Our point is: get the border open. Our challenge is: get the border open. So I want to utilize all the resources that we have to enable the USDA to prove to their own court that they are right. I don't want to challenge what the USDA is doing. I would rather challenge what that judge is doing, and we are working in that direction.

I think that covers most of the points, Mr. Chairman, and if there are other questions, I'd be happy to answer them.

The Chair: Anyone else wishing to speak? If not, I'll recognize the hon. Minister for Children's Services.

Children's Services

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to be brief, and if the opposition critic has any questions after I've explained where we are, I'd be more than pleased to provide her with some answers in writing. I know we've got six others after me.

In total an extra $18 million will be used for child intervention services. Child and family services authorities will receive $14.4 million to cover additional costs for the child welfare service programs. This includes a 4 per cent, $4 million increase in the foster parents maintenance rate. The remaining $3.6 million will be used to implement the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. This one-time cost will fund the transition to provide child welfare services under the new act.

An additional $7.5 million will be used to implement a network of parent link centres across the province. This additional funding will be fully offset by additional federal transfers.

Supplementary funding of $5.3 million will be used to fulfill our commitment to the prevention of family violence. We are using an extra $2.5 million to fund community incentive grants and help communities take action against family violence and bullying, we will continue to develop and implement Alberta strategies for the prevention of family violence and bullying with an additional $1.76 million, and we will use $500,000 for a cross-ministry public awareness and education campaign to help put an end to bullying.

We also require $1.1 million to cover increases in insurance and corporate administrative costs. We'll pay Alberta Finance an additional $400,000 for insurance, and $700,000 will go to ACSC for related costs.

We also are able to use savings from other areas to partially offset increased costs in some of our critical programs.

So that really explains the reasoning behind the supplementary estimates, and we'll intently listen to the opposition.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As I think about the provincial budget, I want to give my thanks for the message from Her Majesty the Queen for Commonwealth Day three days ago.

Her Majesty's reference to children, youth, and education in the human family are important to us in Alberta. I believe that Commonwealth is a good context in which to look at some of the issues we face here. I'm speaking of Commonwealth not simply as an international organization but as a spirit of sharing and co-operation, whether on the world stage, within the Canadian federation, or in our own province.

Let's take the word Commonwealth. I believe that the shift in thinking from empire to Commonwealth was one of the truly positive signs of how people and governments can evolve peaceably. It was a shift from a relationship based on the domination by one party or group of interests to a point where it is recognized that wealth, resources, and responsibility are shared among the members and that the challenges and opportunities faced by one confront us all.

I'm especially grateful that this experiment in Commonwealth began in Canada in our development of a growing measure of autonomy in the context of connectedness. Since the first ongoing contact between Europeans and our First Nations, Canada has been in the orbit of three great world powers: France, Britain, and the United States. The issues of dependence, domination, consultation, and connection are not new but an ongoing part of our story.

It was Canada's emergence without revolution or civil war from a dependency on the world's greatest empire ever, territorially speaking, that paved the way for Australia, New Zealand, and scores of other countries that make up the present Commonwealth. It was Canada's internal politics of 80 years ago that led to a re-examination of the relationships between the parts and led to the statement of a new relationship in the 1926 declaration: "They are autonomous Communities . . . equal in status, in no way subordinate one to another in any aspect of their domestic or external affairs, though united by a common allegiance to the Crown." What better model for a society in Alberta: coequal, responsible communities of citizens united by common transcendent values.

Mr. Chairman, it is a model of our society and its values that faces us as we deal with the Alberta budget. In each specific spending bill we vote on as well as the budget as a whole, there is a reflection of what truly matters to us as a government and as Albertans, as individuals and families in relationship.

Many of us feel that our relationships are too private and too precious to be quantified in dollars or regulated by the state. I note that a former Newfoundland and Canadian cabinet minister has brought up the proposal of legalizing a certain relationship in order to regulate its practice and protect its practitioners. He's speaking of relationship at the level of a commodity, the exchange of what I get for my dollar. Our most valued relations are more than dollar exchanges, yet what we spend in billions is an indication of what our values and relationships are. As the values that we are professing affect what it is we do, so what we do reflects what our values really are.

I am sure that most of us would not want to see the intimate aspects of our lives assessed in dollars and cents. Yet, Mr. Chairman, a provincial budget, the billions we spend collectively, is a good mirror of what the priorities in our relationships are. C. Northcote Parkinson, who gave my generation Parkinson's law and other insights on how we administer and mishandle our wealth, pointed out that corporate boards of directors often approve contracts worth millions on a simple recommendation without discussion then spend half an hour haggling over the price the staff pay for coffee in the lunchroom. He believes this happens because the million- and billion-dollar contracts are too big for us to get our minds around, so we opt out, step back from these to focus on something we can make sense of. Mr. Chairman, the budget being a statement of the big picture, it is important that we stop and step back to get it right, to get the picture clear and to be clear ourselves on our part of the picture. What does it mean to spend dollars, a measure of energy and value on some things and not on others?

In our parliamentary system it is the government's side of the House that brings forward the bills that spend public money. Someday, in a more consensual spirit, in a recognition of the principle of common wealth that may change, but for the moment that is the reality with which we must deal. So, Mr. Chairman, as a member of the second party in this Legislature I propose some alternative measures for our investment that reflect another set of values from those we have before us.

In Bill 1 the government focuses on postsecondary education. This costs billions in faculty and facilities, research and infrastructure. It leads to a flow of expertise and investment to the focus of communities and capital. Yet, Mr. Chairman, the greatest learning takes place in the earliest years of life. Here a child not only learns how to orient himself or herself in the world but faces the basic question of value. Whether she or he is loved and nurtured for what she or he is or for what she or he does to satisfy others, whether she is central in others' attention and affection or somewhere on the periphery, on the basis of this early education curriculums are structured, and systems are put in place.

Is it better spending to provide the initial supports in having a parent on-site at home or quality and qualified support, if required, which costs at most tens of thousands per year, or to train and pay psychologists, psychiatrists, and other therapists at hundreds of thousands and who charge a hundred dollars per hour at least for intervention once damage in early miseducation has been done? Is it better stewardship to have both parents competing in the competitive economy, leaving a child to decide that he must prove his worth by taking jobs that impress, dropping out of relationships and postsecondary programs that she or he should never have entered? One of the greatest educators of all time stated that the goal of education is to know thyself. This is what happens or does not happen in the early years. If we structure society, the market, and family relationships on a basis of unknowing, we cannot be surprised if the results are flawed.

With our provincial budget I understand that decisions are made through managers to either cut or allow certain expenses. Each region makes decisions about how their funding is to be spent. Child and family services is a difficult area in terms of budget because as other areas are cut back and if the cutbacks involve families, child and family services picks up the slack – example: justice, health, income support, education – because in the end child and family services are responsible for the safety and security of our children. As well, as the needs and risks become more complex, the services required in upcoming years may become more costly and complex as well. This may be one area where unexpected expenses would apply. Because of demographics some regions are more costly – for example, fetal alcohol syndrome, addictions, violence – depending on the socioeconomic conditions.

I do have some questions about costs and possible improvements. I wonder if some contracted agencies in our province are duplicating services; for example, when more than one agency has a permanent emergency bed set aside for kids while there is an emergency shelter available which always has room. I'm wondering if these funds for unused emergency beds could be put to better use.

Another thing is training. I'm wondering why some agency staff cannot participate in the training offered to government workers. Those agencies don't usually have the budget, and the government workers, I believe, are getting great training. I think that, surely, including agencies would be wise. I believe there may be innovative ways of working together that are not entertained because of camps and territories within our service provision.

Could we also do a better job of creating a better working relationship with youth justice and agencies in providing transitional services to youth leaving the justice system? These steps may be cost-saving through avoiding some unnecessary duplication and supporting each other in common goals.

As I look at the supplementary estimates, I notice that the request at this time is for $14,426,000 for financial support to child and family services authorities for additional child welfare services program costs, including the 4.5 per cent increase in the foster parents maintenance rate. I appreciate the minister's attempt to give me a little bit more detail because the line items are not very detailed; for example, $425,000 more for corporate administration.

We have a large increase in programs such as the prevention of family violence, and I really salute your efforts with the bullying initiative and the parenting resources initiative. I also notice that the Edmonton area and region is requiring the largest input, with $6,550,000.

I wonder how we could have avoided the need for supplemental income? One of the things that is really difficult as we talk with Albertans about budgets is that we have little information on the expenditures. If we are supposed to vote on this judiciously in the spirit of appropriate government recognition of expenditures, we need to have the detail that allows us to know the types of expenditures.

Another point is that if we are going to have prudent fiscal management in this province, we've got to have timeliness associated with that. We have to make sure that as the budgeting process is put in place, the signals are sent out to the agents that use the dollars that are allocated by these budgets so that they have time to plan, subject to their fiscal year. I believe we must work together toward giving all departments clear priorities and sustainable, predictable funding so that they can better plan for expenditures. This will allow appropriate planning capacity so that we can make sure that our dollars are used prudently.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to be really brief, actually because the hon. member talked a lot about the budget process. I really have to say off the bat that I know her heart is in the right place. We had a meeting; she very deeply, deeply cares about the children and youth in this province and showed it at our meeting. We've decided that we're going to work together for the betterment of the children and youth in this province.

She talked about the duplication of services in regard to some of the things that are happening in this province, and I don't disagree with her. We are going to be looking at how we can better improve the services and, if there's duplication, get rid of that. We're going to do a review of the FCSS and find out if there is any duplication, what they're providing and what government is providing, and make sure that we get the best bang for our buck and do the right thing.

I like the idea that she mentioned, the fact about training, about why the agencies can't participate with government. I don't know why they can't. I wasn't aware of that, so I appreciate your bringing that up to me, and I've got staff that are listening and taking notes.

She talked about youth justice and youth in transition. We're really very, very excited about what's happening in that area. We've got youth receiving services through the new enhancement act that requires a plan to help them work toward independence and adulthood. Previously, when they turned 18, of course, I know the member is well aware of what happened. Under the new act we've got it going until they're 22, and we've developed a mentor program.

Our youth in transition programs that we have currently in the department are, without question, leading this country in how we're dealing with our youth. We'd be more than happy to have her at one of our youth forums sometime, and we'll extend an invitation to let her have the ability to meet the youth that I've met in the past. I mean, it's just an incredible high to be around them.

Her interest in FASD: we talked about that when we've met in the past because it's one of her passions. I can tell her that we are leading in FASD in North America. We have just hired a director because of our involvement with the Canada Northwest Partnership, of which I take over the chair on April 1. He's from Washington, and he's very excited about being here, very excited about what he's doing, told us when he was offered the job as the executive director for that particular position, that he took it in a heartbeat and told the university he was working with how much Alberta is leading. So we're quite excited about that. We're also involved with research, and they're doing a lot of work on FASD. So we should be very, very proud.

The family violence initiative. You indicated that you applaud what Alberta is doing: again, working toward trying to be family violence free. I think probably that would be pushing it, but certainly we're going to continue to work very, very hard on that initiative and the bullying issue.

Mr. Chairman, those really are the few notes I had. Like I indicated to the hon. member, we have staff that will be taking notes. If there's any question, we'd be pleased. Looking forward to continuing working with the opposition member.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to spend a few minutes, make some observations on the request for supplementary estimates for the Department of Children's Services. We'll have a few questions for the minister. I hope she will either be able to answer them here or perhaps later, which would be fine as well.

Mr. Chairman, the additional funds being asked for by the department are close to $27 million, which is a fair bit of change. So the question that I have is: why this fairly large request for extra dollars in the budget in the supplementaries? I thought budgets are prepared by this government doing its due diligence to forecast expenditures and obligations. Then the money is asked of this Legislature by way of the annual budget. Close to $27 million extra dollars being asked I think requires some broad explanation. The information that's provided here in two pages is not enough for me to understand why the expenditures have overshot by this amount over the budgeted ones.

So the minister, I think, took over this portfolio recently, and I appreciate that. I think she is relatively new to this portfolio, but I hope she will have some answers to these questions.

A couple of questions here. On page 23 I think I'm dealing here with line 2.2.6, prevention of family violence. There is quite a substantial increase in that line item from $18 million to close to $23.5 million, so the increase is anywhere between 28 and 30 per cent, quite a large jump over the period under consideration. While I would applaud any effort that is made and bears fruit with respect to the prevention of family violence, I'm curious. Why this jump?

Are there some special measures that have been brought into play to reduce family violence, to prevent it? Has the incidence of family violence gone up so much over the last year that it required additional resources, or has the salary part of the bill gone up because we are paying so much more to people who do this work for us? I mean, all kinds of questions come to mind. Why is it that such a large increase has occurred? As I said before, I would applaud any concrete program and additional effort that will contribute to the prevention of family violence rather than having to deal with the results of it once it's taken place. So it's in that spirit that I'm asking this question, and the minister I'm sure will try to address that.

The Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act implementation

support is 2.1.2. There again the increase is quite substantial, almost 75 per cent more than the $4.3 million overbudgeted as part of the budget. Three point six million dollars extra is being asked for as part of this supplementary request, close to a 75 per cent increase. When increases are so large relative to the budgeted amount, I think it's important to ask some tough questions: why so?

Similarly, Mr. Chairman, the line item 2.2.9, parenting resources initiative. Again, the amount being asked for, in fact, is close to four times what was budgeted. What kind of oversight at the time of budgeting last year led to this one is the question that comes to mind. There's no explanation anywhere here that I can find which would give me the answer so that I don't waste the time of the House and pester the minister with these questions.

One other concern has to do with the only place where I see reference to child care programs, and it's page 22, the very last two lines there: "These costs are being partly offset by anticipated lapses of $4,657,000 from the Child Care Program." What in heaven is this? "Lapses." Is this money unspent? Is this money that's not invested for the care of our children in this province? How does one explain this? I'm just wondering about it.

The minister has been on the national stage with respect to the future of health care in the province. She was in Vancouver, of course, attending meetings with, I suppose, the federal Minister of Social Development. She made some interesting statements and took positions, which we will have opportunity another time, perhaps, to engage the minister in debate on. I'm very concerned about the position the minister has taken.

The child care subsidies that are available now go to families, and only some families qualify based on their income. There are 75 per cent of mothers who are working now, in the labour force. What percentage of that 75 per cent get the subsidies based on this income criterion that the government uses? There's a very large number of middle-class parents who find it both necessary to work and want to work.

It's no longer that women want to accept the old traditional sort of definition of their roles. They want to work. Many of them have gone to university, to college to acquire qualifications. They want to work yet find it very, very tough to pay for the quality of child care that they want to provide for their children. They cannot from their incomes, so they are cutting into their budgets for other family expenditures. I'm hearing from my constituents and from across the province that this is causing a huge hardship.

Now, I don't know the details of the federal program that's under discussion that the minister has been participating in, but I do know that there are some general parameters that are well known, that it's conceived as a universal program, that it'll be available to those who want to make use of it. The minister, during her, I think, statements related to that discussion that she participated in, talks about parent choice. There are lots of parents who want to choose to send their children to good, quality, publicly funded child care programs. Child care provision is not just about babysitting. It's about, in fact, child development and child learning and education in very early years, which are so critical for these very children to do well later on, both in school and beyond.

So the whole notion of child care needs to be revisited in its expanded form in the 21st century. If we really want to succeed, our children must succeed. If our children must succeed, they must receive the services that they need very early. The science of child development that we have available to us, knowledge that's available to us, tells us that any dollars that we invest in very early childhood learning experiences and developmental experiences are paid back wholesomely many, many times over later on in terms of these children doing the right thing that they need to do so that our Solicitor General doesn't have to deal with the problems that arise when we neglect or ignore our children. The children succeed in school. They become more productive. They become higher income earners. They become more contributing citizens of society.

So I don't need to convince the minister or this House about how important it is for us to provide what current knowledge about child development tells us should be provided to our children regardless of who they are or where they are. Yet the minister's statements I find disheartening and discouraging when she talks about not wanting to participate in the federal program, perhaps because it's universal, perhaps because she thinks that it doesn't provide choice.

I'm saying that choice is not the issue. It's not a program that would be compulsory. It's not a program that parents would be forced to participate in. It's a program that will be available to the 75 per cent of women who now take part in the labour force. We need to stand by them. We need to be there to say: well, we are with you as you pursue your hopes and dreams and the incomes that you need as you take part in the place of work, in the labour force. I don't see any indication here that the minister has devoted any resources to exploring that possibility and cutting a new path in that direction as we approach the next year and the year beyond.

So general comments on the minister's position on, you know, providing universal child care to the children of this province. When parents want to go and work and want to choose to send their children to these facilities, we want to make sure that those facilities are of good quality, of the best quality possible. Risks of not guaranteeing quality are so high that they must not be taken.

Anyway, with these comments, I'll sit down, and maybe the minister would want to make observations. I'll be certainly happy to take her answers later on.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really am going to make my comments brief, keeping in mind the other ministries that have still got to report. The hon. member from the NDP opposition started off with the comment about it being a fair bit of change. Yes, it is a fair bit of change, but it's good change. It's good change that we're doing here. Yes, you've had some tough questions, but you've also had some very, very good questions.

I want to start on the last thing first, if I can, and that's on your national child care and the questions you had. Maybe you should join us at the federal/provincial table because what you're talking about is exactly what we were fighting with the federal government about, and that's about choice. What you discussed in regard to child development and the importance of those children getting good quality daycare is exactly what we were fighting about. The federal government was talking about spaces versus output, and we were talking about it being important not to count the spaces but how the children are coming out of the system.

We were also speaking about the fact that we wanted our parents to have choice, whether it was for-profit or nonprofit, whether it was a day home or whether it was kin care or even talking about the fact that we thought about tax incentives for stay-home parents. I have to tell you that one of the questions that you asked – we spent $4.6 million less on child care because there was a decrease in the number of families that chose to participate in the child care subsidy program. That is a very interesting stat. One of the things that we're talking about with the federal government and looking at when we're making our way through this discussion on the national child care is not only a parent's choice; we want to be able to provide the best quality for the parents in this province who choose to put their children in care, whether it's for-profit, nonprofit, day home, or kin care. We think that's very important.

The family violence initiative increase that you asked about is a commitment that we've committed ourselves to from the round-table. We're going to continue to put a lot of emphasis on family violence.

You also asked some other questions. I have to tell you that we've put an extra $18 million in use for child intervention services, which we think is key, and talked about a $4 million increase for foster parent maintenance.

We are very, very pleased and proud of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, which we think is groundbreaking in this country and has been accepted throughout the whole province after many, many, many, many months of consultation with the stakeholders. They're all very, very excited about the new act. With that new act come costs, but again it's important for us to have the best, best for the children and youth in this province.

The parenting resource that you asked about was for us to get up and running parent link centres, that we're very, very excited about, and we'll continue to work on those.

The hon. member asked many, many more questions. We've got staff that have been listening, and I'll be pleased to send you answers by written response. I thank you for your, again, tough but good questions.

The Chair: Is there anyone else wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my great pleasure to rise again, to be able to have another opportunity to address the debate. This time it's supplementary supply, not interim supply.

Mr. Chairman, I'm critic for Community Development. This year Alberta is celebrating its centennial, and pursuant to that, this government has allocated funds for a variety of centennial projects. The goal of these projects has been stated by the government to be to construct and upgrade community, historic, and cultural facilities. However, it appears that some of the projects that have been described as centennial projects to celebrate the vibrancy of Alberta's arts community are, in fact, infrastructure maintenance.

The Chair: A point of order. The hon. minister.

Point of Order Relevance

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Chairman, maybe you could help me out here. We're talking about Children's Services. The hon. member seems to be talking about centennial projects and maybe Community Development. My understanding is that we're still on Children's Services unless you've gone to Community Development.

The Chair: The minister would have to speak first on that topic before you're allowed to speak on it. We're still on Children's Services. So did you want to speak on the estimates of Children's Services?

Mr. Agnihotri: No.

Debate Continued

The Chair: Okay. Does anyone else wish to speak on Children's Services? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Good. I'm glad that you decided that we weren't quite finished. I'd like to ask if I could have answers to the same questions that you're going to send to the other hon. member, minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Absolutely.

The Chair: Anyone else?

Community Development

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Gaming for the hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you. Good afternoon. On behalf of the Minister of Community Development I'm pleased to speak to his request for a supplemental amount of $2.801 million for capital investment.

The facilities at the Canmore Nordic Centre were built for the 1988 Olympic Winter Games in Calgary. They need serious upgrading to bring them back up to international sporting standards and to train Canada's internationally rated athletes. Of the $3.5 million approved this fiscal year, Community Development managed to accommodate $699,000 needed for equipment purchases such as snowcat vehicles used to groom the trails. This supplementary estimate today covers the balance of $2.801 million. The upgrades are paying off already. The facility will host the 2005 World Cup in cross-country skiing this December. We also expect to see the benefits in our athletes' performances at the next Winter Olympics in Torino and again in Vancouver in 2010.

On behalf of the Minister of Community Development I ask that you vote to approve his request for this supplemental estimate. If there are questions to be raised on this $2.8 million, I'm sure the minister will be referring to Hansard when he returns and will answer those questions in written form to the people asking the questions on the supplemental estimate.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Once again it's my great pleasure to rise, to be able to have another opportunity to address the debate, but this time it's supplementary supply, not interim supply.

Mr. Chairman, I'm the Community Development critic. This year Alberta is celebrating its centennial, and pursuant to that this government has allocated funds for a variety of centennial projects. The goal of these projects has been stated by the government to be to construct and upgrade community, historical, and cultural facilities. However, it appears that some of the projects that have been described as centennial projects to celebrate the vibrancy of Alberta's arts community are in fact needed infrastructure maintenance. This government is calling the needed renovation to the two Jubilee auditoriums in Edmonton and Calgary as well as the Provincial Archives centennial projects when they are in fact required infrastructure upgrades. This is not fair.

The Alberta government is not providing sufficient funding for the 600 Alberta artists who are going to participate in the upcoming celebrations in Ottawa and some other cities, to perform their art, for their accomplishments. The Alberta government is providing only half a million dollars for 600 artists. I don't think it's a sufficient amount for all 600 Alberta artists. The Alberta art community is growing. They are generating approximately $153 million in our economy and also about 3,500 jobs every year. They are growing, and we should help them more to grow.

I have just been going through this list of questions on the supplementary estimates that I've kept for the Community Development section. I would like to address this issue to the Minister of Community Development. I don't think he's here, but somebody should see them.

Point of Order

Referring to the Absence of Members

Mr. Oberle: A point of order, referring to the absence or presence of another member in the House.

The Chair: On the point of order?

Mr. Mason: I don't think the hon. member mentioned any particular member of the Assembly.

Mr. MacDonald: Also, Mr. Chairman, on that point of order there was no citation from the hon. member.

The Chair: Do you have a citation?

Mr. Oberle: I don't know the citation, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: I would just caution the hon. member that that's not acceptable.

Would you carry on.

Debate Continued

Mr. Agnihotri: Okay. My first concern is: why did this government allocate $2,801,000 to upgrade the Canmore Nordic Centre facility? Why wasn't this money allocated in Budget 2004, and why couldn't it wait for Budget 2005? What upgrades specifically was this money spent on for this project? I want clarification on this particular project because once again the government has not provided the full detail. Why is it happening year after year? Is it the normal kind of practice? Don't you think it's poor budgeting practice? If the government were a corporation, its CEO would be fired.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. minister, any comments or answers?

Mr. Graydon: The questions are in Hansard, and I'm sure that the responsible minister will be happy to answer them next week. I congratulate the member on getting to the point at the end about the supplementary estimate. We're not here to talk about Jubilee auditoriums, et cetera. The supplemental estimate is very specific to the Canmore Nordic Centre, and that's what his questions were about.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Specific to the supplementary estimates for the Department of Community Development I think it's great that Canmore has been awarded the World Cup race for the winter of 2005. That's fantastic. The information that I have on what the government has already committed to for upgrading the centre is as follows.

In June 2004 the then Minister of Community Development announced $16.5 million to upgrade the Canmore Nordic Centre in support of this bid, which has now been concluded, and of course the World Cup cross-country venue will be Canmore. Now, between June 2004 and March 17, today, we have seen that particular cost skyrocketing by another $2,801,000.

I wonder: what's the explanation for it? Why is it that within a period of less than a year, in fact within a period of eight months, we are seeing a request which adds another $2.8 million to the $16.5 million which was precisely allocated last year for the purpose of upgrading this facility? I think the House would like to have a clear answer to this question. Is it cost overruns? Was it sloppy budgeting eight months ago? Why is it that such a large increase in the cost is being funded without getting answers to the question of what happened over the last eight months that's resulting in this request for an additional $2.8 million for this purpose?

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Anyone else wishing to speak?

Education

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise today of course to discuss the supplementary estimates for the Department of Education, over which I have responsibility. As all members can see, the supplementary estimate that is requested is in the amount of $64.8 million in order that we can continue to support a number of very important initiatives that are of tremendous benefit to our students and toward the enhancement of their learning and, particularly so, to help add more teachers to our classrooms. In fact, of the $64.8 million $52 million for fiscal '04-05 will go specifically toward reducing average class sizes in our school jurisdictions, which, I might add, was an important if not critical recommendation of the Alberta Commission on Learning.

Mr. Chair, I'm sure that the members are well aware of the need for these funds because there's been a lot of talk about reducing class sizes in Alberta. This particular class size reduction initiative, which started last year, has been phenomenally successful. Having concluded my meetings with all 62 school boards, I can tell you that they are absolutely delighted with these new monies. They just want to make sure that we continue them, and we intend to do that.

In any event, the $52 million was first identified and allocated for school jurisdictions I think back in July and August of 2004, and then it was incorporated as a special warrant on January 26 of '05, and what we're asking for now is ratification by the Legislative Assembly within this process called supplementary estimates.

I should also just add for clarity purposes that there is an additional $37 million, which if you add to the $52 million comes to $89 million, and that, in fact, was part of the announcement. But because of the way the government year and the school calendar year sort of overlap by a five-twelfths/seven-twelfths basis, the $37 million will actually come forward in the '05-06 budget, that has yet to be presented in this House. So I just wanted to clear up that point.

This particular supplementary estimate is for the $64.8 million, and of that amount $52 million is specifically for the class size reduction initiative. The second item, which will be the balance, represents $12.8 million, and that's specifically for the purchase of textbooks and other classroom resources that are in support of the new and updated curricula in Alberta's classrooms.

The new funding that we're asking for here will support the implementation of a new social studies curriculum, in particular, which will start in September of '05. The work has all been done. The professional development side has been looked after. The inservicing side, for the most part, has also been looked after, and it's a timely recognition for our centennial year. Obviously, Mr. Chair, everybody in the Assembly would know that textbooks are a critical learning tool for our students, which help them with their literacy, research, study skills, the KSAs as they're called: knowledge, skills, and abilities of our students.

A final couple of comments. The $12.8 million requested here as part of the $64.8 million will help our teachers with classroom learning objectives, and it will give school administrators the flexibility they need in preparation for the introduction and implementation of the new school curriculum. I would like to advise everyone that the revised social studies program will include a greater emphasis, a greater focus on Canadian and Alberta history and will focus on the core concepts of citizenship and identity, for example. This is a good thing, and it's one reason why we updated the curriculum. That, of course, ties in with our centennial initiative that I referred to earlier.

I'll conclude by just saying that the $12.8 million for this aspect will be distributed on a per student basis, and all school jurisdictions, that being 62 school boards plus Alberta students enrolled in the Lloydminster public and separate boards plus 13 charter schools and 112 accredited and funded private schools, will receive their portion of funds with the March '05 grant payments. Providing funds in this fashion, Mr. Chair, is very much in keeping with our flexibility formula, our flexibility principle of our new funding framework, and it will allow school jurisdictions to do the best planning possible for the allocation of these additional resources, whether it's for textbooks or for other important student resources as referenced in the estimates book.

I'll finally just say this concluding statement. These supplementary estimates are very necessary to us, Mr. Chair, because they are ministry-specific and they will give my Ministry of Education the legislative authority to increase spending above amounts previously approved by this Legislature in 2004. In that respect, I certainly look forward to support for these two important initiatives that will be addressed through this supplementary estimate amount.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Chair, for allowing me to speak to the supplementary estimates for 2005. Just before we get into this in terms of specificity in questions, I think there are about three principles of management that concern me here, and I hope that the new minister is going to be addressing these in his new ministry.

Good fiscal planning seems to be one of the things that we really need to look at here. I think it's also significant and important to look at the whole business of input from the school districts. We looked at that this afternoon in terms of the computer. But what kind of input into this information? For example, looking at daily physical education, I think that that was planned somewhat in a hairy-scary kind of situation, and I think we need to try and look at that. I'd like the minister to elaborate, if he would, and tell us the mechanisms he uses in the department to hear from people advising him on curriculum matters. I'd be interested in getting an update on that.

I think the other significant issue here, Mr. Chairman, is the matter of co-ordination between ministries. We have here the $52 million I believe the minister talked about in terms of class size. But as good as that is – and I'm certainly pleased to see that he did that – I think the aspect of planning comes in there. What does it do to the infrastructure of schools in terms of dealing with this? I think we're talking there, as a principle, the interchange of co-ordination between the Education department making a change. What implications does it have in terms of schools accommodating this kind of thing, and what happens to kids in terms of having to deal with the initiatives that are brought forth and the kind of space they use to learn? Is it safe? Is it properly lighted? Does it have the proper blackboards and so forth and so on, audiovisual and so forth?

The other question I'd like to ask the minister is: if this class size initiative was brought by the Learning Commission, I think it was in 2003, for example, how come it wasn't put – I think there was ample time – in the 2004-2005 budget? I'm wondering about that. Then, I look down the line and we look at the whole question of curriculum changes. Again, we look at the question of the Learning Commission report including second language instruction and daily physical education activity. They were accepted shortly after the commission reported in the fall of 2003. Well, is this money being used to support the curriculum changes which the government needed in 2003? Why wasn't it allocated in the regular budget? That's a question I'd like you to answer, sir.

The other question that comes to mind is the question on the business of learning resources. I wonder if he'd be able to tell us: what kind of books? How is this money allocated in terms of school districts across the province? How is it going to be used as a room resource? Is it going to be used for gifted children? Is it going to be for learning disabled children? What kind of use are we getting out of that? Some of the areas I've talked to in the province are even having to supply their own books.

Then the other question I'd like to make. The current allocation for the increased pressures on infrastructure and teachers needed as a result of both class size initiative and new curriculum demands: are these going to be addressed in the new vision in '05-06? He may not want to share that with us. In the need for class size, that he's already talked about, are we going to see some changes to deal with the structural changes that class sizes caused or brought about? I think this is very important, going back to the business of planning and interfacing with the ministry of infrastructure.

I'll just pass on, if I can, Mr. Chairman, to my colleague to my right.

The Chair: Did the minister want to respond first?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Let me just answer a few because it might help out there.

An Hon. Member: Don't ever admit that he's to your right. [interjections]

Mr. Zwodzesky: A bit of mirth in the House. Sorry, Mr. Chair.

Thank you for the questions. I'll just address a couple of the issues, and the rest we'll pick off in Hansard and provide you with the answers that you're looking for.

However, I want to clarify one very important misspeak from the hon. member, and I know it wasn't intentional. We were never talking about daily physical education; we were talking about daily physical activity. As you would know, there's a huge, huge difference. In fact, it was so huge that I had to send out a letter of clarification because some members of the media got it wrong. They thought we were talking about implementing a mandatory daily physical education program, which, as you know, is a whole different thing.

We're talking about simply daily physical activity, 30 minutes per day starting in September for I believe it's grades 1 to 9. It can be as simple as bending, stretching, walking, jogging, taking a field trip down to wherever. The difference is that we are asking teachers to explain that before they do it. Recess, for example, in the lower grades has a huge amount of physical activity out on the playgrounds. That will be eligible, as will stuff at lunchtime, some of it after school, and so on. As long as the activity is connected directly to the school – it doesn't necessarily have to happen on school grounds – then it will be eligible for counting.

The other point that the hon. member made, which is a very good one, is on the relationship between the class size reduction initiative and physical space in the schools. I'm sure that it will come as no surprise that when you hire more teachers to accommodate the first initiative, which is the class size reduction initiative, you have to provide them with classroom space in which to do it.

The member is correct that it has put some additional pressure on the system, and that's why we work very closely with Alberta Infrastructure – now it's called Alberta Infrastructure and Transportation – to ensure that we have a very smooth or as smooth as possible a transition as we're able to arrive at. I would never say that the system is perfect at this stage, but it's being worked on right now very aggressively to make sure that we smooth out some of those difficulties that have arisen and I heard about from my meetings with the school boards.

The other part about the Commission on Learning recommendation. I should probably remind the member that when the Alberta Commission on Learning report came out – I believe it was October of '03, somewhere in that neighbourhood, in any event – there was an undertaking at that time that the government would respond as quickly as possible to whichever initiatives it could. In fact, we then prioritized with additional consultation which of the initiatives, which of the recommendations we were prepared to accept at that time, which were in the priority category. As members here would know, class size seemed to be one of the top priorities.

But with the lateness of the arrival of the Commission on Learning report – which was no one's fault; it was just late in arriving, postponed, as I recall, by about six or seven months – we responded as quickly as we could over the Christmas period and into the January/February period. However, the unfortunate thing is that we couldn't get it all into the budget in time for printing and presentation. So it came out as soon as possible thereafter, which I believe was June or July. It was still done in time, however, for school boards to hire about 1,250 new teachers for the September '04 calendar start-up year, so that was a good thing. We'll be adding more this fall and again next year.

With respect to curriculum changes I'll just have to read what the member said there because I was writing these other notes, and I didn't quite catch it all. We do spend a considerable amount of money on developing curriculum. In fact, we invested about $11.4 million during this past year, hon. member, in curriculum development and in the implementation of it and all the accoutrements surrounding it.

With that having been said, we certainly have involved a lot of teachers and others in that process. In fact, we provide about a million dollars to support teacher professional development through the six regional consortia, which you would be familiar with, hon. member, for in-servicing and in-service training for teachers, and so on. So there's quite a bit that goes into all of this, and we do the best that we can with all the experts we have to maintain an excellent curriculum development process.

The question about how the money is allocated I addressed in my opening comments. Perhaps if you just reference back, you'll see that it's going out on a per student basis, and that will impact everybody equally. It doesn't matter what their particular circumstance is, if they're a special-needs child or whatever. We're addressing primarily grade 3 right now because that's the one that starts in September, and we must have the textbooks for those children, but we're not restricting it just to that level. There might be other priorities there as well.

Let me take my seat so that other members can get their comments on record.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The minister has addressed a couple of the questions that I had. Let me start by saying that the fact that the Learning Commission report came somewhat late in October shouldn't have prevented the government from prioritizing the recommendations. In particular, the school classroom size issue was one of the key issues even before the commission started its investigations. It made certain recommendations with respect to what should be average class sizes, but the class size problem was known prior to the commission starting its work. That was one of the key concerns of parents. That was a key concern of teachers.

For the government to then take five, six months before it could come back with its decision on what is the highest priority and then find money, $52 million, within less than a month or a month after this Legislature, this House, had just finished giving approval to the budget that the government had proposed – I think we worked hard. I think we worked some sweat on our brows, that hadn't dried up yet, and the ink on the budget was still kind of not quite dry. The government started changing its budget numbers in June. A $52 million addition, welcome as it was because the issue of the crisis in the classroom was a huge one, did provide some relief, but it wasn't adequate. It didn't provide the relief to the whole system, you know, most school boards.

As a matter of fact, the Edmonton public school board came up with numbers at the end of September or October or November, whenever they did the counting, and drew attention to the very large number of classrooms which are still above the recommended average class sizes. So the minister might want to refer to that.

The adequacy of the allocation is one issue; the timing is another. The timing, as I said, was welcomed. I welcomed it even though it came, I think, with some political motivation attached to it. The government was considering and thinking about the upcoming election, and that's why it held back making any announcements at the right time. School boards need to know these things quite a bit ahead of time in order for them to plan to use those funds. So inadequacy and the political timing are two issues, I think, that I wanted to put on record here.

I want to ask the minister if he agrees with me that the $52 million that the government allocated for class size reduction was an inadequate amount. If he agrees, then what is he about to do, and do soon, to make sure that the class size matter is addressed in the interest of our children who are in those classrooms and in order to assist our teachers, who provide the most valuable help and assistance and guidance and learning opportunity to our children, so that they can do the job that we expect them to do in the classroom? So that would be my question.

The second question that I have is for the minister to perhaps tell the House what amount of this $52 million went to which school boards. Certainly, I'm interested in finding out, using the formula that the minister used to allocate this money or the department at that time used – this minister wasn't the Minister of Education at the time, so I can't attribute the allocation to him as the formula was developed under the guidance of another minister – whether or not that formula is seen by school boards as a fair one or whether it needs some change. Again, I hope that the minister is able to share his reflections on those questions with us: what amounts have gone to which school boards and the fairness of the formula that they use to allocate those amounts.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Very briefly. Thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, for some good questions, although there are a few there that I thought were politically charged, but we'll deal with them.

The fact about the recommendation from the Alberta Commission on Learning report concerning this issue is that we saw it as a priority and we got on to it as quickly as we could. In fact, we are accelerating the small class size strategy by two full years. In other words, instead of doing it over the five-year window which was initially contemplated, we're doing it over three years. But I want to say that you can't rush out there all that quickly with an initiative like this because, as spoken to earlier, you have to look at the physical infrastructure side as well. They have to be sort of done in tandem, so you can't flood the system too, too quickly with this.

Now, we arrived at the numbers that we did for very calculated reasons, and in that three-year window, Mr. Chair, we will see about 2,200-plus brand new teachers added into the system over the three-year period I'm talking about. So I hope that helps that point a little bit.

With respect to the class size problem being known earlier, certainly some of us knew about it earlier. I did in my area, and I would agree that it would have been a wonderful thing if we could have made the announcement sooner than later because if you want to look at it from a planning perspective, it obviously would have helped school boards and it would have helped parents. It would have relieved the anxiety. To get to your political point, I would love for it to have been announced much earlier so that perhaps some people could have used it if they so chose. But it came out when it came out, and teachers were hired, and by the time the good news got out there, I think the election was over. So it certainly didn't really help from a political timing point whatsoever.

The other point was in respect to the class size averages, and that is an extremely important point, Mr. Chair. The fact is that these are jurisdictional averages, and I do have an issue with that. I know, for example, that if you take a look at let's just say Edmonton Catholic, for example, they received about $4 million under this initiative, thereabouts I think. In any event, whatever the exact amount was, it allowed them to hire about 74 brand new teachers, so it helped across the jurisdiction.

But I find that in some particular schools there still might be numbers that are slightly higher than what we would like them to be. A case in point is in my own riding, in my own constituency. I have a lot of joy over the new money and over the new teachers and new teacher assistants and so on that have been engaged because of the class size reduction initiative, but it's hard to explain that to those parents who still see higher than average class size numbers in their particular class. I won't name the school, but there's one school in particular that I get calls from frequently because they are still above the average. So I know the school board, the public school board in this case, is working hard to address and alleviate that.

By the way, the public school board was able to hire 180 or 182 brand new teachers with the additional $13 million that they received. I hope that's the right amount.

My final point is on the member's question about: do I think it's adequate, that is to say, the $52 million? Well, in fact, the first announcement was $52 million plus $37 million. But because our government year ends on March 31 and the school year continues through to the end of August, you know, we're caught in that five-twelfth, seven-twelfth thing, so it's actually $89 million. It's an appropriate amount for what we felt we had available.

I'm working right now on my budget, as members here would know, to continue that first level of funding and if possible add the next level so that we can address the next level of schooling, which would be grades 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and on through up to grades 10, 11, and 12. We addressed K to 3 because that was where we felt that the greatest pressure was, and that's where there is a greater benefit for one-on-one instruction. That is not to say that one-on-one isn't beneficial later. It certainly is, but the priority is in the K to 3 area, so it was an adequate amount for them. We need more, and I'm working on that now.

The final thing that he asked about was providing him with a list, and I'd be happy to do that. I will undertake to get you that list of who got exactly what. I've got it all. I just don't have it all on one sheet because when I met with every one of the school boards, we talked about it, and they were very happy with this new money. They just felt that they needed a little bit more in the next budget, so I'm working on that. So I'll undertake to provide those answers out of Hansard.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Listening to some of the debate, I'm very pleased that there is some new monies. Again, it was expressed that it could have come a little bit earlier than later. I mean, we've only got 90 days left until the end of the school year, so they were going to be able to hire in some cases 189 teachers.

The minister had mentioned 2,200 new teachers coming into the system. Is that taking into account the retirement, or is that going to be new teachers?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Brand new.

Mr. Bonko: Brand new teachers. So retirement is altogether different then.

Mr. Zwozdesky: That's what we call new.

Mr. Bonko: The fact that we're going to be giving some money with regard to being able to buy new books certainly is a big question and concern to school boards because of the ongoing costs of maintaining the books as well as having to charge students the textbook rental fees. Does this money come in the form of a credit to be spent at the LRDC, or will it be actual cash given over to the individual school boards allocated per class? That's another question with regard to that.

We did mention the new social studies curriculum, which I'm pleased about. I would hope that it would have a little bit more impact with Canadian history and content, as you did mention, with perhaps the struggle of Upper and Lower Canada, that I read about as well years ago.

Part of the infrastructure money or the monies going to the schools here in Edmonton – we realize that there is almost just within two school boards a billion dollars just within Edmonton itself. So the breakdown of $64 million in a province really doesn't amount to a whole lot, although they're not going to squeal about the money they're given. The Catholic system, I think the minister said, was going to receive about $4 million, which maybe would allocate about $7 million to the public system then. If you break that down to 206 schools, it doesn't amount to a whole lot. So I just would echo some cautionaries there as well.

Thank you then, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Chair, just to clarify. The 2,200-plus new teachers that will be hired over the three years from '04-05 through '06-07 will be 2,200 brand new FTEs. So you can add that on to the base that you have now.

With respect to the question on textbooks there will be a combination of how these monies roll out. I don't know the member's familiarity with the school system well enough to know, but in any event, in case he's not familiar with it, we will be placing some of it as a credit, a buy-down credit, with the LRC, the Learning Resources Centre, and then other materials will perhaps be acquired through other means. But the central way of handling new curriculum textbooks is to provide that as a buy-down credit through the LRC.

The other question was with respect to the public school. In fact, according to the numbers I have here, hon. member, the public school actually received about $13.2 million, not $7 million, under the class-size reduction initiative for the '04-05 year. That allowed them to hire 180 or 182 – I forgot the number – brand new FTEs. By comparison, the Catholic schools received $4.1 million, and they were able to hire 75 new FTEs. All of these FTEs started in September.

Was there another question there that I missed? I'm sorry; which one was it?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We've recognized the cost of upgrading textbooks, but school boards are certainly finding it a burden with the ongoing costs for computers because as more and more computer technology comes on stream, the cost of ownership is very hard on the school boards.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yeah. That's why this is mentioned as it is in the estimates book, which I'm sure you have a copy of. It talks about "for the purchase of textbooks and other classroom resources in support of the . . . curricula" because we understand that some of this is online, some of it'll be available through LearnAlberta.ca, and so on. So it's not just for textbooks.

The second part of your question is a little outside the supplementary estimate, but I hope what I've just provided by way of an answer at least gives you some level of comfort that there's more to it than just textbooks.

The Chair: The hon. leader of the ND opposition and Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to ask something which the minister may also feel is a little bit outside the question of the supplementary estimates, but I nevertheless want to raise the question of school closures in a number of locations.

We have seen very quickly since the last municipal election the Edmonton public school board move towards consideration of the closure of a number of schools in inner-city communities in Edmonton. This is, of course, a great concern. I know the minister is not directly responsible for the school utilization formula – that falls under the minister of infrastructure – nevertheless, I think he must have some concern for the school issue.

