that lies at the base of the debate over climate change. I think we have come to a stage where, perhaps with a few doubters and dissenters, there is consensus that that science speaks the truth that we must listen to and then we'll pay attention to.

Now, it's another matter whether or not the government's own policies and positions on climate change and greenhouse gas emission reduction strategies are appropriate ones. In my view, the emissions intensity model that this government has adopted continues to allow the increase in the absolute release of tonnage of greenhouse gases into the atmosphere, and I respectfully submit to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the House that that's not the way to seriously address the truth of science that lies at the base of climate change.

Kyoto is an incomplete, certainly imperfect first response, only a first response, a first step to our global attempt because it's a global problem. We can't solve it by taking action on it just in one place or one corner, but we can certainly develop nodes of leadership. Kyoto is an attempt to provide that opportunity for giving leadership to societies and communities that are at the cutting edge of industrialization, scientific development, and prosperity. When you are prosperous, when you are leading the pack in terms of economic growth, economic development, you also have some social responsibilities, and one of those responsibilities is expressed in the form of Kyoto obligations that are accepted by a very large number of countries around the world, particularly countries like Britain, I want to draw your attention to, and Canada who say: yes, we have a social responsibility, and we should accept it and become part of the solution rather than continue to be part of the problem.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, the motion itself – the amendment to the motion, of course, tries to amend the motion, so I can't speak about the amendment without speaking about the motion. "Royalty reduction," which is now being proposed to be taken out of the initial motion, draws attention to the fact that perhaps the original motion was narrow in its scope.

We not only need to address these legislative measures and motions and resolutions to the energy industry, industry in general but to research organizations, universities, community groups, renewable energy producers whether they produce renewable energy through wind power or solar power or biomass. These are other industrial activities and scientific activities that fall outside the energy, petroleum, natural gas production industries.

The motion itself concedes rather narrowly to somehow provide a carrot-and-stick model, that the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View sort of used, as if we are dealing with only one person, one actor, and that actor being petroleum companies and gas companies. We're not. We should be addressing by way of this motion the larger question of how we can encourage the development of technologies, science that will lead to the development of those technologies wherever we can find parties and actors and institutions that are willing to lend their support in terms of their ongoing research activity and technological innovation to the development of technologies that will help us reduce our dependence in the long-run on fossil fuel as the primary source of energy and to move to others where we can begin increasingly to use renewable sources of energy.

The motion even when amended by dropping "royalty reduction program," in my view, still remains rather narrow in what it attempts to address. I think we need to have a debate in this House which looks at the picture as a whole and sees many players on the scene who are willing and able to make contributions to our desired goal, which is to slow down climate change, climate warming, and at the same time increase our reliance on energy sources that will not only help us slow down the climate change and the space and rate at which it's changing but also help us keep our environment clean, keep our communities clean, and keep our health in better shape than the fossil fuel consumption helps us to do. We need to have a debate which is broader, which has a larger scope and doesn't just focus on the oil and gas industry as this motion, even when amended, would seem to suggest.

With that said, Mr. Speaker, I think the amendment does move towards at least limiting the negative side of the motion, and for that I'm pleased; I'm happy. But I think that in the days when, in fact, oil and gas industries are making absolutely unheard of, unparalleled profits and generating huge revenues for themselves, it isn't the time to talk about royalty reduction as a carrot that they need.

I visited with the management of Suncor a year and a half ago in Fort McMurray, and they said: "We don't need any incentives. We have the technology. We think we can save money by using our own technology to reduce the greenhouse gas emissions plus sell that technology to other producers of tar sands based fuels." All they needed was for this government to say, "Go ahead," but they were worried that this kind of positive response would be taken in a negative way by the powers that be in this province. Similarly, BP has not only reduced greenhouse gas emissions but, as a result of the technology that was developed, has increased its profitability enormously.

So companies in this day and age working in the area of fossil fuels making huge profits don't need any more royalty reductions as incentives or carrots. They are willing to do the thing so long as they get a strong expression of will from Houses like this which say: "This is what we expect you to do. Please accept your social responsibility as you are enjoying such huge profitability, and come with us. Let's all work together to work on reducing the rate at which climate is changing and also making our air and water cleaner than it is now."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning on the amendment.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in support of the amendment proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on the motion from the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. I think there's some wisdom that's been spoken by the previous two speakers, from Vermilion-Lloydminster and Edmonton-Strathcona. There is a need to have a broadening of the initial bill, and I think that this amendment speaks to that. There is a need to recognize that, you know, the government's royalty regime and some things in the past have done a lot of good. I think it might have taken a bit too long to get started in the tar sands, and it could've come a number of years earlier, but in the final analysis it has spurred on production and helped make the oil sands the booming sort of great enterprise for Alberta that it is.

The expansion of this bill through the amendment is very important, I believe, because of the need to look at the options that would allow the government to get into things like what British Columbia implemented with its scientific research and environmental tax credit in 1999. That program provided tax credits to qualified corporations that carry on scientific research and experimental development in British Columbia.

Now, we have some similar types of programs, but if we were to direct it at energy and direct it at some of the problems that we have associated with energy production in terms of our climate, in terms of our pollution, in terms of our many things that are so attached to the economic driver of our province, the carrot-and-stick approach can have some good effects.

I've talked to a lot of tradesmen, a lot of people in the construction industry and a lot of contractors over time, and, you know, people have said: "Oh, environmentalists – environmentalists. Yeah, yeah, yeah." But, in reality, much of the investment, much of the work that's done, much of the actual cost, and the wages paid have been done for the purposes of environmental projects in the oil sands, in the pipeline areas. The advances in the last 20 years have been remarkable. You know, we have world-class scrubbers in the Genesee coal-fired generation plant. We have similar world-class sulphur scrubbers and such in Suncor and similar types of technology being developed for Syncrude.

As the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona says, there's money to made in these things. But sometimes these technologies come forward not only from the big corporations, but they come forward from private interests that are much smaller. To provide something like tax credits or things like that which go beyond royalties, which go beyond the initial, more constrained idea of the bill, I think, provides a much more utilizable tool for the government in dealing with this. We've got some areas that these types of research should be coming into and coming from some maybe smaller companies in the field, you know. CO₂ sequestration is an important area to look at that could be developed with Alberta leading the field.

We should not take a head-in-the-sand approach. We should not, I think, leave it a way, not have it as a tool for the government to encourage corporations through the taxation system in general. There's a real incentive, I think, a real interest on the part of many corporations. The people that work there are people just like everybody here and everybody that are neighbours in Alberta, and many of them are looking to not only have profits but also to have a real clean environment, clear air, good water for their children.

I speak in favour of this amendment, Mr. Speaker, and I ask all members to support it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been a number of comments made tonight both with respect to this amendment and Motion 504. As amended, the motion would read, I believe: "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to provide incentives for industry to develop new technologies for cleaner energy." Some of the speakers have said that this thing is too narrowly focused, doesn't include renewables, doesn't include possibilities that exist beyond the hydrocarbon world. I don't see anything in there at all that says anything about hydrocarbons. It says "cleaner energy." I would suggest that energy can come from a vast number of sources.

One of the speakers thought that the Alberta government, in respect to this thing once it would be amended, should be more aggressive. We should have a more aggressive approach to renewables. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to point out that right now the province of Alberta is a North American leader in wind power generation. We're a leader in generation and construction of generation in cogen. We're a leader in biomass and other renewables that are tied into the grid. In about four years we produced 3,000 megawatts of additional power, a good percentage of which is renewables. On top of that, the Alberta government leads the country in the public purchase of green power.

Now, if we want to talk a bit about incentives, it's been mentioned a number of times, but I just have to go back to this thing: a five-year program, $200 million – and it's a royalty offset program – for innovative technology to enhance recovery and reduce emissions. Some suggestions were that this thing is targeted at CO₂. Again, much, much broader than CO₂. We're talking about any innovative technology.

Mr. Speaker, besides those two small projects that we actually have on our books at the moment, Alberta has an ingenuity fund that has a value today of some $560 million, and there has been a motion recently in this House to increase that to a billion. These types of initiatives by this government would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, to be almost at the edge of being aggressive.

The Alberta government has been suggesting for a number of years that the Kyoto protocol is flawed, and it will result in Alberta companies and Canadian companies purchasing hot air credits from areas of the globe such as Russia, a form of wealth transfer, Mr. Speaker, or global equalization program that has absolutely no value in the reduction of greenhouse gas in the atmosphere. That's why the Alberta government under the leadership of Alberta Environment created the made-in-Alberta solution to climate change, and the solution already includes royalty adjustments that encourage industry. The more efficient we can get at extracting oil and natural gas, the less waste we have, the less energy there needs to be expended to extract the oil and gas, and the less water we'll use during these processes.

So back to the $200 million of offset royalties. It seems like a lot of money, but with the efficiencies gained, as has been pointed out, more oil and gas will be extracted from existing pools, and this, again, what we would like today, I guess, to call conventionals, certainly increases royalty eligible production and hence the return on those invested dollars to the citizens of the province of Alberta.

Another part of the made-in-Alberta plan for climate change was the creation of AERI out of the old AOSTRA. AERI's mission statement simply says that what we want is "an abundant supply of environmentally responsible energy, creating economic prosperity and social well-being for Canadians." For Canadians. They have already seen success in Alberta's oil sands. In September 2003 industry and government collaborated on a new heavy oil extraction testing facility near Fort McMurray known as DoVap. It's a heavy oil research project using a vapex process and decreases the amount of energy required for extraction. It cuts operating costs and recovers bitumen that would generally not be recoverable.

All of these things are supported, Mr. Speaker, by the Alberta government. AERI provided $7.5 million towards that project. In my opinion, that's aggressive, money well spent. We've seen amazing results from the test facility both economically and environmentally.

Mr. Speaker, we're also working and working hard in AERI and in other research facilities and research programs across the province, across the country, and certainly across North America, and, I might add, in certain circumstances globally to do exactly what it is that the member has asked this Legislative Assembly to urge the government to do.

Personally, I don't see any real requirement for us to support a motion that is just a motion. It doesn't create anything new, doesn't establish anything innovative; it only reinforces something that this government has taken very, very seriously for a number of years. I will for my part not be voting either in favour of the amendment or the motion.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment lost]

The Deputy Speaker: We'll recognize the hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View has placed an interesting motion before the House. I must admit that I was surprised by the proposed idea when I read it on the Order Paper. Instead of raising taxes, hampering the provincial budget process, or throwing more money at the health care issue, there appeared to be creativity contained in this proposal. At first glance Motion 504 had the appearance of an idea that I could support. It would help to stimulate the private-sector research in our province and advance clean energy research. This could possibly result in the creation of jobs and spawn a greater development of Alberta's knowledge-based industry. However, upon closer inspection the fatal flaw of this idea becomes readily apparent. The scope is too narrow. Alberta has traditional strengths in the oil and gas industry, but in order to better prepare this province for the coming years, it is necessary to expand our vision.

We have some of the world's leading minds conducting research into a variety of fields in our province, and it would be foolhardy to ignore these industries. Mr. Speaker, when you are trying to build a house, you use all the tools at your disposal; not just a hammer, not just a level but everything in your tool belt. To do otherwise, to limit yourself by not making use of all the resources that are available just does not make sense. It would be remiss of this Legislature to urge the government to give financial support for research exclusively to one industry, especially considering there are other industries involved in clean energy research. This motion is limited solely to Alberta's oil and gas sectors when there are many other sectors that could benefit from a tax incentive for increased development of clean energy.

A great example of this is the integrated manure utilization system, or IMUS, that has been developed right here in Alberta. IMUS is a product of collaboration between the Alberta Research Council and private industry. Essentially, IMUS takes the manure from a 36,000-head feedlot and converts the energy contained in it into electricity and other value-added products. This type of technology is killing two birds with one stone. First of all, this system addresses a problem facing feedlots in our province: animal waste. When you have an operation dealing with 20,000 or 30,000 head of cattle, waste by-products quickly become an issue, a very large issue. Several problems associated with this waste include shipping and disposal costs, preventing contamination of ground and surface water, release of greenhouse gasses, and, of course, the odour.

The integrated manure utilization system currently being piloted by Highland Energy deals with these matters in an environmentally friendly way. Not only will the animal waste be dealt with, but it will be transformed into electricity, biofertilizer, and irrigation-quality water. This is accomplished through a sealed processing plant that utilizes anaerobic digesters to do the work. In sealed tanks the methane and carbon dioxide are drawn off and fed into a cogeneration plant. This provides electricity for the feedlot itself, and surplus power can be fed back into the Alberta power grid. The slurry that is left in the tank is separated, with the dry solids being sold as a rich biofertilizer. Nutrients can also be recovered from the liquids that are separated, with water that can be used for irrigation being the end product.

Mr. Speaker, while I realize that this is a bit of an earthy topic, the potential of this project is massive. The pilot project being carried out is designed for a 7,500-head feedlot. It has been estimated that this will produce one megawatt of electricity. To put this in perspective, three megawatts is enough to power a town of 5,000 people. The full size commercial application of this project, based on a 20,000-head feedlot, is predicted to produce 14,480 megawatts of electricity annually as well as over 13,000 tonnes of biofertilizer.

Mr. Speaker, this technology will relieve the provincial dependency on a fossil fuel fired generation plant, thereby reducing greenhouse gas emissions from this type of energy generation. At the same time, the system addresses environmental issues surrounding our cattle industry, such as reducing the amount of emissions that are created by spreading raw manure as fertilizer, protection of our water resources, recycling waste water, and, of course, odour reduction. This is but one of the many energy innovations that are being developed outside of our oil and gas industry. It is necessary to promote research and development across the private sector, not just in one area.

While I appreciate the intent of Motion 504, I feel that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View has brought forward a proposal that is too narrow in its scope to provide a real benefit to Albertans.

Additionally, as other members have pointed out, the government already has programs in place to bolster research and development in the oil and gas sector. The action suggested by this motion would be redundant in the extreme.

Because of these reasons I find myself unable to support Motion 504, and I urge all my colleagues to do the same. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View to close.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank all the hon. members for their feedback and excellent discussion. I in no way intended through this motion to limit the discussion to the fossil fuel industry, recognizing that there are a host of industries that need and deserve incentives, and I hoped that the amendment would cover that. I'm prepared to now open the floor to the vote and close debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Business Corporations Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate March 23: Mr. MacDonald]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak on Bill 16, Business Corporations Amendment Act, 2005. I would like to start by thanking the hon. Minister of Government Services and the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, who sponsored this bill, for taking the time to meet with me and with my researcher.

In the general scheme of things this bill appears to seek to harmonize Alberta's business corporations legislation with the national law, the Canada Business Corporations Act. Also, it permits the incorporation of unlimited liability corporations in this province. Plus, it offers some minor modifications and fine-tuning.

I agree with this bill in principle as it appears to be geared toward removing unnecessary restrictions on Alberta corporations. I definitely support liberating our private sector and business community, allowing them more freedom, more room to breathe, allowing them to prosper and to grow. I would like to see all of them unleash their power, and I would like to help them all realize their full potential. Of course, the main goal here would be that they continue to reinvest in this province and in Canada and to employ Albertans and Canadians.

I did some primary research around this whole business of unlimited liability corporations, and apparently Nova Scotia is so far the only other Canadian jurisdiction which allows them. The Alberta government wants to be at par with Nova Scotia to try to attract U.S. companies and capitalize on what it views as an unutilized revenue source. Here I would have to agree that making Alberta more attractive to business and providing opportunities or opening doors for foreign capital are things we all desire and support.

However, I'm concerned with regard to some points. I have some issues with this bill; namely, that we would facilitate the flow of investment capital into Alberta. But with the preferential tax treatment, will such unlimited liability corporations escape taxes on their investments in this province? On the one hand, we're bringing them in and, hopefully, allowing them to invest in our own market, but then by offering them preferential tax treatment, are we allowing them to not pay their fair share?

Also, shareholders of an unlimited liability corporation are ultimately and fully responsible for any liability, even after the dissolution of the company. So what are the safeguards here? Are we letting the directors off easy? We've all heard of cases or numerous situations where financially sound companies, strong healthy corporations, were hurt or went under as a result of bad or irresponsible management practices. Are we letting those company directors off the hook? I would be more worried, of course, if they're from the U.S. If such a ULC, or unlimited liability company, folds, they would board the first plane out of here, and they would tell us: "See you later. Sayonara." The shareholders, some or most of whom might be Canadians, are left with the debt and the liability.

Also, what guarantees will the public have that after the initial phases, as I indicated, after the euphoria and the ecstasy subside, these ULCs will continue to invest here and employ Albertans and Canadians? Canadian companies at least, or most of them, one would hope, have some social conscience and show some respect and recognition for their role in society and their duties to sustainability and development. The question then: will these extraprovincial corporations share that vision? Will they honour the same obligations, or will they, as some would suspect, only focus on profitability and their own growth at all costs and without regard to our own workers, families, economy, or the environment? We have to stay alert and careful so as to avoid and prevent such scenarios from going sour. Allow them to come and operate here, but monitor them very closely.

Also, I would urge this government to stay alert to and mindful of the potential for those companies to push or lobby for the importation of foreign workers because they cost less and don't ask for much. There has been a lot of debate in this House about the oil sands and the proposed importation of foreign labour from outside Canada, and I think we have made it very clear as the Official Opposition that we are naturally opposed to any such move. Any and all available jobs in Alberta in any industry or trade must be filled by Albertans, Canadians, aboriginals, and landed immigrants first before any consideration is given to outside labour.

There is something positive to mention about this bill in that it is proposing some protection for a person from being liable for acting in good faith in reporting information to the auditor. To me, when I read this clause or this phrase, it really sounds like whistle-blower protection. Definitely, this is great and very commendable. Now, perhaps the natural thing to follow would be for this government to implement similar legislation to allow similar whistle-blower protection mechanisms for its own employees and for its own staff to ensure more transparency and accountability within government circles.

Furthermore, this amendment disqualifies a shareholder accountant from being an auditor of the corporation in which he or she owns shares. Again, this is a good move, and I commend the government on taking this direction. Similarly, it would make sense from a conflict of interest point of view to perhaps challenge this government to extend this provision to its own auditors. Can we opt for more transparency and truth in the government's audit procedures by only allowing neutral, unaffiliated, and impartial auditors to review the books and offer unbiased commentary and recommendations? If this day comes in our lifetime, this would be tremendous. Such a move will surely make Alberta a leader in Canada if not in the world and, in my opinion, will be a signature stamp on this Premier's legacy passport.

To conclude, we support the direction this bill is going but hope that the proper safeguards and assurances are in place to protect our capital, our resources, and our people. I would look forward to hearing more comments on this bill perhaps at this stage or maybe in Committee of the Whole.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available, hon. members, if anyone wishes to participate.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 16, the Business Corporations Amendment Act, 2005, in its second reading.

Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to thank the Minister of Government Services for his courtesy to invite me and our researcher, a staffer, to sit with him and his assistant to go over the main features of this bill, which essentially are in the form of amendments to existing pieces of legislation. I also want to thank, of course, the sponsoring member, the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, for his work on this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to try and limit my comments – it's a fairly extensive set of amendments – to the ones that deal with creating in Alberta a situation parallel to what presently exists in Nova Scotia for the benefit of foreign corporations, primarily American corporations, to register in order to avoid American taxes. That is the issue that I am going to address: whether or not we should adopt the Nova Scotia legislation to serve largely the same purpose; that is, to encourage American investor corporations to come into the province and register here and then do business wherever they want to.

The point of the Nova Scotia legislation is that it doesn't necessarily require or compel American companies that register, incorporate in Nova Scotia to necessarily bring business to Nova Scotia other than to bring business, I suppose, to the government services department of the province of Nova Scotia. American businesses so incorporating in Nova Scotia feel free to go and do their business wherever they wish. The only attraction for them to go to Nova Scotia is to somehow avoid having to pay taxes, the American taxes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the real issue, in my view, is the issue of creating tax havens in Canada for the benefit of corporations from outside, particularly U.S. corporations. The Nova Scotia model has a certain type of corporation which provides some benefits in terms of taxes to the corporation. This kind of a corporation has got an unlimited corporation entity – I'm trying to get the exact wording here – and the unlimited corporate liability means that it's part of this increasing number of parties which can be pursued in potential lawsuits as an ordinary corporation provides protection to its shareholders. So it really spreads the liability to all shareholders. In an unlimited liability corporation shareholders themselves can be pursued in case the corporation cannot meet its obligations.

So far Nova Scotia is the only province offering this unlimited liability corporation and, for obvious reasons, was flooded with requests from U.S. companies and individuals to incorporate these kinds of entities. The application fees were increased significantly in Nova Scotia, and it turned into quite a cash grab for the province. Since the people paying fees are primarily U.S. investors, no one really complains about this. It now seems that Bill 16 wants to bring that model of unlimited liability corporation right here to Alberta so that Alberta now would like to provide this corporate structure to U.S. investors and make it unnecessary for them to incorporate in Nova Scotia to attain the desired corporate structure.

Now, the argument could be made, I'm sure, in support of this bill that this will allow more American capital to come into Alberta, thereby enhancing economic growth and economic activity in this province. Mr. Speaker, I think that's a pipe dream. As I said before, for American companies to come to Nova Scotia to incorporate there as unlimited liability corporations has not translated into those companies investing in Nova Scotia. There's no reason, therefore, to assume or believe that simply opening up this avenue for American companies to incorporate as unlimited liability corporations in Alberta will do anything different.

As I said, the actual location of the business does not change since a company could always incorporate in Nova Scotia but operate in Alberta and vice versa. It just keeps more of the corporate legal activity in Alberta. I think certainly some corporate lawyers would be happy that they will have some increased business because American companies may come here and seek legal services to get incorporated as unlimited liability corporations.

There's very little benefit, as I see it, in it for additional investments being attracted to Alberta by nonresidents by virtue of the passing of this legislation in this House. The Government Services department will probably make a few more bucks, but that's not, in my view, what the purpose of that department is. Its primary purpose is to ensure that there is appropriate legislative framework in place for corporations and businesses to do their work here within the bounds of the laws of this province and of this country.

The only people who will be happy, if this legislation were to pass and allow the incorporation of these unlimited liability corporations in Alberta, would be Alberta lawyers, who have up to this point seen much of this work go to Nova Scotia. The passing of this bill here simply will be another signal sent by this government to let their American friends know that Alberta is, quote, unquote, open for business. But business may in fact go elsewhere, with the exception of the legal business that may be attracted here if they pass this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I have here a news release from CanWest news – and I will try to table it tomorrow – called Canadian Offshore Investment Jumps Eight-fold Since 1990. This says that Canadian direct investment in offshore financial centres, including “tax havens,” has soared eight-fold since 1990 to a whopping $88 billion in 2003, according to a report by Statistics Canada.

The report, released Monday – this says March 15 – rekindled opposition demands, including demands from the federal Conservative opposition for a crackdown on Canadian firms' use of offshore financial centres to avoid paying taxes in Canada. It also triggered a suggestion that Canada cut its taxes to compete with legitimate low-tax regimes, such as Ireland.

In other words, a race to the bottom kind of argument emerges from this debate on the flowing of capital outside Canada to these tax havens and use of those tax havens to avoid taxes for Canada.

For example, there's a quotation here.

“From 1990 to 2003, Canadian enterprises invested substantial and growing amounts in countries known as ‘Offshore Financial Centres’ (OFCs), many of them in the Caribbean,” Statistics Canada said. “These centres include countries that are often referred to as ‘tax havens’, as well as those which have important financial sectors, such as Switzerland, but also Ireland,” it said.

The largest increases went into Barbados, Bermuda, the Cayman Islands, the Bahamas and Ireland, the five countries being among the 11 nations with the most Canadian assets.

I'm sure everyone recognizes this name in this House; we sometimes wish we had an Auditor General like that.

Auditor General Sheila Fraser two years ago charged that multinational companies operating in Canada have avoided “hundreds of millions” of dollars in taxes over the past decade through the use of tax havens.

A more recent university study charged that Canadian banks alone saved $10 billion in taxes over the past decade through the use of tax havens.

The point, Mr. Speaker, that I'm trying to make is that if as Canadians we are unhappy with the fact that tax havens offshore help Canadian investors avoid paying billions of dollars of taxes of corporations, then we have to as individual citizens and taxpayers pick up in terms of our own income tax – what we lose in terms of corporate taxes, we are asked to make up through income taxes and other indirect service fees and indirect taxes.

We don't want to become part of this tax haven world, where Canada competes with Cayman Islands or Barbados or some other Caribbean offshore financial centre, OFC. We don't want to become that. We want to create conditions in this province and in this country that will generate interest in healthy economic investments, healthy economic activity, and investments which respect the laws of the land and want to do business in order to both profit themselves but also contribute to the social good and to the broader economy, which all of us are part of and are participants in.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, given that the main thrust of this bill and the part of the bill that I'm focusing on is an attempt to turn Alberta into something like Nova Scotia and then Nova Scotia and Alberta become more like tax havens as we now know exist offshore, which draw Canadian resources away, take our taxes away, I don't think we should compete with those and become like them. In fact, we should do everything that we can to attempt to limit the accessibility of tax havens and reduce the attractiveness of those tax havens so that everyone does honest business, pays taxes honestly, and enjoys the benefits of doing both in the places where these investors are and investments occur and businesses take place.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anyone that wishes to have a question or comment.

Seeing none, anyone else wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise in support of this bill, moved by the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, and join with the Member for Edmonton-McClung from the Official Opposition in supporting this bill.

I do have a number of concerns and questions I'd like to have answered, though, in Committee of the Whole. One would be, you know: what are the reasons to allow the directors of a corporation to add all or part of the value of shares used in dividend payments to the capital account of the corporation? Before it all had to be put into the capital account.

Another question would be the provision that allows for beneficiaries of registered shareholders that hold shares in trust to vote on corporate decisions. The question is: what about blind trust situations?

Also, the area that changes the number of Canadian directors required by the corporation and reduces it from one-half to one-quarter. The question: why the drop in the Canadian requirement, and shouldn't we have Canadians fully represented on the boards of Canadian companies?

Another question – and this echoes a comment put forward by the Member for Edmonton-McClung – is the provision that protects a person from being liable for acting in good faith in reporting information to the auditor. Well, a couple of questions: isn't this whistle-blower protection, and will the government implement the same provisions for its staff?

The general thrust of the bill, especially the areas that put it in parallel with the Canada Business Corporations Act, I believe, is very good and adds to the ability for corporations to act in Alberta. A number of the provisions for shareholders I think are especially important. You know, it allows electronic participation, making it easier. It allows registered holders of beneficiaries to vote the share. These provisions, among many of them that are in here – and I won't go on at length – I think add to a strong bill that works in a very comprehensive way to look at many of the changes that are necessary in this area.

I support this bill, in closing, Mr. Speaker, and thank the mover of the bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a second time]

Bill 23

Administrative Procedures Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate March 21: Mr. Stevens]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 23, Administrative Procedures Amendment Act, 2005, in its second reading. Bill 23 applies to what the bill calls decision-makers: boards and tribunals appointed under an Alberta act “to decide matters in accordance with the authority given under [the particular] Act,” as stated in section 10(b). Such decision-makers include, as the Minister of Justice pointed out in his introduction to this bill, in his second reading explanation of this bill, such boards as the Labour Relations Board, the Securities Commission, the Energy and Utilities Board. Actually, the minister named 12 different boards to which this bill applies.

The problem which Bill 23 addresses is the issue of constitutional questions. Most of these boards will not ever have to deal with constitutional issues such as Charter challenges, but some will. Which boards should have the power to deal with such issues, and which boards should not have such powers? That problem, that issue, is what this bill is trying to deal with.

In part, as the minister explained, the Supreme Court of Canada recently made decisions in respect to two cases, one in British Columbia and one in Nova Scotia, where boards and tribunals were set up by the provinces. In these two cases these boards did rule on constitutional matters. There was a challenge, and the Supreme Court upheld their authorization to decide on constitutional matters.

The problem is that the provincial legislation empowering boards and tribunals does not in most cases explicitly make it clear that such powers are granted to them to discuss constitutional questions. So all the Supreme Court could do was try to interpret the empowering legislation of boards in B.C. and Nova Scotia. In effect, the Supreme Court threw the ball back to the provinces to ask them to make it clear in legislation which boards have the authority over constitutional matters and which do not.

Bill 23 tries to solve this problem. First, it gives designated provincial decision-makers, those so designated in section 16 of this bill, power to determine constitutional questions. Second, it then deprives any nondesignated provincial decision-maker of jurisdiction to determine a question of constitutional law. So Bill 23 kind of has a positive side and a negative side. Positively, it gives some boards the authority to deal with constitutional questions, but it also deprives other committees of being able to deal with such questions.

At first when I read this bill, I was seized by a mild fit of paranoia, wondering if this bill was granting too much power to provincial boards, granting them permission to interpret the Charter and the Constitution in whatever way seemed important to them, but the legal advice that I have received assured me that the effective and administrative tribunal or board decision on a question of constitutional law is quite limited. It applies only for the purposes of the board determined by the empowering act, and it cannot be made into a declaration of a law for more general purposes. If a board intended to have such a general effect, it would be making decisions which are unconstitutional.

Another way in which the decisions of the boards are limited is simply the fact that they are subject to the control of the courts. Anyone affected by the decision of a board dealing with constitutional questions has a right to appeal that to the courts by appealing directly to the court or by a judicial review, and the courts can set aside the decision. So given the limited scope of such board decisions, it does not seem that Bill 23 threatens our civil liberties or the rule of constitutional law.

Given what I've just said about the relations of boards to the courts, it is important to ask: what is the effect of this bill? What does it actually do? Is it really a solution to the perceived problem? For those boards which have already been dealing with constitutional questions, simply designating them as having the power to do so actually doesn't change anything. At the most this bill has the negative consequence of depriving certain boards of being able to deal with constitutional questions if they are not designated under 16(b). But what is the point of doing this? It's very hard to understand why this bill is coming to this House. What is the motivation for it? Maybe in Committee of the Whole we'll hear some explanation of why this bill is before us. It's difficult to not think that maybe there's some kind of hidden agenda here.

So I want to turn to two illustrations. The first illustration is the one provided by the Supreme Court, which is fairly clear. In that illustration an aboriginal person cut down four trees and planned to use the logs to build a porch on his house. Those logs were seized, and he was charged. In accordance with regulations set down by the B.C. Ministry of Forests, he shouldn't be doing this; this was against regulations. But that aboriginal person appealed on the basis that he has a constitutional right to do what he did. The board went ahead and dealt with that constitutional question in his favour, and the Supreme Court of Canada upheld that. So that's an interesting case. I'm not sure, though, whether this bill, which allows for the designating of such boards as being able to deal with those questions, would have made any difference in that kind of example.

The next example is more interesting for me, and this is kind of an imaginary example, but it illustrates the negative effect of this bill, which raises the issue of restricting access to justice. In other words, does this bill actually, then, make the whole process of access to justice just more complicated and so complex that, really, it's not in the interest of people who have appeals to make? The negative effect of this bill is, as I've said, to deprive certain boards or tribunals from being able to deal with constitutional questions; for example, take the illustration of same-sex marriage. By itself, Bill 23 would not directly impact the same-sex marriage issue. However, amendments to the Marriage Act along with this proposed Administrative Procedures Amendment Act could delay the application of the same-sex marriage legislation in Alberta. So in my view justice would be delayed, and access to justice would be restricted.

So let me explain. The Marriage Act as it exists now does not establish a tribunal to oversee the issuing of marriage licences. Appeals or challenges about marriage licences can be made to the director of vital statistics, or if alleged discrimination is involved, then appeals can be made directly to the Human Rights Commission. Since there's no delegated authority to deal with appeals regarding questions of law, the government could amend the Marriage Act. I'm not saying that they should do this. I don't want them to think that they can add this to their list of options in dealing with the whole situation of same-sex marriage, but the government could amend the Marriage Act and establish an administrative tribunal to deal with licensing appeals. Let us call it the MLRB, the marriage licence review board.

Now, if under section 16 of the Administrative Procedures Amendment Act the MLRB as a decision-maker is not given the authority to determine questions of constitutional law, then it becomes impossible for anyone to appeal to such a board that their decision is unconstitutional. A same-sex couple who was refused a licence would not be able to appeal to such a board because that board cannot deal with constitutional issues. There would be no ability to seek a constitutional remedy from such a board because of exclusive withdrawal of its power to decide constitutional questions. The avenue open to such a same-sex couple would be to appeal to the Court of Queen's Bench in respect to the unconstitutionality of the empowering legislation of the authority of the board itself. Eventually, such amendments of the Marriage Act and such a tribunal probably would be struck down because it would go against the Charter.

Mr. Speaker, this is such a complex process, this designating of boards with powers to deal with constitutional questions or not, that I think the effect of it is that access to justice is severely restricted and limited. So I would vote against this bill for that reason. I'm asking myself the question: what have I accomplished in wading through all of this legal quagmire other than simply to waste my time trying to understand something that may be quite unnecessary? Perhaps the government should withdraw this bill and bring us something that really accomplishes something.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with some interest to speak to Bill 23 here this evening. By and large I find that the bill is largely administrative in the sense that it's trying to keep up to some recent Supreme Court rulings that have taken place, as the previous hon. member has mentioned. There was, I believe, a Supreme Court decision, Paul and Martin – which is an interesting combination of words, isn't it? – coming from the Supreme Court. A coincidence, I suppose.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

This decision was dealing specifically with a WCB claim and, you know, protecting, ultimately, the right for the WCB to make rulings on the constitutionality of the client's rights rather than a court making that decision. It's an interesting ruling, and I suppose that it is useful to bring in this bill before the Legislature to be in keeping with this recent development in the Supreme Court. In fact, I think that probably it is not an unreasonable thing to do, the main issue being that for all practical purposes we do create a myriad of tribunals and councils that administer everything from appeals and WCB to the tire recycling board, I suppose. Each one of these citizen groups, whether they're lawyers or not, are entrusted within a narrow scope of the interest of the boards to make some administrative decisions about, potentially, the constitutionality of what their jurisdiction is. Quite simply, I think that Bill 23 does satisfy that need.

I suppose that it does allow individuals to forego the expense and potential delay of courts, to have their cases decided rather by a board or a tribunal that is specific to their needs, so there might be some practical purpose for that as well. Otherwise, I suppose each bill that we consider here in the House has cast some reflection on other larger issues that are bearing our concern.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The one that comes to my mind is, you know, if we're looking at, say, the WCB being able to make decisions in regard to a person's constitutional rights. But then I noticed that Bill 23 here does provide a balance where a judge can intercede and say: "No. You can allow a court of law to make a ruling on something as well." So this Bill 23 is quite balanced in that respect. It does allow for a judge and lawyers to intercede if they deem it necessary. Yet in other bills that we have put forward here, talking about the WCB, we're sort of limiting that ability for an individual to use the court of law. So while this bill seems balanced in that way, I think other bills that we've been discussing recently here in this same room in regard to, say, the WCB tribunal have been very unbalanced. So, you know, I guess that's the way the world works, not justice all the time everywhere, each time in each place.

Regardless, my reading of this Bill 23 is to give it tentative support. I'm looking forward to debating the specifics in the Committee of the Whole. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions and comments. The hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora if he's aware of any other English-speaking democracy that allows administrative tribunals to exercise this power of constitutional review. But since I can't ask him questions, I'll answer my question myself, and of course the answer is no.

I'd like to ask a second question as well, if he's familiar with the first principle of administrative law, which of course is that any administrative tribunal is the creature of the Legislature that creates in and, therefore, is subordinate to that Legislature, which of course explains the reason why no administrative tribunal in any English-speaking democracy exercises such a power of constitutional review. It would literally be the tail wagging the dog.

So I'm happy to speak in favour of this bill and correct a few misperceptions on the part of the hon. member.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to comment?
Anyone else on Standing Order 29(2)(a)?
Anyone wish to participate in the debate?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: The question has been called.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a second time]

Bill 24

Fatality Inquiries Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate March 22: Mr. Stevens]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on this bill, Bill 24, introduced by the Minister of Justice, the Fatality Inquiries Amendment Act, 2005. This bill is the culmination of a dialogue during the last few years involving many different interested groups. The debate has focused on the issue of finding a more effective method for public fatality inquiries.

The fatality inquiry process is, of course, extremely important to the public. Human life is sacred; every human life is sacred. Our society places a high value on human life. It follows that it is in the public interest to have a thorough investigation when there is a loss of life from what appear to be unnatural causes. Fatality inquiries which are thorough can teach us many things about how to protect human life in the future. Not only individuals but institutions are able to learn important lessons from such inquiries. Public confidence is at stake here. The public must have confidence that the government and the courts are doing all they can to investigate and make recommendations for the future.

I want to focus my attention on a couple of issues of concern in this bill. First of all, it is obvious that this amendment gives unprecedented powers to a single judge to seriously limit the nature, scope, and dissemination of information in respect of a public fatality inquiry. For example, a judge can meet with interested parties at any time and then proceed to limit the issues that will be under consideration in the inquiry. The judge will also have the power to stay the public inquiry if the judge is of the opinion that all matters related to the death have been examined and answered in another forum.

All references to a jury have been removed by this amendment. I find that interesting. I realize that no fatality inquiries have been held before a jury, but I think that it's one of the principles of fundamental justice in Canada that we have the right to have a hearing before a jury. Maybe we can debate that while this is in Committee of the Whole.

The addition in section 38 seems to change the power of judges. Previously a judge had all of the powers of a commissioner appointed under the Public Inquiries Act: powers to call in technical experts and legal counsel, not just clerks, reporters, and assistants. What was considered as a full investigation previously is now narrowed to what the judge considers to be required for the purposes of the inquiry. This is an inquiry limited, then, in the scope of its investigations, and it does not seem to me to be in the interest of a full, open, and transparent public inquiry.

If the goal of fatality inquiries is the prevention of future deaths, then we may well ask: why should there be any limits placed on the investigation of all the factors that led to the particular death? The goal of a fatality inquiry should not be to achieve efficiency, as the Minister of Justice has stated, but should be a full and public debate on the evidence, with full participation by everyone who can help us understand and save lives in the future.

That brings me to the most serious issue with this bill. Now, the Justice minister stated previously that one group intended to be affected generally by this proposal is the media. In Canada a fundamental freedom, according to section 2(b) of the Charter, includes "freedom of the press and other media of communication." Bill 24 would severely limit the participation of the media in public fatality inquiries. In this bill judges have the power to decide who should be present at a public fatality inquiry. Interested parties – that's the expression used – would have to make a good case that they have a "direct and substantial interest in the subject-matter of the inquiry." That's the phrase used: "direct and substantial interest." The minister interpreted this as meaning that substantial interest refers to personal or business or legal interest. Only parties meeting this criterion would have the right to examine evidence at a public fatality inquiry.

The Minister of Justice told the Legislature that the role of the media is to report the news, not to make it. A reporter can report on the process without actually being there to listen and observe. Well, allow me to remind this House of the famous remark made by the 18th century British statesman Edmund Burke. He commented that there are three estates in Parliament, referring to the priesthood, the aristocracy, and the commons, but he pointed out that "in the Reporters' Gallery yonder, there sat a Fourth Estate more important than they all." The fourth estate, consisting of journalists and authors, whose power consists of the words they write or speak, have for hundreds of years been seen as the guardians of democracy and the defenders of the public interest everywhere in the democratic world except, apparently, in Alberta, where we wish to limit the presence of the fourth estate at public fatality inquiries.

So the all-important question is this. If the media is restricted, how can such inquiries still be considered to be public? When a fatality occurs, whether the result of an accident or a crime, how is the public served if reporters are not permitted to attend such inquiries? We use the term "fourth estate" to refer to the media as a powerful watchdog revealing abuses of state authority and defending the democratic rights of citizens. How is democracy served if the fourth estate, our writers and journalists, are greeted at the courtroom door with a sign: "Private. Do not enter. No watchdogs allowed in here."? In so many different ways the public sphere is being eroded as more and more inquiries and decisions are being made behind closed doors. What we need in Alberta is more transparency, more openness, more public accountability, and more democracy.

So, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I would vote against this bill because it's going in the wrong direction in terms of public accountability. What we need is more openness at public fatality inquiries, not less.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in the debate on Bill 24, the Fatality Inquiries Amendment Act, 2005. The Fatality Inquiries Act, the legislation that exists in the province, I think already has some problems with it that are in the nature of the legislation being relatively weak in ensuring that the public has access to the procedures of the inquiry, to what goes on during the inquiry. There is a fair bit of discretion in the hands of the presiding judge or justice to make the decisions as to whether the information before the inquiry is public, who can be there, and in some cases can rule against the information being made public.

What this set of amendments in Bill 24 does is further aggravate concerns of Albertans who would want to see more transparency and openness to fatality inquiries in this province. Fatality inquiries deal, of course, with fatalities that occur under situations where lots of questions remain unanswered as to why someone lost her or his life. Under what circumstances could the death have been prevented? Did it occur because of either confusion or ambiguities in the procedures attendant upon the situation in which this particular death occurred?

In other words, fatality inquiries have two purposes. One, of course, is that the government wants to reassure the public and make it aware that it's acting to ensure that guarantees relating to human life are duly respected, and as we all know, the right to life and liberty is guaranteed by most constitutions in modern democracies. Nothing is more valuable, nothing is more sacred than human life.

So when a death occurs, say, in a hospital or in a school or on a school excursion, as happened in the case of a well-known private school in Calgary some time ago, there are many questions that those deaths raise, that those fatalities raise. Those questions need to be addressed in order to both make sure that those questions with respect to the particular death are answered but also that questions are answered in a way so that such unnecessary loss of life can be avoided in the future.

Protection of life, insofar as it's possible, must always be the highest priority of any piece of legislation or any court or inquiry or any action related to human life that's in the hands of governments and legislators. So what's the problem with the amendments being proposed here, Mr. Speaker? That is the question before us, and I am sure that we will have the opportunity to look in detail at the clauses of the bill as we move into the next stage of debate on the bill; that is, the Committee of the Whole. But here I'm talking more in terms of principles and whether or not, in my judgment, Bill 24 is likely to accomplish the goals of reassuring the public and making it aware that the fatality inquiries undertaken in this province are done in such a way that they help to ensure the guarantees relating to human life and that they are duly respected by public agencies, institutions, and offices.

Now, one of the problems with this bill is that, in fact, it closes the doors of these inquiries to being public and being reported on. With the changes, if they are approved by this House, then this law that we will be creating will take the media out of the running for interested person status. That's one important thing. The media's ability to get interested person status is simply put outside of this law. It's beyond the reach of the media to seek that kind of status. So that, I think, is a step backwards because as I said, there are two purposes to the act: one, to look at the actual reasons why a death may have occurred and whether it could have been prevented; second, to educate the public and ourselves in general so that we learn from such tragedies in order to prevent such occurrences in the future. The media plays a very important role in educating us all with respect to the second objective of fatality inquiries, as I see it. So eliminating the ability of the media to be deemed as interested persons I think is a weakness.

Now, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, of course, has argued that media don't need the power to ask questions or present evidence to the inquiry, but that's not the issue. I don't think that when the media gets interested person status, it automatically gets the power to ask questions or present evidence to the inquiry. I don't think that media intends to speak to inquiry issues, but certainly it intends to make sure that the inquiry is as open as possible and those of us who are not present at the inquiry learn on a daily basis about what goes on inside the inquiry room chamber.

Another problem is that the second or third amendment that the minister proposes says that a fatality inquiry will no longer be mandatory in the death of someone in care unless the death relates to government care. But there's a big grey area here. How would you know that a death was unrelated to guardianship without an inquiry?

A death when it takes place in a hospital. I remember the case of that young person who was rushed to the Foothills hospital in Calgary, I guess a year and a half ago or so, from High River, I believe. I'm trying to recall the details to the incident. He had, I think, appendicitis or some such infection. He was turned back from the emergency room by someone without thoroughly examining the person, and the person, I think, died on his way back. Certainly, that's not a death that occurred when the person was in the government's hands. Nevertheless, it is important for us to learn why that occurred.

To be able to expect that a fatality inquiry in such cases would be automatically ordered is an important way in which we can learn from past mistakes and assure the public that we as legislators and governments and other institutions remain ever faithful to the principles of protecting life whenever it is possible to do so and learn from mistakes. There will always be accidents. There will always be misjudgments. But there's always room when that happens, if you pay attention to under what circumstances those judgments were made or errors were made, to learn from them and to improve in our future practice when similar situations occur again.

Given that, I think the amendments that are sought in Bill 24 turn the clock back rather than help us forward. It happens to weaken an already relatively weak piece of legislation rather than strengthen it so that it would serve us better in the future. For those reasons, I'm inclined at this stage not to support the bill, but I do undertake to take a closer look and a more detailed look at the provisions of this bill. Hopefully, during the debate in the Committee of the Whole I'll be able to change my mind if I'm persuaded through strong arguments made either by the Minister of Justice and Attorney General himself or my other colleagues in this House. Until then, I withhold my support of this bill, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question to our learned and very objective friend across the way, the hon. member, would be this: hypothetically, given that the Gomery commission could turn into a fatality inquiry – in fact, the Liberal Party may die from it – would he think that the fact that the media, that isn't allowed to ask questions, that's controlled by the fellow who is the biggest crook in there, controls the CBC, or the fact that he appoints all the judges will be the biggest detriment to getting the truth out of what could be a fatality inquiry?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly don't want to wish a Gomery inquiry on this government because that might lead to further fatalities as well.

We do need to get to the bottom of matters, and inquiries sometimes do help. Regardless of who is on the fatality table, I think that such inquiries are absolutely necessary in a democracy. That's how citizens are able to see through what their rulers may be doing with their tax dollars and to them and to seek ways of eliminating future possibilities for politicians or crooks being able to do that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other comments or questions on 29(2)(a)?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise tonight to speak on Bill 24, the Fatality Inquiries Amendment Act, 2005. I'll make my comments brief since the hour is late.

Some Hon. Members: Thank you.

Mr. Tougas: You're very welcome.

The stated aim of this bill is to make the fatality review process more effective and efficient. Now, while being efficient is all very well and good – and I believe that the government has created a whole department devoted to efficiency – it is not the be-all and end-all. The Minister of Justice and Attorney General indicated in his introduction of this bill that there was an extensive consultation process behind the act encompassing the Information and Privacy Commissioner, police forces, Canadian Medical Protective Association, and many other groups. It appears that the consultation process was quite thorough, covering virtually every interested party in the process with one notable exception, and I commend the Minister of Justice and Attorney General for conducting such a wide-ranging review.

As the minister himself said, “Some of the proposed amendments are procedural in nature, but many of them have a significant impact on the fatality inquiry process.” First, the amendment to call a limited investigation into the death of an Albertan that happens outside the province is certainly worthwhile. While a death occurring outside of Alberta falls outside the scope of Alberta law, there may be instances where actions taken in Alberta may have contributed directly or indirectly to the fatality. This part of the bill will allow for a less formal investigation to be held into the incident with an eye towards preventing further deaths in the future. I wholeheartedly support this section of the amendment.

The section of the amendment deleting the requirements for mandatory fatality reviews for anyone who dies while they are in the custody, care, or guardianship of government is another nod to efficiency, but it does have its drawbacks. There are certainly times when what is now a mandatory review would no longer need to be called, but I caution the government to proceed carefully in this regard. While, certainly, there are many cases where the death was entirely accidental and not foreseeable, it should not be mandatory to hold a public inquiry in many of these cases. For example, the minister himself used the hypothetical situation of a 16 year old under government care driving a car and, unfortunately, dying in a motor vehicle accident. At present, because that 16 year old is under government care, there would be a mandatory fatality inquiry. Under the new rules there would not be an inquiry. But I ask: what if that 16 year old who was under government care was impaired at the time of the accident? I would think, then, that in a situation of this sort perhaps a public inquiry would still be held to investigate why the 16 year old in government care was drunk and driving a car at the time. Now, I suspect that there are many times when a fatality review is not required. I urge the government to move with caution in eliminating the mandatory provisions of this act.

The one area of very serious concern in this amendment, as the other speakers have mentioned, is the tightening of the rules regarding who may appear at a public inquiry and examine and cross-examine witnesses. The current law has a fairly broad interpretation of who may be regarded as an interested person and be allowed to participate in the inquiry. The amendment tightens this up considerably, allowing only a person who has a direct and substantial interest in the subject matter of the inquiry.

As my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora has already pointed out, the minister himself admitted that one group intended to be affected by the proposal is the media. The minister said, and I quote, “The role of the media is to report the news and not to make it.” Mr. Speaker, this statement reveals a fundamental misunderstanding of how the news media works. The media is not supposed to be a service that simply regurgitates whatever was said at a public hearing or in the Legislature.

The media has always – and that is always – not only reported the news but has made the news. It was the news media, after all that ferreted out the information on this government’s cavalier use of public aircraft as a high-flying taxi service. On a larger scale it was the news media that forced the Watergate scandal that brought down the presidency of Richard Nixon. Did the media make the news? Yes, it did. And we should be thankful for it.

In both of these cases and thousands of other cases over hundreds of years, it was the news media that created the news. Canada and all democracies of the world have been well served by a news media that did not just report the news but made the news. Only in dictatorships and communist countries is the media restricted to just reporting the news under the guise of the Tass news agency or Pravda.

It can also be argued, Mr. Speaker, that the government itself goes to great lengths to make news. This government’s vast Public Affairs Bureau spends a great deal of time and millions of public dollars making news by churning out the happy news stories about government accomplishments.

Like it or not, Mr. Speaker, one of the news media’s primary roles is to act as the eyes and ears of the public. The Canadian news media willingly allows for a number of restrictions to be placed on its freedoms in order to facilitate the fair trial process. The recent testimony at the Gomery inquiry upon which there was a publication ban placed, and which the Canadian media adhered to, is a good example. The news media in Canada has always shown a remarkable degree of restraint compared to the news media in the United States and particularly Britain, and I feel that it is unfair and unnecessary to further shackle the media as it attempts to do its job.

Perhaps in Committee of the Whole the minister will be able to supply this House with specific examples of how the media interfered with the effectiveness and efficiency of a public inquiry, but I sincerely doubt it. It seems to me that this government under the guise of increased efficiency is attempting to shut the door on public questioning at fatality inquiries.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does anyone wish to comment or have a question under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Does anyone else wish to participate in debate? I recognize the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief. I’m waiting for the voices on the other side of the House to say: hmm. But whatever. The reason I’m standing up to speak is because I really believe that open and transparent discussion is a part of strong democracy. Bear with me, voices on the other side of the House.

I’d like to speak to this bill because I believe that it has the potential to limit interested persons from attending fatality inquiries, interested persons being an interesting use of a definition. A judge actually would be allowed to narrow the scope of who would participate at an inquiry. All of this is being done in the attempt to be effective and efficient. I’m not sure that these words should ever be used when you put it on the value of a human life that would be then applied to the bottom line. Especially, open, transparent, and honest criteria should never be compromised. The public must know – they mustn’t just feel – without any doubt and have the confidence that inquiries are not tainted by politics. This bill could redefine the interested party. It could severely limit the participation of people or groups, and one of the groups that has been spoken about, of course – I won’t go into great detail – is the media at fatality inquiries. Very important that we have open discussions.

A government that controls the information or, worse, the distribution of any information to the public, frankly, scares me; one more step toward creating a powerful, hungry dictatorship. There are examples of this behaviour in history, and the consequences of a government with this kind of power are not pretty. The public must be allowed to unfiltered information regarding fatalities.

This bill also limits the scope of what can be investigated within the inquiry, and it would appear that this is all being done in the name of efficiency. As I said before, efficiency cannot be applied to human lives. A family who has been waiting two years for a public inquiry into a loved one who was working alone and was killed by a client has contacted me. The pain and the uncertainty and the waiting for this family is, in my mind, cruel and unusual punishment for the families of this victim. They wait and wait for what should have been considered a timely response, and they feel that the government is just hoping that they'll go away as they wait for the court system to inch its way along.

It was stated in Hansard on March 22, '05, that there are circumstances in questionable deaths "that the public interest would not be served by a fatality inquiry," an area that would have been mandatory in the past. That, frankly, scares me even more. In my mind, this represents the slippery slope to information control that's just too scary, Mr. Speaker, just too scary for me to be able to vote for this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to move adjournment of debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 36 Police Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate April 7: Mr. Cenaiko]

Dr. B. Miller: Mr. Speaker, it's unusual for me to give three sermons in one evening. [interjection] Well, if you wanted to adjourn, somebody should have moved adjourn for the evening. So here comes my third one. I'm used to giving only one per week, not three in one evening.

I'm privileged to stand and respond to Bill 36, the Police Amendment Act, 2005, because this is a very important amendment to the Police Act, and it's overdue. It's been quite a few years since the Police Act has been amended. Because of changes in our culture and pressures from the public, it's certainly a timely amendment, the Police Amendment Act, 2005.

The purpose of Bill 36 is to provide legislation determining the proper relation between the police services of Alberta and the public. To that end, we have in this bill an outline of the function and manner of appointment of police committees and police commissions and an outline of the process for dealing with complaints concerning police actions.

The Solicitor General stated in his introduction of this bill that this legislation ensures fair and objective investigations into complaints against police and enhances the credibility of the complaint review process. I agree that that is the issue. In the organization of police committees and police commissions and the process of dealing with complaints, the issue is: do we have a system which the public perceives as fair, objective, and credible?

What I am hearing from the public and certainly the overwhelming viewpoint of the media is that we do not have a system of public civilian oversight of the police which fulfills the criteria of being objective and credible. This amendment to the Police Act fails in my estimation to provide the level of oversight which the public is demanding.

Recent serious incidents and complaints demonstrate the seriousness of the issue of dealing with police misconduct and the demand of the public for a better system of civilian review of police conduct. For example, the Overtime scandal involving a sting operation against a journalist and the former Police Commission chairman at the Overtime bar is one such incident; the recent ruling of a judge that excessive force was used with a taser by a police officer here in Edmonton; the death of a young boy, Giovanni Aleman, due to a police car involved in a high-speed chase in Edmonton, a chase where the police car didn't use emergency lights and sirens. There's the incident of the shooting of a man armed with a knife, which turned out to be a toy knife, by members of the Edmonton Police Service tactical squad.

Incidents such as these have seriously eroded the public's confidence in the Edmonton Police Service and other police services throughout Alberta. What the public is concerned about is how these incidents are dealt with in terms of investigating them and then reporting to the public, and there are even questions about the ability and the effectiveness of police investigating themselves. They're certainly concerned about the objectivity of such investigations.

Now, it's interesting that, you know, when police services first emerged in Britain a couple of centuries ago, the police were considered to be an extension of the public. The police represented the public. Sir Robert Peel was the founder of modern policing, and he served as the British Home Secretary during the 1820s. It was his act for improving the police in and near the metropolis that was passed through the British Parliament that resulted in the creation of the first law enforcement agency in modern history.

What is really interesting about Sir Robert Peel's proposal is something that's called Sir Robert Peel's nine principles. I'll just name two of them. The first one is that "the ability of the police to perform their duties is dependent upon public approval of police actions." There never was the idea in the beginning of the formation of police services that there should be a separation between the public and the police. They are identical. Another principle of Sir Robert Peel is that "police, at all times, should maintain a relationship with the public that gives reality to the historic tradition that the police are the public and the public are the police." It undermines the ability of the police service to do their work when we see an adversarial relationship between the public and the police service. When the public loses its confidence in the police service, it undermines their ability to do their work.

Mr. Speaker, we need a rewriting of the Police Act which would put into place mechanisms to handle complaints that would bring together the police and the public. Public policing was imported from England and introduced into Canada in the 1830s. The theory of public policing was always that the police carry out their duties on behalf of the citizens. As democracy grew, the conviction strengthened that enforcement of the law is ultimately the responsibility of every citizen. It follows, then, that citizens and police have exactly the same goal, and that is the prevention of crime and the maintenance of public order. So, to that end, it's extremely important to have the right kind of model for handling complaints, and this bill does not give us the right kind of model, not the kind of model that is going to inspire public confidence.

There are five types of civilian oversight, and the type that's represented by this bill is not adequate. The first type is the in-house model, whereby police officers receive a complaint, investigate it, determine if the complaint will be substantiated, and take any necessary follow-up action. In other words, police investigate the police. That's the in-house model.

Then, secondly, there's the externally supervised in-house model, in which there is some involvement of citizens, but their involvement is very limited.

Thirdly, the investigation is completed by the police, but the adjudication and final disposition of the complaint are determined by an independent body. That's a third model, and the reverse is possible: the investigation is independent, but the police perform the adjudication role.

The fifth model is the fully independent model, where civilians both investigate and adjudicate the complaint.

What is proposed in Bill 23 is the second one that I have listed, the second type of civilian oversight, with the police doing the investigating. There is a civilian appointment to oversee the process, but that civilian appointment does not contribute to the investigation. I think this reflects the Solicitor General's remarks to this House when I asked him about the need for civilian oversight. He said: well, the public can't investigate criminal activities; they don't have the experience; they don't have the skills; they don't have the training. That, to me, is demeaning of the public.

We do not need the kind of approach that pits the public and its abilities and capacities against the police. It goes against the very fact that other jurisdictions, other provinces have formed independent civilian oversight bodies where the public does obviously have the ability to investigate incidents within the police service. What is not understood is that the majority of citizens simply do not have confidence in a process in which the police investigate themselves, the in-house models. So this variation of the in-house model proposed by this bill will not be generally accepted by the public in Alberta, and we'll hear more and more comments in the news media and articles printed in the newspapers calling for a better model.

One such better model is the model that Ontario has, the Special Investigations Unit, which was established in 1990 as an independent, arm's-length agency of the government, led by a director and composed of civilian investigators. They would be quite surprised to hear the Solicitor General's remarks that the public does not have the skill or the ability to be involved in investigations. Apparently, legislators in Ontario do have confidence in the public's ability to carry out investigations. The motto of the Special Investigations Unit is Independent Investigations, Community Confidence, and that, Mr. Speaker, is the commentary I would like to make on this Bill 23. It does not provide us with independent investigations, community confidence. Those two things must go together if we're going to have a proper rewriting of this Police Act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to speak on Bill 36 here this evening. Now, it seems to me that it's funny in a way because I think there are two very distinct parts to this bill. The first part I find to be very reassuring, and I applaud the government's efforts to do so, while on the second part I have a number of serious questions.

First of all, the provision in Bill 36 to increase the province's responsibility to pay for the RCMP, essentially, from a population of 2,500 up to 5,000 is very welcome news. I think that the community policing that the RCMP provide in rural areas is absolutely essential. It's part of the glue that holds the communities together in rural areas. Indeed, the function of the RCMP in small towns extends far beyond the role of policing but also just adds a lot of stability and community contributions that have been a long part of our rural Alberta history.

So for the first part of this bill, certainly, I think this is welcome news, and I think that, hopefully, it's a reflection of this government's commitment to increasing on-the-ground police services and forces not just in the rural areas and small towns but also in the urban areas. I think that the perception of an increase in various types of property crime right across our province is a direct reflection of a lack of police force on the ground. So the more individuals, quite literally, Mr. Speaker, we can put onto the streets and working in communities, I think the safer we all will feel and, in fact, will be. So this is a step in the right direction.

The second part of this bill is to deal with oversights over the various police forces in the province. While I think that, certainly, this is an attempt to survey a perceived need that's coming out from all quarters of the province, both rural and urban areas, there are a number of different ways to approach this. At this juncture I think that probably people across this province, and certainly we as well as the people especially here in this city, are looking for more civilian oversights to do with the police as opposed to less.

So I think that if we can work with that through the second and third reading, then perhaps Bill 36 might be salvageable to some degree. Otherwise, the outcries that we've been hearing for, I guess, the ability to have regulation on the various police forces around our province was not an outcry for the police to be further regulating themselves, although this is the first place where regulation does occur, and in fact it occurs on a daily basis through the chain of command. But, you know, looking for a civilian body that has oversight over more serious allegations and that can function independently, I think, is really what is at the heart of the need that's being brought forward here in this province over the last couple of years or so. I think it's important for us with this bill to reflect on what is truly an independent civilian oversight commission: what that would look like, what sort of powers they would have, and how that due process could function in a useful sort of way.

I think that at the heart of any police system that we choose to employ in a society is that compliance is the essence of a functioning police force, the compliance of the population to adhere to the law and internalize those laws for themselves. We don't have police hanging over our heads or watching around every corner to make sure that we follow the law; rather, it's a system that's internalized through our culture and through a confidence that we have of not only our policing system but our judicial system as well. We are a willing participant in that system, and we like to see a reflection that there is interaction to make that system work.

So having independent civilian oversight, Mr. Speaker, into the function of the police force I think really does contribute to that sense of confidence and interaction that we need with our laws, and it allows people to feel that there is a reason to be confident, to know that if, say, individuals in the police force are perhaps not following procedure, there's another level of oversight that will kick in and provide protection for us. You know, this is an ongoing thing. It's not as though we're born inherently with any sort of sets of law or justice; rather, we have to cultivate them in our society. So a civilian, independent oversight commission of some sort, I think, would be most valuable.

Some other things that I would like to bring up that we perhaps can discuss further with third reading of this bill might include the problem of having a one-year time limit for people coming forward for complaints. Always these time limits. I mean, of course, life and all of our lives are temporal, but just having this – sometimes crime and for people to come forward to speak about crime takes longer, so perhaps this is a bit too short.

I think that, as well, we are seeing in this particular bill as it's written now that there's perhaps too much discretion put into the hands of the Justice minister. So again, as I say, disseminating the power down into independent commissions I think would increase the confidence of the public, the media, and the police as well to comply to some new regulation. The idea here, I guess, is that part of the reason that people find it difficult to comply with the current system is that there's just too much self-regulation. I think that with any industry you have to have in a sense an independent regulator to be there, be it the police or health or electricity or whatever it happens to be. By having that interaction with some independence, I believe that we can come to more intelligent conclusions, and that's a general comment, not just on the police.

Finally, I think that we're seeing an evolution towards external review and investigation. It's an essential safeguard for a free and democratic society to have this in place, and I think that as Canadians, in general, we've done a very good job in promoting this. As I would like to say one more time, that's how we indeed do have a just and free society, that people agree to comply with the rules and regulations of our society. The police are certainly there to help you. On some occasions you might need a little assistance and reminders about the laws, but otherwise it's an internalized process.

So people have to believe in the system. They have to believe that it's just. They have to believe that it's serving them. I think that by extending some independent, civilian oversight to our police system, we would all be better for it.

Thank you.

Ms Evans: I'd like to move to move adjournment of debate on the bill, please.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 15

Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2005

[Debate adjourned April 6]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I imagine that I'm not the only one who's feeling the delayed hour, and I will attempt to keep my comments brief in recognition of that. Most of what I have to say may already have been said in this Assembly, but just in case I want to get my thoughts on the record.

Mr. Speaker, in speaking to Bill 15, there are a number of things that come out. Quite frankly, some of them seem to point to a pattern that I've referred to previously in this House when it comes to some of the legislation that we're being told is of a housekeeping nature or a relatively minor nature in terms of what is trying to be accomplished by it. I find it interesting that in some cases some of the movers of the bills, some of the ministries involved have gone to great lengths to consult with various stakeholders. In some cases, some of the legislation that's coming forward, we're getting feedback from stakeholders that, in fact, there's been little or no consultation, and the latter would appear to be the case with Bill 15.

I'm not sure why that is, if there's a particular reason why this particular bill appears not to have received a lot of consultation out in the real world, as it were, if there's a particular reason why it appears that this bill is being rushed forward when, in fact, those that the Official Opposition have consulted with indicate that they wish that they had a little more time to review the bill and the ramifications and impacts that it might have. In fact, if I'm correct, there was a reasoned amendment brought forward previously on this bill, which would have seen it set back until the fall, and that, unfortunately, was defeated. So I guess we have no choice now but to go ahead with the bill. I'm assuming that the government majority will see that it moves beyond second reading and into Committee of the Whole. Certainly, at that point there will be no shortage of debate and perhaps some amendments to it.

The Alberta Liberal opposition, Mr. Speaker, unlike the government, apparently, in this particular case went to great lengths to consult with the Alberta Building Trades Council, as an example, in seeking their input as to what they thought the impacts of this bill might be. We spoke to at least two employment lawyers, seeking their advice as to what they thought was good in this bill and areas where they thought there may need to be amendments. We spoke to the Alberta Federation of Labour and had some good response from them and also a WCB advocate who has extensive experience advocating for the rights of injured workers. Almost universally they came back with some positive comments but, certainly, some serious questions as to what exactly this bill might mean if it were to be passed in its current format.

Just to name a few examples, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Federation of Labour has indicated that they were quite upset, quite frankly, that they were not consulted, saying that in general the government has been very good consulting with them on WCB matters, and in this particular case there was no consultation at all. That, certainly, has raised some concerns with them. They're wondering, in particular, how Bill 15 will change current practices. When we talk in here about the subrogation that is contemplated by the bill whereby a worker's rights would be taken over by the WCB, certainly they're wondering why there couldn't be consultation and co-operation between the WCB and the claimant in third-party actions, why it would appear that, in fact, the WCB is given the power to act unilaterally.

I believe that when my colleague from Edmonton-Manning spoke to this bill the other night, he referred to a recent court decision whereby, in fact, the Alberta courts were quite firm in their judgment involving a case with WCB whereby exactly this case was in play where the WCB had taken over completely the rights of a worker and overruled the worker's wishes in terms of what action would be pursued next.

Some of the feedback we got certainly indicates, as I said, some good things. The fact that under this new bill the WCB would be required to hold an annual general meeting that would be open to the public at which any matters raised in relation to the reports by those present at the meeting would be discussed: certainly, those that we've consulted feel that this is a step in the right direction and applaud the government for taking that small step at least.

Mr. Speaker, there is certainly some recognition of the fact that changes were badly needed to ensure that employers would be required to supply appropriate information in the case of a claim. This perhaps wasn't strong enough in the past. Again, some of the groups we consulted with are pleased with that and say that this will be a good thing for claimants.

However, they certainly have concerns about some other areas. When we get to, particularly, the situation with existing old contentious claims, Mr. Speaker, there seems to be in this case a situation where once again – and I know I've referred to this several times in debate on other bills – more and more power is being given to the Lieutenant Governor in Council in terms of passing regulations. What that means to me is that instead of having it in legislation, where it's open to public debate and public scrutiny, once again we're giving an awful lot of power to the backroom boys to do their changes in rules and regulations in private without, as I suggested, the public scrutiny and public debate that they deserve. Any time I see that, I'm greatly concerned, so I have that concern again with the changes that are being contemplated to Bill 15.

Mr. Speaker, in general it would appear to me that this bill reduces the accountability of the WCB and provides for it to act in its own interests and not necessarily the best interests of the workers in Alberta. Again, this strikes me as being somewhat similar to Bill 34, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2005, which I spoke to the other evening here, in which we have a clause that actually not only limits but excludes the right of individuals to seek legal recourse in the courts against the Alberta government for wrongs that may have been done to them.

Here again we have a situation where the government through legislation is limiting legal redress, and it causes me untold concern when we see that happening. Certainly, there has been no shortage of examples over the years of people who have felt hard done by by WCB decisions. Anything that would be seen to be stifling their legal rights certainly is going to raise the ire of not only those that are involved in these long-standing contentious claims but probably should concern all workers, who might through their own misfortune sometime in the future find themselves involved in a claim with the WCB.

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned that it seems that this particular bill is being rushed through the Legislature, and in fact some of the stakeholder groups are quite concerned. As I said, not only were they not consulted, but they feel that they really need some time to explore the ramifications of the bill and what it might mean. I hope that the fact that that's happening is not a reflection of or a response to the court case previously mentioned that, if I can use the terminology, sort of slapped the wrist of the WCB, but it would appear to my untrained and certainly not legal eye that that might be the case. I would hope that it isn't, but it does cause one to ponder.

Mr. Speaker, payment of compensation to the worker under this bill would be under the complete control of the WCB. Payments would only be made after the board has recovered its costs and legal fees have been covered. Again, the real concern here is that workers don't have the right to elect to pursue compensation in tort on their own or to choose to fall under the auspices of the WCB, as they do in other jurisdictions. Under this legislation they would simply have no choice but to allow the WCB to subrogate their claim.

Mr. Speaker, I think, as I said, that most of those issues have been raised before. I wanted to be on the record as raising them again because this is an issue that touches almost all Albertans. Most of us do fall under the WCB in our working careers, and certainly, as I suggested, whether or not we've ever been involved in a claim, there is the unfortunate reality that we all might be. Were that to be the case, we would certainly hope that the legislation in place would do its utmost to protect the worker and not necessarily the employer. For that reason, I will be voting against this bill when the time comes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing order 29(2)(a) is available for questions and comments.

Seeing none, anyone else wish to participate in the debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 8
Personal Information Protection Amendment Act, 2005

The Chair: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As you know, the bill was pretty much housekeeping amendments, although there were a few questions in there, so just a short note on some explanations, and I would like to provide the further explanation on the amendment respecting health information.

In Alberta we have a comprehensive framework for privacy protection that applies to personal information in both the public and private sectors. Because of the special character of health information, Alberta also has a separate Health Information Act, that applies to the health information in both the public sector, which is the hospitals, and the private sector, which is the physicians. What this amendment does is carve out a body of information, health information that is covered by the Health Information Act, and make it clear that PIPA does not apply to that information.

At the same time, the amendment makes it clear that PIPA does apply to any health-related information that is not covered by the Health Information Act. For example, PIPA covers health-related information in an organization's personnel files, medical information requested by an insurance company in Alberta to issue a policy, and records of a psychologist providing privately paid services.

The Minister of Health and Wellness agrees to this amendment. The amendment ensures that there are no gaps in privacy protection, that there are clear rules as to which act applies.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think it's always a healthy process when information access and privacy protection laws are reviewed and revised. The process is sometimes long and arduous, yet it results in greater awareness of these laws, and it assists us as legislators as well as public servants to become more informed and aware of the legislation too. Such amendments should also improve the legislation, especially if there is an opportunity for public and corporate input. I therefore wish to commend the government in bringing this forward.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I want to turn to some points of the proposed amendments that have been brought to my attention. Amendment 2, regarding section 4(3)(f), replaces what was previously a vague statement with a more specific one that establishes an order of paramouncy between two pieces of legislation; namely, that the provincial information and privacy act does not apply where the Health Information Act does apply. This jurisdictional issue between the two acts is better clarified here.

In amendment 2, regarding 4(3)(m) and (n), adding the constituency offices and associations is a good idea. I believe there was a case under our provincial FOIP Act, freedom of information and privacy protection, where an MLA's correspondence and financial records were requested, and the information requested was in the member's legislative office and the constituency office. There was some question as to whether the material stored in these offices was subject to the FOIP Act's section 4(1)(q)(ii). The ruling concluded that information in the custody of an MLA includes information in these offices. Now, most of the records being sought were not considered subject to the act, yet the Information and Privacy Commissioner interpreted that records in the legislative and constituency offices fell under the custody and control of an MLA and were, therefore, under the act. That ruling by the commissioner gave section 4(1)(q)(ii) quite a broad scope.

Mr. Chairman, criticisms are sometimes made of judges, commissioners, and other nonelected officials making laws when they are, in fact, only doing the job the lawmakers gave them. It is important that we as legislators not hide behind such officials, leaving them to do the work and criticizing them for taking stands on matters on which we may not be prepared to commit ourselves. By clarifying the scope of coverage and specifically including legislative and constituency offices under the act, we are committing ourselves in accord with the earlier finding of our Information and Privacy Commissioner.

Whether we choose to act in support of rulings by officials, as this amendment does, or to overrule or correct these, as the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View proposed last Monday in a letter to the local newspaper, in both cases we are fulfilling our mandate as responsible legislators. This closer integration of legislative, executive, and administrative functions is a characteristic of our parliamentary tradition by contrast with that of the separation of powers practised by our sister democracy to the south. For this to work, we as legislators must be prepared to be responsible not only to our constituents but to each other to oversee the direction of government.

Mr. Chairman, responsible government as it is now practised throughout the world was a Canadian innovation from the 1840s. Britain already had parliamentary government, but British governments at that time were still often being led from an unelected upper House. Without an established aristocracy, Canada was the first country in the world to make her Executive Council responsible to a body of elected legislators.

If it seems that I have digressed into a discussion of our democratic heritage, it's not only because democratic renewal is dear to my heart. Most of the measures being proposed for democratic reform are imports from other systems that overlook the original strengths of our own system. Before we turn elsewhere for reform, I feel it is important that we utilize the means already available to us. We must commit to make the system work rather than simply work the system.

Greater use of private members' bills, such as we have been debating in this session, is one way to make our system work better. Another is the amendment before us, which confirms and strengthens the harmony between legislators, officials, and quasi-judicial bodies such as the Information and Privacy Commissioner. I am pleased therefore to speak in favour of this amendment with some of its points.

Another example of co-operation between different aspects of government, Mr. Chairman, is amendment 3 regarding section 43.1(1). This relates to common interests among provinces and between federal and provincial levels of government. Alberta's private-sector information legislation grew out of a federal initiative, the Personal Information Protection and Electronic Documents Act, which applied to all provinces until they enacted comparable legislation of their own. Alberta has now done so, yet the similarity with other regimes and other provinces and the fact that personal data crosses provincial boundaries points to the need for co-operation between jurisdictions. This is already taking place among the Information and Privacy Commissioners of Alberta, B.C., and the federal government.

The amendment regarding section 43.1(1) also deals with extraprovincial commissioners and refers to an information protection statute from the government of Canada or another province which is similar. However, it does not provide criteria for determining this similarity. Does this depend on a federal view of what is similar, or is it up to the provinces? This is not clear from the amendment. Mr. Chairman, is the sponsor, the Member for Highwood, aware of this, and are there any measures being taken to clarify this by way of an amendment to this amendment?

Also, Mr. Chairman, section 43.1(2)(g) of the bill reads that "notwithstanding anything in section 41, [the commissioner may] disclose information for the purposes of exercising or performing any power, duty or function pursuant to clauses (a) to (f)." This does not state to whom the information may be disclosed. Is it to the extraprovincial commissioners? This may appear to be picayune, but I feel it better to err on the side of being overly precise on a matter that concerns disclosure of information.

It appears that the amendments in this bill relate primarily to matters of housekeeping. This is still important, for we must keep our house in order legally as well as financially and socially.

I am not pleased with the provision of amendment 6, section 63(1), to provide for an automatic review every three years, beginning July 1, 2006, and reporting within 18 months. I am proposing an amendment to this act which would strike out the proposed amendment 6 and retain the original section 63(1), which is a result of royal assent on December 4, 2003. I have the papers here for the amendment.

The Chair: We will refer to this amendment as amendment A1.

You may proceed.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The Bill 8 amendment seeks to delay by a year the first review of the act by a special committee of the Legislative Assembly. The original required review was by July 1, 2005, eighteen months after coming into force on January 1, 2004. An amendment delays this first review until July 1, 2006. I am proposing an amendment to this act which would strike out that proposed section 6 and retain the original section 63(1), which is a result of royal assent on December 4, 2003.

Given rapid changes in technology, I believe that frequent review is a good thing. Innovations in biometrics such as the new radio frequency identity tags permit tracking of individuals who have received an injection. Such measures are being used experimentally in the U.S. on people entering the country as a response to possible terrorism. In addition, more established measures such as video surveillance cameras that do not record what is observed fall outside present privacy law. These are developments that need to be monitored regularly and closely.

Mr. Chairman, access to information and protection of privacy are twin foundations of our democratic and personal rights and freedoms. Without information citizens cannot return an informed verdict on government when they vote. Without assurance of the privacy of their persons and information they may not have the confidence to express themselves freely without fear of reprisals.

The need for recourse to legislation in these areas is not an intrusion by additional laws to regulate people's lives. It arises from the need to prevent intrusion into people's lives by an ensemble of sophisticated techniques beyond the reach of most citizens and to attempt a measure of transparency by those who have power – state power, corporate power, and technological power – in short, to balance the odds and ensure that those who have those means that others lack are subject to the rule of law. To the extent that the amending of this legislation is a means to that end and with agreement to my amendment, I'm happy to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: Does anyone wish to speak on amendment A1 to Bill 8, the Personal Information Protection Amendment Act, 2005?

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning on the bill.

Mr. Backs: I just have a few issues here, and seeing the late hour I'd like to move adjournment of this bill for now. [interjection] Go ahead now? Okay.

I've got a number of questions, Mr. Chairman, on this . . .

The Chair: Have you withdrawn your motion to adjourn?

Mr. Backs: I withdraw the motion.

Some of these questions deal with the repeal of certain clauses in section 2 and the extension of where we go in this Personal Information Protection Amendment Act in terms of how this affects, for example, people in public offices such as service clubs or, say, for example, unions. I mean, a union like the provincial public employees union has tens of thousands of members and has a very extensive electoral process. Are they to be treated separately in their elections than somebody in a constituency association? There are a number of types of democratic organizations that are very, very important in our democracy. It does not just extend to parties in the political process or even municipalities and municipal politicians; it extends deep into the way our system is set up, and that's an important first question I'd like to see answered.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think it quite clearly shows in the bill here that it's a registered constituency association, which would certainly pertain to a political nature such as we have here in the House. I know that it wouldn't cover the position that the hon. member is taking on the others.

Mr. Backs: Well, then, Mr. Chairman, I have some great difficulty with this because this bill does not allow for the full operation of democracy and, in fact, is biased as to what we do and only thinks as to what we do in the operation of political parties. I think that there's some significant cause for concern, and I think it's going to only be before us again in years to come because of people complaining about this particular extreme restriction of information that they will not be able to deal with in the same way that we deal with it. People should not be looking in our democracy at, I guess, people they see in the Legislature as being given a better deal on these types of things than the rest of the types of elected bodies we have in our society.

There were some additional questions, but I really don't want to go on for too long. That's enough for tonight. Thank you.

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Chairman, I would like to remind the hon. member that this is strictly for clarification. It is not a change in the act per se as from the original part of the act.

[The clauses of Bill 8 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's been a very, very interesting and very productive evening, and I would move that the committee now rise and report Bill 8, Personal Information Protection Amendment Act, 2005.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill: Bill 8. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move in view of the hour that we adjourn and reconvene tomorrow at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; at 11:16 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 12, 2005 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 05/04/12
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. Grant that we the members of our province's Legislature fulfill our office with honesty and integrity. May our first concern be for the good of all of the people. Let us be guided by our deliberations this day. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you a long-time friend, a resident of the Stony Plain constituency, and a guest of this Assembly today, someone who needs very little introduction, a progressive Albertan who has served Albertans most of his life as an educator in our public school system and for the past 15 years as a member of this Assembly.

As an MLA Mr. Stan Woloshyn served Albertans as a private member, as the minister of public works, supply and services, as Minister of Community Development, and until his retirement in 2004 as minister of seniors. Mr. Woloshyn was an integral part of the Progressive Conservative government that positioned Alberta to enter our next hundred years debt free. Mr. Woloshyn is seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I ask that this outstanding Albertan stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am just delighted to introduce a young man, his class, his parents, and his teachers. His name is Levi Dibben, and his father works as the executive assistant for the Minister of Innovation and Science. He is accompanying today his teachers Mrs. Mair and Mr. Robertson and parent helpers Mrs. Sonnenberg; Mrs. Dibben, his mother; Mrs. Wells; Mr. Nowelselsky; Mr. Van Camp; Mrs. Robinson; Mrs. Chorney; and Mrs. Jamieson. They are members of the Lakeland Ridge public school community. They are two grade 6 classes, teachers, and parent helpers, and if they would rise now, please, and be given the warm welcome they so richly deserve.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you a class of 43 students from the Calgary French & International School. They are accompanied today by six adults: Grégoire Belland, Judi Poole, Marlene Wilson, Cecile Trigg, Robert Ward, Natasha Wosnock. They are seated, I believe, in both the members' and public galleries, and I would ask that they stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and privilege to be able to introduce to you 24 people from Rosemary, Alberta. There are 17 grade 7 kids who are here with seven adults: Mr. David Blumell, Mr. Richard Hall, Don Plett, Brian Plett, Carol Reid, Phyllis King, and Chad Fika. I do want to bring attention to two things. First of all, these kids, who are actually just walking into the Assembly right now, two weeks ago shaved their heads and raised $10,000 for one of their classmates who has cancer. The second point of interest: I talked to them and asked them how many of them I delivered as a family doctor, and I delivered eight of the 17. I would ask that they all rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure and pride to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly an instructor and students from Grant MacEwan's south campus in Edmonton-Mill Woods. Mr. David Kincade is a political science instructor and a fine researcher for the Official Opposition. He is accompanied by students Miss Andrea Pipke, Mr. Thomas Barr, and Mr. Marcus Durante. Would you please stand as I ask the Assembly to give you a warm welcome?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Marcel and Bernice Desaulniers. Marcel and Bernice are the grandparents of Justin Laverty-Harrigan, who is one of our many hard-working pages. Among their many accomplishments Marcel and Bernice have been married for 52 years. I might point out that their grandson Justin did a great job of writing this out for me. I would ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two gentlemen who are seated in the members' gallery. They were here last month and enjoyed the proceedings so much that they're back again today to observe the proceedings once more. Mr. Joe Anglin is a resident of Rimbey, Alberta, and with him is Mr. Jim Graves, who was the NDP candidate in Lacombe-Ponoka in the last provincial election. I would ask them both to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of the Assembly three graduate students from the University of Alberta. They're currently engaged in a campaign to save Pembina Hall as a student residence. Some of you may have stayed in Pembina residence in your own student days. It's the third-oldest building on campus. The U of A is considering converting Pembina, a thriving academic and social community, from a residence into office space. This conversion would displace about 130 students, who were not consulted about the change and only informed about the impending decision just before final exams. They are Andrea Dalton, Meredith Kenzie, Bryan McKelvie. They are seated in the public gallery. I'll ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Dr. B. Miller: It is an honour for me, Mr. Speaker, to introduce to you and through you to the House Bill Daly, a resident of the Edmonton-Glenora constituency. He calls himself a senior activist, but for me he is an important and valued researcher, providing statistical analyses of seniors' programs and health care in Alberta. I invite Bill, who I believe is in the members' gallery, to stand and receive the traditional welcome of the House.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Smoke-free Places Legislation

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the Tory convention last weekend the huge majority of delegates voted for a province-wide workplace smoking ban. This contrasts dramatically with what we saw last week when this Tory government waded into private members' business to bring in watered-down amendments to the nonsmoking bill. What remains to be seen is whether this government's change of heart has anything to do with chief of staff Rod Love's former position as a paid lobbyist for the tobacco industry. To the Premier: given that Rod Love has strong ties to the tobacco industry, how can the Premier guarantee that the choice to water down this bill was not affected by financial concerns of big tobacco?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I can tell the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition that I have never, never, never been lobbied by tobacco companies or Rod Love on this particular issue.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Again to the Premier: given that the majority of the Tory caucus itself voted to support the smoking ban after the second reading of Bill 201, will the Premier explain why, upon Rod Love's return to the Legislature after a month's absence, there was a sudden reversal on this vote on the smoking ban?

The Speaker: I'm not sure that, given the rules, that would be an appropriate question. An individual in this Assembly will vote his or her way or conscience, and I don't know how any member can control that.

The hon. leader. Third question.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Again to the Premier: given that members of the public have shown overwhelming support for a workplace smoking ban, will the Premier reconsider the decision to allow smoking in bars, casinos, and bingo halls and let the will of Albertans prevail?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, this bill is before the Assembly, and it's entirely up to the members of the Progressive Conservative caucus and members of the Liberal caucus and members of the ND caucus to debate the issue. I understand that it's at third reading now. It is before the Legislature, and it would be entirely inappropriate for me to address the issue at this particular time.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Securities Commission

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The list of people raising serious concerns about the operation of the Alberta Securities Commission has been joined by a prominent investor advocate from Ontario, Diane Urquhart, who raises worries about the blurring of policing functions and adjudicating functions at the commission. This controversy is becoming a national issue, and Alberta's role in Canada's capital markets is being tarnished. This is an opportunity for decisive leadership from this minister, not for dithering. To the Minister of Finance: given the information the minister now has, does she have full confidence that all is well in the Alberta Securities Commission?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have not said at any point that all was well. In fact, I did suggest that there are some human resource issues at the commission, and they are being addressed. I have had word from the independent commissioners to say that they have engaged an external management company to deal with those issues.

I've received a copy of the letter from Ms Urquhart. I would agree fully with her that if a member has a conflict or information about enforcement proceedings, they should not be participating in hearings on the matter. I will also, when I reply to Ms Urquhart, make her aware that when this does occur, members excuse themselves from those hearings. Mr. Speaker, we also have a provision in our legislation that if there are a large number of our part-time commission members that may have a conflict in an issue, we have the ability to appoint people from the outside to sit on a particular matter, and I can assure the House that that would happen.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister, then: why does this minister continue to accept the word of the commission's part-time commissioners that there were no regulatory problems at the commission?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the House and the hon. Leader of the Opposition that the part-time commissioners derived their report from two separate reports provided to them by Mr. Mack. One was from the persons who brought forward complaints; the second was the review of those complaints. From those two reports the independent, part-time commissioners brought forward their findings to me. They did comment on some issues, human resource issues, and those are being dealt with, but they also stated very clearly that they believed the enforcement part of it was being handled even-handedly and fairly.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, I don't think she gets it.

To the same minister: given the growing voices of concern across the country, will the minister now follow the example set in Ontario when their Securities Commission faced controversy and call a full, genuinely independent inquiry into the Alberta Securities Commission?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, if you have actual examples of enforcement issues, I would certainly deal with those. I don't mean one or two, given the number of files that are handled, because I think everyone understands that you can have those concerns. What I would be most concerned about is if people brought concerns forward and they were not dealt with.

Mr. Speaker, I think the person who doesn't get it is the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Travel by Elected Senators

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Electoral reform is a personal passion, but without any guarantee that the federal government would appoint Alberta's elected nominees to the Senate, this government wasted $3 million on a senatorial election. Albertans responded to this ineffectual exercise by spoiling or declining 169,000 ballots. Now the government is planning to spend $28,000 to reward the four nominees by sending them on an eastern Canada junket. To the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency: given that the $3 million Senate elections have not forced the federal government into Senate reform, how is sinking even more dollars into this issue an efficient use of tax dollars?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, it's important for Albertans to understand that my ministry is dealing with efficiencies and restructuring inside itself, including corporate services and completing the build of the SuperNet. I have said from my first day as minister that my priority is to find efficiencies in my own department first and foremost, and as time goes by and we begin to assemble necessary resources, I will be happy to work with other ministries in these areas.

I actually believe that our Premier could answer this question.

Ms Pastoor: I think he's been cheating because my next question is to the Premier. Mr. Premier, if I may, will this government institute a citizens' assembly for electoral reform as they have in B.C.?

Mr. Klein: There are no plans to do that, Mr. Speaker.

In response to the hon. member's first question and preamble $28,000 is a drop in the bucket compared to the amount that was spent by the Senators-in-waiting back in 1990 or 1989, I believe, when they travelled. So $28,000 is reasonable.

What they want to do is to explain to the rest of Canada that the government of Alberta remains committed to the democratic – democratic – ideals even though the Prime Minister has chosen to act undemocratically by not appointing Alberta's Senators-in-waiting, including Mr. Mitchell and, of course, one former member of this cabinet and another person: all good people. Well, sort of. But, Mr. Speaker, we will not abandon our support for democracy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: based on what you've just said, sir, if this government really wants meaningful, democratic reform, why does it keep stonewalling the Liberal opposition's great ideas like a lobbyist registry and fixed election dates?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, a lobbyist registry. I would remind the hon. member that her leader has no problems whatsoever finding out who's lobbying government. He asks a question every single day, so why would we need a registry?

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

1:50 Government Chartered Air Travel

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, Albertans know that this is a government of high fliers who like to flit across the country on the public dime. During the question periods of March 7 and 8 the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation committed to quickly making public the information dealing with this government's chartering of private jets and aircraft. Over five weeks have passed, and guess what? The minister has yet to make good on this commitment. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Why is it taking so long to massage the chartered aircraft records, resulting in these records still not being tabled more than five weeks after the minister promised to do so?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to say thank you to the hon. member for asking me a question when my students from Rosemary are here. I do very much appreciate that. The reason for this is that we actually do a lot of charters, and what we are doing is going through and taking out all of the personal phone numbers and personal information. I would anticipate that that will be done very quickly. The point of the question at the particular time had to do with seven or eight charters, but in reality the number of charters that we have is very, very extensive, whether it's for firefighting, whether it's for whatever. So all of these things will be tabled in the Legislature as promised as soon as the private information has been taken out consistent with the FOIP legislation.

Mr. Mason: The minister knows we're dealing with government use of aircraft.

When will the minister stop stonewalling by making public the promised information detailing the cost, frequency, and who flew where and when on government chartered jets and planes? What are you hiding?

Dr. Oberg: Actually, Mr. Speaker, we're hiding nothing. I would remind the hon. member that firefighters and members of government as well as the staff of government are the government of Alberta. It's critical to the running of the province of Alberta.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, can the minister specify exactly when this information will be brought forward given that the last time we asked him, five weeks ago, he said then that it would be quickly?

Dr. Oberg: Actually, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's researcher has been calling our office about each and every day, maybe every other day, to get this information, and we have told them essentially the same answers. This certainly will be brought forward as soon as we can do it. I would certainly hope that it would be within the next one or two weeks, and that's the time frame that we're aiming for. As soon as it's here, though, Mr. Speaker, through to the hon. member, it will be passed on and tabled in this Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Chiropractic and Physiotherapy Insurance Fees

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last October the government brought in reforms to the private passenger auto insurance system that included a streamlined approach to treating injuries. In the context of these reforms the government has set the fees that physical therapists and chiropractors can charge insurers for treating people injured in collisions. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. Why has the government set treatment fees for these practitioners?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, the process for setting those fees was consultation between the auto industry and the professional organizations, but they were unable to come to an agreement or a conclusion, so government did in this case set those fees.

Mr. Rodney: Supplementary again to the same minister: does this action reduce the treatment available to Albertans who are injured in automobile collisions?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it absolutely does not reduce the treatment available. There is some reduction in the fees paid, but I would say that those fees are still very much in line with the Workers' Compensation Board fees, with the fees that the health authorities pay, and they are among the highest in Canada.

Mr. Rodney: My final question is again to the same minister. Will the savings that result from these fee reductions pad the profits of big insurance companies?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, no, Mr. Speaker. Actually, when you reduce the costs, you reduce the fees. At least, that is the way the marketplace works. So we expect that these savings will be passed on directly to the consumer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Arts Funding

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently in the arts community there have been rumours that there is a real risk of funding cuts from the Alberta government. The implication for Visual Arts Alberta is evident: without a sufficient budget this organization will be unable to support the flourishing Alberta arts community. My question is to the Minister of Community Development. Given that Visual Arts Alberta was created by this government to respond to the needs of individual artists, is this government planning to eliminate Visual Arts Alberta and bring funding for artists back under the direction of this government?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I say this with the greatest respect to the hon. member, who is new to this House. He knows or ought to know that matters such as the budget are properly dealt with on budget day, which will be tomorrow.

With respect to the balance of his question, however, Mr. Speaker, the arts: I'm glad that he acknowledges that they are a flourishing and important part of the province of Alberta, and this government places a great deal of emphasis on supporting them. With respect to the specifics of his question about the quantum that will be in the budget for the Alberta Foundation for the Arts, I leave that till tomorrow.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister: given that the government created these organizations, why after five years are they dismantling this one?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, there have been examples over the years where there has been an evolution with respect to the umbrella organizations that deal with the arts. At one time there were groups set up by the government to deal with the performing arts, the visual arts, the literary arts, and so on. Generally speaking, now they are all under the umbrella of the Alberta Foundation for the Arts. That was a decision that was taken some number of years ago, I believe back in about 1994. The reason for that is because we wished to protect the funding in support of the arts, but we wanted to reduce the administration costs. Obviously, there were administration costs associated with running three or four organizations as opposed to one. That's the reason why it was done, sir.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister: given that Alberta is celebrating the contributions of the artistic community this centennial, will this government commit to continued support for these dedicated organizations?

Mr. Mar: Oh, indeed, Mr. Speaker, there is much to celebrate. The hon. member and members of the House should know that, for example, on the 28th of April some 600 performing artists, culinary artists, visual artists, and writers are all going to Ottawa as part of a national arts celebration called Alberta Scene. The provincial government in collaboration with the federal government has supported this program. It will be Alberta's gift of culture to the rest of the nation at the venue of the National Arts Centre among others.

Overall, Mr. Speaker, I'm glad that the hon. member acknowledges that during the centennial year celebration of the arts is an important part of the centennial celebration, that the centennial is in part about understanding where we've come from, where we are, and what we aspire to be as expressed through our arts and culture.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Emergency Hospital Services

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The health care budget has increased significantly over the last 10 years, far exceeding the inflation and growth rates during that same period. By and large our health care system is a good one, but one common complaint that we hear from Albertans is that they are not entirely happy with the service provided in emergency departments. My first question is to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. Have there been any studies conducted regarding the amount of funding that is spent on emergency service and the level of service that is provided?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in December the Health Quality Council did in fact identify the services in emergency rooms as being something that we should look at, but I'm not aware of any other studies that were conducted on this.

However, I'd like to make a comment. Last year the Capital health authority treated over 435,000 patients, and in Calgary over 360,000 patients were treated during the same period. At least half of the patients in either location waited two to three hours for a bed. So we are improving, but we still have work to do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplementary question is also to the same minister. Would the minister encourage regional health authorities to deploy additional staff to assist patients in emergency waiting areas?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, one of the programs that we're doing is a program that's done in conjunction with St. John Ambulance, and that is work with volunteers that are talked about or identified as Friends of the Emergency Room. In both Calgary and Edmonton these volunteers in this project, assisted by Alberta Health and Wellness, are trained to help families receive support while they're in the emergency room. The volunteers are giving extra comforting presence in the emergency rooms in centres like the Royal Alex and in the Foothills medical centre in Calgary. I've been in emergency rooms in my tenure as minister, and I can see the benefit that they're bringing today, for example, at the University of Alberta. These volunteers are guiding people and giving them a sense of calmness, and I think it is providing additional support for the patients.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Pham: Thank you. My last question is also directed to the same minister. Could the minister ask the regional health authorities to provide more non-emergency clinics during holidays and after hours to reduce stress on emergency departments?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the first solution that I'd like to raise is the Health Link in Alberta, which is providing some service relief. Some 800,000 calls a year are being alleviated from the emergency rooms because they are going straight through to Health Link, and qualified nurses are providing them with advice.

Beyond that, our new local primary care initiatives are having great success in identifying ways for patients to access the system earlier. Health teams there are providing support, and we hope by the end of this year to have at a minimum at least a dozen of these types of services available to give non-urgent service, thereby alleviating the congestion in wait rooms in emergency departments.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

School Closures

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government continues to fail Alberta parents and students who require sustainable public education. Its actions demonstrate that it cares more about the bottom line than students, parents, and the communities they live in. Given that the Valhalla school in Peace River and the Sangudo high school and the Bruderheim school have avoided closures, my question to the Minister of Education: will the minister support a moratorium on public school closures until such time as the new utilization formula, one that could save these schools, is developed?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I really have to take some exception to the preamble in that sentence because I don't think the school system or the government funding for the school system is failing anyone in this province. I'm very surprised to hear the hon. member opposite suggest that there is something wrong with the fact that we provide the highest per capita funding, the highest per student funding, and have on average the highest paid teachers in the whole country. I don't think that's failing the system at all.

Now, that having been said, with respect to the second part of the question, there were reasons why the school boards in the case of Sangudo and Bruderheim and Valhalla and perhaps other places made the decisions they did, and there are equally so reasons why, I believe, the Edmonton public school board is pursuing its options with regard to the cluster studies that they are studying, and that includes the school that you've referenced.

Mr. Flaherty: The highest dropout rate.

To the same minister: is the plan to give school boards more flexibility in these decisions, and are these decisions an attempt to off-load responsibility for closures onto school boards rather than the government?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, as the new member will come to learn very soon, these school trustees are elected and have that responsibility. They have that authority, and they're exercising that.

Now, specific to the utilization rate that was asked about earlier, it's true that from time to time you have to evaluate the particular guidelines and policies that we as a government pass on to our trustees to follow and adhere to. To my knowledge that has been done in this particular case, and it will continue to be done. Those are local decisions, up to the local boards to make.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the government's current policy will almost certainly force additional Edmonton schools to close, can the minister tell us today how many additional schools he's prepared to see close in the name of the bottom line?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, again I won't fault the hon. member for his newness to the system, but what I would like to point out to him is that the government of Alberta does not make decisions to close schools. Those are decisions made by locally elected trustees, who have the responsibility to be responsible to their particular electors. The point is that as you come to learn how that system works, perhaps the questions could be pointed in the proper direction.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Snowmobile Use on Public Lands

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Mr. Minister, with regard to the Petty Trespass Act could you please clarify what public use is allowed for snowmobiles on public lands?

Mr. Couffts: First of all, we need to advise the hon. member that the Petty Trespass Act focuses on private land and not public land. Holders of agricultural dispositions must provide reasonable access to recreation users under the recreation access regulation, Mr. Speaker, and this legislation allows for penalizing or removing of people who violate that, up to $2,000 if they're on an agricultural lease without permission. The department expects our agricultural leaseholders and our recreation users to work together to enjoy public lands in a way that does not interfere with the use that has already been decided upon for that land. For unoccupied public lands the department supports responsible motorized recreation use of public lands, including recreational snowmobiling.

The Speaker: As there was an interjection when the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition asked his second question today, there will be one now as well. I refer hon. members to Beauchesne, section 408: "Questions should . . . not require an answer involving a legal opinion."

Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the minister: how does this apply to lands under FMAs, or forest management agreements?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much. This is an important question. And thank you for the guidance, Mr. Speaker. Recreational users, including snowmobilers, can access forest management agreement areas and lands where there are trails that are integrated with a forestry use. In fact, this is a condition, Mr. Speaker, that every forest management agreement holder must have. I'd like to add that a number of our forest management agreement holders are already working with recreational trail users to make sure that that integrated trail system that I mentioned is in operation and for the enjoyment of everyone. That's what we expect under the department.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: can you share with the House any efforts your department is pursuing toward building a trail network on public lands that would assist this growing industry and popular outdoor pastime?

Mr. Coutts: A wide variety of recreational trails, of opportunities already exists in Alberta today, but we must look at the future. We manage high-traffic snowmobile trails on public lands through access management agreements and programs such as integrated management agreements as our approach to making clear guidelines on how trails should be managed and should be opened for snowmobiling and the recreation of all Albertans. This approach is working well, we feel, in Alberta, but as plans are being completed, it could work better, and as people want to leisure on the land, we will work with our off-highway vehicle community and with other stakeholders with an interest in public land to develop a framework for a trail management system, which will be part of our land legacy for the 21st century.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Responsibility for public school closures falls squarely on this Progressive Conservative government's shoulders. They have demonstrated poor planning and an unwillingness to provide the necessary resources needed to keep central Edmonton schools like Strathearn, Wellington, North Edmonton, and Terrace Heights open and vital. The threatened closures will undermine students' educational experiences and weaken mature and thriving communities. My first question is to the Minister of Education. Given that there are over 30 – 35 to be exact – public schools within the public school district of Edmonton that could be deemed eligible for closure, which Edmonton neighbourhoods are the next victims of this government's public school closure policy?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, what an awful way to look at the school system, as if to suggest that there are victims out there. My God. And to level that comment toward the Edmonton public school board is particularly ridiculous because here we have a school system that is revered and respected throughout North America for having some of the best delivery programs anywhere. I will not stand here and allow this member to belittle what so many excellent teachers and excellent administrators are doing so well to uphold. That is just ridiculous.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is also to the Minister of Education. Given that this Progressive Conservative government recently spent $3.2 million renovating Terrace Heights public school, why is this government now forcing that school to be closed? It's a waste of money.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me explain this again very slowly. We have a group of individuals out in the community who are elected to serve as trustees. They comprise what we refer to as a school board. In fact, we have two members in the gallery today from Calgary public. Mr. Gordon Dirks, welcome, and Dr. Brendan Croskery, welcome as well. I'm sure they're following with great interest this false line of questioning.

It's not the government of Alberta who initiates school closures. In fact, one of the most difficult decisions that any school board has is to look at declining enrolments, to look at increasing costs, and to try to balance and manage the two. It's been going on in this province for almost a hundred years, and I suspect that that particular style and that particular formula will need to continue because there has to be a way to rejuvenate and at the same time refresh. That's part of the process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that shifting students to other schools may drive utilization rates at the receiving schools, including Kenilworth junior high, beyond 100 per cent of capacity, is it this Progressive Conservative government's policy that increased use of portable trailers as permanent classrooms is part of the Alberta education system and policy?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, portables, add-ons, and now modules are all part of the education system, part of the capital infrastructure of the education system. I think it has to be remembered that tens of millions of dollars have been put forward in capital infrastructure over the last many years. I'm sure there will be more money coming as those needs arise. Portables work extremely well in some areas.

But now as you look at new school construction and you look at the type of life that a school would have after its normal life expectancy is over or the use for which it was initially created is over, it's important to look at what kind of new modules and modular systems are going to be designed for maximizing the use of that building after its life expectancy as a school, and that's what's happening, in fact.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Conservative government, no doubt to placate the firewall crowd, has decided to send its four Senators-in-waiting on a taxpayer-funded junket across the country. The purpose is apparently to sell the people of Canada on the dubious merits of electing people until age 75 rather than appointing them until age 75 to an otherwise unreformed Canadian Senate. My question is to the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. After spending millions of dollars in last November's election farce, tens of thousands more sending wannabe Senators on a cross-country junket, can't the government at least try to find more efficient ways to waste taxpayers' dollars than that?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I think the appropriate minister should answer that question. If the intergovernmental affairs minister would like to take that, it's all up to him.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was in 1905 when the province of Alberta was incorporated. It wasn't until 1929 that Alberta finally wrestled control of its natural resources from Ottawa. This is a just cause. We will continue on what we feel are the best interests to pursue on behalf of Albertans, and we're not going to roll over and surrender to Ottawa on this issue.

Mr. Eggen: Back to the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency, please: in the interests of improving government efficiency and saving taxpayers' money, why doesn't the minister undertake to fully recover from the provincial PC and Alliance parties the cost of these cross-country trips since only those parties even bothered to contest the election farce last November?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I have said this time and time again: what my ministry is all about right now is about finding efficiencies, what's happening within this government, not chasing around the countryside after other people.

Mr. Eggen: To the same minister: will he please try to explain to the Assembly whether funding a cross-country junket by wannabe Senators will make the Conservative government more efficient by filling up government planes, or will it make the Conservative government less efficient by wasting taxpayers' money?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again I'm going to say that I think this belongs to a different ministry. If he would like to stand up and answer the question, he may.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the four Senators-in-waiting, the nominees, met with myself and our people in the department, and also working along on the file is our Member for Foothills-Rocky View. One of the tasks of the Senators-in-waiting is to not only talk to other provinces but also to travel to those provinces where they have been invited to speak with respect to Senate reform, to bring that information back to the Premier. One of the major tasks of the Council of the Federation, at the meeting that will be held here in Banff and hosted by the Premier, will be this whole issue of institutional reform.

Again, Mr. Speaker, we're not going to roll over and die on a very important issue, because this is in the best interests of the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Crop Production Insurance Changes

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two years later and the fallout from BSE continues to affect Alberta's agriculture industry. The impact has not only been felt in the livestock industry but by Alberta crop producers. I understand that some of the Alberta crop producers are really contemplating and challenged by how they're going to seed their crops this year let alone have enough money for insurance to protect themselves against low prices and/or weather conditions. My question is to the minister of agriculture, if I may. What is the minister doing to help producers with these skyrocketing costs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member brings up a very important point. Our producers are experiencing some very difficult times, the perfect storm, if you will, of low commodity prices, high input costs, a difficulty that is going to be difficult to overcome. But we've announced today that we're lowering the producers' share of one of the production insurance options, and that's the spring price endorsement option. We're lowering that from 50 per cent to 30 per cent, and I think that's a valuable tool for our producers to enter into and participate in risk management. Aside from that, we've had a lot of questions about CAIS in this House. We have fast-tracked a number of those payments, and I expect that many of those payments are going to be out before the end of this month for sure on the 2003.

We've dealt with the snowed-under crops, Mr. Speaker, which was another issue that was hurting our crop industry up in the north, and we're working on making some changes. We're making some changes to the CAIS program and will continue.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The deadline is two weeks away. Is the minister going to be able to put the program in place in time for this crop year?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. The program is effective immediately, and we do encourage the producers to make their election. As the hon. member mentioned, the deadline is April 30 for them to do so, but the program which we've instituted and I've announced today is effective immediately.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is to the same minister. Given that production insurance is not the only input cost that producers face, what is the minister going to do to reduce other costs such as fuel?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, in addition to all of the other things that we just spoke about, we recognize that fuel is an input cost, and it's a very high input cost given the price of oil and fuel in the marketplace today. We do have the Alberta farm fuel distribution allowance, which is a credit to producers of 6 cents per litre discount on diesel in Alberta.

Alberta farmers and their counterparts in every province in Canada continue to pay a federal fuel tax of 10 cents per litre on gas and 4 cents per litre on diesel. As short a period ago as yesterday I was impressing upon the federal minister of agriculture that, really, perhaps they should follow suit with what Alberta has done and give those tax dollars back to producers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Edmonton Remand Centre

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is not a new revelation that the Edmonton Remand Centre is hopelessly overcrowded. The government knows this, yet they refuse to solve the problem. This negligence has led to the terrible incident of two men being raped by the same inmate while under the care of this government. My questions are to the Solicitor General. Given that the remand centre was built for 288 inmates but now houses at least twice that, what is the government doing to address the serious overcrowding that has led to the practice of double-bunking?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, that is a very good question. The first incident happened in April of 2003, the second happening in February of 2004, where the Edmonton Police Service investigated the incident and an inmate was charged with sexual assault. The safety of inmates is our top priority, and it's our policy to segregate known sexual predators. The second incident happened as a result of human error, and disciplinary action was taken against one of the staff members.

Mr. Speaker, double-bunking in correctional facilities is not unique in Alberta. In fact, it's not unique throughout all of North America, where double bunks are placed into the rooms. These are not hotels. These are corrections facilities for criminals.

Dr. B. Miller: Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister: given the victimization of two men under the government's care in a remand centre waiting for trial, will the government live up to its responsibilities and provide long-term financial and emotional assistance to these two people?

Mr. Cernaiko: Mr. Speaker, while inmates are in custody, they are provided with rehabilitative programs to provide them with the assistance they may need to get back on the street again once their sentence is completed. As well, our ministry is looking at long-term capital funding programs in order to look at a new facility for the Edmonton Remand Centre as well as an extension to the Calgary Remand Centre.

Dr. B. Miller: Again to the same minister: why has this government not addressed these Third World conditions that threaten the health and safety of not only inmates but the guards who work there as well?

Mr. Cernaiko: Mr. Speaker, with the rise in gang activity and organized crime within our own facilities, we are reaching maximum capacity, but the issue is, again, that double-bunking is the norm in North America both throughout Canada and the United States. We want to ensure that our inmates are safe but, as well, that the guards are provided with the security they need to ensure their safety.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Energy Efficiency at the University of Calgary

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The University of Calgary announced a partnership with Direct Energy Business Services that will yield $38 million in student and research support and energy savings. As the single largest user of energy in the city the U of C is showing tremendous leadership by combining support for students with energy-saving initiatives. My first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Can the minister tell this Assembly what his department is doing with regard to energy savings in government facilities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I had the opportunity of attending the announcement that was made with the University of Calgary and Direct Energy, and it was very, very exciting. In essence, what is going to be occurring is that over the next seven years there are going to be savings of roughly $30 million in energy costs. The University of Calgary is going to be taking all of their business to the LEED silver level, which is leadership in energy and environmental design. They will be taking their buildings to that particular level. That will allow them to receive $30 million in savings that they can put into student activities. They've done a tremendous amount of work on the LED light bulb, and they will be utilizing that to a large degree in their research.

Mr. Speaker, in our own facilities we are also stressing energy saving, and it's been said in this particular Assembly numerous times that 90 per cent of our energy right now is green energy. We're working with buildings to ensure that we can also get to the LEED silver level.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. To the same minister: what is your department doing to address the long-term challenges of energy consumption in public buildings?

Ms Blakeman: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: A point of order on this question.
The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the public buildings there's an awful lot that can be done. We did have some programs with regard to schools which showed that energy savings could be occurring within the next seven to 10 years. We're currently looking at all of our government buildings to ensure that the energy utilized is at the lowest amount possible.

Mr. Speaker, quite simply, what we're talking about here is the word that's on everyone's mind these days, which is sustainability. We're talking about sustainability and energy utilization for our buildings. This is incredibly important for the environment, and that's why we're doing it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. My second supplemental is to the Minister of Advanced Education. Is there a scholarship component to this partnership between Direct Energy and the University of Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, indeed, there is a part of the agreement which involves a $3.5 million scholarship fund which Direct Energy will provide. It's to be used across the University of Calgary faculties to enhance student access over the next several years. This is a good addition to the $45 million in scholarships and research grants that the University of Calgary already gives out each year, $8 million of which comes from the Alberta government. I'd also note that about $1.75 million will be directed toward a chair in sustainable energy.

Mr. Speaker, this is a great example of how the private sector can work together with our postsecondary institutions to ensure that we have enhanced access and enhanced quality. Direct Energy, like so many other Alberta companies, is looking ahead to the future and seeing the importance of investing in postsecondary education in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Student Finance System

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in question period the Minister of Advanced Education indicated that it's okay for a students' union to provide supplementary financial assistance for students for emergencies. This year 693 U of A students have received over $1.1 million in aid from their students' union, or on average $1,800 each. That's some emergency. To the minister: what kind of so-called great student finance system, as he referred to it yesterday, requires hundreds of students a year to rely on the charity of their fellow students like something out of a Dickens novel?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the hon. member talk to his colleague from Lethbridge-East about the great student finance system that she and I served on with the Students Finance Board a number of years ago. We served on a Students Finance Board that helped to develop and continue the finest student finance system in this country.

The student finance system that we have provides assistance, and it provides maintenance assistance grants for those students who need supplementary assistance over and above what loans might logically provide. In a first year students going to university who need more assistance than the Canada student loan and who reach the threshold level get a student loan benefit, which is essentially a grant. Then we provide loans for the following three years of the first degree that a student might take. Then, Mr. Speaker, upon completion of the program a remission program, where virtually all of the money that's provided by the provincial student finance from Alberta coffers gets remitted, doesn't have to be paid back, and Alberta students end up with the lowest – the lowest – debt of any students across this country. It is a great student finance system.

Mr. Taylor: Eighteen hundred dollars each, Mr. Speaker.

To the same minister: if, as he claimed yesterday, the amount given out . . . [interjections]

An Hon. Member: We're cheering for you.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you. Thank you. Try the veal.

If as he claimed yesterday . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, the television camera is on the Speaker, not on the hon. member. Proceed.

Mr. Taylor: This wasn't done with the TV cameras in mind, Mr. Speaker.

If, as he claimed yesterday, the amount given out by the loan program takes into account tuition fees and is adjusted annually, why does tuition now eat up about twice as much of the maximum allowable loan as it did when the Conservatives last went through a leadership change?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the time reference that the hon. member used is totally irrelevant, as he knows. The question really is: are there sufficient resources available to ensure that finances are not a barrier to a student getting an education in this province? We've committed to an affordability review to make sure that finances are not a barrier to a student getting an education.

In fact, we have a very good student finance system, but that does not mean that more work does not need to be done to ensure that people understand how they can access resources, that they know that the cost of getting an education, as much as it might be perceived to be, is still the best investment they could possibly make, and that the resources are there for them to finance that cost at whatever level it is.

Mr. Taylor: So, Mr. Speaker, I take it the minister admits that as good as he says that the student finance system is, it can be made better than it is today.

Mr. Hancock: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. Of course it can be made better than it is today. We always strive to improve, to look to make this province a better place, to make sure that all Albertans have the opportunity to be the best they can be and that that opportunity is there and is seized by Albertans.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I will call upon the first of six hon. members to participate. In the interim might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the House two very honourable visitors that we have here today. First of all, we have the chief superintendent of the Calgary public school board, Dr. Brendan Croskery. Accompanying him is actually a former MLA and minister of social services from the Saskatchewan government, a trustee and chair of the Calgary board of education, Gordon Dirks. If they could stand and we could show our appreciation.

Members' Statements

Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Legislation

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I have a bill before this Assembly, Bill 202, a private member's bill, that can be addressed only on Mondays according to our procedures and only after written questions and motions for returns are dealt with. There are 50 written questions and motions for returns on the Order Paper sponsored by opposition members. I am issuing an invitation to the opposition today to help me realize the good work of Bill 202, to help me help the desperate families and teen addicts of this province, by responding positively to my request for unanimous consent each and every one of the remaining four Mondays between now and the end of the spring sitting, if needed, at 4 or 4:30 p.m. to ensure that my Bill 202 is addressed and has a fair chance of becoming one of the best, most helpful laws we could possibly pass this spring.

Mr. Speaker, today I received this photo album and a note from a parent who dropped off a petition, that I will table later this week. I have changed the names, but I would like to read this note to all my colleagues.

Dear Mary Anne,

This is my daughter Sara, my love. She is my heart. I want to thank you with all I am for helping us with Bill 202.

Along with the petitions, I would like you to have this little album. It shows my daughter's progression with crystal meth. If you were here in front of me now, I would get on my knees and I would beg you: please don't give up. Please help us. I miss her so much. I love her so much. What would I do without my Sara, my love? Please don't give up.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask all my colleagues in this House on both sides of the floor not to give up on Sara and the many others.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Crop Production Insurance Changes

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize some important changes to Alberta's production insurance programs that were announced today. Alberta producers continue to face hard times stemming from the BSE crisis and drought. Crop producers are dealing with both low commodity prices and high input costs this year. Many are struggling to even put seed in the ground this spring. It's around this time that producers make their risk management and seeding decisions for 2005, and the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development has taken steps to make price-risk programs more affordable for Alberta farmers.

To encourage as many producers as possible to participate in production insurance programs, the producer's share of the spring price endorsement, SPE, premium has dropped from 50 to 30 per cent. By enrolling in the SPE program, producers are automatically eligible for revenue insurance coverage at no additional cost. Benefits available under revenue insurance coverage increased today from 50 to 70 per cent. Both of these programs are designed to specifically address price risk, an important factor for producers facing increased costs.

Alberta's Agriculture Financial Services Corporation offers the most comprehensive suite of risk management tools in Canada. With these changes Alberta producers can protect themselves more affordably. The deadline for Alberta producers to purchase coverage is April 30. I encourage all Alberta producers to consider their risk management options and take the initiative to protect themselves.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Definition of Marriage

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, it's a sad day for political freedom in Alberta and in Canada when a person is threatened with prosecution for criticizing government policy. I'm referring to the human rights complaint brought against Bishop Fred Henry for his public criticism of the federal Liberal's bill to authorize homosexual marriage. Rather than being charged with a hate speech crime, Bishop Henry should be celebrated for defending an institution that is essential to the well-being of children and, therefore, the very future of our society.

Traditional marriage is above all a child-rearing institution. Institutionalizing homosexual marriage would mean the deliberate creation of motherless children and fatherless children. Mr. Speaker, children have a right to both parents. Parents have a duty to meet that right, and if the Liberals legislate homosexual marriage, the law of Canada will be sending a false and destructive message: kids don't need both a mother and a father.

Mr. Speaker, opposition to homosexual marriage is not just based on religious belief. Abandoning the traditional institution of marriage would be contrary to the findings of an entire decade of social science research. This research shows that everything bad that can happen to a child in the 21st century – and we all know, as Mary Anne just alluded to, that there are a lot of bad things that can happen – is statistically more likely to happen if both biological parents are not present.

Mr. Speaker, why would Canadians want to embark on such a massive social experiment, the consequences of which are unknown? The answer of course is: we don't. Two-thirds of Canadians oppose homosexual marriage.

No right is more fundamental to democracy than the right of the people to criticize government. I would like to congratulate our Premier for defending Bishop Henry despite the fact that Bishop Henry has not always been an outspoken defender of the Premier. The Premier did not say that he agreed with everything Bishop Henry said, but he defended the bishop's right to say it. This affirms the Anglo-Canadian tradition of liberty through full and public debate, and I urge all members of this House to spring to its defence.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Loretta Van Brabant

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize a truly outstanding individual who teaches at St. Teresa Catholic school in the wonderful constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. On March 22 of this year at a ceremony held in Ottawa Miss Loretta Van Brabant received the Prime Minister's award for teaching excellence. Teachers are selected for this award on the basis of achieving outstanding results with students, inspiring students to learn and to continue learning, and providing students with the skills and attitudes to succeed in a changing society and knowledge-based economy.

It is quite apparent upon reviewing the application package which was put forward on Miss Van Brabant's behalf that she not only meets but indeed exceeds all of these criteria. Now in her 34th year of a stellar career with the Edmonton Catholic school district, she continues to exhibit genuine love for, belief in, and respect for each child she teaches. Parents, colleagues, and students alike constantly applaud her efforts in exploring and embracing new approaches to teaching and learning. Like so many in her profession, Miss Van Brabant also somehow finds time to volunteer with the YMCA, her church, and various community and school endeavours, including running with and encouraging participation in St. Teresa's Running Club.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Jessica, a former grade 3 student of Miss Van Brabant, sums it up best when she says, "I know when I look back on my life, you will be one of the people that I will remember, who believed in me when I didn't believe in myself."

Mr. Speaker, I would ask all Members of the Legislative Assembly to join me in congratulating Loretta Van Brabant on her wonderful achievement.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Terry Fox

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize a great Canadian. Once or twice in our lives someone special comes along who touches our heart, deepens our faith in people, and forever changes our perspective on life. Twenty-five years ago today Terry Fox dipped his foot into the Atlantic Ocean and began his marathon into Canadian history.

Mr. Speaker, it goes without saying that Terry Fox was and remains a special person to all of us. He touched many of us individually as he battled cancer during his run across Canada to raise funds for cancer research. The groundswell of financial and emotional support he gained has become legendary in our province, in our country, and around the world. Terry exhibited courage, selflessness, and compassion beyond his years, and his memory lives on in the hearts and minds of all Albertans and Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, on this very special occasion I would remind and encourage all members of this Assembly that the Terry Fox Marathon of Hope is not over. In fact, it has just begun as we continue to run for tomorrow, to run for hope, and to run for Terry.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Political Reform

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Canadians are rightfully appalled at the conduct of the Ottawa Liberals: kickbacks, threats, fraud, and of course massive campaign donations to the Liberal Party from corporations that received the money from the taxpayers.

Yesterday the Premier suggested that we have a higher ethical standard in Alberta. He offered no proof. Adscam was not uncovered by accident. It was uncovered by an Auditor General who is empowered by Parliament to co-operate with the Public Accounts Committee. Alberta's Auditor General is not similarly empowered by this Legislature. What we do have in Alberta is evidence of untendered contracts, ministers hiring their friends to produce no work, politicians and their friends jetting around in private planes on taxpayers' dimes, and Tory insiders moving around the political, corporate, and lobbyist worlds like a revolving door.

Ottawa's Adscam was also investigated by a Public Accounts Committee with real teeth and a full staff. We do not have that in Alberta. The chair of the federal Public Accounts Committee, Conservative MP John Williams, has criticized the way the Alberta Conservatives have weakened Alberta's public accounts process on several occasions. Alberta needs an all-party committee to closely examine how we can prevent scandal and corruption in our province. We need to look at a lobbyist registry so that Albertans know who is bending politicians' ears. We need to strengthen our Public Accounts Committee and its independence.

We also need real campaign finance reform. Since the sponsorship scandal, Ottawa has put a stop to corporations funnelling big money to their chums in political parties, but corporate money still funds Conservative and Liberal campaigns in this province. We need to follow the lead of the NDP government in Manitoba, where they have eliminated corporate and union donations to political parties. Alberta will not have a higher ethical standard until we eliminate big money from politics.

Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, today is a very important day in our history. Recognizing that it was in 1917 that Alberta became one of the first jurisdictions in the world to provide the franchise, the ballot, to women, it was some 48 years later on this day in 1965 that an act to amend the Election Act was assented to and came into force, allowing aboriginal people the right to vote in provincial elections.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition by 102 Albertans that says:

We . . . urge the Government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm presenting a petition from 102 residents of Alberta asking the government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I rise today to table five copies of documents signed by 147 of your residents living in the Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock constituency. These citizens are requesting that the government implement changes to the Alberta Aids to Daily Living benefits schedule and have a custom-made breast prosthesis added to the schedule.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two letters to table today from Calgaryans who express considerable dissatisfaction with the government's stance on the Métis interim harvesting agreement. Mr. Kevin Klockow strongly questions the government's definition of subsistence and considers its position on the agreement "excessive and irresponsible."

Mr. Schwanky in his letter similarly labels the agreement "a disaster for wildlife management in Alberta."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of six letters I have received from constituencies throughout the province expressing deep concern about our province's position on possibly opting out of the national child care strategy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table two open letters protesting the dismissal of Don Hill, former host of the Wildrose Forum on CBC. First is a letter from Ted Woyillowicz, dated March 21 of this year, and it's addressed to Mr. Orchard, regional director for CBC.

The second is from Brian Staples, who writes on behalf of the Seniors' Action and Liaison Team, who has requested an in-person meeting with the CBC VP of communications.

Thank you.

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is from Nellie Samek, and she notes that she frequently hears the Premier saying that “our health care is very good and that he hears much praise and little complaint.” She begs to differ and outlines an episode that happened to her 79-year-old neighbour, in which she was sent home from the hospital with no support at home.

The second tabling is from a constituent, David Cournoyer, who is a student in a postsecondary education institution. He wishes to counteract the Premier’s notion that postsecondary education is well funded and gives a number of statistics and some personal notations to support that.

Thank you.

Point of Order

Urgency of Questions

The Speaker: On a point of order the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, the Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this afternoon during question period, during a question from the Member for Calgary-Bow directed at the minister of infrastructure around an announcement of a partnership between the University of Calgary and Direct Energy Business Services, I believe that the information that was being sought from the minister is readily available on websites and media releases.

I would argue, as I look at Beauchesne 409(5), that the question offered by the Member for Calgary-Bow does not meet the criteria of 409(5). That is:

The matter ought to be of some urgency. There must be some present value in seeking the information during the Question Period rather than through the Order Paper or through correspondence with the Minister or the department.

I would argue that the question today did not meet the bar that is set by 409(5). Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on the point of order.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m absolutely delighted to rise and respond to the allegations raised because, first of all, based on that standard, if that standard were to be applied, I would argue that virtually every question raised by the opposition today and every day would fall into it.

This particular question I’m delighted to respond to, and maybe the member herself would like to respond to it as well because it asks for information which is surely in the best interests of the public to know and is certainly current. As I understand the question that was asked, as I heard it, the question asked about what this government was doing about energy savings with respect to government facilities. By implication it asked how the announcement made with respect to the agreement between an energy-providing company and the University of Calgary, an institution which is obviously funded by public funds to a great extent, how it was able to save money and save energy and create – I heard in the answer talk about the LEED program. I don’t remember what the acronym stood for, but the hon. minister outlined that. Clearly, leadership and energy in environmental design – I guess that’s what it stands for – is certainly something of urgent and pressing necessity in this province and, indeed, across the country.

In fact, I’ve heard the members opposite on a day-to-day basis, not in this session but in other sessions, talk about issues such as Kyoto and how we can reduce greenhouse gases. Surely it’s important for Albertans to know when somebody makes a bold step forward by making an agreement between a private corporation and a public institution to reduce energy utilization. Surely that’s important to draw out and to say by implication how that sort of technology, how that sort of agreement could be extrapolated and provided further to other government buildings or facilities.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on at length about how important that question was today, but I think I’ll stop there and afford us the opportunity to get on to the debate on other issues of importance to the public.

The Speaker: Are there other participants on this point of order?

Well, hon. members, I’m going to refer hon. members to Beauchesne 408, Beauchesne 409, all items within 409, actually – the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, in raising a point of order, referred to 409(5); there are, in fact, 12 subsections in there – Beauchesne 410, Beauchesne 411. Quite frankly, if the chair would have enforced all the direct rules in here, I don’t think we’d have had a question period today.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Fatality Inquiries Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate April 11: Ms Pastoor]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. I have concerns about the fatalities information act. My concern has to do with the availability of information that this act attempts to basically cover or hide. My concerns, that I brought out throughout my time here, have had to do with FOIP. I can understand the need to protect the privacy of victims of fatalities, but my concern has to do with how we protect that privacy. Is the protection of that privacy such that legitimate public inquiries from the press or from legal institutions are being prevented from occurring given these amendments? It seems to me that rather than creating greater transparency and accountability, we’re trying to once more cloak information.

I don’t believe in the notion of the term “ambulance chasing,” whereby a person gets access to a fatality file so that they can potentially gain money from the pursuit of that file. Like in The Shipping News I don’t believe either that the information should be graphically represented on the front pages of a publication or on TV. But there is a legitimacy to know how the fatality occurred, and if the fatality inquiry is behind closed doors, and either the public or the press, which is one of the instruments by which the public is provided with information, is prevented from having all the details of the inquiry, then justice is not being done.

Fatalities can be as a result of neglect. An example of a fatality and neglect might be the condition of roadways. I’ve had the misfortune of having to drive along a number of highways, typically the back-and-forth route that I take each week on highway 2, and the state of decline of these road surfaces is unbelievable given the fact that we’re Canada’s wealthiest per capita province. The government goes on at length about saying how we have the best health care system, the best education system. I question whether they’d be able to make those same statements about our roadways.

The inquiries are necessary. If you hide information or you withhold information, which is just another form of hiding it, then justice is not served. We need to know why people were killed. We need to know if the conditions of the roads were part of that fatality.

We need to know if signage was part of that fatality. A number of constituents of Calgary-Varsity have brought up the business of signage on semitrailers and their close proximity to the road and the distracting quality of these signs. They also question the safety and the enforcement by the government in terms of allowing these signs to be as close to the roadway as they are. We have examples of modern electronic signage where basically you're seeing large video screens on the edges of roadways, which are terrifically distracting. Later on I'll be proposing a motion with regard to cellphone use. All these things potentially contribute to fatalities, and if we don't know what all the contributing factors are when an inquiry is held, if that information is kept and it is not made public, then the public is not being served.

With regard to FOIP I have no trouble with the notion of FOIP being used to protect legitimate privacy, but when FOIP is used to just prevent information from being revealed, whether it be through the Public Accounts when we ask a particular minister to provide evidence of their travel credit card arrangements or we ask various members of that particular minister's entourage to provide that information. That is the type of information that should be available. When we ask, similarly, for information on flights and the reasons why certain members or nonmembers, as the case would be, were on that flight, that is no reason for the legitimacy of FOIP being used.

I have great concern that this fatality inquiry and the limiting of information in inquiries can potentially let people off the hook for their degree of contribution to the actual inquiry. My concern, again, is that without transparent availability of information in a timely manner following a fatality inquiry, information that is critical, that might be preventative in nature, will simply be swept under the rug because it will not be allowed to see the light of day.

I speak against this amendment. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, but prior to that we do have Standing Order 29(2)(a) if anybody wants to participate.

Then, hon. member, proceed, please.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess the question that has to be asked when we deal with legislation and this particular bill is: why is it coming forward? I've heard many times from the government and other people: we don't bring in legislation, unless we need it, for the sake of legislation. So there has to be an overriding reason for bringing in this legislation.

I think there was a quote – and I'm sure the minister will tell us if it's incorrect or not – that the goal of Bill 24 is to make fatality inquiries as efficient and effective as possible. But when we start dealing with issues dealing with the public, I sometimes worry about this idea of being efficient. There's a time for being efficient: when we're dealing with dollars and cents. I suppose being efficient would be not having Senators-in-waiting trotting all over the province, wasting taxpayers' money.

The point that I'm trying to make is that when you're dealing with a fatality inquiry, certainly the FOIP issues are there, but generally it's the public's right to know when we're dealing with these sorts of issues. I'm not sure that this is an area that we need to be particularly efficient at. What is more important is getting to the truth, and when we get to the truth of a fatality inquiry, perhaps then that leads to changes that could be made so these types of circumstances don't happen in the future.

I'm not sure that our fatality inquiry process was that open to begin with, but it seems to be a move now to hide more, if I can put it that way, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, this bill is going to make it not as open as fatality inquiries are now, and I don't believe it's going to be as open as it needs to be to protect the public's interests. This is the key: the public's interest. It seems that the minister wants to restrict the evidence that the media can see on behalf of the public and also take steps to make sure that the media are not present at closed portions of the hearings.

Now, there may be times when this is necessary, but already judges could do this without having to bring this into legislation. So we should be in a democratic society erring on the side of openness. We don't need this sort of legislation. If a judge in his opinion decides that we should go behind closed doors or that there are things that the public should not know, that judge can make that decision then. Why do we need to bring in legislation and close the process more than it is already?

The first amendment would put all documents filed at the inquiry off limits to the press unless a judge rules otherwise. Well, it seems to me that it should be the other way around. It should be open to the media and through the media to the public unless a judge determines otherwise, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me that that's an assumption, that the media should have access unless a judge specifically rules against it. That makes more sense to me than closing the process and forcing the judge to go the other way for the public interest.

I think the minister's argument that a fatality inquiry often deals with sensitive documents such as medical records – fair enough. If that's the case, then FOIP. And a judge can do that. We don't need to set up legislation. It's just common sense. If there's something personal there that should not be out in an inquiry, they already have the authority to do this, Mr. Speaker.

The second amendment, to go on, Mr. Speaker, is aimed at restricting who can be named as interested persons. Well, I guess this is pretty obvious. In this case this is what I'd call the media legislation; we don't want the media there. Now, I know and we all know that sometimes we'd all rather deal behind closed doors. It's more comfortable not having the media there. But in a free society, in a democratic society that's the price we pay, and the media is a way that the public can be involved. Again, there should be a very good reason – a very good reason – and I haven't heard it yet, why the media should not be involved in this particular process.

I think that under the changes it says that only people with direct and substantial personal, legal, or business interest in the death investigation inquiry would get standing in the closed portions of a hearing. Again, Mr. Speaker, I would leave this discretion with a judge. If there's a good reason, again, why there should be only certain people there and not the media, they can do that now. Why create legislation that seems to go against the idea of openness and the public's right to know? I would say that public access to fatality inquiries is only weakly protected now because a judge can already decide to go behind closed doors at his discretion. So why do we have to even make it worse? The judge already has that authority.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the third amendment, again along the same way, I guess, to control information, says that a fatality inquiry will no longer be mandatory in the death of someone in care unless the death relates to government care. Again, how do we know? There's an area there that we would not know whether it's government care or not.

I guess, you know, we can go through the whole bill amendment by amendment, but I'm really, Mr. Speaker, at a loss to know why we need this legislation when I believe that we should always err on the side of openness, always err on the side of the right of the public to know, always err on the side of a free press. As I say, we already, I believe, have the protection. If a judge believes there's something that should not be public, should be behind closed doors, they already have that right.

I guess my question is – and I'd hope the minister would answer it. Efficiency is not a good reason here when we're dealing with the public's right to know. I mean, Mussolini made the trains run on time, but that didn't make him right, Mr. Speaker. He was very efficient. I think we have to be very, very careful if under the guise of efficiency we're taking away the right of the public to know.

Mr. Speaker, I guess, just in conclusion, I would hope that the minister would tell us in a little more forceful way than the bill why he thinks it is necessary to bring this in and to take away some of the rights that we expect. I think there has to be a better reason than at least I've been able to think of because we are, I think, going against democratic principles here to some degree. I honestly believe that there was protection before for the things that the minister was worried about without having this legislation. So I'd be interested if the minister somewhere along the way could at least give us some indication why he thinks this is so necessary, other than what we're dealing with in the bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member if he thinks it would be prudent to have such time-honoured media institutions like the National Enquirer or Jerry Springer attend and ask questions at fatality inquiries.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I haven't really seen a keen interest for them to come to Alberta to check on our fatality inquiries. The point that I've made is that already we have the authority. If the judge says that because of the circumstances, FOIP or whatever – he can ban any media, whether it's Jerry Springer. Jerry Springer is running for the Democrats. You don't need to worry about him. He's gone. And I haven't seen the National Enquirer really jumping up and down to get to public inquiries here. I think that's irrelevant.

What I'm saying is that judges already have the authority to close on sensitive things. We do not need legislation. As a Conservative I wouldn't have thought you'd want all this extra legislation if it's unnecessary.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, additional participants?
The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today in my participation in this debate I am going to take a slightly different approach to this bill. I think one of the main reasons why we would have and why we would need a fatality inquiry is to assure the public that the government and the authorities are doing all they can and all that's in their power to protect human life. I don't think we're really talking about fatality investigations in cases which are not suspicious or for deaths which appear natural. What we are really discussing here is when the circumstances surrounding the death of a person are unnatural or extraordinary.