I just want to indicate to the minister that, you know, inner-city schools often struggle with a greater range of problems than you might find in suburban schools. The classroom complexity is an issue. You have students with special needs; you have students who have issues related to poverty, who have issues related to not being fed or not being properly cared for at home. In some cases it's often the child who is one of the more responsible members of the household and gets him- or herself to school. They may not get there until 10 o'clock in the morning, but they get themselves to school. So a one-size-fits-all formula is not going to work.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, the whole question of schools as a focus for revitalization of inner-city neighbourhoods is very important. Many neighbourhoods are struggling to revitalize themselves and attract new young families. When the school is closed, it is almost impossible to attract new young families, so the whole process gets cut short. I think there's a need for the municipalities to be involved in this too. Municipalities have some responsibility to have revitalization strategies for their inner-city communities and to put some kind of controls on urban sprawl.

I know that in the city of Edmonton a few years ago there were actually 34 separate communities under construction. Of course, that means that the build-out of these communities is very slow and they often wait many years. They often wait many years for their schools because the new housing is spread through so many communities that they just grow slowly and they have to wait. In some communities that I used to represent on city council, the kids were moving into junior high and high school by the time they got the elementary school built, and by the time they got the junior high built, all the original families' kids were moved on to high schools.

It's a complex problem, but the needs of children in communities I think are not necessarily being met, and I just want the minister to be aware. We know that there are a number of so-called clusters in Edmonton public that are going to be considering closures. They call it a closure process, but in fact it's nothing more than a move towards closing schools, and it causes a lot of concern for parents and for communities and certainly for me. So, Mr. Chairman, I'd ask the minister if he can offer us any hope with respect to resolving this issue.

Now, closing an inner-city school is essentially closing the community, and they are central to community life and to hopes for the future. I would ask the minister to maybe make some comment on that and what kinds of things he thinks the government could do or the community or the city could do in order to keep some of these schools closed and if, in fact, there can be any accommodation in the new utilization formula to take into account special needs to allow community functions like a daycare, for example, to go into a school and have that space be eliminated from the calculation of the formula. I know that it's not his direct responsibility, but I know that he's interested in it, that it affects his work and the work of his department and will want to have some input and some comments on that.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, hon. member, for those questions and observations. I'd be happy to address just about every one of those things, but they're not really relative, Mr. Chair, to the estimates before us today. I do care deeply about them, and I hope the member won't take offence at that. But the fact is is that we're talking about the class size initiative monies and the new textbook monies primarily here today.

Before I go on to that, I just wanted to visit back to the previous speaker from Edmonton-Decore when I made the comment about the familiarity with the system. I'm well aware of his background as a trustee, but I was talking specifically about how schoolteachers go about ordering these books, so I hope he didn't take any offence to what I had said.

Nonetheless, the issue of utilization rates does have some relevance to the class size initiative, Mr. Chair, so I will comment on it. We are working together as two departments right now, Alberta Education with Alberta Infrastructure and Transportation, on a new utilization rate formula. It's a point that was referenced in almost all 62 school board meetings that I had. It's been referenced to me over the past three months by teachers, by the Council of Alberta School Superintendents, CASS, by the Alberta Home and School Association, by the ATA, and by a number of other groups that I can't recall all the acronyms, and it was referenced in a very positive way, simply saying that the utilization formula that we've had worked for a while, that there are some pressure points developed around it and it's time to revisit it and fix it. And that's in fact what we're trying to do. I'm acutely aware of some of the difficulties with how space allocations have been made under the utilization formula where we're looking at teachable space versus, perhaps, hallway space or other space that clearly is not used for teaching, and that's why we're revisiting it.

That, Mr. Chair, does tie in with our class size initiative because as I indicated earlier, hiring new teachers simply doesn't happen by itself. You need to provide them with physical space in which to carry on their teaching practice, which they do so very, very well.

That raises the point about the difference between rural and urban and suburban and 'rurban' Alberta, and one of the strategies that we're looking at more and more here is the video conferencing to help out with some of those disparities of sparsity and distance. It's not central to this particular topic today, so I'll leave it, but I just wanted to give the member comfort that we are looking at some of those differences as they apply to learning and teaching and also as they apply to the differences in our utilization in rural versus urban settings.

With the special-needs area, the ESL area, the poverty area I think I'll just remind members that we spend about $108 million per year in the kindergarten program. That's not mandatory, as you know; it's optional. But that's a significant commitment on our part that catches a lot of those areas, and I know it's not just kindergarten. I understand that.

We spend about $215 million per year for extraordinary costs related to severe special needs. In fact, I met with the AACL representatives this morning, and we talked about inclusive education. There's a gentleman in town from McGill, Dr. Roger Slee, and he'll be talking about this issue at the convention this weekend. There's $36 million a year for ESL, and all of these amounts have gone up. The ESL amount, in fact, has gone up by about 71 per cent in the last while. So we're acutely aware of those things. Again, all of these things can't happen overnight, but I'll give them my commitment to do my very best to address all of those in the upcoming budget; that's for sure.

The last thing is with respect to daycares. I'll just comment, Mr. Chair, that we spend about I think $14 million or $15 million per year working with ECS operators for mild and moderate special-needs children in particular, and we're reviewing that as well. I'm not sure where the dust will settle yet, but anything we can do to help those children get the proper start we're going to try and do. With that, I'll cede the floor so that others can ask more questions.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have a few questions for the hon. minister. Certainly, I would also request a copy of the list that the minister agreed to provide to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona in regard to the boards and their respective allotments in regard to the $52 million in class size reduction initiatives.

Also, I was listening with interest to the hon. minister discuss the per-student basis. This money will be delivered on a per-student basis, and the first cheques must be out now, in the March 5 grant payment that went out.

Now, the school year, as other hon. members have said, is obviously over in June. For the teachers that are to be hired, this is good news, but what happens to schools such as Strathearn public, Terrace Heights, and the other schools on the north side of the city, in Wellington for instance, that are tentatively scheduled for closure? Where would this per-student money go? For other small schools, schools with populations of 100 students and schools with populations of 200 students, what difference on a per-student basis will this money make?

Certainly, this is welcome, but am I also to understand from the minister that we're just hiring teachers here or are other support staff going to be hired as well? What about librarians? What about language specialists? What about counsellors? Are they going to be hired as well, or is this exclusively for teachers? This is a welcome expenditure, but if we're going to implement the Learning Commission, we have to recognize that it is going to mean a reduction in class spaces. The current utilization rate will no longer be applicable because, of course, we're going to need more and more class spaces because we're finally recognizing that smaller class sizes make a difference.

I appreciate the minister's time, and if we cannot get the answers today in the time allotted, by writing in due time would be appreciated. I look forward to the hon. minister's answers.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. I'd be happy to provide the list that I offered to provide to the previous speaker before Edmonton-Gold Bar spoke regarding the $52 million rollout, how it went, and where it went and so on.

The question about what happens to schools that are tentatively scheduled for possible closure with the Edmonton public school board is a very good question. My staff worked with all of these school boards in their planning because each school board is required to submit a plan with respect to how they intend to use the money in the coming year. I think the former trustee would agree with that. I don't have their plan just in front of me, but we'll get you an answer for that specific question in relation to their plan and how it's built in.

With respect to the smaller schools that are facing enrolments of, say, less than 100, I think it's the same answer, and I'll get you more elaboration on that.

In the minute remaining here, Mr. Chair, let me just say that the initiative for class size reduction is very much targeted at exactly what its title suggests. We're looking to reduce the number of students that each teacher has to teach in a single classroom at any one time. So it's not as immediately applicable to librarians or language specialists or counsellors or the other areas that the hon. member referenced, although there might be cases where it could be. For example, you might have a teacher-librarian who has a class. In that case, obviously, it could possibly be applied. But in a general sense it's, I guess, the broader, the bigger picture. These other items are extremely important, and they're ones that I'm very sensitive to, but that's not the central purpose of this particular class size reduction initiative at this time.

School boards have referenced those points and asked for some ability to address those pressure points. I think we would all agree that more librarians are needed, more specialists, language specialists, language therapists are needed, and if they were available to be hired, we would likely be hiring them, but there is a world-wide shortage of audiologists and speech and language therapists at the moment. World-wide. I was surprised to hear that, but that's the truth. It's the same with counsellors. It depends on whether we're talking about career counsellors or guidance counsellors or whatever have you.

So I'll close there, Mr. Chair, and we'll do our best to look through Hansard and see what other answers need to be provided. Unless, of course, there are just a couple of seconds here. I'll just finish then.

With this point about the counsellors that I rushed a little bit, if I could just clarify that briefly, we have two types of counsellors in a generic sense that are employed in many of our schools, and I pursued this issue as one of the points . . .

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce Bill 27, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2005. This [Motion carried; Bill 27 read a first time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a very, very great Alberta day as we discussed a lot of important issues. I just wanted to thank my two staff members Jeff Olson and Brad Smith, who were in the galleries. They left before I had a chance to thank them during my estimates debate. To them and Mat Hanrahan and everyone else who helped me out in this regard, thank you.

With that having been said, I would move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn until 1:30 on Monday, March 21.

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. Guide us all in our deliberations and debate that we may determine courses of action which will be to the enduring benefit of our province of Alberta. Amen.

Hon. members and all those in the galleries, I'm now going to invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. Please participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, two historical vignettes for today. On March 21, 1930, the Floral Emblem Act was passed in Alberta, making the wild rose the official floral emblem of Alberta.

On March 21, 1940, a general election was held in Alberta. Of 57 MLAs elected, 36 were Social Credit, 19 were Independents, one was Liberal, and one was Labour. There were 309,000 votes cast provincially.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the House three guests who are seated in your gallery. They're representatives of Pacific Northwest Economic Region, PNWER as it's better known. They're in Alberta meeting with members of government and Members of the Legislative Assembly. In fact, we were honoured that they hosted a lunch, and all members of the Assembly were invited. We had a good turnout and discussed a number of very important issues to Albertans over the lunch hour.

Mr. Speaker, if I could introduce to you representative Glenn Anderson, who is from Washington state, and he is a PNWER vice-president; representative George Eskridge, who is from Idaho, also a PNWER vice-president; and also from the state of Idaho representative Max Black, who is a PNWER past president. I see that they are standing. I'd ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of all.

head:

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly five very distinguished guests. Three of them are from the Lushoto district, Tanzania, Africa, and they're here visiting the town of Drayton Valley on an international partnership exchange. I will ask them to stand and remain standing as I call out their names: first of all, the district commissioner, Elias G.B. Goroi; the chairman, which is our mayor counterpart, Richard A. Mbughuni; also the district director, which is the counterpart to our town manager, Obed K. Mwasha. Accompanying them today from Drayton Valley are our mayor, Her Worship Diana McQueen, and our town manager, Manny Deol. I'd ask that the Assembly please recognize them.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly members of the Council of Alberta University Students, an advisory group of presidents and vice-presidents of students' unions from universities around the province with whom I had the pleasure of meeting earlier today. The council represents over 80,000 university undergraduate students from the University of Alberta, University of Calgary, University of Lethbridge, and Athabasca University.

I'd ask each of our guests to stand as I call their names and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly: Duncan Wojtaszek, executive director of the Council of Alberta University Students; Lisa Priebe, president of the Athabasca University Students' Union; Jordan Blatz, president of the University of Alberta Students' Union; Alex Abboud, vice-president external of the University of Alberta Students' Union; Bryan West, who was recently elected to his second term as president of the University of Calgary Students' Union, and being elected twice as president of the students' union is a relatively unique opportunity; Michael Bosch, vice-president external of the University of Calgary Students' Union; and Jason Rumer, vice-president academic of the University of Lethbridge Students' Union.

These representatives of students from across the province serve their constituents well, and they're here today to talk to members of government and to watch as we serve our constituents well, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a guest visiting from the Lac La Biche-St. Paul constituency. Watching the proceedings today is Kim Heyman, the chief administrative officer of a great staff from the county of St. Paul. She's accompanied by her mother, Pamela Napier, from Victoria. Mrs. Napier is retired and has taken up travelling in her retirement and is originally from England, where she hopes to return as a tourist this year. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. You've often heard me talk about the incredible community of artists that we have in Alberta, and I'm thrilled today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very special visual artist, Peter Field. Some of you Edmontonians will remember Peter's work as artistic director for the First Night Festival, designing the huge puppets and the parade icons and characters like the Big Mamas or the big chairs that sat atop the transit information centre for a number of years or any of the downtown murals that he's done. Peter currently has an exhibit running at the Works Gallery in Commerce Place until April 1. The exhibit is called Chickens, and for anyone with a drop of prairie blood in them, you've got to see these portraits of chickens. You absolutely must. I would ask Peter to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second introduction today is the two people that work in my constituency office. They do all of the work to make me look good, and I'm very appreciative of that. [interjections] And I need a lot of help, yes. All right. The first person is Jane Wisener. Jane is from New Brunswick, and we managed to get her all the way out here as a good Liberal. She graduated with a poli-sci degree from Mount Allison, and she ran a very successful campaign that gave me my colleague in Edmonton-Rutherford. Jane is already standing. Could I ask Jim Draginda to join her? Jim comes from a career at the Edmonton Journal for 14 years, United Way for three years, and then went into arts administration. I have managed to scoop him from arts administration to work in my office as the caseworker. Thank you both very much for joining us, and please accept the welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today as well, actually. The first is a group of seniors from Luther Place, connected to Hosanna Lutheran church. I met with them earlier in the rotunda. There are 22 of them, and they are led by Mr. Walter Adolph. I think they are in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of all members.

I would also like to introduce some of our staff, who are seated in the public gallery, four altogether. The first one is my special assistant, Susie Sykes. Susie has been working with me since last summer and has a degree in communications from Ryerson, went to high school in Edmonton, and is I think happy to be back here in Edmonton. The second is our senior administrator, Leigh Anne McCrowe. She joined our caucus after working at the University of Alberta and, before that, several years in the private sector. She grew up in Newfoundland, so we're representing all provinces here, just about. Third, I'd like Yolande Cole to stand. She works in our media liaison group. She's a recent grad of journalism from Mount Royal College in Calgary. And last, Vivienne Kostiuik, if she could rise. She's also an assistant to me. She grew up in Lloydminster and, after living and working overseas for 13 years, has returned to join our team.

Mr. Speaker, if I'm not organized after the help of these four women, I am helpless. I ask all members to give them a warm welcome, and I hope they enjoy their stay with us. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of this Assembly residents of Ottewell Place seniors' lodge, which is very well run by the Greater Edmonton Foundation – it is located in the south end of the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar – and also two residents of Virginia Park seniors' lodge, who are together today on a tour of the Alberta Legislature. They are accompanied by Kristi Getz, their recreational co-ordinator; volunteer Wilma Nerenberg; and their bus driver, Mrs. Vicki Noël.

I would ask them now to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly 35 grade 6 students and three supervisors from the Polish bilingual arts program at St. Basil school in Edmonton. They are attending the School at the Leg. this week. They are led by Vice-Principal Teresa Kiryluk, Mr. Luke Wasik, Mr. Roman Kalinowski. Could you please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you 24 members of our outstanding public service, who are here for the public service orientation tour of the Legislature. We have one from Advanced Education, six from Education, one from Finance, one from Government Services, two from Health and Wellness, one from HR and E, eight from my Department of Infrastructure and Transportation, one from IIR, one from PAO, one from Restructuring and Government Efficiency, and one from Sustainable Resource Development. We couldn't be here today if it wasn't for these people, and I'd ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've got two sets of introductions today. Just to remind the House that today is World Poetry Day, and on this very important day we have three poets visiting with us. The first one is Christina Grant. She's the interim executive director of the Writers' Guild of Alberta. The Writers' Guild of Alberta was formed in 1980 to provide a meeting ground and collective for the writers of this province. The guild acts as a strong representative voice with the public and with every level of government. Ms Grant strongly believes that the province of Alberta will benefit greatly by having a provincial poet laureate. I ask Ms Grant to rise and wait for me to introduce the other two members of her group.

Andrew Thompson is a poet and the president of the Stroll of Poets Society, which operates in my constituency of Edmonton-Strathcona. The Stroll of Poets Society was founded in 1991 to address the need to promote poetry as a popular art form. Stroll stages two annual poetry festivals, publishes an annual anthology, and offers other programs such as a reading series and workshops. Mr. Thompson has been involved in Edmonton's local poetry scene since 1980 and was a founding member of the Stroll of Poets Society.

My third guest, Mr. Thomas Trofimuk, is a member of the Raving Poets, a group who read and perform Tuesday nights at a pub in my constituency. Mr. Trofimuk is the author of a book called The 52nd Poem and will be launching his newest novel, Doubting Yourself to the Bone, in September. Now I would ask these three guests if they are not standing already to stand and please receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second set of guests, Mr. Speaker, represents the Northern Alberta Alliance on Race Relations, called NAARR. Ms Charlene Hay is the program manager and head researcher of this organization. She is a former teacher who has taught in Africa and with aboriginal children in Alberta. Charlene received her MEd in educational foundations in 1989, and I had the pleasure of being her supervisor. She also happens to be my constituent, and during the past several years she has managed the Northern Alberta Alliance on Race Relations. With her today is NAARR's youth organizer, Mr. Oliver Kamau. Mr. Kamau conducts outreach to youth on behalf of NAARR and leads such efforts within the organization as the peace ambassadors' initiative, which uses everything from games to drama to help youth to recognize and help eliminate racism. I'd ask both of these guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to the Assembly three gentlemen who are seated in the public gallery. They are Mr. Paul Moist, the president of the Canadian Union of Public Employees. CUPE represents 535,000 public-sector workers across Canada, including hospital workers, school workers, child care workers, and municipal workers. Mr. Moist became a CUPE member at age 19 in 1975 and was elected president of CUPE Manitoba in 1997 and elected president of CUPE national in October of 2003.

Mr. D'Arcy Lanovaz, president of CUPE Alberta, has been active in the labour movement for over a decade now, first with the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees and now with CUPE.

Finally, Mr. Alex Grimaldi, who is currently the president of CUPE local 30, representing city of Edmonton outside workers. He is also the former president of the Edmonton & District Labour Council. I joined these three gentlemen today at the multicultural luncheon sponsored by CUPE local 1158 in honour of the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. I'm very pleased that they were able to take time out of their very busy schedules to be with us today, and I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Definition of Marriage

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The line between the PC Party and the government gets blurred more every day. After announcing last Wednesday that a fight against federal civil marriage legislation is completely unwinnable, this government has now decided to waste taxpayer money to appease the right wing of the PC Party and fight a costly legal battle it is guaranteed to lose. Once again the interests of the taxpayer come after the interests of the Tory party. To the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency: how does this minister justify wasting taxpayers' dollars on a legal battle that the Premier and the Justice minister have admitted they cannot win?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, that's a good question, and I think I will have the hon. Deputy Premier answer that question.

Mrs. McClellan: And that was a good answer, too, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, there is no question that the government caucus and the people that we represent in our constituencies feel very strongly about the traditional definition of marriage. However, having said that, I will let the Leader of the Official Opposition know that we are considering all of our options at this time.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, back to the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency, who presumably is interested in cost-benefit analyses: can that minister explain the cost-benefit analysis of fighting civil marriage?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The only thing I want to explain is we try to do everything we possibly can for our constituents and all Albertans. I believe that the hon. Deputy Premier did a very good job answering that question with her first answer.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, perhaps then to the Deputy Premier: will she elucidate the House on what the other options are that are being considered?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, at this point that's a bit hypothetical. But what I will tell the hon. leader is that when we have reviewed our options and have made a determination as to which options we will choose, I will be happy to elucidate the House.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're not getting much elucidation so far, so let's try the Minister of Community Development. What will be the role of the Alberta Human Rights Commission in the government's strategy to fight same-sex marriage?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Community Development responsible for the Human Rights Commission, obviously I'm at the table as these things are discussed. I would certainly bring forward any perspective that the Human Rights Commission feels is appropriate.

Dr. Taft: Well, then, to the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency: given that the Premier and the Justice minister have both admitted that they cannot win the legal battle over same-sex marriage, will the minister be investigating why the government is throwing away taxpayer dollars on this issue?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I don't think that this government has spent any money or thrown any money away on anything at this point in time. The hon. Deputy Premier has said that we are looking at all different avenues on anything we can do to protect marriage between one man and one woman.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, again to the same Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency: given that the government is wasting taxpayer money on this issue to shore up support for the PC Party, will this minister ask that the legal fees for this action be paid out of the PC Party bank account?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I think we've answered the question once already, that we're not wasting any taxpayers' money. Absolutely not will I be going to the party for anything.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is no shortage of skilled industrial trades labour in Alberta; there's just a shortage of cheap labour. Government has just approved an application for the first 680 temporary foreign construction workers to work in the oil sands. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: why has this government not done its duty to ensure employment for Albertans and Canadians first or offered training for these positions to unemployed aboriginals, unemployed youth, underemployed landed immigrants, or displaced farmers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To start with, I want to clarify that there is no cheap labour. These workers that come in will have to follow all the standards and policies laid out in Alberta. Again, I'd like to stress the fact that the issue of a labour shortage or the issue of a strong economy should not be looked at as a negative thing for Alberta. It's a challenge that most jurisdictions in North America would love to have: a strong, diversified economy and lots of jobs for everybody.

Now, when an industry wants to hire people, the first thing they have to do, number one, is hire local people, hire Albertans, hire aboriginal people, hire Canadians first. Yes, Mr. Speaker, if that is exhausted, the next step is the employer then applies to the federal Liberals for approval of the process to bring in workers.

Mr. Backs: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: understanding that this minister in this Legislature has said that there would be no temporary foreign workers approved for the oil sands until Albertan and Canadian labour sources were exhausted, why has this government teamed up with the federal government to approve this first group of 680 temporary foreign workers?

Mr. Cardinal: Well, Mr. Speaker, again I stress the fact that our priority is to hire local people first. Our priority is to hire Albertans, aboriginal people, persons with development disabilities, and Canadians. Until that is exhausted, then nothing else happens.

Mr. Backs: A third supplementary, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: why is this government providing huge royalty breaks to large oil sands firms while Albertans are denied access to the good jobs there?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are not denied access. We have more job openings than we have people right now, and the challenges we have are to ensure that the proper training and programs are in place. I'll give you some examples of some of the communities we're dealing with in northern Alberta. Wabasca, which used to be in my constituency, 5,000 population, still underemployed and unemployed in some cases. They are interested in these jobs. It's a matter of putting in the infrastructure, the training, the road network in that region so these local people can work in these jobs, and they're not given that opportunity. That is our priority.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Southeast Edmonton Ring Road

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The government misled Albertans in claiming that building the southeast Edmonton ring road by conventional means would cost $4 million more than if a P3 public/private partnership was used. Last Thursday the infrastructure minister admitted that the cost of conventional financing had been deliberately inflated by 10 per cent to make the P3 look better in comparison. In other words, the P3 model preferred by this government will cost Albertans $41 million more than it should. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Will the minister commit here and now to table immediately all documents relating to the financing of the southeast Edmonton ring road by conventional means?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First off, I would like to say, through the Speaker to the hon. member, that the facts that he has basically stated are completely, 100 per cent false. What we did is we put out what is called a public-sector comparator, which is a potential estimate of what that road would cost. Included in the P3 process is the agreement that it could cost 10 per cent either way. It could be 10 per cent higher or 10 per cent lower. There was a private-sector panel who looked at this every step of the way. The Auditor General looked at this every step of the way.

I would ask the hon. member to be honourable and withdraw that question.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, will the minister admit that the government issued the number, the 10 per cent, rounded up when they told the public about the full price of this project by conventional means?

Dr. Oberg: Absolutely not.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that this answer completely contradicts the answer that the minister gave on Thursday, will the government now admit that this southeast Edmonton ring road project, like the Calgary courthouse and the southeast Calgary hospital, will cost more as a P3, and will this government also consign this project to the P3 graveyard and get on with building a proper road?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the P3 project on the Anthony Henday has several huge advantages. I recognize that the hon. member is from Edmonton, but, for example, it will be built two years sooner doing it this way. The private-sector component, the P3 component, of this particular road will assume all responsibility for cost overages. There is a warranty for 30 years – 3-0 years – on this particular road. While that is extremely, extremely valuable to us, if I was a MLA for Edmonton, I would be extremely happy that we get the road early and get it on time. It's wonderful for the city of Edmonton.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

B.C. Ports Strategy

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The importance of transportation links for our products moving to the Pacific Rim cannot be understated or overstated or stated at all. The recent announcement of the opening of a rail link from Alberta to Prince Rupert gives rise to a question. It is my understanding that the Alberta government has endorsed the British Columbia ports strategy at the B.C./Alberta joint cabinet meeting held March 18 and 19. What does this endorsement mean for the province of Alberta?

The Speaker: I gather it's directed to a particular minister?

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Dunford: You know what happens now, Mr. Speaker. I'm now under some suspicion that I might have actually written the question. It ain't so.

Mr. Speaker, I was there. I was in Cranbrook on Thursday and Friday, when we had a joint cabinet meeting with colleagues from the British Columbia government. Yes, in fact, on the agenda was the B.C. ports strategy. We recognize in Alberta from an economic development standpoint just the urgency and the strategic advantage, of course, that as Albertans we would have not only in the further development of the port of Vancouver but, probably even more importantly, in the importance and the strategic opportunity of developing the port of Prince Rupert.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For clarification, the minister didn't write the question. However, I will make it clear that the supplemental question is to the Minister of Economic Development. Does Alberta's endorsement of the B.C. ports strategy commit our province to funding or partnering in any funding of any project or program?

Mr. Dunford: No, it won't, but we will still play a critical role. I think it's important that British Columbia and Alberta on the B.C. ports strategy try to speak with one voice wherever we can. I believe that we will go to Ottawa with British Columbia in some type of format, then, to not only present the economic business case for this particular strategy but, I think, to once again point out to the rest of Canadians that there are a lot of things that are happening on the west coast and in the western part of this country. That, of course, is an important message that we have to get out to all Canadians.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Game Farming

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Health Canada's risk assessment for transmissible spongiform encephalopathies, including chronic wasting disease, Report 2000, concluded, and I quote: the highest risk ranking of Canadian domestic products were pharmaceuticals containing high-risk tissues and elk antler food supplements. The report further states, quote: the possibility of BSE risk to humans must now be acknowledged. To the Minister of Health: given the profound impact of BSE and its impact on human health and the economy, will the minister acknowledge the potential risk to humans of this prion disease?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member did me the service of advising me by note this afternoon that he had forwarded the information that he is referencing to our medical health officer. We'll be pleased to review that information. As of a few minutes ago it had not yet arrived.

I would like to comment that in conjunction with the Minister of Agriculture we have been part of a study – Health has supported a study – that is going to do Alberta-based research into issues surrounding BSE, and I look forward to that. Presently, I have no further comment other than to say that I appreciate the notice, and I look forward to reading the information.

Dr. Swann: Again to the Minister of Health: will the government work with Health Canada to immediately ban the use of elk antler velvet?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would have to say no. At this point I have no further information to base my comments on other than the hon. member's question, which I have committed to undertake a review of.

Dr. Swann: That was reported five years ago, the high risk of elk antler velvet.

Given the Premier's promise since 1992 to hold a public inquiry, will this government now hold a public review of the game ranching industry in Alberta?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to invite the hon. minister of agriculture to respond to the hon. member, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to respond to the question. We are constantly reviewing all of the industries in the province and, as such, have been reviewing game farming and hunt ranching, as the Premier answered last week in answer to the question. We are working diligently with the elk industry and with the other ruminant industries in the province to ensure that not only are they safe but that they are going to be viable into the future.

I think, Mr. Speaker, to compare the CWD risk to human health risk when science is telling us – and I've not had the pleasure of reviewing anything that the hon. member has brought forward – that to link it to health risk and to compare it to BSE health risk is akin to what a group of ranchers in Montana right now are trying to do by suggesting Canadian beef is unsafe because of BSE. I believe that to be irresponsible fearmongering, and I just think it's a direct shot at those producers who are working very hard.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton McClung.

Student Loans

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a most shameful manner the Prime Minister snubbed postsecondary students along with the media and most Albertans during his visit to Alberta last week. I know many students who would have liked to ask him about the recently announced increase of the federal student loan limit by his government as they're very concerned about how this impacts their student loan debt limits. My first question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. Is there anything that the Alberta government can do to assist students in dealing with this increase in federal loan limits?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The federal government has indicated that it will increase the combined provincial/federal student loan limit by $540 for the 2005-06 academic year, bringing it up to $12,140. On one hand, this is good news because it will assist the students getting the financial resources they need to complete their education. On the other hand, it will allow students to graduate with more federal debt.

Alberta has no power over the federal government's approach to their student loan limits. What I can indicate to the hon. member is that we do have a remission policy in this province, which allows us to remit provincial debt that students incur over the course of the debt load. That remission policy actually works very well to forgive almost all, in many cases, of the provincial debt load that's there. So we'll have to work with the federal government to encourage them to follow suit with their student loan program to allow student loan remissions on the federally granted loans side.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the minister. Is Alberta's approach to increasing the student loan limit different from the federal government's?

Mr. Hancock: Well, our process is considerably different. In the first case, this is the first time, I think, in 10 years that the federal government has increased their student loan limit, and so it's done sort of on a one-off basis, with a massive period in time. We increase ours on a regular basis to keep pace with inflation. Our student loan limits increase with respect to the cost of living, with respect to mandatory fees and other learning costs to recognize the increases, yes, in tuition fees, those other things. So we've urged the federal government to take a similar approach, to do it on a continual basis rather than to do it periodically and sporadically.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: what is the Alberta government doing overall to increase the affordability of postsecondary education?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier announced in his conversation with the province at the beginning of February of this year, first of all, that the province would pay the increase in tuition fee for students this year. So that gives us an opportunity to hold the line for a year on the increases while we look at our tuition fee policy but, more broadly than that, look at affordability because finances cannot be a barrier to a student getting an education.

We need all Albertans to have the opportunity to access education so that we can deal with some of the skills-shortage issues. We can maximize the human potential in this province. So we will be taking a very careful look over the course of this year involving the institutions, involving students, involving the community in talking about how we make sure that getting a postsecondary education is affordable, that there's a proper balance between the amount that the student and their family pays and the amount that society pays for the benefit that society gets, and making sure that everyone knows that they can get that postsecondary education. We will make sure that their finances are affordable.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

SuperNet

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency, RAGE, agreed last week that the SuperNet project was long overdue. My question is to the hon. minister. Why did this government not accept the bid from Telus when, in fact, Telus had 75 per cent of the infrastructure already in place?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I wasn't here at the time when Telus was around or when that bid actually went, but I do know that I'm sure whoever was in charge at the time did what was responsible and looked at all the bids and made sure they picked the very best bid that came in. I would like to let the — ah, that's enough information for him for today.

Mr. Elsalhy: Again to the same minister: please share with us why the penalties and provisions stipulated in the contract with Bell were not enforced to hold this private-sector company accountable. That's probably another fine example of a successful P3.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I want the hon. member across to know that the SuperNet has been moving along very, very well lately. I explained to him last week how many new ISP readies were coming on stream, and I just got another note passed to me this morning before I came to the House that we had 29 more come on this week. We had Barons, Bassano, Blue Ridge, Cardston, Carmangay, Champion, Duffield, Elnora, Entwistle, Evansburg . . .

Mr. Elsalhy: To the same minister: given that the ministry will not reimburse communities and public agencies for the upgrades and interoperability costs, how do you propose that these public agencies make their networks compatible with Bell SuperNet without your government's support?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, the $193 million that this government committed to the SuperNet program includes all the hookups of all the municipalities, the schools, the libraries.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Electronic Health Record

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In January our Premier announced that this government would be fast-tracking the provincial electronic health record. My question is to the Minister of Alberta Health and Wellness. Would the minister please tell us where this province is today with the rollout of the electronic health record?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since October 2003 we have trained 9,000 health care providers in the use of the electronic record. We are currently looking at the three strategies that have been in place with Calgary, with Capital, and with the rural providers, developing a plan to embrace in a formal fashion the co-ordination of all of the strategies for the electronic health record to ensure better patient care and a number of other obvious benefits to the health care system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. How will the electronic health record address some of our real issues we're facing in our health system like improving access and patient safety?

Ms Evans: The opportunity to co-ordinate the system to better schedule when we have patient transfers, the opportunity to avoid adverse events by understanding the legibility of the record.

Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence I want to just ask the hon. member and others present to imagine a bank where you're told you can get your money at only one branch because it's where your records are. You can use your bank card only in bank machines at your own bank, if at all, your balance is incorrect because the teller's handwriting is illegible, you're told to wait for two hours while your money is being sent by taxi from head office, and you do not have Internet access to your accounts. What the electronic record will do is put us even further ahead. We're already number one in Canada, and we lead many places in the nation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Big Lake Natural Area

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tonight in St. Albert a proposal is being presented by the city of St. Albert, the city of Edmonton, Parkland county, and Sturgeon county to initiate application to the government of Alberta to have the Big Lake area designated as a provincial park. Big Lake is an important area for the sustainability of wetlands that support many plant and animal species. My question to the Minister of Community Development: will this government commit to changing the status of Big Lake from a natural area to the more protected designation of a provincial park?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, Big Lake's natural area is an internationally renowned area for nesting and migrating of waterfowl and shorebirds. We are willing to work with the four municipalities as partners. The area in question already is under provincial Crown lands, so the proposal, at least in its current iteration, is that the current boundaries remain the same and that, as the hon. member said, the level of protection would be higher. I don't anticipate any great challenges in this at this point, but that's the reason why we're waiting for the municipalities to come back to us with a plan for proposal that we can consider. If there are challenges that are presented by moving it to a provincial park designation, I can assure the hon. member that we'll make whatever efforts we can in order to try and resolve those difficulties.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Environment: will this government commit to developing a more integrated approach to managing water resources which will guarantee the sustainability of the water from the Big Lake basin?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, and a very good point raised by the hon. member. I want to assure all Albertans that our government, through the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development, the Ministry of Environment, and the Ministry of Energy, is working on what we refer to as an IRM, integrated resource management, approach for the exact points that the hon. member has raised.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Community Development: will this government commit to honouring the memory of the late the Honourable Dr. Lois E. Hole by designating Big Lake as the Lois Hole/Big Lake provincial park?

Mr. Mar: We cannot make a commitment to that at this time, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A follow-up on the Ledcor Industries Limited approval to bring in 684 temporary tradespeople over the next year to work in oil sands projects under the banner of the Christian Labour Association of Canada, and of course they're the favourite big oil union. The decision to bring in these foreign workers is being made despite a 6 per cent unemployment rate in the construction industry, according to this government's own figures. My question to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: why is the government prepared to allow temporary foreign workers to build oil sands projects at the expense of skilled Canadian tradespeople when there is already a 6 per cent unemployment rate in the construction industry?

Mr. Cardinal: Yeah, Mr. Speaker. I just want to mention again that that's very similar to the question I answered already, but I just want to mention that this member is talking about what may happen a year from now. That's part of his question. He's projecting that this will happen a year from now. At the same time, again, I want to stress the fact to these members – and I'm going to file this document that shows exactly what an employer has to do – that the employer here in Alberta has to exhaust all avenues available before any foreign workers are brought in. You've got to hire local people. You've got to hire Albertans first. You've got to hire aboriginal people, persons with development disabilities. Then you go beyond that, go outside anywhere in Canada to try and bring in the labour force that's required.

It's not an easy job, but again it's a good problem to have. Most jurisdictions in North America would love to have that problem and that challenge, Mr. Speaker. We are in a good position to be able to meet those challenges. My department alone spends $280 million a year in training for 4,000 apprentices, and we're trying our best to fill those jobs.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, this is not hypothetical. This has been approved by the federal government.

My question is: why is this government going along with bringing these people in – and I'll repeat it again – when there's already a 6 per cent unemployment rate in the construction industry? Why are they doing it?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, there are lots of jobs for all Albertans. In fact, the question wouldn't come up if there weren't any jobs. There are lots of jobs for all Albertans. You can be assured that when everything is exhausted here to hire local people in Alberta, then the federal government does the approval process. I will file this document because step-by-step it shows you exactly what the employer has to do. It shows you exactly what Human Resources and Skills Development of Canada has to do in order to bring the foreign workers into Alberta.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, this is already occurring.

At least would this government be honest in that the real reason that they're encouraging foreign workers to come into Alberta is to give their big oil company friends cheaper labour costs? This is what it's all about.

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, the opposition member again is not right by saying that we're bringing in cheap labour. Any employee that gets hired – Albertans, Canadians, aboriginal people, and employees from across Canada – has to meet the labour standards in Alberta. I'll give you an example. CNRL projected that during the construction the average salary will be $95,000 a year. I don't class that as cheap labour. I don't call that starvation wages.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Film Development Program

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta film development program was established in 1998 to try and encourage Alberta-based film production. Since then, other provinces have increased and expanded their tax credit based programs to entice more foreign production to their jurisdictions. Most recently, in response to similar moves south of the border, both B.C. and Ontario have increased their tax credits to 20 per cent of all eligible labour cost in their provinces to try and retain their current level of production. Could the Minister of Community Development please tell the House what impact these increased credits are having on our Alberta-based production?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, it's very difficult to identify it this early in the year. I can give some background information, sir, on the total expenditures for Alberta-based productions and coproductions that were supported under the film program under the Department of Community Development. This year the total for that is about $133 million, and of that, $64 million was spent directly here in the province of Alberta. The result is that there were 3,000 people involved in this industry, including 450 directly involved in acting and performing.

We do know, Mr. Speaker, from the industry that our system of grants is much less complicated and cumbersome than the system of tax credits that's used in many other jurisdictions in Canada. We do know also that increasing the tax credits in places like British Columbia and Ontario does reduce production costs of film, so we know that this may have some impact on our film industry. To what extent it's too early to tell, and I can tell you that the department is currently involved in discussions with the industry on possible improvements to our film production grant program.

Ms Haley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that our program is oversubscribed every year and that we are still losing production to our neighbouring provinces, could the Minister of Community Development tell me what steps he is taking to try and expand film production in Alberta?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, our department's film development program currently has a budget of monies in the amount of $13.5 million. It has resulted in a very strong resident industry in the province of Alberta. This is one of the great advantages of having the grant program as opposed to film credits, which do not require that the work actually be done in the province. So, for example, there may be a $50 million project done in the province of Ontario that takes advantage of film credits but does not in fact result in $50 million worth of economic activity in the province of Ontario.

So we are working at trying to improve our program. We're in ongoing discussions with the industry to determine how best we can improve our program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Haley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is for the Minister of Economic Development. I would ask if it's possible for him to tell us what steps he and the film commissioner are recommending that we make in Alberta to make it an attractive location not only for Alberta-based production but also for foreign or guest production?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have the Film Commission Advisory Council, and they have made representations to the minister colleague and myself. There seem to be two areas that we need to focus on. The first one has a bit of a tourism bent. We can employ, I think, Travel Alberta with their marketing expertise as we go out into the world, not only to the United States but also into Asia and Europe, and talk about Alberta not only from a tourist-type perspective but also from film location, and we of course plan to do that. The other one would be in the area of human capital in the sense that we also can attract film to the province by making sure that we have the artists, the technicians, the administrative-type people that are available so that we can have an effective and an efficient film industry here in the province. Of course, we'll work with the Minister of Advanced Education on that as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Software Licences for Schools

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Conservative government continues to claim that it runs a tight ship and provides the best services possible with the taxpayers' dollar. Opposition members are duty bound to hold government accountable, to ask questions and to seek information about the government's activities. My question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. Is the minister prepared today to provide details of the tendering process regarding the government's $6.3 million deal with Microsoft for software licences for the educational system?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, in actual fact the Microsoft licensing project was one that benefited both advanced ed and our K to 12 system, but primarily it was a K to 12 initiative. My understanding is that that was an open competition, there was a list of accredited companies that were invited to bid on that, and in the end the successful bidder was reviewed against the usual criteria and that contract was awarded in that fashion.

Mr. Taylor: Okay, Mr. Speaker. I'll direct my first supplemental question, then, to the Minister of Education. Will the minister commit to ascertaining whether after the government of Ontario signed a similar software deal with Sun Microsystems for next to nothing, Microsoft responded by offering its software to Ontario educators for nothing more than a nominal administrative fee?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a part of our ongoing improvements in technology opportunities for our students. I'm not aware of what the jurisdiction in Ontario may have done. What I am comfortable with is what Alberta did. We did what was right at the time: to enter into an agreement that went through a standard open-competition tendering process. The net result of it is an incredible array of new information and new software for our students to work with. For example, we're very proud that Alberta is the only jurisdiction that has exclusive licensing rights to use all of National Geographic's material, the only jurisdiction to do that. It's through these kinds of initiatives that we're able to move that particular technological advancement forward.

Mr. Taylor: Well, I'll try my last question, then, to the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. When can this Assembly expect a report on this contract to be tabled?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, in many cases the responsibility of securing contracts remains with the individual ministries. We would be involved in software version upgrades or modifications for licences over $50,000, and I'm not sure that what he's speaking about is in that range.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Municipal Tax Exemptions

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. I've recently learned that some Legions in my constituency are completely tax exempt while others pay property tax only on the lounge portion of their facilities. Can the minister explain what the Municipal Government Act says about Alberta Legions paying property tax?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Municipal Government Act does exempt certain properties from taxation, and that would include hostels, not-for-profit organizations, and student dormitories. Section 363 specifically exempts property that's "used in connection with a branch or local unit of the Royal Canadian Legion, the Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada or other organization of [any of the] former members of any allied forces." The act also provides for the option for municipalities to exclude themselves from that exemption, and there could be a number of reasons for that. Usually it's the canteen version that the municipality feels is in direct competition with other businesses within the community. They therefore, then, use their ability to opt out.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental to the same minister: given that Legions do such good and charitable work as community halls and churches, who are tax exempt currently, will the minister change section 363 of the MGA to make all Legions in Alberta 100 per cent tax exempt?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, just as the MGA recognizes that not all communities are alike, I would suggest to the hon. member that perhaps not all Legions are alike. This is the kind of decision that really needs to be taken on a case-by-case basis and is best left up to the expertise and the community knowledge of local councils, and I would urge the member to advise his constituent to contact his or her local council with respect to this issue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Métis Hunting Rights

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The uncertainty over the Métis hunting agreement continues to cause a great deal of concern within Alberta's hunting, fishing, and conservation community. With the agreement itself making very little reference to conservation and the Sustainable Resource Development minister admitting that the Métis can hunt protected animals for subsistence, there are still more questions than answers regarding this agreement. To the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development: can this minister define subsistence as it is used for the purposes of the Métis harvesting agreement?

Ms Calahasen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I certainly can. Subsistence means that it's for noncommercial purposes.

Mr. Tougas: To the same minister: given that the Supreme Court decision was in regard to Métis hunting on their traditional lands and keeping in mind that Alberta already provides thousands of acres to Métis settlements, why did this agreement expand beyond Métis settlements?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Powley case certainly didn't talk about Métis settlements. The Powley case came from, actually, Ontario, where there are no settlements, as a matter of fact. What it talked about was being able to deal with the Métis settlements aboriginal rights to hunt, fish, and trap on unoccupied Crown lands.

Mr. Tougas: To the same minister: can the minister provide a date when a draft version of the Métis harvesting agreement will be available for public scrutiny?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Powley case of 2003 was actually a case that recognized the aboriginal harvesting rights for the Métis, and that agreement we did with two of the Métis settlements: the Métis Nation of Alberta and the Métis Settlements General Council. Those agreements are between the government and the Métis settlements.