The legislation we're discussing is trying to limit access to, supposedly, public hearings. So why are we doing this again? It really puzzles me. Why is the government concerned, or what information might it be uncomfortable with if revealed? I can probably understand that if it's a situation like that unfortunate young person who fell down the elevator shaft, then maybe an investigation would reveal information that might make the government uncomfortable because he was in their custody or care. But like the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity said, we have fatality inquiries on highways and roads. So, I mean, the situation is totally different there.

I view fatality inquiries as almost a learning tool. They're almost educational, in a way, because they offer information that might prevent similar occurrences from happening again. They might be useful in allowing us to study our protocols. It might actually allow us to modify some of our practices to prevent similar situations from happening.

I don't support this bill, Mr. Speaker, because it clearly interferes with the level of transparency and accountability that we as the Official Opposition are advocating and fighting for. I don't think the government is only proposing to exclude media and news outlets. I think it's just a step amongst many to hinder or to interrupt the dissemination of information. It's also allowing a single judge to have enormous powers, and I don't think that that's the direction we should be going in this day and age.

Again I emphasize that information that is obtained from fatality inquiries is useful and usually timely because we can actually use this to study and look at our own practices and protocols and modify them, with the utmost goal being to prevent such occurrences from happening again.

In closing, I think I share the sentiments that were voiced and expressed by my hon. colleague for Calgary-Varsity and similar ones which were previously expressed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, who is the Official Opposition Justice critic. I think that as it is currently worded, I cannot support this bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

Is there anybody else who wishes to participate in the debate?
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are three particular pieces within this legislation that I'm somewhat concerned with. Again, some of them have been mentioned by previous speakers.

Transparency. The bottom line with a public inquiry is to examine the circumstances around a fatality to increase the public awareness about the factors that put the public or those lives at risk. Our society places a high value on human life and death. The investigation with regard to the legislation does provide a mechanism whereby the categories or the deaths that appear to be unusual may be investigated as well as explained.

Currently, on page 10 of this bill it reads:

49(2) The following persons may appear at a public fatality inquiry either personally or through their legal counsel and may cross-examine witnesses and present arguments and submissions . . .

(d) any person who applies to the judge before or during the inquiry and is declared by the judge to be an interested person.

Right now, the proposed amendment to section 49 is designated to redefine the meaning of an interested party. Essentially, under the new amendment judges may grant interested person status only if those parties have a direct and substantial personal, legal, or business interest in the death or the investigation or the inquiry. The amendment will severely limit the participation of people or groups in a fatality inquiry unless they can show a direct relationship that the judge will accept in this particular case. That's concerning there.

Other references such as a jury have been struck by the amendment. There no longer are any provisions for a jury of six people to sit at a public inquiry that gives the recommendations to the minister. This provision is contrary to the principles of the fundamental justice of Canada. The provision of a jury has always been an integral part of the justice system. In this instance, a jury, the public, can listen to all the evidence presented and make recommendations as to what action could be taken in the future to prevent similar incidents. Why is this government not allowing the participation of a jury at public inquiries? That would be a first question. The second one would be: why does this government want to limit the participation of the public in a supposedly public inquiry?

If I move to page 7, the amendment in section 38 changes the powers of a single judge in a public fatality inquiry. Previously the judge had "all the powers of a commissioner appointed under the Public Inquiries Act." This has changed now in the amended section 38(1). A judge can only "engage the services of clerks, reporters and assistants to assist him or her in the inquiry." Previously under the Public Inquiries Act a judge could have had "[legal] counsel . . . experts, persons having special technical or other knowledge or any other qualified person to assist them in the inquiry." This change will severely impair the ability of a judge to obtain specific expertise to advise him or her. The new amendment will only allow for clerical support.

Another section also says that it's taking away the powers of a commissioner under the Public Inquiries Act, which changes the scope of the judge's power as well. Previously under the Public Inquiries Act in regard to evidence the commissioner could order the summoning of witnesses and documents that the commissioner considered "to be required for the full investigation of the matters into which the commissioner or commissioners are appointed to inquire." The new amendment changes the wording to "that the judge considers to be required for the purposes of the inquiry." It appears that this change in the wording from "full investigation" to "the purposes of the inquiry" limits the scope as to what can be investigated in the context of the inquiry. Again, there seems to be the necessary substantial and direct relationship to the inquiry that is driving the evidence that's being sought after.

The entire reason for the death investigations is to investigate and explain how deaths occurred if they're involving government or care incurred. How can it be prevented in the future? It is absolutely critical that the preservation of human life and a full understanding of how the death occurred is determined and what actions could be taken in the future to ensure that a similar incident does not occur. That was stated by the previous couple of members as well.

Additionally, there are elements of public accountability by the government that can be determined through a full, open, and transparent scrutiny of the operations of public institutions and agencies when a sudden or suspicious death occurs. We have already mentioned one with regard to where the young individual was in care awaiting trial and fell down the elevator shaft.

Bill 24 severely limits the scope of these investigations and is contrary to the principles of openness and accountability of the government. In the end, if the goal of the fatality inquiry is the prevention of future deaths, then why would there be any limits placed on the scrutiny of the events leading up to and including the death?

The goal, again, of the fatality inquiry should not be to achieve efficiency, as the Justice minister has stated, but rather should be a full public debate on the evidence with full participation not only from the media but nongovernmental agencies who may be able to contribute to the process. That, in fact, would save lives in the future.

The Justice minister also stated that one group intended to be affected generally by this proposal is the media, and there were expressions as to why or why not that should be allowed. The role of the media is to report news. In our society, under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms a fundamental freedom under section 2(b) includes "freedom of the press and other media of communication." The statement of the intent of the bill to exclude the media from participation in fatality inquiries appears to run contrary to the fundamental freedoms. Oftentimes it's complained that the media is the one that drives the story instead of merely reports it, but again I would revert back to my last statement there, that it's a transparency that we seek to be able to provide and contribute to the process that would save lives and prevent future catastrophes from happening.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), any questions or comments?

There being none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak on second reading of Bill 24, the Fatality Inquiries Amendment Act, 2005. A couple of points I'd like to raise – and perhaps I could ask the minister to respond in Committee of the Whole to the questions that I will raise – and some observations as well.

I think part of what's being discussed by the other speakers today is the fact that democracy is not efficient. It is a cumbersome, noisy, time-consuming, awkward process. Nonetheless, all of us in this Assembly profess to support it, uphold it, and try to perpetuate it. I think that a fatality inquiry is part of that process. So if I may, I believe that an attempt on behalf of the government to make a fatality inquiry efficient runs contrary to its position in our democracy. It is there to investigate the circumstances and to make recommendations, and part of that is to give it a public airing.

I'm reminded of the situation that is being raised repeatedly around police commissions and investigation of incidents involving police officers. What we're hearing increasingly from the public is that that needs to be a process where people outside of the affected police department are conducting the investigation, and there is some suggestion that, in fact, it be civilian oversight.

The reason for that, I think, is that when you get the final commentary on the investigation, what's needed is for everyone to feel that the questions were asked and answered and that whatever decision is reached, the individual is cleared or condemned, frankly. The situation we're experiencing with those investigations right now is that there's no satisfactory ending to it at all. Even if an officer's name is cleared, the public is tending not to believe that they're truly cleared, which is very unfair to the officer. Likewise, if they're not cleared, nobody quite knows what to do with that one either and wonders if it wasn't swept under the rug.

I think the same requirements of the public regarding those kinds of investigations and inquiries also need to be reflected here. I'm arguing that the government should not be attempting to make this more efficient. I think what's needed and the primary principle under government support for a fatality inquiry is that it is an opportunity to examine all of the facts of the case and to make recommendations so that that incident does not ever happen again.

One of the issues that is most concerning me is this phrase that I keep seeing, that participation is prohibited unless they can show a direct and substantial personal, legal, or business interest. My question to the minister is: where does the nonprofit advocacy sector fall in these categories? I will be very concerned if they are not allowed to participate in these inquiries, organizations like Elizabeth Fry or John Howard or Bosco Homes or any number of other agencies that work out in the community and are very aware of the circumstances and, in fact, can appear and shed light on what has happened or what's the norm or the standard or all kinds of other bits of information. I don't see them included in what is proposed here by the government.

If that is the case, then, Mr. Speaker, we have a situation where the business sector gets standing but the nonprofit sector does not. I would ask the government to defend that because I think it's flat-out wrong, and I think it would be very wrong to be cutting out the nonprofit advocacy sector, the social service sector. I mean, there are a number of ones that potentially can be involved in a fatality inquiry. I would be very concerned if I see the government elevating the business sector above that of the nonprofit sector in being able to influence or participate in these fatality inquiries. I don't see why the business sector would be entitled to paramouncy in being able to participate here, and I would like to hear a full reasoning from the minister if that is the case.

Frankly, I'd like to hear from the minister why the business sector is included at all. I don't understand why they're in there. If you're going to have the business sector in there, then why don't you have, you know, religious institutions or faith communities? It's very suspicious to me that we have personal, legal, or business interests, but nothing else. I'm deeply suspicious about what's going on here, and I'd like to hear from the minister during Committee of the Whole on that.

The other issue is that an inquiry would not automatically be called if someone dies in care that is not directly government care. Well, that's interesting, Mr. Speaker, because what we've seen in this province in the last dozen years is a devolution and designation. Probably 50 per cent of the government programs that used to be run directly by the government have now been designated or contracted out to a number of agencies, public and private sector, in the community. They're still offering what is government service.

Let's take foster care. Well, the government doesn't really run foster care directly anymore. It contracts out to a variety of other agencies, which then in turn provide the foster care. They are expected to meet certain criteria, in fact all of the criteria that the government meets and in some cases even more. But that foster care is being delivered because the government needs to be delivering foster care.

What I'm hearing is that the government is now going to go: well, if somebody died in care that was designated by us but not directly run by us, we're not going to have a fatality inquiry. I'm looking for clarification around that because it's not clear in the legislation if that's what's intended here. What about if someone dies on First Nations land or under care of a First Nations agency? Is that considered, you know, distant enough from the government that they would not require a fatality inquiry?

I'm questioning very much what the intention is behind that because I would argue that for the most part those services are essentially government services. The government has entered into an agreement that somebody outside of government will be contracted to provide the service. Nonetheless, it's still a service that the government is responsible for and is responsible to the people for. So on the one hand we see the government devolving itself out of the business of doing anything. They don't offer anything themselves anymore. It's all subcontracted out to the whole community. On the flip side, they're willing to pass legislation that is very restrictive of people's personal lives at the same time as the government is devolving itself out of provision of services. So I'm looking for clarification on that.

I'm aware that there has been some preparation running up to this bill. It did not pop out of the minister's head on a whim. There has been a project, and it looks like it began almost three years ago with a committee involving the Chief Medical Examiner, the MLA for Calgary-McCall, and members of Alberta Justice to review this. Was that report tabled in the Assembly? No, that report wasn't tabled in the Assembly. Well, that's interesting too, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask that the report be tabled in the Assembly if that's the rationale that's behind this proposed bill.

That's something that we see this government doing a lot. You know, there's money put into developing a committee, a review, a report. It's taxpayer dollars that support it, but the public never gets to see the report. It remains in the murk, in the shadow behind the scenes. I would argue that they paid for that report; they should see it. In fact, they should see it before they see legislation that is midwived by it, that springs forth from it. You know, I find that the public is much more interested if they get an opportunity to find out what's actually going on. I believe in the good, common sense of Albertans, and I think that we need to listen much more carefully to what they're telling us.

Again, I see a trend where we don't tell the public anything, and we don't show them the reports, and then we just whistle through the legislation as fast as possible. For the most part it's only the opposition members that speak to it – very few government members speak – and it just whistles through this Legislature sometimes in a week. The public never gets enough time to know that it's up and being debated, and if they wanted to give input to their MLA, they should get on the phone or on the e-mail or letter or drop by their office and give them some feedback on it. Often by the time that happens, the bill's done. It's passed third reading, and it may have had Royal Assent by then. I think that's problematic.

The other question that I had. There's nothing in the current act that required the release of the report from the inquiry, and I'm wondering if that has been addressed here.

Those are some of the issues that I am most troubled about with this proposed Bill 24, the Fatality Inquiries Amendment Act, 2005, and I'm very cautious about supporting it in principle at second reading. I would like to have the responses to my questions before I would be more supportive of the bill.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak in second reading, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

Does anybody else wish to participate in the debate?

The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to close debate.

Mr. Stevens: Question, please.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a second time]

Bill 36
Police Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate April 11: Ms Evans]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I want to make it extremely clear, when I talk about this Police Act, that I am in total support of the variety of police forces that operate throughout Alberta whether they be the RCMP, the various city police, the municipality volunteers. I do believe that on the whole policing in this province is wonderful, and I promise my support to the hon. minister that should he wish to increase the size of funding for any of the police forces throughout this province, I will be a champion of that consideration.

However, I do take exception to something the minister spoke of when we were last discussing this bill. The minister suggested that the public lacked the skills to carry out an investigation. I would suggest that while the police receive a great deal of training at various wonderful institutions such as Mount Royal College, that we hope to soon become Mount Royal university, there are a number of public individuals who have a whole variety of skills that would lead them to be qualified to understand and oversee police investigations.

We trust the public to become jurors, as was mentioned by a previous member. We select jury members who are capable and who aren't prejudiced and who we believe have the sufficient skills to rule on a variety of court cases. I think that we can find sufficiently intelligent and capable public-representing individuals to be on civilian oversight committees.

Also, like any other profession police can make mistakes. I don't want to dredge up a whole series of mistakes that have occurred, but we've had the Edmonton circumstance where it appeared that a variety of police officers were involved with a sting that was set up to potentially entrap a local politician and a local media member for whatever reason. In the process we've lost that particular police chief, and the investigation basically, I gather, is still ongoing and continues.

There are a number of situations of similar concern that have happened in Calgary. There is a whole series of incidents where mistaken identity or a mistaken address has taken place. I think it was two weeks ago that we had a mistaken identity circumstance where the individual was wrestled to the ground and handcuffed. A great amount of force was used, although this individual didn't offer any resistance, to secure the individual, and it turned out later on that it was the wrong individual. This is where civilian oversight committees I think come into play.

The whole idea of investigating oneself we have difficulties with. I mean, we had the example – and we've debated this, and we've brought it up as members of the opposition – about the Securities Commission basically investigating themselves. Likewise when the police investigate themselves. There is a lack of public participation. No one is above the law, including the police officers whose job it is to enforce that law.

A situation in Calgary. Another example of, basically, mistaken identity having to do with an individual of Spanish background who was mistakenly thought to have committed a crime. The photographs of that individual following his arrest – although I will admit that he did resist arrest, as I think I would rather be doing as well, this individual ended up being portrayed in the news, and the various bruising that had occurred on this individual were in my mind overdone. Yes, if the police suspect somebody, they have to secure that individual. They have to protect themselves in the securing of the individual, but shots to the head and so on are questionable.

There have been situations where the use of force, I believe, has been justified. There was an example in Calgary where an officer was stabbed and hadn't immediately realized the extent of the puncture wound. He was just coming back from the stabbing, and he was filling out the information. It turned out that he had approximately an eight-centimetre piercing in his chest. There wasn't use of a gun, and there wasn't use of a great deal of force. Potentially, in retrospect, he would have kept himself from injury had he used more force.

There have been other examples where people have been held. I think we had an example recently in Edmonton where a chap had stabbed his wife and stabbed his mother-in-law and was ordered by the police, justifiably, to put down his weapon. When he didn't do that, he was shot. He posed a definite threat.

Another example occurred in Calgary where an individual with an ethnic background, who had previously caused a great deal of difficulty in his community in the apartment that he was living, stabbed a police officer. The result of that stabbing was that he was shot, but not before he had created a life-threatening situation for the individual involved who was trying to make the arrest.

So we have situations where force has been justifiably used. We have other situations where police expecting that they were either going to grow up or to investigate a potential drug sale scared the heck out of families by busting through their front door and securing senior members of the family and so on. I truly believe that if you have a civilian oversight committee, you get rid of the perception of the potential of hiding information. We have examples from Saskatchewan where we had outside individuals doing the investigation where it occurred that people – again, in this case it was First Nations individuals who had had a history of alcoholism or other run-ins with the police – were basically driven out of town, in the one case the young man driven out in a T-shirt without shoes and basically left to die.

We must have independent organizations who are willing to oversee police matters, and police organizations and justice organizations should have the same type of faith in these external monitoring, oversight committees that the police organizations want the public to have in them. The idea of, basically, the fox, no matter how clever that fox is, guarding the chickens: we must think, under the best and the most quality hopes and wishes, that the person could succumb to a personal interest. Therefore, I believe that civilian oversight committees are necessary.

We want to increase the transparency, the same type of transparency that we talked about in terms of fatality inquiries. This needs to be there. Terms have been used in terms of dictatorships, have often been referred to in quotes as "police states." We don't want to take away the powers of the police force to carry out their duties, and that is not what I am suggesting, but in every single organization there has to be sort of an external conscience, a secondary review to ensure that procedures were followed and that the best interests of the public are being maintained.

For that reason, I cannot support Bill 36 at this time. Possibly when some of my concerns are brought out later in the Committee of the Whole, I'll be more understanding, but at this point I believe that civilians are capable of overseeing committees, and they would add a degree of transparency and legitimacy if they were allowed to do so.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments? The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must admit feeling rather uncomfortable during that last speech, and I would ask your advice with regard to Standing Order 23(g) on sub judice perhaps for that hon. member and for some of us old-timers who might not remember exactly what we can comment on in this Chamber with respect to matters that might be, could be without our knowledge before the courts. So what I would request is that perhaps the chair consider providing us all with advice on sub judice because I must admit I felt very uncomfortable. I know that the hon. member is new, and I wouldn't want to see him get trapped into that sub judice thing either.

Thank you for that.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, there's no point of order. He had a request that information be provided.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. But how do we discuss this act if everything is sub judice?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, under Beauchesne 508(3) "the convention applies to motions, references in debates, questions and supplementary questions, but does not apply to bills." So that's a clarification. However, if the hon. member wishes to have more discussion on this matter, the chair would be more than happy to arrange for one of the table officers to sit down and explain exactly what constitutes sub judice.

Mr. Herard: Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else wish to participate in the questions or comments?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just as I didn't see the need for the last bill that we debated, I think there was great anticipation for this particular bill to be brought forward. It's been talked about for a long time. I think it goes without saying that there has been some disappointment expressed by most people about the bill. I think the terms I've heard are window dressing or not dealing with the problem.

It's a difficult issue, Mr. Speaker. Whether it be the RCMP or city police or police in smaller towns in Alberta, we know and especially were reminded very dramatically in Mayerthorpe what a difficult job they have. But I would say that this whole concept of the police investigating themselves does not do a service to the rank and file policeman because there is a perception and there is the idea that with the police investigating themselves – whether this is true or not, and probably in most cases it isn't true, but that perception is there – they're not going to get a fair hearing.

So Bill 36 has done, I think, what I'd call some minor tinkering, but we really haven't dealt with the crux of the matter, and that is: on certain investigations should it be done by the police or not? Now, I think Bill 36 opens the door slightly – and the minister, if it's not the case, will I'm sure let us know – to independent investigation of serious police wrongdoing. But – and this is a big but – it would be entirely at the discretion of the Solicitor General. Now, I know he's wise and all-knowing, Mr. Speaker, but it seems to me that that's too much power in the hands of the Solicitor General. Given that there's no agency being established to conduct such investigations, it seems like the status quo of the police investigating the police will continue.

Now, I know the minister says – there's probably some truth to this, and I'm not quoting him directly – that the rationale is that some things are so complicated that have to do with police matters that civilians could not begin to do a lot of the investigations that they need to do. Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister sort of defeats that logic though. If the minister says that that's the case, that we need to have police investigating police because of the complications and they need the knowledge of what was going on, why then would we open the door to independent investigations of serious police misconduct in instances involving civilian death or injury? The Solicitor General still has authority. He's given himself authority to do that.

Well, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that if it's too complicated to do routine matters, on the one hand, but the public can do it when called upon by the minister, there seems to be a leap of logic there. It seems to me that if we wanted to ensure independent inquiries in the serious cases that he's talking about, he should make them mandatory, not just an option for the minister, who from time to time may be facing his own political pressures.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we don't always have to reinvent the wheel. I know that in Alberta we think that everything here is done the best and that we can never learn from anybody else, but there are cases, and I would like to refer the minister – and I'm sure he's aware, but just for the Assembly – to an example we have, especially in Ontario, where they do have the commission, the Ontario Civilian Commission on Police Services. That is not the police; it's civilians that do this.

What is the role of that commission? Well, they say, Mr. Speaker, that it's an "independent quasi-judicial agency," and it carries out a number of duties which are primarily . . . decision-making in nature.

These are things they do, Mr. Speaker, and this is civilians.

These include . . . appeals of police disciplinary penalties; adjudicating disputes between municipal councils and police service boards involving budget matters; conducting hearings into requests for the reduction, abolition, creation or amalgamation of police services; conducting investigations and inquiries into the conduct of chiefs of police, police officers and members of police services boards; determining the status of police service members; conducting reviews of local decisions relating to public complaints at the request of complainants; and, general enforcement relating to the adequacy and effectiveness of policing services.

In Ontario, police services and police services boards are ultimately accountable to the public through the Commission. The mandate and duties of the Ontario Civilian Commission on Police Services are set out in the Police Services Act. The Commission reports to the Solicitor General.

Now, I'd say, Mr. Speaker: there it is. It seems to work well in Ontario. There's not a perception that the police are investigating the police. The police live under it. Things go along. They still have the ultimate authority. They report to the Solicitor General.

What can they investigate?

The SIU is a civilian law enforcement agency with a consequence-based jurisdiction to conduct criminal investigations. The SIU investigates incidents involving the police and civilians that have resulted in a serious injury or death.

Complaints involving the conduct of police that do not involve a serious injury or death must be referred to the appropriate police services and other agencies.

So they've got a combination of ways to come at it. They still have control. The Solicitor General still has control. They also have a director and 40 civilian investigators, nonpolice officers.

The point I'd make is that there may be a time when both groups, the police investigating the police and this group of civilians investigating – probably 9 times out of 10 they might come to the same conclusions. But to the public – and this is an important point,

Mr. Speaker – if it's not the police investigating the police but an independent board, are you going to accept the results of that investigation more than you would if it's the police investigating the police?

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I don't think we're doing our police officers a favour by putting them in this position, where they're always being second-guessed when they're investigating themselves. I've never seen a case where people necessarily believed them. But if it's an independent board, like in Ontario, then it is seen to be independent. For the life of me I can't see why we didn't go in that direction. I thought for sure that discussions and this whole Overtime bar situation in Edmonton – and I know the minister had some quotes at the time about it. That would have been handled by this group. [interjections] Sure it would have. They have the broad powers to do that. It says that right in here. I'll show them across the way.

The point is: this is still going on. We don't know what happened there, and again with the police investigating the police, it's going to be suspect. I think the minister would agree that no matter what comes out of this, it's probably going to be suspect when that comes down anyhow.

The only reason, I understand, that the minister – and correct me; I'm sure he will in closing debate or in Committee of the Whole. Why are we afraid to go that extra route? The minister has allowed the option that he can appoint a civilian board if necessary on a serious matter. Why don't we just do it? Why don't we just do it, Mr. Speaker? We could get some civilians, and the police can be in an advisory role to them if it's something that has to do with investigations or whatever. I honestly say to the minister that this would be better for the police. It would enhance their reputation for the vast, vast majority of police, that are honest, hard-working people under very difficult circumstances. We are not doing them a favour by having them investigate themselves.

There's only one other point, Mr. Speaker, in the bill where we have some concerns, and that has to do with the constitutionality of the one-year proposal. I don't know. I don't pretend to be an expert in this whole area, but I'm sure the minister has had some advice. There have been some thoughts that the proposed amendments to the province's Police Act that put a one-year time limit on filing complaints against police, including possible indictable offences, violate the Constitution.

Now, this has come from, as I'm sure the minister is aware, a U of A law professor. That's a major concern. He makes the point that if there were some rogue police, if I can use that term, they could very easily intimidate somebody so that they wouldn't come forward in that year. I don't know how often that would happen. But the more important point – and I'm sure the minister would want this to be bulletproof constitutionally. Mr. Stribopoulos – I think that's the way it's said – has indicated that he believes that this probably violates the Constitution. I would like the minister to indicate if he has some concerns about that. If it is, then we don't want to bring in a bill that would cost us extra money going into a constitutional challenge.

Mr. Speaker, let me just conclude by saying that I just don't understand the reluctance. The minister has allowed himself the ability to appoint independent civilians to do this. Why don't we just do it and get it out of the way, like other provinces are doing, so that the police are not investigating the police?

Again, I stress that it is not good for the rank and file police when people do not believe that they're being treated fairly, and I think you'd be doing a favour by taking this and going the way the public wants and almost everybody demands in saying that this should not be the case, that we should have civilian oversight.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

There being none, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The purpose of Bill 36 is to bring in greater public accountability and civilian oversight of investigations into complaints against police officers in serious incidents involving police. In October 2000 the Minister of Justice and Attorney General appointed an MLA committee to conduct a public review of policing in Alberta. I am impressed with the process established by this committee in an effort to meet its purpose. The committee chose a three-pronged approach to the review: to solicit public and stakeholder submissions in response to a discussion paper, to review the findings of the police strategic vision project, and to consult with experts on issues arising from these submissions.

The police strategic vision project organized a police strategic vision project that brought a wide variety of stakeholders together to develop a long-range and strategic vision of policing. The findings of this project have proven a valuable resource to the review committee, and in fact its main themes form the structure of this report. The vision project identified three themes for the future of policing in Alberta: equitable policing, provincial leadership, and public oversight of policing.

The concern about oversight of policing, including responsiveness to provincial and local priorities as well as the investigation of complaints against the police, is also my concern. Public oversight is a huge thing. The major principles of public oversight can be summarized by the following. Police must be governed by transparent, objective public oversight free of undue political influence. This means they must have well-defined roles and responsibilities undertaken by informed citizens. That is essential for effective public oversight. Local police oversight must be by locally appointed and suitably trained citizenry. Credible internal investigations by police are a prerequisite to public trust and confidence.

In looking at local public oversight, three issues arise in relation to providing effective local oversight: the structure of local police commissions and the relationship to the municipal council, the provision of local public oversight in communities contracting for police service, and the provision of local citizen involvement in areas that do not provide their own policing.

The government policing plan and response to the MLA policing committee board was released March 26, 2004. One of the core themes of this report was the need for public oversight. Police must be governed by transparent, objective police oversight free of undue political influences.

I realize that civilian oversight already exists through various mechanisms, but the problem is that they are rather loose; specifically, commission selection, political interference at the municipal level, and so on. We need a visible component that would ensure public scrutiny. The idea of having a police committee everywhere there is an RCMP detachment is great, but I wonder about the cost and who would pay.

The new amendment fails to give teeth to civilian agencies in complaints against the police. It fails to provide the level of public oversight that has been called for in the wake of several incidents involving serious police misconduct and the messages that they got in all of the process that they have undertaken to determine what is needed.

Incidents such as these serious police misconduct allegations have seriously eroded the public's confidence in the Edmonton Police Service as well as police services across Alberta. In the wake of these high-profile incidents, there have been serious concerns about the effectiveness of the police conducting investigations into the misconduct of their members. These investigations are conducted without any public oversight and without any disclosure of all relevant information. Essentially, we are supposed to trust that the police are conducting themselves professionally and without bias, and I do believe that that is probably the case most of the time.

However, in order to restore the public's faith and confidence in the police, investigations and prosecutions of allegations of police wrongdoing should be conducted by a body with no connections to either the individual officer or officers who are at the heart of the complaint or to the police service of which those individuals are members. This is the only way to restore public confidence.

It is entirely appropriate that some aspects of police disciplinary action can be handled internally. The concern that I have is the investigation and handling of allegations of more serious forms of police misconduct which by their nature directly engage or have clear implications of a broader public interest. This will involve complaints and allegations which suggest criminal behaviour and those which, while not criminal in nature, nonetheless are more serious than the purely internal. These middle-ground concerns, falling between criminal and internal on a spectrum of seriousness, will most often involve public interest and concerns about police misconduct.

The investigation of complaints requires two crucial elements to be addressed. The first is the need for an actual independence and impartiality in order to ensure that the matter is being dealt with in accordance with established procedures and values. The second is the need to preserve the appearance of impartiality and objectivity so that the members of the public maintain confidence in the system and will not be left with the impression that bias, favouritism, or prejudice had an influence in the outcome.

Mr. Speaker, it is essential that more serious allegations of police misconduct ought not to be left to the police themselves but conducted by a separate public body not connected to or part of the service being scrutinized. This is crucial to ensuring that there is neither actual nor the appearance of bias in reaching the appropriate concerns.

Mr. Speaker, I am reminded of a line in a book on ethics by Joseph Fletcher, that sometimes you have to go against your principles to do the right thing. I believe that this is one of those times. I and my colleagues do support greater police accountability and civilian oversight of complaints involving the police. We support them so much that we are opposing this amendment, which provides neither.

Our vote against this bill is a voice that can be heard in three ways. To the government, we are not prepared to dignify window-dressing measures with the support of this side of the Assembly. We would like to see substantive oversight measures, and if they had been included in this bill, we would have supported them.

To those who have experienced incidents that call for greater supervision of police, I want it known that our opposition to this bill is not because we were opposed to the original principles behind it. In its present form it fails to meet up to those principles.

Thirdly, to the members of our law enforcement agencies, I want to assure you that our misgivings about this bill do not translate into general misgivings about our police forces. On the contrary, our belief that greater safeguards are needed grows out of a belief and conviction that our police forces can meet a standard set by raising the bar higher than this bill does. The police, too, need the level of protection that effective civilian oversight can provide.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to assure members of the policing community and of the public at large that I believe that it is possible to address the concerns of both without sacrificing the essential well-being of either. I and my colleagues are convinced that such substantial measures are possible. Until they are included, our support of token responses will be denied.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

Does anybody else wish to participate in the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a bit of history. Sir Robert Peel is the founder of modern policing. Sir Robert Peel served as the British Home Secretary during the 1820s. It was an act for improving police in a nearby metropolis that passed through the British Parliament that resulted in the creation of the first law enforcement agency in modern history. The beliefs and principles of Sir Robert Peel are just as relevant and viable today as when they were first authored. In particular, of the two principles applied today, the first bullet would be that "the ability of the police to perform their duties is dependent upon public approval of police actions." That certainly speaks today as it did in the 1820s.

The second one of the beliefs was that "police, at all times, should maintain a relationship with the public that gives reality to the historic tradition that the police are the public and the public are the police." In saying that, the police are "only members of the public who are paid to give full-time attention to duties which are incumbent on every citizen in the interests of community welfare and existence."

These two principles, which should be at all times guidelines to the police in the process, seem to be that the focus of the police services has shifted from the intentions as outlined in the founding principles to becoming adversarial with the public. The only way to restore the public's faith and confidence in the police is to realize that the best way to police the effectiveness of their job was to work with them and through the public and not perpetuate the perception that the police are a separate entity and do not have any scrutiny to investigate the procedures, which was stated in Peel's principles. The police are dependent upon a public approval of the Police Act to perform their duties, as I stated earlier.

These are just a couple of quick sections I would highlight there. I think it is, in fact, pertinent that one of the ways to restore public confidence is to have an independent public body. We had a couple of highlight incidents, where there would be the police chief's son involved or where a high-speed chase involved the death of a young individual due to the police car racing through the intersection without the use of emergency lights or sirens – and that was on Yellowhead Trail and 124th Street – and the incident where a young man armed with a knife was shot, and I think the member from Calgary mentioned that as well. I think it's of interest here that the same officer was involved in both these incidents yet is still on active duty, I believe.

Again, these are certain questions that are raised in the mind of the public. Just exactly how impartial are these investigators when, in fact, they are investigating their own? I myself, if I had to investigate the integrity of someone I worked with for 18 years, known him to be a fine, upstanding citizen above all, holding the law in the utmost degree – suddenly I'm asked to investigate their whole principles. I've worked alongside them 18 years. I certainly would have a hard time maybe being impartial.

Those are, again, some of the questions raised by the community. I think that just begs the reason even further as to why there need to be impartial, independent bodies to review and watch over on occasion the goings-on and the investigations into police matters.

Thank you for that, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

Mr. Bonko: I would move that we adjourn debate, then, too.

The Acting Speaker: I guess, hon. member, your time had run out, so somebody else may have to move that. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. At this point I would like to move that we adjourn debate on second reading of Bill 36, Police Amendment Act, 2005.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 34 Insurance Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate April 6: Dr. Miller]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Bill 34, Insurance Amendment Act, 2005, I haven't spoken on, and it does a number of different things. It allows public insurers from neighbouring provinces to enter Alberta's competitive market, so Crown insurance companies from across the prairies are able now to move into Alberta. It outlines that insurance companies and Albertans are not entitled to sue the government for costs incurred from the government's auto insurance reforms. It outlines a three-step consumer dispute mechanism.

So these matters – and there are others in the bill – my colleagues have addressed from their perspective of expertise. But from my perspective as an Albertan, listening to my constituents, regardless of what our opinion is on allowing Crown insurers into Alberta from other provinces, this added competition does not deal with the fundamental problem, which is that the insurance industry is making a huge windfall in profits at our expense. I believe in extravagant generosity, especially when it is directed towards the poor and the needy. Why we're being so generous and allowing private insurance companies to make so much money at Albertans' expense I have no idea.

Ms Blakeman: They think they're needy.

Dr. B. Miller: They think they're needy.

Well, this is a huge issue for all Albertans. I remind us that in other provinces this single issue has almost brought down other provincial governments, especially in New Brunswick. I think that it's an issue that needs far more attention as we move along. This bill, of course, is trying to repair aspects of the whole policy of the Conservative government, and it doesn't basically deal with the fundamental issues.

I think that in Alberta all of us are concerned about the situation of having to drive in this province. The expression "driving scared" comes to mind. We all take risks every day, but especially we take risks when we drive our cars. Automobile insurance is one part of a vast social security infrastructure that helps us to deal with the risks that we take, but more and more we're realizing how costly those risks are. I just refer to a definition which I came across by the Insurance Bureau of Canada in defining the risks that we face, that "insurance replaces uncertainty with a degree of certainty, providing financial peace of mind in a world filled with risk." But what consumers are beginning to realize more and more and beginning to wonder about is: how much security can we afford as our insurance rates keep going up and up?

Nothing in this bill addresses this fundamental issue of the high costs of insurance, not the allowing in of Crown insurers from other provinces, not the increasing of competition that will not address obscene profits that the insurance industry has developed and will not alleviate the anxieties of so many Albertans who are now driving scared.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would not support this. I hope that in the future we can move in a completely, totally different direction as our Alberta Liberal platform suggests, and that is to put into place public auto insurance, which provides the kind of stability, the kind of security that Albertans want.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

There being none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Interesting on Bill 34: instead of dealing with it, this is almost the triumph of ideology over common sense. We're trying to keep fixing little problems here because we refuse to take it seriously. This is an issue where people that drive need to have insurance. It's compulsory. So it's not sort of at the whims of the market. The reality is that that price can keep going up and up and up, and the working person driving the car is finding it harder and harder to be able to drive.

Mr. Speaker, I quote Larry Phillips from the Alberta Consumers' Association. He says that for some auto insurance is beyond reach. If the market cannot deliver a product that is needed, then there should be a public system. It's that simple. There should be a public system. The reality is that now we're trying to put all the leaks out. [interjection] If you want 29(2)(a), please get up; I'd love to have the debate with you after.

But the reality is simply this: now we're trying to fix all the problems. We froze it at the top levels, and now there are supposed to be rollbacks. I got a cheque for a dollar for my insurance. That makes no sense at all. This particular bill might create more problems because now we have Kingsway insurance, that's going to sue the government – we don't know where that's going to go – because of the freezes and the rollbacks and all the rest of it.

So it's just a terrible mess that has been created, Mr. Speaker. We can argue about the public insurance, and I'm glad that the Alberta Liberals have now adopted NDP policy positions because it's been brought in by NDP governments in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, British Columbia. In almost all those cases the Liberals fought against it. That's a reality of what happened, and now here in Alberta they've decided that it's worth doing. But if you check the records, Liberal governments have fought against it. In fact, Dave Barrett, who brought it in, said that they brought it in and the Liberals there were deathly against it, and that's been true in every case.

But the reality is that it makes sense, Mr. Speaker. It makes sense, and what makes sense should occur, but unfortunately with this government we get into this particular thing where: public has got to be bad; private is good. It's just that sort of simple-minded ideology that leads us to these particular problems. Having worked in it probably longer than some people here did, the private sector works well in the economic area where there's legitimate competition. It doesn't work well when we're dealing with human needs and when it's in a monopoly situation. That's why the public systems in the other three provinces are able to be significantly lower in most cases, and that's a reality. The government can't turn off their ideological blinders and get there, Mr. Speaker, and that's a reality.

All this is basically a smokescreen. How many public insurers operating in a different system care about coming into Alberta to sell insurance? Somehow that's going to create competition? They're not going to bother, Mr. Speaker. They have better things to do. This is just for the government to pretend – just to pretend – that there's competition. That's a reality. Then because of this bill, I worry about – and I don't know; I'm not a lawyer; the hon. Minister of Justice is and the House leader is – how serious the challenge by Kingsway insurance is. Is that going to cost us an arm and a leg of taxpayers' money defending that? I mean, this whole insurance thing by the government has been sort of a calamity of errors, Keystone Kops. We keep doing it back and back and back and keep getting in deeper and deeper and deeper.

The public knows. In going door to door, the people were angry about the insurance. They still are, and this doesn't solve anything at all. It's just, as I say, a smokescreen to pretend that there's some competition.

I want to stress, Mr. Speaker, that the more dangerous part of this is that the insurance was frozen at the top levels, and the rollbacks are a joke, frankly. There are many people that are working people that have been finding it very difficult to go to work with insurance rates the way they are, and when that becomes a serious problem to people, it's time this government should do something about it. At the very minimum, the insurance profits, I believe, are up 12 and a half per cent. Even if they don't want to go to public insurance, they could have mandatorily rolled it back to that level. But then, of course, you get caught into rollbacks and insurance companies and Kingsway insurance and the rest of it.

There'll be a day, even in Alberta, when there will be public insurance because it is common sense, Mr. Speaker. It works well in three other provinces, and it would work well here. But we'll continue to try to throw the finger into the dyke and change it. We'll have another bill, I'm sure, next year to try to do something else with the insurance. So we'll wait and see what happens.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

There being none, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to rise and speak in second reading to Bill 34, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2005. I was quickly trying to review what my colleagues had said on the record so as not to repeat what they'd said. Obviously, there are some key themes that are coming forward that everybody shares a concern in.

One that I'm seeing coming forward around this bill is the rather unprecedented step, I think, that the government has taken to prohibit a particular company, obviously, from taking any kind of legal action against the government. I'm really interested that the government would actually write that into legislation and is making such an effort and has really made this quite a big deal, put it on the marquee, so to speak. So they must be pretty worried about this case if they're now trying to make it impossible for this particular company to proceed.

I do join with others that have expressed concerns that this bill is not doing anything to address what the public have asked us to address around problems in the automobile insurance area. People, certainly during the election, made it very clear that they felt that the government had not acted as a good steward and in their best interests around provision of automobile insurance given that we have the government insisting and through laws saying that you must have certain kinds of automobile insurance. Well, if that's a law and everybody must have insurance, then it's also incumbent upon the government to make sure that that is accessible insurance and that it's reasonable and that the benefits that flow from it are reasonable. What people are feeling is that it's not accessible anymore and that the government through its insurance board, the one that reviewed all the applications and allowed increase after increase after increase after increase – I think there was an astonishing number, 34 of them or something, in a fairly restricted period of time that just made the automobile insurance rate go up and up and up and up.

Finally, people started to revolt, and the government had to do something. People argue that they didn't really do anything. The rates have not gone down. I mean, basically they froze the rates at the highest possible point. Now we have some sort of tinkering that's being done to flesh out and firm up that original Insurance Act, that came out in the fall of 2003.

They didn't address the major concerns that the public have with insurance in Alberta and are not looking at incorporating best practices from other places, so the very worst of all possible worlds in that they are allowing Crown insurers and other insurers into the province but not using any of the best practices that flow from that public insurance. A number of people have alluded to that. I mean, the whole point and why those are viewed as better systems than what we have is that, you know, it is stable, it is a lower price, and any savings that are realized are reinvested because it's a public system, publicly administered, and the public benefits from it. So we have the government inviting public insurers in to compete in a free market without using any of the best practices that are in fact embodied by the public insurers. I don't know what to call it. I'm reminded occasionally of – no, I'm not going there.

There are issues around the government removing accountability for its actions from these reforms. That in particular, I think, is addressing the issues around not allowing anyone to sue them over this, removing the ability to sue the government. That's very problematic.

I'm also noticing in here that once again we are devolving a serious chunk of the bill to decision-making through regulations or by the minister through an order in council. I always object to that because it makes it very difficult for the public or the business sector or the NGO sector or the media to follow what is happening. It also takes away the ability of constituents to get involved in the discussion. They come to their MLAs, they want their MLAs to bring their voice into this Assembly and make sure that their voices are heard here, and then they can read and see what their MLA said.

The process that the government favours is one of operating behind closed doors. We have government members saying: well, you know, I spoke to this. Really? Where's the Hansard? Where are the minutes? Your constituents can't tell. You may well have spoken to it behind closed doors, but there's no way to tell that, and there's no way for constituents to find what their MLA said and hold them to account or hold them on their record. So whenever something is moved out of legislation or a choice made not to put it in legislation but to put it in regulations or designate the decision-making power to the minister, I have real problems.

Mr. Speaker, let me be clear. I'm not talking about micromanaging these things. That's not what I'm talking about. But I am talking about transparency and accountability in this overall decision-making. You know, I have no interest in having it in legislation as to whether it's 50 cents or 55 cents. That's not what I'm talking about, and people should be careful not to try and misconstrue that. But where we have decisions of an import that they're going to affect people's lives in a significant way, that should come before this Assembly and be debated. We should all be held accountable by people watching us and being able to review what we're doing through Hansard or the online audio or the video streaming.

I did have one question. I did specifically read the mover's comments, and he did not touch upon this. I'm wondering what the purpose is to section 8, which is allowing the government to impose terms or conditions on licences at any time it considers appropriate? What is being envisioned here? What are the circumstances that the government anticipates needing this section for? If I could get a couple of examples, because it's just not clear to me why you need it. If it can be explained why you need it, I may well be fine with it, but I'd like to know what's being anticipated here. So I'll leave that for the mover of the bill to answer at some point, I guess in committee.

Now, the other thing I notice is that a different section is making it mandatory that all Alberta insurers, whether that's for home or auto, public liability for the public sector, whatever, must be members of the General Insurance OmbudService. This is supposed to be part of the government's process to make consumers more able to access a dispute resolution process. That's very interesting for me because I've been noticing something else happening here.

My ties are very close with the nonprofit sector, also sometimes called public administration, and increasingly the rates have gone up as much or more for those agencies with their required insurance or insurance that they really have to have to operate. I mean, often you can't get a grant unless you can prove that you have adequate insurance, and, you know, if you're running a children's service in any way, you've got to have a certain kind of liability insurance. Anybody pretty much has to have public liability: if somebody trips on your sidewalk, you know, that sort of thing.

But the rates there have been going up at an astonishing amount, and increasingly this is becoming a major factor in operating expenses for the charitable/volunteer/public sectors. I am really concerned about that.

Now, it's not regulated specifically by this government, and this is the first time I've ever seen direct reference to it. So in now requiring that it come under this, I'm wondering if there will be any further requirements around nonautomobile insurance. Ultimately, the public looks to the government for consumer protection. We can all think of disasters that have happened. You know, the person is interviewed on the street by the television crew, and the person goes: "Where was the government? Why didn't the government have a rule that would have saved us from this?" Ultimately, people go: "I can't make this happen. I can't protect myself from this. My boss can't, my company can't, and my family can't. We look to the government to have consumer protection laws in place."

My concern is that the government has done nothing to regulate the amounts that are being charged to that nonprofit sector for their liability insurance. Although they're not required by law to have it, they pretty much have to have it to operate. Let's not kid ourselves. In some cases the government itself is requiring that they have adequate insurance; to apply for grants, for example.

I'd like to see what the government is going to offer and what consumer protection is going to be negotiated or limits by the government around the insurance to the nonprofit sector. This is as simple as community leagues. I just saw an e-mail go by where somebody is going around and giving little talks to community leagues about, you know, how much insurance they've got to have. I remember that was a whole deal that happened last year, where the community leagues went to renew their insurance and they were all told: "Sorry. Your $800 policy is now five grand." That's an astonishing amount of money for a little community league, that has a budget of $3,000, to come up with. I mean, literally, their insurance premiums were larger than the money that they usually dealt with in an entire year. The $800 had seemed reasonable for a building that's used infrequently in many cases. In other cases it's used very frequently, and their insurance would have been higher. That is a huge issue for those community leagues.

I'm wondering where that whole scenario is going to shake out. Now that the government is insisting through this section 18 that all kinds of insurance be included, what's the next step? And will the government consider that?

Those are the issues that I wanted to raise during second reading. I don't know that there's anything really bad in this bill, Mr. Speaker, but there's nothing really good in this bill either. The thing that's really bad is the prohibition against the opportunity to use the courts against being able to sue the government.

I know that in many cases the government needs to be protected so that it can move on. You often see in legislation that the minister, as long as he's doing his or her job, is protected from being sued. But that's not what's happening here. This appears to be a deliberate attempt to stymie a legitimate court proceeding. And it's retroactive, which is even more chilling, in my opinion, and seems to be staking a claim to be farther reaching in that nobody would be allowed to sue the government under any circumstances. I'm thinking that there's an echo of this coming up in that WCB bill, Bill 15. So that's starting to look like a theme.

Thank you for allowing me to speak to Bill 34 in second reading. I look forward to some answers back from the sponsoring member, and I look forward to continued debate in Committee of the Whole. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

There being none, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A common element in this afternoon's bill discussions is self-regulation over public protection. Possibly a new insurance theme or an election slogan of the government members might be: trust us, you're in good hands within Alberta state. Unfortunately, that trust has to be earned, and just saying "trust us" isn't sufficient.

Basically, the insurance board was given a licence to print money by continuing to allow a whole series of insurance increases rolling one after the other. It's interesting that members of the insurance board, while there was no public representation on that insurance board – it was an in-house, self-regulated, we know best, and you can pay the highest kind of circumstance. Again, there was no internal watchdog. This government believes in the free-enterprise principle, and yet free enterprise is no longer free. It's becoming extremely costly for the average Albertan.

What we have in Alberta is a forced demand but a limited supply, and now the government is basically dictating or picking off which insurance companies they favour and threatening to remove the ability for others to sue the government over limiting their market share. So in one sense we've got free enterprise, and then we have slightly free enterprise.

Also, with this idea of increasing the number of potential insurance companies operating within the province and the suggestion of a limited degree of public insurance participation, this is an extremely false premise. Public insurance depends on a large market share in order to spread out the liability costs and the cost of the insurance to the user. It's interesting.

An hon. member next brought out the fact that in Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and B.C. the notion of public insurance was first brought out, and to his, I guess, principled party members who had that public insurance foresight, where it had been introduced in these provinces despite government changeovers, they kept the principle. So regardless of whether it was an NDP invention originally or not, it was well received. This was a good example of wisdom that I would invite into this province regardless of who had the creative idea to come up with an umbrella that protects people. I guess that's a different insurance logo, so I won't go in that direction.

In terms of questions that I would have for Committee of the Whole answers, I believe that in this morning's discussion it was suggested that chiropractors were not necessarily consulted on the soft-tissue injury situation. I'm just wondering, again, if physiotherapists were consulted. There is a dentist who shares my constituency office professional building in Calgary-Varsity, who basically has found that he has been driven out of business because it appears that when it comes to soft-tissue injuries, dental associations haven't been consulted either.

I personally believe that this soft-tissue, basically, trade-off, which, in order to try and meet the superior rates of public insurance companies, traded off a person's right for compensation and a court challenge – I don't believe this will stand up to a constitutional challenge. I don't think any government has the right to limit a person's ability to seek proper remuneration in the event of an injury suffered at a second party's causing.

It was interesting this past weekend, on the soft-tissue concerns, Licia Corbella, an editor with the Calgary Sun, talked about a situation whereby she was forced to be off two months from her position with the Sun based on what appeared at first sight to be a soft-tissue injury. Basically what happened was that she was pushed off the road and ended up hitting a large pole and suffered great damage. At first it wasn't physically apparent, I guess, in the same way that some AISH recipients don't physically appear to be having difficulties. With soft-tissue injuries at the beginning you see a bruising, but you don't necessarily see the structural damage below that bruising.

What Licia pointed out was that this whole idea of capping insurance at $4,000 doesn't begin to address the needs. Again, this is the government sort of interfering with the process, saying that we know best and that we'll determine what is an acceptable compensation. To the best of my knowledge, I don't believe that what constitutes a medical soft-tissue injury has even been determined by the college of physicians. They were involved in coming up with some kind of a definition; whereas, as I mentioned earlier, I don't believe chiropractors, physiotherapists, or dentists received the opportunity for input. Hopefully, the sponsor of this bill can tell me to what extent these other medical practitioners – their worth is recognized, but they don't appear to have had their advice sought.

If we're going to have a fair and just insurance system that Albertans can afford, then we have to either roll back the current exorbitant costs that were allowed to proceed without any supervision, or we have to truly have a public insurance system, not one that is, you know, sort of a contrivance, an appearance of extending competition but with the reality that public insurance is dependent on a large share of the market.

It wasn't just New Brunswick, where Bernard Lord had a great deal of difficulty. The same concern over public insurance affordability happened in Nova Scotia as well. It seems that the Maritimers realized that the public good was more important than any particular party's interpretation of what the public good was, and I'm hoping that within the next two years that same sort of realization will become more pervasive in this province.

With that, I thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

Does anybody else wish to participate in the debate?

The hon. Member for Peace River to close debate.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and provide concluding remarks on the motion for second reading. During the discussion we've heard some pretty interesting comments here, much ado, I suppose, about public insurance. I'd like to point out to hon. members of the opposition that, in fact, public insurers from other provinces are interested in participating in Alberta and have indicated that, certainly Saskatchewan has.

I don't object to the discussion, though, because it provides some fascinating and occasionally amusing insight. I've learned some new terms, like competitive monopolies, for example, Mr. Speaker, and I'm going to apologize right now to my economics professor because apparently I missed that day in university. We've also had an interesting discussion on just what is and what isn't Liberal Party policy, and perhaps we can get that clarified later on in the debate.

There were some serious questions that I would like to address. First of all, the all-comers rule not applying to commercial vehicles: that is true. The bill is designed so that the all-comers rule applies only to private passenger vehicles. The reason for that is: a commercial sector has access to the Facility Association, which is an insurer of last resort run by industry, and this allows insurance companies to specialize if they wish, increase their efficiencies.

With respect to section 8 – and I address specifically the question posed earlier by the Member for Edmonton-Centre – there was some confusion here on the opposition benches that the insurance contracts could be changed mid-term. That's not the case. The licence to operate could be changed mid-term. We do this with all sorts of companies, with pulp mills or any construction company, anybody that violates or demonstrates substandard performance with respect to regulations. Be they safety, environmental, reforestation, the government reserves the right to put restrictive terms upon their operating licences.

With respect to the insurance company, again, anybody that didn't meet the regulations, failing to have an amount of capital on hand or a failure to meet reporting requirements for example, could allow the government to put restrictive terms on their ability to operate mid-term. Previous to this act they were only allowed to do that upon renewal of the licence. So an insurance company that was demonstrating substandard performance, we couldn't modify their licence, so that was the intent of that clause.

There's a section in here that I'm fascinated that we got some negative comments from the opposition on, and that has to do with the unilateral right of the government to force rollbacks. First of all,

I don't think this government needs to take any lessons from the opposition on creating a business climate in this province. I think we've done a pretty good job on that. This is a consumer protection mechanism. It would come into effect when, in fact, there are excessive industry profits, and I don't know why the opposition would object to it.

I had a question at the back from the Member for Calgary-Varsity on who was consulted on the soft-tissue injury cap. I can't speak to that, Mr. Speaker, because that's not a part of this bill. It was dealt with in the last session of the Legislature.

Lastly, the questions with respect to clause 5. It was clearly the government's intention that any impacts of the insurance reform in the bill last session were tempered by decreased liability and injury caps, for example. The government's wisdom in this regard is borne out by the insurance industry profits and the further rollbacks that we're seeing now and will continue to see. Again, this was a consumer protection mechanism and, overall, has had the effect of lowering insurance rates, and we'll see rather more dramatic rates in the very near future. I would like to point out that this restriction proposed by clause 5 is not unprecedented and is not a violation of the rule of law.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude my comments, and I call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 34 read a second time]

5:00 Bill 38
Pharmacy and Drug Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate April 7: Ms Evans]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased as the Official Opposition critic on Health and Wellness to rise and respond to the minister's comments in second reading of Bill 38, the Pharmacy and Drug Amendment Act, 2005. Overall I'm supportive of this bill, in large part because it was arrived at as a negotiation, an open and respectful negotiation between the parties involved, specifically the Pharmacists Association, the College of Pharmacists, and the Department of Health and Wellness.

As the minister did point out, in fact, this is one of those things that this government gets into occasionally, where they pass an act, but then it doesn't get proclaimed, but then it gets rolled inside of the next one that comes along. In fact, the first version of this was in 1999, the Pharmacy and Drug Act, and it was not proclaimed because it needed to be reviewed. I'm not sure why that wasn't done before the bill came through the Assembly.

I've gone back and checked and, in fact, the Liberal caucus supported the original bill in 1999. We did raise a couple of issues. It was around the minister of health making regulations. Again, that making of regulations out of sight of public scrutiny always raises a problem with us. But this was specific to making regulations regarding designation of drugs not covered under the federal statutes in the various schedules. If I'm remembering correctly, that has to do with the government's delisting and the concerns around the government's increased delisting of drugs that would be covered under health care for Albertans.

We noted that it did not contemplate alternative medical practices at all. We noted that a number of the definitions were not in the bill. They were left to be defined by regulation. Again, concerns were raised there because that becomes a sort of movable target in how things progress. You know, if you can define it as a duck today but a bird tomorrow, that affects a fair amount, and that kind of significant change should come back to the Assembly and be debated. That was what was in the '99 version, and we raised that concern at the time. I think a large concern for us was that the Alberta Pharmaceutical Association, as it was called then, was not completely satisfied with the bill.

So we move forward into 2005. We have jointly drafted amendments that are proposed in Bill 38 – happy, happy, joy, joy – and now we have a number of things that are involved in the 2005 version of the bill, which has got the '99 version rolled inside of it, specifically a broadening of the licence categories to include the facilities such as compounding and repackaging centres, mostly because although those existed in '99, not to the level that they do now. They're increasingly becoming a factor in distribution of pharmaceuticals, and there's a need to bring them in a little closer under the scrutiny and licensing requirements.

Creating an avenue of appeal and review if for some reason the registrar will not issue a licence to a pharmacy. Registering the drug wholesalers: very important. And a number of other clarifications and minor revisions that have arisen over the seven years, I guess, or six years.

Essentially, we're looking at Bill 38 aligning the Pharmacy and Drug Act with the Health Professions Act, and this whole thing, in my understanding, is a bit of a hand-in-hand endeavour. We've got the Pharmacy Act now, and the Health Professions Act will be coming along shortly, and then both will be proclaimed in the spring of 2006. That is my understanding from the minister.

My main reasons for supporting this are because it has the full support and knowledge and participation of the major stakeholders. Nothing is a significant shift away from what I would expect to see. It is giving pharmacists more ability to work with patients to modify drug therapy to meet the needs of the patients. This doesn't mean, you know, changing the prescription in major ways, from giving you an antidepressant to giving you a muscle relaxant, but indeed being able to work with the dosages.

I think many of us have experienced that, where we are given a drug, and it works, but it's more than we need or not enough, we think. It's all working fine, it's not enough to go back to the doctor about, but it just needs a minor adjustment. Before, what you'd have to do is go back to see the doctor and spend that time and, of course, another billing through, which is a cost to the health care system as a whole. So to be able to work with the pharmacist one on one is a good idea.

It leads into something that the Alberta Liberals have been promoting for some time and, in fact, is a major part of our health policy as developed by the previous critic for Health and Wellness, who's now the Leader of the Official Opposition. For those of you following along in Hansard or at home on live audio, this would be policy position 10, which is recommending that we "reshape the way we manage our health care workforce. This includes reducing doctors' roles as gatekeepers to the system, evaluating alternative systems of payment, and gathering better data to plan for future needs."

The way I've been putting that to explain it – and part of that is facilitated in this bill, Mr. Speaker – is that we need to move to the point where doctors are doing what only doctors can do. Right now we have doctors doing a number of other things that, in fact, other health professionals could be doing for them. The relationship between the pharmacist and the doctors is one where we require the doctor to do administrative paperwork kind of stuff. Someone else could be doing that. We spend all of this time and effort in years and years of training for these doctors so that they can deal with these life-and-death situations and long-range health care and all of that, and then we have them involved in minutia, micromanagement that is not a good use of their time.

Since we've all just come out of an election, the obvious comparison is the candidate during an election. There are certain things that only the candidate can do, and everything else in the campaign is handled as much as possible by anyone else that can do the job, to save the candidate for what only they can do, which is those personal appearances and participation in forums and that kind of thing. That same principle needs to be applied to what we're doing with our health care professionals.

If one of our major problems is that we don't have enough doctors in the system to be able to deal with everybody, let's look carefully at what our doctors, in fact, are doing. If we've got them doing a whole bunch of other tasks that, in fact, could or should or already are being done by other health professionals, then let's take that off the doctors' plates so that they're freed up to do what only they can do.

I see here a facilitation in this bill of that concept, and I'm obviously approving and supportive of it, seeing as it's part of the Liberal opposition policy on health care overall. Specifically, how that's happening in this bill is that a prescription is being redefined to give those pharmacists the ability to work with the patients and modify the treatment.

What I'm interested in hearing from the mover of the bill or from the health minister is whether it is contemplated in this legislation or in legislation to come that there are more roles that the pharmacists could take on from doctors in order to free up the doctors' time and, therefore, improve patient access to doctors. In other words, is there more that could be done to empower or delegate to the pharmacists, who are also trained health professionals, and free up the doctors to do what only doctors can do? So I'm very supportive of what's happening there, and I think that's the direction that we need to be moving in as much as possible.

A couple of other things that have arisen as I looked quickly at this bill are around the institutional pharmacies. Now, that's basically the pharmacies that are in the hospitals and nursing homes. Some of them, not many though. They're in an institution already. This act is clarifying that for the purposes of administering or prescribing the drugs to people that live in institutions, they're not required to be licensed. They're outside the purview of the College of Pharmacists. But if they are going to dispense pharmaceuticals in the way that we think of a pharmacist – they're selling them, or it's going to people outside of living in the institution – then they must be licensed and fall under all of the requirements of that.

I am interested – and I will put these questions on the record. Why are the institutional pharmacies not required to be licensed even though they're dealing with those patients in the institutions? What's wrong with having those pharmacists covered under the requirements of the college? We say that it's important enough for all those other pharmacists to have to be covered under this and to fall under those rules and regulations, and they must do it. They must adhere to it. Why are you not making all pharmacists do that? That's my query on that one.

I guess that by comparison I could say: well, are there any other self-regulated professions in Alberta that have some members exempted from the regulations of their college or their regulation-making association? I'm not aware of that, and if this is the only exception, then I'm really interested in why it's the exception. Is the government aware of any other provinces or any other jurisdictions where, in fact, they're allowing some members of the pharmacy profession to not be subject to regulations?

Just in closing, Mr. Speaker, the final thing that I'm not happy about is that the institutional pharmacies are not required to be a licensed pharmacy. Sorry; that's in section 5, which I've already put on the record at some length.

I am really interested when I see the government start to align with the health care policy that's already been outlined by the Alberta Liberals; as I say, our policy position 10, which is talking about managing the health care workforce. And there are a couple of others that apply specifically. Policy 22 is that we would have a more extensive public pharmacare program. This is not talking about enlarging pharmacare, but it's coming close. I would invite anyone to check that out on our website, liberalopposition.com, to see what we're advising the government to do.

So, overall, I'm expecting that this bill will have a fairly swift passage through the Assembly. I am overall supportive of it. A couple of questions I wanted to put on the record. I am very lucky, Mr. Speaker, to be in a caucus where there are a number of people with a great deal of background in health care both from the nonprofit advocacy sector but also a professional pharmacist. I am going to recognize that they probably have more direct experience in some cases and also opinions that they would like to get on the record in this second reading debate, and I am going to cede the floor to my colleagues.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, support the intention of this bill based on the consultation that preceded the writing up of the bill. I also very much appreciate incorporating best practice and all-party input. I think that if we're all on the same side, then obviously this is going to be a successful bill.

I have a concern that was brought up by the Edmonton-Centre MLA in terms of the licensing for institutional pharmacists. It brings up a situation that, unfortunately, occurred at the Foothills hospital where off-site drug preparation and the accompanying mix-up resulted in two tragic deaths. I'm hoping that potentially through this bill before that medication makes it onto the tray and then is served to the patient, all the safety checks have taken place, the patient's history has been clearly read, and they will be receiving the appropriate medication.

I have an appeal to the creator of this bill, and that has to do with the affordability of drugs. We're, again, fortunate in this province to have such oil and gas and natural resources, and I would like to see the government providing a larger drug coverage for individuals.

I want to very briefly talk about an individual who is a diabetic whose business is found in my constituency. Basically, he was attempting to self-medicate in the sense that he was trying to reduce the amount of insulin he required because it was of a special type and it was extremely expensive. In order not to suffer financial hardship for his family, he was putting himself at risk. I would like to think that within this province we could potentially help or subsidize the cost of specific medications, especially those of almost an exotic nature, but ones that have been approved in Canada for use.

Another situation that I'd briefly like to discuss is a constituency association meeting that took place in Calgary-Buffalo. At that particular meeting a former health minister was present, and he talked about a situation that I would like to take almost out of his hands. He felt that he was put into the position of approving costly drug treatments and having to almost put on a balance the value of a single life and the cost that it would be to maintain that particular single life versus the good of the whole. The notion of having to balance human life and those kind of values – I don't think we should be putting ministers in that position of having to play almost a godlike role, and that's why I would like to see the government support and underwrite the cost of expensive but required drugs.

The last situation that I'd like to briefly mention is that if it appears that one other level of government is failing, then I'm hoping that the province will come in and help out in the case of an Alberta resident. Very recently we heard the case of the young First Nations individual who required a rather expensive medication, and it wasn't sure, even though First Nations provisions come under the federal government's responsibility, whether that individual was going to have his needs met. I would just like to suggest that I'm hoping that within this bill or amendments to it at some point the needs of Albertans, whether they be exotic special medication needs or needs that other governments are not covering, that we'll rise to look after their well-being, to meet their needs.

So I support this bill in principle. I just encourage the government to provide the kind of coverage, the generosity of treatment that individuals find themselves in, where the cost of drugs is prohibitive and the quality of their life is diminished because of these costs.

Thank you very much.

5:20

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Then I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, as far as the bill goes, we will support it. I think there has been a discussion, and we recognize, as I'm sure the minister does, that this drug distribution process is extremely complex and includes far more than just pharmacies, and of course the wholesaling of drugs is a federal jurisdiction, and it's very difficult. In saying that, the bill goes in the right direction.

There are a couple of things from the bill that I'd like to say to the minister that perhaps could be looked at and may have to be worked out with the federal government. There are some things, provincially, that we can do. One bill coming up – I believe it's Bill 204 – is about controlling crystal meth, and of course the Member for Red Deer-North has talked about the other end of it, the treatment.

An interesting idea, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps the minister could comment on it, that the Canadian Council of Grocery Distributors has recommended a way to deal with this, and they say that striking at the source – that is, by regulating bulk shippers of crystal meth inputs – is an effective way of combatting the crystal meth epidemic. Now, it may be that that's an easier way to come at it with the same intent as I think it was the Member for West Yellowhead in his private member's bill, to try to deal with this at that level. That might be a much more effective way to get at it. At least that's the suggestion they're making, and I think it's one that, perhaps, might be worth looking at. It probably needs some co-operation, I don't know, with the federal government or not, but if we could do that, I think that might have a bigger impact. So I'd leave that with the minister.

The other suggestion I might make – and of course it's been alluded to – is that the cost of drugs is one of the biggest driving forces of the higher costs for health care. I think it behooves all of us to take a look at what we can do. I think we can look at other jurisdictions, and perhaps this is something that the minister might take a look at in another bill very soon. I'm talking about setting up a couple of things: bulk purchasing of prescription medication sold at pharmacies and used by health authorities. There's some evidence that that can lower prices by 6 to 10 per cent in the first couple of years. That's a significant saving.

Along with that, as has been done in other places, is a reference-based pricing strategy so that we can use the lower-cost options with equal health care options. We don't often do this. Sometimes drug manufacturers are presenting the most expensive ones to pharmacies. It seems to me that there are some ideas that this has worked relatively well. B.C. introduced a version of reference-based pricing in 1995. They believe they saved $200 million in the program in the first five years, and they save $44 million a year. New Zealand has achieved big savings since creating the Pharmaceutical Management Agency. They believe that their pharmaceutical expenditures have I think gone up by 3 per cent as compared to the OECD average of 14 per cent. So I think that there are things that we can look at in dealing with the drugs.

The other area – and I don't know if the minister has had time or is aware of it – is the whole idea of education on how prescriptions are being used. There was, I think, last week a two-part series on CBC especially about seniors and being overdrugged – this was across Canada, but I expect it would be in Alberta – to the point where they've got one set of prescriptions fighting against the other one. Some doctors actually said that it was probably creating unnecessary deaths. So I don't know how we deal with this. It's not an easy matter. It seems to me that we have to start to focus on education, this whole idea of education, and what we do especially with seniors. If that's the case, one prescription fighting against itself, this is a serious problem. It's costly, lives are being put at risk, and all the rest of it.

So I think that beyond this bill, which we will support, I would really like the minister to take a look at some of these suggestions that are coming with crystal meth and ways that we can do bulk buying, reference basing, and how we begin to deal especially with seniors. It's not just the seniors at nursing homes and that. This was talking about right across the board that this was happening. So I think that we need to take a serious look at this issue.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung. Hon. member, there's no conflict of interest with respect to this bill?

Mr. Elsalhy: No, I don't suppose there is, and I actually cleared it with the Ethics Commissioner, Mr. Speaker. We're not talking money. He clearly indicated that if it is a money bill, then I cannot contribute.

Mr. Speaker, I just need guidance. I want more than three minutes to talk about this, so can I move adjournment on the bill so it comes back later?

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess that given, then, that we have two minutes left, I would move that we adjourn until 8 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:27 p.m.]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 25

Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2005

[Debate adjourned March 21: Mr. Stevens]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in response to the mover of Bill 25, Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2005. This bill proposes to amend the Provincial Court Act to add the provision that provincial court judges can retire and sit on a part-time basis. This amendment is the result of the 2000 Judicial Compensation Commission, which recommended that there be adequate compensation for retired judges, enabling them to continue working as part-time judges. This amendment allows a judge who has reached 60 with at least 10 years of experience to exercise the option of retiring and continuing on on a part-time basis. Also, a judge who is approaching 70 can retire as a full-time judge and then ask to be appointed as a part-time judge, and he can continue part-time until 75. So this bill simply outlines the process for appointments and the terms of appointments and the rules for compensation.

For example, in terms of compensation it outlines that part-time judges can be paid an annual salary of up to 50 per cent of the annual salary of a full-time judge, but the total salary and benefits payable to a part-time judge cannot exceed the annual salary of a full-time judge. So this amendment to the Provincial Court Act obviously meets the need of providing our courts with more judges, especially given the fact that with so many impending retirements there will unquestionably be a shortage.

I have never been a fan of compulsory retirement, especially at 65, although I'm approaching that age. Thankfully, instead of facing compulsory retirement at 65, I was elected to the Legislature, so I have a new career.

An Hon. Member: But a short one.

Dr. B. Miller: No. It's going to be a long career, moving from one kind of ministry to another kind of ministry.

It seems to me that a society benefits from the wisdom of having professionals who have rich experience and can continue in their later years to apply that experience to the life of our province.

So this bill enables judges who wish to work only part-time to do so until the age of 75. Our courts and the public can only benefit from this step. All around the world, of course, retirement is being looked at more closely, and compulsory age levels are being removed as being something that's quite arbitrary and discriminatory, and we are increasingly unsatisfied with discriminating against people on the basis of age.

I think that the idea of compulsory retirement has always been based on the false stereotype that older people hold outmoded views and can't cope with change or acquire new skills, but they bring so much more to work: the experience of a lifetime. It has been said that ageism is the next and biggest battleground for equal employment rights because it affects us all. I remember that at the University of Alberta Olive Dickinson fought against having to retire at the age 65. She made a valiant attempt and didn't succeed, but I applauded her at that time in her effort.

I can only approve this bill making it possible for judges who have experience to continue on the bench and provide leadership in our province for years to come. So, Mr. Speaker, I recommend the approval of this Bill 25. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, before I recognize the next speaker, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

head:

Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Thomas Howe. Thomas works in the oil industry in northern Alberta and has come all the way from High Level to observe the Assembly's proceedings this evening. I notice that Thomas is already standing in the public gallery, so I would ask all hon. members to give Thomas a very warm welcome, especially if you come from a cold part of the province.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope that I'm allowed to ask this question. I was phoning a psychologist that helps me a lot . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, were you trying to rise on Standing Order 29(2)(a) to ask a question, or do you want to speak?

Mr. Flaherty: I was asking a question.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. What happens is the first two speakers don't have the rule apply to them. It's the third speaker onwards. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora happens to be the second speaker, but you may participate in the debate.

Any other speakers?

Are you ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister for Justice and Attorney General to close the debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a second time]

head:

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we will call the committee to order.

Bill 12Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: No, I don't have any amendments, and I don't want to repeat all the points that I made in second reading. It's not the way we would like it – that's what I said in second reading comment – but the elements are here. The principles of justice, I think, are outlined here, especially the new one, so it's better than it was before under section 2(1)(c) and (g), and (h) and (j) and (k) are new.

I'm not going to go through each one because that's kind of redundant. The only point that I really want to make and what I regret not finding here is more on restorative justice. Under (h) there is just the one phrase "requesting restitution" that refers to the whole area of restorative justice. I think that we're not going to make much headway in dealing with the plight of victims and what the victims really want unless we have more on restorative justice among the principles of justice.

I'm not going to repeat all of those points that I made. I think I'll take my seat.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Chairman, I'm also tempted to just say a few words. I spoke at some length to this bill in second reading, Bill 12, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2005. I spoke in support of the bill in general, its principles. The victims of crime need our support. They need their dignity restored. They need violation of their person to be taken into account and compensated for. In general, the bill certainly elaborates on the notion of compensation and the manner in which it should be done.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to observe that while we all seem to agree that in a democratic and highly educated society such as ours, we need to move away from retribution toward a restorative model of justice and compensation to victims of crime. Their protection and restoring their respect is certainly one of the key commitments that we need to make. But restorative justice as an idea, as an alternative model to retributive justice also looks at the perpetrator of a crime, a perpetrator, perhaps, of violence against other persons or property.

I just want to submit that restoration of the person who breaks the law, who perpetrates violence is also important because, after all, it's in our interest as a society that wants everyone to respect our laws and to promote lawful activities. People who make mistakes, people who commit crimes, people who engage in violence and violate others also need in an ultimate sense to have our compassion and care. They need to change themselves. In order for them to change themselves, to rehabilitate themselves, to become normal members of a society whose rules and laws they may have broken, and in some cases may have broken them violently, they should nevertheless be in a position to hope that one day they will return to a normal pattern of behaviour having paid what society considers their due punishment for the crime that they have committed, and they should expect to be treated as if they have now paid their debt and can feel that we extend them the same dignity that every human being in a civilized society expects to have.

So, then, while the primary commitment that they make by way of this bill is to address the concerns of the victims – their protection, their dignity, their ability to function again properly in society – and do what we can to secure those conditions for them, we should not ignore and speak perhaps on the record of the need for rehabilitation of those who commit those crimes. Ultimately, these are human beings, our fellow human beings, who have erred and have paid for their erring if they have been brought to justice. It's in our broad interest to make sure that they have the support that they need in order for them to be able to rehabilitate themselves, restore themselves to the position of normal citizens who enjoy our respect and have dignity.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[The clauses of Bill 12 agreed to]

Bill 23Administrative Procedures Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Now, the House will be happy to know that I don't have any amendments on this one either. This is a very difficult bill to understand, and I think my speech in second reading should suffice, although it disappoints me that so many of the questions that we raise about these particular bills don't receive any kind of response from the minister, and some of these issues could be serious. I mean, in this particular bill we're dealing with giving powers to boards and tribunals to deal with constitutional issues and, more importantly, depriving certain boards and tribunals of being able to deal with constitutional issues. It's that negative part that really concerns me because it may impede the process of justice and not make things faster.

I think the purpose of the bill is that if the boards and tribunals so named in section 16 of this bill can deal with constitutional issues, then that saves time because people will not have to appeal to the courts to deal with constitutional issues. But my view is the opposite, that it may actually impede justice because people who disagree with the decisions of boards and tribunals on constitutional issues will have to take quite a circuitous route to try to oppose the decisions. They'll have to take on the very empowering legislation that established these boards, and that might be an appeal through the court system all the way perhaps to the Supreme Court of Canada. So I am concerned about that.

This kind of bill comes out of the experience of the courts, and lots of thought has gone into it, although I'm not really sure whether it was absolutely necessary. If this is the only kind of bill we're going to get from the Justice department – it seems like we're only getting household kinds of bills, to make things more efficient and so on, nothing really earthshaking. I don't see any way in which bringing in an amendment would help because in most cases it wouldn't succeed.

I think I will take my seat, and I recommend that we just go ahead and accept this in Committee of the Whole.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is my first opportunity to speak to this bill, Bill 23, Administrative Procedures Amendment Act, 2005. The bill has been inspired by, if you wish, the decision of the Supreme Court some years ago. I believe that it might have happened in 2003 sometime.

There's been some debate among judicial circles and legal circles over the years with respect to whether or not the Charter of Rights issues can only be addressed by duly constituted judicial courts or whether we need to democratize, as it were, the chances for Canadian citizens and individuals living in Canada to seek action on Charter of Rights issues from quasi-judicial bodies such as boards in this province, of which there are dozens and dozens and dozens. Many of these have quasi-judicial powers, but the boards are so constituted that we know that they may not necessarily have in their membership the legal sophistication or expertise that we expect our judicial courts to have available to them.

The issue of interpreting whether or not there is a bona fide issue related to the Charter of Rights may at times be somewhat difficult for these boards to determine on their own, but the bill does have, I think, some provision in it which allows the Minister of Justice to decide if a tribunal is sophisticated enough to handle a case involving the Charter of Rights and that the board or tribunal cannot proceed with such a matter unless an individual who has gone before this tribunal or board so requests explicitly and does so in writing.

So there are some elements to the process through which a board can address an issue at a person's request related to the Charter of Rights. It is addressed, I guess, by way of certain procedures. At this stage, although somewhat uncomfortable about seeing boards and tribunals addressing those issues, I'm willing to take a chance and go along with the provisions of this bill in light of the decision that the Supreme Court made in which it said that Canadians can fight for their constitutional rights at administrative boards and tribunals, such as workers' compensation boards, instead of being forced to go to a court.

The unanimous ruling win for two injured workers from Nova Scotia clarifies a long-standing legal question over whether boards and tribunals should have the same power as judges to interpret the Charter of Rights. We know that perhaps hundreds of administrative bodies across Canada which settle disputes involving issues such as rent, job-related complaints, workers' compensation, immigration and refugee claims, et cetera, are often composed of nonlawyers. There may be some former lawmakers on them, but certainly lawyers are not always present on the membership of these tribunals. The court, however, did not give such tribunals and boards constitutional carte blanche but ruled that there should be a strong presumption in favour of allowing them to hear and settle Charter claims.

Justice Charles Gonthier said the following: "Canadians should be entitled to assert the rights and freedoms that the Constitution guarantees them in the most accessible forum available, without the need for parallel proceedings before the courts." Those are his words. This decision, then, that the Supreme Court brought down dealt with the Workers' Compensation Board of Nova Scotia, but Steve Barrett, a lawyer with the Canadian Labour Congress, predicted that it will have sweeping implications. We are seeing now those sweeping implications, I suppose, with reference to the provincial laws being amended to allow for such Charter of Rights issues to be heard by the boards and tribunals under certain defined conditions.

Mr. Barrett said that it will make a difference for Canadians who don't have the money to go to court. I quote Mr. Barrett here. He said, "It will have significant implications for individuals being able to raise constitutional claims in a way that is more expeditious and less expensive and more accessible to them."

For the last two decades the Charter of Rights has given judges the power to decide whether laws are in keeping with an established list of rights. These include freedom of religion, expression, and association; the legal right to life, liberty, and security of the person; the right against unreasonable search and seizure; and freedom from discrimination based on age, sex, race, or disability. Judge Gonthier said that it would not undermine courts to let tribunals in on Charter cases, particularly since judges would still be the final arbiters by deciding appeals. There is, then, some recourse to individuals if they find that the boards and tribunals for whatever reasons have made a decision that should be appealed, and that appeal will ultimately be heard by a judicial court in Canada.

I want to conclude quickly, Mr. Chairman, but I just want to draw the attention of the House to the fact that this Supreme Court decision in 2003 overruled its own judgment from 1996, when it said that human rights commissions did not have the authority to consider Charter claims. My hon. colleagues in the House will be interested to hear what Justice Beverley McLachlin, while she was still not the Chief Justice, had to say about it. In that ruling the then Justice Beverley McLachlin said that "the Charter is not some holy grail" that only courts can touch. She continues: "Many more citizens have their rights determined by these tribunals than by the courts. If the Charter is to be meaningful to ordinary people, then it must find its expression in the decisions of these tribunals." That's the end of the quote from her decision.

So I hope that the bill encapsulates in it the spirit of the observations made by Judge McLachlin when speaking to the issue of whether or not tribunals and boards should have the ability to hear Charter of Rights cases.

With that said, Mr. Chairman, I would like to conclude by saying that I am in support of the bill and hope that it does broaden access by Canadian citizens to Charter of Rights issues. Thank you.

Fatality Inquiries Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. There were some questions that were raised during debate in second that I would like to address at this time. I'd like to begin with the issue of transparency and access as it relates to the interested party status. I want to stress that fatality inquiries will continue to be fully public hearings aimed at learning and bringing out the recommendations that may prevent future deaths from occurring. The public and the media have a right to attend.

The purpose of the proposed amendment is to specify that an interested party to a fatality inquiry is a person who has a connection to the deceased or to the circumstances of the death, someone whose arguments and submissions will help the presiding judge reach conclusions regarding the circumstances of the death. The amendment ensures that the participants to an inquiry have a meaningful connection to that death. This may be by way of their relationship to the deceased or because they will be scrutinized during the inquiry.

I want to make certain that it is clear that this amendment does not prevent media from attending fatality inquiries. Fatality inquiries will continue to be open, particularly open to the media and to any other person who wishes to attend. Media reports are important to ensure that the circumstances of the death are known, and the amendments do not close the door on the fatality inquiry judge granting interested-party status to a media organization in proper circumstances.

It has never been automatic for media organizations to be granted interested-party status. They've always had to apply for it, as would any individual wishing to be an interested person. This amendment simply gives additional guidance to the judge in making that ruling.

To give some perspective, there are only a few instances in the past 20 years where the media was granted this status. If the media organization has sufficient ties to the deceased or to the circumstances of death and if the media organization should properly be given the opportunity to cross-examine witnesses and make submissions to the fatality inquiry judge, the judge may grant them status. I'd like to make that point again. This amendment is not intended to deny the media access.

There are other considerations that go along with being an interested party. Anyone with interested-party status has the authority to cross-examine witnesses and present evidence to the judge. None of the media outlets who have expressed their opposition to this amendment have championed their need to present evidence or cross-examine witnesses. I think the media themselves recognize that cross-examining and giving evidence without any relationship to the deceased or the ability to present unique testimony would not be advancing the purpose of a fatality inquiry in any meaningful way.

The hon. member spoke yesterday of restricting the media's participation at a fatality inquiry, and I want to make this clear: having the right or ability to attend an inquiry is very different from having the right to participate at an inquiry. This bill does not restrict the media's ability to report on the inquiry.

I believe that the media play a crucial role in attending and reporting on fatality inquiries. I find it more difficult to believe that there will be too many scenarios where the media testimony and cross-examination will be needed to help a judge make recommendations to prevent future deaths. The amendments do nothing to alter the existing provisions of the act that state that anything heard in camera, or in private, if you will, cannot be published. In camera hearings are very rare. They are done to protect sensitive personal information such as family health records or to protect the public interest. In some cases the judge may decide that it's in the public interest to not have certain evidence heard in open court. In these cases the evidence is held in camera.

Certain law enforcement agencies have begun to claim privilege over some of their internal documents for fear of their sensitive policies becoming widely known. This makes them unavailable to the inquiry and prevents the judge from having all the information when making recommendations to prevent future deaths. This amendment will provide more confidence that the internal safety procedures will remain confidential if, in fact, that is important.

Having interested-party status will allow the media to hear the evidence presented in camera but has never allowed it to be published. This is not new. Further, this amendment will not prevent people or organizations, including media organizations, from being called as witnesses to the inquiry if they have facts and information that could help expose the circumstances of death or other relevant information.

The hon. members expressed some concern with respect to section 38, the power of the judge, and that is a situation where we want the fatality inquiry process to be efficient. If they would prefer, I could use the terms "focused" and "effective" instead. The amendments are aimed at ensuring that fatality inquiries are not confused or delayed by the introduction of issues that do not help to achieve the goals of fatality inquiries.

A fatality inquiry is not intended to be an open forum to bring forward grievances or concerns about any subject at all. It is intended to be focused on the death in question, what caused the death, what changes can be made to ensure that such deaths do not happen again, what the public needs to know to ensure that unsafe practices are avoided. These are the things that we must learn and that the judge must comment on, which brings me to the question of restricting the scope of an inquiry.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora referred to giving unprecedented powers to a single judge, but Provincial Court judges have always had the authority to determine the scope of an inquiry. It is the judge's right and responsibility to determine the best avenues to explore and to ensure that the inquiry meets its goals of preventing similar deaths. The amendment aims to ensure that the scope is defined before the inquiry begins so that all parties are aware of what the issues will be and to afford them the opportunity to challenge the judge's decision before the inquiry begins if they disagree with it. In his comments yesterday the hon. member indicated that the fatality inquiry shouldn't focus on being efficient, but we do wish to be considerate to the affected parties as defining the scope prevents delays and adjournments later on in the process.

The hon. member also commented yesterday regarding the elimination of the jury provisions in the act; that is, the repeal of section 37. He pointed out that it is a fundamental principle of justice in Canada that a person has a right to have a hearing before a jury. The right he speaks of is the right of an accused to be judged by a jury of his peers, and that argument simply isn't applicable in the case of a fatality inquiry.

The amendments to section 38 let the judge engage services of clerks, reporters, and assistants. By removing the reference to counsel, the goal was to make it clear that counsel appointed by the minister is counsel to the inquiry. Counsel appointed by the minister does not represent the minister or the government but is there to act as counsel to the inquiry as a whole. Practically speaking, if the judge wants an expert report, inquiry counsel would give the expert report.

I would also like to discuss the amendment that relates to mandatory inquiries for people who die in the care, custody, or guardianship of the government. That is section 33(3)(a) and (b). For example, a person may die while a ward of the government or as a result of an interaction with a peace officer. Normally, in these circumstances the Fatality Review Board would be required to call a fatality inquiry in the interests of finding out how and why the death happened, how to prevent similar deaths from happening in the future, and to reassure the public that the government is doing its best to preserve and protect human life.

The amendment is aimed at a very narrow set of circumstances where holding an inquiry simply is not necessary. The example provided in second reading was of a 16 year old under government care driving a car and, unfortunately, dying in a motor vehicle accident. At present, because the 16 year old is under government care, there would be a mandatory fatality inquiry. The amendment would allow the board, after reviewing the circumstances of the death, to decide not to recommend an inquiry. Each case would have to be decided on its own facts.

If, for example, the driver were impaired or if the driver should not have been unaccompanied or if there were any other questions at all that are appropriate for further investigation, the board can still recommend that an inquiry be held. Further, even if the board thinks that a fatality inquiry is not necessary, the Minister of Justice can still call an inquiry. This new amendment will only be applicable in a narrow set of circumstances and is aimed at eliminating unnecessary proceedings in the clearest of cases.

One of the primary goals of a fatality inquiry is to inspire confidence that public authorities are taking appropriate measures to protect human life. If death occurs for reasons that are entirely unrelated to the issue of government care, the Fatality Review Board should not be required to recommend an inquiry. The board has been doing an admirable job working to protect Albertans for many years. There's no reason to believe that this would change as a result of these amendments.

I trust that these have gone some way to answering the questions of the members, and I thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, and thank you to the minister for being in attendance and making an attempt to answer the questions that have been raised. I was asking a specific question around participation of not-for-profit advocacy groups. I understand the distinction that is made in the legislation between being in the room and observing the proceedings and participating in the proceedings. My question was around participating in the proceedings, and the minister did not address that in his remarks. I'm asking if he could please address that now.

Thank you.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, the definition is there, and if a group can bring themselves within that definition, indicating that they have a direct interest in the matter, then the judge will be able to address whether or not they're an interested person. Once again, the circumstances of the case are going to determine that particular situation.

I can tell the hon. member that what we have done here is taken a look at the definition and have specifically addressed it principally to the question of whether or not the media should as a matter of right have a position before the fatality inquiry as an interested person. I'm not in a position to advise the hon. member one way or the other as to whether there are no circumstances which would be available for not-for-profit advocacy groups to be heard before a fatality inquiry.

Ms Blakeman: But the minister, then, is leaving it to the nonprofit to be able to fit itself into the definition of direct and substantial personal, legal, or business interest. So if I'm going on a known quantity, then, the fatality inquiry on the unfortunate senior who was scalded and died as a direct result of that, the Elder Advocates of Alberta, for example, and the FAIRE group were very involved with that. They were supporters of the family. They had additional information about what was happening that set a context for what was going on. My concern is that there would be an undue onus upon them to have to try and prove this linkage that might well be beyond their legal or financial ability to argue in front of the judge, and therefore we would lose a voice that should be able to participate in such an inquiry.

Would the minister consider an amendment that would clarify or reduce the burden on the organizations to have to argue before the judge that they were showing a direct and substantial personal, legal, or business interest, or is he confident that the scenario I've described would be adequately and rightly captured under the legislation as proposed?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, what I contemplate is that every party that comes before the judge in a fatality inquiry will be required notionally to bring itself within this particular definition. There are some parties that, clearly, are going to be able to do that. So, for example, the family of the deceased will not be an issue. In a case such as that, if, in fact, a party is so closely aligned with the family of the deceased, they can align themselves with the family of the deceased, from my perspective, and support the family of the deceased and thereby get their issues before the court.

But I'm not in a position to confirm that advocacy groups per se are going to be able to bring themselves within this particular definition. It's going to be dependent on the facts of the particular case, and it's going to be dependent upon how the judge who's hearing these applications for interested party status considers it. From my perspective it's appropriate to have what I would call a substantial connection to the particular case in order that people bring themselves within a fairly defined and proximate relationship with the issues before the court.

I don't know how you go about dealing with the matter that the hon. member has raised, which is that there are not-for-profit advocacy groups which have interest in matters, and they should as a matter of course be recognized. I think I have an issue with the concept that because I'm a not-for-profit advocacy group, I should be recognized.

I think that we have approached it on the basis of establishing a close connection with the matter, and then you can deal with it. In the case that was used by the hon. member of having a close relationship with one of the parties, the family of the deceased, in the example, I think it's fair to say that if, in fact, such a close relationship exists, counsel for the advocacy group may in fact be counsel for the family, or they can work together to ensure that the interests of the advocacy group are represented if, in fact, the advocacy group doesn't get its separate representation.

Ms Blakeman: All right. I hear what the minister is saying, and I understand it. I guess what I was seeking was a recognition of what, for Charter cases, for example, we would recognize as intervenor status, in which an organization has to meet the tests that are set out, that they have a substantial interest in the proceedings of what's going on and wish to be regarded as an intervenor so that they're involved in the proceedings and can speak. As you have pointed out, once you're in that arena, once you're granted that direct and substantial personal, legal, or business interest, you now qualify to cross-examine witnesses, et cetera, and you are a player in what's being contemplated here.

I was seeking a determination that if a group can meet the test, it could be granted similar to an intervenor status, and that's not set out in the legislation now. What I hear the minister saying is that the test they would have to meet is to somehow align themselves with showing a direct and substantial personal, legal, or business interest. Well, it's not going to be a legal interest, and it's not going to be a business interest, so they're going to have to somehow chum up to the family in order to be able to gain some status.

I would have preferred to have seen some ability to recognize intervenor status, but maybe I'll look at developing amendments for this, or the other possibility is to let it go and see how well this runs and come back to it at some point in the future to see if, in fact, we had well-meaning groups. I mean, as an example for the minister, I'm thinking of the contributions that LEAF has made to a great body of work that has come out of the Charter challenges. I would argue that they have contributed substantially to what has happened with those Charter challenges. They were recognized and should be recognized. I don't want to set something up in Alberta where we would not be allowed to have that kind of participation from those groups.

Thank you very much to the minister for that clarification. I will do my best to send the Hansard out to the groups that I think would be interested in that, and then we will watch what happens with this and look at it in a year or two.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have been listening to the debate carefully, and I want to thank the minister for the observations he made and the explanations that he offered for the changes that he's seeking to make in the Fatality Inquiries Amendment Act, 2005. I remain concerned about two of the proposed amendments, the minister's explanations notwithstanding. I don't by any means want to discount the seriousness with which the minister has taken the questions that were raised in the debate and tried to address them, but my concerns remain.

I have, Mr. Chairman, two separate amendments. I seek your advice now.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, are you indicating to me that you have two amendments?

Dr. Pannu: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: Did you want to deal with them together as one amendment or two separate amendments?

Dr. Pannu: That's what I was going to ask you. I think they could be dealt with, perhaps, as one amendment, although they are on two separate pieces of paper.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Well, pass them on to the pages. Let me have a look at it first, please. We'll just give the pages a few moments to distribute them.

Dr. Pannu: Yes, indeed.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, as indicated by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, he has distributed two amendments but chooses to deal with them as one amendment, so we will have one vote on both amendments that are before you. We shall refer to these amendments collectively as amendment A1.

Hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona, you may proceed.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I now speak, then, to amendment A1. Amendment A1 has two parts to it. The first part of amendment A1 deals with the concerns that I have with amendment 4(b). That's on page 2, I think, of the legislation. The amendment that I'm proposing in 4(b) to the proposed section 33(3) is as follows: strike out "or" at the end of clause (a), the second last paragraph on page 2, and strike out clause (b) on the bottom of page 2. It will have the effect of keeping the act as it presently is.

I think the addition of this part 33(3)(b) is to make the whole procedure much too restrictive, in my view. I like the provisions of the previous legislation as it stands, which are stated on the opposite side, page 2. I think that by striking (b) from 33(3), it will allow all parties and the board of fatality inquiries to continue to do the job they've been doing, by and large, to the satisfaction of Albertans in general.

The minister's concern was with the efficiency. I think in matters of justice, in matters where human life may have been lost and there may be questions about why it has happened, in order for us to learn from that, the goals of efficiency must take second place to concerns about human safety and well-being.

So that's the purpose of the first part of amendment A1; that is, to maintain the current status of law, which has served Albertans well when they have sought redress and answers to questions which were related to a family member losing life or dying on a hospital floor or in a seniors' home or somewhere where they were supposed to be receiving care from third parties with some sort of public status. So that's the first part of the amendment.

The second part of the amendment, Mr. Chairman, deals with amendment 17 in proposed section 49, and there the amendment that I'm proposing calls for striking out clause (b). Clause (b) in the draft legislation that we are debating repeals subsection 2(d) and substitutes it with "any person who the judge, on application, determines has a direct and substantial interest in the subject-matter of the inquiry."

Mr. Chairman, clearly, the media has expressed concern about how their status will be changed with this amendment that the minister has proposed. I take the role of the media in inquiries such as this quite seriously. I think Albertans like to be informed, and perhaps their best means of being informed is through the media when they can't be present there personally, and most of us can't be present in person at these places.

The change in the law as proposed by the minister would take the ability of the media to seek interested-person status away from them and leave that matter entirely to the discretion of the judge. I think this will be a step backwards. We need information to be made public. We need this information to be made public through the presence of media, and I don't think this will in any way interfere with the proceedings that are conducted by boards of fatality inquiries. I don't think it will in any way reduce the efficiency of it, but certainly it will help increase the confidence of the public in the process that fatality inquiries follow. So I think it will be both to enhance the respect for and credibility of the fatality inquiries process and to make sure that the media's role in informing the public remains fully protected.

The second part of amendment A1, then, simply proposes to strike out clause (b) from section 17 in the proposed section 49. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the noise level in the Assembly is starting to rise. It's becoming difficult for anyone to listen to what is being debated before us.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'll be brief in my comments. I will be urging the members not to support the amendments put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I have commented on both of these matters both in second reading and in my introduction here in committee.

Briefly, relative to the interested-party issue and the media I will acknowledge that there are circumstances where the media is an interested party. Where perhaps the deceased person is in fact employed by the media, for example, they will be able to be an interested party. The circumstances are that the media will have in any event an opportunity to attend and report upon the fatality inquiries and matters that are there to be seen and heard, that in the ordinary course of things the role of the media is to report the news, not make the news. There will be opportunity for them to participate if, in fact, they have a substantial connection to the event, and I think that the amendment that is put forward in the bill per se clearly puts the relationship of the media to fatality inquiries into proper perspective.

With respect to the other proposed amendment by the hon. member, once again this evening I talked about the example of a 16 year old under government care driving a car and, unfortunately, dying in a motor vehicle accident. Assume further that that is a situation where the 16 year old entered into the intersection and a third party failed to stop at a red light, blew into the intersection. It was clearly the third party's fault.

Under the current circumstances it would be necessary to have a fatality inquiry into that particular event simply because of the relationship of that child to the custodial party. We do not have fatality inquiries with respect to motor vehicle accidents where somebody goes through a red light or a stop sign and causes the death of another individual. That is not what typically occurs in fatality inquiries as a general proposition. If there's a police chase or something of that nature, yes, but in the ordinary course of things, no. So what we are saying here is simply that that is a situation where there is "no meaningful connection between the death and the nature or quality of care or supervision being provided."

Now, on the other hand, if that youth were impaired, different circumstances. But in the amendment that the hon. member is attempting to delete, the words are that there is "no meaningful connection between the death and the nature or quality of care or supervision." We think that it is important to allow for the review of this matter initially to take that into account.

So, once again, in the circumstances that I alluded to of the 16 year old driving a vehicle, being in an unfortunate intersection collision, the fault of the third party, where the 16 year old is under care, it would automatically give rise to a fatality inquiry today. There is no causal connection between the care and the circumstances of that particular death. There may be in other situations; for example, if the child is impaired. Sixteen year olds ought not to be impaired driving vehicles, and I can understand that somebody would want to inquire into that if the child was in care, but those circumstances can be taken into account in the amendments that we have proposed in this particular bill.

So once again I am asking the members not to support the amendments put forward by Edmonton-Strathcona. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I find it unfortunate that the choice of the third-party sponsoring members was to combine the two amendments into one because what's happened is that I would be very willing to support one of them; that is, the amendment of section 17, which, in fact, the minister and I had a number of exchanges on. I accept the minister's explanation of what is included in section 4, so I'm not in favour of amending section 4. So you have presented me with a dilemma, and I'm wondering if the member is willing to sever. Not likely, seeing as they just put them together, but I thought I'd ask. If they are not willing to have this voted separately, then I'm afraid I can't support it, but I sure wish I could.

Thank you.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Chairman, I am open to your guidance on this. Certainly, on the point that's been made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, I'm willing to go back and have the amendment severed in order to allow the Member for Edmonton-Centre to be able to vote, at least on one of them, with me. But the ball is in your court. It's your advice that I need.

Chair's Ruling Separating Amendments

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I think it's a little too late in the process to change that decision. However, remember that we are at committee stage, and there is nothing precluding the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre from bringing forward an amendment that would address the issues that she has indicated.

Hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, did you want to participate?

Ms Pastoor: I wanted to speak on the amendment that was stuck together, but if it's going to be severed, then I'll wait.

The Deputy Chair: At this stage we are proceeding with it as one amendment.

Debate Continued

Ms Pastoor: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to speak on the amendment. Actually, both of them I could support. I just really feel that this allows too much power to be given to one person's hands. Right at this moment in time it's probably okay. We all know the minister. We are all very comfortable with the process. But I sometimes look into the future, and a misguided minister could hide and bury many, many mistakes by having that power to not allow fatality hearings. I wonder if I might ask for a clarification from the minister as to who would actually own the file if this went beyond a fatality into a court.

The other comment I wanted to make is about the minister having the power to actually – no, I'm sorry; that's actually to the bill, not to the amendment.

Perhaps the minister would like to answer my question when he's digested it. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the chair is being approached by the Government House Leader with a suggestion that the committee be given consent to have two votes, separately, on these two amendments. Now, the chair had made a ruling. The chair is a servant of this Assembly, and if we have unanimous consent that we split these two amendments again, into A1 and A2, and have separate votes, the chair will follow the direction of the committee.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I'll ask you. Would you like this to revert to two separate amendments?

Dr. Pannu: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I would like to go back to the original intent that I had to have two separate amendments.

The Deputy Chair: Will the committee give unanimous consent that we proceed with this as two separate votes?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Does anybody oppose?

An Hon. Member: Opposed.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Hon. members, unfortunately, we were not able to get this unanimous consent, so we shall vote on them collectively as one amendment.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Chairman, I'm disappointed but, nevertheless, must proceed.

Amendment A1, the first part of it, proposes to change 33(3) by striking out “, or” at the end of clause (a) and striking out clause (b). I'm trying to explain why I think the amendment is necessary. The minister has given an interesting hypothetical scenario in which he thinks that the absence of a “meaningful connection between the death and the nature or quality of care or supervision being provided to the deceased person” is apparent. I think that in that hypothetical case that may be so.

I want to ask the minister if he would have any information on whether the existing legislation, which is under amendment now, has presented any problems where, in fact, fatality inquiries have had to deal with cases where they proceeded in spite of the fact that there was no meaningful connection between the death and the nature or quality of care provided. I haven't come across any such instance. It would seem to me that if there is no demonstrated need to change the act, then why do it? Doing this would seem to me to be restricting the scope of circumstances under which a fatality inquiry can be called. I think it's redundant, unnecessary unless a case can be made based on some past experience which has demonstrated that there's a need for this change in direction. I am not aware of that.

The whole idea of meaningful connection is itself something that's subject to debate. Parties often are in disagreement on whether or not there is a meaningful connection between the death and the nature or quality of care. That's precisely why fatality inquiries are often called for and needed. In the case that I referred to last night, in Calgary Foothills hospital in the emergency room, where a patient was flown in and then flown back without getting the appropriate attention and died on the way, whether or not there is a meaningful connection between the quality of care provided or the quality of care that the institution failed to provide is the issue, and there the fatality inquiry, in fact, was very helpful in sorting out the difficulties in the procedures which led to this particular fatality.

So I am kind of puzzled why the minister assumes that the meaningful connection is so obvious as not to be debatable, as not to be questioned, as not to be challenged by one party or the other. One of the reasons that we have fatality inquiries is to see whether or not we can establish a meaningful connection between the provision of care or failure to provide that care and the fatality. So that's the first part of the amendment. I would hope that members will reconsider and vote on it in light of what I've just said.

On the second part of the amendment, which deals with section 17, where I call for striking out clause (b), I think that's fairly obvious. I think the media as a present status is the one that needs to be maintained, and the intent of the amendment is to maintain that status.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Debate can continue on the bill. Does anybody else wish to participate on the bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I might perhaps reiterate a couple of my remarks to the minister. [interjection] Then I'll just ask the questions and have them recorded. I realize that you were very busy and perhaps didn't exactly hear what I had said. It's just a quick remark, and I wanted a couple of clarifications. One of the things that actually troubled me was the power that is being given to the minister – and perhaps I need a clarification on this – to actually appoint the judge. I thought that at very least the Law Society should select a judge that would be based on his or her experience in the area of question for that fatality.

Then a further question that I would have that came to mind sort of based on the amendment would be – we would be okay in the present, but the future might scare me in terms of perhaps a misguided minister that would have the power to hide and bury mistakes. Again, this would be, I think, probably a lawyer question, but the information that comes out of these fatalities that this minister would have the power to release or not release based on how he decided he would release it, would it be then allowed to be used in a court of law? It's an awful lot of power for one man.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. To the hon. member, the judge that would be assigned to a fatality inquiry is assigned by the chief of the provincial court, not by the Minister of Justice. So there was never any intention to make any appointment of the judge. There is an appointment of counsel to conduct the inquiry but, certainly, not of the judge. That is done by the Chief Judge of the provincial court.

The amendments that we have brought in here clearly provide that the Justice minister has an obligation to make public the report when it is made available to him. Now, that's different than the circumstances at present. The legislation currently is silent on that particular matter, so there will now be an affirmative duty on the Justice minister to make that report public. I don't know if that wholly answers the question that the hon. member had with respect to the report, but it's out there in the public. These reports do not have a finding of liability. The purpose of the report is to talk about the circumstances of the death and to make recommendations, if any, as to how to make whatever we're talking about better so as to avoid these kinds of losses in the future.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you very much for that. Further to that, when that report is made public, I understand that it just comes with recommendations in that particular case, but is that information available to be used in a court of law that would then decide perhaps responsibility?

Mr. Stevens: I don't believe, hon. member, that that report would be of any evidentiary value in a case dealing, say, with liability. If there was a liability issue or if there were disciplinary hearings, those would be tried separately with fresh evidence, unless the parties to the particular case agreed between themselves that aspects of the findings of the fatality inquiry judge would bind them, but that would only be as a matter of agreement. There would be no operation of law which would see the findings of a fatality inquiry be binding on parties to some collateral, parallel proceeding.

One of the things I pointed out in second reading that is advantageous about the process that will be available upon these amendments becoming law is that a fatality inquiry will be able to in appropriate circumstances take advantage of adversarial proceedings that give rise to certain findings of fact or give rise to certain evidence to streamline a fatality inquiry. So a fatality inquiry in appropriate circumstances may be able to take advantage of other adversarial proceedings that are related to but independent of and parallel to the fatality inquiry.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: I would just like to close debate on our side, and I would like to thank the hon. minister for answering all the questions we have raised in second reading and tonight. I found his remarks very, very helpful. I think my own tirade at times about the media being excluded from the proposed amendment fatality inquiry probably was more of a reaction to the hon. minister's explanation of the bill because he said that one of the groups affected by this bill would be the media, and I reacted to that.

If you just concentrate on the bill itself, then maybe it's not such a big issue except that, you know, it just makes it confusing when 49(2) says, "The following persons may appear at a public fatality inquiry . . . and may cross-examine witnesses." So I understand that the media wouldn't be in that kind of role, but if they cannot prove a direct and substantial interest, would they be excluded? I think your explanation indicates that they would in fact be able to be present to report on what is happening to the public, so it still is a public fatality inquiry. That was my main concern.

So as far as our support or nonsupport, I will take the whip off, and we'll see how we vote.

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 19 Securities Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think I indicated when I spoke to this Bill 19, the Securities Amendment Act, 2005, in second reading that in consultation with the stakeholders it does again appear to be primarily of a housekeeping nature. The efforts to move us towards a passport system as opposed to having one, single, overriding commission, although they may not be exactly what I would have liked to have seen in a perfect world, I recognize that it certainly does bring us in line with what other jurisdictions are doing and at the same time recognizes the autonomy that is requested by some of these junior companies in Alberta, so I can live with that.

I do however have a few questions that I'm hoping could be answered tonight. I alluded to them when I spoke to the bill in second reading. In particular they are: in part 6 in the bill section 13 is amended. It says:

- (c) may designate one of the members of the Commission as the lead independent member, with the powers, duties and functions prescribed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

My question, that I referred to in second reading, was just exactly what that range of powers might be, if the mover or the minister might be able to describe for us what they envision as the duties and functions that would be given to that lead independent member.

I would comment: in part 7 section 14 is amending the remuneration for the chair, vice-chair, and members of the commission. It currently reads that that remuneration shall be set by the commission, and the amendment in the bill says that that would be "subject to the approval of the Minister." I would like to suggest that that's a good thing. We've seen in the past a number of commissions that are entitled to set their own remuneration without any oversight by the minister. I'm particularly thinking of the WCB a few years ago, that was in the news a lot in that regard. So I think this is a good thing that the minister would have final say.

In part 8 it refers to adding a clause after section 14:

14.1(1) If a member of the Commission resigns or a member's appointment expires, the Chair may authorize that individual to continue to exercise powers as a member of the Commission in any proceeding over which that member had jurisdiction immediately before the end of that member's term.

(2) An authorization under subsection (1) continues until a final decision in that proceeding is made.

I referred, when I spoke to this in second reading, to a concern that I have given the situation that is currently in the news with the Alberta Securities Commission: if, in fact, this might allow the extension of an appointment by a new chairperson of an existing chairperson that may in fact leave his or her position under a cloud, as it were. There is no provision here for the minister to review that decision. I'm wondering if there might be some consideration to that, given the current situation, that we might wish to allow the minister to have some oversight in that regard.

Then finally, Mr. Chair, the same old, same old that I go through all the time is my concern about moving things from legislation into regulations. Perhaps there's good reason for this, but I'm certainly interested in hearing the explanation. In this particular bill there are exactly 11 pages – 11 pages – of legislation that are being removed entirely and put into regulation. I understand the argument for the expediency required at times to change rules and regulations in reaction to things that might be taking place out there in the real world, if I can call it that.

I think I had indicated in second reading that in Ontario the Ontario Securities Commission has decided to leave all of this in their legislation because they're comfortable that they can have the appropriate changes in legislation made if and when they need to. In fact, what they told us is that it's because the Ontario Legislature sits more often. Now, whether or not that's accurate, whether or not there's really an impediment in Alberta I'm probably not the person to say, but I did find it interesting that that was the comment we had from the people in Ontario.

But, again, I do have a concern any time we're moving 11 pages of legislation into regulation and then allowing those rules to be made by Executive Council without the benefit of public debate and public scrutiny. That causes me a great deal of concern.

So those would be the questions that I would hope I might be able to hear an answer for tonight, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I certainly want to thank the member opposite for his interest in the questions, and I hope that I'll be able to answer most of them satisfactorily.

Both members that commented in second reading, Mr. Chairman, asked why Alberta had decided not to pursue a single securities regulator to cover all of Canada. The reason for this is that the memorandum of understanding we signed with other provinces focuses on a passport system that's highly harmonized and streamlines security laws across the country. It increases the communications between the provinces and other jurisdictions and also increases co-operation on securities regulatory issues. They're all consistent with steps that would be needed and would be taken in any event in the future if it is determined that a single regulator should be pursued. However, the provinces and territories with the exception of Ontario at this point are not prepared to commit to a single regulator. The focus for us in the short and medium term will be to continue the implementation and the commitments that we made in the memorandum of understanding.

Mr. Chairman, with respect to the lead independent member that's proposed in the legislation, this position is similar to that of a lead independent director in a public company. Private-sector best governance practices provide for the appointment of a lead independent director where the role in a corporation of a CEO and a chairman of the board are combined in one individual as is the case with the Alberta Securities Commission. This amendment is intended to ensure that the commission is subject to and provides the same level of corporate governance and transparency and effectiveness expected of the reporting issuers that it regulates.

Also, the member has brought up the situation with respect to allowing members whose term has expired to continue to sit and participate in an enforcement hearing with an expired appointment. Enforcement hearings are often conducted over a very extended period of time, and the loss of a panel member when they resign or their term expires may result in the loss of a prescribed quorum of members. That would require the appointment of a new hearing panel and the commencement of a complete new hearing in the worst-case scenario, or it could deprive the panel of one of the persons who has heard evidence from providing input and expertise to the final decision.

This provision should permit the member to continue to participate as a member of the hearing panel until the hearing is concluded and a decision and the reasons for the decision are handed down. The provision is limited to enforcement hearings and would not permit the individual to carry out other prescribed duties as a member.

The matter of enforcement, Mr. Chairman, has been raised by all three members who spoke. Much was said about allegations surrounding the Alberta Securities Commission. This legislation is completely unrelated to the allegations. However, I'd like to point out that one of the goals of the bill is to increase the enforcement and compliance powers of the Alberta Securities Commission. The enhanced enforcement powers in Bill 19 will allow the ASC to address a greater range of inappropriate market activities as well as providing a greater range of tools at the disposal of ASC when they're fashioning an appropriate sanction. This will be accomplished through a variety of means in the bill.

Mr. Chairman, there will be a replacement of the existing prohibition against misrepresentation, expansion of the prohibition against fraud and market manipulation, addition of a new prohibition against front-running to protect investors, and assurance that registrants and their representatives who provide trading and advisory service to Albertans put the interests of their clients ahead of their own and ahead of the firm when trading.

There's a new obstruction of justice prohibition that captures activities intended to hinder or interfere with reviews, investigations, and hearings such as withholding, concealing, or destroying documents. It will expand the current insider trading prohibition to include prohibition against encouraging a person or a company to engage in illegal insider trading in addition to the existing prohibitions against trading, tipping, and procuring in the provision.

Mr. Chairman, there's a matter of remuneration that had been brought up. I think really what's intended here in the legislation is to allow for just another level of transparency with respect to the remuneration. It still would be set initially and discussed in the commission and would be then vetted with an OC at the ministerial level.*

The final issue that I think was a concern to the members was the idea of moving sections of the Securities Act into regulation, and there were concerns with respect to transparency in that case. But, Mr. Chairman, what I'd like to note here is that many jurisdictions are moving to platform-style legislation in which the fundamental requirements that rarely change are set out in the statute, and the more detailed requirements that continually evolve to meet the changing market conditions are set out in rules.

So what we're doing here, Mr. Chairman, is nothing that's really unusual in the area of securities commissions in other jurisdictions in the country. The MOU commits the provincial and territorial ministers to developing and implementing highly harmonized and simplified securities legislation. However, the advantage of moving some provisions into rules is that it enables timely response to issues in the marketplace and changing market conditions.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that those questions would have been mainly addressed by my comments, and I would look forward to further debate if required. Thank you.

[Two members rose]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: It's okay. You can be the honorary hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Chairman, I am rising just to speak on a number of specific issues in regard to Bill 19. While I think that it's an honourable pursuit to look to harmonize Alberta's security regulations with other Canadian jurisdictions and develop some sort of homogeneity through what amounts to a passport system, I guess my only question, but it's a large question, is if this government and the hon. minister specifically is looking to this as a platform or a step forward to creating a national regulatory system. Now, the reason that I ask that – and it is specific to provisions that are built into this stage along the way – is because, in fact, if this is a step down the path towards a national regulatory system, then certainly I think that we could consider supporting Bill 19. However, if it's not, then I think that there are some specific things that are flaws in Bill 19, and we would like to address them.

I think that, for example, quite a number of investor groups that we had spoken to had very strongly in no uncertain terms suggested that only a single security system could strengthen the public faith and the investor faith in the security systems here in Canada. The patchwork system that we have currently is inadequate, and really the most logical way to solve that is to have not a federal regulatory system by any means but a national one bringing together each of the provinces and territories to create a cohesive whole.

I think that with a passport system, you know, you can still find the weak links in the system in regard to individual security commissions. This is a moving target, Mr. Chairman, in the sense that the individual security commissions and their administration can be either weak or strong over time depending on what happens to be going on. Currently, other provinces and jurisdictions are looking at Alberta's current commission as being weak, so this encourages the potential for abuse of the system and discourages investment in each different area, in this case Alberta. So, as I said before, if we could sort of get an assurance or a sense that these provisions are in fact moving toward a national system, then I think that we would consider supporting this particular bill.

What a number of different groups are bringing forward – say, for example, the Canadian Council of Chief Executives, the CCCE. In a publication they had last fall, they were suggesting that the national system is exactly what they're looking for. A gentleman by the name of Gwyn Morgan, vice-chairman of the CCCE and president of the Alberta-based EnCana Corporation suggested that "it is critical for provincial governments to recognize this passport agreement as a beginning and not an end," towards a national system. Other individuals have echoed Mr. Morgan's statement.

Someone else that we have had contact with is Diane Urquhart from Ontario, and she is suggesting that, you know, some of the weaknesses in the ASC could be cleared up by not only moving towards a passport system but, in fact, pushing towards a system with national standards for the enforcement and the adjudication of securities offences. Again, I think that considering our present difficulty, our pickle, so to speak, with our Alberta Securities Commission, with a national set of standards it might be easier to fix that problem.

So these are the specific comments that our caucus has in regard to Bill 19, and I would welcome any comments and answer to really that one main question. Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The two questions, I think, that I got from the comments from the hon. member were, number one: is this a step down the path towards a national regulator? I have to answer that by saying: categorically, no. All I said and what remains to be the case is that in the event that in the future we did end up with a decision, with other provinces and territories involved, that a national regulator was in everybody's best interests, these changes and amendments in Bill 19 would be necessary at that point in any event. So what this does is move us ahead, whether we are involved in the passport system with other provinces and territories or move to a national regulator. With the exception of Ontario I would suggest that all the other provinces and territories are onside with the passport system, and I believe that we will all move in that direction.

The other – and I'm not sure if it was actually a question – that outside of Alberta and across the country and perhaps even wider than that, there's an indication of weakness with respect to the Alberta Securities Commission. Again, I just have to reiterate and enforce: the case with Bill 19 has nothing to do with current allegations with respect to a situation that may or may not exist in the Alberta Securities Commission.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that that has answered the member's questions. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes, Mr. Chairman, that does, in fact, make it clear, I suppose, in regard to the intentions of this bill.

I would like to just comment briefly, though, in regard to the ASC. I think that, you know, if we had a wider jurisdiction or if it was available through us to have a national adjudication of securities and, say, infractions in regard to securities, then it just makes it easier for us to move the problem and to dissipate it. You know, stock markets are volatile places, and there are many of them and lots of places to put your money. If there was a national system in place, this current thing that we have in front of us – it would be easier to, let's say, let the air out of the difficulty because a national body would have a national set of guidelines, and they could move in and clear the air, and people could have a restoration of some degree of confidence.

Thank you.

9:50

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the comments by the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky in terms of attempting to clarify the situation with the passport system as opposed to a national regulator, but I now find myself a little confused because the current chair of the commission is on record publicly as saying that a national overriding commission would be the best for investors in Alberta, but the political will just isn't there, he says. So my confusion, I guess, stems from – because you said emphatically no, that we have no intention of moving towards a national regulator, I'm wondering now: are you directly contradicting the current chair of the commission or simply confirming that this government doesn't have the political will to move towards a national regulator?

Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have some very brief comments to make. We've worked very hard with the Provincial Court to develop a made-in-Alberta solution that improves our judicial system by meeting the needs of Albertans and the judiciary. Judges who want to provide a guaranteed amount of judicial service after retirement will be attracted to this option. As a result, highly experienced and competent judges will continue serving Albertans on a part-time basis after retirement.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Yes, Mr. Chairman, in second reading, which we had already this evening, I presented my ode to retirement and part-time work, so I fully support this bill. We're not bringing any changes or amendments, and I commend the minister for making it possible to draw on the cumulative experience of our judges and enabling them to provide service in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Chairman, I'll be brief in speaking to Bill 25, Provincial Court Amendment Act. The bill provides for the appointment of retired judges as part-timers. If they're 60 years or older and want to work as part-time judges, the bill does provide that. It, of course, outlines the minimum requirements in terms of experience of 10 years, be 60 years old. On the other hand, they do retire at 70. So that's fine.

I think the fact is that justice delayed is justice denied, and the availability of judges is certainly a key factor in delivering justice on time. If this bill expedites the dispensation of justice, I think it's certainly worthy of support. I think it does, so we certainly would be happy to support the bill.

Of course, it will need more than just the provision to have part-time judges. We'll need more resources for the courts and for the judges, to pay their salaries and pay other staff that are needed around the courts. So I would urge the minister to work at the other end as well to provide the resources that will be required. If this commitment that's being made in this bill – that is, to expedite the judicial proceedings, make settlements available to people in a shorter time period, time cycle – is to happen, the government and the minister will need to certainly go through the budget so that resources are available for the court system to hire these part-time judges and have more court hours, through which, then, cases can be decided on and adjudicated in a shorter time cycle than presently is the case.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I simply say again that we support the bill and hope that matching resources are available to implement it as quickly as possible. Thank you.

Bill 1 Access to the Future Act

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we still have on the floor with us amendment A1, as moved by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. Are there any comments, questions, amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do want to rise and speak to the amendment very briefly. The amendment is with respect to section 4 of the bill and proposes to strike out section 4(5), which indicates that “the maximum amount that may be allocated under subsection (4) is $3,000,000,000.” Now, as I understand, some of the critique that's been provided both in the discussion of second reading and again when this amendment was moved was that the endowment fund should be allowed to grow to a number a lot larger than $3 billion. I agree.

The endowment fund should grow to a much, much larger number. In fact, members of the House in speaking have alluded to endowments for some of the private institutions in the States that have large endowment funds. They might have mentioned that those endowment funds have grown from contributions by alumni and in other manners over the course of in excess of a hundred years to get to that amount. Hopefully, we would aspire in Alberta to have an endowment fund of such significant proportions created by, perhaps, an opportunity for private contributions or other ways of doing it, but this is a way to get the process started.

I'm particularly proud of the fact that Bill 1 provides for $4.5 billion of endowment in the future, and if you add the $500 million which the Premier announced in January with respect to the Alberta heritage medical research fund, that's $5 billion of endowment in the future, and most of that, I would argue, is endowment in some way connected with the postsecondary system because the heritage medical research fund and the ingenuity fund, both research monies – most of those monies attract the best and the brightest to Alberta for research projects.

Then, of course, a billion dollars for the heritage scholarship fund and $3 billion to the access to the future fund. So while we ought to aspire for endowing the future to grow and for those endowment funds to grow, $3 billion is not a bad start.

Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the House that we leave section 4(5) in the bill, not because it ought to be a cap for all times, but it ought to hold our feet to the fire, to say that we've committed to put $3 billion into this fund, and we ought to be held accountable to put $3 billion into this fund. Quite frankly, I would hope that the opposition, rather than suggesting that that limit be taken out, point to that limit every day that we don't have $3 billion in the fund and ask why we haven't got $3 billion in the fund. Then when we get to the $3 billion, I will be with them to suggest that we should be amending that to raise the limit so that we can put more money into that fund.

I believe that endowing the future is the right way to go. I believe that Bill 1 really starts that process off with a good thrust, but it's the wrong way to go to take the $3 billion reference in the bill out. Rather, we should be aspiring to grow the fund, but let's have a target that we can be held, as a government, accountable to reaching as soon as we possibly can. For that reason, I would ask that the House not pass this amendment but instead celebrate the fact that we have a bill before the House which is calling for $4.5 billion to go into endowing the future.

If you add the $500 million that's been announced for the heritage medical research fund, that's $5 billion that this government is committing out of nonrenewable resource revenues, whether budgeted or unbudgeted, to be applied to the future of research and development, innovation, and leading and learning in this province, and I think that's a great place to start. It is a place to start. It's not the finish. It's not the end line. It's the beginning. But it's very important to have those targets in there so that the public can hold us accountable for that commitment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm very pleased to be able to rise and speak in Committee of the Whole to the amendment currently on the floor for Bill 1. I really appreciate the minister's enthusiasm, but, you know, only the government could have a limit as a target. Only this government could say that a cap is a goal. And you know what? They've got experience at it because it's happened before. This is why, although I appreciate the minister's enthusiasm, I think he's wrong.

We had the government bring forward a so-called cap on tuition fees for postsecondary education institutions. I think it was 20 per cent for universities and 30 per cent for colleges. At the time, you know, this was touted as being a cap, and no way would the government ever allow the universities to charge more than 30 per cent in the tuitions, and this was a wonderful thing, and it was going to benefit all students absolutely. Get out the parade; strike up the band; get out the bunting. This was the bee's knees. Mixing my metaphors there a bit, but you'll bear with me, Mr. Chairman.

What really happened from that is that the colleges and universities looked around and went: oh, you know, we're not at that amount, so that's not really a limit; it's a goal. And they started increasing tuition fees as fast as they possibly could to try and reach the cap because it had become a goal.

This is the kind of process that this government likes to put in place. Given the funding situation with postsecondary education institutions, I cannot fault the boards of governors and the leadership at our postsecondary education institutions for taking advantage and following the lead that the government dangled so enticingly in front of them. Of course they were going to follow that change. That's why the government put it in the legislation, I'm assuming. But the end result is we had ever-increasing tuition fees rapidly. You know, it really is a special talent, Mr. Chairman, to be able to say that your target is a set limit and that a cap is a goal.

So I'm speaking in favour of our amendment put forward by the Member for Calgary-Currie because I have to say: why would you be in this rush to stop yourself already? The Minister of Advanced Education says: well, it's not a limit; it's a goal because it's going to entice us and inspire us to reach that minimum maximum amount. I say: why? I mean, we haven't even started down this road, and you're already starting to put this limitation on yourself because, let's face it, it is a limitation. Just given the track record here, I cannot expect that the government will not find something else that it's going to want to start diverting the money to, and in fact this goal will become a limit very quickly.

The funds that we're talking about here are surplus funds, so why do we need to put any kind of a cap on it? You know, we don't know what the surplus is going to be, but we do expect that there will be a surplus, especially with the voodoo, black magic budgeting that this government likes to get involved with, especially around forecasting surpluses and the price of oil and gas. I don't think we need to rush to put a limit on this. Let's deal with the surpluses as they come. Let's start to build it over the years. I don't think we need that enticement.

I think the Alberta public understands very well the need for that investment. They spoke very clearly to me during the election and were very happy to support what I was saying at the doors, which was, of course, the Liberal policy on the surplus, and that included 35 per cent into the heritage fund, 35 per cent into a special postsecondary education fund, 25 per cent into infrastructure, and the final 5 per cent special for the universities enhancing an endowment fund for the arts and humanities. They certainly returned me to this Assembly with a fairly good margin, and I think it's policies like that that really helped. So there is no need to put a limit on this even if the government sees a limit as a goal. I just gotta love that.

The minister referenced the points that we'd been making about the size of the endowments that are really needed to adequately fund the money that's needed in postsecondary educational institutions right now, and I agree. We need a lot more money in there. I mean, honestly, Mr. Chairman, a $3.5 billion endowment fund is going to give us about $135 million a year. For the amount of money that we need in the universities of Lethbridge, Calgary, Edmonton, our colleges, our apprenticeship programs, and our institutes of technology, 135 million bucks is a drop in the bucket. Considering all of the things that we need or want right now, I mean, good heavens, we're dealing with some amazing amount of infrastructure deficit – yeah, deferred maintenance for the two largest universities alone of approximately a billion dollars, and that's coming from the Alberta public interest fact sheet. So $135 million isn't getting us very far.

You know, today in the session I tabled correspondence from a constituent of mine who, in fact, is a student and is, I'm assuming, attending the University of Alberta. He was responding to some comments of the Premier, saying that there's a notion that postsecondary education in Alberta is underfunded, and he was taking issue with the concept of it being a notion. He points out that funding from the government per student dropped 24 per cent between '93-94 and 2003-2004 in constant dollars – dropped 24 per cent, funding from the government per full-time student. In 1982 for every dollar of tuition a student paid, the government gave $10 to the institutions. In '02-03 the government contributed $2.20 for every dollar of tuition put in by students. So this is starting to give you a feel for how much money we really need invested in those postsecondary institutions. Provincial expenditure on postsecondary education as a share of gross domestic product in '92-93 was 1.52 per cent. In '03-04 it was .91 per cent. Same problem. These statistics are all supporting the same thing. We are not investing enough money in our postsecondary institutions. Tuition at the U of A in '92-93 was $1,610.40 – you can tell this is a university student; it's exact – for a full course load. In '04-05 tuition was $4,537.20 for a first course load.

Mr. Hancock: On the amendment?

Ms Blakeman: I am on the amendment. The minister is concerned that I am not speaking to the amendment, which is to remove the cap. The point of removing the cap is to get more money in there because the cap, as the government has it, is $3.5 billion, which is only going to generate $135 million a year. My argument in looking at these statistics is that more than $135 million is needed.

In 1983 tuition consisted of only 10 per cent of university operating revenue in Alberta. In 2003 tuition accounted for over 25 per cent. Remember where I started, Mr. Chairman, talking about the race to the cap, the universities going: oh, my goodness, we can increase our tuition fees in order to achieve that cap. There we have it going from 10 per cent to 25 per cent in a fairly short period of time.

I'm happy to support my colleague's amendment on this bill. I think it is the most important amendment that he needed to bring forward. I think that's signalled by him bringing it forward as the first on the bill. It's listed here and forevermore as amendment A1. It is deserving of support, and I appreciate what the minister's saying, that, you know, he's not going to view it that way. I appreciate his ability to reframe the way this gets looked at, but the fact of the matter is it's still a limit. We need more money available to go into postsecondary, and this is putting a cap on it. This is putting a limit on it, and I don't want to see that limit.

The recommendation of the amendment is to move the cap, remove it completely, and I think that is the right thing to do. I'm happy to speak of favour of it, and I will be voting in favour of it. So thanks for the opportunity to speak in favour of that amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I as well will certainly be supporting my colleague from Calgary-Currie in his efforts to have this amendment approved by the Legislature.

I thought the minister was on a roll there when he jumped up and waved his hands and indicated how much he supported this amendment. If he had just stopped after the first sentence, we could probably have moved on quite quickly. He spoke in favour of the $3 billion, and in fact maybe the amendment based on the minister's comments should be simply to change the word "maximum" to “minimum.” I see his head nodding, so perhaps that’s what we should be doing, establishing that the government would automatically make that fund a minimum $3 billion and allow it to grow. That would perhaps be a friendly amendment that would accomplish what it is that we’re trying to do here and at the same time help the government move a little quicker to the cap that the minister so desperately wants his government to move to. Really, I think that’s perhaps what we should be looking at.

Mr. Chairman, there are so many facts and figures that could be quoted here. I’m just going to name a few of them. In March this year there was a newspaper report that indicated that four Alberta universities, just four of them, the four big ones, project 160 million new operating dollars just to catch up to their peers. Now, I’m not sure exactly about the math that my colleague from Edmonton-Centre was quoting, but she was saying that on an investment of $3 billion it would return somewhere in that range. So just one year alone with this fund, assuming that it was at the $3 billion, would be used simply to help those four universities catch up to their peers in terms of where they feel they should be. I think that illustrates quite clearly that the $3 billion is not nearly enough. Of course, one of the things that I’m quite sure we have already discussed in second reading of this bill is the fact that there’s no clear mandate in the bill as to when we would reach that cap, and the minister himself said that it is to be treated as a goal.

I know we’re all anxious to see the budget tomorrow, Mr. Chairman, and I’m particularly anxious to see the fourth-quarter results and find out just how big the budget surplus has ballooned. The numbers we’re hearing are somewhere between $6 billion and $8 billion. I honestly wouldn’t be surprised if it was a little bit more. At a time when this province is experiencing unprecedented wealth due to the unexpectedly high world prices of oil and natural gas, I think we’re shortchanging ourselves. I think we’re shortchanging our students and our future by putting what I see to be an artificially low cap on what is, admittedly, a very good idea, the idea of a postsecondary endowment fund.

I won’t spend a lot of time talking about whose idea it was – we’ve bounced that one back and forth a few times already in this Assembly – but it certainly is an idea that has captivated the imagination of all parties and certainly garnered an awful lot of acceptance out there in the real world, again from students and parents alike. So it’s a very good idea. The only real question is: why are we holding it back? Why are we putting this artificial cap in place when, in fact, as I suggest, if anything, we should be viewing the $3 billion as a starting-off point and allowing it to grow from there?

I was also intrigued by the minister’s comments when he correlated this fund to what takes place at some of the larger postsecondary institutions in the United States and some of the endowment funds that they have, privately funded, that are many times more than the $3 billion. I’m not sure whether there’s been any effort made to explore the possibilities of having private funds contributing to this fund, but there may be something there that we should be looking at as well that might allow us to race to this cap, as my colleague from Edmonton-Centre described, and get there a little sooner if, in fact, the amendment that we’re debating is not successful.

Certainly, Mr. Chairman, as I said, I just believe that by setting it at $3 billion, by suggesting that it’s a goal and by not defining the parameters under which we will try to achieve that goal, given the fact that we’re experiencing this incredible wealth and given the fact that we’re probably in a better position than any other jurisdiction in North America to make that $3 billion a minimum as opposed to a maximum, I certainly have to voice my very strongest support for the amendment. If, in fact, we can’t do that, then, as I suggest, maybe with the minister’s consent we might be able to look at changing the word “maximum” to “minimum” and accomplishing something that perhaps both sides of this House could be happy with.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to add a few more words around this debate about why the $3 billion cap is in the bill in the first place. I think I understand what it is the minister would like to accomplish, and I find myself hard-pressed to disagree with the minister philosophically. I think the minister gets it that this fund really does need to grow far beyond the $3 billion mark, and I think the minister is taking at least a medium-term view.

I don’t know if I can say that he’s taking a long-term view. We haven’t had discussions that would allow me to peer that deeply into the minister’s psyche, but I do believe that he is taking at least a medium-term view and looking ahead to the day when the cap is reached or very nearly reached and perhaps coming back into this House with a new piece of legislation. Perhaps it will be called the Access to the Future Amendment Act – I don’t know – in, we should be so lucky, a year, maybe two, maybe three, maybe five years. I don’t know how long it’ll take to then raise that cap.

Philosophically I believe that’s where the minister is coming from. I can’t quibble with the philosophy. I can’t quibble, I suppose, with the principle. The process, the practical application of this, though, I think has the cart decidedly before the horse. If the notion here is that a performance target of some sort needs to be established in order to achieve the desired goals, I have no quarrel with setting performance targets, by any stretch of the imagination. My colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford has certainly defined one way that we could go about this, changing the word “maximum” to “minimum” so that the minimum amount that would be allocated under subsection (5) would be $3 billion, not the maximum. That’s one way of doing it.

Another way of doing it would have been to perhaps look at section 4(4). If you’ll bear with me, Mr. Chair, because I know I’m now off the specific amendment into a different section, that subsection says:

An account from within the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund is deemed to be established to which is allocated, as considered appropriate by the Minister of Finance, money that is transferred to the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund after April 1, 2005.

You see, Mr. Chairman, there was an opportunity right there – and, no, I didn’t propose an amendment on this, and perhaps I should have – to lock in a performance target, a performance requirement. If the desire here is to start this fund growing and to grow it rapidly in this race to the target, this race to the limit, if you will, then commit the Minister of Finance to putting in a certain specified amount of money on a regular basis.

Our plan, the Liberal opposition’s plan, during the election campaign, of course, was to put in 35 per cent of every annual budget surplus. We’ve talked about this. We’ve debated this. We’ve discussed it in the House. It’s in the record. I’m not going to spend a lot of time on that. I think it is a matter of public record that that is the way we would have gone about it, and if there’s any need to go further in getting that onto the public record, our Bill 203, Report on Alberta’s Legacy Act, will I’m sure make that abundantly clear as we come up to discussing that.

But the thing is that I don't know whether we should commit this government or commit the Minister of Finance to putting in a minimum $3 billion to kick-start this endowment fund. I don't know whether it's fiscally prudent to demand an immediate infusion of $3 billion. I imagine that's a bit on the high side. The way this province's economy is working, the way it's humming along, I think it's pretty clear that, God willing and the creek don't rise, we can achieve that $3 billion figure – let me not call it a target now, Mr. Chairman, but a figure – in fairly short order.

Whether we could commit the Minister of Finance to dumping $3 billion, writing a cheque for $3 billion to transfer the money, supposedly new money, immediately into this account within the heritage savings trust fund – you know, I think there may be some real questions about the fiscal prudence of doing that. However, I think the minister could have been required and the government could have committed the minister to putting in a percentage or dollar amount that would have been reasonable and fiscally prudent. By taking that tack, the desire to achieve an endowment fund that ultimately is much bigger than $3 billion could have been fast-tracked.

The minister alluded to discussions that have happened in this House, and I've certainly been part of those discussions myself, as have some of my colleagues. We're not going to get to the point where we have so much money in an endowment fund that we literally have, as in the case of I believe it's Princeton University – I don't have my notes right in front of me, but I believe it's Princeton – $1.3 million per student. Yes, it is Princeton that has the endowment of $1.3 million per student, which is the biggest in North America. We're not going to get there overnight. We're not going to get there in a couple of years. We're not going to get there in a decade. You know, maybe a 100-year time frame or a 50-year time frame for that level of endowment is realistic, but let's aim for it, Mr. Chairman.

That is the point of amendment A1 in striking out section 4(5), which sets a maximum amount, a cap – you can call it a target, but what it really is is a cap, an upper limit – removing that from the legislation, from the bill. It says, "The maximum amount that may be allocated under subsection (4) is $3,000,000,000." So the language there, Mr. Chairman, is very clear. Yes, it's subject to revision, subject to amendment down the road by another piece of legislation, but unless and until that subsequent piece of legislation is brought forward, we are stuck with a postsecondary endowment fund that is capped in this province at $3 billion. The minister's good intentions notwithstanding, there is absolutely nothing in this bill that would commit this or any subsequent government to reopening the legislation and changing the cap.

Now, as we all know, our mothers have all told us that we should be careful what we wish for. Perhaps the minister should be careful what he wishes for in suggesting that members on this side of the House should ask regular questions in question period until that $3 billion target is reached. It might get monotonous. Yes, in question period we do have the opportunity, to a degree at least, to hold the government accountable for promises made, but really what we would be doing is asking: "Well, have you reached the limit yet? Have you grown this thing as far as you ever said that it was going to grow?"

We do not have the power to compel. The voters, I guess, in a subsequent election have the power to compel this thing to grow by changing the government, but we on the opposition side of the House do not have the power to compel this government to bring in a subsequent piece of legislation that reopens this issue and establishes a higher cap or removes the cap altogether.

So why wait, Mr. Chairman? Why wait to see whether the government will do this? Even if we can assume that the government will, for the sake of argument, why wait until they do? Why not remove the cap now? Why not let this endowment fund start out from a point at which it can grow in perpetuity until it is worth $300 billion or more? That's the right way to go about this, we believe. That's why I brought forward this amendment. I certainly intend to vote for the amendment, and I hope this House will too.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Oh, I'm not done yet, Mr. Chairman, not by a long shot.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to move a further amendment to the bill, if I might.

The Deputy Chair: We need to have it circulated.

Mr. Taylor: Yes. I will circulate it first of all. My next amendment will be coming around to you all very shortly here.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the amendment that is being distributed to you will be referred to as amendment A2.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, you may proceed.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is, as the chairman noted, my amendment A2 to the Access to the Future Act, and I would move that Bill 1, the Access to the Future Act be amended in section 5.

Mr. Chairman, a little guidance from you, if I may, please. Do I need to read this amendment into the record?

The Deputy Chair: Not necessarily. You have circulated it.

Mr. Taylor: It will take a while. There are quite a few changes. Well, I'll zip through it.

(a) By adding the following after subsection (1):

(1.1) The Council shall consist of not more than 17 members comprised of the following:

- (a) the chair of the Council appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council;
- (b) the following members appointed by the Minister:
 - (i) 2 members representing universities, each nominated by a university board of governors;
 - (ii) 2 members representing public colleges and technical institutes, each nominated by a board of governors;
 - (iii) one member representing non-profit private colleges, nominated by a college's governing authority;
 - (iv) 2 members representing the academic staff of public post-secondary institutions, one nominated by a general faculties council or an academic council, and the other nominated by an academic staff association;
 - (v) one member representing the non-academic staff of public post-secondary institutions, nominated by a non-academic staff association;
 - (vi) one member representing undergraduate students of public post-secondary institutions, nominated by a students association;

- (vii) one member representing graduate students, nominated by a graduate students association;
 - (viii) not more than 7 members of the general public who may be representative of parents, alumni, business organizations or organized labour.
- (b) by striking out subsection (2)(a);
 - (c) by striking out subsection (3) and substituting the following:
 - (3) The members of the Council may elect one member to act as chair in the absence of the chair or in the event of the chair's inability to act.
 - (4) The Minister may designate an employee under the Minister's administration to attend meetings of the Council.
 - (5) Words defined in the Post-secondary Learning Act have the same meaning in this section.

Mr. Chairman, I know that there are other of my colleagues who wish to speak to this as well, and so I will be reasonably brief in speaking to this amendment myself. The point of this amendment – and I take you back to what I said at the beginning of committee study of this bill, that we really had three major areas of concern where this bill was concerned. Number one is the cap on the fund, and we spoke to that just a moment ago; number two, the composition of the advisory council; and number three, a need for some specified accountability on the part of the Ministry of Advanced Education, and we will get to that later.

This deals with the composition of the access advisory council, which is established under section 5(1). Section 5(2) goes on to talk about it to some degree, and of course we would strike out the part of that that in broad, general terms how the council might be established.

We think the terms in the bill are too broad and too general, to be blunt. We think that in order for this access advisory council to function as I'm sure the minister intended it to function, it needs to be specifically comprised of representatives of all sorts of different parts of the system, stakeholders in the system. I hesitate to use the word "stakeholder" because for some strange reason whenever I hear the word "stakeholder" I always think of the guy standing there with the platter next to the barbecue ready to put the steak on it, but I digress.

It needs to have specific representation across the system so that all sectors of the system that should be represented are represented and have a seat at the table. Not only that, Mr. Chairman. We believe that it needs to be seen by the public to have that kind of representation. Thus it is that we spell it out: two members from universities; two members from public colleges and technical institutes; one member representing the nonprofit private colleges; two members representing academic staff of public postsecondary institutions; one member representing support staff; one member representing the students, and we think they should have a place at the table; one member representing the graduate students, and we think that they should have a place at the table because they're still part of the system; and seven members of the general public.

Here we give some guidance to the minister as to who we think should be worthy of consideration for membership on the council. We think there should be some parent representation there. Parents, after all, do pay some of the bills for their adult children's postsecondary education, possibly not as large a percentage as the government believes the parents should, but they do pay some. Alumni, of course, have been through the system and in some cases fairly recently. Not to put them necessarily first among equals here, but who better to ask for input, for advice on an advisory council as to where the money in the access to the future fund should go than people who have been recently through the system?

Business organizations: of course business organizations have a stake in this. Organized labour: of course organized labour has a stake in this, you know, if for no other reason than that we include our fine apprenticeship training programs in any discussion that we have in this province on advanced education. That's part of it. So of course they should be on there.

Does that mean that the minister has absolutely no ability, no wiggle room if you will, to add somebody else who in his considered opinion deserves a seat at the table? No, not necessarily. We say, "7 members of the general public." The reason why we say not more than seven is because we just don't want this advisory council to get so unwieldy as to not be able to accomplish anything. But of the seven members of the general public we've only specified here four organizations that we think should be represented. We do not require that they be represented. We merely say that those members of the general public "may be representative of parents, alumni, business organizations or organized labour."

So there is room for others here, and even at that, although this admittedly would not be a voting member of the council, we've suggested that the minister have the ability and the authority to designate an employee under his administration to attend meetings of the council so that he's got a direct pipeline to what the council is proposing.

The chair of the council would be appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. That's the one requirement that we suggest, to have someone other than the minister himself or herself appoint advisory council members. We are a fairly new bunch on this side of the House, but as we understand it, that brings a little more transparency and accountability to the process.

Of the people that the minister appoints, he has a great deal of discretion in there in choosing from among nominees put forward by, you know, their respective organizations, be it a board of governors of a university or a general faculties council or a students' association or whomever. So we think that this amendment – I would urge this House to consider it carefully, debate it, and I hope at the end of that debate approve it – not only ensures that there is fair and comprehensive representation on a very important council that will advise the minister on how to disperse this money but will be seen to do that as well. And that's key. That's key in a democracy.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll allow others to debate now.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to briefly respond to the amendment put forward by the hon. member and, in doing so, indicate that I believe the intention of the amendment is, in fact, quite appropriate in terms of trying to put some parameters around how the access council might work. However, I would encourage members not to support this particular amendment because I think it is not useful at the start of this process to prescribe in too much detail how this might work.

While it may in fact evolve to this, and I would anticipate that on the council there might be a significant number of these organizations and institutions and students, et cetera, represented or their perspectives represented on the council, what it envisions with the access council is something very similar to something that we set up when I was in the Department of Justice. We called it the Justice Policy Advisory Committee, and in fact it was established based on the steering committee that came out of the justice summit. We found it very useful to have on that Justice Policy Advisory Committee not representatives of various groups but people who brought the perspective of various stakeholders and organizations within the justice system to the table. There is a distinction between a representative of a group and someone who brings the perspective of a group to the table.

When you're setting up this type of an organization, I think it's important to have the kind of flexibility to be able to work with it, to make sure that you can build it. Yes, it has to be open and accountable. Yes, the public has to know what's going on. Yes, there have to be ways of ensuring that that happens. We had the option, when we set this up, of prescribing it in this kind of detail in the act and chose not to go that route because there does need to be flexibility.

I'll just use the example that when we set up the Justice Policy Advisory Committee, we had a meeting. We were talking about mandate, we were talking about how it would proceed, and someone at the table indicated that it would be useful to have the perspective of a person from the community of persons with disabilities, for example. So we said, yes, that would be a great perspective to have at the table, and we went out and found an appropriate person from that perspective to come to the table. By the same token, we talked about bringing someone from the education sector into the process.

So sometimes when you look at what you're doing and you sit down and you say, "Well, these are the people who ought to be at the table," you prescribe it in this kind of detail, and you build a council of 17 members. Then you're saying: well, that's a lot of people to have around the table to be involved in these sorts of discussions. Then you say: but this is an endowment fund; wouldn't it be great to have somebody who has endowment experience on here? Or maybe we want somebody from the perspective of how we might transition this fund to grow in another way.

Maybe we want to look at the question of how endowment funds across North America have been able to obtain funds from their alumni, for example, and how we might engage in that sort of thing. So there may be talents that you want to have at the table. Yes, you could invite those talents on an ad hoc basis to participate. You could set subcommittees, as the bill suggests. You could bring in those talents in a number of different ways.

The point that I'm making, Mr. Chairman, is that in the bill as we have it, we have the context to the concept of the access council and the need to deal with the access council. So the public knows that it's there. It's not hidden. The public knows it's there. It doesn't have to be in the act. Many other councils and things are put together without them being prescribed by the act. It doesn't have to be in the act, but we wanted it to be in the act so it was very clear that there was going to be an advisory council, that decisions that were being made with respect to the fund weren't going to be made in secret, without anybody seeing them, without there being any input. We wanted to have the flexibility to design this properly and to be able to adjust it in its early stages so that it has the appropriate perspectives brought to the table. Certainly we're open in doing so to having suggestions – and these ones are some good suggestions – about the types of people that ought to be involved in that discussion.

With respect to the hon. member: unduly prescriptive, unduly limiting, and I think would not in the early stages of the access council be the appropriate way to go. So I would ask members to not accept this amendment, in fact, to vote against this amendment.

I'm sure that there will be others that will want to speak to the amendment before we vote, so, Mr. Chairman, I would ask that we now adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Mr. Chairman, I'd move that we rise and report.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, I presume that you are moving that we rise and report bills 12, 23, 24, 19, 25, and progress on Bill 1.

Mr. Stevens: That's exactly what I meant by those few words.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 12, Bill 23, Bill 24, Bill 19, and Bill 25. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 1. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:49 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 13, 2005

1:30 p.m.

Date: 05/04/13

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask for guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's official visit by Her Majesty the Queen isn't taking place until next month, if it takes place at all. Today we have a different kind of royalty in the legislative Chamber. The Ferbey Four have just returned from Victoria, B.C., where they captured the 2005 men's world curling championship. They are truly the kings of curling, having now won three world championships and four Brier titles.

If this past week was an emotional roller-coaster ride for Canadian curling fans, it must have been more like a tornado for the members of the team, but like true champions they fought through to the end and delivered a virtually perfect gold medal game. They certainly earned a day of fishing, although I understand they didn't catch anything, the first day of what I hope will be a relaxing summer for all of them.

Mr. Speaker, it's my great honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Team Canada skip, Randy Ferbey; third, David Nedohin; second, Scott Pfeifer, who, incidentally, works for Alberta Energy as a policy analyst; lead, Marcel "Shot" Rocque; alternate, Dan Holowaychuk; and coach, Brian Moore, who couldn't be with us today. I see they're already standing. I'd ask that they receive the warm welcome and congratulations of the Assembly. [standing ovation]

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly His Excellency Mohamed Saad, ambassador of the Republic of Tunisia. With His Excellency is the honorary consul of Tunisia in Alberta and a former member of this Assembly, Mr. John Zaozimy, who is based in Calgary.

I was pleased to host our honoured guests at an official luncheon earlier today, and I want to say that it was a great pleasure. I want to let you know that it didn't matter what language you spoke when you were there, His Excellency is fluent in a number of languages. This is the ambassador's first visit to Alberta. Mr. Speaker, the ambassador is visiting Calgary tomorrow to formally install Mr. Zaozimy as Tunisia's first ever honorary consul in this province.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that our honoured guests stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I would like to introduce to you and through you 16 seniors from the Club 60 Roses in Legal, which is located in the Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock constituency. They are accompanied today by coordinators Mrs. Georgette Cyr, Mrs. Lucille Dube, and their bus driver, Mr. Normand Cyr. They are participating in a tour of the Legislature today and are seated in the members' gallery, I believe, this afternoon. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Yes. They are here, Mr. Speaker. I would like introduce to you and to members of this Assembly 26 students who are here again from Mistassiny school in Wabasca, a different group this time. With them are teacher/group leader Christine Gullion and parent helpers Aline Auger, Angie Holt, John Houle, and of course the other is Don Tessier, who is the principal and the bus driver as well. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour on this historic budget day to introduce to you and through your to all members of this fine Assembly a group of young women who work miracles every day with all of their colleagues and clients across the province. They work in AADAC's Edmonton executive offices and in the information services division. After I announce their names I'll ask them to stand. They are Sara Elliott-Erickson, Sandee Greatrex, Jennifer Hourihan, Susan Hutton, Sheryl Kapy, Trisha Keetch, Jenine Safioles, Habi Shariff, Clara Sinfield, Brandy Spence, Jan Tworek, Michele Watkins, Laura Wignall, and Cathy Work, and joining the group on their Legislature tour today is Shirley Noel, who is from the Ministry of Environment. I would ask all these amazing young human beings to stand to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure today that I introduce somebody to you and through you by the name of Greg Pasychny. He's the very energetic and young mayor of Edson with lots of enthusiasm to bring this town into the 21st century. I'd like him to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two individuals from my constituency. Jeannette Giesbrecht is a former editor of a local newspaper and currently serves as my constituency assistant. Mr. Peter Byrne is president of the Devon Chamber of Commerce and a Leduc/Nisku ambassador. Mr. Speaker, this gentleman takes his democratic privileges so seriously that at last November's election he was gravely ill in the Misericordia hospital and got a three-hour pass just so he could get home to Devon to vote in the election. They're seated in the public gallery. I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to rise today and to introduce somebody who is well known to this House.

Of course, it is budget day, so he'll be watching the budget very closely later this afternoon. I'd ask him to stand as I introduce him: the director of the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, John Carpay.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 41 students from Northmount elementary school. They're accompanied today by Mrs. Gloria Arsenaault, Ms Charmain Francis, and Miss Michelle Ellison, a student teacher. They're seated in the public gallery. I would ask them now to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to the members of the House four seniors from the Glenora riding, the executive of Groat House Tenants Association: Jean Gateman, president; Allan Stacey, vice-president; and Esther Morgan, treasurer. With them also is Maria Garcia. I'd invite them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the assembled host Brian West, president of the Students' Union of the University of Calgary, the heart of Calgary-Varsity. Would Brian please stand, if he's arrived, and receive the traditional greeting from this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Ms Ireen Slater, a resident of St. Albert since '69, a tireless worker. She was the original founder of Stop Abuse in Families and was the executive director for 13 years. She has received many recognitions: the Queen's jubilee medal in 2002, the commemorative medal of the 125th anniversary of the Confederation of Canada in 1992. She was recognized by the United Nations with an International Women's Day award in 1998. Ms Slater is currently the vice-president of SUN for Alberta and chair of the St. Albert chapter. Would she please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly my guest who is seated in the public gallery observing proceedings. He will also be joining us later in the gallery for the presentation of the budget to see what the government has in mind for Alberta seniors. He's representing a very vibrant and active group called Seniors United Now. He is Ron Ellis. I would ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Bryan Harvard. Bryan is the chairman of the Lloydminster exhibition association, Lloydminster also being home to the Wayside curling classic. It's Bryan's first trip to the Leg., and I'd ask that Bryan rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great honour today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Legislature the mayor of Rocky Mountain House, Jim Bague. Of course, he's very interested in what's in the budget because the taxpayers of Rocky have to spend just about $150 per capita on policing. So he's interested in the budget. Jim, if you would stand and get the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly two outstanding Albertans who, like the Ferbey Five, personify what the Alberta advantage is all about. Dr. Jacqueline Shan is the co-founder of CV Technologies, a spinoff company from the University of Alberta, and the co-discoverer of Cold-fX and currently the company's chief executive officer. She has double doctorate degrees in pharmacology and physiology and led the company's product development effort which resulted in the discovery of its lead product, Cold-fX, which is today found on pharmacy shelves in more than 4,000 retail outlets across the country. She was chosen as BioAlberta's 2004 entrepreneur of the year as well as a Global TV woman of vision. Therefore, it's not surprising that in January of this year Alberta Venture magazine named CV Technologies one of the 50 fastest growing companies in Alberta. Accompanying her today is Warren Michaels, who is the vice-president of communications for CV Technologies. I would ask the two of them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two wonderful ladies that work very hard on making sure I don't get into any trouble. That's Mrs. Jan Wasylshyn and Mrs. Lorna Willert. They're both constituency assistants of mine, and if anybody in the House would like to learn how to make sure that everything is streamlined for their constituents, they could have a meeting with them later.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me today to introduce two elected officials from my constituency who share the same constituents as I do and who work very closely with me. It's a pleasure to have them here today: the reeve of the county of Mountain View, Al Kemmere, and Murray Woods, the reeve of Kneehill county. That is a position I once held. They're seated in the public gallery. Please give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly municipal leaders from the constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake. Joining us today is the mayor, Ray Prevost, from the town of Bonnyville; mayor Johnnie Doonanco of the village of Glendon, home of the world's biggest perogy; and reeve Ken Foley from the municipal district of Bonnyville. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask my guests if they'd please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Well, then I'll introduce two of my distinguished visitors today in the Speaker's gallery: Brian Schultz, the mayor of the town of Barrhead, and Bob Jackson, the chairman of the Aspen health authority.

head:

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Legislation

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the hon. Member for Red Deer-North made a passionate plea to this Assembly in support of her private member's bill addressing treatment for crystal meth addicts. The Liberal opposition supports this bill. In fact, our critic of Children's Services has worked with the Member for Red Deer-North in a combined effort to advance the bill. But as a private member's bill there are no guarantees it will be passed or proclaimed. My questions are to the Premier. Given the support for an amended version of Bill 202 on both sides of this Assembly, do you as Premier support Bill 202 with its proposed amendments?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I do wholeheartedly support Bill 202, and I appreciate the phone call from the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition relative to seeing if it can be brought forward as a government bill at this late stage. We're looking into that right now, and I'll have the hon. Minister of Justice and House leader respond.

The Speaker: Let's go on to the second one. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Well, given that the Liberal opposition is prepared to work hand in glove with the government to pass such a bill on an urgent basis if it were brought forward as a government bill, will the Premier have the same issues brought forward as a government bill?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again, I don't know the procedures involved, and I'll have the House leader speak to this issue.

The Speaker: The hon. House leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is an interesting issue because I'm not aware of a mechanism within our Standing Orders to move a private member's bill onto the Order Paper as a government bill. So we would have to either look at the opportunity as to whether the bill can be withdrawn at this stage and replaced with a government bill or whether it may be more appropriate just to simply complete the process. Private members' bills are bills in this House which private members own, which have the opportunity of being debated, and, in fact, are the only bills in this House which are subject to automatic closure or time allocation at each stage of passage.

So it may be appropriate to ask the hon. members opposite to use that full co-operation that they've suggested that they'll so willingly grant so that this bill can proceed through the process that it's already in, which would be the easiest and most straightforward way of making sure it became law in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: will the Premier give this Assembly his personal commitment that his government will undertake best effort – absolute best effort – to bring this forward as a government bill?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, we will use all of our best efforts to make sure that this bill is passed. Now, as the Government House Leader said and pointed out to the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, there is an opportunity for this to proceed as a private member's bill and be passed, but if that can't be done, we will look at all the rules to see if there's any possible way that this can be brought forward as a government bill.

Speaker's Ruling Voting on Bills

The Speaker: At this point I'd like to caution all who participated today, including the Premier and including the Leader of the Official Opposition. If any member in this Assembly chose to rise on a point of privilege believing that their right to determination of a vote on a bill was now being compromised because of positions taken by leaders, that point of privilege would most certainly be upheld by the chair in this Assembly. Every member in here has the right to make his or her own decision and his or her own determination on the basis of every bill before this Assembly.

Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Standing Policy Committees

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Standing committees in areas of policy are standard in all the provincial, state, and federal governments in Canada and the U.S. These are all multiparty committees except for one province, Alberta. Issues like the crystal meth bill could have become a government bill with proper input from the opposition. My first question is to the Premier. When will the government make standing policy committees truly representative of all Albertans by making them multiparty?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has to understand how standing policy committees came about. It was after the leadership in '92 when we decided to change the way government operated and to have a bottom to top decision-making process that involved MLAs, private members, and cabinet members meeting as equals to decide and make recommendations on government policy. Hence, the policy committees came about. These are committees of cabinet and are government committees, so there is no need to follow the federal system, which is their prerogative. They can have any system they want, and we can have any system we want, and the system appears to be working. As a matter of fact, as a participant and president of Executive Council I know that the system works very well indeed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: why did this government shut down opposition MLAs at a standing policy committee from asking questions of stakeholders on a multimillion dollar issue, as it did last week to the members for Calgary-Varsity and Edmonton-Manning?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea. That decision is entirely up to the chair. Perhaps – and I underline the word “perhaps” – the questions were frivolous. I don’t know. But that decision is entirely up to the chair.

Mr. Backs: Again to the Premier: when will this government begin a review of the standing policy committee process to make them truly democratic?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, they are very democratic. The process is thus. You know, I’d like to explain this to the Liberal opposition because that’s what they’re always going to be.

An Hon. Member: In your dreams.

Mr. Klein: No. Believe me; we’re going to leave the government in very good shape, in very, very good shape, so my successor can take over a good government and continue with the process we now have in place.

Quite simply, Mr. Speaker, items go to A and P, the Agenda and Priorities Committee. They’re steered to a standing policy committee, the appropriate standing policy committee. That committee then makes a recommendation to cabinet. The chairs of those committees sit around the cabinet table to speak to the recommendations. If a recommendation is approved, it’s reported to cabinet. If there’s no recommendation, then it’s reported to caucus.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

School Utilization

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has the highest dropout rate for high school students in the entire country. Meanwhile, many high schools across the city of Edmonton are overcrowded. Students are packed into classrooms like sardines into a can. Strathcona high school has a utilization rate of 116 per cent, McNally is at 108 per cent, Ross Sheppard is at 104 per cent, and W.P. Wagner is at a 99 per cent utilization rate. My first question is to the Minister of Education. Is this chronic student overcrowding the reason why the three-year high school completion rate is the worst in the country?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we don’t have the worst high school completion rate anywhere in the country. However, suffice it to say that the three-year high school completion rate is very, very low, and we are working on improving that. In fact, one of the first things I did when I became minister was I struck a task force to examine that question.

I think it should also be pointed out, however, that our high school completion rate for the four-year and five-year windows is about middle of the pack. It’s about 75 per cent. Then when we get to the actual age range of students, who are now young adults in the 25 to 35 year age range, we have an 89 per cent high school completion rate amongst that population, which is very good. So I think there’s a disconnect in the linkages that the hon. member is trying to make.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Education: if there’s so much surplus space in public education facilities, surplus space that is unfortunately being used to force schools to close, why is this government not using the surplus space for continuing high school education programs and saving thousands and thousands of tax dollars in the process? Use that space.

Mr. Zwozdesky: You know, that’s an interesting thought, Mr. Speaker, and in fact I think the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation would like to augment the answer I’m going to give because I know that he and I have been looking at new ways of utilizing school space, underutilized school space, and school space that might become available after the normal lifespan of that school has been exhausted.

So I’d ask the other minister to augment briefly if he wishes.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the city of Edmonton and Edmonton public there are roughly 160,000 square metres of unused space, which is the highest percentage anywhere in the province. They are not necessarily in the right place, and indeed one of the issues that we have in the province of Alberta is that the school space is not necessarily in the right place where the students are because of the change in demographics.

I can tell how anxious you are to have the next question.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Education: how much does it cost to lease all the current commercial space used for continuing high school education in Edmonton? Why are we renting space when we already own good facilities?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I’ll have to take that question under advisement. I don’t carry that statistic in my hip pocket, and if there is an answer such as the hon. member is looking for, I’d be happy to try and dig it up for him. I don’t know if the hon. minister of infrastructure might wish to comment further.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Sure. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The simple answer to that is that it is up to the Edmonton public school board. Edmonton public rents space in a couple of buildings downtown, where you have specific issues such as Amiskwaciy Academy, which is a rent-to-own type of space. You also have metro high school, I believe it is called, which again is a specific centre high, which is a specific type of school that is used for a specific purpose. As a general rule Edmonton public is very cost conscious about where they rent space, especially when there is space that is available elsewhere.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Women’s Shelters

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government announced funding for 55 new spaces in Alberta’s women’s shelters this week. That’s welcome, but it’s a drop in the bucket when set against the shocking fact that 3,800 women and families were turned away from shelters last year for lack of space. Edmonton will get a grand total of three new beds, while Calgary will get none. This is simply not good enough. My question is to the Premier. Will Alberta women and families only get crumbs from the grand banquet that you call the Alberta advantage? When will this government commit to appropriate funding for services for abused women?

Mr. Hancock: Point of order.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member to await the budget. But relative to policy as it affects women's shelters, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'd like to say that this isn't about Edmonton or Calgary. This is about serving the needs of all women and children in this province. I'd also like to indicate that the announcement that we made this week is servicing nine beds at Hope Haven in Lac La Biche. We're going from one end of the province on this announcement.

The other thing I would like to say is that we're facing a budget in an hour, and I'll ask the hon. member to stay tuned on that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier again: given that almost 4,000 abused women and their children were turned away from the shelters last year, is it this government's policy to turn a blind eye to family violence?

Mr. Klein: No, Mr. Speaker, it's not this government's policy, intent in any way, shape, or form to turn a blind eye to family violence. As a matter of fact, a lot has been done to combat family violence, and I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, no one in crisis gets turned away in this province. Let's be very, very clear. I think it's also important: if there is a crisis situation and the beds are full, we find other accommodations for them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Second supplementary to the Premier: given that Alberta has the fewest supports in Canada for women fleeing abusive relationships, including paltry affordable social housing programs and disgraceful social assistance rates, is it this government's policy to make it as difficult as possible for women to escape the cycle of violence?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I take great offence to those statements in the preamble. This is a wonderful province in which to live, and we look after those who are the subject of abuse and look after those who are less fortunate in society. Notwithstanding what some critics and the NDs would like to see, this government and my colleagues have a conscience that is so socially responsible that it would make their heads turn. You know, sit down and examine exactly what we are doing and the millions and millions and millions of dollars we pour into support programs for the less fortunate in society.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Border Closure to Canadian Cattle

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our hon. Premier indicates that his government represents Albertans, yet they seem to be scared of a little court challenge on important issues. Given that Alberta beef producers are Albertans and that the U.S. border cattle closure is devastating to many of them and on March 3 a U.S. district judge blocked the lifting of the ban on live Canadian cattle to the U.S., my question to the Premier: who from this government was representing Alberta in that Montana courtroom on the 3rd of March?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if anyone from Alberta was at the court hearing, but I'll have the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations respond because this is his bailiwick.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Klein: Or minister of agriculture.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Horner: Indeed, the judgment out of the court case was somewhat biased, to say the least. There were a number of representatives in the courtroom that were feeding us information on probably a minute-by-minute basis. The Agriculture Canada representatives and their legal counsel were also working hand in hand with the USDA during their presentation and, in fact, were working on the amicus briefs that were presented to court, which were rejected by the judge. We all know where he stands.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: why was this government's own official U.S. representative, Murray Smith, not in the Montana courtroom when such an important case was being made?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if Murray had his feet firmly on the ground at that particular time when this ruling was made.

I can tell the hon. member that we have been very aggressive on this file, and we feel that the actions – Mr. Speaker, just to qualify. I don't know the rules and regulations and the legalities surrounding a Canadian lawyer appearing before a U.S. judge. Notwithstanding that, we feel that the judge's ruling should be challenged. I understand that it is being challenged. The federal government, of course, has a responsibility in this regard, as do other provinces. We are not the only beef-producing province in Canada, although we produce the most beef and the best.

Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, we have consistently said that this has nothing to do with animal health or human health. It has a lot to do with protectionism and a lot to do with politics.

Mr. Hinman: Three months to land is a long time.

Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: why were the Alberta beef producers not represented in this courtroom on the 3rd of March, when they could have been?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to have the hon. minister of agriculture respond to that question.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, it wasn't up to this government for that to happen. They could not have been involved in the court case because the judge – Cebull, in this particular instance – is the one that decides that.

I would like to point out to the hon. member, though, that the representative in Washington that we have has been invaluable to us in accessing senators and congressmen to solidify our support in the United States. He's been invaluable, actually, in connections between the CFIA, the USDA, and in fact, Mr. Speaker, even our federal government is accessing some of the contacts that he has.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government has legal counsel engaged in Washington because we believe that's the best way for us to fight through their own legal system.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government is working closely with both the federal government and the USDA on the amicus briefs and the filings of the appeal currently going on in a California courtroom.

Mr. Speaker, we're doing more and all that we can to help this court case become overturned.

SuperNet Hookup Cost

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, schools in my constituency are concerned about the implementation delays regarding the SuperNet project and also whether or not the Ministry of Education is going to offset hookup costs. My questions are to the Minister of Education. Will the minister provide monies to all school jurisdictions for SuperNet hookup costs?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the SuperNet project is one of the most outstanding projects that our government has ever undertaken. In fact, I think the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency would confirm that our total package price for this particular new endeavour is about $193 million. As the new hookups come on stream, yes, is the short answer. We did provide for that funding, anticipating it to have been completed in the '04-05 budget, and I hope to be able to continue that through into the next budget to help with those hookup costs on a monthly basis.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: how soon can schools expect to have those SuperNet hookups completed?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are several sites already set to go, and I expect, if I can remember the Minister of RAGE's comments correctly, that we will have the balance of the sites ready sometime later this year, perhaps even in time for our centennial in September. So the short answer is: very, very soon.

Mr. Webber: Again to the Minister of Education: will the minister be helping to offset hookup costs for those schools that have already chosen some other form of broadband carrier other than the SuperNet?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we did have some unusual circumstances last year, and we did our best to help them, but our project is specific to the SuperNet, the broad bandwidth that is provided specifically by the SuperNet, the partners that we have with the government of Alberta. If there are some unusual circumstances out there beyond that, then perhaps the hon. member could direct them to my office, and we'll take a look at them, but at this time we are concentrating and focused much more on SuperNet exclusively and those costs involved therein.

Mountain Pine Beetle Control

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's $23 billion forest industry stands threatened by an infestation of the mountain pine beetle. This tree-killing pest has already cost the British Columbia economy millions of dollars. As usual, the Alberta government is waiting for the threat to be a clear and present danger before acting. My question for the minister of sustainable resource: given that the threat of the mountain pine beetle has been evident for years, why is this government in reactive mode instead of proactive mode?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, the question is about being reactive. We're doing anything but being reactive. For the past five years Sustainable Resource Development and this government have known about the threat of the pine beetle coming across from the British Columbia side, where it was first started, and we've seen the spread of it over the past five years.

We have been in consultation every year with the B.C. government in identifying the areas where the pine beetle may have come across. We do aerial surveys. We work with the B.C. government. We do on-the-ground surveys to find out where those beetles are, and we put the financial resources to make sure that the beetle is going to be eradicated at that border.

As a matter of fact, during the joint ministers' conference in Cranbrook we had a very thorough discussion about the pine beetle and the threat of it, and the B.C. government has put a million dollars into eradicating the pine beetle at our border. As well, we just put a million dollars in this last March to eradicate the pine beetle to protect our sustainable forest industry.

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Speaker, the devastation caused by the pine beetle in B.C. was described by NASA scientists as one of the biggest North American ecosystem disturbances ever observed. Can this government explain their ability to foresee this threat and act to protect Alberta's forest industry?

Mr. Coutts: I pretty well explained that in my first answer, so I will be brief. We will continue to monitor the threat of the pine beetle coming into Alberta along with our industry partners, the people that are actually out in the forest. We will make sure along with the federal government, that the research that is being done by British Columbia and the participation of the federal government for $100 million to help them with their pine beetle will certainly be a benefit to us as well. So we're well aware of the issue and the situation.

Mr. Bonko: Third question, Mr. Speaker: why has this government concluded that a million dollars and a cut-and-burn solution of one area is the logical course of action?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, the best thing that we can do to get rid of the pine beetle, unfortunately, is to have about three to four weeks of very, very cold weather, minus 30, minus 40, where it doesn't deviate from that temperature. That will eradicate the pine beetle faster than any clear-cutting or any burning whatsoever. That's the best way to do it. But in the meantime, when we don't have that provision – we don't have the climate to do that, and B.C. doesn't have the climate to do that – we must take the measures that have been proven over the years, and that is, one, identifying; secondly, taking clear-cuts; and the third, burning it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Gambling Addiction

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The very few of us in this Assembly who farm understand why gambling is an accepted practice when it comes to weather and pests, but I don't truly understand how or why anyone wants to indulge in the habit of putting coins into gambling machines that are programmed to beat you, particularly our youth. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. I would like to know if the minister could indicate how many of our Alberta youths currently today have gambling problems or are developing some form of gambling allergy.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, this is a good question. AADAC identified in 2002 that almost 40 per cent of Alberta youth from grades 7 to 12 were actually experiencing some form of gambling, whether it's on a sports bus going to an activity, whether it's at school at recess time. We noted that there were actually about 3.8 per cent of youths that were considered to have a serious problem. Another in excess of 5 per cent were at risk of a problem. In total 9.5 per cent of Alberta's youth in the 2002 survey were identified as either being at great risk or potentially having a severe problem with gambling, a concern not only to this government but, clearly, to their parents, who know that children who are gambling are doing so illegally and developing a habit that is detrimental to their growth and development.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: what's the government doing to address the emerging trends and problems associated with these gambling activities, especially amongst our youth?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, there are several things that we are doing. Briefly, on the heels of that survey this is the next year for a follow-up by AADAC with a survey that will be conducted this fall. I am at the present time cosigning letters with the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, who is the chair of AADAC, to all of the schools and to community groups and authorities that would make them aware that we consider this a problem, that would put them on the alert to remind their circle of influence where youth are gathered to put up posters and really re-energize parents and community members to watch for youth that are engaged in gambling problems.

Currently AADAC has over 560 beds, and most of these beds are involved in treating detoxification and drug-related problems, but there are beds available for stabilization of youth with severe gambling problems and addictions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Highway 28

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Ribbons of tar are not holding together the asphalt puzzle pieces which for this government pass as highways. The deterioration and lack of timely government maintenance have led to an alarming increase in Alberta road fatalities. In May 1989 17-year-old Tara Grainger, 17-year-old Elizabeth Timmer, and seven-year-old Kelly Formanski were killed on highway 28. My first question, Tara's mother's unanswered question, is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

What upgrading has taken place on this stretch of highway since 1989 to prevent further deaths?

The Speaker: Well, hon. member, I'm not sure that we have the kind of an opportunity and time factor in question period to go back to 1989. That's 16 years of highway construction.

The hon. minister, as briefly as possible.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess as briefly as possible I will say that we have received one complaint on highway 28 in the last year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: why did the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation choose to ignore highway 28 for upgrades this past March 22 when the 2005 federal/provincial agreement was announced?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, when we choose which highways to do, it's purely by a priority list right around the province, and there are a significant number of highways that are, certainly, at issue. My apologies and my heart go out to the families who lost their children on this in 1989, but the issue, realistically, is that we look at the whole province, and we subsequently decide which roads to do on a priority by looking at the whole province and doing the roads that are the most important.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Finance: why doesn't the government follow the Liberal opposition idea of a legacy fund to set aside sufficient funding for infrastructure?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'll take that question under advisement for the hon. Minister of Finance.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Sour Gas Well Safety

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A new initiative to develop sour oil and gas wells in the Tomahawk-Drayton Valley area is causing safety concerns among residents in the area. It is anticipated that hydrogen sulfide, H₂S, levels ranging from 15 to 25 per cent could be encountered in the Nisku formation. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Has exploration of a zone containing H₂S concentration at this level ever occurred in the province before?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to say that over the last 50 years the development and exploration of sour gas and oil has occurred safely, and there are numerous areas throughout the province where concentrations of hydrogen sulphide are higher or just as high as the amount in this area of Drayton Valley. In respect to that, I would say that a lot of that safety is in large part because of the priority that the Energy and Utilities Board does place upon safety as being paramount in developing this resource.

Mr. Lindsay: Again to the same minister: how can these concerned residents be assured their safety is not at risk?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I think it's important that anyone and all Albertans can participate in hearings of the Energy and Utilities Board if they are directly or adversely impacted by a proposed drilling site. So they should, if in the area and have those concerns, participate in those hearings when the applications come forward. I should also mention that in this particular instance the Energy and Utilities Board officials have met with the local community in the Drayton-Tomahawk area, and as part of the application process local residents will have the opportunity for input on this sour gas drilling.

Mr. Lindsay: Again to the same minister: will the government consider increasing the no-drilling safety zone around residential areas?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Energy and Utilities Board undertook back in 2000 a very large consultation on safety with sour gas, and 87 recommendations came out of that review. Part of that is they're developing a hazard risk dispersion tool that's going to help more accurately calculate the emergency planning zones that are required. That tool should be available sometime in 2006. That will only help increase and further improve the safety record when they're modelling and looking at setback zones in residential areas.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

School Closures

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Education stood in this House yesterday and took no responsibility at all for school closures. He blamed it all on the school boards. However, this government's policies create the problem because the government could have a different capital plan and a different utilization formula. They did this in Ontario in 2003, where their Education ministry will "no longer recognize closed schools as creating eligibility for new school grants." My question is to the Minister of Education. When will Alberta stop holding school boards hostage and do as they have in Ontario and stop recognizing closed schools as eligibility for new schools?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member is confusing me with some member from the opposition who was asking a question and affixing blame. I did not affix any blame, as the hon. member obviously knows, and I think he should review his comments and withdraw them because I did not blame anyone for some of the difficulties that are being experienced in the system.

The point in yesterday's question period, Mr. Speaker, was to indicate very clearly where the responsibility lies for the difficult decisions that school boards have to make. As a former member of the school board the questioner should know that first and foremost. Secondly, nobody is holding anybody for hostage either. I would take exception to that comment. What we do is provide funding to the school boards, who then have the flexibility to apply it to the best of their abilities. From time to time we see changing demographics; we see changing population counts. School boards have to adjust to that just like everyone else.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the minister conveniently ignored the question. My question is simply this: why does the minister refuse to follow the lead of the Ontario government, where it's now against the law to tie funding for new schools to the closure of existing schools?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think it's been clearly indicated in the House on several occasions – I'll indicate it again – that the minister responsible for the utilization rate formula, for example, the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, has said that he is reviewing that particular formula. I am part of that review with the minister, and as soon as it's ready to come out – if he would just stay tuned, the hon. member will have it very shortly.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, they talked about the utilization. I'm talking about a school closure process coming from the provincial government.

I guess that my question, flowing from the minister's answer, is: why is the minister leaving this to the bean counters in Infrastructure and persisting with a policy that's a how-to guide for closing schools and gutting communities?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is correct in one part of the comment, and that is that there is a school closure guideline procedure that is referenced in the School Act. Perhaps it is time to review that particular school closure procedure. I would undertake to have a look at it and see if there are places where, perhaps, it can be streamlined or smoothed or somehow else fixed up, and we'll be doing that in tandem with the utilization rate review which the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation is doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The new money for women's shelters that this government announced in a press release on Monday, April 11, includes 55 beds. This is still grant funding which can be removed next year. Once again this government is giving shelters and our vulnerable a one-time transfer of cash, leaving them to beg for adequate funding next year. To the Minister of Children's Services: are the 55 beds announced new beds, or were they existing beds previously funded through donations?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we did is that we provided the money to the shelters, and it was stable funding. In regard to her other question when she said "one-time" funding, I ask her to stay tuned. The budget will be done in about 30 minutes.

Mrs. Mather: To the same minister: what amount of this new money that was announced in the press release is for capital expenditures versus operational costs such as staffing, utilities, and maintenance to aid agencies to keep their doors open?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, I think it's important that we understand this: this is a good-news story to the shelters that did receive the funding. We have provided them some funding for the beds that they currently have in place and then some, so they can fund raise for other initiatives. Again, you know, it's a good-news story. The shelters that we're hearing from are pleased with the initiative. They're pleased with the money that they're receiving. Again I ask her to stay tuned to the budget coming up.

Mrs. Mather: To the same minister: what policy does this ministry have to deal with transitional housing so that women and children will have a safe place to live after they leave the shelter and try to start a new, productive life?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, in addition we provide some second-stage housing projects that receive operational funding support for about 40 self-contained units in the province.

You know, this government is very concerned about the women and children that live in this province and has been for some time now. We had the forum that provided us with lots of ideas. We're continuing to work with all the shelter providers on the issues that they seem to think we need to address. I'd like the hon. member to know that we're also hosting the World Conference on Family Violence in October, which is very exciting.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Climate Change

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The federal government announced today their long-awaited plan for implementing the Kyoto accord. My question is for the Minister of Energy. With the federal climate change plan will it make any change or any difference in climate in Alberta or the rest of our country?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the member said, today just at 1:30 our own time, so we haven't had the chance to review in any details the work that the federal government has now announced on the Kyoto accord. In general I would say that, clearly, there are some aspects that can help facilitate the climate change improvement in this country, yet I would say that the Kyoto accord itself is a flawed accord. It will not actually solve the problem that it's purported to on a global basis. We need to have more partners, the larger countries such as the United States, China, India, and those, working co-operatively with us. We are pleased that they have taken some direction from us though very concerned about some of the suggested methodologies.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, again to the same minister. Alberta is the first in Canada to pass greenhouse emissions. What else is the government of Alberta prepared to do on climate change?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, we are the first as a province to actually introduce an act to talk about climate change. We have the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act. It's that act that takes a very technological approach to solving the issues, to turning maybe a problem of carbon dioxide, which is not a pollutant – and I want to emphasize: is not a pollutant – into potentially an opportunity. As an example, even within the Department of Energy there's a $200 million technology royalty credit program, that's driven towards technological improvements, some very specific pilot projects. You're looking at carbon dioxide sequestration that will help both enhance oil recovery as well as sequestering carbon dioxide.

Mr. VanderBurg: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the federal plan calls for sectors, like the agriculture industry, to create and sell emissions. Is this in our Alberta plan as well?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are companies, there are certainly people in the agricultural and other sectors' industries that are already looking at trying, in anticipation of the federal government's plan, trading emissions credits for carbon dioxide. The problem we have is that we do not and, I would say, should not support any dollars from Alberta or this country going anywhere for just buying carbon credits. It does not solve the problem.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Corrections Officers

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On January 22, 2004, Kyle James Young fell to his death down an elevator shaft at the Edmonton courthouse while in the custody of two provincial protection officers. This tragic incident and the resulting public inquiry have raised serious issues about the training received by provincial protection officers. My questions are to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Can the minister explain what level of training courtroom officers receive to deal with such situations without resorting to the use of force?

Mr. Stevens: Well, my first comment, Mr. Speaker, is that the fatality inquiry with respect to this matter is still ongoing, and the issue of responsibility regarding these court workers is that of the Solicitor General.

The Speaker: Briefly.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a very good question, and the issues with regard to training I'm sure will come out. As the Attorney General mentioned, the case is still before the courts, and the recommendations haven't come out yet.

Dr. B. Miller: Again to the Minister of Justice: given that a former courtroom officer has testified that he was concerned about the faulty elevator door that gave way prior to Kyle Young's death and was told to keep quiet by his superiors about these concerns, can the minister tell us if he is going to fully investigate these allegations of intimidation of employees by senior staff?

Speaker's Ruling Sub Judice Rule

The Speaker: Hon. member, there is a sub judice rule. Now, I have to be guided by the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General. If this matter is still before the courts, then it would seem to be only prudent to wait for the final resolution by the courts by whatever document or whatever report they would give. If the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora wants to entice the minister to comment on something that's before the courts, that is not within the purview of the rules of this Legislative Assembly.

Dr. B. Miller: Can I ask my third supplemental?

The Speaker: Please proceed with your third one.

Dr. B. Miller: Can the minister explain – and this has happened before – why there is no protection available for employees who complain about safety in the workplace? In other words, why is there no whistle-blower protection in Alberta?

Mr. Stevens: Well, once again, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the employees in question, those are under the auspices of the Solicitor General.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Training is made available to all of the corrections officers and all of the provincial protection officers as well. In light of this incident, of course, those training issues are going to be reviewed as there is a parallel investigation going on within the department to ensure what our procedures are, to ensure the safety and security of not only our officers but, as well, those in custody.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Economic Benefits of Snowmobiling

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has many summer attractions – the Edmonton Fringe festival, the Calgary Stampede, for example – that attract millions of tourists every year. However, we need to promote Alberta as a four seasons destination, which means highlighting the activities available throughout the year and seasons. Alberta's winter culture includes snowmobiling, which is a great tourist attraction that supports hotels, restaurants, and other facilities. The province has more than 5,000 kilometres of snowmobile trails, roughly the distance from Edmonton to Halifax. My first question is to the Minister of Economic Development. What is the government doing to increase the profile of snowmobiling as a tourist attraction for the province? [interjections]

Mr. Dunford: I'm being asked what I'm doing, Mr. Speaker, and I'm going to attempt to answer the hon. member's question as succinctly as I can. I see that we have a need for another member's statement about heckling, perhaps sooner rather than later.

I would agree with the hon. member that snowmobiling is an important recreation and tourism activity here in the province. Mr. Speaker, you might be as surprised as I was to learn, related to participation and to equipment purchases, that this is actually a portion of the tourism industry with about $200 million of expenditures each year. So, certainly, Economic Development is not going to ignore this kind of participation in the province, and we will continue to work with snowmobile trail associations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one supplemental for the minister. What is the department doing to stem the tide of snowmobiling enthusiasts who head to other provinces to pursue this activity and taking the tremendous economic spinoff benefits across the borders with them?

Mr. Dunford: Well, this is a concern, Mr. Speaker. It's a concern not only, I might add, to snowmobiling but to our ski industry as well. We don't want to ignore, however, hon. members, that we have some excellent snowmobile trails in Alberta. We can talk about the Iron Horse Trail between Smoky Lake and Cold Lake. We've got the Golden Triangle between Whitecourt, Edson, and Fox Creek and, of course, in the Crowsnest Pass and some areas within Kananaskis.

I might inform the hon. member that the Bighorn access management plan, that was prepared by my hon. colleague in Sustainable Resource Development, looked at the area west of Rocky Mountain House, and they also now have identified a number of snowmobiling opportunities.

So, hon. member, we're committed to this activity. We recognize winter sports as a Canadian thing, and of course we want it to become more of an Alberta thing as well.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Victor Ringuette

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise to recognize a great Albertan. This past Saturday over 300 friends, relatives, and associates of Victor Ringuette gathered together to celebrate his lifetime of philanthropy and his 40 years as the owner of B & R – Eckel's Transport Ltd.

Beginning in 1965, working out of his home with his wife, Greta, as his only employee and his mother as his only investor, Vic Ringuette built a successful business through hard work, dedication, and sacrifice. Today B & R – Eckel's Transport Ltd. has over 300 employees across two provinces.

The road to success for Vic Ringuette has not always been a smooth one. In 1983 Vic lost 11 trucks and his entire maintenance shop due to a fire, and in 1986, when oil prices bottomed out, B & R – Eckel's nearly went belly up. Like a true entrepreneur Vic never gave up and always found the positive in even the most difficult situations. Vic held tight, and when the economy began to pick up steam in the late 1980s, so did B & R – Eckel's.

Although Vic has been an extremely successful entrepreneur, to the people of Bonnyville he is much more. He is first and foremost a dedicated husband, father, and grandfather. Vic also continuously gives back to the community that has given him so much. In his speech on Saturday evening Vic explained his philanthropy over the years by saying: "I believe a community is like a bank. You can't keep drawing without putting something back, and I like to give back to the community."

Mr. Speaker, without the commitment that Vic has shown to the community of Bonnyville over the years, Bonnyville would not be the place it is today.

Congratulations and best wishes, Vic, but most of all keep on trucking.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

2:40 ARFEX 2005 Culinary Trade Show

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to speak about the Alberta Restaurant and Foodservices Association and the ARFEX trade exhibition taking place this week in Edmonton. It's the largest of its kind in western Canada. The ARFEX 2005 marks the 24th anniversary and also celebrates Alberta's 100 years of tastes. With over 350 booths, this culinary trade show promotes the development of a greater culinary industry in Alberta.

I want to thank the ARFA leadership and members for raising Alberta to high levels of culinary arts and science. Restaurants and food services have become an important and integral part of Alberta's booming economy. They also enrich Alberta's diverse culture through taste and sense of food.

I believe Alberta now has its own what I call 'culi-culture', if I may say such a word. The quality and the variety of food produce available in Alberta have made food dishes prepared in Alberta among the top in the world. The skills of our Albertan culinary artists have brought home many prestigious world championship awards. People told me that our Chinese Peking duck dishes are better than the ones in China, that our Mexican and Italian dishes here are better than the ones in Mexico and Italy, that our Vietnamese beef noodle soup is better than the one in Vietnam.

Mr. Speaker, the traditional advice of mothers to daughters is: the way to a man's heart is through his stomach. May I complete this advice by saying: the way to a woman's heart is to take her to a restaurant in Alberta.

Braille Menu at La Ronde Restaurant

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize La Ronde Restaurant, the revolving restaurant located on the top floor of the Chateau Lacombe here in Edmonton's beautiful river valley. I had the sincere pleasure to attend the annual general meeting of the Alberta restaurant and food association yesterday in my role as chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities.

At the meeting I was presented with La Ronde's first menu printed entirely in Braille for the visually impaired. I also had the opportunity to speak with members of the hospitality industry about disability issues. Inclusion is not just about wider doorways or ramps. It's also about Braille menus, sign language interpreters for people who are deaf, and making other services accessible along with the facility. It's one thing to be able to get into a facility and another to access the same services as everyone else. The new Braille menu offered by La Ronde will now offer some people with visual impairment the same dining experience as the rest of society. Furthermore, it allows them to maintain their dignity and their independence.

Mr. Speaker, it's often small things we take for granted that greatly affect persons with disabilities. The ability to enter a building, easily obtain transportation, or order from a menu are examples of things that persons with disabilities have to struggle with every day.

I'd like to commend La Ronde's executive chef, Jasmin Kobajica, and Chateau Lacombe's general manager, Paul Stephens, for their leadership. I know that their efforts are appreciated by persons with disabilities, and they are a role model for the hospitality industry.

Full citizenship for persons with disabilities occurs one step at a time. Mr. Speaker, I believe we moved one step closer yesterday, and I would ask the members of the Legislature to applaud that step.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

City of Edmonton Archives

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In January 2005 the City of Edmonton Archives completed two historical projects dedicated to the preservation of the city's heritage. I would like to take this opportunity to recognize the Prince of Wales Armouries Heritage Centre for the recent completion of these projects.

The first project was a cataloguing initiative processing approximately 400 maps of Edmonton and Alberta. The catalogue acts as a guideline of the planning and development in residential, educational, recreational, and commercial areas of the city.

The second project consisted of mounting eight of the city's earliest tax rolls to the archives' website. These efforts were made to preserve the city's historical information and document Edmonton's development through the last century. The historical data acts as an informal yet important city census by detailing religious preference, family size, and education from Edmonton's earliest records.

Both initiatives hold considerable informational value for researchers and those interested in the development of the city of Edmonton. It is the continued support of the Alberta Legislature through provincially funded programs such as the Archives Society of Alberta that maintains and preserves Edmonton's and Alberta's documentary heritage.

Please join me in applauding the City of Edmonton Archives for their continued accomplishments in recording our city's history. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Legislation

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appeal to the members of this Assembly to pass Bill 202 as a provisional response to a clear and present danger that faces youth, families, and society at large. Jaded as we have become to alleged security alerts, to cries of wolf and code orange, some may feel that this language is exaggerated. I assure you that it is not.

Three elements justify this conclusion. There is the element of illness, which requires the same precision in response as other biological challenges. There is the element of addiction, which requires the same awareness as other chemical hazards, and there is the element of abdication of the self to a substance and its suppliers, which requires intervention to restore a user's autonomy.

The elements of danger to users beginning from a single experiment have been described and documented in earlier speeches in this Assembly. Moving testimony has been read and shared from families in distress. The need for some measure to cope has been amply demonstrated.

Another question that may arise from our cynicism of false alerts is this: whether calling "danger" may lead to a knee-jerk reaction in which the measures proposed are out of all proportion to the cause and may be used and abused for purposes for which they were not intended or foreseen. With the amendments that have already been made to Bill 202, some of which may be seen as watering down, there remain five days' detention and assessment for suspected users at risk. What remains is a limited, temporary measure that can be invoked when all else has failed and parents want the child's right to live to take precedence.

Mr. Speaker, let us dilute no more and delay no longer. The word "crisis" in the original Greek meant not panic but an opportunity to make a decision. This is such an opportunity. Let it not be said that we evaded when we could have acted.

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling a petition signed by another 379 Albertans from Edmonton, Lac La Biche, Clairmont, Plamondon, Stony Plain, Blairmore, St. Albert, Devon, and Sherwood Park urging the government of Alberta to "introduce legislation that will allow parents the authority to place their children into mandatory drug treatment" and to fund urgently needed youth treatment centres.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to present the petition of 105 Albertans from the good Alberta communities of Minburn, Wetaskiwin, Newbrook, Thorhild, Redwater, and Edmonton, which reads:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2005

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 39, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2005.

The main objective of this amendment act is to make Alberta's roads safer for all road users. The Traffic Safety Act consolidated a number of statutes that have not been reviewed in many years, and since it came into force in May 2003, various requirements for clarification have come to light.

This amendment act will create new offences for speeding past parked emergency vehicles and past highway construction and maintenance workers. Too often, Mr. Speaker, the lives of fire-fighters, police officers, paramedics, tow truck operators, and construction workers are put at risk because motorists refuse to slow down. In addition to this, Mr. Speaker, this amendment act makes many other legislative and regulatory changes to improve traffic safety, including increasing penalties for driving with no insurance, addressing the sharing of information to ensure roadway safety, addressing operational requirements of the Transportation Safety Board and appeals to it, and enabling the minister to make safety enhancements concerning the management of commercial motor carriers. Finally, Mr. Speaker, this amendment act also makes changes to provisions regarding the seizure of vehicles involved in prostitution-related offences so these provisions can be proclaimed into force.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce this piece of legislation which reflects this government's very serious commitment to road safety.

[Motion carried; Bill 39 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 39 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 58(6)

the Leader of the Official Opposition may, by giving written notice to the Clerk and the Government House Leader prior to noon on the day following the Budget Address, designate which department's estimates are to be considered by the Committee of Supply.

With the permission of the Opposition House Leader I'd love to table an agreed-upon schedule in anticipation of the budget motion this afternoon in reference to Committee of Supply because we would anticipate starting Committee of Supply tonight, and I believe that all members of the House should be aware of the schedule as early as possible. I'd like to table the schedule and also provide copies for distribution to all members.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're in part of the Routine, and we need some time to set up for the Budget Address at 3 o'clock. Is there an immediacy to proceed with these other matters today?

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, do you have a tabling?

Mr. Martin: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table an appropriate number of copies of a document taken from Ontario Education: Excellence for All, 2004. The portion I am tabling details Ontario's policies on school closures, which is miles ahead of Alberta with its emphasis on the role of schools within communities.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today from Mrs. Hughena Grainger, the mother of Tara Grainger. The two letters were sent to her MLA, the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment, expressing her continuing concerns regarding highway 28.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling for the Assembly this afternoon. It is a document prepared by Marilyn Carlstad on behalf of the Strathearn Elementary & Junior High School Parent Advisory Association and Strathearn Community League in response to the Edmonton public school board's recommendations to force the closure of Strathearn elementary/junior high school. I would urge the Minister of Education and the department officials to read this.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're going to declare a recess to 3 o'clock.

[The Assembly adjourned from 2:54 p.m. to 3 p.m.]

The Speaker: Hon. members, could I bring you all to attention, please. The recess is now over.

head: Transmittal of Estimates

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have received certain messages from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

As well, the Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province and of certain sums required from the lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

head: Government Motions

18. Mrs. McClellan moved:

Be it resolved that the message from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2005-06 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates, the 2005-06 government and lottery fund estimates, fiscal and business plans, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

[Government Motion 18 carried]

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, prior to moving Government Motion 19, I now wish to table the 2005-06 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates, as well as the 2005-06 government and lottery fund estimates.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I am tabling the government's consolidated fiscal and business plans for Budget 2005 as required under sections 4 and 7 of the Government Accountability Act. Also provided for the information of the Legislative Assembly are business plans for each ministry, which must be made public under section 13 of the same act.

head: Budget Address

19. Mrs. McClellan moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to present to you and to all Albertans the first budget for our province's second century.

Two thousand and five is a special year for Alberta. It's a time to celebrate 100 years as a strong and vibrant member of the Canadian family. It's a time to look back at the contributions of literally thousands of Albertans who have built this province, a province all of us are so proud to call home, and it's a time to look ahead to build on the legacy of our first 100 years and invest in an even better future for our province.

As we enter this our province's second century, who can doubt the tremendous progress Alberta has made in its first 100 years? In our Premier's words we've gone from a remote, sparsely populated, untamed long shot to one of the most prosperous, highly educated, and lowest taxed places in all of North America. All that in just 100 years.

The best news for Albertans is that we enter our second century full of hope and opportunity with the best fiscal position in the country, an economy that's leading the country, and a clean slate for the future: no debt, just an unparalleled opportunity to build on all of the strengths Alberta has to offer. And I'd put a highly educated and talented workforce, an abundance of natural resources, some of the best minds in business, and that well-known can-do attitude of Albertans right at the top of the list of our strengths. Alberta and Albertans enter our second century with nothing to stand in our way, and the single overriding purpose of this year's budget is to invest in Alberta's second century, a century that promises even more opportunity for future generations of Albertans.

For people listening and waiting to hear about the priorities in this year's budget, the messages are very clear. This is an investment budget, an investment in Alberta's next century. It takes its lead from the results of the It's Your Future survey, where an unprecedented number of Albertans told us what our priorities should be, and it follows through on the commitments that are outlined in this year's Speech from the Throne and our government's 20-year strategic plan.

Budget 2005 opens up new opportunities in advanced education. It reinforces our commitment to the best possible education for Alberta's children, and it supports our ongoing efforts and the efforts of health boards across the province to continuously improve Alberta's access to quality health care services. These are the priorities of Albertans, and once again our government is taking its lead from Albertans.

This budget substantially increases our investment in infrastructure to respond to and support a growing and thriving economy, and it increases our investment in a wide range of areas from improving safety in our communities to helping children, expanding benefits for seniors, and supporting Albertans that need our help.

Mr. Speaker, our province is blessed with an abundance of natural resources and thus revenues, and that has given us exceptional opportunities. But make no mistake; increases in spending must be affordable. In this year's budget we've been able to make significant investments because debt has been eliminated, our economy is strong, and because the medium-term outlook for energy prices is positive. At the same time, our spending must continue to be based on what is affordable over the longer term. So as we look ahead, the increases planned for future years will continue to be tied to the growth in our economy, and we'll avoid the temptation to let temporary spikes in oil and gas prices drive our spending decisions. It's the responsible course to take.

Yes, it means that there will be years when resource revenues are higher than expected. That is the nature of oil and gas revenue. When that happens, there are choices we can make about how surplus funds can be used strategically and deliberately to invest in Alberta's future. We could increase the sustainability fund. We could add to our current endowment funds or increase funding for capital to meet emerging needs for infrastructure. All of these choices are possible because of our strong financial position, and they will be made throughout the year as our financial forecasts are updated.

Mr. Speaker, 2005 is a year when we invest strategically in areas that build Alberta's future. It's also a year when we will challenge universities, colleges, schools and school boards, health boards and health providers, and all those who are entrusted with government funding to build on the legacy we've created, to invest the funding wisely, to embrace innovation, and to seek the best and most effective ways of delivering services.

Mr. Speaker, with Budget 2005 we'll aggressively move forward in three priority areas: firmly establishing Alberta as a national and international leader in learning; making sure Alberta continues to be the best place to live, work, and visit; and promoting innovation and positioning Alberta to compete and succeed in a global marketplace. This afternoon I want to highlight just some of the areas where Budget 2005 will make a real and lasting difference to Albertans and to the future of their province.

Mr. Speaker, there is no better investment we can make in Alberta's future than to invest in our children and youth and to make sure that they get the very best education we can provide, an education that lets them pursue their dreams and fulfill those dreams right here in Alberta. Strengthening advanced education is our government's top priority in this our centennial year and for good reason. For our young people to compete and succeed, for them to have every opportunity to build this province and build their futures, we need an advanced education system that rates with the best in the world, and for Alberta's businesses and industries to compete and succeed, they need the best and the brightest, the most talented and highly skilled workforce we can provide.

With Budget 2005 overall program spending on advanced education will increase by 13.4 per cent. That will bring it to almost $1.7 billion. The majority of that money will go to universities, colleges, technical institutions, and apprenticeship programs. It will open up thousands of new spaces and new opportunities for young Albertans. In the years to come we'll make sure no qualified young Albertan gets turned away because there's no space in the system. Over the next three years 15,000 new spaces will be added in our advanced education system, and that number will grow to 60,000 by 2020. With those new spaces stories about young people coming out of high school with high averages and no place to go will come to an end. There will be a place for everyone who aspires to advanced education. That's our promise and our commitment to every young Albertan.

To help fulfill that commitment our government introduced the new Access to the Future Act. With Budget 2005 we'll make the initial allocation of $250 million in what will become a $3 billion legacy to supports, innovation, and access to Alberta's advanced education system.

Mr. Speaker, our second promise to young Albertans is that money won't stand in their way. In our Premier's February televised address he announced a new centennial gift to Alberta's postsecondary students. If universities, colleges, and technical institutions must increase tuition fees in 2005, they won't send the bill to students; they'll send it to us. With Budget 2005 that promise will be fulfilled with a $43 million one-time payment on behalf of all Alberta's postsecondary students.

On top of that commitment our government will invest an additional $7.5 million in scholarships, grants, and bursaries, providing direct assistance to 30,000 students. As promised in the throne speech, a new Lois Hole humanities and social sciences scholarship will be introduced to pay tribute to a truly great Albertan, a special woman who believed in our youth and in our province, who was passionate about education, and whose legacy will last for generations to come.

Mr. Speaker, our government's investment in education certainly doesn't leave out Alberta's young children: the ones just starting out in kindergarten and the ones getting ready to finish high school and plan their futures. With Budget 2005 total program support for basic education will increase by just over 7 per cent to a total of $4.3 billion. Support to school boards across the province will increase this year by 5.4 per cent. The best news for parents and students is that 1,015 new teachers can be hired over the next two years thanks to Budget 2005. That means that schools will be able to meet the class size guidelines recommended by the Learning Commission by the 2006-07 school year.

Mr. Speaker, investing in education is the top priority for Budget 2005, and it's the best investment we can make in the next Alberta. But investing in the next Alberta also means that we have to make sure that Alberta continues to be the best place in Canada if not in North America to live, work, and visit.

With Budget 2005 our government will invest in improving access and quality in Alberta's health care system, will lighten the load for Alberta's seniors, will increase support for persons with disabilities and expand programs for children, and will take important steps to improve the safety of communities all across the province.

Spending on health care will increase to over $9.5 billion. That means that 37 per cent of Alberta's budget now goes to support the rising costs of health care services for Albertans. Health regions across the province will see an overall increase of 11.3 per cent in base operating grants to allow them to bring quality health services to Albertans when and where they need them.

A new mental health innovation fund will be established. Targeted funding will be provided to increase nursing care in long-term care facilities, and support to the Alberta Cancer Board will increase by 25 per cent.

With Budget 2005 our government will also invest in information systems to help improve the efficiency and quality in health care and will move ahead with investments in new facilities such as the Alberta Heart Institute in Edmonton, the Children's hospital in Calgary, the new health sciences ambulatory learning centre in Edmonton, and a new hospital in the south part of Calgary.

In May our government will host an international symposium bringing leading experts from around the world to Alberta. As the Premier has said, our goal is to make innovation a hallmark of Alberta's health system. We'll take the best ideas from here in Alberta, from across Canada, and around the world and use those ideas to continually reshape and improve our health system and make sure that Albertans get the services they need, when they need them, and at a price taxpayers can afford.

Mr. Speaker, Budget 2005 also substantially increases our commitment to Albertans who need our support. This year's funding for social service programs will increase by 8.3 per cent to a total of $2.7 billion. This government cares about Albertans, and Albertans can count on us for support when they need it.

With Budget 2005 nearly $250 million will be invested in the Alberta seniors benefit to provide much-needed support for thousands of low-income seniors. Seniors with lower incomes will also be eligible for coverage for basic dental services and prescription glasses. Ten million dollars will be spent to protect seniors from increases in school property taxes, and steps will be taken to add affordable supportive living units in rural communities and increase support for lodges.

Support for Alberta's AISH program will increase by 20 per cent, or $80 million, in 2005-06. The Minister of Seniors and Community Supports will be announcing details on increases in monthly support and other program enhancements in the coming days.

In Children's Services additional funds will be used to improve services for children with disabilities, to improve community-based protection and prevention services, and to follow through on the comprehensive strategy for addressing family violence and bullying. Mr. Speaker, family violence has no place in Alberta. Last year's round-table process captured the ideas and passion of literally thousands of Albertans, and with the support of Budget 2005 we'll transform those ideas into action, starting now. We'll also take steps this year to address growing concerns about safety in communities all across this province.

Mr. Speaker, the deaths of four young RCMP officers in Mayerthorpe was a devastating blow not only to their families and friends but also to the communities involved and indeed to our entire province. It drove home the reality that Alberta is not immune to horrendous acts of violence, and it reminded us that crime doesn't happen just in our big cities. Every community in every part of the province is vulnerable.

Mr. Speaker, with Budget 2005 we will take direct steps to support police efforts to tackle crime and ensure the safety of our communities. Nearly 200 police officers will be added in 2005-06. Funding for provincial policing programs will increase by 16 per cent this year to $153 million. This will provide over 100 additional RCMP officers under the provincial policing agreement and another 60 new police officers whose single purpose will be to fight organized crime in Alberta. Funding will also be provided to expand the Solicitor General's courtroom security and prisoner transfer programs, freeing up another 30 RCMP officers for front-line policing duties. In addition to all of this, we will increase municipal policing grants by 16 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, the next Alberta will be a safe Alberta, a place where people feel safe in their homes and communities, a place where people get help and support when they need it, a place people are proud to call home.

Mr. Speaker, the next Alberta starts with the tremendous foundation Albertans have built in our first 100 years. We'll work together to foster innovation, to maintain and strengthen all the advantages Alberta holds today, and to make sure our economy continues to thrive and continues to offer more and more opportunities for Albertans to succeed here and around the world.

In the Premier's televised address earlier this year, we heard people say: "What isn't the Alberta advantage? Why wouldn't you want to live in Alberta? Everything I need is here in this province." They're right, and with Budget 2005 we'll take steps to ensure that it stays that way, starting with the lowest overall taxes in Canada bar none.

This year Albertans will benefit from targeted steps to strengthen that tax advantage even more. Albertans have always been generous people, willing to support those who need it the most. Steps are being taken to reduce the tax burden on seniors, exempting them from health care premiums and protecting senior homeowners from increases in school property taxes. Mr. Speaker, Alberta seniors have made a tremendous contribution to Alberta's first century, and we won't forget it as we begin our second century.

Mr. Speaker, we won't forget that young families sometimes struggle to make ends meet, especially those with low and middle incomes. Effective July 1, 2005, we'll expand the Alberta family employment tax credit, and that means direct benefits to low- and middle-income families in the order of $25 million.

With Budget 2005 we also reduce the hotel room tax from 5 per cent to 4 per cent and convert that to a levy to support tourism marketing and development across this province. School property tax mill rates will be reduced by about 5 per cent, and the personal income tax system will continue to be indexed to inflation, saving Albertans a total of about $35 million just this year. This year's package of tax incentives provides tax relief to those who need it the most, and it strengthens the tax advantage that makes Alberta a magnet for businesses and individuals all across the country.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps one of the biggest announcements in Budget 2005 is our strong commitment to investing in Alberta's infrastructure. With Budget 2005 Alberta's investment in capital infrastructure will increase to $9.2 billion over the next three years. That level of support is unmatched anywhere in Canada. In fact, it's more than double the average percentage of capital spending in other provinces, and it continues the significant investment in infrastructure our government has made in the last five years.

Mr. Speaker, we're proud of our investment in Alberta's infrastructure, and that investment is possible because of the steps we took to clear the books, get rid of the debt, and free up dollars to invest in Alberta's future instead of the past. First priority for capital funds will go to municipal infrastructure programs. In 2005-06 provincial support for municipal infrastructure will increase by more than two and a half times. Our government understands that the pressures of a growing and thriving province are felt in our big cities and our smaller communities across this province. We understand, and with Budget 2005 we're taking action. In addition to municipal infrastructure projects, capital funds will continue to be invested in hospitals and health centres, schools and postsecondary facilities, and in the provincial highway network.

Mr. Speaker, investing in Alberta's next century means investing in innovation, research, and new ideas. We're blessed with an abundance of natural resources, but more and more Alberta's future will depend on making the best use of those resources, adding value right here in Alberta, seizing new opportunities to build a strong and diverse economy, and preserving our environment. Over the next three years over $300 million will be provided for water management, including Water for Life initiatives, municipal water treatment, irrigation rehabilitation, and reservoir improvements.

With Budget 2005 we'll turn innovation into action. We'll step up our investment in research endowment funds. We'll forge Alberta's strong reputation as a leader in health, medical, and engineering research. We'll provide up to $200 million in royalty relief as part of the Alberta energy innovation strategy to enhance oil and gas recovery. We'll support energy and climate change research with a priority on oil sands upgrading, clean coal technology, water management research, enhanced recovery of conventional oil and gas, exploring alternative energy sources, and reducing greenhouse gas emissions.

Mr. Speaker, as the MLA for Drumheller-Stettler I'd be remiss if my first budget speech didn't address what is perhaps my first love, and that's rural Alberta and the future of Alberta's agriculture industry. It's been a tough time for Alberta's farmers and ranchers, and those tough times are being felt in rural communities all across our province. All of us had hoped the U.S. border would have been opened by now. We hoped the worst would be over. That wasn't to be. In spite of that blow, we're not giving up now, nor are Alberta farmers and ranchers. One farmer described it this way: a farmer has to be a particular kind of person to take on God, the weather, the international market, and a whole bunch of other stuff and say, "I'm going to survive." Well, Mr. Speaker, that will to survive has certainly been put to the test, but Alberta farmers and ranchers aren't quitters, and neither are we. We'll keep on fighting for a better deal, for better markets, and for a better return for their investment and hard work.

With Budget 2005 we continue to invest in developing new export markets. We'll step up our work in prion research to get to the cause of BSE. We'll continue our monitoring and surveillance programs and continue to assure the world that Alberta beef is safe and it's the best beef in the world. Mr. Speaker, we'll work with Alberta's farmers and ranchers to explore new ideas and new opportunities. We'll move ahead with the new rural development strategy. A new Alberta school of veterinary medicine is expected to begin accepting students in September of 2006, and together we'll strengthen rural Alberta and make sure that the rural way of life continues to thrive in the next Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, as I said at the outset, 2005 is a special year for Alberta. It's our centennial, and it's the year we turn the page on our first century and invest in the foundation for the next Alberta. A special year like 2005 deserves special recognition, and this year Albertans will see celebrations, events, and projects all across the province. In just over a month Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth will visit Alberta and join us in what promises to be a very special part of our celebration.

In September we'll officially celebrate 100 years in the Canadian Confederation. In the fall we get to see the brand new look of the renovated Jubilee auditoria in Edmonton and Calgary, and, Mr.

Speaker, I understand they are outstanding. Across the province over $300 million is being invested in the construction and upgrading of community, historic, and cultural facilities. Alberta's centennial will also be marked by a substantial increased investment in upgrading and maintaining our provincial parks.

Mr. Speaker, let me close today by thanking our Premier, my colleagues, and all Albertans for the honour of presenting Alberta's first budget in this our second century. When our Premier came to office, he made a pledge to Albertans. He said that if Albertans helped us to get rid of the deficit and debt, they would reap the rewards for their hard work. Today our Premier delivers on his promise just like he always has. Budget 2005 is an investment in Alberta's future, and it's only possible because the hard work, sacrifice, and determination of Albertans put us in the strong position we enjoy today. Budget 2005 reflects Albertans' priorities, and it positions us for an even greater success in the years to come.

As I look ahead to the future, there is no doubt that this is a great time for our province. If we could talk to Alberta's earliest pioneers, the people who came to our province at the turn of the 1900s searching for a better life and a better future, I'm sure they would be amazed at what our province has become: the most prosperous place in Canada, a thriving hub of action, ideas, and opportunity, a driving force in the Canadian Confederation, and the best place to work, to live, to raise our families, and to build our futures.

Mr. Speaker, it's a great time to be an Albertan, and we've only just begun. As someone once said, the toughest thing about success is that you've got to keep on being a success. In typical can-do Alberta style our first hundred years have been marked by determination, hard work, and a strong belief that anything is possible in Alberta. We've stared down adversity, we've taken on the toughest challenges, we've stuck to our principles and our values, and together Albertans have built a province that is an outstanding success. There's no stopping now. We have to keep on being a success.

We have one more promise to keep, a promise to Alberta's children, a promise to make sure that Alberta's next 100 years are even better than our first. Mr. Speaker, with the hard work and support of Albertans, I have absolutely no doubt that that promise will be kept.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to begin debate on Motion 19. The fiscal plans and policies proposed by the government will receive vigorous discussion by members of the Liberal opposition, and I look forward to leading the debate tomorrow.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I now move adjournment on Motion 19.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the Assembly do now adjourn until 8 this evening, at which time we'll reconvene in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:37 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 13, 2005 8:00 p.m.

Date: 05/04/13

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2005-06

Offices of the Legislative Assembly

The Chair: Pursuant to Standing Order 58(8), which requires that the estimates of the offices of the Legislative Assembly be the first item called in the Committee of Supply's consideration of the main estimates, I now put the following question without debate or amendment on all matters relating to the business plan and proposed estimates for the offices of the Legislative Assembly for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006.

Agreed to:

Support to the Legislative Assembly Expense	$42,740,000
Office of the Auditor General Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$18,304,000
Office of the Ombudsman Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$2,237,000
Office of the Chief Electoral Officer Expense	$2,497,000
Office of the Ethics Commissioner Expense	$419,000
Office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner Expense	$4,336,000

Restructuring and Government Efficiency

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As you all know, this is my first presentation as minister to the Committee of Supply. I appreciate being the first minister on deck. I was originally hoping to watch other ministries first, learn from them, and then totally impress you. Instead, though, I have come to the conclusion that it's my job to set the bar for the rest of my colleagues, so that's my job tonight along with, of course, telling you more about the Ministry of Restructuring and Government Efficiency.

You may have questions about why we were created, what our plans are, how we're going to get there, and how much it will cost, so over the next few minutes I hope to answer most of your questions and tell you about my vision for the ministry, which includes government operating as one, single entity for Albertans, because in the end, as we all know, that's who matters the most.

I know that you each have a copy of our business plan, and I would like to take you through what I consider to be its highlights. Before I get to that, however, I would like to introduce some folks in the gallery. They have been working very hard over the past three to four months in creating this ministry and developing our plans for the coming years. They are Paul Pellis, my deputy minister; Wanda Vlahac, his executive assistant; Les Speakman, executive director, corporate services; Peter Crerar, executive director, standards and business information; Barry Devlin, senior financial officer; Cheryl Arseneau, manager of business planning; Lorelei Fiset-Cassidy, my communications director; and Jason Ennis, my executive assistant.

Our focus, Mr. Chairman, is on how we can streamline government, how we can be more effective for Albertans, and how we can deliver programs and services more efficiently. After the election the Premier said that our new ministry should help government to focus on its most important job: providing programs and services to Albertans effectively and efficiently. The Premier said that the job is not about reductions or cutbacks; it's about improving and simplifying the organization of government. He also said that we have an obligation to provide the best possible service at the least possible cost, yet efficiencies don't have to mean cutting budgets. Efficiencies could also mean a better way of doing things.

So it's clear that the Ministry of Restructuring and Government Efficiency has a job to do, and we're at the cabinet table to do it. I plan on doing it with the other ministries as my partners. I plan on listening to Albertans. I even plan on listening to members of the opposition because even they have some good ideas now and then.

While we're a new ministry, a lot of what we do day in and day out is not new. When our ministry was formed, it was given the Alberta Corporate Service Centre from Government Services and the corporate chief information office from Innovation and Science. These two parts work well under the same umbrella. As well, we'll be able to get maximum benefit from our technology investment. Our business plan is the beginning of a new, integrated way where these two parts will work together. I'm excited with how this combined expertise will return positive results for government operations and, ultimately, for Albertans.

Our business plan introduces a new function: opportunity and restructuring assessment. In fact, you'll note that on page 296 of the estimates, we list this as core business 1. We list it as core business 1 for a good reason, Mr. Chairman. This is a priority, and it's certainly a major piece of the puzzle that I'd like to focus on tonight. Opportunity and restructuring assessment was mandated to make things simple and deliver programs and services better to Albertans.

First, I strongly believe in practising what you preach. I believe in cleaning up your own backyard before looking into the other backyards. So this department is going to look at our own ministry to see where we can make improvements, to see if there is any duplication, and to see how we can be more efficient. Ministers, government staff, Albertans, whoever has an innovative idea for efficiency: we'll listen, and we'll investigate. A number of suggestions have already come in from the public and my cabinet and caucus colleagues, and we're beginning to work on them. Our process is to figure out which ideas are the most important, then put those ideas to work with the other ministries.

I want to be clear on one point because opposition members have been looking to me to wear a policeman's badge and whistle. My ministry is not the policeman of government and other ministries. We are here to work in partnership with ministries to develop ideas and improve together. Our mission is not to change or discount services or to lay off staff. Efficiencies are not only about cutbacks. Instead, efficiencies can be about getting services over the Internet, about dealing with only one person to access programs from three different ministries, or about getting what you need faster. In essence, efficiencies are about serving Albertans better.

Our mission is to "champion excellence and innovation in technology and shared services and optimize the government's ability to deliver programs and services" to Albertans. Our vision is that Albertans will have more "convenient, efficient and timely access to government programs and services." This will take some work and some time. Since the formation of Restructuring and Government Efficiency last November the MLA for Foothills-Rocky View has been appointed to the Regulatory Review Secretariat. Its mandate is to reduce regulatory red tape and complexity, and I certainly look forward to seeing the good work to come from there.

We'll also be looking closely at fees and charges to make sure that amounts charged are appropriate and necessary. We have been given a new beginning and an opportunity to make change. We are a service delivery organization, and we are focused on the future.

This focus includes ensuring that we stay on track with our four core businesses. Along with opportunity and restructuring assessment, we will also focus on core business 2, business transformation; core business 3, information and knowledge management, which includes the SuperNet; and core business 4, shared services.

Mr. Chairman, the government of Alberta was one of the first governments in Canada to use a shared services system for conducting day-to-day business tasks. Alberta's system includes more activities than any other province and is recognized by B.C. and Ontario as a leader in improving government business practices. Shared services now involve over 1,200 staff working on tasks such as mail delivery, procurement, human resources, desktop support, and other behind-the-scenes work. Streamlining and standardizing these functions for all of government reduces duplication, provides economy of scale, and ultimately reduces costs.

I want to make it clear that shared services continue to be a good idea and are here to stay. I would also emphasize that shared services operate mainly on a budget recovered through service agreements with other ministries and agencies. This is called credit or recovery in our estimates and is also referred to as dedicated revenues. As we go forward, to make sure that shared services are the most efficient and effective that they can be, we'll talk with other ministries about their needs and about how we can make things better, and we'll take action because if government operations are efficient, we can put more money toward programs and services for Albertans.

Shared services also identify opportunities for business improvement. This is the business transformation part of our work. It's about being proactive. As one recent example of this, our ministry notified the Privacy Commissioner of a potential privacy issue with the newer digital photocopiers and fax machines. My ministry now ensures that all hard drives are removed from these machines prior to returning them to the vendor. The options available for removing data from other devices, such as cellphones, are still being reviewed. I can assure you that this ministry will keep on top of it and determine the most appropriate solution for government.

By looking at purchases, we've been able to find more efficiencies, such as consolidated office supplies purchasing and increasing the government discount from 48 per cent to 70 per cent on approximately $7 million worth of purchases. We've also just negotiated access to 18 databases of full-text articles from prominent publications, allowing ministries to drop their subscriptions.

Managing information and technology is no simple feat, Mr. Chairman. RGE is about discovering an issue and getting out in front of it, and I'm extremely pleased with what we've accomplished to date. Indeed, we've been doing a lot of things right, and we'll be talking more about them in the future.

The information and knowledge management core business includes the chief information office, Alberta SuperNet, and standards in privacy for information and communications technologies. We manage computers, their operating systems, software applications, and the infrastructure necessary to co-ordinate the government's use of technology. Over the coming year we'll be looking at the best way to implement IT standards and guidelines and manage government-wide IT projects. In fact, we're carefully reviewing business cases and are considering a number of business models to move forward on, consolidating the government's ICT infrastructure into a co-ordinated and managed environment.

For example, we're looking at developing a common blueprint for technology across all government to reduce costs and share business solutions. In this way we can support ministries in decision-making and ensure that all solutions are compatible. This ministry believes that cross-government standards are very important. Again, this is about government operating as one for the benefit of Albertans. I intend to be as aggressive as needed to make that happen.

Another major goal of this core business and a much more visible one for the public is the SuperNet and making it come alive for Albertans during this our centennial year. Mr. Chairman, few would argue that the Alberta SuperNet could easily be recognized as the flagship of this year's budget theme, Investing in the Next Alberta. When we talk about investing in the priority areas of health, education, communities, and infrastructure, well, the SuperNet contributes to all of that. Today all 27 larger urban centres, or what we call base communities, are service ready.

In fact, our rural SuperNet communities will be connected to the network by the end of this month. I also have assurances that the vast majority of the thousands of facilities across Alberta will be connected very soon. Several hundred customers are using the network right now.

I had the distinct pleasure of touring the SuperNet management centre in Calgary, and I must say that it is impressive technology that will make a significant difference for economic development, education opportunities, and better health and government services primarily in our rural communities. In fact, I'm told that the Minister of Advanced Education will be using a SuperNet connection here in Edmonton tomorrow to speak at the second biannual Grande Yellowhead regional division video conference symposium in Edson, and the Minister of Education will do the same from Edmonton on Friday. Investing in the next Alberta with SuperNet will become increasingly clear over the next few months as ministries promote SuperNet and its next-generation technology as part of a province ready for the 21st century.

I know that some have said that by the time SuperNet construction is complete, the technology will be outdated, but those people probably don't realize how expandable fibre and wireless technology is. Alberta's SuperNet is designed to meet the high-speed telecommunications needs now and far into the future. In order to upgrade fibre, whenever that time might come, it's only necessary to upgrade the electronics at each end. Don't take my word for it. Take the word of the Institute of Electrical & Electronics Engineers, which said that Alberta's SuperNet, with its combination of fibre optics and radio-based long-distance links, "offers the best blueprint yet for a bridge over that digital divide."

What a bridge it is, Mr. Chairman. The length of the network and its technology to make that all happen: over 1,200 kilometres, the distance from my constituency of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake to Auckland, New Zealand. The number of hospitals, schools, libraries, and government offices that will be connected to the SuperNet: 4,200. The number of Albertans who stand to benefit: over 3 million. The building cost to the Alberta taxpayer: $193 million and not one penny more. The cost of saving a life by sending instant, high-quality images from one hospital to another or watching a bright-eyed student take part in a high-quality video conference for the very first time: priceless.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, I would like to emphasize that we're not just building a network; we're building a future. We are indeed investing in the next Alberta, and I think we always have to keep that in mind. Last year the Globe and Mail's Report on Business stated, "It's time for all of Canada to jump on Alberta's big broadband bandwagon," and now we're beginning to see other provinces follow our lead. Indeed, imitation is the best form of flattery.

Achieving our vision and mission and acting like one government will benefit all Albertans. We can realize e-government opportunities that provide more convenient access for Albertans. We can provide cost-effective shared services for all ministries. Restructuring and Government Efficiency can help make it happen.

With that let's take a look at the budget numbers, page 296 of estimates. The 2005-2006 budget for this ministry is $258 million. It's important for me to stress that 68 per cent of that, over $175 million, are expenditures on behalf of other ministries for the shared services. For example, we may do a large mail-out for another ministry, and that expenditure shows up in our budget, but it shows up in their budget too. When you subtract the recovery credits, the remainder is less than $83 million for restructuring and government efficiencies.

Allow me to break down that $83 million. The cost of running the ministry is about $2.5 million. This includes things like my office, the deputy minister's office, and, of course, corporate management. The cost of the new core business of opportunity and restructuring assessment is $3.3 million. I discussed this division earlier. This funding will be used to discover programs and service delivery opportunities, research best-practice solutions, and work with our ministry's partners to make it happen.

Initiatives in business transformation come in at just over $1 million. This provides leadership strategy and development for transforming internal government process.

A number of activities in the information and knowledge management core business comes in a just under $40 million, mostly for developing our information and communications technology strategy across all ministries. This $40 million is about $16.5 million over last year. For the most part that increase is the higher amortization of SuperNet. For those of you old enough to remember, we used to call this depreciation. The money has already been spent. Now for accounting purposes it gets written off. That's $14.8 million of the $16.5 million. The balance is about $1.7 million, and that's for setting up the ongoing operations and management of SuperNet.

If you're keeping track, that leaves about $36 million of the $83 million, which pays the portion of shared services that we absorb in-house. It pays for nongovernment shared services, including agencies, boards, and commissions. It includes voice and data systems, debt collections, and supply management, to name a few.

Those in a nutshell are the budget numbers. Overall, we'll be operating on a voted budget of $258 million, of which $175 million is paid directly by other ministries for services they require.

Thank you for your interest in our new Ministry of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. You might ask how we'll know when we've become as efficient as possible, and to that I point to the Fraser Institute's 2005 budget performance index. Their report released in February explains how governments across the country are facing increasing pressures on a number of fronts. Some are calling for increased spending in health and education or for legislated debt reduction, something that, of course, we don't have to worry about ever again in Alberta. Alberta for the eighth straight year received the top score of 94.9 out of a hundred. The second place finisher score was well below at 61.9.

The bottom line, Mr. Chairman, is that Alberta maintains the smallest government with provincial and local spending just 15.8 per cent of GDP. Still, the report said, "Every Canadian jurisdiction, even those ranking highly, has room to improve." I couldn't agree more. You'll see that our business plan addresses key strategies needed to unleash innovation and compete in the global marketplace.

My ministry is committed to the other pillars of the government plan, including leading in learning and making Alberta the best place to live, work, and visit. I'm proud that what we do for Albertans is part of the overall government plan for the next 20 years. We are well on our way, Mr. Chairman.

Now, I'm sure there are questions, and I'd be happy to discuss them with you. If there are any that I can't answer, my staff up in the gallery will be happy to follow up and make sure you get the information that you are all looking for.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the next speaker, might we revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. On behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie I am honoured this evening to introduce a group of young men who are visiting the Legislature this evening as part of the Knottwood Venturers, a scouting group. I'm going to read them off by name since there are not too many of them, so I won't take a lot of our time. They are Chris Carter, Benjamin Keyes, Brandt Oviatt, David Hanson, and Jeremy Colling. They are accompanied by their leader, Aaron Low. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'll offer my congratulations at this point to the new minister of the newest ministry and thank him for the explanatory remarks that he made at the beginning. I was really looking forward to that because, frankly, this entire ministry is a bit of a puzzlement. I'm certainly in agreement that the government could use some efficiency watchdogs, but I have to admit that thus far that was not the sense that I was getting based on the performance of this ministry. So I was very interested to hear that the minister will investigate and will look at which ideas are more important and will try to achieve efficiencies.

But then he went on to say that he wasn't a policeman. By that I take it that he's not interested in enforcement. But it's not enforcement that I'm seeking here; it's investigation. There seems to be a schism between what the government says they're going to do and what the minister is going to do. On every issue we've raised with the minister in question period, for example, and said, "Well, are you going to look into the efficiencies here?" the minister has gone, "No, no, no, that's not me; go back to the ministry." You go to the ministry and they go: it's not me. So the government is dropping this all into this big hole in the middle, and nobody is responsible for figuring out where the efficiency should have been achieved and where it went wrong. So you're not following an investigative process. I mean, yes, I think that if things went wrong, then there should be an enforcement part of this, but I can't even get an understanding of an investigative portion. You may want to clarify that based on my remarks here, but the minister wasn't even clear when he outlined that.

For example, will the ministry be looking at what happened in the department of health and between health and the municipalities with the misunderstandings of the transfer of the ambulance authority? Now, there's a case for inefficiency. There was something that was four years in the planning. It was announced with a great deal of fanfare a year ago. We get one month out from the rollout for it, and the whole thing is pulled. Now, it may well be that the Minister of Health and Wellness was absolutely right in stopping that particular endeavour, but it begs the question: how was four years of effort spent on this? And that cost money. That cost taxpayers' money. So why is that not being investigated? Or perhaps it is, and if it is, I'd like to hear that from the minister and what plans he is going to follow. I'll use that example as a way of an introduction.

So further questions to the minister are: how does he go about investigating efficiencies? What are the criteria that he uses? How does he set the timelines when he goes to investigate something that's happened in another department? How does he set the measurements for a successful investigation or suggestion or decision about which ideas are the most important? Or is this just sort of wading around and chatting with folks? I want to know what the criteria are and how this is all being laid out because it seems pretty loose and airy-fairy to me right now. I think that if we're going to spend $258 million on it, there has got to be a better explanation than that.

I noticed in the minister's comments that he talked about reviewing the fees that are being levied by the government, and I'm wondering if the government is currently in compliance with the Eurig decision. If I could get an answer on that, please. Oh, that caused a quick look above my head to the staff. I'm sure that they know what it means. But it strikes me that we've strayed away from that again, and I would like to know if the minister is confident in saying that we are in compliance with the Eurig decision at this point in time. So I'd like to get an answer on that, please.

Of course, as with any ministry we are happy to receive responses to our questions in writing, but I would ask that we please receive those answers back before we are expected to vote on the budget because I think it's irresponsible of me to be voting on a budget when I don't have the responses to questions that I ask. You're going to have the most advantage over all of your colleagues, so if you can just please make sure that you've provided the written responses before we have to vote on this budget.

I'm interested in hearing where the minister is examining technology. What work is he doing around security levels and access levels? In the past several years of Auditor General's reports there have been concerns expressed that the security levels were not being properly instituted and maintained. In other words, someone that was only supposed to have a certain level of security clearance to get certain kinds of information, in fact, had access to other kinds of information, and that wasn't being rigorously enforced.

Of course, that's where it all falls apart for us. That's where we end up with disasters happening because if someone is determined that they are going to make nefarious use of a good government system, and we make it easy for them, that's where it's going to happen. So I would like the minister to discuss those security levels.

Dr. Taft: Will you give him a chance to answer?

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, I'll give him a chance to answer.

8:30

The other sort of grouping of questions that I had was around the SuperNet. Now, I'm wondering specifically if the minister can lay out – since this is definitively inside of his department and therefore I would expect that he would in fact answer these questions – what the supervision is of the contracts and particularly of the assets that are owned by the government but used in the SuperNet.

In Calgary, the office that the minister toured, I believe those computers are in fact owned by the government. How are they supervised to make sure that they are being used for government business only and not being used eight hours a day for something else? What kind of monitoring do you have in place to ensure that that is, in fact, the case?

I would like to know why the fine that was allowable under the terms of the contract was not imposed with Bell, because they were late. Why did the government choose not to enforce that fine or to charge that fine? They were late; there was no question. The government has admitted it on the record a number of times. Why was the fine not enforced?

I'd also like the minister to explain for the benefit of all members of the Assembly how the contract with Axia works – what is the costing for the contract with Axia? – so that we have that on the record from the minister.

I'm being urged by my colleagues to give you a chance to answer those questions. I gave you a couple of groupings there, ending with the SuperNet and starting with the investigation of efficiency power. So I will take my seat and look forward to hearing from the minister his answers to my questions. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Lots of good questions there, hon. member. I'd like to start by trying to clarify a little bit, if there were some misunderstandings when I was trying to explain, that we are not a policeman, and really you have to also remember that we do have an Auditor General in this province that looks at how anybody would be doing something that would be a complete waste.

What I was trying to explain is that what we plan on doing, what that part of this ministry is doing is to look for efficiencies and try to help other ministries in a partnership, in collaboration with them. We're not going to be a policeman or a heavy-handed person saying: you have to do this. We're going to look and present a business case that we believe would be a more efficient way for them to do certain things, that would make it better for all Albertans.

I believe that every morning when you get out of bed, you think the same as I do: we want to do the best thing for Albertans. I don't think that you really get up to come here and just give us a hard time to give us a hard time. You really believe that you want to do the best for Albertans even though sometimes you have to go a far stretch for that.

Anyway, I hope I explained that well enough to say that, really, we're not trying to step in the place of any other ministry, because that is their business. We're just going to try to help them and investigate things when people tell us that there's a better way of doing it. So if you have a better way of doing something, give us that suggestion. If we believe it's good, we will investigate if that way would work better, and we would try to present a business case on that.

I want to make it clear also on voting on the budget, the $258 million. I want you to remember that $175 million of that or over is showing up in everyone else's budgets. It's dedicated revenue because we're doing a shared service, so we're looking for economies of scale, and different things like that is what that shared service is.

Security awareness is a high priority for this ministry. In fact, we have a dedicated corporate security office to encourage ministries to develop and deliver security awareness training. One of our first activities is to identify key areas that need attention and better training. We have already completed a survey of ministries and are working on developing the next steps. We are also gathering key resources and material from suppliers, external organizations, and other governments. We are actively encouraging ministries to participate in a security management committee of our chief security officer. We have also developed an activity plan for an education and awareness program to be implemented across government.

I can't read my own writing here all of a sudden.

I have to say that when I was in that office in Calgary – that's actually the control centre, and I'm not sure if the computers are owned by us. I'd have to find that out. But I will tell you one thing. What they're doing in there is controlling what's going on on the SuperNet. The computers are strictly hooked up to the SuperNet to watch all the functions that are happening, and it's actually very interesting how far they can drill down to find out exactly where there's a problem or not a problem. If anything goes down in that centre, they have a laptop there that they can pick up, take out to any one of the point of presence buildings, hook up, and they're back online and can run the whole system from there.

You were asking about measuring Axia's performance. We measure Axia's performance in terms of service and provision and financial performance. Axia is responsible for providing SuperNet service to all Alberta SuperNet facilities: government offices, learning and health care facilities, libraries, and municipalities in the extended network. Axia is also responsible for providing other customer services, providing access to commercial customers such as Internet service providers. We measure Axia's performance in providing service against the terms of the contract. Axia is also required to provide immediate, real-time reporting on any major disruptions in service and outline how the problem is being fixed.

We also monitor Axia's financial performance. We receive monthly reports from Axia on SuperNet costs and on revenue. Axia's year-end financial statements are audited against the terms and conditions established in the access, management, and operations licence agreement. We compare Axia's financial performance against the budget approved in advance by an independent third party, and if Axia exceeds this budget, they are responsible for paying the extra cost. I have to remind you that that's strictly on the operational end. On the build end, which is going on right now, that's strictly on that $193 million contract. It doesn't matter how much money Bell spends. It doesn't matter how much money it costs. It's only going to cost the taxpayer $193 million.

Ms Blakeman: Plus Axia's contract.

Mr. Ouellette: That's strictly operational and later. Axia's contract is going to – they're going to make money off of the hookups.

The SuperNet is overdue. I've got to agree with you there. There are penalty provisions built into that contract, and I don't want to speculate right now whether these provisions will be invoked or not. Our focus is to work with Bell and Axia to complete the project. We recently announced the completion plan, and I'm very pleased with it. Both Bell and Axia have agreed to those deadlines.

More than 390 rural communities will be connected to the SuperNet by the end of April. The vast majority of the facilities – government buildings, health care buildings, libraries, and schools – will be connected by the end of June, with the total network being completed by the end of September. That gives us even more reason to celebrate our centennial in true Alberta style. This system is going to be so great for Albertans. It is such a complex issue, and I want to work with them in partnership and get the job done.

I think I've covered all of them.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Committee Chair. Do not go gently into that dark night; rage, rage against the dying of the light. That is the literary theme of tonight's commentary, and I'm going to do my very best to be hard on the policy but soft on the person.

My first suggestion for efficiency would be to change the name. I've noticed already that I think it was the House leader this afternoon or the Deputy House Leader spelled it out, R-A-G-E, and then I noticed this evening you short-formed it to RGE. It's kind of like the Johnny Cash song, you know, Boy Named Sue, because no matter what you do, that name is going to haunt you.

Speaking of names haunting you, can you imagine what it was like for me going through numerous years of school, including a bachelor's degree at the university, when roll call was called out? Chase, Harry. So I know all about what can happen with names and so on.

I want to talk about how we could increase the efficiency of some of the other departments by changing their names. I'm going to use another literary reference to sort of try and put it in perspective. In George Orwell's novel 1984 the ministry of truth was actually the ministry of propaganda. That's not so far off from what's happening with our various government ministries. After all, was it not the ministry of infrastructure that blew up the General hospital? That seems kind of like a reversal.

Then we have the ministry of learning. Within that ministry of learning during the province-wide strike because learning wasn't taking place because of the large, crowded classrooms, part of the expectation for teachers was that you could not have two teachers gathering in one spot to discuss the notion of striking because that would have been against the law. If anyone spoke to a teacher, like, for example, a parent, you know, if they were overheard on the street saying, "How long are you going to be on strike?" well, we expected to look over our shoulder and possibly the ministry of supersize and efficiency would be coming to take us away.

Then, of course, with the current ministry of learning there was a lot of, sort of, bragging going on about what a great education system we have. I do admit that it's going to get better based on today's budget announcements, and I thank you for heading in that direction. But as a teacher for 34 years I'm very aware that 75 per cent of our ESL students don't make it through high school because the funding for ESL doesn't extend for a sufficient length of time.

Then if we look at the ministry of advanced learning, there's a bit of an oxymoron there, too, because the reality is that we have the least number of postgraduates in all of Canada. Hopefully, again, the budget announcements today will help address that, but currently that's not the case.

We had an interesting experience today in the Public Accounts Committee. The hon. minister came in with a whole slew of entourage. We had the deputy minister. We had the assistant deputy minister. We had the assistant to the assistant deputy minister. We had so many deputies that we could have had a posse right there and then. You know, I'm not sure about the efficiency of the number of deputy ministers. How many deputy ministers does it take to keep a minister headed in the right direction? So we have those kinds of concerns about efficiency.

Now, I have a couple of concerns about comments that were made within the House. There's been an awful lot of talk about the SuperNet, and there are a lot of schools, there are a lot of institutions that require being hooked up, but I'm not sure just how much time it takes within the department itself to make sure that these hookups are taking place. Then we go back to the department of infrastructure. It must be exhausting being the department of infrastructure right now and overseeing the installation of the SuperNet into schools because you've got to get it in there fast before you close them. So, you know, I'm not sure how efficient that is.

I also have heard, or at least the sense I got was that the department had not been able to check out the efficiencies of the other departments. I may have heard wrong – and you can certainly correct me, and I'm sure you will numerous times – but it seemed like the department was busy looking at its own internal efficiencies and had not yet had sufficient time to examine the efficiencies of the other departments. I gather it's an onerous task in both cases.

What was stated earlier was that the money shows up in two budgets. It appears within the Restructuring and Government Efficiency department, and it also shows up in other departments. I wonder if that's kind of like making the announcement about the $3.5 billion worth of infrastructure three times, and now it's $9.2 billion. Possibly that's part of it. Maybe it's double-dipping. I don't know. It's in this department and that department. You know, it's certainly questionable.

In terms of efficiency the Premier talked about having a smaller government, a more, sort of, responsive government, and then we added on another department. I'm not sure whether that was the way to go. I would like to think it's kind of like what I proposed in the wellness bill. We were talking about taking $250 million out of a $650 million budget, and the idea would be to promote wellness to such a point where smoking was no longer a problem. In other words, we would try and put ourselves out of business. I would like to think that that was the main point of Restructuring and Government Efficiency, to work so hard that you'd work yourself out of a job.

With that, I'll take my seat, and if you're able to answer the questions, that would be great.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Chairman, I will give a shot at some statements here, but I really didn't catch much for questions out of that. I got a lot of comments, a lot of mumbo-jumbo, a lot of raging, and whatever he was trying to do there. Anyway, I will comment.

He was talking a lot about education. We have one of the best education systems in the country, and we have the stats to back all that up. So I don't know how you could say all the time, especially with 30 years of experience as a schoolteacher, we have a poor – you were the teacher. How can we have such a poor system?

You did ask about money being in our budget or in somebody else's budget or double-dipping. We do not have the money. We report it as money that we're going to spend, and that's why it's reported in our budget, but it's all in everyone else's budget, and it's dedicated revenue. So we show it as what the costs are going to be to supply the shared services across 24 ministries in government, and all of that money is in their ministries. We submit them a bill, and they pay it, but it's showing that we're going to spend it, so it's in ours.

That was about it for questions, wasn't it? Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I tried to listen intently to find out what this department is all about, Government Restructuring and Efficiency. I wondered if it made the trains run on time or whatever it's supposed to do.

You know, I went through this today, and it's the business plans, the core businesses, and it reminded me of when I was in the financial world with Investors Group. I mean, these things are all very nice on paper, but it really doesn't tell us much. Everybody has a business plan, and we're going to do this and that, and we're going to be more efficient. We're going to do – blah, blah, blah.

What we're trying to get a handle on – this is a brand new department – is why we would create a new department to become more efficient. I would remind this government that when the so-called Klein revolution was occurring back in '93, he cut, as I recall, the cabinet by 30 per cent, down to 17. Now we're edging back up, and now we're creating an extra department to make us more efficient. Now, I thought Conservatives were supposed to believe in small government, and I don't understand why we need to create another department to make the other departments more efficient and why we're adding more cabinet ministers as we go along. So we're trying to get, in the opposition, Mr. Chairman, a handle on exactly what it is that this department does and why we need this department to do those particular things.

Flowing from that, Mr. Chairman, I guess I'd like some – the minister said that they're not policemen. Okay? They don't enforce anything. I hear what he's saying. Well, then, if that's the case, we still want to know what they do. We know you deal with the SuperNet, and that's rather ironic although, admittedly, it's probably not the minister's fault. When we moved the SuperNet to Government Efficiency, we find out that it's been rather inefficient getting it going because the project was first supposed to be completed by July 2004, then it was January 2005, and I think now it's September of 2005. I'd be interested if it's even going to be done then. It is rather ironic that the most inefficient program has been put into the department of so-called efficiency.

I guess what I would like to get a handle on – because I would take it that one of the mandates from this department would be that it's to try to be efficient and save money down the way, taxpayers' money. I take it that that would be one of the mandates. Otherwise, I can see no other purpose of a ministry like this. So I would like some specific examples of things that this ministry has done to save money for the taxpayers of Alberta. That's one question, Mr. Chairman.

The other question that I would have, and it ties into that, is: who is benefiting from this ministry? I know the SuperNet is there, but it seems IBM and Bell Canada are doing well. Can you give some examples, then, of this department beyond saving dollars, the types of things that they've done that are socially valuable to the government that wouldn't have been done if a department was operating on its own? We need to have some specific examples. I know it's $80 million – I'll give him that – to run his department, but that's a lot of money too. So we have to have some concrete examples about what's happening here, especially in government efficiency, because if we're wasting $80 million, that's not very efficient, is it, Mr. Chairman?

Again, what I'd like to clarify from this minister is how this ministry is different from the Ministry of Government Services and, if it is different, why they couldn't be together in one department? Then, Mr. Chairman, I guess that gets into the whole duplication of services between this ministry and the Ministry of Government Services. The minister did allude that – correct me if I'm wrong – $175 million was in his budget from other departments. Can he explain why that is? I'm wondering if there is duplication of services.

Then just a couple of quick questions that may give us an idea where this department is going beyond that, Mr. Chairman. If it's a department of restructuring and efficiency, is it part of their role maybe not to be a policeman, but I think the minister did say that, well, they'd go into other departments and lay out business plans and that sort of thing when asked, I suppose, by the other departments – for example, could they tell us why the information and knowledge management expenses, which have to do a lot with computers, of course, have increased by 70 per cent from last year, from $23 million to $39 million roughly, from the government and lottery estimates? Why have these costs increased so exorbitantly? Is this another form of corporate welfare for IBM?

So, Mr. Chairman, just to come back to the last question that maybe I didn't make clear, about the SuperNet. The latest was September 2005. Is that still going to be the time frame that the minister is shooting for, or are we looking at beyond that?

So, Mr. Chairman, with those general comments, and there are a few questions there, I'd open up to other members. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I guess you wanted to know where we've saved some money. We contracted digital imaging services for Health and Wellness at a cost savings of $450,000 in this fiscal year. We saved $737,000 on a cross-ministry quarterly volume purchase of computers and printers. We consolidated office supplies purchasing and increased the government discount from 48 to 70 per cent on approximately $7 million of annual purchases. Projected savings of $178,000 through increased rebates as a result of usage through our newly negotiated contract with the Bank of Montreal for employees' purchases on a new procurement card system. The credit card also offers better security and more detailed reporting for purchases so trends can be capitalized on.

We've also just negotiated government-wide access to 18 databases of full text articles for such prominent publications as Harvard Business Review and Business Week, allowing ministries to drop their individual subscriptions.

We saved $15,000 per year by recycling boxes used to ship government records to be shredded. Each year we shred 130,000 cubic feet of paper records, microfilm, and computer data. The shredding service is paid for through the sale of recycled paper, and we recover some of our shipping costs when the shredding company reaches its threshold for the sale of recycled paper and provides us the excess, about $650 per month.

The answer to your question on the SuperNet being September. It's yes, that's our plan. I have no reason to believe that we're anywhere off kilter. In fact, I think I just received another paper with 41 new ones, another 41 points of presence that were just connected. We have all of the different schools, hospitals, the final little connections, but the point of presence is the main thing. That's also the big benefit to go out to rural Albertans because that's where the Internet service providers can now hook up, at the point of presence. Now they can supply retail service at the same cost in most cases, in some places cheaper, in some more. It depends how competitive we get out there.

The 41 communities are all over the map. Pincher Creek just got hooked up, Lundbreck, Bocket, Milk River, Coutts, Iron Springs, Brant, Blackie, Willingdon, Two Hills, Seven Persons, Morrin, Hanna, Delia, Irricana, Carbon, Standard, Rocky Ford, Hussar, Milo, Arrowwood, South Cooking Lake, New Sarepta, Hay Lakes, Redwater, Radway, Spirit River, Bonanza, Woking, Whitelaw, Eaglesham, Wembley, Hythe, Beaverlodge, Wildwood, Hinton, Edson, Enoch, Bragg Creek, Spruce View, Clive – and I've got four more pages.

I mean, when you think that in most cases anywhere in rural Alberta you can't even hook up to anything but dial-up service – and today you can't do business on dial-up service. All of a sudden we're going to have a system that they can buy, as wide a band as they need to do video conferencing, voice over Internet, all of that stuff, and that's going to be there. We're going to have the best system in the world for rural people.

I do have to say that, yes, we have a brand new name, but it isn't a brand new department. There is not $80 million of new money there. Our total new money in this budget I think is $3.3 million or $3 million even. That's our total new money. The rest came with CCIO and with ACSC. Yes, I believe that we can do much, much better within ACSC and in putting ACSC and CCIO together because they both do a lot of things the same, and we want to streamline that.

I have to say that all of us in this whole building are here for the same reason: to make things easier, to make things better for all Albertans. It doesn't matter which party you're from or where you are. When you're walking out there, outside of this room, and you're talking to constituents, they all say: "Why is government so tough to deal with? Why is it hard to get this? We don't need all this red tape." That's part of the stuff that we want to work on. We want to find out maybe a better definition of rules and regulation as to what actually affects somebody when they need something done by government. Let's cut through that and make things better and easier for all Albertans.

I think I covered just about everything he asked about there. Thank you, hon. member.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. You'll forgive me if I ask some questions that perhaps aren't exactly appropriate or relevant to the topic at hand. Forgive me; I know not what I do, fully. As members opposite are so eager to point out in question period so often about so many of my colleagues on this side, the member is new, and were the member more experienced, he might know the answers to these questions. But I'm going to ask a couple of questions that are really key to my understanding of the minister's department and the purpose for the minister's existence as a minister.

Question 1 is this. It came to mind as he was explaining all the savings in procurements, and I appreciate that explanation for the previous member who was speaking. Can the minister explain to this House, please, how any of that part of his business plan requires a separate government department? It sounds to me – and remember that I'm new here – like the business of the Department of Government Services. We have a ministry already, called Government Services, that I think ought to be responsible for making sure that the stuff that government needs is bought in bulk at a healthy discount, you know, and that efficiencies are sought all the way along the line there. I don't understand why we need the Department of RAGE to ride herd on the department of not doing its job. This is how it sounds to me.

Now, the other question, and this is why I beg the House's indulgence here. This is very definitely a question that comes from a person who is new to this, but would somebody please explain to me: why SuperNet? Why SuperNet? As I sit here and I listen – and I'll grant you that as a private citizen perhaps I should have paid more attention to the issue of SuperNet as it was developing – it sounds very much to me as though here is a government that spent much of its first 12 years of existence trying to convince the people of Alberta that the government had no business being in business now providing a service that, it would seem to me, should be up to business to provide.

I mean, for heaven's sake, it can't be that difficult to get access to the Internet – can it? – from anywhere within the province of Alberta when all you have to do is go out to your Chevy half-ton or your Cadillac, turn on the engine, hit the OnStar button, and you're in touch with somebody from Atlanta, Georgia, who could tell you how to lock yourself in your car with your keys or whatever the deal is.

You see, it would seem to me, Mr. Chairman and hon. members opposite and the minister, that there are technological options that business could explore and make a reasonable return on, but I could be wrong about this. So please explain to me why it is that the government now has to provide a piece of – and I'll use the word "infrastructure," for lack of a better word. Maybe that's exactly what it is, and maybe when the minister answers my question, I'll be fully satisfied with the answer, fully and completely satisfied. But it seems to me that this is a piece of infrastructure being provided by government that is equivalent to telephone lines provided by a publicly held but private telephone corporation or power lines provided by a private business or many other services like that.

I know that some of the hon. members think I'm just jerking their chain here, but I'm not. It just seems to me that there's a disconnect between the government's overriding philosophy that it should get out of the way of business and let business do what business does best and, in this instance, an attempt by government to do, it appears to me, something that business does best. As we've seen so far – and perhaps this is all the justification for the minister's department that we need: if he can get this leaky old ship to sail in a straight line. It seems to me that this is a classic example thus far at – what? – $200 million and counting of a system, a project that government has mismanaged.

So there are my questions, two of them. If the minister could answer them, please. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I can see that really you weren't listening very closely when I gave my speech. You weren't listening very closely when I just explained that the total new spend, what this ministry is costing, is $3 million.

9:10

Mr. Taylor: I wasn't asking about that.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, anyway, you were asking about the SuperNet: why the SuperNet? There are a million reasons why the SuperNet, but I'm first going to start with when you said: leave it to private business. We better go back to starting in Alberta. I was at a meeting with all the gas people last year, and they were saying: how did you ever get Alberta so gasified? The reason that Alberta is so gasified was because of rural gas co-ops. That's the only way it would pay to go out into rural Alberta. Why is rural Alberta so electrified? The same thing. Why are there telephone lines all over rural Alberta? Because Alberta Government Telephones put them in, and once the province was done all over rural Alberta, then private business could take it over and make a go of it.

The $193 million that's going into SuperNet is going in to give rural Albertans the same opportunities as urban Albertans. It's going to enable rural Albertans to have e-business and e-learning and e-health, and it's going to enable the small communities in rural Alberta to offer better services within their school system and possibly keep those schools open. It's going to enable people to have a business somewhere in rural Alberta and possibly have their people trained right there in rural Alberta instead of having to leave their families behind and go into an urban centre to go to school, to take their upgrading or their training or whatever they need.

So I think I've covered that. That was the big thing. You were asking about the $200 million on SuperNet. That's a pretty good question.

You were asking about why we only have a $3 million ask on a brand new ministry. Because from the money that was being spent on ACSC and CCIO before, we've already made efficiencies to make sure we can operate.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'd like to ask a number of questions as they relate to information and communications technology, ICT, as most call it these days. I'd like to ask the minister what he's doing to stay on the proactive front when it comes to ICT security. I would also like to know more about the security architecture your ministry is designing.

Changing gears a little bit but still dealing with ICT, how exactly do you monitor security attacks against government computer systems, and what sorts of improvements have you made over the last year?

Finally, I'm wondering about spam and the nuisance it is. It seems to be getting worse, especially on our home computers, and I'm wondering if this is the case for government computers as well and, if so, what we're going to be doing about it.

Mr. Ouellette: I certainly appreciate the question because technology has become a big part of our daily lives. It can help us stay connected and be productive, and I don't know if anyone realizes that better than me these days. In order to effectively deal with ICT security issues, I believe we need commitment from everybody in the organization, and it needs to be ingrained in the entire business processes of government. It includes the need for government security policy, secure operating procedures, ICT infrastructure, an educated workforce, and most important of all, the need for enforcement.

You might be aware that we have a chief security officer, who reports to me. His mandate in technical terms is to design government of Alberta information security policies, strategies, and tactical operating processes, procedures, and standards. In layman's terms his mandate is to seek out security problems and get them fixed. I should make it clear that when we talk about security issues, we're not just talking about issues affecting government employees. It's important that we keep the bigger picture in mind and that we have policies and standards in place that protect the privacy rights of Albertans. It's one thing for a hacker to get into my computer. It's quite another for the hacker to then access through my computer the information of other Albertans. So our policies and standards define how systems are protected. For example, the policies define who should have access and how that access is granted. It also defines where and how the data is to be stored, handled, and disposed.

Last year the Auditor General noted that some departments are not complying with corporate policy. I can tell you with all assurance that corrective action is being taken. A questionnaire was recently provided to all departments, with a response rate of over 90 per cent. The analysis is ongoing to determine how to provide further guidance to the ministries.

In keeping with being proactive, we're also in the midst of building a training and awareness program. It's in the early stages, but we are working with other ministries in developing content and delivery options. The program will cover everyone from managers, technical personnel, and business users. Once complete, we'll get it out to as many people and places as we possibly can.

Our ministry's security architecture design is part of a comprehensive enterprise architecture that defines how systems need to be designed. For example, one section deals with how to separate sensitive information from less sensitive data, while another section sets the requirements for making sure that only authorized people have access to sensitive information. The government enterprise architecture is receiving great reviews from many large-scale organizations. We have a lot of exciting work ahead of us in this regard.

As I mentioned in my notes, over the coming year we'll be looking at the best way to implement IT standards and guidelines and manage government-wide IT projects. We're carefully reviewing business cases and considering a number of business models to move forward on, consolidating the government's ICT infrastructure into a co-ordinated management environment. We're a bigger purchaser of IT products, and defining standards and expectations ahead of time provides all suppliers a way to compete fairly. It's our way of backing free enterprise. I believe the best way to enhance IT development in Alberta is by keeping the best interests of Albertans in mind and by doing it in a cost-effective manner. That doesn't always have to mean going to the big guns to get the job done.

You also asked about security attacks and what sort of improvements we've made. There are a number of systems in place that detect Internet attacks such as viruses and attempted intrusions. Some of these systems cover the government as a whole, while others are designed to protect individual ministries and even single computer systems. One marked improvement has been the number of people dedicated to computer security who have been hired directly in ministries. Another is the level of dedication to security observed when new systems are deployed. For example, conducting vulnerability tests is becoming more and more frequent as a way to detect problems before they can occur. Restructuring and Government Efficiency is partnering with other departments to establish and maintain strong security of Alberta government computers.

To answer your question about spam, I don't know if you're aware of this, but the government of Alberta receives about 3 million e-mails a month. I'm told that a lot of these e-mails, upwards of 80 per cent, are spam, an industry average and no different than all those annoying e-mails we get at home. There are different types of spam. Some of it can be rather harmless, annoying but harmless, maybe offering the latest headache remedy, but a lot of spam can be offensive, malicious, or fraudulent.

Spam in the government is handled through a series of filters. We have a government-wide system in place for all departments, a number of department-specific solutions, and finally some filters at the employees' machines. This ensures that no legitimate mail is filtered out and allows decisions to be made at the appropriate level.

The government of Alberta has a working group involving most departments. This group is looking at all the technical issues to continue improving the handling of spam. We're also aware of a federal task force on spam, which is expected to table a report within the next few months. We'll take a close look at this report when it comes out because it's expected to set industry practices and legal options.

Whether we're talking about spam intrusions or other ICT security issues, it's important that we address these issues as one unit, one government, one corporation. Even the Auditor General has pointed out in the past that our ministries don't always sing the same tune, and we don't always operate as one smooth-running machine. I said it in my notes, and I'll say it again: this ministry believes cross-government standards, including ICT security standards, are very important. This is about government operating as one and benefiting all Albertans.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to participate in the budget estimate debates on Restructuring and Government Efficiency ministry. The RAGE department certainly has grown. It's gone from zero to 1,272 full-time equivalent employees in less than four months. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview was talking about the increase in the size of the government. In 2001 we saw it go from 16 cabinet ministers, 17 including the Premier, and now it's gone up by an additional one after this election. So we see a big budget, and we see a supersized government. The government has become supersized.

I have a number of questions directly related to Restructuring and Government Efficiency for the hon. minister. The first one centres around the fiscal plan tables on page 57 of the Fiscal Plan. Now, I notice in here where we see an increase in total full-time equivalent employment from last year to this year of over one thousand – one thousand more employees. This is a supersized government.

Now, the Restructuring and Government Efficiency department, RAGE, has an estimate for this budget year of 1,272 employees. So I thought, naturally, Mr. Chairman, that, well, Innovation and Science must have lost some, Government Services must have lost some employees, and perhaps those two departments were transferred over to the RAGE department. But I look at the estimates, and I find that not to be true.

Now, in Government Services we see a change. From last fiscal year to this year there are 16 more employees, so it didn't work out there. Innovation and Science, where the administration of the SuperNet was housed or parked or whatever you want to say, had 696 employees last fiscal year, and this year it's having the same number, so there was no change. Yet we see this department with a staff of 1,200 full-time equivalent employment positions, and I would like to know where those people came from. Are they former contractors? Because there's no other government department that has seen a reduction in staff, none except one: Legislative Assembly. There was one person less in that department than there was last year.

So I would like the hon. minister to explain to me where he got those 1,272 staff. That's my first question, and that's why I say that this is a supersize government now, Mr. Chairman. And I would be very grateful for an explanation of this.

Now, the hon. minister was also talking about rural schools and the closures of rural schools. Another hon. member talked about Red Earth and how far people had to travel there to get to school. I think a wise use of our money is building schools, and the ones that we have already built at taxpayers' expense should remain open. Now, we look at Wellington school, we look at North Edmonton school, we look at Terrace Heights school, and we look at Strathearn school, and at a public meeting Monday night I was told that the Ministry of Education paid for the SuperNet installations of those four Edmonton public schools that the public board is considering closing.

I and many people in the community are confused, and some people are outraged at this expense. Certainly, streets had to be dug up to facilitate the installation of these cables into these schools. Why after the public board decided to go ahead with the closure process for these schools did the Minister of Education then pay for the installation of the SuperNet? If the schools are going to be closed and the students are not going to benefit from this, who exactly is going to benefit? What was the cost of each of those installations of the SuperNet to those four respective schools?

Also, while we're on the topic of restructuring and efficiency, how could it be that the government paid $3.2 million to renovate, completely renew, Terrace Heights school – new wiring, new plumbing, some new windows, new exterior, asbestos removal, new desks, new gymnasium floor. It's a beautiful school now, Mr. Chairman. It cost taxpayers $3.2 million. The government's utilization rate is forcing its closure. The public school board is now in the process of closing that school.

We asked this question last Thursday night at a public meeting. Why this expenditure? Why this apparent waste of tax dollars if you're going to close this school? The public school official who was chairing the meeting indicated: oh, well, we didn't know at the time that, poof, the government was going to spring money to build a new school in Jackson Heights. Their planning department had no idea that out of thin air the government was going to come up with enough money to build this school in Jackson Heights after the repairs were initiated in Terrace Heights. If the minister could clarify whether he thinks this is the efficient use of tax dollars or not, I would be grateful. Many people in the neighbourhood would be very interested to know that.

Now, another question I have is in regard – and this is on page 306 of the Government and Lottery Fund Estimates. On page 306 there is a breakdown of the full-time equivalent employment of this department of 1,272 individuals. The office of the chief corporate information officer has 112 employees, the regulatory review has one employee, opportunity and restructuring assessment has 16, and Alberta Corporate Service Centre has over 1,100.

Now, after the election I was led to believe that when the cabinet was expanded even further with this RAGE department, the chief responsibility of the minister and the department was to look at inefficiencies and overlaps in government and what regulations were not needed, what was going to happen with the size of government: we're going to look at this, and we're going to examine this. Why is there only one person in that department looking at regulatory review?

Now, I don't know what the Deep Six would think of that, Mr. Chairman, but I don't think even the Deep Six would be impressed by this. I can't recall – I know Mr. Hlady was, I think, a member of the Deep Six. Murray Smith was a member of the Deep Six. I believe the hon. Minister of Economic Development may have been a Deep Sixer. [interjections] No. Okay. I'd better not stray from budget estimate debates, because I think there are other members that want to participate.

I'd like to know why there's only one person. If the government considers it so important to have all this regulatory review, why is there only one person conducting that review? I think that is unique.

The Alberta Corporate Service Centre. That is quite an outfit now. Eleven hundred staff in there. But before I get there, Mr. Chairman, I have to remind the hon. minister of a comment from Hansard, before I go any further with the regulatory review, where there's one employee. The hon. minister stated this on March 17, 2005, St. Patrick's Day: "Our department is looking at all the contracts right now to make sure that we are adhering to all of our government policy and rules." If that is the regulatory review, and there's only one employee in there, that individual is going to be getting a lot of overtime because they're going to be very, very busy keeping the commitment made by the hon. minister.

The Alberta Corporate Service Centre. This enterprise has caught the eye of the Auditor General. The 2003-2004 Auditor General's report pointed out many problems with the Alberta Corporate Service Centre in an area that this hon. minister took over. Has the hon. minister looked into the two contracts, valued at $250,000, that were not in accordance with the centre's policies?

This has to do, I believe, with this notion of sole sourcing. I always hear this government and its members talk about free enterprise, but I think we should have competitive bidding on government work. I don't understand how we can have all this sole sourcing of contracts where only one person is simply given the contract, from what I can understand. Has the hon. minister improved the documentation for sole source contracts as recommended by the Auditor General because some contracts were apparently given without any documented reason?

I consider the government's reliance on sole source contracts as inefficient, and I don't believe anyone can gauge whether or not you're getting best value for money. We're looking at a department with a sizable budget. I think it's $258 million. Wow. There are a lot of contracts in there.

Mrs. McClellan: It's just about as big as health.

Mr. MacDonald: It's just about as big as health, the Provincial Treasurer has commented. It's not there yet, but if you give it a couple of years at the rate it has grown in four months, it could be. It could be a $6 billion, an $8 billion department.

Why is there such a high threshold with these sole sourcing contracts for what could be considered a private contract? I can certainly see a thousand dollar contract or a fifteen hundred dollar contract or maybe an amount even up to $5,000 or $10,000 as is calculated in the public accounts documents for sole sourcing, but we're talking about some major dollars here. How many of the staff from the department are dedicated to making sure that the interests of the taxpayers are looked after in these contracts? How many internal watchdogs have you got in this department whenever we see so many employees with so much money to spend?

Certainly, there are other areas of interest that I have, Mr. Chairman, but with those comments, I will cede the floor to another hon. member of the Assembly. I wait anxiously for the responses, whether they be this evening or soon in writing from the hon. minister. Thank you.

Mr. Ouellette: I've written so much tonight now, Mr. Chairman. I don't think I want to write to him again. Now I'm having trouble understanding my writing here again because you had me going so much, and you were so far off topic half the time.

I do want to address for sure SuperNet at the schools because Restructuring and Government Efficiency confirmed with Bell that this particular school was being considered for closure, but a decision by the school board had not yet been made. Until we are notified to remove it, the facility would remain on the construction build list that Bell follows. Put yourself in Bell's shoes. They've been put under much pressure to make sure they stay on course now and make sure they get this done. You've got to remember another thing. This does not cost the taxpayer of Alberta one dime for hooking those schools up because Bell is doing the full build for the $193 million contract regardless.

Ms Blakeman: The minister today talked about money from Education to pay for the rest of the hookups.

Mr. Ouellette: For hookups. I don't know if that school is hooked up. All I do is take it to the school. Plus, that school isn't going to close till '06, so if the Minister of Education wants to hook that school up, do you want to deprive those children even for one year from having the SuperNet hookup?

But as far as getting the hookup to the school, that's Bell's contract. It does not cost the taxpayer any more. I want to reiterate that. Our $193 million investment in the network includes connecting all 4,200 facilities across the province. So to connect all 4,200 of those facilities is in our $193 million. Bell is paying more than a million dollars to lay fibre and connect facilities in the base area, which is Alberta's largest communities.

Restructuring and Government Efficiency has set a very strict timeline for the completion of the network, and Bell is obviously wanting to have it completed on time. Should the school ultimately close, Education may have other uses for the facility, so I'll let the hon. Minister of Education answer that whenever he wants to. We work closely with other government departments on planning for all of this.

About contracting and what the Auditor General had said. This Ministry of Restructuring and Government Efficiency takes the Auditor General's recommendations very seriously and is committed to ensuring that all necessary changes are implemented. I think I've told you that a number of times. All the concerns have been discussed with the Auditor General's office, and some had already begun to be addressed prior to the release of the report. For example, we've developed thorough policies and procedures for contracting, and I've assigned an individual to be responsible for training staff and monitoring compliance. This action was taken immediately and is now fully in place. I'm confident that our new contracting policies and procedures along with our new monitoring and tracking systems will address concerns of the Auditor General.

In regard to the specific question about sole sourcing, this was related to the storage of documentation to support the contract award. Now the documentation is stored in its entirety in the service office until its completion. Then it goes into the corporate office. This is part of the procedure that has been refined to address the Auditor's concerns. In another, similar case the supporting information was not being properly documented, and this too has been resolved by strengthening procedures. In fact, all of the Auditor General's recommendations have been accepted and have resulted in improvements in our contracting procedures.

One additional point worth making is that we have struck a contract review committee for all sole sourced and new contracts over $25,000. This is over and above the standard policies.

I think you were asking me about page 306. I've got to find that. Okay, 1,272 employees. I want to tell you that the only new employees that our ministry is adding are 16 new FTEs, and that is for opportunity and restructuring assessment. All the rest of those employees came with the Alberta Corporate Service Centre and with the chief corporate information officer. I will say that we're asking for 66 new FTEs, but 50 of them have always been there. We were paying them, but we didn't have them actually listed, so we've made an adjustment to correct the error. There are 16 new FTEs in this business plan.

What else did he ask me? To comment on the one regulatory review. That one regulatory review person right now is looking at regulations and regulatory review. Our new opportunity and restructuring assessment – that's where the new FTEs come in – is what's going over the contracting and looking at the policies and that sort of thing.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The minister just identified opportunity and restructuring and just briefly talked about it. I'm interested in learning more about your new business unit of opportunity and restructuring assessment. It is, after all, new money in your budget, at $3.3 million. I certainly understand the need behind having to spend money in order to save money. It's probably taught in economics 101 somewhere, and that, maybe, is the class that I missed. How do we know if we're getting a good bang for our buck?

Mr. Ouellette: I certainly appreciate any opportunity to stress over and over how important this new business unit is to our ministry. In fact, it's so important that it's listed as core business 1 in our new business plan. Opportunity and restructuring assessment is mandated to make things simple and deliver programs and services effectively, efficiently, and economically to Albertans. Instead of a triple-E Senate, I guess you could call this a triple-E service. I might have to trademark that, you know.

This new business unit will consult and collaborate with ministries and partners in order to assess the business and service delivery practices of government. I anticipate those practices always changing as government changes with the times, whether it's proactive or reactive. So it will always be a bit of a moving target, but the end goal is to improve those practices, pure and simple.

This ministry will take a lead role in assessing and prioritizing opportunities to streamline, to restructure, to gain efficiencies and will do that by working with the other ministries. I should mention that I expect that these opportunities will be both internal and external, whether it's the way we conduct business amongst ministries or the way we deliver programs and services to Albertans.

The strategy of opportunity and restructuring assessment is listed in our business plan. But in a nutshell, it will work with ministries and partners to identify opportunities, research and evaluate alternative strategies, identify best practice for improvement, develop and implement a framework that will be the guide to continuous improvement, and then communicate effectively with all ministries and partners.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll be brief to yield the floor to some others here, but the first and biggest question, I guess, that I've got for the hon. minister of restructuring is . . .

Mr. R. Miller: Take your time, Paul.

Mr. Hinman: Thanks.

One has to ask if the only thing that's efficient is if one is measuring the growth of the government. It's phenomenal how fast it is growing, but we really need to cut back on it.

I'll start on the Internet because one of the areas he mentioned tonight was Milk River. I wonder how familiar he is with it because there are only two that I am familiar with in the province. I'd like to talk a little bit about Milk River. The town asked them to please move the hub to a place that was located for the town to easily hook into and to reach out to the rest of the people.

He's talked about the importance of rural Alberta being able to have access to the Internet, and I think one thing that we do all realize and understand in today's world is that high-speed Internet is critical, and we do agree with that. But the problem that we're having here is that we're still missing a high percentage of rural Alberta. Though they get it to a town, that does not get it to the people living outside the town, whether that's students living on a farm, small acreages, other areas.

Milk River has gone ahead and put up their own wireless Internet that actually worked out at the same price that they were going to be charged just to move the hub because Bell already had their plans and they couldn't be efficient and move it before – no, this is the plan; this is where we're told it's going to go in the town – and it wasn't close to their wiring and their hookups.

So if, in fact, we're looking for efficiency, the most important thing is that we need to be flexible and open-minded in order to be efficient. But that doesn't seem to be the case. We continue to spread out.

At another school where a friend of mine who has moved up to northern Alberta – it's a very small rural school. He's told me that they're spending hundreds of thousands of dollars to get it into this school, and they don't even have computers yet. They ask: wouldn't it be more in line to get computers and those things there?

Mrs. McClellan: What do you mean they don't have computers?

Mr. Hinman: No. I'll get you the name of the school and stuff there, hon. minister.

Mrs. McClellan: How ridiculous.

Mr. Hinman: It is ridiculous. I can't agree with you more on that.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, you better ask your school board where they spent their money.