However, having said that, I have indicated to anyone who would like to talk about these agreements to sit down with me in a format where we would be able to address the concerns that have been brought forward by all the different groups. I have had the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to go out and meet with the various groups to be able to address the concerns, and I have attended a number of public meetings to address those very issues. I think it's really wonderful to have people who are interested in conservation because when we're dealing with the conservation of the natural resources we have, we want to ensure that we continue to do that, and that's what these agreements have done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions will be for the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Could he please advise the Assembly about the time frame for the southeast portion of the Anthony Henday?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's an excellent question. Because of the P3 arrangement I'm able to stand here today and say that the 120 lane kilometres and 24 bridges will be open for the citizens of Edmonton in the fall of 2007.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lougheed: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the minister as well: what will be the impact on highways 21 and 14?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, access to highway 14 will be extremely increased. It will be much easier to get onto highway 14, and indeed heading out east of Edmonton will be made a whole lot easier. But probably more important is there will be a lot of traffic that will be redirected off a very busy highway 21 that will be able to be taken in by the new ring road. Mr. Speaker, through to the hon. member, I've had the opportunity of travelling with the hon. member on highway 21, and it is going to alleviate traffic in that heavily congested area to a large, large degree.

Mr. Lougheed: A follow-up question, Mr. Speaker: what would be the estimate of the time saving for members of my constituency to get down to the Calgary Trail or to the International Airport, for example?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, my residence tends to be in Sherwood Park, and this morning it took me about an hour to get down to the airport, so I do believe that a ring road is going to make the trip to either highway 2 or to the International Airport much easier for not just your constituents, hon. member, but for everyone in east Edmonton and everyone in northeastern Alberta. This is going to be a huge, huge economic benefit to the people of north-eastern Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Centennial Projects

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has allocated funds for a variety of centennial events. However, it appears that most of the projects described as legacy projects are in fact required infrastructure maintenance. My question is to the Minister of Community Development. Can this government explain how renovating old buildings can be described as a celebration of Alberta's centennial?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, there have been a wide variety of projects that have been given centennial legacy funding. Some of them are brand new facilities; for example, the brand new Millennium Place in Sherwood Park was partly funded by centennial legacy funds. In Spruce Grove and other jurisdictions, in Calgary and throughout the province some facilities have been new. It's true, as the hon. member says, that some of the facilities were renovations of existing facilities, facilities that are important parts of the communities they serve. For example, I don't think anybody would suggest that significant amounts of monies that we spent on the two Jubilee auditoria were somehow not an important part of the legacy of the province of Alberta. Those facilities were a gift to the people of the province of Alberta in 1955. Now 50 years later in the year 2005 they will be reopened in the fall to provide again another hundred years of terrific service to the people of the province of Alberta.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister: can this government explain how all Alberta artists can travel to Ottawa and Atlantic Canada to participate in the Alberta Scene celebrations when they have to pay most of their own costs?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, Alberta Scene in Ottawa is a tremendous opportunity for Albertans to demonstrate the gift of their culture and their arts to the rest of the nation. For 10 days, commencing on the 28th of April, some 600 Alberta artists will be at venues including the National Arts Centre and dozens of other venues around the city of Ottawa demonstrating everything from visual arts to performing arts to culinary arts.

Mr. Speaker, the provincial government has put a significant contribution into this project. It is true that artists will be making, no doubt, some out-of-pocket expenditures themselves, but in combination with the federal government and the provincial government this is a tremendous opportunity for Albertans to share the great richness and diversity of their culture with other Canadians.

Mr. Agnihotri: Again to the same minister: can this government provide all Albertans with a breakdown of what percentage of the centennial budget is for bricks and mortar projects?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, that's obvious to anybody that reads Public Accounts. This is what we do.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first of seven.

The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. The United Nations first recognized this day in 1966, designated in memory of anti-apartheid demonstrators killed or injured in Sharpeville, South Africa, in 1960.

Mr. Speaker, this special day reminds us that we all have a responsibility to ensure that fundamental rights and freedoms are safeguarded for us as human beings and citizens of this world. Let us use this opportunity to remind ourselves to foster greater equality and fairness for all our citizens, who represent a rich mosaic of cultures woven into the strong fabric of our province and our nation. Let us celebrate the uniqueness of each individual and each culture. Let us embrace a vision and shared belief of Alberta that values the dignity and worth of every citizen. We can by working together create an Alberta free of racial discrimination.

As chair of the Advisory Committee on the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Education Fund I encourage all Albertans to join their community and the members of this House in working towards this goal.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Brendan Thomas Bellingham

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Sunday, March 13, the aptly named Great Kids of Alberta were recognized during the Premier's excellence awards in Edmonton, and the youngest recipient was from the constituency of Calgary-Lougheed.

Brendan Thomas Bellingham was born two months premature, was resuscitated at birth, and was transferred to a third-level facility to receive intensive treatment. Brendan was diagnosed with cerebral palsy, and he has had numerous surgeries and intense therapies for much of his short life. Brendan is now six years old, and I'm pleased to report that Brendan enjoys grade 1, downhill skiing, swimming, martial arts, and helping other children. He's taken part in community launches and many other charity events, including the Miracle Treat Day for the Children's Miracle Network. Recently Brendan sang live during a radiothon, and his recording was rebroadcast many times in an effort that raised $880,000 for the Alberta Children's hospital. I can tell you from firsthand experience that Brendan sings like a little angel.

Brendan Bellingham is an intrepid young Albertan who is an inspiration to us all, and I'm proud to have him in my riding. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Parents Empowering Parents

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with pleasure that I ask this Assembly to recognize the group Parents Empowering Parents, or PEP. PEP is a support group for parents whose teenage and young children are abusing alcohol and drugs. These are parents who are feeling helpless as they see their children with addictions. This organization gives somebody to call when in crisis.

PEP also educates and supports parents. It also provides counseling activities and support for teens trying to stay clean and sober. This group meets every second Tuesday in Sherwood Park and is determined to provide support to parents and youth as well as look at what is needed for intervention and do whatever is necessary to have those needs met.

Please join me in congratulating these parents for their initiative.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Fairview College/NAIT Consolidation

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take this moment to recognize a significant event in Alberta's postsecondary education system. Saturday, March 12, 2005, commemorated the inaugural graduation ceremony for the self-consolidated Fairview College and Northern Alberta Institute of Technology. First announced in April 2003, the historic agreement saw NAIT grow to serve over 65,000 full-time, part-time, and apprenticeship students via nine campuses stretching from Edmonton to High Level with a budget of over $200 million. The consolidation of NAIT and Fairview College along with its six campuses was made official on July 1, 2004.

Mr. Speaker, this successful alliance is a testament to Alberta's commitment to ensuring that all Albertans have access to first-rate, cutting-edge educational opportunities. Not only has this alliance brought NAIT to the true north, but it has brought northern Alberta closer to the province's urban centres, which have customarily offered the educational opportunities we are now seeing in rural Alberta.

I want to congratulate the NAIT Fairview campus graduating class of 2005.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Lord Beaverbrook Lords Basketball Team

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm so very proud to recognize the Lord Beaverbrook Lords basketball team for winning the Alberta 4A high school basketball championship Saturday night in Calgary. Now, the last time that a Calgary team won that title was in the last century, when Bishop Grandin won it back in 1997.

The Lords defeated Edmonton's Ross Sheppard T-Birds 71-62 in a seesaw battle that saw Jeff Price lead the Lord Beaverbrook offence with 15 points, Beau Lawlor with 14 points, and Greg Jobagy with 13 points. Congratulations to head coach Ray Raymond and everyone involved in bringing this championship back to the best high school in my constituency, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise to recognize the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. This special day is observed annually on March 21 because on this day in 1960 police opened fire and killed 69 people at a peaceful demonstration against apartheid pass laws in Sharpeville, South Africa. The International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination was first proclaimed in 1966 by the General Assembly of the United Nations. At that time, the UN called on the international community to step up efforts to eliminate all forms of racial discrimination. Sadly, however, 39 years later discrimination still exists.

Mr. Speaker, as we observe this day, we must each resolve to better ourselves every day of the year so that we neither perpetuate nor tolerate racism no matter what the form, no matter what the venue. People are essentially the same all over the world. We may have different traditions, experiences, languages, cultures, or religions, but that's what makes us worth getting to know. Each individual must be judged based on their own merits, not on the colour of their skin, their place of birth, their culture, or their religion. Imagine all that would be lost if each culture kept to itself. That is reason enough for all of us to promote inclusion instead of discrimination.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

2:50 International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise today to join my colleagues from Stony Plain and Edmonton-McClung to recognize International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. On this day, of course, over 40 years ago police opened fire on peaceful demonstrators and massacred close to 70 of them. The demonstration was to protest the apartheid pass laws. Proclaiming the day in 1966, the General Assembly of the United Nations called on the international community to redouble its efforts to eliminate all forms of racial discrimination.

This year's theme, Mr. Speaker, is Empowering Youth to Fight Racism. This theme is particularly dear to my heart both as an educator and one who represents a constituency which has a very large number of young Albertans living in it. Too often politicians give lip service to the importance of youth for our collective future. We tend to forget that we must go beyond rhetoric to actually providing young people with the tools, skills, and resources they need to fight racism.

I would call on all hon. members of the House to join me in renewing our collective commitment to work with groups such as the Northern Alberta Alliance on Race Relations in their efforts to eliminate racial discrimination.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Petitions

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, as chair of the Standing Committee on Private Bills I beg leave to present the following petitions that have been received for private bills under Standing Order 93(2):

- (1) the petition of Albert Holthuis, Marvin Phillips, Edward Latvala, Werner Scheidler, Brenda Caston, Richard Hester, and John Davis for The Bow Valley Community Foundation Act;
- (2) the petition of Camrose Lutheran College Corporation for the Camrose Lutheran College Corporation Act;
- (3) the petition of Rodney Wutch, Kathy Mandeville, Walter Sauve, Fred Weinheimer, and Michael Christie for the Medicine Hat Community Foundation Amendment Act, 2005; and
- (4) the petition of Brooklynn Hannah George Rewega, an infant, by her legal guardian and father, Douglas George Rewega, for the Brooklynn Hannah George Regewa Right of Civil Action Act.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition with a hundred-plus signatures on it. The petition urges the government to "prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd also like to present a petition from a number of largely Calgarians but also from a number of southern Alberta communities such as Claresholm, Airdrie, Coaldale, Picture Butte, Lethbridge, and a number of other communities calling on this government to prohibit the use and "importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition with 259 signatures on it. The petition urges the government to "institute a fair and equitable floor price for cattle," which brings us to 1,217 signatures for this session.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Real Estate Amendment Act, 2005

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce a bill being the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2005.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will ensure that the real estate assurance fund is for consumers. These amendments will prohibit financial institutions and those people that commit fraud in real estate from having access to the fund.

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Insurance Amendment Act, 2005

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Insurance Amendment Act, 2005.

With this act the government is following through on its commitment to open an automobile insurance competition to other provinces' Crown insurance corporations. The other amendments in this act will continue the Insurance Act as progressive and contemporary consumer protection legislation.

[Motion carried; Bill 34 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 34, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2005, be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table with the House five copies of the annual report of the Alberta Teachers' Association for the year 2003, which highlights some of the excellent work the ATA has done for their members with respect to issues relative to government, members' services, professional development, teacher welfare, and administration.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission it is with pleasure that I table today the requisite number of copies of AADAC's 2003-2004 annual report. This document summarizes AADAC's leadership in services with respect to the education, prevention, and treatment programs for Albertans with alcohol, drug and/or gambling problems.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with three tablings. The first is a copy of a letter, tabled with permission, written by a constituent named Peter Verchomin, who raises the idea of a rebate of half the royalties on natural gas for nitrogen fertilizer production.

The second tabling in the appropriate number of copies, written by Ami Brodribb, tabled with permission, a constituent who is writing to express her concern about lack of financial support for midwives in Alberta.

The third is from a Calgarian, Gracie Seto, whom I met last fall and who has asked me here: "Please bring this letter to the legislative assembly to speak on behalf of . . . people with disabilities who desperately need" an increase in AISH funding.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from a very concerned parent. The writer very much wants Strathearn school to stay open for the sake of her community and the children in that community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. The first is from a constituent who is a filmmaker, William Becze, who is noting that it's very difficult to get distribution in Alberta and in Canada and asking us to do whatever we can to help with that issue.

The second tabling is a very good letter on seniors' care written by Judy Brown, and she notes that staffing levels in particular are a problem and that "it's time for people in nursing homes to be considered a priority."

The third tabling is a point of view from St. Albert noting that local kids can fall prey to crystal meth addiction and that a primary goal of a safe injection site is harm reduction.

The last tabling, Mr. Speaker, is in support of Bill 202. This is from Mary Talbot, and noting that if this bill had been in effect sooner, it may have given her the tools to help her child.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today, three of which are from University Heights residents expressing outrage at the lack of provincial consultation. Mary Abel is concerned about the widening of 16th Avenue. Sheila Donaldson is concerned about the effect that roadway connections and the Children's hospital are having on community reserve lands. Doug Bonnyman shares the same community reserve concerns. Finally, Don Smith in his letter urges the provincial government to "consult with the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation" prior to naming or renaming provincial parks.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings for the house today. The first, in relation to Bill 202, is an article from the St. Albert Gazette talking about the training course that a number of St. Albert firefighters have gone through on how to deal with a fire on a property in which a suspected crystal meth lab is discovered.

The other is a report from the University of Alberta called A Case for Investment, which points out the degree to which funding for postsecondary institutions in this province has fallen behind other jurisdictions and our funding for K to 12 education in this province as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. The first one is a document indicating just how big the bonuses were before bankruptcy to some of the senior officials at Enron, including one John Lavorato, who was active in Project Stanley.

The second tabling I have this afternoon is a letter dated March 21, 2005, from myself to the FOIP co-ordinator at Alberta Energy. It indicates that I accept the estimate and am enclosing a deposit of over $880, which is 50 per cent of the amount, in regard to a freedom of information request I made about Enron.

The third tabling I have is the correct number of copies of a six-page transcript. It is a conversation between a Murray from TransAlta and a Sean from Enron. These are energy traders, and they're discussing the fact of a marriage of convenience between the two companies. This can also be listened to at enrontapes.com, and I would urge all hon. members to have a squint at this.

The last tabling I have is a Markets & Strategic Initiatives report from the Alberta Electric System Operator dated September 2003, and this is further evidence that unfortunately our prices were higher than they should be for electricity in 2001.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table with permission the appropriate number of copies of a letter from a constituent by the name of Shannon Critchley, who has written to me expressing her concern regarding the closing of the RCMP crime lab in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a report with the appropriate number of copies. This report is indicating the process of an addiction from the words of a parent and her addicted child.

I have a second tabling which comes from the October 16 St. Albert Gazette. It's entitled Treatment Centres Needed to Help Kids Get Off Meth.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from a constituent named Christine Rogers, who is expressing support for the high school fine arts requirements but also with a reservation about the implementation and the effectiveness in actually achieving the desired results.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table Battling Drugs relative to Bill 202. The author of this position paper is Jac MacDonald of the Edmonton Journal. So I table this, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a very good article from the St. Albert Gazette on March 5, 2005, about the addiction bill that we are going to be discussing today, that it's finding a great deal of support throughout the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The tabling with the appropriate copies is to acknowledge the Alberta Grandparents Association, who wanted to identify and recognize the struggle that grandparents have in access to grandchildren and the "extremely onerous and burdensome" requirement for grandparents to gain access to their grandchildren.

Mr. Tougas: Mr. Speaker, I rise to table the appropriate number of documents of copies of a letter from Mr. Ron Watt, the president of the Southern Alberta Bowhunters Association, a 168-member group, outlining his concerns about the Métis harvesting agreement.

The Speaker: Now, have I missed anyone?

Speaker's Ruling Tabling Documents

The Speaker: Perhaps it's as good a time as any to make a brief comment about tablings. Brevity is very important in our House. It's very different from virtually every other jurisdiction that follows this form of government in the world. There are few parliaments in Canada – the House of Commons does not permit it – that you are allowed to table anything other than statutory requirement tablings.

Now, we've gone into e-mails, cartoons, letters, letters from ourselves to other people, and what have you, and I suspect that – hon. members, this is why I caution you. The only day during the week which is an opportunity for private members to participate in legislation or other activities on their behalf is today. You could conceivably see three hours of tablings, which would be the most devious form of filibuster possible if a private member's bill was coming up, and private members had better understand this very, very carefully. There's a risk in what's going on here.

Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with great honour that I begin the debate in second reading for Bill 202, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act, 2005, or PCHAD.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 is an extremely important bill for Alberta's children because it gives them a chance to overcome their dangerous drug addictions with the help of their parents and government. It gives them the chance to enter adulthood without criminal records and with renewed opportunities for success. Bill 202, PCHAD, is important to Alberta's parents and families because it gives them a tool for helping their children fight the disease of addiction that has become far too common in our society.

Bill 202 would give provincial authorities and parents the power to place children under the age of 18 into mandatory drug-treatment programs. Instead of considering children who use drugs as a menace, Bill 202 would recognize that children who abuse drugs are victims who are in need of help and protection. An important aspect of this bill is that it allows for parents to be actively involved in their children's recovery by allowing them to initiate the process of addiction treatment.

In fact, the idea for this bill came to me while listening to parents and youth while I was the Youth Secretariat chair for Alberta but especially listening to parents at a methamphetamine conference which took place in Red Deer in 2004. At this conference parents told delegates stories about their children's drug problems. They complained about being helpless while they watched their children destroy their lives.

I would like to take a few minutes to share one of these stories. It's a story about a woman named Audrey Bjornstad, who helped organize the meth conference in Red Deer. She has created an organization called Parents Empowering Parents, and she works tirelessly trying to educate other parents on the crisis facing many of Alberta's children.

Audrey's story begins about two years ago with a normal middle-class family in Sherwood Park. This family consisted of two loving parents and their son, who played hockey, lacrosse, and volleyball. By all standards Audrey's son seemed like a typical child who was well on his way to becoming a productive member of society. One night, however, when Audrey's son was in grade 11, he did not come home. Being a concerned parent, Audrey filed a missing person's report, which prompted a search by the RCMP. That night authorities found Audrey's son at a known meth house. This is how Audrey and her husband found out their son was addicted to crystal meth, even though he denied it vehemently afterwards.

Audrey and her husband tried time and time again to convince their son to go for rehabilitation. He denied having a problem and refused to go. He was so sick that he was not able to help himself, and his parents could do nothing but watch his condition deteriorate. He fell victim to the disease of addiction and was in need of protection and help. Ironically, Audrey's son was too young to buy tobacco and liquor, yet he wasn't too young to refuse treatment for his severe drug addiction. Audrey and her husband were left with nowhere to turn. Their son spent more nights away from home on drugs while they spent more sleepless nights worrying and wondering how they could intervene.

Then they got some good news. Their son had been arrested and was in a youth detention centre. Under normal circumstances finding out that your child has been arrested is terrible news, but these were not normal circumstances. Their little boy had fallen victim to a deadly drug addiction, and as long as he was in prison, they knew he was not on the streets and not taking drugs.

Audrey remembers celebrating when her son was selected to play on a hockey team or when her son's school volleyball team got into the playoffs. Today she celebrates the fact that her son is alive. Her son's life had been lost. He is suffering from short- and long-term memory loss and attention deficit disorder. Luckily, he had been chosen to participate in a test treatment program for youth who are addicted to drugs and who have been convicted of a crime. Hopefully, once this program is complete, Audrey's son will be drug free even though his life will never be the same.

Mr. Speaker, Audrey's story is all too common these days. Every community in this province is affected by drugs. This problem is not limited to underprivileged children or children who have only one parent. Having a child who is addicted to drugs does not mean that a parent did a bad job raising that child. The reality is that drugs are very prevalent in our schools and in our communities. Sometimes good children make bad choices. Drugs are not forgiving, and crystal meth and other drugs are extremely addictive and dangerous.

We, as adults, as parents, and as legislators, have a responsibility to help these kids get back on the right path.

Mr. Speaker, there are three complementary ideals that when combined create a healthy society. It is a society in which the vast majority of citizens are encouraged to and helped to accept responsibility for themselves and their families. It is a society where everyone feels that they are responsible members of the community in which they live and work. It is a society where people are inspired to play a part ensuring the well-being of that community. It is a society whose foundation is the family.

Mr. Speaker, parents across this province are asking for our help. They are forming groups, organizing conferences, and taking action. Parents are pulling together and taking responsibility for their families. They are playing their part, ensuring that the well-being of their communities is looked after. Unfortunately, when it comes to making the right decisions for their children, their power is limited.

Bill 202, PCHAD, will give this power back to the parents by allowing parents to make decisions in the best interest of their children, whose judgment is often clouded by the disease of substance addiction. Bill 202 ensures that this process includes the family, which is the foundation of our society.

PCHAD is based on the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act, or PCHIP, which considers children who are involved with prostitution as victims who are in need of help and protection. The Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act enables police and child protection workers to apprehend with or without a court order children engaging in or attempting to engage in prostitution. Very often children who are involved with prostitution are also involved with drugs. My great hope is that with Bill 202 we will be able to help our drug-addicted children before they become involved with prostitution, crime, and other dangerous activities.

This is one of the most important aspects of Bill 202. It not only proposes to help children who are addicted to drugs overcome their addictions, but it proposes to do so before they become involved in crime. Currently the only way to force a person into drug rehabilitation is by sentencing them to it as a part of their punishment for being convicted for committing a crime. The premise of Bill 202 is that if a child is forced into rehabilitation because they have committed a crime, it's too late.

The idea of having involuntary addiction treatment is not new. In fact, there are several states in America that have similar legislation.

Washington state is one of these jurisdictions. In that state a person may be involuntarily committed if they either present a likelihood of serious harm to themselves or are gravely disabled by alcohol or drug addiction or the person has threatened or inflicted physical harm on another and is likely to inflict physical harm to another unless they're committed.

Mr. Speaker, children who are abusing drugs are causing serious harm to themselves, and this should be reason enough to intervene. Some people will not like Bill 202 because they believe that it will violate the rights of the child. These people see this bill as an infringement on personal rights and believe that we should be fighting at all costs to protect these rights. I wonder what gives us the right to step back and watch our children fall victim to drug addiction. Children who are addicted to drugs are suffering from a disease, and we have not only a right but an obligation and a duty to help them. This obligation is supported by provincial courts of Alberta, which stated that children, especially young children, are not able to assert their right to life and health. These rights are to be balanced in the child protection context with parental liberty.

Mr. Speaker, we want to be able to help our children. We do not want to be helpless while we watch our children destroy their lives. If we can force our drug-addicted children into rehabilitation programs before they destroy themselves, we can provide them with a variety of life-saving services. First and foremost, we can give them detoxification and drug counselling. In addition to this, however, we can also provide them with mental supports, counselling and psychological services, educational and life supports.

We must remember, Mr. Speaker, that these children are still developing and that we need to do everything in our power to ensure that they develop into healthy and productive members of society. Our children are vulnerable. We as parents raise our children hoping and praying that they become successful. We dream for them, we nurture them, and we teach them. We have the life experience to tell them which choices they should make, but as they grow older, we must allow them to make their own choices. We should, however, be able to help them overcome their bad decisions.

Mr. Speaker, for the sake of our children, our communities, and our futures I strongly urge all members to support Bill 202, PCAD, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a private member's bill, so it will be back and forth with this debate for the remainder of the afternoon.

I'll recognize someone from the Official Opposition. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As critic for Children's Services I urge all members of this Assembly to give this bill careful attention and consideration. I believe that its intent is honourable and that action is needed. This bill, when passed, will set up the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act. Its intent is more focused than this suggests. It is intended as a tool for use against addiction in general, and it is a response to a relatively new and specific type of addiction. While it does not mention crystal meth by name, that is the focus that brought this bill forward.

Why a special act for addiction and especially one agent of addiction? The effects of crystal meth are so potent that they call for special attention. They pose dangers that require rapid assessment and response. Most other addictions do not create the same type of unmistakable blips on the radar screen that this act sets as a minimum standard to intervene. It is for this reason, Mr. Speaker, a high threshold for intervention and a chemical that uniquely meets it, that I believe I can assure my fellow members that this proposal, this act, will not be used as a catch-all for dealing with other more widespread types of addiction.

The critical factor about crystal meth is that as many as 50 per cent of users can be addicted with the first dose. They can become paranoid and experience chronic hallucinations and mood disorders. This first-time factor is like the warning on bottles that say: if taken internally, seek immediate medical attention. A person who has taken crystal meth does not have the luxury to wait in line or experiment with remedies. They have crossed a line that is critical. They may not be able to go back on that crossing to regain themselves without expert assistance. The effects are too fast and far-reaching for the usual procedures.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Under current legislation an addicted minor can be committed for treatment only through the criminal justice system or the Mental Health Act. One requires that the individual commit a crime and the other that they be found a danger to themselves or to others. Families of crystal meth-addicted minors should not have to wait to reach this point before they access the needed assessment and treatment.

The medical community is concerned with the implications of a wave of addictions. It is limited in its response by the current intervention models of delinquency and mental breakdown. A model that is more integrated with the medical one provides a broader basis for diagnosis.

Addiction is an illness as well as a behaviour pattern, a biological problem as well as a psychological and social one. It needs to be recognized and treated as such. It does not meet criminal or mental health standards unless we leave it to fester. On a basis of discussion with both parents and medical personnel, I feel I need to say this again: addiction is an illness. Crystal meth addiction is an illness. It is the result of a foreign agent in the body, an agent with its own agenda that can be eliminated only by rapid response measures. The body has been breached, the individual invaded.

What is needed, Mr. Speaker, is the means to enter a critical situation before the damage becomes widespread and the ravages irreversible. Therefore, I support this bill permitting a parent to admit an addicted child for treatment. I support it as a parent myself and as a liberal democrat who recognizes that our society is imperfect.

This is a measure which some may be reluctant to take, and I want to admit that at the outset. Any approach to health that entails holding against one's will is offensive to many in a democratic society for the freedom to come and go without hindrance is one of our most cherished values. We cannot escape this dilemma by claiming that this bill applies only to persons who are underage, as if there was some magical point at which a youth becomes a responsible adult and the problem might disappear. Responsibility is something that must be learned gradually, and the need to substitute external discipline for self-discipline is one that can only be taken with deep reservations and regret.

This is not an ideal route or recourse to an addiction problem. It is not a solution but an admission of failure, a last resort when other measures have failed. To pretend that it is a remedy would be dishonest, yet in the relatively recent experience of crystal meth addiction we can say that other measures have failed. In an imperfect world often the best we can manage is an imperfect measure, and this is one to be used in case of breakdown.

There is a parallel in another type of breakdown where the state intervenes. Divorce legislation is an attempt to limit the damage in a breakdown between two people. It imposes waiting periods, requires an attempt at mediation or counselling, and tries to act in the best interest of children of the failed relationship.

The situation that this bill addresses is also one of breakdown, a breakdown within oneself. It, too, provides for counselling, a space in which a young person can be shielded from further damage and given an opportunity in which he or she may decide to come home to herself. There is no guarantee that she or he will, but this offers a chance. This offers hope. This is a case where liberal democratic values allow for reluctant intervention in people's and families' lives in the hope of giving them time and opportunity to regroup and make their own wise choices. In a broader perspective of human values, this measure is intended to ultimately further a person's choice rather than to take it away.

I answer the concern about violating a young person's autonomy in this way. Addiction is an abdication of one's autonomy. By being addicted, one has already surrendered control over his or her own life to someone or something else, in this case a chemical substance and the people who provide it or urge the use of it. The intervention proposed by this bill is not a further act of overriding or violating but a countermeasure to a violation of self by drugs that has already taken place. It is not a case of two wrongs making a right but of attempting to limit a wrong that should not be left unchecked.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks in support of this bill with two points of secondary importance. One is to note what I see as an omission in its content, and the other is to observe and commend the process by which we are dealing with this issue in this Assembly. The bill mandates assessment that may lead to treatment, but it deliberately does not specify the type of treatment.

I agree that as legislators it is not our competence to prescribe medical matters, yet I am concerned that any treatment prescribed pursuant to this act be the best for the condition this bill is seeking to deal with. Specifically, I wish to commend what is described as the wraparound approach where clients are assessed and monitored regularly to determine their level of risk, medical impairment, and progress. Individualized treatment plans, intervisitation, and treatment strategies must be comprehensive. Given the social context in which addiction occurs, an appropriate response to the medical condition needs to include all areas of the youth's life. Activating hope and strengths in youth is essential.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I see as significant that this issue involving children and youth is one that we are dealing with on a nonpartisan basis. I hope that this will become a precedent. Young people's lives are affected by what we decide here in many ways. Many of these do not fall under the rubric of Children's Services. They are implicit in our approaches to health, education, ethics, environment, and law enforcement. It is right that we look at the issue in this bill and these other issues from a perspective of our common humanity, unblurred by artificial lines of demarcation.

This bill is important not only for what it contains but in the way we are dealing with it. We do not have to change our institutions to begin to change the way politics is done. The private member's bill is a measure that is available to us. All we have to do is use it. I commend the sponsor of this bill, the hon. Member for Red Deer-North, for choosing to proceed in this manner of inviting the participation from all sides of this House. I thank all members for their contributions and the government for permitting discussion to run unfettered.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that I'm not alone when I say that I share the public's concerns and my colleagues' concerns about the harm associated with drug use amongst youth. Serving the needs of our youth in our province is certainly amongst the most important of our callings as government members.

To place my comments about Bill 202 into context, I must first report that my remarks are made as chair of the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission. AADAC provides a range of addictions information, prevention and treatment services for youth and families, and they're available widely across Alberta in 49 communities as well as through mobile outreach services, satellite sites, and two specialized youth centres.

In 2003-2004 the number of young people and their families who turned to AADAC for help was approximately 6,500, a 75 per cent increase in the last five years. Of these, 358 required intensive treatment. I find this troubling both because 6,500 is a large number and because addictions problems have very serious implications. But I think it may also be a hopeful sign because it shows that youth and families are accessing our treatment services in considerable numbers.

What are the characteristics of these youth who attend AADAC's treatment programs? Well, first of all, they tend to be multidrug users, often dependent on more than one substance. They're typically under the age of 12 when they first start using drugs, and many have a history of criminal involvement, abuse, suicidal ideation, school failure, and/or mental diagnosis.

AADAC treatment clients are comprised of voluntary – I'll repeat that: voluntary – admissions and also those who are ordered by the courts to attend treatment. The commission is unable to hold clients for treatment under its mandate. AADAC is, however, currently piloting Bridges, a residential addiction and mental health treatment program in Edmonton designed for adolescent male offenders transitioning from closed custody to open custody.

Now, while AADAC services for youth are extensive in scope and reach, there remains a significant gap. AADAC does not currently provide separate youth detoxification or residential treatment as part of its continuum of services. This is something that AADAC and other ministries involved with children or youth are working on right now to address. Generally, AADAC supports legislation and regulations that promote health and well-being and discourages illicit substance use. These legislative and regulatory measures should be sensitive to changing community needs and values and should not result in more harm to the individual or to society than would occur from the actual use of the illicit substances.

Bill 202 provides us with an opportunity to consider an additional avenue open to us to help youth. However, youth addiction is complex and difficult, and it often has no easy solutions. The fundamental principle of Bill 202 is that it would give provincial authorities and parents the power to place children under 18 into mandatory drug treatment programs. There are definitely compelling arguments – I've heard them first-hand myself – that are in favour of compulsory treatment. I should mention that research I've seen regarding effectiveness is somewhat inconclusive. There's little evidence it works for intensive drug and alcohol addiction treatments since the most effective treatments are based on individual commitment to stopping drug use. Positive effects appear to last only as long as the clients are supervised and to the extent required by the courts.

In my consideration of Bill 202 I'm pleased to give it support in principle because it's intent to act in the best interests of young Albertans is clearly evident, and the hon. member presenting it has wonderful, wonderful motivations in doing so.

At the same time, there are certain concerns in the bill that I will just draw your attention to. Number one, any legislation that permits involuntary detention of persons in treatment without that person's consent raises Charter concerns, and this is an important issue that will be reviewed by the Minister of Justice. Number two, the act does not provide mechanisms for appeal or review of the involuntary treatment order. Number three, without community-based supports children leaving an involuntary treatment program will be at very high risk of not maintaining the gains made in compulsory treatment programs. Number four, significant increases in resources will be required if large numbers of children are confined in safe protection houses and require compulsory treatment. It's worthy of note that these houses would have to be provided by someone other than AADAC at this time. While I have made these four concerns known, I do expect that the hon. member bringing forth this bill will be able to answer to each of these in turn.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, effectively addressing substance use by youth requires comprehensive, effective action, including the availability of a range of information, prevention, and treatment services. Legislation such as Bill 202 should be entered into after due consideration of evidence regarding the efficacy of such an approach and consideration of the rights of the individual. Please note that should government choose to implement legislation that compels youth into treatment, AADAC will definitely continue to work with key stakeholders such as the Minister of Children's Services, the Solicitor General, and others in meeting the needs of youth. AADAC's role would be to provide addictions treatment consistent with its mandate while working with other key stakeholders, including the Ministry of Children's Services, who would provide the protective safe houses.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to address this issue.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity over the next 10 minutes to speak on Bill 202, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act, in its second reading.

As I understand it, Bill 202 would allow a parent or a legal guardian to go to a court to order mandatory treatment for their child if the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission has determined that the child is abusing alcohol and/or drugs. The problem of minors abusing drugs or alcohol is a serious one. The intentions of Bill 202 as expressed in the preamble are certainly admirable and sound. Children who abuse alcohol or drugs are a danger to themselves and sometimes to others. As legislators we have a responsibility to take whatever action we can to help.

As legislators, Mr. Speaker, we also have a responsibility to consider what the most effective way is to address the problem of substance abuse among children and youth. In considering whether Bill 202 is an effective way to address this problem, the first question I ask is: how widespread is the problem among Alberta youth?

The most recent study I've been able to find was an AADAC survey of adolescent substance and gambling abuse done in the fall of 2002 among high school and junior high school students. That survey found that the most widely used substances were alcohol and marijuana. In fact, the survey found that a larger percentage of high school students had used marijuana, about 41 per cent, than had used tobacco, which was about 25 per cent. Of harder, more highly addictive drugs 7.6 per cent had tried club drugs like Ecstasy and crystal meth, 6.1 per cent had tried hallucinogenics like LSD, 5 per cent cocaine, and 4.5 per cent crack. These are the percentages of young people who tried the above drugs at least once in the last year. Now, the percentage addicted to these drugs is likely much lower.

The AADAC survey also noted that most youth drug users did so at relatively low frequencies, particularly in the case of softer drugs like cannabis or alcohol. While in no way diminishing the seriousness of the problem of drug addiction among youth, the fact is that most youth, like most adults, are not abusing drugs and do not have a substance abuse problem.

Has the drug abuse problem gotten worse among youth since the fall 2002 AADAC survey? As the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed indicated, it perhaps has. I know that this is no comfort to parents with children struggling with serious addictions. For those parents and for society as a whole this is a very tragic situation.

Communicating or trying to get through to adolescents is a challenge at the best of times. Adolescents are trying to find their own way in the world outside of the boundaries of even the most loving homes, and often the influence of peers can be more powerful than that of parents or legal guardians. Children and youth with addictions, especially to highly addictive drugs such as crystal meth or cocaine, are very vulnerable, and we must do everything we can to assist them. It can be extremely difficult for parents and guardians to reach out and convince their child to seek treatment especially if peer influences are keeping them trapped in an unhealthy lifestyle.

To support their addictions, these children are also vulnerable to other negative influences such as prostitution or committing crimes to feed their habits. These are tragic situations. Solutions are not easy to come by. The situation is complex. It is important to ask the question as to whether we are doing everything that can be done to provide the services and supports to youth facing addictions.

In talking to parents, educators, and social work professionals, I find that this province is a very long way from providing the required specialized services and supports to young people struggling with addictions. In most of the province drug treatment programs specifically targeted at children and youth struggling with addictions are either nonexistent or woefully inadequate. Shouldn't we be putting necessary treatment options into place before we adopt the approach proposed either in this bill or in other legislative actions?

I remain to be convinced that Bill 202, compelling young people into drug treatment, is the correct approach especially when we have not done everything we can to provide the necessary supports to youth who are ready to confront their addictions and seek treatment. It is our duty as legislators to carefully examine the consequences that flow from the legislation passed in this Assembly. For example, Bill 202 could be used to force into treatment not only youth addicted to hard drugs but also softer drugs such as marijuana and alcohol. I'm not entirely sure if tobacco addiction, for example, would also fall into the very broad application of the proposed legislation.

Bill 202 would also significantly change the mandate of AADAC. Instead of being strictly a helping agency, AADAC would take on certain enforcement powers that could lead to the involuntary detention of minors. This could well taint the perception that youth have of AADAC and its services, possibly compromising its ability to reach out and educate youth about the dangers of drugs, tobacco, and alcohol. In researching this bill, I asked our staff to contact AADAC and ask them for their views on mandatory youth drug treatment. Our efforts to contact AADAC as to their views have not been successful, and I believe it is very important to hear from them.

Bill 202 also has significant implications for police officers, for the courts, as well as for those involved in child protection. While

I appreciate the fact that the motivation behind Bill 202 is protection, not punishment, I'm concerned that this may not be a perception shared by some of those that this bill is trying to help.

Bill 202 also sets up a process of apprehending youth that parallels existing provisions of division 4 of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, Mr. Speaker. Under division 4 if there are reasonable grounds to believe that a child or youth poses a danger to themselves or others, that child or youth can be confined in a secure services facility. Why is separate legislation needed when it seems that legislation exists that could be used to accomplish what the Member for Red Deer-North is trying to do through Bill 202?

Moreover, I'm not convinced that commingling youth who are voluntarily in treatment programs with youth who are in compulsory treatment is a good idea. Similarly, it may not be advisable to mix young offenders in protective safe houses or later on in treatment programs with other youth not currently involved with the criminal justice system.

My NDP opposition colleagues and I strongly support the need for more and better drug treatment services, including residential treatment programs for youth caught up in addiction. Bill 202 does not add a single bed for a highly addicted youth needing treatment in a residential facility. Bill 202 provides no needed counselling services for the youth or for their families. We need to make sure that these services are in place. Why do we need legislation compelling treatment when the appropriate services for those wanting treatment are not in place? That's putting the cart before the horse, Mr. Speaker.

So for all these reasons and despite the most admirable motivations of the Member for Red Deer-North, who is sponsoring Bill 202, at this stage I find myself harbouring serious concerns and reservations about whether or not to support this bill. With this, Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks, and thank you very much for this opportunity.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate the opportunity to address Bill 202. While I think that the bill will likely pass and eventually become law in our province, I want to put on the record that I have serious concerns, many of them just said by my colleague across the way.

I want to start my comments by citing three different parts from the Charter of rights, Mr. Speaker. They're called "legal rights." They have three specific provisions.

8. Everyone has the right to be secure against unreasonable search or seizure.
9. Everyone has the right not to be arbitrarily detained or imprisoned.
10. Everyone has the right on arrest or detention
 - (a) to be informed promptly of the reasons therefor;
 - (b) to retain and instruct counsel without delay and to be informed of that right; and
 - (c) to have the validity of the detention determined by way of habeas corpus and to be released if the detention is not lawful.

This bill would confine a child for up to 90 days against their will. This is not a voluntary treatment bill, Mr. Speaker, and that's what concerns me. This bill could be triggered by a wide variety of people, from guardians, physicians, relatives, teachers, or spiritual advisors.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, to talk about adults, when I was on the board for the Calgary General hospital, we had a psychiatric ward on-site in that facility. From time to time the court would mandate someone into our custody for up to 28 days for assessment.

A person could voluntarily commit themselves for short periods of time, and when deemed necessary, a person could be committed for up to seven days. There was a mental health advocate on-site that could and did review each individual case, and if he deemed that a person should not be held against their will, they were in fact released.

I had a friend, Mr. Speaker, who was having serious mental health issues. Her family wanted her to get help, and she declined. They tried to have her institutionalized and failed. My point is simply to point out the difficulties when trying to detain an adult. We need to be very careful here. We're talking about mandatory treatment for children and holding them for 90 days, which brings me to my second point, which is that if government members and opposition members were to pass a law like this, people would anticipate that we must in fact have facilities and staff to deal with this problem.

I worked very hard just to get a drug counsellor in Airdrie for our youth. I have been fighting for years to get a 24-hour medical clinic for Airdrie. There's not enough money to do everything that everybody asks us to do, yet with no dollars attached we talk about passing this bill. It would indicate to many people, parents and guardians alike, that not only do we have facilities, but we in fact have staff to treat young people who may not want to be treated. I'm trying to tread a really fine line, Mr. Speaker, between my desire to never have a child hurt by drugs or alcohol and my desire not to have them incarcerated or put into a treatment program against their will.

Twelve years ago, Mr. Speaker, I knew that we had a drug problem in Alberta. Today it is crystal meth, and it's a very serious drug. It is and was then cocaine, LSD, pot, Ecstasy, ice, and dozens of other designer drugs. It is sold on playgrounds, in schools, and a thousand other places in both rural and urban Alberta. There are grow ops and drug dens throughout our province and, sadly, even in my riding. One estimate just on marijuana grow ops between British Columbia and Alberta is that it is an over $7 billion business. I have no idea what it really is for all of the illegal drugs that are sold in our province or in British Columbia or in Canada, but just from that one estimate, it's a huge problem.

I as a legislator want to make a difference, Mr. Speaker. I want Albertans and especially our children to be safe. I am concerned about how this law will work and what it really means to lock children up in mandatory treatment programs. It has been my experience that unless an addict actually wants to enter a program, it won't work. Even if they want to quit, there's still a high recidivism rate, and I'm not sure how this bill addresses that kind of issue.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the sponsor of this bill will help me to understand how the Charter impacts this bill. Also, I would like assurance that, if passed, it would not mean that the taxpayers have to provide facilities and programs that we currently don't have but, rather, that it is enabling legislation that would in fact allow parents to choose a location for their child and pay those costs, that as well the children's advocate and the courts would have the ability to overturn an order remanding a child into custody.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think that we have a very complex situation, and it's going to require a great deal of thought as to how the whole issue of drug and drug abuse is dealt with, from children to adults. I don't think that we can be precipitous by passing a law like this without having carefully understood all of the ramifications of it, and I for one would feel a great deal better if we took the time, had our minister of health and representatives from AADAC do a little bit more work for us, tell us what it is we really need, what we have, what is available in a comprehensive way, what parents can do now versus this. While this bill is done with the best of intentions, I am a little concerned that it's maybe a little sweeping and perhaps a lot further ahead of where we truly are when dealing with this issue.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity to participate in this debate, and I look forward to hearing other speakers.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night I attended a support group meeting in St. Albert on crystal meth, and I'd just like to start off today by sharing with the members of the Assembly some of the characteristics of this drug.

It is a colourless, odourless, powerful, and highly addictive synthetic stimulant. It is as toxic to the environment as it is to users, producing five gallons of toxic water per ounce. This is often dumped into the water table. Crystal meth is abused because of the long-lasting euphoric effects it produces. Crystal meth, however, typically has a higher purity level and may produce even longer lasting and more intense physiological effects than the powdered form of the drug. Crystal meth typically is smoked using a glass pipe similar to pipes used to smoke crack cocaine, and crystal meth also may be injected. A user who smokes or injects the drug immediately experiences an intense sensation followed by a high that may last more than 12 hours. Quite devastating to the individual, Mr. Speaker.

Now, a number of parents in St. Albert – and I share some of the concerns of the member who just spoke – who have children with crystal meth feel that they are supportive of the mandated treatment that is necessary. They support a clause in all mental health confidentiality agreements that states that in order for confidentiality and privacy to be assured, the person cannot be present with symptoms of either suicidal or homicidal problems. In plain terminology, a person who poses a risk to himself or herself or to others is no longer protected by their individual rights to privacy and confidentiality.