Mr. Hinman: It's not my school board. But the point is there is no – this restructuring is just disjointed, out of touch. They don't understand what the problems are, and we need to have some communications between the different arms of this beast that says that it's efficient, because it isn't.

Anyway, down in Milk River they've set up this wireless Internet that's going to reach out into rural Alberta. When the government tried to hook up high-speed even to my own house – and we have two hubs. I live between Raymond and Magrath, within eight kilometres of each area. I'm not able to hook up to high-speed Internet with the new SuperNet because we're too far from the hub. We're missing a huge number, but percentage-wise I'm sure this government says: "Oh, don't worry about it. We've got the majority. That's close enough." But it's very disheartening.

The other area that I guess I'd like to touch on a bit is about the red tape reduction, the rules and regulations that seem to proliferate from this government, and I'll use BSE for an example. We know and understand that this is just about politics, not science, with the BSE problem. Yet here in Alberta we've had all kinds of new rules and regulations that are going out to the small abattoirs and butchers that are run out there, so much red tape and expenses that they can't even upgrade at the cost to meet the new regulations.

Mrs. McClellan: Oh, you have no idea. Unbelievable.

Mr. Hinman: You should come down and drive around my area then, hon. minister. Come to my side and talk to them then. We're definitely living in different areas or else on different planes. [interjections] No other free advice?

Anyway, B.C. has had quite a good plan, and they've really gone at it. They've actually numbered the amount of statutes and regulations, and I believe they've passed a statute there that they can't put in a new one without eliminating two old ones. If we want to do something that's efficient, let's look at the amount of red tape, and let's start going through it line by line and hiring people so that we can.

Mr. MacDonald: You're going to need one guy doing that.

Mr. Hinman: I know.

The Chair: Hon. members, through the chair, please.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner has the floor.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We really do have a history here of free enterprise, entrepreneurship, and people, businesses, families that will put their whole heart and soul into a business, but they continue to be confronted with more red tape, more regulations that say that they're not reaching the new bar. It's very frustrating for small business to get up and running, and it's critical that this government does take a few steps back, looks at what's going on, and really goes through the regulations. Let's trim them down and make them as simple and straightforward as possible when people want to start and get a new business going.

I guess the only other comment that I'll make is the one that's been made several times this evening, and I just don't think it can be emphasized enough. We don't need more cabinet ministers. We don't need more branches of this government to give good service to the people and the industry of Alberta. We need less. We need less regulations. Trimming back the size of our government will do us more benefit in the future than all of the trimming that we've done and the huge debt that we've been able to pay off because we've made those massive cuts. Now it's time to cut this massive government and start being efficient as we go forward in this next century.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The only disjointed, disconnected, diswhatever that he was yapping about there I think comes from somewhere near what he was trying to call names of places, but I will say to you, hon. member: I know Milk River very well. I know southern Alberta very well. I have relatives that live down there, and I worked down there for 15 years as an oil field consultant.

I'll tell you that whatever Internet they hooked up to, when the SuperNet is up and running, they will never be able to get as wide a band of network for the money that they're going to be able to get rural Alberta for. They can purchase a full megabyte in rural Alberta for $50 per month, which is cheaper than you can buy it for in the city. If you would have listened at all to the beginning of the speech or if you would have ever looked up what the Internet is about, never ever in any of the contract or in the $193 million that the government is paying Bell were there any last mile connections. The total thing was to hook up approximately 4,200 schools, hospitals, libraries, and government buildings.

The rest of it is done with Internet service providers to create a competitive field out there. I want to tell you: right now Axia is saying that they're getting more calls from people, not just the people that are already in the business as Internet service providers but new start-up companies, another Alberta advantage of another opportunity for young people that want to start a company.

I will say that, yes, we're not looking at reinventing the wheel or doing anything like that. British Columbia has done a very, very good job with their red tape ministry. They've done a good job getting rid of rules and regulations, and their economy is way up on the upswing.

I'm just getting excited over nothing here. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you. I just have one question that I'd like to ask tonight. Could you please clarify why you need two core businesses to achieve efficiencies? There's the new business unit of opportunity and restructuring assessment, and you have another business unit called business transformation. It seems to me that this might not be reflective of efficiencies that your ministry is supposed to be searching for. Could you tell me about the differences between those two?

Mr. Ouellette: These two business units follow significantly different paths both in scope and expertise. Opportunity and restructuring assessment is really the design work of the ministry and its partners. Business transformation, on the other hand, is seen as the building function. I'll try to explain the difference the best I can.

Opportunity and restructuring assessment involves working with other ministries to identify projects that might be best co-ordinated or handled by Restructuring and Government Efficiency as a third party. This will involve collaboration with others outside the ministry in order to conduct research, take stock of the programs and services offered, then determine needs and opportunities. These needs will be prioritized, and business cases will be developed. We would then ask for all those impacted by the program or service to endorse the plans for change.

The type of expertise required for this new business unit and its related functions includes those with a strong background in research, trend analysis, planning, risk assessment, priority setting, relationship building, and business case production.

Now let's take a look at the business transformation unit. This unit takes on projects that require business process improvements, re-engineering work, or significant structural changes in order to produce further efficiencies. Its focus is on improvements to the delivery of shared services for government, including finance, large-scale procurement initiatives, human resources, administration, and information technology. Consultation prior to the current strategic plan has identified a number of key major program areas for re-engineering efforts in order to improve services and efficiencies.

The type of expertise required for this business unit and its related functions includes those with a strong background in public-sector organizational analysis, business process improvement, re-engineering, technology-based solutions, contract management, project management, problem solving, costing, and pricing.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm a little angry because the two questions that I wrote for the hon. minister were asked. I actually just need some elaboration from the hon. minister with respect to the full-time equivalent employment positions and then also with respect to their goal 1, opportunity and restructuring assessment. My question is: couldn't the 1,272 full-time employees do the opportunity and restructuring assessment without the need for $3.3 million extra in budget expenses?

Then, my second question, very briefly, is from the ministry statement of operations by program, which actually reflects in the estimates a net operating result of minus, or negative, $79 million.

Mr. Elsalhy: Page 304.

In essence, I'm interpreting this as: we're spending $79 million more than what we're bringing in, so to me it's like net loss or net shrinkage.

So the two questions. Why couldn't the 1,272 staff perform goal 1, and why do we need $3.3 million on top? Then my second question is: can the minister explain to us very briefly why it seems like this ministry, newly formed, is going to lose $79 million?

Thank you.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

10:00

The Chair: Anyone else? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I don't believe time's up; I'm quite sure we have a few minutes left still. Secondly, Mr. Chairman, I noticed that the minister was preparing an answer, and I think out of respect to the minister I certainly would like, rather than calling the question, to give him another few seconds to hear his answer to my hon. colleague's questions. So my question would be: if the minister would not mind, would he please answer the two questions that my colleague from Edmonton-McClung has asked.

Thank you.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Chairman, I will gladly get him those questions in writing.

Thank you.

The Chair: After considering the business plan and the proposed estimates for the Department of Restructuring and Government Efficiency for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases $258,071,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

On the vote for the offices of the Legislative Assembly for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, shall the vote be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the Committee of Supply rise and report the estimates of the Legislative Assembly and the estimates of the Department of Restructuring and Government Efficiency and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, for the following departments.

Support to the Legislative Assembly, expense, $42,740,000; office of the Auditor General, expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $18,304,000; office of the Ombudsman, expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $2,237,000; office of the Chief Electoral Officer, expense, $2,497,000; office of the Ethics Commissioner, expense, $419,000; office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner, expense, $4,336,000.

The main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, Restructuring and Government Efficiency: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $258,071,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:05 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, April 14, 2005 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 05/04/14
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Welcome.

Let us pray. We give thanks for the bounty of our province: our land, our resources, and our people. We pledge ourselves to act as good stewards on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a parliamentary delegation from Malaysia. Our Malaysian visitors are engaged in a dialogue on parliamentary reform, counterterrorism, regional security, and economic relations with Canadian parliamentarians. They are in Canada on the invitation of the Speaker of the Senate of Canada. Malaysia and Canada have much in common, including an economy rich in natural resources and membership in the Commonwealth. The mission is led by His Excellency Dr. Abdul Hamid, the President of the Senate of Malaysia, and his wife, Elham Hamid. The delegation includes Senator Wong, Deputy President of the Senate; Senator Benedict; Nora Hardin, spouse of Senator Benedict; Senator Osman; Senator Norsimah; Mr. Zamani, Secretary of the Senate; Mr. Salleh, secretary of the delegation. This delegation is accompanied by Mr. Mat Dris, the consul general of Malaysia, based in Vancouver; and Mr. Mahathir, vice-consul. Providing co-ordination and support are Mr. Tonu Onu and Ms Astrid Ratzel. I would ask that all honoured guests rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Assembly Kimberley Coulter and Ronda Bellerose, who are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. Both Kimberley and Ronda work for the Deputy Minister of Human Resources and Employment, and they do an excellent job. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly on behalf of the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo and Minister of Environment some 38 students and 9 adults from the Westview school in Fort McMurray. This is a grade 6 class. They're accompanied by helpers and parents Mr. Janes, Mr. Stephen, Mr. Hobbs, Mr. Boehmer, Mrs. Whittaker, and Mrs. Foster and their teachers, Miss Laura Lewis, Mrs. Laura Rogers, and Mrs. Pearl Field. I'm not sure which gallery they're in, but I would ask them to please rise and receive the cordial welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a large group of grade 6 students from the Lacombe Christian school. They're accompanied by some teachers and parents, and I'd like to name them: teachers Mrs. Stephanie Littel and Mr. Tim Van Doesburg. The parent helpers are Darcy Dyck, Claire Talsma, Henry Luymes, Carolyn Vanderhoek, Sherry Vink, Willy Hoogenboom, Joanne Walls, Betty Scholing, Angie Salomons, Anneke Kassies, Lisa Ellens, Kim Walls, and bus driver Nick DenOudsten. This is a large group. They're bright students, but they're also vocalists. I don't know if you heard them singing a while ago. They came with a whole stack of birthday cards for me, and they serenaded me in the rotunda. So this was a great thing from the students. I would like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of this House most of the board of directors of the hard-working Northwest Corridor Development Corporation, who are working to sustain and enhance the economic base and trade potential of the northwest corridor, linking the northwest to Prince Rupert and to the world. Today we have with us the chair, Mr. Jeff Burghardt; executive director Mr. Graham Kedgley; accompanied by boards members Mr. Wayne Ayling, the mayor of Grande Prairie; Mr. Mike Mihaly, the mayor of High Level; Graham Dallas from CN Rail; Marylin Davies, who is a councillor with Terrace; Jim Eglinski, a councillor from Fort St. John; Kelly Glazer from Prince George; Carolyn Kalebaba, who is a councillor with Northern Sunrise county and who I promised to introduce nicely; Don Krusel from Prince Rupert; Dave Menzies from Terrace; Bud Powell, a councillor from Dawson Creek; Ron Vanderlee from Terrace; and Ron Wiebe from Grande Prairie. They're seated in the members' gallery behind me, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly a constituent of Edmonton-Gold Bar, Mr. Merle Schnee. Mr. Schnee has been a resident of Edmonton-Gold Bar for over 40 years, is a former president of the firefighters. He is very active in the community and is a keen observer of all levels of government and the politics involved. Mr. Schnee is in the public gallery, and I would now ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am honoured to introduce four guests from the community of Warburg in my constituency. They own and operate a company called North End Oil Industries Ltd., and I would ask them to rise as I call their names and please remain standing: first of all, Arnold Bryant, Audrey Bryant, Kevin Hagel, and Bill Jewett, who is also a councillor for the village of Warburg. I'd ask the Assembly to please give them the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Mr. Justin VannPashak. Justin is a young man who resides in Vancouver but was born and raised here in Alberta. He's here to observe the Assembly's proceedings as well as visit family and friends in Edmonton. He also happens to be the grandson of my distinguished colleague the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. I would ask that he rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Deanna Fuhendorf. She is the project co-ordinator for the Fort Road & Area Business Association, a tireless worker and driving force behind the effort to revitalize the Fort Road area. One such initiative is the historical town area, which will greatly enhance Beverly-Clareview for residents and businesses. I applaud and support her efforts and hard work. Accompanying Mrs. Fuhendorf today is Mr. Tony Jones. Tony is my constituency assistant in my very busy office in Beverly-Clareview. I truly appreciate his efficiency and hard work in keeping things running smoothly. I would ask them both to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly an outstanding Edmontonian, Liz Iggulden. In 1984 Liz began working for the Old Strathcona Foundation, whose mandate, many of you will know, is to preserve and restore the historic assets of the area, making it a place where people would want to live and where businesses would prosper. She was hired on for a temporary two-week position way back then. Last month she retired after 21 years of service with the foundation, the last 10 years serving as its executive director. I want to take this opportunity to thank Liz for all her hard work and dedication and amazing service to the community of Old Strathcona. She is here today with her husband, Lee Iggulden. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly. Also, Mr. Speaker, here with Liz today to honour her accomplishments and wish her well in her retirement is Old Strathcona Foundation executive director Karen Tabor. They're all seated in the public gallery. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Are there others?

The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly my first group of students from the city of Fort Saskatchewan. They are 28 students from Win Ferguson school. They are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Joanne Simpson, Miss Carrie Sannerud; parent helpers Mrs. Sandra Smorenburg, Mr. Mark Smorenburg, Mrs. Heather Cnockaert, and Ms Mary Couper. I would ask them to all rise – I believe they're seated in the gallery opposite – and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Premiums

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government refuses to eliminate or even reduce health care premiums. These are a tax by any definition of the term, and they have soared in recent years, making a mockery of this Premier's claim that the only way taxes in Alberta are going is down. Likewise, this government takes more and more revenue from Albertans by allowing tax creep in the education portion of property taxes. My question is to the Premier. Will this Premier finally admit that health care premiums are a tax that hits middle- and lower income Albertans and small businesses the hardest?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition that we have removed the health care premiums for seniors. The premiums are a way to have people understand that there is a cost to health care. Having said that, the amount the government spends on health care aside from premiums, the small amount that people spend on health care premiums, is in excess of 9 billion – billion – dollars. That is a huge amount of money.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that health care premiums just go into general revenues, not into the health department, why does this government refuse to give all Alberta families a tax break of over a thousand dollars a year by eliminating health care premiums? Why refuse to do it?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, whether it goes into general revenue or not, it still finds its way to support health care. It's part of that $9.5 billion. That is a very large amount of money.

The opposition quite naturally are critical of the government.

An Hon. Member: Rightly so.

Mr. Klein: Not rightly so. It's their job. They have no other function, no other justification for living other than to criticize.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, then, I'll ask the Minister of Finance. How much do health care premiums cost to provincially funded organizations like school boards and regional health authorities and children's services authorities and the like?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd invite the hon. Leader of the Opposition to raise that question during estimates, and I'd be happy to bring the amount forward for him. But I want to reiterate that our expenditures in health far exceed our premiums, by about 8 or 9 to 1, obviously. We very deliberately in Budget 2005 did some very targeted tax reductions to low-income and middle-income persons and to seniors both on the school property tax side and on health premiums. I would also remind the hon. member that we have reduced taxes in this province by $2.5 billion over the last half a dozen years, and I would remind him that health premiums have not soared. In fact, they were frozen in this province until about two or three years ago, when there was an increase.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the Speech from the Throne, the Premier's televised address, and during the introduction of Bill 1 Albertans were given the impression that the Conservatives had actually turned over a new leaf, were taking it off autopilot and were about to build a world-class advanced education system. But in yesterday's budget the government made a modest 8 per cent down payment on its $3 billion access to the future fund without a commitment to make any future payments into that fund. To the Premier: why won't the government officially guarantee that it will continue to invest in the fund next year and each year after that?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it was in the budget speech. I don't know if the hon. member was paying attention or not, but it certainly was in the budget speech.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's very interesting to note what other people, especially those in the education field, say about Budget 2005, and I quote Carl Amrhein, who is the provost of the University of Alberta, where the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition is a postgraduate student.

Since my grad school days, I have not seen a government here in Canada or even in the U.S. announce a three-year funding package for post-secondary institutions that will accomplish so much . . . I haven't seen anything like this in my entire professional life. This has to be seen as bold and visionary. This is just a wonderful thing, not only for the people who run universities, but it has got to be seen as wonderful news for the parents who have been worrying about where their children will go.

The Speaker: The document will be tabled later for the benefit of all members.

Proceed.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given all that accomplishment, can the Premier explain how a 6 per cent increase in base operating grants will build a world-class system when our colleges and universities experienced that big an increase in their operating cost last year?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, to answer the hon. member's question, again I have to quote, and I quote from the president of the University of Calgary, who understands, by the way, these issues, as opposed to the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. Dr. Harvey Weingarten said:

"It will make a huge difference in the number of spots we have, in the quality of educational experience we can offer students, also in how affordable post-secondary education is," he said. "All those things are good."

Mr. Taylor: Again to the Premier, Mr. Speaker. This is not about good; this is about excellence. Can the Premier comment on the fact that students can generate as much income per student next year as the access to the future fund will by each taking three empty pop cans a day back to the bottle depot?

1:50

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that's the level to which the Liberals will sink: pop cans. But I take my lead from those in the teaching profession, especially in the postsecondary system. I quote from Bill Cade, the president of the University of Lethbridge, who said: never in my 27 years in Canada have I seen an increase of this amount.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

School Closures

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In March of this year a concerned parent from Sangudo had to go to court to stop the public school closure process at Sangudo high school. The local school board failed to provide the parents the information required by section 4 of the closure of schools regulation. In August 2004 this regulation was amended to mandate that school boards across the province provide to all parents information on their long-range capital plan. My first question is to the Minister of Education. Why did both the Department of Education and the Edmonton public school board district No. 7 use an outdated closure of schools regulation to force the closure of four good public schools in Edmonton?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't believe any schools have been forced to close, at least not to my knowledge. Perhaps the schools being referred to are still open. I'm not sure if he's named them, per se.

However, I would have to say this with respect to the regulation. There was a regulation change made last year under the ministry of learning, and as people who deal with legal matters would know, you should really consult the Alberta Gazette or the Queen's Printer to get the most up-to-date and most current regulations or regulation changes, similarly with statutes. Information that exists on websites, regardless of whose they are, always carries a disclaimer to that effect.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. The parents have consulted the Alberta Gazette. The Minister of Education has not.

How can the parents of the students enrolled in Wellington, North Edmonton, Terrace Heights, and Strathearn – these are all parents that are affected by these closures – make an informed decision when the board, the public board, has failed to provide them with all the information required by law?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not intimately familiar with exactly what documentation the Edmonton public school board provided to whom at what time. But there are specific regulations that govern what has to be provided, and I'm assuming that the Edmonton public school board has done that through one form or another. So that question would be a very good question to ask the Edmonton public school board, and I assume the hon. member will do that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Education: given that parents were not provided all the information they are entitled to by law to prepare for the school closure meetings, will the minister now immediately stop the school process of closures that was initiated by the Edmonton public school board district No. 7 on March 8 because they broke the law?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if anybody broke the law or not. I suspect that they haven't. The school board has its legal people who look after these matters. If they provided the type of information that is required surrounding a rumoured school closure or a rumoured set of school closures, those issues are dealt with at the local level, and I would seriously ask the hon. member to please put that question forward to the public school board. Until I see information to the contrary, there will be no need for me to intervene whatsoever.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's budget did little to reduce the burden on hard-working and middle-income Albertans. In fact, using the government's own figures, an Alberta family of four making $60,000 a year will pay $1,057 more in combined personal income and health premium taxes than the same family with the same income in Ontario. My question is to the Premier. Why won't the government accept the NDP opposition proposal to give a $1,056 tax break to middle-income Alberta families by scrapping health care premiums?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we don't take our lead from the NDs. That's for sure. As the hon. Minister of Finance and Deputy Premier pointed out, we chose to make targeted tax reductions that would benefit those who need tax reductions the most. The family employment tax credit has been enhanced. Seniors, of course, are now exempt from paying any health care premiums at all, and senior homeowners will receive relief from increases in school property taxes. We've gone a long way to address the needs of those who are classified as being low income in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, why is the government then punishing Alberta families with yearly incomes between $50,000 and $150,000 by forcing them to pay, according to the government's own figures, a thousand dollars a year more in combined personal income and health care premium taxes than the same families in either B.C. or Ontario?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to have the hon. Minister of Finance respond relative to the details, but I will say this as a preamble. If we had the tax system of the next most competitive province, which isn't Ontario – it is British Columbia, and he mentioned British Columbia – Albertans and Alberta businesses would be paying almost $7 billion more in taxes, or over $2,000 per person.

The Speaker: The hon. member. Hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker; I thought the Treasurer was going to respond.

Will the Premier admit that the reason middle-income earners pay more tax than those in some other provinces is because of Alberta's flat tax, which hits the middle class the hardest?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I just pointed out that if we had the same tax system as our most competitive province, British Columbia, Alberta taxpayers, including businesses and individuals, would be paying almost $7 billion more in taxes, or $2,000 per person.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Traumatic Injury Rate in the Aboriginal Community

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A study published by the Canadian Medical Association Journal stated that First Nations people in Alberta are four times more likely to suffer a traumatic injury. These injuries are often the result of motor vehicle collisions. My question is for the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. What is being done to address traffic safety issues in aboriginal communities?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, four times is really very traumatic when you think of the numbers. One of the recommendations in the McDermid report was to include and engage aboriginal leaders and elders in developing strategies to reduce highway traffic fatalities. Of course, the government accepted that recommendation. My department has been working with the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation to be able to see what we can do in terms of developing an Alberta traffic safety plan. What we're trying to do is make sure that we reflect all the importance of addressing the high rates of traumatic injury and death from motor vehicles.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what are some of the contributing factors causing these high rates of traffic-related injuries and fatalities in Alberta?

Ms Calahasen: Well, there are a number of contributing factors, Mr. Speaker. Number one is poor road conditions on reserves. Number two is the lower seatbelt usage rates. Number three is the higher number of passengers in vehicles. Number four is, of course, increased highway travel due to the remoteness of aboriginal communities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Solicitor General. Given that the same study found that First Nations in Alberta are also more likely to sustain injuries from stabbings and assaults, what steps is the Solicitor General taking to enhance policing services in these aboriginal communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We take these issues very seriously. We have 59 trained and skilled professional First Nations police officers that are serving on five different First Nations police services now in northern Alberta. These arrangements have been made in a tripartite agreement with Canada, the province of Alberta, and the First Nations band. We're providing these services through the First Nations themselves, who are taking a lead role regarding policing in their communities, and we are working on three new tripartite agreements with them. First Nations officers are expected to and do meet the same training standards as any other police officer in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Highwood.

Environment Budget

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Repeatedly Albertans have told this government, including the government's own pre-election survey, that environmental protection is a top priority, yet well below 1 per cent of the budget continues to be committed to Alberta Environment. Indeed, there's no ability to implement the vital Water for Life strategy despite commitments in the throne speech, the rural development strategy, and in this House. My question to the Premier: as the third top priority to Albertans why has there been no significant increase in proportion of funding to this ministry in over a decade?

2:00

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member says is not quite true. If he examines the budget documents carefully, he will find that our commitments to infrastructure, including the Water for Life strategy, are ostensibly in infrastructure. That will be spelled out by the Minister of Finance, and I'll have her comment further.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, there is, in fact, a significant amount of budget allocated to Water for Life. First, there are budget dollars in Environment's budget on the operational side, whether they're used for monitoring or watersheds and so on.

Secondly, there are significant capital dollars that are in this budget. I outlined some of those yesterday. I invite the hon. member to debate this issue in the House.

Thirdly, we have a Water for Life strategy. It's a tremendous strategy, and we have approved that as a government and accepted that. The Minister of Environment is working with his cabinet colleagues on putting together a very comprehensive work plan on all aspects of this very complex study.

Dr. Swann: My only supplemental, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: with a fivefold increase in applications for oil and gas development in this province in the past decade, how can anyone believe that Alberta Environment has the capacity to ensure compliance with environmental protection regulations without a commensurate increase in monitoring, compliance, and enforcement staffing?

Mr. Klein: This is a very interesting question, Mr. Speaker. It's one that the hon. Minister of Energy and myself addressed with representatives of the oil industry just recently. We need to revisit the whole issue of land reclamation in light of the number of wells now being proceeded with.

Mr. Speaker, it is not as simple as the hon. member points out. There are matters of reclamation that go to, well, the situation of the landowner being satisfied that the land has been reclaimed and that go to the situation of streamlining regulations and setting out rules, very specific rules, for the proper reclamation of land.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Cougar Management

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. The recent report of a cougar attack on one of my constituents in Highwood is just one more example of how common these predators seem to be now. With a largely urban population in Alberta many of those who go out to our backcountry are not aware of the dangers they may face. What is the minister's department doing to ensure that Albertans are aware of the threat of these animals?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There has been an increase in wildlife in the province of Alberta, and particularly we've seen a slight increase in cougar activity in our province. Our staff work with a cougar management provision as well as with our partners in Community Development in parks.

Because cougars can be found anywhere in this province and because they are available almost all 12 months of the year, particularly our fish and wildlife officers are out there trying to educate people year-round in terms of how to deal with cougars when you come upon them. We go into communities, and we do information sessions. We're there seven days a week, 24 hours a day, to make sure that when these cougar attacks exist, we're on the spot and look at the situation.

We're really relieved that the folks that ran into the cougar in the backcountry in the member's constituency only received a few scratches and that they're okay.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is also for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Does any of this management of cougars include relocating these predators to areas closer to the communities, which some rural Albertans have been alluding to?

Mr. Coutts: Definitely not, Mr. Speaker. We've heard these rumours as well, and we have to be clear here. We never relocate cougars in any way, shape, or form because there's a real chance of affecting their mortality when you relocate a cougar. But if we do need to move a cougar, we have expert biologists that go in and take public safety in mind when they do that. We have shown in cases in our history, in the past, that we would also close to human access areas where we felt there was a particular danger of cougar advances on human activity.

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, my final question is for the same minister. What guarantees do Albertans have that they will be safe in the backcountry?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, public safety is a key priority in wildlife management, everything from vehicle collisions to aggressive moose and elk and bears coming to garbage cans and that type of thing. Wildlife is a part of Alberta, and we can't guarantee their behaviour. Innovative education programs are necessary to make sure that industry and the public understand, and we have programs out there like Bear Smart and Living with Cougars. Many of our fish and wildlife officers are in communities, as I've said, to make sure with year-round programming in reducing encounters. We also manage vegetation on trails. We have programs that keep animals away from livestock in high-use areas. We're well served by our fish and wildlife officers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fetal alcohol spectrum disorder was identified as a medical condition in 1973. There is no cure, and the damage is irreversible. A child with FASD becomes an adult with FASD. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Given that many, many adults with FASD end up in the criminal justice system, has the department identified whether this is attributed to the lack of community support as an adult or a missed diagnosis when the individual was still a child?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that first of all the hon. member should realize that this province, Alberta, is leading edge on the issue of FASD, and I think that's very, very clear in all the work that we've done in the past.

I also would like to let her know that I have just taken over the chair of the Canada northwest fetal alcohol spectrum disorder partnership, and we're working on and researching some of the issues that she's brought forward.

FASD is a disease or an illness that this government is very, very vigilant on. We've got numerous pilot projects looking at what we're doing in regard to the children in this province plus the adults.

Ms Blakeman: I just wanted an answer to the question.

The second question to the same minister: would the province consider a pilot project for adult FASD specialized housing, group homes, with support workers and counselling services included in the model?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, as minister responsible for Children's Services it's something that we could look at. I would be pleased to work in partnership with my colleague the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. My final question to the same minister: what is the timeline for the implementation of the strategic plan dealing with FASD composed by the cross-ministry committee?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think you can get into timelines on this initiative. I think it's an ongoing process. To have any timelines, period – I can tell her, though, that we are working very, very hard on the issue of FASD and would be pleased to sit down and show her what we're doing and explain to her. We've just increased the budget of one of the centres of research by $2 million, and they're very, very excited about it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Rural Police Services

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With the tabling of the 2005-06 budget yesterday by the hon. Treasurer, I would like some clarifications on items in the Solicitor General's budget. My first question is to the Solicitor General. Rural municipalities have been calling for more front-line policing in their communities. How does the budget meet the West Yellowhead constituency's concern, especially in Edson and Hinton?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Budget 2005 was really an investment in the Solicitor General's department as in every other ministry in government. We know that the cost of policing puts an unusual strain on some of those municipalities that have a smaller tax base, and they don't have the funds that they can put into policing. Some of those smaller communities, like the hon. member mentioned, have their tax bases where up to 45 per cent goes directly to policing.

Thirty towns and communities with populations between 5,000 and 20,000 received significant increases. For the town of Hinton the new amount that they'll be receiving is $275,000 a year, which is almost double what they received last year. The community of Edson will receive about $262,000, which is more than twice the amount they received last year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. Can he tell the House where the additional police officers promised for rural Alberta will be placed and how soon they will be able to look after the streets and highways?

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Speaker, this government recognized the need for additional officers in rural Alberta, recognized the fact that criminal activity takes place in rural Alberta, as it does take place in every larger urban centre. The additional 100 RCMP officers will be located throughout the province. Community needs will be looked at with regard to criminal activity. Those decisions will be made by Assistant Commissioner Bill Sweeney. But we have also been reassured by Commissioner Zaccardelli in Ottawa that the RCMP will be providing those officers to Alberta as soon as they can. There are officers in training in Regina right now that will be coming to Alberta, and new classes as well will be starting up, with them coming to Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question: the production of and traffic in illegal drugs, particularly crystal meth, is a growing problem in rural Alberta communities. Can the Solicitor General tell this House what he is doing about this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In our budget announcement yesterday 60 additional officers, 20 RCMP officers and 40 municipal officers, will be funded through the Solicitor General's office to provide enforcement with regard to our integrated response to organized crime throughout the province. These will provide officers that can work in an intelligence-based operational format as well as the enforcement format, all in undercover positions that can be mobilized and utilized anywhere in the province, from Grande Prairie to Medicine Hat to Fort McMurray to Crowsnest Pass.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Horse-racing Renewal Program

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's budget produced another winning ticket for the horse-racing industry in the form of a $45 million lottery-funded subsidy. The horse-racing renewal program is entering into its fifth year and will have given out well over $150 million to the government's friends in the for-profit horse-racing industry. My questions are for the Minister of Gaming. How much longer will this government continue with this extraordinary subsidy for this one for-profit industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased he's so interested in my budget that he's bringing it up today as opposed to waiting till May 4 in the evening, when we will go into the details.

Briefly on this point, it's not a grant. It's an amount of money that could be earned at the racetracks. Depending on the amount of gaming activity at that racetrack, in addition to the money that goes back to the industry, 33 and a third per cent of the money earned at the racetracks in Calgary, Edmonton, Lethbridge, and Grande Prairie goes into the Alberta lottery fund, which benefits every single Albertan.

Mr. Tougas: Again to the Minister of Gaming: how can the minister justify giving more money to the benefit of the for-profit horse-racing industry than to the community facility enhancement program, which benefits all Albertans?

Mr. Graydon: As I just said, the 33 and a third per cent of the money earned at the racetrack goes to all Albertans through the Alberta lottery fund. As well, we need to know that there are between 7,000 and 8,000 people working full and part time in the racing industry. As well, this industry contributes $300 million a year to the Alberta economy.

Mr. Tougas: Same minister: given that this government is supposedly out of the business of being in business, why does this not apply to the horse-racing industry in Alberta?

Mr. Graydon: It's a rural-based industry. It goes all the way from the people who raise hay and grain to the people that breed horses to the jockeys that ride the horses. I think the hon. member should saddle up and move on to a different topic.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Capital Investment in Schools

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government's touting of its increase in infrastructure spending is misleading and disingenuous to say the least. When you look at the actual numbers, capital investment is being cut quite severely in many key areas. Capital investment on schools is down 10 per cent compared to last year, capital investment on hospitals is down 30 per cent, and capital investment on postsecondary facilities is down more than 50 per cent. My question is to one of these ministers over there; I'm not sure. Maybe the Minister of Education: he's here. Given the threatened closure of dozens of schools throughout the province, why was the capital investment for new or renovated schools cut by 10 per cent in yesterday's budget?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation would like to comment on this at some later stage, but let me say this in a general sense specific to the school question, at least that part of the question that has been asked. We are looking at a new way of providing funding for new school construction or for major school renovation projects or for additions to schools, be that through the use of portables or modules or other forms of temporary accommodation for students. What we have found over the last several years is that because of the tremendously fast way in which costs related to steel, for example, and gyproc and labour and so on are increasing, it's very difficult to provide one single budget item at the beginning of a budget year without having to amend it several times later on. So we're looking at moving to a new way of doing that, perhaps on a quarterly basis, and the first announcements in those respects will likely come out in June of this year.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, it means this budget doesn't mean anything.

My question to the minister, then, is simply this: given that over half the schools in Edmonton are over 50 years of age, how can it make sense to cut 10 per cent from this year's budget for capital investment in schools? How does that make any sense at all?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't have the exact figure in mind, but I think it's something like $644 million will be provided over the next two, three, or four years for the types of school projects that I just indicated. I am sympathetic, as all members here would be, to schools that are aging and to the fact that there are declining enrolments in many of those areas whereas in other parts of the province there are some rapidly escalating student population counts. We're doing our best to come forward with a new formula that will address those realities.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the new reality is that we cut 10 per cent from the budget. How can we, then, Mr. Minister, have new schools in Edmonton and fix up the ones we have with a 10 per cent cut in the budget?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation along with the Minister of Municipal Affairs and myself and the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs attended a very interesting press conference this morning at which the announcement was made of how the $3 billion in brand new monies are going to be rolled out to all municipal districts in the province of Alberta. That's all part of a $9.2 billion capital infrastructure plan, and schools are going to be included within that bigger picture very soon.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Climate Change

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Although they likely won't be around much longer, yesterday the federal government announced their long-awaited plan for implementing the Kyoto accord. My constituents were happy to see that it was taken out of the budget documents; however, we still have a lot of questions. My first question is for the Minister of Energy. How does this federal plan address the large final emitters, many of whom are industries based here in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to first state that this government has been the only province, really, that has taken a very proactive approach along with industry in trying to address and find solutions to climate change. In that light, though, I must state that the Kyoto accord continues to remain a flawed agreement, and this implementation plan of the federal government continues to remain a flawed methodology of application in trying to resolve the problem.

With respect to the large final emitters, they have reduced the megatonnes emission question to 45 megatonnes – I'd say that's at least in the light of trying to find a practical approach – yet only about 20 per cent of that commitment can be put towards a technology solution. The solution is all about technology. It's technology, technology, technology.

Rev. Abbott: Again to the Minister of Energy: given that the federal plan talks about a number of funds, including the climate fund, the partnership fund, and the GHG technology investment fund, what difference will those funds make?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of funds which are being outlined, potentially $10 billion worth of funds, money that is going to come from somewhere to implement this plan. One of the funds mentioned was a technology fund. That'll be upwards of about $2 billion. That is at least in the direction we would suggest that it ought to go. Companies then can apply to that fund with respect to their applications and solutions to climate change.

There's a climate fund, however, that's the largest fund, probably in the magnitude of $5 billion to $6 billion, and it remains focused on hot air. That is their solution: a lot more hot air.

Rev. Abbott: Sad.

Mr. Speaker, my final question is also to the Minister of Energy. Given that the federal plan calls for the automobile industry to have a voluntary approach to climate change, is this something that the oil and gas industry can also look forward to?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, an application, once again, very inconsistent across the industries in this country. We do support that there ought to be a voluntary approach with the auto sector. I think that is a right. Those industries in that area have the best understanding and expertise to address the question in their provinces. However, when it comes to the energy sector the expertise, the regulatory environment, the ability to address the question remains in Alberta, and the federal government's approach is to enact the Canadian environmental protection act and to somehow, through their own regulation, regulate and take control of an issue on which they don't even have the expertise.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Securities Commission

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance continues to try and bury the serious concerns regarding the enforcement of regulations at the Alberta Securities Commission. She continues to take the advice of the part-time commissioners, who are investigating their own work and actions. My question is to the Minister of Finance. On Tuesday in this Assembly the minister inferred that it was acceptable for one or two enforcement breaches at the Alberta Securities Commission given the number of files that they deal with. Is the minister, in fact, aware of one or two enforcement breaches?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I'll be happy to take that information under advisement on behalf of the Minister of Finance.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then to the same minister: how many enforcement breaches would be considered acceptable at the Alberta Securities Commission?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I would give the same answer as to the first.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why is the minister afraid to follow the lead of Ontario, where when the Securities Commission came under controversy, an independent inquiry was appointed? Will she call an inquiry into these allegations?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, our Minister of Finance is a very brave and courageous individual that acts to protect all individuals in this area of securities regulation, and she will continue to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

B.C./Alberta Transportation Issues

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In northern Alberta there has been a significant increase in oil and gas activity, forestry, wood products, tourism, agriculture value-added products. This has taxed not only our road infrastructure but our weak and deteriorating railway system as well, with the majority of our exports in northern Alberta destined for the west coast. We are therefore required and should be encouraged to co-ordinate with the B.C. government to expedite our transportation schedules. My question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. What is the government doing to increase the export opportunities for our industries shipped for the west coast?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, trade, of course, is very vital to Alberta's continued economic well-being, and even though 90 per cent of our export trade is with the United States, as we look around at how the world is changing, especially the increase in value-added products and the growth in the Asian economy, we have to seize those opportunities. One way to seize those opportunities is to increase port capacity. We are working with the B.C. government. In fact, we're jointly co-sponsoring a northern corridor study, and that information will be coming forward to both governments as both governments are intensely interested in expanding port capacity.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, my first supplemental to the same minister: what is the government doing to co-ordinate transportation policies and regulations between the two provinces?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this had been on the top of the discussion list between the two cabinets, B.C. and Alberta, in the last three meetings. Both Premiers instructed ministers in charge to come back with a plan as to how we will continue to harmonize transportation regulations between the two provinces. We have moved, small steps but measurable. I believe the largest accomplishment of the two governments is a joint vehicle inspection station that will be on highway 1 at Golden. Rather than the truck stopping on the Alberta side and being inspected and then driving across the border to the B.C. side, we will now have one station, jointly manned. It will save this province about $3 million in capital costs and about $300,000 to $400,000 in manpower costs in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much. My final supplemental, again to the minister: what investment does Alberta have in the port at Prince Rupert, and what are the future plans?

Mr. Stelmach: The file in Prince Rupert is rather complex, but very quickly: our original investment was in the area of about $106 million; I believe one of the loans with respect to the grain port sits in our GRF at about a dollar. There are other issues there in terms of the ownership of the port authority in Prince Rupert, the grain-handling facility, and those, of course, in Vancouver, and we are working with all the parties involved. I believe there are about four grain-handling companies. I'll definitely have the Minister of Finance give a much more detailed answer to the member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Government Efficiency

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What happened to this Conservative government's less-is-more mentality? This government has bloomed from 17 ministries in 1993 to a bloated 24 in 2004. The last addition was ironically created to make government more efficient. An expanded government is not an efficient government. To the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency: can the minister please explain how adding seven new ministries since 1993 and more than 1,000 new employees to the public payroll this year alone has made this government more efficient?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, in all the different articles you read out there, we run the smallest government in the country, the most efficient government in the country. We've got the busiest industry in the country, we've got the highest rate of population growth in the country, and therefore we are running the most competent government in the country.

Mr. Elsalhy: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency commit to making the government so efficient that he risks restructuring himself out of a job?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we have 24 ministries in this government, and they're all very, very competent. Hopefully, we can get so efficient that I can sit with my feet up.

Thank you.

Mr. Elsalhy: Mr. Speaker, given that this ministry is spending over $3.3 million to assess opportunities for restructuring, how many millions does the minister promise to return to Alberta taxpayers through more efficient government?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I'd love to be able to return all kinds of money to every Albertan there is, but we all know that we have to look after the business of government.

International Delegations

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, for our province to grow economically and culturally, it's important for Alberta to develop and maintain close relations with other regions, other provinces, and countries around the world. My first question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. I understand that there's a delegation from the Chinese province of Shandong in Edmonton. What is the nature of the delegation's visit?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a 26-member delegation visiting Alberta. They're here to reaffirm a memorandum of understanding that was signed some time ago between Shandong University, the University of Alberta, the Alberta government, and the government of the province of Shandong, mostly centred around exchange of students, some technology. We hope that this relationship will lead to even bigger and better relationships with the province of Shandong.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you. My first supplemental and final question is to the same minister. Does Alberta have many types of these delegations come to our province?

Mr. Stelmach: Actually, Mr. Speaker, that is a very good question, the reason being that Alberta is certainly much more prominent on the world scene. Today the Speaker of this Assembly, yourself, hosted a very large Malaysian delegation. Roughly about 60 to 65 delegations visit Alberta on an annual basis, but I expect that number to increase in the future. As the province grows in size, we will see much more interest in what Alberta has to offer in terms of trade and investment.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, in just a few seconds from now I'll call upon the first of six.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Sara Renner
Thomas Grandi

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand today and recognize an extraordinary couple from the constituency of Banff-Cochrane. Canmore's Sara Renner and Thomas Grandi are both remarkable athletes, and this past ski season they proved to be among the best not only in Canada but in the world in each of their respective sports.

Sara, a two-time Olympian and Canadian cross-country skiing veteran, excelled in both distance and sprint events and started the season by claiming a gold medal at the Haywood Canada Cup pursuit race in Canmore. Thomas also had an incredible season as a giant slalom skier and captured World Cup gold medals not once but twice this year, in Italy and Austria. His win in Italy gave Canada its first victory in 10 years and was the first in the discipline by a Canadian male in the 38-year history of the World Cup circuit. Following on her husband's successes, Sara went on to win a bronze medal at the world sprint event in Germany, earning Canada's first-ever medal at the world Nordic ski championships.

What a breakthrough season for both: Sara's first world podium and Thomas's first two World Cup wins. The excitement back home after each of these wins was immediate and contagious.

Besides being inspirational to Albertans young and old with their athletic endeavours, Sara and Thomas are also inspirational with their community work. In fact, Sara donated all of the prize money she earned at the Canada Cup towards relief efforts for victims of the tsunami tragedy in south Asia.

Mr. Speaker, Sara and Thomas are great role models for our youth, wonderful ambassadors for our province, and true heroes to the Bow Valley residents. Please join me in congratulating these two exceptional athletes and individuals and wishing them well as they train for the upcoming season, World Cups, and 2006 Olympics.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Legislature Committees Structure

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we look back into the last century and celebrate Alberta's history, we must look at the importance that most of the governments in our history placed on select standing committees. There were many established for different areas of policy. Indeed, in the first days of this session we paid homage in this Assembly to former members who had passed on in the last year. In our dedications to these former members, including many who were in opposition at their time of service, we remembered their membership on standing committees like Agriculture, Education, and Railways, Telephones, and Irrigation.

The governments of those days valued contributions from all viewpoints even if they didn't agree with them and obviously considered multiparty committees as fundamental to democracy. Indeed, that remains the practice on much of this continent.

I will draw attention to the process in British Columbia. The Legislature of B.C. website clearly states that these types of committees are creatures of the House. There, they do not give these over to one-party caucus committees. These committees are comprised strictly of members of the Legislature, usually excluding the Premier and other cabinet ministers, and the membership mirrors as closely as possible party representation in the Legislative Assembly.

Some of the committees there are Health, Education, finance, and other committees. In these committees matters are allowed a more detailed and thorough examination than in the larger, more formal environment of the House. Opposition involvement ensures as full a spectrum of analysis as possible.

I submit that this process is responsible, representative, and speaks to the fundamental operation of this democratic Assembly and must be reinstated. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Project Discovery

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. February 13, 1947, was a day that transformed Alberta and propelled our great province into the unimagined prosperity that we enjoy today. Today I rise to recognize Project Discovery, an expansion to the Leduc No. 1 oil interpretive centre, which is located one kilometre south of the town of Devon at the site of the Leduc No. 1 discovery well.

The Leduc/Devon Oilfield Historical Society, which is a partnership supported by the town of Devon, Leduc county, and the city of Leduc as well as industry and a host of volunteers, built an interpretive centre to capture the history of energy development in Alberta. The centre has evolved from its humble beginnings, and now, with $1 million in funding from the Alberta lottery fund, a planned expansion called Project Discovery will be completed to highlight the ongoing evolution of the energy industry. This expansion will assist in increasing our opportunity to educate the public in understanding the value of Alberta's energy industry to the province and to all Albertans. As well, the expansion will be a great addition to the outstanding tourist attractions in the area, enhancing and promoting the local economy.

I would also like to recognize some key individuals who were instrumental in developing and maintaining the interpretive centre: Dan Claypool, Gord McMillan, and Don Hunter. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, Don Hunter is the son of the Leduc No. 1 driller, Vern "Dry Hole" Hunter. Along with these individuals, this project could not have been accomplished without the support of the Alberta lottery fund.

Hats off to the members of the Leduc/Devon Oilfield Historical Society for their dedication and hard work in telling a great Alberta story. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Old Strathcona Foundation

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thirty years ago in my constituency an area known as Old Strathcona was plagued by urban decay. Historic buildings had been run down, and the neighbourhood had a terrible reputation across the city. On November 13, 1974, the Old Strathcona Foundation was incorporated to turn things around. By the mid-1980s the foundation had begun to work with various partners to transform the neighbourhood into the vital and dynamic community we know and love today. They were overseeing the restoration of historic buildings and the development of a pedestrian-friendly retail district that is the envy of the communities across the city.

The foundation has also played an integral role in the development of Edmonton's famous Old Strathcona Farmers' Market, the Fringe festival, McIntyre park, End of Steel park, the Silly Summer Parade, the merchants' association, and the Whyte Avenue mural. I have a particular fondness for the Silly Summer Parade, Mr. Speaker, in which I have participated for a number of years. When else do I have the opportunity to masquerade as Jimi Hendrix and Elvis Presley?

I have been truly fortunate to have the Old Strathcona Foundation as neighbours to my constituency office. The staff and volunteers there have always been helpful in keeping me up to date with what's happening in the neighbourhood and have always met me with a smile and a warm greeting.

One staff member in particular stands out in my mind. Liz Iggulden, who is now retiring after 20 years' service to the foundation, has been a hard worker, dedicated community activist, and good friend. I want to thank Liz and the entire Old Strathcona Foundation for all they have done for the neighbourhood and the city.

I would ask my colleagues in this House to join with me to truly wish Liz all the best in what I know will be an active and enjoyable retirement. Thank you, Liz.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

National Wildlife Week

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. National Wildlife Week is being celebrated across Canada this week. Protecting Alberta's natural spaces for wildlife has been a priority for the past 100 years. Parks and other areas protected by law conserve important habitat for many threatened or endangered plant and animal species. Of this, more than 12,000 square kilometres protect core woodland caribou habitat.

Hay-Zama Lakes wild-land provincial park is another protected area that conserves important habitat for the migrating waterfowl. During the fall migration 130,000 lesser snow geese, 47,000 Canada geese, and 200,000 ducks have been recorded at this site.

I would like to recognize all the dedicated provincial government staff who do an outstanding job of managing Alberta's lands, forests, fish, wildlife, and parks and protected areas. Natural resource management requires a balanced approach to ensure all values and uses are considered, including economic, environmental, and social values.

Over our last century science and technology have come a long ways, and at every stage Alberta has continued to use the best and latest science in managing our natural resources. Our centennial year brings to mind the fact that Alberta has been committed to managing our resources for the long-term benefits of Albertans.

Albertans have demonstrated their strong support over the years. It is the Alberta way to emphasize a collaborative approach to protecting and managing our natural resources. Albertans have worked co-operatively to protect and preserve wildlife. Alberta is indeed fortunate to have many residents who serve as co-stewards for the sustainability of our wildlife.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Alberta Centennial Multicultural Gala Night
East Coulee Spring Festival

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Recently my wife, Heather, and I had the privilege of attending two cultural events, one in an urban setting and the other in a rural.

On Monday, March 28, we had the privilege of attending Alberta's Centennial Multicultural Gala Night at the Jack Singer Concert Hall in Calgary. I wish to recognize in particular the efforts of the India Canada Association, the Southern Alberta Heritage Language Foundation, and the Calgary Federation of Filipino Associations for organizing such a colourful and entertaining evening of awe-inspiring cultural music and dance. The program included performances from talented artists of various ages from the Aboriginal, Ukrainian, Irish, East Indian, Chinese, Filipino, Colombian, Tibetan, and African communities.

It is through important events such as this that Albertans who have originated from across the globe can come together and share their rich heritage and traditions and celebrate the cultural diversity that contributes to the character of our great province. Congratulations to all the hard-working, dedicated organizers, volunteers, and performers on a tremendously successful event showcasing Calgary's vibrant cultural kaleidoscope.

This past weekend we once again had the pleasure of attending the annual spring festival in East Coulee, which is just east of Drumheller. East Coulee was once a thriving coal mining town, which had a population of over 3,000 people, primarily employed by the Atlas coal mine. The approximately 200 remaining residents, led by a variety of dedicated local volunteers including Marcel and Bev Deschenes, Antonia and Andy DeJong, Linda and Robin Digby, Vivian Deitz, Gillian Murray, and Lynn Van Kleef to name a few, organized this year's musical event. Numerous talented musicians from throughout Alberta volunteered their time to raise funds for the East Coulee school museum and the Atlas mine wash house. Alberta author Lawrence Christmas through his book CoalDust Grins, which immortalized the history of coal mining immigrants who came to Canada, serves as an inspiration for this annual event.

Among the talented local performers was the band Willow Creek, led by Don Howard. The show stealers, however, were five-year-old Tyler Ferguson, eight-year-old Jordan Ferguson, six-year-old Rachel Robinson, eight-year-old Jesse Robinson, and six-year-old Kaylie Peak. Three generations of the Peak family were represented, including Kaylie's mom, Velma Peak, and her granddad, Ed Peak.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, by way of an historical vignette today I'm going to tell you something that's really, really odd, and it may be of particular interest to the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul. On this day in 1898 a sailor by the name of Charles Walker, who was a mate on a sailing ship, the Orca, arrived at what was then known as the Saddle Lake Indian reserve, which is located near St. Paul, after a walk of 2,500 miles to report the loss of his ship on the west coast of British Columbia.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and present a petition from good Albertans from the communities of Kikino, Enoch, Wetaskiwin, Morinville, Bowden, and Edmonton. It reads:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

There are 102 on this petition.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 12 through 23.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday I will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 14 through 26 inclusive, noting, of course, that 14 through 18 inclusive were left over from this previous Monday.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the Minister of Finance.

Bill 37

Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2005

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I request leave on behalf of the hon. Deputy Premier and Minister of Finance to introduce Bill 37, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2005. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

In short, Mr. Speaker, Bill 37 amends the Fiscal Responsibility Act so that debt retirement funds can only be used for that purpose and to increase the nonrenewable resource revenue that can be used for budget purposes from $4 billion up to $4.74 billion. This bill also amends the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research Act, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research Act, and the Alberta Heritage Scholarship Act to clarify the transfer of money into these particular funds.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 37 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table five copies of the report completed by the internationally recognized London Economics group which concludes that Alberta's move to an open, competitive electricity market puts the province in an enviable position amongst the provinces. The report, commissioned by the Independent Power Producers Society of Alberta, was undertaken to review residential electricity rates across Canada while taking into account real factors, not considering comparisons by other organizations.

The price analysis suggests that the rates in other provinces would be 25 to 30 per cent higher if consumers were charged the full value of electricity they use and that the rates in those provinces can be expected to rise much more rapidly than those in Alberta over the next decade.

Copies of the report will now be tabled. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today before the House and table five copies of the Surface Rights Board and Land Compensation Board annual report for 2004.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings, and I'm going to anxiously await the chance to read the hon. Minister of Energy's tabling. My first tabling is a letter I wrote on Friday, April 8, 2005, to the hon. Minister of Education. This is a letter indicating that the closure process for the Edmonton public schools is not in accordance with the closure of schools regulation 238-97, consolidated up to 170/2004.

The second tabling I have is a parent- and community-based solution to maintain the long-term viability of Strathearn school. It's a report to the Edmonton public school board of trustees. It's prepared by the Strathearn Community School Parent Advisory Association, and it is written by Deanna Dixon, president of the Strathearn Community School Parent Advisory Association.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have seven letters to table today from deeply concerned representatives of a variety of hunting and conservation organizations who call upon the government to re-evaluate its position on the interim Métis harvesting agreement, which they feel far exceeds the points of the Powley case and does not take the best interests of Alberta's wildlife into account.

The first two are from Tom Foss of the Alberta Bowhunters Association, followed by letters from Dr. Gerrow of the Rocky Mountain Elk Foundation, Brian Rufiange of the Spruce Grove Fish & Game Association, Kevin Williams of World Class Alberta Trophy Outfitters Ltd., Pete Mountain of the Alberta chapter of the Foundation for North American Wild Sheep, and, lastly, Ron Watt of the Southern Alberta Bowhunters Association.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table an op-ed piece written by Ricardo Acuna and Diana Gibson of the Parkland Institute. The piece argues that the budget tabled yesterday by this government does nothing to promote a sustainable and equitable Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk on behalf of the hon. Mrs. Forsyth, Minister of Children's Services: pursuant to the Social Care Facilities Review Committee Act the Social Care Facilities Review Committee annual report 2003-04.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Subject to Standing Order 7(5) I would ask the Government House Leader to please share the projected government business for the week of April 18 to 21.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd be happy to do that. On Monday, April 18, in the afternoon we will begin with private members' business, including Written Questions and Motions for Returns, followed by Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders. On Monday evening at 8 we'll continue with private members' business. At 9 p.m. we will go to Committee of Supply, which will be the department of aboriginal affairs – that's day 2 of 24 – followed by second reading of Bill 37, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2005; Bill 35, Employment Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2005; and Bill 39, Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2005; and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

On Tuesday afternoon in Committee of Supply we will review the Department of Advanced Education as day 3 of 24. At 8 p.m. we will go to Committee of Supply and look after Seniors, followed at 10 p.m. by Committee of the Whole on Bill 37, followed by second reading of Bill 35 and Bill 29, the anticipated Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Amendment Act, 2005, and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

Wednesday afternoon will be dedicated to Committee of Supply, the Department of Energy. Wednesday evening at 8 will be Committee of Supply for Sustainable Resource Development. That would be day 6 of 24. At 10 p.m. we will proceed with third reading of Bill 37 and then with Committee of the Whole on Bill 1, Access to the Future Act, and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday, April 21, in the afternoon Committee of Supply will deal with the Ministry of Finance, followed by third reading of Bill 37, and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate April 12: Dr. Taft]

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to rise to reply to the budget as presented by the Minister of Finance yesterday and, frankly, to take an opportunity to present some of our own ideas for the budget.

I've come to think of Albertans as sitting on this amazing treasure chest of wealth quite unprecedented or unparalleled in the world. I've often said – and I'll keep saying it over and over – that this is probably the most valuable piece of real estate per capita, certainly, on the entire planet. Nobody in this world has the opportunities that we have here.

A few weeks ago I was going through a list of the metropolitan areas in Canada and the United States with populations over a million people, and there are a total of 55 metropolitan areas in Canada and the U.S. with populations over a million. The very, very bottom of this list, the last one to make it on, is Edmonton, and the second-last is Calgary. So we have the two smallest populations of any cities in North America over a million; we just make it over that threshold. I studied the list for a while, and I realized that if you were to take every single Albertan and put them into one city, people from Rainbow Lake and Fort Chip and Elkwater and Milk River and everywhere in between including our big cities of Calgary and Edmonton and they were all in one city, we would only rank number 18 of cities in North America. That helps put it in perspective.

If you look at North America, we have a province here with a total population roughly equivalent to metro Seattle, yet we sit here on such wealth. We sit here with huge forests, a strong agricultural sector – struggling now but still strong, fundamentally – tourism, a hard-working, well-educated workforce. We live in peace and security next to the richest market in the world, the United States, and on top of all of that there are petroleum reserves that rival Saudi Arabia's, all of that divided among a population about the size equivalent to greater Seattle. Unbelievable opportunity.

It's our responsibility as legislators to make the most out of that opportunity, to recognize it for what it is and to steward it for future generations. I didn't feel or see that kind of spirit in yesterday's budget, although I'm sure the intent is good.

Some of the things we would do if it was our opportunity to present a budget, Mr. Speaker. First of all, put forward a surplus policy, put it down in black and white, and commit to it over the long term. Build up the heritage trust fund by taking 35 per cent of all surpluses and putting them into the heritage fund without capping it. Set up a second endowment fund and put 35 per cent of all budget surpluses into that and dedicate that to building the best postsecondary education system we can imagine. There's no reason that in this province we can't have the best technical institutes and colleges and universities in the country and, indeed, on the continent. Take another 25 per cent and put it into a capital account to address infrastructure. Finally, recognize the role and the importance of the arts and humanities to a fruitful and rewarding life, putting 5 per cent of surpluses into an endowment fund for the humanities, social sciences, and arts up to $500 million. I didn't see any sense of that plan in yesterday's budget, Mr. Speaker.

On the health care front. Health care consistently is the first concern of Albertans and of Canadians. What we would aim to achieve in our budget would be a high-quality, sustainable public health care system based on bold innovation and steady management within a public framework. An accessible health care system is one of the top priorities for the Liberal opposition. We would like to bring in, we would propose to bring in a more extensive public pharmacare program, increase the number of residency training positions, proceed decisively with the new southeast Calgary hospital, eliminate health care premiums, and then some bold innovations because this isn't all about treating sick people. In fact, we need more and more to emphasize how to keep people healthy. So you would have seen a Liberal government here support a much stricter province-wide smoking ban in the workplace and taking tobacco tax revenues and putting them into a wellness fund to support building a healthier society.

We'd establish an independent health auditor to ensure that our health care system delivers value for money, a health auditor focused on asking the questions: what is the best way to deliver orthopaedic surgery or the best way to deliver cataract surgery or long-term care services, taking it and giving it a sound basis of a value-for-money audit in our health care system? Frankly, we would require all major policies and funding decisions to undergo a health impact assessment to help us identify and plan for all major decisions of the government and understand their impact on our health care system.

We'd invest heavily and boldly in our education system, right from kindergarten to postgraduate studies. We'd introduce optional junior kindergarten and full-day kindergarten, with a special emphasis on children at risk. We'd follow the recommendations of the Learning Commission and decrease class sizes, eliminate the need for school fees for education basics, and return to the day when we and pretty well all MLAs went to school, where school fees were to cover extras like field trips, not to cover some of the basics. We'd plan for an orderly renewal of existing school buildings, something that we don't see at all in the current budget, and support community schools.

Of course, we would establish, as I've already said, an endowment fund for postsecondary education with the vision of making the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, the University of Lethbridge, Athabasca University, and all the colleges and technical institutes rank among the very best in the country.

The municipalities would also get particular attention in our budget. One of our first priorities would be to address infrastructure problems by providing $3 billion to municipalities to address infrastructure needs, and I was glad to see that in yesterday's budget. We'd like to develop a three-year rolling grant funding framework to allow municipalities to plan their infrastructure well in advance so that we don't have this year-to-year, on-again, off-again game of unstable funding for municipalities. I think that, very importantly, we'd like to increase the local autonomy and create some new tax room for municipalities.

The environment also consistently ranks as a top priority for Albertans. We need to be protecting Alberta's natural resources, and that's of all kinds: water, petroleum, coal, wildlife, land, and landscapes. Some of the measures we would introduce include establishing an arm's-length standing committee to develop a province-wide water management strategy, implementing strategies to protect Alberta's remaining wetlands, reviewing water-intensive industries to ensure that they're using the best available technologies. I suspect there are dramatic improvements to be made if we really put our spirit into it. We'd phase out, more ambitiously than is currently proposed, the use of fresh water for oil well injections, and we would – we would – prohibit bulk water sales of Alberta water.

There are other things we'd like to do to build forward on our environment: supporting aggressive research into renewable energy sources – wind, biomass, solar energy – supporting the growth of environmental technology companies; helping to diversify the economy as well as protecting the environment. We'd like to create a revolving fund for energy efficiency to help Albertans retrofit their homes, increase their energy efficiency; protect Alberta parks and special places from environmental damage; and halt the current plan to sell off public lands. We'd design a comprehensive land use policy for all public lands in Alberta based on principles of conservation biology, and we'd fund and publicly share a comprehensive scientific study to determine the impact of sour gas flaring on human and animal health.

Mr. Speaker, those are some of our ideas that we'd like to bring forward in a budget. We'd like to see some bold and dramatic plans here. What I would love to see from any government here and any party would be statements like: making Alberta's universities the best in the country or making Alberta the most energy-efficient jurisdiction in Canada or even in the world within a decade or making Alberta's population the healthiest population in the world.

Those are the kinds of lofty goals and ambitions that motivate and drive Albertans, and those are failing us here.

The thing about approaching these in a comprehensive manner, Mr. Speaker, is that it's not either/or. It's not that we invest in health at the expense of education or invest in education at the expense of protecting the environment or invest in the environment at the expense of our cities. Indeed, a comprehensive plan addressing all of these would create a virtuous circle in which higher education levels contribute to better health, stronger communities contribute to better health and a healthier environment, a healthier, cleaner environment creates a healthier population, and on and on, so we can have benefits across the board. This is not an either/or proposition. This is a way of building a strong, robust, well-educated, healthy, coherent community in Alberta for the future.

That's the kind of vision I would like to see and that my colleagues in the Liberal caucus, I think, have for Alberta. There were baby steps taken in that direction in yesterday's budget, but I'd like now, Mr. Speaker, to raise some of the specifics in response to the budget presented yesterday.

There is no long-term plan to seize Alberta's opportunity. We are on the cusp, maybe on the apex of remarkable opportunity here, and it feels like we're letting it slip through our hands. It really does. There are some good initiatives in the budget, and we're happy that some of our ideas have been borrowed and adapted. That's fine. We're all here, ultimately, to advance the quality of public life in this province, I'm sure.

We're pleased to see issues or ideas like increases to AISH levels appearing – and we look forward to the announcement tomorrow on the details – increases in health spending, inflation-proofing the heritage fund, and investing in municipal infrastructure. Those are all good ideas, but they are not enough on their own to inspire confidence. This feels – and I give credit for a good line to the New Democrats – like we're sleepwalking into the next century with this budget.

Mr. Mason: Now I have to change my speech.

Dr. Taft: Well, you can borrow from us.

My disappointments with the budget. One of them, Mr. Speaker, was the postsecondary education endowment fund. I was really looking forward to something clear and dramatic there, something that would really make a difference, and I was, I must say, sorely disappointed. That was my greatest disappointment yesterday.

The headlines for weeks, perhaps months even, had trumpeted a $3 billion postsecondary endowment fund, and what was delivered was a payment, a down payment, of a quarter of $1 billion, that when the numbers are crunched will produce $11 million a year for the entire postsecondary education system, Mr. Speaker. Let's put that in perspective. That would not have covered the increase in the electricity bill faced by the University of Alberta two years ago, not the whole bill but even the increase. That wouldn't have covered the increase in their power bill, much less have made a significant contribution to the rise of quality across the postsecondary education system. That was a real disappointment.

To make matters worse, as we read the budget documents – and I hope we're corrected – the government actually cut the capital budget, indeed slashed the budget for capital spending for postsecondary institutions in half. So we're left wondering: where will institutions house those 15,000 promised new spaces in the postsecondary system within the next three years? Are those real spaces, Mr. Speaker? We're left wondering if they aren't virtual spaces, if we're not actually going to see home offices and base-ments counted as spaces because students are having to log on and learn through the Internet instead of getting a direct, in-place education at a campus somewhere.

So there were some real disappointments with postsecondary education, and as I say, I hope that as we go through the numbers and the details, we're proven wrong on those, but so far it doesn't deliver what it ought to deliver, Mr. Speaker.

On the K to 12 education side clearly there were some things to be pleased about, depending on how the details work out. If it's actually a net gain of 435 new teachers this year and another 580 the next year, it's a good thing, clearly, as long as it's a net gain.

Reducing class sizes so our kids have space to learn in is something we've supported, and aiming at achieving the objectives of the Learning Commission is commendable. We support that, and we'll work with the government to do that.

But infrastructure spending, Mr. Speaker, as we read the figures, is down for schools $20 million from last year. It doesn't add up. Where are these teachers going to go? Where are the students going to go? How are we going to reduce classroom sizes when we're not investing in school infrastructure?

I can tell you from my constituency that schools are in rough shape. I tour all the schools of my constituency, and I still remember – and I don't think this has been corrected yet – going through one of the schools. The ceiling in the gym was leaking. I checked the emergency exit in the gym in an elementary school, and the door frame was so rotten that I could pick the wood frame apart with my fingernails. There's another school in my constituency, Mr. Speaker, where the cracks in the walls are so extensive and so wide that I can run a pen through them for metres and metres at a time. How are we going to correct that when our infrastructure investment in schools is actually dropping? It's cold comfort to parents and students and teachers.

So that's a concern, as is the pressure to close schools when, indeed, we should be converting these to community schools and looking at creative solutions to these issues and remembering that those schools 10 years from now might be the heart of a rejuvenated community and might actually play a crucial role in halting the urban sprawl when people want to move back into the central part of the city and they're attracted there because there's a school in the neighbourhood. If we've closed those schools or sold them off, what have we done? We've made a long-term mistake for a short-term gain. No addressing of that issue that I saw at all in yesterday's budget.

Health and Wellness. The first impressions look good. Base operating grants to health authorities are going to increase. Funding for the Alberta Cancer Board looks like it's up about 25 per cent, and that's good. Nobody is going to argue with that. It's a good move. Unfortunately, the demand is there, but that's the reality of a growing population.

It also suggests to me, Mr. Speaker, that we need to be looking at the impact of environmental factors on the rise of cancer, and we actually need to get more serious about things like smoking bans. You can see this strange and ironic paradox in this Assembly being played out, where we have a 25 per cent increase in funding for the Cancer Board, and we don't have the guts to come in with a province-wide workplace smoking ban. It's a sad commentary on our mentality in this Assembly.

AADAC funding is up 12 per cent. I guess if we need it, we need it. Clearly, as we will be debating, perhaps, later this afternoon, there's a need for treatment facilities for drug addicts: crystal meth and other drugs. But we also need to take a long-term view and recognize the importance that strong communities and excellent schools play in keeping kids from needing detox centres and treatment services because when those kids end up as addicts, it's not just a breakdown of a family, and it's not just because they're weak individuals; it's also a breakdown of a community. We need to pay attention to the strength of our communities.

Calgary and Edmonton, as I've often said in this Assembly, have the most overcrowded hospitals in the country, so we're glad to see some action, some funding available to allow things like the ambulatory care centre to move forward in Edmonton and apparently – apparently – a solid commitment to the southeast Calgary hospital. I just hope it's delivered. I hope it comes through. I hope it's done properly and efficiently as a public hospital because I can warn this Assembly right now – mark my words – that if we end up in a P3 for the southeast Calgary hospital, we will lose control of that budget just like we did with the Calgary courthouse, and we will pay over and over and over for that facility.

As I mentioned near the beginning of my comments, we're delighted that the funding for AISH is being increased by $80 million and look forward tomorrow to the announcement that we hope will see the monthly maximum benefits for AISH recipients addressed and perhaps some of the other issues around clawbacks of the AISH benefits addressed as well.

We're pleased that there's over $7 million provided to help seniors cover increases to the costs of school property tax. Of course, we would have liked to have seen a cap put on the total provincial take from the education portion of the property tax so that there's more room for municipalities if they need that tax room or that seniors or all families and all homeowners in this province can get a little bit of a tax break there. Funding for housing under Alberta Seniors goes up, I think, some $43 million, and that's great. We've got to look after our people.

Housing is crucial. Affordable housing is important. As we see the cost of housing in this province climb dramatically, we're going to have to pay more and more attention to this. The cost of housing in Fort McMurray is out of the reach of far too many people, and frankly the same thing is happening in Calgary. I heard a story two or three days ago about a house being listed in Calgary at, I think it was, $319,000 and being bid up and finally selling at $350,000 or $360,000. The cost of housing in Calgary is getting out of reach of too many people, so we're going to need to pay attention to that.

Minimum wage doesn't have to be addressed through the budget. It would be nice to see it addressed clearly and firmly somewhere in some mechanism before this session is over. It links back, Mr. Speaker, to that issue of the virtuous circle I addressed. One of the clearest indicators of health problems and strongest predictors of health problems is poverty. If we help people who are struggling to get by – you don't have to give them a handout, but let's give them a fair chance – we will see in the long term demands on the health care system diminish. We'll see happier families and healthier communities and, frankly, a stronger society. So I would have liked to have seen some addressing of the minimum wage. Maybe that awaits later legislation.

There's no clear plan for the surplus. There's been some sort of sketching out of what we might see. It's interesting that just a few minutes ago a bill was given first reading, I think Bill 37, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2005, which allows, as I'm reading it, as I understand it, the government to increase the amount of revenue it spends from nonrenewable resource revenues, and I'm not convinced that's a wise step for us to take. Is that really a sustainable policy to bring in, or are we losing discipline in our long-term control of our resources? We have to remember that every $4.75 billion we spend out of the nonrenewable resource revenues is gone forever. We could have an interesting debate on that.

Beyond that, what other plans are there in here for the surplus? Well, we'll see how the postsecondary endowment fund plays out, that little down payment that's going to produce $11 million a year that I hope gets augmented rapidly, but there's no clear evidence that that's going to happen. I hope we pay serious attention to diversifying our economy away from our dependence on petroleum.

There's no mention in here of investing in our democratic deficit and investing in overcoming our democratic deficit, which I'd very much like to see. I'd like to have seen funds set aside to launch a citizen's assembly on electoral reform. I'd like to have seen support in here for a lobbyist registry. I'd like to have seen some of the technicalities addressed of how we handle an account for our money such as replacing the current government-only accounting principles with generally accepted accounting principles, which is, frankly, a recommendation that's been made by the Auditor General for years and years.

Of course, there are a few things that are downright irritating in here. Once again the horse-racing industry is receiving $45 million, and I know that draws a reaction from some members of this Assembly, but why? Why, Mr. Speaker, are we supporting the horse-racing industry? Why not some other industry? Why any industry at all? If this is a government that wants out of the business of business, why are we still in the business of horse racing? What is the exit plan? This subsidy has actually increased year after year, and it's well over $100 million in the last three or four years. Where does this end? Forty-five million dollars is more than the new money budgeted to hire police officers. It's more than what's given to seniors to provide dental and optical assistance. What's the priority here? When do we give the human race some priority over the horse race?

Mr. Mason: Good line.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you. You can use it in yours, hon. leader.

We're pleased to see the investment in municipalities, in particular the infrastructure issues that the municipalities face. I think some exciting leadership is going to emerge in local government in Calgary and Edmonton and elsewhere to really turn our cities into jewels, globally, among cities, not to take their place among the list of, you know, the huge cities, the Tokyos and New Yorks and Londons of the world, but to stand proudly on a list that might include Geneva or Zurich or Austin or Helsinki, to have Calgary and Edmonton recognized globally on that same list. We're not there yet, but we could get there. Let's try. Let's work on that.

Environment consistently ranks as a top priority for Albertans. There was some debate about that earlier today, Mr. Speaker, and there will be more. I don't see enough in here about the environment. We'll see if there's actual funding in here for increasing the number of fish and wildlife officers and other initiatives to protect the environment. Let's hope that there is. We'll see how the financing and support for the Water for Life strategy really plays out.

We'll see what efforts, if any, and what resources, if any, are committed to helping Alberta address the issues of global warming because, frankly and clearly, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Liberal caucus accepts the signs of global warming. We recognize the need that something is going to have to be done, and it's going to have to be done boldly. It could be done. We could be leaders. We could take this problem and say, "This is not a problem; this is an opportunity." If we deal with this opportunity properly, 10 years from now people from around the world could be coming to Alberta to learn how to live with a lighter impact on their environment, how to generate power without burning so much fossil fuel, how to insulate their homes or how to design their buildings so that they have absolutely minimal impact on the environment. We should be looking at that as an opportunity, not as an obstacle. I don't see any addressing of that issue in this budget, Mr. Speaker.

I applaud the government for adding up to 200 police officers to fight crime in Alberta. It's a positive step, ensuring a safe community. I also applaud the particular focus to fight organized crime because I do think that's a rising problem in our province. The commitment to increase our police services is long overdue.

Our parks and protected areas are suffering from neglect, and I don't think this budget comes close enough to providing the necessary funding to return those to the proud state they were once in and to understand that they're a key part of a tourism strategy, which is part of diversifying the economy.

I could go on, Mr. Speaker. I'm concerned that this budget, frankly, doesn't do much at all for the arts community. It shows once again that this government does not value the contributions of the artistic community to the vibrancy of our province. It's particularly galling that we can find $45 million for the horse-racing industry and so little for the arts community.

Mr. Speaker, I understand that there's going to be other special business and important debate today. I know that there will be day after day after day of debate, department by department, of the budget. I look forward to that. I will be following it, and we will all be following it closely.

I'd summarize by saying that this budget takes some good steps, but it's not clear what road map we're really following. There's no sense of saying: "Albertans, rise to the challenge. You have the opportunity here to be remarkable." There's no sense of that here, Mr. Speaker, so I'm disappointed. We'll debate it department by department.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude my remarks. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members should be aware that under our Standing Orders the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition has up to 90 minutes to participate, and the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition left 57 minutes and 40 seconds on the table today.

Hon. leader of the New Democratic opposition, are you participating today?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, of course, get 15 minutes, and I intend to use all of them.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank you very much for the opportunity to participate in the debate on the budget for 2005. As I have said, and now I've been quoted by the hon. Leader of the Liberal Party, Budget 2005 can most aptly be described as sleepwalking into Alberta's second century. That's bad enough, but we all know that it's very dangerous to wake a sleepwalker, so we don't know what could happen then.

There's really so much more that this budget could have done for hard-working Alberta families. It could have scrapped health care premiums, which pose a particular burden on middle-class and low-income families. It could have scrapped the $45 million annual subsidy for the horse-racing industry and got government out of being in the business of government, and then used the savings to cut tuition fees for postsecondary students by 10 per cent instead of providing students just a one-year stay of execution when it comes to tuition increases.

The budget could have kept the promise to implement full-day kindergarten and half-day junior kindergarten for disadvantaged children. The government could have funded expanded kindergarten programs by scrapping the Alberta royalty tax credit, at a savings of almost $100 million, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, Budget 2005 addresses none of these priorities.

3:30

Budget 2005 estimates a budget surplus of $1.5 billion for this year, which is slightly more truthful than the $300 million surplus claimed in last year's budget. We know, of course, Mr. Speaker, that last year's $300 million surplus actually ballooned into a surplus of over $4 billion.

Because the Tory government knows that they're underestimating the budget surplus to the tune of billions of dollars, instead of making appropriate provisions for expenditures in the budget, this government then gives itself permission to go on spending sprees later in the budget year, often after the ink has barely dried. Instead of properly budgeting up front, the government likes to throw money at problems in an unplanned way.

You know, the lowballing of budget surpluses has been a problem, Mr. Speaker, because the government quite consciously uses estimates for the price of gas and oil that are significantly lower than what they traditionally will be. Thus, instead of accurately budgeting the finances of the province, we get into the situation where we are used to having so-called unplanned or unanticipated surpluses. It's this, I think, that we would like to focus on a little bit.

The government should use accurate estimates for the price of natural resources and accurately forecast its revenues and its expenditures instead of using unbudgeted surpluses to fund things like the postsecondary education endowment. I think that the problem here is that we've opposed this approach of unbudgeted surpluses in the past, but now with this proposal, which the government has lifted from the Liberal Party's campaign book, they are institutionalizing the use of unbudgeted surpluses to finance ongoing government expenditures.

We think that that's a bad approach, Mr. Speaker. We disagree with it. By all means, we should put more money into postsecondary education, but we should not be creating the endowment fund from unbudgeted surpluses, as the Liberal proposal suggests and which the government has adopted. It should be budgeted money that goes into postsecondary education. So, by all means, let's spend a lot more money there because I think it is a good priority, but the approach is a bad one. I think that if the government is going to steal ideas from the Liberals, they should at least steal some of their good ones.

Mr. Speaker, this is a less than honest approach to government budgeting, particularly if infrastructure is taken into account. We think that it should be a priority, and it should be included in its entirety in the budget of the Ministry of Infrastructure and Transportation rather than being doled out from the so-called sustainability fund at the whim of the Conservative government to meet their political needs.

Speaking of infrastructure, the monies being budgeted up front in Budget 2005 are actually quite disappointing. In fact, the capital plan outlined on page 46 of the budget's Fiscal Plan shows that while infrastructure transfers to municipalities are going up, capital investment in hospitals, schools, and postsecondary facilities is actually going down. In 2005-06, for example, capital funding for schools is actually 10 per cent lower than in last year's budget. The postsecondary sector fares even worse, with needed capital investment down more than 50 per cent compared to last year's budget. When it comes to health care facilities, capital investment is down some 30 per cent compared to what was actually spent last year.

Increased investment in municipal infrastructure is badly needed and will help our municipalities begin to put a dent in their infrastructure deficits, but we should not be paying for it at the expense of infrastructure investments that are badly needed in other areas like schools, hospitals, and universities.

Mr. Speaker, we know that there are crumbling schools across this province. We know that one of the things that's leading to the closure of inner-city schools is just the cost of catching up on their maintenance. It's time the government had a systematic plan to restore and protect these valuable community resources and to work with municipalities to revitalize the inner-city communities so that they aren't faced with a declining enrolment. We should be seeing these older schools as badly needed assets for our communities rather than as something that has to be closed before new schools can be constructed.

Mr. Speaker, if you're a parent and your child's school is facing closure, this budget will not help you. If you're a patient waiting for a hospital bed to open up so you can have needed surgery, this budget will not help you either.

I'd like to highlight another example of bad budgeting in this year's budget; namely, the $55 million provided to municipalities for ambulance services. This government knows, based on documents provided by the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, that it's at least $12 million short, but instead of adding this shortfall to the budget, the Minister of Health and Wellness has tried to deflect the blame onto municipalities rather than putting the blame where it belongs, and that's with this Conservative government and its botched approach to ambulance transfer.

I must say that the NDP opposition is pleased that there were no further reductions in the general corporate tax rate. In last year's budget the NDP opposition stood alone in this Assembly to oppose the 9 per cent cut in the tax rate for larger corporations, from 12 and a half to 11 and a half per cent. This corporate tax rate was supported by the other parties in this Assembly, and we're pleased that the opposition that we have raised to this ongoing attempt to cut corporate taxes has succeeded again in preventing this measure from being introduced in this budget. Alberta's corporate tax rates are already by far the lowest of any province.

While I'm pleased that there were no further corporate tax cuts in this budget, I am concerned that the government still has not backed away from its eventual goal of cutting corporate taxes by another 30 per cent, all the way down to 8 per cent. The NDP opposition will keep up the pressure to ensure that the corporate sector pays its fair share for public investment in our schools, hospitals, and infrastructure, investments from which they are among the greatest beneficiaries.

Yet we do favour some tax reductions, Mr. Speaker. We favour a reduction in the tax burden for those for whom it truly is a burden, and that is for low- and middle-income families. Instead of cutting health care premiums and putting $1,056 in the pocket of each and every hard-working Alberta family, the government is choosing to rack up a budget surplus of at least $1.5 billion, and we know from previous experience that it's going to be a lot higher than that. Even going by the government's own lowballed revenue forecasts, the government could scrap health care premiums immediately and still end up with a sizable budget surplus of at least $650 million. Why they don't do that is beyond me.

The refusal of the government to give hard-working middle-income Albertans a meaningful tax break means that they will pay significantly more in combined personal income and health premium taxes than if they lived in either British Columbia or Ontario. By the government's own figures on page 140 of the budget's fiscal plan, an Alberta family making $100,000 per year will pay $844 more in combined personal and health premium taxes than the same family with the same income in the province of Ontario. Even worse, an Alberta family of four making $60,000 per year will pay $1,057 more in income and health premium taxes than the same family in Ontario.

On school property taxes this is the fourth budget in a row where the government is breaking a promise made in the 2001 budget to freeze school property tax revenues at a constant $1.2 billion. In fact, when you cut through all the government's spin and talk about mill rates and look squarely at the bottom line, this is what you find, Mr. Speaker: next year Martha and Henry's school property taxes are once again going up, this time by 3.2 per cent. The government's take on school property taxes will increase to $1.45 billion, or 20 per cent above the $1.2 billion dollar property tax freeze promised in budget 2001.

As the government first announced on the eve of last year's election, Alberta seniors will get a provincial rebate to offset increases in their school property tax, but even there, Mr. Speaker, there's a catch. Seniors will only have their school taxes frozen if they remain in their existing home. This seniors-only freeze will cost the government a very modest $7 million. By contrast, everyone else will have their school property taxes go up, and the government pockets $40 million.

The same misplaced priorities as in previous budgets keep showing up; for example, the horse-racing subsidy is being kept at the same $45 million level as last year. The multiyear horse-racing subsidy actually cost $2 million more than a one-year tuition freeze for postsecondary students.

On K to 12 education, per-pupil grants to school boards are only going up by 2 and a half per cent, barely matching inflation. Moreover, the government is not expanding, only maintaining, funding for kindergarten and junior kindergarten programs. The government is breaking its promise by not providing funding for implementing the Learning Commission's recommendations to expand kindergarten and junior kindergarten programs for disadvantaged children, and I think that's a terrible shame, Mr. Speaker.

In terms of health care, the $700 million funding increase does seem impressive at first blush. However, the government is not telling people that over half of this increase – that is, $370 million – is being paid for by Ottawa as a result of increased health transfers resulting from last September's health accord. Moreover, the single biggest jump in spending is one of about 14 per cent in prescription drug costs for seniors and the poor. The government is keeping municipal ambulance funding transfers to municipalities at $55 million and not funding the $12 million shortfall identified by AUMA.

On policing, 200 new police officers is a good start. I'll recall the NDP election platform that would have put 500 police officers on the street in Alberta. I see that since we've been raising this, the Solicitor General has managed to squeeze a little bit more money out of the Treasury Board and bumped it up to 200. So that's a good start, Mr. Speaker, but I know that the people of this province want to have their municipalities properly funded for policing services. While these increases for mid-size communities are welcome, there is no increase in per capita police funding for the cities of Edmonton and Calgary, where the need is very great.

While $6 million for fighting organized crime and gangs with 60 dedicated officers is welcome, not all of this money should be going to the enforcement side alone, Mr. Speaker. We also need to make sure that some of the resources go into crime prevention; otherwise, the call on the government's budget for policing will go up and up.

In terms of the assured income for the severely handicapped, actual monthly benefit levels are not going to be made public until tomorrow. Looking at the $45 million being allocated to increased monthly benefit levels, it appears that it won't even be sufficient to keep up with increases in living costs over the past dozen years.

I'm running out of time, Mr. Speaker, but I want to say that with the billions of dollars of petrowealth flowing into provincial coffers, this budget could have accomplished so much more. It's easy to budget in Alberta given the money flowing in from our bounty of natural resources, but it's tougher to budget well, and it's tougher to budget for all the people. It's tougher to meet the needs of low- and middle-income people ahead of the wants of the wealthy and the corporate sector. In this critical sense this budget has failed abysmally.

With that, I will conclude and take my seat. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

The chair is prepared to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, I ask for the House's unanimous consent so that the leader of the NDP opposition could complete his comments given that there are no questions.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Speaker: Well, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood suggested, at least in what I heard him saying, that he had concluded his remarks. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, before the question would even be raised, it sounds to me that unanimous consent would not be given, so I won't raise the question.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, shall I call the vote then, the question? I've been sitting here waiting for a minute. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, do you want . . .

Dr. Pannu: My request doesn't stand there anymore. I withdraw it. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that. You had me nervous. I wasn't sure what the question was going to be.

I'd like to congratulate this Tory government on their budget and the excitement that they had in being able to do what they wanted to do and to express their view to Albertans. I'm very excited with the announcement of a health care facility that will be similar to that of the Mayo Clinic. That's exciting, and it will be a great addition to our province that we'll all truly benefit from.

I'm excited about the commitment, though at this time it seems more ceremonial than concrete, on the access to the future endowment fund. This has great potential. I hope that we will look at and want to have world-renowned institutions, like we will do with our health care system. I'm excited about the thousand teachers that have been announced being able to go out to help our youth, our future assets in this province. I was very pleased with the increased funding for law enforcement and the 200 new officers that are going out there. I commend them on all of these excellent programs. Albertans will truly benefit from that as we go into this new centennial century.

While this budget offers a peek into the future, it still leaves me wondering what their 20-year plan really is. They say that they have one, but they just don't share it with us or the municipalities, and it makes it difficult to plan for the future. So I have a few areas of concern that I'd like to address today about the budget; namely, those concerning families and individuals, communities and small business, the role and size of the government, and the future and the direction of Alberta.

Help for families and individuals should be our first and highest priority. Past government surveys have shown that the number one desire of Albertans, after paying off the debt, was to reduce taxes. They're onerous and burdensome on the people of Alberta, and we've failed to look at that. But if we were to increase the basic personal exemption to $20,000 in Alberta, we would not only be the best in Canada. We'd be a long way ahead. We need to leave the money in the pockets of the people, where it is needed and used best.

Tax cuts could have and should have been taken with the health care premium taxes for everyone. Property taxes and hidden taxes, fuel, and auto insurance are a few. Currently our Health and Wellness budget is huge. Our Premier is running out of time to present his much talked about reforms, and I have great concerns. Too often when it comes to essential services like health care and power, when we look at the reforms that he did in the power industry, it's been at the expense of small business and Albertans and didn't benefit them as a whole. I question his reforms, and I hope that he puts them and aims them toward the benefit of Albertans.

One of the things that I would like to see in their health care reforms is if funding was to follow the services provided. In my area, with the Chinook health region, they're desperately in need of an angioplasty unit, and if the funding was to actually follow the service, I know that we would have one down there. But right now, being micromanaged and being sent to two facilities, it's not serving the interests of Albertans.

The property 5 per cent education rollback is nothing more than smoke and mirrors. With the way our property assessments go forward, they actually have a net gain, I believe, of $60 million, to the detriment of Albertans. Market value assessment is inflationary and adds to the problems. We only need to look back a few short years, 25 years, to see the real estate bubble of the past. We need to have a program where production value and purchase price must enter into the formula and have a higher weighting on the assessment to the economy. We could eliminate our health care premium tax, give a 50 per cent reduction in our education property tax, and increase our basic personal exemption tax to $20,000 and still have a balanced budget.

We need to have more help for our communities and our businesses. We need to start downloading our surplus, not our debt, on our communities. We could do that. One example that I'll use is that currently we have the Community Development budget, $247 million, that's been micromanaged, and applications were given and received, especially for this our centennial year. If this entire department was to be removed, we'd have $247 million divided amongst Albertans, which would give a per capita of $83 per person. The small town of Raymond, which I live close to and which was denied its centennial application, would receive a funding of $250,000 for community development, and they would put that to very good use instead of being denied, which they were.

Communities with more than 5,000 people are very grateful for the increase in the funding from the policing dollars. This problem has been known for over a year. They've taken one step, but we need to take further steps. We need to have a higher graduated program that will help benefit these areas. For the small town of Taber it currently costs their citizens $150 per citizen for their policing costs. This will go forward to help them a great deal, but we need to take another step.

Businesses were promised a long time ago to cut the rate from 11.5 per cent to get it down to 8 per cent. This promise was also broken. We also have discussed in the province here a small business corporate tax threshold raised to $500,000, which would truly give a boon to the economy.

The beef producers of Alberta need help protecting their assets. In the drought a few years ago the provincial and federal governments got together and realized that inventory replacement was hazardous to the industry because of the decimation to it, and programs like that could have taken place here and could have pushed the federal government to take that at no cost to the taxpayers. We need some incentives in the beef business.

This government understands the benefits to the oil business and has been very innovative and leading in its ideas there, yet there have been none presented in the beef industry. If we were to take the same principles that have been used in the oil and mineral exploration and put them into the beef industry and have those incentives – one would be as allowed in the tar sands – if there were no provincial taxes until the capital investment was recovered, it would truly be a boost.

This government could also take its surplus money and have a dollar-for-dollar loan match with a first mortgage fixed on that facility to be held by the province and, if in fact it was to go under, have it and sell it to recover the taxpayers' dollars. Such incentives would be a boost to the economy and help out the beef producers in this country.

Margaret Thatcher made a comment on the federal PCs, that they have become much more of an adjective and less of a verb. This government has grown at an unprecedented rate. We started at 17 ministries, as has been mentioned several times, and we've grown to 24. I imagine it will just be a short time before we reach Getty's full size of 25 ministries.

Efficiency would truly be increased if we were to eliminate the new ministry of restructuring and efficiency. As previously mentioned, the removal of Community Development and the downloading of those funds would truly benefit the local municipal governments. One Ministry of Education with deputy ministers would provide continuity and efficiency. With a good analysis we could easily reduce our numbers back to 16 ministers. That would truly serve Alberta with a lean, more productive, and efficient government.

The direction that we want to go in Alberta: we want a strong and diversified economy. We want to take those incentives – and we've seen how it boosts the oil industry – and give those incentives to other areas. If we were to have those capital expense programs where you don't have to pay until you've received your money back, then it would truly boost our economy in many areas, not just the oil and gas industry.

If this government would download the surplus to the people through tax cuts, it would not be compelled to grow and spend money. In 2000 their survey The Future: Meeting Priorities, Sharing Benefits – It's Your Money, Albertans were clear that after the debt was paid off, the surplus should go to tax cuts. If one-time spending is okay, why not one-time tax cuts? Or perhaps they could become permanent ones. But unless we try it, we don't know. The problem is that you say to the people, "It's your money," yet you keep it in your pocket, and you say that you know how to spend it better than the people do.

In conclusion, I guess I'd like to compare us to that of winning the lottery. We've been very blessed here, but that winning can be the beginning of our downfall. Too much money has often led to corruption, mismanagement, and flamboyant lifestyles. Can we sustain the huge influx of money without redistributing it and not cause inflation and possibly run into a brick wall in a few years?

The gap between our potential and our achievement grows with our added revenue. We are the envy of other provinces and even the world. It is my hope that we can strive to reach our ever-growing potential and not rest on our past achievements. We have seen not just good examples here in Alberta but excellent ones here in the province in the past. Wayne Gretzky was not just happy to be the top scorer; he shattered the previous records. The Sutter family was not just a good hockey family; they were outstanding. Let us follow our most recent example by not just saying that we're the best in the world. Let's clean the house, and let's score some perfect ends, like the Ferbey team just did.

It is not good enough to say that we are the best in the world. We need to rise to our full potential. We need to be hard-working, most innovative, and efficient. We need a formula that will restrain government growth, invest in our future and infrastructure and endowment funds, and truly put Alberta ahead of the race by reducing taxes and leaving as many dollars as possible in the pockets of the people to be used at their discretion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a most recent survey entitled It's Your Money, Albertans have clearly indicated that their priorities post debt payment were, one, health care; two, education; three, infrastructure; followed by environment. I'm wondering what version of It's Your Money this member is referring to in saying that Albertans' number one priority was tax cuts.

The Speaker: The hon. member, if you wish.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. I just need to pull it out. I was going by the 2000 version. Until we had all this money, the question was always asked: where did we want to spend it? It was the deficit. There was one in 2000 and one in '97. In '93 it was debt-reduction surveys. You've had several surveys. In all the previous ones, except for this last one, which to me was a push/pull – it wasn't an opinion one – we asked for tax reductions. It was always number two.

The Speaker: Others?

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader to participate.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would then move adjournment of debate on Government Motion 19.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we could revert briefly to tablings.

The Speaker: I asked the House leader to do this, so please give him unanimous consent. Okay?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports
(reversion)

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As offered by the Premier earlier today, I have two tablings on his behalf. The first is a tabling in which the quotes from Carl Amrhein, provost of the University of Alberta, and quotes from Dr. Harvey Weingarten, president of the University of Calgary, are contained. So there's that.

Also, a letter to the Hon. Lorne Calvert, Premier of Saskatchewan, with respect to Alberta's and Saskatchewan's joint centennial celebration and, in particular, referencing tonight's hockey game, wherein a small wager is being placed and one Premier would wear the other Premier's jersey depending on the outcome of the game.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Red Deer-North, did you catch my eye?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, thank you for recognizing me. Following discussions between all sides of the House, I seek the unanimous consent of the Assembly to revert to Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders to address my private member's bill, Bill 202, in Committee of the Whole. I understand that I will also need to seek unanimous consent, once back in Assembly, to have the bill proceed to third reading today should the Committee of the Whole approve Bill 202.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'm asking for unanimous consent of the House to move to Bill 202.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North is seeking unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 8(3) to allow for the consideration of Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call on the Clerk, this is most unique. This, perhaps, has never happened before in the history of Alberta in 99 years, so it's a wonderful example of parliamentary co-operation, the highest form of democracy. I congratulate you all.

Now I'm going to ask the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere to assume the chair in committee after the Clerk calls it.

head: 4:00 Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Ms Haley in the chair]

The Acting Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order, please.

Bill 202
Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act

The Acting Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

Mrs. Jablonski: Madam Chairman, I rise to introduce amendments to Bill 202, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act, PCHAD. There are copies of the amended bill being circulated. Would you like me to wait until the members receive them?

The Acting Chair: Hon. member, could we wait for it to be circulated, please?

Mrs. Jablonski: Yes.

The Acting Chair: Hon. members, I believe that everybody has the amendment now. We will refer to it as amendment A1. The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Madam Chairman, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms was created to protect Canadians from the potential misuse of power by the government. It was created to ensure that everybody, regardless of race, sex, or age, is treated with dignity and respect and to ensure that every Canadian is treated equally under the law. However, Charter rights are not absolute. The Charter and the courts both recognize that the government has the right to make laws for the good of most people, even if the law violates a Charter right or freedom. If a court decides that a law does this, the court will consider whether the violation can be justified under section 1. It says that Charter rights and freedoms are "subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be . . . justified in a free and democratic society." This is the test that is used by the courts.

Madam Chairman, the original wording of Bill 202, PCHAD, had two parts: a forced intervention, assessment, and detox and a 90-day mandatory treatment program. To avoid significant problems due to the Charter, I removed the 90-day treatment order from the bill at this time. This was because of a lack of specific, scientific evidence showing that mandatory treatment is more effective than voluntary treatment. Due to this lack of scientific evidence, in the opinion of several experts Bill 202, PCHAD, as it was originally written was likely to fail this Charter test.

I have looked for many hours to find scientific studies that prove that mandatory treatment is effective. Although it is difficult to find any saying this, it is also difficult to find any saying that it is ineffective. Furthermore, I have received many phone calls and e-mails from former youth addicts telling me that this measure will work. Addiction counsellors at the Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre in Calgary and Bosco Homes east of Edmonton also state that mandatory treatment is effective. These people deal with addiction every day and are in a good position to make this assessment. In time the science will become more consistent with the anecdotal evidence. The scientists need to start asking the right questions.

After much research, however, I did find studies that show that mandatory treatment can be as effective as voluntary treatment. Furthermore, according to AADAC, an argument for compulsory treatment is that it provides better outcomes than no treatment, and it offers a viable method for retaining clients in treatment long enough for them to recognize that they have a problem and then to seek help. Additionally, AADAC admits that alcohol and drug treatment is more cost-effective to give someone than to incarcerate them. By shifting resources from the criminal justice system, additional funds could be made available to increase treatment capacity.

A critical aspect of PCHAD, Bill 202, is that it proposes to intervene and to treat children who are addicted to drugs before they become involved with the justice system. This would save the justice system and society even more costs associated with the problems that surround addiction and crime in the long run.

However, at the moment the difficulty and complexity in proving the effectiveness of a 90-day mandatory treatment order to the Supreme Court of Canada are the reasons for the amendments to this bill. The amendments, however, leave in place the first part of this bill, which allows the addicted youth to be removed from the drug environment and be put into detox and assessment for five days. Five days has been deemed by the courts as a reasonable amount of time to hold someone against their will. Once the five days expire, we will ask the youth to consider voluntary addiction treatment, which could then potentially be enforced by contract if the youth agrees to a treatment program.

Madam Chairman, this is a forced intervention, with the option for the child to help themselves at the end. This intervention would be very helpful to parents, especially when they have the support of loved ones in trying to convince their child that they have a problem for which they need help. I believe that parents who need to help and protect their child will accept this tool for intervention even if it doesn't include further mandatory treatment.

Madam Chairman, this is far less than I had hoped for with this bill. However, mandatory treatment is a very complicated issue, and to withstand a Charter challenge, we will need more research and more consultation. The Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act took two years to develop using experts from many fields, and it, too, had to be amended to avoid being deemed unconstitutional. More work is needed, and I intend to make sure that this work is done.

Madam Chairman, I have just explained to the members of this Assembly the main reason I had to amend Bill 202. Going back to the Charter, the Supreme Court of Canada stated that a limit on Charter rights is acceptable if the limit deals with a pressing and substantial social problem and the government's response to the problem is reasonable and justified. It's amazing that the Charter, which is supposed to protect everyone, can stop parents from keeping their children safe and protected from drug addiction.

According to AADAC's Alberta youth experience survey, uppers without a prescription and club drugs are some of the most frequently used drugs among youth. According to addicts of drugs such as crystal meth, one or two experimentations can quickly lead to a very dangerous addiction. My point, Madam Chairman, is that it would be very difficult to deny that we have a pressing and substantial social problem, and I believe that a five-day detox is a very reasonable response to this problem.

I also believe that having a forced treatment for 90 days is reasonable as well, but as mentioned, it would be difficult to have this withstand a Charter challenge without further research and review. Therefore, these amendments are important to ensure that this bill is strong. Although I am very disappointed with the changes that I've had to make to the bill, the intention remains the same, and that is to give parents a tool to intervene in a behaviour that is seriously harming their children.

People will be right when they say that five days is not enough time. In fact, five days is no time when it comes to dealing with the complex issue of addiction. In five days, however, the hope is that we could get the child away from the drug long enough to realize what a profoundly negative effect it is having on them, and this will hopefully help them to decide to go into voluntary treatment.

As my colleague from Peace River stated during the debate on Bill 201, "sometimes when you go for all or nothing, you get nothing." Trying to pass this bill with a 90-day provision is an example of going for all, and I am not willing to settle for nothing. If we vote to accept these amendments, we will be voting to do something now, with the ability to build on it later.

In conclusion, I would like to reassure everyone that the purpose of these amendments is to give parents hope. The hope is that this bill will help parents to help their children recognize that they have a problem, and that will go a long way in the first part of treatment.

Madam Chairman, the United Nations convention on the rights of the child is the most universally accepted human rights instrument in history. In fact, except for two countries it has been ratified by every other country in the world, including Canada. This declaration of rights of the child spells out the basic human rights for children everywhere. The universal rights state that children have the right to be protected from being hurt or badly treated, the right to have the best health possible and medical care, and the right to be given guidance by their parents and family. Most importantly, article 33 states that children have the right to be protected from dangerous drugs.

Many critics of this bill, including civil libertarians, argue that it will violate the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. To these people I say that it does not violate the rights of the child. It upholds these rights. Parents have a duty to protect their children, and Bill 202 will give them an important tool to help them do so should a child become addicted to drugs.

I would like to thank all of the members of this Legislature for seeing the importance of this legislation and for helping me to get it through this House. I would also like to thank all the parents and the youth and others who have supported and encouraged me in fighting this cause. Finally, I would like to thank David Gillies for his help, his guidance, and his support. I would also like to thank Peter Pilarski, our researcher, who has dedicated much time and great effort to this bill. The support for this bill has been amazing and is a testament to people's belief that it's the right thing to do.

I urge all members of the House to support the amendments proposed for Bill 202. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The next speaker is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Madam Chairperson. First of all, I'd like to congratulate the member for a very tenacious approach. If I may say so to the member, I think that taking a bill that somebody believes in very strongly and pursuing it and doing everything you can to bring it forward bodes well. That's what an MLA should be doing, and I congratulate you for doing that. I think it's very important that we do that. As I say, tenacious to say the least, we can say about the member. But she believes passionately in this, and she's prepared to go the wall for it, and I again congratulate her for it.

I just want to add to what the member is saying, and I want to just very briefly talk about a case that came to my constituency office last week. I think the Member for Red Deer-North would be interested because it's some of the same sorts of situations that I know she's had to deal with, and it shows some of the problems, I believe.

Obviously I'm not going to use names here, but it is a 14-year-old child. April 1 the child ran away from home. April 3 the mother and aunt contacted Children's Services, who already had an open case with this particular child, and they refused to intervene because the child had not been gone for a normal length of time, because she had run away before. For the same reason the police refused to intervene. So you can imagine the frustration here.

They believe that she's probably on crystal meth. They're not sure, but the way they read about the symptoms and that – and here they are. Because she's a problem, she's running away all the time, they want to get there quickly. They contact Children's Services; there's nothing they can do. Then they contact the police, and they say – and so they're caught. I think that's the type of people that you're talking about. What do we do? Finally, on their own the mother and an aunt found the child, on their own initiative.

They went down to West Edmonton Mall, and they found the child. As I said, they're worried that she may have been using crystal meth. She had the symptoms. They're also worried that she may be involved in prostitution because often the two go together. Children's Services still refused to intervene even after this message was relayed. They said that she had to – this is the term that the person said on the phone – hit rock bottom before they intervened. Well, being down at West Edmonton Mall and running away from home and the potential, at least, they think, that she's on drugs seems to me to be pretty rock bottom.

So they're very frustrated, but they kept bugging the police, and the police finally intervened on behalf of the parents and kept her in a hold cell at West Edmonton Mall. The police officers then found that no one agency could intervene on their behalf, not the crisis unit, anybody.

What's scary about this is that this particular child was a friend of Nina Courtepatte, who we know was just murdered. She was in that group. So you can imagine the stress that they're going through after they read this. I think that this probably says as much as anything about the need for something to happen and the reason that the member is bringing forward this particular bill, because this is happening, and there's a great deal of frustration out there.

Madam Chairperson, in going through the bill itself, the member was disappointed because she didn't get all or nothing. But I guess that – and I think she alluded to this – it's much better to get a bill that can pass and do some good rather than one that's going to end up unconstitutional. Nobody's well served by that, and I think that's what the member has realized.

The changes, I think, are positive ones because the five days would have helped these particular people that I'm talking about. It would have helped them. They would have been able to move much quicker. They eventually did get her out, but they would have had a means to do it, so it would have solved their problem. Hopefully, in five days – who knows? – you give some opportunity. Again, you would like the 90 days, but if it's unconstitutional, then forget it.

The other thing that I think is extremely important, because there was a potential for abuse, is the idea that it has to be a guardian. I think that's crucial in terms of amendment, and I think that's very positive because you don't want everybody holus-bolus, from teachers to social workers, you know, involved in this. It should be a parental or guardian responsibility.

I would just conclude, though, and say to the member, because she's championed this cause and done it very well, and to the government: we can have it mandatory or voluntary, but there just are not enough treatment centres in the province. I think there's a growing epidemic – we know that – in rural Alberta. We're told that in Edmonton it's more coke than crystal meth. Who knows? It doesn't matter. Drugs are drugs are drugs. So the point that I would make: if she would take that same energy, talk to her colleagues even if it's in the budget, and get some more treatment centres. Even the ones that want to go in voluntarily now, there just are not enough there. I think the member is well aware of that. So I'm saying to the member across the way that if she would now take that same tenaciousness, that same energy, and really start to promote that end of it. That's the most crucial part of it.

Having formerly, in a different world, been a high school counsellor, if a person doesn't see a problem and want to change, it's very hard to change them. If they do see a problem, then you can work with them. I'm told that even for the students and kids that want to change and get off this, it's a very difficult drug, one that we're not used to. It's very difficult to change. So we have to have more help there, and I'm convinced that the hon. member will use that energy to promote that, that we get more treatment centres.

So, Madam Chairperson, I just wanted to conclude by telling the member and the members of the Legislature about some of the problems. I know that she's talked about parents and one that just came to my attention last week, and I think that this bill would go some ways in at least temporarily helping those parents. That's just temporary, but the more long range is: how do we get more treatment centres?

Thank you, Madam Chairperson.

4:20

The Acting Chair: Thank you.

We'll move to Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Madam Chairman. In one of his wartime speeches after the Battle of El Alamein I believe Winston Churchill said: "This is not the end. It is not even the beginning of the end. But it is . . . the end of the beginning." I believe we are one better than Churchill and the Allies here. We are at the beginning of the end. Now that the end in the time frame for the passage of this bill is in sight, we need to focus again on the other meaning of end: the purpose or goal of this exercise.

Madam Chairman, this bill is about a chemical, but it is not about just another chemical. In an age when we've come to accept the presence of trace elements of toxic chemicals in the clothes that we wear and the air that we breathe, we need to remember that though all toxins may seem equal, some are deadly, far more deadly than others, and crystal meth is one of these. There are some substances, cyanide for instance, that not even the most reckless experimenter would be likely to try once, because one try is all they'll get. Crystal meth is not quite there, but it's close. Addiction can occur from a single dose, from which inevitable damage follows.

Madam Chairman, this is a bill about abuse, but it is not only substance abuse. It's an abuse of the promise of youth and the hope of adulthood. It's an abuse of God-given potential to grow and manifest the divine image in relationships, re-creation, and service. It's an abuse of relationships among human beings – adolescents and their guardians, siblings and friends, significant others – who must stand by powerless to prevent the destruction they see happening. This bill opens a window, a small space through which they can try to intervene to pull a loved one out of a downward spiral.

Madam Chairman, this bill is about people, not just about some other people. In some way it affects us all. The timeless words, "you shall love your neighbour as yourself," are not just a noble ideal. They are a recognition of the fact that we are all connected and that, ultimately, we cannot do or be otherwise. How we love or treat another ultimately comes back to how we treat ourselves in the society we share.

I urge my fellow members in this Assembly not to reduce this to the level of a problem, a social problem, someone else's problem. I urge us to stand together, to commit in the resolve that crystal meth shall not pass the threshold of acceptance in our society, and that this bill shall pass in our combined and co-operative effort to find an alternative.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The Member for Calgary-Shaw, please.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you. I just wanted to rise briefly today and also add my comments to today's debate in committee. I'd just like to compliment the House in this centennial year. I think this is a moment in time when we all put aside our political differences and do something for the right reason, and I commend all members of the House for the co-operation today here in the House.

I was thinking of my own four boys when they were little. I used to spend a lot of time and energy locking up poison. I know that the rest of parents can all remember the days when all things had to go on a high shelf or behind a locked cupboard. I was just vigilant about that. I never placed a cleaning element low. I never left anything in harm's way that I felt my boys could get access to and do themselves harm with. I knew what poison meant as a young mother with young children.

Now, my boys grew up, and they became teenagers. I could no longer lock the cupboards, and I could no longer put things on the shelves high enough. I had to send them out into that greater community. What I was hoping was that I had been able to teach them enough so that they would recognize the dangers of poison. Yet we know that there are those poisons out there. The fact that children today in their teenage years would feel inclined to take the things into their bodies that their parents have locked from them their entire lives is just astounding to me on some level, but we know it's true, and we know it's happening.

I'm thinking of a good friend of mine whose son got addicted, and she told me that she prayed nightly that the police would arrest her child. Now, I never prayed nightly that the police would arrest my children. I have to say that that was not a dream of mine, but that's what she had been reduced to. She prayed nightly that something would happen so that the police would arrest her child because she feared for his life, and she had no other tools at that point to work with. I see this bill, in the first, as giving parents tools, but I also recognize that there are some realities around this bill, that we can't necessarily take it to its full extent today, that we might encounter challenges that will mean that we'll lose the first half of the opportunity.

I recognize that sometimes as legislators we have to balance the intent with the realities of our current situation, so I'm going to support this amendment, although I will say also that my hope is that the member will pursue this.

I have a brother-in-law that actually runs one of these treatment facilities down in Utah, and I spent a good hour talking to him about the kinds of kids that come into his facility and the kind of help they can give those children. He has almost a 90 per cent success rate right now in his facility.

So I say to you that I think there are good ways to do this. I think that we can, first of all, take a look at doing the right thing in the first instance, bring these children in, get them tested, maybe get them in that five-day period to acknowledge and actually help us to get them into those voluntary treatment programs.

I commend the member, and I will be supporting this amendment because I also agree that we can't afford to lose this first step. So I thank you.

The Acting Chair: The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 202, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act. I must applaud the hon. member who sponsored this bill because it's an issue that needed to be addressed. This bill will give parents the capability to force their drug-addicted children into secure treatment facilities. This, in turn, will help to battle drug and alcohol problems in youth throughout Alberta.

This bill is the first of its kind in Canada. Madam Chair, under this act a person from the community can apply to AADAC to have the child admitted. This member of the community who is referring the child abusing drugs must have a valid belief of the child's drug or alcohol problems. After the application is made, then AADAC must decide whether the child needs treatment. They can request that the guardian appear before them.

A child should be allowed to enter treatment voluntarily if the commission rules that that is what is needed. It can be at a facility or on an outpatient basis. There must be an agreement between the guardian and the commission about the treatment. This treatment would be no longer than six months. If the child does not go along voluntarily with the assessment, the guardian of the child may apply to the court.

When a child is apprehended, he or she will then be taken to a safe house, and a director within child welfare must be notified. The director will either give the child back to the guardian or confine the child in the protective safe house. If the child in the safe house has not appeared before AADAC on its initial assessment, he or she will be assessed involuntarily at the safe house.

Within five days of the apprehension the child's guardian must appear before the court to show cause for confinement. The child must be fully informed of the case against him or her. Under this act a child can be confined for 90 days. The child or their guardian can apply to end the period of confinement, requiring the child to live at home and work through the addiction as an outpatient. A child may be excused from a hearing if prejudicial information is being presented and the child should not be there. Protection of the child's confidential information – for example, the names of family members, et cetera – will not be disclosed.

The minister is in control of developing the programs to treat children on drugs or alcohol. The minister may decide what are protective safe houses and make regulations pertaining to the costs of treatment programs, the cost of guardians, the assessments done on children, the panels within AADAC that will make the decisions, and programs for treatment. This legislation will give many, many affected families a hope, our children much-needed drug treatment, and, consequently, make the fabric of our society stronger.

I have received many phone calls from my constituents about the recent problem of drug abuse among children. In some cases the parents are helpless because they don't have the right to step in and take care of their own children. I know some people argue that this is taking away rights from Alberta's teens and arbitrarily forcing them into treatment. What defences are in place to make sure that children who don't require treatment will not be forced into treatment? This bill is in reaction to the similar problems of drug abuse among children.

Madam Chair, the way that this bill will work in apprehending is the same as the protection of children in prostitution legislation. The parents will have to bring their case to the courts, and there will have to be a hearing with child welfare to determine the application. The threshold for the decision on whether the child will be detained will be created by AADAC. The child will then be picked up under a court injunction and detained for five days for an assessment to be made on whether the child should remain in secure treatment or returned to the parents.

The children will not enter the child welfare system other than the assessment part of it. There is no direction within the bill on what treatment will be provided. We support this bill but with some concerns for the question on granting this control to the court. What role does the children's advocate play in this bill? This is the question. What facilities are going to be used for safe houses? Who is going to pay for the police needed to perform these new arrests? How many new directors of child welfare will be required for the enforcement of this bill?

There are concerns about the treatment facilities available since there are very few treatment facilities throughout Alberta.

I am sure that this bill will give parents the tools to force their kids into treatment so that they can be helped. I agree that parents should have the right to step in and take care of their own children. The government must look into creating facilities for children so that there are enough spaces for the children to get the treatment they need. The government and the courts will have to exercise caution in the use of this new law to ensure that the rights of the children are not abused.

In closing, I want to say to all parents and teens who are affected by this: we will not give up on your battle against drug and alcohol problems in Alberta. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise and join the Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 202, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North. I commend the member for introducing this meaningful private member's bill and for her effort to navigate it through the legislative process.

The amendments may seem to soften the original bill, but like the philosopher Plato said: never discourage anyone who continually makes progress, no matter how slow. It's also said that Rome wasn't built in a day. Likewise, the Great Wall of China wasn't built all at once. I have been brought up in the Oriental culture, where strong family values of honest, clean, and healthy living and behaviour are the foundation of society. In fact, in that culture parents are the ultimate authority in keeping those family values. Due to some socialistic ideology, governments have interfered somehow in family life, so I see this bill as an opportunity for parents to claim back some rights to protect their children from modern societal harm.

I support this bill and amendments, and I urge all of you to support it as well. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, hon. Chairman. Regarding this Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act, issues for us in St. Albert are simply that we don't have any intervention service, and we don't have any treatment service under the umbrella of the FCSS. Many parents have talked to me regarding our AADAC service in St. Albert, and we're pleading with the powers that be to evaluate the service because we don't think it's doing the job.

There are several points in here that I'll quickly touch on. It's the civil liberties aspect. What I've come to terms with is that for the well-being of the family and other community members, I think it's important that we support the aspects of the bill that talk about incarceration. Treatment and intervention is a focus that I think is very important. I believe in the wraparound service aspect of this particular underlying philosophy of treatment, whereby we focus not only on the medical but the spiritual, physical, social, and mental health aspects of the person. A must to address in this whole question are the emotional and behaviour patterns. They are the things we must look at, and the key here is therapeutic cognitive behaviour interventions.

Another aspect that I'd like to address is the question of lodging. I think it's important that down the road we look at halfway houses or a facility in a rural setting for the treatment of these kinds of people. It's key that we have trained staff with follow-up resources after the particular persons leave treatment.

Other aspects that I think have to be encouraged are the supports for the pharmaceutical people in St. Albert, for example, that are supporting the behind-the-counter strategy for people not being able to get at the ingredients. I would hope that down the line we do a little more encouragement in terms of the research and start now into this very serious problem and continue it.

I also haven't had a chance to look at the Minister of Education's budget thoroughly, but I hope that the DARE program in the elementary school is reinforced, that it's looked at in terms of the problem of crystal meth, and that we start in the exercise of prevention.

With that, Madam Chair, I'll sit down. I want to just compliment the members on both sides of the House, women power, and also suggest that I support the amendments as they are.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Chair: Thank you. Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm very proud of the work of the MLA for Red Deer-North and also very proud to stand in this Chamber today and congratulate the members opposite for not having withheld the ability of this bill to come forward today. So I commend all of you.

I believe that all members of this House agree that the protection of children is one of the paramount duties that we have as legislators. I also believe that the members on both sides of this Chamber agree that the protection of children is the intent of the Member for Red Deer-North in bringing forward the bill and the amendments that I'm speaking to.

I fully support the premise on which this bill is based, the intent, and the desired outcome. The amendments which have been brought forward today preserve the intent of the member: to protect children. At the same time, these amendments ensure that the rights and freedoms of minors who are apprehended under PCHAD are fully protected.

Everybody knows how difficult it is today to parent because parents don't know where their rights begin and where they end anymore. They don't know what can happen to them if they simply try to bring some discipline into the lives of their children. So it's a very complicated world today to bring children up in.

I really didn't realize until some years ago that it was against the law to take your child for treatment with respect to this kind of a situation, but I'm aware of a family in Vancouver who had a 15-year-old daughter who had been away from home for something like seven or eight months, and this was the third or fourth time that she had not come back home. The parents were aware that this teenager had a rap sheet the length of your arm in terms of criminal charges and in terms of prostitution and everything else. They were aware that she had several times tried to take her own life. The last time they had seen their daughter was some three and a half months before they got a call one day that she had been seen at a particular location. They rushed over there, picked her up, and they came to Alberta, the entire family: mother, father, siblings, and this 15-year-old child. They didn't stop until they got to Alberta, and in fact they moved the entire family to Calgary because there's an adolescent addiction centre there with a fantastic record.

I'm pleased to say that today this young lady is an honours student, that has either graduated or is about to graduate with honours. But the interesting part was that had they been stopped on their way from Vancouver to Calgary, they could have been charged for kidnapping their own daughter.

So what this is doing is it's giving parents tools. As limited as perhaps some people feel the tools are with respect to this, it's giving parents tools. You know, during the five days, once the assessment is done – and it says in here that they'll be assessed by AADAC and that then they can be in detox for a maximum of five days. The bottom line is that if they are determined to be type 3 or type 4 addicts, at least there's an opportunity to find a treatment centre that will take them on and work with them with this horrible illness.

We have to remember that addictions are illnesses, and addiction to drugs is probably one of the worst addictions or one of the most difficult to treat. I'm aware that in the treatment centre that I'm so proud to have in my constituency, the Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre, it takes on average 11 to 14 months of very intensive treatment, where the children go and live in the homes of parents who have been through it with their own kids, where peer counsellors exist and work with the addicted because you can't snow the snowman. You know, they've been there, done that. They know all the lies. They know all of the shame. They know all of the things that happen to these kids.

So this is giving parents some hope that at least during that period of time that their children are under a court order, they can find a place that can in fact deal with the addiction, not just in the child who's addicted but also in the destruction that it creates in the entire family and siblings. I have been to graduations at the Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre where three – three – kids from the same family graduated at the same time, but a fourth child was out there using.

So some people have some very, very difficult things to go through with the ravages of drugs. I'm just so proud to support the hon. member and the amendments that she's brought in while we can take some time to maybe deal with this problem correctly. I know that I agree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. I think that we do need to look at dealing with this problem and having more facilities and beds available and programs that really work.

So I would urge everyone to support this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, please.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm excited to be able to stand up and debate this amendment as well. I give my thanks to the persistence of the hon. Member for Red Deer-North in getting this to here. I think that, perhaps, the government is more to be thanked than the opposition in getting this here. I am truly thankful for being able to be part of this exceptional occasion, I guess, today being a first in history according to our Speaker.

I'm sad that we have to bring forth an amendment that's watered-down. The point that, I guess, I'd like to talk on this amendment is that, perhaps, we need to be innovative again, as we were to get this bill here, and to look at the second step on what we can do. If, in fact, this is the first step and we can pass this amendment, which I will agree and I'm excited about, we need to be looking at the second step. I would urge this government and challenge them to write a stronger bill and to bring it to this Assembly, that we could pass a second one, that we could – this is worth the fight – fight a constitutional challenge on the original bill. But let's pass this one first, and then let's look at taking the next big step, sticking our neck out and fighting for the youth of our province, not saying: this is a step and good enough. We want to take the next one.

I believe this is a situation of priorities, and as the hon. member just mentioned, we need to protect those who can't protect themselves. This is just such a predatory environment once they get into that lifestyle that we have to be able to reach out and to protect them.

The challenge that I'd also like to put forward is the priorities. Just as this has come forward, I think there are many other things that we could do for our youth in protecting them if, in fact, we agree to continue working together to do that.

But I am very concerned about the lack of facilities. I can't help but ask myself – today we've gone over it several times – how many facilities could a $43 million transfer from horse racing to treatment centres accomplish? And I think that we have the funds that we can do it. I would challenge the government to put that in their priorities and where we spend the money.

But I'm pleased to be able to speak to this amendment and am looking forward to passing it here in the House. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Shariff: Thank you, Madam Chair. Before beginning comments, let me just congratulate you for the wonderful job that you're doing as chairman of the committee right now.

Madam Chairman, I'd like to speak on the amendment to this bill and make some comments about the bill itself, Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act, 2005. I want to first recognize and acknowledge the excellent work done by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North. I think this bill is due, a long time coming, and I'm glad that she has forced it upon us and taken the approach that she has to make it a unique process to have it passed in this session. I also want to thank and acknowledge all members of this Assembly from all sides of the House for their co-operation in moving this bill so fast through committee today.

I will support the bill. I support its purposes and objectives. But I want to raise a few concerns, and I think these are important issues that we need to really try and understand. First, why are our children finding themselves in this situation? We need to ask that question, and we need to find other amendments within our legislation to try and address solutions for this problem. First and foremost, what are we doing to those people, those perpetrators, those abusers who are bringing these drugs to our children? Why is our justice system not tough on them? I think these people should be – there should be no leniency whatsoever. If you are caught getting drugs to our children, selling it to them, put them behind bars. If it is for 30 years, so be it. Let's be tough.

My second question is: what has happened to our society today? Why are our children – and the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont just talked about a family with four children in the same situation. What's happening to our society? What's happening to the society that would oversee its neighbours? We were a small village at one time. We've become a big cosmopolitan centre. But I think we need to make sure that our schools, our other resources that our children go to have the monitoring abilities.

A third point I want to make is that as a former child welfare worker I have heard this again and again, that we are not funding the current resources for child welfare needs. I hope we have the courage to find the resources within our budget so that these issues are dealt with first and foremost.

The act also is proposing that the parents will apply before the court to obtain an apprehension and confinement order. So I raise this issue: do we have the capacity in our judicial system to have these parents go before a judge? Do we have the capacity to help the parents so they can prepare appropriate court paperwork and apply before a judge? Do we have enough court workers or child welfare workers who have experience to help these parents put the application in a correct format? So I think there is a lot of thinking that needs to go through with the various departments to make sure that adequate resources are provided to our court system, our judicial system, and our families.

But, most importantly, I don't think we have enough services in this province to address the needs of such children. I hope that that becomes priority 1. As soon as we pass this bill today, we make sure that services and resources in this province are made available so that our children, the children of this province who find themselves in this situation, and parents who want to take responsibility and apply to the courts are able to go before the judge, get an apprehension order, get a confinement order, and have the child in resources on the very same day.

Finally, Madam Chairman and hon. members, I just want to make this statement. We as a society will be judged by how we respond to the challenges faced by our children. I hope we do not fail them.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

[The clauses of Bill 202 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Acting Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Now I recognize the Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would move that the committee now rise and report Bill 202.

[Motion carried]

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 202. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Would all hon. members who agree in the report provided by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere please say aye?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Speaker: Opposed, please say no. The motion is carried.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I would ask permission from the House to revert to introductions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have in the members' gallery people who are very important in respect of this bill.

We have Audrey Bjornstad, who is the chairperson of PEP, Parents Empowering Parents; Marilyn Benay, who is the co-founder of PEP; and Gary Bjornstad, also a member of PEP. They worked very hard and dedicated many hours to get to this point. We also have Peter Pilarski, the researcher who put in many hours, and Susan Gosselin, my loyal and faithful assistant. I'd ask them to stand and receive the warmest welcome from this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, thanks again for recognizing me. To all sides of the House I thank you for your support today. I seek the unanimous consent of the Assembly to proceed to third reading of Bill 202.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Third Reading

Bill 202

Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a true honour for me to stand here today for the third reading of Bill 202. Allowing for this process to go through the way it has speaks volumes about the compassion and social responsibility of all members in this House.

On November 16, 2000, members of this Assembly came together and took a bill through all the stages necessary, and we passed that bill in one day. That bill was the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act. That day I witnessed all parties coming together in support of a very important cause. That day showed me what could be done when we agree to work together.

Today is another example of such a special day. On behalf of all the parents who have been waiting desperately for this day I say: thank you. The Holocaust was one of the greatest evils ever forced on mankind. Perhaps with the help of Bill 202 we can heal another kind of evil.

I thank the members for Calgary-Shaw and Banff-Cochrane for helping me to get started. Without their initial help this bill would not be here today. I thank the members of my caucus for supporting me and the various members who provided useful advice. I also thank the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, the Member for Edmonton-Centre, and the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods for doing their part in helping me to push this issue forward, and I thank the hon. members from the two other parties for helping me to get unanimous support to introduce the amendments and for allowing me to move third reading. To see everyone come together as they have is truly remarkable. I'm certain that parents and ex-addicts in the future will be ever grateful for this amazing work.

I must also thank the hundreds of parents who have phoned me, e-mailed me, and approached me about this bill, and I'm sure other members have had the same. Their words of encouragement have gotten me through the difficulties I have faced, and their stories have caused me to fight harder for their cause. This bill is for these parents, so they can help their children.

Finally, I would like to say a special thanks to David Gillies. David, you have been a wise and caring friend throughout this process, and your advice and assistance are greatly appreciated.

Today we have come together to give parents a tool for helping their drug-addicted children to overcome their dangerous habits. We have given parents a way to take their children into detoxification and to help them to get their lives back. We have upheld the right of children in Alberta to be protected from dangerous drugs. Mr. Speaker, the members of this Assembly have come together today to do something out of the ordinary. Alberta's parents thank you all for this effort.

The only thing left to do today is to vote in favour of passing Bill 202 in third reading, and I encourage all members to do so. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is an exciting day for us. The challenge of crystal meth is giving us an opportunity to think, act, and speak as a single body. I believe it is important to recognize that on matters of common concern we can come together and vote as a body, not in lockstep with party discipline or in keeping with preheld positions but as a conscious body of members acting in the common good.

In matters of this importance it matters not who introduced a motion or a bill, who spoke first and last, the constituency they come from, or the party to which they belong. What matters is that we are not only representatives or members of the Assembly but fellow human beings addressing an issue that touches our common humanity. If the disease of crystal meth addiction can propel us into a commitment to physical, emotional, and spiritual health, then, Mr. Speaker, we may look back on our deliberations and say: it was good work we did together here.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate the opportunity to join the debate on Bill 202, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act, in third reading. I'm going to be very, very brief this afternoon, but I guess I just want to say that I'm very heartened by this day, and I'm very heartened by this bill as I agree with my colleague from Red Deer-North and other members that we do need legislation that gives parents the tool to help their children break the dangerous cycle of drug and substance abuse before it's too late.

Mr. Speaker, in my community in Drayton Valley and the surrounding area, unfortunately, this has become a severe, severe problem, an epidemic. I can't tell you how many times I've had parents come to me asking for some form of a tool or some form of a way that we can help, that we can intervene.

I really appreciated it when the Member for Red Deer-North talked about the word "intervention" because that's what this is. When you have a friend that is in a crisis or that is in need, one of the best things you can do for them is to do an intervention. This is certainly what we will be able to do now if we can pass third reading of this bill today.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'm just very, very supportive and very thankful for what I've seen happen here this afternoon. I think it's a wonderful statement of co-operation and opportunity and democracy. I would just like to lend my support to the hon. Member for Red Deer-North and echo her in all of her thank yous around the House and urge all my colleagues to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am mindful of the time and what we're trying to accomplish here this afternoon, so I'll try to keep my comments brief. I've not had a chance to speak on Bill 202 yet, and I really do have a few things that I had wanted to say.

First of all, I'd like to add my voice to those many today who have congratulated in particular the two House leaders, I believe, who worked late into the night last night – I know because I witnessed it myself – to sort of steer this process that we witnessed today, make sure that it happened, and the third-party House leader and the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, who also were consulted. All indicated they would provide the unanimous support and make sure their whips provided the unanimous support to allow what you, Mr. Speaker, referred to as an historic occasion in this Assembly. I'm very proud and honoured to have the opportunity to be a part of that.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to this bill in third reading because, quite frankly, I really couldn't support the amendment that we were dealing with in Committee of the Whole, yet I understood, as did the Member for Red Deer-North, that that was most likely the way that things had to be dealt with today. Once again, something is better than nothing, and I certainly appreciate that. My comments, then, really are more suited for third reading.

I am a parent of two teenaged children. I have a 17-year-old son and a 13-year-old daughter, and touch wood, we've never experienced anything like this. But, Mr. Speaker, I'll be frank with you. I live in fear every day that my kids, in a moment of foolishness or a moment of submitting to peer pressure, might test just one time crystal meth. Just one time.

We've all seen pictures. We've heard the stories. Several of my colleagues visited Bosco Homes last week, and we saw first-hand some of the ravages that this drug, amongst many, can do. In light of that, I just think there is a duty upon us to do absolutely everything we can to help those parents who find themselves facing this challenge, a duty upon us to do everything we can to give them every available tool.

In preparation for debating this bill once I knew it was coming forward, I took time to arrange for a visit with Doug Green, who is a school resource officer at Harry Ainlay high school in my constituency. He's been in the news a little bit, Mr. Speaker, because he has a black lab that he visits various schools around the Edmonton area with, and there were some of the same concerns expressed about him visiting the schools with his dog that have been expressed about Bill 202 in terms of privacy and so forth. But it was a very enlightening morning that I spent with Mr. Green.

He showed me some crystal meth. Things have changed a lot since I was in grade 5 or 6, and a police officer came into the school with a bag of dope. Mr. Green pulled out a very tiny, about a half inch by half inch, plastic bag, and there were two little crumbs in that bag. Those crumbs were crystal meth. They were so small you could hardly see them. He told me that that was a day's supply.

One of my colleagues earlier asked: why have we let things get this way? Well, one of the reasons is that this drug is so dangerous because it's so small. It's cheap. That supply that he showed me is less than $10 for a day. It can be hidden anywhere. It provides a high that lasts up to 10 hours as opposed to a joint, which may give you 15 or 20 minutes or half an hour of pleasure, as it were. Those are some of the reasons why this drug is so devastating. Not only is it so terribly addictive, but it's cheap, it's easy to conceal, and it provides this long high.

We've met with some of the members in the gallery, and we were told that one of the problems is that the kids perform better for the first little while when they're on this drug, so it makes it so hard to detect. By the time they get to the point that we're talking about today, when the provisions of this legislation might actually kick in, quite frankly, it's almost too late. This is why I say that at that point you have to give the parents absolutely whatever tool might be available.

I would recommend to anybody who hasn't seen one of Mr. Green's presentations to take one in. He does them weekly throughout the city and the surrounding area. He has told me that they're open to the public, and he would be happy to have members of this Assembly join him for one of those. I would be happy to facilitate that if anybody is interested. I'm going myself next Friday to a presentation that he's doing in north Edmonton.

This program that he is doing with his dog is costing a grand total of $5,000 per year, a pittance – a pittance – compared to the numbers that we talk about daily in this Assembly. He told me that one man, whether it be him or somebody else, could tour all of northern Alberta. So presumably two officers for the entire province could tour every school and educate students in every school in a year on a rotating basis. I don't know what that would cost, maybe $60,000 or $70,000 in wages and a few thousand dollars for the dog and some money for travelling and whatnot.

We're talking probably, in my mind, less than a quarter of a million dollars to have a full-time person doing what he's doing part time aside from his other duties as a school resource officer at Harry Ainley high school. It just seems like such a small investment because as much as we're concerned about the kids that are hooked on meth and are at the stage where they're going to benefit from this legislation, several have mentioned that not only do we have to talk about treatment, but we really, truly have to look at why they're getting to this place in the first place. Anything we can do to make sure that that doesn't happen is so valuable.

Mr. Speaker, I am a member of a rather select club. There may be others in this Assembly that I'm not aware of. I've lost a daughter. Thank God it wasn't to crystal meth, but I've lost a child. When you've lost a child, if anybody in this room has, they will know that everything is completely out of order when that happens. It's not the way God intended it to be. It's not something that you ever completely recover from.

One of the things that I did – this was 11 years ago – to deal with it was that I became involved with a group called Compassionate Friends, which is a bereavement society for parents who have lost children. For the first couple of years I was there because I had to be, and after that, I was there because I could help other parents who had lost a child. One of the most interesting things that I learned out of that was that there was at times almost a division in the room, almost a wall between two groups of parents. The one group of parents would have been parents like myself who had lost a child through an accident. All of a sudden, you know, your life changes in a flash. On the other side of that wall were the parents who lost their children through a disease or an addiction, and they had watched their child die in front of them.

It was always interesting because in our case we never had an opportunity to say goodbye to Nicole. We never had an opportunity to make one last trip to Disneyland or whatever. But in the case of the parents who watched their child die in front of them, they had to watch the suffering. They had to suffer themselves. They had to experience this daily over, sometimes, a prolonged period of time. I can't imagine what that would be like. I know in my heart the unbelievable despair that comes with losing a child, but thank God I never had to watch my child suffer. I never had to watch my child die in front of me.

It's for that reason that this bill, as watered down as it may be, gets my complete support. If I'm that parent, and I'm watching my child die in front of me, at that point, quite frankly, I don't care about personal freedom or liberty. I don't care about laws. I would do as the Member for Calgary-Egmont suggested and kidnap my own child. At that point I would do anything, and what we're doing here is making sure that these parents don't have to be criminals when they'd do anything to save their child.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that pretty much covers what I meant to say. I could go on a long time. I think perhaps members sense that, but I wouldn't want to do anything that might interfere with making sure that we get the business done that has to be done before 5:30.

Thank you.

Ms DeLong: I just wanted to express a quick thank you from all the parents in Calgary-Bow to the member for bringing this forward. It not only starts to solve the problem for those parents who really need it, but it also gives a backup to the parents who are raising children, to know that they do have more tools to be able to help bring up their children. I just wanted to say thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just for the interest of members of the House – there's been a couple of mentions of Bosco Homes here – the Bosco program is called the adolescent drug and alcohol prevention and treatment centre, the ADAPT centre. It's for children and adolescents age 12 to 18 who are facing difficulties with a variety of drugs, including crystal meth. The program is available at a rural lakeside setting in Strathcona county, which is 20 kilometres from Edmonton. There is an in-patient program, which can last from six to nine months, and there is an out-patient day program offered in conjunction with the Bosco Homes schools.

The ADAPT program is based on the latest research in the field of addictions treatment, and the program is in place right now and can easily be used as a secure facility. So if any members run across cases where your constituents are looking for some sort of option, I encourage them to consider Bosco Homes. You can get in touch with them through their telephone number, which is 440-0708.

Thank you.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I'd be remiss as the Minister of Children's Services if I didn't add a few words on this particular piece of legislation and the hard work that has gone in by the Member for Red Deer-North. We held a meth conference about a year ago, and she was there every day from start to finish, listening to what had to be said and what people had to say at our particular meth conference.

I think it's a wonderful day in this province to see something like this go through, Mr. Speaker, and I have to stand up here and say, "You go, girl, and good for you."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I guess I want to add to the thank you to our hon. Member for Red Deer-North and also state that in West Yellowhead it's quite a problem too. That's why I've got another bill coming up after. We did have a crystal meth workshop in Edson in September, and we had the Solicitor General there as well as the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, who is the chair of AADAC. We had over 150 people there, and we turned lots away. So this problem isn't centralized within one area.

So I'm just proud of the member for doing what she's doing because that puts another tool in the tool chest so that we can look after our future.

At this time, I'd call the question.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'd be remiss not to add my views in terms of Bill 202. To the Member for Red Deer-North I just wanted to indicate that I'm very pleased to see this bill go through.

From an aboriginal perspective I certainly have seen many of the aboriginal youth and parents who have had to deal with the issue of crystal meth, and as we have more aboriginal people move into the urban centres, it certainly highlights the need for some tools for the parents to be able to deal with it. I'd like to commend her for all the work that she's done and the care that she exhibits in dealing with children, most particularly in dealing with the issues that affect the children and families of today.

I would like to say congratulations to her.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North to conclude the debate.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just before I conclude the debate, I would like to thank every member in this House for proving through their actions that children are the number one priority in this province of Alberta.

I'd call the question.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 202 read a third time] [applause]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a very, very historic day, indeed. I just want to briefly add my comments in relation to Bill 202, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act, and to thank the Member for Red Deer-North for the courage to see this through and all members on all sides of the House for supporting it so unanimously. I've been in this House for 12 or 13 years, Mr. Speaker, and I've yet to see such tremendous co-operation. Wouldst it were so on so many other important pieces of legislation we do in this House, we could change the image of democracy as we know it in this entire country.

On that note and on the historic note of a historic budget as we begin the second century of our province financially and given the hour, I would move that we now call it 5:30 and adjourn until Monday, April 18, at 1:30 p.m.

The Speaker: Before calling the question, let me just tell you how proud I am of all of you for being true parliamentarians.

[Motion carried; at 5:22 p.m. the Assembly adjourned until Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

Let us pray. At the beginning of this week we ask for renewed strength in the awareness of our duty and privilege as members of the Legislature. We ask for the protection of this Assembly and also the province we are elected to serve. Amen.

Hon. members and to our guests here as well, today we'll be led in the singing of our national anthem by one of our tour guides, Inge vanDelft. I would ask all to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Thank you, Inge.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Loughheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members assembled students from Strathcona Christian Academy, accompanied by their principal, Mr. Jim Seutter, and their teacher, Mr. Doug Zook. I'd ask that the students from SCA please stand and be acknowledged in the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you 26 students and four adults from your constituency, sir. They're led by their teacher, Anita Flese, and Mr. Michael Wiese, Mrs. Sharon Gilchrist, and Mrs. Marion Charchun. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, and may I also take this opportunity to congratulate the hon. member on his new wedded bliss status as of last Saturday.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a distinct pleasure I have today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly the most beautiful woman in the world. She's kind, sensitive, intelligent, funny, warm, endearing, and I could go on forever, but either way she is the light of my life, and any person would be so lucky to know her. I'm the luckiest man in the world because this weekend she married me. I'd like to introduce to you and to members of this Assembly my wife, Mrs. Sue Griffiths.

Mr. Rogers: I don't know how to follow that, Mr. Speaker. But it is my privilege to introduce to you and through you some of the most exceptional students in this province. I have two groups of students here today. The first group I will introduce is from Covenant Christian school, and they are seated in the public gallery. They are accompanied by their teacher, Ms Colette Hayes, and parent helpers Wim Ruysch, Melanie Samuelson, Linda Van Doesburg, Joanne Gulley, Marianne De Boer, and Michelle Koopmans. I would ask that the students from Covenant Christian school rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, the second group is a grade 10 social studies class from Leduc composite high school in the city of Leduc. They are led by their teachers, Mrs. Vanessa Andres and Mr. Stanley Staniszewski. They are also seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Lynda and Ron Jonson. The Jonsons are vocal advocates for improvement in long-term care facilities. Lynda has herself visited over 100 long-term care facilities in Alberta and describes them as plagued by an epidemic of neglect and abuse. I would ask that Lynda and Ron rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a group of 23 very bright and energetic young students from Princeton elementary school in my riding of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. They are seated in the public gallery and are accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Unger, and their student teacher, who has been with them for the past nine weeks, Miss Joumaa. Also, parent Manfred Grunling has joined them for this visit. Princeton was one of several Edmonton schools considered for closure. However, thankfully they received word that they will get to keep their wonderful school for a while yet. I ask that these students and the staff accompanying them rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, have your guests arrived yet?

Dr. Pannu: One guest, Mr. Speaker, so I'll take the liberty of introducing her and wait for the others.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of this House Pamela Miller. Pamela Miller's brother, Aaron Webster, was brutally murdered three years ago in Vancouver's Stanley park apparently for no other reason than the fact that he was gay. His death serves as a reminder that we live in a society in which individuals can still be hostile and violent towards gays and lesbians and other minority groups. At this time I'd ask that Pamela please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electricity Marketing

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hundreds of hours of transcripts involving Enron and the manipulation of electricity markets are being made public through a trial in the U.S. The Calgary Herald reprinted some of those this weekend, but one they did not print is the transcript tabled earlier in this Assembly of a conversation between an Enron employee and an employee at TransAlta concerning ideas for manipulating markets. To the Minister of Energy: has this government or its agencies ever investigated the possible role of TransAlta in manipulating Alberta's electricity prices?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, those transcripts in particular that refer to TransAlta have been looked at. Those actually refer to transactions that occurred in the state of Washington, not in Alberta in particular. Also, actually, when they use words like "marriage of convenience," it refers to control areas. It actually talks about that any jurisdiction, companies included, can create control areas, and those have a very stringent regulatory requirement around them and a very high standard. So they talk about should they set up a control area, which is a very valid part of any discussion.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the transcript and other evidence, will the minister categorically deny that TransAlta conspired with Enron to price gouge Alberta consumers?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, what I will say is that those transcripts have been looked at. They didn't apply to Alberta in particular, and in that respect the market surveillance administrator continues to be a watchdog and does an excellent job in protecting Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister tell this House if the Alberta electric system operator investigation into potential market manipulation, reported in September 2003, was referring to TransAlta?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I don't have the specifics in front of me with respect to 2003. I'd be happy to advise in due course.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, for years companies like Enron took advantage of electricity deregulation to manipulate power prices. An Enron senior executive declared in 1999 about Alberta that, quote, it's become clear how easy this is to do, end quote, referring to price manipulation. Despite the claims of this government, deep concern remains that Alberta's electricity market is still being manipulated. Again to the Minister of Energy: will the minister tell us clearly what monetary or legal penalties exist, if any, for companies that unethically exploit market loopholes to their advantage?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First off, I've got to say that all of the things talked about are just allegations or statements. The facts have not proven out. There have been investigations in the past, but even with that, the market surveillance administrator has referred some material to the federal Competition Bureau. They take these things very seriously, and they will ensure and act very judiciously on behalf of Albertans to protect them.

I would like to expand though. In 2003 there was legislation passed that gives substantial improvements, and it was done to ensure that there was a broad standard of conduct that all would have to abide by and that there would be very severe penalties for those that would breach those.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that current investigations, including the one by the federal Competition Bureau, won't tell Albertans how much money they are owed by Enron, why won't this government pursue Enron to recover undue profits, that should be returned to Alberta consumers?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, the legislative hedges in place back at that time, 1999 in particular, that are referred to did just that. They protected Albertans, that they would not have been harmed by any profiteering or manipulation of the marketplace. Because the power at that stage was regulated – before the transition in selling the power purchase arrangements – there was a cap on the amount that any company could get on an upside, and any additional monies would go back into the power pool. Therefore, the consumers were protected at that time.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, then, again to the same minister: is it, in fact, this government's and this minister's position that there was no price manipulation for Alberta's electricity?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I will state that Albertans at the time of 1999, in particular, were not harmed in any material aspect at all with respect to the case that he cites.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Budget Expenditures

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government appears to be playing a shell game. It has traded its fiscal debt for a down-loaded infrastructure deficit. While $9.2 billion is a large sum of money, it will not restore the province in 2005 to its pre-cut 1994 state. My first question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. Will the minister please explain why Calgary's postsecondary infrastructure repair and expansion needs, including the University of Calgary in Calgary-Varsity, Mount Royal in Calgary-Currie, and SAIT and the Alberta College of Art in Calgary-Mountain View were basically ignored in this year's budget announcement?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member, having lived in the community and representing a community that has an institution in it, will know well that, for example, Mount Royal has engaged in a considerable amount of building over the last number of years and continues to do so, that SAIT has just finished an aerospace centre at the airport in Calgary, that the Alberta College of Art and Design has plans with respect to how they might proceed with the downtown urban campus site in conjunction with the other postsecondaries in Calgary – and that's in the early planning phases – that the University of Calgary is looking toward building a digital library in the context of e-Calgary and the Calgary campus and is working with us in development of the Lois Hole digital library for across Alberta. There are many, many good things that have happened in, are happening in, and will happen in Calgary, and we'll continue to work with them on the planning process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: while Calgarians were pleased to finally hear the promised government commitment to publicly fund the southeast replacement hospital, when will this government provide the entire expansion funding for the needed beds that were lost due to the closure of half of Calgary's hospitals in the 1990s?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the hon. member totally ignores the fact that there has been a considerable amount of good work happening in Calgary and across this province in terms of building the health system, and the announcement with respect to the south Calgary hospital ought to be the most exciting thing that he's heard in a long time. The commitment to building the south Calgary hospital is not only about putting beds in place, but it's about new ways of delivering health and finding ways to make sure that Albertans stay healthy. So the hon. member ought to stay tuned and stay on tune with respect to the good things that are happening in the health system, including the international symposium that's going to happen in Calgary at the beginning of May.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Community Development: given the centennial spotlight on arts and culture, the heart and soul of Alberta, why were these two key societal pillars ignored in this year's budget?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, I'll just take that question under advisement for the hon. Minister of Community Development. Thank you.

Long-term Care Facilities

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the appalling conditions in long-term care facilities are Alberta's dirty little secret. Accommodation and related charges to long-term care residents keep going up, but living conditions remain deplorable. Staffing levels are woefully inadequate, facilities are overcrowded, and inspections are few and far between. My questions are for the Premier. Why, after this government has been in power for 34 years and posted billions of dollars in surpluses over the past 10 years, are the province's most vulnerable seniors forced to live in such appalling conditions?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the preamble is to say the least rude, insensitive, offensive, and totally false. The hon. member should apologize to all the good people who work in long-term care centres.

Mr. Speaker, certainly, it is a fact that the Friends of Medicare, the friends of the NDs and the Liberals, held a news conference this morning, sponsored by the New Democrats, as I understand it, to talk about problems with Alberta's long-term care system. Totally unbiased, of course. We recognized some time ago that the demands on Alberta's long-term care system are going to grow. The reality is that we have an aging population. Improving long-term care is a priority for this government, and I will have the hon. minister of . . .

Some Hon. Members: Time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, why does the government keep ignoring the petitions and pleas of family members when they tell this government that there are simply too few qualified caregivers to look after their loved ones in these facilities?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it was in the budget, but as I said previously, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we said in the Assembly last week, the responsibility for long-term care is a shared responsibility. It's a joint responsibility between the Minister of Health and Wellness and my ministry. The area that I look after in long-term care is the accommodation area, which, of course, is meals, laundry, and that type of service, housekeeping services, utilities.

The question was in regard to caregivers and staffing ratios, and what I would say to the hon. member is that I will take that under advisement for the Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: notwithstanding the commitment we just heard from the minister, which is far too late, why has the government not already established minimum staffing and quality care standards for the vulnerable elderly and disabled citizens who live in long-term care facilities?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we have. We have. We have been making tremendous progress. For example, we directed regional health authorities to raise the average hours of care each resident receives from three hours to 3.4 hours over the next three years. This means more hands-on care every day for residents. If the hon. member was listening to the budget debate, he would have heard that targeted funds will be provided to increase nursing care in long-term care facilities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Unbudgeted Surplus

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation made reference to another possible 35 new or upgraded school projects if there was a surplus revenue. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. How does the idea of further capital projects relate to potential surpluses?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in the budget speech of Wednesday last, we do have options for unbudgeted surplus, options that would be for balance sheet improvements. Of course, some of those could be for capital, for the overall capital plan. It could be to improve the heritage fund. It could be to endowments such as the advanced education fund, the scholarship fund, or the science and engineering fund. So those unbudgeted surpluses will be dealt with in that way.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Ady: Yes. My first supplemental is also to the Minister of Finance. When will you know if there is additional money that could be allocated to these projects?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, it will continue to be our practice to do a first-quarter review, a second-quarter review, and a third-quarter review. If during that process there are pressures that need to be addressed in any of the areas I mentioned and if it seems prudent to expend any dollars in those areas, those decisions will be made through that process.

Mrs. Ady: My final supplemental is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Since 35 projects have been discussed, have you already decided what projects would take the highest priority? Which communities would get what if money was available?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Finance said the key word, which was “if” there is a surplus available. We’ve had each and every school board in the province give us their capital requests, give us their capital desires, and certainly we will look at that. But there have been no decisions made. Again – again – the key word is “if” there is a surplus and “if” we decide to put it toward capital infrastructure.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Student Finance System

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Students, parents, and indeed all Albertans are waiting anxiously for the forthcoming postsecondary affordability review, yet the minister’s recent defence in question period of the student finance system in Alberta, one that he described at the time as the “finest . . . in this country” and even “great,” leaves me wondering whether this affordability review is more about PR than seizing the opportunity for an honest look at the problems and the full range of possibilities. My question to the Minister of Advanced Education: given the vigorous defence of the current system how can Alberta students and parents be confident that the minister is willing to look at real reform rather than simply tinkering at the margins of the system?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s because I’ve had the opportunity to talk with students and with members of the institutions and the stakeholders in the community. We’ve had open, frank, collaborative discussions about what’s needed and about how we go forward.

It’s not difficult to admit that we have the best system available in the country today, but also admit, Mr. Speaker, that there are students who feel that finances are a barrier to their education, and so there may be better ways to deal with it. We can look at other ways to ensure that rural students have access to education even if the costs of education are more than just the tuition fees: the cost of moving to school as well as the cost of going to school. There are many things that we can look at. What we’ve promised, and I think what the student leaders and others in the system are very excited about, is the fact of an open, honest affordability review, looking at all aspects of it and making the changes that are necessary after that review. That’s what we’ve promised to do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the government expects to disperse $105 million in loans this year but only allocates $35.5 million to the loan remission program, can the minister clarify his recent claim that virtually all the money that’s provided by the provincial student finance from Alberta coffers gets remitted?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, in terms of details and questions on the budget I’d remind the hon. member that tomorrow in Committee of Supply he’ll have all the opportunity in the world to explore and ask extensive and detailed questions about the budget for Advanced Education, including a lesson, if he wishes, in how the student loan system works and how remission works.

Mr. Taylor: And I will, Mr. Speaker.

To the same minister: will the minister end the confusion among some student finance experts across the country, who tell me they can’t find the evidence, and table the documentation to support his claim that Alberta students end up with the lowest debt of any students across this land?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the information that I have is that Alberta students benefit and end up with the lowest overall debt, at least government-supported debt, across the country. I will find the information to back that up and have a discussion with the hon. member.

The clear facts are that we have a great student finance system, that students who want to go to school can apply. Yes, we expect them to earn resources themselves. Yes, we expect parental contribution and family contribution. Yes, we expect them to maximize their own investment in their own education. But we’ve also said that finances are not a barrier to a student getting an education, and it is clear that students in this province are in the best position of any students across the country when it comes to student debt.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Education Property Tax

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Wednesday’s budget once again increased the education property tax, placing additional pressure on municipalities that are facing significant challenges providing service to their communities. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. The budget shows that taxes are going down, but the education property tax requisition is actually increasing. Can the minister shed some light on this anomaly?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question is an excellent question because it does tend to get a little bit confusing. The mill rate, in fact, went down but the requisition, the amount that will flow through to the government, went up. It’s not unlike reducing the income tax rate, but you have more taxpayers paying more taxes, and so the total revenue goes up. In this budget the intention was to capture the real growth, the actual new assessment, new buildings that weren’t there the year before, but not to capture the inflation. That’s why the rate went down, but the actual dollars that were collected will go up.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental is to the same minister. What will the impact of this requisition increase be on municipalities and homeowners?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, there really isn't one simple answer to the question because every municipality has a different rate of growth. I can tell the hon. member that in 40 per cent of the municipalities where there has been relatively slow growth, their taxes will in fact go down. The requisition will go down by 5 per cent where they haven't had the growth. The individual taxes will go down.

In the other 60 per cent approximately 43 of the municipalities, because of high growth, will be protected by the maximum 10 per cent cap that's in place. The balance of the municipalities will have an increase of somewhere between zero and 10 per cent on the requisition, which means that there may be some slight increases to the individual homeowners' taxes.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister: how much education funding is coming from the property tax bill?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question, and in fact it shows that the trend is moving in the right direction. When we amalgamated and took over the collection of property taxes in 1994, approximately 57 per cent of the total cost of education was being borne by municipal taxation. Through the years, by having a close hold on the increase in assessment to property taxes, that percentage has shrunk down to 34 per cent. So today only 34 per cent of education taxes are borne by property tax payers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Youth Residential Drug Treatment

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Because of the growing demand for specialized treatment for adolescents, Alberta needs more youth treatment facilities. The good news is that this government has provided 12 spaces for each region. This means 12 new spaces for the entire city of Calgary and 12 new spaces for the entire capital region. To the Minister of Children's Services: given the magnitude of the problem identified through the Alberta drug strategy, why only 12 beds?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd be pleased to try and answer that question as it comes under the minister of health. I can tell her that this government is concerned about our adolescents in this province. The private member's bill that the member is discussing was brought up last week and passed unanimously in the House. The minister of health has addressed that issue by providing 12 beds in Edmonton and 12 beds in Calgary. I think what's important is that we've got those beds now. We can assess the children that are going in there, try and figure out the needs, and if we need more beds, I'm sure the minister will address that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. To the same minister: given that AADAC doesn't have the infrastructure or staff to run residential treatment, will AADAC receive the only new funding as compared to NGOs in the province?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, it's a difficult question for me to answer because it comes under the purview of the minister of health, but I will say that she is dedicated to the matter of dealing with children who are drug addicted, and I'm quite positive that AADAC, with all of the staff that they have and all the knowledge that they have contained within the department, will do whatever they can to address the needs of the children.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. To the same minister: given that the existing not-for-profit facilities that provide drug treatment in Alberta have empty spaces, is the minister going to commit the funding to make these spaces available to our youth?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, I really am having trouble following that particular question, whether she's talking about the treatment facilities under the minister of health under AADAC dealing with drug addictions or if she's talking about other facilities that are outside of that purview. I'd be more than pleased to sit down with her, like I have in the past, and discuss her concerns.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Bow and Elbow River Watersheds

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Environment. After the Walkerton inquiry, Ontario is moving forward with legislation and regulations to implement some of the recommendations of that inquiry, and those recommendations identify the protection of source waters as the first step in a multibarrier approach to protecting water quality. Ontario is now implementing source water protection plans on a watershed-by-watershed basis. Can the minister advise, given the fact that the Bow and Elbow rivers in the Calgary area are important sources of drinking water, what sources of potential contamination or risks have been identified in those watersheds?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to say, as we've referred to in this House before, that this invaluable resource, which we refer to as blue gold – we will treat it and continue to treat it like the precious resource that it is.

I would like to say, though, that from the Bow River Water Quality Task Force, that studied the point that the hon. member has made, there are recommendations, and in terms of dealing with that, we are looking at contamination and what impact it will have on our quality of water. I want to say that the council that he makes reference to is working very closely as a stakeholder with the Ministry of Environment.

Dr. Brown: Will the minister advise whether his department has identified any specific risks in the Bow and Elbow watersheds with respect particularly to herbicides, pesticides, and any agricultural or industrial chemicals?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member again asks a very important point, and we're examining that. We're doing a data collection relative to the exact point that the member is talking about because we want to ensure that at the end of the day the conservation of our water resources, one that we all as Albertans use preciously, something that I think we can all do a better job at. But even more so, we want to ensure that it continues to be considered the number one quality that we enjoy in this province, unlike, as you know, some other provinces that are experiencing extreme difficulty. I'm very proud, I want to say, of the resource that we have in this province based on the good people that are making that kind of positive effort.

Dr. Brown: Will the minister advise if there are any proactive steps being contemplated with respect to ensuring that there is an assessment on a continuing basis of possible risks from such things as herbicides, pesticides, and other risks to the aquifers in the Bow River basin?

Mr. Boutillier: Mr. Speaker, absolutely, without any fear of contradiction, we are proceeding exactly on that line. We will continue to do an analysis relative to what is today and what is in the future. As I said in this House before, we inherit the land and the water not from our ancestors but literally borrow it from our children. We want to ensure that that water, quality water, is left for our children in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the government's response to the MLA corrections review, the province decided to close correctional operations. Young offender units in Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, and Red Deer are now sitting empty and collecting dust. It seems obvious that these spaces could be used for treatment centres for youths addicted to alcohol and drugs. My question is to the Solicitor General. Given that the treatment centres appear to be in Calgary and Edmonton, why has this government not considered using these existing rural facilities as treatment centres?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, with Bill 202 moving through the Assembly on Thursday last, that is one of the options that we are going to be looking at, to look at detoxification facilities for that five-day period, and we're going to be examining all types of alternatives throughout government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. You saved approximately $3 million annually by closing them, and I'm thinking that it isn't a small price to pay for utilizing these facilities to help our children fight addictions. Is that right?

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Speaker, the new Youth Criminal Justice Act, which came in, emphasizes noncustodial sentences to our youth, and this is why the review that was done two years ago was very important. It provided as well the ability to look at the young offender centres and the fact that about only a 50 per cent population is required in them right now as per the new justice act. So that is one of the reasons why we're going to be looking at the availability as well as the opportunity to assist with Bill 202.

Ms Pastoor: Given the importance of fighting the growing problem of crystal meth in Alberta, will you not commit to using these empty facilities to increase the number of beds available for detoxification and treatment?

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Speaker, we recognize that crystal meth is a very, very serious problem in Alberta and a very serious and addictive drug that our youth are being involved in right now. There are a number of strategies regarding our ability to combat organized crime as well as the ability to have centres that will be able to assist those kids in detoxification as well as, in fact, the mental health wellness aspect of it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Policing Resources

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the last week a 13-year-old girl was brutally murdered, a hard-working Yellow Cab driver, a father of seven, lost his life while at work, and last Saturday another woman's body was discovered near Edmonton. All of these are big-city crimes, yet last week's budget failed to deliver any increase in the per capita policing grants for the major cities of Edmonton and Calgary. My question is to the Solicitor General. Given the long overdue and welcome police funding increases for Alberta's medium-sized communities, how can the government justify failing to provide comparable additional police funding increases for our two major cities?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the hon. member mentioned the fact of the female that was found north of Camrose this past weekend, and I can tell you this, that $3 million is provided to Project Kare, which is a joint force and integrated model between the RCMP and Edmonton Police Service providing the homicide investigation with regard to the missing women. That is in place right now, and we are continuing to move that way.

There was obviously, Mr. Speaker, a definite need for additional funds to rural Alberta, to those smaller communities between 5,000 and 20,000, and those needs have to be addressed first. We've met with the mayors of the other cities and let them know what the schedule is for us to look at down the road. As well, we are providing Edmonton and Calgary and our other larger municipal services additional resources that'll be utilized with regard to Alberta's response to organized crime.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since these murders don't appear to be related to organized crime, how does the freeze in the per capita police grant help address the need of Alberta's major cities for more front-line police officers?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, the investigation that's taking place outside the city of Edmonton by the Project Kare team is utilizing analysts, is utilizing skills and experts from across Canada. They're doing psychological profiling on who the suspect or suspects may be. So there's a lot of work taking place at this very moment. When we talk about policing and policing resources within our major centres, there is a commitment by this government. Calgary received almost $15 million this year and Edmonton about $10 million to provide initiatives toward assisting them regarding their policing costs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that both Edmonton and Calgary are improving community safety by hiring more police officers, why does the Conservative government refuse to at least share the financial burden, their refusal made evident by its failure to increase per capita policing grants for these two cities?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are committed to providing assistance to those municipalities regarding their policing costs. As I mentioned, we are providing Edmonton with approximately $10 million and Calgary with approximately $15 million, but in addition we're also going to be providing 20 additional officers for Calgary that the province will be paying for, which will be working with the integrated response to organized crime. As well, Edmonton will receive roughly in the same neighbourhood and the RCMP roughly 20 as well. So we are going to be working in an integrated fashion between these police services, exchanging information, working together to better serve Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Foreign Investments in the Energy Industry

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In January the federal government signed an agreement with China to encourage mutually beneficial commercial partnerships between our two nations, and last week saw two announcements of significant Chinese investment in the further development of Alberta's oil sands. My question is to the Minister of Energy. What can he tell this House about this source of investment and the possible implications it might have on Alberta's energy industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member does rightly confirm that there were two announcements last week. One was about a 16 per cent interest in MEG Energy, which is a Calgary-based company that holds some leases in the oil sands, and the other was with respect to Enbridge and PetroChina signing a memorandum of understanding at the exploratory stage of shipping oil from the oil sands through a pipeline to the west. In that respect, we have always made sure that our markets are open to outside investment. I want to reinforce, though, that Albertans do own this resource. It is in our interest to see that they are explored under the policies that we would put in place in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that Enbridge intends to include a Chinese partner in the Gateway pipeline project which would move Alberta oil sands production to the west coast, where it can be shipped to China, is this pipeline in the best interests of Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a lot of advantages for us to source additional areas for supply of the oil that will come from Alberta, not just the oil sands but truly from the natural gas and oil that's in abundance in this area. That would source not just the Chinese market but also the southern California market by opening up further markets. That said, though, we will work hard with those companies to ensure that we get all the upgrading opportunities to happen right here in Alberta so that we're not just shipping raw bitumen out through those pipelines. We can look at upgrading, refining, and all the petrochemical-related activities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: what specifically is the province doing to ensure that foreign involvement in Alberta's oil sands is not just about mining and removing our own nonrenewable energy resources?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is our policy that we look to all the valued-added opportunities for Albertans to maximize that hydrocarbon chain for Albertans. There are excellent jobs – highly skilled, professional jobs – that are available in the upgrading and the refining and petrochemical industries. In that light we will continue to work very closely with industry to ensure that an integrated approach to developing our resources occurs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mountain Pine Beetle

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development stated, "There is no epidemic of mountain pine beetle at this particular point in time." It appears that burning trees and clear-cutting is a strategy that has been adopted to protect our multibillion dollar industry. My question to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: why is it that we identify the problem, we cut and burn, and we wait for it to surface again? How is this strategy proactive?

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, in this year's budget we do have some extra dollars that will go to ongoing programs. The first line, of course, is exactly as I stated in this House last week, that first of all you have to identify where the pine beetle are. Aerial surveys do that, as well as on-the-ground surveys, as well as taking into account the people that are actually in the forest. That's the people in the forest industry that help us identify where the pine beetle are. You take that first line of action, you clear-cut that, and you burn it to make the preventative measure. But in the long term we have committed and will be committing extra dollars to make sure that that pine beetle does not come into our healthy pine forest in this province. So it's an ongoing concern of ours, and it's an ongoing prevention that we go through.

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Speaker, given that the B.C. government has committed $150 million on top of the $1.5 billion on long-term plans, can the minister inform us what financial commitments this government has taken besides the token amount mentioned last week?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, a million dollars is not a token amount. It's a considerable amount. The million dollars is also matched by the province of British Columbia, and it's part of the ongoing agreement that we have with them. In addition, the federal government has come along to help the people in British Columbia to eradicate the pine beetle because basically there is no way of getting rid of the pine beetle except by identifying pockets of it, other than having the cold weather, minus 30 or 40, which is the only natural way of getting rid of the pine beetle.

So it's an expensive undertaking, and we will continue to make sure that we protect our healthy pine forests by investing the dollars, and this year's budget has a significant amount in it for that prevention.

Mr. Bonko: I used to fight my own fights as a kid. It sounds like this government's allowing someone else to fight their own fight.

The Speaker: That's a question, hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, it is a co-operative effort, and we are participating with both the B.C. government and the federal government to make sure that we protect Alberta's – Alberta's – pine forests. We don't want the same thing to happen in our healthy pine forests that has happened in British Columbia because of the pine beetle, which is an epidemic over there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Everyone knows that our fast population growth and our continuously booming economy are due to the right government policies. The megaprojects in the north and their supporting services across Alberta require thousands of skilled workers. This has generated a concern over hiring of temporary foreign workers. So my question today is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Minister, do we have shortage of a skilled workforce in Alberta?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is a good question. Last month's Alberta unemployment rate was 3.5 per cent, and it is the lowest it's been in 24 years. In fact, this means that we are creating more jobs than we have people to fill those jobs. The hon. member is right. It's the right government policy that's doing it, in fact. So, yes, skill shortages are indeed a reality. But employers, of course, have to go through a rigid policy, an exhaustive policy, to ensure that Albertans are given the first opportunity and Canadians are given the opportunity to access these jobs, and that policy will remain.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. What is your proof against the claim that we don't have skill shortages where temporary foreign workers are being hired and that there are plenty of Canadian-/Albertan tradespeople who are available to do the work?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, that's another good question. An unemployment rate of 3 per cent or less indicates that there is a skill shortage. The unemployment rate in the mining, oil, and gas industry and the extraction industry is 2.6 per cent. Like I said before, you know, the employers have to go through an exhaustive policy and actually make the application to the federal government to approve the process. It's costly and it's exhaustive. Employers do not prefer that. They would rather hire people here in Alberta and in Canada. In fact, I've said earlier in this House that anyone that can come up with a person that's a tradesperson that's applied for a job and has not been hired and is replaced by a foreign skilled worker: show me. Show me the person.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental question is to the same minister. What is the government policy to deal with the concern that temporary workers displace Albertan and Canadian work with cheap labour?

Mr. Cardinal: No. Mr. Speaker, any person that is approved to come and work in Alberta has to follow all our labour standards, including the wages paid to the employees. Again, it is not cheap labour because it is an exhaustive and a costly process to get foreign workers here. It's only common sense that employers will hire local people if they're available because they're not as expensive as bringing in foreign workers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Oil Well Drilling on Crown Land

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are under the illusion that their government is in control of resource extraction and honours principles of environmental protection. In recent months, however, extensive land clearing for oil and gas activity on contested Crown lands has been allowed to take place without the companies seeking prior approval from government or consultation with the affected Lubicon communities. I have pictures here that I'll table later. To the Minister of Energy: given that the minister stated that companies are merely following standard procedure, how are issues of public trust addressed when a company is essentially allowed to bulldoze public land without approval from the EUB?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, it's not without the awareness of the EUB. What has to yet happen is the EUB has to – when they come forward for an application of drilling for that well, that has to yet go forward at that stage. That's the next part of the process.

Dr. Swann: To the Minister of Environment: how can the minister assure Albertans that proper environmental protection exists when oil and gas companies are allowed to destroy natural areas without licence or approval?

Mr. Boutillier: Mr. Speaker, I want to first and foremost say, as I have said in this House many times in the past, that ensuring environment protection principles are always in place to protect the environment no matter what stakeholder is using the rich and valuable resource that Albertans own – and Albertans own the resource, no one else. Pertaining to the specific issue that the hon. member mentions, I can assure this House and the hon. member that all environmental principles will continue to be met based on the framework we have established. Pertaining to any that are licensed or unlicensed, I will also suggest that the EUB and the Minister of Energy will ensure that due diligence is taking place to ensure that they are licensed relative to the work that they do.

Dr. Swann: Again to the Minister of Environment: will the minister stop the unlicensed destruction taking place on this Crown land, publicly owned land, until a proper assessment is completed?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I can assure this hon. member and every member of this Assembly and all Albertans that are listening and watching at home that the environment protection framework and principles that we have to ensure sound environmental principles, also pertaining to stakeholder work that is done in this province, the principles set forth by this government, will be followed to the letter and to the law.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Bridge Repair and Construction

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many bridges and large culverts on rural roads are in serious need of repair or replacement because they're either nearing the end of their useful lives or were not designed to take the larger vehicles and heavier loads of today. My questions today are for the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. What is his department planning to do to address this important issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Two years ago we doubled the amount of dollars that were available for the bridge program from $9 million to $18 million. This, theoretically, will help the local authorities to put in more of these necessary structures. What we all realize and know is that if a road goes and comes to a bridge and if you can't cross the bridge, you're not going to go anywhere. So it's quite common sense that we have to do this, and we will be doing it in conjunction with the municipalities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: what assistance is his department providing to rural municipalities to help them access these available grants?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. From a purely monetary point of view we also have the municipal infrastructure program as well as the bridge program. One of the big issues is that actually even last year not all of this money was used up. It was not all given out to the municipalities because there is a significant amount of planning. You have DFO issues, for example, Department of Fisheries and Oceans, especially when it's over an active waterway.

So, Mr. Speaker, we continue to help them. We continue to help the municipalities with their planning, and we certainly hope that the municipalities will avail themselves of these dollars because obviously these bridges are extremely important.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is also for the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Given that we're on the subject of bridges, could the minister update this Assembly and my constituents watching at home on the status of the twinning of the bridge over the North Saskatchewan River near Drayton Valley?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, it's very doubtful that the hon. member's constituents are watching at home because all of his constituents are too busy working. However, I have met with the mayor of Drayton Valley as well as the county of Drayton Valley and went over the bridge that the hon. member is referencing. It certainly is a very tough hill going down to the bridge, and indeed there have been a lot of accidents.

We had a functional study done in 1999, which did bring back some figures, but we're currently in the process of updating that 1999 study to 2005 standards, Mr. Speaker. This is something that is of tremendous concern to the hon. member as well as to his constituents, and we're going to do our utmost to ensure the safety of the people driving over this bridge because there's a lot of heavy traffic, a lot of logging trucks that are now going over this bridge.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mortgage Fraud

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When an Alberta family achieves the goal of home ownership, which allows them to raise a family and provide some financial security, there is an expectation that government registry services will protect their largest investment from fraud. Alberta has unfortunately gained the distinction of being the mortgage fraud capital of Canada, with some 2,700 cases of mortgage fraud in one year alone. My question is to the Minister of Government Services. Will the minister acknowledge that this government, having failed to protect the information and privacy of Alberta homeowners, will now commit to implementing increased security measures within the provincial land titles office?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, while there is a lot of fraud going on within the province, it's not unique to Alberta. As a matter of fact, this is one of the problems that's surfacing across the country, and we have put in place a cross-ministry initiative to deal with the issue. We will be coming forward with some different ideas on how we can deal with it, but we certainly would urge people to watch for certain indications where there may be transactions relative to property that are happening on a regular basis that indicates that there's an inflation. There are a number of other areas that, in fact, we will be trying to make the public aware of that would assist a great deal in preventing these mortgage frauds from occurring.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the land titles office, which his department refers to as merely a registry, is responsible under Alberta law for losses suffered by homeowners, including those resulting from fraud, what decisive action will the hon. minister take to prevent future fraudulent activities?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course, there's more than just the land titles that is involved in many of these transactions, and as you probably have recognized, under Bill 31 we are trying to plug certain cases there where, in fact, the assurance fund under the Real Estate Council of Alberta would be held responsible for these frauds. Through the various means that we're going to be implementing, we hope to be able to curtail if not stop a lot of this fraud.

I've got to indicate that this is not just in Alberta. This is happening across the country. As a matter of fact, it is an issue that we will be discussing at our federal/provincial ministers' meeting coming up in June.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So given this cross-ministry initiative my final question will be to the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. How will the hon. minister work with Government Services to help them overcome this baffling inefficiency?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe that the competent Minister of Government Services is taking the lead role on this, and I will gladly give him whatever help he needs to help him.
Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I'll call upon the first of six hon. members to participate in statements, but in the interim might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I introduce to you and through you to the Assembly 25 bright students from Mountain View school in Hinton along with their teacher, Linda Muhly, aides Bonnie Gillespie and Mrs. Terri Bancroft, and parent helpers Mrs. Sarah Burns and Mrs. Debbie Corless. At this time I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm absolutely thrilled to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of very special guests: close to two dozen residents from Pleasantview Place seniors' lodge, located in my constituency of Edmonton-Strathcona. These seniors are actively engaged in many healthy living and community projects. They have established a walking club at the lodge and have been exploring Alberta's many towns and villages. They recently visited the waste management plant in Edmonton. They've also raised funds for the tsunami victims. They are accompanied by Diane Loyer, a co-ordinator at the lodge. My guests are seated in the public gallery, and I will now ask them, please, to rise so that they can receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, by way of historic comment for today on this day in 1966 an act respecting the establishment and operation of Mount Royal junior college received royal assent. Thousands of graduates, including our Lieutenant Governor, the Hon. Norman L. Kwong.

AADAC Youth Drug Treatment Programs

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The problem of addiction has been the cause of impassioned debate in this House recently. As chair of AADAC I hear first-hand about the lives impacted and the corrosive effects on society that result from addiction. Substance abuse is a serious matter, and it's especially tragic when it involves children. However, the government has it within its means to intervene in a positive way, as was demonstrated recently in this House.

Thankfully the new provincial budget, announced last week, includes an increase to AADAC's funding, which will allow the commission to begin operating almost immediately youth detoxification and residential treatment in this province. I'm pleased to say that there will be two programs, located in the Edmonton region and the Calgary region, with 24 new beds, eight for detoxification and 16 for residential treatment.

The programs are designed to help youths who are in serious difficulty with substance abuse and who require intensive intervention. Both the detoxification and residential programs will treat crystal meth users as well as users of other addictive drugs. Regarding crystal meth AADAC will provide a treatment protocol designed specifically for youth who are abusing this dangerous substance. The residential program will be 12 weeks in duration. However, in cases of long-term or severe substance abuse AADAC has the capacity to provide youths with up to a year of treatment through its spectrum of programs. AADAC has also as of April 1, 2005, increased its accreditation standards for all youth treatment programs we fund so that we can doubly ensure that young Albertans in our care are receiving the highest standard of help possible.

The new standards along with the detoxification and residential treatment programs are excellent enhancements to AADAC's range of services for youths and adults. AADAC already provides comprehensive outpatient programs for youths and their families at 26 area offices.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Economic Development in Northern Alberta

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise today to draw attention to the importance of northern Alberta. As we move forward with the aggressive infrastructure agenda put forward through the 2005 budget, presented last Wednesday, it is of great importance that we don't forget about our northern communities.

Northern Alberta already makes a significant contribution to Alberta's economy and the quality of life that all Albertans enjoy, but it is only beginning to capture its full potential. There are tremendous untapped opportunities in the north. Government needs to work with northern Albertans to help enhance their current industries and make value-added concepts become value-added manufacturing realities.

In order to create more manufacturing and the processing of raw materials that the north exports, it will take more than local businesses to be erected and start adding value-added materials. As a government we must make a commitment to provide an opportunity for these Albertans to change how their economies operate. An investment in infrastructure will assist in the economic transformation the north is seeking to make. This includes ensuring having the necessary roads and railways to handle the economic growth taking place.

Tourism will also be playing a large role in the growth of the north. As almost all of the members of this Assembly can attest, northern Alberta has some of the most beautiful country in Canada and the entire world. Those who have not had the opportunity to experience this vast, bountiful, breathtaking country must do so. It is a great place to visit, live, and invest.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Speaker's Ruling Gifting of Promotional Attire

The Speaker: Before introducing the hon. member, might I remind all members that from time to time an hon. member will arrive in the Assembly with a certain different form of attire. But there was a rule established several years ago that if that member wanted to wear such distinctive attire, it would only be appropriate and in good manners to provide all members of the Assembly with a copy of such attire. Now, the chair is still waiting for the hon. Member for Red Deer-North to deliver the 82 jerseys that she promised to deliver to all other members of the Assembly. I suspect that the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster will be a little more prompt with respect to this request.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it would be rude for me to be quicker than the hon. Member for Red Deer-North, so I'll wait until she does.

2:40 Centennial Hockey Challenge

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan celebrated their joint centennials by staging a very special hockey game last Thursday in the border city of Lloydminster. This historic battle at the border featured some of Alberta's finest junior A hockey players face to face with their counterparts from Saskatchewan.

It was a game that truly defined the friendship and friendly, competitive spirit between our two provinces. More importantly, it showed that our young athletes are indeed true champions that personify Alberta's and Saskatchewan's reputations for sportsmanship and excellence in athletics. Mr. Speaker, through snowstorms and power failures the Centennial Hockey Challenge was a huge success that saw Team Alberta emerge victorious by a score of 7 to 5.

To the organizers, participants, volunteers, and especially the fans: your involvement in this biprovincial celebration of our centennial have set a standard that will be truly hard to match. For Lloydminster, Mr. Speaker, it is just the start of a week of great hockey as the Allan Cup starts there tomorrow.

A special thanks to Premier Calvert and all the Saskatchewan MLAs who attended this nonpartisan event. However, thanks to the time-tested theory that a good team of solid right wingers leads to success, Premier Calvert will be wearing Alberta's colours in the Saskatchewan Legislature today in honour of Team Alberta's win.

I know that all members in this Assembly will join me in extending congratulations to head coach Dean Clark and all members of Team Alberta for writing the perfect ending to the 2005 Centennial Hockey Challenge cup.

The Speaker: It's XL.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to acknowledge that April 17 to 23 is National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week and to share with you a new initiative by the Kidney Foundation of Canada and Scotiabank that was launched in my constituency of Cypress-Medicine Hat this past Friday.

The green wristband I'm wearing is part of the Live2Share campaign, which is designed to raise awareness of the importance of organ and tissue donation. Right now in Alberta 512 people are waiting for an organ transplant. Seventy-five per cent of them are waiting for a kidney. In 2004 41 Albertans died while waiting for an organ transplant.

For people whose kidneys have failed, the cost to the health care system is enormous. The cost of dialysis is approximately $50,000 per person per year. A kidney transplant has a one-time cost of $20,000, with $6,000 per year for medications. More importantly, transplants offer individuals a new lease on life.

For some people talking about organ and tissue donation can be difficult, but for the more than 4,000 Canadians who are waiting for a life-saving organ transplant, it's a subject we can't afford to avoid. A very small percentage of people die in circumstances that make them ineligible to be an organ donor. We owe it to Albertans to make sure that every possible opportunity for organ donation is pursued. One organ donor has the power to save eight lives and to help 50 to 100 other people through the donation of tissues, corneas, bones, and veins.

Many people don't realize that while you can sign your Alberta health care card to show your support of organ donation, the decision is ultimately made by your family. Studies have shown that 92 per cent of families will donate their loved one's organs if they have discussed organ donation while only 53 per cent of families will give the gift of life if they have not previously discussed organ donation.

Mr. Speaker, until you've talked to a gentleman who's had a double lung transplant or a person who's had two heart transplants or a lady who's waiting for a kidney or a child waiting for a liver, it's perhaps difficult to understand how important it is to consider organ donations. I congratulate the Kidney Foundation of Canada on the Live2Share campaign and their commitment to improving the lives of the people in my community and of this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to advise the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster that my jersey size is XL as well.

Caroline Mouris

Mr. R. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I am so pleased to rise today to recognize the accomplishments of Caroline Mouris, a grade 12 student at Harry Ainlay high school in my constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. Caroline at the tender age of 17 is already an artist of some renown and just recently has been awarded a full-time, full tuition, four-year scholarship at Cooper Union for the Advancement of Science and Art. Cooper Union is located in New York City's East Village and prepares students for the professions of architecture, art, and engineering. The scholarship itself is worth about $110,000 U.S. and will allow Caroline to pursue an undergraduate degree in the fine arts.

Mr. Speaker, although Caroline started drawing as a toddler, she credits her high school art teacher, Mr. Theron Lund, with teaching her how to take her abilities to the next level and encouraging her to apply at Cooper Union. Caroline has indicated that she has no particular preference as to what reaction her art invokes as long as it provokes thought amongst the viewers.

Mr. Speaker, it seems that we are bombarded daily with news stories about crystal meth, gang shootings, and troubled youth. It is the brilliance of young people like Caroline that reminds us of the incredible potential of today's youth and gives us all plenty of reason to believe that our future is in good hands indeed.

I would ask all members of the Alberta Legislature to join me in congratulating Caroline Mouris on her wonderful achievement and in wishing her all the very best as she begins her studies in New York this fall. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

School Closures

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the last few weeks ministers of this government have stood in the Assembly and denied any responsibility for the devastating school closures that are threatening several of Edmonton's core neighbourhoods as well as hurting many rural communities. Using their tired and unfeeling arguments about utilization formulas, rhetoric that is, of course, familiar to those of us who have attended school closure meetings, this government chooses to blame closures on the school boards. The reality is, however, that school boards are bound by the utilization formula set by the government, and the current formula is nothing more than a how-to guide in closing schools.

The impact felt by a community that has lost its school can be terrible indeed. It doesn't have to be this way. For example, Ontario has recently changed their policy to separate school closures and grants for new schools. In Alberta, by contrast, the policy rewards boards for closing schools because that's the only way they can get a new school built in new neighbourhoods. We can also look to B.C. for a different approach to school utilization. In B.C. they include after-hour activities from Boy Scouts and badminton to adult education classes in the overall determination of how much a school is being used. In fact, some areas have hired evening co-ordinators to ensure that schools are being used as much as possible by the community.

These approaches are wildly different from the irrational approach used by this government. In its obsession with the short term and the bottom line this government is promoting a vision of schools in communities as temporary and disposable. Instead, we should be building a sense of tradition in our core communities. We should be instilling our students with practical knowledge to prepare them for the world, but we should be doing so in buildings and schools that will give kids a true sensitivity to local history and a strong connection to their community.

Emphasizing community use of the school and detaching school closures from grants for new schools are two initial steps to recognizing the importance of schools in our communities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition from 105 good Albertans from the great Alberta communities of Anzac, Tofield, Coalhurst, Lethbridge, Fort McMurray, and Edmonton. It reads:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am presenting petitions signed by 102 Albertans from across this province who also are dismayed at the fact that temporary foreign workers are being brought into this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have the honour of presenting a petition to the Assembly. It's a petition signed by 3,400 Albertans who happen to come from all across this beautiful province of ours, from Taber, Coronation, Red Deer, Barrhead, Ponoka, Nanton, Wabamun, Slave Lake, St. Paul, Fort McMurray, Stony Plain, Camrose, Wellington, Drayton Valley, Bashaw, Forestburg, Daysland, Wetaskiwin, Thorsby, Eckville, Stettler, Edmonton, Calgary, and I could go on. The petition urges the government to introduce legislation that will enhance the quality of care for residents in long term care and continuing care facilities by requiring health regions to increase the number of caregivers to at least one caregiver per five residents from 8:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m. and one caregiver per eight residents from 8:00 p.m. to 8:00 a.m.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Bill 29

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Amendment Act, 2005

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 29, the Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Amendment Act, 2005.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 29 amends the AISH Act by expanding the definition of the benefit to include supplementary payments for emergent or personal costs outside the current financial and health benefit package.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday was Equality Day in Canada, which is the anniversary of section 15 of the Charter coming into effect. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a document called The Top 15 on 15. It summarizes 15 of the most important Supreme Court decisions made under section 15. I would encourage all members to review this document so that we can all renew our commitment to the importance of equal treatment for all Canadians.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am tabling with permission the appropriate number of copies of a letter I received from a constituent of Edmonton-McClung by the name of Cheryl Applewhaite expressing support for a total smoking ban in all public places and also expressing her dissatisfaction with what she refers to as “disease driven health services” and “inadequate support for health promotion and disease prevention.”

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have seven letters to table today regarding the interim Métis harvesting agreement from the following concerned Albertans: Duane Radford, Richard Duquette, Fredrich Kegel, Ian Kopp, Jolin Fisher, Bryan Martin, and Aden Stewart. These individuals are frustrated that the interim Métis harvesting agreement proceeded without adequate stakeholder input and is not in keeping with sound conservation practices.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a letter to table from a constituent who questioned the value of his hard work in his apprenticeship training and becoming qualified in light of all of the temporary foreign workers that are being proposed to be brought into the province.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, April 14, it is my pleasure to move that written questions appearing on today’s Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 12 through 23 inclusive.

[Motion carried]

Trade Show Expenditures

Q12. Mr. Elsalhy moved on behalf of Mr. Bonko moved that the following question be accepted.

How much money has the Ministry and Department of Economic Development spent on trade shows in the fiscal years 1992-93 through 2003-04 inclusive?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Economic Development I would like to advise the House that the minister recommends that we reject this written question as the time period is sufficiently long that much of the requested information is now publicly available, archived material, or will have been destroyed. Consideration was given to amending the written question to cover only those years for the which the ministry is in possession of the relevant records. However, the process of collecting the necessary records required to answer these written questions would involve significant cost to the ministries.

The member’s inquiry can be made through the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, which sets forth a process for completing such requests, including a fee schedule to ensure that applicants cover a fair portion of the cost of collecting and disclosing relevant records.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you. I’m happy to participate in the discussion on Written Question 12, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I must express my disappointment to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. I have in the past used the access to information laws to try to gain access to some of this information. Some of it I have been successful with; some I have not. There is one file that certainly comes to mind, and that’s a trade mission that went to Tokyo and then went on to Korea; Seoul, as a matter of fact, not North Korea but South Korea. It took a great deal of time and effort to get this information.

We are spending significant amounts of money on these trade shows. There was even the design in this case of a booth that was done. Fortunately, it was done in Alberta. There were also two arts groups that went on this trade show, one from Calgary and I think a country band from out around Hinton. So there are significant amounts of money being spent here, and to say that one should have to go through access to information to get it I think is an error. To say that it is cumbersome for the department to have these records going back to the fiscal year 1992-93 is also an error. I think that is not respectful of the taxpayers. I would have to say in this case, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, that it’s neglectful of the taxpayers.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. My question and comment as well are addressed to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. I’m not sure that the minister is aware that every time a flight request is put out there, it’s the taxpayer who is basically paying twice for information to be provided. At some point I’m hoping that the government will realize that the opposition is equally important to the development and promotion of democracy in this province, and without the necessary information being provided upon request, we are simply putting the taxpayer further in the hole by asking for legitimate requests.

A question to the Minister of Municipal Affairs is: are you willing at this time to provide more recent information that is more easily convenient for you to come up with? For example, let’s go back to 2003-04, 2004-05. Would you at least consider tabling that information?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity should be aware that this is not a question-and-answer period. One has one chance to participate.

Mr. Chase: Can I ask him to take it under consideration, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: No.

Mr. Chase: Okay. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung to close the debate.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar pretty much summed up my sentiment on this question. We will be maybe submitting another question in the near future that meets with the hon. minister’s criteria.

I move to close debate.

[Written Question 12 lost]

Trade Mission Expenditures

Q13. Mr. Elsalhy moved on behalf of Mr. Bonko that the following question be accepted.

How much money has the Ministry and Department of Economic Development spent on trade missions in the fiscal years 1992-93 through 2003-04 inclusive, broken down by mission and year?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government will be recommending that the House reject this question also. The question is similar in nature, and the rationale is the same.

3:00

Mr. Chase: Again, when travelling is undertaken for the express purpose of increasing the Alberta advantage – a number of, for example, what I would call trade junkets to the Orient have taken place – if there was value in these junkets, if we achieved more foreign investment, then I would suggest that it would be advantageous of the government to basically blow their horn with regard to all the investments they achieve through these junkets. If there's no proportionate return for value for Alberta taxpayers based on these trips, then I suggest that we stop them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I will be brief. I'm disappointed in the rejection of Written Question 13 by the Minister of Municipal Affairs. We look at the Department of Economic Development, and we look at the fiscal years where we are trying to get this information, from 1992-93. I think that if we were to get this information – and perhaps this is why the government is so afraid to provide it, so reluctant to provide this information – there would be a chart starting in 1992-93, and it would sort of flatten out, I think. Then as we got the information and we tracked the number of trade missions and the amount of money spent through to 2003-2004, we would certainly see a chart that would be reflective of this government's spending habits, which in my view in a lot of cases are excessive.

I don't believe some of this money is being wisely spent. We've seen dramatic budget increases. I would think that this chart, if we were to build one, would be very much like the Project Stanley hockey stick that's referred to in Enron in the electricity price manipulation. It would go along like this and then go straight up, Mr. Speaker, on a 45- or 50-degree angle, very similar to a hockey stick.

I hope I'm wrong, but those are my suspicions as to why we can't have that information. It would just show the excessive spending by this government in these sorts of matters.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung to close the debate.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, although disappointed, in the interest of saving time and moving along, I move Written Question 13.

Thank you.

[Written Question 13 lost]

School Fee Revenues

Q14. Mr. R. Miller moved on behalf of Mr. Flaherty that the following question be accepted.

What is the total revenue received by Alberta school boards from school fees, broken down by school board and by fee type for the fiscal years 2000-01 through 2003-04 inclusive?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to indicate to the House that we are prepared to accept Written Question 14 with some amendments should the mover or someone on behalf of the mover be so disposed to agree. In fact, this information was shared with the opposition colleagues prior to 11 this morning as required, and I think it's now been circulated throughout the House.

Nonetheless, the reason that we need to look at amending this particular question is simply because all school boards report their financial information based on their particular school year, which typically runs September 1 through to August 31 of each year, as most members here would know. So the amendment is simply to change the motion from "fiscal years" to read "school years." I think the same information would still be arrived at. The amended question would simply read, "What is the total revenue received by Alberta school boards from school fees, broken down by school board and by fee type for the school years 2000-01 through 2003-04 inclusive?"

So I would move acceptance of Written Question 14 as amended on the basis that I've just explained.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Just to clarify, Mr. Speaker, we're speaking only on the amendment right now. Is that correct?

The Speaker: Only on the amendment.

Mr. R. Miller: Yes. Thank you very much. On behalf of my colleague for St. Albert I would like to thank the minister for his explanation as to the amendment and suggest that it is something that we are agreeable to. So I would speak in favour of the amendment.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on the question as amended.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to see that the government is willing to provide this information, and as I suggested, we're understanding of the parameters under which they're doing so. I would move that we close debate.

Thank you.

[Written Question 14 as amended carried]

School-based Fundraising Revenues

Q15. Mr. R. Miller moved on behalf of Mr. Flaherty that the following question be accepted.

What is the total revenue received by Alberta school boards from school-based fundraising initiatives, broken down by school for the fiscal years 2000-01 through 2003-04 inclusive?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I'm going to suggest that we accept Written Question 15, albeit with some amendments, and I would also indicate that this particular set of amendments has been shared with the opposition prior to 11 a.m. today as required, and it's now been circulated throughout the House.

Very briefly, the same rationale applies here, for the first part, as with Written Question 14, and that is that all school boards report their financial information based on a school year. Similarly, school boards' audited financial statements do not report at the school level. They report at the school board level. I should also add that in Alberta Education we refer to school-generated funds as funds raised at the school level to support programs that enhance educational services for students. For example, there might be some items that might be included that are actually optional school fees, such as the case might be for field trips or activities pertaining to graduation exercises, a yearbook, student pictures, locks, locker rentals, and so on.

As a result, I would again like to propose a suggested amended wording for this question so that it would read as follows. "What is the total revenue received by Alberta school boards from school-generated funds, broken down by school authority for the school years 2000-01 through 2003-04 inclusive?"

Should the mover or the person speaking on behalf of the mover be amenable to those changes, then we would be happy to accept and move the acceptance of Written Question 15 as amended.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm afraid that on behalf of my colleague for St. Albert I can't support the amendment. By striking out "fundraising initiatives" and substituting "school-generated funds," we lose the intention of the question, and that is, obviously, to identify how much fundraising is being done in initiatives outside of school fees. By lumping them together, as I understand this amendment would do, we lose the clarity we're looking for and the detail that we would be looking for.

Again, I guess I would make the same argument. If we have to deal with school authorities – i.e., school boards as opposed to individual schools – then we're once again going to lose the sort of detail and clarity that the writer of the question had hoped to receive from the government.

Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure about the legalities involved, but it would appear to me that although they have changed the wording of the question in the rewritten question to show that they're dealing with school years as opposed to fiscal years, that's not actually outlined in the three amendments, (a), (b), and (c), that are shown here. Oh, maybe I'm wrong about that. I think I'm wrong about that.

On those first two anyway, (a) and (b), certainly I couldn't on behalf of my colleague from St. Albert speak in favour of this amendment given that it takes away from the intention of the question in the first place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to bring to the attention of the entire House in regard to this amendment to Written Question 15 that schedule E of the standard format for auditing each and every respective school board in this province outlines the source and application of school-generated funds for the respective year. This information would already be listed in a document that was tabled by the hon. Minister of Education during this session. So to substitute "school-generated funds" and to strike out "school-based fundraising initiatives" completely changes this written question. If one looks at the revenue, the statement of revenues and expenses for the school year ended the 31st of August for whatever year you want to look at, there certainly is a line item for net school-generated funds that is totally different than the use of school-generated funds. I think this changes the written question.

The information that we were seeking in the original, unamended version would be of a great deal of interest to many parents who work very hard to raise money for their respective schools. The parents, some of them, feel very frustrated that public education is not being publicly funded adequately.

Thank you.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. What this amendment doesn't get at is how schools are funded. Basically, my experience of 34 years was that in the last number of years, when I taught at, I would say, an upper middle-class school with reasonably affluent parents who were able to participate in casinos and other fundraising activities such as selling coupon books, one-third of our total school budget was provided by the province in the form of grants. The other two-thirds came out of parents' fundraising through casinos, through cafeteria profits, through Coke machines, and school fees.

So basically, the point this question was asking was very specific to fundraising as opposed to school fees, cafeteria profits, and all the other areas, and I would very much hope that these concerns would be addressed.

[Motion on amendment lost]

The Speaker: Now on the debate on Written Question 15. Additional speakers? Shall I call the question then?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has already spoken on this matter. You'd be closing the debate here now.

Mr. R. Miller: I won't be closing the debate.

The Speaker: Any other speakers? Well, then, proceed, hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Just very briefly, Mr. Speaker. [some applause] Well, thank you. I always appreciate the encouragement from the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

This is becoming a serious issue in terms of accessibility. I know that in the previous question, Question 14, by fees and now through school fundraising initiatives we're starting develop a bit of a tiered system here. I think one of the members alluded to it, the Member for Calgary-Varsity. If you happen to have the wherewithal and you're in a school where the parents have the wherewithal and ability to fund raise, that school is going to get more than some of the, for lack of a better term, high-needs schools because the parents don't have the wherewithal to do that.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that we should begin to take a look at how education is being funded. How much of it is through school fees? How much of it in high school? If you've got three or four kids and you come from modest means, it becomes very difficult for those parents to just do the regular things. They have to do that, but if there are other things in high school that add to the student's education, add to the quality of the education, trips and that sort of thing, they're not going to be able to do it.

I'd like to see this information. I'm realist enough to know that that's not going to happen in this House today, Mr. Speaker, but I really say to the Minister of Education that we should begin to take a look at this whole area of fundraising and how that leads to, I think, an inequality from school to school within the same district. Of course, I'm speaking now of being on the Edmonton public school board, but it'd be true in Calgary in the bigger schools. Also the fees: more and more fees tacked on for what I'd call regular programming. Again, it leads to a two-tiered system because people from modest means certainly aren't going to be able to involve themselves in some of the trips and that sort of thing.

I think this is a reasonable question that people ask. I don't know why it is that we can't get this sort of information. I think it's sort of important. More importantly, if we had the information, Mr. Speaker, then we could begin to look in terms of the overall funding for education. Is there a necessity to increase the funding because more of it's through school fees? We could talk about the taxpayers, but those parents are the same taxpayers. I really worry about where we're going. It could lead, I think, to a two-tiered type of educational system.

So I would hope that the minister, even if they're not going to give us this information now, would look at it in the future and also take this as a very serious matter in the direction that education is going. I can assure you, having been a former trustee, that this was an issue raised to us by parents time after time after time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly unfortunate that members chose to defeat the amendment that was proposed, which would have allowed the Minister of Education to have this question phrased in language to which he could respond. Having not accepted the amendment, it's now in unclear language and puts him in a position where he can't adequately respond to the question, so we would have to ask members of the House to now turn down the question.

In saying that, it's interesting that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar made reference to the audited statements, which clearly refer to school-generated funds, which is something that school boards do report on as I understand it. That's the language that the minister was trying to inject into the question so that the information could be provided on an appropriate basis. I don't understand why the hon. members would turn down an amendment which allows the question to be answered, but having turned down the amendment, we now have to suggest that the question be turned down because it's not in language which can be answered on the basis of which the information is reported. [interjection]

The Speaker: Well, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity has moved. If I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, that closes the debate.

The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I'm having difficulty with the notion that the question is unclear. It clearly states "school-based fundraising initiatives." We've accepted the former amendment of changing "fiscal" to "school" years, so I don't see where the confusion exists.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, the amendment has been defeated on this question.

Mr. Chase: But the turning down of the question . . .

The Speaker: Sorry. There's no debate. It's just a fact.

Additional comments? Hon. Member for Edmonton Gold-Bar, you can participate if you wish.

3:20

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I listened with a great deal of interest to the brief explanation by the hon. Minister of Advanced Education in regard to this written question and how difficult it would be to provide that information. The information for school-generated funds is in each audited statement.

Mr. Hancock: My point exactly.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. But the information – and this is my point exactly – that we're after is not, and there is quite a difference here. There is quite a difference in the information that was asked for and the information that's been offered.

I would remind the hon. minister that in this House last week the Department of Education didn't even have the proper regulation for school closures on its website. You had an outdated one on there. [interjections] Yeah, you fixed it up. You bet. You fixed it up on Thursday of last week. But that information wasn't adequate.

How are parents to know what is accurate and what is outdated information in this department when we look at the school closure regulation that had been passed by this government in August of last year and the Minister of Education and the Department of Education still had one on there, Mr. Speaker, from before that? So whenever parents look at this department and they're looking for information, on occasion the most up-to-date, accurate information is not available. I don't understand why there is a reluctance to provide this information in the manner that was asked for by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to close the debate.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview perhaps expressed my sentiments and those of my colleagues best when he indicated that if it's not possible to get this information, perhaps the minister will recognize from today's debate how much interest there is in having this information and, certainly, how very much the parents of the students in this province would like to have this information. Perhaps, if nothing else, the government can take under consideration changing the way that they report the statistics so that in the future when this question is asked, they would be able to provide it.

Just as an anecdote, Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie and myself visited Ellerslie north campus on Friday and were appalled to see that on their wish list that they're presenting to their parent council looking for items to be purchased by the proceeds of an upcoming casino was new carpet for the library. This is exactly why these sorts of things are so important for not just members of this House but also for parents across the province to know because, certainly, the consideration is that perhaps schools are raising money outside of the fees, as my colleague from Calgary-Varsity suggested, outside of pop machines and cafeteria and so forth, for things other than field trips and, rather, for essentials for learning.

Really that is the crux of the matter, and that is why the question was worded the way it was, referring specifically to fundraising initiatives, and why the Member for St. Albert feels that it is so important to have this particular information. So I would certainly hope that the Assembly would vote in favour of this question, and I will close debate.

Thank you.

[Written Question 15 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Department of Energy
Communications Contracts Expenditures

Q16. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

How much money in total did the Ministry and Department of Energy spend on communications contracts in the 2003-04 fiscal year broken down by organization?

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, fiscal year 2003-2004 was a busy one for the department. The department on behalf of this government was trying to defend publicly electricity deregulation, natural gas deregulation. [interjection] I hear one clap over there, but there are a lot of government members in the Assembly this afternoon, and they obviously don't support that. It's sort of quiet.

Support for electricity deregulation and natural gas deregulation, or energy deregulation: certainly, consumers have had a number of campaigns directed their way. There are many people who think that all of these campaigns originate in the Public Affairs Bureau, but there are some that are contracted out to various communications agencies. It would be very interesting and very informative to know exactly how much money is being spent by this government to convince consumers of both electricity and natural gas that energy deregulation has worked, that choice has reduced costs and improved efficiency. It certainly hasn't happened. [interjection] Now, the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky says: give it up. No, I won't give it up. Consumers are phoning, and they're saying: don't give it up. They feel that this whole process has let them down from day one.

The propaganda campaigns: they start, but they never finish explaining to consumers the benefits of energy deregulation. This is, again, information that we should have. We should know how many of these communications campaigns have started. How many have, for instance, tried to convince us, whenever a third-party marketer or a middle person or a middle marketer knocks on your door, of the merits of having a long-term contract whether it be one or three or five years? The Department of Energy's website: who designed that? The one that's updated as frequently as my own website, which is not too often. Certainly, there has been a lot of money spent telling people how wonderful electricity deregulation is. It's money that's been spent, and what we really should be doing is taking our low-cost plan for electricity deregulation and adopting that in this province.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I would like to say that citizens of this province would probably be as startled as I if they knew the total costs of trying to sell in the fiscal year 2003-04 the merits of energy deregulation to consumers by this government. The bill would be in the millions of dollars, and I would hope that I can receive this information and share it with all the consumers of this province, consumers who have not only in this fiscal year that we're talking about but in previous fiscal years had to bear the unfortunate burden of sky-high energy bills.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of the Environment.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time on behalf of the Minister of Energy and the government I am recommending that Written Question 16 be rejected. I would like to assist the hon. member, though. If he has a question, perhaps he can make it just a bit more clear. Since there appears to be a question related to how the ministry spends its money in the budget, he may want to specifically as chair consider asking a question in Public Accounts Committee as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:30

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. This question again has to do with transparency and accountability versus hiding information within the FOIP requirement and then requiring, as we formerly mentioned, taxpayers to fund the bill and wait months to finally have the information.

One of the first moves the Premier made upon assuming the leadership of the Conservative Party was to bring the public relations department under his specific wing. Right now that public relations department costs taxpayers annually $14 million, and there are approximately 266 employees employed to basically tell the people what a good job this government is doing. We don't need extra tellers unaccounted for. In other words, if we have extra individuals being contracted out by the Department of Energy on top of the $14 million that taxpayers are already paying out, then at some point this self-promotion becomes rather prohibitive.

I would suggest that in the nature of accountability and transparency this question be accepted. If the expenses are legitimate, back them up by revealing them. Thank you.

The Speaker: Others?

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the comment just made about the taxpayers' money, I'm not sure who the hon. member thinks has to ferret out all this information when a written question is asked, but I can assure him that many times when written questions come forward, when they're phrased in a global way that you can't narrow it down to the type of information that's being looked at, it takes civil servants hundreds of hours to get the information together, and it's not a very appropriate use of the taxpayers' money if it's a fishing trip. Often these written questions could be much more effective if the type of information that was really being ascertained could be appropriately described.

Many times in this House we have to move to amend a question to get it into the right language so that we can be sure that we respond accurately. When the Legislature orders a return or an answer to a written question or orders information be provided, you must be certain that the language is precise so that you provide the information that's being ordered. You would not want to be offside an order from the Legislature. That is why often you try and get precise language in the questions. When a global question is asked which doesn't have the precise language, it ends up ordering civil servants – wasting taxpayers' money looking for a broad scope of information, and it's not a good use.

Now, the other comment that I wanted to respond to was when our current Premier became Premier of this province – if the hon. member wants to go back to that point in time and talk about Public Affairs and bringing the communications department under the government, it was this Premier who, as one of the first acts, brought forward a Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, which made a process for the public to access information that was in the hands of government in an appropriate way and to make those determinations as to how to appropriately acquire and how to pay the cost of acquiring information when people sought to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The latest comments from the hon. Minister of Advanced Education – I would have to say that was an unbelievable speech. We're talking about government waste here. We have to go no further than contracts to friends of the government that we don't know whether any work was ever done. Waste. Over $40 million spent on the thoroughbred horse-racing renewal while we're closing schools: that's a waste.

The Speaker: Okay. The chair appreciates all of this, but relevance is important. Right now we have Written Question 16 before us.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. In regard to Written Question 16, I would not need to ask this question if public accounts were organized in such a fashion that each department was listed alphabetically. Then I could go through the document myself and see which communications outfits were hired by this government, for how much, and then I could pursue the questioning. Right now, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker – now I'm going to get in trouble with my colleagues on this side of the House – the public accounts documents are organized A through Z, not zee but zed, and they're not organized by department.

It would be totally unnecessary to ask this question if this government could provide to all Albertans on a department-wide basis exactly how much money they're spending and where, and with Energy people would be very interested to know how much money is being spent to convince them that they should like electricity and natural gas deregulation.

In conclusion, we were quite specific to the hon. Minister of Energy. We want the amount that was spent on communications contracts in the fiscal year 2003-2004, broken down by the respective outfits that were awarded these spin-doctoring contracts.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ministry of International and Intergovernmental Relations Hosting Expenses

Q17. Ms Pastoor moved that the following question be accepted. How much money has been spent by the Ministry of International and Intergovernmental Relations on hosting expenses in the fiscal years 1996-97 through 2003-04 inclusive broken down by function and year?

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm certainly the first to recognize the enjoyment of hosting and the value of networking, but there is a difference between the value that you get for your dollars networking and just plain partying. Further questions, I think, that could be answered are: how many people are actually meeting? How many are hangers-on? How many of these people actually have the information or, in fact, have the authority to move any of the issues along that might come out of this networking? I believe that the taxpayers should have that information.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations I'm pleased to advise that Written Question 17 will be accepted.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East to conclude the debate.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I'll call the question.

[Written Question 17 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Information Technology Security Awareness

Q18. Mr. Elsalhy moved that the following question be accepted. What measures has the Ministry of Innovation and Science taken to improve the information technology security awareness of government employees as recommended in the Auditor General's 2003-04 annual report?

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My motive for submitting this question is in reaction to the cases where information was either lost or misplaced, and the Auditor General reacted by trying to encourage the Ministry of Innovation and Science to beef up security and try to prevent such losses or information being misplaced from happening again.

So I would really urge the House to support this written question. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to respond to this question because it's a question that should properly be directed to Restructuring and Government Efficiency as my ministry now has the office of the corporate chief information officer under its authority. Therefore, I must formally reject the question, but I would ask the Member for Edmonton-McClung to resubmit the question so that I may answer it. In fact, I encourage the member to resubmit the question because there are a number of security awareness measures under way that I would be pleased to share with him if he resubmits at a later date.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung to close the debate.

3:40

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would definitely go ahead and take this advice, and I will resubmit the question, although it appears that it could have been just answered by the hon. minister, you know, in the interests of sharing the information. Again, like my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford indicated before, if they have something positive to show, and they would like to parade and show the efficiencies that they have now, certainly if I'm in the minister's shoes, I would be the first person to share this information even if the question was submitted to a colleague and not to myself.

However, I thank the hon. minister, and I will definitely resubmit this. Thank you.

Reforestation Timelines

Q19. Mr. Elsalhy moved on behalf of Mr. Bonko that the following question be accepted.

What measures has the government taken to ensure that reforestation timelines are being met by timber harvesting companies?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, we would be pleased to indicate to this House that we are prepared to accept Written Question 19.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung to close the debate.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, this certainly is a positive move, and I appreciate the co-operation from the hon. minister. I move the question.

[Written Question 19 carried]

Student Loan Program

Q20. Mr. R. Miller moved on behalf of Mr. Taylor that the following question be accepted.

What is the dollar amount of student loans provided to students attending public postsecondary educational institutions in Alberta under the Alberta student loan program in each of the fiscal years 2000-01 to 2003-04 inclusive?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would be pleased to accept this question on behalf of the government provided that we can amend it for clarification purposes. I would therefore move that Written Question 20 be amended by striking out "provided" and substituting "issued." It may sound like a very small or picky change, but there are a number of different ways in which student loans are recorded.

We issue a certificate. The certificate is then taken to an institution for certification that the individual it's issued to is a student. Then that certificate is provided to the student loan provider, and funds are then deposited; in other words, the certificate is cashed. There are sometimes differences in the amounts between what's issued and what's cashed, depending on whether it goes over a fiscal year-end, although they're modest differences. The language that we've utilized consistently is the question of how many loans have been issued or the amount of loans issued, so that's the reason for the change. Otherwise, the information will be similar in nature, but it'll be more accurately reported.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking to the amendment, then, I understand and appreciate the minister's explanation, and I would support the amendment and would hope that the remainder of the members would do so as well.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to close the debate.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, in the interests of time and given that it would appear as if the government is going to provide the information that my colleague from Calgary-Currie is looking for, I would move that we close debate on Written Question 20.

[Written Question 20 as amended carried]

Student Loan Program

Q21. Mr. R. Miller moved on behalf of Mr. Taylor that the following question be accepted.

What is the dollar amount of student loans provided to students attending private, for-profit educational or training institutions in Alberta under the Alberta student loan program in each of the fiscal years 2000-01 to 2003-04 inclusive?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I would be pleased to accept Written Question 21 on behalf of government if we could ask the House for a small amendment, in this case two points. I would move that Written Question 21 be amended by striking out "provided" and substituting "issued" and by striking out "for-profit educational or training institutions" and substituting "vocational schools."

Again, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the information that would be provided would be similar, but the language is the language in which the information is collected. We don't collect information on for-profit educational or training institutions, but we do collect information on private vocational schools. I think the information that would be provided is what the member would want, but it's again the precise language under which we collect the information. So I would ask for those amendments in order that we'd be able to accept the question and provide the information.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, no problem with the change in clause (a) as it's similar to what we did on a previous written question. On clause (b) my only comment would be that I find it interesting that this government continually admonishes the opposition, saying that profit is not a dirty word, and here they are taking it out of this particular question. So I find that a little bit ironic, I suppose, but I understand, again, what the minister is trying to achieve. In the interests of receiving the information that my colleague for Calgary-Currie is looking for, I would expect that we will probably be supporting the amendment, but I'll certainly give other members a chance to speak to it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you.

The Speaker: We're on the amendment.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Very definitely on the amendment. I'm discussing for-profit educational or training institutions and substituting vocational schools. Just for my own clarification an example: would the DeVry Institute of Technology be considered a vocational school?

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: On the question as amended, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to close debate.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Currie that we close the debate, and we'll gratefully accept the information from the government.

[Written Question 21 as amended carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Former Chief of Staff Remuneration

Q22. Mr. R. Miller moved that the following question be accepted.

What was the total amount paid to the Premier's former chief of staff, Mr. Peter Elzinga, in each of the 2002-03 and 2003-04 fiscal years broken down according to salary, allowances, bonuses, and severance pay?

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is an issue that has been not only in the news a lot over the last couple of years but certainly on the minds of many Albertans. It was an issue that arose several times for myself at the doorstep during the campaign. I think that there are many, many Albertans that would be most pleased to have the opportunity to review this information, so we're hopeful that the government will comply by providing it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of the Premier's office to indicate that unfortunately this question will have to be rejected, and the reason for that is because information pertaining to salaries and benefits for the former chief of staff for the office of the Premier is already publicly available in the 2002-03 and the 2003-04 annual reports for Executive Council. Severance payments are also included within the overall expenditure reporting on the financial statements in Executive Council's annual report. So that information is there should they wish to dig it up.

Thank you.

3:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Just, again, clarification. When the Premier's most recent adviser, Dr. West, was I guess terminated, the information was very clear. It came in the area of about $186,000, and the time period was obvious. Is that type of clarification and detail available for Mr. Elzinga?

The Speaker: The minister can only debate once. This is not a question-and-answer period. You had your input.

Mr. Chase: Okay. Thank you.

The Speaker: Additional comments?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to close the debate.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Minister of Education has indicated that that information is available to us if we dig deep enough, and I can assure him that we will begin digging.

[Written Question 22 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Current Chief of Staff Remuneration

Q23. Mr. R. Miller moved that the following question be accepted.

What is the total maximum amount scheduled to be paid to the Premier's current chief of staff, Mr. Rod Love, for each year of the current contract broken down according to salary, allowances, bonuses, and severance pay?

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can assure the Assembly that most of the people that I have spoken to are particularly interested in the question of severance pay, and I will look forward to the government's response.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This question will need to be rejected as well, and I want to briefly explain why. First of all, Executive Council publishes the salaries and benefits of the chief of staff in its annual reports. The 2004-05 annual report will be published – and I say that in the future tense – in September of '05. The salary range of senior officials, including the chief of staff for the office of the Premier, is publicly available on the public administration office website. Finally, if severance were to be paid, it would be included within the overall expenditure reporting on the financial statements in Executive Council's annual report.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Hopefully, I'm doing it right this time. The point of the question with regard to severance pay again goes back to Dr. West. The feeling not only by the opposition but by many members of the public was that it was exorbitant. Therefore, we have the latest adviser coming back on. It's sort of in a revolving-door format. Obviously, he's undertaken a contract, and part of that contract would include severance. We would like on behalf of the taxpayers to know what the payout will be that has previously been agreed to so that taxpayers can judge the ongoing worth of this individual and potentially how quickly he should be severed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to close the debate.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think my closing comments really reflect the comments of my colleague from Calgary-Varsity in that the intent of the question here is to gain some understanding as to how much Alberta taxpayers might be on the hook for if, in fact, this current chief of staff is let go as quickly as the previous chief of staff was let go and whether or not, then, Alberta taxpayers are getting good value for their money. So that was really the reason for the question and, as I said, the particular emphasis on the severance pay.

Unfortunately, it would appear from the minister's response that we're likely to have to wait until after the fact to learn how much money we're on the hook for as opposed to knowing now. I really believe that Alberta taxpayers have every right to know up front what would be in that contract.

Given that, we'll move Written Question 23.

[Written Question 23 lost]

head: Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been served on Thursday, April 14, it's my pleasure to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 14 through 26 inclusive.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar

Minister of Municipal Affairs Business Expenses

M14. Mr. MacDonald moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a breakdown of the Minister of Municipal Affairs' expenses including but not limited to airfare, food, accommodation, and conference fees from February 18, 2003, to November 22, 2004.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I would be anxious, as would the taxpayers, to see a full accounting of this minister's expenses as noted. Thank you.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to indicate on behalf of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs that we are prepared to accept Motion for a Return 14 albeit with some amendments. These amendments were circulated prior to 11 a.m. to the opposition as requested and required, and I believe it's now been circulated to all members.

That having been said, you may recall that we had debated a similar motion to this one in this Assembly last Monday. In that context, Mr. Speaker, I'm just going to indicate to the hon. questioner and to all members of the House that for ease of reporting matters such as this, the categories that we have listed in the amended motion reflect the government's adopted procedures when reporting these kinds of credit card expenses. They were successfully embraced a week ago, and I'm hopeful that they will be again this week.

I would also like to point out that the specific reference to conference fees in the original motion is included under incidental and miscellaneous expenses, which I will read out shortly as part of the amended motion. That information will be provided as a separate category under this particular subtitle when the response gets tabled in the House.

So to accommodate accounting practices, I would like to propose an amendment to this motion. That amendment, in fact, would be worded as follows. First of all, we would strike out "but not limited to airfare, food, accommodation, and conference fees" and substitute the following words: "travel, accommodation, meals, receptions and hosting, and incidental and miscellaneous expenses, including conference fees."

Following that, Mr. Speaker, we would propose to strike out "February 18, 2003, to November 22, 2004," and in place of those words we would substitute the following words: "February 1, 2003, to November 30, 2004," which, of course, would have the net effect of giving the hon. members even more information than is being asked for, which is a good thing. From our point of view it gets down to this being necessary to report on a monthly basis, that being from the first of the particular month to the end of the particular month. So it helps us to provide the information in a form that is already being collected.

In the end, Mr. Speaker, the final amended motion would be phrased as follows.

That an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a breakdown of the Minister of Municipal Affairs' expenses, including travel, accommodation, meals, receptions and hosting, and incidental and miscellaneous expenses, including conference fees, from February 1, 2003, to November 30, 2004.

I would like to move the acceptance of this motion as amended on the basis of the rationale provided.

The Acting Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

4:00

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In regard to the amendment that was read into the record by the hon. Minister of Education, certainly, with this Motion for a Return 14 that is acceptable, and I and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview will look forward to receiving the information through this Motion for a Return 14 as amended. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

[Motion for a Return 14 as amended carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Department of Municipal Affairs Business Credit Card Statements

M15. Mr. MacDonald moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2003-04 issued to the deputy ministers, all assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders for the Department of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, that is, I think, self-explanatory. We have a duty and an obligation to ensure that this government remains accountable and each respective department remains accountable. We cannot forget the taxpayer in all of this.

The budget of this government is going up, up, and up. The government is growing larger. It's a big government, and these sorts of motions for returns ensure that there is transparency and accountability. I look forward, hopefully, to receiving this information from the Department of Municipal Affairs in light of what has happened in the past with some of the credit card expenses. Executive Council comes to mind, certainly. This information would be of a great deal of interest to the taxpayers, as I said before.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Motion for a Return 15 I would again like to indicate on behalf of the government and specifically on behalf of the Minister of Municipal Affairs that this particular motion as worded would be acceptable to the minister and to the government provided there were some amendments made to it.

You may recall, Mr. Speaker, as would other members in the House, that a similar motion to this was in fact debated and advanced in this Legislature last Monday, April 11. I understand that the amendment that I am now proposing on behalf of the Minister of Municipal Affairs has been circulated in its totality to all the members in the House and that opposition colleagues affected were notified prior to 11 this morning as per protocol and other procedures.

I should indicate, Mr. Speaker, that in the amended motion we have again categorized expenses under the same categories referenced in Motion for a Return 14, that being travel, accommodation, meals, receptions and hosting, and incidental and miscellaneous expenses. The reason for this is as a result of a decision by the government of Alberta last fall to use these specific categories and these specific accounting codes within these categories for the purpose of delineating specific expenses, and those particular categories are used throughout the government of Alberta now. So there's a big effort for consistency of purpose there. Of course, there's been a tremendous amount of standardization that has gone here in the interest of openness, accountability, and organization.

It's our belief, Mr. Speaker, that by using these categories, we'll be able to provide responses to the motion for a return and hopefully to the satisfaction of the questioner.

The second area that I'd like to comment on, Mr. Speaker, is just with respect to being able to provide information at the deputy minister level and not at the other positions' level listed in the original motion for return, specifically, assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, unit leaders, et cetera.

So I just want to explain what the rationale for the wording is then, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated to the House last Monday, I think, during debate on a similar motion for a return, the Auditor General does an extremely good and a very thorough analytical job when reviewing all provincial departmental expenses on an annual basis. He provides that report and any concerns that he might have not only to this Assembly but also to the general public of the province and, for that matter, to anyone else who might be interested. To the best of my knowledge our Auditor General has not highlighted any senior department officials' expenses as being a concern at this time.

So I just want to again indicate that a considerable amount of time and effort has already gone into preparing the response to this motion, and it would take literally dozens and dozens and dozens of more hours to compile even more information in a form other than what I am proposing on behalf of the Minister of Municipal Affairs. I hope that will be acceptable to the hon. questioner, Mr. Speaker, because our well-established process is now in place through these annual reviews by the Auditor General, that I've already referenced. I think the hon. member and others present are well aware of other avenues that can be used to access even more information should they wish to do so.

That being the case, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the amendment simply go as follows: that we strike out "a copy of all monthly business credit card statements" and substitute the words "a statement of all credit card expenses categorized by travel, accommodations, meals, receptions and hosting, and incidental and miscellaneous expenses"; further, that we strike out "issued to" and substitute "incurred by"; and finally that we strike out "all assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders" such that the final amended motion would be worded as follows:

That an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a statement of all credit card expenses categorized by travel, accommodation, meals, receptions and hosting, and incidental and miscellaneous expenses for the fiscal year 2003-04 incurred by the Deputy Minister the Department of Municipal Affairs.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. On the amendment to Motion for a Return 15, I'm astonished that this amendment would reduce the number of people who are actually going to be responsible and accountable in regard to the expenditure of tax dollars on who knows what. Certainly, this amendment where we're striking out assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders, whoever they are, from any form of public scrutiny I think is totally wrong by the minister.

What happens if and when these employees, these senior civil servants, pick up the tab for others? Perhaps it's going to be the minister that they're picking up the tab for. There will be no accountability if we are to accept this amended motion as described by the hon. minister. I'm not satisfied with that. I don't think taxpayers would be satisfied with that.

For instance, let's say that a delegation from this department goes to Mexico. Mexico comes to mind, Mr. Speaker, because there was a delegation that went there before, and it was quite a long trip to Mexico and various individuals went at various times during that interval, and they went off on little side trips as well. The information provided to me indicated that these side trips were there. So what would happen with this department if there were side trips, and the side trips were picked up on the credit cards of the assistant deputy ministers or the executive directors? No, I can't accept that amendment.

The hon. minister talks about the Auditor General, and he's correct. The Auditor General, what he does investigate, is thorough. But the Auditor General doesn't investigate each line item in the budget. There are things called test audits, and that's what is going on here. That's not satisfactory. In light of the past behaviour of this government I think it's shameful that we would even attempt to amend this motion as described by the hon. minister.

Now, certainly, Mr. Speaker, if one was to go to the Alberta Gazette, you could see hosting expenses over a certain amount, $600. Perhaps we could have access to some of this information, but not all of it. If the tab was over six hundred bucks, well, then it has to be listed, and I think it's a good idea that it's listed in the Gazette. But what would happen if, for instance, let's say we went to a restaurant in Calgary, a steak house in Calgary, and the executive director picked up a portion of the tab, the unit leader picked up a portion of the tab on the government credit card, and the assistant deputy minister picked up the rest of the tab. So the tab was divided into three, and it would less be than $600. Taxpayers would have no idea what the money was being used for and with whom it was being spent.

Mr. Mason: You'd even know the price of the orange juice.

Mr. MacDonald: No, the price of orange juice can get pretty high, as everyone knows. It doesn't matter whether it's freshly squeezed or frozen. In some jurisdictions it can be quite high, Mr. Speaker.

I, for one, am surprised at this amendment. I'm disappointed in this amendment as well, and for the sake of openness and transparency I would just have to say that, no, this is not satisfactory. There are a lot of people working, in this case the Department of Municipal Affairs, and I think that all senior managers should be accountable. Thank you.

Mr. Chase: I'm not going to go on, but I've got to give an analogy. We've got Snow White and the seven dwarfs in the ministry of diamond extraction. Snow runs up a large tab, but Dopey says, "No, I've got it, Snow." Then Snow goes off on a tour of other castles, the wicked queen, and the hunter, et cetera, and the bus tab comes up, and basically Happy stands up and says, "No, Snow, I've got it." So the point of what I am saying is that without the specific information we're getting snowed.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Another Liberal fairy tale, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to briefly get on the record and again say that I'm disappointed in this.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Ah, really?

Mr. MacDonald: Yeah. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs is chatting over there. But I'm sorry; we have to have a government that is accountable and transparent. This motion for a return, the changes that have been initiated here, are not satisfactory. It's only a year since there was a great deal of debate in this Legislative Assembly about some of the habits, some of the excessive spending habits, of this government. It doesn't matter whether we're talking about orange juice by the glass or by the pitcher, the taxpayers have some concern whenever they feel that their dollars are not being used wisely. This motion for a return will help taxpayers have a lot more confidence in their government and how they spend their dollars.

Now, to water this down is discouraging. I'm not going to get into detail on this, but some senior civil servants have had their expenses questioned. Some of them, in fact, have wound up going through the court system.

We on this side of the House have a duty and an obligation. The government in this case, whenever it is so insistent on changing through amendment this motion for a return, I just have to say that I'm disappointed. You don't seem to have learned lessons from last year that taxpayers demand answers, and they demand answers through us as the Official Opposition.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 15 as amended carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Minister of Municipal Affairs Business Credit Card Statements

M16. Mr. MacDonald moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2003-2004 issued to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the minister's executive assistant.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is, again, self-explanatory. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview is keen and serious about holding this government accountable, and it's reflected in this Motion for a Return 16. I would hope that we will receive this information in a timely fashion from the department.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Motion for a Return 16 I would like to indicate on behalf of the government and particularly on behalf of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs that this particular motion if it were to be amended minorly would be acceptable to the minister and to the government. The amendment has been circulated, I believe, to all members of the House, and I believe it was also provided as a courtesy and as required to opposition prior to 11 o'clock this morning.

That having been said, Mr. Speaker, the rationale behind the amendment is simply this, and that is to indicate that the issue of reporting is obviously something we do take very seriously on this side of the House, and for ease of that reporting, the categories that we have listed in the amended motion, which I will read to you very soon, actually reflect the government's adopted procedures when we are looking at these kinds of credit card expenses and the best way to reflect them and report on them. I believe I've indicated that in previous comments here in the House.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, each department, as all members here would know, is, of course, annually audited by the most professional and thorough of all processes, by our own Auditor General, and he would have drawn out to our attention any anomalies that he may have found during his reviews in previous years. Of course, there haven't been any, so that has not been done.

However, we're offering these amendments in the spirit of at least trying to provide information in the form that is currently collected. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I propose that we strike out "a copy of all monthly business credit card statements" and substitute the words "a statement of all credit card expenses categorized by travel, accommodation, meals, receptions and hosting, and incidental and miscellaneous expenses" and, finally, strike out the words "issued to" and substitute the words "incurred by."

In the end, Mr. Speaker, the amended motion 16 would be worded in its totality as follows:

That an Order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a statement of all credit card expenses categorized by travel, accommodation, meals, receptions and hosting, and incidental and miscellaneous expenses for the fiscal year 2003-2004 incurred by the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the minister's executive assistant.

I hope that's acceptable to the questioner and would move the acceptance of this motion as amended.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened to that with interest. Certainly, at this time one might have to see with this Motion for a Return 16 just exactly what will be provided with this amendment. There was a great deal of fanfare when the government decided that they would put on each respective ministry website all reports and amounts spent on international travel. And, you know, there are certainly some departments in this government that travel more frequently to international destinations than others. Municipal Affairs is a department where there's very little globe-trotting that I'm aware of. Now, Economic Development, that would be another matter.

But when you look at the websites and you see what information is on there and you have a look at this amended motion for a return, I would be of the understanding that all travel, whether it be international travel, within Canada, or within Alberta, would be included in this motion for a return. It is for that reason that I'm going to on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview wait and see precisely what sort of detail we get from this Motion for a Return 16.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview we will look forward to getting that information and having an analysis done of it.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 16 as amended carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on behalf of the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Department of Learning Business Credit Card Statements

M17. Mr. MacDonald moved on behalf of Mr. Flaherty that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2003-04 issued to the deputy minister, assistant deputy minister, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders for the department of learning.

Mr. MacDonald: Certainly, I think many people, including parents of public school students in this province, would be very anxious to see how much money is being spent and where by senior government departmental officials. Whenever we're having this debate across the city here, some of the central city neighbourhoods are being asked to just step aside and allow their community-based schools to be closed so we can save in some cases $90,000 in operational costs, in some cases $140,000 in operational costs. So if it's an issue of having very little money, well, let's find out exactly how much and where senior people from the department are spending tax dollars.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister for Education and Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to this particular motion, 17, I guess that it needs to be indicated once again that the motion can be accepted if it were to be amended. I'll get into that in just a moment.

I have explained this before, but for purposes of those people who only read selective motions or selective written questions, I will go through the procedure again and also remind all colleagues that this particular issue and a similar motion with a similar context and a similar amendment were debated in this Assembly last Monday. That having been said, I know that the amendment has been circulated to all members now, and it was also provided to our opposition colleagues prior to 11 this morning as required by protocol and procedures that govern this House.

I'll begin by indicating that in the amended motion, once again, we have categorized the expenses, standardized them, so to speak, under the same categories that were referenced in response to Motion for a Return 14 just earlier, those being travel, accommodation, meals, receptions and hosting, and incidental and miscellaneous expenses. The reason for this, of course, is as a result of a decision that was made by our government roughly a year ago or half a year ago or thereabouts, last fall in any event, to use these specific categories and these specific accounting codes within the categories for the purpose of explaining those specific expenses, and those particular categories are now employed throughout the government process.

So that's one of several efforts in government to standardize procedures that we have undertaken in the interest of being accountable and open and honest and so on. By using these categories, Mr. Speaker, we'll be able to provide the response to this motion as amended, and hopefully that would be to the satisfaction of the questioner.

I've already explained the comments pertaining to the deputy minister level versus the other positions listed in the original motion, and I would just explain what the rationale for the wording is, then, in this respect. As I've indicated previously in the House and earlier even today in the House and during last Monday's debate on similar motions for returns, our Auditor General for the province of Alberta does an exceptionally fine job and a very, very thorough and meticulous job in analyzing all expenses of all provincial departments on an annual basis.

Then that particular report with his comments, be they favourable or be they negative but nonetheless his comments, regardless of what they might be, is provided back to and through this Assembly to all members as well as to the general public of our province. To the best of my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General has not highlighted any senior department officials' expenses as being a major concern to him at this point.

So I'll just indicate again that we have spent considerable amounts of time and considerable amounts of effort looking into the preparation for the response to this particular motion, as with previous ones of a similar nature, and it would just take so, so long to try and compile every little tidbit of information in a form different than what I'm proposing in the amendment. So I hope that will be acceptable to the questioner or to the person speaking on behalf of the questioner.

That having been said, the amended motion, which we could see ourselves supporting, would be worded as follows:

That an Order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing:

A statement of all credit card expenses categorized by travel, accommodation, meals, receptions and hosting, and incidental and miscellaneous expenses for the fiscal year 2003-04 incurred by the deputy minister for the department of learning.

That having been said, I would hope that everyone would accept that as a suitable amendment to the motion proposed.

4:30

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Again for the record, just in case someone is reading Hansard and they haven't had a chance to look at the debate for previous motions for returns where the government has been very reluctant to provide all the information in regard to credit card expenses categorized by travel, accommodation, meals, reception, hosting, and incidental and miscellaneous expenses, we would have to say this. Again, if we are to strike out, as has been requested here, the tabs that are to be picked up by the assistant deputy ministers, the directors, the branch heads, the managers, and unit leaders from the department of learning, we really are doing the taxpayers of this province a disservice, and we are being disrespectful of the taxpayers.

We are, as I said earlier, requesting schools to be closed so that we can reduce operational expenses by as little as $100,000 or $140,000, yet we can't make public the amount of money that assistant deputy ministers, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders may be spending by picking up the tab again. Who are they picking up the tab for? And why? And where? They're not doing it, in my estimation, for public schools. That doesn't seem to be a priority. In fact, this is the government that'll turn around and, just like that, order an audit of a public school. You know, they'll just turn around and, zap, you're audited.

In that case, why then can parents through the Official Opposition not have a look at how the monthly business credit card statements run and at what exactly is on them? I would remind the hon. Minister of Education that it's not too long ago, in the last two or three fiscal years – it may have been Municipal Affairs; it may have been Infrastructure – that there was some significant public discourse surrounding the behaviour of an assistant deputy minister or, I will stand corrected, Mr. Speaker, a senior member of the department. I'm on recall here, and if I were to make a mistake, I would apologize to the House. But there was definitely some wrongdoing, and I believe this matter wound up in the courts.

To say now that there's nothing wrong, I think that is an error because there have been some indiscretions in the past. This original motion for a return as proposed by the Member for St. Albert certainly, in my view, is in order. You can't exclude all these senior officials in the department. Why would you? Again, we go back to the same information that is published in the Alberta Gazette: hosting expenses over a certain amount, in this case 600 bucks.

So the parents in North Edmonton school don't find out that the assistant deputy minister, a director, and a branch head used a credit card to pay off a dinner with we don't know whom. Maybe it's an organization promoting charter schools. Maybe it's a group of private schools, and they're picking up this tab, but if the three of them are separating the bill, the taxpayers will never find out because the Alberta Gazette will not record that.

Again, I think this is disrespectful to taxpayers, to the public school system, to parents and pupils. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. We have the same argument again. We're asking on behalf of the taxpayers and the constituents, who sent us here, for transparency and accountability, and unfortunately we're not receiving it. The easiest way to deal with this would be simply to post the information on the website on a regular basis and make it publicly available to all interested parties. I can't see this as being particularly top-secret, FOIPed information which involves us going through a long, unnecessary process to get the information that should be there.

I'd like to remind the members opposite in the House that while there are only 21 of us here, the majority of Albertans voted against the government and for parties representing the opposition, and that's because we were knocking on doors saying that we would try and improve accountability and transparency in this House. Yet every time we stand up and offer a legitimate suggestion for a small time period for travel expenses, and so on, incurred by a whole department as opposed to one individual, we get turned down.

Also, with regard to the Auditor General I think that under most circumstances the Auditor General is doing a wonderful job. However, he has not been given the powers by this government to investigate nearly as thoroughly as, say, the federal Auditor General, Sheila Fraser. So if you want true accountability and you want it to be handled through the Auditor General rather than through your own departments, I suggest that you give the man the sufficient power to make the changes.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar sort of moved me to make a couple of comments here. This particular department I've had some knowledge of in the past, and I go back. Certainly, when they didn't like things, they were prepared to audit the Edmonton public school board. The idea was that it's all right to waste the time and energy of the school board, but when they're asked for the same sort of audit on the assistant deputy minister, directors, and branch managers, they're not nearly as forthcoming.

I would remind people that the Edmonton public school board – and I was there at the time – was audited because we had the temerity to say that if the arbitration wasn't covered, we were going to lose a lot of teachers, which is precisely what happened. Immediately the Department of Education's response through the minister, taking the advice he was getting from these very same people, was: "Well, they must be wasting their money. We have to audit them."

But it seems that now, when the members are asking for a similar approach to these same bureaucrats – assistant deputy ministers, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders – well, then, it's too much work. It's too much work, Mr. Speaker, to ferret this out. I say that what's good for the goose is good for the gander, especially with this particular department in view of the record.

What was interesting about the audit – and I sat there with the former minister – were the things that they said about how we were inefficient. One of the major things was that we weren't closing down enough schools. We weren't closing down enough schools. That was one of their brilliant analyses. The other was that we should add teacher minutes onto people. That was how we were being inefficient. We should add more teaching time, and we should close down more schools. That's what they paid for in an audit, this brilliant bunch here, Mr. Speaker.

I think it should be appropriate – I know it wasn't this minister that was there at the time – that this type of great information that they got back, wasting all that time and energy auditing the Edmonton public school board, which this minister says is doing a great job – it should be fair that we check and see what's happening with them. I say, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, that if they want to talk about wasting money, that was the biggest waste of money I've ever seen, a department doing that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close debate.

4:40

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. On behalf of the hon. Member for St. Albert I would have to express at this time my disappointment. This government claims to be open and transparent, but after this amended Motion for a Return 17 I have to say again that I'm sorry. I'm deeply disappointed in this government for refusing the original motion for a return as requested by the hon. Member for St. Albert. I'm very, very disappointed in this government in light of what's going on across this city and across this province with public education, that we can't have full accountability. Accountability with the Progressive Conservative government is not a two-way street.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 17 as amended carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Department of Innovation and Science Business Credit Card Statements

M18. Mr. Elsalhy moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2003-04 issued to the deputy minister, assistant deputy minister, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders for the Department of Innovation and Science.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Something tells me that I am going to listen to the same debate from the opposite side, but I'm hopeful that maybe this time it might be different.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Motion for a Return 18 the explanation is identical to Motion 17 and to previous motions that have already been discussed and debated in this House, so I'll save the House the time by not re-repeating all of that at this time. Suffice it to say that if it's acceptable, then we would propose an amendment to this motion on the basis of the same rationale that had been explained earlier.

In a nutshell, Mr. Speaker, that simply is that we categorize our expenses by a different nomenclature, and secondly, we do have an Auditor General, who examines all of the expenditures within government. I've explained all of that earlier, so I'll sum up simply by saying that we would support this motion if it were amended to read as follows.

That an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a statement of all credit card expenses categorized by travel, accommodation, meals, receptions and hosting, and incidental and miscellaneous expenses for the fiscal year 2003-04 incurred by the Deputy Minister for the Department of Innovation and Science.

I would hope that that motion as amended would succeed.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung on the amendment.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the explanation from the hon. minister, but again I would have to reject the offer to amend this motion for a return. I understand and maybe agree with the nomenclature and changing the wording in section (a) and section (b). It still captures the essence of the question, so I am not in disagreement with point (a) and point (b). But, really, limiting the information given to just the deputy minister and not disclosing the information as it pertains to the assistant deputy minister and the directors and the branch heads and the managers and unit leaders is really disappointing. The Auditor General might do a fine job reading the ministry records in general, but I think that really what we are looking for is detailed information that would allow us to answer questions that are fair and that are reasonable.

I think that failing that, we would probably have to resort to maybe hiring a forensic accountant or somebody who has experience combing through hidden information because now what the government is doing is not disclosing that information, so it is, in fact, hidden. I am really most disappointed. This is not an unfair question, and I bet you the information is easily compilable in the format that we requested. Like some of the previous hon. colleagues indicated, perhaps they could have simply posted it on the website and saved themselves and ourselves the trouble of going through a motion for a return to ask for it or, failing that, maybe even going to the FOIP co-ordinator and having to wait for several months and then having to pay through our noses to get this information.

So I would urge the House to not accept the amendment. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. As MLAs we're required to go through our expenses and be accountable for them. When I travel from Calgary to Edmonton or back, I claim expenses, indicating the kilometrage I travel. If I take a taxi and use the Diners card, then that bill comes back. All this information, I'm assuming, is available because it's being collected. I post it for myself for the benefit of the LAO every single week. The idea is that the information is there. It's available on a weekly basis. Possibly, it's just a matter of posting it so that it would be more transparent and accountable.

If it is such a difficult task to collect and post all this information, then I might suggest to the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency to bring Steve West back in, that this time, instead of getting rid of 10,000 members of the public service, he start by removing deputies, assistant deputies, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders who are not willing to have their expenses publicly put forth.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung to conclude debate.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As was previously expressed, I'm really most disappointed. However, I think we have to take what's offered and study it. Although it is really inadequate and it doesn't really answer the question, we'll just take it the way it comes.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 18 as amended carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on behalf of the Leader of the Opposition.

Ground Ambulance Services

M19. Mr. MacDonald moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of any documents from the Department of Municipal Affairs for the fiscal years 2003-2004 and 2002-2003 referring to the provincial takeover of ground ambulance services from municipalities on April 1, 2005.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, this has created a great deal of debate in the province, this whole issue of the ground ambulance services and who is to fund them and how. We saw a significant cost overrun here. It was initially decided that between $52 million and, I believe, $55 million would be an adequate expenditure to provide for this takeover, but to everyone's surprise it was more than double that. It was more than double that. Some municipal districts were very concerned about their ambulance service and what would happen to it. There has been much talk about this.

There was also a lot of talk in the last election about the lack of vision of this government, and this was an example of that lack of vision. We see this dramatic increase in costs and one spokesperson for the government saying one thing and another saying another thing. It was a program or a takeover that certainly did not at this time work out. So the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview is doing a great service to the citizens of the entire province by requesting this information through this forum at this time. I'm sure the government is going to provide this information, and I'm eager to receive it on his behalf.

Thank you.

4:50

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is prepared to accept this motion.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, did you want to speak?

Mr. Chase: If the hon. members opposite are prepared to accept this motion, I strongly support their acceptance. Thank you for speeding up the process and adding clarity to our procedures.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to thank the hon. minister on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview for agreeing to this motion for a return. We look forward to having a look at the information and analyzing it.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 19 carried]

Alberta Office In Washington

M20. Mr. Elsalhy moved on behalf of Mr. Bonko that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents including but not limited to budget, business, and operational plans related to the establishment of an Alberta office in Washington, DC.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations I wish to accept Motion for a Return 20 with amendments. The amendments have been distributed to all members and shared with the opposition.

I'd like to move that the motion for a return be amended by striking out "all documents including but not limited to" and substituting "the." Mr. Speaker, the amended motion for a return would then read as follows: "That an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of the budget, business, and operational plans related to the establishment of an Alberta office in Washington, DC." The hon. minister would be pleased to provide that information.

The motion as drafted refers to "all documents . . . related to the establishment of an Alberta office in Washington, DC." I'm advised that some of the documents requested may contain information potentially harmful to our intergovernmental relations and third parties and contain information that is considered privileged, such as advice to the minister and cabinet. For the wide-ranging information requested in this return, it is suggested that the hon. member use the process that currently exists under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. This would give all impacted third parties an opportunity to review the request and provide their comment before any information is released.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move that Motion for a Return 20 be accepted as amended.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung on the amendment.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the rationale given by the hon. minister. When we drafted this question, we didn't think that the words "all documents" were this big, really. We didn't expect it to be potentially troubling for the government. Although I don't agree that, basically, some of those documents might have been privileged or may be damaging to our relations with the U.S., I appreciate the approach offered by the hon. minister. I know that the hon. colleague from Edmonton-Decore would still like to see some of that information.

However, I just have this question. Basically, the amended version of this motion would offer stuff that I would have assumed to be readily available, perhaps on the website or perhaps in government printed publications. So my question is: isn't this information readily available? It was the other information that we were really after, but I would welcome more comments from colleagues.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll just make a few comments on that because the three motions following are sort of all around the same issue. I'm prepared as the critic for International and Intergovernmental Relations to accept this amendment because although it's not great, at least we have access to the documents. I understand what a problem it can be waiting for third-party permission. Rather than wait, I would like to get something going. Because this is a new department, I'd like a good, strong baseline of information, and then I can worry about the other stuff. This is a department and an office that we will be keeping a very close eye on. So I would accept this amendment.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the amendment.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. If I could offer a suggestion. We have through the LAO the availability of legal counsel. I would suggest that through that legal counsel, if there was any potential privacy, third-party circumstance that the legal counsel considered to be of such a nature that potentially would affect intercountry relations, then that lawyer or member of the counsel could provide that information to all members.

At some point we need to be working together and sharing a common information base, and there has to be, obviously, an improved trust circumstance. With the availability of our legal representations to keep us straight on what is and what isn't acceptable information, we would all be playing on the same team instead of the LAO serving in the role of a referee. I appreciate what my colleague has said, and in the interests of getting the information flowing, I will sit.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung to close debate.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Official Opposition and the sponsor of this motion for a return, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, will be awaiting the information as amended.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 20 as amended carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Alberta Office in Washington

M21. Ms Pastoor moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all cost-benefit analyses for the newly established Alberta office in Washington, DC.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll repeat some of the remarks that I made to the previous motion. Because this is newly established, I think that now is the time to create a baseline so that we can get a true evaluation of what exactly is going on and what we're getting for our taxpayers' dollars.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Once again, on behalf of the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations I'm pleased to accept Motion for a Return 21.

5:00

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East to conclude debate.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. It's concluded. I'd call the question.

[Motion for a Return 21 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Alberta Office in Washington

M22. Ms Pastoor moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the detailed budget breakdown for the Alberta office in Washington, DC, for the 2004-05 fiscal year.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My reasoning is basically the same. It is more detailed in the previous two motions, and again it's giving us a good baseline to see if, in fact, we are getting benefit for our tax dollars.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations I would note that this hon. member clearly crafts very good questions and is most persuasive in her arguments because, once again, I am pleased to accept Motion for a Return 22.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East to conclude debate.

Ms Pastoor: Well, thank you to the hon. member from across. Yes. I have been known to be succinct in my remarks.

The debate is concluded, and I would call the question.

[Motion for a Return 22 carried]

AISH Review Committee Submissions

M23. Ms Pastoor moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all submissions to the renewing AISH, assured income for the severely handicapped, committee between August 1, 2004, and December 31, 2004.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to indicate that I'd be able to accept the motion for a return if it was amended and also to let you know that this amendment was previously shared with my opposition colleague and circulated to members of the House as per the protocol with motions for returns.

I'd like to move that Motion for a Return 23 be amended by striking out "copies" and substituting "a summary"; striking out "renewing AISH, assured income for the severely handicapped, committee" and substituting "MLA committee reviewing the AISH, assured income for the severely handicapped, program"; and striking out "August 1, 2004, and December 31, 2004" and substituting "September 28, 2004, and January 31, 2005." So the amended motion, Mr. Speaker, would now read as follows: "A summary of [the responses provided] to the MLA committee reviewing the AISH, assured income for the severely handicapped, program between September 28, 2004, and January 31, 2005."

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to share with you the rationale for making some of these changes. We did receive, as the hon. member knows, an overwhelming amount of feedback from AISH clients, their families, and Albertans during the MLA AISH review process. In fact, we received approximately 18,000 individual responses as part of the review. Copying all the submissions would result in significant costs and use of supplies, staff time, et cetera, and I don't think that was the hon. member's intent.

Also, Mr. Speaker, the time frame indicated in the motion for a return is different from the time period during which we received input from Albertans, as the AISH review was announced on September 28 of last year and input was accepted up to January 31, 2005.

Last Friday I released the MLA AISH review committee's report and was pleased to do so, Mr. Speaker. This report is a summary of the input provided by Albertans. It is responses which established the framework for the committee's recommendations and set the stage for the significant investment and enhancement to the programs which were announced last week.

Mr. Speaker, I know that the hon. member is very interested in this area, just from conversation that we have had about this, and I'd like to invite the Member for Lethbridge-East to meet with the assistant deputy minister for the AISH program so that the member can review any submissions, hon. member, that you are interested in out of these 18,000 submissions.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East on the amendment.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you. I would accept this amendment, and as has already been described by the hon. member from across the House, we have sat and discussed this, and I believe that with these amendments I will still be receiving the information that I need. I particularly wanted to know how the budget had been based on some of the suggestions that had come out of those reports.

So I thank the hon. member for actually cutting down, probably, my workload and still getting me the information that I need.

[Motion on amendment carried]

[Motion for a Return 23 as amended carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Temporary Foreign Workers

M24. Mr. Backs moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of any and all documents pertaining to the June 2004 memorandum of understanding between the government and the federal government regarding foreign temporary workers.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll just note that there's been a great deal of interest in this particular agreement, a lot of controversy surrounding this particular agreement as to what, indeed, were the real statistics used, any studies that were used regarding the actual unemployment rate.

I know, for example, that some of the trades, say last spring, for example, were experiencing quite high unemployment. There were a lot of complaints from a lot of construction apprentices about the lack of continued, steady employment so that they could stay in their trade and, certainly, in a number of other occupations and areas. There was not a lot of consultation on this with a lot of labour providers. It seemed like the Alberta government went after this agreement quite aggressively. You know, many people call this the Oberg agreement now, as he was the minister responsible at the time. Many people say that the whole agreement in itself is an attempt to distort the labour market.

I would appreciate that this information be forthcoming. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to respond to Motion for a Return 24. I am rejecting the motion for a return requesting copies of any and all documentation pertaining to the June 2004 MOU between the provincial and federal governments regarding foreign temporary workers. The MR could be interpreted very broadly, including correspondence from members of the public, which is submitted in confidence and contains personal information.

However, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member's interest in this matter. As such, I am willing to table documents that indicate the government's intent in negotiating this MOU with the federal government. I will table these documents to the Clerk's office tomorrow.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. It'll certainly be interesting to have an opportunity to read those tabled documents tomorrow. When we look at Motion for a Return 24 as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, I think it goes into a lot more detail than that. You know, I realize that the hon. minister is monitoring the situation, but in this case he's being very selective with the documents that he could release tomorrow.

I think the motion for a return as proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Manning is much more appropriate. This is an issue that has created a lot of interest in Alberta and, certainly, in the rest of the country. I was as surprised as anyone to learn on the 2nd or the 3rd of June last year that this memorandum had been signed and that we were going to implement this drive to recruit foreign workers on a temporary basis.

Now, certainly, in the last day or two in the media there has been a great deal of speculation on the new policy from the federal government, the family reunification policy, and that is a good policy. We certainly need to increase the number of Canadians that are coming here from other parts of the world, but . . .

An Hon. Member: P.E.I.?

Mr. MacDonald: Now, there was an hon. member who said that P.E.I. was on the other side of the world, but it's not that far away, and it's certainly been a part of Canada for a very long time and has been making a positive contribution to this country for a very long time.

But when you look at this policy, where we're going to have these temporary foreign workers allowed into the country, we're not going to be training the new immigrants like we should be. They are in some cases having to wait for long periods of time to enter this country. It's not fair to them. It's not fair to them to suddenly recruit – whether it's through NAIT or SAIT or some other community college or some other organization – temporary foreign workers. It's not fair to them.

It's not fair to the farmers, who have faced very difficult economic times and have a very high interest in getting a trade certificate in this province so that they can participate in the construction of the new tar sands facilities. How do the farmers feel when they see this massive tax holiday that they're paying for? We have reduced royalties from 25 to 1 per cent, and they're not getting fair access to this employment because they've not been trained. It's not fair to the farmers.

It's not fair to the First Nations people, who have a very, very high rate of unemployment. Now, I was surprised that last week, I think it was, there was a member from the workforce in Fort McMurray – Dorothy was her name – who had walked all the way from Fort McMurray to Edmonton to protest this notion, this notion that we're going to recruit all these temporary foreign workers into this country.

Her original residence was over in Saskatchewan, east of the tar sands, and she told me that there were chronic rates of unemployment in the First Nations people in Saskatchewan. Why in the world would we talk about going to Venezuela and to other places to recruit construction workers on a temporary basis while this pool of labour is probably 300 or 400 kilometres away in northern Saskatchewan? This is just poor public policy, and Motion for a Return 24 would satisfy a lot of the requests for all the information about this government's ill-conceived policy.

We have youth unemployment rates in this province. There are lots of young people in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar who are looking for apprenticeships, and they can't get them. They cannot get them, yet this government is trying to diminish the trade programs in this province and undermine living wages by recruiting these foreign workers on a temporary basis.

That's why I would ask the minister to reconsider in regard to Motion for a Return 24 and provide the information as requested by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning. There are still groups in this province and in this country that have high levels of unemployment. This whole idea of having temporary foreign workers should be an action of very last resort, after all pools of labour have been trained in this province. We just can't be operating at the whim of the big oil companies here. We're giving them lots of tax breaks. They're willing to invest their money here. That's evident. They're not stopping investing their money, and that's a good thing.

But it has to be fair. It has to be fair to both the trained and untrained workers. It has to be fair to the farmers, the young people, Canadians from all across the country, and it also has to be fair to the immigrants who are already here. They shouldn't have to wait for training and access to jobs in the north because someone is more interested in recruiting temporary foreign workers from Venezuela.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to this motion, and I want to begin by expressing my concern that this particular motion has been rejected by the minister. Now, I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has been repeatedly disappointed today by the response of the government ministers because each time he's been disappointed, he's said so. So I know he's a very disappointed man, and I would like him to go away from our session this afternoon in a little bit more of an upbeat mood.

In a little more serious vein, this is a very important motion. I'm pleased that it's been made, but I am concerned that it has been rejected. Now, the minister, in rejecting this, said that there would be too many things that would have to be provided, and it could be interpreted very, very broadly, and all kinds of things like personal correspondence or issues related to personal matters could be revealed.

But if you go up a little bit higher to some of the motions that have been accepted by other ministers, they are drafted in a very similar form. So, for example, the provincial takeover of ground ambulance services: copies of any documents; all documents related to the Alberta office in Washington. These have been accepted by the respective ministers, but this minister has rejected this one. Why is that, Mr. Speaker? Why is he rejecting it?

Well, you know, there was a document that we tabled in the House a week or two ago from Suncor that basically detailed some of the labour shortages that they're dealing with. It was clear from a careful look at that document that the labour shortages were not general. They were a shortage within CLAC. In other words, CLAC, the Christian Labour Association of Canada, which is the company's favourite union, has difficulty attracting certain trades. Probably, at least in my view, this is due to the fact that that union does not fight as vigorously for its members as legitimate trade unions in the building trades and elsewhere. So CLAC has a problem fulfilling the needs of potential employers for the construction of new projects, most notably the Horizon project, and can't fill its roster and supply the necessary workers in order to allow the government's section 8 to take effect and allow them to step in ahead of other trade unions.

So the government's plan has got to be seen in that light, Mr. Speaker. The rejection of this motion has to be seen in that light, as well, because I believe that these documents would demonstrate that, in fact, the government is conspiring with investors in the oil sands in order to replace legitimate trade unions with a company union, CLAC, or potentially even the Merit shop contractors, which is a non-union shop. In order to provide a low-cost wage environment for these employers, the government is willing to sacrifice not just reasonable wages, working conditions, and benefits for legitimate trades workers but also the employment of Albertans, including First Nations people, and other Canadians in order to fast-track the project on behalf of the Horizon project and further developments of the oil sands as well.

So, Mr. Speaker, I suspect that this motion that has been proposed, if passed, would provide ammunition for those of us on this side of the House who have argued that the importation of temporary foreign workers is unnecessary at this time and is in fact intended to undermine legitimate trade unions and the benefits that they bring to their members. They wanted to bring over a bunch of Venezuelan oil workers who at the instigation of the American government helped participate in a strike in a vain attempt to bring down the Chavez government in Venezuela and now find themselves without work. Now they want to bring them here to undermine the working people of this province as well. You know, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, that kind of thing is not acceptable. I don't think we need to bring in the foreign workers.

But it would be very curious to be a fly on the wall if you were at the discussions between the federal government, which is, frankly, no better than this one when it comes to these matters, and this government as they put together their plan to bring in foreign workers to build the oil sands non-union. That's what this is about, Mr. Speaker, and that's why, in my view, the hon. minister has rejected this question.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Very frequently in this House what is thrown at us is, "Your federal cousins did this," or "Your federal cousins did that," associating us with those so-called federal cousins. Yet here we are in the House asking for information that supposedly our federal cousins passed along to the government, and the government is not willing to share that information, which, if nothing else, points out that we have no idea what our federal cousins are doing with regard to temporary foreign workers, and we would like a little bit of elucidation from this hon. member's department.

Also, it's been pointed out by my hon. NDP colleague that this is a very specific motion, requesting information for the month of June in 2004. It's not global, and it's not asking for details on the expenses of a variety of individuals, which have been the reasons for rejecting similar motions and similar questions. It's extremely specific. What we don't need from this government are translators, summarizers, or information sanitizers. We need specific detailed information.

As has been pointed out in question period and then through to . . .

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the noise level is beginning to rise. Please, if you have any discussions, there is room at the back in the Confederation Room or in the coffee area. You may proceed and have your conversation take place there.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity has the floor.

Debate Continued

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I know the hon. members would rather hear this information first-hand than spend long nights reading it in Hansard, although it might assist them with their sleeping patterns.

In this House we have brought forward a whole series of unemployment figures. Obviously, the Maritimes are suffering to a much greater extent than we in Alberta are suffering, but even as close, as has been pointed out, as Saskatchewan and within our own aboriginal community we have a number of workers who are practically begging for employment. Some of that employment would involve skill training, and we have the institutions within this province. We also have union organizations that have the skills to train the members to bring them up to the level of employment that the oil sands are requiring.

We are not opposed to legitimate refugees. We're not opposed to immigrants. We're not opposed to the work that is done that helps out local farmers and orchard people in terms of seasonal and migrational employment. Every year we welcome thousands of workers on a very temporary harvesting basis from Mexico, and it's thanks to their efforts and the Canadian working conditions and the co-operation that we produce a number of products that serve our domestic needs as well as exportables. So the idea of seasonal and migrational isn't a problem. But when we go to temporary foreign workers, one of the problems is the definition of temporary. If temporary means that they're over here for two or three years on the equivalent of an extended green card, then they don't fit the definition of temporary.

We have workers throughout our country who need employment. Each time we read one of these series of petitions, it starts out that first we should employ a variety of people, and it basically ends up:

and unemployed farm workers. We have the people here that need the employment. We would not want our federal government to be shoehorning individuals from other countries into this process to lower the standards of work and pay for Albertans and unemployed Canadians. You've heard the petitions enough that you should have it memorized by now without my having to repeat it. Let's look after Canadians first. Let's look after our immigrants. Let's look after our refugees. Let's keep Albertans number one, Canadians number two. We don't need temporary foreign workers whose temporary contracts extend.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning to conclude the debate.

Mr. Backs: To conclude debate on that, Mr. Speaker. The use of temporary foreign workers is really very much an issue at the forefront of concern for many, many Albertans for many reasons. The papers – the Edmonton Sun, the Edmonton Journal, the Globe and Mail, the National Post – have had many, many different articles on this issue which have tried to analyze it. We've seen numerous studies. Fort McMurray Today, of course, has had many, many things, the Lethbridge Herald – I even had an interview with the Olds Albertan in the fine community of Olds regarding the issue.

Certainly, there's a great interest in having the information brought forward, the full information. I'm surprised that the minister would say that there would be issues of a private and personal concern in a memorandum of agreement between governments on this issue, which will deal specifically with the oil sands and all of the important employment issues that we will have in seeking the construction of those huge facilities.

There was, again, an odd agreement on the division 8 application from CNRL. A lot of good people work for CNRL. A lot of them have done a lot of work on that, but it's again raised great consternation.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, it's 5:30 p.m. The House stands adjourned until 8 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, April 18, 2005

8:00 p.m.

Date: 05/04/18

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

Hon. members, before we proceed with the matters before us, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very honoured to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a whole bunch of people here tonight that I'm going to introduce in groups because there are so many of them. I'm going to ask the members of all of the groups that I introduce to stand up, and then we'll give them the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

From your constituency, Mr. Speaker, the Bishop McNally high school concert band from Calgary, with teacher Mr. John Ramsay; the Hunting Hills high school drama cast of Peter Pan from Red Deer, with Mr. Bill Jacobsen; the Eastglen high school dance group from Edmonton, with Ms Allison White; the Victoria school concert choir from Edmonton, with Mr. Gerhard Kruschke and Mr. Craig Daniel, vice-principal; art students from Louis St. Laurent from Edmonton, with Mrs. Claire Theberge, vice-principal. Please stand and receive the warm greeting of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, the second group are all of the discipline reps from the Fine Arts Council of the ATA as well as the Alberta Teachers' Association district reps: Mr. Glen Christensen, art rep from St. Paul; Ms Andrea Coull, dance rep from Spruce Grove; Ms Kerry McPhail-Hayden, drama rep from St. Albert; Ms Sherri Larsen Ashworth, music rep from Sherwood Park; Ms Mary Dunnigan, Kim Fraser, and Mr. Harold Neth. Please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

We also have Ms Claire MacDonald, editor of the Fine Facta journal, from Calgary.

Finally, and by no means least, the person who made all of this happen, Mr. Speaker, a man by the name of Mr. Peter McWhir, past president of the Fine Arts Council, from Calgary. Please stand, Peter. This fellow took it upon himself to organize all of this today. I just don't know how to thank you except to say that I'm sure that all of the students really touched all of our souls.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the hon. members of this Assembly a couple of people who are interested in government and certainly are interested in hearing the riveting speech from the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont. I'm talking about two people, Kristen McLeod and Vincent Tetreault, from Edmonton. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two guests with me this evening. First of all, it gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Mr. Graham Lettner. Graham is in his third year of a degree in electrical engineering. He has recently been elected president of the University of Alberta Students' Union. Since arriving at campus in 2002, Graham has been very active and has sat as an elected member of student council, representing the Faculty of Engineering, and was previously the president of St. Joseph's College. Graham, I would ask you to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

As well, with Graham tonight is Mrs. Samantha Power. Sam is in her fourth year of political science, where she studies the effect that the media has on the treatment of marginalized groups. She has been recently elected to the University of Alberta in the position of associate VP academic in the student elections that occurred in early March. I would ask her, as well, to rise and have her receive the warm welcome of the Assembly too.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the chair would not want to miss this opportunity to recognize the work of Mr. Ramsay and his staff at Bishop McNally, which is a school in my riding, and I'm very proud of each and every one of you.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

High School Credits

505. Mr. Herard moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to consider the benefits of requiring five credits in fine arts as a condition for high school graduation in the province.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This motion urges government to review the role that fine arts plays in our provincial education system at the high school level. Our province already enjoys one of the best education systems in the world. This is the product of good curriculum, good teachers, and great students, like the ones we have in the galleries tonight.

So why am I requesting this review of fine arts in high schools? There are a number of compelling reasons, Mr. Speaker, that I hope will convince members on both sides of this Assembly to vote for this motion. These include improved human development and learning outcomes, as supported by an abundance of research; historical and economic reasons resulting from technology and new globalization trends; and our ability to achieve our 20-year strategy to become the best place to live, work, visit, and raise a family.

Mr. Speaker, this motion calls for the government to consider the benefits of requiring five credits in fine arts for high school graduation in light of the significant changes in our world and the abundance of the new research supporting the benefits of including fine arts in high school for improved student learning.

There are those who feel that studying the arts has no practical benefit except for those who pursue a career in the arts. Mr. Speaker, the last 20 years has produced volumes of research that provides convincing evidence that learning music, dance, drama, or art helps kids learn better, live better, enjoy a better quality of life, and become better citizens. To summarize the research, generally speaking, creativity, innovation, and lateral thought are developed and enhanced through the studying of the arts. The ability to assimilate information, attention to detail, working in teams, worth ethic, discipline, and self-esteem are all other benefits that are recognized.

A few examples follow, Mr. Speaker. A study by physician and biologist Lewis Thomas found that the top 66 per cent of students admitted to medical schools were music majors. In another example researchers from the Yale University School of Medicine have found that medical students are better at diagnosing if they are taught to analyze fine details in paintings. By studying art, medical students' ability to learn in other areas was also shown to be demonstrably improved. To paraphrase, an issue of Neurological Research published in March 1999 demonstrates that music rhythm involves ratios and fractions, proportions, and thinking in time and space. When compared to learning math on computers, students who took piano keyboard training performed 34 per cent better on tests measuring spatial/temporal ability or proportional reasoning, including ratios and fractions.

Dr. James Catterall of UCLA in 1997 tracked more than 25,000 students, which is a huge sample, Mr. Speaker, and found that regardless of socioeconomic background – and that's important – those with music training consistently got better marks in standardized tests in reading proficiency exams than those who had no music.

The important part of this is that an arts education helps level the, quote, unquote, learning playing field across cultural and socioeconomic boundaries. Other studies showed measurable impact on youth at risk: deterring delinquent behaviour and improving dropout rates. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I'm told that one of our own northern school jurisdictions reduced their dropout rate by over 30 per cent by introducing an arts program at the high school level. The program also helped develop a positive work ethic, pride in a job well done, self-esteem, and reduced substance abuse in the face of other socioeconomic issues.

Studies have shown that where schools increase opportunities for the arts to all students, test scores rise proportionately with no detrimental effect on test scores even in subject areas, Mr. Speaker, where time was borrowed in the school day to make time for band and choir.

Mr. Speaker, for those who need a more academic discussion, I would urge them to look at a study entitled Gifts of the Muse: Reframing the Debate About the Benefits of the Arts, written by Kevin McCarthy, Elizabeth Ondaatje, Laura Zakaras, and Arthur Brooks, commissioned by the Wallace Foundation in New York in 2004. Time does not permit me to discuss this research in detail, but this study explores both the intrinsic and instrumental benefits of both public and private value of the arts in education and society. It deals in detail with instrumental benefits such as cognitive, attitudinal, behavioural, health, social, economic outcomes; intrinsic benefits including captivation, pleasure, capacity for empathy, cognitive growth, social bonds, and expression of communal meaning are also discussed in detail.

Mr. Speaker, there's no end to the literature that has emerged over the last 20 years that demonstrates the benefits of the arts in all school levels. I believe it's time to take this research seriously and get on with the opportunity for improved student learning throughout Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I know that some of my colleagues are worried about how rural schools will be able to integrate fine arts into the classroom and that the same options or opportunities may not always be available in the rural areas as are available in urban areas. If it turns out that the research shows significant benefits in human potential and improved student learning by studying the arts, why would we want to continue to disadvantage rural children in that way? As a province we invested in SuperNet in part to level the learning playing field between urban and rural students. Why would we not want to level the learning playing field for the arts? Rural children deserve the best that we can provide.

This is why this motion is asking the government to at least consider the benefits of requiring students to have five credits in fine arts for graduation. Concerns such as rural issues can be discussed. Perhaps funding formulas need to be changed or more fine arts teachers hired, but again that is something that we as a province have the capacity to do to improve student learning in rural Alberta.

There may even be an opportunity for Alberta to move outside the box in terms of implementing fine arts with the help of SuperNet. Our best arts clinicians will be made available anywhere, any time via SuperNet video conferencing. I've visited schools who learn with the help of artists, and they all rank near the top in student achievement.

Mr. Speaker, historically, the last time that fine arts was extensively reviewed at the high school level was back in the information age, in the 20th century. The 21st century is the knowledge age, where the use of technology permeates most of what we do in life. Who could have predicted that the world would be so different when the last review of fine arts in high school was done, some 20 years ago? Who could have thought that the whole multimedia foundation of the 21st century knowledge age would rely on creative minds trained in the arts? We need to become a province that understands the relationship between multimedia technology and the importance of the arts and the humanities in defining who we are as people and how best to prepare our children for success in the 21st century.

Mr. Speaker, increasingly when one examines the new economy of the 21st century, one finds creative artistic expression in most of the products of the multimedia age. Artists are used to build the billions of creative websites world-wide, websites of every description that are becoming the repository of the world's knowledge. The content industry has huge potential, and we're only beginning to see the implications.

Currently, Mr. Speaker, the most commercially successful computer games for children are not built by technocrats, but they're built by teams of artists working in concert with computer software experts. Some of the world's best animators, musicians, singers, Juno and Academy award recipients are Canadians, all with a solid background in the arts.

Mr. Speaker, the future importance of five credits in fine arts is what this motion seeks to examine because the demand for creative interfaces to the knowledge age is growing rapidly. I'll be listening with interest to others' comments.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to speak to Motion 505. Before starting, I would just like to compliment the government on the big band assembly yesterday at the music hall. I think it was a wonderful thing for the government to be sponsoring. Again, St. Albert was just at the bottom of hosting it, so it was very successful. I happened to have the opportunity to sit next to some of the trustees at the event and got my fill-in on 505.

First of all, it's my understanding that currently high school students require 10 credits from a select group of courses. Looking at these, they range from career technology, fine arts, second languages, physical education, locally developed and acquired authorized courses, one 36-level course from the IOP occupational cluster, one 35-level locally developed IOP course, or two 35-level courses from any trade in the registered apprenticeship program. The point I'm trying to make in this one, Mr. Speaker, is that it is a crowded curriculum, and I guess one has to look at where priorities are when you come into school administration and the cost of these things.

I have to also say that in the Learning Commission, number 6, regarding curriculum enhancement and fine arts, suggests that “all students should have opportunities to learn and experience the fine arts at all levels in the education system.” So fine arts should be mandatory, it suggests in the commission report, and then optional in grades 10, 11, and 12.

Another consideration, I think, Mr. Speaker, in terms of this new program is school fees. Any time we introduce something, sometimes we have in fine arts especially the thing of school fees coming into play. I think this is something we have to consider and make a concern for parents that may not be able to afford the extra school fees to have such a fine program that’s been outlined for us this evening.

Also, much like other curriculum proposals for mandatory daily physical activity and second-language acquisition, this proposal will likely place additional pressure on schools’ infrastructure, equipment, teacher numbers, and training. Resources would have to be provided for implementation and would have to involve, hopefully, consultation across the province at the rural school level and also at the urban centres across the province.

One other aspect I’d like to emphasize: I think it would be important in such a fine program as this if we were to go outside the schools and talk to the many fine artists across the province and get some of their feelings and the information that they would have to offer.

Now, Mr. Peter McWhir – I haven’t had the pleasure of meeting him – I understand is hosting an arts education conference this fall, the 27th and 30th, and I guess that is tied into, as I understand it, the ATA Fine Arts Council. So I imagine he would be able to get feedback from school districts, teachers right across the province and get lots of input.

I think, in terms of thinking back to the crystal meth bill, it seems to me that one of the key things we require here is leadership. I was interested to see that the Minister of Education’s background is mentioned here in the statement: a former arts teacher and supporter of the arts coupled with his experience in the fine arts field. I think this would be of great benefit, and hopefully he can show us the way to get this new course implemented. I would suggest, too, that it would be nice to start it at the other end, from 1 to 9, so again I’m probably causing the problem of a crowded curriculum.