While civil liberties dictate that a person who refuses treatment should be respected, they also provide for the instance when that very treatment will promote the person's safety as well as the safety of other innocent people in the community. It is well known that a minor who uses crystal meth is putting himself or herself in deadly peril. Crystal meth use is associated with numerous serious physical problems. One of the things that parents in the St. Albert constituency who have had children involved in crystal meth feel very strongly about is that this incarceration mandate, or taking into care, is very, very important.

Risk to self. Let me just look at some of these for a moment, Mr. Speaker. The drug can cause a rapid heart rate, increased blood pressure, damage the small blood vessels. Chronic use of the drug may result in the inflammation of the heart lining, long-term damage to the brain cells similar to that caused by strokes or Alzheimer disease. Overdoses can cause hypothermia, elevated body temperature, convulsions, and death.

The other thing I'd like to look at, Mr. Speaker: what are the risks to others relative to crystal meth? It can augment episodes of violent behaviour, paranoia, anxiety, confusion, insomnia on the part of the person taking the drug, and psychotic symptoms. Crystal meth users who inject the drug expose themselves to additional risks including contracting HIV, hepatitis B and C, and other bloodborne viruses. So we see the impact in terms of other people, in terms of our citizenry. Chronic users who inject crystal meth also risk scarred or collapsed veins, infections of the heart lining and valves, abscesses, pneumonia, tuberculosis, and liver or kidney disease.

Crystal meth is a man-made stimulant. The vast bulk currently on the streets has been illegally manufactured. There is an increasing number of small-scale labs being set up in rural areas of the mid-eastern states such as Missouri and Kansas and Iowa and also, I think, in parts of rural Alberta if not in the cities. The chemicals used in manufacturing processes can be corrosive, explosive, flammable, toxic, and possibly radioactive. For every pound of finished product five or six pounds of chemical waste are left at the illicit lab site. Possible ingredients include brick and driveway cleaner, drain cleaner, starting fluid, and Vicks nasal inhalers. I think my colleague will talk about some of this later on. Crystal meth is typically used on a regular daily basis, and users tend to integrate their drug use into many other daily activities.

Now, the one thing that's really concerning me as the Member for St. Albert is in terms of the mandatory taking of the person into care. I think it's very important that we look at treatment, and that is the one major consideration that I have. Crystal meth treatment consists mainly of addressing damaging emotional and behavioural patterns. No pharmaceutical treatment is particularly effective for crystal meth, although in some cases antidepressants are administered if necessary. The most effective crystal meth treatments are therapeutic, cognitive, behavioural interventions. A support community is essential after the first detox and second treatment stages are completed.

One of the things that I am not sure about in this bill is what is out there in terms of treatment, and this is of grave concern to me. Also in terms of treatment is the follow-up after the treatment. If we're able to get it, do we have the staffing in order to do this? I think it's very crucial that we have a look at this. It seems to me that if you're just incarcerating and you don't have the right treatment and facilities in order to provide the program, we have a major problem. So those are some of the reservations that I have.

Just taking a look for a moment in terms of St. Albert, we did a survey of 13 agencies in St. Albert. Most of them – this is under the FCSS banner – are doing preventative work with young people. The one area that we don't have in St. Albert is the intervention services or treatment services and, for that matter, lodging, which again focuses on some of the reservations that I have regarding the bill. I'm not clear in terms of: do we have the power with a private member's bill to make amendments to the bill? I would sleep a lot easier, for example, if it was a lot clearer to me how treatment was going to be done.

I do believe that it's very important to have the medical profession involved. Right now, if I understand the mandate of AADAC, we do not have – and I stand to be corrected on this, Mr. Speaker – services delivered to youth that are under 18. Maybe somebody can clarify that for me. So I think this is very crucial, and in terms of St. Albert it is very crucial that we look at the whole business of treatment and have a look at, again, the facilities where this service will be provided.

Let me, then, just come to this and conclude. A person under the influence of crystal meth meets the criteria in the mental health clause of being a danger to themselves and to others. Under these criteria it is essential that minors who are addicted be assisted in obtaining safety and self-control. If a person cannot present clear judgment and self-direction and poses a risk to self and others, this person becomes incapable of making appropriate choices for themselves and is then a risk to other members of the community.

The treatment of crystal meth is slow and costly and requires the assistance of well-trained mental health professionals, a support community, and the availability of long-term resources such as halfway houses or appropriate facilities. Still, as a community – and I'm talking about St. Albert here – our best bet is to educate our children and prevent them from starting to abuse this lethal drug in the first place. Going back to St. Albert, we have approximately 13 agencies that are doing prevention. We're not coping with this particular problem as well as we should. An aggressive education campaign that involves more than road signs must be added to the school curriculum. These classes must be mandatory and be made available to every student as early as grade 5. Only empowered with this knowledge, future generations might avoid this and other drug perils.

For the hundreds of minors in the community who are addicted and for their desperate families, the solution for speed is paradoxically very slow. Mandatory treatment should not be seen as an infringement on civil rights and, I would say, in terms of the need of a particular parent. But, again, the whole question of treatment and facilities is important, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you for letting me talk to this.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon to make a few comments with respect to Bill 202, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act. At the outset what I would like to do is congratulate the hon. Member for Red Deer-North on this initiative. I think it's a very important issue in today's society. I think it's one that all members of this Assembly will recognize as addressing from a topic perspective a plague that is running through all of our communities, and that is this pervasiveness of illegal addictive drug use.

I do however rise this afternoon as Minister of Justice and Attorney General to make a few comments regarding the bill. Because it is a private member's bill, it is introduced in this House and really sees the light of day, if you will, when it is introduced. It is not something that I as a minister have an opportunity to see beforehand, so the comments that I can make are based on a review since its introduction. The comments I make this afternoon are in no fashion comprehensive but simply to underscore some of the preliminary issues that we have been able to identify.

Mr. Speaker, there's no doubt that the intent behind the bill is a good one, and that is to establish a process whereby children who are abusing drugs or alcohol can be placed in treatment programs, whether voluntarily or involuntarily. The bill appears to be similar in nature to the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act. It gives parents and provincial authorities the ability to place children under 18 years of age into mandatory drug treatment programs. The basis of this appears to be that children are victims in need of help and protection. The bill also recognizes that families should be actively involved in ensuring the safety of their children, especially when it relates to drug abuse. It apparently will cover a wide variety of drugs and include alcohol in that definition.

This, however, is not the same situation as children involved in prostitution in some material ways. It's intended in this bill to give not only provincial authorities, such as police, the power to act but also parents. There are far more children who are involved in substance abuse situations than children involved in prostitution, and this gives rise to the issue: if a very large number of children were taken into custody, what facilities would be available to deal with the caseload?

It should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act was challenged on a variety of constitutional grounds, and significant evidence was introduced through Children's Services about the background and purpose of the legislation to support it as child protection legislation.

What's notable about private members' bills is, of course, that these are initiatives taken on by the private member, and the resources of government in terms of developing the policy, the evidence, the drafting are not available to the private member. So some of these very, very important causes simply do not have the resources available to them when they become before the Legislature in this fashion.

Therefore, it ought not to be a surprise that evidence may well be lacking in this instance because government departments that should be involved—namely, Children's Services, Justice, and the Attorney General, Health and Wellness, and so on and so forth—have not, just simply because of the way we do business around here, had an opportunity to participate in the matter.

It should be anticipated, in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that if the bill is passed, it will be challenged on several constitutional grounds. It's unknown whether Justice will be able to successfully defend against these challenges because we haven't had participation to date, and that is a fundamental problem of many of these types of bills that come before the House. But the fact is that they raise important issues. We can have that discussion, and if in fact we do see that there are fundamental problems, then it can be, with the will of government, with the will of the members of this House, addressed at a later time, recognizing it is something that we want to do. I think that there is absolutely no doubt that this is something that we want to do; namely, giving assistance to our children who have drug dependency.

I thought that with the time available what I would do is just give a little bit of more detailed flavour as to some of the problems that may be anticipated with respect to this bill. For example, on legislative intent: under the PCHIP legislation it provides for the apprehension and confinement of a child for the purpose of removing the child from the abusive environment and ensuring the child's safety. Bill 202 provides for the apprehension and confinement of a child for the purpose of imposing involuntary treatment. This involuntary treatment component of Bill 202 makes the legislation fundamentally different from PCHIP and raises a number of jurisdictional, Charter, and procedural issues.

On the issue of jurisdictional authority PCHIP establishes child prostitution as a child protection issue within the jurisdiction of the province. Under Bill 202 it provides a definition of drug and alcohol abuse, but it does not clearly establish the activity as a child protection issue. As a result of that, Bill 202 deals with illegal drug use and utilizes confinement as a consequence, meaning the legislation could be interpreted as criminal legislation and challenged as being beyond the jurisdiction of the province.

Just a couple more, Mr. Speaker. When an order is granted, what provisions are applicable for review of the order? Under PCHIP a child may apply to the court for review of the confinement order. The court may confirm, vary, or terminate that order. Under Bill 202 while the child may apply to the court for review of the period of confinement, there is no ability for the child to apply for review of the compulsory care order, and therefore the lack of review process for the child or the child's guardian raises Charter concerns.

One last point, Mr. Speaker, on the issue of notice to guardian. Under PCHIP if a child has been apprehended and confined, the director is required to notify the child's guardian. Under Bill 202 there is no such requirement, and that lack of notification to the guardian raises Charter issues.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, my comments are not intended to be comprehensive. I applaud the hon. member for this initiative, but I advise you and through you to other Members of the Legislative Assembly that as this bill is currently structured, there are significant constitutional and Charter and other legal issues that in my view ought to be addressed if it is to become law. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a physician in the system for a number of years I'm familiar with the challenge of addictions and particularly concerned about the early onset addictions and addictions with young people. Let me say at the outset that we know a lot about some of the precursors of addiction now, and there should be a resurgence, I should say, of investment in getting at root causes and preventing some of the addiction that is increasing in our society.

Some of the precursors I allude to relate to social conditions, families in poverty, family violence, mental problems that can be identified within family constellations and in individual children themselves, learning disorders, emotional and behavioural problems. Part of our challenge in the health system and definitely in the educational system is to identify early some of the signs and symptoms of young people and older people who are starting to move toward abnormal and serious problems such as these addictions.

This points to the vital importance of social and economic supports for people, particularly those at a disadvantage. It points to the need for a cadre of individuals who have the skills to identify early some of the signs and symptoms and for appropriate early intervention programs, both in the school system and in the health care system. I'm pleased to hear in the discussions so far the allusion here to the need for strengthening our prevention and early intervention programs. This indeed is a last resort where we're intervening to the point where we take away an individual's rights. It has a mixed blessing for the individual and the family system and can indeed go awry, as the hon. Minister of Justice has alluded to.

We need to also have a strong research component. I don't think we understand as well as we should some of the precursors, some of the issues relating to early identification of symptoms. What are the results of intervening in certain areas in the family with individuals and in the schools? I don't think we know as much as we need to about this addiction and, indeed, addictions in general.

Crystal methamphetamine addiction is a very serious condition, and rightly it's been identified as not only a risk to the individual but to those around the individual. I think we do have to take it very seriously. I'm pleased that the hon. member has raised this as it is an emerging problem that is unique and different among the addictions, both its serious rapid addiction and its impact on the individuals and the society that is emerging.

What we are recognizing in modern medicine is that diseases have to be identified as diseases if we're going to get the appropriate holistic approach to these problems and recognize that these are not simply social or psychological aberrations. They have a biochemical basis in some instances, a biochemical tendency, a genetic tendency, and they are therefore much more resistant than a lot of diseases that modern medicine has treated. But at the same time if we treat them only as social or psychological quirks, they will not be addressed in a comprehensive and effective manner.

It's obviously an increasing concern across this province and across the country. With the increasing signs of youth violence and the conjunction of drug use, alcohol use, sexual problems, and violence we need to address this in a very serious way. This is one step that has to be seen in a context of a broader approach to early identification, indeed prevention, and a comprehensive treatment that includes not only medical but social, family dynamics, and spiritual supports.

I think that's been identified also in the AADAC mandate, and they have been doing very worthwhile work in terms of education and early intervention, but they clearly don't have the resources that they need to be as effective as we want them to be, particularly in this new realm for which we still need a lot of research, Mr. Speaker.

I want to say of the recognition by AADAC through the hon. member that they simply don't have the resources and that this would require a new cadre of workers and new centres, indeed a significant involvement of the court system, and raises questions about the cost. I think we would need in this House to hear a little more about what some of the expected costs might look like so that we can make a responsible decision and sustain the important interventions that we identify here.

Secure residential treatment I think is an appropriate way to deal with some of those who particularly are in the extremes and are significant threats to themselves and to others around them, and I certainly would support that in unique cases. Again, it raises the question that the Justice Minister made about: how far can we intervene in taking away the rights of individuals, and is there an appeal process for young people in that instance? There's a lot that needs to be reviewed, then, in the human rights and Charter issues as indicated.

I have several questions that I don't know the answers to and perhaps will emerge in the further discussions. What defences are in place to make sure that children that don't require treatment will not be forced into treatment? In other words, will there be an objective panel that reviews the allegations and the evidence of family members that particularly are forcing this issue? Secondly, what role does the child's advocate play on this bill? Thirdly, what facilities are presently available such that we will not have to build new ones? Is there going to be an added police service cost that we have not considered so far?

That, Mr. Speaker, deals with most of my concerns. I support the bill and its intention. I have questions, as I've indicated, that I would like to learn more about. I wanted to recognize particularly that this is the extreme end of a growing problem in our culture, and we need to look at root causes and more research on early intervention.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to contribute to the debate surrounding Bill 202, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act. I'd like to commend the Member for Red Deer-North, first of all, for sponsoring this piece of legislation designed to alleviate a very serious drug problem that we have in our society. I also want to thank the previous speakers who have all acknowledged and stressed the seriousness of this problem that we have and the problem that Bill 202 addresses.

My time spent as chair of AADAC from 1999 to 2003 gave me insight into the breadth and scope of addictions in our province. Substance abuse is a problem in all jurisdictions across North America, and Alberta is no different. Abuse of alcohol, prescription drugs, illegal narcotics, and other substances presents a problem throughout this province as previous speakers have indicated. This disease does not discriminate based on age, gender, geographic location, or income bracket. People from all walks of life are affected by this problem. The introduction of new superdrugs compound the problems that we are facing because the rate of addiction is high. Drugs such as methamphetamine have such potency that I'm told it is possible for a person to become hooked even after one use. Drugs such as this can turn a momentary lapse in judgment into a lifelong battle with addiction.

The cost of substance abuse in both human and financial terms is very high. Those caught in the spiral of addictions are often unable to break free, and their dependence affects every aspect of their lives. There is a negative impact on careers, on schooling, and on family life. In extreme cases a substance abuse problem can lead to a total loss of financial stability and the initiation of criminal acts in order to feed the addiction.

Mr. Speaker, the devastation that addiction can cause in a life becomes especially pointed when the person affected is a minor. Young Albertans are some of the most vulnerable in our society, and I believe that we have a duty to offer protection and support in any way that we can. One of the great strengths of Bill 202 is that it recognizes the fact that minors who have a substance abuse problem need help. These kids are not likely criminals, though that may change if the addiction is not broken. They have merely made some wrong choices in life, and with support and encouragement it is possible that these minors can beat their addiction and take control of their lives again. However, making the decision to quit using drugs, especially while in the grip of that drug, can be very, very difficult.

Bill 202 would give parents the opportunity to help their children by placing them in a mandatory drug treatment program. This would give the minor in question a chance to break their addiction and begin making healthier lifestyle choices once again. While the cost of such a program is high, the cost of an addiction over the long term is even higher. The course of action laid out in Bill 202 would have a beneficial effect not only on the person struggling with an addiction and their family but also on the province of Alberta as a whole in both financial and economic terms.

In light of these factors I fully support this idea, the motivation behind it, and the bill itself. However, as legislators we have a responsibility to ensure that the laws of Alberta will benefit the citizens of this province and that this law is necessary. At times we find that there is existing legislation that will allow the minister responsible to create the desired outcome through a change in regulations or through a new interpretation of an existing act. If this is the case, the creation of another law becomes redundant and, therefore, unnecessary.

In the case of enforced drug treatment there are currently only two avenues: either by getting in trouble with the law or through the use of the Mental Health Act. In the first scenario the child must be involved in criminal action before it is possible for the justice system to order them into a drug treatment program. In this case the addicted individual has already come to the point in their addiction where crime becomes a factor. This could be early, this could be late, but the fact is that if that child does not commit a crime or is not caught committing a crime, it is next to impossible for the parent of the child or the proper authorities to help them.

Additionally, the need to brand the person as a criminal is not congruent with the philosophy of Bill 202. The present pathway to drug treatment does not recognize the fact that minors addicted to drugs are in need of our help and protection. In fact, it does somewhat the opposite: labelling the minor as a criminal. This can have a detrimental effect on the child, possibly making the treatment even less effective.

This brings us to the possibility of adapting the Mental Health Act or its regulations to deal with the placement of minors in mandatory drug treatment programs. Under the current Mental Health Act it is conceivable that this legislation could be used to place an addicted individual into a mandatory drug rehabilitation program. A physician has the power to issue an admission certificate if they have examined a person and feel that the person, among other requirements, is in a condition that is likely to present a danger to themselves or to other people. It can be argued that an individual using drugs presents a danger to themselves, and therefore they could qualify under this section of the act.

However, just because one is able to use a tool for a purpose doesn't mean that they should. To illustrate, it is not wise to use a knife where a screwdriver is required to adjust a screw. I can see the use of the Mental Health Act to deal with mandatory drug treatment in the same way. It may work, but it is the wrong tool for the task at hand, and eventually this is going to cause difficulties. The Mental Health Act was not originally designed to deal with this type of situation, nor are the facilities which fall under its jurisdiction necessarily equipped to deal with this type of program.

It would be possible to attempt to retailor the Mental Health Act, its regulations, and the associated facilities to accommodate this new program, but that could prove to be detrimental not only to the program which we are discussing but also the programs which currently fall under the jurisdiction of the Mental Health Act.

The best course of action to take is the one set out in Bill 202, I believe. This piece of legislation will give parents a possible way to help their children, where previously there was none. I believe that this program, acting as a possible solution of last resort, will be beneficial to Alberta's youth who are struggling with an addiction.

I fully support Bill 202, and I urge other members to support it as well. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise to talk about this Bill 202.

The Deputy Speaker: Perhaps before you get started, I'd like to remind all members that we have to have our own spots occupied; we're not in committee.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I agree with most of the speakers that the intent of Bill 202, Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act, is laudable, but there are lots of questions to raise about it.

I want to start with the big picture because the big picture is not very encouraging. Illegal drugs are the world's largest illicit market, and though its products are quite simple – agricultural products and chemical compounds – because of the huge jump from import price to retail price when the products come to North America, there's a huge, huge cost in the production and consumption of drugs. So the estimates recently are that the illicit drug trade is an industry between $200 billion and $400 billion, which certainly surpasses the tobacco industry and alcohol.

Of course, there is moral outrage about illicit drugs. There's no question about that. No matter who you talk to, whether you know somebody that's a part of your family who is involved with drugs or not, there's a tremendous moral outrage in our society, but as many commentators point out, moral outrage does not necessarily lead to good social policy. A good example of that is the United States. The United States' war on drugs has been going on for quite some time, and it seems to be a repetition of the 1920s prohibition against alcohol. But the war on drugs in the United States has simply created a huge black market for drugs and the involvement of organized crime, yet the level of drug usage amongst people in the United States has not diminished.

That is quite challenging for us in Canada, and we have to ask the question whether Canada just follows the United States as an example. In the United States prisons are overflowing with convicted drug offenders, over 2 million in prison because of drug offences. The United States has a quarter of the world's prison population but less than 5 per cent of the world's population, and it's partly because of the emphasis on punishment of those who possess drugs.

So in Canada what is the direction that we should follow? We have been following that same direction. Historically, beginning with MacKenzie King's 1908 Opium Act, Canada has been emphasizing that drug prohibition is the way to go, so for decades we followed that emphasis, but the usage of drugs has not diminished.

I think the moral question – and I'm taking this from not exactly a leftist magazine, the Economist magazine, which had an excellent article on July 16, 2001, on the big picture in terms of drug usage. The heart of the issue for the Economist magazine was that it's a moral question: what duty does the state have to protect individual citizens from harming themselves? Now, that gets to the tradition of libertarianism, which has been the basis of much of our politics in the modern world.

In fact, John Stuart Mill in the 19th century wrote a famous, famous essay called On Liberty, in which he stated, "The only purpose for which power can be rightfully exercised over any member of a civilized community, against his will, is to prevent harm to others." Here we're talking about intervening and preventing harm to oneself. When is that warranted? When a person is about to harm themselves, you can try to persuade them to act otherwise, you can argue with them, you can try to prevail upon them through your own moral discourse, whatever, but you can't bring force to bear upon their action. John Stuart Mill says, "Over himself, over his own body and mind, the individual is sovereign."

Of course, Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with children, so this is where the issue becomes difficult. I would be a champion of individual human rights. I would champion a person's ability to make choices, whether they harmed themselves or not, but here we're dealing with children. Even John Stuart Mill acknowledged that children might indeed need our special protection. Of course, it can be argued – and I know this from experience – that children who are hooked on drugs not only harm themselves but harm others because it destroys the family, it destroys friendships, and it has a tremendous effect on society, especially when drugs seem to always lead to crime. It's not always the case but in many examples. I can speak from personal experience about this. Because children who are on drugs don't think rationally, they don't make the right choices. They don't hang around with the right kind of crowd, and they get into trouble and end up committing crimes.

Still, I'm nervous about this bill because of its tendency to see children involved with drugs as a criminal activity. I'd say that it may lead to criminal actions. But the actual use of drugs itself: is that a criminal activity? The government of Canada's 1982 statement of principles, called The Criminal Law in Canadian Society, argued that "the criminal law should be employed to deal only with that conduct for which other means of social control are inadequate or inappropriate." Those are nice words, but we don't follow that very often because we so quickly turn to a Criminal Code solution, some legal solution, some solution of imposing force before really dealing with the issue in other ways.

Mr. Speaker, I think this should give us pause because surely we must first think of all that we can do in the name of compassion and justice before we turn to the criminal law. We need an honest, open debate about the harm that drugs bring to young people and to adults in our society. We need that debate in our schools, in our churches, in our community halls. We need to be openly debating and talking about this issue before we become draconian and start passing laws that take away human freedoms. Of course, I've heard the expression already that this bill is a bill of last resort, but I'm nervous about going ahead with a bill of last resort when we don't do the other. We don't have the kind of educational supports everywhere throughout our province to properly educate our children.

You know, a week ago I spoke with a group of ex-cons and addicts. I asked them about this bill, and of course, predictably, they said: "This won't work because this bill suggests that you force a person into a treatment centre. It never works because if they don't volunteer, if they don't decide and make the choice themselves that they need help, then there's not much hope for success in their treatment." So they volunteered themselves to go into schools and go to a young offenders' centre and talk to young people about the harm that drugs can have on people, and they would give their own testimony about how drugs often lead to crime. They would do that. Of course, Mr. Speaker, they probably wouldn't pass a police check and be able to do that. But I find that quite interesting. I think that's an important question. To what extent is there success if a person is not led to actually voluntarily enter a treatment program?

I agree with all of the other speakers about the need for more treatment centres. I can speak from personal experience that in my own family there was a problem with a drug addiction, and my son was not able to find a treatment centre in Alberta. He had to go to Yorkton, Saskatchewan, and it was very difficult for us as a family to travel right across the prairies to visit him. Thankfully, my son has been clean for many years, and he's a great success story, but there were not at that time any residential treatment centres in Alberta. So, Mr. Speaker, I agree with the others that we can't pass a bill like this and not have the proper treatment centres here in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to address the Assembly today regarding Bill 202, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for bringing forward this important legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I'm a very blessed man. I have an amazing wife and three wonderful children. I live in what I consider to be Alberta's single best constituency, Drayton Valley-Calmar. [interjections] Thank you. We attend church on Sundays. We spend a lot of quality time together as a family. I would consider us to be a fairly average middle-class Alberta family.

Now, while I consider myself to be blessed, I'm also a little scared, Mr. Speaker. I'm scared when I think about the dangers that are out there that my children are going to have to face, dangers that I never had to face. When I was growing up in rural Alberta, drug abuse was something that you heard was happening in big cities like New York or Los Angeles: drug addicts living on the streets, robbing people to pay for their habit, terrorizing neighbourhoods. It wasn't something that people in rural Alberta could even fathom. However, today nearly every community in Alberta is dealing with drugs. Some communities that I'd never even heard of until a few years ago are seeing their youth become drug addicts sometimes even before they reach junior high school.

In fact, drug use across Canada by all ages is increasing. Last year Health Canada released their Canadian Addiction Survey. It showed that across Canada drug use has greatly increased during the last decade. In 1994 28.5 per cent of all people surveyed indicated that they had used drugs at some time in their life. In 2004, just 10 years later, that number was now 45 per cent of Canadians. In 1994 3.8 per cent of Canadians indicated that they had used cocaine or crack, and in 2004 that number had increased to 10.6 per cent of Canadians.

Drug use in Canada is getting even more prevalent, and the drugs are getting harder and more addictive. In 2002 AADAC did a survey of youth in Alberta on their drug use: 41.9 per cent of students in grades 10 through 12 indicated that they had used cannabis in the last 12 months; 7.6 per cent of grade 10 to 12 students indicated that they used club drugs like crystal meth or Ecstasy in the past 12 months.

Mr. Speaker, these are absolutely staggering numbers, and these aren't just troubled teens living in inner-city Edmonton or Calgary. These are kids living in Drayton Valley, Fort Saskatchewan, Camrose, and many other rural communities. This isn't an Edmonton or Calgary problem. It's an Alberta problem, and it's all of our problem.

In my constituency crystal meth is particularly rampant. Sadly, Drayton Valley has become a hotbed for crystal meth producers and pushers. In fact, our town has hired three more police officers to deal with enforcement as well as a community officer to conduct prevention programs in schools. Now, these are good initiatives, but they're not enough. Part of the problem is that crystal meth is so easy to make. Meth can be cooked up in bathrooms and kitchen sinks with precursors obtained from the local drug mart or even found beneath some of these same kitchen sinks. It's being pushed in our schools and in all of our communities.

Children coming from good, loving families are becoming addicted to crystal meth at exponential rates. I've had countless parents come into my constituency office pleading for help. Often they've been battling with their child's meth addiction for months, and they don't know what else they can do. Their child isn't eating or going to school. They're either up all night or asleep for days on end. In most cases when they confront their child about their problem, the child runs away. Mr. Speaker, I can't even imagine what these parents are going through, not knowing where their child is when they go to bed at night, thinking that they might be strung out on meth, and wondering what they're doing to afford these drugs.

As their MLA and as a parent I often feel helpless. I don't know what I would do if I was in their situation, and I pray that I never have to make these hard decisions. But my children are getting to that age where the pressure to try drugs is mounting. My eldest son, Taylor, is 13 years old. What really scares me is that I've talked to parents whose children his age and sometimes even younger are already addicted to drugs. That's one reason why I attend the Drayton Valley parent-to-parent support group, in my constituency. I wanted to educate myself as a parent and as an MLA as to what other parents are going through so that I can help my child manoeuvre through the pitfalls that await his every step. I also wanted to provide what support I can to those parents as they struggle with this problem.

For many of these parents who are dealing with drug-addicted children, there are currently only two options, Mr. Speaker. They can try to convince their child to come in voluntarily and voluntarily ask for treatment, or they can try to have their child arrested and put into a young offender facility. Now, even if the parents can track down their children, very few of them can convince their addicted child to accept voluntary treatment. Sometimes even for those who can convince their child to go into treatment, it's only voluntary treatment, and many of them leave after a few weeks and return to a life of drug use.

I know for a fact that many of us here have had to suggest to constituents that their only option might be to try to have their own child arrested. Now, if that alone isn't enough to convince us that Bill 202 is needed, I don't know what is. But arrest is, unfortunately, one of the only options available to parents right now. Having arrest as an only option is not satisfactory for Albertans. Arresting a child puts an unnecessary strain on our police and on our court system. It also puts a child in a young offender facility where they may or may not get the addiction treatment they need. Furthermore, their child ends up being branded a criminal when all they really needed was help for their addiction.

I can understand why a parent may take this option. Their child gets taken off the streets, put into a safe, secure environment. They get a bed to sleep in and three meals a day. I imagine for these parents simply knowing that their child is safe and not on the streets is a huge relief.

Mr. Speaker, parents shouldn't need to have their child arrested to be able to get them into a safe place. That is why I support Bill 202, brought forward by my hon. colleague from Red Deer-North. Bill 202 will give parents another option. It will take drug-addicted children off the streets and put them into a safe, secure facility where they can dry out and start to receive proper treatment for their addictions. Bill 202 will empower parents again. I can tell you right now that many of them feel helpless. Bill 202 will allow parents to help their children when for so long they have been helpless.

As many of you here know, I strongly believe that governments must not dictate how each of us should live. Most Albertans don't need the government telling them how to live their lives, but I also strongly believe that as a society and as a government we need to help those who cannot help themselves. I'm not talking only about those people that are homeless or that are living in poverty. I'm also talking about those who have a mental illness and those who are addicted to drugs and alcohol. If we don't act now and give parents with drug-addicted children another avenue for help, we will have failed. We will have missed a chance to try to stem the tide.

Now, I'm very optimistic that we're going to see a great number of children taken out of harm's way as a result of this bill. I also believe that if it is successful as I think it will be, it will lay the groundwork for us to look at expansion to other types of interventions. This bill will allow parents to force an intervention upon their own child, but it does not allow for a community to enact an intervention upon an adult. There are many drug addicts out there today who would probably benefit if their family or friends or even their community were able to take their case in front of a judge and force them into treatment such as the community treatment orders like we see in other provinces. The community would also benefit, especially if it's suffering due to a person's drug addiction.

In most cases it is simple economics. A drug addict needs money to feed their addiction. To get this money, members of a community tend to suffer from increased thefts, break-ins, prostitution, or a proliferation of drug dealing. A community should be able to protect itself from harm as well as have the ability to help one of their members who so greatly needs help. In fact, the state of Washington has had legislation in place since the '70s where a person, not just a child, can be involuntarily committed to a treatment facility if they are, "gravely disabled by alcohol or drug addiction."

As I have mentioned before, Mr. Speaker, I believe it is about more than protecting the individual. We also must protect the community from some of these individuals. I also believe we should consider extending this to people who have a severe mental illness. In Saskatchewan they have the community treatment order program, as I mentioned earlier. An order for mandatory treatment can be obtained for those people deemed by a psychiatrist as likely to cause harm to themselves or others.

As I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, I believe that Bill 202 is a great start. It's a good first step. In fact, it's a necessary start. If we don't act now, parents of drug-addicted children will continue to struggle. We must give them help. We must give them options. We must give them hope. So I urge all members to join me in supporting Bill 202.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to give my response to Bill 202, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act, and I rise not only as an elected official but also as a parent and as a health care practitioner.

Bill 202 proposes that the way we apprehend these children who are under the influence or who are addicted is the same as stipulated in the protection for children in prostitution legislation, and I think this is a positive step. The one thing we all have to remember is that children are vulnerable. These young guys don't know what they're getting themselves into. They're surrounded by temptation, and we've heard on numerous occasions how boys would resort to stealing or get on the wrong side of the law to feed their addictions and then how girls would also resort to prostitution to feed their addictions.

I can't imagine what I would do as a parent, myself, if one of my two children were addicted to a substance or to an illicit drug. I would probably be devastated. I could probably lose my mind. My hon. colleague for Edmonton-Glenora indicated that the illicit drug industry runs into the billions of dollars, and I can probably add to that that it's probably the second worst and dirtiest industry to arms dealing.

The threshold for the decision whether a child or a youth is incarcerated would probably be made by AADAC. AADAC is qualified. They have the medical staff, and they have the knowledge and the expertise to render a scientifically based decision that would help the court in making that judgment. So I think AADAC is a suitable agency to ask for expert advice. However, I don't think AADAC itself is qualified or empowered enough to handle the treatment of these children. If they do and if they're asked to play that role, we'd probably have to empower them and fund them more so they can actually have more beds open for treatment. They can probably offer all the different angles of treatment, which is not only chemical.

I have a little concern with this proposed bill. The government and the courts will have to exercise extreme caution in the use of this new law to ensure that the rights of children are not violated. Many of my colleagues indicated that it's a multifaceted problem. The situation has two sides. You have the parents, on the one hand, who are helpless. They're at the end of the road. They don't know where to turn or who to go to. You also have the children who might not voluntarily agree to being placed in a secured facility for treatment. There's also the third side with society, and, yes, we do have to protect society from the crime that is perpetrated and the ill effects of a spiralling drug trade.

There is also the other concern that treatment facilities are not adequate and that they're few in Alberta. Government cannot just simply legislate a solution and say: yup, once this is on paper and it's available, we hope that everything works and that everything will miraculously fall in place. If they legislate a solution, they probably have to look at ways to implement the solution and empower the individual agencies to fulfill that role.

Children's rights are paramount. We have to respect a child's rights. However, under the influence or when these guys are addicted or hooked on a substance, they're impaired. They cannot make these decisions for themselves. So a parent in their right capacity as a guardian or as the caregiver to that child probably is in the best position to make that request of the court.

There's also the concern with regard to the safe house, the proposed treatment facility. Safe houses are not meant to be holding cells or jails. I think they're meant to provide a safe and healthy environment for a person to cope and to recover. The chemical treatment is the main thing. It's the main angle of treatment. However, we have to conduct more research and look for ways to help these kids recover from their addictions. As it stands now, the treatments that we have are not successful and they're inferior. They're not useful enough.

Also the angle of behaviour and psychological counselling. These kids have to know that, yes, we're fighting the physical dependence, but you have to want to quit. You have to want to recover.

Also their education or schooling component. When they're incarcerated or held in those treatment facilities, they're not attending class, they're not studying, they're not doing their homework. So we have to minimize the impact on these children's development and allow them to receive some sort of schooling or some sort of education while they're in the treatment facility.

We also have to encourage the development of support groups. Peer support is probably the most useful because it's kids advising other kids about the detriments and the potential side effects of the addiction, telling them how to identify the temptation and how to fight it, how to resist it, and maybe looking at empowering those children to become ambassadors in their communities once they're released from those facilities. They can go back and talk to their same age group and tell them, you know, what's involved, what got them hooked, how they fought it, and now how they're planning to continue to stay clean. So I think we should empower them to become ambassadors in their own communities and their own schools to distribute and spread the word that you can fight it and that you can probably resist it at the beginning too.

Two days ago I met with 250 high school kids with my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Decore, and we spent 90 minutes surveying these children with regard to Bill 202. We wanted to go to both the source and the target of the issue. Ninety per cent of those 250-plus students indicated that they're in favour of Bill 202. They had questions about their rights as individuals, most of whom are almost 18. They said: okay; what happens if I'm 18 or if I turn 18? They identified with the risk to society, and they identified with the escalating danger, and they recognized that some of their peers are either drug traders themselves – they're trafficking in the drug to feed their own addictions – or they're profiting from it, and they didn't like either of the two situations. They said: this has to stop.

Ten years ago they hadn't heard of crystal meth. Now we have it. Who knows what we will have 10 years from now. It gets more potent, it gets easier to make, and it gets deadlier. So they said that, yes, intervention is necessary.

They also indicated that education was not adequate. They commented on the DARE program, and they said that it wasn't enough. They say that even parents don't identify the signs of addiction. With crystal meth, for example, early on the kid actually excels. They do better, they're more energetic, and they look brighter. A month after that, they start the downhill dive. They lose weight, they lose sleep, they cannot study, they cannot function, they resort to crime, and then they leave the house. So we probably have to educate the kids, but we also have to educate the parents what to look for, what signs to watch for.

Interestingly, the children and the youths that I actually spoke to had a parallel concern where maybe one or both of the parents are drug addicts themselves. The children said: what recourse do we have if we identify one of the parents as a potential threat? They're faced with a temptation in the house. "What can we do to alleviate that temptation, that risk? What can we do as children if the parents have all this power now? What do we do if we realize the threat and we want to do something about it?"

So, to close, Mr. Speaker, I support this bill and so do many of my constituents who came into the office and indicated their support, some of whom were actually young adults. They weren't just parents who came and said: yes, we agree. Some young adults themselves came in and said: yes, we agree. I applaud the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for sponsoring this bill, and I would hope that she listens to my concerns and those made by the other colleagues because really the intention here is to make this bill foolproof, basically. We want something that works, and we want something that is useful, that is empathetic, and that is courtproof. So I applaud you and God bless you and thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and join the debate on Bill 202, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North. Bill 202 has provided the opportunity for the House to debate an issue that affects all Albertans. Some Albertans may choose to believe that drug abuse doesn't affect them. They would be mistaken. Every Albertan pays for drug abuse, whether it's through policing and court costs, adding stress to the emergency medical system, or the loss of a friend or a loved one. Those are just a few broad examples.

The truth is that drug abuse is like a pebble that is dropped in a pool of water. The initial result is confined, but in time the ripple effect spreads, the result of one small pebble, across the entire pool of water. I would like to commend the Member for Red Deer-North for introducing Bill 202. It is revolutionary and it is necessary. I see this as a ripple effect that can ultimately destroy families, cripple communities, and weaken a province.

In discussing this issue with families and constituents, you can often hear the word "assume" used to describe people's thoughts on drug abuse. They assume that their community and schools are drug free. They assume that their child's friends have positive intentions. They assume that their children assume the pressures involved with using drugs. Mostly importantly – I alluded to this before – they assume that consequences of drug abuse in our province don't affect them.

Drug abuse is a serious problem in Alberta. Statistics from 2001 show that Alberta has the lowest number of drug offences in Canada at 7,211. That includes possession, trafficking, and importation offences. Cannabis possessions account for half of all drug offences in Alberta. That was in 2001, Mr. Speaker, and that was just those who were caught and charged. As we all know, we are facing a new problem in our province and across the country: methamphetamines, a word we are going to hear a lot of during our debates in the House. As all MLAs, especially rural ones, we'll be working hard to lessen the effects of drug abuse on Albertans.

There is a reason for real concern on these issues when in one year's time span over 1.5 million needles were exchanged at needle exchange programs in Edmonton, Calgary, Red Deer, Grande Prairie, and Lethbridge. This statistic only highlights the drug abusers that are exchanging their needles. It does not take into account the drug abusers who do not use the needle exchange program. There are real problems with real consequences, some of which I alluded to earlier, such as health risks and death.

In 2002 39 per cent of all positive HIV serological tests in Alberta listed injection drug use as a reported risk factor. In 2000 the chief medical officer in Alberta investigated 205 deaths that were drug related and 49 that were drug and alcohol related. These included suicides resulting from overdoses or poisoning, accidental deaths involving the use of drugs and/or alcohol, deaths directly caused by substance abuse, and deaths where drugs and/or alcohol were contributing factors.

Mr. Speaker, we live in a province where the only way we can get help with drug abuse is to voluntarily seek help or by being charged with a criminal offence and being sentenced to a mandatory drug treatment program. There need to be other options available, especially for children and teenagers of this province.

The statistics I have been using have been generic ones that take into account all Alberta, but ultimately Bill 202 is for Alberta's children. However, as I alluded to earlier in my remarks, I see Bill 202 as a permissive stake to circumvent the inevitable should we allow drug abuse to spiral out of control against Alberta's children, resulting in criminal charges, court appearances, health issues, and death.

Just so we can get a grasp on exactly what we are dealing with when it comes to children and drug abuse, I would like to share some specific statistics dealing with the youth in Alberta. The number of children under the age of 18 charged with possession of drugs in 2002-03 was 204, while the number charged with trafficking was 132. In 2002 persons between the ages of 12 and 17 years of age had the second-highest rate of drug-related violations, only to be outdone by individuals between the ages of 18 and 24. I think the most pertinent stat to this legislation was in 2002: 27 per cent of junior and senior high school students in Alberta had used cannabis, and 14 per cent reported using one or more drugs such as magic mushrooms, club drugs, or cocaine in previous years. They are real statistics that highlight a real problem.

Alberta families have to be our first line of defence against teen-aged drug abuse. Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 recognizes that children who abuse drugs are in fact victims that need help and protection. Their families should be involved in ensuring the safety of their children, and Bill 202 would allow them the right to do so.

Going through some documents on the legislation, I found an interesting quote from a Supreme Court of Canada justice that was made during a ruling concerning a children's charter of rights that I'd like to share with the House.

Children, especially young children . . . are unable to assert their rights to life and health. These rights are to be balanced in the child protection context, with parental liberty . . .

Where parents, for what ever reasons, do not exercise their rights vis-à-vis their children, or do not exercise them in the best interests of their children, the state has assumed the duty and role to intervene to protect children's welfare.

The government of Alberta introduced Alberta's Promise, which promises all of Alberta's children that the government will champion their future. I see Bill 202 as yet another positive step in this direction. I am sure you are all familiar with the little red wagon that symbolizes America's Promise. This symbol is derived from a speech given by Colin Powell when he launched America's Promise in 1997.

Every child should have a Little Red Wagon . . . A Little Red Wagon to pull around the heavy load of life . . . A Little Red Wagon to pull around his or her dreams. The Little Red Wagon also has a very long handle so that an adult can come along and help when the road is particularly difficult or rocky.

Through this legislation we have an opportunity to further strengthen our resolve in providing Alberta's children a safe place to grow, learn, and develop positive life skills. Those children that abuse drugs need the help and protection of their families and friends.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 has been in the media for some time now. If any of us were to walk into a coffee shop in rural or urban Alberta and sit down next to a family or an individual and ask them about it, they would likely know what we were talking about. Most surprisingly, the majority of individuals you talk to would have a story to share with you involving a family member or a friend. The story would likely be one about the overwhelming feeling of helplessness as they watch their son, daughter, sister, brother, best friend, neighbour, cousin, niece, or nephew fall to the devastating effects of drug abuse.

Mr. Speaker, I'd be pleased if everybody would support Bill 202. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That certainly cuts it down to one page, doesn't it?

I just will say the one thing that I wanted to perhaps give as an idea to the Solicitor General. We have treatment centres up and running now, but I'm not sure that AADAC is the only answer. They could be utilized under a contract basis. This government contracts out to private-care-delivery firms for the elderly. Bricks and mortar, big buildings are great, but a secure room with a trained and compassionate worker will do the trick just as well. For instance, in Lethbridge as in other parts of this province the government has shut down the youth remand centres. These buildings sit there with all the security fences, the locks, and the cameras, ready for these victim children to move into. All of society will say thank you for the dollars saved in the long run because these victims would not end up on social assistance.

I distinctly recall back in the early '80s a family that had to remortgage their home and use their savings. The mother lost her job just to pay for the rescue of their son from a cult. The consequential time and effort to help him rejoin society as a productive, balanced, and more importantly a happy and content human being – did that son say thank you that he was helped in spite of himself? Yes, he did, and they were lucky that their son made it.

There is a parallel with that story with crystal meth. Parents can't wait and must help their victim children in spite of themselves, especially when the problem is developed before the parents know what's going on. I recall comments made by Rod Stewart and Jamie Foxx when they received their Academy awards, that they were very thankful, Rod Stewart to his mother for making him practise his piano and Jamie Foxx for his grandmother.

I would just like to thank the minister for bringing this forward. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Actually, it's a member. This is a private member's bill.

Hon. members, under Standing Order 8(5)(a)(i) five minutes is now provided for the sponsor of the private member's public bill to close the debate. I invite the hon. Member for Red Deer-North to close debate on Bill 202.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that this is a very important bill. I see that we will need some strengthening of the bill, and I look forward to answering all the questions that I heard today in the debate in Committee of the Whole. In the meantime I would ask that everyone support Bill 202 in second reading, and I would call for the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 202 read a second time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that in view of the hour now we call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 p.m.