Let me, then, just say that some of the things like timetable, teacher availability, curriculum development, leadership at the ministerial level and also at the school system level is very crucial for this program. I would also like to say that in the discussions yesterday St. Albert schools would be most happy to pilot some of this activity. I hope that doesn’t mean that I have to be a Tory MLA. Anyway, I’ll let you look at that and be objective. I think that that would be a good way of introducing this program into the schools if we need a year to find out what some of the things are that we require and to look at some of the things that I have already mentioned.

One of the other things I noticed in a memo that I just got this afternoon from the ATA – it talked about teachers being needed. I think we talked about that. Something that I didn’t realize: it said that it would also be necessary to update the curriculum for all arts courses as most material is currently 20 years out of date. Now, I don’t know if that’s true, if that’s just ATA jargon or politics, but that surprised me. So with a program of this nature I’d have to get information, and probably I can get it from the minister someday, regarding what is the need for upgrading curriculum in the school system.

Another interesting thing that the member across the way mentioned seems to be an increasing popularity of the arts. In the last decade high school enrolment was 23.4 per cent whereas enrolment in drama and visual arts has increased over 50 per cent. I found that very interesting. Enrolment in dance is up 700 per cent. I’m happy to say that my granddaughter in Calgary will be dancing in front of the Queen. She’s 10 years old, and she’s a wonderful lady, and I think that she’ll do a tremendous job.

It says here also, however, that despite the popularity of grade 10 arts courses, there’s a sharp decline in enrolment by the time students reach grade 12. I think it’s unfortunate that that happens, but evidently he’s indicating in this memo that that’s the case.

Before sitting down, Mr. Speaker, I would like to also say that the St. Albert constituency is very, very high on the arts. It’s very important to our community. Some of these things can be looked at. I emphasize the leadership of the Minister of Education to get this thing in order and shape it up. I think we would probably be very supportive of this proposal.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m pleased to add a few comments to the debate on Motion 505 tonight. I take great interest in any idea that may have a positive impact on our education system, and I would like to commend the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont for putting forth such an interesting one.

Motion 505 is urging government to “consider the benefits of requiring five credits in fine arts as a condition for high school graduation in the province.” Given the important role art plays in our lives, I think government should at least weigh the merits of this motion.

As the hon. member next to me stated, there is a steadily increasing body of knowledge that shows that exposure to the arts and training in the arts have a positive impact that extends far into other areas of a person’s life. It is also widely acknowledged that the skills developed through the process of creation and experimentation – that is, creativity, innovation, and lateral thinking – are extremely marketable in the current world labour force. Moreover, the benefits of arts training have been touted as improving students’ ability to not only perform in areas other than the arts, but arts training also prepares a student for the new demands of the information age. Alberta’s Learning Commission noted these benefits and recommended that all students should have the opportunities to learn and experience the fine arts. With this in mind, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be shortsighted to not at the very least consider that Alberta students receive a minimum level of exposure to the arts given the many benefits.

Perhaps we could find out about and learn from the experiences in British Columbia and Nova Scotia. In recent years changes have been made to the curricular requirements in both provinces to make arts education mandatory for graduation from high school. A report of the Foundation for the Atlantic Canada Arts Education Curriculum in 2001 stated that learning in the arts over time results in increasing control over creative and technical abilities. As students progress along the learning continuum, they increase their ability to create and generate their own ideas for work and make decisions about its development. Critical and contextual understandings are deepened so that students are able to form their own judgments and support them using correct terminology and a range of evaluative criteria.

That, Mr. Speaker, is quite the endorsement of arts education in our high schools. I am encouraged to hear that over the last 10 years in Alberta the number of credits that students have earned in the fine arts has increased significantly and that the government continues to look at ways to further develop a fine arts K to 12 program.

Given the modest nature of Motion 505, I support its intent. Let's investigate whether we can or should mandate fine arts within a learning system that still values the preservation of flexibility and choice for our students.

Mr. Speaker, this past weekend I had the opportunity to attend the inaugural Lieutenant Governor of Alberta's arts awards at the Banff Centre. Established under the patronage of the late Lois Hole, these awards were created to celebrate excellence in and underline the importance of the arts in Alberta, and they succeeded in doing just that. The evening was artistically very impressive, very motivating, and an incredible tribute to Lois, who was a dynamic force in the development of our appreciation of the arts.

In closing, I'd like to share some words spoken in Lois' public speech when she launched the Alberta awards last October:

The arts bring meaning to our lives. They prick our consciences, excite our senses, and inspire our own creativity. They make us think and feel and [strive] to do better. The arts bring comfort when we need it, and they make us uncomfortable when we need it too.

They are a reflection of all we are, an image of what we were and a call to what we could be.

These are wise words from a very wise woman.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would encourage all members to support this motion and urge the government to review the role that fine arts plays in our provincial education system. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Minister for Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also have the pleasure to rise and speak in favour of Motion 505 this evening. I would like to congratulate the Member for Calgary-Egmont for bringing up a very innovative and important, I think, innovation and perspective on our public education system.

I think, as several speakers have already brought forward, that it's becoming more evident that an applied and systematic study of the arts is beneficial in the broadest possible way for education of both young people and adults. You know, it also has the benefit of enriching people's lives, which otherwise, I think, is an important part of public education that we sometimes forget about, that we're not just producing working units to fit into various parts of our economy; rather, we are here to produce, Mr. Speaker, in our public system citizens of our province and of our country. Citizens that are well educated in the arts, I believe, have a more balanced view of life and are more capable of enjoying the world that we have around, physical and spiritual and intellectual. So by pursuing the arts, it means a great deal to me as an educator myself and with my own personal history of education. I taught for several years in a most wonderful school that we have here in Edmonton, the Victoria school for the performing arts, where, you know, we have seen sort of the tip of the spear of the potential, I believe, of the arts and education and how we can apply it to public schools.

I think, as well, Mr. Speaker, that we don't have to look any further than all of the wonderful guests that we have here this evening, the vivacity and the camaraderie and the wonderful opportunities that I think the arts provide for young students at various stages in their education. You know, I think that if each of us as members reaches back into their own public education experience, some of their most fond memories might come from their participation in music programs or drama programs or the spoken arts and such things as that.

I do, too, have some reservations as an educator, specifically in applying more obligatory things onto the public education system. I think that we have to be careful with those applications because we know from practical experience of our own children going to high school or some of us teaching in high school that already the curriculum is very full. Students who are applying themselves and trying to get the most out of high school will often find themselves with 140 or 150 credits or more during the course of their three years of education.

You know, quite frankly, I believe that in the 20 or so years since I was in high school, the high school education really has improved. There's no doubt about it. The vigour has definitely increased and the level of expectation has increased, but, you know, along with that is a level of stress and time constraint that we have placed upon our young people. I think that we have to be judicious in how we apply new programming to our high school curriculum in particular and, I think, public education in general.

Mr. Speaker, I think that we might consider this motion in a broader sense and have it perhaps spread to the junior high curriculum or even the higher grades of the elementary curriculum because, in fact, this is a place where students have perhaps a more acute receptiveness to the arts, and we can start habits and appreciation of various types of visual and musical and performing arts that they can carry through with them regardless of what they pursue in high school.

Just to go back specifically to the high school curriculum, I think that one of the places where the arts and arts appreciation has made some inroads, Mr. Speaker, is in some of the accelerated, or advanced, programs that we have available to us now in the Alberta high schools. I know, again from personal teaching experience, that the IB, international baccalaureate, and advanced placement programs both have artistic appreciation elements built into the curriculums: in the English curriculum, in the history curriculum, literature, and language arts. You know, this is a place where we might be able to pursue these same things in our Alberta curriculum and recognize them as such.

I think that one of the walls that an arts focus runs into in our public education system at this point, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that we have built, I think over the last 10 years or so especially, a public education system that is very much focused on a very reductive and test-oriented view of what an education is. The best and the most that we can gain from a good arts education and appreciation does not fit into that reductive and test-oriented view of public education.

So I think that perhaps the hon. member's motion actually is an opportunity for us to look beyond just how we are formulating our education system and perhaps look to not just trying to categorize our students so much and put them into boxes and to give them a mark and a stamp and off they go but, rather, to educate them in a more holistic way. I think it's a window of opportunity for us. It's a door, as I said at the beginning of my comments, to create better citizens who enjoy their lives more. As I say, focusing on arts is a wonderful idea, but let's make room for it by perhaps adjusting other elements of our education system in English and in social studies or even in math and in science for certainly these studies have applications in the arts as well.

So just by way of concluding, then, Mr. Speaker, I do fully support the spirit of this motion. I think it's wonderful and refreshing to discuss such things here in this Legislature. I think it's important as well. I leave you with the last observation that I have. It's that, you know, the arts are for everyone. I think that we perhaps create a bit of elitism in the way that we approach fine arts, focusing on the very best of the best, you know, the great actors and musicians that we hope might become world renowned. But the true heart of the arts is where our own heart of humanity lies, and every single one of us with a beating heart and a mind has that within us. To stir that appreciation in every citizen I think will derive benefit for all of us in turn.

So I thank you very much for the opportunity to speak.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, wish to get a few supportive comments on the record for Motion 505 as presented by the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont. Before I do, I just wanted to say hello and thank you for their attendance to all of our special guests, particularly our young guests who are here from Bishop McNally school, from Hunting Hills, from Eastglen, from Vic school of the arts, from Louis St. Laurent, from St. Albert, from Spruce Grove, and so on and so on. In that context, special thanks to Peter McWhir for having helped orchestrate the evening, so to speak.

I also would like to just quickly reference two special individuals who are here in the members' gallery, Mr. Speaker. My deputy minister, Mr. Keray Henke, is here – if he could just give us a wave – and Mr. Rick Morrow, who is our assistant deputy minister in basic learning. Thank you, gentlemen, for being here on behalf of the department to listen to this important discussion. Finally, to the ATA Fine Arts Council reps, thank you, as well, those of you who are here, to the teachers.

This is a tremendously important motion, obviously, and I want to make a few comments, first of all, as a former fine arts teacher at the high school and junior high level because it was at that level, Mr. Speaker, that I really came to appreciate how beneficial fine arts programs, fine arts classes can be to our young students. Later, of course, I had a very interesting career as a professional musician, as a performer, a composer, a conductor, and so on, but it was the teaching part that really zoomed in on me because of the tremendous impact it had on future generations.

Obviously, my own experience with the arts deeply enriched my life. I got to travel the world. I got to meet kings and queens and Rolling Stones and all kinds of wonderful people along the way. But those are just some of the opportunities that await these young folks who are here tonight and others who might be reading this later.

So today in my new role as Alberta's Minister of Education I want to express some support for this motion. In fact, Mr. Speaker, earlier this evening, I'll just point out to members here, the arts were used in a very special way by the young students from Lago Lindo school here in Edmonton with their principal, Mr. John Eshenko, who celebrated the Cycle of Life/Recycle program, a special concert program at the Winspear Centre. They provided songs that focused on the importance of caring for our planet with hit songs like Landfill Blues and the Life Cycle Dance and Grasslands and Bear in Buckingham Palace and the Voices of Nature. Well, you can appreciate where these young K to grade 6ers went with this special program that was presented by the Beverage Container Management Board. It gives you one way in which the arts can be used to promote other important life goals, Mr. Speaker.

In fact, it's not surprising, therefore, that Alberta's Commission on Learning supported fine arts education in recommendation 6, wherein it stated, "All students should have opportunities to learn and experience the fine arts." Also, the Commission's report recognized the demands of the high school curriculum and stated, "Fine arts should be mandatory [for students] up to [and including] grade 9."

Now, many students already choose to take fine arts courses in high school as well, which is what Motion 505 is really all about. In fact, it might interest members of the Assembly and our guests to know that last year 45 per cent of high school graduates had in fact completed at least five credits in a fine arts program. There are 18 such formal course programs offered in music, drama, and art and almost 200 locally developed courses created by schools to meet the unique interests and talents of their students.

I'm always reminded of the outstanding programs that are put on by our schools here, for example at J. Percy Page, where the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods sits and once taught. They use the arts to portray their love for our country during Remembrance Day ceremonies. Some fantastic arts programs have been provided by numerous other schools throughout our constituencies as well. I should also point out, Mr. Speaker, that students can earn credit for private music study from the Conservatory Canada program, from the Royal Conservatory of Music program, and from Mount Royal College.

Now, putting this particular motion into effect would mean overcoming some challenges, which have been alluded to. For example, we would need to ensure that we have enough qualified fine arts teachers, that there are prerequisites for these high school level courses, that the student course load for completion of diploma requirements would be workable, that there was enough classroom space, materials, and equipment, and so on. So there are some challenges. But you know, Mr. Speaker, there is that expression: obstacles are what we see when we lose sight of our vision. I wouldn't want us to lose sight of this particular vision, but I would like to put some of those cautionary points on record as we consider and, I hope, support this particular motion.

So Alberta Education is currently reviewing the fine arts kindergarten to grade 12 program of studies, and this might be a very appropriate time for us to do some additional consultation with our stakeholder groups: the school boards, the teachers, the parents, and so on. In fact, Mr. Speaker, this motion's suggestion of having a requirement of five basic fine arts credits for high school graduation would certainly be considered in that particular review.

As I wrap up, I just want to reference very quickly some comments by John Ruskin, a Victorian artist, author, and teacher, who once said, "Fine art is that in which the hand, the head, and the heart of man go together." It's truly an area that involves the physical being, the mind, and the spirit, and of course the fine arts are an important element of every student's education.

I'm going to support this motion, Mr. Speaker, as a teacher, as a musician, as a parent, and as Minister of Education. I also want to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont for having brought it forward in such an eloquent fashion. I am obliged to say that we at Alberta Education need to be very careful how we proceed, should this particular motion be adopted here tonight, because we want to make it very clear that there will be some challenges in working through how this particular motion might be brought to bear for our schools, our teachers, and our students.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, the research, the facts, and the evidence in support of the overwhelming impact that the arts can have on student learning are irrefutable. The arts breathe an incredible amount of oxygen into our daily living. They impact the cultural, the social, and the economic life of our province, and they yield enormous benefits for our young students as they go about acquiring the knowledge, the skills, and the abilities to take their place as contributing citizens.

In that regard, Mr. Speaker, and with those comments, I'm going to go on record as supporting this motion. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the member bringing forward Motion 505. I certainly listened with interest with regard to the previous speakers and especially the Minister of Education as he raised some caution. I think everything's good, but there's caution to be taken when you're approaching some new territory. He did raise specifics with regard to funding, and that would be included with instrument purchases or supplies and equipment as well as making sure that the necessary teachers are there to ensure that this motion and that the all-over intent is secured by the schools.

I think we can go back to say that some of the aspects of this motion include some of the earliest forms of our communication. Whether it be music or the visual or the performing, I think we can all attest that it's a no-brainer that we all, in one form or another, do appreciate it in its most simplistic form.

Coming from the school board, as I was sitting on the board of trustees, we made sure that that was part of our priorities embedded within our education system, that we did have music, art, performing arts as part of our priorities so that all students can have a basic form of appreciation for this. Coming from there, you would hope that it would take on a lifelong journey, so then it would go into the general public, so they'd have a general appreciation for it and carry it on to lifelong.

I think, again, this has excellent merits to be able to continue on, but I would just raise some cautions, as the minister has raised. I do support it with just some reservations with regard to making sure that this isn't just lip service that we're paying, that we are in fact ensuring that the basic things that we need to carry through with this are going to be supplied in the form of hard-core funding, that it will be able to be fully implemented throughout the districts as well as into the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise this evening to participate in the discussion and debate of Motion 505, a motion that raises the issue of a fine arts requirement for high school graduation. I would first like to congratulate my hon. colleague from Calgary-Egmont for understanding the benefits and the importance of the fine arts, not only in education but in real life. The education of Albertans has always been a priority of this government, and this motion raises another initiative that would enhance and contribute to the learning environments of young Albertans.

Motion 505 requests that the government examine the benefits of taking five credits, the equivalent of one course, at some point during the three years of high school to complement students' education. There are many different courses which fall under the category of fine arts. There would be more than a few choices to choose from. Fine arts encompass music, drama, graphic art, pottery, art history, dance, painting, and many others. The arts offer a vast variety of options and choices.

Mr. Speaker, what I find to be the crucial advantage of Motion 505 is the potential benefits it may bring to the students. Fine arts offer a unique learning experience, one that is not the same as writing an essay or solving a math problem. Music, drama, or visual arts provide tools that cannot be duplicated by any other form of learning. Fine arts inspire and motivate creativity while developing intellect. After all, without Peter Pan how would we know the directions to never-never land?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw wanted to be here to speak tonight about her experience with her son about the importance of fine arts. He applied to medical school, and during the interview at Albert Einstein university in New York they didn't ask him about his neuroscience degree. They asked him about his fine arts courses. The question they asked was: what did music teach you? He answered: music was the first place where I learned to accept criticism and to manage it. He was accepted into the medical school and is now a successful student there.

Mr. Speaker, not only does education in the arts enhance one's creativity, but research findings indicate that arts education greatly improves a student's ability to perform in other areas. Fine art courses draw on a range of intelligence skills and learning techniques. These techniques may not be addressed in most educational classrooms, as learning settings have traditionally focused on verbal, written, and mathematical skills.

Mr. Speaker, over the last decade jobs in the workforce as a whole have changed dramatically. We have seen this change occur mostly due to the information age and information-based technologies and systems. Nonetheless, the skill requirements for workers are expanding. It is becoming increasingly important for workers to develop their ability to communicate, think creatively, and find several solutions or find alternative methods to deal with a problem.

Mr. Speaker, there are many life skills that are inherent through learning in the arts. The arts help students to acknowledge that components within a group interact and influence one another. The arts teach attention to slight variances and bring to light that small differences can have a large impact.

As much as I support this motion and find it valuable, I do have a concern that I'd like to express. Smaller communities have difficulties accommodating fine arts classes. Rural constituencies or ones surrounding smaller centres may not have the same choices and options available as schools in Alberta's larger urban centres. However, Mr. Speaker, why couldn't we have a teacher with a mobile classroom in the arts to visit classes in the rural areas once or twice a week? Have classroom, will travel.

Having said that, I do believe the potential benefits of an education in the arts, regardless that it is just introductory, will outweigh not requiring the arts course in the first place. Mr. Speaker, I feel that it is vitally important to give students a broad range of learning experiences. It is difficult for students to know the direction or path to take if they've never been exposed to alternatives. Some may argue that a mandatory fine arts requirement takes away from flexibility or control that the students have over their career path. Quite frankly, I do not believe that students will lose their ability to determine an education that suits their interest if one course in the fine arts is implemented as compulsory. A balanced education is important to student learning.

The findings of the Learning Commission support the idea of a well-rounded educational experience. The sixth recommendation in the report says that Alberta Learning should "maintain and continuously improve Alberta's comprehensive and balanced curriculum." There was also a further recommendation that "all students should have opportunities to learn and experience the fine arts at all levels in the education system." Training in the arts can assist in the building of general behaviours, skills, and attitudes. Moreover, these positive attributes can be broadly applied to extend beyond the realm of the arts program.

Mr. Speaker, this motion could possibly contribute to an enhanced learning experience for Alberta students. It would also facilitate in providing choices and exposing new opportunities to our youth. I had the great opportunity of being the wife of Julius Caesar in our high school production of William Shakespeare's Julius Caesar. The camaraderie and the bond that you share with your fellow thespians is unforgettable, and it stays with you for the rest of your life.

Mr. Speaker, if I could take artistic licence and paraphrase the great Julius Caesar, I would say this about the students that were here tonight to entertain us with their artistic skills: they came; they saw; they conquered. I strongly support this initiative and urge all my hon. colleagues to vote in favour of Motion 505.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do applaud the Member for Calgary-Egmont for the worthy objectives of this motion, which urges the government to consider five credits in fine arts as a condition for high school graduation in the province. This motion would ensure that fine arts programs exist in every school in Alberta.

There is a misconception that art and music are isolated subjects. Nothing could be further from the truth. The arts help children understand other subjects much more clearly. From math and science to language arts to geography art nurtures inventiveness as it engages children in a process that aids in the development of self-esteem, self-discipline, co-operation, and self-motivation. Participating in artistic activities helps children gain tools necessary for understanding human experiences, adapting to and respecting other ways of working and thinking, developing creative problem-solving skills, and communicating thoughts and ideas in a variety of ways. Mr. Speaker, Grant Wood, the author of Art in the Daily Life of the Child, states: "The aim of art education in the public schools is not to make more professional artists but to teach people to live happier, fuller lives; to extract more out of their experience, whatever that experience may be."

But those concerned with the flourishing of the arts in our province should remember that this government helped force the arts out of schools with their funding cuts.

Mandatory fine arts programming requires that schools have adequate facilities, equipment, and trained teachers. This motion extends the Alberta Learning Commission's recommendation 6 regarding curriculum enhancements in fine arts. According to the recommendations of the Learning Commission, "all students should have opportunities to learn and experience the fine arts at all levels in the education system." Fine arts should be mandatory up to grade 9 then optional for students in grade 10 to grade 12.

The Alberta Liberals oppose charging extra for materials, art classes, instrument fees for music classes, et cetera. This may also impinge on this motion if the fine arts required charging fees for the courses. The content selected for the courses should be developed primarily by educational professionals and remain free from political interference or censorship. This motion calls only for the government to consider the advisability of implementing the proposal. No final decision or policy direction is implied by supporting this motion.

Quality arts programs provide opportunities to address two things: number one, cultural perspective within multiculturalism and aboriginal cultures; number two, diversity, which includes socioeconomic status, ability, gender, sexual orientation, race, and ethnicity. In doing so, quality arts education programs ensure that students are able to see their own cultural and life experiences within the curriculum.

Mr. Speaker, I will support this motion with some reservation because I think that learning about the visual arts gives students a window onto the rich and interesting world around them, teaching them about their own history and culture as well as that of other people. Art is a subject that encourages children to think critically, solve problems creatively, make evaluations, work within groups, and appreciate different points of view. These skills are particularly suited to the complex challenges of the contemporary workplace. Students with exposure to the arts are not only happier but more successful.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, in looking at the time, I just wanted to advise the Assembly that given the extended time we used for introduction of guests, we will proceed with the debate until 9:07, at which time I will call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont to close debate.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to rise today and join the debate on Motion 505, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont. The motion urges the government to "consider the benefits of requiring five credits in fine arts as a condition for high school graduation." I don't think many Albertans would dispute the merits of fine arts education in the development of students' talent, character, intellectual skills, self-confidence, and many other important attributes required for successful and healthy lives.

One area I would like to discuss as we debate the benefit of making five credits in fine arts mandatory is the availability of resources. These resources include materials as well as teachers. While it could be possible to implement this initiative in high schools located in the main urban areas like Calgary and Edmonton, I do not think that it would be easy for some rural areas. It may be difficult for a small town or community to provide the necessary resources that would allow them to offer students the required options to fulfill the fine arts credit requirements.

Studies upon studies have demonstrated that children tend to perform better in school and other environments if they have been exposed to the art curriculum. Fine arts, be it music, drama, visual arts, dancing, or other forms, spur confidence, curiosity, emotional intelligence, and self-control. Exposure to instruction in the arts not only promotes talent but also teaches the young how to relate, communicate, co-operate, and, most importantly, tolerate one another on various levels. It is important that we put more emphasis in our schools on arts because there are undoubtedly hundreds of students in our province that may have talents that they or their parents are not aware of.

Currently the province is putting emphasis on physical activity in school. It, too, is important to the health of Albertan children, but as much as a healthy body promotes well-being, so does a healthy mind. If we are going to make physical activity mandatory, is it such a stretch to make five credits in fine arts mandatory? If I can remember correctly, the idea of school when I was there was to educate and open up the unknown so that the students can experience as much as possible. In doing so, school promotes strong and healthy minds as well as active, healthy lifestyles.

Mr. Speaker, to limit students to a certain set of predetermined classes because it is felt that any other type of educational experience would be a waste of time is very, very inappropriate. For all we know, in each one of those children there could be a potential Michelangelo or da Vinci just waiting to be discovered and inspired. For example, in ancient Greece, Rome, China, Persia, India, and elsewhere people were renowned for combining art and science in order to understand the world around them and solve problems of the day.

Mr. Speaker, I support Motion 505 because it asks the government to consider the benefit of requiring five credits in fine arts upon graduation. I think one of the solutions to the problem of rural students accessing adequate fine arts options is giving them the ability to seek fine arts education outside the school.

Mr. Speaker, I see myself as a student of history. History teaches that what's left of the mighty societies of ancient civilization is not the wealth nor the power but the legacy in the arts such as the beautiful architecture of the pyramids, of the Great Wall. Through thousands of years what's left are the beautiful artifacts, the graphic depictions of their lives, the sound of their music in song, and the movement of their dances.

So with that, I urge all the members here to support Motion 505. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is an important issue for our society, and I, too, want to thank the Member for Calgary-Egmont for bringing this motion forward. Thank you to all the guests who are here tonight in support.

The fine arts do two important things, both of which are hard to measure: they feed the soul, which we desperately need in an increasingly secular world, and they make us more creative. Both of these statements are hard to prove. Both statements defy measurement. It's like the wind. We know it's there, but it's hard to measure.

We need to support this motion because the arts have been sacrificed for everything else on the timetable for a long time. When a school has to cut the budget, the money is usually taken from the fine arts. It happens over time as well. The sciences have dominated the Alberta high school curriculum for many years, with the result that there are many trained scientists who cannot get a job, and the people who want to do arts are afraid that there won't be any work for them, so they take something else. We have lost a generation of creative people because of our focus on science and technology. That technology is useless if we can't find more creative ways of using it, and we lack the creative people in every walk of life.

The arts humanize. Social skills learned in orchestra and concert band and choir are directly transferable to the workplace. When we have a crisis, we look for comfort in music, art, literature, poetry, sculpture. The arts teach us how to live. In any civilization that we dig up, it is the arts which give us the clue to the psychology of the people. When people are prosperous, they have time to express themselves. Even the cave paintings tell us that that society must have had abundant food. You cannot create or express when you are hungry. The wealth of the arts defines the personality of a society.

The arts foster creativity. IBM and other corporations are desperate for creative minds. They have many brilliant technicians but not enough brilliant technicians who can see other possibilities. One of my favourite quotes about creativity and what it does for the people is by Brenda Ueland. "Why should we all use our creative power . . .? Because there is nothing that makes people so generous, joyful, lively, bold and compassionate, so indifferent to fighting and the accumulation of objects and money."

Five credits are the absolute minimum. We should maybe be looking at 15. More importantly, every time you mandate something into the curriculum, like phys ed, something else has to be mandated off. The timetable is finite. You can't keep adding without subtracting. So we play around with it in a random fashion, but I think that it is time for a complete overhaul of the timetable.

What kind of people do we want running this province in 20 years? What kinds of things do they need to know? Our curriculum was formulated in the 19th century for the 20th, and now we're in the 21st century. Do we need our students to know the same things now that they did then? If we feel the need to mandate courses like science or phys ed or fine arts, then is that telling us that our present setup is inadequate? Maybe it's time to get a group of futurists together and decide what our students need to know when the oil sands are dried up.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, but under Standing Order 8(4), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont to close debate on Motion 505.

Mr. Herard: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank all hon. members for their well-thought-out comments. I was going to get into a number of issues that, possibly, conservative thinkers would have an interest in, reports such as, for example, from the Canada West Foundation entitled Culture and Economic Competitiveness, discussing how CEOs of corporations look for human capital centres. They look for highly educated managers and skilled workers, and these people look to places where they have an opportunity for an active cultural lifestyle and where quality cultural infrastructure exists.

I was going to quote a fellow by the name of Jason Azmier in an article in Western Landscapes, who clearly demonstrates that the west loses out big time in terms of federal funding for the culture. In fact, federal funding is $45 per capita in the west and $110 per capita in the rest of Canada. The reason for that is because there really isn't a cultural infrastructure here in Alberta to attract any more than what we're already getting.

So then the question becomes: can we really live up to the 20-year strategic plan when we talk about, you know, having the best place to live and raise a family? Those were the things that I still needed to cover.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hundreds of Albertans who sent me encouragement and expressed personal experiences as to the benefit of fine arts in their lives and those of their children. I want to say a special thanks to the many teachers, students, and the performers who travelled here to their legislative home and to make us feel first-hand the values of fine arts and to help make a difference in this decision, and I wish them a safe trip home. I want to thank my son Christopher, who's also a music teacher, who helped spread word of this motion to the arts community and garner a lot of support.

I want to close, Mr. Speaker, by quoting a notable Canadian artist and producer, Bob Ezrin, who produced albums for Pink Floyd, Kiss, Roberta Flack, and Rod Stewart amongst others. You may remember that he was inducted into the Canadian Music Hall of Fame in the 2004 Juno awards right here in Edmonton. He used his time in his acceptance speech to express his concern about reductions in nonacademic arts programs. He said in part, and I quote: even though I'm the guy who brought you School's Out and "We don't need no education," I'm very passionate about music education; while the three Rs provide kids with the basic tools they need, the arts give them the imagination and inspiration to do something important with these tools.

Another notable that I wish to quote, a man by the name of Plato, said centuries ago, "Musical training is a more potent instrument than any other, because rhythm and harmony find their way into the inward places of the soul."

Hon. members, I urge everyone to vote in favour of this motion. Thank you so much.

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2005-06

Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development

The Deputy Chair: As per our Standing Orders the first hour is limited between the minister and members of the opposition, following which it'll be available to any other member of the Assembly. Should the chair of the Northern Alberta Development Council wish to participate, he may be able to do so within the first 20 minutes allocated to the minister.

The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you very much, colleagues. Today, actually, I want to present the 2005-2006 estimates for the Ministry of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development and the 2005-2008 business plan. This is the ministry's fifth business plan, and it supports our vision of an Alberta that includes the full participation of self-reliant aboriginal and northern Albertans into the province's second century.

I'd like to thank my terrific staff, Mr. Chairman, for the hard work they do on behalf of all Albertans. With me today is my deputy minister – I don't know if she's seated over there; it looks like she's not – and the assistant deputy minister, Ken Boutillier. I don't know if he's over there. No? They're not here either. They're probably out smoking. Senior financial officer Lorne Harvey is seated over there. Do you want to stand and take a bow? Executive directors John McDonough and Neil Reddekopp. I don't know if they're both over there. It looks like I've lost them while we were waiting. [interjection] Oh, are they over there? Okay. Also my directors: Thomas Droege, Jason Gariepy, Gerry Kushlyk, and Allan Pard. Would you please stand so that everybody knows who you are? As well, NADC's acting executive director, Allen Geary. These are the individuals who keep me in line.

One person that I want to talk about today – and I know he's not sitting there, but he will eventually get here – is Ken Boutillier, who is the assistant deputy minister. This is Ken's last budget. He'll be retiring, actually, after 25 years. He'll be retiring in September. I want to say a thank you to him for all the hard work that he's done and thank him also for making sure that we had cutting edge programs and cutting edge policies that he's led. So I want to say a special thanks to him.

Achieving our mission involves developing partnerships with aboriginal people and collaborations with other ministries and the private sector. Together we will enhance the well-being and self-reliance of aboriginal and northern communities. Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development is a small ministry with several responsibilities. We are not in the business of program delivery; however, the ministry does advance the social and economic needs of the largest northern geographical area in the province.

In addition, we strengthen relationships with approximately 200,000 aboriginal people in Alberta. We provide advice and support to other government ministries to address policy and service needs of aboriginal people. This includes guidance on how to work effectively with aboriginal governments and communities.

We facilitate, co-ordinate, and advise on the development of cross-ministry policies, strategies, and initiatives. This helps to ensure that all Albertans benefit from our province's opportunities and prosperity. Our mandate is to be responsive to the needs of aboriginal and northern Albertans, other government ministries, and the private sector. Our 2005-2006 estimates reflect this mandate and other key legislative requirements.

Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development has a budget of $39.4 million, which is up $3.7 million from 2004-2005. A significant portion of the budget is for legislative funding requirements, or, as we call them, statutory funds, provided to the Métis Settlements General Council as per the Metis Settlements Accord Implementation Act. The act requires payment of $10 million per year until April 1, 2006. As well, under the legislation our department provides funding to Métis settlements through the matching grants replacement agreement. The grant amount for 2005-2006 is $4.1 million. This brings the total for Métis settlements legislative requirements and governance efforts to approximately $14.1 million.

This leaves $25.1 million for key departmental initiatives such as aboriginal affairs specific, $22.4 million. The Northern Alberta Development Council receives $2 million, and I know that I'm asking the chair, the MLA from Lac La Biche, to speak on NADC's efforts shortly. The Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal receives $942,000.

In 2004-05 we had 79 full-time employees, of which 57 worked in the department, 15 with NADC, and another seven assigned to the Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal. This year we're adding 11 full-time employees, bringing our total to 90.

Our 2005-2008 business plan identifies five strategic priorities that the ministry intends to focus on. These are the aboriginal policy framework. We will continue to lead implementation of the commitments made in the aboriginal policy framework. This involves working with all Alberta ministries, the aboriginal community, and other stakeholders to address socioeconomic barriers facing aboriginal people.

On consultation we'll continue to lead development and implementation of provincial processes for consulting with aboriginal communities in relation to land and resource issues. We haven't completed that yet, but we'll get there.

Métis settlements. We will work with Métis settlements through the transition assessment and planning project to enhance self-reliance and to prepare for 2007, when statutory payments end.

Urban aboriginal initiatives. We will continue to work with federal, provincial, and municipal departments and agencies and local aboriginal organizations in urban centres to focus on aboriginal needs and priorities.

Northern development. We will continue to co-ordinate policies and strategies to address northern matters and to enhance economic and social development.

The department's business plan goals are linked to the four pillars of the government of Alberta strategic business plan, and our collective goal is to make Alberta the best place to live, work, and visit. Our ministry has two core businesses for '05-08. These goals are consistent with government-wide business planning standards, and funding is aligned with core businesses, goals, strategies, and performance measures. Our ministry's first core business relates to aboriginal people and issues. It is aimed at increasing aboriginal participation in Alberta's social and economic life of the province and to facilitate resolution of significant matters.

Our first goal is to "provide leadership in assisting government to manage significant Aboriginal priorities requiring a co-ordinated policy or strategic response." We will achieve this goal by, one, leading the implementation of the aboriginal policy framework through the cross-ministry aboriginal policy initiative; two, identifying and addressing barriers to socioeconomic opportunities facing aboriginal people; and three, continuing to collaborate in the development of cross-ministry consultation strategy. Together our department's participation in cross-ministry policy initiatives provides opportunities to co-ordinate responses to the priorities of aboriginal people and northern Albertans.

The strategies under this goal include leading in the cross-ministry API, which is the commitment under the government's aboriginal policy framework; working with Alberta ministries on economic development strategies that address barriers to self-reliance on First Nations reserves; developing and implementing appropriate arrangements with Métis governments in Alberta on harvesting rights, which includes striking a balance between respecting rights and addressing safety and conservation concerns; facilitating participation of Alberta ministries with Canada and First Nations on self-government; and co-ordinating the implementation of a proposed consultation strategy to address land and resource challenges.

There are two specific initiatives under this goal: first, developing First Nations economic capacity will play a more meaningful role in Alberta's economy – the cross-ministry initiative, Alberta Economic Development and Alberta Human Resources and Employment, includes building the skills, business planning, financial management, and knowledge and resources of First Nations to take advantage of existing and emerging opportunities – second, utilizing the proposed consultation strategy to gain access to land for resource development while protecting sites of vital importance to First Nations. Traditional use studies are one example of how we are addressing land and resource matters in the province.

Our performance measures for goal one include the percentage of targets achieved in a cross-ministry aboriginal policy initiative. This is an indicator of cross-ministry progress on addressing aboriginal needs. We will also report on the percentage of Alberta ministries addressing aboriginal priorities in their business and operational plans.

Our second goal is to provide advice and specialized knowledge to ministries, aboriginal governments, and other stakeholders to identify and resolve emerging issues. Achieving this goal depends on our ongoing efforts to enhance provincial relations with aboriginal people, facilitate inclusion of aboriginal priorities in the development of government initiatives, and work with aboriginal communities, Alberta ministries, and other stakeholders to identify and resolve concerns.

Strategies also include working towards a timely resolution of land-related negotiations, which Alberta has an obligation to under the natural resources transfer agreement. It also includes partnering with Métis settlements to prepare for greater self-reliance in working with other levels of government and aboriginal organizations to address urban aboriginal needs.

Other strategies under goal two include advising and assisting ministries to develop policies to enhance the well-being and self-reliance of northern and aboriginal peoples. This includes addressing funding and capacity building strategies. We will continue to engage the ministries' aboriginal industry advisory committees to help us set our department's future direction, and we will continue to be active participants in federal/provincial/territorial processes involving aboriginal people.

Performance measures, of course, include Métis settlements' self-generated revenue. Another key measure is progress achieved in negotiation and implementation of land-related agreements. We will also report on a number of capacity building initiatives within aboriginal communities and organizations, which assist in resource development and creation of a stable environment for consultation and partnership.

Our second core goal is to advance the development of northern Alberta. This means that we'll continue to listen to northern Albertans to work with other ministries and stakeholders to advance economic and sustainable development. This includes advancing strategic priorities and identifying opportunities and challenges that will lead to the creation of a northern development strategy. We will also continue to support initiatives to improve skill levels in the north.

Other strategies include raising awareness of the importance of northern development, which means that we are active participants in the federal/provincial Northern Development Ministers Forum, the Northwest Territories/Alberta memorandum of understanding, and the Alberta/British Columbia accord, as well as on northern issues we belong to the Alberta-Alaska Bilateral Council. Alberta is North American vice-president to the Northern Forum, which advances the concerns of northern residents in a global context.

So we are looking at long-standing indicators such as partnership satisfaction survey results, return rates on bursary recipients, and a number of stakeholder partnerships to develop.

I'd like to ask the MLA for Lac La Biche-St. Paul and chair of the Northern Alberta Development Council now to please update what they've been doing.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and thank you so much, Madam Minister. As you noted, the government is focusing on strategic priorities. The north has abundant natural resources and is one of the driving forces behind Alberta's thriving economy. It has 100 per cent of the oil sands, 40 per cent of the conventional oil and gas, 90 per cent of the potential productive forests, and 21 per cent of the provincial crop production.

Achieving our full potential requires better co-ordination on northern development. While oil sands' development is always at the forefront, it is important to add value to northern resources, especially in agriculture and forestry. There are tremendous untapped opportunities in the north. Much of the northern economy, however, is based on resource extraction. Northern Albertans want to enhance their current industries, capture the full value of raw products, and make value-added concepts become value-added manufacturing realities.

Developing northern transportation corridors, including air, road, and rail, particularly railroads to the western ports, is essential to provide access to markets, resources, and services. This infrastructure is key to development processing and the sale of products to allow the north to compete in global markets. We need to connect communities, enhance internal movement of labour and materials to meet high investment requirements, and develop tourism opportunities.

Northern Alberta growth is advancing quicker than the infrastructure and support services and trades. Northern Alberta Development Council continues to promote the northern Alberta highway strategy and to work on the advancement on the northwest corridor and its connections to the port of Prince Rupert, reopening key rail links and establishing a container site.

Skill development is another high priority for council. We need to ensure that northern colleges and industry help provide a trained workforce, that northern residents benefit from development, and that there is greater aboriginal participation in the northern workforce. NADC initiatives that will advance skill development in the north include assisting northern students to make the transition from high school to postsecondary education, implementing a youth apprenticeship program, and encouraging graduates to return to northern Alberta to work and to live.

While there are barriers and challenges facing northern Albertans, Alberta's north holds the promise for incredible economic opportunities and sustainable development. I've enjoyed promoting northern development, and I look forward to working with the minister on these opportunities.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, you will be able to respond once. Did you have concluding remarks?

Ms Calahasen: Just a conclusion, yeah.

I would like to actually conclude by highlighting the ministry's focus on developing the next Alberta. Our vision is one of full participation by self-reliant aboriginal people and northern Albertans. This vision is achievable. It includes removing barriers to increase participation in Alberta's economy. It involves trusting and working with our partners and using the necessary resources to achieve our vision. We want to ensure that we continually set a vision for the next 20 years for the north. Strategically, we'll continue to develop and implement provincial processes that benefit our province. We will work with aboriginal people and northern Albertans to make our province the best place to live, work, and visit in our second century.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to lead off the debate on the aboriginal affairs budget. First of all, I'd like to start with a compliment, believe it or not. I know, I saw your head spin around there for a moment. I noticed that the Auditor General's report found nothing of any significance in the aboriginal affairs department, and aboriginal affairs was also one of the few government departments that maintained its budget for the last year. I think the other departments just – I think it was 22 of 24 – spent a little bit more money than they should have, and aboriginal affairs believed it had a budget and stuck with it. So congratulations to you for maintaining it.

Enough of the congratulations. Let's get on to the rest of it. You didn't think I was going to end there, did you? No.

I do have a few questions about the budget. As you mentioned in your opening address, it's another $3.7 million that has been added to the aboriginal affairs budget this. Last year I believe there was another $4 million or so added to the aboriginal affairs budget.

Now, the obvious question is: where is this money going? That's $8 million over two years. That's a pretty substantial increase, and I don't find anything in these documents that tells me where this extra money is going. It's not a very big department, as you said yourself. I believe it's $29 million or something like that, and an $8 million increase over the last two years is pretty substantial. I think it would be of interest to everyone in the House if we had a breakdown as to why you're getting another $4 million.

I'm also curious about aboriginal affairs itself. Now, there's a line in these budgets that says aboriginal affairs budget. At one point it says $17.4 million, and elsewhere it says $22.9 million. This is the bulk of your department, and it comes up under a one-line mention that says aboriginal affairs.

An Hon. Member: Page number.

Mr. Tougas: It's on page 120, and it's on a number of other pages: page 20 of the budget document.

Why is there so little information about where the bulk of your department funding goes to? Now, we have all the other departments – you know, Energy doesn't have a listing that says, "Energy, $5 million," and Learning doesn't say, "Learning, $1 billion" or something. There's a detailed breakdown about where the money goes. What we have here is: aboriginal affairs, $22.292 million. Where is it going?

Now, I suspect that if we wanted to spend the time, you could probably give me a detailed listing right here and now. Knowing you, you probably know it off the top of your head, but I don't think anybody wants to sit here and listen to it. So if you could supply it in writing, I'd appreciate that because it is of interest, and it's also very hard for me to do my job as the aboriginal affairs critic with so little information. So a little bit more would certainly be appreciated in this regard.

The same applies, too, for the Northern Alberta Development Council, the funding for that. I believe it stays roughly the same at about $2 million every year. A little bit further information on where that money goes would also be appreciated.

Now, over in the five-year plan I've noticed that there's a substantial increase in the budget again under aboriginal affairs without any particular justification or any listing for what it's all about. For 2003-04 under aboriginal affairs the budget was $14.7 million. The target for 2007-08 is $24 million, so you're looking at almost a $10 million increase in the aboriginal affairs budget, again under that one single line: aboriginal affairs. Now, the rest of the budget is actually going down, I assume, because of the end of the Métis settlements legislation. By 2007 that disappears, the way I read this, and your budget will actually decrease by 2007-08, except under the listing of aboriginal affairs. So, again, if we could have more information on that, that would certainly be appreciated.

I'd also like to ask you a few questions about the business plan. On page 116, there's a mention of the consultation process, which, as I understand it, has been going on for quite some time. I believe it's been going on since about 2000. I may be wrong; if I am, please correct me. Under Consultation the document states that the ministry will "lead the development and implementation of provincial consultation processes to ensure that Aboriginal interests are recognized in the management of Crown lands and resources." Now, as I understand it, the budget for this was about $6 million going back to 2000, and we're now in '05-06. First of all, what is the status of that document? How far along are we with it, and how much is it costing us? I mean, are we out of the $6 million now? Is it still going on? Is there more to come? What is the status of this document at this time?

I've also been told that some chiefs in the north have only received a draft document from last May, and they haven't heard anything since. If this is correct, why so? Are they being adequately informed about what is actually going on with the consultation document?

If the minister would like to interrupt and answer any of these questions, feel free to just carry on. I don't care to stand and talk for 20 minutes. If she'd like to make a few comments, feel free.

Now, concerning the recent developments with the Métis, there have been a couple of Supreme Court decisions, as you know, the Powley decision in particular, which seem to give the Métis increased hunting and fishing rights. The question that arises then is: will this lead to further rights for the Métis and perhaps on a par with the aboriginal people? Does that mean that this will put extra stress on the department? Will it mean that more funds will be needed? Does the minister see this as something that is going to be happening in the future? Will there be virtual parity between aboriginal and Métis, and will that mean more work for her department or more funding required?

Now, of course, we've been talking in the Legislature recently about the Lubicon, who found that industry was accessing Crown land near their reserve without any consultation originally. Now, the Minister of Energy has said in the House that the companies are allowed to bring in their equipment and develop areas on Crown land without permits in anticipation of winning EUB approval to begin drilling. My question is: is the consultation process working, when Lubicon members wake up to find that heavy equipment is moving onto land very near their territory? I don't know if this is the appropriate forum for this, but it is an interesting question, and perhaps you can address that at some point.

I'd also like to ask about the Métis harvesting accord. In the business plan on page 117 strategy 1.4 says that there will be cross-ministry work to develop the MHA. Again, I suspect the cost of this is probably hidden somewhere in these documents; we just can't find it. I would like to know exactly how much this is going to be costing the aboriginal affairs department. Is it going to be spread out with Sustainable Resource Development, or is it entirely an aboriginal affairs initiative? In the original MHA I believe the signature of the Community Development minister at the time was affixed to that document. Is Community Development still involved in this process, or have they been sent to the sidelines, so to speak?

Regarding the north, we have a serious situation developing in Fort McMurray right now with housing and infrastructure. Now, it seems to me that the area is moving along quite nicely on the economic side, and I'm wondering if there is a role for the council to play in addressing the increasingly serious housing problem in the north. Is this something that there may be more funds required for, or is this something that's sort of outside of the purview of the aboriginal affairs department?

This also brings up the question again of temporary foreign workers being brought into Alberta to alleviate this alleged shortage of trade workers for oil sands projects. Now, from an aboriginal affairs point of view is the ministry doing everything possible to ensure that aboriginals are getting every opportunity to participate in this booming economy? These northern developments are not going away any time soon. This is a long-term thing. This isn't a boom. We're going to be seeing this for years and years. It seems to me that we have a golden opportunity right now to make sure that every aboriginal who wants to participate in the oil sands development gets a chance to, and I don't know if that's happening.

It's a little hard to tell from these documents if enough resources are being brought to bear in this matter. We can't let this opportunity go by. I hate to think that there are aboriginals who may want to be working in the oil sands but that we're bringing workers from elsewhere who may be taking their place. That may not be happening, but this is a serious matter, and it's a great opportunity. I mean, we just cannot pass by this chance to make sure that aboriginals are doing everything they can to participate in the Alberta economy.

An Hon. Member: And the advantage.

Mr. Tougas: Yes, the Alberta advantage. Thank you very much.

Finally, I know I've touched on a lot of things here, and I see you're taking a few notes, and maybe you'd like to address some of these things afterwards. The question of urban aboriginals has come up. I believe you have a strategy for that. Again, I think that by 2007 . . .

Some Hon. Members: 2011.

Mr. Tougas: By 2011. Thank you.

By 2011 Edmonton will have Canada's largest aboriginal population. What is the aboriginal affairs department doing about this situation? It's not a crisis, but it is something that is developing. It's an emerging issue. I know you do have the urban aboriginal program, but I would like a little more information about what it's all about.

I also have here that the city of Edmonton has formed the Edmonton urban aboriginal accord initiative between itself and the Edmonton Aboriginal Urban Affairs Committee. Is this part of the aboriginal affairs department, or is this something quite apart from it altogether? Or is it something that you're even at all familiar with? Is this the type of thing that the city is involved in? I don't see any mention of the province of Alberta in this document here. So perhaps you could fill us in a little bit on that.

If you'd like to address any of these questions, I'd be happy to sit down, and you can fill me in on a few of these things. I think some of our colleagues here have some questions as well. So if you would like to have the floor for a little bit, feel free.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I would like to talk about the urban aboriginal societies or groups that we are working with. It's true that we're going to have a large aboriginal population that's going to occur all across Canada, and you probably have that information from the Canada perspective because it's a huge issue.

One of the areas that we've been trying to deal with is: how do we work with the urban aboriginal communities and, more particularly, the urban centres like Edmonton and Calgary? We were in partnership with the federal government in Calgary and in Edmonton, and now we have also encouraged the federal government to include Lethbridge as one of the urban aboriginal strategies so that we could begin to deal with some of the concerns that have been brought forward. So with that we've actually committed a number of dollars to co-ordinate an overall strategy for accessing and improving the delivery of programs and services.

I'll just give you an example. In Calgary we committed to provide $100,000 to the Calgary Aboriginal Urban Affairs Committee for community-approved projects, and of course an official from our department sits on that steering committee. We're also working with the city of Edmonton, as I indicated, with the Edmonton Aboriginal Urban Affairs Committee and the Western Economic Diversification Office developing an aboriginal accord between the urban aboriginal people and the city.

What we wanted to do was to make sure that we continue to work with these various groups and the various cities because, as you know, the urban migration from the aboriginal community into the cities has just been quite an interesting situation with the urban people. So we've been wanting to ensure that we continue to do that. So we are working in partnerships with not only the cities but also with western diversification so that we can begin to look at priority setting and decision-making processes that would enable the aboriginal community to become more involved in the city to be able to determine what needs to be done.

We also, as I indicated, successfully partnered with the city of Lethbridge, and that would be to help with community-based strategies to address aboriginal employment issues in Lethbridge. What we want to do there is to make sure that we continually work together jointly on addressing the community's needs. We have to be able to work with other communities as well in those cities as well as across Alberta with groups such as the friendship centres. As you know, there's a friendship centre in Lethbridge, there's a friendship centre in Calgary, and there's a friendship centre in Edmonton. We've got friendship centres all across the province: in Pincher Creek as a matter of fact. We have them in small urban areas.

Of course, the Métis Nation of Alberta has also been a really good group to work with, and we're dealing with the urban aboriginal issues because they do live in the urban areas. Of course, what we've been trying to make sure we do is to include health, education, and employment of urban aboriginal people. Those are the areas that the communities that are located in these centres have been talking about and bringing to our attention, and we certainly have been working with them.

That was an important question. That's an area that I have a special concern about because when you see the concerns that the people are bringing to the table and you begin to see the cities dealing with that urban migration, we have to sit with them to determine what it is that we have to do to address those. So thank you very much for that question because that's, in my view, one of the bigger questions.

When we're talking about the north, I know that probably my colleague from the north will address some of the northern issues, but I want to talk about the temporary workers. We have been working with Human Resources and Employment, and that's basically to be able to start to figure out how the First Nations can get, first of all, an education so that they can begin to look at trades training.

Then from there, what we want to do is to make sure that they also have the ability – in fact, we've been working with Education as well as with Advanced Education not only to deal with the issue of education so that they can begin to look at trades but also to look at those projects that my colleague will talk about. We have to be able to see how we can encourage the aboriginal community to get that training so that they can access the next level, which is the trades training and more education so that they can begin to see the opportunities that are available.

We've been working not only on the educational side; we've got the First Nations, Métis, and Inuit policy that's in place. We also have the Learning Commission, of which 15 of the strategies were recognized as aboriginal-specific, and those 15 strategies are the ones that we also have adopted. They're the recommendations that we've said we would deal with, and those ones we're trying to put in place, working with our partners, which are First Nations as well as the Métis community, to see how we can begin to address the educational needs of the aboriginal community so that they can take advantage of what's happening with the Alberta advantage, as you've identified. Those are the areas, I think, that are very important for aboriginal communities to be able to see what opportunities are available to them.

We are also making sure that when we're dealing with the economic possibilities in the province, when something happens in a community – I'll give you an example. We have Loon Lake. I don't know if you know where Loon Lake is, a community called Loon Lake. It's a reserve, actually. We have a community called Loon Lake, and within Loon Lake – Loon River, actually, is the reserve – we have all sorts of activity happening around the reserve. What we try to do is to make sure that we help them make the connections with industry to see what possibilities exist not only for employment but also training possibilities and to make sure that there are other opportunities for them in the contract areas so that there are full possibilities of their involvement in the economic participation.

So those are the areas that we get involved in and work with the communities as well as with industry and other departments to see how we can ensure that that could happen. It's a continuation of everything that we're doing and making sure that we do the cross-ministry initiative, which is called the aboriginal policy initiative. On that note, I think it's important that my colleague will address that as well, and maybe he can get up in a few minutes and talk about that.

The Auditor General. I want to say thanks for the compliments. As they say, anything before the but is, you know . . . But I want to say a special thanks for that. I appreciate that. We've worked very hard. My staff have worked very hard to make sure that we continually deal with the issues that the Auditor General brings to our table and try to address them. I know that he's continually making sure that we get better and better, and my staff has certainly been involved in that.

I'll have the chair of the NADC now address some of the northern issues, if he may, Mr. Chair.

Chair's Ruling

Questions to Members Other than Ministers

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, as per the Standing Orders there's no provision for chairmen of committees to answer questions or participate. We had the special provision that in the first 20 minutes that were allocated to you, you could cede some time to the hon. chairman.

The chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Caldor.

Debate Continued

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you as well . . . [The sound system malfunctioned] I've got a little feedback action going on. It's kind of like an electric guitar effect, you know, in keeping with the arts theme that we were doing earlier this evening, I guess.

Thank you so much for giving me an opportunity to make comments on the budget. I, too, would like to make a general comment, that amongst the different critic portfolio areas that I am responsible for, I see Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development as being a very straightforward and well-organized budget document. I think that it's in keeping with the mandate of the ministry as well as looking at a number of important needs that need to be addressed in this area, so it is quite a good one to work with.

I have a number of questions. I'm just going to take the lead from how you were working with the other critic member and just give you a number of them, and then you can work with it as you see fit.

My first question is in regard to the overall spending in aboriginal affairs. Of the spending from last year my reading of it is that it's up by 31 per cent. I would be curious to know what specifically these extra monies were allotted to. I would be interested in some more specific information. You can give that to me in writing or orally, if you like.

My next question is in respect to the Métis subsistence hunting and fishing area. I would like to ask the ministry if they are going to provide extra funding to solidify the membership lists in the Métis community because, of course, with the Powley agreement I believe we have some not confusion but some new developments in regard to hunting and fishing rights, so perhaps providing some more funding to developing membership lists would be useful.

Will the government be providing funding for education to Métis, First Nations, and hunting and fishing groups on this issue? I think each member of this Legislature should be receiving a great deal of correspondence from different groups in regard to the new developments in hunting and fishing rights, and I think sort of an overall education and consultation process is in order at this juncture to try to give some clarification to the public in regard to the hunting and fishing rights of everyone, really.

[Dr. Brown in the chair]

I have a question as well. My understanding is that there are $10 million set aside to provide for the partnership with the Métis Settlements General Council to establish self-reliance in preparation for the end of the current funding agreements I believe in 2007. Are these settlements sort of ready? Is that a firm number or a firm date for those things to happen? What's being done as well, then, in conjunction with that to ensure that Métis nations will in fact be self-reliant by this date of 2007? I'm curious to know that as well.

By the government's own numbers the off-reserve aboriginal people of Alberta – we've been discussing this previously – have twice as high an unemployment rate as members on reserves. I should say it's twice as high as the overall unemployment rate in this province. So we're looking for specific programming – I know you spoke to this to some degree already – for employment training and direction in the urban areas because this is where, I believe, the highest unemployment level is for people off reserve.

Perhaps one of the things that comes first to my mind in terms of funding – and it's an important question – is that of urban housing. As the hon. minister has mentioned, we are experiencing a migration of people, a movement of people from rural to urban areas. This is sort of inevitable, and in a way we welcome the migration into our urban areas such as Edmonton, but the housing situation is critical. Affordable housing in Edmonton and Calgary and Lethbridge and Red Deer and other centres, Fort McMurray and Grande Prairie, is severe. I know specifically in regard to aboriginal people moving to, say, Edmonton, in my constituency, there's a real acute need for more affordable housing. I'm wondering if there is a provision to budget for this from this department or to steer some directive from this budget into infrastructure, for example.

My last question would be in regard to the Lubicon Cree situation, which is ongoing and developing quite quickly in perhaps less than favourable ways. I would like to ask what's being done to include the Lubicon Cree, which are still without a treaty, in consultations involving the oil and gas exploration on their lands or the disputed lands. It's developing into a potentially volatile situation, and I would hope that this department could find resolution to that somehow.

Those are my specific questions in regard to the budget, and I welcome the response of the minister as she sees fit to do so.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I will address some of Edmonton-Calder's specific concerns. Then if I am not as thorough as he would like me to be, what we could do is go back, and I can find the questions, and I'll write to you about some of those because some of them I think will take a little bit more time than what we can find tonight.

The overall spending. You were talking about Métis. As you know, the Métis harvesting – this actually does have something to do with Edmonton-Meadowlark as well, on the Métis side, the Powley decision. Powley is actually an aboriginal rights decision, not a hunting case, and it is possible that it could have implications beyond harvesting, is what we assess. This is a matter for the future. For now harvesting is enough for us, and that's what we've been dealing with and trying to make sure that we take care of the concerns that are out there.

Community Development is a valued partner. You were asking about Community Development. They are part of what we've been doing and certainly are at the table with us. We're trying to ensure that those ministries that are to be at the table are at the table with us to address their concerns from their perspective. We co-ordinate and we try to get their input, whether it's Sustainable Resource Development or whether it's Justice or whether it's Community Development, to deal with the issues that they're responsible for. So they are definitely a valued partner.

Costs relative to the Métis, as both of you have asked, are contained within our existing budget, and that's what we've been dealing with in terms of the funding for the membership. The Métis community have certainly taken that on themselves and are working with us in terms of determining who is a Métis, which is an important part of the test for the community basis and self-identifications and that nature. They are taking care of that portion. However, we're involved to make sure that it does follow and meet the test that has been brought forward by the Powley decision.

You were talking about the Métis Settlements General Council, and are they going to be self-sufficient by 2007? We're wanting to ensure that we work with them as we work through the transition. We have got a process called the transition assessment planning, and that brings the concerns that they have and the areas of budgeting that we have to deal with, and that'll go through the process within government as we've always done.

We'll continue to work through that to make sure that we can see if there is going to be a gap that's going to result maybe from today to 2007, and we'll make sure that we continue to work with the Métis settlements so that we can address the concerns of a shortfall, should there be one. The $10 million will end as of 2006, as I indicated, and certainly we want to make sure that we have a way to be able to make that transition, so we'll continue to work with the Métis settlements. They have actually brought forward the concern to our table, and we have now started that process to address the very issues that you're bringing to the table. I want to thank you for your interest there, though.

The unemployment rate. It's true that there is a huge unemployment rate that we have to be able to look at, and that's why it's important that we continue to work with Human Resources and Employment and also with Education and Advanced Education not only on the educational side but on advanced education to make sure that we have pre-employment training and also to ensure that there is going to be trades training and to ensure that if people want to go to university, they have that ability, as I indicated earlier, so that they can see that there are opportunities for them that they can achieve once they get to that point. So we'll continue to work with the various ministries.

As I indicated, my ministry works with other ministries. We don't deal with program delivery; however, we encourage the various ministries to incorporate these ideas into their ministries. As a result, I've seen some really good activity that has happened from the various ministries, ensuring that we do those kinds of planning and programming that would address those very issues. So it's a milestone, and we continue to make those milestones.

Urban housing. We do need more affordable housing, as you know, as the migration occurs. The cities are starting to feel that, and that's why we have the aboriginal committees and the cities that we've been working with as well as with western diversification to ensure that we address those very issues as we begin to see the concerns come forward. The only thing I can say at this time is that we will continue to do that and address it with those partners because we can't do it alone, and we don't intend to do it alone, but we need to be able to have the partners with us so that we can begin to work out these challenges that we have.

I call them challenges because if they're challenges, then we have to find solutions. As solution finders we can begin to address the concerns that have been out there for a long, long time, and we have to be able to work together to address those.

On the Lubicon situation I know that a lot of people don't know this, but as a result of my ancestry I'm eligible for membership in the Lubicon Lake band and, therefore, could theoretically share in the benefits of any settlement. I have actually handed off that file to the Minister of Justice to deal with that, so that's the reason why I don't deal with the Lubicon issue.

The issue of consultation, however, is another issue. That's another question from the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. It's been a couple of years at least since we started this process, and on the consultation what we have done is we took forward some information and some possibilities and some principles to First Nations. I met with the First Nation chiefs on a government-to-government basis, requested to have our technical people meet with their technical people so that we can begin to address the issue of consultation.

We have now reached a point where my colleagues will be looking at the consultation package once we've finished it, and then it'll go through the regular process. We're still at that stage. We're not finished yet, and therefore the consultation with First Nations doesn't happen to the extent that I believe that you and the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark have been asking about. So I think it's important to note that we haven't got to that degree yet. We will be, and I believe that we will get to that point eventually. That's the one that Edmonton-Meadowlark has been talking about. We will get to that point eventually.

The capacity building initiative. I think this is really new because you asked where the new money was going to go to. We are looking at capacity building to assist First Nations in developing an internal consultative process for resource development. That's what the additional money was for that we requested. Presently First Nations in Alberta do not have the physical ability to meaningfully consult with the government of Alberta or industry on resource development issues, so what we did was that we went forward and asked for more money for us to be able to work with First Nations to be able to do that.

The implementation of the consultation policy, of course, will create consultation fatigue, as you probably know with the small party group that you have, in First Nations under their present administration structure. Without adequate funding for capacity that consultation policy will probably not be successful or at least get to the goal to create a stable environment for resource development. So we wanted to make sure that we developed capacity within First Nations to assist in a more stable environment for consultation with industry and, of course, the government on resource development issues.

We have money that we requested. The $6 million that we had, the first $6 million you asked about, was to be able to look at how we can develop the capacity within government. That was the first role because we also needed to develop our capacity within government, which we didn't have at the time. So it was divided amongst a variety of departments who were involved with our department. Once we finished that, then we went into capacity building for First Nations. With that, now we've got the economic capacity to be able to work with First Nations.

I'll write to you about the specifics relative to the additional money that we've asked for.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to get up and speak to this this evening. I want to commend the ministry in their vision and mission for aboriginal and northern affairs as they put out in the book: "an Alberta that includes the full participation of self-reliant Aboriginal and Northern Albertans in the province's opportunities and prosperity" as well as in their mission "to enhance Aboriginal well-being and self-reliance." Those are very worthy goals, and we're all wanting to attain those.

I guess I'll start and don't want to go over a lot of things, but I, too, would like a more detailed written answer on the breakdown of how the budget is being spent and especially on those huge budget increases. They are substantial, and I, too, would like that information in a written answer.

On page 114 the goal is to have aboriginal Albertans achieve "a socio-economic status equivalent to that of other Albertans." There I guess we're recognizing the fact that they're not equivalent to other ones.

One of the questions that I have is on unleashing innovation and that you're putting forward the SuperNet to aboriginal and northern communities. The question that I have, being from rural Alberta, is that you're putting in this connection. Is it just going to the schools? Is it going to community facilities? Do you have a program where it will actually get that last mile to their individual homes out in the country where many of them live? We spend a great deal of money to get it to maybe one area, but what percentage are we really getting it to when, in fact, so many live in a rural area? If you live more than three miles away from that hub, then they're not able to get the Internet. So I would like to know the answer on that.

Then I guess I have a little bit of a different angle, and I've received many letters and phone calls, and I've gone to meetings. But you have "supporting Northern bursary and stay-in-school initiatives." The question that I have in regard to that is not so much with the aboriginal but the programs that this government is putting out because of the socioeconomic status of a group that you want to encourage to stay in school. I guess I ask the question to the government as a whole that in section 15(2) in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms it talks about the amelioration of programs irregardless for "disadvantaged individuals or groups." If we find that this program is good for those that are socioeconomically challenged on the reserve, why would we not do that for other Albertans that are faced with the same situation and not just give it to one special group?

The last question that I have – and on this I've received probably the most numerous contact I've had – is on page 117, 1.4, which has been addressed a few times this evening. "Lead and co-ordinate participation of Alberta ministries with Métis governments and organizations in developing and implementing appropriate arrangements for Métis to exercise harvesting rights.” The question that many Albertans are asking me is: why are we giving them special status?

This country was founded on harvesting and gathering and hunting. We no longer live in that age where we can go out and do that. Fish and Game and Sustainable Resources have looked at that, and we’ve got very good programs in place in Alberta. It seems like this proactive move of this government to allow another whole group special status to go out and to hunt and to harvest when up until now they haven’t had that privilege – to say that they need it for sustenance is somewhat confusing. How are they alive today if they haven’t been allowed to do it in the past? And now they get this special status. It just seems like if we’re going to really maintain our fish and wildlife and have a quota system, we can’t open up the door here and allow such special privileges in harvesting. Like I say, a great deal of concern with many outdoor Albertans concerning that.

I’d appreciate those answers and am looking forward to receiving them, written or oral. Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, I will also advise you that we will be within a few minutes entering into the second hour of the estimates, at which time I would be more than happy to recognize the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul should he wish to add any comments.

Ms Calahasen: That sounds like a good idea, Mr. Chairman.

First of all, let me talk about something that I think there’s been a lot of misinformation and misinterpretation of, what Powley and the Blais case are all about, because I think it’s important for Albertans to understand what this is. As a government we did not give Métis hunting rights. Those were actually recognized and affirmed by the Supreme Court of Canada. What happened in the Powley case was that they recognized and affirmed aboriginal rights to Métis.

But on the other hand, on the same day they had the Blais case, which is Blais versus Regina in the fact that Mr. Blais said that he was an Indian under the natural resources transfer agreement in Manitoba. The NRTA, as you know, are under three provinces. So what happened was that he was not recognized. The Supreme Court of Canada said that he is not an Indian as recognized under the NRTA. The NRTA, or the natural resources transfer agreement, is what sets the limitations on First Nations hunting and trapping et cetera. So what happened was that with the two decisions what came out was that there was already a policy decision made. It wasn’t a policy by the government of Alberta. It then took into consideration that there was the aboriginal hunting rights for Métis but that potentially they could have had more rights than the First Nations.

So what the three negotiating groups did – and the negotiations took place with Sustainable Resource Development, Alberta Justice, and Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development – was that they then looked at what the issues were and tried to ensure that these rights would be confined under the NRTA; therefore, the limitations and closures and conservation and safety would be taken into consideration in those agreements. That’s basically what happened there.

What has gone out is that people are saying that we gave the rights to the Métis. I think that’s blatantly wrong, and I’d like to state here that that’s really not the fact. So we have to be able to address the issue from the fact that if these rights are out there, how do we ensure that all the aboriginal communities can be under the same rule?

That’s, basically, why we went and did the interim measures. These are interim. That doesn’t mean that there might be a possibility of information that will come in as a result of the interim so that we can use that as we move in a direction of maybe a series or maybe final. We don’t know what that will bring until we know what these interim will do for us because that’s what interim is all about.

So I think it’s important for people to understand that also when those cases came forward, they didn’t tell us who it could be in terms of the specifics, but they also didn’t tell us where and when. We wanted to make sure that we could have those areas of concern that would otherwise not allow us to be able to deal with it in a way that we could manage the resource, so what we did on the negotiating was we talked about: who are the Métis?

We recognized a group called the Métis Nation of Alberta. We also recognized the Métis Settlements General Council. With those two agreements we then confined Métis to Alberta Métis, not necessarily across Canada. So then it would be that that community, whoever that community was, in this case the Métis Nation of Alberta and Métis Settlements General Council, those Métis would then be the community. In that way we would know if there is somebody who comes from somewhere else to be able to try to take advantage of what the Alberta scene was about. We confined it to that.

We also decided where the hunting would be, and we did it so that we called it harvesting lands. These are important because harvesting lands are all unoccupied provincial Crown lands in Alberta, the provincially protected areas, and other occupied provincial Crown lands in Alberta that have a designation or area designated for hunting, trapping, or fishing, as the case may be. We also talked about any privately owned lands in Alberta on which that person has been given permission. It’s not automatic. Under the agreement it talks about: you have to have permission to be able to go on these what we call privately owned lands.

Any body of water in Alberta in respect of which domestic fishing licences are issued and, of course, commercial trapping, commercial fishing were not part of that. We wanted to ensure that the commercial component was out of it. We wanted to make sure that we can look at it from a subsistence perspective.

We also wanted to ensure that we would deal with this situation from a perspective of making sure we had the relationship with that Métis community so that they can then also help us in terms of the policing aspect and so that they will also work on the conservation issue. That was a big concern for them as well. I want to thank them at this time and be able to say that this decision came out in 2003, and it took us till 2004 to come out with something that would be palatable for both sides so that we can deal with this as a conservation issue. We knew that we were dealing with a concern where people could be concerned on the conservation side, and that’s why we encouraged them to be able to allow us to work in a framework that would allow us to deal with these issues of safety, conservation, and to be able to determine where and who and when it can be done.

So we try to do everything we can to work with the Métis in that respect because, as you know, these agreements I think are basically trying to build a regulatory framework around the principles stated in the Powley and the Blais decisions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to address some of the concerns and some of the questions that came forward as well.

First, I'd like to address the comments made by the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner if I may, and that's in regard to the SuperNet. I'm going to paraphrase, but I believe your question was: what is SuperNet doing for rural Albertans over and beyond? Maybe I can add a little bit to say that, number one, of course, the SuperNet is not only going to our schools but also going to our advanced education, our postsecondary schools, which provide access. We think that that is very important in the development of the areas where they are very isolated.

The second aspect I want to talk about is health and telehealth. In northern Alberta we have communities that are very isolated, are eight hours away from specialists. If we can incorporate a telehealth system that assists individuals to come into health care units or come into hospitals or come in to see their doctors and with the use of SuperNet be able to transfer some of the information – and I say information: taking an X-ray of an individual, bringing it forward to a specialist in Edmonton, and having the return of that expertise going back into the rural areas – it is very beneficial.

Also, when we talk about access – and you mentioned access for, let's say, the local individuals – the SuperNet is going to tie into all of the libraries, not only to the library systems but tie into the libraries, which will provide access for anybody to come into the libraries, use the libraries, be able to use the widened pipeline. We can also add the northern municipalities and their functionality with each other and with the centres and the government.

I'm going to refer as well to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark made a comment about housing. I want to say that we feel that it's very important for the government to make some land available – we talked about in Fort McMurray – for housing because it does provide pressures, and it does provide I want to say challenges to individuals that are there. From that aspect I will also maybe put a brief point in that I think we should stay out of the business of development but make sure that we have the opportunities afforded to individuals.

Some of the major challenges that we have in northern Alberta are, I will say, advanced education, temporary workers, and human resources. It is very important for our colleges to offer a curriculum that will assist individuals to be able to take courses that are necessary for oil and gas development, for forestry development. There is no doubt that there is a higher unemployment rate. The jobs are there, but we need to do training. There are individuals in northern Alberta, whether it be from the aboriginal communities or from municipalities or towns, that do not have the desire to come into the large centres to take their training. I think it is important for us to develop these individuals, to give them the opportunity to be able to learn, and to give them the opportunity to go to school in our northern colleges and provide those courses. I think that will assist in the minimizing of the need for temporary workers coming from other areas. I think that's one of the concerns that you had to kind of offset all of those vacancies that have been afforded because of the greater development.

There was a comment also made, I want to say, that asked something on the aspect of transportation. There is no doubt that transportation is one of our most immediate and our largest barriers. We need to be able to tie the communities together. We need the mobility in order to see the communities flourish and in order to see the north advance.

Someone – and I think it was the Member for Edmonton-Calder

– mentioned the aspect of working together, and I think it's very critical that our ministries do work together. There is no doubt that we need to co-ordinate between the ministries because when we look at the north, there is a major tying together. There is a major need for co-ordination. I talk about Transportation and Infrastructure tying in with Agriculture, where we need a container port coming out of the western part of the province to be able to bring product to market, which would be on the west coast. We talk, of course, of the co-ordination between Energy and Environment. We talk about the co-ordination between, as I said before, postsecondary colleges and our education systems and human resources. We need to work together in those aspects. I suppose I could go on and talk about seniors and children's services and health care.

We need to tie the ministries together and have a single focus of what is necessary and work together with aboriginal affairs and the Northern Alberta Development Council for what is the best advancement for northern Alberta.

Let me mention one other point that was mentioned: what else are we doing? One of our major attractions, one of our major renewable resources in northern Alberta is, of course, our parks, and our parks have basically quadrupled their budget to refurbish and rejuvenate those parks. I'll quote the minister but maybe not verbatim. The Minister of Community Development did say that our parks are the embassies to the world, and to our visitors it is Alberta's signature.

That development, as I said before, is a renewable resource for northern Alberta. It is something that can be accented. It will bring people to northern Alberta, and some of those people will be professionals, will be tradesmen, will be labourers, and will want to stay, and that will also address some of the labour concerns that we have.

Mr. Chairman, I think that that maybe summarizes some of the questions that were asked, and I thank the minister for giving me the opportunity for those questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I've just got a couple of short ones because they seem to be easier to answer, rather than going on with 20 of them, in being able to just pick a couple of them. A couple of specifics would be: how much consultation is there with the Department of Sustainable Resource Development to ensure that we have sustainable resources for future generations, which is always being talked about with regard to northern development? As well, what does the Northern Alberta Development Council do with regard to ensuring that there is a dialogue with the Sustainable Resource Development department?

When we talk about development and exploration, I think there needs to be more consultation with the Energy and Utilities Board. In fact, with the Lubicon and other cases, it looks like it's better to ask forgiveness than it is to ask for permission when we start with development. They wake up one day looking at the pipes and pieces ready to punch holes into this. The logs are already piled up, and they're waiting for, I guess, permission with regard to the utilities board granting them the access to already start drilling.

Are we talking about, in fact, monitoring and ensuring that we have fresh water for oil injection with regard to taking out oil, and are we talking about developing with environmental impact assessments?

Those are just a couple of specifics that I'd like to raise for question and consideration with this ministry.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity also to respond to the budget for the ministry. As opposition it's our responsibility and our privilege to raise questions around the business plan and the budget for Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. I guess I also will be very brief.

Thirty-five million dollars is a lot of money, a lot of Albertans' money, and it's not clear to me either where the money is going. Could you say a little about where the money is going?

Secondly, how we're measuring the impacts of this $35 million. I identified with you some of the goals that you've articulated in the budget. It's not clear how you can measure achieving those goals.

The third question has to do with what's happened in terms of the $6 million in the consultation. Where does that money go?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, did you want to respond?

Ms Calahasen: I would like to respond to, actually, Calgary-Mountain View first, and then I'll go to Edmonton-Decore.

10:30

First of all, I would like to talk about where the money is going. Let me first address the $6 million that we received in the beginning. What we did with that money was divide it amongst the various ministries, as I indicated to the question that was asked by the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. What we did – it was actually three parts to the MR that I took forward, and of those three parts the first part was to be able to look at capacity building within government. So the money was divided amongst the various ministries. There was Sustainable Resource Development, Alberta Justice, Community Development, myself, and of course Energy and Environment. So we all had areas of responsibility that would be able to deal with consultation issues. We all had a portion of that money – I think ours was $1.28 million – that we received as a result of the $6 million that I received. I'm probably known as the Six Million Dollar Woman, but I didn't get all the money.

We wanted to ensure that our partners – because it is a cross-ministry initiative. The cross-ministry initiative would mean that all my partners would have to be at the table to address the concerns from a consultation process. So we wanted to ensure that that would occur.

The second portion was actually to be able to look at the First Nations' dollars so that we can begin to look at how we get money to the First Nations, first of all, for traditional land-use studies so that they can begin to map their areas of where their burial sites have been, where their gathering places have been, where the possibility of the ceremonial sites would have been. So it would give us factual information as to where they have traditionally used the land. The First Nations got the money to be able to do those traditional land-use studies.

Also, the other part of it was to be able to get money to them so that they can begin to build their capacity as well. Not only is it government that has to build capacity; the First Nations must develop capacity in order for them to be able to be consulted. We wanted to make sure that they had those dollars so that they can begin to build their expertise. That's where the money went to. On this portion now we are looking at how we can look at First Nations' economic participation, and that $2.7 million would be used on that specific so that they can begin to look on the economic side.

In my speech I talked about where that money would be used, and if you will recall, I talked about a portion where they would be working on looking at developing First Nations' economic capacity to play a more meaningful role in Alberta's economy. It's a cross-ministry initiative as well, and it's with Alberta Economic Development and Alberta Human Resources and Employment. It includes building the skills, business planning, financial management, and knowledge and resources of First Nations to take advantage of existing and emerging opportunities. So it gives them the ability to be able to get those kind of skills so that they can begin to say how they can begin to take advantage of the Alberta advantage, as was identified.

So that's where that $2.75 million will go, an aboriginal consultation initiative of $1.45 million as well as $150,000 for salary provisions. So when we're talking about those dollars, that's where the money will be going. [interjection] No. The $6 million was before. This is now, the other money that I have been requesting for this year. I can write to you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: I'd just like to answer one of the questions from the Member for Edmonton-Decore. Your question was in regard to the dialogue between NADC and, for instance, SRD. To answer the question, I need to just kind of give you a little bit of a format on what NADC is and how they operate, and this is from the information gathering aspect.

The Northern Alberta Development Council has monthly meetings, and they do entertain presentations at those meetings from colleges, from municipalities, from individuals, from authorities, from community groups as to what they feel is important and what they feel should be advanced to the government or different parts of the government. At that time when we do have presentations, we do not only just have presentations in one area. We do circulate all over northern Alberta in different meetings, different months and try to get this information.

Then what we do is present it on to the ministries that it involves. So we take each isolated issue or else a collection of issues, and we do have a meeting with the minister. We do present it to the minister. Also, all of this information goes to our Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development minister. Just to let you know, what does happen is that those concerns of individuals are brought forward and are answered back. We make sure that we try to deal with those issues. If there are issues that need to be helped with, that is also another role for NADC.

I know that maybe I lightly just described, but I think I want to say that, yes, there is communication with different ministries. Yes, there is communication with Sustainable Resources. I can just use the example of Sustainable Resources. We have discussions with forestry. We have discussions with fisheries, trapping, leased land. Those issues all come forward, and we bring that forward to the minister.

Thank you.

Mr. Tougas: One last question and I think we're pretty much done. I believe that the minister in discussing the consultation process – I think you said it was going to be done "eventually." I think that was your term. Can you be a little bit more specific rather than eventually if it's been going on since 2000? Can you get a little bit closer or let us know: is it this year, next year? What are we looking at?

Ms Calahasen: It'll be this year. We are pretty close. As we do get to the point where we can share with you, we certainly will share with you that information. But we will go through our process and make sure we've finalized it and work with the First Nations and make sure my colleagues are following through on the process that we have established. So, yeah, it'll be this year, and I'm looking before the end of summer.

Mr. Bonko: Just for some clarification then, Mr. Chairman. I'm getting some mixed signals, perhaps, from the members across. I just would ask it again, and perhaps I can get the answer then. How much consultation is there between the two ministries with SRD to ensure that there is sustainable resource development?

Ms Calahasen: I think this is really important. I know that my colleague was kind of making signals, and I think you misread that. What we have been doing is working together extensively, as a matter of fact, on every issue relative to land and resource management. So Sustainable Resource Development is one of the partners not only in the cross-ministry initiative on consultation but also on the Powley decision and a number of other issues that we have to deal with as we go through. Anything to do with Sustainable Resource Development that may affect aboriginal affairs or northern development, we certainly are at the table, and he never forgets us.

So it is extensive in terms of that consultation that we do have. It has to be. That's the only way we work, and that's why we call it cross-ministry initiatives. Cross-ministry means that if there's something that happens in Sustainable Resource Development, we have to be able to deal with it in Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, and if it affects us, then we are at the table. So we have those cross-ministry initiatives to address those very issues so that we're not looking through stovepipes.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm still struggling to get any sense of where the budget goes and how you measure the results. Maybe you want to comment on that or maybe you want to send it over in written form, but there's no way we could assess the budget without more information.

Thank you.

Ms Calahasen: Let me first of all talk about some of the measures. I specifically did not go into measures in my speech, hoping that I would be able to address it as we go through. We have specific initiatives under the various goals, as you will see in the budget. You will see that there are certain goals. Then we have the initiatives, and then we have performance measures. We look at the percentage of targets achieved in the cross-ministry aboriginal policy initiative, and we have an annual report that we do give out identifying what we've been able to achieve and everything that we have been looking for.

In most cases what we're finding when we're dealing with aboriginal issues is that we have very soft measures. We found that across Canada it's very difficult to kind of get hard measures, to be able to do that, so what we've been doing is slowly with our partners trying to find ways for us to be able to even do greater measures. If you have any kind of suggestions, I'm always interested to see what other measures we can be looking at. If you have anything that you'd be able to offer to myself, I'll certainly look at those and see how we can incorporate those measures in the following budget.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chair: The question having been called, after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases $29,449,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the Committee of Supply now rise and report the Department of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, for the following department.

Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $29,449,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Second Reading

Bill 37
Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2005

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yes, indeed, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance I just want to move Bill 37, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2005, at second reading.

Mr. Speaker, this act includes amendments to the Fiscal Responsibility Act and other acts covering the heritage fund and the endowments funds. These amendments to the Fiscal Responsibility Act would do the following. They would lock in the funds in the debt retirement account so they could only be used for repaying the debt, they would increase the nonrenewable resource revenue that can be used for budget purposes from $4 billion to $4.75 billion, and finally, these amendments would clarify some of the more technical aspects of the legislation.

Now, with respect to the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act and other endowment fund acts the amendments in this bill would clarify the transfer of money into those particular funds.

A few comments with respect to the debt retirement account, Mr. Speaker, if you will. Last year our government set aside sufficient funds in the debt retirement account to repay the remaining accumulated debt as it matures. Alberta, of course, has become debt free. Three point five billion dollars in the debt retirement account will be locked in and will only be used and can only be used to pay off maturing debt as it comes due. Finally, it will continue to be against the law to run deficits in this province.

With respect to nonrenewable resource revenue limits there is an amendment that will increase the nonrenewable resource revenue that can be used for budget purposes from $4 billion to $4.75 billion, and over the last five years average resource revenue has exceeded $8 billion, it should be noted. The outlook is for revenue to stay above the $4.7 billion level in the medium term, so we feel quite comfortable with the amendment in that respect.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans told us that with accumulated debt eliminated and if resources are available, the government should address key priority areas much more aggressively. This amendment will in fact allow our government to do that.

Other, more technical amendments are being made to the Fiscal Responsibility Act including the following. The contingency allowance economic cushion will specifically be addressed, and the calculation of the contingency allowance economic cushion will be simplified in the process. Also, the contingency allowance will continue to be set at a minimum of 1 per cent of budgeted revenue for fiscal policy purposes. Finally, the previous requirement to set aside the net amount of the retained income of funds and agencies and capital cash requirements as part of the economic cushion will now be treated as an adjustment within the sustainability fund.

Just in wrap-up here, amendments are also required to clarify wording around a withdrawal from the sustainability fund for a settlement involving a First Nation. Mr. Speaker, this is basically a housekeeping amendment that corrects omissions from the amendments that were made last year.

Finally, with respect to heritage and endowment funds amendments to the heritage fund and the endowment fund acts will clarify the transferring of money into these funds from the general revenue fund. As funds become available, the amendments will allow the transfer of the following to occur: $500 million to the medical research endowment fund, $500 million to the science and engineering research endowment fund, $3 billion into the heritage fund for the advanced education endowment, and, of course, $1 billion into the scholarship fund.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would urge everyone's review, consideration, and support of Bill 37, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2005.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to adjourn debate on Bill 37.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been another excellent day in the Alberta Legislature, and on that note I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:49 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 19, 2005

1:30 p.m.

Date: 05/04/19

[The Speaker in the chair]

head:

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We confidently ask for strength and encouragement in our service to others. We ask for wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and future of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a 27-member delegation from the city of Grimma, Germany, led by Bürgermeister Berger, the mayor of Grimma. His Worship is accompanied by two aldermen; the consul general of Germany based in Vancouver, Mr. Michael Schwandt; and the honorary consul of Germany based right here in Edmonton, a man who needs very little introduction to us here, Mr. Fritz Koenig. Also accompanying him are Mr. Joerg Diecke, alderman, head of the partnership committee. In the delegation are business leaders, academics, and municipal leaders.

The mayor and his delegation are visiting Leduc this week and earlier today signed a joint partnership declaration between Grimma and Leduc, marking the first official relationship in North America for Grimma. This relationship builds on the 2002 twinning agreement between Alberta and the province of Saxony, where Grimma is located, which has already led to initiatives in the fields of education, training, science, and technology. Our Speaker visited Grimma, toured the city, and met the mayor. Grimma was in the spotlight during the floods of the summer of 2002, when the people of Alberta helped raise emergency disaster relief funds. These were matched by Alberta's Wild Rose Foundation.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that our honoured guests please rise in your gallery and in other galleries to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head:

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly guests that are seated in your gallery: from Capital City Savings & Credit Union, Mr. Dennis Horrigan, vice-president, direct banking; Mr. Doug Forsyth, vice-president, community branches; Ms Gail Stepanik-Keber, vice-president, marketing; Mr. Tim Downey, president of Priority Printing Ltd.; from Access Media Group Dr. Ron Keast, president and CEO; Mr. Ross Mayot, vice-president, administration and business affairs; and Mr. Gordon Sheppard, producer, creative services.

Capital City Savings & Credit Union Ltd., Priority Printing, Access, and Canadian Learning Television are community sponsors of the School at the Legislature program. This program gives grade 6 teachers from all over our province an opportunity to relocate their classrooms to the Alberta Legislature for an entire week. In the fiscal year 2003-2004 over 714 students from 29 classes attended the School at the Legislature program. This program is supported by 29 teachers and 310 volunteers. We're very grateful for the support we receive from our community partners.

I would ask that our guests now rise and receive the very warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly two grade 10 students who are participating in the Westlock Rotary Club youth exchange program, which is sponsored, of course, by the Westlock Rotary Club. With us today are Paula Mustonen, who is visiting Alberta from Finland, and Dawnia Myshak, who will be travelling to Switzerland in July. Accompanying them is an old friend of mine, actually, Mr. Les Dunford, a Rotarian who is also the editor of the Town and Country, which appears in several newspapers in your constituency, Mr. Speaker. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As you know, in the city of Fort McMurray our city slogan is We Have the Energy. But it's not just about oil energy; it's also about youthful energy. Today it's my pleasure through you and to members of the Assembly to introduce students, teachers, and staff from Father Beauregard school. Of course, this is a Catholic school in Fort McMurray and quite appropriate on this day, when a new Pope was announced to the world. They're seated in the members' gallery. I'd like to welcome the 45 grade 6 students, vice-principal Micheal Chaisson, teacher Mrs. Williams, and teaching assistant Mrs. Arbter. I'd like to invite the parents, teachers, students, everyone to please rise and show this Assembly we truly do have the energy in Fort McMurray.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent of mine from Brazeau county. Cecil Andersen is a farmer and rancher, and his wife, Colleen, serves on the David Thompson health authority board. Cecil and I had lunch today, and we discussed the CAIS program, the interim Métis harvesting agreement, sour gas exploration, and other easy issues such as these. I'd ask my guests to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly members of Panties Productions, who are taking their original production of Burlesque to the Alberta Scene in Ottawa. Burlesque is the story of the British comedienne Lydia Thompson and the introduction of the all-female extravaganza to America, which is particularly appropriate today, being the anniversary of the legislation giving women the vote in Alberta. They are sitting in the members' gallery. The writers and performers of Burlesque, by the way, were nominated for two Sterling awards this year as well as being the hit of last year's Fringe, so I would ask Jocelyn Ahlf, Belinda Cornish, and Celina Stachow to please rise and the artistic team and crew, Jesse Gervais and Tomas Brabec, also to join them. If you would all please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

I have a second introduction for you today, Mr. Speaker, another very special guest, and that is Mark Meer. Mark is best known to Edmonton audiences as Susanna. Her show, Oh Susanna, has become an institution in Old Strathcona's Varscona theatre. Hosted by Mark as Susanna Patchouli, this Euro-chick variety show features interviews, municipal gossip, local musicians and actors, plays by children, grilled cheese sandwiches, and all kinds of fun. I would ask Mark to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you two combined groups from another fine school in my constituency of Edmonton-McClung. This time it's Ormsby elementary school. Today we have 51 visitors on their tour of the Legislature. My grade 6 friends are accompanied by their teachers, Mrs. Linda Vanjoff and Mrs. Alana Eaton, teacher assistant Miss Megan Grainger, teacher assistant Miss Rushika Fernando, teacher assistant Miss Carole Desranleau, and two parents, Mrs. Brenda Johansen and Mr. Barry Olsen. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't believe our guests are in the gallery as yet, but we will recognize them when they enter soon. I wish to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 15 members of the Red Hat Society. Their group leader is Ms Isabel Maltby. They're the first chapter of the Red Hat Society in Fort Saskatchewan, which is an international society promoting fun amongst all 50-plus aged female members. This international society is now present in 20 different countries and 49,000 different chapters. This local chapter calls themselves the Crimson Chicks. If they are in the gallery, I'd ask them to rise, and if not, we will recognize them when they enter the gallery a little later.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, because of the historic nature of today, I'm going to give my historic comment now. On April 19, 1916, an act to provide for equal suffrage received royal assent in Alberta. The bill gave women absolute equality with and the same rights and privileges as men. That was for the first time in Alberta. It was also for the first time in what was then known as the Commonwealth. Women were allowed to vote in provincial elections and hold provincial office.

Since June 17, 1917, when the first two women, Roberta MacAdams and Louise McKinney, were elected as Members of this Legislative Assembly, 56 women have served as Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, including the 13 currently sitting as members today.

The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly two guests in the members' gallery who are here in Edmonton for a trade show and workshop. They operate Hang-Ups, a photo and art framing business in Lethbridge and Carmangay. Would Nancy Allen and Sean McFarland, the son of the Member for Little Bow, please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Municipal Infrastructure Program

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This provincial government has had a long history of fighting with the federal government over the notion of receiving money with strings attached, yet the same government then turns around and treats municipal governments in Alberta with the same Big Brother mentality. It is the height of Tory hypocrisy. My questions are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Given that this government has announced that municipalities will have to vet spending plans for infrastructure funding through the Minister of Municipal Affairs, is it the intention of this government to micromanage infrastructure plans made by elected municipal governments?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Quite the opposite. At the announcements that were made on Thursday, with the minister of infrastructure and myself in attendance, we made it abundantly clear that the program is to be as flexible as it possibly can be, that the priorities are to be established by locally elected councils, but that we wanted to have an opportunity to ensure that the priorities of the program were directed towards basic infrastructure and that the basic infrastructure was taken care of before moving into issues such as recreational facilities. We're trying to ensure that someone doesn't build a rec centre and then come back a year later and advise us that their sewer system needs upgrading.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given that the infrastructure money provided for municipalities only addresses the infrastructure debt created by years of downloading provincial responsibilities onto our cities and towns, does this government have any plan to provide long-term, sustainable funding for Alberta's municipalities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three billion dollars is a lot of money in anyone's books. Municipalities appreciate the fact that this is one-time funding, but we've also indicated that we hear their concerns with respect to long-term, sustainable funding. This is an opportunity for us to engage in that discussion and over the next five years, hopefully, come up with a resolution to long-term funding. In the meantime $600 million a year for five years is a very significant portion of that discussion that needs to take place.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: does this government have any plans to increase the autonomy of Alberta's municipal governments, reflecting the fact that they are themselves democratically elected government bodies?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I indicated on Thursday, when I was asked the same question in Calgary, that I'm prepared to have that discussion. I'm not prepared to give the answer at this point, but I'm certainly prepared to enter into that discussion. I think it deserves some discussion.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Social Assistance Rates

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government gave $45 million to horse racing in the budget but not one extra dime to poor families needing social assistance. Poor families have seen inflation erode their meagre rate by almost 40 per cent since 1993, when this government cut the rates by 20 per cent. All religions call for assistance for the poor, and many cannot work. This government only grudgingly respects that. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. With surpluses mounting, can this government pause to think of those in need and give an increase to those on social assistance like they gave to the ponies?*

Mr. Cardinal: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a reasonable question. Of course, I'm reviewing that whole situation of the 11,000 caseload we have where people are not expected to work. We are reviewing the caseload for the core benefits and also the shelter benefits. Since 1993, of course, there have been a lot of positive changes in relation to the welfare reforms. In fact, people have received health care benefits since then, and we normally provided for other needs such as daycare, work clothes, children's school expenses, utility hookups.

But going back to 1993 – and the member mentioned 1993 specifically, Mr. Speaker – that's when this government announced the welfare reforms. That's when we had a caseload of 97,000, and 80 per cent of the people using the welfare system were single people and couples without children. Our strategy was to move these people back into the workforce, and the money saved would be spent in the high-needs areas, including children's services and persons with developmental disabilities. Both of those have ministries now.

Mr. Backs: Time for an increase.

A question to the same minister: will this government encourage the needy to work by increasing the welfare personal income exemption from $115 a month?

Mr. Cardinal: Of course, Mr. Speaker, we are always continuing to monitor the situation very closely. Any adjustments we can make to assist those people that cannot work of course our government will make. But anyone that's able to work and is on assistance will always also be given support to find jobs and stay on the jobs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A further question to the same minister: can this government tie our social assistance payments to something like its own market-basket measure instead of having our needy wait year on year, cap in hand, hoping for a pittance?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, of course, we always continue to review the benefits, especially for those people in the high-needs areas, the 11,000 cases that are not expected to work. We review them very closely, and no doubt within the next three or four months we will be looking at some changes.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

1:50 Oil Well Drilling on Crown Land

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recent resource development on public land near Sawn Lake, Alberta, without proper approvals confirms what many Albertans already know, that the oil and gas industry calls the shots on resource extraction in Alberta. Neither the Minister of Environment nor the Minister of Energy, charged with regulating this industry, has indicated that anything unusual has occurred. Therefore, my first question is to the Premier. Do oil and gas companies require any prior government approval before trees are cleared, water reservoirs affected, and ecosystems irrevocably altered?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. Certainly, they just can't go in holus-bolus and start to raze the forests and drill. There are lots of regulatory processes to go through.

Turning to another issue, the preamble by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, the $45 million to . . . [interjections]

Dr. Swann: Supplementary to the Premier: given that illegal oil and gas development is occurring presently near Sawn Lake in violation of the public trust, will the Premier please explain to Albertans why this is allowed to happen?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the situation, as I understand it, is under review. It's being investigated. I'll have the hon. Minister of Environment respond.

Mr. Boutillier: I would offer to the hon. member that if he is aware of any illegal activity that is in violation of Alberta law, Alberta regulation, I'd ask him and encourage him to please provide me with that. We will take swift action, immediate action, continuing to protect the environment that Albertans truly do value here in this province.

Dr. Swann: I'll be tabling more pictures today, Mr. Speaker, on that case.

Again to the Premier: will the Premier take steps to restore public confidence in our regulatory bodies by stopping development and fining the offending companies?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know the situation well enough to stop the project, but I will assure the hon. member that all rules and regulations must be met relative to drilling activities and the removal of trees.

Of course, the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development is working on a framework agreement relative to the development of traditional hunting grounds. Perhaps she would wish to respond.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Long-term Care Facilities

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Serious problems faced by vulnerable elderly and disabled residents in this province's long-term care facilities have been well documented over many years. These include inadequate staffing ratios, the need for better training of caregivers, lack of government inspections, and an overreliance on private, for-profit providers. Yet these long-standing problems have largely been swept under the rug while the government off-loads more charges onto residents in these facilities. My question is to the Premier. How can the Premier claim that seniors are well taken care of in long-term care facilities when they can go three or even four years without a government inspection?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, if that is indeed the case, I would ask the hon. member to provide evidence of that kind of neglect to the appropriate ministers. As I understand it, yesterday the Friends of Medicare held a news conference sponsored by the New Democrats. That news conference was to call for higher standards and more staff in long-term care facilities. Lynda Jonson, the spokesperson for the petition, says that she has witnessed staff and quality deficiencies in the system first-hand. Now, both ministers involved, the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports and the Minister of Health and Wellness, have offered to meet with affected parties to determine whether, in fact, this is taking place.

But I can tell the Assembly that improving long-term care is important to this government. We have been making progress. For example, we directed regional health authorities to raise the average hours of care each resident receives. This means more hands-on care every day for residents. But more importantly – and I think that this is the point that needs to be made – no allegation of abuse in publicly funded care facilities is ignored. None. As a matter of fact, we have put in place the Protection for Persons in Care Act, requiring mandatory reporting of abuse in care facilities. Every report is investigated. If they have evidence of abuse in long-term care centres, then report it according to the law.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, if long-term care facilities are indeed a priority for this government, why does the Premier not know how often they are inspected by government inspectors?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again, according to the law, will the New Democrats obey the law – obey the law – and report?

An Hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Klein: The answer to the question . . . [interjections] Mr. Speaker, I don't need a lot of chatter from the other side. I don't need a lot of chatter from the Liberals or the New Democrats.

Mr. Speaker, if there are allegations, according to the law, will those allegations be reported to the appropriate ministers?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, will the Premier tell the Assembly, once he has familiarized himself with the inspection regulations for our long-term care facilities, what action he will take to beef up inspections at those long-term care centres and assisted-living facilities? That's the question, Mr. Premier.

Mr. Klein: To answer the question, Mr. Speaker, I really don't know, but I will have the appropriate minister or ministers respond.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Métis Hunting Rights

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For several weeks reports have been circulating that numbers of bighorn sheep have been killed by Métis hunters just outside our national parks ostensibly for subsistence reasons under the protection of the interim Métis harvesting agreements. These agreements allow Métis to hunt, trap, or fish for subsistence reasons and allow “the occasional sharing of wildlife or fish between Members,” but they do not address the issue of taking animals for other than their meat or the sale of animal parts, which is restricted under our Wildlife Act and regulations. My first question is for the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Given the fact that the bighorn sheep is the official mammal of Alberta and is a species at risk throughout much of its range and that trophy heads are extremely valuable, can the minister advise what mechanisms are in place to track the number of bighorn sheep that are being killed and to ensure the preservation of the gene pool in this treasured symbol of Alberta?

Mr. Coumts: Mr. Speaker, our role in Sustainable Resource Development is definitely to manage the resource, and we do that by constant monitoring and enforcement of the resource. We have been monitoring aboriginal harvesting activities since the 1930s, and we have several systems in place that assist us in doing that.

I can report to the hon. member and to this House that all male bighorn sheep must be registered by all hunters, including aboriginals. During the last hunt and up to the end of March there were 145 bighorn sheep taken in the province, and I can report that of those seven were reported taken by Métis hunters.

Dr. Brown: My supplemental, Mr. Speaker, is to the hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. What sort of lists or tracking mechanisms exist to enable peace officers to know who is a bona fide Métis recognized by the Métis Nation of Alberta or a Métis settlement member?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, there are a number of ways that this is going to be done. Under the agreement we have, the Métis Nation of Alberta as well as the Métis Settlements Council will use their best efforts to advise members that when a member is subject to an investigation by Alberta officials of a potential harvesting offence, the member will identify himself or herself as Métis. When they have done that, Alberta will examine that the harvesting has been done in accordance with this interim agreement, and if that Métis harvesting has been done in accordance with this interim agreement and applicable legislation and regulations, Alberta will take no further action. However, should that not happen, then the applicable legislation and regulations will occur.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to talk about what kind of format will follow. There will be 45 days of . . .

The Speaker: Hon. minister, the rules prohibit legal interpretations.
2:00

Dr. Brown: My second supplemental, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Will the minister ensure that any new agreement with the Métis includes a provision specifically forbidding the sale of any animal parts taken under the Métis harvesting agreement?

Mr. Coumts: Mr. Speaker, under the provincial Wildlife Act we can prosecute anyone who tries to sell wildlife. It is illegal to sell wildlife and its parts regardless of who you might be. Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development makes sure that it takes the lead in the continued negotiations with the Métis, and conservation is the key part of those particular discussions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

School Closures

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Accountable, responsible government is a precious commodity, one that seems to be scarce in Alberta. This government is eager to take credit for the oil and gas found in the ground but continues to avoid responsibility for public school closures. Closures are happening as a result of the policy guidelines and funding decisions of this government. My question to the Minister of Education: does the minister take no responsibility for the looming closure of four valued schools in Edmonton?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, funding for education in this province just increased by 7.1 per cent. A year ago today it increased by over 6 per cent. Two years ago today it increased by over 5 per cent, and I expect that it will increase by similar amounts in the years to come because we have an outstanding education system, and we are investing wisely in it.

With respect to the school closure issue, I have addressed that issue in this House countless times, and I'm going to address it yet again. If you carefully read through the regulations and the School Act, you will see that school closures and rumours to that effect are entirely at the whim of the local school board. You have former school board members in your caucus and in the NDP caucus. Why don't you talk to them about how the school closure process works? In that way, you'll find out.

Mr. Flaherty: To the same minister: can the minister update the Assembly as to whether proper documentation was provided to parents involved in the school closure meetings, or is the minister not interested in enforcing his own regulation?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, there are two questions there. Take either one.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the issue that I think the gentleman is referring to has to do with probably the cluster studies done by the Edmonton public school board. Now, as the member would I hope know, there is a set procedure and there is a set standard of information and timelines and time frames and so on that has to be adhered to and followed. To the best of my knowledge any time a school board undertakes a school closure process – it can take up to a year – they follow those particular guidelines. If the member has some indication that certain documents that ought to have been provided were not provided, then he should talk to the school board in question about that issue.

Mr. Flaherty: Parents need help.

A supplemental: what resources is the minister prepared to provide so that principals can work effectively with parents, who need to understand the long-range plan for renewing and building schools? What help will he give them?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, the cluster study included ample opportunities so far, perhaps more to come, for parents to have input. I assume that as part of their process there was a healthy exchange of information. If parents want more information, all they have to do is contact the school board or their trustees or the school superintendent's office, and they'll get that information. I don't know what information was provided by whom on what date for what purpose. It's all clearly spelled out, and each school board is expected to follow that process. I would encourage the member to become more familiar with it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mount Royal College

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the Minister of Advanced Education. People across the province, including my Calgary constituents, are concerned about access to postsecondary studies. Many are calling for Mount Royal College in Calgary to become a university in order to ensure that Calgarians have access to postsecondary education. In fact, this week there has been a letter-writing/petition campaign in the city of Calgary further calling for this to happen. My questions, as I said before, are to the Minister of Advanced Education. Can the minister advise us whether Mount Royal College has met all the requirements to become a university?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There isn't a set outline of criteria to become a university. It's not something that happens every day. There's no set procedure or process. What I can advise the hon. member is that we do have under the Post-secondary Learning Act the Campus Alberta Quality Council and that institutions that wish to offer baccalaureate degrees can apply to the Alberta quality council for approval of their degree program. The Alberta quality council will look at the institution to see whether it's capable of delivering the program and look at the program to see whether it qualifies for a baccalaureate degree and in that way ensure quality in the process.

We have committed, Mr. Speaker, to looking at the request from Mount Royal in the context of a process, an overall review of the postsecondary system, to determine whether moving Mount Royal from a college to a university is the appropriate way to go: what value it adds to the system, what value it adds to students in Calgary and southern Alberta and all of Alberta, what problems it creates and how we deal with those issues.

Mrs. Ady: Mr. Speaker, my second question is to the same minister. Has the minister discussed this approach with the officials at Mount Royal College, and are there other things that they could be doing in order to promote their request?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, I have had a number of discussions with both the chairman of the board of Mount Royal and with the president of Mount Royal College. We have had discussions about their time frames, what would be helpful to them, what process they want to proceed with, and they understand the process that we're proceeding with, which will be a review of the system in the context of the overall system across Alberta. There are a number of decisions, not all of the same magnitude of the Mount Royal college/university issue, a number of issues that need to be decided in the context of that system review, and we will try and complete that review by the end of October this year.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Youth Residential Drug Treatment

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The new money for youth drug treatment centres in Alberta is important for the care of children. The opposition agrees with the government that new spaces are needed. Our only concern is with the funding disparity for new spaces. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: why is the facility in Calgary being appropriately tendered while the ministry is funding a new facility here in Edmonton without tendering?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I wasn't aware that there was a difference in how the facilities were being acquired, but I will say that with the approval of Bill 202 we are looking at how we treat the youth. We're looking particularly at the emphasis in this legislation relative to detox and assessment, and we will be assessing our plans for how we advance what was in the budget, which was sufficient money to add some 34 staff in two locations to provide voluntary supports for youth. This new capacity to look at mandatory assessments will mean that I've instructed our deputy to take a full review of what our plans are and to see how we make sure that we have healthy protocols in place for these affected children.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. To the same minister: has the minister looked into the possibility of using existing programs in the Edmonton area rather than starting up a new program?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we've had an incredible example of the constraints that parents find themselves in when they have children with crystal meth addictions, for example, and they are looking to us to find new ways to treat their children and to respond to the needs of the children. So although there may be some capacity in existing facilities – and I won't suggest that they will not be used – the answer I've just given and will continue to give is that currently we are reassessing what our options are, taking a look at how we best provide for those children. In that case, the facility in Edmonton may be appropriate, but we also have to make sure that certain criteria are in place to make sure that it's secure.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. To the same minister: how are the 12 treatment beds being allocated in the seven other health regions outside Calgary and Edmonton?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, we will be developing a plan around that. Of course, those are voluntary beds. Again, when we have an opportunity for a review of what this new legislation can mean in terms of providing a comprehensive, well-structured plan, well-trained staff in place with the youth, when we take a look at what this new legislative piece will do, we'll be better able to answer how we will address other bed needs throughout the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Federal Gas Tax Agreement

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the province of British Columbia and the federal government signed an agreement to share federal gas taxes with their municipalities. My question to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation is this. Why hasn't Alberta signed a similar agreement?

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have been negotiating with the federal government and doing a very good job at negotiating with the federal government. I think what has happened in the past couple of weeks has added a sense of urgency to this. With the potential for an upcoming election in the federal government I think there certainly is a sense of urgency to get this signed. Indeed, I have been in communication with Ottawa, and we hope to have this signed within the next two weeks. We will be the second province in Canada to have this signed and, as I say, hopefully within two weeks.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is good news.

My supplemental to the same minister is: how much will Alberta municipalities get once that agreement is signed?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, the nice thing about this is that it is very sustainable funding. It's over five years and very sustainable funding. It starts off at $40 million for the first two years, goes up to $80 million, and then $159 million for the fourth and fifth years. So the stability, the sustainability, certainly is there. There have been some musings that it will go on beyond five years, but we really haven't seen anything final to that.

It is good news. Even though it's not as much money as we gave the municipalities, it certainly still is good news.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question, also to the same minister: how will those funds be distributed to our municipalities?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, one of the big things that we want and one of the things we do in this government is that we ensure that the bureaucracy is kept to a minimum, so we're going to be distributing it in exactly the same way as we've done our municipal infrastructure program. Certainly, there will be a ceiling for those small communities, and everything else will be delivered on a per capita type of arrangement. This has been an arrangement that has been accepted by the AAMD and C and the AUMA. Certainly, we want to ensure that as much money as possible goes out to the municipalities and is not used up in bureaucracy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Parks and Protected Areas

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The federal government has renewed its commitment to repairing decaying infrastructure in Alberta's national parks, which account for 8 per cent of our provincial land use. The provincial government, to its credit, is also starting to repair parks and protected areas, which together make up 4 per cent of Alberta's heritage land. A large portion of this year's Community Development parks and protected areas infrastructure budget will again be spent on restoring Canmore's world-renowned Nordic Centre. My questions are all to the Minister of Community Development. My first question: approximately what portion of the remaining money will be spent on reopening closed conservation offices and rehiring officers? Just ballpark.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, this would be a more appropriate question to be asking in Committee of Supply. The hon. member knows or ought to know that that is scheduled for the evening of the 11th of May, day 24 of Committee of Supply. I can share with him the broad numbers that are contained in the budget, which he has a copy of, and I would refer him to page 82 of that budget, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the hon. Minister of Community Development: approximately what percentage of parks and protected areas will have their trails, buildings, and downed border fences restored?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, in approaching the issue of how to restore our parks to the kind of condition that they ought to be in, we've got to do it on a priority basis. It won't be done on the basis of a percentage of how many we'll be able to get done. There are some areas that remain in very, very good condition, that don't require any capital upgrades.

The long and the short of it, Mr. Speaker, is that I appreciate the hon. member bringing attention to the fact that we are making this effort. As an example, sir, under Capital Investment in program 5 on page 82 of the budget we are moving our gross expenditure to $41.1 million. That is up from approximately $9.36 million. So clearly a large investment, a significant increase, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Again to the hon. Minister of Community Development: will this government commit to a freeze on public land sales while setting aside more land for parks and protected areas?

Mr. Mar: Sir, that is not within the purview of the Minister of Community Development.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Abortion Services

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Women in northern Alberta are understandably concerned by Capital health's decision to no longer provide abortion services at the Royal Alexandra hospital effective May 13. This essential service should be provided in a public facility, and access should not depend on a sole, private provider. Waits for abortions are already two to three weeks, and longer waits simply are unacceptable. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What action will the government take to keep the Royal Alex clinic open so that women in Edmonton and northern Alberta requiring this time-sensitive procedure are not forced to endure even longer waits?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, Capital health, as they are delegated to do, made the decision to assign to a private clinic the responsibility for abortions for a very good reason. They wanted to accommodate in vitro fertilization at the Royal Alex and have made accommodation to do so. It is their expectation that the staff at the private clinic will be increased to accommodate the increased volume of traffic. In speaking with the chief executive officer of the Capital health authority this morning, I'm understanding that once the new facility is constructed at the Royal Alex hospital, once again medically necessary abortions will be performed in this publicly funded hospital.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister again: what steps will the government take to work with Capital health on a longer term plan to make abortion services available in a public facility rather than having women depend on an uncertain future of a single, private clinic?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, up until this point the Royal Alex has been providing the service. The clinic has got an excellent track record for providing service, has been accessible to women, and has been doing an exceptional job of counselling, so in fact the women in northern Alberta will not see a reduction in service or in service quality. I've already stated that the opportunity for public facilities to be used in future is part of their long-term plan. Currently they are making this kind of accommodation so that another needed service in northern Alberta for women, that women are asking for and that is important because this in vitro fertilization is an extremely important benefit of new technology – they want to accommodate it as well, and this is the best place for it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A further question to the minister: what steps will the government take to ensure that women in northern communities like Grande Prairie and Fort McMurray are able to access abortion services closer to home, putting a stop to the extra expense and delays involved with making a long trip to Edmonton?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's in fact an excellent question. The regional health authorities, especially in outlying areas, have challenges relative to the volumes of traffic that are there, and we've had an excellent presentation from Fort McMurray, from Wood Buffalo relative to their needs. We have been working with staff through Alberta Health and Wellness, with even the Capital health region to look at whether there are any linkages we can make with Northern Lights. For these outlying districts to provide the same level of service might not be practical, but we are working with them to ensure that as much as possible we provide the medically necessary services, and hopefully in the future we'll be able to abbreviate some of the wait and the inconvenience for people in outlying regions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

2:20 Benefits of SuperNet for Rural Alberta

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Access to the SuperNet will be a great benefit to rural Alberta in multiple applications. Telehealth used in conjunction with the SuperNet will allow for echocardiograms, MRIs, or dermatology images and pictures to be sent across the province to a number of leading physicians to provide the most accurate diagnosis without having a patient drive, as mentioned, hundreds and even thousands of kilometres to see their physician face to face. The technology is ready to help assist rural Albertans obtain the best the health system has to offer. We need the information infrastructure to be in place. My first question is to the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. What steps is the minister taking to ensure that SuperNet stays on track and doesn't fall further behind, preventing remote rural Alberta from having access to health services and health professions urbans living . . .

The Speaker: I think we got the gist of the question.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is certainly right. The SuperNet will be of great benefit to rural Alberta. It's good to know the construction of the SuperNet is at a point where the challenges of building 12,000 kilometres of broadband technology are behind us. In fact, 36 Alberta communities were connected to the SuperNet just last week, bringing the total to 201. That's exactly half of the 402 communities to be connected. But halfway isn't good enough. Bell and Axia are well aware that I intend to continue holding their feet to the fire with penalty provisions for construction delays that include a $100 million performance bond. As such, there's no reason to believe our deadlines won't be met for rural Alberta. The SuperNet will truly be part of our centennial celebrations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. When SuperNet is completed and all rural communities have high-speed telehealth transfer capabilities, will mobile MRI units be introduced to provide approximately 300,000 rural Albertans access to leading-edge diagnostic services?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's certainly entirely a possibility. When I first received the opportunity to serve in this ministry, there were health authorities, health board chairmen that were telling me they were working in that direction. Alberta Health and Wellness is working with the radiologists and with the authorities to determine how best to provide standards of support for introduction of either mobile MRIs or some other capacity for regions to be sure to access the service. Currently if these tests are needed, doctors define the priority, and nobody is denied access to an MRI.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister of health also please tell us what other high-tech programs and services her ministry is looking into to help deliver high-quality health care to rural Albertans?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, Alberta telehealth provides service in 260 sites. Thirty clinical areas, including diagnosing lung cancer, monitoring heart and dialysis patients, and responding instantly to emergencies, are available. We have the leading record in Canada for our electronic record. We have 9,000 linked to the electronic record, and we are already seeing an impact in the reduction of duplication of tests. We know that our system is safer, and I think that we've advanced more in rural Alberta than they have in any part of Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Insurance Rates for Small- and Medium-sized Businesses

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Small- and medium-sized Alberta businesses are being plagued by the escalating costs of all types of insurance: automobile, commercial, life, and disability. The government's auto insurance reforms, while chaotic in nature, have at least provided some minimal relief. However, they apply only to privately owned and operated vehicles and do nothing to address the concerns of Alberta's small-business owners. My question is for the Minister of Finance. Why did this government make the choice to do nothing to protect small- and medium-sized businesses from skyrocketing auto insurance premiums?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, insurance is sold in this province under the private sector. When we looked at automobile insurance reform, we looked at the portion of automobile insurance that is compulsory in nature, thus saying that you cannot operate a vehicle in this province if you do not carry public liability and property damage. So it was very appropriate that the government ensure that insurance that we require people to carry be available to them at a reasonable rate, and that's, indeed, what automobile insurance reforms have done.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will the government undertake to review the property and casualty insurance issues affecting small- and medium-sized enterprises?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have a concern, but surely the hon. member is not saying – well, maybe he is – that we should regulate all private companies and their operations. Should we not allow car dealerships to sell cars at a competitive rate? Should we not allow insurance companies to sell insurance at a competitive rate? It is a competitive business, and it is a business. We encourage people to shop around and make sure that they are getting the most competitive price for that. If I were to review property insurance, what would the review accomplish? That's my question. Perhaps the hon. member will enlighten me on where he's going with this in his next question.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given outrageously high insurance premiums and reported record profits, will this government eliminate the hidden insurance premium taxes collected on all insurance premiums – all insurance premiums – paid by small businesses?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, there's a question I can answer, Mr. Speaker. Can I have the assurance that if we remove the 3 per cent tax on insurance, which partly covers the cost of regulating that industry in this province, the actual consumers will receive that benefit rather than the companies themselves?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Recreational Sport Fishing

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, a very wise man, who just happens to be my husband, always says that if you take your son hunting, you will never have to hunt for him; if you take your son fishing, you'll never have to fish for him. Thanks to this philosophy my family spent many happy camping weekends together, fishing the beautiful lakes and rivers of this great province. But something has changed. Many of my constituents are now going to B.C. and Saskatchewan to fish because the opportunities are much better there. My questions are for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What are we doing to support the fish populations in our lakes and rivers, and why are so many people leaving to fish in B.C. and Saskatchewan?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's lakes and rivers face the third highest angling pressures in Canada. We do have a tremendous sports fishery with about 300,000 fishermen. One-third of them don't pay for any fishing licences at all; they're either youngsters or seniors. We have a good fishery considering the fact that we only have 1,100 fish-bearing waters in the province as compared to 90,000 in Saskatchewan and many more deep lakes in British Columbia. Through our programs of conservation we really do have good success with ensuring conservation. I know that the hon. member is concerned about walleye fisheries in the province, and we've loosened up walleye regulations on 14 lakes in our province over the past two years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister: is fish stocking part of the solution?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, definitely fish stocking is a great part of our solution. We have a significant stocking program here in Alberta. There are about 300 waters that we provide fish stocking for, and 40 per cent of our recreational fishing comes from stocked waters. There are 3.5 million trout stocked in our province, and that's brown trout, rainbow trout, and brook trout. Natural populations, of course, are the most effective, but when trying to provide recreational fishing, we need to definitely have a stocking program.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the same minister: given that revenue from fishing and hunting licences goes to the Alberta Conservation Association, does any of this money go to stocking fish in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Yes, indeed, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Conservation Association provides a tremendous amount of support to our provincial stocking program, and a breakdown of the revenue from fish and wildlife licences: 27 per cent goes to general revenue, 1 per cent goes to the Professional Outfitters Society, 22 per cent pays for computer systems for vendors, and almost 50 per cent goes to the association for fish and wildlife conservation. So a recent report from the ACA also shows that enhanced stocking involved 67 water bodies in Alberta and more than 118,000 trout in addition to many other fish programs in the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Edmonton Remand Centre

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The protection of basic human rights in Alberta applies to all people. In fact, the human rights act states quite clearly that "recognition of the inherent dignity and the equal and inalienable rights of all persons is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace," quite powerful words that apply to all, including those housed in remand centres. My question is to the Solicitor General. Last week the hon. minister stated in regard to the Remand Centre that "these are corrections facilities for criminals." Can the minister explain if the people housed in the Remand Centre are included as all guilty of an offence, or does section 11(d) of the Charter of Rights of Freedoms apply?

The Speaker: Okay. For about the sixth time now in the last number of days I'm going to say that the question period is not the place for legal interpretation.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The question the hon. member raised is that the Edmonton Remand Centre does house individuals that have been through court or are making their way through the court process. They're remanded into custody by a judge until their court case is before the courts. So, clearly, they have their rights with them. They have the ability to meet with a lawyer, discuss their cases with a lawyer, but they're there in a remand situation not as an offender.

Mr. Agnihotri: My first supplemental is to the Minister of Community Development. Given the well-documented Third World conditions at the Remand Centre, that constitutes a violation of human rights, will the minister investigate these abuses of human rights that are occurring at the Edmonton Remand Centre? It is the responsibility of the government to protect all Albertans.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, it is not known to me what conditions are like in the Third World, and to try and compare them to the Remand Centre is, I think, a very, very difficult thing to do.

What I can say, however, is that the Human Rights Commission operates at arm's length from government. The government does not direct the Human Rights Commission in any way, shape, or form. It serves as a quasi-judicial function and as an administrative body determines its mandate and its process for investigating complaints that are filed against it or to it by, for example, in the case suggested by the hon. member, somebody who is in the Remand Centre.

I'm certain that the Human Rights Commission will take appropriate steps and process to investigate such things if somebody makes such a complaint.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister: can the minister explain to the two men who were raped by the same inmate while under the government's custody why this government failed to protect their fundamental rights?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a confusion with respect to responsibilities. In this particular case the hon. member has talked about a criminal activity that took place on the site of the Remand Centre. So it's an appropriate step that the individual involved as a victim has redress by filing criminal charges. In any case where there is a criminal activity that is taking place – it matters not whether it's in the Remand Centre or outside of the Remand Centre – the appropriate steps are to be tabled by filing charges. It is not a matter of human rights in this case.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Gaming to supplement an answer.

Social Assistance Rates

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier in question period in a question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning in his preamble he made a very inaccurate statement that the government was giving money to Horse Racing Alberta. The true fact is that Horse Racing Alberta has the ability to earn money – earn money – at the racing entertainment centres in four locations in the province.*

Based on the amount of entertainment money spent at those racetracks, a portion of that money is earned by Horse Racing

Alberta. As well, a portion of that money flows into the Alberta lottery fund to the benefit of all Albertans and many communities.

I would also point out that the economy of the province of Alberta benefits to the tune of nine times what they are able to earn at those racing entertainment centres.

The Speaker: As per our practices the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning has a supplemental question to ask if he chooses to.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The interest of Albertans is clear in any monies that are spent by Albertans, and certainly the monies from lotteries are included in the budgetary monies. My question is to the minister. Because of this large number, $45 million given to horse racing, that could be given to other areas and, of course, is brought from all these realistic monies that are coming from raising funds that could go elsewhere, why cannot some of this be given to the poor families of this province?

Mrs. McClellan: I'm going to make one more attempt at this, and I invite the hon. member to take part in our estimates and talk about the budgetary process.

The Minister of Gaming has clearly laid out that this money is not given to Horse Racing Alberta. In fact, they earn those dollars through the racing entertainment centres, Mr. Speaker. I invite the hon. members opposite to get more acquainted with an industry in this province that not only provides entertainment but provides jobs, many of them in the area in this city just northeast of this building. I would invite them to examine the jobs, the work they've done in education with a program for groomsmen at Olds College, the improvements in the backstretch, the child care programs that they have initiated, and look at an industry that has a proud history in this province and is making a very real contribution to the economy in this province.

The Speaker: There's only one supplemental question.

Hon. members, I'll introduce a number of members to participate momentarily, but might we revert briefly to the Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: All right. The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, and I think there's identification that's pretty obvious here, but please proceed.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the consideration of allowing me to reintroduce these very special guests. I wish to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 15 very special ladies from the city of Fort Saskatchewan. They're the first chapter of the Red Hat Society to be registered, and earlier I read more about their background. On their website they say: "There is fun after fifty . . . for women of all walks of life. We believe silliness is the comedy relief of life and, since we are all in it together, we might as well join red-gloved hands and go for the gusto together." I am so happy that you are able to stay here and rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. Have a good look at their hats.

The Speaker: I think, though, an obvious correction must be made, hon. minister. There's not a lady up there over the age of 50.

The hon. Deputy Speaker.

2:40

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you Bea Niedersteiner, a co-ordinator, plus 30 other active seniors that are involved with the Didsbury District Community Bus Society. This trip to the Legislature today marks the very first trip for their newly acquired community bus, and hopefully they'll be able to get to use it many, many more times during our centennial year to tour our wonderful province. They're seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the very warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: In just a few seconds I'll call on the first of six members.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Participation of Women in Politics

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta, home to the Famous Five, was in the forefront in extending political rights to women. Eighty-nine years ago on April 19, 1916, the Alberta Liberal government, led by Premier Arthur Sifton, passed the Alberta equal suffrage act, granting most, but not all, Alberta women the right to vote in provincial elections. They exercised this right in June of 1917 and elected Mrs. Louise McKinney and nursing sister Roberta MacAdams to the Alberta Legislature. For the first time in either a Canadian or British Assembly women were elected to serve as members.

In 1997 our province briefly led the country in electing women, with women holding 27 per cent of the seats in the Legislature. Unfortunately, this is the high mark in Alberta politics. Since then women have been rapidly losing ground, with only 13 women elected during the 2004 Alberta election, the lowest number since 1989.

This trend must be reversed. According to a survey released last fall by the Centre for Research and Information on Canada, 90 per cent of Canadians think electing more women will improve the political system. Canadians rank electing women higher than any of the other suggested reforms, including referendums and proportional representation.

If more women are indeed part of the solution to the burgeoning democratic deficit, Albertans are out of luck. In the last provincial election the Progressive Conservative Party offered only 12 women candidates, down from 17. Eleven of these were incumbents. We Liberals had 18 candidates, the same as last time, while the NDs managed to recruit 25 women candidates. Over half of the ridings in Alberta couldn't elect a woman even if they wanted to because all of the candidates were men. Unless there is a concerted effort by parties, pundits, nonpartisan groups, and electoral reform activists, Alberta's strong record of promoting women's political representation will be little more than a historical footnote.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, simply because the Famous Five were mentioned here today, I'd just give you an update. The maquette, the major statuettes that are located in Ottawa, a replica figure will be coming here shortly. We made the arrangements with the Famous Five Foundation to have them housed in this building for much of the 2005 centennial celebrations.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Youth Secretariat

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the spring of 1999 our Premier announced the formation of the Youth Secretariat, to be housed in the Ministry of Children's Services. The Youth Secretariat was developed to recognize the importance of youth in Alberta. Youth play a significant role in this province and have demonstrated to us that they are innovative and inspiring contributors. The Youth Secretariat allows government to communicate openly with young people and together identify and address youth issues. Youth have the expertise as well as the solutions. It is our responsibility to give them an opportunity to use their voices.

It is my honour to work for and with the youth of Alberta as the newly appointed chair of the Youth Secretariat. Together it is important to ensure that we have a solid youth perspective on all youth initiatives. In my conversations with youth, community stakeholders, and the ministry staff we have identified that the Youth Secretariat's priorities to date are illicit drug use, identifying gaps in services for youth, putting together a new Youth Advisory Panel, and working with other youth networks across Alberta.

It is quite evident that youth are committed to making realistic change for their peers who are confronted with addiction issues. We look forward to continued communication with young people as we develop effective solutions in this area. The Youth Secretariat will be assembling a new Youth Advisory Panel for Alberta. Youth input will be crucial in setting the direction for the Youth Secretariat in the coming year. I look forward to updating the members of this Assembly on Youth Secretariat activities and sharing the great work of our youth in effective change in Alberta.

Camrose Kodiaks Hockey Team

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night before a sold-out crowd of 2,200 the Camrose Kodiaks won the Alberta Junior Hockey League championships. They defeated the defending champion Fort McMurray Oil Barons 4 to 2 in game seven at the Max McLean Arena in Camrose. This is the third time in the last five years that the Kodiaks have won the Alberta Junior Hockey League championships. Led by head coach Boris Rybalka and assistant coaches Doug Fleck and Miles Walsh, this team of 24 up-and-coming hockey players came back from a 3 to 1 series deficit, staving off defeat by winning the last three games of the series.

The three provincial championships in the last five years are not their only accomplishment. In 2001 the Kodiaks won the Royal Bank Canadian junior championships. In 2003 they won the silver medal at the Royal Bank Canadian junior tournament. In 2001 and 2003 they won the Alberta/B.C. Doyle Cup. This is a very impressive record considering that the Kodiaks have only been in the Alberta Junior Hockey League for eight seasons. All Albertans are hoping this winning record continues when the Kodiaks first meet the Surrey Eagles this Friday in the 2005 Doyle Cup on their way to another Royal Bank Canadian championship to be held later in Weyburn.

The Kodiaks are owned and operated by the Camrose Sport Development Society, a nonprofit community organization whose purpose it is to promote and develop a strong sports program in the community. The Camrose Sport Development Society stresses the importance of combining a successful education with sport. Many of the Kodiaks of the past have been awarded scholarships to various universities.

The Kodiaks are proud to be members of the Alberta Junior Hockey League. The Alberta Junior Hockey League started in the 1960s with only five teams and now provides a high level of hockey for 15 Alberta teams throughout our province. The league itself encourages further education for all players, and it is an important part of our Alberta sport history.

Alberta: Land of Opportunity

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta, the land of opportunity. Alberta is the top destination for Canadian migration. Between 1996 and 2001 Alberta's net gain was around 120,000 citizens. In 2002 Alberta gained 18,000 newcomers. Last year alone 11,600 Canadians came, saw, and settled in this great land of Alberta. All indicators predict that this trend continues.

These are just numbers, but the real situation can be seen in the construction and expansion of residential communities, shopping malls, office buildings, warehouses, roadways, hospitals, schools, and many private and public facilities. The real situation can be felt in seeing the many happy faces at community events, the laughter of young children playing in the playgrounds, the waving of hands to new friends in the neighbourhood, the high traffic on the way to work, and the tasting of food varieties for dinner after a productive day.

In a recent newspaper headline it said: Alberta Is Number One Pot of Gold at the End of the Rainbow. I often wonder why Alberta has attracted so many hard-working people from many parts of the world and Canada. Positive can-do attitudes of Albertans plus sound governing policies must be the reason. The ancient Oriental proverb goes: good land, birds nest. May I say it politically, or rather Caofucius says: good government, people come.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is now like a well-disciplined and caring family, free of debt, living within its means. Without debt to pay, all of its incomes are dedicated to saving for the future and spending on essentials and growth development. All in all, Alberta is doing very well, but we cannot be complacent. We should keep on working together for this land of opportunity.

Thank you.

Pope Benedict XVI

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is a most momentous day. Over one billion Catholics have a new spiritual leader with the election of Pope Benedict XVI.

At approximately 9:50 a.m. our time 115 cardinals from 52 countries burned their ballots from the fourth round of voting in the stove of the Sistine Chapel. White smoke, or, as they announce it, fumo bianco, poured out of Vatican City, signalling that they had come to a decision, and delighted crowds awaited, ripe with anticipation. Shortly after, Cardinal Jorge Arturo Medina Estevez appeared to introduce the newly elected pope, Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger. Cardinal Ratzinger addressed the thousands of people in St. Peter's Square for the first time as pope. He described himself as a humble worker in the vineyard of the Lord.

I cannot express how pleased all Catholics around the world are today. The College of Cardinals had the wisdom to elect a gifted theologian, a man who has been a very influential member of the Catholic Church. Joseph Ratzinger was formerly the archbishop of Munich and for many years the prefect of the Sacred Congregation for the Doctrine of Faith. He also sat as dean of the College of Cardinals. He served in the papacy of John Paul II with dedication and is a very fitting choice to be our 265th pope and the first Germanic pope since the 11th century.

Without question Pope Benedict XVI has some big shoes to fill. Pope John Paul II was a great man and led the Catholic Church with wisdom and kindness.

I would like to congratulate the Catholic Church on the election of Pope Benedict XVI. I pray he will lead our faith and the world with the same wisdom, humility, and kindness as his predecessor.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Ken Fearnley

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We must express our gratitude to all those who provide affordable, safe, and secure housing for Alberta's seniors. One of the many not-for-profit organizations in Alberta that provide a secure and dignified way of living for seniors is the Greater Edmonton Foundation. The foundation has over 350 caring and dedicated staff, with an annual operating budget of $15 million. This staff's prudent use of this budget provides housing to over 2,000 low-income seniors in Edmonton at 10 lodges and 10 self-contained apartment buildings.

Today I would like to recognize one of the many fine employees of the Greater Edmonton Foundation who recently retired after 13 years, Mr. Ken Fearnley. Mr. Fearnley was the chief administrative officer reporting to a board of directors appointed by Edmonton city council. Mr. Fearnley had a career that was outstanding as a public administrator. His dedication and commitment are an example for us all. At this time on behalf of all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly I would like to wish Mr. Fearnley and his family well in all their endeavours in his retirement.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank him for making our city, our province, and our respective communities a better place to live. His efforts do not go unnoticed nor unappreciated.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a petition signed by Albertans who are very concerned about the dangerous driving conditions faced by many workers in northern Alberta. In particular, the 428 people who signed are urging the government to "increase infrastructure development for funding Highway 63." This brings the total of this petition to 2,146 signatures.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise and present a petition from 108 Albertans in the fine communities of Rochester, Calmar, Rolly View, Sylvan Lake, Stettler, Clyde, and Edmonton. It reads:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aborigines; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of around 1,350 signatures from Albertans who would like to see an increase in the number of caregivers per resident in long-term care facilities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of an e-mail received by my colleague the leader of the NDP opposition. The letter is from an oil sands worker who is concerned that bringing foreign temporary workers to work in northern Alberta will reduce his wages and prevent Albertans from being able to get their start in the trades.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies from a group called the Coalition for Alberta's Future, consisting of "five thousand citizens and families who own land in excess of 5-million . . . acres" and are seriously concerned about the need for reform and how the oil and gas activity is regulated in the province.

A second tabling, Mr. Speaker, if I may: the appropriate number of copies of photographs taken around the Sawn Lake area, where development has been occurring without permission.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling this afternoon, and it's a document inviting everyone to a school closure summit workshop, which is to take place this Sunday, April 24, at 1 p.m. at Duggan Hall at 37th Avenue and 106th Street. It is a meeting that has been organized to provide Edmonton public school board and, hopefully, this government "with input about the principles [that] should be used to guide" the public school closure process. It needs to be changed.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Hon. members, it is my pleasure to table the appropriate number of copies of the fourth School at the Legislature Report Card 2003/2004. This is the Legislative Assembly educational program for grade 6 students cosponsored with community partners Capital City Savings, Priority Printing, and Access Media Group.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2005-06

Advanced Education

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to open Committee of Supply with a few remarks and then take the opportunity to answer questions from members with respect to the supply that we're requesting for the Department of Advanced Education.