Elimination of Library Card Fees in Tribute to Dr. Lois E. Hole

502. Mr. Agnihotri moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to eliminate fees for library cards in all public libraries in tribute to the late the Hon. Dr. Lois E. Hole to honour her belief in the importance of literacy and in the principle that access to libraries should be free for all Albertans.

[Debate adjourned March 14: Mr. Danyluk speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to stand again and speak to Motion 502. I'm familiar with rural Alberta more than I am urban Alberta. I would like to say that I'm very proud of the extensive library system that we have in Alberta. I'm very proud of the library services network that we do have.

In my constituency, which really affects, I believe, nine constituencies, we have a library system that an individual can walk into a library and have access to 3 million books, Mr. Speaker. So when I look at a system that offers that sort of service, that comes to all of our individual libraries – and we have libraries in some very small communities that do not charge for any sort of service. The library opportunities are free and are very, let's say, accessible to anybody there. So what happens is that there are some library systems that charge a very nominal fee for their services, and that really provides them with the opportunity to purchase some extra books, some extra things that aren't funded. As I said before, I think we're very fortunate with the library system, the support that does come from the government to the municipalities. And the municipalities pass that on to the individual library systems.

When we had the discussion of Lois Hole, we talked about: wouldn't it be a tribute to Lois Hole to have no library fees? I believe that it is a tribute to Lois Hole for us to make libraries accessible to people through a digital system, through enhanced systems. I think that is a lot more important to make sure that children and people have an opportunity to read, that individuals have an opportunity to access the books that we do have in our area. I think that is a tremendous tribute. Lois Hole sponsored books in each one of our local libraries, and that was such an inspiration to the small libraries, her dedication and devotion to learning and to reading.

So, Mr. Speaker, if I can, I would like just to close and say that I believe that it wouldn't be the right decision to try to put a curtailment on a library system, to not be able to charge a fee. Presently, most people have the access and the ability. I don't think it's necessary to put that forward.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 8(4), which provides up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I'd invite the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to close debate.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been very interesting to listen to this debate and to hear how every single speaker has talked about the vital contribution made by the libraries. Well, it's time to put our money where our mouth is.

Several hon. members remarked that library card fees are nominal, not significant. Well, $12, $15, or $30 a year does not mean the same thing to a lawyer, a doctor, or a parliamentarian as it does to a minimum wage worker. The less affluent one is, the less privileged one is, the more significant that so-called small fee is. Public libraries are there to serve all of us, especially the less privileged, and that is why we should pay for them through our taxes and not through private membership fees.

Some hon. members speculate that fees do not deter users, but the facts prove them wrong. When Edmonton introduced a fee, enrolment dropped, and no doubt the same thing happened in other libraries. On the other side of the coin, when Banff eliminated their $10 annual fee, memberships soared.

Some hon. members believe that we don't value what we don't pay for. Well, I value our police department. I value our fire department. I value my right to cast a vote. I value my family. I don't need to pay user fees to know that these things are valuable. Let us not confuse price with value. I think the hon. members have it backwards. It's not that we don't value what we don't pay for; rather, we don't pay for what we don't value. In this wealthy province over the last two decades the province has not paid its fair share of funding towards public libraries, that we in this House all profess to value.

The hon. Minister of Education says that he would like to see a significant increase made to the per capita rate for public libraries. It is unfortunate that when he was Minister of Community Development, the increase that he brought in after 15 years of stagnant funding was only 26 cents per capita. But he's right: public libraries do deserve and require a significant increase in the provincial per capita funding, and that is exactly what we propose.

There's no doubt that the late Lois Hole was a passionate believer in public libraries and in social justice. She said on many public occasions – and I'm sorry if some of the members didn't seem to hear what she said – that she wanted to see library membership fees eliminated in Alberta. Today we have a chance to honour her name and her values in the lasting legacy of open library doors for the benefit of all Albertans. Let us not squander that opportunity. Everywhere else in North America except for parts of Quebec public libraries are supported by taxes, not by private membership fees. Our province can afford to support public libraries too. Let us pay for what we profess to value: well-funded, accessible libraries.

Thank you very much.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 502 lost]

Alberta Ingenuity Fund

503. Mr. Knight moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to consider the advisability of increasing the value of the Alberta ingenuity fund to $1 billion over the 2006-07 and 2007-08 fiscal years.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reason I decided to sponsor Motion 503 is because in many ways the future of our province and our economy is dependent on our commitment to research and innovation. I see the Alberta ingenuity fund, or the AIF, as a very appropriate way for us to invest some of our growing resource revenue. With the debt paid down and oil prices higher than expected, the next several years may be an opportune time for us to invest our revenue into areas that will help sustain and grow our economy for years to come.

The Alberta ingenuity fund was established by our government in 2000 to provide funding for grants and award programs for both basic and applied research initiatives. Over the past four years the fund has provided valuable dollars in support of research projects in the areas of agriculture, natural sciences, engineering, telecommunications, applied mathematics, ecology, soil science, and artificial intelligence. As you can see, Mr. Speaker, this is indeed a very diverse list, one that mirrors our own diversification efforts.

In order to fund these efforts, the AIF was originally endowed with $500 million, and the government set a goal of growing the fund to $1 billion when finances permit. It is important to note, Mr. Speaker, that unlike other one-time research and innovation investments the AIF is an endowment fund which funds R and D projects through investment income. The added advantage of funding research through endowment funds is the fact that the principal is never lost, and the government retains the option of modifying the fund if times deem necessary. Therefore, I don't consider topping up the AIF by a further $500 million over the '06-07 and '07-08 fiscal years as revenue spent but rather as revenue redirected. The $1 billion principal should double investment income, thus providing additional funding for research and innovation initiatives.

Another advantage of Motion 503 is that it does not make it mandatory for the government to top up the AIF to $1 billion dollars over the specified fiscal years; rather, it urges the government to do so without having to pass laws mandating this proposal. Through Motion 503 I want to encourage the government to consider increasing the fund by a further $500 million in '06-07 and '07-08. However, I don't wish to restrict our budget flexibility if we're not able to do so over the proposed fiscal years.

With this in mind, I am pleased that this government is moving in this direction through Bill 1, the Access to the Future Act. Section 8 of the act complements Motion 503 by proposing to top up the ingenuity fund up to $1 billion. The difference between what I'm proposing and Bill 1 is that Bill 1 does not offer a timetable outlining when the investment should be made. Rather, section 8 of the act stipulates that the $500 million would be invested "in amounts considered appropriate by the Minister of Finance." Having said this, I'm encouraged that the government is looking to top up the AIF. However, I urge the Minister of Finance to allocate the necessary funds over the years I have suggested because depending on what happens to oil prices, our revenues may not be as high as they have been and may, in turn, limit our ability to follow through with this commitment.

While I'm on the subject of our revenues, particularly those generated through oil royalties, I would like to briefly look back at our previous research and innovation investments and their contributions to the creation of the Alberta advantage. Our province has been blessed with large quantities of natural resources, especially oil and gas deposits. However, many of these deposits would still remain untapped if Albertans did not recognize the importance of investing in R and D initiatives, which produce the necessary technology enabling us to discover and develop more resources.

Thanks to our current and past governments, who invested large amounts of public funds in the development of our energy sector, the province finds itself in a situation where we are considered the leaders in the country not only in terms of economic growth and potential but in innovation and ingenuity as well. By focusing on research and development projects and initiatives, we have been able to take advantage of our natural resources in a manner that is both environmentally prudent and economically viable.

One of the best examples of combining research and innovation with industry development has been the expansion of Alberta's oil sands. The story of the Athabasca oil sands is directly related to Motion 503 because it not only reflects the linkage between innovation and industry development, but it also demonstrates just what can be accomplished through continued commitment to research.

It's fascinating, Mr. Speaker, that in only a few short decades – these oil deposits were considered unworkable and unviable as the technology of the time could not allow us to tap into these potentially rich sources of revenue. However, the government of the former Premier Peter Lougheed recognized the enormous economic potential of developing these deposits and formed AOSTRA, the Alberta Oil Sands Technology and Research Authority, in 1974. The goal behind establishing the new authority was to develop oil sands technology that could allow us to exploit our oil resources at relatively low cost and minimize the impact of potential declines in conventional production.

In order to bridge the technology gap, the government provided AOSTRA with approximately $100 million in funding to help research and development in an entirely new method of extracting bitumen, which was previously considered uneconomic. This was a relatively large investment of taxpayers' funds for its time, Mr. Speaker, but it pales in comparison to the return it helped generate over the years to come. Thanks to the initial investment AOSTRA led the way in developing steam-assisted gravity drainage, or SAGD, and the OSLO cold water extraction system, both of which were vital in transforming the oil sands into an economically viable source of oil revenue.

In the last five years alone, Mr. Speaker, the industry sector has allocated $24.7 billion toward oil sands development, which is amazing.

An Hon. Member: How many?

Mr. Knight: $24.7 billion, which is amazing when one considers that it took only $100 million to get the ball rolling.

The benefits of the project, Mr. Speaker, have been truly staggering. In 2003 the oil sands contributed about 52.7 per cent to Alberta's total crude oil and equivalent production, and we're responsible for about 34.8 per cent of all crude oil and equivalent produced in Canada. Between 2001-2002 and '03-04 the oil sands development provided $565 million worth of revenue to Albertans in the form of royalties paid to the provincial government, outweighing the initial investment more than fivefold. In addition, annual oil sands production is projected to grow at a steady pace, promising to generate valuable resource revenue for years to come.

In addition, the oil sands development project opens new job opportunities for Albertans and Canadians seeking employment in the oil patch. Just to illustrate this point, Mr. Speaker, it is predicted that the oil sands will create a total of 102,000 new jobs across Canada by 2012, which is important as this not only adds to our economy but also helps to create added spinoff industries and employment opportunities across our province and across the country.

Now, the reason I spent so much of my time referring to the Athabasca oil sands project, Mr. Speaker, is because I want to illustrate just what can be accomplished through recognizing potential economic opportunities and finding research that would allow us to capitalize on these opportunities. Without a doubt, there are many other potential oil sands type of discoveries waiting to be made. These are not limited only to the oil sector but other sectors of our economy, some of which are currently in their infancy. However, I believe that only through funding the Alberta ingenuity fund and other research and development funds and initiatives will we be able to take full advantage of all the opportunities that await us in the future.

With this in mind, Mr. Speaker, I urge all of my colleagues to vote in favour of Motion 503 and look forward to the debate. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to respond to Motion 503, which calls on this government to increase the value of the Alberta ingenuity fund, which is otherwise known as the Alberta heritage fund for scientific and engineering research. I will briefly say that although we as the Official Opposition are not against this motion, I for one was greatly astonished that the Conservative deputy whip, the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, would sponsor a private member's motion that exactly duplicates one entire clause stipulated in the proposed flagship government bill, Bill 1, Access to the Future Act, which was sponsored by our hon. Premier and marketed as new-found Tory pride.

The Alberta ingenuity fund was established in the year 2000 with an endowment of $500 million. This Motion 503 wants it to increase to $1 billion, Mr. Speaker, whereas Bill 1 wants to increase it by $500 million. So correct me if I'm wrong, but I think that these two calculations are the same: $500 million plus $500 million is $1 billion, or $1 billion minus $500 million is $500 million. Motion 503 is identical to section 8 of Bill 1.

The point is, Mr. Speaker, that here is proof that the government caucus is in some form of disarray. The left hand doesn't know what the right hand is doing. The leadership race within the Tory ranks is clearly interfering with their legislative duties to the extent that they're jamming the Order Paper with motions excerpted and extracted from their own bills just to look like they're working and thinking wonderful ideas. This is of course contrary to what the hon. Premier instructed his MLAs to do in that no leadership campaigning or organizing should interfere with government business.

We obviously find ourselves tonight wasting some time on a done deal whereas, in fact, we could have used this time more productively. I for one would have much rather stood here tonight debating one of our Official Opposition motions, which are really worth looking at. We are now faced with a situation where our motions were pushed down the line to make room for this supposedly unique government motion. Maybe the hon. member himself is not seeking the Tory leadership, and maybe I shouldn't be as critical of him personally, but perhaps he or maybe some of his research staff are busy supporting one of the many leadership hopefuls which are dotting our landscape and they're not paying attention to their own legislative agenda or what the people of Alberta are actually after.

Having said that, I appreciate the explanation that the hon. member offered, and I mean no disrespect. But I still think it wasn't necessary as it was exactly stated in Bill 1, a government bill which is expected to pass and to receive royal assent anyway.

So, in short, we support this motion, but I think we should move on. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this evening and join the debate surrounding Motion 503. I'd like to thank the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, first of all, for bringing it forward and also for the excellent information provided on the ingenuity fund in his introductory speech on Motion 503.

The intent of Motion 503 closely shadows one that has been put forward by the government in Bill 1. The distinguishing feature is that Motion 503 asks that the principal of the Alberta ingenuity fund be brought to $1 billion in a set time period, more specifically during the 2006-07 and 2007-08 fiscal years. Increasing the capital investment of the endowment fund will increase the amount of money that the Alberta ingenuity fund, or AIF, as it is being called, is able to distribute to researchers who are working in Alberta. This fund supports a variety of research initiatives including student scholarships, fellowships, and industrial associateships which assist researchers to become involved in applied research in the private sector.

These various funding programs all have one goal: working to attract and retain leading researchers in a wide array of disciplines. This type of program increases the amount of human capital that we are able to access in our province. In fact, the foundation has supported over 200 graduate students in full-time research training in Alberta with a commitment of $5 million per year. By supporting initiatives such as the AIF, Alberta is able to increase the amount of research performed in our province, and this will assist us in shifting from a resource-based economy to a value-added economy.

As we begin our second century as a province, we are in an enviable position, and it is important that we keep working to ensure that we retain the advantages that we have built up over the past 100 years. The high prices of oil and gas have been a boon to Albertans both in terms of natural resource revenues and the creation of jobs for Albertans. However, the problem with nonrenewable resources is that there is a limited reserve. Alberta now has the opportunity to begin working with industry to begin creating economic alternatives here at home. Using the benefits that our oil and gas wealth has given us, we can create other industries alongside our traditional ones. By building a more diverse economy, we will be bolstering our current industrial strengths while planning for the future. Supporting research and development is one way that we can achieve this.

Being a former educator, the current chair of the Alberta Research Council, and the current vice-chair of the Alberta Science and Research Authority, I have a great interest in education and research. Education and research go hand in hand as it is necessary for Albertans to obtain the training and skill sets that come with an education before embarking upon research initiatives. Alberta's universities are among the finest in the world, and with the government's announcement of continued commitment to our postsecondary institutions I am certain that our campuses will remain at the top of their fields, and that means research excellence as well.

Since becoming the chair of the Alberta Research Council, I have had the opportunity to learn about the research and development initiatives that are taking place in our province, and there's a great deal of excitement in the research that is presently taking place. This includes new research in biosciences, agriculture, energy, engineering, forestry, information and communications technology, and the environment, including the water initiatives of the Alberta ingenuity fund.

While the AIF provides funding for research in our province, the ARC provides facilities and staff that work with industry to assist them in developing technology. The ARC, the Alberta Research Council, provides access to world-class resources and facilities in Alberta and a team drawn from 600 experienced scientists, researchers, and business experts. Alberta currently lends a great deal of support to research in our province through our universities and through organizations such as ARC, ASRA, AHFMR, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, and of course the Alberta ingenuity fund. Increasing the value of the Alberta ingenuity fund will give additional support to research, including water research, and development in our province.

So, Mr. Chairman, the AIF, the Alberta ingenuity fund, provides valuable funding and a valuable service to research in this province. Therefore, I support Motion 503 because it will serve to further stimulate research in our province.

Thank you.

8:40

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in support of Motion 503 because I do think it is an important addition to what should be happening for our Alberta. This is the kind of investment in Alberta's research and innovation capacity that Liberals have been calling for. You know, failing the type of surplus strategy that the Alberta Liberal Party called for in the last election, which I think would have really worked in an even much better way to develop our future Alberta economy, I think this is a good second choice. I mean, if we look at the past, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, you know, I believe had its 25th anniversary this year, and it's had a huge number of successes. It's been a great addition to the research capacity of our province. It's created many businesses. It's created economic development. It's created wealth.

I believe the Conservatives here now need to broaden their gaze and understand that over the long term it's pure scientific research that provides the foundation for the applied research that the government is willing to fund. We welcome this investment and understand that it will provide resources for both applied and pure research but caution that they need to do more to support pure research, that is driven not by immediately foreseeable commercial applications but by the imagination of our best researchers.

It seems to be something about bragging about catching up. Alberta lags behind most other provinces in research and development. This R and D spending as a percentage of provincial GDP is much behind most provinces. There must be public support for this type of research. I'll give a quote from a much quoted study from TD Economics: Special Report. It talks about research and development spending.

Research and development spending is another area of vulnerability [for the Alberta economy]. As mentioned earlier, the Corridor [from Edmonton to Calgary] is home to several excellent centres of research, most notably the Universities of Alberta and Calgary. Since 1994, University of Alberta Research Services reported that the university conducted $194 million in industry-sponsored research, $22 million in licensing royalties, and currently has 47 active spin-off companies. At University of Calgary, there have been 398 licenses negotiated, resulting in a number of highly prominent companies such as Cell-Loc Inc. and Living World Education. As well, there are a number of other groups that support and fund research, including [the already mentioned] Alberta Research Council, Edmonton Capital Region Innovation Centre, and Calgary Innovation Centre.

Still, overall spending on research and development . . . as a share of GDP in Alberta stands at roughly half the level recorded in Canada. Only 10 Alberta companies made the list of Canada's Top Corporate R&D Spenders in 2002, with nobody placing in the top 30. And, while there have been a number of successes in commercializing new research in the Corridor, a large share has been licensed abroad, leaving the lion's share of the benefits to accrue to other countries. But, levels of funding are not the only ingredient to achieving success on this front – without a high quality of management, efforts of taking new products to market will probably fall dead in their tracks.

There are many areas of R and D. You know, there's a number of sort of ways to look at how this can develop in terms of the synergies in certain areas, and the corridor is one of those areas. To quote again:

Over the past decade, a number of city-regions in North America have established research alliances to bring together R&D activities in their universities, colleges, teaching hospitals, labs and research-based companies. One notable example is Georgia Research Alliance (GRA), which was formed in Atlanta in 1990. Through the collaboration efforts, the GRA was able to reduce the labour and capital costs of research, spawn high-tech firms and lured world-leading scientists to its research institutions. Such an alliance provides a number of advantages, including lowering costs for R&D costs, and raising venture capital.

You know, these can be a huge benefit for the developing Alberta that we're seeing, but I'll just say it again: we have not had a lot of top R and D spenders in Alberta even though we have had a lot of income generators.

The ranking in 2002 of the top hundred: the highest from Alberta was NOVA Chemicals at the time and Syncrude at 39, and those were of the top 40. You know, this is something that I think the government has to look at, encouraging the private sector as well somehow to move up on its R and D investment, and that can only pay a lot of dividends for the future.

I believe that I have to speak in favour of this bill. I think it's a good and a sound idea. I think these things work, and I think this endowment can only help the future of our citizens and the children to come. That's all I have to say, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to make a few comments with respect to the motion, but before I get into the substance of the motion, I'd like to remind the Member for Edmonton-McClung that every private member has the right to bring forward a motion of their choosing. Whether it looks like it's duplicating a government bill is immaterial because that private member has the right to do anything of their own volition and their own initiative to maybe underscore a point or underscore a direction. So in that respect, the motion the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky has brought forward is one he feels very strongly about, and one that I frankly support.

So what is the distinction? There is a distinction between Bill 1, which does talk about the Alberta heritage science and engineering research fund, which we effectively know as the Alberta ingenuity fund, being increased by $500 million. The motion, while it reflects that particular commitment, talks about a timeline, which makes it a little bit more distinct from Bill 1. So I think that the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky is trying to put some urgency in his motion around the decision to top up the ingenuity fund and to let all members of the Assembly know that commitment.

We've heard some very good remarks from both sides of the House about the importance of research, the importance of innovation, and the fact that this direction is supported. It was talked about, the legacy that the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research has had in this province. Again, that was started as an endowment fund many years ago. Many of us now know and have seen the impact that that has had for our province, the amount of credibility that brings our research community, the level of expertise we have in this province, the reputation of our universities. Mr. Speaker, the Alberta ingenuity fund, if we look 20 years ahead, I am convinced will have that same kind of reputation and will continue to put Alberta brains and ability on the map.

I'd also like to point out to the members of the House that if they would look under the website www.albertaingenuity.ca, there are some very interesting things that probably aren't well known to most of us in terms of what the ingenuity fund has done and the areas that they invest in. I'm just going to pick a couple because they've got four ingenuity centres, one on carbohydrate science. Now, that one's based, actually, over here at the University of Alberta, and the lead person in that particular group is a Dr. Bundle. One of the breakthroughs that they're working on is a carbohydrate molecule which has been dubbed "starfish." Well, what does that mean? Well, it's dubbed that because of its shape. It's tailor made to neutralize the kinds of toxins that made diseases like hamburger disease and cholera so deadly. The five arms of the starfish attach to the toxins and thus render them unable to stick to healthy human cells. So that's one example of a research project that is being funded out of the Alberta ingenuity fund and that has potential commercial applicability into the future.

Another one that I would point out that is very timely in its development is the ingenuity centre on water, and this follows the water for life strategy that we introduced a number of years back that is under way. This particular centre is a partnership of the three universities – the University of Lethbridge, the University of Calgary, and University of Alberta – just to look at some of the issues surrounding the water resources we have in our province: being able to catalogue the resources we have available, what's happening to them, determining water quality and the quantity, and establishing a research base from which we can make good policy decisions.

Mr. Speaker, those are just a couple of the initiatives that the ingenuity fund has undertaken. One of the problems we had with the fund when it was initially established at the $500 million level is that it was also the time when, most of us remember, the market tanked. As a result, the ingenuity fund got off to a slow start because the amount of earnings coming from the endowment fund were not sufficient to actually establish some of these programs. But, Mr. Speaker, now that the market has recovered and now that we're starting to see some returns in the market, you're going to begin to see more and more important initiatives come out of this particular fund.

The additional $500 million that is proposed by this motion and, in fact, also proposed in Bill 1 will give this organization, this fund the opportunity to do even more long-term planning that will benefit all Albertans.

So, Mr. Speaker, I do urge all members of the Assembly to vote in favour of this motion. It underscores the commitment that we have under Bill 1. I do thank the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky for bringing it forward.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also rise this evening to speak in favour of Motion 503. I think that the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky is bringing out some very, very good points in regard to the urgency and the necessity of us investing in research development at this juncture in our history. I think that we have tremendous opportunity and a tremendous sort of physical human power to produce a long sort of storied history of research and development in this province, and the Alberta ingenuity fund has contributed to that immensely.

I, too, like the Member for Edmonton-McClung, was somewhat confused about just how similar this particular motion was to parts of Bill 1, but you know at the same time I think that the important issue here – and I'm glad that he's bringing it up – is the idea that the government should commit this money regardless of the vagaries of the markets and put the money in there with the utmost urgency. I think that a lot of projects in this province do not prosper because of a lack of sustained funding over a long period of time. So this particular endowment fund, I think, has some merit in that regard. I think it's in a way better than some parts of Bill 1, which according to the discretion of the Finance minister can be perhaps not funded properly depending on what the budget is for any particular year.

A few points that I would like to bring out in regard to research and development, particularly in science and technology and engineering in this province. You know, we've had a long history of producing R and D in this province, and one of the problems that we've seen is that we've invested quite a lot of money, Mr. Speaker, in specific projects, but when the termination of that funding happens, or when the company or the people that are producing that thing are no longer required to stay, then we lose that. Right? People leave, or the technology is sold off, or the funding dries up, and that particular project ends up leaving the province.

One of the things that I would like to see, and I think many scientists and research firms around this province would like to see as well, is that R and D money is tied to those projects and those people staying in the province of Alberta for a specified amount of time so that we are gaining the full benefit of the research and the innovation that they produce.

As well, you know, part of a prosperous scientific community is to have an infrastructure that supports science in the broadest possible sense across the province. So, Mr. Speaker, I think we must not always focus our attention on individual projects that are just standing on their own but, rather, the broader sort of support that creates a good scientific community across the province. So funding for pure science in the universities and colleges and in our schools as well, our secondary schools, is absolutely important to create a culture of science and technology that will serve us well in this next century.

So, yes, I do stand to support this motion, and I hope that it helps to strengthen some of the weaknesses that we see in Bill 1. We see the urgency and commitment of quite a significant amount of money for the next few years and the years into the future for both our children and grandchildren.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise to speak to Motion 503 this evening. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky for bringing forward this motion.

The province of Alberta has seen its fair share of good times, and we are certainly in a period of extreme prosperity. Alberta has been so successful because Albertans are not afraid to innovate. New ideas foster new technologies and new treatments, which sustain our economy and improve our quality of life.

Alberta is beginning to realize the full economic potential of the oil sands. The oil sands, one of the largest oil reserves in the world, originally were thought to be uneconomical. However, through dedication and ingenuity Alberta has been able to develop methods to make bitumen recovery economical. Alberta is known around the world as a leader in both medical and energy research, Mr. Speaker. The foresight of this government has already created a substantial research infrastructure to support innovation in the province.

The Alberta ingenuity fund, which is the subject of this motion, is currently valued at $500 million. The interest that this fund earns is enough to provide many grants. The endowment is used to support a balanced, long-term approach to science and engineering research in the province of Alberta. Increasing the amount of the endowment can only help to increase the number of grants available.

Mr. Speaker, this fund operates at arm's length from the government. This fact is extremely important as it insulates this granting body from political influence. The granting procedure is a peer review process, which ensures that only scientifically sound projects are funded. This fund is not a storehouse for government slush funds but, rather, a commitment from the government to the people of Alberta.

At its current level the fund has supported many important projects through its flagship ingenuity centres. These centres are able to provide a competitive edge to Alberta's universities as they attempt to retain top homegrown researchers and international stars. These centres create ideal training environments for allowing Alberta students to achieve excellence and reach their potential. At these centres students are exposed to world-class instructors and have access to cutting-edge technology. By creating ingenuity centres, we are creating virtual circles. The centres attract top professors, which in turn attracts top students, who because of their experiences in the presence of the centres are more likely to remain in Alberta and instruct the next generation of researchers. In short, our ingenuity centres are ensuring that research in Alberta has a healthy future, Mr. Speaker.

Four ingenuity centres have been created in the province: a centre for water, in situ energy, machine learning, and carbohydrate science. Each of these centres has made an important contribution to the lives of Albertans.

At the centre for water multidisciplinary research has been conducted, and this research has been instrumental in the formation of the government's water for life strategy, water management that's paramount to the survival of Alberta. Water is needed to keep industry working, for recreation, to grow crops, and most importantly for human consumption. Without a safe and reliable source of drinking water Alberta will not be able to grow or prosper.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2005

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education for the hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance to move Bill 30, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2005, for second reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I checked Hansard this afternoon, and it would appear as if I managed to speak for about 20 minutes on this during the committee stage, so I don't intend to bore the members with an awful lot of my rambling this evening. [interjections] I figured you might appreciate that. I do however wish to share an anecdote, as it were, and then make one comment. Then I will cede the floor to at least one other member on my side who wishes to comment.

I come from a small-business background, Mr. Speaker. I think I mentioned the other day that the fact we're not even looking at a budget yet really calls into question the entire budgeting process by this government. We're only days away from the end of the fiscal year, and we've not had one yet.

It was indicated in the House last week by the Finance minister that this is normal procedure. I know that in my business with my partners if I were to come to them at the end of our business year and tell them that I need 25 per cent of my next year's budget with no details as to why and with no explanation as to why I didn't have a budget prepared for the upcoming year, quite frankly they would probably have laughed me out of the boardroom. I don't doubt that in most instances most private corporations would not allow their company to operate in this fashion. It really concerns me, quite frankly, when it's suggested that this is normal operating practice.

I mentioned last week that the government of Saskatchewan last year for the very first time in its history went to interim supply, so I don't see that it should have to be, and I would hope that next year we'll be back in the House in early February debating the budget so that by the time we come to the end of March, we'll have completed the process, and we won't have to do this again.

The other concern that I have, Mr. Speaker, is in the preface to the document which we received last week from the Finance minister, the 2005-06 interim supply estimates. In that preface it says:

... departments of the Government of Alberta to support their operations from April 1, 2005 to June 1, 2005. Before that date, it is anticipated that spending authorization will have been provided for the full fiscal year ending March 31, 2006.

In other words, it's anticipated that by the end of May we'll have passed a budget for this coming 2005-2006 year.

My concern is that we have yet to hear from the Finance minister exactly when there will be a budget brought forward. The most recent rumour I heard the other day – and I don't know what it's worth, but I'll throw the date out anyway: I heard April 18. Now, if it comes April 18 and with my understanding of the number of days required to debate each department, we probably would get it done by the end of May, but if for some reason it's another few days delayed, we may well not have a budget passed by the end of May. My fear is that I'll be looking at another one of these documents some time in the near future, and I hope that that's not the case. I really hope that that's not the case. So, with that, Mr. Speaker, I will allow somebody else to speak to this particular motion.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise today to contribute to the discussion on interim supply not only as a Member of this Legislative Assembly or as the Official Opposition critic for two departments but as a concerned citizen. I agree with the remarks that were made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. Although I do not object to the interim supply for either of these two ministries – I recognize, of course, that they need these funds to operate and to carry out their duties – I'm just concerned that more than two weeks into March the government is making us make funding decisions in excess of $5 billion over a period of very few days, and then based on this rushed agenda, interim supply is to be implemented or slated to come into force on April 1.

I think this is because the government was distracted. They cannot add or subtract properly when other things are occupying their minds. I would have loved to see this interim supply document much sooner than the two weeks before the huge cheques for interim supply are issued. As a businessman myself, as my hon. colleague indicated, I never prepare my budget and I never prepare my forecasting sheets this late. In fact, I do up my budget early in the fall of the year prior. If my accountant and every level of government expect me to be accurate and ready way in advance, why is it not a fair expectation to have of this government? If I as a citizen with a budget that is a lot smaller than what we're discussing here have to do it way in advance, why can't this government?

I urge this Assembly to revisit this practice and urge the government to present their interim supply estimates a little earlier, and maybe, hopefully, in the future we might actually do away with interim supply altogether and discuss the budget and have it done with.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. Minister of Education on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance wish to close?

[Motion carried; Bill 30 read a second time]

Bill 27

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2005

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, thank you. It's my pleasure on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance to move Bill 27, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2005, at second reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope I don't sound too much like a broken record, but I'm going to give another little anecdote and then actually a compliment to at least one minister.

Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, I'm a small businessman, and in fact for 20 years I manufactured and distributed rubber stamps. Not a terribly exciting business, although when people ask me how I could make a living making rubber stamps, I always said: as long as there's a government, there will be a rubber stamp. So far I've never been proven wrong.

Mr. Speaker, if at the beginning of the year I do my planning and I budget to sell a stamp for $35, at the end of the year, when I look back, I will have sold those stamps for $35. Never in 25 years – and I went back and checked it – did I budget to sell stamps for $35 and come back at the end of the year and find, lo and behold, that people were paying me $55 for that same stamp that I had budgeted to sell for $35. It just never happened.

Now, we're very fortunate in this province – and I'm using oil as an example, obviously – to find ourselves in a situation where energy prices are volatile. There have been years when the budgeting process was such that the price of oil was much less than had been planned, and of course nobody wants to see that. All of us would much rather be in a situation where we have more money left over at the end of the year as opposed to not having enough.

However, when I look at this document – again, I spoke to it at length last week – 20 out of 24 departments were over budget, and it's only by the grace of God and good fortune, i.e. oil and natural gas, that we're not in a very, very serious situation here with all of the overexpenditures. If it were not for those tremendous revenues and the fact that the price of oil and natural gas have skyrocketed in the last few years, we would be $2 billion, if I remember right, over budget and probably be the laughingstock of the country as opposed to the envy of the country. So we're very, very fortunate, and I just want to remind everybody of the fact that this is not a good-news story in any way, shape, or form.

Having said that, I did mention that I wanted to give kudos to at least one department – and I actually ran out of time the other day when I was speaking to this in Committee of the Whole – the Department of Municipal Affairs. Now, this is what, in my mind, a supplementary supply document should be all about.

I'm just going to run through here quickly: $22,900,000 for the 2004 greater Edmonton area disaster recovery program, $500,000 for the 2004 Kneehill county disaster recovery program, and $700,000 for the 2004 greater Calgary area disaster recovery program, all related to the unprecedented storms and flooding that took place in those areas in July of last year, Mr. Speaker. In my mind, as I said, this is really what supplementary supply should be about: acts of God would have been totally unforeseen, no real way that anybody could have predicted that this might happen, and totally understandable. When I go out to my constituents to say, in this particular case, that there was nearly $23 million spent for flood recovery in Edmonton – and I have to say that Edmonton-Rutherford, my constituency, was one of the harder hit constituencies in Edmonton – certainly my constituents appreciate that.

That's really the end of my comments. When I look at this, that's what I would like to see a supplementary supply document refer to, things that were not planned, could not have been foreseen, and money that is spent to address those sorts of situations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, again, Mr. Speaker. This is, of course, the first time I speak to supplementary estimates, and I think that the first thing I would like to comment on is how, again, I'm surprised that the government wants us to matter of factly approve an almost $2 billion supplement to their 2004-2005 budget.

Mr. Speaker, as a layman, and if I may explain this to other laymen out there, in my humble opinion this means that our government was $2 billion overdraft. If we didn't have the fat and sizable surplus this year to hide this overdraft – and again I emphasize, like my hon. colleague indicated, that this was almost an act of God. It's not because of financial wizardry or good management skills that this government hid the $2 billion overdraft. They would have actually posted a deficit, and we would have been brought back to a provincial debt situation. So I think this is a sign of irresponsible management. Two billion dollars is a huge, huge sum of money, much higher than the GDP of some sovereign nations.

We have a government which spends taxpayers' money like it's pocket change. I would not stand here today and discuss a couple of million. We're talking $2 billion, which is a $2,000 million overdraft. Of course, I'm not talking about emergency response to wildfires or BSE research to help the farmers or the one-time election cost for the fall provincial election. These are unbudgeted amounts, and yes we can spend more than was initially allocated. These would be legitimately classified as emergencies. However, the government expects us to go through the document – and it's really a very thick document with some 98 pages – and say, "Yup, this money is needed," with little difficulty, sign off, and say: "It's all right. Go for it." I would do it if it's for a rainy day, not because we brought on the rain. Overspending by $2 billion or missing the dot by $2,000 million is not a healthy sign at all.

If I may remind people who listened to my maiden speech, I represent a constituency which is relatively well off, an average household income of more than $80,000 per year per household. So my neighbours and constituents are not counting nickels and dimes, but they're not known for throwing away money. If we as citizens are expected to be careful with our own money, why can't this government? What can I tell my constituents when they ask me about this rich and extravagant bailout? What does this government have to say to justify to the taxpayer that $2,000 million more were needed for government programs? What can I tell people on AISH or welfare in my constituency who might be suffering or are barely making ends meet and the government tells them that their relief is on the way but that they shouldn't really have their hopes up and it shouldn't be terribly much? This government claims to not want to break the bank, but again, as a layman, I think the bank is already broken.

I was not a member of this Assembly before this past November, but I'm guessing that this is not the first time huge supplementary injections like this one were retroactively introduced and approved. In the preface to the document, the 2004-2005 supplementary estimates, it says:

On November 24, 2004, a restructuring of government ministries was announced. This changed the responsibilities of some ministries, created new ministries and eliminated others. The Estimates information has been restated to reflect this new government structure.

So I read this, and the way I understand it is that this restructuring for efficiency translated into a $2 billion deficiency.

Of the two ministries that I'm Official Opposition critic for, the first one is Innovation and Science. They asked for a supplementary estimate of $38 million, and it says here:

... is requested to support participation in a co-ordinated network for prion and protein misfolding research to develop solutions related to Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy (BSE), associated diseases, and the management of specific risk material. Pursuant to section 4 of the Fiscal Responsibility Act, this response to the BSE emergency will be funded from the Sustainability Fund.

Now, having read that, of course no one would dare criticize any research initiative or government project trying to find an answer to our BSE crisis. But, really, we knew about BSE in May of 2003. So why wasn't this co-ordinated network research budgeted for a year in advance? Was that a last-minute decision?

Also, the point is whether or not this research proved beneficial. Did anything positive or useful come out of it? Thirty-eight million dollars can sure go a long way in microbiology and veterinary pathology research, and I can see the merit and potential. But, really, what do we have to show our ranchers and farmers? Tangible results for this amount? Couldn't this amount be better spent on maybe testing all animals and not just opening the U.S. border but probably opening many other markets all over the world for our beef? So I don't disagree with the research to find a cure for BSE or to alleviate that problem, but I think that this is $38 million that could have been spent elsewhere.

My second ministry, which is Government Services, spent $180,000 on registries renewal. It says here: "previously classified as Operating Expense, [and it] has been restated as Equipment/Inventory Purchases due to an audit recommendation." Again, to the layman, I find this very vague.

While any amount over budget, big or small, irritates me or causes me discomfort, it sounds like, "Yeah, maybe they needed it. It wasn't forecast, and it wasn't budgeted for, and it's not a terribly big amount." Again, all things relative. So this department is slightly better than some of the others.

I would urge the minister, though, to exercise better management practices next year so that this doesn't develop into a trend: $180,000 this year, next year it'll be $300,000, the year after it'll be $1 million, and so on, and it will just continue to escalate. Again, this is not a bad ministry relative to the other ones, but I'm looking forward to the day that maybe we will have all 24 ministries on the dot and not overdrawn.

So with that I would close my remarks and invite other people to participate in the debate. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 29(2)(a) there is a five-minute period for questions and comments, if you wish.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I too have a number of issues that I would just like to bring up in regard to these supplementary budget figures. This is my first time looking at something like this as well.

You know, what I find working backwards is a sense of surprise again in just how much extra money has to be put in. Now I realize that there are so many different contingencies that can take place in any one of these 24 ministries, but you know I would suggest that the almost $2 billion that we're over budget currently is a sign of a larger problem that we have here in our budgeting process, and this is the tendency to underestimate the revenues that are brought into this province every year as well and sometimes to a very, very large extent. So everyone in the various ministries lowballs their budgets as well, and then it's almost as if everything shifts up once we realize, in fact, that we do bring in these windfall profits from the oil and gas industry, let's say, or other sources of revenue.

My feeling, as a person who has looked at budgets for a long time, is that you're being unrealistic and sort of somewhat deceptive in the amount of money that's coming in to the province on a quarterly basis. I mean, we've seen this for so many years in this province of Alberta that people are wising up to this, of course. And they say:

oh yes, well, you know, we're not going to have so much money with oil and gas revenues. And then – boom – six months later there's this unbelievable windfall. So people are wising up to that here in this province, and I think that we saw a reflection of that in the last election where we have a much stronger opposition.

As well, I take exception to running a budget quite significantly over. You know, we take pride in our own personal budgets with our homes or with institutions or businesses to maintain a balanced budget or run something like a surplus, but it's so difficult with the numbers in this province, Mr. Speaker. There are just so many things hidden that make it difficult to know what the reality is of our financial situation here in Alberta. Certainly the situation is very good; there's no two ways about that. It comes not from clever planning but rather just the bonus windfall that we always manage to get from our energy revenues. There's certainly a better way to do this, Mr. Speaker, and I think that it would be easier for each minister, as well, to build a proper budget if he or she had an honest idea of where the money is going to be.

So just going through my own anecdotal places where I found some points of interest, I think that I can just comment on various ministries as I see fit. I was looking with some interest, for example, at Human Resources and Employment. There's a $14 million, almost $15 million, additional funding line here for "People Not Expected to Work," Mr. Speaker, which I found in itself interesting, besides the numbers, and then an extra almost $9.5 million that was already reallocated to this program, which I believe then represents a total of a $24 million increase in this area.

Mr. Speaker, this ties into something that we've been discussing in the last few days in regard to employment and employability here in this province. You know, it's interesting to see what the definition is of someone who is "Not Expected to Work." According to the ministry itself, this is a client who shows evidence through a proper and detailed assessment of their potential by a career and employment consultant that they will probably never be able to work full-time continuously in the competitive labour force, and they're assigned this not expected to work designation.

It is interesting, though, that this does not include people who receive our AISH benefits, but rather it's people who, among other things, have a lack of education and are thus considered not able to work. So I think that, again, this is perhaps a budgeting issue because a $24 million increase in expenses not accounted for is significant, but it points to a structural problem as well.

Moving over to the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation, again we've been discussing a lot about this in the last few days. The Calgary Courts Centre really stands out in the budget because of an $85.5 million change in the budget voted to capital investment. I would like to know what the nature of this change is exactly. What all does it entail? It's very vague, and I would appreciate clarification on that. I'm sure I'll get it.

There's a whole range of things that I find curious. Another one is in the Sustainable Resource Development area. The minister has allocated a million dollar fund for the mountain pine beetle infestation. Now, certainly I recognize, and most people do in the province, the imminent threat from the mountain pine beetle infestation, but my question is: where did such a beautiful round number come from? This million dollars – right? – with all the zeroes, you know, it seems rather vague and points, to me, to a lack of a specific plan to deal with it but rather just a chunk of change that might look like there is in fact a plan.

My second question is with the mountain pine beetle infestation. I would suggest, perhaps, that we not use more money for this problem and, in fact, long-term funding. This is like a sort of a slow tidal wave of devastation, as some people describe it, that occurs over a 15-year period that could literally change the face of our forestry industry and the tourism industry as well, as the mountain pine beetle destroys vast swaths of our forests here in the province.

This is sort of a skip-about view of things. Again, my main categorical criticism of this supplementary document is that (a) there is just such a vast discrepancy between budgeting from one quarter to the next and (b) why is it that we have to underestimate our supply side so much so that these budgets don't balance at an earlier date?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Does anyone wish to rise under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to assess the supplementary supply for the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development. The ministry is requesting $125 million broken into two components: $124 million for forest fires and $1 million with regard to the pine beetle.

Why can't realistic budgets be prepared? The reason I say that with the interim supply is because of poor budgeting practices. I'm going to read from some examples with regard to that as to why I do say this.

The core businesses listed under this ministry – forest, land and resource management, fish and wildlife management, rangeland management, land use disposition management, surface rights and land composition boards, Natural Resources Conservation Board, and environment statutory programs – have all had realistic budgets for the last two years with regard to being almost exact or pretty close to it. The one where we could have problems is with forest protection.

When we look at actuals with regard to budgets, we're way out to lunch on these ones. We've had budgets that have been very close with the exception, as I said, of forest protection. The budget 2002-2003 was budgeted at $302 million. The following year the budget for that ministry was lowballed at $75.6 million. We knew we were going to have a problem, but we again still budgeted low. Now we go to the next budget with regard to 2003-2004, and again it's gone up almost double the other one, $204 million. I'm not sure why it had the yo-yo effect with regard to budgeting.

Here we are tonight discussing the budget of $124 million additional dollars to fight forest fires. This is in request to almost a full budget amount for this government's $14.5 million. We're asking for an additional $124 million, going to bring that up to $138 million with regard to forest fires. I'm wondering why the urgency to have this additional requisition of $124 million now before the regular budget is to be addressed. If this government was a corporation, it's CEO should be fired for the fact that we're underestimating this on an ongoing basis.

With regard to the pine beetle, that in itself is another discussion, but I'd still like to talk about the forest fires. We're talking about April 1 we're going to be charging men and women who fight these forest fires room and board. Some of this money, $124 million, would that be used to offset? Or are we going to still go through with regard to charging the men and women the $450 room and board? These Albertans risk their lives to control the wildfires that threaten not only thousands of hectares of public forest land but, more importantly, human lives and communities, and we're going to charge these men and women room and board. I find that atrocious.

We're talking about the pine beetle. We're allocating only $1 million to fight an industry which generates $4 billion. That's less than 1 per cent of the allocated budget to fight protectionary measures for this ministry. I find that shocking. This ministry and the budget generated by it, $4 billion in research as well as spinoff industries, employs about 69,000 people here within the province of Alberta. This problem has been around for over 10 years, and it's been recognized, but we've not jumped on it. I'd say that's being reactive instead of proactive.

The federal government announced a program to commit $40 million over six years. My question would be: has this ministry in fact looked into how much money is available for this province? B.C. is faced with a similar program and similar problems, but I'm sure they're able to access that money down from the federal government. How much of this money did this ministry receive? That would be one of the other questions. What exactly is this money going to be spent on for fighting the forest fires? Is it going to be on equipment, supplies, services? I'm not sure. How long will the money contribute to enhance the abilities of the forest fire fighters as well? Why wasn't this money allocated in the previous budget?

Those are just a few questions, specifically, that I had with regard to this ministry and its lack of proper budgeting then, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Does anyone have any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I sat and listened to the new members of the House, and occasionally there was a good point to be made. I know that some of them were speaking from a layman's perspective, and some of them were speaking from a businessman's perspective to Bill 27, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2005.

I wonder if I could just answer at least one question, Mr. Speaker, which I think the second speaker on the opposition side asked. He wanted to know what to tell his constituents. Well, you can tell your constituents that the government continues to invest in their best interests and the expenditures that are listed here are all going out for central government programs that benefit not only education but seniors and children's services and health and wellness.

In the education area it will help us to provide payment to cover about 1,250 brand new teachers, which I know that they would support. We'd be spending about $12.8 million to buy brand new textbooks for children, which I'm sure they would support. We'll be reducing waiting lists and providing additional medical procedures. There's elimination of health care premiums for seniors. There's so much that's going on in this budget, Mr. Speaker. I hope that they will vote for these items because, as I recall, many of them campaigned on having some of these increases made.

So that having been said, I would hope that they will find it in their hearts to support our efforts to assist Albertans through these many valuable programs by providing these extra dollars through the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2005.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a second time]

Bill 18 Alberta Order of Excellence Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 18, the Alberta Order of Excellence Amendment Act, 2005.

This amendment changes section 7(2) of the act, increasing the maximum number of persons that can be named in a given year from five to 10. To put the proposed amendment in context, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to offer members of the Assembly a very brief overview of the order.

The act was created in 1979 to recognize Albertans who have rendered service of the greatest distinction and of singular excellence for or on behalf of the residents of Alberta. The Alberta Order of Excellence, or AOE, is the highest honour the province can bestow upon a citizen. There are currently 58 members of the order, Mr. Speaker. They come from all walks of life and represent many fields of endeavour, including agriculture, education, science and research, the arts, health care, business, law, politics, engineering, the military, and community service. Each year names are put forward through public nomination, and currently up to five of these nominations are chosen by the Alberta Order of Excellence Council for induction.

Mr. Speaker, these people who are chosen for AOE induction are selected because of their extraordinary contributions to this province. While many members have achieved the highest level of expertise and success in their chosen fields, their professional accomplishments are not the main reason for their induction in the order. AOE members are all people who place a high premium on service to others whether through their professional work, through philanthropic contributions, or through volunteer activities.

Mr. Speaker, these are people who have made a difference in the lives of their fellow Albertans. They are people who have made real and lasting contributions to the quality of life of our communities and the quality of life we all enjoy as Albertans. The contributions of AOE members can also be seen in many cases at the national and even the international levels. In short, AOE members are people whose contributions will truly stand the test of time.

As I mentioned earlier, the act currently allows up to five Albertans to be inducted each year. As successful as Alberta was when the act was created some 25 years ago, the Legislature may not have fully imagined the level of innovation and distinction Albertans would attain by the province's centennial year. Simply put, Mr. Speaker, limiting the annual inductions to a maximum of five is just not enough. It doesn't reflect the level of community service taking place across our province today or the level of commitment and dedication that characterizes so many Albertans' stories.

Moreover, work by the AOE Council to increase public awareness of the order has been successful over the past few years, and a greater number of deserving nominations are finding their way to the council every year. By raising the maximum number of inductees per year to 10, this amendment will allow the council to recognize more of those deserving nominations.

Induction into the order is more than an honour for the inductee; it's also a way for Albertans to thank outstanding citizens for their service and to ensure that their stories are passed down to future generations. This amendment will help to accomplish that goal.

I would encourage all members of the Assembly to lend their support to this bill. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 18.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to Bill 18, the Alberta Order of Excellence Amendment Act, 2005. I'm pleased to rise and speak to it.

The Alberta Order of Excellence is the highest honour the province can bestow on a citizen. It's about recognizing Albertans who have made a difference and who have served Albertans with excellence and distinction. It's presented by the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta. The chancellor of the Order of Excellence presents the new member with a medallion and personalized illuminated scroll.

At present, Mr. Speaker, five people with excellence and distinction get this award. This Alberta Order of Excellence is a great honour to any Albertan that receives it. I'm glad to support this Bill 18, that will allow 10 Albertans instead of five to be honoured, more members of the Alberta Order of Excellence from different walks of life such as science, medicine, education, agriculture, politics, law, business, engineering, and arts. There are many, many great people in this province that deserve to be honoured by this type of award. Many more members will make an impact on our economy and our society.

I think it's great that the government is increasing the amount of people that can receive this award. I commend the hon. minister for proposing this amendment act. I am pleased to support this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Oh, yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I also would like to rise to speak very briefly on this bill. I think that with some reservations I would consider supporting it as well.

Just looking through the history of recipients of the Alberta Order of Excellence award, it's just a remarkable list of individuals who have contributed so much to our province. The only reason I might suggest some reservation is that, you know, with the very highest awards that any state or government might bestow on its citizens, it's important to keep the very highest standards of criteria to receive one of these awards.

I can think back to any number of awards through military service; say, for example, the Victoria Cross. It's something that was only given out to a very, very select group of people who did something truly exceptional, in this case in a military context. So, you know, the reason that these standards are left so high for the very top awards that the state can bestow on its citizens is because you want to give them that special feeling amongst the population, and people want to recognize just the very best.

You look back through the years, and sometimes there were only one or two recipients in any given year over the last 20-some years that were given this. You know, I think that you in no way want to dishonour, say, for example, some of these individuals, like Joseph Shocter and the Pooles, Peter Lougheed, among the people who were the only recipients or perhaps one or two recipients in any given year when they won it.

So that would be my only reservation. Otherwise, I believe that it's a bill that I would consider supporting.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does anyone have any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the object of this particular bill is to increase the amount of people that can receive the Alberta Order of Excellence.

The Deputy Speaker: I beg your pardon. Is your question or comment directed to the previous speaker under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Mrs. Mather: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay.

Mrs. Mather: I'm understanding that there are no suggestions of changing the criteria or the high calibre. Is that correct?

The Deputy Speaker: Does the member wish to respond?

Mr. Eggen: Well, that's true although, you know, when you are increasing the number of people, then inherently the two things work together. Right? You have a relationship between the criteria that you put onto paper and then how many people you choose, so the overall value of each word or each descriptor that you might use to choose an individual of exceptional standing or deeds in our province inherently does change if you choose more people to fit into that category. The two have a relationship with each other.

The Deputy Speaker: Did you wish to comment further, hon. member?

Mrs. Mather: Well, I just believe that it's a great honour for Albertans to receive this award and that there are many great Albertans. I don't imagine that we will have to lower the criteria in order to extend it to more people.

Thank you.

Mr. Eggen: I am in no way, shape, or form suggesting that either. I'm just saying a qualification. I mean, we're moving 100 per cent increase. Right? So 100 per cent increase can indeed change the nature of the words and the criteria that you are using. We have to recognize that that is something that does happen.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Any other member wanting to speak on the bill?

Does the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon wish to close?

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I close the debate on this motion. I thank the previous hon. members for their support, but I would note that in the 25 years of this award we've given out 58, a little more than two per year. It would suggest that the criteria and the people that have been going through the nominees have been very cautious. This is a very coveted award, Mr. Speaker, and the fact that in our centennial year we would give the opportunity to go to 10 instead of five, I would suggest, will in no way diminish the wonderful opportunity to receive this order.

So I would again like to encourage my colleagues and all the members of this House to support second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I would call the committee to order and remind everyone that this is the informal part of the process. Members can have their jackets off or occupy a seat other than their own. However, you do have to be in your seat to be recognized by the chair.

Bill 2
Alberta Centennial Medal Act

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. At second reading of this bill I indicated to hon. members on both sides of the House that I would take the transcripts from Hansard and conveying them on to the drafters of the regulations so that the comments and questions that were brought forward at that stage of the reading of this bill could be addressed by the drafters of the regulations, and I've fulfilled that commitment. With that, I don't have any further words to add except to say thank you to the members who have spoken very passionately about this particular bill.

Thank you, sir.

Mr. R. Miller: Mr. Chairman, I just have one quick question to the minister. Under section 6, revocation of the award, it says that "the Minister may revoke any award given pursuant to this Act." I'm just wondering if he could share with us under what circumstances the minister might wish to revoke an award.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, this question was asked by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona at the second reading stage. The reason why the revocation clause is put in there is because it is a requirement by Rideau Hall's direction so that this medal may be recognized by the order of precedence as established by the Governor General. So it is a requirement. Obviously, one can think of many examples where an individual, perhaps by reason of criminal activity, is somebody that you may wish to revoke their medal. There are numerous circumstances – I think most members could probably imagine – when such a situation could arise.

Mr. R. Miller: I'd like to thank the minister for that clarification. I obviously didn't read Hansard, or else I would have seen that and perhaps your answer.

That may well be the case here as well. Under article 3, eligibility, it refers to "former long-term residents," and again I'm just wondering if you could share with us what the definition might be for "long-term" when we're talking about former residents of the province.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, I think what we're trying to contemplate is if somebody had long been a resident of the province of Alberta but was retired in the province of British Columbia, but they were well-recognized as an Albertan who contributed greatly to this province, then that's such a person that we would not want to restrict from being eligible for this medal.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a couple of questions in regard to the medallions. I guess my first question is perhaps a bit naive, but I would like to ask it anyway. I'm just wondering why we require legislation in the first place to hand out these medallions. You know, it seems as though it's a bit of a formal process for the medallions. Right?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, at the outset of my comments at second reading I did make a very clear distinction between the medallions and the centennial medal. Medallions being struck do not require legislation. Those medallions are being struck for commemorative souvenirs for all school students, for example, in the province of Alberta. That is not the subject matter of the legislation that we're looking at today.

The subject matter of the legislation that we are considering today is the Centennial Medal Act, which is restricted. A total, I believe, of 8,000 of these will be struck. The requirement for legislation is the requirement that is established so that it is recognized by Rideau Hall so that individuals may wear the medals at appropriate occasions.

[The clauses of Bill 2 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that we rise and report Bill 2.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 2.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Second Reading

Administrative Procedures Amendment Act, 2005

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise this evening to move second reading of Bill 23, the Administrative Procedures Amendment Act, 2005.

This bill is in response to two Supreme Court rulings that have made it necessary for provincial governments across Canada to specify the authority of tribunals in their jurisdiction. In October 2003 the Supreme Court released two decisions that set out a new test for determining the jurisdiction of administrative tribunals. Those two cases were Paul and Martin, one relating to aboriginal rights and the other to labour rights.

In the Paul case, which originated in British Columbia, Mr. Paul, an aboriginal person, cut down two red cedar trees to construct a deck for his home. The province of B.C. charged him with offences under their Forest Act for cutting down the trees without authorization. Mr. Paul appealed his regulatory convictions to the Forest Appeals Commission, the B.C. tribunal set up to regulate the use of forest products. At his hearing Mr. Paul argued that he had an aboriginal right under section 35 of the Constitution of Canada to cut down those trees. The question in that case was whether the tribunal had any jurisdiction to consider the constitutional matters.

Mr. Speaker, regulatory tribunals such as the Forest Appeals Commission in B.C. were set up by the province to streamline regulatory dispositions and hear matters quickly so that resource development can proceed in a timely fashion. An inquiry into whether Mr. Paul had an aboriginal right to cut down trees was a significant threat to the entire purpose for which tribunals are created. Aboriginal claims are complex and very involved, often requiring reams of historical evidence and experts and elders to testify.

It was not clear that the Forest Appeals Commission had any capacity to handle such an important but complex and lengthy inquiry. Without jurisdiction the issue would be litigated and resolved in the courts. The Supreme Court concluded that the Forest Appeals Commission had the necessary jurisdiction to determine aboriginal rights because of the way the enabling statute was drafted.

Mr. Speaker, the second case, the Martin case, was decided the very same day as the Paul case. While the Paul case considered aboriginal constitutional law matters, Martin concerned the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and whether the Workers' Compensation Appeals Tribunal had the jurisdiction to decide whether the Workers' Compensation Act offended the Charter.

The case concerned an argument before the Workers' Compensation Appeals Tribunal of Nova Scotia that provisions excluding certain injuries from the workers' compensation system violated section 15 of the Charter. Based on the wording of that legislation, the Supreme Court concluded that the tribunal had the jurisdiction to determine the constitutional law issue.

Mr. Speaker, prior to the Supreme Court's decisions in these cases the law was that when deciding whether a tribunal had jurisdiction over complex questions of constitutional law, it had to be determined whether the Legislature or Parliament intended to confer jurisdiction on the particular tribunal. In most cases the statute creating the tribunal was silent and did not expressly give the jurisdiction to the board. The statutory scheme as a whole in the capacity of the particular tribunal had to be looked at to discover whether or not the Legislature or Parliament intended to confer such jurisdiction. The exercise was not a very clear one.

The Supreme Court turned the test on its head by saying that if a Legislature gave the tribunal the right to determine questions of law, there was an automatic presumption that the tribunal had jurisdiction over all constitutional matters; that is, without an express withdrawal or constitutional jurisdiction by the Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 23 is designed to clarify which Alberta tribunals and boards have the jurisdiction to determine which constitutional questions. Constitutional questions generally fall into three broad categories: Charter of Rights and Freedoms, existing aboriginal and treaty rights, and federal and provincial division of powers. There are many other constitutional questions, but these three are the most common.

In the fall of last year, Mr. Speaker, Alberta Justice put a team together to go out and discuss the contents of Bill 23 with most of the major boards and tribunals in Alberta. Input from the various boards was solicited and obtained as the bill was drafted. The boards who met with our officials were very supportive of this legislation and were happy to have the question of constitutional jurisdiction clarified by the Legislature.

Our officials had discussions and meetings with officials from the Labour Relations Board, the Securities Commission, the Energy and Utilities Board, the Natural Resources Conservation Board, the Workers' Compensation Board and appeals tribunal, the Human Rights Commission, the Environmental Appeal Board, the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, the Law Society of Alberta, the Citizens Appeal Panel under the Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Act, the Occupational Health and Safety Council, and the law enforcement board. Mr. Speaker, all of the boards contacted by our team supported the legislation, especially the provisions to allow boards that have jurisdiction an opportunity to refer constitutional questions to the court and the provisions that provide a role for the Attorney General in the determination of constitutional issues for tribunals.

In addition to the boards I mentioned, there were a great number of other statutory offices and tribunals that were identified by Alberta's team, including the agricultural services boards, the Irrigation Council, the livestock diseases panel, and the Seniors Advisory Council, to name but a few. Our team did not meet with every board because it was very clear upon discussing the matter with the department overseeing them that these boards simply did not have the capacity or need to determine issues of constitutional law. These types of issues arise very infrequently, and the courts are simply better equipped to resolve them. However, the new test by the Supreme Court could mean that many of these boards that lack the capacity or need to determine questions of constitutional law now have that jurisdiction.

Something has to be done to clarify the will of the Legislature, and Bill 23, Mr. Speaker, provides that. The amendment specifies that as a general rule no board has the jurisdiction to determine questions of constitutional law unless jurisdiction is given by regulation. A regulation will be finalized in the coming months listing the various boards that need constitutional jurisdiction and what type of constitutional jurisdiction is required.

Mr. Speaker, during the fall, the major boards were also asked by our team to indicate and itemize the type and kind of jurisdiction required by them to discharge their statutory functions. Our team used the following criteria to determine whether a board required this type of jurisdiction. Do constitutional issues arise with some frequency before the tribunal? Does the tribunal need to decide these questions in order to discharge its statutory functions? Does the tribunal have the necessary expertise to decide these questions? Are there other avenues of redress, such as court, and are these avenues a preferable means for a litigant to obtain constitutional relief?

While work is still proceeding to determine what boards will get what type of jurisdiction, many boards have demonstrated the clear need and capacity to determine constitutional issues; for example, the Energy and Utilities Board and the Labour Relations Board routinely are asked to consider constitutional issues and have a demonstrated capacity in handling them. The Workers' Compensation Board and appeal tribunal did not wish to have jurisdiction over Charter and aboriginal law issues, as these issues simply did not arise very often, and they felt they would be better handled by the courts. However, they demonstrated a need to have jurisdiction over constitutional division of powers, as they have to determine when their legislation applies as opposed to federal legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation also provides a mechanism for boards to refer questions of constitutional law to court. This will allow tribunals that have jurisdiction over routine constitutional law matters to refer complicated matters to the courts for decision.

One other provision of the bill requires a person who wishes to raise a question of constitutional law before a board to give the Attorney General 14 days' notice so that the Attorney General has the right to participate in the determination of any matter of constitutional rights. This provision was significant to many of the boards our officials met with because, clearly, Alberta boards want the assistance of the Attorney General and its council in determining issues of constitutional law. The requirement to give 14 days' notice means that the determination of these important issues will not be made hastily and will ensure that they are determined with full knowledge and participation, in appropriate cases, by the Attorney General and council.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the new legislation is expected to streamline the regulatory process and help boards get on with the business the Legislature entrusted to them. It will clarify the intention of the Legislature, thereby reducing the number of court challenges brought by applications over whether certain boards do or do not have jurisdiction to determine constitutional law matters. It will allow boards, such as the Energy and Utilities Board, to decide constitutional questions when appropriate, but it will allow the very same board to refer issues that it believes may be beyond its capacity to the court for determination. This will provide flexibility so that the board can conclude its statutory business subject to what the court has to say on the constitutional issue.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all members of the Legislature to support Bill 23 in clarifying the roles and responsibilities of our boards and tribunals, and at this time I wish to adjourn debate on this bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this evening to move second reading of Bill 25, the Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2005, and to bring to the attention of the House some aspects of this bill.

Most importantly, Mr. Speaker, the bill amends the Provincial Court Act to allow provincial court judges to retire and sit on a part-time basis. Just to clarify this matter, these amendments allow retired provincial court judges to be appointed to sit full-time for six months, or half of the year. This can be either six consecutive months or two terms of three months each.

Mr. Speaker, we've worked with the provincial court to develop a made-in-Alberta solution that improves our justice system by meeting the needs of Albertans and the judiciary. Judges who want to provide a guaranteed amount of judicial service after retirement will be attracted to this option. As a result, highly experienced and competent judges will continue serving Albertans on a part-time basis after retirement. Further, the government will obtain a financial benefit in that it no longer has to contribute to the part-time judge's pension plan. As of April 1, 2005, the government contributions to a provincial court judge's pension will be approximately $63,000. These kinds of innovative solutions in delivering court services demonstrate how Alberta Justice and the provincial court are working together to make our justice system more cost-effective.

Mr. Speaker, to be eligible for part-time service, a judge must be at least 60 years of age with a minimum of 10 years of service or age 70 or older. Alberta currently has 112 full-time provincial court judges. In 2005 there will be 40 judges who will be eligible for part-time service; 32 of these judges will be under the age of 70. Judges wishing to sit part-time will be required to notify the Chief Judge of their intention prior to their retirement. The legislation ensures that all part-time appointments will be subject to the Chief Judge's approval. The Chief Judge must be satisfied that the appointment will enhance the efficient and effective administration of the provincial court.

Mr. Speaker, judges 70 years of age or older must meet an additional criteria established by the Chief Judge and approved by the Judicial Council. This additional criteria involves providing a medical certificate establishing that the judge's health will not be an issue in his or her ability to provide continued judicial service. This additional criteria is also currently applied to judges 70 years of age or older who wish to continue sitting on a full-time basis.

Mr. Speaker, the bill also lays out the process for part-time appointments. When the Chief Judge is satisfied that allowing a judge to sit on a part-time basis will enhance the efficient and effective administration of the court, he will request the Lieutenant Governor in Council to appoint the judge a part-time judge. The Lieutenant Governor in Council will then formally appoint the judge as a part-time judge by order in council. The term of a part-time appointment will commence on the judge's birthday. The term of a judge under the age of 70 will expire on his or her 70th birthday. The term of a judge 70 years of age or older will be for one year with possible renewals for further one-year terms. No judge can sit on a part-time basis after age 75.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to compensation part-time judges will receive their pension and a salary of up to 50 per cent of a full-time judge's annual salary. A part-time judge's total annual remuneration is capped at 100 per cent of a full-time judge's annual salary. By virtue of the Provincial Court Act part-time judges will also be restricted from engaging in any other business, profession, trade, or occupation.

Mr. Speaker, we have an understanding with the provincial court as to how part-time judicial service will operate. Some of these operational matters will be dealt with in the regulations; for instance, part-time judges will not be permitted to hold administrative offices such as the office of Chief Judge or Assistant Chief Judge. Judges who currently hold an administrative office and who meet the part-time eligibility criteria will have the option to sit part-time available to them; however, they cannot keep their status as an administrative judge once they begin sitting on a part-time basis.

If a part-time judge's pension is worth more than 50 per cent of a full-time judge's salary, the part-time judge's salary will be reduced, but he or she will still be required to sit full-time for six months of the year.

Part-time judges under 70 years of age will be entitled to participate in the same group benefit plans available to full-time judges under 70 years of age. Part-time judges 70 years of age or older will be entitled to participate in the same group benefit plans offered to full-time judges 70 years of age or older.

Part-time judges will be entitled to one-half the annual professional allowance and one-half the annual vacation benefit of full-time judges. Part-time judges will not be given a personal office, nor their own parking space. They will not have their own judicial assistant or any other staff.

Mr. Speaker, the remuneration of part-time judges will be subject to the review of the next Judicial Compensation Commission, expected to convene in 2006.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will also make a consequential amendment to the Judicature Act. The amendment will allow a judge to appeal to the Judicial Council if he or she disagrees with a decision made by the Chief Judge regarding their request to be appointed a part-time judge. The Judicial Council is composed of the chiefs of the Court of Appeal, the Court of Queen's Bench, and the provincial court or their designates, the president of the Law Society of Alberta or his designate, and two other persons appointed by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Speaker, other provinces such as Ontario and Nova Scotia allow retired provincial court judges to sit on a per diem basis. British Columbia has legislation allowing retired provincial court judges to sit full-time for up to six months of the year.

As I indicated earlier, Mr. Speaker, we have worked with the provincial court to develop this made-in-Alberta solution to improve our justice system by meeting the needs of Albertans and the judiciary. By these amendments we are ensuring the retention of highly experienced and competent judges for our justice system while at the same time providing a cost-effective solution for government in meeting the needs of our courts. I look forward to the support from other members in the Legislature on this amendment.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members today three visitors from the North Red Deer River Water Services Commission. They are seated in the Speaker's gallery. First of all, a lady that needs no introduction here, I think, is Mrs. Judy Gordon, chairman of the water commission, mayor of the town of Lacombe, and former MLA, of course, for the Lacombe-Stettler constituency. Next to her is Mr. Larry Henkelman, mayor of the town of Ponoka and also a member of the water commission, and Mr. John VanDoesburg, the chief administrator of the water commission. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this House four representatives from the Council of Alberta University Students, a couple of whom were here and introduced yesterday. They're back in the House again today, demonstrating, I think, with a couple of others their ongoing commitment to and interest in an issue that both sides of this House have identified as a top priority for us, postsecondary education. If you would please stand as I call your names: Mike Bosch, vice-president external of the University of Calgary Students' Union; Bryan West, president of the University of Calgary Students' Union; Jason Rumer, vice-president academic of the University of Lethbridge Students' Union; and Duncan Wojtaszek, executive director of the Council of Alberta University Students. Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly an adult ESL class, LINC 4, from Metro Continuing Education. I believe that they're sitting in the public gallery. These students are very high-level ESL, and they have been studying the research on cabinet ministers' responsibilities, so I'm sure they'll be looking forward to question period with great anticipation. They are accompanied today by their instructor, Mr. Fred Sherbourne, and I would ask if they are in the public gallery to please rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Jim Graves. near Rimbey. At one point, Mr. Hansen and his brother Jim ran 5,000 head of cattle, employed over 20 workers, owned 16 quarters of land and rented out 50 more, and owned $1.5 million in farm equipment. At present they stand at zero on all the above accounts. I would also like to introduce Dave King, who is also a farmer from the Rimbey area. I would ask Mr. King and Mr. Hansen to stand and be acknowledged by the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Mr. Joe Anglin. The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour and a privilege for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly this afternoon a lady who is not only the vice-president for the Edmonton local of the Alberta Teachers' Association but also an educator at Strathcona high school, and in fact she taught my son. As well, I'd just like to throw in there that Strathcona high school is my high school, so we had an awful lot in common when we shared lunch together today. I would ask Ms Sherry Robbins to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Again I would like to introduce the guest I missed. There's a lesson in this for us. When you're in doubt, go with visitors' services. They're never wrong on names. Would Linda Bart please stand and receive the very warm welcome of this House. Sorry, Linda.

head:

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Enron Activities in Alberta

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to be weak and ineffective in reaction to the Enron scandal in Alberta. Court evidence from Washington state, where they take these things seriously, reveals a conversation between Enron and TransAlta power traders from January 2001 about setting up a, quote, marriage of convenience, end quote, to take advantage of the Alberta market. The conversation actually details how such manipulation between two companies could work. My question is to the Minister of Energy. What did the government do to prevent such marriages of convenience, in other words collusion, between Enron and TransAlta?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to first state that we do take these issues very seriously, and the market surveillance administrator is working very aggressively and actively on behalf of Albertans to see that they are protected. So, first off, the system is working and designed to do exactly that. Investigations did happen back in 1999 of some of these instances specifically mentioned. As to the other transcripts that have come forward, it was the market surveillance administrator that specifically requested those transcripts, has looked into them, and has also forwarded them to the federal Competition Bureau.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that in September 2003 the Alberta Electric System Operator raised concerns that a plan like that detailed in the Enron/TransAlta conversation had actually been implemented, why did this government ignore evidence that companies were colluding to set power prices in Alberta? Why didn't they do something?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I think it's very important to note that fortunately in this country we do work under the presumption of innocence until we have evidence with the appropriate bodies to judge the merits of that information, and that's exactly what is happening today.

Thank you.

Dr. Taft: There are thousands of pages of evidence, and he will not act.

Has this government or any of its agencies ever investigated the role of TransAlta in potential manipulation of Alberta's electricity market, and if so will it make that information public?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, the market surveillance administrator acts on behalf of Albertans, watches all of the transactions every day. It certainly manages those issues. They have also done their preliminary review of these transcripts. From their information that's why they have sent it forward to the Competition Bureau. That's with respect of Enron. But with respect to TransAlta they have also investigated and looked at transcripts that refer to all of these things.

One thing in particular that should be said: it is important that people with the right expertise knowing how to judge these transcripts and in what context they are made do their appropriate assessment of that information, and that's what they have been doing.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday a secret communications strategy from Suncor was leaked. This document states that this oil sands firm knows Albertan and Canadian tradespeople are available and will be in the future. Its stated reason for temporary foreign workers is to stock an employer-dominated convenience union to get workers for a particular contractor. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: given this latest proof that temporary foreign workers for the Alberta oil sands are indeed replacement workers, why is this government allowing this to continue?

Mr. Cardinal: The process is not to replace Alberta workers here in Alberta. To start with, you know, we shouldn't look at the whole process of the Alberta economy in a negative way. We have one of the best diversified economies in North America, in the oil and gas industry, agriculture, forestry, tourism, science and technology. Now we're moving into value adding. Last year alone, 2004, Mr. Speaker, 40,000 jobs were created by Albertans. That's 31,700 new jobs, and it does create some challenges.

The Speaker: The hon. member can now proceed.

Mr. Backs: Second question to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that the leaked communication plan from Suncor states that foreign workers, quote, are expected to cost more than Canadian workers in the long run, end quote, exactly how much more will passing over qualified Albertans for foreign workers cost this province?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, I think the member basically answered his own question, but I may want to add some more. If there is a leaked document, I wouldn't mind if the member would pass a copy on to me because I haven't seen any leaked document.

Again, I'd just like to stress the fact that our policy here in Alberta is to hire local Albertans first, then Albertans, then aboriginal people, then persons with development disabilities, then Canadians. When that is exhausted by the employers out there, they go through this process, which is very, very complicated and costly. So this definitely – it's not a priority for industries here in Alberta to go find workers elsewhere.

Mr. Backs: Mr. Speaker, another question to the same minister. That process was not done in this case. Given that the temporary foreign worker agreement with the feds says that the Alberta building trades must be consulted before permits are issued, I ask the minister simply: why were the proper procedures ignored, and why was this permit issued without them?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, of course, it's a federal issue, but the agreement the member is talking about I believe is under Advanced Education, so the Minister of Advanced Education may want to answer.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Postsecondary Education Costs

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, this government is legendary for its poorly conceived privatization schemes, from electricity to the ever-mysterious health care reforms. The ideological urge doesn't stop there, though, because there has also been a conscious decision over and against the expressed interests of Albertans to privatize part of the province's debt right onto the backs of students and their parents. My question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. Will he commit to providing real tuition relief to students by ensuring that institutions don't impose two years' worth of fee increases after the token one-year tuition rebate is over?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, what we've committed to and what we've committed to all students and to all Albertans is that we'll do an affordability review, which means that we will look closely at all the costs of attending postsecondary education affordable to the students, looking at all of the costs to students attending postsecondary education, determine what balance of those costs ought to be appropriately shared by the student and their family as opposed to society, and then how we make sure that every student can afford the cost of education. That's the affordability review we're engaged in. When we're completed that review, we will have a new tuition policy proposed and, broader than that, a way forward for every student in Alberta to make sure that they can afford a postsecondary education.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: now that this government is free of its debt, will the minister commit to lowering the current debt thresholds for the Alberta student loan relief program?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member would know, I believe, that very few students in Alberta actually carry a debt load from Alberta; they carry a student debt load from their federal student loans. In Alberta most student loans are totally remitted to those students, so the money that this province puts in is very much taken up in remission to students. Most of the debt that students carry is a federal student loan debt. The other thing that the hon. member would know is that Alberta students have the lowest debt load in the country.

Mr. Taylor: I'll take that as a no.

To the same minister: why hasn't this government increased student loan living allowances from its current sub-AISH level of $730 a month, when the cheapest residence at the U of A costs $622 a month? Could the minister get by on 27 bucks a week?

Mr. Hancock: When I was a student, I probably did exactly that because I was going to school as many students do, living in a student environment and working in a student environment. But times have changed, so we must every year take a look at the living allowances, the cost-of-living allowances, the costs of going to school and adjust appropriately for that. We committed to doing that review and making sure that going to university, going to college, taking a postsecondary education at any level is affordable to students.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, earlier today the NDP opposition released information showing an average of 6.1 per cent unemployment in Alberta's construction trades. According to StatsCan labour force data, since January 2004 monthly unemployment in the construction area has never dropped below 4 per cent and has been as high as 9.4 per cent. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Given the thousands of qualified Alberta tradespeople ready and available to work on oil sands projects, why is the government facilitating the entry of 680 temporary foreign workers to take away jobs that should be going to Albertans first, including aboriginal people and immigrants?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, again I'd like just to clarify that the policy that we have here in Alberta, of course, is to hire Albertans first, then aboriginal people, local people, persons with developmental disabilities, Canadians. In relation specifically to that question, if there are thousands of tradespeople out there and there are thousands of jobs, surely between the organizations out there they can match the people.

We try very hard in our own department, Mr. Speaker, and there are other departments that are also involved in that. Under Human Resources and Employment we spent $280 million to start with in assisting in training people. We have 26 offices, some colocated with the federal government, that provide all forms of employment services, including matching people with employers, providing the supports that are required, resumé writing, posting jobs. I mean, we do almost everything in those offices.

Mr. Mason: Given the smoke, Mr. Speaker, all I can do is repeat the question. Given the fact that in Alberta's construction trades there is 6 per cent unemployment, why is the government bringing in 680 temporary foreign workers?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, there must be something wrong with our system. If there are thousands of jobs available for Albertans and there are thousands of tradespeople that are looking for the jobs, why are they not connected? Like I say, we spent close to $300 million to do some of the work at the provincial level, but surely there are private employers and the unions and other people that are looking for work that should be able to find the jobs that are out there.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the minister is just explaining why he's not doing his own job.

In facilitating the entry of these temporary foreign workers, why is the government putting the interests of big oil and the preferred labour organization CLAC ahead of the best interests of hard-working Alberta trades union people facing continued unemployment?

Mr. Cardinal: Of course, Mr. Speaker, we wouldn't do that here in Alberta. Again, when you talk about the strong economy here in Alberta, all of us should be proud that we have a diversified, strong economy and jobs for everyone.

Now, if for some reason we cannot match the jobs that are available and the tradespeople that are looking for work, then we'd better look at our process to see if there is a gap because the actual approval of the foreign workers is complicated and costly. Employers would not prefer to use that process because it is very, very costly and complicated, and the federal government approves that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Airport Rental Costs

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As part of the transfer of airports the federal government leases 26 national airport system facilities to nonprofit airport authorities, which consists of two major airports in Alberta. The federal Liberal government requires the authority to pay a substantial rent which is also going to be increased dramatically, and this is despite no longer being responsible for the running, maintaining, or funding of these facilities. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. What is the minister doing to address the concerns of airports regarding these significant rent payments?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is an incredibly important question. When the federal government passed on the airports to the airport authorities, the amount of infrastructure that was passed on was roughly $1.6 billion. Since that time the airport authorities have paid over $2 billion in rent, and the federal government is indeed increasing the rent to make these not-for-profit airport authorities pay even more money. Ultimately this system goes right through to the air traveller, and these costs are absorbed by the air traveller. We have spent a lot of time in sending letters to the federal Minister of Transport, and I will continue to lobby on behalf of the airports.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Has his department worked with other jurisdictions to confront the federal Liberal government on the airport rent issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we have. The council of ministers of transportation, Canada, have lobbied the federal government. This is not just an Alberta issue. This is an issue right across Canada. To put it in perspective, the Edmonton airport will go from $4.3 million a year in rent to $20 million a year this year. The Calgary Airport Authority will go from $25 million a year to $50 million a year. You and I as airport travellers are going to be the ones that bear the cost of this increase in rent.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That brings forward my second supplemental. My question again to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: in addition to the freezing and reducing of rent levels, what else is the minister going to try to do to ensure affordable air travel for Albertans?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I think we have to get to the fundamentals of this. The fundamentals are quite simply that the not-for-profit airport authorities were turned over with a value of $1.6 billion, as I already stated. They have now paid over $2 billion back to the federal government. I believe that their share of taxation is now done, complete, kaput. Turn over the airports to the airport authorities without rent so that they can run them so that they can pass on the savings to the travelling public. That's the only way that this is going to get better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Automobile Insurance Rates

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta auto insurance rates are still high, and they're still frozen. To the Minister of Finance: where are the auto insurance rollbacks?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in the House previously, we have had a discussion with the insurers. There are some 72 companies that insure in this province. I expect to hear in the next day or two as to the final decision on insurance rates in the province, so perhaps tomorrow. If not tomorrow, certainly the next day.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the last rollbacks averaged less than $5, how much are they going to be this time?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have an Automobile Insurance Rate Board, and that rate board is certainly charged with ensuring that insurance rates for the compulsory insurance that we have to carry on our automobiles in this province are reasonable.

I find it interesting that a reduction of $5 is somewhat scoffed at whereas if it were an increase of that, it would be of gigantic proportions. However, Mr. Speaker, a reduction did occur, and all of the people that I talked to that received a reduction, either by a $5 cheque or by a reduction in their renewal or off their policy, were actually quite appreciative of the fact that the insurance reforms in this province worked.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why doesn't this government just do the right thing and protect consumers by significantly reducing premiums immediately?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, as I indicated to the hon. member, I expect that in the next day or two at the latest you will know what the insurance industry in this province is going to do. We do have a rate board, and it is a compulsory review, actually, by October 1. However, as I indicated earlier, because of the profits that were shown in the industry, I wrote immediately to the rate board and asked them for a recommendation. They responded. We reviewed it. I discussed this with the insurance industry, and we will have a response this week.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Financial Assistance for Youths

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some of my constituents have expressed concern about a group of young Albertans who appear to be falling through the cracks. These are young people aged 16 to 19 years who require financial assistance so that they can complete their high school education. I'm told that these teenagers are required to leave school in order to be eligible for funding so that they can go to school. My question is for the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Can you clarify if 16 to 19 year olds are required to drop out of school for one year so that they can receive financial assistance to attend school?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to mention that financial assistance is available to eligible youth while they are attending the regular school system. It was discovered under our regulations that some 16 to 19 year olds who had previously been supported to attend school were no longer eligible, but very quickly we addressed that issue. Now youth are considered for support if they are attending the regular school system and if there is a family breakdown that results in the youth having to live independently or they are a single parent or they are living independently with a partner over 18.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister. As you mentioned, your department helps youth live independently. Is the government using taxpayers' dollars to help kids move out of their family homes?

Mr. Cardinal: No, Mr. Speaker. That is not so. The government has never funded youth, in fact, to move out of their family homes. Families, as you know, have the primary responsibility for the caring of their children. We are committed to supporting families by providing a number of services, actually, that assist Albertans here, some through Children's Services of course.

Mrs. Jablonski: Then to the same minister: is this funding available to youth who wish to take skills training?

Mr. Cardinal: Yes, Mr. Speaker, students are eligible for skills training. Persons have to be 18 or older of course.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Hydropower Purchase Arrangements

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Here in Alberta the EUB concluded on April 16, 2002, that TransAlta's hydro offer pricing strategy caused undue increases in the Power Pool price in certain hours of 2000 to the ultimate detriment of customers. The board ordered TransAlta to make a compensation payment of $3.7 million within two weeks. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Why were hydrogenerating units such as Bighorn and Brazeau, which are owned by TransAlta, excluded from the original power purchase arrangement auctions?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I don't have all the specifics that are related to that. I'll be happy to look into that and advise him accordingly.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: why are actual water rental and associated charges paid by TransAlta regarding the matter also determined by TransAlta?

Mr. Melchin: Once again we're going back to specific incidents that happened a couple years ago. I'd be happy to look into it and advise him.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: why are so many terms of the hydropower purchase arrangements confidential and, therefore, withheld from the public, who are the owners of the water, the resource that's used to generate the electricity?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many documents are held confidentially in respect of protecting businesses and their confidential interests.

With respect to that specific one, we previously answered the question. These are very specific, isolated incidents that we'd be happy to follow up and advise on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Workplace Safety

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency of Calgary-Fort has many small businesses and shops that employ many of my constituents. Safety at work is their concern. Recently two Calgary gas stations were robbed at knifepoint, and an employee who was working alone was stabbed. Given that the working alone regulation was passed some years ago in response to the tragic murder of Tara Ann MacDonald, a young woman working at a fast-food restaurant, and in light of this recent incident, my question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Is the minister considering any changes to the regulation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is a very good question. Incidents like these are terrible incidents to have happen, but they are the result of a crime, and there's no evidence to show that if you had more than one person working, they'd be different. However, I am prepared to review the regulations, and if I feel that changes need to be made, of course I will be taking them through the process. Just for interest, no province prohibits working alone here in Canada.

Mr. Cao: My next question is to the same minister. What steps has the minister taken to ensure that employers are aware of the regulation that protects hard-working constituents?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, we do try very hard. Of course, through some of our offices we've distributed over 140,000 copies of a best practices guide called Working Alone Safely.

Mr. Cao: My last question is to the same minister. What is being done to make sure that employers are meeting their obligations for the safety of the employees?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Again that's a very good question. It's not self-regulated. We do have occupational health and safety officers that can go out and inspect any work site without advanced announcement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Construction Projects in University Heights

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. University Heights residents received very little consultation when the Children's hospital, the bone and joint institute, and the research centre were shoehorned into their community. With the planned widening of 16th Avenue both their patience and their community's development have reached the saturation point. My question is to the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Will the minister briefly outline the process his department employs to hear, evaluate, and incorporate affected stakeholders' concerns?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Any time there is a project, whether it be in the city of Calgary or whether it be elsewhere in the province, there is a strict procedure that is followed in order to ensure that the projects have as little community impact as possible. This one was followed with respect to the project that the hon. member is talking about, and indeed there were some residents of the community that were not entirely happy. However, it is an extremely, extremely important project, and we're doing everything that we can to ensure that the issues with the community are minimal.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. To the same minister: if after this initial consultation citizens still have objections, what recourse do they have from this government?

Dr. Oberg: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, what we attempt to do is to hear the concerns of all the affected people, and we tend to act on them. I'll give an example. In one particular project with the Children's hospital there are approximately 400 trees that have to be uprooted and moved. One hundred and sixty-three of those trees are being moved, and we're actually in the process of planting more trees than the 400 that were originally there. That particular roadway is extremely important because it provides a direct access between the Foothills medical centre and the new Alberta Children's hospital over 16th Avenue, so the access for doctors, the access for medical personnel is extremely important. What we've attempted to do is deal with the issues that face the communities and attempt to come to a satisfactory conclusion.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the same minister: will University Heights residents receive compensation from this government for their devalued property and lost community reserve land?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I would be very, very surprised if University Heights people see their property values go down. There's a lot of development that is going on in there, and obviously the development in Calgary is at an extremely high rate right now. Again, it is a necessary part of development in Calgary and in every community where roads are put in. With roads there are people that are going to be inconvenienced. There are people that are not necessarily going to like what is happening. However, my department and certainly the city in this case, as well, go to whatever extent needed to ensure that those complaints are kept to a minimum, and we will continue to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Climate Change

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Trying to figure out where this government stands these days is somewhat like herding cats. Not a week goes by that we don't see MLAs going off in one direction policywise and the Premier in another. The latest instance is on the climate change file. Last week I met with the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers and with Suncor, who said to me that above all they want certainty, and that's precisely not what they're getting from either Ottawa nor the Alberta government. My question is to the Minister of Environment. When is this government going to set firm targets for large industrial emitters to stabilize and reduce their greenhouse gas emissions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First and foremost, let me correct the hon. member. In terms of what Alberta is doing, it is exactly that. We're the only province in Canada that has legislation in place approved by the Members of this Legislative Assembly. That does provide certainty in achieving the objectives that the hon. member is talking about.

Mr. Eggen: Given that this government's Kyoto plan is based on the discredited concept of reducing emission intensity, why won't the minister admit that this so-called climate change plan he describes will in fact cause a 40 per cent increase in emissions here in this province?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, the province of Alberta is the only province in Canada that has an agency referred to as Climate Change Central. Tomorrow myself and the Minister of Energy will be in Ottawa meeting with my counterpart, the Minister of the Environment, Stéphane Dion, as well as Minister Efford in terms of trying to mitigate the uncertainty that he is making reference to in protecting the environment that we all cherish in this province.