Before I start those remarks, I'd like to introduce a number of people who are in the gallery to support me in whatever way they can, by signalling or waving or smiling or frowning or nodding or shaking or rattling or whatever it is that they can do to communicate with me, because we have a very, very dedicated group of people who work in and for the Department of Advanced Education, or, more appropriately, for the people of Alberta.

Having some familiarity, I think I can say that across government we have dedicated people working for Albertans. But I have to tell you that I am very impressed with and have had a great deal of assistance and direction from the people in Advanced Education. We've worked through the last three months postelection in a very truncated time frame, dealing with getting together the business plan for the newly constituted department, dealing with putting together the proposals, first of all, for the Premier's speech to the province at the beginning of February and then the throne speech and then Bill 1. This group of people and the people who work with them and for them have done yeoman service over the last three months and indeed through their considerable years of service to the province and to the people of this province.

I'd ask Dr. Bill Byrne, who's the deputy minister of the department, to stand; Phil Gougeon, the assistant deputy minister, adult learning; Shirley Dul, who's the assistant deputy minister of apprenticeship and industry training; Rai Batra, who we've just recently stolen from Community Development, who's the assistant deputy minister of strategic services; Gerry Waisman, who's the executive director of learner assistance – there's a man you want to know; he gives out $480 million a year to Alberta students – Solomon Quarshie, acting director of financial services; and Michael Shields, director of communications. I'd ask them to stand because I want all members of the Legislature to be able to see what a wonderful team of people they have serving students in this province and advancing education.

Mr. Chairman, government has announced in Budget 2005 a strong commitment to advancing education that will go a long way towards addressing both immediate needs and future demands on postsecondary education in this province. These aren't just increases to line items in the budget. All these budget items are grounded in this government's overall 20-year strategic plan, a plan that's built on fiscal responsibility but one that looks to the long-term picture. This is a budget that puts wheels on that strategic plan.

This budget puts the leading in learning pillar into motion. Mr. Chairman, I would also say that although this is the Advanced Education department, we not only contribute to the leading in learning pillar but certainly to unleashing innovation, helping Albertans compete in the global economy, and above all making Alberta the best place to live, work, and visit. A key part of leading in learning is having a world-class postsecondary system based on accessibility, affordability, and quality, and this ministry has made concrete steps towards this goal by making it an integral part of our three-year business plan for advancing education.

Advanced Education's mission is for Alberta to be a learning society where all Albertans have access to the opportunity to develop the learning, work, and life skills that they need to achieve their aspirations and maximize their potential to the benefit of themselves and Alberta. To achieve this success, we've set out the four strategic priorities that will guide everything this ministry does throughout the next three years. Those strategic priorities are leading in learning, one of the pillars in the government's 20-year strategic plan, so obviously it must be our ministry's main priority; access for all learners so that all Albertans have access to opportunities to achieve their aspirations and maximize their human potential; affordability for all learners to ensure that costs are not a barrier to a student getting an education; and quality and innovation. To be a leader in learning Alberta must continue to move ahead towards excellence.

All budget items are designed to address these strategic priorities and move Advanced Education toward succeeding in its mission, and that will ultimately move the Alberta government and Alberta closer to achieving our 20-year strategic plan. To that end, I'll go through the 2005 budget by looking at the four strategic priorities in the ministry's plan and key spending items under each area.

Leading in learning, a top priority in the government's 20-year plan, a key strategy in this ministry's three-year business plan. It's about the whole system. This includes all advanced education. Yes, university and college programs, but also literacy, trades and occupations, English as a Second Language, and other adult learning opportunities. That's the context for the 2005-2006 Advanced Education budget.

Over the next three years Advanced Education will increase its budget by nearly 30 per cent, or $433 million, bringing the total program expense for the ministry to almost $1.9 billion. This funding increase will begin immediately in the 2005-2006 year. Government is focused strongly on advanced education in order to leave a legacy of higher learning for the future, and a big part of that is making sure that the resource wealth that Alberta enjoys today isn't spent but is invested to help future generations of Albertans achieve their postsecondary aspirations.

That's where initiatives such as the access to the future endowment come in. In 2005-2006 the government will make a $250 million initial payment towards the $3 billion access to the future endowment. We asked Albertans what they wanted done with future surpluses, and they told us that advanced education was a priority. That's what this endowment fund is all about, Mr. Chairman: saving a portion of the unbudgeted surpluses for the future and investing them in a way which helps to create the future.

Another way we're preparing to lead in learning is by encouraging parents to save for their children's education through the Alberta centennial education savings plan. Funding for the Alberta centennial education savings plan in 2005-2006, its first full fiscal year, will be $19.5 million. Mr. Chairman, the education savings plan has a greater good than just encouraging the parents to save for their children's future education. We know that people who have an expectation that their children will go to school have a greater degree of success in having their children go to school. By asking parents to consider opening an education savings plan at the birth of their child, we'll create the expectation at that child's birth that that child will go on to have an advanced education.

We're also increasing, Mr. Chairman, assistance to postsecondary institutions by more than 31 per cent, or $382 million, over the next three years. That includes, as was requested by the postsecondary institutions themselves, sustained three-year budget increases of 6 per cent per year, or greater than 18 per cent, a $205 million increase in base operating grants over the three years to enhance accessibility and quality instruction, $90 million additionally in the access growth fund over three years to achieve the target of adding 15,000 postsecondary spaces, $4 million annually to support degree-granting programs at private, not-for-profit colleges that weren't previously included. Funding to support operating costs of new postsecondary facilities will increase from $8.7 million in 2005-2006 to $19.5 million in 2007-2008.

These line items will go a long way towards helping Alberta lead in learning, but as I've said before, more can be done. Does that mean more dollars? Better use of existing resources? New types of programs? We don't have all those answers yet, and that's why we're also undertaking a postsecondary education review this year. It will look at the funding issues. It will look at issues of affordability, and in fact it will look at the entire system.

Mr. Chairman, as I mentioned in the House earlier today, issues and decisions in the context of Mount Royal College versus Mount Royal university or other dramatic changes to the system have to be made in the context of Alberta as a learning society and what we need to have in place to make sure that we have the system necessary to make sure all Albertans have the opportunity to advance their education and that the education that Albertans can get here in our province will enable them to be world leaders.

The review will look at access and how we can make sure that there's a space for every qualified Albertan who wants to advance their education and how we can inspire Albertans to want to advance their education. In the meantime, Budget 2005 takes some very solid steps towards ensuring Albertans can find the postsecondary programs they want right here in their home province. As announced in the Premier's address in February, we're adding 60,000 additional student spaces by 2020. That's 15,000 in the next three years, 30,000 over six years, and 60,000 over 15 years. These spaces will be in universities and colleges and technical institutes, yes, but they'll also be in apprenticeships, in literacy, and in lifelong learning. Mr. Chairman, I can't emphasize enough that postsecondary education, or advanced education, is not just about the universities and colleges in this province. It's about every Albertan, wherever they're located in the province, being able to advance their education. It's about those Albertans who need to move to literacy as much as it is about those Albertans who want to move past the PhD.

As I mentioned, we're putting $90 million in the access growth fund over three years to help achieve our targets. The government is also putting $469 million into the postsecondary capital projects over the next three years, and $17.6 million will be available in 2005-2006 to support a network of 180 community-based groups that provide access to programs such as family and adult literacy, English as a Second Language, and rural community programs in more than 80 communities across this province.

Mr. Chairman, I had the opportunity to speak to the community learning councils annual meeting and conference on Wednesday, just before the budget came down, in Calgary. There were probably 120 people there representing these 80 communities, many of them volunteers, many of them helping to make programs of adult learning available to Albertans in their communities. I want, again, to thank those volunteers and the people who work in that area because they help Albertans advance their potential.

We're also working very strongly to increase access in apprenticeship and industry training. It's a viable career choice for Albertans, helping Albertans meet the demand for skilled labour. Can't say it often enough, Mr. Chairman: a career in the trades, a career in the technology areas, in industry is a very, very viable career in this province and across the world. It's an area that we have to value as an advanced education because it is truly an advanced education.

Truly, there are very, very few places that you can work now that you don't need to have some form of advancement. I've said before even in the area of trucking, not to diminish that. That's a very good career for those who want to do it, whose passion it is to drive. But if you want to be a truck driver, you need to know GPS technology, border crossing technology. You need to have skills and abilities.

In 2005-2006 there'll be a $5.7 million increase for apprenticeship training, bringing the total funding to $22.5 million. This funding will increase spaces in trades training to meet industry demands.

We want to also make sure, Mr. Chairman, that there are spaces in a high-quality postsecondary system at a cost that is affordable. We want to ensure that finances are not a barrier to a student getting an education. We're starting by addressing immediate concerns with a one-time $43 million payment to postsecondary institutions to cover tuition fee increases this year. Scholarships, bursaries, and grants are a key to the student finance system, and we're increasing funding for scholarships, bursaries, and grants to students by $7.5 million, to $72 million this year. Also in 2005-2006 about 30,000 students will receive scholarships, including the new Lois Hole humanities and social sciences scholarship, that will provide $5,000 to four postsecondary students.

Alberta's student finance system is a leader in the country, and this government expects to disburse $105 million in student loans in 2005-2006. Mr. Chairman, $105 million in student loans, but you add to that the $32 million in learner assistance bursaries, $48 million in maintenance grants and special-needs bursaries and the Alberta opportunity bursaries, and $23 million in heritage scholarships, for a total of about $200 million that is being provided to Alberta students from resources in this province and an additional $270 million approximately that is managed by our learner assistance branch to provide over $480 million to Alberta's students. That is a significant amount of money.

The combined federal/provincial yearly student loan limit is increasing to $12,140 in recognition of increased costs for students. That includes a 2 per cent living allowance increase. Lifetime loan limits for programs of study will increase by $10,000 for those programs that have not recently been adjusted. Undergraduate programs of study will go from $40,000 to $50,000. Masters programs will go from $50,000 to $60,000.

Alberta is also working to make sure that if a student must carry debt after graduation, the bulk of that is not Alberta debt. That's where the Alberta student loan relief benefit that I mentioned comes in. In 2005-2006 this program will reduce the debt of students in their first year of study by about $32 million.

I'm pleased to say that according to the most recent national graduate survey, average university undergraduate debt in Alberta is the lowest in Canada, excluding Quebec. Quebec operates on a different type of system. It opts out of the federal finance system. Across the country, as I said, it's the national graduate survey which shows Alberta student loan debt the lowest in Canada. On average, Alberta graduates at all postsecondary levels have among the lowest debt, both provincial and federal, at graduation in the country. Of course, in addition to graduating with among the lowest net debt in the country, Alberta's strong economy and the lower cost of living allows graduates to pay off their debt more quickly than those in other provinces.

These are some of the ways that we're working to help our postsecondary students, and we're going to continue to find ways to ensure that finances, costs are not a barrier. Of course, affordability is a key part of the postsecondary review that we've promised this year. We're doing a lot of great things. We're continuing to find ways to be better, to do more, and to find innovations in the postsecondary system.

Final key strategy in the Alberta education business plan has to do with quality and innovation in advanced education. We want to continue to move forward to find newer and better ways of providing world-class postsecondary education. The budget includes a $12.8 million performance program to reward institutions for meeting their performance targets in terms of responsiveness, accessibility, affordability, and research. The performance envelope is something that government has provided in the past as a one-time funding item. Now we recognize this as a key to the quality of systems, so we're including it as a line item in the budget.

The government is also making strides in the area of apprenticeship with key innovations. We're increasing the availability of distance and mobile delivery of apprenticeship technical training, as requested by industry. For example, in the steam-fitter/pipe fitter trade we're working with the college system and industry to provide apprenticeship technical training at the camps in the Fort McMurray area where the oil sands workers are staying.

We're also implementing ATOMS, the apprenticeship trade and occupation management system, which will give clients and stakeholders access to apprenticeship and industry training services 24 hours a day seven days a week. The service can be used to register employers and apprentices, update employee information, register for training, pay fees. These initiatives will help to ensure that the apprenticeship system is even better and more responsive to students' needs in the future.

Mr. Chairman, this government has a plan for postsecondary education, and it's a plan we're working on in partnership with all advanced education stakeholders. This budget is part of an overall plan that melds the government's fiscal plan with its strategic plan for the future of the province. We're moving in new directions every day, and Advanced Education's budget and business plan is just a part of movement towards truly leading and learning, developing Alberta as a learning society.

Mr. Chairman, I've said it in the House before: Alberta has a great postsecondary system. We've built a solid foundation to ensure continued and future success. Our fiscal plan and our strategic plan will take it to the next level and position our system on the leading edge of advanced education anywhere in the world. The government will continue to work with all stakeholders in the system not only to determine our postsecondaries' immediate needs but to look forward to what postsecondary education in Alberta should aspire to; in short, to ensure that Alberta as a learning society makes Alberta the best place to live, work, and visit, unleashes innovation, ensures that we're leading in learning, and allows all Albertans to be able to compete in a global economy.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and my thanks to the minister as well for that overview of the estimates for the Advanced Education ministry within Budget 2005. I think there are many good ideas in the works and many ideas that could be good, could be great and, hopefully, will be someday when they're properly funded. I think there are some ideas that are being held back from greatness by the level of funding being allocated to them.

Mr. Chairman, the minister said yesterday in question period that today I would "have all the opportunity in the world to explore and ask extensive and detailed questions" and maybe even get a lesson, if I wish, "in how the student loan system works and how remission works." So I will get to those questions, and I look forward to the answers.

I want to start out, though, just with a very brief quote from one of a number of e-mails that I've received over the last little while having to do with people's thoughts, stakeholders' thoughts on what would constitute an ideal provincial budget for postsecondary education in the province of Alberta, their budget wish list, if you will. This comes from an instructor at NAIT who says:

Increased accessibility is a wonderful goal. However there is a "serious" need to increase base funding . . . to institutions to repair the damage done by years of neglect. So it is not the total monies that go to post secondary education . . . it is how the funding is directed and the strings that are attached.

With those comments in mind, some questions. I'd like to start around the area of base operating grant increases if I could because, as the minister knows and, I think, as the minister has probably been told by a number of the same stakeholders that I have spoken to over the last several months, the fundamental problems in the advanced education system in the province of Alberta, as great a system as it is and as great as it aspires to be, really need to be addressed by a substantial increase to base operating grants. Institutions' operating costs are going up by about 6 per cent a year. Rather than improving the situation, this increase apparently just keeps them treading water. They're still behind where they were in real dollar per student terms back in '92-93, before cuts to postsecondary education began.

But I wonder if the minister could redo the math for me, if he would, please. He talks about a total increase over three years of $205 million, or a little in excess of 18 per cent. That's in the three-year business plan, and of course years 2 and 3 of the business plan are subject to potentially major revision once we get to writing the actual budget for those years. In the budget per se for 2005-2006 he commits to a base operating grant of $81 million. Now, Mr. Chairman, $205 million minus $81 million is $124 million, and divided by two, that's $62 million a year. So it appears that there is some fairly significant front loading of the increase in base operating grants. It appears that the percentage increase in year 2 and year 3 will not keep up with what's being done this year.

By my calculation we're actually doing about a 7.2 per cent increase this year, so my question to the minister is: why has he taken this approach? Why not an across-the-board 6 and 6 and 6? Even better, why not 8 and 8 and 8? That would perhaps get us closer to actually getting our colleges and universities the money that they need to function properly over the course of the next three years.

Also, what I don't see addressed in here – I'm not sure, and perhaps the minister can enlighten me on this: where it would be introduced, whether it would be introduced within a budget framework or within legislation – is a gap in base operating funding between institutions in the province, between the city of Edmonton and the city of Calgary. I think that needs to be addressed possibly via a base instructional unit approach, as they use in Ontario, and I wonder if the minister would comment on that possibly.

Now, program spending increases. The minister, yes, did say that program expenses over the next three years, should we stick to the business plan, will increase by $433 million, or almost 30 per cent, to reach $1.9 billion cumulatively, but most importantly we're here to talk about what will happen in this coming fiscal year. There program expenses will increase by $196 million, but capital spending – and again I want to focus on this year. The minister rightly pointed out that over the next three years of the business plan, if we stick to it, we'll increase capital spending in postsecondary education institutions by in excess of $400 million, but this year capital spending is apparently being cut by $117 million.

Now, that's my reading of it. I wonder first of all if the minister agrees with my interpretation, and if he does agree that my interpretation is correct, I'd like to know why he's done it this way. If he disagrees with my interpretation, I'd like an explanation of how things are really working because no matter how I crunch the numbers, it looks as though we have sliced capital spending for this year from last by $117 million. So if we cut on the capital side by $117 million and we add on the program side by $196 million, we're really only ahead by about $79 million for the fiscal year, and that's considerably less bang delivered by considerably fewer bucks than it appears on the surface.

If the minister could answer this, please: what would be the impact of this on the access plans to add 15,000 spaces by 2008? Perhaps the answer is in year 2 or year 3 of the business plan; I don't know. I refer back to a study done by and a request made by Campus Calgary, which is the coalition of the five postsecondary institutions in the city of Calgary, in which they've said that there is a need for almost 20,000 spaces in Calgary alone. They attached a cost figure of that of $1 billion, and that, yes, would have been over five years. We compare that to this ministry's plans to increase access by 15,000 spaces province-wide over the next three years for, more or less, $433 billion. So I guess my question there to the minister – there are a number of questions. What is the plan? How will the increase in spaces be funded by his ministry? Does the department have a full base of understanding of supply versus demand of students regionally; the 30 per cent gap in spaces between Calgary and Edmonton again?

Mount Royal College, as I understand it, continues to operate with 30 per cent unused capacity. If Mount Royal College was, in fact, a high school, under this government's utilization formula it might be skirting the danger of having to close because it has too much unused space. My understanding is that Mount Royal continues to operate with 30 per cent unused capacity while turning away large numbers of students every year because it has yet to get extra money for additional instructors to fill the classrooms that it added a couple of years ago with capital funding from this government. So capital funding is obviously very important, yet if you don't follow it with appropriate operational funding, you end up with unused classroom space. Given the space crunch in so many other institutions, it's a bit of an anomaly.

On the access growth fund and the increases to that, $90 million over the next three years, I wonder if the minister can share with us some details of enrolment growth, expanded apprenticeship training capacity. How many of these spaces are real spaces? How many are virtual spaces? How far will the money go?

I'd also like him to address, if he would, Mr. Chairman, the question: why funding envelopes? I mean, the system forces universities to try and find ways to move money that's in the funding envelopes out of funding envelopes to pay for ongoing programs and other expenses that aren't really being met. I got this from an instructor at SAIT who said that one-off funding, which refers essentially to envelope funding, is no substitute for ongoing, reliable funding. Either the opportunity to use the money is lost, given the size of many of these projects and the lack of time to do proper planning and consultation before you have to spend the money, or more likely, it's not spent in the best way possible. He made the note in an e-mail to me that neither is acceptable to him as a taxpayer. So I think that's a good question that deserves an answer.

Still on the access issue, the Alberta Council on Admissions and Transfer, a question which, I hope, is not too far off topic. I think it relates here. If it doesn't, I am sure the minister will be pleased to tell me that it does not. Again using Mount Royal College just as an example, 50 per cent of Mount Royal students are in university transfer programs, but to this day there is no guarantee of acceptance to the University of Calgary in third year. Even if all other things are equal, if the Mount Royal student and the University of Calgary student have the same marks coming out of second year, no guarantee that the Mount Royal student will be accepted in third year. That is an access issue.

On student loans. You've got $105 million in student loan disbursements and $35 million allocated to the loan remission program, so I come back to my question in question period yesterday. I would love and welcome and encourage clarification from the minister of the claim that virtually all the money that's provided by the provincial Students Finance Board from Alberta coffers gets remitted.

I would also like to remind the minister of my request yesterday in question period for documentation to support the claim that Alberta students end up with the lowest debt of any students across the country. We found out today that, in fact, that's the lowest for students across the country in any province except Quebec. Of course, given events in Ottawa and the fallout from that, one doesn't know from one hour to the next, but the last time I checked, Quebec was still a part of Canada.

The annual loan maximum. It was interesting and encouraging to me and I'm sure to a lot of students in this province to hear that among other adjustments to the student loan program there's a 2 per cent increase in living allowance, but I wonder if the minister could provide on a sort of – I know this is very, very difficult to do on an average basis, and I'm not sure whether I should ask for this by sector or by city or how. In fact, I'm going to leave it up to the minister to decide how to answer this question.

Could he provide us with some information, some more or less typical information, for a university student in the province of Alberta, which certainly means that they go to school in either one of two big cities or in the city of Lethbridge unless they're going to Athabasca? If that student requires the maximum student loan, how much money is left over for that student to live on after university tuition and residence fees have been paid? I'd like to know about that.

I'd also like to know a little more about the tuition rebate, of course, which is a one-time $43 million expense. What happens next year after the one time is over? Many concerns from many people who have e-mailed me that it's going to mean, as Christine Johns, vice-president external of the Graduate Students' Association of the University of Calgary, said:

At the University of Calgary, tuition is still increasing to the maximum allowable amount. If nothing is to be done, in two years time students could be experiencing close to a 12% increase in one year . . . in order for Universities to even begin to think about not raising tuition to the maximum allowable level, [the university] needs a dramatic increase to base operating grants.

Some comment there. Knowing full well that the affordability review is coming, I wonder if we could get in advance of the review a little more detail of what the minister is thinking.

Finally, the access to the future fund and the $250 million which is being put in this year. I suppose $250 million is nothing to ever sneeze at except that it seems like such a shadow of the promise that was held out when the $3 billion cap was mentioned in the bill itself. Where is the commitment beyond the minister's stated good intention and that of the Premier, who himself is one of these days or months or years going to step down, to put more of the $250 million in? There is no commitment to do that in this budget that I can find. Maybe the minister can find it for me.

You know, the budgeted fund income for investment purposes in '06-07 and again in '07-08 is essentially $11 million. It goes up a little bit, you know, in '07-08 because it's made a little interest on the interest, I guess, but again there's no more principal for it to be earning income on.

Since an endowment fund is supposed to produce proceeds to invest in, in this case, excellence in postsecondary education, this works out to an amount for investment in excellence that is equivalent to $61 per student, or 16 cents per student per day, the equivalent of said student taking it upon himself or herself to return three empty pop or beer cans to the bottle depot each and every day, and at least the student knows that the bottle depot is still going to be around next year. So I wonder if I could get the minister to comment on future plans to grow this fund much more quickly, much more significantly, and in much more of a perpetual fashion than he has committed to thus far.

On that note, I will take my seat. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate it.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A number of good questions there. I hope I can read my writing, which is not always the easiest thing to do. Stakeholder thoughts; increasing across the board; serious need to increase base funding; how funding is determined; why 6/6/6 and not 8/8/8; where do you find the 6? The bottom line is that this budget provides for an increase in base operating funds of 6 per cent per year this year and in each of the next two. That's a promise. It's printed in the line. You'll very seldom find that these lines go down year over year unless something catastrophic happens. What you tend to find is that they go up.

The interesting thing is that institutions and many others in the province have asked for sustainable funding and have asked to know year over year what their funding is going to be. Well, the reality is that they have known year over year what their funding was going to be. They just didn't like the level of it. In fact, the year over year was 2 per cent, and that wasn't good enough. They told us so, and they were right. So it's moved to 6 per cent. They were expecting maybe 4 per cent.

I can tell you that the boards and the presidents that I've talked to are very, very happy with the level of base funding increase, both the amount this year and the amount committed over the three years. The 6 per cent is more than their inflation. It helps to cover the costs of unfunded students. It helps to cover some of the things that they've been scrambling on. They've asked, actually, that we do the funding in this way, that we look at increasing the base funding on an appropriate, sustainable, year-over-year level, and that's what we've done. We've done it at a level which is more than what they were expecting, more than what they were asking for. Indeed, in the global package it basically meets what the universities indicated in a letter to me they would like to have and would allow them to make some commitments with respect to access, which is what we wanted to go for.

Now, the other question that the member asked relative to funding and distributing base funding is the so-called gap or the allocation between institutions or between geographic regions. Of course, this is one of the strange things that has come forward over the last couple of years. People think that there ought to be a balance, as though a student were a student were a student, and that you can take a look at an institution and average the dollars over the number of students and say that some institutions are being shortchanged because their per-student average is lower than somebody else's per-student average. Of course, that's just a wrong way of looking at the world. Institutions have different students and different programs, and some of those programs have higher or lower expenses, so you have to fund on an appropriate basis.

The good news for the hon. member is that we're doing a funding review this year. We've promised every five years to do a funding review. There's a funding review being done this year. If there are inordinate gaps in the way funding is allocated to institutions, that will be resolved. Every stakeholder, every institution will have the opportunity to comment on it, to participate in that review, and to ensure that their institution is fairly heard and fairly measured against what happens across the system.

We have to always look at these things, and in fact it's our role. In Advanced Education we don't actually deliver education. We provide the framework for the system and make sure that there's a system context and overall learning policy for the province, a way in which we can look at Alberta as a learning society. We work with the institutions and the community learning councils and the others to make sure that educational opportunities are there, that they're accessible, affordable, and equal. So when we talk about the gaps, first of all, one has to be careful about saying that there are more spaces in this place than there are in that place.

I hesitate to say Calgary and Edmonton because I don't want to get into parochial discussions about whether Calgary is doing better or whether Edmonton is doing better. The fact of the matter is that they're different places. They serve different populations, different geographic regions, and you can't measure it that way with any real sense of purpose. What we really need to do is to make sure that Alberta students have a place to go, an appropriate place for them to advance through education, and, if it's not here, that they have opportunities outside the province and can maximize their human potential. That's what it's about. It's not really about whether there are more spaces in Calgary or more spaces in Edmonton or those sorts of things.

I would ask the hon. member to take the broader view and to look at the system as a whole as to how we can make sure, working together, working collaboratively with the system, that we have the best system and we have an opportunity for every student that wants to go.

Capital spending, the whole mix of capital spending. I mean, when we get into this question of whether there are 15,000 spaces or 30,000 spaces, a lot of people tend to think: well, where are these students going to sit? Well, we have to build the 21st century campuses, the 21st century system, not the 20th century or, heaven forbid, the 19th century system. It's not about a new chair for every one of those 15,000 new spaces. It's about making sure that there's access, that there's a place.

That's going to be partly dealt with by e-learning opportunities. It's going to be partly dealt with by more apprenticeship spaces, partly dealt with by delivering mobile classrooms, partly dealt with by having courses offered at the campsite in Fort McMurray so that it's accessible to the workers there when they're off shift and able to take the learning side. It's about making sure that there's an opportunity in a small community to get ESL if that's what the need is or to have access to literacy programs if that's what the need is or a teacher training program or a nursing assistant program or a nursing program. You see opportunities where, for example, the University of Alberta has entered into arrangements with Blue Quill so that they had the first graduating class off campus of teachers from Blue Quill up in the St. Paul area. Those are the types of things we're looking at.

It's not about building two new universities. I mean, you talk about 60,000 new students, and you visualize it in the context of that meaning the size of two new universities. But you're not talking about actually building two new universities; you're talking about making sure that the spaces and the places are available. If you actually looked at the capital needs across the province, most of that capital need is not in classroom space. Most of that capital need – and there is capital need – is in labs, is in space for academic staff. It's not the classroom space that's really in a crunch. In fact, if you had more instructors, you probably could utilize the classroom space much better.

The hon. member mentions Mount Royal College and the 2,500 spaces that are available. He expressed it as 30 per cent of the available space in Mount Royal College. Yes, we've got to take up that space. We've got to make sure that that space is appropriately used, as we do right across the system. So the single-point-of-entry process that we've promised in Bill 1, where people can apply online and have their application apply to all of the appropriate colleges or universities or technical institutes that they want to go to, will help us to make sure that we make the maximum use of the space. Also, the funding that's available will fund places in those institutions that if they have more space and more opportunity to offer courses and they have the demand, we can provide the funding to ensure that that happens.

Campus Calgary. Yes. In the process I would caution the hon. member with respect to the use of the number of 20,000 spaces, although over five years that may be an appropriate projection. There's been a lot of talk, particularly in Calgary, about the lack of access, and there's a significant amount of double, triple, and quadruple accounting in those numbers. There is a need for more spaces – there's no question about that – and this budget and this three-year business plan will address that in spades. But the global number that's been reported across Calgary in the media about the tens of thousands of spaces that are needed right now to accommodate students is not a reality. The reality is that it's probably closer to 2,000 or 2,500 spaces across the province of immediate demand that needs take-up, and that can be accommodated, I believe, within the resources that we've talked about.

We addressed the question of Mount Royal and its change of status, but Mount Royal can of course address space issues earlier on without the necessity of addressing the university issue, without impacting the decision on the university issue, and indeed can address the transferability issue by sitting down and working with other institutions in the system. There's no good reason why an agreement can't be made between Mount Royal and the University of Calgary or Mount Royal and Athabasca University – in fact, they have an agreement with Athabasca University – so that there can be an automatic transfer, automatic entrance if students achieve a certain level of standard. Of course, we don't tell the universities or the colleges what their admission requirements are, but given the admission requirements that they had, they certainly can work out an arrangement.

There is no good reason why Mount Royal students in a transfer program would not be able to know that there's a place for them if they successfully complete their transfer program. There is no good reason for that, and I will be working as a mediator or an arbitrator or in whatever type of process I need to to bring the system together so that there are no dead ends for anybody in the system. It's a ladder approach: people can take a course in one area and move to the next area. We have with the Council on Admissions and Transfer one of the jewels of the system across this country, indeed in North America, in terms of ensuring that people know where one course will take them into a next course or one program will take them into a next course. We need to do more on that because we ought to be in a position where every bit of learning that you do enables you to do the next bit of learning. That's certainly one of the agenda items for me.

Why funding envelopes? Well, purely and simply it's a good way to ladder, again, the system. The base funding is necessary, absolutely. But if you put it all into base funding, sometimes you find that – and even institutions will tell you this – the pressures will drive the spending. So we want to make sure that there's money there for performance, there's money there for research, for example, and there's money in this budget which will help to provide some of the indirect costs of research. I think it's about $12 million. We need to fund that directly to the places where that research is happening. So that's an envelope as opposed to a base-level budget item.

The student loans issue: $105 million and $35 million. What the hon. member ought to do is add those two numbers together, not subtract them, so $105 million in student loans going out. That's not spending; that's an asset. It's converting cash to a loan asset, so it's not a spending item.

In addition to that, $35 million goes out to students in student loan relief benefits. A first-year student in their first course of studies doesn't get a provincial loan; they get a federal loan. Once they've maximized the federal loan, the money that we would have given them as a student loan in their first year we now give them as a student loan relief benefit. So they don't get a debt; in essence, they get a grant. So $105 million in student loans go out from the province; $35 million additionally goes out in student loan relief benefit for first-year students in their first course of studies. I might say, Mr. Chairman, that in addition to that there is, and the line item that shows it – did I say $35 million? Probably it's $32 million this year on student loan relief.

But there's a total of $80 million including that $32 million which goes out for maintenance grants, special-needs bursaries, Alberta opportunity bursaries, achievement scholarships, and an additional $23 million for the heritage scholarships. So the $105 million and the $35 million, just two of many numbers which add up to a whole lot of student relief and student assistance in this province. Then, of course, we add in the money that the federal government puts into the process, which is a considerable amount of money, and that means $480 million going to students this year in this province for student assistance.

The loan maximum, asking about providing information for a university student: how much is left over? The programs provide for variable natures. Obviously, you have single students who are just leaving home, single students who are still living at home, married students, married with children – I guess that's a TV show or was. But there are many variables as to students and how much they get for cost of living. The long and short of it is that cost of living is often a lifestyle choice as much as anything. The question is: is there sufficient for a student to be able to afford appropriate living accommodation, appropriate food accommodation, appropriate supplemental living expenses?

The cost-of-living allowances are on the low side. Students raise that as an issue. The Students Finance Board has raised that as an issue. That's an issue we'll probably have to deal with, and I'm sure that's an issue that will come out loud and clear in the affordability review process, and it may be something that needs to be addressed over the longer term.

Again, I would go back to the fact that it is a variable expense. It's something that you can do a lot towards dealing with yourself as a student. For example, you can get a part-time job if you want to have a higher quality of life or a higher standard of living. You can do as many of us did when we were at university. I'm sure, hon. member, that when you went, you had to mitigate your living costs, so you probably shared accommodations, as I did.

I lived in a house where we had 15 students in the house. It only had four or five bedrooms, but there were 15 of us living there. In fact, the room that I lived in, there were three of us. I chose to live in that room because, quite frankly, I couldn't afford a higher level of accommodation. But I did want to go to school, and I did want to live at or near the university instead of living with my aunt, so I made the choice to move out of my aunt's house. She lived in the west end. I moved into a fraternity house at the university, and I lived in a room with two other people. That was a quality of life choice that I made. It would have been a much, much, much better quality of life, if you measured it in terms of space and place, to live at my aunt's place. In fact, she would have made the meals. But those are choices you make.

I was chairman of a housing corporation at the university for a number of years, providing student housing for members of a fraternity and others who wanted to rent a place. It's interesting how the lifestyle choices change over time. Now you can't rent a double room very easily. People don't want to live two to a room. They like to live in a single room, and they need a place to plug in their computers and things like that. Things change.

The bottom line is that cost of living is important. The cost of going to school is something we need to look at. We need to do the affordability review. We need to make sure that it's not hazardous for someone to go to school, that they're not starving to death when they go to school. But there's a balance between how much society pays for the education and how much a student and their family pay. It's the students themselves who drive the question of the quality of life that they want or need to have in order to go to school. So that's a very important part of the equation. I don't say that to diminish at all the need to have appropriate cost of living, to be able to look at it across the province and say: how do we supplement it in areas?

Indeed, students can supplement across the province. If they live in a high-income area or a high-cost area like Fort McMurray, for example, they can always afford themselves the appeal route to supplement the amount of resources because their cost of living is higher than in other areas.

Tuition rebate. What will happen next year? Good question. Don't know. Would like to know, so we're going to spend a good year looking at it to say: what are the costs of going to school? What are the finances to go into those costs? How do we make sure that costs and finances are not a barrier to a student getting an education? Tuition is part of that package, but it's not the be-all and the end-all. Tuition is one of the costs. If you're coming from rural Alberta to a residential college or university in Edmonton or Calgary or even Lethbridge or some other place, the cost of living and the cost of travelling to school and the other costs are as big or greater a barrier than the tuition costs. So they have to be looked at in context.

The $43 million that we put in this year was essentially to hold things steady for the year so we could have a focused review on the cost of going to school, and we've put in, as well, a substantial increase in the operating budgets for the institutions. So our clear expectation is – and I think all the institutions know this – that they will not do a double bump next year. But in terms of the overall context of how we get to how much tuition cost they should charge and how it gets paid for, it's part and parcel of that review process.

Access to the future fund. I love to talk about the access to the future fund. It's a wonderful concept, a concept which was originally brought to me – of course, I lived through this concept once before because I was on campus in the early '70s and graduated in the '70s, and there was a triuniversity fund.

Mr. Dunford: So you're the guy that got all the cheap tuitions, eh?

Mr. Hancock: I got the cheap tuitions. But you know something? I didn't earn as much when I graduated. So even though my costs of going to school were less, the return on my investment was substantially lower at the time. So it all balances out, of course.

I think I was talking about the access to the future fund. Well, how this idea came to us as a government was that in the '70s – that's where I was; I was in the '70s – there was a triuniversity fund. In fact, the assistant deputy minister of adult learning joined government at the time to administer that fund. Unfortunately, it was a fund that was spent down rather than an endowment. So the difference between that fund and this fund is that this is an endowment fund, not a spend-down fund, and this is a fund which is going to be available to all institutions and everyone in the postsecondary sector, not just the universities. But apart from those two substantial differences the concept has been there before and has been very useful.

So we have the Bannister chair in business at the University of Alberta. Now, why would I say the Bannister chair? Well, because Harold Bannister came to government about two and a half or three years ago with a concept.

I'll have to continue this later, I guess.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to put a few comments on the record and ask a few questions of the Minister of Advanced Education during this Committee of Supply debate on the Ministry of Advanced Education budget. Just a few questions that I have been keeping in my little notebook. One is: why do we see the capital plan going down? We're seeing cuts to the allocations: in '04-05, $228 million; in '05-06, $111 million, for example. So I'm just wondering why we're seeing that. I mean, I think at some point the figure $10 billion was being tossed around as the infrastructure deficit in the postsecondary system, so I'm very concerned to see cuts to allocations there.

The next thing that's occurred to me is: can the minister provide us with information? This ministry, in fact, during my time here has been one ministry, then two ministries, back to one ministry, and it was two ministries before that. So we seem to get into this cycle with the government breaking it apart and putting it back together. The interesting part of it, Mr. Chairman, is that the money never goes down. So when it breaks apart to create two departments, there's great justification that, well, you know, now we've got two office spaces and two deputy ministers and two of this and two of that, so we need more money. But when it comes back together again, guess what? It doesn't reduce. In fact, it goes up.

So in the minister's office we've got a 42 per cent increase; deputy minister's office, 100 per cent increase; finance and admin services, 10 per cent; communications, 28 per cent. What gives? They should have saved us money putting these two departments back together, and we've got in some cases some fairly substantial increases. So I'd like comment and justification on that, please.

I do appreciate the efforts by the government to put more money into postsecondary education. The struggle that I see is one of trust. We know that there has been, however you want to term it, a starvation in this sector for some time, severe cutbacks, very low maintenance. However you want to describe it, the advanced education sector has been on a pretty low-cal diet for a long, long time. Again I'll note here the infrastructure deficit that's been created as well.

So now we have the government promising to put all kinds of money in, but it's in a lot of different piecemeal ways and a lot of sort of this fancy project and that fancy project or program. What I'm seeing is mistrust from Albertans going: does this really mean that we're going to get more money and it's going stay, or is this somehow not going to turn out the way that we want?

I hear the minister talking about a three-year commitment. In fact, it's laid out in the budget books, but it's going to take a lot more than three years to restore what we had, to come back to the level that we had in advanced education, and more than that to achieve any kind of excellence in these areas. If I could get him to comment briefly on what the longer term vision of either this minister or the government is, I'd appreciate it. Let's talk 10 years out; let's talk 20 years out. I appreciate that there's a three-year plan here, but if we go through a three-year plan and then we're all going to tighten our belts again, then we did not even catch up to where we were before.

The Liberal plan for the use of surpluses contained two very specific investments into postsecondary education. One, of course, was the postsecondary endowment fund, which we now call the legacy fund. The government more or less took the whole idea and used it for their access fund, which is fine. I'm happy to let them take that idea. It's all for the good. We also had that an additional 5 per cent of any future surpluses would go specifically into the arts and humanities because we recognize that this is a group that doesn't fall comfortably, doesn't fall at all actually, into that sort of research-based, attract outside money to sponsor chairs. It just doesn't fall comfortably into that category like science does, for example, and even the maths. You just don't get a company that's really interested in sponsoring a chair in philosophy or French language or the fine arts, for example.

So those areas have really suffered severe cutbacks, and nobody is stepping up to the plate on them, which is why we as Liberals recognized that we still need a world where we have artists and philosophers and English majors and people who study languages and anthropologists. We believe that that's important for our society, and we didn't want that sector to continue to fade, frankly. We specifically targeted money there to help address that problem. I'm wondering if the minister, in any kind of blue-sky-envisioning exercises he did, if he or his government ever looked at addressing that imbalance with the arts and the humanities versus the other sectors, that are a bit sexier and attract that kind of investment dollar and research dollar that is so sought by the universities now, frankly, directed to be sought by the government, who values these things and I think even somewhere has a performance measurement based on whether they can attract those kinds of research dollars. That just doesn't happen in the arts and the humanities.

I appreciate that there is a Lois Hole scholarship that is going to benefit four students to the tune of $5,000. But, you know, that would barely cover their tuition depending on which faculty they're in, and that's not addressing that whole range of educational opportunities and contributions to our culture and society as a whole that I'm talking about.

The minister has talked a lot about creating those spaces, and he's made it very clear that we are not to expect actual spaces, that he's looking at a combination of virtual spaces and other creations of access for students to be able to learn. I'm wondering if he has anything that he can table before the House that's showing us a successful version of this done somewhere else. Has any other country or province engaged in this? Can he give us some kind of success story or cost-benefit analysis or study in any way, shape, or form? Again, this is part of the trust factor. We're going out a bit on a limb here believing that these spaces are going to be created virtually. We want to know that that's going to have the effect that we think it's going to have.

I'll just give you a short example, Mr. Chairman. A long time ago when the cutbacks first started, the government had a saying: we're going to give people a hand up, not a handout. It was a great choice for a spin, for a slogan for the government to use because it really sounded good, and lots of people started singing that song along with them. But I think for many of those that were on the receiving end of that, it really meant something far different than what was being said.

What we saw years down the road were things like increased numbers of children on the child welfare rolls, which I think can be partly attributed to the cuts in the social insurance and a number of families and people being removed from the social assistance rolls. So, you know, great slogan, but it didn't turn out the way that most of us thought it was going to. I'm a little concerned that we're getting the same thing here. Great slogan, great idea, sounds like it's going to do what we want it to do, but not too sure that that's where it's going to end up. So I'm looking for anything the minister has – and surely he must have had something – that can give us some backup, give us something to prove that this is, in fact, a workable idea.

A number of the institutions in my constituency and, indeed, many of my constituents are in need of ESL training. There are various programs that are offered through the government. I would argue not enough. On the one hand, we say that we want new workers coming in here and making their homes here, and people often complain to me – like every time I'm speaking to a group – that the information that they were given in their home country about what the possibilities were here in Alberta is vastly different from what, in fact, is reality. They're very frustrated that their foreign qualifications are still not recognized here.

I don't know where foreign qualifications rests any more. It's been moved around so much in the government. Maybe it's under Advanced Education, maybe not, but it's an integral part of welcoming new Canadians into our social and educational and working fabric and helping them to get up and running so they are working with us and thriving in their own life, making a good living, raising their children.

I've always felt that we don't do enough ESL training, but tied in with that very much is that I also get a lot of concerns expressed by people about the level of subsistence that they're allowed while they go to school taking these various ESL courses or sort of make their way into the workplace, bridging courses that are offered, particularly by NorQuest College but also by some other institutions.

So two issues there. One, are we looking at offering additional ESL training? Is it possible that we could look at underwriting or giving more funding to those specialized, business jargon courses? I mean, every business has its lingo, has its jargon, and it's very difficult when you're speaking a second language to be able to pick up those buzzwords that are very specific to the area that you work in and specific to the idiom that you're in. If you come here speaking Russian, it's darn hard for you to pick up the buzzwords in the engineering field, for example, because your Russian ones aren't the same in English. They use different words.

So there are a number of levels of ESL that I'm questioning here: base funding for ESL, just the amount that we fund; specialized ESL for, you know, high-functioning professionals that are working hard on a second language to move and be very successful in their professions; the recognition of foreign qualifications and whether we're going to get enough support and funding into those areas to work again at a useful level. I can't believe how long that department or agency has been in existence and how low a profile it has and how many complaints I hear about foreign qualifications not being recognized. It may not be your area, but it ties into part of what we're doing here.

Also, the subsistence level of funding that is available for students attending ESL is low. You know, if we thought SFI was low, they're right in that range. Some of these students are trying to live on, like, $300 or $400 a month is my understanding, and then there's their tuition level. So we're losing folks that we could have functioning at a much higher level in our society and from which we all gain because we can't expend a few bucks at the beginning. It's another instance of being penny-wise, pound-foolish. We're being too cheap on the front end, and it's costing us a lot in human resources on the back end.

I'm wondering about the health centre funding that was received by Grant MacEwan Community College. How far ahead does this commitment go? Is the government going to hang in there? Now, this is partly an infrastructure question, I know, but is Advanced Education envisioning right through to the completion of this project and, indeed, to the rest of the projects that Grant MacEwan is envisioning as part of their downtown campus? Again, I don't want to see promises for long-term stuff that just never comes to fruition. How far has the minister gone in concrete plans on this? And if it's only three years, fine. Let us know. At least that tells us where we're at.

There's something else I want to question the minister about that's come up recently with this idea, in the universities anyway, of creating a position called lecturer, which I understand is a non research-based worker in the university system. I am really concerned about this and what it's saying or what I read into what it's saying about the government's understanding and value of universities as places of higher learning, of research, of challenge, of thought, in fact.

If we now downshift because we need cheaper people to teach the courses and somehow participate in a mortarboard factory, and they're just supposed to stand in front of the class and churn out that learning to whoever is sitting in front of them without understanding the content, I'm really concerned that we're moving away from the idea of institutions of higher learning and that we are getting more and more into the production of specified degrees as set out by the private sector. That's my overriding concern about what I'm seeing here.

When I was told about this idea of a lecturer – you know, we've seen that in a number of ways. The Solicitor General is still kind of thinking about these deputy constables, which would do a lot of the same functions as a police officer but get paid less. Then there's the question about: well, do they carry guns or not? In the university system we're now talking about . . . [interjection] Yeah. Well, we won't have the lecturers carrying guns. No.

Again, there's talk about a lesser level, somebody doing most of the same work of a higher paid individual, but this individual has – what? I don't know. Less training? They get paid less, certainly. I think that changes what we're doing with our universities, and I'm really concerned about what this signals as a long-range, value-based outlook from the government. I'd like to have the minister talk a little bit about what he's seeing there. I think ultimately that compromises intellectual freedom, and I think it takes away the challenge that we need to be coming out of our postsecondary institutions, to challenge us all about how we think about things. I don't think they should be mortarboard factories, and I particularly do not think they should be driven by the private sector, but that's what I'm starting to think I'm seeing.

I just don't understand why this government insists on constantly trying to dumb down a profession and pay it less. What is wrong with people earning a decent or a good living doing what they were trained to do? What's wrong with that? Why do we constantly have to put in a junior level of something and pay them less for doing more or less the same job? It's just wrong. That's a personal expression of concern from me.

Another thing that the Liberals were talking about during the election that I got great reception on was blue-skying. Since we've got so much money, we could be extraordinary. We could set stuff in place today that would just make us blow everybody away. You know, we have the ability to be astounding, and I'm not seeing that kind of vision coming from the government.

One of the things that I'd looked at and had tried was the idea of having the second year of university provided free; in other words, no tuition. Not the first year but the second year because it's the second year where people seem to stumble, where they figure out that they've chosen the wrong path of learning, and they don't have the money now to go back and start over. They kind of have to plow ahead, or they've run out of their savings, and they're going to have to take time off to go and work.

It seems to be the second year where it's tougher for folks, and that was the one where I was thinking: well, gee, if we looked at tuition free for the second year, how far ahead would that put us? I started to look at some of the innovation that was happening in Sweden and some of the Scandinavian countries, and that was starting to look very interesting. Now, I didn't have time to completely follow that through, but did any of that sort of visioning come up as the minister looked at what to do to reinvest into Advanced Education?

I've given some very specific questions there and then quite a bit of questioning of his vision for the future of education. So I'll take my seat now and listen carefully to his response. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, some interesting comments. But I want to go back to where I left off because there was one question I hadn't fully answered from the hon. member earlier, and that's with respect to the access to the future fund, the $250 million that was put in this year.

I think I was at the point where I was saying that Harold Bannister, whose family had endowed the Bannister chair in the '70s, had come to us several years ago saying: wouldn't this be a great idea in the centennial year to put in place an endowment fund? In fact, the Edmonton-Riverview Progressive Conservative Constituency Association, if I may say that, brought a resolution based on that proposal some time later to an annual meeting of the Conservative Party, actually – I think it was two years ago now – and it was endorsed I believe unanimously, but I could be wrong on that. If it wasn't unanimous, it was certainly very strongly endorsed.

I know that I had a number of conversations with Harold and with other members of government and talked about how we might move to endowing the future with the unbudgeted surplus revenues that were coming in because as a Conservative government, as any prudent government would do, when you have a volatile revenue stream like royalty revenue from oil and gas and revenue from land sales, which varies dramatically over time, it's not prudent to put your base budget on spending all of that revenue, nor is it appropriate to spend all that revenue on current Albertans.

Some people have said: "Well, it's our money. Send us a cheque." Well, it's not. It belongs to future Albertans as much as it belongs to us, so we have to find a way to manage those nonrenewable resource revenues in a way that builds the future. Again, we checked with Albertans through the It's Your Future survey and were told that Albertans wanted us to invest in the future. They wanted to invest in priority areas of health care and education, they wanted to invest in infrastructure, which serves the future, and they wanted us to help build the future.

That's where the endowing the future concept built from. The Liberals like to say that it was part of their election platform. Well, they must have been listening to one of the constituents in Edmonton-Riverview who was talking about it long before they were. But it doesn't matter whose idea it was because it was a good idea. We don't need to fight over whose idea it was because now the idea because of this government is being implemented and implemented in a way which really will truly endow the future.

Now, the $250 million is a bare minimum. It's a start. No question about that. Because we are budgeting revenue on a prudent basis, there can be an expectation, there probably should be an expectation in any given year – in fact, in the last two years we've seen that – where the prudent budgeting of resource revenue is outstripped by the actual amount of resource revenues. So while we're budgeting I think it's $42 a barrel for oil as a forecast – and everybody knows that forecasting oil prices, forecasting gas prices is a very difficult thing to do. We're forecasting oil at $42 a barrel and, I think, gas at $5.60 or so, $5.80. We know that the price of oil has been over $50 a barrel for the last couple of months and has been as high as $57 a barrel but as low as just over $50 a barrel, so the volatility is even seen there.

So it's not prudent to put in the budget, you know, $55 a barrel for oil and then say: "Okay. We're allocating that surplus to the fund." It is prudent to say: $42 a barrel for oil and $5.60 or whatever it is for gas. That gives us a surplus over and above the $4.75 million that's being taken into revenue for program spending in terms of capital dollars and those sorts of things and allows us, then, to say: "Well, there's $250 million that can go into the access to the future fund, which actually we hadn't intended to budget for – it is to come out of the surplus revenue – and, by the way, $500 million to the heritage medical research fund."

So a strong start but just a start on endowing the future. The promises we made: $500 million to the heritage medical research fund, which the Premier announced in January. That's about advancing our education because that's about driving research and development of research in this province. That brings the best and the brightest to this province to teach, to advance knowledge, all the things that the Member for Edmonton-Centre was concerned about in terms of cookie-cutter approaches and mortarboards. Well, no, I'm sorry. That's not the reality in this province now. That's not the reality in this province in the future.

The reality in this province is that we had the foresight as a government some 30 years ago to set up the heritage medical research fund, which has paid dividends in this province in terms of the amount of research that happens in the medical area, and now we're topping that up with another $500 million. So that's endowing the future. Putting another $500 million into the engineering and science research fund, colloquially known as the ingenuity fund, to drive research in that area, which again will bring and attract the best and the brightest to this province so that that research drives learning, drives knowledge, and drives teaching – that's an enhancement, too, and that $500 million is in Bill 1.

The $1 billion to the heritage scholarship fund, enhancing a scholarship fund that was set up by an earlier Premier and Progressive Conservative government, I might say. The demands on that heritage scholarship fund have outstripped the supply, so it's very prudent to endow the future by saying: "We'll put a billion dollars in. It'll be an endowment. We'll spend appropriately out of that on an endowment basis so that the fund remains there in perpetuity and continues to grow and continues to provide that sort of funding, that scholarship and bursary funding, for Alberta students."

Of course, the access to the future fund, the $3 billion access to the future fund. No one else in this country, that I'm aware of, has promised $5 billion to enhancing, to endowing the future. No one has put away the money that's been put away already in terms of the heritage medical research fund and the ingenuity fund, and no one has promised the $5 billion. And not just promised it. There was some skepticism in my critic's voice earlier when he was asking: when will we see it? It's in the act. The act says that there will be $3 billion.

Actually, the hon. member brought forward an amendment to the act to try and take the $3 billion out of the act, and I said to him: "No, no. Leave it in. Leave it in. Hold our feet to the fire. Make sure that we contribute that $3 billion to the fund." It's in the act, and by being in the act, Albertans know that that's a commitment that this government has made to build that fund out of surplus revenues, out of the nonrenewable resource revenues.

Yes, because we recognized out of the current projections that $250 million could go in and that that will drive out under the spending rule $11 million, we've put the $11 million into the out-years in the budget in each year as spending. But I don't think we should be under any illusions. If the oil and gas revenues continue as they are, that fund will be built, and that fund will drive out $135 million, and it can come none too soon, Mr. Chairman, because people are already lining up. People are already calling and saying, "I want to make a gift to the university or to the college" or "We've been in discussions." The colleges, certainly, and the universities are calling and saying, "Somebody has stepped up to the plate, and we've been talking to them, but this access to the future fund has encouraged them to finalize the gift because they know it'll be matched, and they want to know that the money that they'll provide will be matched."

These aren't gifts that will drive specific private-sector control of the universities because the universities are under board governance. They have academic independence. They set their quality standards. They're not driven by the private sector. These are people who have earned money in this province and want to give some of it back. These gifts are coming from people who have benefited from the strong economy in this province and have earned money in this province or as a result of an education they've gotten in this province.

I'm going to get to the answers to your questions. Honest I will. Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, who had some skepticism in his mind, should put his mind at ease because there's the commitment in the act. It's there. This government has made the commitment that surplus revenues will go to the fund. They're going to have to go to the fund faster than anybody might think because . . .

Mr. Dunford: He can sleep at night.

Mr. Hancock: He can sleep at night indeed. He can sleep at night knowing that advanced education is in good hands with this government.

We not only have made the commitment to endow the future, Mr. Chairman. We've made the commitment in our strategic plan, which we've published – this is the second year that it has been published – indicating that in our 20-year look forward, advancing learning is a key component of unleashing innovation, leading learning, competing in a global economy, and making Alberta the best place to live, work, and visit. Endowing the future is critical to the success of that program. So he can rest easy.

Now, Edmonton-Centre wanted to know about the capital plan and why it might be going down. What the hon. member should know is that we have changed the way we budget capital, so instead of having a finite number each year that has to be spent or it's lost, driving projects in an inordinate way or an inappropriate way, we have a long-term capital plan. Capital that's budgeted can flow through that capital plan. We've talked about a $9 billion plan. That's a lot of money in anybody's books, $9 billion dollars to build infrastructure in this province, whether it's roads or whether it's hospitals or whether it's schools or, yes, indeed in the postsecondary area.

That capital is very necessary to build the labs so that research can happen. We have, for example, at both the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary health research innovation facilities going up. Those are going to advance learning and advance knowledge, and Edmonton-Centre was concerned about mortarboards being bought or some foolish notion. The reality is that research is happening. The ambulatory learning centre, a really novel partnership between Capital health and the University of Alberta to change the way that health education and health professionals learn and practise together, change the way that we deliver diagnostics and health services and how we learn more – that's in the capital plan, and that's going to go forward.

So the capital plan is a more fluid plan than ever has been allowed. We have a capital fund, so surplus revenues – that's where the challenge is going to be, the balance between surplus revenues going to building the future in terms of the capital infrastructure of the province, including postsecondary, and building the future by endowing the future in the endowment funds. What a good struggle to have: whether you build the future on the physical infrastructure so that you can build intellectual capacity or whether you build the future by endowing the future so that you can encourage a greater private-sector involvement in ingenuity projects like the Lois Hole digital library. What a wonderful, wonderful problem to have: how to split that up.

Talking about splitting up, the Member for Edmonton-Centre was concerned about the department being amalgamated into one and split into two and why the costs never go down, that they always go up. Well, I don't know what world she's lived in, but in the world that I live in, we've had huge technological improvements over the last 10 years, and technology costs money. One would expect that one would acquire some good technology so that you can do things better, cheaper, faster, so that you can give more information to more people.

In fact, we've gotten asked written questions from the opposition over the last couple of weeks that I've tried to address in terms of making sure that they have information about how many students receive student loans and how much they received in student loans and breaking them down, please, by institution and by default rate and all that sort of thing. Well, if you don't have the best in computing technology, you couldn't possibly even dream about getting that kind of information. You need to have management of information. That's just one way that costs go up, obviously.

While you can look at the numbers and say, "Well, you know, you've split the ministry and you've amalgamated and costs have always gone up," the reality is that costs do go up. What we do know is that again there's a Ministry of Advanced Education in this province, that there's a minister who's passionate about advanced education and will pursue that. We've built it into our strategic plan, and we've made it a number one priority this year, and it's going to be worth every single penny that gets spent on the office and the administration, I can tell you.

Cutbacks. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre talked about cutbacks. Well, I'm looking at numbers, Mr. Chairman, which indicate that we spent a little over a billion dollars on postsecondary education in '92-93 in this province, and we're spending a little over $1.9 billion projected in the 2007-08 budget. There was a period of time when we were going through some severe fiscal restraint, in 1995-96, when that number dipped below the one billion dollar mark, but since that year of '95-96 there have not been any cutbacks in advanced education. The budget has grown and grown substantially. In fact, the uptick on that chart is very impressive.

But I can say this. We have made a huge commitment. It's been a public commitment. It's in our 20-year strategic plan. We've published it. It's been in the business plan. It says that advanced education is a priority. It says that leading in learning is a fundamental pillar of the 20-year strategic plan. It says that unleashing innovation is another fundamental pillar. You can't unleash innovation unless you're leading in learning, unless you have the top researchers and the top people finding new ways of doing things. So I think that any skepticism about that should be clearly put away, and as my seatmate here indicated earlier, she should be able to sleep at night.

The question of pursuing excellence is clearly, clearly part of the goal of this government, pursuing excellence so that Albertans can compete in the global economy, so that we can have the quality of life. That addresses another of the issues that the hon. member mentioned, quality of life. Living in a province like Alberta is not just about going to work every day, although some of us get excited about going to work every day. I know I do. But it's not just about going to work every day. It's about the full range of quality of life. It's about safety in our community. It's about having a good education system so that our children can seize the opportunities that are here. It's about having a good health system, and yes, it's about the arts. It's about the quality of life that's provided on the arts and the cultural side of the agenda. Yes, those are very important parts of it.

Now, I don't know why the hon. member thinks that there's no money here to support that because the access to the future fund isn't restricted to engineering students. It's not restricted to building engineering facilities. That might happen, but it is available across the board.

Indeed, the scholarships that have been announced, not just the Lois Hole scholarships, which are a very important symbol of the respect that we have for the former Lieutenant Governor and her commitment to the arts and humanities, but also the other scholarships which we're putting in – yes, that's only four scholarships. That's modest. It was only one piece of it. The Lois Hole digital library, however, will expand the ability to transfer knowledge and print resources and to digitize print resources and three-dimensional resources right across the province, and that will be funded out of the access to the future fund.

One of the reasons we put that in the throne speech was to show the broad parameters of the access to the future fund, the capacity of that fund not just to match private gifts, which is a very important way of encouraging people to give back to their community and to help build their community, but also to show the way in which the fund can be used on ingenuity and new ways of transferring knowledge, new ways of delivery, those sorts of things. So a very important part.

Also, the billion dollars going into the scholarship fund will be able to afford opportunities for students right across the board, not just in engineering, although certainly in trades, where we want to encourage the trades. There will be more support for students in the trades and assistance to students taking the trades, but it's not limited to that.

Creating spaces. We're talking with stakeholders in the community, looking at best practices around the world, on how we deliver education in the 21st century. That's got to be a fluid approach. That's not something that I'm going to sit down and say: after three months in the department I have all the answers about how we advance education in the 21st century. Quite frankly, even someone with 35 years of experience in the department, I would suggest, would not have the temerity to sit down and say: I know all the ways that you can deliver education. No.

What we're talking about is working with people in our system, looking at best practices around the world, finding ways to make sure that every qualified Albertan who wants to advance their education – and quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, every Albertan is qualified to advance their education. What we need to have is a system which allows them to do that, indeed encourages them to do that.

Foreign qualifications was raised. The hon. member obviously missed that line in the budget which shows that the international qualifications assessment budget is going up by 37.8 per cent – I couldn't believe it when I looked it up – 37.8 per cent, from $677,000 to $930,000. That's another one of the untold stories that we have: international qualifications assessments. We have people who are ready, willing, and able to go anywhere in the world to assess qualifications if we need to bring people here to work in this province. I heard somebody earlier table an e-mail from somebody who is concerned that qualifications would go down. Indeed, that's not the case. We have our international qualifications assessment service, which makes sure that we can establish the qualifications, the credentials, of people from anywhere in the world, and we do that.

But we need to put more of a focus on prior learning assessment on international qualifications and make it more readily available. Indeed, I hear the complaints that the hon. member hears about people who come here with qualifications and can't work because they can't get entry, although we've added in the last little while 10 more internships, for example, for people who want to practise medicine here. Indeed, we need to work harder on those complaints because we need those talents.

English as a Second Language. Obviously, support for immigrants, developing an immigration policy for the province, working together with the Minister of Economic Development and the Minister of Human Resources and Employment so that we can have an immigration policy in this province which values people from other parts of the world, whether they've come to other parts of Canada first and then come here or whether they've come directly here. We need to value those talents, we need to welcome them, and we need to make sure that English is not a barrier to their success, specifically in the areas that they want to practise.

Mr. Chairman, I see that my time has come, so I'll have to continue answering those questions a little later.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Very quickly, Mr. Chairman. Thank you very much for recognizing me because I know there are many others who want to speak to this. But I did need to get on the record based on what the minister had to say about the access to the future fund, the $250 million commitment to actually put hard cash dollars in there as opposed to the $3 billion figure, which, in fact, is a cap, a floor, not a ceiling, and his comment that I moved an amendment to Bill 1 to try and remove that figure. I tried to remove that figure for the precise reason that it is a ceiling, a cap, and not a starting point.

So while the minister likes to talk in glowing terms about getting it up there to that $3 billion mark, where it produces $135 million of investable income, the fact remains that the bill as it's written now – and that amendment was voted down in this House – doesn't commit the minister to anything. It says that up to $3 billion may be put into that endowment fund. There is not a commitment beyond the $250 million in this document. There is not a commitment to put another dime into that endowment fund. I know the minister wants to; I can see it in his eyes. I know that he has every good intention, and I know that the minister is passionate about advanced education. I also know that from time to time Premiers shuffle their cabinets, and maybe his successor isn't going to be as passionate about advanced education as he is.

Mr. Chairman, a recent opinion survey of Canadians on who they trust in various professions revealed that 16 per cent of Canadians trust politicians. We were at the bottom of the barrel. That is precisely why I want the minister to commit to a program and a schedule of putting money into the postsecondary education endowment fund, the access to the future fund, so that the people of Alberta can see that he really is going to make good on his intentions, on his promises. We don't have a commitment yet.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would hazard a guess that the statistics that the hon. member has used, saying that 16 per cent of people don't trust politicians . . .

Mr. Taylor: Do trust.

Mr. Hancock: Do trust. Yes. I would suggest that most don't. I would suggest that the biggest part of that problem has to do with much of the mudslinging and things that go on in this process. We should all make a commitment to do a better job of holding all of us up as very trustworthy in doing the people's work because I don't know anybody who's run for office and been elected to this office who did it for self-aggrandizement or for their own personal gain. In fact, anybody would be an idiot to run for this job for their own personal gain. With the amount of time and effort that goes into this job, you could make a lot more money in the private sector.

So I just wanted to say that because you throw it out saying: "People don't trust you. Why should we trust you?" People don't trust people because you're always talking about the fact that people don't trust you when, in fact, you should be talking about that we've put the commitment into the bill which says that we're going to put in $3 billion. Yes, we ought to put in more than $3 billion. I would hazard a guess – and this would be only a guess and not a commitment – that when we get to the $3 billion or even before we get to the $3 billion, the emphasis in the system is going to be so strong and the number of good projects is going to be so high that we ought to add more to the endowment fund to endow the future of postsecondary in this province. I would aspire to that. I think you aspire to that.

That was the purpose you brought forward the amendment, I think a well-meaning amendment, to take the $3 billion out of the act and, instead, allow us to aim higher. Well, I aim higher, but I also know that if we put $3 billion into the act, people can see that as a commitment to put $3 billion into an access to the future fund, and that's a commitment we should aim at.

It's also interesting – and I raise this with a little bit of trepidation – that when we talk about a cap on tuition fees, everybody says that it's a target and everybody's going to get there, but when we put a cap in the $3 billion fund, you say: what's the commitment you're going to make to get there? I mean, at least we should be consistent in our critique.

Mr. Chairman, there were a number of other things that I wanted to address because I think it should be clear for every member of this House and certainly in the public that this government is committed to endowing the future. We've made a commitment to $5 billion out of nonrenewable resource revenue to endow the future. We've committed in the budget documents to put $500 million into the heritage medical research fund. We've indicated $250 million into the access to the future fund, and we have Bill 1, which talks about the billion dollars for the heritage savings trust fund, which talks about $3 billion in the access fund, which talks about $500 million into the ingenuity fund. That's a commitment that people can take to the bank.

So I hope we can put that to rest because, yes, I would have loved to have said, "Let's budget for a $50 price of oil, and let's show that that excess revenue is going to be in there." I would have even loved to have a line in the budget documents which said that 50 per cent of excess revenues are going to go into the fund. What Albertans know with Bill 1, the Premier's commitment hopefully when it passes this Legislature, if the members of this Legislature agree to pass it – and I hope they will – is that Bill 1 makes a commitment on this government and this Legislature to put money into that fund, $3 billion, and $1 billion for the heritage scholarship fund. That is a commitment that's not been made by anybody else that I know of from public money across North America.

The hon. member raised in discussion a number of times endowment funds from private universities in the States. I think he mentioned Princeton and Harvard, private universities in the States, which have had some 200, 300 years to build endowments and most of those endowments being built by graduates sending their money back. Well, what we're planning to do, Mr. Chairman, and what we've set in motion here with this endowment fund is a way in which our universities, our colleges can go to their grads. And we're seeing that: Grant MacEwan yesterday, the largest donation in its history, a $5 million donation to the health care learning centre from Bill and Mary Jo Robbins, residents of Houston, Texas, who have business operations in Alberta, giving a little bit of money back, encouraged to do so, money which presumably could be matched by an access to the future fund, starting that process that the Princetons have had 200 and 300 years to build those funds. We're starting that process in Alberta with this endowment process, and it's going to be exciting. It's going to be very exciting.

I was talking earlier about foreign qualifications and ESL training, and I want to mention that the Member for Edmonton-Centre is bang on with some of her comments with respect to maximizing human potential, making sure that immigrants to our community can not only learn the English language and have access to ESL programs but through NorQuest and institutions like NorQuest can find job-specific language, which will help them be successful in their jobs. We know that at NorQuest, for example, if you want to take a nursing assistant program, you can take a course which will assist you with the language specific to that job. Those are exciting things, and we need to do more of that.

We need to work with Human Resources and Employment with respect to living allowances for people who need to be supported while they advance their education. Grasping that human potential, helping Albertans be the best they can be: that's what this is all about. That's what we aspire to, and that's certainly what I'm working with my colleagues in government to achieve.

The Grant MacEwan health centre has been talked about, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre raised the issue of capital planning for that. It would be absolutely ludicrous for us to announce that we're supporting the first year of building for a project like that and not have any intention for the second year or the third year. Obviously, that's part of a capital plan, and one of the beauties of the capital planning process that we now have available to us is that we can cash flow that. We can say to an institution: "That's an approved project. Yes, you can go ahead starting to do it." Or we can even say: "Well, go ahead and do the planning. Do the planning on a Bow Valley College. Go ahead and get that done."

Then before we make a commitment to the growth, obviously, there are a whole bunch, 30-some institutions in this province – and that's just the postsecondary institutions – and all of them have capital plans, so obviously there has to be prioritization. There has to be a strategic approach to how we move forward with them, but we need to work with each institution with respect to their aspirations. Obviously, once we say, "Yes, you can go ahead and build that building," the cash flow for that building has got to be there over the period of time of its build or the period of time that the postsecondary institution can process it.

The hon. member raised issues about a position called a lecturer, and I hope she's not suggesting that as Minister of Advanced Education I should go over to the university and tell them how to staff up or what kind of staff they should have, what sort of academic staff they should have, what they should be asking them to teach or not teach. Surely she wasn't suggesting that.

What I think she was trying to address, though, is the need for quality in our institutions at every level. In some cases that will be quality teaching, exclusively quality teaching. In some cases that will be research and a knowledge search, that we can advance knowledge. That's what the ingenuity fund and the heritage medical research fund are funding research in. There are all sorts of other research grants.

In fact, our universities are doing very, very well at bringing in research grants so that we can advance knowledge. We have people doing research and also teaching and involving graduate students in the research. We have our colleague from Foothills-Rocky View, who indeed was a political science professor, I believe, at the University of Calgary and, I'm sure, did some research in that capacity and added to the base of knowledge and wrote articles, some articles that I've read, Mr. Chairman, and that, I would say, are well worth reading. Some I may have to review again.

Mr. Chairman, government is not about telling the universities or the colleges how to do their job in terms of the quality of learning and the quality of teaching. It's about making sure that we understand that there needs to be quality of learning and quality of teaching. There needs to be those opportunities and appropriate funds in place to ensure that that happens and to ensure that they can do that, that the research happens that drives the creation of new knowledge and the ability to transmit that knowledge, that we have the technology available so that where it's appropriate, knowledge can be transferred in an easier mechanism.

My first class in university was an economics 200 class, and there were about 350 people in it. We had an excellent instructor, but she did stand at the front of the class and gave a lecture.

Now, with modern technology I might be able to actually access some of that knowledge electronically and perhaps have a better opportunity to be face to face with the instructor in a discussion group rather than sitting in a lecture hall with 350 people. I don't know. Different people learn differently. What we have now are many different ways of delivering educational opportunities, and we ought to be able to access them all, and we ought not to critique them by saying: well, we're dumbing down the system by hiring a lecturer. Sometimes a lecturer might be appropriate, but far be it from me to tell a university who they should hire or what they should hire or what their qualifications should be.

I think that addressed most of the questions I had, Mr. Chairman, so I'll take my seat and see if there are more.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wonder how much time is left. It's quite a sight to behold to see our Minister of Advanced Education talking about the future of advanced education in this province, talking about advanced education for the 21st century with such glowing words, such optimism, and such passion and commitment. I must say that it's a sea change in the way this Legislature has heard the minister responsible for Advanced Education talk about it in the past. So I'm with him. I share his passion for advanced education and wish him luck with his colleagues sitting around the cabinet table as he seeks support from them for his plans.

With respect to this budget certainly there are steps in the right direction, I must say. The 6 per cent increase in base funding is certainly something that will go some way in addressing the concerns of institutions in the postsecondary system, the advanced education system, from universities to colleges to technical institutes.

The Premier here was quoting the other day the, I think, vice-president or provost of the University of Alberta as saying how hugely good this news is, you know, for the whole system. I just want to add here the concern that the Council of Alberta University Students, CAUS, has. It had a less glowing view of the budget that we're discussing here today. They talked about the government taking baby steps instead of great strides in the postsecondary education system. I just wanted to put this on record so that there is an understanding of the way different parts of the system view where this budget is going, how good a news it is.

Certainly, the budget today, if we keep going in this direction at least on the monetary side, fiscal side, will help institutions begin to repair some of the damage that institutions have suffered not due to any of their fault but simply because of the chronic underfunding over the last 10 years that they have faced from year to year. The minister talked about a 2 per cent increase, you know, on the average over the last 10 years on an annual basis. The costs have been going up for each of these postsecondary institutions at a much faster rate. The number of students going there has been increasing. The programs that they're offering: the expectations are that they should have more and more programs.

So all the institutions have been falling seriously behind on an annual basis with respect to their annual budgets. As a result, they've had to respond and have done lots of things, the first of them, of course, was to continue to increase tuition fees at rates which students found unaffordable and unacceptable. They have been protesting about it. This government came up with a very innovative tuition fee policy, the 30 per cent cap. I heard and saw the former Minister of Advanced Education walking in with a cap in hand which said: tuition cap. Well, tuition cap or not, tuition fees have been going up 6 or 7 per cent every year.

The increase has been certainly considered unaffordable by students and seen as not sufficient by institutions because they began to see tuition fees as a cash cow. That's the only source that they had where they could raise more funds in order to meet the deficits that were caused by the government's deliberate underfunding of the institutions over the last 10 years. The result has been, as I said, an increase in tuition fees and the resulting increase in student debt loads. That's true here; that's true in other parts of Canada.

There have been shifts within the universities and colleges with respect to emphasis on programs. Cannibalization is a word that's used by academics. I met with representatives of the Faculty Association of the University of Calgary just a couple of weeks ago, and this word was used, the cannibalization of programs. When the government encourages or gives some incentives for the university to introduce a new program, the veterinary sciences college is one example, then the University of Calgary has to find funds from within in order to implement that particular program, to introduce that. In order for the University of Calgary to do that, they had to find monies within the system as is, take it away from existing programs and move it to a new program, a new college that's being set up there.

That's not the story just at the University of Calgary. That has happened in every institution, particularly at the university level. The University of Alberta is no exception to it. Funds have been going down for faculties of arts. Humanities programs have been cut back. Courses have had to be cancelled. Courses that were offered on a yearly basis which were needed for students to complete their degree programs on time began to be offered every alternate year to deal with the problem of unavailability of funds.

Faculty composition has changed dramatically over the last 10 years. More and more part-time teachers are being hired, more and more sessionals are being employed, and the full-time faculty numbers have been going down. Many sessionals have been hired on soft money, not on hard cash that is there from year to year. So there were uncertainties created within the institutions, the postsecondary system, with respect to faculty recruitment, faculty retention, the quality of instruction in classrooms.

The size. The minister said that when he was a student, in the first year he was in classes of 200, 250. That might have been an odd case then; now it is a regular happening, Mr. Chairman and Mr. Minister. It's not something to be celebrated. As a matter of fact, the drop-out rate from our universities and colleges is close to 40 per cent, according to the minister's own numbers here. These are students who qualify to get into college or university. They are not students who come with questionable academic records or background. They come with good preparation. They meet the admission requirements, the entry requirements. Yet 40 per cent of them do not complete their programs. Huge wastage of their resources, public resources, and a very great loss to the future of the province. The question must be asked: why is it that such high drop-out rates, such high rates of failing to complete, are there in the system? The minister hasn't really quite addressed that issue.

On the tuition fee issue, the minister has broadened the notion. He no longer wants to talk about a tuition fee policy as such; he wants to talk about affordability. I hope this is not a phrase that he will use in order to skirt talking about having a firm tuition fee policy in this province for our postsecondary students and postsecondary institutions. I hope he will tell this House that he will not encourage institutions in this province to continue to use increases in tuition fees to fund ever-increasing deficits in terms of their operation funds, that he will make a commitment to provide enough operating grants so that universities and colleges don't have to every year resort to huge increases in tuition fees.

I want to hear him talk about it not only in terms of, you know, the affordability in terms of the overall costs. Sure going to college or university is expensive. People have to pay money for their board and lodging, travel, all of these, particularly students who live away from major metropolitan centres. They have to leave home to come to a university or college to get their education. Their costs are certainly higher than the costs of those who live close to or in those metropolitan centres.

The issue of affordability must not allow this minister and this House and this government to take its attention away from addressing the question of tuition fee increases. Tuition fee increases have been used by this government as a matter of policy to fund institutions in this province; 30 per cent was a cap. That has been reached in some places. In other places it will never be reached because the costs are going up so dramatically that we will not be able to reach that level for many years to come in most of the institutions. But that doesn't mean, therefore, that tuition fees should be allowed to increase indefinitely and at a rate which students, 80,000 of them in this province, do not find an acceptable rate at which they should grow.

On the overall minister's vision about advanced education for the 21st century – and he used quite a bit of time when addressing the questions posed to him by other hon. members on the budget to talk broadly about his vision of the strategic plan and how the postsecondary education vision that he has fits into that. He talked, I must note, about this fluid situation, that he cannot talk specifically, that he can't talk in any firm terms about what the system should look like over the next 20 years, but he has ideas. I'm sure the minister has ideas, and that's fine. But is the minister willing to in fact create a public forum to talk about the shape of the future education system, the system of the 21st century that he talks about?

Albertans are well-educated citizens. They have ideas that they want to share with the government. They want to have an opportunity where they can freely talk about this, perhaps in the form of an independent commission. I want to ask the minister: will he be willing to commit to using the opportunity of setting up a commission such as I'm proposing, one somewhat similar to the Learning Commission? It did a splendid job of going around the province listening to Albertans – parents, students, teachers, school board members, academics, experts from all over the place – and came up with 90-some recommendations, one of which was about asking this government to establish, in fact, a postsecondary education commission along the lines of the Learning Commission, an independent entity that will hold public hearings.

The hearings will be public, and Alberta citizens from all walks of life, not just corporate executives, not just university presidents, not just members of the boards of governors but ordinary, regular Albertans will have an opportunity to come and speak to this commission, share their views, share their vision of where Alberta should be going in terms of designing a postsecondary education system, an advanced education system, which will be a matter of pride for all as it serves the needs of the 21st century as it unfolds before us. I ask the minister to respond to this.

There are many questions that need to be addressed as the advanced education system evolves, the issues, of course, of affordability, accessibility, that the minister himself has identified as two important issues; the issue of the expansion of the system – what parts should expand? – whether we need more universities. Do we need to put a cap on the number of universities that are there? There's the issue of the role and place for private, for-profit institutions as part of the system, and the minister has remained, unfortunately, relatively silent about his vision and his own view with respect to the presence and the growth that's taking place of the private, for-profit sector within the postsecondary system.

There are NAFTA implications in there. Once you allow these institutions to set up business in the province, how can you deny them public funds? Are there NAFTA implications? The point is not, Mr. Chairman and minister, to simply shake your head and say that you have no concerns about it, that that simply isn't the case. You haven't sought any firm legal opinion on it. You haven't heard in a public forum Albertans talk about the implications. I'm sure you'll get legal advice there too. The legal community will come forward to perhaps give you some advice on that.

These are questions that need to be asked. The role of the private sector, the private, for-profit sector within the system. There is a need to raise questions about governance. There is the Postsecondary Learning Act, which is an act which really centralizes the authority into the hands of the Minister of Advanced Education in ways which have been unknown in this province in the past. In debating that bill, we talked about one of the major problems with that act being the high degree of centralization of power in the hands of the minister.

I find the same problem with Bill 1 with respect to the way the minister wants to appoint the advisory council on the access fund. There's a concentration of powers into the hands of the minister, which, in my view, must be questioned and questioned seriously. Now, Albertans want to have a say in telling us, telling this Legislature, telling this government, telling this minister what kind of governance structure they want for their system: the governance within each institution, the governance across the province. Where should this power reside and how should it be shared among Albertans coming from various walks of life?

The issue, Mr. Chairman, with respect to advanced education for the 21st century which must be addressed by the commission such as the one that I'm talking about has to do with the role of the corporate sector in funding, in financing the system of advanced education. I just want to draw the attention of the minister – it's good bedtime reading for him, I think – to a book that has just been released two months ago, in February. It's called The Corporate Corruption of Higher Education, by Jennifer Washburn. A couple of brief comments on what's in this book. Barton Bernstein, professor of history, Stanford University, says this about this book:

This hard-hitting book will provoke controversy, upset rank-and-file citizens, and ignite the concern of faculty and alumni. Washburn raises fundamental questions: Who owns and controls university-produced knowledge? Who should own it and benefit from it?

Now, these are questions that need to be addressed. I am sure the minister in his own office can't address this. His able deputy minister: I doubt the deputy minister should be required or asked to address it. It's an issue that must be addressed by citizens of this province, to whom this system after all belongs. Let me give another quote here, by William Greider. He's the author of the book called The Soul of Capitalism. He's saying that

Jennifer Washburn's meticulous reporting and insightful analysis reveals how corporate intrusion is undermining academic freedom – and the foundations of scientific inquiry – within our nation's most prestigious institutions of higher learning.

He's talking about the U.S., but I'm sure it's a question that is pertinent for this province. It must be asked, must be addressed, and must be addressed comprehensively.

In the minister's plan, as I'm looking through his strategic plan here on Advanced Education, there's no concern with asking these questions. They're fundamental questions. We can keep on pouring more money into the system, but unless he asks some extremely important fundamental questions at the same time, we may find 10 years down the line that we have wasted some of those most precious resources that we are now committed to investing in the system.

The system needs a comprehensive, a close, and deep look at it. In this province it was in 1973 that the last comprehensive look was taken at both the K to 12 part of the education system and the postsecondary system. It's about time, 32 or 33 years later, that we commit ourselves to undertaking that kind of exercise. Albertans want to have input. Their input has proven valuable in the past, and I'm sure, if invited, they will enthusiastically participate and be able to contribute a great deal to setting the direction of the advanced education system for at least the first 20-some years of the 21st century that we have moved into already.

Mr. Chairman, I will conclude at this point and let some other hon. members have an opportunity to speak.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My comments relate to the postsecondary institutions that have taken in in good faith over the past couple of years students that have not been fully funded by the Department of Advanced Education. I'm wondering whether the minister could enlighten us as to whether or not the 2005-2006 budget makes provision for full formula funding for all of those students that have been unfunded and, secondly, whether or not there is some provision in the budget separate and apart from the 6 per cent increase in the operating funding for those unfunded students.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to ask the hon. minister what is in the budget for our independent universities. Independent colleges and universities contribute a great deal to the education of Alberta students. They are funded at a fraction of the rate of public institutions, and they build their own buildings and require no capital budgets, so they are much on their own as far as building their schools.

The independent schools are not affected by the tuition freeze that applies to the public universities. Public universities seem to be getting an increase in base funding to compensate for the tuition freeze that does not affect the independent schools. Will the independent schools get the same benefits this year or in the years to come? Does the budget allow the independent schools to catch up?

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was hoping to ask the minister a few questions relative to the Learning Commission. If I've got it straight, I think he talked earlier in the discussion about a framework for funding postsecondary education. This blanket went to a decentralized level to each institution to follow. What I was trying to get at last night, listening to the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development – I was wondering if the government as such, through the framework of funding that he was talking about, would ever consider some incentive funding.

When I looked at the Learning Commission, Mr. Minister, I looked at the need for aboriginal teachers, for example, and I looked also at the need for specialists in the area of remedial programs, career counselling, administration, and board governance. I was wondering, sir, if that could be covered under the framework, that institutions would be given an incentive nomenclature. For example, when I took my masters, I went there under the auspices of the government of Alberta having career counselling needs in the school system. That was the incentive: I would come into the institution, take training, but I had to serve three years in the school system that I had come from.

I see this as a particular challenge, and I think – and I'm sincere about this – that it's important that a government of the day take the initiative to show leadership where there are particular needs for incentive funding. For example, last night we talked about – and I know this is not related – the fine arts. There's a time when we have to stimulate and direct, I believe, and provide leadership. I do believe that in terms of the aboriginal framework – and I know the argument about federal funding and everything else on that. But I talked to a former dean of the faculty yesterday, and he said: why not have incentive funding to help this kind of initiative and get that whole thing looked at?

I'll just talk about two other things, and then I'll sit down, sir.

The question of seniors going back through extension programs. I know one of the things that we hear about extension programs is that they are self-sustaining, that they don't need incentive funding. But let me suggest, sir, to you that there are people out there that I know of, in my constituency for example, that lack the dollars to go on. I think it would be fortuitous for them if we could have some stimulation or some help where they can take courses in such things as legal matters, pastoral care, helping with taxes, advocacy, bereavement, those kinds of initiatives. I think it would be very, very interesting to have you look at that, sir, if I may. They will return: "We're not dead yet, although we may look like we are. Come back into our communities and serve a very sincere population that is there."

The other thing that's dear to my heart that's left out – then I'll just sit down very quickly – is the whole area of student services. I really, sincerely would like your insight into this because I think it's somewhere forgotten in many institutions, and maybe you could just share your experience as to how this is funded. I didn't have a chance to study the budget as much as I'd like to. How do we get money for that from institutions?

I'll sit down. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have other questions. I'll bring them up later on.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I realize that our time is short, so I just have one quick question for the minister. The Member for St. Albert just talked about incentive funding. I guess my question is somewhat similar. I noticed in the budget that there is almost $13 million that will be awarded to public postsecondary institutions through a performance envelope, and I think that's a great idea. I guess it's something that I feel is needed in our postsecondary institutions as well as perhaps in our K to 12 basic education. My question is: how will this work, and what is meant by a performance envelope? Perhaps the hon. minister could flesh out the details on that for us.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to commend the minister on the budget focus on advanced education.

My question is just regarding the yearly student loan limit, that's now increasing to $12,140. The increasing loan limits will put students further into debt. How is the government going to address affordability of postsecondary education? That's my question number one. I would love to hear some comment from the minister regarding students attending private universities in terms of financing, in terms of assistance because with private universities, we don't have to provide capital funding to them.

Perhaps, if you have time, you could comment on the foreign students in Alberta. How do we encourage them to come here and pay a lot of dollars to take their education from us and to build a good relationship down the road when they go back to their country and become the leaders there?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I think we're very short on time, so I will just put my questions forward. If I could get some answers in the future, that would be great.

My first question would be in regard to: would the minister care to make a comment on the fact that there is no money in the budget, as we can see it, for planned operational and capital growth? Is this going to be funded by tuition increases?

In conjunction with that, with regard to tuition we would like to ask about when we would see some stability and affordability put into the tuition fee question. With all of the money that's being put in, we still have tuition fees that have more than doubled in the last decade, and it's becoming increasingly unaffordable for many students to even consider going to postsecondary education, regardless of what endowments might be available to them.

As well, I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona did mention this, but, you know, it bears repeating. Why does our province have such a low completion rate for postsecondary education? We're approaching a 40 per cent noncompletion rate for postsecondary students, and this is unacceptably high. We would like to see something in the budget to address this specifically.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoons, I must now put the following question after considering the business plan and proposed estimates of the Department of Advanced Education for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006.

Agreed to:

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$1,582,176,000
Nonbudgetary Disbursements	$117,400,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Chairman, it is with a great deal of regret because I didn't get the opportunity to go on – I was going to say go on at length, but that would have been a bad comment – to answer some of the questions, but I will commit to answering the questions I didn't get to in writing.

I would move that the Committee of Supply rise and report and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, for the following department.

Advanced Education: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $1,582,176,000; nonbudgetary disbursements, $117,400,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn until 8 p.m., at which time we return in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:19 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 19, 2005 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 05/04/19
 head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'll call the Committee of Supply to order.

Before we do that, may we revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have several special introductions to make to you tonight, and I practised these names with my guests, but I'm sure that I'm going to get them wrong. It's a group that comes to us from the Mennonite Centre for Newcomers, and they are learning English and taking a tour of the Legislature tonight. I'm going to introduce to you Kyaw Myint – and he's from Syria, so we'll get him to rise – and Nobumasa Nakajima and Mayumi Nakajima. They are from Japan. We have Hong Nguyen, and she's from Viet Nam; Jin-Young Eom, and I believe that she's from Korea – I may have that wrong – and then Abdulla Alkhatib. They are accompanied by my son Courtney, who is helping them to learn English. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm deeply honoured to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the 99th Girl Guide association from my riding of Edmonton-Ellerslie, a long established association providing girls with opportunities, experiences, and long-lasting friendships. This wonderful group of 17 students and their chaperones are here this evening to tour the Legislature. They are seated in the public gallery. I request them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Seniors and Community Supports

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Before I begin, I'd also like to take this opportunity to introduce staff that are in my ministry, and they're in attendance here tonight. I have my deputy minister, Ken Wilson – I'm going to ask that you rise as I introduce you, Ken – also Chi Loo, my assistant deputy minister for housing services and who has been our chief financial officer as well; Dave Arseneault, assistant deputy minister for strategic planning in support of living; and many of you, of course, know my executive assistant, Zoe Kolbuc, from my office. I'd ask that you give them a warm welcome.

Mr. Chairman, I'm really pleased to be here to present the Ministry of Seniors and Community Supports 2005-08 business plan and the budget. I'd like to begin by providing an overview of our programs, as this is very much what this ministry is about and, of course, the many people that we serve. Then I'll be pleased, as well, to go through our budget items with you in detail along with how this budget will further enhance the programs and the services that we provide.

As many of you know here in the Assembly, community supports programs were added to this ministry just this past fall, and I'd like to mention that this was the first time that responsibility for disability programs was placed under one department. That's a fairly significant change with the ministry. Prior to the reorganization the former ministry of seniors was comprised of three key areas: seniors programs, housing for lower-income Albertans, and public guardian services.

The ministry and the number of people we serve changed significantly with the addition of the assured income for the severely handicapped program, persons with development disabilities, and community support systems. As of April 1, Mr. Chairman, responsibility for the Alberta Aids to Daily Living program was added to this ministry from the Ministry of Health and Wellness, and it was a welcome addition because that is where it will make the most sense, I think, at this time to be because of the change in the ministry's portfolio.

The vision for the new ministry is "a vibrant province where all Albertans live with dignity as full participants in society and experience the best possible well-being and independence." I'll briefly mention the ministry's four core businesses from the 2005-08 business plan. The first core business is to provide "services, programs, and planning for seniors and the aging population," the second is to provide "supports, services and planning for persons with disabilities," the third is to support "the provision and ongoing management of housing for lower-income Albertans," and the fourth core business is to provide "supports to enhance choice and well-being for clients of the Ministry."

With the expanded scope of the ministry total spending for Alberta Seniors and Community Supports will reach $1.6 billion in 2005-06, which is an increase, Mr. Chairman, of more than 12 per cent over last year's budget. More than $176 million in new funding for seniors programs, the renewal of the assured income for the severely handicapped, known as the AISH program, and provincial housing programs are highlights in this new budget.

But I'd like to begin with our seniors programs, Mr. Chairman. The budget renews our commitment to one of the most generous packages of benefits for seniors in the country. Although the focus of our benefit programs are on those seniors who are most in need of assistance, there are some benefits that are available to all seniors, such as premium-free Alberta health care insurance and Blue Cross coverage.

Approximately 143,000 seniors currently receive the Alberta seniors benefit, a program which provides a monthly cash benefit for eligible seniors. This year's budget increases the total spending on the Alberta seniors benefit program to $249 million to fund enhancements that were announced last year. As of July 1, 2004, increased thresholds made 17,000 more seniors eligible for cash benefits from the program while existing recipients have seen their monthly payments increase.

In addition to the Alberta seniors benefit, Alberta also has the special needs assistance grant program. Last year this program provided more than 35,000 payments to lower income seniors facing one-time emergency or extraordinary expenses. And I'm also pleased that this program will continue.

Part of our commitment to supporting our province's generous seniors benefits package includes $52 million in new spending to support three programs which you're aware of Mr. Chairman: the dental and optical assistance programs and the education property tax assistance program. About 80 per cent of the 336,000 seniors in Alberta will receive some assistance through the enhanced dental and optical assistance programs, and the maximum benefit is $5,000 coverage for basic dental health procedures every five years and up to a maximum of $230 for prescription eyeglasses every three years.

This year we are also pleased to announce a program for seniors looking for education property tax assistance. In 2005-06 we estimate that approximately 115,000 senior households will receive education property tax assistance, which protects them from year-to-year increases in the education portion of their property taxes. Under the new program seniors can apply to be reimbursed for the difference between the 2004 and 2005 education property tax amount. This year's budget includes $10 million for the education property tax assistance program.

As I mentioned earlier, the scope of the ministry has expanded, Mr. Chairman, from seniors and housing matters to include the assured income for the severely handicapped program. Approximately 32,000 Albertans rely on AISH and will be positively affected by this year's budget increases. We are increasing the AISH budget program by $80 million, bringing total spending to more than $488 million. Of this $80 million increase, $45 million will go toward implementing the MLA committee recommendations, and $35 million will address increasing program costs. This is a significant investment, Mr. Chairman.

Without getting into too many details about the MLA review, I would like to mention that last Friday, with the support of my colleagues here in the Assembly, I accepted the committee's recommendations to renew the AISH program. The AISH living allowance will be increased from $850 per month to $950 per month and $1,000 per month by April of 2006. These increases will cost approximately $40.3 million in 2005-06 and $62 million in 2006-07.

However, Mr. Chairman, renewing the AISH program is about more than just an increase in the monthly living allowance. It's about an entire package of benefits and helping those who need it the most. AISH clients will continue to receive a comprehensive health benefits package worth an average of $300 per month. That package is at no cost to the client and includes premium-free Alberta health care insurance, Alberta Aids to Daily Living supports, all prescription drugs, complete eye care, full dental care, emergency ambulance service, and essential diabetic supplies.

Last Friday we also introduced supplementary benefits as a new addition to personal income support through the AISH program. Among other things these supplementary benefits may include school supplies for children, utility arrears, medical supplies such as wheelchair repairs and batteries, and support for guide dogs. The supplementary benefits, which will be available starting in October, will cost an estimated 10 and a half million dollars to administer for the remainder of 2005-06 and $22 million next year.

We're also working to improve the earning power of AISH clients by increasing the employment earnings exemption for those clients who are able to work. As of October a single person who is an AISH client will be able to earn up to $400 each month without affecting their living allowance. That's twice as much as they can earn now. Couples or single parents who receive AISH benefits can earn $975 per month before it affects their living allowance.

We are also implementing a number of AISH enhancements that will be done within the current dollars allocated for the programs. These include requiring AISH staff to meet with clients to be sure clients are getting the best support possible, improving client service delivery, and partnering with disability organizations to provide ongoing training for AISH staff.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased that we have followed through on the commitment of renewing the AISH program. But I'd also like to take a few minutes to review our budget for the housing initiatives. The ministry is working with communities throughout the province to develop a range of housing facilities and support services that include emergency shelters, transitional housing, supportive housing, and affordable housing. New spending of $16.7 million will be used to address increased costs associated with the operation of family and specialized housing units across Alberta. This includes funding for the upkeep of the approximately 25,000 provincially owned or supported units to ensure that our clients have a safe and secure place to live.

Support for operating homeless shelters located in major municipalities throughout the province will rise by $6 million in 2005-06, bringing total provincial support for transitional housing and the homeless to more than $23 million. We want to ensure that emergency shelter spaces are available. Keeping that in mind, we are also working to develop long-term housing solutions to assist people to live independently in our communities. I hope that the budget information that I'm reviewing today is useful in providing further guidance to the Member for Lethbridge-East, who asked a question last month about grant funding for homeless shelters.

Mr. Chairman, seniors' lodge assistance also falls within the housing portfolio. An additional $6 million will be used for seniors' lodge assistance grants, bringing total program spending to $21.7 million per year. This funding helps provide accommodation, meals, and housekeeping to approximately 8,900 low- and moderate-income seniors throughout Alberta.

In our constant quest to develop affordable housing, Budget 2005 includes $25 million to conclude phase 1 of the Canada/Alberta affordable housing agreement, 12 and a half million dollars from the province and 12 and a half million dollars in matching federal funding. Phase 1 of this agreement has led to the development of approximately 2,400 affordable housing units in Alberta during the last three years. With the current funding program scheduled to end in 2006, we are currently discussing a second phase of this program with the federal government. To date these funding partnerships have resulted in new affordable housing units in at least 18 areas of the province, and we will continue to search for innovative ways to provide low-cost, affordable housing for lower income Albertans and for persons with disabilities.

My department is also now responsible for persons with developmental disabilities, known as the PDD program. In this budget I am pleased that we are committing an additional $21 million to the PDD program, bringing total funding to $489 million in 2005-06. This increase will help people who are new to PDD and requiring supports. In addition, it will work to enhance our communities' ability to support citizens with developmental disabilities, a concept known through PDD as community inclusion. Through community inclusion people with disabilities are encouraged to participate fully and make active contributions in their communities.

I am conscientious of the time, Mr. Chairman, but I'd still like to mention a few other budget highlights. Budget 2005 includes approximately $2 million in new funding for the establishment and monitoring of accommodation standards in supportive living and long-term care facilities. Developing provincial standards and establishing an effective monitoring mechanism are essential for the well-being of people in supportive living and long-term care facilities, and these standards will address areas such as maintenance, housekeeping, food services, social activities, safety and security, and nonmedical personal services.

An additional $400,000 has been committed this year to the protection for persons in care program. I know that protecting people in care is important to members of the Assembly as it was already raised twice during this legislative sitting. This new funding will go toward implementing changes to the Protection for Persons in Care Act and for investigation services.

Just as we must ensure the safety of those in care, Mr. Chairman, we must also ensure that we help those who can't make decisions for themselves. The office of the Public Guardian, which provides assistance to individuals who are unable to make personal, nonfinancial decisions for themselves, will see an increase of approximately $800,000. This funding increase will provide Albertans with the best possible service by reducing the client to staff ratio. Some of the funding will also go toward promoting personal directives across Alberta, an important issue that recently came into the spotlight with the recent case in the United States.

The newest addition to the ministry is the Alberta Aids to Daily Living program, which was transferred, as I said earlier, from the Ministry of Health and Wellness on April 1 this year. This program provides assistance to people who have a chronic disability or illness, and this program also provides assistance to individuals who require basic medical equipment and supplies which will allow them to be more independent in their home or in a home-like setting. In addition to its existing budget, which was transferred to my ministry, the program will see an increase of $2.3 million to support annual caseload growth, price increases, and necessary maintenance to computer systems.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, as you can see and as I mentioned earlier, the elements of this diverse ministry are serving those Albertans most in need. I am pleased with the programs that we're able to offer to Albertans, and I am committed to ensuring that these continue to meet the needs of Albertans.

I'd also be pleased to answer any questions. Those that I'm not able to answer just in the course of time, I'd be pleased to respond to in writing if we're not able to get to them over this next period of time. I think it's by 10 o'clock.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the next speaker, could we revert to introductions once again?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members here Mr. Abe Neufeld, who is the director of the Canadian Association of Agri-Retailers. They are suppliers to farmers. He is also a business owner in Grande Prairie. Mr. Neufeld is also a high school friend of our distinguished Minister of Advanced Education, and he also has a distinguished MLA, the Minister of Gaming, and also another MLA, our distinguished Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, in his business, I believe. I will ask Mr. Abe Neufeld to stand up and receive the warm welcome.

Seniors and Community Supports (continued)

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I really would like to thank the minister. I think that under her direction there have been some very positive things and certainly an understanding of what's required.

The opposition is pleased with the increase in the budget, and it is a great first step and certainly a long time in coming. It's been many years since AISH recipients got an increase in living allowance, and seniors on fixed incomes were aided in their struggles to meet the ever-increasing costs that sometimes only allow survival. I certainly see an understanding of the importance of protecting our most vulnerable citizens, those in care, be it long-term care, assisted living, or in group settings, but in fact it's sad to say sometimes they need to be protected from their own families.

Safeguards are needed through standards and legislation to prevent physical, emotional, sexual, and financial abuse. The AISH payments, I believe, should have been raised immediately to a $1,000 a month level because there has been an increase in the cost of living of 30 per cent since they had their last raise. I've had numerous calls regarding raises of those who live in subsidized housing because out of the $100 raise, the first $30 will go to rent as their rent is based on 30 per cent of their income.

There's been so much talk of off-budget increases if the price of oil remains, and perhaps the government may have even used their forecasts and lowballed them. I'm wondering: could this ministry increase the AISH benefits before April 6 and perform the review before the two years? I believe that, in my opinion, that's too long. The other question to go along with that would be: what formula would be used? The market-basket measurement is very comprehensive, and I think that it really reflects local communities. Or perhaps the formula which is used for the MLA yearly salary adjustments.

Perhaps I'll stop there, and we can go forward after.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you. Hon. member, I'm pleased to see, too, that you're addressing the area of AISH because it is so recent with this announcement of the renewal of the WISH program. As you know, that review was fast-tracked. It was over a six-month period. There were 11 recommendations that came forward from the review, and we have implemented all 11 recommendations. But having said that, I know that you are looking for – we discussed this – that increase in living allowance to occur immediately to a thousand dollars. It is, as you know, in two increments, the first being $100 and, as I mentioned earlier, the next, $50, being April 2006.

But I want to tell you why that decision was made. It was made after a lot of discussion with the chair of the WISH review committee and with the committee members, and it was really thought that it would be much more beneficial in the context of what the budget was, which is $80 million this year in that program and $91 million next year, if rather than doing an immediate living allowance increase to a thousand dollars, we provided what had been asked for in the Alberta disability strategy report. It meets three recommendations out of the eight there.

Those recommendations related very much to a personal income support program, and that income support program, as I mentioned earlier, is to meet unique needs of clients that have not been met before. It was never a part of the AISH program, and it is very important, which is why I had introduced the bill yesterday, so that it will be placed in legislation, so that it will not be very easily ever removed from this program.

The personal income support program will of course provide on a case-by-case basis, for now, whatever that individual client finds that they require over and above what their living allowance payment would allow for. So that's a significant addition into the AISH program, and that's why I say that it was within the context of the budget. I know, hon. member, that you don't see that as ideal, you know, about that increase not being immediate, but at least it will be there over the next year.

Also, you asked about the subsidized housing at 30 per cent of the income, the concern that some clients may have that they are not going to be able to keep their hundred dollar increase. We had heard that same concern from clients, and approximately two to three weeks ago – I can't recall the exact date – I wrote a letter to all of the management bodies to indicate that they are not to raise the rent based on this hundred dollar increase and that if they do, we will know about that immediately. We do have 25,000 housing units in the province, and I am hoping that with that direction being in writing and as firm as it was, the management bodies will follow through with that.

The benefit is being reviewed every two years. I know that we have, just as we're doing today, the normal process that we follow through with. We have the process, you know, of budgets being allocated and then going through this process with the Assembly. I don't look at that as an informal process; that's formal too. But I think it's more formalized when in two years we actually have a formal review of the program rather than what I think you were thinking about, indexing of the living allowance.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you for that. Yes, I was thinking about indexing, but I guess what I wanted, perhaps, was it being very definitive: this is exactly how we're going to do it year after year so that they can at least count on it. Even if it's a small amount, at least it's a little bit that goes up.

The opposition is also very pleased with the increases to the seniors' benefits and increases for housing. Some of the concerns were with the standards for housing, with the enforcement to back that up, especially when public dollars are paying the private sector and after a number of years these accommodations are substandard with no legislation to ensure that any level of the standards are maintained. I think that you have answered the question, but I'll ask it again if you don't mind. Are you contemplating legislation along these lines, and if not, why not?

The other question I think I can fit in before we break for answers. The increase for seniors to help with the school property tax is certainly more than welcome, but I can't seem to find a timeline. I trust that it is yearly, based on the differences from year to year.

The Chair: Hon. minister, do you wish to respond?

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you. Hon. member, there is a line item in the budget regarding the maintenance for housing, and I had alluded to that in my opening remarks. I agree with you that for people that are low income to moderate income and for whom we are subsidizing their housing, we do need to be very certain they are living in facilities that best meet their needs, whether it's with a disability. You know, people with various disabilities require certain services within that housing component, and we do have grants in place to assist with that.

More importantly, I think you were asking that the housing be kept in good repair, and that is a responsibility that we have. I have made my deputy minister and my staff very aware that following session I would like to go out, and I'd welcome you, hon. member, if you'd like to come with me, and look at the housing market that we do have out there – I have not done that yet at this stage – and see where that new funding in the budget can best be allocated for the repair of housing. As far as it being incorporated in legislation, though, as standards, no, I haven't contemplated that.

Thank you.

8:30

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of different categories of issues that I'd like to question the minister on. Thank you to my colleague from Lethbridge-East for letting me get in on some of her time.

The question has been asked a couple of times, and the minister has not directly answered it, but I'd like to know why the choice has been made to not index the AISH benefits to some kind of measure. We in the Liberal opposition have proposed a number of times to hook it to the market-basket measure, but the minister is not responsive there. So I would like to know why the choice has been made not to proceed with indexing to anything.

I'd also like to get the minister on the record to see if there have been any changes at all to the allowable asset levels for people on AISH. I know that there was a great deal of concern from the community that the asset level would be lowered in some way or perhaps some sort of staggered limit. I'd like to know exactly what the decision-making was there and if there are any plans to change that within, I take it, the two-year period that this current program is expected to run without any changes.

I'm sure that the minister is aware of the social determinants of health, and I'm wondering if those factor in in any way to the decision-making process that she uses in her department. Just for the record, social determinants of health as determined by Health Canada, the public health agency of Canada, include things like income and social status, social support networks, education and literacy, employment and working conditions, social environments, physical environments, personal health practices and coping skills, healthy child development, biology and genetic endowment, health services, gender, and culture.

Essentially, once you take away the sort of preventable injuries like accidents and genetic predisposition, you can make people as healthy as you want, but if they're poor, they're still going to be sick. They're going to develop chronic illnesses. If they live in unsafe housing, they are going to manifest that difficulty through their health. We have not been successful thus far in getting the government to work with social determinants of health, and again I'd like to know why that choice is being made. I guess I should put on the record: is the government, in fact, aware of these? I'm assuming that you are, but let me put it on the record. Then, why the choice not to use it?

You know, for example, we ended up with, I think, the second-lowest or the lowest minimum wage in Canada. Well, that's one of the significant social determinants of health. If we're trying to get higher birth-weight babies, if we're trying to get more kids completing high school, and if we're trying to end up with lower chronic diseases, which cost our health care system a great deal, these things have all got to be factored in. I don't see the government following that, certainly not by the practices that we've seen, for example the very low minimum wage. There's also a real issue around housing. So I'd like to hear from the minister what the department's attitude is and whether they'll ever consider using social determinants of health to help them develop policy around this. Who do they work with for advice on this, et cetera?

The minister mentioned that there was a disability strategy – I think I heard that correctly – and that three of the eight recommendations were accepted. I'd like to know: what were the other five that were not accepted, and why weren't they accepted?

One of the interesting things that I noticed was that there was an awful lot of money being spent moving people from AISH onto social assistance and back again, trying to be able to help people access various medical benefit programs that existed in either place, and that was costing the department a significant amount of money. Could the minister tell us how much money was saved, then, by putting forward this additional health access program that is being offered and whether that relates directly to the additional cost in the program? In other words, if it was $25 million that it was costing the department to move back and forth, is that the amount that has now been increased on the one side of the ledger and decreased on the second side of the ledger? Maybe you report back to us on that.

On housing could the minister please give us the exact plans for the expenditure of the housing dollars and, with that, the amount of money that is the contribution from the federal government and the corresponding, matching amount from the province and exactly how that money is going to be distributed? How many units are expected to be created within this fiscal year, and what type of unit is expected to be created? Also, since we're looking at a three-year plan put forward in this budget, I'd like to get those same categories extrapolated forward. I know that I can depend on the minister's excellent staff to provide the nitty-gritty detail of that in writing. I would just ask that we please receive it before we're expected to vote on the budget appropriation bill in May.

I note that according to various statistics – and they all say the same thing – in Edmonton alone we are looking at a need of 4,700 new housing units. That includes things like 275 emergency shelter beds or mats; 675 units of transitional housing, for example for women's shelters and counselling and treatment beds, drug and alcohol treatment beds; 1,750 units of social housing, with subsidized accommodation for low-income residents; 700 units of affordable housing; and 183 fully adapted units for the disabled. How is the ministry progressing towards achieving those targets?

Given that these targets are for the fiscal year that we're in – actually, I think those figures are from the fall, so we're now six months further into this, with I don't think having created very many of those units. So how is the department measuring up against that? Given that I highly doubt 4,700 new units are going to be built out of this year's budget, what is the plan to be able to catch up with this in the future? Given that these are Edmonton figures only – I'm sorry; I represent an Edmonton riding, and homelessness and transitional and social housing are big issues for my constituents – but, you know, easily the same number in Calgary and probably the same number again for the rest of the province, we're looking at a need for between 13,000 and 15,000 units in Alberta within this year. I'd like to know what the plan is to catch us up on that one.

In the extra hundred dollars that was given for the housing for the seniors' accommodation, I'm wondering if the minister has changed the regulations to allow the cost of the telephones to be included with the rent. Most of the management companies will not include the telephone, so that's an additional cost. For example, the senior is paying 30 per cent of their income for the rent, and then they're paying the cost of the telephone. For anybody living downtown, they're also paying the cost of basic cable TV or they don't get any cable TV, which might sound like an extravagance to many here, but frankly to a senior that doesn't have many activities they can participate in, being able to watch television, at least watching the news and keeping up on current affairs, is one way for them to keep in touch with what's going on and to have some kind of very limited interaction with other human beings. So it becomes very important for my constituents anyway. Those regulations didn't encourage that with the housing management companies, and I'm wondering if there's been a move – I hope there has – towards encouraging the inclusion of the telephone and the cable TV into the 30 per cent rent.

Has there been an improvement in the housekeeping rates and the understanding of what housekeeping is for the seniors? A number of seniors talk to me and say that, well, they could stay in their own homes and be more independent if they could just get reasonable housekeeping, but the housekeeping services that are offered for them just don't do the job. They're far too limited. They won't help people with meal preparation, for example. They won't do the cleaning that's really required. Eventually the senior gives up and moves into some sort of care facility, which is much more costly, as the minister knows, and much more costly for all Albertans who participate in that.

Those are the specific issues that I wanted to get on the record that have come up in my constituency and a bit left over from my work in my previous role as the critic for Seniors.

There were some additional questions that had come up when I went through the budget briefing book. On page 310 of the estimates book, under vote 2.2.5, the dental and optical assistance program, which the minister also referred to earlier, I'd like to know what this is based on. She gave new figures for what it's possible for seniors to apply for, and I think I heard $230 for a pair of glasses every three years. Is that three years based on anything? Do you have statistical information that tells you that seniors tend to replace their glasses every three years? I'd be interested in knowing that or, better yet, having the minister table it.

With the dentures, again, I often hear that as they age, their mouths are changing faster than they did, and in fact the time limit that was allowed for them to replace dentures is not adequate for their needs. So again I'm looking for any statistical backup that you have that sends you in the direction of saying: you can have this much money every this many years.

I'd like to know what is covered exactly on page 309 under vote 1.0.4, strategic corporate services. That budget increased by $2.9 million, from $3.8 million to $6.7 million. Could I get a breakout, please, of exactly what that is?

Just generally for your budget, could I get a breakout, please, of how much was brought from each of the other ministries to create this new department? How much was brought from Seniors? How much was the allocation from housing? What was the amount of money allocated to PDD, how much to AISH, and now how much for Aids to Daily Living? If I've missed anything that has made up the budget for this department, I'll ask for that to be included as well, please. If I could get any kind of a report on whether that corresponding amount of money was in fact taken out of the departments that they were in, which would've affected Community Development the most, I think.

On page 312 if I could get an explanation, please, on vote 4.1.2, supportive living and long-term care accommodations, under management and operations. This budget is increased from $506,000 to $2.4 million; in other words, it increased fivefold. I'd be interested in knowing why. Under supportive living grants, the corresponding vote 4.2.1, has gone from $4.5 million to $500,000. Perhaps these are connected, but if I could get that explained, please.

I'm wondering if this department has any hand in program development or policy development for adult FASD, please.

With those questions, thank you for my being able to get those on the record. Given our very limited time tonight and the very long list of people who wish to question the minister, I'm happy to receive the answers to those in writing, but I do ask that they are received within the next couple of weeks, before we have to vote on the budget.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will take the opportunity to respond to a couple of the questions from the hon. member. The one that I would like to respond to is regarding the Canada/Alberta affordable housing agreement. The hon. member had asked questions about this program. I indicated that it was 12 and a half million dollars in funding from Alberta and 12 and a half million dollars in matching funds from the federal government to finish up this first phase of the program.

I have met with the federal minister, hon. member. We are in discussions on the next phase, which would be phase 2, and it is a matched program. Twenty-five million dollars in 2005-06 will provide funding for over 400 additional units. I know that you mentioned an awful lot just here in Edmonton alone and the 4,700 that you were concerned about.

This has been a very good program. It has provided over the past three years approximately 2,400 new affordable housing units. Those have been in very high-need, high-growth communities, and that was with $53 million from Alberta and $53 million from the federal government, for a total of $106 million. We are continuing – and I think you know this, hon. member – to look at innovative ways to provide low-cost, affordable housing for our lower and moderate-income Albertans. I just want you to know, though, that we are in discussions for the next phase of the program.

Also, you asked a question regarding dentures, and I thought that that would be an important one for you to know as well. You were looking at the benchmark that we used and how we came to the conclusion that for the dental program that we were offering, first of all, that it was necessary to add this $50 million into the budget for this program. It's two, dental and optical, which you know as well, but it has come into effect as of April 1.

We did involve very professional organizations to determine what that list should be of the dental care that seniors would require; for example, at the University of Alberta through Dr. Gordon Thompson with the dental faculty and the association. He and many others contributed why we should increase our dental program, which is currently $5,000 over a lifetime and limited to basic dentures and maybe some fillings, you know, cleanings. Well, this list that we have now is much more extensive, which would include root planing and endodontics and, you know, that type of dental care. Also, they indicated that the $5,000 per person over a five-year period was much better than what it had been, over a lifetime, and that that should meet the needs of seniors. I did meet with seniors' groups which you're familiar with. The groups are well-known organizations throughout Alberta, and they as well indicated that $5,000 over five years would meet the needs of the seniors.

That's the same also with eyeglasses. We heard through the ophthalmologists and the optometrists, you know, that if we looked at a three-year period for $230, that would cover prescription eyeglasses, and that that was an average for seniors. But I want you to know this: it's not that it's cut in stone, that if a senior came to us and they had lost their eyeglasses, or if somebody had stolen their purse with their eyeglasses or whatever, we wouldn't try to assist that senior. We do have other programs that would be of assistance, like our seniors' assistance programs.

I know you know that the other questions, as you indicated, we'll provide answers in writing. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think the minister has at least partially answered one of the questions that I had for her on behalf of a constituent who says that he had not noticed in news releases, in any event, relative to the budget anything in particular with regard to seniors referencing dental, glasses, general health care items, taxes, et cetera. He was specifically concerned about dental. He said, and I'm quoting here: it is difficult to contemplate doing certain necessary items such as extensive dental because of the very high costs.

Clearly, you've changed from $5,000 over a lifetime to $5,000 over five years, which I think is very good and very progressive. But for my information could the minister speak perhaps in a little more detail about what constitutes basic dental and what constitutes extensive dental. You mentioned a couple of examples there. I'm thinking about things like crowns or root canals or things like this, which can be, as we all know, very pricey at any age, manageable, obviously, if you're an ordinary working Albertan with an ordinary income and an ordinary, perhaps, group health benefit through your employer where you would end up paying 50 per cent of the cost of that. But certainly it would constitute a major setback, I think, for anybody on a fixed income who is required to pay 100 per cent. So I wonder if the minister could add just a little more detail about the dental.

The other question that I had also focused on transitional housing and homeless support initiatives and, of course, comes primarily from the Calgary perspective. I guess that much like my colleague from Edmonton-Centre, who referenced the fact that she's an Edmonton MLA, I'm a Calgary MLA. I suspect the stories in our two cities are very similar, but I'm, of course, more familiar with the Calgary situation. In Calgary it seems to me that we have in many respects a tremendous program for getting homeless people, who may present with a wealth of issues, off the street and into, really, a graduated program of taking them through substance abuse issues if there are problems there, mental health or psychological or emotional issues if there are problems there, upgrading of education, upgrading of skills through transitional housing, several-step programs, and so on and so forth. They work their way up the ladder, Mr. Chairman, kind of to the top and to graduation, at which point it's almost like they fall off the ladder and go back to the start again because of a chronic, acute shortage of affordable housing.

I wonder if the minister could give us a workable, serviceable definition. I know this is difficult to do because I'm asking almost for a one-size-fits-all definition here, and this is anything but a one-size-fits-all problem. Can she give us some insight into perhaps the definition the government uses of affordable housing and talk a little bit more about that?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to go back to the dental program because it is an important question, especially because it had been asked by the member previously. As I indicated, it did come into effect April 1. People are asking already: can that be retroactive? The answer to that is yes. We met with stakeholders just at the very end of March to indicate that, and it is going to be seamless. Seniors can apply in the dental office, because it's through Blue Cross, and once they've applied, they will not have to reapply and reapply. Especially if they're on our seniors' benefits program, they're already in our system, and we won't be asking for new information. But this program is for low-income to moderate-income seniors. It has changed in that regard as well.

We anticipate that approximately 80 per cent of all our seniors in Alberta, which is 267,000, are eligible to receive financial assistance through the dental care and the prescription eyeglasses. Eligibility for the program is income based, as I just mentioned, the maximum coverage targeted to lower income seniors, who are most in need, but also to moderate, who will receive partial financial assistance. Seniors with annual incomes up to $20,000 or couples with incomes up to $40,000 a year will be eligible for up to the maximum amount, and that's about 186,000 seniors. Seniors with incomes between $20,000 and $30,000 and couples with incomes between $40,000 and $60,000 are eligible for partial coverage, which ranges up to 99 per cent coverage. We're thinking that about 81,000 seniors will be eligible, and I mentioned how we came to the determination of the amount of money over the five-year period being $5,000.

You asked then, too, about why the list is more extensive than it had been previously. Of course, it is going to include basic dentures, but as I mentioned, it's going to include not just diagnostics like X-rays and whatnot but what dentists refer to or will refer to as restorative, with root planing and endodontics. I think there are about 10 items on the list that we received from the college, that I'd be pleased to share with you for your constituents.

The whole area of transitional housing, though, too is an important area. Like you, hon. member, I have visited in the city of Calgary with the Calgary Drop-in Centre, with the Mustard Seed, you know, with different organizations, and my understanding is that there is a real change now in the continuum of housing for people that are homeless. It's happening right with the drop-in centres. You know from being there that there is transitional housing support in, I think, the top four floors for people that may have been homeless but are beginning to work in the community in some way, still want the supports that they've been provided with within that context, and will stay there, you know, for a few months.

The $23.3 million budget for homeless support in 2005-06 consists of homeless shelters, $13.5 million; transitional housing, $6.8 million; and homeless initiatives, $3 million. The additional funding of $6.2 million that's going to be allocated in this budget is going to address the cost pressures experienced by operators who are struggling to provide basic services because of rising operating costs, and that will include utilities. I think that's important for you to know. The $3 million budget for the provincial homeless initiative is allocated throughout the province, and that's to address the needs of the homeless. These funds in 2004-05 were provided to seven major urban centres. I know we've heard of the Calgary and Edmonton situation, but there are seven centres.

Also, I think it is important that you know as well that we're continuing to work toward a financially sustainable shelter system and toward fostering independence among homeless people by creating long-term solutions such as the transitional and affordable housing that we discussed earlier. But we can't do that alone, you know, which is why we're working with the organizations in this area.

Thank you.

Mr. Taylor: Might I ask just a supplementary question? Could I get the minister to briefly talk about what some of those longer term plans and partnerships are? Ultimately, that's where the system breaks down right now – isn't it? – at the point at which the client is through the transitional housing, needs affordable housing, and in expensive centres like Calgary and Edmonton, of course, affordable housing, although the definition changes depending on the person we're talking about, can be in terribly short supply.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, the long-term plan – and this is through the organizations that I've discussed this with and with the books there are. There is one written by the Mustard Seed that you may wish to read, and you'll see what their goals are. The long-term plan is: what we refer to now as homeless shelters, people are looking more for transitional housing.

Mr. Taylor: Beyond that?

Mrs. Fritz: They are. Yeah. It's changed.

Then beyond the transitional housing, where people move out into the community to supportive living, whether that be in an apartment setting, even some still in a group home depending on whether or not they have addictions or whatever they may be experiencing. Beyond that, hopefully at that time, then, they are, you know, working as well as getting other supports, and then it moves on from there back to what we refer to as affordable housing.

I think that's a good plan. I agree with the community in that regard, and also I know from meeting with the federal minister, Joe Fontana, that that's very much the direction that they're taking now as well. That's not just here in the province of Alberta but throughout Canada.

Mr. Taylor: Just one more quick stab at this, if I might, Mr. Chairman. I'm in full agreement with the minister as far as she's gone so far, but what I'm trying to get to is: what happens after all that, when the homeless person has been through the shelter system, through the transitional housing, perhaps through the group home experience if that's applicable, and on to the point where that person is deemed by themselves or others or both to be now capable of living on their own, in their own accommodation, in a rental apartment or whatever? My understanding is that it is at that point where you often have a breakdown because there's simply a very small, virtually nonexistent inventory of that kind of affordable housing, the kind of apartment that rents at a level that someone on a low income can afford to meet the rental payments every month, the kind of apartment that carries a damage deposit modest enough that that person can reasonably expect to come up with it.

I'm using somewhat out of date statistics here, Mr. Chairman, I'm sure, but we are told that there have been times in the recent past where upwards of 50 per cent of the homeless people in the city of Calgary – and although I don't know for a fact, it would not surprise me if the statistics in Edmonton were very, very similar – are, in fact, people from another province who have come here without a job in search of the dream that is Alberta, you know, without a whole lot of assets of their own. They get a job easily enough, but it's a low enough paying job relative to the cost of living in a city like Calgary that they simply cannot scrape together the money for the damage deposit; ergo, they're homeless. So if the minister could address specifically that issue of affordable accommodation after you've been through the system, which does, admittedly, a very good job of transitioning people up to a point.

Mrs. Fritz: We do have a next program – I know we have a number of programs we're discussing here tonight – and it is a support program to our community housing providers, and it's very much in keeping with what you are asking about here tonight. There's been an increase of $14.75 million allocated to this program for this year. Its additional funding was also planned for 2006-07, because I keep looking at the next part of the budget, which is a further $4.1 million, and then 2007-08, another $4.3 million.

It's to assist the local housing providers with increasing operating maintenance costs, that kind of thing, but also that they administer 8,200 provincially owned and 2,400 municipally owned community housing units. Those provide modest rental income for our low-income families, for individuals or persons with special needs. These 10,600 community housing units provide safe, affordable housing as well to over 32,000 low-income Albertans.

I'm hoping that's answering your question. I know we've gone from homeless to transitional to group homes and now into the community provision of supportive housing.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to ask the minister for some clarification on behalf of some of my constituents in terms of the dental plan. It sounds better. Can you tell me specifically what it's going to mean to my constituent who's concerned about fillings that he needs to get done and has been waiting for, hoping that they might be covered? What is the cut-off level for getting the full coverage? Can you tell me those things?

Mrs. Fritz: I can. I apologize. I don't have the long list of services that are being provided with the dental plan. Those, as I said, did come through the college, but as I had mentioned earlier about that plan – I'll just go back to the numbers that I had. Just let me look here, Mr. Chairman. I want to be sure I have the exact numbers for the record. I know that it's full coverage of $5,000 for five years for $20,000 and less for a low-income Albertan, and then between $20,000 and $30,000 for a single person it is based on a scale of income. But for a couple it's not going to be that a couple is $30,000. For a couple each person in that couple would be up to $30,000, so it would be up to $60,000 for a couple for coverage.

Mrs. Mather: All right. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to thank, also, the minister for her excellent presentation on her department budget this evening. As chair of the Seniors Advisory Council I have enjoyed working with her and getting to know about the many issues related to seniors.

In spite of some of the media and opposition reports, I have visited many seniors' homes and facilities as the chair of the Seniors Advisory Council. I have visited many of these facilities and found them to be very nice places. The seniors and the people that live there are well looked after and, mostly, are very generally happy to be in the places where they live. My own mother lives in a seniors' home in Red Deer and enjoys it very much.

In her remarks the minister referred this evening to the fact that more seniors were made eligible for the Alberta seniors' benefit because of changes brought in last year. While that is good news, I still hear from some constituents that not enough is being done for those who fall slightly above the threshold. Does the minister have plans to review these thresholds on a regular basis? Maybe I'll just wait for an answer, and then I have another question.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to thank the hon. member. As chair of our Seniors Advisory Council you certainly are doing a lot of work, hon. member, on behalf of our ministry, and it's well appreciated. I know that we had a discussion earlier today about this, and I know that you are thinking of looking at this issue in a more detailed way through the council, but thresholds were changed as recently as last July, and that made 17,000 more seniors eligible for the benefit. It increased the average monthly payment as well to those that are already on the program.

I have to say this again, hon. member – and I know that we're going to have more discussions about this – it really is the most generous benefit program in the country right now. It did add 17,000 more people to the threshold level, and the monthly payments as well are also the highest in the country. I would still be pleased to hear your views back from the council.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The minister also referred to new dental and optical programs, and I believe that these will be a welcome addition for our seniors. Can the minister advise how these programs compare to programs that the province used to offer to the seniors?

Mrs. Fritz: So how the dental program compares to other . . .

Mr. Prins: The way it was before.

Mrs. Fritz: As I mentioned, Mr. Chairman, this program is – well, it's like a renewal of the program because of the extensive list that will be offered in dental services. As well, the income threshold level is higher for the recipients of the program. It is streamlined so that it will be far easier for people to access, being directly through Blue Cross and indirectly through the dental office. As well, the amounts of money are the $5,000 over a five-year period, and it's very inclusive of our population that will be able to access the program.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to break down two or three areas with a few questions. I think it comes down to some perhaps philosophical differences with the government, maybe not so much with this minister; I'm not sure of that. But we look at the AISH announcement, and of course any money that can flow to the most vulnerable in the society is welcome. I would suggest that in a very rich province with the oil and gas reserves that we have, we still could've done better. I expect maybe the minister tried to do better. I can say to the minister that my office has had a lot of phone calls, and they are not satisfied. They expected more in terms of the increases.

I've recognized that the health benefits and that have been helpful too, but I think that we have to look at this in perspective, Mr. Chairman. The massive cuts came back in the mid-90s. If we look back at 1993 and we take inflation – and it might even be higher with the living allowances now – just the CPI or something like that, up to the time that the minister announced the increases last week, they had lost 23 per cent of their income. Now, these are the most vulnerable people, that have no other means of doing this. It's not that you can take on two jobs or three jobs or whatever to deal with the very serious problem. The minister's announcement, while welcome, by next year when we get up to over $1,000 that will be a 15 per cent increase. But the point I'm trying to make is that even after that people on AISH are still not as well off as they were in 1993. There are not a lot of people in this society that can say that, and these are the most vulnerable ones. So I think we have to keep it in perspective.

With all due respect to the minister about the indexation – I do believe that if she had her way I think she might agree to this, but I know she also has to go through a cabinet.

I was interested that at the news conference with MLA Rob Lougheed, who chaired the review committee, he suggested that the reason they didn't index it is they might want to in the future raise it more than indexation. Well, that's a rather ridiculous statement because you could still have the indexation. You can raise it to whatever you want. The government can do that. But it seems to me that that's a key point. There should be some form of indexation for the most vulnerable people there.

I know the minister will say: well, we'll look at it, I think, in two years. Now, I would remind this minister that her intentions may be good, but you have to go through a cabinet, caucus, and all sorts of things. AISH has been reviewed and reviewed and reviewed over the last 10 years, and whether they have a review in two years doesn't necessarily mean money in the pocket for those people. I guess I would say – I know this is what's going to happen at this present time. We know that's not going to change, but I would hope that the minister as an advocate for AISH and seniors will push for indexation and not say that we're not doing it because we want to give more. That just doesn't flow with people. I mean, it's just not an answer that's acceptable.

I guess the only question I have, well, a couple perhaps, from the AISH is: does the minister have some idea of what we're looking at in the future in terms of numbers? I think it's $80 million overall, but there's probably some of that $80 million that they're projecting in the next year, with more people going on AISH. Are there some rough figures that the department's working at that we're looking at in the next two- to three-year period? I think the minister said the numbers now are 32,000 – correct me if I'm wrong – on AISH. What are we looking at in the next couple of years?

I think it was alluded to by the Member for Edmonton-Centre that, as we know, the people on social services, those numbers are way down. What is the relationship between AISH and social services, if any? There is some speculation that people have been moving back and forth because of the benefits before.

Could I stop there and just do the AISH, or should I continue?

The Chair: Yes, you may.

I'd just like to remind the member of your referral to another member by his proper name instead of a constituency name.

Mr. Martin: Fair enough. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will make just a couple of comments on the AISH program because I know that you're fairly familiar, hon. member, with the people that are on AISH and that we do have 32,000 clients and that it is between two areas.

Now that we have disabilities under our ministry, there are two areas which people often mistake, but we're trying to have the recognition of what this is. That is that we have persons with development disabilities. There are approximately 8,000 people who've had from a disability from when they were born, a developmental disability, but there are also approximately 24,000 people that received their disability at some time during their life. This program is for people over the age of 18. AISH refers to both disabilities. It's the assured income for the severely handicapped, which people don't often realize is for persons with developmental disabilities as well. Approximately 92 per cent of people are receiving the AISH benefit.

When you take that into the context, which this review committee did, and they had 18,000 submissions from Albertans, when they put all of that in place and were looking for a holistic program for people, to provide what I said from the Alberta disability strategies report, to provide that personal income support level for these unique needs, when you put it into its complete context, the review committee decided not to request an indexed living allowance, not to request it to be indexed. Rather than that, they put in recommendation 11, which I'll refer you to when you read your AISH review book, which explains why they made that decision.

They were under the impression, even from everything that they had taken in, you know, in regard to the information that was given to them, not just by people that made submissions but by the staff and others, that increasing and indexing a living allowance at this time would not be in the best interests of the development of this program because it may not necessarily meet exactly what people were looking for if it's just continual, continual. They were looking more for what is the true cost of having a disability and being in the community with a disability and what that would mean in the overall context, and they hope that part of the personal income support of that will be reached.

The other five recommendations in that disability strategy report that the Member for Edmonton-Centre had asked for addressed that as well. I don't know if that assists you. I respect what the committee came forward with in regard to that.

The future of the budget. It is $80 million now for the 32,000 clients. It is $91 million next April. That's $171 million. When you include what we were discussing earlier about affordable housing, with four people based on 30 per cent of the living allowance, the cost, when you include that and what's in the budget here, you will see there is approximately $30 million to address that as well. So over the two-year period that is at least $200 million in this renewal of this program, but it's just a first step. It's a beginning, and then we'll see how it goes over the next 24 months and what the community identifies as needs.

I go back to this too, hon. member, that this is unprecedented across Canada, this increase and this way that we are viewing the program, to try to determine to have full inclusion of people in the community.

I'd be more than pleased, too, to hear from you over the course of time. I have heard from a number of organizations, like the Alberta Disabilities Forum, who have written that they are pleased with the personal income support, with the health benefits, with the living allowance, and with the housing that is being provided.

We are working with municipalities. I know that Edmonton, for example, is meeting some of the transportation needs through their bus-pass system. We are working with the transportation committee in the city of Calgary as well. So there are many other needs that will need to be addressed. This is just a start with that.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There's nothing to say that we can't set new measures, but indexation can be part of those measures, and again I think we say that if it works here for MLAs, it should work for theirs. But you can set whatever measure and then index it. I don't think one follows the other necessarily. I know the minister is trying to make the best out of the situation.

The figures. I was trying to get a handle on the numbers because when we get into millions of dollars and that, it tells us about the budget. It doesn't tell us, you know, about what sort of numbers we're looking at in the future. It's largely irrelevant to the people here because we're happy to be in a boom economy because of oil and gas. We're wealthier than other provinces, perhaps other states even, because we're fortunate to have that, and that creates other problems for people and the most vulnerable. To say that we're the most generous doesn't mean much to those people that we talk to out in our constituencies.

Let me just go from the AISH into just some general things. I have the release that the minister's department put out during the budget, and there are some steps in the right direction from where we were with the cuts in the past, no doubt about that. Enhanced dental and optical programs – I will come back to that just briefly – and the program to reimburse the education portion of the property taxes. But flowing from that – we've been asked this, and I'll throw it out – is that that's nice that the people that are fortunate to own their own homes are getting a tax break. We've had other seniors say, "What about us?" That's always the case when we do that. "We happened to sell our house, we're renting, whatever. There's no particular tax break for us." I'm wondering why we didn't take that into consideration, even if it's a marginal one. I know it's budget, but I throw it out as a question to the minister.

The other area, though, that I do want to talk very briefly about is long-term care. I think part of the problem that we're facing here – contrary to the member, we're getting all sorts of calls lately about problems in long-term care. Obviously, there are going to be some good ones around the province, but there are some serious problems. I know the minister has part of the department and Health the other part of it. I think that's a problem in itself. I think the government should look at putting it in one or the other. Probably the health minister has enough to do, and it probably should be there, but I don't know.

All these people that are going out to care centres – there are a number of elder abuse groups – are saying that there are some real problems, and they're willing to document them in many cases. I think we have a serious problem that we don't seem to have, sort of, standards and enough staffing, perhaps, in some institutions. There's got to be some good ones, but we do have some serious problems. I think for the government to, as the Premier did the other day, huff and puff and say that there are no problems there is just not right.

I think that one of the petitions that the minister is aware of was put in by Lynda Jonson yesterday, a petition with nearly 500 signatures, and she's been all over the province. A very sincere person. I'm sure the minister knows her. I think this makes something that we should be working for. They're saying that even though the staff wants to do the right thing, in many of these places, these long-term care centres, they can't do the proper job. They can't look after this one because they've got too big a client staff. I think it is a serious problem. She's suggesting that we work towards staffing levels of 1 and 5 during the day and 1 and 8 in the evening. Surely we can afford that in this province, because that could be our parents or a lot of other people's parents that are facing this.