Mr. Eggen: If this government really wants to fight climate change, why won't it implement the NDP plan to help Alberta families retrofit their homes through interest-free loans that are repaid from energy savings on utility bills?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, the province of Alberta is again the only province in Canada that has Municipal Energy First through the Ministry of Municipal Affairs on exactly the point of energy efficiency. In fact, if you want to get your furnace retrofitted to be more energy efficient, the province of Alberta through Climate Change Central offers a rebate up to $300 per furnace.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Payday Loans

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The payday loans industry has seen rapid growth in the last few years. From my constituents and from my involvement in the AISH review I have been hearing about serious problems with some of these companies regarding their interest rates and collection practices. My question is for the Minister of Government Services. What is Alberta doing to protect Alberta consumers?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, currently in Alberta we don't have any specific regulations that apply just to the payday loan industry. However, they are subject to the Fair Trading Act, and of course under that act they must reveal what their costs of credit are, how much they're charging for it, and also their service charges. As you know, there are amendments before the House in Bill 6 dealing with the Fair Trading Act. Under that act it will be against the law for a payday loan company to actually seize a paycheque in order to secure a loan.

We are currently working with the federal/provincial governments to come up with an across-the-country standard and probably some legislation because, quite frankly, this industry is important, and we know, having met with many of them, that they would like to see regulations that would govern the industry across Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. I understand that consumer advocates are requesting that this government limit the interest rates these payday loan companies can charge. Are you planning to do that?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, the interest rate that anyone can charge is a federal regulation, so we cannot unilaterally control those prices. However, we are working, as I said earlier, across the country to try to establish something with the federal government that will deal with all of these issues.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. When can we expect to hear back from that committee?

Mr. Lund: Well, we're hoping that by midsummer we will have reached some kind of understanding and agreement. We will be meeting face to face in June.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

CT Scans

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, almost three years ago when two private clinics began offering preventative CT scans, the Alberta Liberal opposition raised serious concerns regarding the effectiveness and safety of those scans. Since that time, the issue of safety has continued to be raised about these CT scans, including a recent article in the peer-reviewed journal Radiology, which found that full-body CT scans can lead to increased cancer mortality risks. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What restrictions has the Department of Health and Wellness placed on these private clinics offering private CT scans?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with the article that has been cited by the hon. member opposite. I should assure you, however, that when there is work done with private clinics – for example, the work that was done on the bone and joint allocation last year with the Calgary health authority – there is a very detailed and thorough review of the capacity of any clinic to engage in any kind of performed duties. I'm very satisfied that proper protocols are in place when such an agreement is made. In fact, I just reviewed patient safety and progress with those types of agreements yesterday, and I'd be pleased to address any concerns that are reported by the hon. member opposite.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you. To the same minister and specific to these preventative CT scans: what evaluations has your department done of these private clinics in Calgary offering customers private CT scans?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, since the formation of regional health authorities much of the work relative to patient safety has been delegated to the health authorities. They have engaged in proper processes for assessing the types of care that is offered. I am sure that if I am given a day to look specifically into the CT scans, anything that has been done there, I will find out that there is significant work, mitigating measures, and that patient safety is protected.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Final question. Again to the same minister: can the minister explain, if a doctor's referral is needed and if additional symptoms are present, why these scans are not being paid for by the public system? If they're medically necessary, why aren't they being paid for?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I'll be happy to answer that question tomorrow.

Veterans' Licence Plates

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government recently introduced a special licence plate to honour our veterans. However, my neighbour tells me that he's unable to have one of these special veterans' plates for his farm pickup, which is his only vehicle. Could the Minister of Government Services confirm that he's considering a change in this policy?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, when we were working with the Alberta-Northwest Territories Command of the Legion on this whole program, there was an oversight when the decision was made that commercial vehicles would not be allowed to have one of these plates. The oversight was that farm vehicles – pickups have been mentioned – are registered under our registry as commercial vehicles. So when we came about to start registering these vehicles, we discovered that the system would not accommodate them. So we have made the changes. Probably in another month or so the folks that do qualify through the Legion will also be able to get these stickers.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: does this mean that other commercial vehicles will also be eligible for these plates?

Mr. Lund: No, Mr. Speaker. It will be only those that are registered as farm vehicles.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, since several people have already been told that they will not be able to have these plates for their farm vehicles, does the minister have a way of communicating this information to them so they can reapply?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, we have already sent out notices to the Legions across the province, so they will be able to contact folks that have been approved but unable to get the licence plates. We're sending it out also to all of the registries so that they will also know. Also, we'll let the individuals that have applied but were rejected know as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Homeless Shelters

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The system of grant funding for homeless shelters in Alberta is not working. It leaves homeless shelters begging at the end of the fiscal year when their grants run out. To the minister of seniors: will the minister be reviewing the current application process to establish a more sustainable funding formula so that homeless shelters are not on the brink of closing before they receive this funding?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to begin by thanking the municipalities and community partners, the agencies that do provide emergency shelter services for homeless Albertans. As the hon. member knows, the situation for the homeless is very complex, but so are the solutions, and it isn't just necessarily solutions regarding housing. It's other issues such as mental breakdown, substance abuse, and whatnot.

We do, though, provide funding, Mr. Speaker, that is fairly substantial for homeless emergency shelters. For example, we provide $14 million in operational funding to 22 shelters, which provides about 2,100 spaces. Also, over the past five years we've provided $15 million to provide 2,500 new spaces in Alberta for the homeless. The member has mentioned the operational grant. That, as I indicated, is fairly substantial at $14 million.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. To the same minister: given that homelessness and the use of food banks is on the rise in this province, will the minister commit to long-term funding increases to match the increases in Alberta's homeless?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, that's a very interesting question, actually, Mr. Speaker, and I think fairly significant too because I have met with a number of people that operate the homeless shelters. Part of that has been discussions regarding the food bank, and I can tell you, hon. member, that I will be looking at that following the budget.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. My hon. colleague must have been reading my mind because my next question is to the Minister of Finance. Given that shelters are four days away from the end of the fiscal year and their budgets hinge on these grants, when will this ministry develop a budget so that the homeless will be protected?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is aware that each department is responsible for developing their budget, and each department minister takes that very, very, very seriously. All of the departments' business plans are put together with great care and with great time, looking at all of those areas, and I know that the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports is dealing very diligently with this. At the appropriate time that department's budget will come forward, and you will have the opportunity to debate those numbers and the accommodation that's in it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Agricultural Income Stabilization Program

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this month the hon. Member for Little Bow stood up and asked about the long waits our cash-strapped producers are enduring before they receive their CAIS payments. Well, it's near the end of the month, and so are my producers in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. With input costs like fuel, fertilizer, and seed going up every year, rural producers are having some tough decisions to make. My questions are all for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. How can our ag producers make business decisions about their operations if they don't have the cash on hand?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned in the House earlier, all programs have growing pains, and the Canadian income stabilization program is no exception, or CAIS as we call it. The CAIS program has had an overwhelming interest from producers in the province. In fact, for the 2003 claim year alone more than 25,000 Alberta producers submitted their applications, and over half of those were done in the last two months after extending the deadline.

Getting the CAIS payments and advances out to producers is a priority. It's taking longer than we had hoped. AFSC has spent a great deal of effort trying to get those payments out by putting on extra shifts, by introducing a call line, by extending the hours of operation. Additionally, to help producers face acute cash flow problems, we did introduce advance payments for the 2003-2004 year, which are not available in all provinces. So as soon as an application is received, we are committed to getting those advances out. It's important to understand that the producers have to have completed applications, or it does delay those things, but so far $190 million in payments for the 2003 year has been paid out.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you for that partial answer. But if the program is not working to get the cash in the hands of my producers who qualify for it, Mr. Speaker, obviously some changes need to be made to this program. What program changes need to occur?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A good question and I was trying to say that we believe that we're going to have all of the 2003s done very, very soon, prior to the end of this month. We believe that a further $260 million in advances and final payments has already been approved for the 2004 year.

As far as the CAIS program is concerned – and producers will be interested to know this – the CAIS program is a whole farm income program. It's designed to stabilize income over the period of the five-year term, the Olympic average. We know that Alberta producers are suffering right now. We have kind of a perfect storm going here in the sense of low grain prices, BSE, high input costs, high fertilizer costs, high fuel costs. CAIS is a national program. We want to maintain that.

Mr. VanderBurg: This is a very serious issue, and my producers are asking me on the weekends when I get home: is CAIS the most appropriate vehicle to deal with high input costs, or are ad hoc programs the way?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, we're getting into opinion here now. Let's get policy.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the policy of Alberta Agriculture is that we're going to continue with the CAIS program because we believe it is the program for the future of agriculture, but we are making it a priority to talk to the federal/provincial ministers this July. We're going to ensure that that's the priority to talk about: how we can make the CAIS program more responsive, how we can make the reference margins more realistic to what the farm operation is. We are also talking about some options and working with my federal counterpart to look at some of those options to help the seeding for this year and for this new crop year.

Library Funding

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night the government voted against Liberal Motion 502, which asked the government to eliminate fees for library cards in tribute to the late the Honourable Dr. Lois E. Hole. The Liberal opposition is extremely disappointed by this result as free access to libraries was one of Lois Hole's core beliefs. My question is to the Minister of Community Development. Last Monday in this Assembly the hon. Minister of Education stated that the per capita funding for public libraries should be increased. Will this government listen to the hon. minister and commit to increasing the per capita funding formula for public libraries?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will have to wait for the budget.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister: given that this government can find $133 million in the budget for horse racing in four years, why can't they find $4 million to support learning in Alberta? What's more important?

The Speaker: We're into opinion here now again.

Mr. Mar: The issues are unrelated, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Agnihotri: Again to the same minister: given that the Ministry of Education encourages literacy, why is this government opposed to providing Albertans with a tool to encourage lifelong learning?

Mr. Mar: That is patently untrue, Mr. Speaker. I can tell you categorically that Albertans love their libraries. They are among the highest per capita users of libraries anywhere in this country. Some 30 million materials are circulated each year. This province has some 300 libraries, many of them, over half of them, serve communities of fewer than 1,200 people. They run over 36,000 different community-based programs.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out this incorrect notion that the hon. member has left this House, and that is that people cannot access libraries without a library card. That is patently untrue. Anybody can enter a public library at any time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are library fees, not for the use of the library but for library cards, which will allow you to take materials out. Now, in other provinces they may not charge library card fees, but they do charge for the borrowing of materials. They might be audiovisual materials. They might be interlibrary loans. They might be used for databases or other materials of the like.

So, Mr. Speaker, the reality is that the overwhelming number of Albertans recognize the value of their libraries, this government recognizes the value of its libraries, and it's demonstrating itself in the utilization rates of libraries in this province.

Speaker's Ruling Items Previously Decided

The Speaker: Hon. members, the chair allowed the hon. Minister of Community Development to go beyond the 45-second guideline simply because Standing Order 23(f) may have been called into question with respect to this last series of questions. I'd ask the member to study and read Standing Order 23(f).

Rural Tourism Conference

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to talk about the 2005 Rural Tourism Conference called What's the Big Idea?, that just took place in Camrose from March 7 to 9 at the Camrose Regional Exhibition.

The conference has been known for its positive impact on the rural tourism industry in Alberta. This year 225 delegates along with 20 speakers and guests attended the conference, where they had the opportunity to exchange ideas and discuss experiences with stakeholders in rural tourism from across Alberta. Delegates and guests were also treated to a Showcasing Alberta evening by celebrating Alberta's 100th birthday on a train ride on Alberta Prairie Railway Excursions in central Alberta.

In its fifth year the concept of a rural tourism conference was brought forward by the Camrose Regional Exhibition. This is one way that the CRE demonstrates its commitment to agriculture and rural development, two integral components to the future of a strong rural Alberta, that is being championed through the rural development strategy advanced by the Member for Battle River-Wainwright. By enabling communities and tourism operators to offer strong and more relevant tourism experiences, the conference allows communities to develop new revenue streams and employment to their communities. Through its support the government of Alberta can proudly say that it is taking steps to meet the goals of the rural development strategy.

The conference was a great success due to the partnership between the CRE, Travel Alberta, Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, and Alberta Economic Development and the support from sponsors like the Calgary Stampede, Northlands Park, the city of Camrose, and Western Economic Diversification Canada among many others. The conference went ahead without a hitch thanks to the great crew from MIH Consulting in Camrose, who managed the conference.

The response from conference participants was very positive and shows the potential and excitement that exists in rural Alberta to develop a strong and vibrant future. Due to the continuous positive response the organizers are preparing for a bigger and better conference in 2006.

Thank you.

Great Kids Awards

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak about an event I attended to honour a young constituent of my Calgary-Fort constituency.

The annual Albertan Great Kids awards was initiated by our Premier and Dr. Colleen Klein together with the Minister of Children's Services over five years ago. This excellent idea encourages and recognizes young Albertans for their outstanding contribution to society.

At the sixth annual Great Kids awards on March 13, 19 outstanding Alberta children were honoured for making a difference at home and in their communities. In honour of Alberta's centennial this year's awards make a total of 100 Great Kids honoured across Alberta since its inception. Each contributed in their own way to the betterment of our society, perhaps not even knowing about their impact. These children have integrity, personal optimism, and drive that adults have to admire. They generally have overcome challenges with a compassion that inspires us all.

The 19 award recipients this year were selected from among 181 nominations, and these outstanding children are: Brendan Bellingham, 6 years old; Kathleen Griffin, 7; Joseph Kemper-Vela, 8; Morgan Mombourquette, 8; Dakota Beaver, 10; Serina Nooitgedagt, 11; Summer Satre, 11; David Smith, 11; Christianna Wood Roddick, 10; Gabriel Diggs, 14; Alyse Geiger, 13; Cassandra Just, 14; Angela Enokson, 14; Jared Potts, 14; Fiona English, 16; Deryck Scott Reade, 17; Jennifer Ross, 17; Alaina Smith, 16; and Justin Yaassoub, 17.

Each recipient received prizes from IBM, TransCanada, Fantasyland Hotel, and West Edmonton Mall. I want to congratulate them.

Thank you.

Walter Paszkowski Agricultural Legacy Endowment

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Saturday last an enthusiastic crowd of over 300 supporters gathered in a hotel ballroom in Grande Prairie to honour a former member of this Assembly. The occasion was the announcement of NAIT's Walter Paszkowski agricultural legacy endowment co-ordinating agricultural research and training in the Peace region of Alberta, British Columbia, and beyond.

The fund has been established to nurture the continued growth of agricultural leadership in the Peace region. Commitment from the Alberta government, the corporate sector, agricultural producer groups, and the Northern Alberta Institute of Technology will enable this endowment to become self-sustaining. Revenues from investment of the fund will be utilized to provide a wide range of services in the agricultural community throughout the region.

Agriculture innovator, Alberta government cabinet minister, community leader, scholar, active volunteer: all of these words, Mr. Speaker, describe Walter Paszkowski, whose commitment to the people and prosperity of our region is second to none. In 1953 Walter was part of the inaugural graduating class of the Fairview School of Agriculture. Graduating with honours, his academic success started him on the path to an impressive record of international, national, and provincial achievement.

His work as a grower, researcher, and developer of canola varieties has proven vital. Walter founded the Grow with Canola committee, recognized as the most successful program of its kind in the world.

Walter's political life encompassed stints as a school trustee, hospital board director, town councillor, and mayor before he was elected MLA for Grande Prairie-Smoky, a position he held for 12 years. His provincial political tenure included posts as Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, Minister of Municipal Affairs, minister of transportation and utilities, and numerous other positions where Walter's expertise was invaluable.

The naming of this endowment to honour a true Albertan whose heart is in the agricultural sector is truly outstanding. Congratulations, Walter Paszkowski.

Community Schools

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's school utilization policy wreaks havoc on both rural and urban school boards. Here in Edmonton the public school board has been forced by the provincial government to close schools in central areas of the city with low enrolments. This is bad public policy, resulting in less public infrastructure for residents of central neighbourhoods.

What is missing from this government's flawed utilization policy is a community school concept. Previous Progressive Conservative governments supported this concept. To date this government does not.

Public schools can be used for far more than just classroom instruction. Public schools play host to daycares, playschools, counselling services, sports events, community outreach, and many other services. If the utilization formula took into account the numerous ways that a school serves the community, many communities would not be facing the closure of their schools.

To remove hundreds of classroom spaces from four neighbourhood communities in central Edmonton is wrong. These communities are showing changing demographics. As population densities increase, the need for these school spaces will increase. These schools are the lifeblood of their respective communities. Their closure would result in a utilization rate of 109 per cent in the junior high schools that the public board wants our displaced children to attend. What happened to the government's promise in response to the Learning Commission to reduce crowded classrooms?

The Official Opposition has long advocated for a community schools policy to help schools form partnerships with community groups offering child care, after school care, social services, and public health care. These schools should be designated as community schools by the school boards and be exempt from closure.

Public school parents were pleased to learn on March 8 that the provincial government is considering a more effective utilization formula. We need to stop this closure process until the government introduces a new utilization formula. All our remaining public schools are a legacy paid for by taxpayers. All communities deserve and need their public schools.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 94 the Standing Committee on Private Bills has reviewed the petitions that were presented yesterday, Monday, March 21, 2005, and can advise the House that the petitions comply with Standing Orders 85 to 89.

Mr. Speaker, this is my report.

The Speaker: Hon. member, will you be moving that the report be concurred in?

Dr. Brown: Yes.

The Speaker: On the motion put forward by the hon. member, would all hon. members of the Assembly agreeing to the motion please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Speaker: Opposed, please say no. The motion is carried.

Hon. members, this is a bit unusual to do this under this segment of the Routine, but I'm going to table five copies of the report of the Select Special Health Information Act Review Committee. This committee was established during the last Legislature. This is unusual to do it at this point as the committee no longer existed with the dissolution of the Legislature and the calling of the election, and the chair is tabling this report at this time to ensure that the records of the Legislative Assembly are comprehensive and complete.

Health Statutes Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate March 15: Mr. Mitzel]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I concluded my remarks when I adjourned debate last Tuesday, but I look forward to hearing any comments or questions which the hon. members may have, and I'll attempt to address these at the conclusion of this debate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to rise today and speak in second reading to Bill 7, the Health Statutes Amendment Act. I'll just note briefly, as we start, a historical change.

This is an omnibus bill in that it's changing a number of statutes: the Health Care Insurance Act, Government Organization Act, Health Care Protection Act, Health Professions Act, Fatality Inquiries Act, and I think the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research Act and some others. We used to, through previous Standing Orders, be allowed a longer period of time to speak to omnibus bills because there was obviously more than one being altered, and it recognized the complexity of having more than one bill being discussed at one time. Those Standing Orders are no longer available to us, so just a little historical note there when I see a bill like this.

Essentially, Mr. Speaker, this is a fairly straightforward act giving us some minor administrative changes. I almost think parts of it could in fact have been done under miscellaneous statutes; nonetheless, I'm always glad to see an act that gets to come out and breathe in the clear light of day in this Assembly and be open for all members to comment upon it.

There are a number of sections in the bill where we're looking at clarifying certain definitions and also recognizing name changes that have happened, colleges and some amending health statutes. So most of what we see in here is actually around names changes from things like "The Alberta Dental Association and College" to a lower case "the Alberta Dental Association and College." In a number of other cases it's around "College of Physicians and Surgeons of the Province of Alberta" to "College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta." So it's a minor change; nonetheless, because it's in legislation, it comes before the Assembly to be altered.

There are a few other areas that are a bit more substantive. The act is dealing with or repealing provisions that are related to what a nurse practitioner may do under the Public Health Act. My understanding is that this is being changed because regulations are coming forward under the Health Professions Act that will govern more specifically and more generally, I suppose, nurse practitioners. I think there is a larger issue around that in that one of the things the Alberta Liberal opposition has been looking at is that in order to assist the health care profession and the system we support to move forward, part of what we need to do is identify what only doctors can do and make sure that's in fact what they're doing.

If there are other aspects of the job that can be covered, obviously, legally, safely, and all of those other considerations that are important to public health, if they can be done by other specialists or trained health care professionals, then we should be making accommodation for that to be happening and leaving the docs to do what only the docs can do. I think that working around the nurse practitioners and clearly defining and even expanding the role that they have is part of what we're looking at.

The act is also looking at amendments to protect the term "specialist." I'll come back to that a little later, Mr. Speaker.

Finally, there are also clarifications around the definition and restrictions around prescribing, administering, and compounding a drug or vaccine.

In the Liberal opposition it's my recommendation as the Health and Wellness critic that we would be supporting this bill. There is very little that I would argue, nothing controversial in here, but there are a few questions that I would like to put on the record, and the sponsoring member has already offered to answer them, and I appreciate that.

I am a little curious about why the name change and the case adjustments from a capital T "The" to a small t "the" and why the choice was made to put it in an omnibus bill along with everything else as compared to bringing it forward as miscellaneous statutes. That may simply be a matter of timing, that all of these were sort of gathered together, but I'd be interested in knowing why the choice.

There is also a section that is striking out of the Government Organization Act the prescribe, dispense, and compound section, and this section was under a list of restricted activities of delivering a health service. I'm wondering if by removing the prescribe, dispense, and compound section from here, we seem to be removing it as a restricted activity. I'm just looking for clarification around the choice there. I believe what it is is that it's being moved into a larger section that, in fact, gives a much more detailed definition of what's involved in prescribing, but I'll look to the sponsoring member for the answer to that and why. What was the impetus or the reasoning behind it?

Now back to the observation about protecting the term "specialist." Can the minister or the sponsoring member tell us whether any other consultations beyond the Alberta College of Pharmacists have been done on this particular change around the term "specialist" as a protected title? I'm wondering if there was any consultation or chats or offers to speak with the colleges or regulatory bodies or any of the other health professional organizations. Can the member tell me which professions would be affected by including this term "specialist" as a protected item?

I'm wondering where this came from, so my final question is whether the member or the minister is aware of whether the term "specialist" was being used inappropriately somewhere by some health professionals and that was what prompted the need to legislate this term as a protected title. If, in fact, they felt it was being used inappropriately, could we have the examples before us, please?

Now, the section of the bill that repeals several sections dealing with nurse practitioners under the Public Health Act. Evidently this is around new regulations that are forthcoming under the Health Professions Act. Can the member tell us when the nurse practitioner regulation and registered nurses profession regulation will be forthcoming? I'm a little worried about the gap time here. We're removing this now, yet I don't see on the Order Paper nor have I had any information from the minister's office that we are expecting imminently to have before us changes in those regulations.

I'm concerned that there's a gap where basically we're looking at removing with the passage of this bill the sections dealing with nurse practitioners under the Public Health Act, but where they're supposed to appear newly scrubbed and freshly minted under the new regulations, I don't see any sign of them. I'm worried that we put them into thin air, and we don't rescue them back again and give them the home that they're looking for. So if I can get some explanation, please, from the sponsoring member about when we can expect the nurse practitioner regulation and the registered nurses profession regulation.

I'm also very interested in what those regulations would be. What is the content of them? It would actually be very nice if the member could table those in the House so that they become a more accessible public document than regulations usually are. If we could find out who the minister consulted with, please, as the department moved forward with these changes.

I spent some time, Mr. Speaker, visiting with a number of the health care professions around Health and Wellness when I was offered the critic portfolio from our leader. One of the issues that came up consistently was workforce planning, and that's interesting because that, in fact, was something that we had identified in our document produced by the Alberta Liberal opposition on our health care policy entitled Creating a Healthy Future. That, of course, is always available through our website at www.liberalopposition.com. But we had raised this as a significant issue, and as I say, it has been raised with me by I think everyone that I met with, and there were some 20 different organizations, colleges, associations, member service organizations, et cetera, in the health professional field.

The whole idea of succession. We've got that baby boomer generation moving through and moving toward retirement age, living longer, much healthier, less likely to be in need of acute care medical services, but they are getting older and retiring at exactly the same time as the health professionals are getting older and retiring. They're all a part of the same generation, so there is a critical need, and I would argue an increasingly critical need, for very careful workforce planning and succession planning.

I think there's an argument that we're not giving nurses and pharmacists and technicians and therapists and technologists the opportunity to put all of their knowledge and abilities to work, and we could reduce the burden on our doctors. This is back to my earlier argument, Mr. Speaker. We could reduce the burden on our doctors in our system by giving these people more direct access to other professionals.

The Alberta government has not been adequately tracking health care workforce participants, so we don't really know how many doctors, nurses, and other workers are being used in the system. I would argue that it's very difficult, then, to plan for them. We have this common concern over the shortage of physicians, but I would argue that we're also looking at a shortage of every other health care professional, and we don't have the data to be able to organize that or to be able to plan adequately for it.

So we're talking somewhat about opening up new spaces for students, and this ties very much into the number of questions that were raised today in question period, Mr. Speaker, around whether we are making the best use of Albertans and Canadians first in training for the workers in the oil sands sector and whether we're giving every possible opportunity to those people before we bring in replacement workers from other countries. I think that's something of what we are anticipating here.

I wanted to make sure that I put it on the record that those very health professions are very aware of the need for succession planning and want to actively participate in this. This whole area, looking at the nurse practitioners, is one access point or entry point into discussing that. So can the minister give us an update of where we are at with workplace planning? Does she have any better data than we did a couple of years ago, when that healthy future report was written? Can she give us anything definitive on how the ministry is planning to better utilize nurse practitioners in the province, and is there any plan to address the fact that the average age of nurses is continuing to climb and we will likely be facing a severe shortage?

Now, as I said, we're not expecting the baby boomers to all hit 65 and be in need of front-line primary care. They're not. We're going to live longer and be much healthier. But we know that there's also a certain age when dying is very expensive because you die from things that are very expensive to treat, like cancer treatment, for example. I would prefer to see us working as much as possible on a wellness model, but I'd like to hear what work the minister has done around that.

That's my first glance at it and reaction to what's being proposed in Bill 7, the Health Statutes Amendment Act, 2005. As I say, it's mostly clarification of definitions, a few sort of miscellaneous housekeeping changes, case changes, and some questions about reserving the term of "specialist" and about the health practitioners.

So I've put some questions on the record for the sponsoring member to contemplate and to get back the information. Maybe if I could either get that in writing, or perhaps the member could answer back when we get into Committee of the Whole with this, I'm happy to support it in second reading.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak to it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to make some brief comments on Bill 7, the Health Statutes Amendment Act, 2005, in its second reading. The bill really deals with changing parts of the names of health professional organizations, as I see it. These changes in the titles of the names of these professional organizations or colleges are mentioned in existing pieces of legislation and statutes. So several of those current statutes will be amended as a result of the changes being proposed here.

I just want to tell the House that we haven't received any concerns from the groups of practitioners in the health care field who either individually or severally or as members of organizations might be affected by these changes, so I take it that most of the changes, as I see them, are uncontroversial. There are no objections that have reached the office of the NDP caucus. So there is not much here for substantive debate.

Certainly, I was intrigued by the substitution, I guess, of the word "compound" to administer drugs. When I was a young child, we used to take a prescription to a dispensary, and a compounder would make some sort of mixtures that would be then used by patients. We've moved a long way from that now. So I think it's about time to make the change as well in our legislation and statutes.

Similarly, I noticed that the college of podiatrists – these are, I suppose, physicians who deal with the problems of the feet in particular – name is also being changed here from the Council of Management of the Alberta Podiatry Association to the Board of Directors of the Alberta Podiatry Association. So many of these changes are merely changes in name, as it were.

The same is the case, I think, with the Alberta College of Optometrists. The only change there is the "T" in the word "The" is changed to "t" in the lower case. That's, I think, an interesting change. Why we needed to take the trouble of doing this may have something to do with drama rather than with substance, but here it is, and I'm not about to say that it shouldn't have been done.

So the changes are minor. The groups to be potentially affected would be health care practitioners and workers, and there's no indication that there is any major concern from any of the groups that are likely to be affected or that potentially will be affected by changes in this bill. So we are in support of the minor technical unsubstantive changes, which seem to be the only ones that this bill contains.

With that said, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my seat and let other members speak to the bill if they wish. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat to close the debate.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There were so many questions, and I would be prepared to answer those questions when we go into committee.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a second time]

Bill 8
Personal Information Protection
Amendment Act, 2005

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 8, the Personal Information Protection Amendment Act, 2005.

The Personal Information Protection Act is Alberta's private-sector privacy legislation. The act came into force on January 1, 2004. The Personal Information Protection Act establishes clear, concise, and common-sense rules for private-sector organizations when collecting, using, and disclosing personal information. The Information and Privacy Commissioner and Alberta Justice have requested three minor amendments to this act to clarify certain issues that have arisen since it came into force.

Number one is exemption for political bodies. Mr. Speaker, amendments are being made to clarify that the act does not apply to the collection, use, or disclosure of personal information by or for a candidate for public office or an office or position in a registered political party or constituency association. This amendment is proposed to clarify the wording in the act.

Number two, co-ordination with commissioners in other jurisdictions. The commissioner's office has requested an amendment that will allow the commissioner to talk to and co-ordinate with other Canadian commissioners when resolving multijurisdictional complaints. Under this proposed amendment the commissioner will be allowed to collect and use and disclose information for the purpose of co-ordinating activities among commissioners and will be able to accept a delegation from another commissioner to investigate a matter if it has a closer connection with Alberta.

Number three, consent for deceased individuals. This amendment will clarify who can consent to the collection, use, and disclosure of a deceased's personal information for the purpose of funeral arrangements and disposal of remains. This amendment is needed because PIPA protects an individual's personal information for 20 years after their death, and there has been some recent confusion in the funeral industry as to who can consent on behalf of the deceased. The Alberta Funeral Services Regulatory Board supports this amendment, by the way.

In addition, stakeholders have requested that the review of PIPA by the select committee of the Legislative Assembly be delayed by one year as there has not been sufficient time since the act came into force to conduct a meaningful review.

Lastly, Alberta Health and Wellness has also requested that the Health Information Act be made paramount over PIPA.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to take this time to briefly comment on Bill 8, the Personal Information Protection Amendment Act, 2005.

Privacy and the protection of personal information are subjects which are increasingly on people's minds these days. How many times have we heard of incidents where personal information got into the wrong hands? We've heard and still hear of identity theft as a growing problem, we hear of credit card fraud, back in the fall we were made aware of the credit reports on top government bureaucrats which ended up being made available to potential crooks, et cetera, et cetera. Many cases.

This is the age of information and technology, but this is also the age when we should worry about protecting personal information and ensuring privacy. This is what the old act was drafted to do – and it's not really that old because it only came into effect in November – but I believe that this is really what this amendment was created to strengthen. I agree with the amendments proposed in this little housekeeping act, and I only want to raise some issues and would appreciate any clarification from the hon. member.

First, there is the issue with political candidates and campaigns. This amendment provides some clarity in that PIPA, the Personal Information Protection Act, does not apply to the collection, use, or disclosure of personal information by or for a candidate running for public office or for a position on a board of a registered constituency association or a political party. Clarification was needed here to alleviate concerns. A candidate – and I was one, and 82 other members of this esteemed Assembly were back in November – needs certain basic information on the electors or the potential voters so we can market ourselves: we can tell them about ourselves, our platforms, our ideas, our concerns, where we stand on things. I think this amendment is timely because it explains and clarifies the legality of that.

Next, this amendment also facilitates the co-ordination of activities between the Alberta Privacy Commissioner and his or her counterparts in other jurisdictions. I was pleased to find out that this change was actually brought forward by the Privacy Commissioner himself, and this is a positive sign that the government is listening. The Privacy Commissioner is crucial, and he's doing an important role in ensuring that the privacy and the personal information of all citizens, not only government bureaucrats, is protected.

This would also prove beneficial when the matter discussed or the subject that's being studied should more properly be referred to a different jurisdiction. Maybe that jurisdiction is of closer proximity, or maybe it has a stronger mandate over the issue. So maybe we can refer situations from Alberta to the outside, or reversely if Alberta has a stronger connection or a stronger mandate over the issue, maybe the discussion has to be brought here. I think it's useful and beneficial to allow our Privacy Commissioner to exercise his or her discretion in delegating or accepting issues of concern.

Furthermore, I agree with the hon. member that clarification was needed in that the Health Information Act, HIA, has precedence over PIPA. Again, that was timely, and I'm referring back to my years of health care practise. There was a lot of confusion in that area. The Health Information Act controls which information is shared in the medical or health fields and which information is transferable between health care professionals, the patient, the patient's family, and the legal system. We as health care professionals or workers, including pharmacists, physicians, nurses, et cetera, are entrusted as custodians of information, but many of us had doubts and concerns with regard to the PIPA because we weren't sure where the overlap is and which one has precedence over the other.

Offering health care workers the clarity and offering them the assurance that the HIA has precedence is timely and very important. That would free them up from their worries, provides them with direction, and allows them to just focus on the job at hand. Many of us health care professionals had the concern that maybe we were doing something that is not entirely correct, or maybe we were not consistent. So, again, I commend the hon. member on this change.

Lastly, with respect to funeral arrangements or the disposition of remains, again I appreciate the clarification. I am sure many people in the funeral industry and families, even, had that concern. Twenty years seemed like a very long period. You know, it was just vague.

I have to emphasize, however, that all information shared or provided must only be for the purpose of the funeral preparation, disposition of remains, or even publishing the obituaries, and nothing more. The person, he or she, may have died, may be deceased, but the relatives and the estate are still entitled to some degree of privacy, so we have to assure them that what's being made available is only for the purpose of the funeral arrangement, for printing or publishing the obituary, and that's it. When a person dies, there remain pieces of information about him or her which should be guarded and not shared.

In conclusion, I think this amendment act is useful and it's timely, and I appreciate the fact that it was presented shortly after the November implementation date. That's a good sign.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to be able to speak briefly during second reading of Bill 8, the Personal Information Protection Amendment Act, 2005. My colleague from Edmonton-McClung has already sort of walked through what's in the bill.

I have no problem at all and am very supportive of the amendments around the disclosure of information around deceased persons so that for folks that need to use that information for arranging a funeral and related matters – you know, put people's names in the newspaper and that sort of thing – and administration of the estate, that's fine. That's perfectly reasonable.

I sat on the Health Information Act Review Committee, the one that you, Mr. Speaker, tabled a report for this very afternoon. The issue of the powers of the commissioner came up in that context as well, if I'm remembering that correctly. So I think this was an omission that happened across the board wherever we were looking at the powers of the commissioner, personal information, and protection of privacy.

My issue when you're talking about the protection of personal information is always around the safeguards that we have in place partly around computer security access. As we all know, when you've got information on a computer and you can attach it and send it to other people by pressing one button on your keyboard and off it goes, you have no control or power over the people that get it, and they can send it on from there. That is a huge issue as we try and deal with that around levels of security access. Yes, that's one way of doing it, but it's not completely successful.

The second area where this really goes off the rails for us and is an area that we have yet to address although I'm sure there are people attempting to do so, is around – how do I put this? – human decisions to interfere in that process and to pervert the process to their own ends. That is always a concern, and that's where the illegal activity takes place. There's nothing that's being proposed here that is specifically dealing with that.

We basically have the three sections, which are that PIPA doesn't apply to use in the political realm or in the elections, the section that's around allowing the Privacy Commissioner to consult and enter into discussions and information sharing with other privacy commissioners but also their ability to delegate certain of their powers, and finally the funeral arrangements and the issues around the deceased persons.

I'm aware that we're in second reading, Mr. Speaker, so I'm not going to get into the nitty-gritty of the word by word dissection of this. Whenever I look at any amendment that is allowing more information to go out without scrutiny, my antenna is always going to go up, and I'm always going to be looking at that with a bit more scrutiny. That is what's being contemplated here with having the commissioner collect, use, and disclose personal information without the individual's consent for the purpose of exercising or performing any power, duty, or function in this particular section. I think we always have to be vigilant on this, Mr. Speaker. We will not have the co-operation of the public in giving us their information if we cannot vigorously police and protect their information.

There are always new entities pulling at us, trying to get access to more information, whether it's for marketing purposes or research purposes. It just seems to be never-ending. Everybody can think of a great way to use that information, and it's so tantalizing to have it all in one place, particularly when it's kept electronically. Then it's really tantalizing because to be able to get it and transfer it is, as I said, the press of a button. So we have to scrutinize things really carefully to make sure that we are not allowing anything to slip under the radar in coming out with this.

As I say, I haven't discovered anything nefarious in here. I'm just always cautious about it. That's why I've read it and I'm up talking about it. The one question I did have about this is: why is it changing the review of the act? That was originally slated to be, I think, July 1, 2005, and that's being changed to a year later, 2006. I'm wondering why that's happening. Why the extra extension? I think it was originally supposed to be 18 months after the act came into effect and then once every three years. So why do we have the one-year extension here?

I didn't hear an explanation for that, but my attention may have wandered. I admit it; occasionally, not often but occasionally it wanders. If it did while the sponsoring member was explaining that, my apologies. I will endeavour to go back and read Hansard and see if I missed something. But I'm very curious about that because I think it's important that we stick to this. I mean, we have to honour the work of those that went before us and, frankly, those of us that are still sitting in this House.

If we said that we felt that the review should be every three years, we contemplated that carefully, or at least I hope we did. If I was sitting here, I did. So why now would we not honour that and follow through on that action that was laid out for us? The postponement of one year: I'm wondering if it's because this is the end of March and the minister feels that we just can't get it together to have this meeting over the summer or because it's the birthday summer and all kinds of celebrations are happening and people don't want to get together and do the review. Why? What's the reasoning? I remain ever hopeful that the government has a good reason for this, and I know that they're going to get up and share that good reason with me.

So that's the primary question that I would like answered. I would like to hear some additional discussion about reassurance that the changes would not result in any additional information being made available and that all possible security precautions are being kept in place, particularly around electronic records, to make sure that these are not either deliberately or inadvertently sent on to others because, boy, electronically, once they leave the first person's hands, we cannot track that stuff.

We have to be really careful about it because in many cases we really haven't quite caught on to how dangerous this can be, Mr. Speaker. I'm reminded of what I learned in having my insurance company send me a fairly innocuous renewal statement, on the back of which was sort of: check off these boxes if you don't want us to have this information or you don't want us to give out this information about you. I glanced at it, and I was ready to send it back as it was. Then I started to think: "Just a second here. Why does my insurance company need to know and have access to all of my financial records and bank accounts? I've got a good record of paying, you know, my fee every month. It comes as a direct withdrawal out of one account, so they already know what's happening there. They don't need to know anything more about my financial records. Why would they? So, okay, no, they're not going to get that information."

Then they wanted to know about mortgages and land owned and all of that kind of thing, and I thought: "This is car insurance. Why do they need to know about mortgages and the land that I own? They don't need to know that for car insurance. No, they don't get that information either." I kept going down the list, and in the end I only left them with a very little bit of information.

You know, when I first got into this, it never occurred to me. I would have happily given them all that information, and I think too many of us do that, not understanding that it just gets passed on and passed on and gets out into that system, and you don't have control over it any more. So we're inadvertently giving too much permission for agencies and commercial ventures even for research purposes to use our personal information, and we have to become much more careful with whom we give permission to use personal information about us.

So those are always my cautions around that. I appreciate the opportunity to get up and put those concerns on the record. I know that the sponsoring member is going to take every single word I said with absolute seriousness and get back to me on the question that I've raised.

Thank you so much.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29 kicks in if anyone has questions for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Anybody else who wishes to participate in the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to give some qualified support to Bill 8. I think that the hon. Member for Highwood has managed to clarify and synchronize a number of issues that were inconsistent between, say, the health privacy act as well as the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. So, hopefully, harmonizing these various elements concerning people's personal information will assist all Albertans in having the security to know that their personal information is being looked after in a reasonable way.

I think the important part of this bill as well is to harmonize our provincial privacy laws in keeping with the federal laws, laws across the rest of the country, and again that's a beneficial thing for personal information here in Alberta.

As well, I think that providing some clarity in regard to the use of information for election purposes is reassuring to all of the members here in the Legislature as well as other levels of government, people running for municipal and federal governments. We like to hold that information as a very important element of our campaigns always, plus we hold a great deal of trust, I think, and understanding that we use that information in a very specific way but not extended to sort of giving that information to anyone else.

The whole issue of privacy, particularly in this electronic age, I believe is something that we need to be continually revisiting. As a number of members have pointed out already, this information is quite literally gold for marketing purposes and for, I guess, analysis purposes. You know, being able to know where people are and what they're doing, what their buying habits are as well as any personal information about their bank accounts and whatnot is of course extremely valuable to both legitimate and less-than-legitimate business interests. So we can only hope to protect that over time. It's very much a moving target though. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we have to always be on the lookout for ways by which both marketers and less-than-scrupulous people might try to use this information.

Now, one particular area that I think that we need to watch for is when we're harmonizing the relationship between the Personal Information Protection Act and the Health Information Act. I think that we have to be very careful because, of course, health information is a whole other ball of wax, if I may say so, in regard to personal information. There is just a tremendous amount of potential for abuse there in regard to analyzing people's health in terms of job qualification or perhaps qualifying for insurance purposes or any number of things. You know, this information is something we need to guard even more, if that's possible.

Another concern that I would like to raise at this point is the threats from extraterritorial claims against personal information, and I think we need to address that here at some point, not with this legislation. You know, there is the American PATRIOT Act, say, for example, which is requiring a whole range of bits of personal information. The Americans are pushing very hard at this juncture to get hold of information from their own citizens that they perhaps were not able to before but also information on Canadian citizens and Mexican citizens, it seems. So, you know, I think that we have to be very careful about protecting those interests in an extraterritorial sort of way and visit that at some point in time.

My last comment and concern in regard to private information is with the issue of contracting out the administration and protection of personal information. We've seen at the federal level the government using private firms and, in fact, in one case an American firm to administer personal information. You know, I think at the end of the day the sovereignty of this body here and of our own country federally in no small way depends on how well we protect the personal information and, by extension, the citizens that reside in this province and in our country. So I think this is another issue we must look at.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29. Any questions?

Anybody else wishing to participate in the debate?

The hon. Member for Highwood to close debate.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly appreciate the comments that were made by the hon. opposition members over here. Certainly, the intent of the act, of course, was not changed, and they quite agreed with that. I could see that.

The one question that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre brought up was about why we were extending it. I think we did question that early on, and I think it was that in consultation with the commissioner he hadn't had enough material or issues come up that he really had any issues at the time, so he wasn't too concerned that we would do it at this time. In fact, he was the one that probably recommended that we extend it the extra year.

So with that, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope we can move this bill on.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a second time]

Bill 9

Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate March 15: Mr. Hancock]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise in the House today to continue second reading debate on Bill 9, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2005. As the minister himself stated when he opened debate on this bill, it is a bill to clarify and do some housekeeping of certain sections, certain areas in the Post-secondary Learning Act, which in itself I believe was a rather major piece of legislation in the last session of this Legislature. It passed with, I think, some speed, some rapidity, and now there are some things that need to be gone back over and cleaned up a little bit, and much of it is housekeeping.

Ms Blakeman: Haste makes waste?

Mr. Taylor: Haste does make waste sometimes, yes. And haste sometimes makes for the need to go back and make some changes that perhaps you didn't contemplate making in the first place, changes that are basically of a housekeeping nature. Also, I think, Mr. Speaker, it gives you at a time like that the opportunity to go back sort of within the context of doing some cleanup, some housekeeping, and make some other changes that maybe you didn't contemplate at the beginning that allow you to do some things you weren't allowed to do in the first place.

This is, I guess, where I have a problem with this bill, Mr. Speaker. I will put it to you this way. There are a couple of changes being proposed under the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act that I've been looking at for some time now and trying to figure out. Are these innocent, innocuous housekeeping changes, or is there something more nefarious going on here?

Now, there are many things about this bill that I don't think I have a problem with and I don't think anybody else has a problem with. I will comment briefly on the changes that are being proposed here around tuition fees, to modify tuition fee policy to provide an additional academic year before which the newly calculated annual limit applies. This is being done, as I understand, Mr. Speaker, largely at the behest of the Auditor General, who had indicated that further clarity is needed to ensure that institutions understand how to calculate annual tuition increases.