The fact that there are so many groups out there, they can't all be wrong. They can't all be wrong. So we think that there are some serious problems there, and it's something that I hope that the minister of health and this particular minister are talking about.

I notice, for example, patients at the Bethany Care Collegesside facility in Red Deer have raised serious concerns regarding staffing levels and quality of care and food that they have received. That's been public, and I know the food is specifically in the minister's department.

So I think that we have to take a better look at this, because we think that there are some serious problems out there around the province, and it's not just us. It's not us manipulating these poor people. They're people coming to us that are saying that this is a serious problem, and there are a number of different groups. Some of the horror stories and some of the pictures that I've seen are not pleasant. We will pursue it, and I hope the minister will pursue what's going on in that area. I'd be interested in her comments about the staffing levels at least.

The third thing I just want to generally talk about is something that's happening in the housing area, and I know that the minister alluded to that, and I think the Member for Edmonton-Centre asked for a breakdown. If I may speak about Edmonton – I expect it's true in Calgary; the minister would know Calgary better than I do – we have a growing population. There is always a downside to a boom economy. The downside is usually that there's a big migration into the cities, and the migration often is the very poorest people. Especially in northern Alberta this is what's happening.

When I was on the Edmonton public school board, we had the fastest growing aboriginal population or the fastest numbers coming in in the country, and it has implications for the school system. Many of these people are coming from very tough backgrounds, and they're the ones that often end up homeless and the rest of it. So even if we have housing – and I know the minister has talked about the dollars, and they're a significant amount of money – it's a growing problem, and I don't know how we can keep up with it because homelessness is growing in this city. So even what we're doing now, it's not enough.

Part of it has to do with the boom economy. It's all right to have the boom economy, and some people are doing very well, but the Alberta disadvantage is that more and more people are falling in the cracks, at least in this city. That has to do with housing and social services and a lot of other things, but the minister is responsible for housing. I think we have to take a look at that because even the money that's there, the numbers that I've seen are growing in this city even with what we're doing. So we have to relook at it, and I would hope that the minister would do that.

I would just conclude with two or three questions that are not related to either of those matters. It has to do, again, with the release, other new spending highlights on the release that was put out. One is an $800,000 increase for the office of the Public Guardian to increase the number of staff to provide better services. You know, whenever I see more money and we're going to give better services, I'd like a little more specific idea of what they're going to do to give people better services.

The other one was right under that, the $400,000 increase to implement changes to the Protection for Persons in Care Act and for investigation services. Are we concerned? I know the minister and the member from – I'm trying to remember. Edmonton-Strathcona: now I've got it; I can remember. They talked about that there wasn't abuse, the whole thing. Is that investigation service, that $400,000, going to investigating abuse, or what is that all about?

The last thing is just about the money for glasses. We got into it, and the minister says that in studies, about every three years. That may or may not be enough. I don't know. I think in Blue Cross it's every two years for other people.

What I found interesting are the figures. Of course, many older people experience problems with their vision, ranging from difficulty reading or watching television to more serious impediments such as being unable to drive or read. This is interesting: about 3 million Canadian seniors, 82 per cent of the population age 65 or older, reported having a vision problem in 2003. In Alberta it was a little less, 79 per cent. With those figures, I don't know if that has implications on whether it's every two or three years, because obviously that's a significant portion of people. Well, some seniors can afford it, but we're talking about the ones that can't. I don't know if that should be reviewed or not, but it's just food for thought.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Hon. minister, I've had a number of people express a view to speak. Would you want to respond individually, or would you like to respond near the end?

Mrs. Fritz: I'll respond to these questions because there's such a range of them, Mr. Chairman, and not to all at this time, which the hon. member can understand, then, based on other people that would like to.

I'll go back to your AISH question again regarding the budget, et cetera. For the 32,000 clients on AISH the total budget is almost a billion dollars, and that's on that 32,000 client base. You asked for the overall figure. I think it's about $980 million, when you look in the budget here, and of course that isn't inclusive of all ministries that provide programs in some way for people with disabilities. We have about 10 to 12 ministries that provide programs in some way, but for the area that I have, for the whole area of disabilities, it's about $980 million.

9:30

The question that you had asked regarding seniors being concerned that on a universal basis they don't receive a tax cut, especially if they don't own a home and they don't qualify for the education portion of the property tax, shielding that's going to be put in place now. We do have other programs, and some may not look at this as a tax cut, but it is a change that puts more money in the pockets of seniors in a universal-type way, which you're familiar with. That would be the premium-free Alberta health care insurance. That was for all seniors, and it made them exempt from paying their health care premiums. It was a savings of $528 per year for a single senior and $1,056 for a senior couple.

Also, we have premium-free Blue Cross coverage for seniors. Premiums are paid for all seniors, their spouses, and their eligible dependants, and that's a maximum of $25,000 in benefits per year and per person.

Then, of course, I mentioned earlier that we have the Aids to Daily Living program that was transferred to this ministry. That, too, is a universal program for seniors. It funds medical equipment and/or supplies that best meet their basic, medically assessed needs; for example, hearing aids, wheelchairs, compression stockings, oxygen, et cetera. I know that not all seniors own their own home and that that education portion of the property tax just refers to those in their own homes, but hopefully they'll see that we are considering all seniors with these others that I had mentioned.

You did ask as well about long-term care. That's a very important issue. It's significant. As you indicated, you know that this ministry is responsible for the accommodation side, which many people refer to as room and board, and the Ministry of Health and Wellness for the staffing side. You'd asked a number of questions about staffing and asked that I comment on those questions. There is an unbundling of the services, as you know, so that we identify what is housing, the housing area that would be for me, the health care, the care services.

It's a complex matter to do that because of the numbers that we have and especially because what's offered in the community is changing as we speak. Over the last three to five years, three or four years really, we changed the interim of housing in long-term care. We've gone from long-term care to designated assisted living to enhanced living, and in there are lodges as well and, of course, seniors in their contained apartments. So it's an issue that does require some careful, thoughtful discussion as to what we now provide in standards.

There are industry standards. The regional health authorities – I just met with the Capital health authority this week – have industry standards which are excellent for long-term care, and so do the organizations responsible for the housing side, like ASCHA, the Alberta Senior Citizens Housing Association, and so do other organizations, including our department, that have contributed overall toward this, even the organization that may own the facility.

There are industry standards in place. Together the Minister of Health and Wellness and myself and Children's Services, because they're responsible for the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act, are looking at the development of standards overall that would best meet the needs of people.

You mentioned about meals and that that's under my portfolio, and you're absolutely right. That's the social side of care in long-term care, where people, you know, have meals together. We have facilities that I've visited throughout the province, like a couple in Camrose, Wetaskiwin, where they'll offer two choices of meals for their clients. We do need to have, I believe, dietitians in place – that would be a part of standards – who govern the meal plan because there are people who have different needs related to their health care needs, like a renal diet or a diabetic diet or whatever. It's an area where I could contribute to the standards when they are being developed, and we are working overall with that.

I apologize that I can't discuss the staffing because that's not in my ministry.

The office of the Public Guardian. You had asked about that $800,000 and were wondering: how do you improve services, or are you just putting money into the existing administration? The budget increase was approximately $792,000, and it is going to increase the client/staff ratio. Currently each guardian representative has approximately 60 clients, but the new funding is going to decrease the ratio to approximately 50 clients per Public Guardian representative. The office through the Dependent Adults Act, which you know we're in the current process of reviewing, provides assistance to individuals who are unable to make personal, nonfinancial decisions for themselves, and the financial decisions are made by Justice's office of the Public Trustee.

But that office doesn't just administer that part of it. It also administers the Personal Directives Act, which is being looked at in context with the Dependent Adults Act. It's legislation that's going to allow Albertans as well to choose a substitute decision-maker and provide specific care instructions in the event that they require assistance sometime in the future. Part of that additional funding is for promoting personal directives across Alberta.

Also, as I indicated, the two acts are going to be reviewed. The office currently provides public guardianship services to approximately 1,800 Albertans, and it assists approximately 8,000 private guardians in their decision-making roles. I hope that that reassures you that it's not going just into administration.

The rest of your questions I'll respond to in writing, if that's okay.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I see the hon. minister has $25 million in her budget for affordable housing. This is an important area, especially for those working Albertans who are struggling to make ends meet, and it certainly is no different in my constituency of Highwood in the towns of Okotoks and High River. I know the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie has covered this off pretty much, and I appreciated the questions he asked and the answers he got. However, could the minister please explain how decisions are made about funding on affordable housing?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. That's a question that I hear often from the community, and it's actually a very simple procedure. We do accept applications from a variety of organizations that are interested in providing affordable housing. We evaluate those applications, and it's based on the needs expressed by the communities that have put forward the applications throughout the province.

I know that there is a total of $25 million which was budgeted, as I said earlier, to complete the first phase of the Canada/Alberta affordable housing program. Since 2002 we have committed close to $53 million in funding to develop almost 2,400 new affordable housing units, and these are in high-need, high-growth communities throughout Alberta. Those are where we receive the applications from. So it is through an application process based on need.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I'd like to start off by commending this minister and the great improvements that she's announced with her budget. It's very enjoyable to see the compassion and the care and concern that she shows for those seniors and community services, which she is over. [interjection] She could hear that; be careful.

The thing I'd like to start off with, I guess, is that you've given those people on AISH the ability to earn an extra $400 before clawback, $975 for couples, which is commendable. It's also good to see that you're leaving dollars in the seniors' pockets with their health care premiums eliminated, the education tax going down.

I guess the first comment, though, I'd like to make is that to me the goals should be to help seniors to help themselves and to also help families to be able to help their aging parents. One of the problems that I haven't been able to find in here – and I believe B.C. is leading in this – is that too often we don't allow families to help their own aging parents. I'd like you to point out if there is anything that's in there. I feel that's critical, that a lot of families aren't able to support and help their parents because they're penalized by keeping them there, or they have no benefits if they're staying with their grandchildren or their children. I'd like to know if there are such accommodations made to enable families to help yet the seniors who are living with their families still receive the benefits. In the rural areas quite often they have allowed what they call granny apartments into the yards in larger areas, that have to be removed when the parents are gone.

An area that I'd like to address also, I guess, is that if they're getting an income of $950 and they earn $450, they're only getting $1,300, $1,400 a month. The question is: why would we want to start clawing back at such a low income? It just seems like a very onerous tax and no incentive for them to go out and really try and become more self-sufficient or enjoy the fruits of their labours to try and get ahead. So I'd very much like to see that increased to give them the chance to get ahead and the desire to improve their lifestyle.

Under Aids to Daily Living another question that I guess goes back to the same one. I've met some very wonderful front-line workers that are there helping these seniors in their homes and facilitating them in overcoming their difficulties in staying in their homes longer. I guess I'm always perplexed at the micromanagement, when we have such fine front-line workers, that they're not allowed to work on a more individual basis with those seniors and to help them in their living at home.

Another area I'd like you to look at. My understanding is that those seniors are not allowed to hire their own family to do work when often they're the very best and most qualified to do that. Like I say, I believe B.C. is making accommodations for that now, and many of those seniors would prefer that. I think that our front-line workers are very capable of making those assessments on those people that need assistance, and it would be great if they had more autonomy in making those decisions to improve their quality of life.

I guess one or two other areas I'd like to address in Seniors is that we have a huge, thick book for benefits for them to go through, and it just seems like somehow we need to be able to streamline that for seniors that need help rather than having to go through and look at every different category and see: well, I can get glasses, but I need something else. It's a huge job, and it's time consuming for my constituency workers to have to help seniors going through and looking and trying to identify a program that would help them. It would be greatly appreciated by the seniors to streamline and have aid there if, in fact, they needed it and not have to fit into a certain category.

The other thing that I'd very much like to see – and I've talked of this in other areas. It's good to see that the education taxes are being reduced for seniors, but I have to ask the question: in order to help them stay in their homes longer and to facilitate them in that area, if we were to look at property assessment taxes. It seems like the government is perhaps its own worst enemy at causing inflation. If we were to take more of a market value, especially for seniors that have been in their home for 50 years and perhaps only paid $50,000. Their income hasn't gone up, they live on a set amount each month, yet as their property is reassessed, it's spiralling up. and it causes them a great deal of stress. For the sake of the seniors, if they could have their property assessment at their cost rather than market value, that would be a great assistance to them and allow them to stay in there and have the incentive to stay in their homes longer.

Also, to look at the other concern that I've heard the most from seniors, the cost of electricity and gas, perhaps there could be some area where we could assist them in that that would allow them also to stay in their homes.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. members, the background noise is getting rather loud. If you would like to continue your conversations out back, it would be appreciated.

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Chairman, I will be brief just because there are other questions that hon. members would like to ask.

You had a number of questions that were interesting, excellent questions on behalf of seniors, some that I have heard about even through developers regarding granny flats and suites behind homes, that kind of thing. I know that when I phoned the city of Calgary to look into that for somebody that had called me, that is related strictly to their bylaws. It's not us that govern that through legislation, but I would be very interested in any information that you do have from B.C. in that regard.

In the area of us assisting seniors to stay together, what comes to mind for me when you said that is about seniors in long-term care, that we're working towards having seniors no longer be involuntarily separated and that in this new interim facility provision we provide through the designated assisted living or the assisted living facilities where there's room in that facility for the senior couple to stay together. If they're unable to, like if we hear of a senior that may be in a rural municipality and their spouse is 50 miles away or whatever based on where they had lived their lives, we do provide transportation funding for that spouse to visit their spouse in the long-term care centre.

We have other assisting programs as well, but we do encourage families, of course, to help out with their loved ones, whether they're in a long-term care centre or whether they visit at home. We do provide home care services, Meals on Wheels through the community. You know, there's lots of assistance for seniors in that way to assist them with staying in the community.

Also, when you indicated that our benefit booklet is far too thick and too much information and difficult for people, we do try to keep it as clear as possible, as easily understood as possible, large writing for people to be able to see what the benefit is quickly, well categorized. I know that we are adding more of the dental, optical, and the education portion of the property tax to that as well.

But our seniors, too, are very familiar with this, that we have a seniors help line that I've been to see in the department. We have a number of workers there. The calls are answered very quickly, within one to two minutes, and we have about 30,000 calls. I think it's about 30,000 calls. I'd have to look at my staff, but I think it's about that per month, so it's well utilized. What seniors ask for is: where can they go in their community in order to have assistance with filling out the forms and whatnot? That's available too, a one-stop area in a lot of the communities throughout the province.

The market value that you had mentioned is with the Minister of Municipal Affairs. It's through the MGA, which I think governs back to the municipality about how they set the mill rate and whatnot.

I hope that assists you. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you. I'll be very brief this evening, minister. I was really happy to hear the minister talk about keeping couples together because that's been a big concern of mine as well. You know, you see these couples that have been married for 70 years, and then I just think it's tragic if they have to separate. So I'm very, very happy to see that the minister is sensitive to those issues and working at trying to keep senior couples together. I think that's a very important component of compassionate care for seniors.

The minister answered my question, but I just want to follow up with the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. He was asking about when seniors access. They often call my office and want to know what the new programs are – and we had some very good news in this budget – how they can access them. You talked a little bit about assistance for them to fill out forms. But one of the questions I have: are there multiple forms for them to fill out? Is this a very simplistic way for them to access these programs? I mean, they're at a point in their life where they can't handle that kind of great complexity.

Thank you.

Mrs. Fritz: In response to that question, Mr. Chairman, actually it depends on what the senior is applying for. I know that there can be more than one form, and depending on the program that they are applying for, they are required to bring in information with them. They may need assistance for clarification of what that information is related to that particular program. But what's important is that once they have applied, for example, for our seniors benefit program and let's say that they're then applying for assistance, that they had a unique need and are applying for our seniors assistance program, which is $5,000 per year that they can apply for up to – once they've applied for a seniors benefit program, that's already in the computer, and we don't ask them to reapply, and we will not be asking for that re-application with the dental program.

9:50

Also, back to the seniors information line: I found it, and I think it's an opportunity, you know, for you to utilize in your constituency office as well, although I know that in constituency offices MLAs help seniors with their forms too, but it's 1-800-642-3853 or 427-7876 in Edmonton.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I again would like to compliment the minister on a professional and informed presentation on a department that is probably one of the more difficult in government and one that has been really crying for some improvements for some time.

First off, on some of these things if I could have some written replies, I'd appreciate that. One is on AISH. Of course, the increase is very timely, and many people on AISH that I've talked to are happy to receive it and, certainly, are happy at the increase in the clawback levels. I have a number of people on AISH in my constituency. I have a number that worked on my campaign, and some of them have shown to me how difficult their lives really can be. To live on what was $850 a month meant they couldn't have a DVD; they couldn't have a computer; they couldn't do a lot of things that people often take for granted in our society as just being normal.

Ms Blakeman: To have a holiday.

Mr. Backs: To have, as the Member for Edmonton-Centre said, a holiday. Simple things. Like, they would take turns on various months on having a bus pass, so sometimes they would walk. It's not like they were bad people; they just were ill. They'd attempt to make a life, and they cannot work. They need that.

I would ask the minister to consider, just like has been mentioned in a number of other programs, that if the surplus is looking up in this year that it be considered that it be increased to the higher level sooner rather than April. I think that that would go a long way to alleviating the lives of these people and to ensuring that we are in fact a caring and civilized society.

Home care has been mentioned by a number of previous speakers, and it is very, very important to ensure that seniors can stay in their homes for as long as possible. I must comment personally that with my own mother she was able to stay at home in a difficult situation, and the people who helped her were very, very professional, very good, sometimes wanted to maybe have a better living themselves and sometimes didn't think that their pay and benefits were adequate and expressed that but in reality were very caring, very professional themselves and very helpful to my mom.

In other areas, the training of group home staff and the actual provision of sufficient levels, there seems to be a real difficulty. There was an incident last week that I mentioned in this area and in the supervision even of the people by the managers of these companies, and it's a great concern in my constituency that this be very, very closely watched. It brings to light the sometimes conflicting objectives within a department and within government of many of the things that are done. The safety and security of seniors and children and the ability of our communities to be comfortable and vibrant cannot be compromised.

Another item as well is, you know, just the question on what sort of costs and what sort of things are really planned in the next year to look at preventing the abuse of seniors. What sort of cross-ministry strategies are really being developed?

Also, the cumulative impact of various costs on seniors. Some were mentioned by the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, the various utility costs, some of the various rising long-term costs. What is being charged, you know, on various seniors because of their spouse's needs?

Other than that, I think many of my concerns were covered by the previous speakers, and that concludes what I have to say, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the member's questions. The AISH question I will get back to you in writing because I've answered it a number of times here today.

Home care, as you know, is working very well for our seniors, to assist them with staying in their homes. It's an excellent program. So are, as I mentioned earlier, Meals on Wheels, other public kinds of agencies that assist the seniors with staying at home. I know the home care program is with the Minister of Health and Wellness, but the program that I do have that assists seniors is the Aids to Daily Living program, that, you know, supplies people with the assistance that they need and can help them with staying in their homes. I agree with you, hon. member: people should be safe, and they should be treated with dignity and respect, especially people that are vulnerable in our society, whether it's our seniors or people with disabilities.

I know you did ask the question regarding the group homes and regarding standards and the education of people within those homes. I had mentioned to you before with this budget how it's allocated that it does go through to the provincial board for persons with developmental disabilities, but they then allocate it regionally to the six regional boards, and the board that's here in Edmonton, then, contracts to the agency or to the home. They follow standards that they've put in place just as we have the AARC standards, the rehabilitation standards. I think it's the circle of excellence or the centre of excellence, something like that is the name, but I could give you a copy of those, which they do follow, and that includes the training of staff.

The Protection for Persons in Care Act we did discuss earlier regarding the 13 key recommendations that were made. They are being reviewed. They're important. You know, if you look at the act and then you see the needs that the community has identified, I can tell you at this point that I agree with many of those changes, and you will see that over the next few months, that that, hopefully, then, will be here in the fall or the next year for the changes in legislation to incorporate those recommendations.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The changes to the amount AISH clients can work is an important part of the package of changes the minister announced last week. Does the minister know how many AISH clients are actually able to work?

Mrs. Fritz: That's a good question, Mr. Chairman. My recollection is that approximately 14 per cent of our AISH clients are able to work. But I can tell you that we're hoping that the changes that we've offered with the exemption that was referred to earlier – because we've doubled the exemption rate where it used to be $200 and then the $300 we had clawed back $75, we've doubled the exemption rate so that it's now at $500, and we've changed the actual exemption with the clawback, that it will be 50 per cent instead of the $75. That, I'm hoping, will assist even more people to have incentive to work and increase that 14 per cent.

The single person who is an AISH client, as you indicated, is going to be able to earn the $400. That was determined through the community. That scale came directly from many agencies in the community who determined the scale of work and the amount of money that people can have when they do work. It'll give them more incentive, but there's a limit to that, a capping at a place where they still receive their health benefit. They don't lose that if they earned $500, and so that, too, continues to provide the incentive.

Couples and single parents, Mr. Chairman, who receive AISH benefits, I indicated earlier, will be able to earn $975, which is $200 more than they can currently earn, and that's before it affects their living allowance as well, hon. member.

I think the rest, about the thousand dollars, I stated earlier. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: My goodness. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I just want to ask a couple of questions about homeless funding. First of all, can the minister please explain how the homeless funding is used? Is it provided to the municipalities directly? That's it.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think I'd like to add to the previous question regarding the homeless funding from a member earlier as well as this hon. member because we do provide $3 million in funding, as I said, to the high-need, high-growth communities. We had mentioned the two urban centres of Calgary and Edmonton, but there are seven, and that does include Fort McMurray and Red Deer, Grande Prairie, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat. What we do is that we continue to work with communities to develop a range of the housing facilities and the support services which were mentioned. Your question was whether or not we give the funding directly to the shelters, and the answer is: yes, we do allocate funding to the agencies that are delivering the services.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. minister, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(4), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration for a department's proposed estimates, I must now put the following question after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Seniors and Community Supports for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006.

Agreed to:

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases $1,582,528,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise and report the vote of Seniors and Community Supports and request leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, for the following department.

Seniors and Community Supports: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $1,582,528,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 28

Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate April 7: Mr. Renner]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in support of this bill and just to make a few brief comments. You know, the Official Opposition stands in support of this bill. Some of the items that are involved in it, like the community revitalization levy, do hold some potential to really provide some tools to municipalities to try and redevelop areas that need that sort of thing. You know, it's called tax increment financing. It can be used to redevelop Calgary's troubled East Village. I think some of the areas in Edmonton that are being looked at could also use this scheme. It has some great potential.

We may need it in the future because of the closing of schools, as some communities do deteriorate because of that.

Ms Blakeman: It changes the neighbourhood, doesn't it?

Mr. Backs: It changes the neighbourhood. You develop a problematic sort of doughnut hole around certain older areas. When you don't have the driving core, like a school inside of it, you lose the attraction for young families. It's a similar problem that a lot of smaller communities had in the past in losing their grain elevators and their schools in the smaller centres.

The community aggregate payment levy, even at two bits a tonne, you know, may provide some additional funding, and there should be, I believe, some agreement on that part by the municipalities of some benefit to them.

In general, the Official Opposition does support this, and at that point I will just say that we'll support moving this.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would just take a couple of minutes. I've had some discussion with the minister about this. It's always the details that we worry about. I'm speaking only and specifically about the tax increment financing. I think this has the potential to be a good thing or a bad thing, depending on how it's worked out. As the minister is aware – and we talked about it – apparently where this was tried in Chicago it has, I believe and from what I've been told, been a bit of a disaster. It didn't do what it was supposed to. It didn't increase the number of businesses. It did not create a net increase in the number of jobs. It tended to increase residential property sales. People living there thought they'd lost control. So I think almost universally what I've heard about that is that it actually had the opposite effect; it just forced people out.

I think that's the major worry. A lot of this is going to happen in the inner city. I know that Calgary is probably further ahead in terms of wanting to do this, but I'm sure that it'll be looked at in Edmonton. There's some concern by inner-city residents that they may lose control of their neighbourhoods and be forced to find other places to live. So gentrification, you know: we do something here and then people that are in that area just keep moving out.

The minister said that he's aware of this, the problems that happened in Chicago, and I take him at his word. I don't know a great deal about it, but my understanding is that Vancouver has had some success in this sort of approach. As I say, the proof will be in the pudding here.

The minister I think said that the opposition could take a look at some of the regulations when they come in so that some of those concerns that we have about, you know, the inner city and things that happened in Chicago will not happen here. I'll take him at his word on that and look forward to seeing those regulations at some time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, anyone wish to rise on Standing Order 29(2)(a) for a question or comment?

Seeing none, does the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs wish to close debate?

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the opposition for their comments. I think they were all very useful, particularly from the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. He indicated that I had had some discussion with him, and I intend to keep my word on that. Not that I will share all of the regulations with the hon. member, but he had some specific concerns. I said that I thought we could address them in regulation, and I intend to work with him and take into account his concerns and deal with his specific concern. We will work with him on that particular regulation.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I call the question.

Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 39

Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 39, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2005.

Very briefly in view of the hour, I'd like to make a few comments about it, and I'll do that now. The changes proposed by the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, I believe, reflect this government's commitment to road safety. In conversation with many of the members from both the opposition benches and the government benches, I believe that everyone here has a commitment to road safety. It's my desire and my hope that, frankly, this bill will get a smooth ride through this Legislature.

The main objective of the act is to make the road safer for all users of the road, in particular those people who are emergency responders, who are out there on our highways and byways on a very regular basis protecting us when we most need them, in other words when we've had incidents on the road, when we're going too fast, perhaps, for safe purposes, and to keep them safer. We've had many, many instances where our emergency responders – people like our firefighters, our police officers, our emergency medical people – are out on the road, and we've created situations where some of them have actually been killed on the roadways of Alberta and some of them have been severely injured. I'll talk at length about those later on.

Bill 39 creates new offences for speeding past these workers as well as workers in construction zones and sets speed limits for motorists passing those emergency vehicles. The amended act increases penalties for those people driving without insurance, and it improves road safety by helping government ministries, law enforcement, and the registrar share information more easily while still protecting the public's right to privacy. The amended act enhances the ability of the minister to make regulations that govern the safety of commercial motor carriers. Again, we've had numerous instances recently where this information and this information sharing becomes even more important.

The Traffic Safety Amendment Act came into force in 2003. It consolidated a number of statutes that had not been reviewed in many years, and Bill 39 addresses the various requirements for clarification that have come to light since 2003.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the time and the fact that I would really very much like many, many members of this Legislature to have the opportunity to hear other members debate, I would like to move adjournment of this bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 1
Access to the Future Act

The Chair: We are currently discussing amendment A2.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I'm really glad that I was on and able to add a few comments in support of amendment A2. What we have attempted to do here under the guidance of our Advanced Education critic, the Member for Calgary-Currie, is to strengthen the access to the future legislation. There were three areas of particular concern for us that we felt could be made better, and this is the second of the three amendments that are being brought forward to do just that.

The first, of course, was to lift the cap on the $3 billion because we felt, in fact, that more money should be going in there, that the $3 billion shouldn't be treated as a ceiling but as a floor. We were trying to get the government to really commit and to fast-track that money. Unfortunately, the government couldn't support that. I hope that's not a reflection of their support for funding overall.

Mr. R. Miller: It could take them eight years at that rate.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. My colleague for Edmonton-Rutherford is noting that it could take them eight years at the rate they're going to actually get that $3 billion in there, which is a little frightening.

But now we have attempted to convince the government to follow up with our second excellent recommendation.

Mr. R. Miller: Twelve years.

Ms Blakeman: I'm sorry. My colleague for Edmonton-Rutherford is now correcting himself and his math. That would be 12 years to reach the limit.

Concentrating on the amendment at hand, what's being suggested here is that we nail down the membership of the advisory council that is suggested in the legislation. The way the legislation stands, it's very vague about who would be on the advisory council. The way it is now, it just says that it would be established.

The Minister may, with respect to the members of the Council,

- (a) appoint [them] . . .
- (b) prescribe their terms of office, and [of course]
- (c) authorize or provide for . . . remuneration, and the minister can designate who the chairperson is going to be. Then it goes on to talk about council responsibilities.

We felt that was very loose, and we wanted to make some concrete suggestions about who we felt should be considered for membership on the council, so we went forward. In this amendment what's being suggested is laid out very carefully, our suggestions on who we think should make up a 17-member council, including representatives from various levels of postsecondary, for example, the universities, the colleges, the nonprofit private colleges, academic staff, nonacademic staff, undergrad students, grad student representatives.

Then we go further and suggest seven members of the general public. What we were considering there were representatives representing parents, representing alumni, representing business organizations and organized labour. That isn't meant to be a hard-and-fast list. That's why we used the wording that we did, which suggests that "not more than 7 members of the general public . . . may be representative of," and then we list those four groups because we wanted, in fact, to be able to make a suggestion but not tie the minister to it.

Now, the minister has already responded to this amendment and has responded by saying that, no, the government finds this too restrictive. They deliberately wanted to leave this sort of loose until they got rolling with this advisory council and decided exactly how they wanted to get it to work. I appreciate that point of view, but I was looking for a bit more clarity from the minister. You know, I'm always interested to see where the government makes the choice to be very specific, in fact micromanage, and the other times when they just sort of take that big step back and go: "Oh, well, no. We're just going to let this flow, one with the universe." It's very interesting where they choose to do that.

I listened to the minister, and I reread his notes in Hansard. Not that the minister's words made me suspicious that there's anything nefarious going on here, but I sure am interested that a number of things have been nailed down in more detail, and to leave this wide open: I'm just curious about that. Let me leave it at that. Obviously, we would prefer to see things laid out and followed a bit more closely. A big part of that is accountability for us.

Now, the minister is saying that they can be accountable without that kind of detail. Yes, but the accountability gets less difficult to track. It's much more difficult for a group to say: well, we weren't consulted. That happens often with this government where they get a good way into something, and then the group they supposedly consulted comes forward and says: "We never heard of that. Nobody ever talked to us about it." The whole thing grinds to a halt, and the government picks up sticks and goes back and actually consults with the group as they were supposed to.

Part of what you get from an idea like we've laid out is that you know exactly who you should be consulting with up front, who's part of that committee, who should be on it, and make sure that, in fact, that's who you're working with. So I'm interested that the minister was refusing to consider that. I had hoped he'd be more open to a higher level of accountability than what he's willing to work with on this particular bill.

This is two strikes, in my opinion. We've experienced difficulty. In our opinion, there's been difficulty in the government's stepping up to the plate on the funding of this in that we had the hesitation from the minister in removing the cap, so it remains a ceiling. Then we get the budget coming out a few days later, and, in fact, only $250 million is in the budget for this year and no other money for it. We're nowhere close to that $3 billion that is supposed to be going into this fund and no future commitment on any of the rolling three-year business plans. So we're starting to think: "Well, how long is it going to take to get this money in there? Where is the commitment for this?"

Then we get into this off-budget money, which reminds me a bit of off-track betting. What are we supposed to make of that? We'll all hang out now and hope that the government has pegged the price of oil per barrel low enough that the money is just going to roll in. It's unbudgeted and therefore, I might add, unaccounted for. That does not bode well here, Mr. Chairman. So, again, I'm wondering about the hesitation from the government in actually following through. I mean, Mr. Chairman, this is Bill 1. This is the flagship. This is the pièce de résistance from the whole spring sitting, from the whole 2005 term of the Legislature, and we can't get confirmation on the money. We can't get confirmation on who's making up the council. It's all beginning to look a bit like a wish, a hope, and a dream and nothing concrete to it.

I don't know that my words will move the minister to change his mind on this, but maybe at some point in the future he can look back and say: yeah, we should do that, and we should do it quickly. I do think the way the minister has it weakens the bill, and this amendment would have strengthened it. So those are the particular points that I wanted to raise around why we're proposing this amendment and what we'd hoped to see from it.

Because I represent so many students, I was particularly glad to see the inclusion of both an undergraduate student rep and a graduate student rep. I've found over the years that I've gotten some very interesting perspectives and very practical front-line recommendations from the undergrads and the grads that live in my constituency and give me commentary on the postsecondary education system and, indeed, on the proposals from the government for that system. I'm always impressed with how thoughtful their comments are, so I certainly would have included a rep from both the undergraduate and the graduate students programs, and in fact I was glad to see that the Member for Calgary-Currie did include those two sectors in his amendment.

So thanks for the opportunity to speak in support of this amendment, Mr. Chairman, and I urge all members of the Assembly to vote in support of amendment A2. Thank you.

The Chair: Any one else wish to rise on amendment A2? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This amendment deals with staffing of the authority that will be set up to oversee the access to the future fund. The bill provides for this to be done by ministerial appointment, and I have to agree with my colleague from Edmonton-Centre: it seems very vague. Our proposed amendment does not take away the ultimate authority of the minister but commits him to appoint nominees made by the postsecondary institutions themselves.

This delegation of the power to appoint is similar to our province's appeal to the Prime Minister to appoint Alberta Senators from a list of names nominated on-site, not from co-opting of the federal government's friends and supporters. But there is another reason, more than simply a geographic decentralization of authority.

Education has long been recognized as an expression of our culture and collective values that encompass us all. Educational standards, curriculum, and staffing should therefore rest on a broader base of support than simply that of the party in power. At the local level we recognized this in the past by setting up the school districts and boards separate from municipal district, city, town, and county councils. These boards enjoyed a measure of autonomy under the ministry. Now, while this government has curtailed the powers of school boards, the principle is still valid, and the structures remain in place.

I urge the government to recognize the validity of this principle in the structure it is setting up to oversee investment in postsecondary education by allowing an amendment to pass that provides nonpartisan local and regional input into the appointment process.

I have spoken appreciatively in the past of the hon. William Aberhart, who as both Premier and minister of education laid the basis of the standard of educational excellence that we in Alberta now enjoy. But there's another side of the Aberhart legacy that's less admirable. When the University of Alberta, bowing to pressure from faculty, reneged on an honorary doctorate it planned to award the Premier, Mr. Aberhart broke up and reorganized its governing structure. The U of A's tricameral system of senate, board of governors, and faculty council goes back to that act of political intervention.

I urge this government to rise above the temptation to make higher education and its administration a political football by including in the appointment process other stakeholders than the government itself. I urge all members to support this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. On this particular amendment one of the things that we have suggested that we should have done before we get into all this – and I think it did put some focus on it. I mentioned before that I had some thoughts that it was a waste of time, but it was the Learning Commission. It superseded what I thought it would do, at least put a focus in terms of things that should be happening in public education. We've said that we should have had the Learning Commission do the same thing in Advanced Ed to show where we're going. Obviously, they're not going to do that, at least at this time.

If that's the case, then, what we need is this council of people that is supposed to oversee what's happening in terms of advanced education and, hopefully, be giving the government some guidelines of what's important and what's not important, where we should be going. It should not be people that are appointed by the government, because they're going to think the same way as the government. They're not going to question anything the government says, and they're going to be sort of yes-people to the minister. Now, I don't think that's even good for the minister ultimately because a lot of mistakes are made that way. Maybe some good Conservatives make a few extra dollars, Mr. Chairman, but I'm not sure it's the way to go in terms of setting policy for advanced education.

Looking at the amendment that the hon. member has brought in, it seems to me that this is an attempt, if we're not having a Learning Commission, to at least have some independent people that will give the government advice about where, if you like, advanced education goes. Mr. Chairman, I think it's important that this be as nonpartisan as it can. It should be broad, not just people that are hand-picked by the minister because I don't think that leads to very good policy development down the way. It's the great unwashed talking to the great unwashed.

As I see it, this is an attempt to make this a more independent, a more vital, and a much more meaningful council than it would otherwise be. For those reasons, I certainly would support this amendment to Bill 1. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will be brief, but I did want to get on the record as supporting this amendment because I think it's very, very important that the government be at arm's length from any advisory council; too much government power and too little autonomy for the universities and the colleges, who, in fact, must establish their own culture and their own way of giving education.

I'm wondering, too, about letting the minister control the funding, sending to the institutions. What about private funds, and what about people who might want to give private donations? Going through a government agency is not how I think it should be done.

The chair of this committee that should be the 17 people should actually be chosen from within, voted amongst themselves. I think the most important thing is that the universities and the colleges absolutely have to have autonomy, and by having that autonomy, they also would respect the collective agreements that they have in place at the moment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm sure that members on both sides of the House are getting eager to vote on this particular amendment, so I, too, shall be brief. I want to thank my colleagues who have spoken in support of this amendment. I think they get it.

I want to note that the hon. Minister of Advanced Education spoke favourably, I guess, to the principle of what we're trying to accomplish with this amendment but suggested that the members of this House should vote against this amendment because he didn't feel that by prescribing who should sit on the advisory council, how it should be comprised, how it should be composed, it was flexible enough. I beg to differ with the minister. I think there is flexibility built in here in a number of different ways.

We've required, requested that up to seven members of the general public but not more than seven members of the general public sit on that advisory council. We've suggested, only suggested, that for the good reasons that I spoke to a week ago, it might be advisable for the minister to choose representatives of parents, alumni, business organizations, or organized labour, suggested that all four of those groups of stakeholders had a place at the table should he desire to offer them one, but I did not require that he choose from each or any or all of those groups.

He spoke at some length last week about using the Justice Policy Advisory Committee from when he was Justice minister as sort of the template for setting this up and suggested that one of the great things about that was that as they were sitting around the table, they were able to say, "Aha, we need someone who is representative of persons with disabilities sitting at the table, and we need somebody from the education sector," that sort of thing. He suggested, you know, that if this is an endowment fund, you might want to have somebody with endowment experience on here.

Well, I would submit that all of that is possible. That flexibility is there right in subsection (viii), you know, the one that says, "Not more than 7 members of the general public who may be representative of parents, alumni, business organizations or organized labour," or, Mr. Chair, other groups. Plain and simple. There's flexibility in here in that although we have to a degree prescribed who should sit on the council or what organizations, what stakeholder groups they should represent, we've made it very, very clear that those groups would submit nominees and the final decision as to which of the nominees to choose would be the minister's. We said further that the chair of the council should be appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council rather than just the minister himself because that brings a little more transparency and accountability to the process.

I have to acknowledge my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, who mentioned that she found it interesting that this government at times can be so micromanaging of organizations, yet at other times, which, you know, I took from her remarks meant at other times when it suited the government, the government can be very loosey goosey about all these things: "No, no, don't pin us down here. We want flexibility. Don't tell us how to do our job. We need that flexibility, but we're perfectly prepared to tell you how to do your job, right down to the dotting of the i's and the crossing of the t's." I think, Mr. Chairman, that what's good for the goose is good for the gander. Plain and simple.

When I introduce my next amendment, I'll be following up on that theme. What we need is some accountability. What we need is some autonomy. What we need is some arm's length here. What we need is a broadly based – this is an important concept, this advisory council charged with making good decisions about how the income produced by the access to the future fund should be invested in order to achieve excellence. I know. I know. To start it's only $11 million worth of excellence, but, hey, it's a drop or two in the bucket anyway.

So this is important. Getting the composition of this board, this council right is important. Allowing this board to have the independence and the autonomy to make good decisions, objective decisions in favour of long-term excellence in public postsecondary education is vital. That is why, Mr. Chairman, I would urge that everyone in this House vote to support this amendment.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Oh, well, we'll try again. I have here my third amendment, 90 copies thereof.

The Chair: We'll call that amendment A3.

Mr. Taylor: Are you ready for me to speak to it now? Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

We will call this amendment A3, I believe the chair said. This amendment says that we move that Bill 1, the Access to the Future

Act, be amended in section 4 by adding the following after subsection (8). This would be: “(8.1) In the Ministry’s annual report, the Minister shall report on each grant from the Fund, including its objective, total value and the amount allocated to each recipient.”

Mr. Chairman, this is a reporting requirement. If this amendment passes, it won’t be the only reporting requirement in the bill. There is already one. The minister is specifically required by section 2(3) to report on access and affordability. “The Minister shall report on the progress in enhancing access and ensuring the affordability of advanced education in the Ministry’s annual report.” We simply believe on this side of the House that he should be similarly required to report on each grant. Again, we are talking here about accountability. Again, we are talking about, I guess, a quid pro quo of a sort: what’s good for the goose is good for the gander. Again, we are suggesting simply that if this government or this minister or this ministry seeks to require the institutions and organizations under its management to be accountable to it, it in turn should be accountable to this House and to the people of Alberta, many of whom pay a good chunk of the bill for their sons and daughters to be educated in our postsecondary institutions: our colleges, our universities, and our technical institutes.

So that’s what this is about. It specifically requires that the minister report on each grant in that fiscal year, I guess, in the annual report. Accountability requires that each grant from the fund be reported on by the minister in his annual report. This fund has been established for specific purposes. Therefore, it’s important to specify that accountability mechanisms are in place to support those particular purposes. It simply asks the minister to do the following: to tell this House in his annual report about each grant from the fund, who got what, to what end, for what objective, for what purpose, how much that particular grant was worth, the amount allocated to each recipient. Although I would hope that the minister in the course of his annual report would address this, there’s not even a specific requirement here that the minister tell this House whether the grant achieved the goal or not. But we do need to see, the people of Alberta need to see the value of the grant, the purpose of the grant, the recipients of the grant so that they can judge for themselves whether that was a wise use of the money.

The minister has made the point frequently – and I fully support him on this – that one of the purposes of the access to the future fund is to foster excellence in postsecondary education. It also addresses accessibility and affordability, of course, but excellence is the other key component here. Whether it’s $250 million, which is all that we’re committed to so far – and I’m thinking back to my failed attempt . . .

Ms Blakeman: Noble.

Mr. Taylor: My noble but failed attempt, yes, to remove the ceiling, the cap on the fund. It seems so pointless now in light of the budget because that ceiling is so high that it makes this ceiling look like an eight-footer in this Chamber, Mr. Chairman.

In any event, whether it’s $250 million or $3 billion or $30 billion or whatever this could grow to if the minister would do it right, it needs to be accountable. It needs to be accounted for by the minister because that’s the only way of ensuring that this money, the income that this endowment fund produces, actually goes to fostering excellence and not just fostering convenience, something that happens to be trendy in a particular year, some sort of applied knowledge for which there may be so many other sources of funding, and so on and so forth.

So that is why I have moved this amendment A3. I’m sure that many members of the House would like to debate this before it comes up to a vote. At this point, then, I would like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Renner: Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report progress on Bill 1.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 1. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Acting Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the Assembly now stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 10:49 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 20, 2005 1:30 p.m.
Date: 05/04/20
[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. In our mind's eye let us see the awesome grandeur of the Rockies, the denseness of our forests, the fertility of our farmland, the splendour of our rivers, the richness of our resources, the energy of our people. Then let us rededicate ourselves as wise stewards of such bounty on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly today His Excellency Ernesto Darias. He's the ambassador of the Republic of Cuba. His Excellency is accompanied by Ms Mary Carmen Arencibia. She's a commercial counsellor. He's accompanied also by Mr. Antonio Castañón, economic counsellor. It was our pleasure to host them for a luncheon, their ambassador's first visit to Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has close to $51 million annually in exports to Cuba, primarily sulphur, wheat, peas, and machinery. Alberta companies are active in Cuba, including Sherritt International, which is now the largest foreign oil producer in Cuba. Alberta's postsecondary institutions, like NAIT, are equally active in numerous partnerships and projects in Cuba.

I'd ask our honoured guests, if they are there, if we'd give them our warm traditional welcome.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It seems that lunch with the Premier has become somewhat of a popular auction item. That's proof, no doubt, of the quality of the lunches, sandwiches, and not necessarily of my conversational skills. Today I had the pleasure of dining and visiting with the successful bidders of this item at the Denim and Diamonds dinner and auction event. This incredible event raised more than $121,000 for juvenile diabetes.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature my guests today: Len Kerekanich, president of Rotating Right Inc. – Rotating Right – Tyrel Kerekanich; Donna Micklos; and Barbara Armstrong, senior manager of resource and program development for juvenile diabetes in Edmonton. I ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, it's always a pleasure for MLAs to introduce school groups to the Legislature. The group I introduce today is a school group from Veteran school in my constituency. Veteran is a beautiful little community in east-central Alberta and has a wonderful school. Today these students are accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Letniak, by parent helpers Dawn Resch, Chris Eamer, Karen Nelson, and Darrel Durksen. I would ask that all members give this group a very, very warm welcome to our Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me as well to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members here 63 of the absolutely most bright and beautiful young students that Edmonton-Mill Creek has to offer. They are here visiting us from Blessed Kateri school. They are joined by some parents and teachers; namely, Robert Burghardt, Cathy Kahanyshyn, Eva Perri, who's a teacher assistant, Miss Diane Nguyen, who's a student teacher, and Francine Verbonac, Elaine More, and Melinda Giebelhaus. I would ask all of them to please rise and accept the very, very best wishes from all members here.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Elaine Ho, provincial director for the Alberta College and Technical Institute Students' Executive Council, ACTISEC, and Brett Bergie, outgoing provincial director of ACTISEC, and Duncan Wojtaszek, the executive director of the Council of Alberta University Students.

Alberta College and Technical Institute Students' Executive Council represents 100,000 college and technical institute students, and the Council of Alberta University Students represents 80,000 university students across Alberta. They're seated in the public gallery. They're here, no doubt, to hear more about the wonderful things that are happening in postsecondary education in our province. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly a constituent of mine, Jim Quinn. Now, Jim Quinn is president of Quinn Construction, and today he's hosting a delegation from Cuba, the CUPET organization, who have come to our great province to explore opportunities in the oil and gas industry. Their visit to Alberta is focused on preventative maintenance training, turnaround management, foreign worker exchanges, specialized and advanced training, technical training at postsecondary institutions, quality control, and technology upgrading. The delegation is seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them each to rise as I call out their names: Jim Quinn, president, Quinn Construction, Paulette Hanson, Mike Pitre, Steve Boomer, Ernie Groom, Ralph Farrell. The members of the Cuban delegation are Abilio Gutierrez, Janvier Dieguez, Sochi Cabarcos, Jorge Aristides, Mirian Acosta, and Antonio Machado. I would now ask the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly eight very special guests from the Dr. Turner lodge in Fort Saskatchewan. They're accompanied today by group leader Darlene Thorne. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly

32 bright, energetic students from the Centennial school in Wetaskiwin. These student visitors are accompanied by five adult leaders, including principal David Luck, teacher William Black, counsellor Eva Rasmussen, student teacher Rhonda Harbert, and parent Mrs. Cathy Robinson. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly another arts company from Edmonton travelling to Ottawa soon to showcase us at Alberta Scene. Concrete Theatre is working in the community using theatre to promote cultural diversity and explore social issues. They're taking a production of The Incredible Adventures of Mary Jane Mosquito to showcase us. This is written by Tomson Highway and targeted to children in preschool to grade 6. I've seen it. It's a very charming little musical cabaret in English with French and Cree. I'd like to introduce the company, please, and if you would stand as I call your name: Julie Golosky is the performer and a wonderful opera singer; Ryan Sigurdson is her accompanist for this performance; Mieko Ouchi, a very well-known filmmaker and director of this production; Gina Puntill, a famous stage manager; and Marian Brant, an old friend and general manger of Concrete Theatre. Please join me in sending them off to Ottawa. Thank you.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so pleased to have the opportunity today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a special guest who is seated in your gallery. Her name is Sandra Sayer, and she is here not only to watch the proceedings this afternoon but to pay particular attention to her son Mikkell, who is a page in the Assembly. I know she is very proud of him. Mikkell is a grade 11 student at Concordia high school, and I'm sure he won't disappoint her this afternoon. So I would ask Sandra to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Mr. Steve Bradshaw. Steve is currently the financial secretary and assistant business agent for the Amalgamated Transit Union Local 569, which is my old local, representing workers at Edmonton Transit. He's also an executive member of the Edmonton-Mill Woods NDP constituency. I would ask that Steve rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions to make today. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Frances Organ. Even at the age of 85 Frances continues to take classes in a variety of areas, epitomizing the idea of lifelong learning. Her long history of volunteerism in our community is remarkable and is greatly appreciated by all of those who she assists.

It also gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Sheila MacKay. Sheila is very involved in the society of Capital Care Norwood auxillary and volunteers two or three days a week helping to make patients feel more comfortable. Sheila has served two terms as secretary of the Alberta Health Care Auxiliaries Association, among other endeavours that she pursues. I would ask Sheila and Frances both to now rise and receive the very warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of this Assembly Jeffrey Laventure-Johnston. Jeffrey is young, 25-years-old, and works as a buyer at Home Depot. He currently is also a caregiver for his brother who is an AISH recipient in Alberta. He is here today, I think accompanied by his brother, and they're both in the public gallery. I'll ask Jeffrey to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Securities Commission

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After weeks of pressure from stakeholders and investors and the Liberal opposition the Minister of Finance has handed off the Alberta Securities Commission file to the Auditor General. My questions are to the Minister of Finance: given that the Minister of Finance has told this Assembly that the report she received from part-time ASC commissioners indicated that there were no enforcement breaches at the commission, has the minister received new information that has caused her to change her mind?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased at the appropriate time to table the letter to the Auditor General in its entirety, but I would like to make sure that the Assembly understands that the Auditor General, as a normal course of his function, had proposed an audit on the Securities Commission. That was talked about in January.

Mr. Speaker, I have said this in the letter, and I think it's self-explanatory.

There have been questions raised regarding the Alberta Securities Commission's enforcement processes. The independent members of the Alberta Securities Commission have provided their assurance that enforcement policies administered [under] the Alberta Securities Commission have been, are, and continue to be applied consistently, fairly, and within an even hand. Nevertheless, given the critical role Alberta Securities Commission plays in capital markets, it is my hope that your review will be complete and timely. I hope that this report can be completed as quickly as possible, with a separate report by you made available to the Legislature and through the Legislature to all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given consistent allegations of enforcement breaches at the Securities Commission, will the Auditor General have the authority to investigate any unenforced complaints he discovers?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, one thing I neglected to say was that this letter was dated April 13, a week ago today.

Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General has all of the authority that he requires to do a complete investigation, and if the hon. member was listening, he would have heard me say, "It is my hope that your review will be complete and timely."

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: will the Auditor General's investigation allow for any and all current and former employees of the Alberta Securities Commission who want to come forward to come forward with a guarantee of legal protection so they don't feel gagged by threats from their employer?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure that it's appropriate that I be questioned as to the abilities of the Auditor General. That question is more properly put to him. What I have said and I will reiterate one more time is that I have asked him to ensure that his report is complete and timely, so obviously there will be absolutely no restrictions suggested, which would be entirely inappropriate to do anyway, by this minister.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electricity Marketing

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's electricity consumers deserve straight answers from this government when it comes to electricity deregulation. They were forced to pay sky-high prices, but this government's explanations have left them in the dark. On Monday the Minister of Energy was decidedly evasive in response to my question, so I will try again. To the Minister of Energy: will this minister categorically deny that TransAlta electricity traders were involved in any manipulation of Alberta's electricity market?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, we continue to be very clear that the market surveillance administrator is very active in protecting Alberta's interest to ensure that the system does work. At this stage there has been no evidence. Clearly, there's some old information that continues to come forward. It's old information. Much of it has been investigated in the past. The things with respect to TransAlta were actually not part of what happened in Alberta. It was part of what happened in Washington state.

Dr. Taft: The same pattern continues.

Again to the same minister, a repeat of a question from two days ago: will the minister tell this Assembly if the Alberta electric system operator investigation into potential market manipulation reported in September 2003, which the minister knows about, was referring to TransAlta?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member is aware of when the question was previously asked, he'll also be aware of when the answer was previously given.

Dr. Taft: Again to the same minister: is it this government's position that there was no price manipulation of Alberta's electricity market?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, at this stage of all investigations there has been no evidence to suggest manipulation in that context.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

1:50 Enron Activities in Alberta

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On July 19, 2001, Bill Williams III, one of the managers of Enron's trading operation, sent an e-mail stating, "We will be taking over the Dispatch of Enron Canada Corp.'s Sundance 3 and 4 Units for the evenings of July 19 – July 22." My first question is also to the Minister of Energy. How often did Enron's greedy American traders take control over electricity generation here in Alberta?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, information with respect to Enron back in 1999 in particular has been investigated. There is some more information that has come forward at the insistence of the market surveillance administrator. That information has been forwarded to the federal Competition Bureau as to future dates.

No one takes lightly the fact that people might be acting improperly with respect to our electricity system. In that respect, evidence has still not been found at this stage to prove that there has been any wrongdoing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: why did this weak and ineffective government allow Enron's west desk, trading desk, in Portland, Oregon, to take over the dispatch of over 700 megawatts of electricity from Sundance power plants here in Alberta and sell it somewhere else?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I'm not specifically aware of the time that he references. We'd be happy to look into the details. I don't have the specifics in front of me, so it's kind of hard to answer that detailed a question relating to some two to three years ago.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister: given that this greedy takeover of Alberta generation by Enron occurred outside the time frame currently being investigated by the Competition Bureau, will the minister finally do the right thing and launch a full, independent public inquiry and find out once and for all how often and for how much the public in Alberta has been ripped off by this electricity generation scheme?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, it's convenient to continue to bring forward suppositions, allegations, and so forth and try and put in preambles that undermine the integrity and confidence in the system, but I'm here to say that the market surveillance administrator is a very effective watchdog, with the professional competence to actually watch and monitor, and does an excellent job on behalf of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Automobile Insurance Rates

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Before the last election the Premier promised Albertans auto insurance rates equal to those in other western provinces. He has yet to deliver, and yesterday's announcement of a 6 per cent cut fails to address the 12.7 per cent overcharging identified in an insurance board study two months ago. My question is to the Premier. Why has the Premier broken his promise to Albertans that he would reduce rates to the level paid in other western provinces which have public auto insurance systems?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I understand the views of the hon. leader of the ND Party, who wants us to socialize everything, including the insurance industry. With respect to his preamble it's simply not true what he says. The intentions of this government were then and still are very good. They are intentions that I think that the hon. leader of the ND opposition would agree with, and that is that good young drivers should not be punished simply because they are young, good older drivers ought not to be punished simply because they are old, and good drivers generally in the age brackets in between ought not to be punished because they are good drivers. The insurance regulations clearly achieve that.

Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the chat, the chitter, the unwanted chit-chat from across the way, I can tell you that relative to my own insurance it is comparable, very comparable to that paid in other jurisdictions.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, not all Albertans have chauffeurs.

Will the Premier tell this House why, when the insurance rate board said in February that Albertans are being overcharged by 12.7 per cent, the government is only rolling back rates by 6 per cent?

Mr. Klein: First of all, Mr. Speaker, every Premier that I know has a driver, not a chauffeur, who acts also as security, but not every Premier drives a '77 Volkswagen. Right? Or a – I forget. It's one of those . . .

Mrs. McClellan: PT Cruiser.

Mr. Klein: PT Cruiser. Right.

So, Mr. Speaker, those are the cars that I drive, you know, as opposed to what he drives.

Mr. Mason: Oh, Mr. Speaker, he got me there. Oh, yes.

Now, if we can get back to the subject at hand, Mr. Speaker, why does the Premier think that being gouged only half as much as people were previously being gouged is good enough?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, relative to the crux and the core of the hon. member's question, I'll have the Minister of Finance respond.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, clearly, the hon. member has not followed the discussion that the Automobile Insurance Rate Board has had, nor does he fully understand the impact of the reforms in this province to date. First of all, there was a freezing, if you wish, a reduction of rates. Secondly, on the direct question on why, when the Automobile Insurance Rate Board stated that it was 12 per cent and they were only recommending 6, this is an interim reduction.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I did clearly outline that there will be a review. That was anticipated and planned. That will begin shortly. We will hear all of the terms of that review. This fall the final number will be made apparent. It may be 12, it may be 13, or it may be 10, but that will be determined. So, really, the drivers in this province are getting a reduction six months earlier than was anticipated in the reform, and the ones I talked to are very, very pleased.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Infrastructure Spending

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance described this current budget as one of investment for the future, and the minister of infrastructure has announced that additional money will go to schools. On behalf of the president of the Warner hockey school, Sandra Nelson – and, I might add, a long-time Conservative – will the ministers of Education, Gaming, infrastructure, Community Development, and perhaps even rural development meet with her and help her to make a centennial legacy for this province by providing the additional infrastructure funding needed to complete the Warner hockey school for girls? Perhaps Sandra's buddy MLA, the minister of infrastructure, could respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd be more than happy to respond to that. I have met with the person that he mentioned on two occasions. I had the opportunity to drive in a car from Raymond, Alberta, where we made a wonderful announcement about a new school in Raymond. I had the opportunity to drive from Raymond to Taber with this individual, and she put forward an excellent case about the Warner hockey school, about what they were doing with kids in Warner. Indeed, my next-door neighbour actually goes to the Warner hockey school. So to say that we know nothing about it I think would be very much an exaggeration. We know a lot about it. We're working very closely with the people of Warner.

Mr. Hinman: I certainly didn't say that you didn't know anything about it.

To the Minister of Finance: on behalf of the mayor of Milk River, Terry Michaelis, will the minister help the town to reduce its debt and interest rate with the Alberta Capital Finance Authority from the current 11.6 per cent to a lower rate?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly the borrowing from Alberta Capital Finance Authority is done under a set of terms and rules and conditions that all who borrow under it understand. It's a well-known fact that there is an advantage to borrowing under that financing arrangement. It's consistent, not subject to change. But I think that if the particular organization in question has some concerns in that area, they should most properly address them directly to Alberta Capital Finance Authority.

2:00

Mr. Hinman: They've tried. That's why they're asking for help.

To the Minister of Children's Services: will the minister commit to recognizing and providing core funding for the Taber Safe Haven women's shelter?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, we have, Mr. Speaker. I know the hon. member had a lengthy conversation with one of the members of my staff, and she explained to him about the funding that they're currently receiving. If my memory serves me well, they also received another $10,000 under this budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Access to the Future Fund

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is in an enviable position with respect to our economic activity, capital investment, and subsequent revenue accruing to the province. A 20-year strategic plan has been developed, one of the pillars of which is leading in learning. My question to the Minister of Finance: with postsecondary education being a cornerstone of this province's future, how will the program be funded if the heritage fund for advanced education is to receive only $250 million in the three years '05-06 through '07-08?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, first, Mr. Speaker, I want to remind all hon. members that advanced education received a 13.4 per cent increase, or $196 million, in addition to the first instalment of the access to the future fund. I want to make it very clear that there is a clear commitment of this government to a $3 billion access fund for advanced education. A clear commitment. We have made it very clear that the $250 million identified in this budget was an initial investment and that future surpluses could be allocated to a number of things, one of them being the endowment funds. It will be built when we have the dollars.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. In the same time frame, '05-06 through to the end of '07-08, reallocations from the sustainability fund do not indicate any additional transfers to the scholarship fund or the science and engineering research fund. What plan is in place to address shortfalls in these areas?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, as was indicated in our budget speech of last week, we anticipate a $1.5 billion surplus this year. There is an anticipation of somewhat of a surplus in year 2 and year 3 of this three-year business plan. It is very clear that those dollars will be allocated to the capital account to deal with infrastructure pressures that are beyond the $9.2 billion capital plan that we have in place, that we will continue to fund the heritage fund to inflation-proof it, and that we have invested $500 million to the Heritage Foundation for Medical Research endowment. With the $250 million for the access fund in this year, it is very possible that there can be a significant contribution to that in this three-year business plan.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Horse-racing Industry

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in this Legislature the Minister of Gaming went to great lengths to describe how the for-profit horse-racing industry, quote, earns, unquote, $45 million in lottery revenue. A plumber earns his money. A carpenter earns his money. An opposition MLA earns his money. My questions are for the Minister of Gaming. Given that the gambling machines at Alberta's racetracks are owned and operated by the province of Alberta, what exactly does the horse-racing industry do to "earn" its $45 million?

Mr. Graydon: Well, the Minister of Gaming is going to earn his money this afternoon.

I guess that a short answer would be that the machines are located at racetracks. The racing industry provides the entertainment, as far as racing is concerned, which invites people to those racetracks, and when they're there, hopefully they also spend a little bit of time being entertained on the slot machines, a portion of which revenue goes to the racing association. Part of that revenue, obviously, goes to the Alberta lottery fund. They bring the guests in, and we entertain them.

Mr. Tougas: Well, if the government takes 33 and a third per cent of the money from gambling machines at racetracks, as the minister said last week, where does the other 66.6 per cent go?

Mr. Graydon: Well, obviously, part of that is what goes to Horse Racing Alberta. Another part of that goes to the facility operator, which is either Northlands, Stampede Park, Evergreen Park in Grande Prairie, and Whoop-Up Downs, I believe it's called, in Lethbridge. That's where the other portion of the money goes.

Mr. Tougas: Well, why does horse racing, which is a private, for-profit industry, get a 66.6 per cent cut of the profits from gambling machines at racetracks while charities at Alberta casinos get just 15 per cent?

Mr. Graydon: Well, we have to look at who builds the facility, Mr. Speaker. In the case of the racetracks the facilities are owned by Northlands or Stampede Park, as two examples. The other casinos in the province where charities get a lesser percentage, those facilities which cost multimillion dollars to provide and build, the nice new ones that we have, are owned by companies and not by the racetracks, or they're privately owned.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Project Kare

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The body of another woman was recently discovered in a remote area near Camrose, Alberta. Police have identified her as having led a high-risk lifestyle. This victim is added to a list of a dozen other women who died violently in our province over the last several years. The killer or killers are still out there. The latest discovery has created even more fear and concern among families and friends of women who also find themselves in similar dangerous lifestyles. To the Solicitor General: what are the police doing to identify and capture the person or persons responsible for these reprehensible crimes?

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This, of course, is a very tragic situation that has occurred, the abduction and senseless murder of another young Albertan. The RCMP have assembled a team of skilled investigators and analysts, 43, that are working on the case every day and have been for the last few years. Through the government of Alberta we are employing four Edmonton Police Service investigators that are also assisting on this case.

Mr. Speaker, last year the province and the Solicitor General's office provided $2.9 million to provide funding to Project Kare, and in this budget last week that amount has increased to $3.7 million, an additional $800,000, to provide the financial support for these investigations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first and last supplemental: what is the province doing to assist the police as they are conducting their investigations?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, the person or persons responsible obviously have been preying on the most vulnerable in our society, and this is one of the issues, again, that we have to be looking at. The government, as I mentioned, is providing full support to the RCMP, full support to the Edmonton Police Service, as we do look at 41 homicides throughout this province, not just in the capital region but homicides going back to the 1930s. Obviously, the Project Kare team was developed in the last few years with regard to those serious murders in the capital region. We continue to monitor as well as assist the RCMP in whatever way we can, but we're also asking the public's support regarding any information they know and asking them to call Crime Stoppers at 222-TIPS.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

2:10 Oil Well Drilling on Crown Land

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Current oil field development on disputed Crown lands in northern Alberta illustrates the lack of direct input Albertans have in ensuring long-term sustainability in the province's natural areas and economic potential. My question to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: before a surface disposition licence was issued to companies involved in oil and gas development at Sawn Lake, did the minister think it necessary to initiate an environmental impact assessment or bother consulting with affected communities?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, I'm not familiar with the exact incident that the hon. member has brought forward, but I'll certainly look into it. It sounds to me that it might be something the EUB might be having approval of, and maybe the hon. Minister of Energy might be able to supplement.

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Speaker, what, if any, public consultations are completed before a licence is given to clear an area the size of half a township?

Mr. Coutts: Again, Mr. Speaker, I believe that when it comes to clearing sites, that's part of the application process to the EUB.

Mr. Bonko: To the same minister: does the minister consider the shoot first and ask questions later approach to be a responsible, sustainable practice in developing long-term integrated land management policy?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, there are processes in this province that have proven themselves for almost 60 years on how approvals are given for development in oil and gas and certainly in forestry, and those processes are followed. I will certainly take this question under advisement and get the details.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Courthouse Security

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Judges in Alberta have expressed concerns about the safety and security in courtrooms and buildings that they are employed in. In light of the fact that in 2004 there was an attempt to take a weapon from a guard in a courtroom and other incidents around Alberta, I have a question for the Solicitor General. That question is: what is the government doing to ensure safety in Alberta courtrooms, not just for judges but for prosecutors and members of the public?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We take the matter of courthouse security very, very seriously. We're well aware that judges, Crown prosecutors, defence counsel, provincial witnesses as well as the members of the public have to be protected within our public court systems. In this last budget we allocated $6 million to provide security to the perimeter of our courts, but as well we're looking at in the future video conferencing throughout the province from our corrections facilities, working in conjunction with the Attorney General regarding video conferencing from a remand centre to the courthouse. So that's another project that we're working on this year.

Mr. Johnston: My only supplementary question is: can the minister tell the House if this increased security plan means checking individuals entering courtrooms or buying special equipment?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, this year we're providing additional funding to our provincial protection officers that do work in the courts. We're going to be hiring an additional 45 officers this year to redeploy 30 RCMP officers out of the courts and back to front-line duties. As well, this may create the fact that, yes, individuals going into the courts may be checked and security screened through a scanner and/or a metal detection device just to ensure the safety of the courts and ensure the safety of the public, the judges, the Crown prosecutors, and defence counsel within those courts. Each case that is held in court can vary from the degree of a high-risk case to those of normal proceedings, but again some of those high-risk cases do need that additional security.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The future of a major heavy oil development near land reserved for the Lubicon Lake First Nation is very much up in the air, with the former partner in the consortium trying to block the project from going forward. The Minister of Energy has acknowledged in this House that the project has not received the necessary regulatory approvals. None of this, though, has stopped this oil company from moving in and inflicting major environmental damage on the site. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Why does the government allow Alberta's natural environment to be destroyed by energy companies like Deep Well Oil & Gas when their projects haven't even reached the first base in the regulatory approval process?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that for the benefit of all members of the House – this question has been asked before and addressed by not only myself but the Minister of Energy – I would like to say that the mineral rights, in fact, were applied for to the Ministry of Energy and through the EUB. In fact, they went through that process to receive their permission pertaining to mineral rights. So this House was not aware of that fact in previous questions, and I want to share that with the House and with the hon. member today.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. To the same minister: why does the minister, who's otherwise meant to be protecting Alberta's environment, refuse to change the rules so that oil and gas companies can no longer clear trees, impact water bodies, and alter ecosystems until after their projects have been secured through all the necessary regulatory approvals.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to say also that I would add that in terms of surface rights they also actually go through the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development, which I understand has also been taking place, that the members of this Assembly would not be aware of. But I can assure this House and all Albertans that the regulations regarding the protection of our environment will continue.

I also want to share that today, of course, 700 Albertans from across all corners of our province are here at the first environmental conference of its kind in Alberta, right here in Edmonton, and I'm very pleased to say that, you know, in the final analysis our most basic common link is that we all inhabit this small planet and this Earth that we live on. We all breathe the same air, drink the same water, and as we go forth, I believe without any political stripe that the environment is something that crosses over all of the boundaries of the politics that are here in this House.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, why doesn't the minister step out of his message box once in a while and instead endeavour to change the rules so that oil and gas companies are required to have all necessary approvals before they can clear the trees, build roads, and permanently alter ecosystems?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member and all members of this Assembly and Albertans that are watching that before any work is done, the rules of environmental protection are followed, will be followed. If there is any breach of that, I'd encourage the hon. member to bring it forward, and we will take quick and swift action pertaining to anything that is going on that is not following Alberta regulation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mental Health Strategy

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Currently the Mental Health Act includes provisions for mandatory treatment only after a person is proven to be a danger to themselves or others; in other words, a danger model. B.C., Ontario, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba have legislated a treatment model that provides people with serious mental disorders community-based treatment and supervision. Studies have shown that these programs reduce hospitalization, increase compliance, decrease victimization of the mentally ill, and decrease violence against members of the public. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will the government update the Mental Health Act to move from a danger model to a treatment model for the treatment of mentally ill Albertans?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in the last couple of years there's been significant work done on the integration of mental health services at the regional level. Now, the question the hon. member asks is worthy of consideration, and in the course of some of the innovative funding responses we get this year to things that we plan to do, we will be very inclined to working further with that. Perhaps during the Committee of Supply I can provide more detail on exactly how we see ourselves funding things. On the legislative requirement we'll take that under consideration.

Ms Blakeman: Again to the same minister: I'm wondering what the holdup is, what the delay is, considering that other provinces have already given us the model to work from.

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to reflect today on the remarks of a certain Senator, Senator Kirby, who spoke to me about, generally, the state of the nation and mental health. There's a lot of work to be done in Canada to improve mental health. There's been a stigma attached to it, and different provinces have described different solutions.

My feeling is that we're embarking on something entirely new with this integration service. We are adding to the supports for mental health. We are working with the professionals and with the training institutions relative to the capacity that we bring in the system. Legislation, although it is one tool, is not always the answer. Frequently the better tools are to work with the providers of service.

Mr. Speaker, one of the emphases that I know was part of the budget speech was on the work that we're going to do with children's mental health, integrating between ministries and also with the providers and the various authorities, and I hope we'll be able to get more answers. The hon. member is right: we're on the threshold of things that I think we can and will do better in future.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that the government has never allocated enough funding to support deinstitutionalization, will the minister under this new third way commit to the resources that we've all been waiting for for 25 years?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think the track record of Alberta's funding for mental health has been appropriate in terms of institutionalization. I have worked in such an institution. It is not always the answer. Frequently institutionalization withdraws the member from the community and makes it much more difficult for them to integrate with the community later. So I think the most important thing is to individually tailor our response to the patient with the provider and take a look at what the most appropriate circumstance is.

Mr. Speaker, some of the supports that have been provided in individual family homes and other circumstances where trained professionals work directly with individuals have had much more success than the so-called traditional model of institutionalization. So I look forward to working on that and to expanding on this further when we talk through the Committee of Supply.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Electricity Transmission

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As Alberta grows, so does the demand for electrical system services. The Alberta Energy and Utilities Board has issued a decision to approve the independent system operator's application to reinforce the Edmonton to Calgary transmission corridor. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. In terms of these upgrades that are needed in Alberta's electrical transmission system, what significance does this particular project have?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This approval by the Energy and Utilities Board recently to build a 500 kv line between Edmonton and Calgary is very significant in the overall context of the reliability of the transmission system so that we can ensure that power can be delivered where it's needed when it's needed. We've had tremendous growth in that sector of population industry, and it's put quite a bit of strain on the existing. With the new transmission lines being built, that will add to efficiency. You will actually by greater efficiency see less line loss lead to a savings, which will actually pay for the new additions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental is to the same minister. When is this project expected to be completed, and are there other upgrades being considered at this time?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, this project has two different phases to it. The first one just involves upgrading existing lines and facilities. That first phase is to be completed in the year 2007. The second phase includes a 330 kilometre line, which is to be completed in approximately 2009. They have the approvals at this stage to do that planning. There still has to be access questions for the specific routing of that line to be approved, and the contemplation is within 2009.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Commercial Vehicle Insurance Rates

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Finance ignored the concerns of small business owners in this province by refusing to provide them with relief on their auto insurance premiums. My question is for the Minister of Finance. Why did this minister once again ignore Joe's pool hall and other small businesses by excluding commercial vehicles from the mandatory, better-late-than-never premium reductions?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the automobile insurance reforms that were introduced in this province in October of 2004 were clearly to cover private vehicles and the compulsory portion of insurance. There was, I believe, at that time a commitment that we would review whether there should be any further inclusion in that and that we would after some experience with the initial auto reforms look at that, and I would expect that that is what would happen.

If the reference is to either the question in the House or to the release from us on the reduction, I'd like a clarification on that because I'm not sure if the hon. member is just referring to the release of the 6 per cent mandatory reduction or to the question on insurance on property, et cetera.

Mr. R. Miller: The question was about auto insurance.

I'm wondering now: will the minister expand the scope of the upcoming AIRB public hearings to include commercial vehicles?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Automobile Insurance Rate Board will very, very soon, perhaps today or tomorrow, be releasing the terms of reference for the review.

Mr. R. Miller: They announced it.

Mrs. McClellan: He tells me that they've announced it, so it was today.

Mr. Speaker, I don't think there's anything that would prohibit anyone from bringing forward information to that review. However, the review was very specific to deal with the reforms that we put in place in October of last year. Again, I repeat: for all of the criticism that we have heard from across the way on those reforms, they must really think they're working because they want more included in them, and I thank you for that vote of confidence.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third supplemental is to the Minister of Finance. I'm just wondering: would she please enlighten this House as to whether or not she reads her press releases before she sends them out?

Mrs. McClellan: I can answer that, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely. I read everything that goes out of my office. Absolutely everything. Sometimes, though, it has a little XXXX at the top on the date, that it will either be today or tomorrow, and when I read the release, it didn't have those Xs filled in. There is nothing that goes out of my office that I do not read if I have approved it or signed it.

Electrical Permits

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, I'm a licensed tradesman, as are the members for Calgary-Foothills and Grande Prairie-Smoky, and I've had calls regarding the proposed changes to the permitting system that would allow journeyman electricians to apply for permits necessary to do electrical installation. Currently only master electricians can apply for these permits. My callers are suggesting that this change would impair the safety of Albertans as a journeyman electrician could have less experience than a master electrician. My first question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Can the minister assure these callers that this proposed change to the master electrician program will not compromise the safety of Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to respond to that question. First of all, let me assure the hon. member that nothing within our public safety division is of more paramountcy than the safety of Albertans within their homes, their workplaces, or their places of employment.

I also want to advise the member that there is, in fact, an ongoing review that has been under way since 2001 by the permit advisory group. One of the recommendations that they are considering is that journeyman electricians be allowed to take out permits for low-voltage installations only, such as single-family homes.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, my constituents that have contacted me do not want this change.

To the same minister: why are you going down this route?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me emphasize that this is not a decision that has been reached yet. It is one that is under consideration. There is, as I mentioned, an ongoing review of the Safety Codes Act and the permitting regulations. The process is designed to ensure that there is uniformity between the trades and between the policies with respect to the issuance of permits. So this particular consideration is in the context of many others, and the decision as to whether we accept those recommendations or not is yet to be made.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister: given that these proposed changes are being considered by your ministry, will there be an opportunity for further feedback not only from my constituents but other electricians around the province?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting that concurrent with the review that's taking place, there was also an initiative by the Electrical Contractors Association of Alberta to review the master electrician program. In fact, they have a number of town hall meetings scheduled across the province to do just that. I would encourage the hon. member and his constituents and any Albertans, as a matter of fact, to find out when one of those town hall meetings is taking place within their community, attend that meeting, and voice their opinion and their concerns with respect to this particular issue and anything else to do with the master electrician program.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Private/Public Partnerships

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Because this government prefers to conduct Albertans' public business behind its closed caucus doors under the cloak of FOIP, the restriction of information act, this people's parliament has the shortest sittings in the country. During question period opposition questions are often ignored and frequently ridiculed. Yesterday I received information that the Ministry of Infrastructure and Transportation had selected a single contractor for a $300 million P3 project to build 25 schools. My questions are to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Will the minister for the record either confirm or deny this latest P3 information?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I completely deny it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. To the same minister: given this government's P3 record, which includes the downsizing of the Calgary courthouse plan although the original $300 million cost remained the same, why will this government not abandon its flawed P3 projects?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, first of all, in the member's preamble there were a lot of things that were, quite frankly, nonsense. For each and every P3 that we will do – and we will be doing more; there will be more P3s in Alberta – we'll take a specific look at the individual one. We'll be taking a look at the business case. It will be reviewed by a committee of private individuals.

Mr. Speaker, the P3s that we're going to do in Alberta are exceptional, bar none. There are no other ones that are out there at this particular time. Could there be some? Absolutely. But each and every one is going to be looked upon on its own merits and its own business case.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given this government's past flip-flops, will the minister commit to building Calgary's southeast replacement hospital in a transparent, publicly accountable, open-bid, non-P3 manner?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member has been reading the newspapers again. The bottom line is absolutely. That's what we're doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Railway Container Terminals

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On April 15 the federal government, the province of British Columbia, and the industry confirmed their support for developing a container handling facility in Prince Rupert. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. What are the implications of this new project on Alberta?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the news that came out of British Columbia, with the federal government and the British Columbia government and CN Rail working together to get the port of Rupert back in the shape that it should be, is absolutely tremendous news for Alberta. What we have now is another port where we can transport our goods.

Mr. Speaker, just for your information, as of today 38 per cent of the goods that go through the port of Vancouver are from Alberta. If there is anything – if there is anything – that shuts down the port of Vancouver, from labour unrest to any technical issues to anything at all, we're going to see that 38 per cent of our goods being an issue. By opening up the port of Prince Rupert, it enables us to have another, quicker, shorter route to our Asian markets. It's approximately 30 to 40 hours shorter from Prince Rupert to the Asian markets than it is from Vancouver.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: what are his department's plans to assist Alberta to take advantage of this new infrastructure?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we're working on the rail links that we have in Alberta through our short-line railroads to link onto the rail to Prince Rupert, and that's probably the biggest thing that we can do. I will say, though, that I think the future is unlimited. If we can expand a pipeline along that same route into Prince Rupert, I think the opportunity is huge for us to export oil through that particular port.

Mr. Speaker, again, this is wonderful, wonderful news for the citizens of Alberta, and it opens us up, quite literally, to a whole new world.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental, again to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: what assistance might the minister be able to offer in developing a proposed container handling facility in the Grande Prairie region?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I was in Grande Prairie probably about four to six weeks ago, and I actually saw the site that they were looking at for this particular container facility. I like the idea. I think there's certainly a case to be made for the intermodalities of transport, and I think that we can certainly look at it. There has not been a specific business case that has been presented to us. There has not been a specific proposal that has been sent to us. However, I do believe that there is certainly opportunity there. Again, this is a wonderful site in order to group the product to ship it off to Prince Rupert and subsequently across to world markets.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I'll call upon the first of six members to participate, but in the interim might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a very special group of students from River Glen school in Red Deer-North. River Glen school is an anomaly because while it is located in the heart of the city of Red Deer, the majority of its students are from rural Alberta. These are well-rounded students who make us very proud. They're always enthusiastic and cheerful whenever I'm fortunate enough to visit their school. There are 44 very bright and energetic students seated in the members' gallery. They are accompanied by their teachers, Mr. Bob Irwin, Miss Tracy Dreher, and Mr. James Stork, along with two parents, Mrs. Christine Richardson and Mrs. Leora Clutton. I would ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure for me to be able to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 26 guests from my constituency. They are 20 students from the Meadowbrook school, five parents, and their teacher. I wanted to tell you that they're here for the School at the Legislature. They won the right to be here through an Access TV competition, and I'm very proud of them. I had the opportunity to visit with them last fall in their classroom. They asked brilliant questions, kept me on the hot seat for over an hour. I'd like to introduce them now, please. The parents are Kim Clark, Gary Wilde, Robert Wellspring, Debbie LeVesconte, and Leanne Simon, and the teacher is Mr. Robert Hodgins. I'd ask all of them and the 20 brilliant students to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, on that point just raised by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, I really encourage you, when you're out talking to schools, to encourage them to look at the School at the Legislature program. Although it's located in Edmonton and it's very difficult for schools outside of Edmonton to do it, it is possible. That's the one message in terms of that, and I appreciate that because it's a tremendous learning experience for citizens throughout the whole province of Alberta.

National Soil Conservation Week

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise today in recognition of National Soil Conservation Week, which is April 17 to 23.

With the federal government's directionless Kyoto implementation plan being recently introduced to the public and few details available, it looks like the feds will let the eastern industries develop their own standards and force unrealistic standards upon the industries which are primarily located in the west.

Here in the prairies conservation, particularly soil conservation, is something that is practised not because it's what Ottawa wants but because it's the right thing to do. Farmers and ranchers are the original stewards of the land, and they pass on their knowledge and respect for the land to the next generation of farmers and ranchers, which is primarily their children. Alberta producers have been leaders in soil conservation and are continually improving their practices by developing the science and technology needed to ensure that our soils are able to continue producing the highest quality crops across the entire globe.

Through the environmentally sustainable agriculture soil quality benchmark program Alberta Agriculture staff work with producers to monitor and assess the quality of Alberta's soil to keep a strong commitment to one of Alberta's most precious natural resources. Producers benefit by using direct seeding and other management practices to improve water infiltration, increase seedbed moisture, enhance organic matter, and reduce the risk of soil erosion.

I would like to thank all the producers past and present for their work in sustaining and enhancing Alberta's soil. Let us leave the land in better shape than when we started.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

National Volunteer Week

Mr. Strang: Mr. Speaker, many of Alberta's great successes have been achieved thanks to the dedication and generosity of volunteers. From coaching soccer to building schools overseas, Albertans have always helped others.

This week we pay tribute to the voluntary sector through Volunteer Week. This is a nationally proclaimed week held to celebrate the valuable and momentous contribution that volunteers make to our lives. All across this great province many events and achievements are going to take place to recognize and thank the volunteers who play such critical roles in our communities. The Wild Rose Foundation provides a provincial focus to Volunteer Week activities. This year a record number of 153 Alberta communities representing more than 2 million Albertans are participating in this week-long series of events.

It is estimated that the volunteer sector is worth over $1 billion to Alberta's economy and over $14 billion to the national economy. The commitment of dollars from Alberta lotteries is continuing to strengthen the efforts of those citizens who are known for their generous spirits, willingness to give, and unfaltering commitment to improving the quality of life for all of us. Alberta leads the way in the voluntary sector, and we can all take pride in the great accomplishments.

I encourage this Assembly to continue its support and encouragement of volunteerism in this province. Throughout Alberta our volunteer spirit is contributing directly to the health and well-being of our citizens and communities.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Centennial Canoe Trip

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1670 King Charles II granted an exclusive charter to Prince Rupert, governor of the Company of Adventurers of England Trading into Hudson's Bay, for the trading of furs and other commodities on all the lands and streams draining into Hudson Bay. That company became known as the Hudson's Bay Company, and the land under Prince Rupert's control, known as Rupert's Land, eventually became most of what is now the dominion of Canada. Prince Rupert's royal charter required the Hudson's Bay Company to pay as rent two black beavers and two elk annually to King Charles or his successors whenever they should be in Rupert's Land.

Mr. Speaker, now that Queen Elizabeth II will once again be returning to Rupert's Land for Alberta's centennial, it's time to pay the rent. Young voyagers from Saint John's School of Alberta, located at Genesee in my constituency, will be joining the 1967 centennial race voyagers on a three-day canoe trip along the North Saskatchewan River from Rocky Mountain House national park to the Alberta Legislature Grounds. Once they arrive on May 22, they will be presenting the Hudson's Bay Company's rent to a prearranged recipient in the form of two elk leather signed scrolls and two tartan-backed beaver blankets.

Saint John's school is a residential school founded in 1968. It is known for its focus on academics and outdoor programming for students from grades 7 to 12.

I would like to commend the young voyagers from Saint John's school as well as the entire delegation who will be making the trek from Rocky Mountain House national park. These adventurers embody what it means to be Albertan and certainly show that the centennial spirit is alive and well.

And, Mr. Speaker, we all know what happens if we don't pay the rent.

Finola Hackett

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize a young Albertan who has once again proven that Albertans rise to the top no matter what the occasion. This past Sunday in Ottawa Finola Hackett, a 13-year-old student from Tofield, Alberta, was crowned the first ever CanWest CanSpell National Spelling Bee champion. During the event 22 competitors, including four from Alberta, competed in Ottawa for the CanWest CanSpell Cup, a $10,000 scholarship, and the opportunity to be flown to Washington, DC, this May to compete in the prestigious Scripps National Spelling Bee. In the end it was Finola and Edwin Ho, from Toronto, battling word for word for 11 rounds before Finola correctly spelled otiosity to take the title. Ironically, otiosity, o-t-i-o-s-i-t-y, means producing no useful result.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all hon. members I congratulate Finola on her impressive victory, and I also congratulate all of our Alberta competitors: Mohamed El Mais, Matthew Fergel, and Mengya Zhou for their accomplishments. Making it to the national finals was no easy feat, and I commend them for all their hard work and dedication. These young Albertans are an incredible example of the talent that lies within every school in Alberta, and I know that they will all be doing great things in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

CKUA Radio

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The CKUA Radio Network

is a true Alberta treasure. Founded in 1927 by a forward-thinking government, CKUA was Canada's first educational broadcaster and its first public broadcaster, predating the CBC by many years. Now in its 78th year CKUA Radio has evolved from a tiny, low-wattage station staffed by dedicated amateurs devoted to the still-newfangled gizmo called radio to a one-of-a-kind radio station carried by a network of 17 transmitters across Alberta.

The CKUA Radio library is one of the most impressive collections of recorded music anywhere in the world, with a quarter million LPs and CDs containing more than 1 and a half million pieces of music. However, this vast collection was briefly silenced when in 1997 a government-appointed board ran CKUA into the ground and forced its closure. Happily, thousands of Albertans rallied around the silent station and brought it back to life run by a volunteer board of directors and dependent for its survival on public support and thousands of hours of volunteer help.

This approach had never before been tried in Alberta, but it was and remains today a great Alberta success story. CKUA today gets most of its budget from its loyal supporters across Alberta, from Athabasca to Whitecourt, and from around the globe. In a world of rigid music formats and cookie cutter corporate control of the radio dial CKUA is truly an oasis for the ears. From folk to jazz, Alberta musicians to stars of world music, classical, blues, Celtic, and contemporary, CKUA has something for every discerning listener.

I urge all members of this Assembly to give it a listen. If you like what you hear – and you will – please join me in making a donation to CKUA during its current spring fundraising drive. There is no other radio station on the planet quite like CKUA, and it is something that all Albertans can be proud of, and it deserves our continued support.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Volunteer Achievements

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The theme of today's recognition is the importance of volunteers. The voluntary efforts of a number of dedicated parents and coaches encouraged the Calgary NASA Rockettes to not only win this spring's Calgary pee wee girls minor hockey tournament but to go on and win the provincial championship. One of the youngest contributors to the team's success was right wing number 8, Moriah Chaisson. Moriah's grandmother, a good friend of mine, not only runs a full-time, highly successful business, Gerry's Hair Design, out of her home, helps with the raising of her grandchildren, but also finds spare time as a volunteer to help adults overcome their addictions.

Last Saturday more than a thousand climbers and their supporters ranging in age from two to 90 participated in the Alberta Wilderness Association's 14th annual Calgary Tower climb. The members for Calgary-Mountain View, Calgary-Lougheed, and I were there to acknowledge the participants' efforts. It was my honour to present iron woman, 90-year-young Phyllis Hart with an award for climbing the 916 stairs not once but twice.

Among the generous corporate sponsors who participated were EnCana Resources and Shell Canada. Shell is one of four environmentally conscious companies, including BP, Petro-Canada, and Suncor, that have already voluntarily reduced their emissions below the Kyoto requirement. Hopefully, Shell will show the same type of environmental ingenuity in finding an alternative method to dredging in a sensitive Canadian Arctic beluga whale habitat in order to access and transport gas deposits.

Thank you.

2:50 Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, by way of an historical vignette for today, on April 20, 1999 – that's not very long ago – one of the really momentous agreements was signed in this country. It was actually signed here in the province of Alberta. It was not the first time, but it was renewed on April 20, 1999, and it was an agreement between the government of the province of Alberta and the Métis Nation of Alberta, which made it very unique in all of Canada.

This agreement was for seven years, and it basically said that it would focus on projects with positive and measurable outcomes for the Métis people in the province of Alberta. The agreement terminates March 31, 2006, but it's also a very good time to just recognize that we have at least four members of this Assembly who are of Métis heritage. To the hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports, the hon. Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency, and the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, who all have Métis blood in their veins, congratulations.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of an op-ed piece in the New York Times of April 15, 2005, by Professor Krugman, a respected professor of economics at Princeton University. In this document Professor Krugman describes why the most privatized health care system in the advanced world – that is, the U.S. system – is “also the most bloated and bureaucratic.”

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of a letter dated April 13, 2005. The letter is from Kerry Barrett, the president of the Alberta Federation of Labour. Ms Barrett is expressing her concern about the lack of consultation with labour in preparing Bill 15 and the serious impact that it has on “important principles regarding worker rights.”

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling this afternoon, and it is the document that I quoted in question period this afternoon. It is from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission library in Washington, DC, and it asks the question, “Did Enron undertake generating projects in Canada?”

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a further five copies of another letter from Kerry Barrett, the president of the Alberta Federation of Labour, asking for a delay in Bill 15 until there is proper consultation with all stakeholders that could be affected by this bill.

Thank you.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier in question period, I would table a letter that was written to our Auditor General, Mr. Fred Dunn, regarding his audit of the Alberta Securities Commission.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'll call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2005-06

Energy

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to take the opportunity this afternoon to review with members of the Assembly the business plan and budget for the estimates for the Ministry of Energy as outlined over the next three years and, as certain members have certainly echoed here, the source of much of the money for this province and this government.

I'd like to introduce, if I could, a few of the members of the executive of the Department of Energy. We are very fortunate to have some very talented, excellent professionals, with great backgrounds, a tremendous source of expertise that is provided by officials in the government and this department in particular to the Department of Energy. I have Ken Smith as Deputy Minister of Energy. He's up in the members' gallery. We also have John Giesbrecht with the Energy and Utilities Board. We have David Breakwell, assistant deputy minister, and Kellan Fluckiger, who's head of the electricity division of our department. Others are I know participating, and we welcome them here and thank them for their excellent work on behalf of the people of Alberta.

Some opening comments. It's an interesting time for the business of energy in this province, very exciting times. A tremendous amount of activity happening across the province: from one end to the other end all across this province the energy sector has reached record levels of activity in 2004 and is expected to increase in the foreseeable future.

Ensuring that Alberta's energy resources are competitive, attractive to investors, nurture Alberta's growth, and create employment well into the future are the Ministry of Energy's most important responsibilities.

Albertans recognize the hard work that it's taken for our province to become deficit and debt free. This prosperity depends in large part on the sustainable development of the province's abundant energy resources.

We are entering an exciting time in this innovative and knowledge-intensive sector as around the world energy demand continues to rise steadily. In fact, sometimes very highly underrated is the level of technology that's involved in this industry, a very high high-tech industry itself, and it spawns a lot of other offshoots in the high-tech industry in the province as a result of the expertise that is demanded and needed to extract and manage these resources.

In today's world the energy sector is certainly worth a lot given the price and demand of that commodity. That is why Alberta has to continue to build the capacity and capability needed to support an innovative and globally competitive energy sector. Alberta's oil sands, conventional oil reserves, and natural gas are all tied directly into the continent's best energy infrastructure.

As the energy industry strives to meet demand, the ministry will continue to ensure that Albertans receive their fair share of resource revenues through royalties, taxes, bonuses, and rentals. Independent royalty regime assessments, including one by van Meurs and Associates of Calgary, suggest that Alberta has some of the toughest royalty terms in the world, and industry sources would concur and support that assessment. It is important that we work towards receiving our fair share, and I believe we have achieved that right balance in Alberta.

We still must remain attractive to investors. Conventional oil and gas and oil sands investment in Alberta alone in 2005 is forecast to be over $20 billion this next year, considerably up from previous years.

Albertans can expect ongoing benefits thanks to the bounty beneath our feet.

In the Department of Energy's business plan the province targets Alberta's fair share between 20 and 25 per cent of industry's annual net operating revenue through the royalty system. In our forecast for this past year, '04-05, the province received over 8 and a half billion dollars in nonrenewable resource royalty revenues.

In 2005-06 in the estimates before us resource revenues are forecast to make up almost 30 per cent of government revenues, about $7.68 billion. These revenues pay for critical services, and of course Albertans reap the rewards of lower taxes, higher employment, and greater business opportunities as a direct and indirect result of the oil and gas industry.

On the utility situation we continue to monitor and are currently reviewing the restructured electricity market. Ensuring that markets are operating in the best interests of Albertans and bringing on new generation to serve our needs are key priorities. That means periodically reviewing and considering options that may be important in fine-tuning the system.

Natural gas consumers also have the protection of the monthly natural gas rebate program, which has just ended the second year of a three-year program. Rebates were activated when consumer rates exceeded $5.50 per gigajoule during the high-demand season, November through March.

With respect to our energy price forecasts our current commodity prices remain very high in historical terms and have fluctuated significantly over this past year. This is due to a number of factors, including robust global economic growth, particularly in China, concerns regarding supply disruptions in Iraq, Nigeria, and Russia, and the high price of oil supporting above average prices for natural gas.

The Department of Energy benchmarks its oil forecasts with those of a number of private-sector analysts. Over the past few years the budget estimates were low compared to the nonrenewable resource revenues that were realized. For our 2005-06 forecast our Budget 2005 is based on an oil price of $42 U.S. per barrel west Texas intermediate, which is between the low and average private-sector analysts' forecasts. Budget 2005 assumes that the natural gas price will average about $5.60 Canadian per gigajoule in this fiscal year. As with oil, the natural gas forecast is benchmarked with those of a number of private-sector analysts.

Another consideration is the general economic outlook provided by Alberta Finance, which projects increased demand for natural gas. But Albertans' share of resource development is more than just royalties calculated on volatile market prices. Bonuses and sales of Crown leases and licences are forecast to generate $886 million in the forecast year coming up.

I would certainly recommend that we continue in our estimates of forecasting. No one can project the future. It's impossible to know for certain. We have seen the cycles in the past. Just when you expect that everything is going to do nothing but increase, markets can decline, and other factors enter into the equation that would see a slackening of demand and price. In that light, I think it's imperative that we do continue an approach of estimating conservatively that price forecast, that we not put at risk the ability to finance programs such as health and education, very vital, infrastructure-related questions of this province, based upon taking an aggressive or high forecast on oil and gas to support that.

Alberta Energy's business plan contains a new vision for energy development in Alberta; that is, Alberta is a global energy leader using its world-class knowledge, expertise, and leadership to develop the vast energy resources of the province and to market these resources and abilities to the world. Alberta will build upon its strength in resources, knowledge, and innovation to become a world-class energy leader, delivering value-added products to North America and offshore countries. Our knowledge, our expertise, our skills and proficiency, our leading-edge approach to energy research, and the vast resources themselves are all of the things that set us apart and set us up as a world leader.

This will require an increased investment in infrastructure, research and technologies, co-ordinated planning, and new approaches to ensure that we can develop these resources to their maximum value in an environmentally responsible manner for the benefit of all Albertans first and foremost, of course, and then to others around the world.

In the coming three years our ministry will focus and prioritize a few areas that I'd like to just touch on, that being Alberta's energy advantage as providing us with being the global energy leaders. I think it's imperative that we develop an integrated energy strategy that looks at not just the production of our natural resources but how it is that we can achieve a greater value-added and the maximum potential for that resource, beyond just being hewers of wood. We have tremendous expertise.

Much of this is starting to occur, but when we see various projects that could come in the oil sands taking a very heavy, heavy oil, we should look at: how can we take those in the producing, those in the pipeline industry, those in the refining industry, the petrochemical industry, and work co-operatively to realize the potential that could be had in taking that raw bitumen to synthetic crude oils or refining that to even refined gasoline products or potentially using bitumen as a feedstock for the petrochemical industry? We could use the expertise and the advantage of the Alberta hub to build upon those strengths and ensure that we can provide that product to not just ourselves in Alberta but to Canadians and, clearly, to the markets in the world.

We have the knowledge and the technology available for integration of that whole approach of focusing our research, focusing the curriculum and the work that's done in our universities and technical institutions to ensure that we have a highly trained and skilled labour workforce that's required now and for the future generations along with the research that we do targeted towards those areas of highest potential and value, given that the technology is at the source, really, of the opportunity, all parts of a further integrated energy strategy.

Secondly, we will continue to focus on and highlight even to a greater extent the oil sands in particular and the heavy oils. We hear about the vast resource likelihood and the 1.6 trillion barrels in place. Proven today are 176 billion barrels of oil, probable in the range of 311 billion barrels. Our resource in proven terms is second only to Saudi Arabia, not much lower than theirs, but in size of resource potentially much greater than any other around the world. It's this world-class resource.

We see and hear about much of the development that is starting to occur, the billions of dollars that are being invested annually, the variety of stakeholders that are being involved in that development. We will need to more aggressively, I would say, focus our energies toward ensuring that we realize the opportunity that's before us. How is it that we can see that the infrastructure is in place as needed? That could be everything from the roads to schools, hospitals, housing, land available. How do we ensure that we have the right regulatory environment in place that can manage this resource for the benefit of all Albertans?

Thirdly, I'd just like to touch on the other huge challenge today. That would be the continued access to the resources, that are vast. I mentioned the oil sands. Natural gas is far too much considered as having been a declining industry. We really are only beginning to realize some of the potential in that area as well. With just improved measures of technology in conventional sources, we leave about 73 per cent of the oil in the ground and 40 per cent of the gas. Just a marginal improvement in technology and we'll realize a whole new Alberta right below us just in our conventional sources.

Then we add to it the nonconventional sources of natural gas in coal. Potentially, 500 tcf of natural gas is available in the coal seams that are there. Just a huge, huge opportunity. We've got this next year likely 3,000 wells that will be drilled just in natural gas in coal. We are just beginning to understand the scope and the size of that resource, and the investment is coming. In many cases this is going to have a large footprint on vast areas of this province.

So when you overlay the oil sands, our conventional sources that span this province, the natural gas in coal, then we can overlay the coal itself, hundreds of years of supply in coal, 800 years in particular, and with the continued improvement of the management of the resources, these will last even longer, I suspect.

Our challenge in Alberta is that we have the world-class size of resources. We have the opportunity to be the world leaders in the extraction of those, both for the development of it but also to show how you sustainably work through a life cycle. How do you ensure that Albertans continue to support that we gain access to the lands to do the work that would benefit all Albertans? So the access will become a third and very important part, that we continue to work with Albertans on to gain their acceptance of temporary disturbances on the surface, to then reclaim and put back to those original conditions, through a life cycle approach, for all the benefits of those vast resources that lie beneath the ground.

With respect to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, they will continue to act on recommendations of the Provincial Advisory Committee on Public Safety and Sour Gas. Significant progress has already been made on the 87 recommendations of that study that was conducted a few years ago. Often we might be asked: why would we develop sour gas around this province? Clearly, it's a lethal substance. You wouldn't ever undertake such an activity unless you could safely manage that product. We have had over 50 years of a very good track record in this industry. It's not without some serious accidents in the past, but no one of the public itself has ever been seriously injured as a result of sour gas. There has been a tremendous improvement in technology, in engineering, with respect to even our own regulation and control and management of the procedures so that safety is paramount.

Last year in particular we had around $2 billion in royalty revenues off the sour gas. A third of our gas in this province is sour. That funds a substantial portion of the benefits that Albertans receive. It provides a clean fuel for the heating of their homes. I don't know about you, but in the middle of the winter it's nice to go to that thermostat and turn it up and have some warmth in the home, and that sour gas adds to the great value of being able to have a reliable, good, safe commodity in our homes. You take a substance that's dangerous and turn it into one that is very manageable and controllable and very worth while, in addition to the substantial economic benefits of jobs, employment, opportunity, and royalties that we derive.

With respect to the ministry's budget this year we'll collect, we're estimating, $7.68 billion in revenues for the upcoming year, over $6 billion in the following year, '06-07, and just under $6 billion in '07 and '08. I would like to point out that the Department of Energy's budget has basically been flatlined for a number of years, yet some of the expenditures propose a net increase in funding of about $13 million, or about 6.4 per cent, for the Department of Energy and the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. It is vital that we make these investments in order to continue to do our business effectively, and the increased costs in the EUB will also translate to manage the increased activity in the energy industry overall and reflect the need of additional resources within.

With respect to a breakdown of those increases, the document shows a request of an additional $7.634 million. That's a little under a 5 and a half million dollar grant to the EUB: $1.2 million of that is for salary increases, a million due to increased activity in the oil sands, a million for information technology, and a decrease of just over a million dollars due to amortization. Of the $5.466 million grant to the EUB, $2 million will be used for public safety, a million and a half for market salary adjustments, $500,000 to oil sands, another $466,000 to monitor Turtle Mountain, and a million for information technology.

Those are some of the details of the specific increases in the ministry's budget over last year. As you can appreciate, it takes resources to collect the billions that we receive annually in revenues, resources of people, systems, and infrastructure, and it's vital that we make these investments in order to continue to do our business effectively.

I thank you for the opportunity to introduce the estimates of the Ministry of Energy and look forward to entertaining the questions of the members.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to get an opportunity to participate in the Energy estimates debate or discussion this afternoon. Certainly, I would agree with the hon. minister that the golden goose has to be maintained. The golden goose is aging. Our conventional crude oil production is declining. I would like to hear later on what incentives, if any, we're going to implement to ensure that we recover maximum amounts of oil and gas from our maturing fields.

I'm watching what the Americans are doing in the lower 48 states. I'm certainly not happy with their initiatives. I'm not happy with some of these royalty reduction programs that we have here now, but we'll get to that later. The Auditor General certainly has some concerns about that, some of which were discussed the other day in Public Accounts.

I'm pleased to see the difference in opinion from this minister to the previous minister in regard to thermostats and sweaters. I'm glad to hear that the hon. minister doesn't think that Alberta should have their own provincial sweater. I don't know what it would be, Mr. Chairman, whether it would be a cardigan or a pullover. If it was the former Minister of Energy and we were to name it after him, well, I think we'd have to have a pullover because he was trying to pull over electricity deregulation on Albertans all the time he was minister. So perhaps we could have the pullover sweater in honour of the previous Minister of Energy.

In that we have limited time and I do not want to waste any of it, there's one question that I would like to ask before I forget in regard to tar sands development. I understand that the oil sands royalty regulation, this OSR 97, is the reason for the significant development in the Fort McMurray area for heavy oil development or synthetic crude production development. Now – and this has been discussed in the Assembly here in the past – if we were to transfer some of that development over into other areas of the province, like the Peace country, where there is not nearly the amount of tar sands and it's at different elevations, if there was to be a development there of synthetic crude production, would that royalty regime or holiday be applicable, or is it just applicable in the Fort McMurray region?

Certainly, as the roads and everything get congested in Fort McMurray, perhaps it's time to have a look at having investment in another area of the province where some of the same resource may be available, and it may be available under the proper economic schedule.

Now, I appreciate the hon. minister's opening comments, but certainly whenever we look at the fiscal plan and we look at what used to be in this book and what's not in it now, we always have a chapter on low operating costs for businesses and households. In the past we would always have a chart on electricity prices, and we'd have convenient comparisons. But this year again it has been omitted. We have business cost index. We have annual labour costs. Edmonton has the lowest labour costs whenever you compare us to places like Houston, Texas, Chicago, Toronto, Vancouver. Even Winnipeg is slightly higher. We have all these charts talking about low operating costs, gasoline prices, natural gas rates, but no electricity rates like we used to have in this report. That to me is a real indicator that this government is ashamed of their electricity deregulation policies because they know that they haven't worked. They know that if they do that cost comparison, it's going to be really, really high.

Now, the Department of Energy also has you know received fairly stable funding over a long period of time. We are requesting this afternoon a total supply of $121.5 million for operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases. The ministry will be spending a little over $200 million, and that's just a wee increase of 3 per cent, as has been previously stated, from last year's forecast.

There are no major spending initiatives or cuts in this year's energy budget. However, I do see where there is an increase in the number of full-time equivalents, or civil servants. There will be an increase of 67 civil servants, and I would like to know where they will be working and what they will be doing. Are these sort of contractors that are employed, or advisors that have contracts, with the department considered in this number, or are they in a separate category? Hopefully, a person will have a chance, Mr. Chairman, to talk about one of those contractors in particular a little later.

I see all kinds of line items in this budget, but what I don't see is what I would like to talk about first, and that's certainly Enron's Project Stanley. I don't see any money or resources allocated for a full, independent public inquiry into the Enron scandal or the Enron behaviour in this province. Why has this government never, ever considered launching a full, independent public inquiry into the Enron scandal in Alberta?

Some of the documents I've had the opportunity to acquire from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission library in Washington, D.C. I wonder if the former Minister of Energy is actually going to maybe grab a sandwich some day and trot from his office to this office of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission and ask where the library is and have a cruise through their electronic version. There are some people there that are really helpful and will guide him if he needs assistance. We could get him researching Enron's involvement, Mr. Chairman, into their activities in Alberta.

Now, again to the Minister of Energy: has the executive director of Alberta Energy's electricity division ever looked into the evidence showing that Enron manipulated Alberta's electricity market to drive up prices or price gouge Alberta consumers? This is an ongoing topic of discussion. Given that the federal Competition Bureau is only investigating Enron's activities for a period in 1999, for just this little window in 1999, but new evidence indicates that Enron was gaining Alberta's electricity market also in 2000 and again in 2001 before the outfit went bust, will the hon. minister launch an investigation, a public inquiry, to investigate these years? It's fine and dandy to say that the Competition Bureau is going to reopen this investigation from 1999, but what about the other years when these rascals were operating in this province?

I'm not confident in the limited mandate that the Competition Bureau has. I don't know what sort of authority they're going to have as a result of the manipulation that was going on with our tie-line to B.C. and the accusations and the allegations that are made there. I don't know exactly how the Competition Bureau is going to be able to do this.

Also, consumers are starting to phone our constituency office, Mr. Chairman, and ask: is the provincial government going to try to get some of this money back on behalf of consumers? Montana – it's hardly a year ago that the Attorney General there made an effort to get some money back for consumers. And the state of California, they're looking at it there, and other jurisdictions are also looking at this as well.

How will Albertans know how much money they're owed by the companies who unethically manipulated the loopholes in the market? How will this money ever be returned to them? We're at the will of the department here to get a refund – not a rebate, a refund, a refund on electricity deregulation. I bet there would be a lot of money involved in this because if we had stuck to that other system, the regulated retail system that we had, we wouldn't be having this discussion today.

Now, also, I realize that I have a FOIP application in, but we could save a lot of time and a lot of trouble here by someone on that side of the House explaining to not only members on this side of the House but to consumers of this province how often, where, and when Alberta government officials met with Enron in the setting up of all this deregulation. There are people that phone, again, and they tell me about the Enron jet and its frequent arrival and departure from the Calgary airport. There are the e-mails that are in existence that indicate that there was communication. Certainly, the last FOIP request that I put in some years ago indicates that there are at least 5,500 documents that were relevant between Enron and the provincial government here.

We know that when the power purchase arrangement press release was put out in the fall of 2002, the top ten list there, Mr. Chairman, one of the people was a gentleman by the name of Eric Thode. The phone number doesn't work, but it's in Houston, Texas. I looked that up. He was an Enron public relations individual, and he's featured on our own Alberta government press release. Yet people are saying, "Oh, no. We had no contact with these people." I would be in trouble if I put someone's name on one of our press releases without permission. Someone had to be talking to Enron. Now, I know the hon. minister was occupied with other things at that time, but someone has to accept responsibility for these rascals and their involvement in our unfortunate experiment with electricity deregulation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the business plan on page 209, the energy resource portfolio diversification. There's a chart here, and it shows Alberta's electricity generating capacity. A recent report, and it's a 10-year study – the government, I believe, is obligated to do this by regulation – on the Alberta electric systems operator, and there is an indication that demand for electricity in Alberta will outstrip supply in 2006. We're hearing all these speeches from government members that "Oh, everything is so great. We had this 3,000 megawatt boost in generation capacity and everything is fine." Yet we have this report indicating that we could have demand exceeding supply as soon as next year.

I think we need to have a good look at this. We need to know what we're keeping in reserve. What's it going to be? Are we going to have to reduce reserves in order to have the system operate? Right now it can be anywhere between 18 and 15 per cent in reserve depending upon whom you talk to. We have to be very, very careful about this. This is not the success story that everyone is talking about. We need to know what this government is planning to address this alarming situation. What solutions do they have? Does the government have plans to compensate companies or provide some kind of financial incentives to companies in order to encourage new generation capacity in Alberta?

Now, while I'm talking about that, I also have another question, and that is: is this government, as a result of the regulation that was passed last year, putting a tax on coal-fired generation in the area out around Lake Wabamun? The reason I ask this is that in the regulation I thought I saw – and I could be wrong – where there was going to be, I believe it was, a $400,000 per megawatt tax on a generating facility if it was located in an area that had surplus generation capacity already in existence.

I took one look at that, and I thought: is this regulation trying to incent coal-fired generation, say, in the Brooks area or somewhere, maybe, on the edge of the growth load in Calgary? If this is not a tax, I would appreciate an explanation from the hon. minister in regard to that because certainly there is lots of generation around that area of the province, Lake Wabamun.

We talked earlier in question period about the transmission system, and we'll get there, time permitting, to talk about the transmission system. What plans, also, does the hon. minister have for a capacity market?

Also, on page 209 – I'm going back here to the business plans – the department is committed to establishing a competitive market framework for electricity and natural gas. Considering that energy deregulation has been an $8 billion failure, an $8 billion boondoggle, why is this government still clinging to such a huge public policy mistake, that this can actually work? Consumers aren't convinced. The silent consumer advocate knows what he's doing, what that office is doing. Consumers don't have confidence in this policy.

Now, considering the pressure the minister is getting to keep the regulated rate option going indefinitely, will the hon. minister commit to keeping the RRO as a permanent option for consumers? Consumers that are contacting our office do not want this flow-through pricing for electricity. Again, if they want to gamble, they're going to go to a casino. They don't want to gamble with their utility costs.

Now, in the estimates on page 126 the budget of energy and utilities regulation has increased to $46.5 million this year from $37.7 million in fiscal year 2003-04. This is a 23 per cent increase. In a department that stresses deregulation, why has the cost of the energy and utilities regulation increased by 23 per cent since 2003-2004?

Now, Grid West. This is another . . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired] I'll get to that later.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll attempt to answer a number of those questions now. If we miss some of it, then we'll respond in writing to the balance.

You started off with any incentives to recover the most we can from our resources. Our royalty structures are actually built upon a production rate that would be subject to volume of production and price. In that sense, you try and make sure that you're recovering in the appropriate economic rent, that smaller volume producing wells would have a lower royalty rate to encourage that they could also retain some of the profits.

We've also, as you're probably aware, put in a $200 million royalty technology credit program to encourage specifically things like enhanced oil recovery. Fifteen million dollars has been put into carbon dioxide sequestration to both deal with climate change and look at how we turn that into an opportunity. Using carbon dioxide is already a proven technology, so how can we see that the economics work for that project? So there continue to be various projects that are looking at technological improvements in addition to the research that we'll help correlate, since this industry is very heavily dependent upon it, on more technology and improvements to technologies to recover a greater quantity of the resources under the ground.

You mentioned the oil sands royalty regulation, OSR 97, with respect to the Peace area in particular. That regulation, the generic royalty regime, does extend to all heavy oil, so it does extend into the Peace area itself. There are actually a few projects already ongoing in that area. Clearly, there's a good, sizable deposit. We talk about the Fort McMurray area, but clearly there are substantial deposits even further west of that, toward the Peace River area. What is happening first is that some of the most easily accessible surface minable areas have started sooner, and some of the in situ kinds of opportunities, the deeper resource, are starting to occur later. But that does also apply to the Peace area.

You mentioned no chart on electricity prices. I can't speak so much for the past, but I can say that it would be actually a great idea for us to continue to inform Albertans that today they receive the least expensive non-hydroelectricity rates of anywhere in Canada. A number of surveys have been done by various other provinces recently. I don't have those at my fingertips, but they continue to put Edmonton, as one of the cities that was surveyed out of about 21 cities around North America, in the top five. The only ones above it were jurisdictions that had a substantially higher percentage of theirs hydro based versus other forms of electricity fired such as coal and cogeneration and natural gas as a primary portion of our electricity generation in Alberta.

So we are very fortunate. Consumers today are reaping substantial benefits even in a marketplace where they're getting the commodity at below replacement cost of those industries. Quite contrary to this being a substantial problem to residential small consumers, they are reaping huge benefits today. They are truly seeing the opportunity of lower prices that have come in relation to new generation.

Many of the regulated models, you have to remember, came with a whole host of other high-cost structures because of guaranteed returns, no forces to actually drive the efficiency. As an example, when Genesee 1 first came on back in the early '80s, it was about trying to time the markets. It's an imperfect forecast, really. No one can know for certain, but a plant was built under a regulated model and had to actually be held off the grid until such time as the growth of the economy caught up to it. There was a recession that hit Alberta at that stage. Consumers paid in those dollars at that time $650 million in interest costs spread over a long time, but it was under those models that we the consumer paid substantial costs for the risks associated.

Today what you've seen is that unlike all the other regulated jurisdictions around us, some of whom have had no growth – Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Well, it's pretty easy to manage no growth. You don't have to contemplate your ever running out if you don't grow. In a fast, high-growing area like ours, this marketplace has responded faster and better than any jurisdiction in North America. Thirty-three hundred megawatts of new supply coming in in a relatively short time is unparalleled in North America. That's from a variety of innovative sources. This isn't just from the few monopoly providers who provide something in the traditional format, maybe a coal-fired plant. It has been able to come from coal, Genesee 3, the very latest of technology that has come in. Some of these come in with higher costs because of the higher standards of environment: carbon dioxide emission, cleaner burning.

Those other provinces. Take B.C.: starting to run short of power. Ontario substantially has huge issues of generation of power. Quebec, even with all the hydro, is actually reaching some issues of supply. Those markets, without the substantial growth that Albertans have faced, still are now about to realize more on their consumer bills the cost of having to produce and generate new electricity under the rules and regulations of today.

When you look into things like Enron, you know, there was a period of time – and these aren't in our estimates, so I'm not going to go forward too much on this. This is in the past. Our estimates are to be looking forward in our budget. In that period of time we had a tight supply, and clearly that drives price. It has been a volatile market. It was early in its design. Substantial improvements to regulations, to the market surveillance administrator's authorities, new regulation and legislation brought in in 2003: a whole host of things done to continuously improve the rules around transparency and the like that will help ensure that the rules provide for greater behaviours and better protection of the public.

Any market produces some volatility. You wouldn't say that in oil and gas prices. We see all the time the volatility of it. We see that in interest rates, your mortgages on your homes. We've seen tremendous volatility. So we are looking at designs. If people want stability and predictability, how do you provide options for them to have stability and predictability?

There are ways to do that in a deregulated model as well. There's a variety of products that are being offered, and it's under a review that we are actually engaged in at the present time, looking at the wholesale and retail rules. Those would be under consideration when you ask things about: would we consider the regulated rate option being continued perpetually? Those are all questions that are being examined at this stage and are part of the business plan, the ongoing part of the Department of Energy, to ensure that we continue to mature and develop a very good market for a reliable supply of electricity: affordable and delivered when you need it and where it's needed.

I will say that when you look to some of the issues of the past, there were protections put in place. While there's no need to conduct a major investigation into the past, there were many legislated hedges put in place that would prevent the volatility of the marketplace being passed on to any one person before the power purchase arrangements were sold. After that, there was quite a tightening of some of the rules around how power would be brought in and out. But in particular, no, we're not going to conduct an inquiry into a company that is bankrupt and that has certainly been proven guilty of some things that were wrong in their behaviours. We don't condone, and we'll be very vigilant in always enforcing the rules that are here.

You mention an increase in a number of the full-time equivalents in the budget. I think it was page 136 of the estimates. Those are both for the Energy and Utilities Board and for the department in particular. With the department there is an increase from 557 to 597. There's a conversion of about 20 contractors to full-time equivalents, and there is also an increase of another 20 personnel full-time equivalents for the department with respect to industry activities. The growth in the oil sands is one of the areas where we have added more staff. There's a tremendous increase in volume of activity in the oil sands.

We've seen record years in the sale of Crown leases. Over $1.1 billion was the forecasted amount that came in last year off our bonus payments. That's just one indication of the tremendous increase in activity. You do need the resources both in the department and in the Energy and Utilities Board to ensure that you can be out and you can do the proper enforcement, that you have the ability to provide the right systems and technology in place. It's a response, really, as a result of the magnitude increase in the industry; therefore, an increase in both the Energy and Utilities Board and the department staff to accommodate that.

You talked about the electricity-generating capacity on page 209, the demand exceeding supply by 2006. I mean, there's a variety of forecasts out there. I'm not certain which one you may be referring to. We have in place about 12,100 megawatts of supply that's available. The peak this past year was – I can't remember the exact number – somewhere in the 9,500 megawatts range. Just even a normal growth will allow you to go well past 2006. You might get to 2007-08 under the worst-case scenario.

We know of numerous options and projects that are being planned. I can't say which ones may all come forward at which time, but what has happened is quite a creativity of people bringing on not just the large projects themselves, the large plants, but everything from the small cogeneration that might bring on a few megawatts of power has continued to add on the ability for the marketplace to bring on the supply as needed.

With respect to capacity markets and the like, those are things that are being looked at with respect to the wholesale market review at the present time. Likewise with the regulated rate option. All of those things in market design are on the discussion. We'll be bringing those back for policy decisions in fairly short order.

I'm not aware, in particular – and we'll have to get back in response to one question – about a regulation that said $400,000 tax per megawatt in the Wabamun area, trying to encourage generation somewhere other than the Wabamun area. We'll have to respond to that one in writing.

The last question was on page 126 I think he said, and I can't remember in particular what the question was, so we'll respond to that one in due course as well.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise with some interest to ask a number of questions to do with the Department of Energy budget for this year. First of all, I would like to just make some general comments. I would like to, you know, offer some praise to the minister for putting together a very concise and straightforward budget. It's refreshing to be able to see with some degree of transparency where the money is going in this particular department. Of course, we have to remember that, in fact, the Energy ministry is more like the engine that generates the funds for many other departments and, indeed, royalties and benefits for all Albertans.

With that in mind, I guess I'm going to approach my comments and questions around a number of different themes. So I will lump the questions together similarly, as a group, and then the hon.

minister can make his comments as he sees fit, either verbally or in writing. I was just looking that the Ministry of Energy first of all is forecasting $8 billion in revenue for this next fiscal year, which is a substantial amount of money. But given that the energy prices are hovering at near-record levels within some small deviation here, and it's expected that these levels will be maintained over the long term – most estimates from different experts from around the world suggest that we are in a new era of high energy prices – I would like to perhaps ask the minister when the government will start to have its forecasting more accurately reflect this new reality, this new platform of revenue that we seem to have found ourselves on, generally to the benefit of most Albertans, although it is a problematic situation because, of course, we do consume energy here as well. So we are paying these high prices along with reaping the benefits of these high royalty rates. But, again, to perhaps have the Department of Energy revisit the royalty structures to more accurately reflect the windfall profits that the energy sector is enjoying at this juncture in our history.

In fact, without addressing this, not just here in Alberta but right across the country and around the world we're seeing a major shift or a sort of migration of capital throughout the world to energy companies because of these massive profits, and it creates an imbalance. You know, part of the best practices of economics, regardless of what ideology you might subscribe to, is to look for certainty and to some degree of regulation in the movement of goods and services.

The second point that I would like to address is in regard to coal-bed methane. According to the Orphan Well website, industry pays for all of the costs incurred with this program. I quote from the website.

Industry funds all of the costs incurred by the OWA, mostly through an Orphan Fund levy. This levy is based on the abandonment and reclamation liabilities held by each company and it is collected annually by the EUB and then remitted to the OWA.

My question is then: will the government be hiking the orphan well fees as it moves towards the fuller realization of coal-bed methane production, which I think the minister knows requires a much higher density of drilling than more conventional forms of extraction?

Indeed, we are seeing the licence for thousands of new coal-bed methane wells, which are all sort of lumped, somewhat curiously, under an experimental sort of grouping, I think. We're seeing thousands of these together. It signals a new reality, I think, in energy extraction in our province. With each move forward we have to keep apace with this in terms of regulations, so I would like to have some new information about this well structure.

Again in regard to the coal-bed methane extraction it's important to look at how other jurisdictions might have addressed this new energy extraction process as it's affected their areas. I know, looking to the states of Montana and Idaho to the immediate south of us, that they have committed themselves or are in the midst of a full environmental review of coal-bed methane extraction, and I would like to ask if our government would be willing to commit to a similar full-scale study on the environmental effects of coal-bed methane extraction in our own province here.

Again in regard to coal-bed methane extraction, of course, water use is also a concern. This industry's appetite for water is well known, and there are potentially serious environmental concerns associated with the use of water not only with coal-bed methane extraction but also, of course, the oil and gas industry. So I would like to ask the minister: what sort of integrated study and focus is the Department of Energy looking at in regard to water use in the energy industry in general and the coal-bed methane extraction specifically? We had the opportunity to discuss this in a short sort of way in Public Accounts, and I'm curious and interested to hear more.

I believe the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar did touch more elaborately on electricity and specifically the early years of deregulation in our industry, so I will speak less to that. But our caucus is also very interested in a public or judicial inquiry into Enron's activities in Alberta through the late '90s and the early 2000s. I think it's important. I know that we want to be forward looking in our budget development, but, you know, deregulation as an experiment is still in its early stages, and we've seen a lot of bumpy spots along the way, especially from the beginning. Although certainly my own caucus and I think the majority of Albertans do oppose deregulation, if we are going to continue down this path, the very least that we can do is look back and have an honest view of what has happened thus far and perhaps develop some honest answers for where we can go with this market.

You know, we have had a tremendous amount of growth in our economy in regard to electricity needs, and I think that the major players in this province have stepped up to the plate to meet those needs. But, you know, the volatility that has been created as a result of deregulation and the need for more generation in this province has ultimately created higher prices than what we should be paying, I think, in this province and, number two, has really cried out for a revisiting of the need to regulate this market and have it rise in a reasonable and equitable way. The casualties along the way for deregulation have been many. While we like to look, as human beings, toward the future, we have to gain our wisdom from the past. So looking into those early years of deregulation I think is vital for us to create a stable electric market in this province.

Recently Martin Merritt, the market surveillance administrator, voiced concerns over the deliberate attempt of some producers to depress the electricity prices in order to elicit what he termed as a price shock in the future. Now, while this strategy may seem reasonable considering the higher prices that we have today, they in fact do hit you in the pocketbook later down the road, of course, when you have a depression and then you have a corresponding swing upwards. This is what we, in fact, did experience in previous years.

Depressed prices, as we all know, tend to scare off producers. So now, interestingly enough, we do have a potential situation where the Alberta government may be forced to encourage producers to come to the province by offering incentives in order to meet our future generating needs. If not, producers may be scared off by the artificially low prices and forgo building new generating capacity here in the province.

When supply is tightened and prices rise, as we know, a few unethical producers may realize the lion's share of profits from the pockets of Alberta's families and our industries, particularly small businesses and small and medium manufacturing operations in this province. So I would have to ask the minister again to explain to Albertans how the government is working to protect all of us, really, from unstable price fluctuations as well as unscrupulous producers and electricity dealers here in the future. I mean, deregulation doesn't just mean wide open, a total lack of regulation, rather we do need to have certain basic standards to hang our hats on, so to speak.

Moving to my next group of questions, I guess. There's obviously a lot at stake to do with oil and gas development. One of the critical issues of this development is transportation of petroleum and petrochemical products. I'd like to ask the minister what the government is doing to ensure that pipeline development is being done not only in an equitable and safe fashion but so that Albertans receive their fair share of the petrochemical products that are being moved about the province and sold outside of the province as well.

We have a number of very large pipeline initiatives moving through the province from north to south and east to west. I know that a lot of industries that have staked a claim, let's say, for value-added production in and around Alberta here are now concerned that perhaps the products, the natural gas and oil, are being shipped without some of the compounds being extracted here in the province so that we can have value-added industry to diversify our economy.

We have to look no further than the string of plants that we have along the North Saskatchewan River east and north of our own city here to see the tremendous stability and profit that we have derived over the last 40-some years from value-added production at such installations as Celanese and Sherritt and Dow. You know, we want to ensure that we are creating those value-added installations here for the future, for good quality jobs, and for production for Albertans.

My last group of questions, I guess, has to do with sour gas and the increasing need, I suppose, for companies to pursue increasingly more volatile, let's say, sour gas wells throughout the province. As our conventional supplies of sweet natural gas dwindle, many energy companies are revisiting wells that, perhaps, were deemed to be too unstable or dangerous to be produced in the past. With that in mind, I think it's incumbent upon this Legislature and the Energy department in particular to make sure that sour gas extraction and production is safe for all Albertans.

I realize, of course, that our natural gas industry is very important to not only our export industry, value-added industries but just simply being able to heat our homes as well, and we do exploit natural gas and have done sour natural gas for a long time. As the oil and gas companies look to wells that are, perhaps, close to urban areas – as we see with the Compton sour gas wells close to Calgary, there and other high-pressure, high-percentage-H₂S fields that we have out in the province – we just want to ensure that safety is the first concern on the minds of oil and gas companies as well as the government.

For example, there are 61 sour gas wells in the Drayton Valley area that have been reclassified as critical, and many people do not know the dangers posed by sour gas. You know, one of my deepest concerns is to educate people about the realistic dangers associated with sour gas exploitation in their immediate area if they are living adjacent to these things, and I think it's important for us to be as realistic as possible. Disinformation is more dangerous than no information at all.

For example, I was taking a peek at the EUB website that's called Kidzone, and while it seemed quite interesting, I suppose – the Kidzone, for those who don't know or have a laptop open right now, you can take a look at it. It's an education website targeting children and trying to educate young people about the oil and gas industry. I think that when I look at something like that and the perspective that's taken in that EUB Kidzone website, I'm somewhat dismayed at the unbalanced nature of that education focus, not really acknowledging certain dangers that are there, the realities that are there and practically trying to inform children about those things, but rather just trying to sell lock, stock, and barrel, say, the sour gas industry as being this fine, fine thing. I mean, kids see through that, and adults see through it as well. As I say, sometimes disinformation or skewed information is more dangerous and damaging than nothing at all.

Then, finally, before I finish, just a couple of things from the Auditor General's report. We spoke about this in Public Accounts just briefly, but the Auditor General was talking about verification for oil sands royalties. I think we discussed this briefly previously. We're looking to see how the Department of Energy is improving its verification process to see if we are in fact receiving the royalties that are due to us under the current royalty structures. Then the second thing that I wanted, and this is my last comment: when will the ministry release a draft of the royalty program objectives and performances that we would so like to see? [Mr. Eggen's speaking time expired] There you go. I just nailed it right on the head.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

4:10

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In response to the questions from the Member for Edmonton-Calder, I'll start first on energy prices, record levels, clearly referenced. Some would say that we're in a new era of high energy prices, and you suggested that we should move more to accurately reflect the new reality.

I guess the challenge with that one is that I'm not certain who in here would be willing to sell all that they have and put that on today's energy price as being the new reality. It could be. I don't know how to forecast that future. But I wouldn't guarantee that we'd provide health and education and some of the services upon gambling on a high price.

I do think budgeting – it wouldn't matter whether it's a high price of a commodity. I think that when you put budgets out, you ought to be fairly conservative in your revenue forecasts if you've got to use those to sustain the services you need to provide. So I think it wouldn't be prudent for us to get too aggressive.

You know, we came through a period in the late '70s, early '80s when there was a new reality then too. I don't know that we'll go back to that. I'm not trying to say that. I'm just saying that high prices spur a lot of other things. They spur a lot of other potential sources. They spur a lot more reinvestment into new supplies. They signal that there's a tightness of supply and demand, and therefore they spike prices, but it then creates a lot of activity to go out and find more supply. It's entirely possible that they could find sufficient supply to dampen price. It might also allow for sufficient price to create other energy sources. We ought to be at the forefront not just of the hydrocarbons but, clearly, energy development in its entirety, whether that came from renewable or nonrenewable sources. But the one thing about high prices is they do spawn a lot of work to bring in other options for energy sources.

But in budgeting, in particular, I don't know. We could be at a new reality. I just think it's far too early to suggest that we're there, and there is downside risk. We know that high prices, as we mentioned, do cause less disposable income for consumers, you and I. We pay for it everywhere. Corporations have less disposable. It will cause some demand constraint kinds of questions. We know of the increase in the need for energy, and energy is very foundational to actually providing for a higher standard of living. Clearly, for the foreseeable future hydrocarbons will play a very significant part of that. But for budgeting, we'll continue to remain on the conservative side of forecasting or picking, really, a price. It's just impossible to foresee that.

You mentioned about revisiting royalty structures to address the windfall profits of industry. I guess, you know, so has the province had windfall revenues. In that light, our royalty revenues do reflect that we get a percentage, and we participate on the upside. You know, we normally only receive, average for the last 20 years, about $4 billion per year. We had last year about $10 billion in oil and gas revenues, forecasting another very strong year next year.

You know, for perspective, part of our royalty structures are more than just the price you see at west Texas intermediate, light grades of oil. Much of our oil is actually heavy oil. Bitumen, in particular, has a huge differential. In the month of December, for an example, those in the oil sands that were selling bitumen actually were losing money because the differential was so great. The market was more flooded with heavy oils, not just from ours, but as the world has to find more oils, even in Saudi and some of those other countries they're having to go with some of their heavier oils, and there becomes an imbalance at times of too much heavy oil and not enough light grades of oils. So there are huge issues that still have to be resolved for us in getting our heavy oils to an upgraded state so that we can realize the higher opportunity.

Even in the oil sands when it's in the mid-50s, west Texas intermediate, there's a lot of work to be done to see that the capacity for upgrading and refining can handle that bitumen for us to realize a higher value for the bitumen. That's the one source – I'll comment a little bit later on one of your other questions – that still impacts substantially even in our forecast going forward. The differential is quite high at this stage for bitumen, and as such we won't quite realize in the near term because the profits aren't quite there on the bitumen side. Most of our royalties are coming from natural gas, and we participate very substantially on the upside of that question.

You talk about the high prices, and it's true of natural gas. They've been high historically. The finding costs – we have smaller pools that are available to find. Supply is what's needed. Some of the larger pools: I don't know that they're all found. There was a recent one by Shell in the Tay River area, a new find, a fairly significant find – they're yet trying to explore the extent of that find – but that's the largest find that we've had in some number of years. In our conventional sources we have quite a challenge, really, of finding costs and exploration costs to find that more marginal play to continue to address supply. Likewise, I'd say that we are trying to see that we get the right balance given that we participate also in the rate, in the profits, on the upside.

You mentioned about orphaned wells. Orphaned wells are tied, actually, to the number of wells that are abandoned, so there is actually a working as to the need for that fund reflected in the quantity and risk of the wells.

In particular, you're referencing the natural gas and coal because of the higher density of wells that could be. Even with that technology, it's not yet for certain whether the density is going to be substantially higher. I mean, they have looked at two to eight wells per section as a potential density that could be in those. We've talked to a few companies that are looking at a variety of horizontal drilling techniques, fewer well locations, a smaller imprint. So we're not really finished to come to a conclusion yet that there really is a substantially higher density of wells. Though initially it looks like there could be, there are many factors that could come into play to reduce that footprint.

That said, many of these areas are far more accessible. Many of these areas are where we are going to need to gain, I think, more co-operation. This does impact a lot of agricultural lands, many in southern Alberta. Really, most of southern Alberta up through to around Edmonton has a substantial play of natural gas and coal, and therefore in minimizing that footprint, they have a little bit more flexibility as to where they locate the wells. When you put two to eight wells per section, it isn't so much that they get it in only one spot but that they look at a broader field and how to drain that field. So there is some flexibility as to location.

Abandonment questions are fully paid for by the industry, and they fully support and we will continue to support that reclamation is the responsibility of industry. It ought to be and will continue to be, and we'll continue to work with industry to ensure that that is the case. That ought not to be something that's left for a future generation as far as risk.

But when you talk about water, I still want to put one thing in context. The industry itself has an allocation of about 5, 6 per cent of the water allocation in total. It's only using about 2 per cent in actual use. Though very important – and I don't want to minimize this because water is a very scarce commodity, too, and very important that we manage it appropriately. We will work and have a commitment to work with Environment to make sure we have the right water strategies and continue to use the best practices. So that will be the foundation of how we manage water.

When you think about some of the areas, I think there is a little bit of a misconception on natural gas in coal. One of the zones, in particular, is the Horseshoe Canyon: very, very little water. A lot of this gas comes out cleaner, with less impurities than what goes into your home today. It comes out under lower pressure, so it's not the volatility and danger of some of the wells. So it's a more stable and benign source and a very good source and a very significant portion of that. Other zones, Mannville in particular, are deeper, and there is water associated.

But we have good rules, no different than in any other drilling in conventional gas. These rules apply to this as well. This is still gas. It's no different in management of water, still the same issues that have to be dealt with. Therefore, we have very good regulation around that issue already. So that'll continue to be the requirement. The modern water management practices are there so that we continue to reuse as much water as we can throughout the industry, not just in natural gas but whether it be in the oil sands, so that we minimize the need for the water usage. We'll work very closely with Environment on their Water for Life strategy and ensure that water is preserved and clean for now and for the future generations.