It is a bit ironic, I think, that we are going back into the Post-secondary Learning Act and making changes to tuition fee policy that will soon in and of itself be replaced, we are told, by the affordability review that the minister has agreed to undertake during this one-year, some people call it, freeze on tuition fees. Some people refer to it more as a rebate since, after all, the institutions, the colleges and universities and technical institutes, in this province are being allowed to raise tuition fees this year. It's just that instead of the students of Alberta paying that increase in tuition, it is the government of Alberta paying it for this one year and one year only. The purpose of that is to buy some time for an affordability review to produce a tuition policy for the 21st century, as the Premier described it in his state of the province speech a few weeks ago.

This will be, I think, the fourth time in 14 years that this government has reviewed tuition policy, and here we go going in and cleaning up a tuition fee policy that – well, you know, I wasn't in this House when Bill 43, as it was called before it was passed, was being debated. Certainly, from outside the House it looked as though this tuition policy was supposed to be the policy to end all policies, and here we are mere months, really, after it was proclaimed going back in and modifying it slightly, amending it slightly to address the concerns of the Auditor General when a few months hence we're going to replace the whole thing anyway. It seems like a bit of a waste of time and effort, but the Auditor General says that further clarity is needed, so this bill seeks to provide further clarity for however many weeks or months it's needed to do.

It's interesting, though, that because the calculation of the annual actual allowable increase per student is done about 18 months after the institution has approved their fees, the calculation isn't timely enough for prompt action. It's, I think, a little bit a case of putting the cart before the horse.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General has indicated that this work needs to be done. This bill seeks to do this work, and I don't have a problem with that. I don't have a problem, as well, with the changes that this bill proposes to make around deleting the entire section about nonprofit private colleges. Circumstances have changed, and I think we can all be fairly agreeable to that. The minister has made the very good point that the Private Colleges Accreditation Board has completed its work. The Campus Alberta Quality Council assumes the role of reviewing degree proposals there. I don't have any problem with that.

There are two sections that I have a problem with. Section one, Mr. Speaker – at least section one in terms of the two that I have a problem with – really refers back to the last bill that we were debating in a funny sort of way because it has to do with the collection of personal information. The amendments or the changes proposed in the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2005, will allow the minister and the ministry to collect personal information on individuals who are not students to support system assessments and reporting. The minister has the authority now to require a board under the existing Post-secondary Learning Act to collect information and submit to the minister any information and reports that the minister considers necessary, and that can include personal information about an identifiable student.

I guess, Mr. Speaker, it would be pretty hard to run our advanced education system if the minister and the Ministry of Advanced Education were denied access to personal information about students in the system. But the change that is proposed goes beyond the students in the system to those who used to be students in the system, alumni, and to those who, interestingly enough, did not make it into the system. The minister has said – and I'm quoting here from Hansard – that “we need to be able to access information for those who apply but do not enrol in an institution as well as alumni information for various surveys.”

Well, okay. What kind of surveys? I think the basic question is: why? Why do we need to collect information, to access information including personal information about identifiable people for those who have applied but who did not enrol? The minister has not been specific, and I would invite clarification from the minister on this point. He has not yet been specific to the best of my knowledge, nor do I think Bill 9 is specific on this as to whether that includes applicants who were accepted by institutions and simply chose to go to a different institution, maybe out of province, maybe within the province, or whether it also extends to applicants who applied for admission to college or university or a technical institute in this province and were denied application.

The minister says that he needs the ability, the authority to be able to conduct these surveys relating to postsecondary education I guess to make sure that policy directions are supporting the needs of Albertans, but I don't exactly know how he finds that out by needing to collect personal information on people who are not in the system. So I have a concern about that. It's probably not the deal breaker though.

The deal breaker for me is again a rather innocuous-looking section which seeks to lift the ceiling on the number of board members appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council for colleges and technical institutes only, just for colleges and technical institutes and not for universities. No plans to change the appointment model for universities, which in and of itself I think, Mr. Speaker, introduces unneeded complexity. But more fundamentally, additional government appointees water down the representation on those college and technical institute boards by institutional stakeholders such as students and faculty and, therefore, tends to undermine institutional autonomy.

Now, I did some checking around on this. We made some calls around the various colleges and technical institutes in the province of Alberta, Mr. Speaker, and we couldn't find any evidence, any indication that any of these colleges or technical institutes had asked for this change to the boards. I'll grant you that most of the feedback I got was that the colleges and technical institutes weren't overly troubled by this proposed change, but they were perplexed and intrigued by it and kind of wondering why it would be proposed since they certainly hadn't asked for it.

Now, we had an earlier indication that at least one of the reasons for doing this was that membership on these boards needed to be clarified to ensure that any member can have a maximum term of six consecutive years on the board and that there is sufficient flexibility in the number of members to address any unique or emerging needs within the community or the institution. Currently it's possible, for instance, for a chair of the board to be restricted from being able to complete a full six-year term if they were appointed partway through a term as a public member. It was indicated to us, you know, that this was unintentional when the act was drafted.

Well, okay. That's fine except that the section of the Post-secondary Learning Act that is being amended is section 44, and this is where the bill seeks to institute a lower limit, if you will, and lift the upper limit on the number of board members for colleges and technical institutes that can be appointed by the minister. The section that deals with the length of time that you can serve on a board, a maximum term of service on a board, is actually section 56, I believe, and there is no amendment proposed to section 56.

I'm not really sure, if section 56 deals with the concerns that had been indicated to us, why section 44 is the one that's being amended unless, of course, increasing the total number of board members appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council and the concurrent reduction, therefore, in the proportion of board seats held by institutional stakeholder groups such as students, faculty, support staff results in the influence of the government or the ministry over the board of that college or technical institute growing correspondingly. LGC appointees are already a majority under the current legislation, so I guess this change does not by itself represent a new balance of power between public and institutional members, but it – what? – institutionalizes, I guess, solidifies that balance of power.

Mr. Speaker, it concerns me because I happen to think that in a democracy the citizenship is best served by an independent, autonomous postsecondary education system where independent critical thinking is not only fostered; it is encouraged. It is coerced when necessary at 8 o'clock on a Monday morning when half the class shows up for that lecture and they're practically falling asleep in the back rows in between bites on their double chocolate Tim Hortons doughnut. You know, critical thinking is vital in a democracy. Critical thinking is what moves us ahead for better or for worse, and I tend to think mostly for better.

Institutional autonomy is important; institutional autonomy is vital. And this government seems to have a reputation, a track record, for wanting to get right in there and get its hands dirty right up to the elbows, you know, and change the oil and do the lube job on every college and university itself. It's micromanaging them, and I have to ask why. I have to ask why. Is it a trust issue? Is it a philosophical issue? I don't know, but it causes me problems, Mr. Speaker. It causes me a great deal of consternation, makes me wonder what it is that this government really wants with this bill.

So I'm going to defer to others older and wiser than me who have said that, you know, in this business of being a legislator, when in doubt vote no. Mr. Speaker, I am going to oppose Bill 9, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act.

Thank you.

4:00

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to make some comments and raise some issues in second reading of Bill 9, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2005. There are a couple of issues that I am really concerned about here, and essentially they come up in two places. One is the gathering of personal identifying information, and the second is around the repealing of the, let me get the titles right, Private Colleges Accreditation Board and what appears to be a sort of transfer of those responsibilities or an assumption of them by the Campus Alberta Quality Council.

My issue there is that it's not assuming what the Private Colleges Accreditation Board actually used to do, particularly around issues of transparency and accountability. When we go back and look at the Post-secondary Learning Act, the Campus Alberta Quality Council is a very small section that was, I think, new in here. On the pages I'm looking at, it's like less than half a page setting out the powers and duties of it. Essentially, it is to provide advice and recommendations: appointment of members, terms of office, rules to govern itself. It is charged to inquire into matters relating to proposals to offer a program of study, then to look at the identified and demonstrated need for a program, the capacity of the institution to deliver the program, the impact of the program on the postsecondary institution's ability to fulfill its stated mandate and integration of programs. That's pretty much it. So it is meant to be more of a sort of global policy checker on behalf of the minister.

The Private Colleges Accreditation Board is much more lengthy in how it sets out everything it's required to do, and we are looking at repealing this. In particular, what I'm noticing is that there is a whole section under the Private Colleges Accreditation Board describing its powers. Again, Mr. Speaker, I mean, to be fair, it also goes through setting up, you know, that there'll be a chairperson and who will be on the committee, how they're appointed – members from the academic staff, members from the nonacademic staff, members from the public – terms of office and remuneration.

Then, Mr. Speaker, budget, records, and reports. Specifically, the accreditation board was to "prepare a budget and submit it to the Minister" and "keep full and accurate records" and submit and transmit "annual and other reports and returns as required." That does not appear correspondingly under the Campus Alberta Quality Council. In repealing what we're looking at for the accreditation board, we are losing some reporting and record keeping functions that are not being transferred to the Campus Alberta Quality Council, so I have concerns about the disparities that are appearing between what was in place before and what will be in place now.

As my colleague from Calgary-Currie laid out, we wouldn't like to believe that any of this was any deliberate sleight of hand, but I've been here long enough that I know to question things now, and I've been proved right more times than I would have ever liked, Mr.

Speaker. I would prefer in these cases that I am proved definitively wrong, and unfortunately that does not happen as often as I would like.

Just for anybody following along in Hansard or on the live audio, under the Post-secondary Learning Act those two sections that I was looking at for the Campus Alberta Quality Council are sections 108 and 109 and for the Private Colleges Accreditation Board are 110 to 115.

I think there's an issue there that needs to be explored. I have real issues about accountability and transparency and record keeping, especially when we're playing around with two really important things: taxpayer dollars and the education of our citizens and how we fund that and how we promote it and protect it. So I'm not impressed by what I'm seeing there.

The second issue that I am really unhappy about – and how interesting that I was just discussing this very thing, which is around collection of personally identifying information.

Oh, there's one other thing that I'm going to want to come back to, Mr. Minister, and that's around the repealing of the listings of those colleges receiving funding from the government. I'm wondering if that isn't starting to just open the door just the tiniest little crack to funding for-profit institutions. I would be most unhappy to see that. I'll come back to that one.

I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I'm searching for the actual information on the collecting of information from people other than students. I think specifically it was talking about two categories; one was the alumni, and the second was people who apply but do not in fact for whatever reason carry through and enrol in the institution.

[Dr. Brown in the chair]

One of the things I learned on the Health Information Act review – and I've discussed this before – is that we collect too much information, and we don't strip it. Yes, that's an onerous task, and it can be expensive, and all the usual qualifiers and excuses that I hear, but the fact of the matter is that we have a responsibility as stewards of that information. More globally, back to the trust issue, if we can't get the public to believe that we are foremost and most vigorous in protecting that information, they'll stop giving it to us, and then we've got research on nothing. So we really have to be careful about this.

I am questioning why you need personally identifying information on the alumni and on those enrolled. You should not need tombstone information on these people, tombstone information being the date of birth, date of death, first, middle, last names, and sometimes there's a version of that called business card information. You should not need that. What you need to know is, perhaps, gender. You should not be able to identify who you're talking about or who those statistics are about. You should not be able to. You get up and explain to me why you would need to know that John Brown, male, 18 years of age, lives on 112th Street and 100th Avenue. Why do you need to know that amount of information on someone when you're looking at enrolment factors? You do not need to have that personally identifying information, and if you do, you get up and tell us all why you need it, because I don't think that's necessary here.

I'm not shaking my finger at you in particular, Mr. Speaker. It's just for emphasis.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, point of order.

The Acting Speaker: What's your point of order?

Mr. Boutilier: I'll withdraw my point of order.

Ms Blakeman: Why am I not surprised? Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

To continue then. The information about collecting the personally identifying information of people in these circumstances I think is fraught with problems for all of us and particularly for the colleges. It's just so tantalizing, so inviting to see all that good information collected in one place and to be able to say: "Oh, look at what we could do with that. We could offer these people grants, and we could give their information to banks so that they could get more money and go more into debt as a student. It's just so good. Let's have the access to the information and share it with everybody." We cannot do that. We can only use the information for the purpose for which it was collected.

Now, why did you collect that information from those students enrolling? So they could enrol in the program. If they didn't enrol in the program, you should not be able to use that information for anything further.

For the alumni why do you have that information? If they're donors to a particular program or they are supporting through a financial contribution, great. Then you need that particular kind of information for them. But what else are you using it for? If you're using it for any reason other than why you originally collected it from them, you have to go back to them and say: we'd like your permission to use it for a different reason.

That is not contemplated in what's in front of us in this act in any way, shape, or form, and I would challenge the government that if that's what they really need it for, then fess up, step up to the plate, and explain that. Let me see it in the act that you've got it in place to go back to those people and get their permission to use their personally identifying information in a different way than the reason that you collected it for or that the government collected it for. Otherwise, it's a no go; you don't get to do that. I'm most unhappy when I see something like this in here.

Now, I was going to go back to the private colleges and the funding of them. What my issue there is that there's an interesting little sort of change in language, and what we've got is a repeal of a section that listed four private but nonprofit colleges, which are traditionally religious-based colleges, or at least that's how they started out. No, I think they all still are. They receive funding from the government, and the funding is determined by the regulations. So what we see here, evidently, is the ministry seeking additional – and I'm putting little quotes around it – "flexibility" as more institutions have been granted authority to offer degree programs, and they would be receiving funding as per the regulations, one assumes, for offering degree programs.

Historically, the ministry has given assurances that for-profit institutions will not receive funding. Well, if we end up with more for-profit agencies that are allowed to grant degrees – and when I look at the list here, interestingly, two of them that turn up, in fact, are for-profit institutions that I think are now approved to grant specific degrees. So most of them, as I say, are religious-based organizations, but we've got the DeVry Institute of Technology in Calgary and the University of Phoenix, which are both showing up. They're both clearly profit corporations, which is fine. There's nothing wrong with that.

What's wrong with it is that when you end up with that hybrid, that mix where a business that is supposed to be competing freely and openly in a free-market enterprise system, yada-yada-yada. We've all heard that rhetoric. But, no, what they really want to do is take their garden hose and hook up to that fountain of public funding.

I say that if you're going to be free-market private enterprise, great. More power to you. Go do it. But don't pretend and try and cloak yourself as being a public institution. That's what I'm picking out here, that we're ending up with a very interesting kind of cross sleight of hand on the definitions. Previously, we had only private colleges that were not for profit. They were receiving funding for their programs. Now we're shifting over to defining this as degree granting, and I'm just trying to make sure up front so everybody knows – and let's get it on the record, Mr. Speaker – that we will not have these for-profit educational companies able to get operational funding for granting degrees. I would like to get confirmation on that.

I appreciate the opportunity to raise those points. I'll see what the rest of the speakers have to say, but I'm very reluctant at this point to support this bill in second reading in principle. Thank you for the opportunity to speak, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Are there hon. members wishing to speak under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

There being none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Caldor.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to make some comments on Bill 9 here in its second reading stage this afternoon. I have some serious reservations about Bill 9, you know, and they specifically are around these issues of the composition of boards and specifically with the technical institutes and colleges.

Now, while under previous legislation the government still had the ability to appoint the majority of board members in technical institutions and in colleges, this change in Bill 9 would allow almost a doubling or more of the government's appointments on any given board in a given institution or college. So, you know, for a number of reasons I think that this is unnecessary and potentially destructive to the democratic composition of these boards. Also, I think it sends a rather negative message towards both these types of institutions, that their ability to be independent and to develop their own strategy and course of action, so to speak, is going to be much more seriously curtailed by the provincial government.

While of course this body is responsible for the funding of these institutions, I think that at this juncture, where we're trying to diversify the economy of this province and we are developing, you know, sort of a booming and vibrant population here in the province, the diversity and the proliferation of different types of colleges providing different types of information in perspective would really enhance our province, Mr. Speaker. This move, quite a heavy-handed move, I would say, to increase the amount of government-appointed board members of institutions to a minimum of 12 as opposed to previously a maximum of 12 at best would be coldly received by these institutions that would be affected.

Now, we've been phoning and speaking to a number of different colleges and institutions around the province, and you know most expressed a sense of surprise at this particular point in this legislation. Certainly it wasn't asked for, and at the same time the people who did manage to get a heads up on it were quite concerned. Remember that the composition of these boards includes teaching staff and support staff and students, the student body as well, and each of those stakeholders has a strong bearing on the maintenance and the future of a school. So, you know, if we're somehow watering or diluting that or changing the way that these different groups can interact with each other in a democratic way, then I think it would be at the peril of the functioning of these boards.

I think that the consultation wasn't there, and perhaps an amendment to this aspect of Bill 9 would be appropriate. We will hopefully pursue that here in this Chamber.

Just briefly, the other thing that I would like to comment on in regard to Bill 9 is this concept of retaining and using information that is used for registration in postsecondary boards. You know, although it's difficult to know what it's pointing at, my suspicion points specifically at the necessity, I think, of these postsecondary institutions to have to fund raise on an extended basis. I know that already the University of Alberta has put a tremendous amount of focus on fundraising in its last seven to 10 years. While that's an honourable thing, I suppose, it undermines the independence once again of a postsecondary institution, and it takes so much energy for a postsecondary institution to have to focus on fundraising to such a great degree.

Remember as well that when you're talking about fundraising – and that's a competitive environment – smaller institutions are less able to engage in that in an effective way. So, you know, the trail leads back, Mr. Speaker, to this whole idea that's in Bill 1, to move more towards an endowment system, towards more of an American-style system of funding our postsecondary institutions, and, you know, really leaning heavily on the alumni of postsecondary institutions to fund their colleges.

This is a road that, I guess, leads to some institutions not getting the funding that they need, and quite frankly it leads to a widening in the gap between the wealthy and the poor because you have certain institutions that will be very well represented and very well endowed and supported by their alumni and other places that will be less able to do so. That gap that is created between the wealthy and the less so as a result of that I think is less than acceptable for a democratic and a very, you know, egalitarian province that we've managed to maintain over these past hundred years.

Privacy of information. We were just talking about this a few short minutes ago, and once again it creeps into the whole debate. I think it's something that we have to remember as Members of this Legislative Assembly, just how important it is for us to protect the privacy and the integrity of one's personal information because, you know, at the end of the day that is the sovereignty that we have as individuals and together the collective sovereignty that we have as a community and as a political entity. So I would like to place my word of warning on that issue as well.

Bill 9. At the end of the day I think it's great that we have a process here by which we can perhaps make some amendments. While I do see some advantage to it, we would have difficulty supporting it as it is presently worded.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29 kicks in.

Any other speaker?

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education to close debate.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be happy to review the comments that have been made by members speaking to this bill and respond to the concerns raised when the bill gets to Committee of the Whole, if in fact the Legislature agrees to the bill in principle. So I would ask that we now do that.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a second time]

The Clerk: For second reading, Bill 3, City of Lloydminster Act. Adjourned debate: Mr. Snelgrove.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of procedure we had agreed – and I'm sorry I didn't inform the chair – to call Bill 10 first in order to have Bill 3 done at a later time this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. If that's an understanding.

The Clerk: Bill 10, Residential Tenancies Amendment Act, 2005, for second reading. Mr. Strang.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to take this time to . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, it's my understanding that this bill has not been moved for second reading, so is the hon. Government House Leader going to move on behalf of the Member for West Yellowhead?

Mr. Hancock: Perhaps we could call Bill 24. Mr. Speaker, I don't want to allude to the presence or absence of any member, but we had agreed that Bill 3 would be called at an appropriate time. So perhaps we could move to Bill 24.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. We'll go to Bill 24.

Bill 24 Fatality Inquiries Amendment Act, 2005

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister for Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon to move second reading of Bill 24, the Fatality Inquiries Amendment Act, 2005.

The proposed amendments are the culmination of a project that began almost three years ago. The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, the province's Chief Medical Examiner, and counsel from Alberta Justice formed the committee charged with reviewing the fatality inquiry process. The current fatality inquiry process was developed in the mid-70s. The objective of the project was to determine whether there might be a more effective and efficient method to meet the needs of Albertans in this new century.

Their work included an initial review of the existing fatality inquiry process in Alberta; consultation with other government departments, policing agencies, health professionals, legal professionals, and other parties with an interest in the fatality inquiry process; and the preparation of a final report to the minister. I might add, Mr. Speaker, that among those interested in this and who were consulted were the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner, numerous police forces, hospitals, the Fatality Review Board, the Alberta Civil Trial Lawyers Association, the Alberta Criminal Trial Lawyers Association, the College of Physicians and Surgeons, the Alberta Medical Association, the Canadian Medical Protective Association, Corrections Canada, the Alberta Mental Health Board, and the national Transportation Safety Board, together with appropriate ministries in government. The committee reviewed specific issues to ensure that responsibilities and roles are clearly defined in legislation and resources are used efficiently so inquiries are conducted in a timely, meaningful, and cost-efficient manner.

A public fatality inquiry examines the circumstances around a fatality to increase awareness of factors that put lives at risk. With this knowledge authorities are able to take measures to prevent similar deaths in the future, so the process must be as effective as it can be. Consultation took place over the summer of 2003, and the committee's final report was completed last year. Some of the proposed amendments are procedural in nature, but many of them will have a significant impact on the fatality inquiry process.

The procedural amendments include giving the Minister of Justice a formal authorization to release the judge's report to the public and eliminating the jury provisions in the act. Currently there is no provision for the release of the report, and a jury has never been called in Alberta.

There are also more substantive amendments that will impact how inquiries operate in the future. One of the substantive amendments will give the Minister of Justice the discretion to order the Chief Medical Examiner's office to conduct a limited investigation into the death when the death of an Albertan occurs outside Alberta. The medical examiner's investigation would be limited to gathering records that had been generated through the other jurisdictions' own death investigation process. The records shall be then given to the Fatality Review Board, who will make a recommendation to the minister as to whether or not a public fatality inquiry is necessary to examine issues specific to Alberta. The subsequent fatality inquiry, if called, would focus only on issues specific to Alberta. Witnesses would not be called from other jurisdictions to testify to the identification of the decedent, cause of death, and so on, as normally occurs at a public fatality inquiry.

As you may recall, in the year 2000 a group of schoolchildren were on a field trip to California. Three people died on that particular trip. After the tragedy there were calls for a fatality inquiry, but under the act at that time the minister did not have the authority to call an inquiry into a death that occurred outside the province. Presently if a death occurs outside Alberta but the body is brought to Alberta, a medical examiner or an investigator authorized by a medical examiner may conduct an investigation to establish or confirm the cause of death or establish the identity of the deceased person. The act does not authorize any further investigation into a death that occurred outside the province.

The review committee also found that there were situations where a person died while they were in the custody, care, or guardianship of government, but the fact that they were in care was unrelated to their death. Sometimes people die while they are in the custody, care, or guardianship of government. Examples of such circumstances are deaths that occur while the deceased person was in the custody of a peace officer or as a result of the use of force by a peace officer while on duty. Also, there may be a death of a child under the guardianship of a director under the Child Welfare Act or in the director's custody.

Under the present wording of the act the Fatality Review Board is required in these circumstances to recommend that a fatality inquiry be held unless it is satisfied that the death was due entirely to natural causes, was not preventable, and that the public interest would not be served by a fatality inquiry. The amendments would allow the Fatality Review Board to decline to recommend what would previously have been a mandatory fatality inquiry in cases where there is no meaningful connection between the death and the fact of the deceased's custody, care, or guardianship by the government.

For example, Mr. Speaker, consider the situation of a 16 year old under government care driving a car and unfortunately dying in a motor vehicle accident. At present, because that 16 year old is under government care, there would be a mandatory fatality inquiry. But, obviously, in that particular situation the death while not natural is also not connected to government care, and under the proposed change a fatality inquiry would not be required.

One of the primary goals of a fatality inquiry is to inspire confidence that the public authorities are taking appropriate measures to protect human life. If a death occurs for reasons that are entirely unrelated to the issue of government care, the Fatality Review Board should not be required to recommend an inquiry. The minister retains the right to call an inquiry in the event that the board does not make such a recommendation.

Other amendments to the act address the collection and disclosure of information by inquiry counsel as well as the disclosure of such material to participants at the fatality inquiry and final disposition of records and exhibits. Having all relevant information helps focus a fatality inquiry on the important issues and allows inquiry counsel to review circumstances surrounding the death, to identify potential issues and witnesses, and generally to prepare for the fatality inquiry.

Under the existing legislation inquiry counsel's authority to compel production of documents in the possession or control of others is not clearly spelled out. The amendments give inquiry counsel the authority to collect any record or information that is considered to be or could be relevant to the fatality inquiry. Relative to this, the custodian of records will be able to object to disclosure of records or information to inquiry counsel by going before the inquiry judge. Situations may arise where a person feels that they should not release records to inquiry counsel, often because the records are subject to some form of legal or statutory privilege. To resolve such questions, an inquiry judge can hear arguments and make a decision regarding disclosure.

The proposed amendment also clarifies access to exhibits. Many different kinds of records may be entered as exhibits to a fatality inquiry. While all parties with status at a fatality inquiry have the ability to examine the exhibits, whether or not the public can examine the exhibits was not clear. Allowing unfettered access to all exhibits to an inquiry could result in an inappropriate disclosure of the sensitive personal information they contain. In order to provide the proper protection to this personal information, an application should be made to the presiding judge to clarify the public's ability to examine the records. The judge can weigh the sensitive nature of the documents against the benefit to the public by their release on a case-by-case basis.

Under the present act the counsel appointed by the minister is the one who will present the evidence to the inquiry, but in some circumstances in the past the fatality inquiry judge also appointed his or her own legal counsel to act concurrently with the minister's counsel. As the counsel appointed by the minister carries out his or her duties in an impartial manner, it was felt that involving additional counsel can only complicate and perhaps inappropriately expand the scope of the inquiry.

The proposed amendment will accomplish two things. First, it will clarify that the person who is appointed by the minister is counsel to the inquiry itself and does not represent the interests of the Minister of Justice or the government of Alberta. This should eliminate the perception that a judge may need to appoint his or her own counsel to act in tandem with counsel that is appointed by the minister. Also, in cases of real or perceived conflict of interest the amendment will allow the minister to appoint outside counsel to take on the role of counsel for the inquiry. The amendment will also clarify that it is the responsibility of inquiry counsel to determine who will be called as a witness, with the assistance of the inquiry judge. This provision will further clarify the powers and duties of inquiry counsel.

A pilot project has recently been implemented in Edmonton for the holding of preinquiry conferences before the fatality inquiry begins. This bill reflects the goals of that procedure by including an amendment that allows an inquiry judge to hear from the parties and then determine the scope of the inquiry, address procedural questions, consider applications for status, and so on. Further conferences may be held before the inquiry or as the inquiry proceeds if the scope of the inquiry changes or expands as a result of newly unearthed evidence.

Under the present act there is no provision for preinquiry conferences. Matters such as the scope of the inquiry, issues, witnesses, production of documents, and so on, are dealt with in the course of the inquiry, often causing unexpected adjournments that interrupt the inquiry process. Preinquiry conferences will also serve to prevent such adjournments and delays. As noted, a number of preinquiry conferences have been conducted in Edmonton over the last number of months under a pilot project, and what we have seen clearly demonstrates the effectiveness of the approach.

As an example, a fatality inquiry was completed in early March into the death of a young boy who died after a collision with an unmarked police car on the Yellowhead Trail in Edmonton. The driver of the police car had been acquitted of charges of criminal negligence. The circumstances surrounding the accident were exhaustively examined during that trial.

A preinquiry conference was held, and the judge determined the main issues the inquiry should address. These were the nature of the activity the police were engaged in at the time of the crash, whether there was a policy in place that covered that activity, if there was, whether the policy was appropriate, and if not, whether there should be a policy.

Most importantly, for the purpose of illustration it was also decided that transcripts from the criminal trial would be entered at the fatality inquiry in place of oral testimony from approximately 50 witnesses. As a result, the inquiry was completed in only two and one-half days, and testimony that was previously given was used appropriately.

All persons who may appear in an inquiry should attend the conference, and applications for status in the inquiry should be made at the first preinquiry conference. Presently the act provides that an inquiry judge may grant status to any person who applies to the judge before or during the inquiry and is declared by the judge to be an interested person. There is a danger in granting interested person status inappropriately for it is a broad and undefined term.

The act allows interested persons to cross-examine witnesses and present arguments and submissions. For example, whether or not a person has sincere motivations, he or she may pursue issues that are not sufficiently relevant to the subject of the inquiry, resulting in undue delay, confusion, and inefficiency. Under the proposed amendments interested person status would be granted only to those parties who can demonstrate that they have a direct and substantial personal, legal, or business interest in the death, investigation, and inquiry.

One group intended to be affected generally by this proposal is the media. The role of the media is to report the news and not to make it. This rule change does not affect the media's role as reporter on the process.

So, Mr. Speaker, Bill 24 is an important piece of legislation that will ensure that fatality inquiries in this province are as efficient and as effective as possible. Albertans need to be confident in the outcome of the inquiry process and know that we are working to prevent further deaths wherever possible. I urge all members of the Assembly to give support to Bill 24.

At this time I would move that debate on Bill 24 be adjourned.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 3
City of Lloydminster Act

[Adjourned debate March 15: Mr. Snelgrove]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to all the comments and questions from all hon. members.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and it's nice to see you in the chair. I'm delighted to rise to speak to this bill. It's addressing a very interesting and unusual problem in a city that actually is a very interesting city and one that has a special place in my heart. I remember as a child driving up and down highway 16 between Edmonton and Saskatoon to visit relatives in Saskatoon and always thinking, "Well, when we get to Lloydminster, we're halfway through the journey," and stopping for a milkshake or a hamburger or something like that before carrying on to our destination.

Of course, over the years so many changes have overtaken Lloydminster. It's gone from a small, isolated, frankly, prairie town almost entirely agriculturally based, and I think, in fact, if I'm correct in my history – and I'm going purely from memory here – it was originally settled by the Barr colonists. So it's a city with a long and very interesting history. It has grown from its agricultural roots into a significant industrial city because of the heavy oil deposits in that area.

I also used to visit Lloydminster quite often in my work looking at health facilities and reviewing health facilities, and I remember going through the long-term care centre and the seniors' centre there, the seniors' lodge, and even the hospital, which at the time I think was on the Saskatchewan side. So I'm delighted to speak on this act.

The strength of Lloydminster's economy is often overlooked by the rest of Alberta because we're so focused on Fort McMurray or Calgary or the corridor, but actually Lloydminster is a very prosperous and growing community. I think someday it will take a place on the global level.

We talked today about west Texas intermediate and Brent crude as benchmark prices for the oil industry. Well, there will be a time when the Lloyd blend – and I don't mean a drink mixed at the house of the MLA representing that constituency, although that might be a good plan too, and maybe I'll sample it sometime, but I mean the blend of oil sands and heavy oil that come out of Lloyd and serve as a benchmark price for heavy oil in Alberta generally. This is a great city.

I also notice that the name of the city shares something in common with the name of the MLA who represents it. Lloydminster and – I don't know if I'm allowed to say his name here, but he's well known. I don't want to get a point of order here.

Ms Blakeman: Given names.

Dr. Taft: I can't use given names, but when I talk about how Lloyd has a soft spot in my heart, I generally mean the city of Lloydminster. Just so everybody's clear on that, Mr. Speaker.

This bill serves what is a unique function for a unique city and provides, as I understand it, in close co-operation with the Saskatchewan government effectively a legislative charter for the city of Lloydminster. Of course, this is necessary because the boundary between Alberta and Saskatchewan runs more or less up the middle of the city of Lloydminster. So the city is faced with the prospect of living in two provinces with two entirely different sets of legislation, and that, of course, can cause all kinds of problems. Imagine the complications in urban planning when half the city is governed under the legislation of Saskatchewan and the other half is governed under the legislation of Alberta or even simple things like bicycle helmets. There's a different bicycle helmet law in Alberta than in Saskatchewan. Suddenly, people crossing Main Street, Lloydminster – on one side of the street they have to wear their helmet and on the other side, maybe at a particular age, they don't have to. And it goes on and on and on. All those complications. So this legislation frankly continues a tradition of special treatment for the city of Lloydminster recognizing that it's divided between two provinces. Actually, I think it's kind of remarkable.

I see our New Democrat colleague is here, and of course many Conservative colleagues are here. This particular bill is kind of a bridge between the Conservative government of Alberta and the New Democrat government of Saskatchewan, and there aren't many things that could bring those two governments together, I don't suppose, but this bill is one of them.

This bill will resolve those issues. It will give a clear mandate to the citizens of Lloydminster and to the city administrators of Lloydminster and the city council there to keep their affairs in order.

In fact, I think work has been going on on this particular bill for some three or four years. A project team has been working to address the special issues faced by the people of Lloydminster. I believe I'm right in saying that a virtually identical or maybe exactly identical version has been passed already in the Legislature of Saskatchewan. With that, once the same legislation is passed here in this Assembly, then both provinces will have given a clear foundation to Lloydminster for all its activities.

I think we will be unequivocally supporting this legislation, Mr. Speaker. We don't want to complicate the lives of the people of Lloydminster. The people of Saskatchewan have already endorsed the identical bill, and it seems only sensible that this Legislature should do the same thing. We will then have matching legislation for the people of Lloydminster, and they can get on with the business of living and developing and growing in a prosperous and flourishing community. That's the intent of this bill. To my knowledge this bill will fulfill that intent, and so I will be recommending to our caucus that we support it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am rising this afternoon to speak in favour of this bill. I think that Lloydminster's unique place on the very border of Saskatchewan and Alberta warrants some sort of special legislation, and as my previous colleague mentioned, the government of Saskatchewan had passed very similar legislation in 2004. So for the sake of convenience and for the good relations that we can enjoy for all citizens of Lloydminster, both on the Saskatchewan and the Alberta sides, I think that it's important to harmonize the laws between the two provinces.

It's interesting how Lloydminster is an example, I think, of what's happening in terms of growth across western Canada at this point. With the heavy oil deposits that we find on both the Alberta and Saskatchewan sides, Lloydminster is enjoying really unprecedented growth over these past 15 or 20 years. I think it's important to allow that growth to carry on and to take place in an unfettered sort of way, I suppose, that the municipal laws somehow are able to encompass the best that both provinces' municipal laws and provincial laws are able to give.

You know, over the years we've seen the good people of Lloydminster taking advantage of Saskatchewan car insurance, say, for example, because of course they have a much better deal in Saskatchewan with public auto insurance. On the other side, I think there are some advantages with the provincial sales tax that Saskatchewan residents can and do enjoy as well.

I know that there was confusion around the smoking bylaw which was in place on the Saskatchewan side. Now, of course, the good people on the Alberta side will be able to enjoy the smoke-free health benefits and the peace-of-mind benefits that come with the smoking bylaw being extended across into the Alberta side. Of course, we would like to see that extend right the way across the province, but I think that will be another issue for another day.

So, yeah, I'm certainly speaking in favour of this bill. I think that border towns are always a unique place, and sometimes they will create unique solutions to problems. We can see it around the world. I think that Lloydminster has been a positive contribution to our province thus far, and it's creating some new, positive contributions here with a unique law that straddles the border between Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29? Any other speakers?

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster to close debate.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I want to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview for his kind comments. I think more members should have taken the opportunity to wax eloquently about my favourite city, and it's much the same as all Alberta cities that are enjoying tremendous growth. They just don't have quite the opportunity for such a fond name.

It is truly unique. It is developing a culture all of its own, and it does have the problems of straddling two provinces. In many cases it has used that to great success to become a service point for much of northern Saskatchewan and, of course, into Alberta.

So I appreciate the comments, and I would like to call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a second time]

Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2005

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and move second reading of Bill 28.

The Municipal Government Act authorizes the operations of municipal authorities and therefore affects the vast majority of Albertans. To improve the act, the government is proposing that some amendments be presented for discussion and approval by the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 28, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2005, will amend the act a number of ways, and I'll take a little bit of time to just explain to the members present what the amendments actually are intended to do. First of all, adding provisions that would allow municipalities to set and collect a community aggregate sand and gravel payment levy, clarifying issues regarding the flow of linear assessment process and jurisdiction, clarifying the intent of the assessment of Crown-owned property held under lease, licence, or permit in provincial parks and recreation areas, adding enabling provisions for a municipality to pass a community revitalization levy bylaw subject to provincial approval, and finally, providing regulation-making authority for the Lieutenant Governor in Council to establish any area as a community revitalization levy area and to set out the specific conditions that will be required.

I'll just go through each of the various sections individually and go into it in just a little bit more detail. The community aggregate payment levy is a levy that is proposed to be implemented through amendments to the MGA and would give municipalities the option of passing bylaws to set and collect a levy from sand and gravel operators. It would ensure that municipalities realize a financial benefit from the extraction of a natural resource located in their communities. Municipalities and industry support this levy, and they agree that sand and gravel operations should provide more funding for mitigation or other initiatives to demonstrate more clearly that communities benefit from these operations.

The proposal gives the minister regulatory authority to set the maximum rate of the levy and establish administrative details, and the levy would be based on the amount of actual material that is shipped. The levy would not replace road-use agreements between individual sand and gravel companies and individual municipalities. I think that's important to note, Mr. Speaker, because there has been some confusion that perhaps this was intended to replace one when in fact it is not.

Finally, municipalities that have already established fees or other charges related to sand and gravel will be encouraged to move to the standardized process of aggregate payment levies established with this amendment.

Mr. Speaker, the proposal was developed with the collaboration and support of the following groups: the Aggregate Resource Development Task Force, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, the Alberta Roadbuilders and Heavy Construction Association, the Alberta Sand and Gravel Association, and Alberta Infrastructure and Transportation.

The next area I'd like to discuss is the proposed amendments to the linear assessment process. The amendments regarding a linear assessment will improve the clarity of existing process, lead to internal administrative efficiencies, and result in improved linear assessments. Accordingly, the proposed amendment includes the preparation of a linear assessment roll. This would be similar to a municipal property assessment except that it's prepared by the assessor designated by the minister. It will also align the provincial assessment process with the municipal property assessment process.

One of the things, Mr. Speaker, that is an issue from time to time is the lack of requirement for notification when a pipeline or a pipeline company is sold, to advise the minister of that change, and then municipalities will send tax notices out and be advised that the company was sold. So this process will create a roll similar to real property. One of the provisions is that just as it's necessary to advise the municipality when you sell your house, you'll also be required to advise when you sell your pipeline. Only in this case it's the province that would be receiving that advice.

The next area has to do with Crown leases. The amendment clarifying the assessment of Crown leases will ensure consistency in property taxation rules among municipalities for similar property regardless of location. The recommendation is supported by my colleague the hon. Minister of Community Development in his capacity as minister responsible for Kananaskis Country.

Mr. Speaker, as a result of unintended interpretations of section 298(1)(k) by the Municipal Government Board and the courts, some private operators using Crown properties for business purposes have recently been exempted from paying property taxes on them. A number of other recent assessment appeals to the Municipal Government Board and to the courts have resulted in decisions to exempt certain businesses on property under lease, licence, or permit to the Crown. The appealed assessment value for these properties is significant to the local assessment and tax base. This has had a significant impact on the local assessment and tax base for Cypress county, Kananaskis Country, and improvement district No. 9.

A 2004 Municipal Government Board decision regarding a ski resort in Banff national park will affect other property in ID No. 9 and could result in additional revenue losses for that ID of up to $300,000, or approximately 30 per cent of their general municipal budget.

The proposed amendment will clarify the rules regarding when and where property is to be assessed if a person other than the Crown holds or uses property in a national park, provincial park, or recreation area. The amendment will continue to exempt any provincial park or recreation area, including any campground, day use area, or administration and maintenance facility held by the Crown in right of Alberta or operated under a facility operation contract or service contract.

However, Mr. Speaker, properties like downhill ski facilities, golf courses, food concessions, stores, and restaurants held under lease, licence, or permit will once again continue to be subject to property tax as was the original intent of the act. This will ensure fair and equitable property tax treatment regardless of the property's location and will result in a tax stability for municipalities and improvement districts impacted.

Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that when the Municipal Government Act underwent substantial amendments back in 1994, there was a move to plain language in the legislation. In this particular area there was no intent to have any change in policy. The intent was to bring forward exactly the same taxing policies that had been in place since 1968.

Since that time various taxpayers have appealed to the courts and then ultimately to the MGB, claiming that the change in wording in the act in effect bestowed a change in policy and an exemption from taxation. That simply was not the case then. It was not the intent then, and it is not the intent now. The intent is to continue to assess all properties that have historically been assessed within provincial parks with the exception of Crown-owned and -operated facilities and facilities that are operated under a specific Crown lease.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to spend a little bit of time discussing the community revitalization levy. Municipalities have been asking the province for access to innovative financial tools to help infrastructure needs. The proposed policy change will allow any municipality to pass a bylaw and designate a specific district for redevelopment and to set the duration of tax increment financing generally up to about 20 years.

In a tax increment financing scheme, a community revitalization levy tool is that a municipality would take out debentures to cover the cost of infrastructure servicing and other costs of redevelopment. As development occurs, the value of the property increases. Taxes collected on the increased assessment are captured in a separate fund to repay the debenture. This innovative financing scheme would see current property tax values held for project purposes at the current level for, again, up to 20 years or until the original investment has been recouped.

Mr. Speaker, just for simplistic explanation, basically what you would do is take an area that is undesirable for development, that requires significant public investment by the municipality. They would go out, they would borrow money, make that investment. The assessment that is in place in that designated zone would be frozen. Any new development that comes into that area would have the taxes diverted into a special fund that would first go to repay the debentures rather than into the general revenue of the city. Once that original investment has been recouped, then the zone ceases to exist, and everything returns to normal.

Mr. Speaker, it's important to emphasize that the proposals have been developed in consultation with Alberta's local governments in collaboration with targeted stakeholders. The overall result is that municipal authorities will be better able to continue providing the high quality of service Albertans have come to expect. The bill is part of the government's responsiveness to the needs of Alberta municipalities and their residents by providing two new innovative tools for revenue generation and clarifying certain property assessments and tax provisions.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the consideration of the House to give approval to Bill 28. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I appreciated the comments of the minister, and I appreciate his efforts at working to keep us well informed on this issue. It's a significant piece of legislation. It's a bit unusual in that it has four very unrelated kinds of aspects to it. Obviously, they're all tied into the Municipal Government Act, but they range from issues around managing sand and gravel right through to potentially very significant inner urban redevelopment projects and other issues as well. So it's a kind of disjointed piece of legislation in that way, but if it's the most efficient way to steer it through the Legislature, so be it.

I would like to begin by reflecting to the Assembly that I consistently hear concerns from municipal councillors that the Municipal Government Act is amended virtually every year, and while they ask for different amendments from time to time, there is a sense that their legislative base is always up for modification, and from one year to the next they're never quite sure what the rules are or what they're going to be.

We've argued recently that the Legislature should consider, actually, an amendment to the Alberta Act, which would amount in some ways to a constitutional amendment, establishing for municipalities a much more solid basis in the Alberta Act, what is in their control and what is not in their control, giving them the predictability and the security in the long term over their legal existence, because they do worry and fret about how secure their legal existence is.

I know that in this Legislature we've debated changes that have reduced the power of municipalities over things like intensive livestock operations when, in fact, some municipalities are very keen to have those controls and regret losing them. But that's a different issue for another time. All I'm really raising there, Mr. Speaker, is the concern that this act is amended so often that municipalities do worry about their legal security.

The intent of part of the bill is to help municipal governments manage and respond to sand and gravel operations, essentially, that may be within their boundaries. These operations, I know, can be very big, very noisy, environmentally quite disruptive. They can also be very economically important. The value of a large sand and gravel deposit to the owners can be easily into the many millions of dollars.

We can all easily imagine the wear and tear on roads that occurs as a result of a busy gravel pit or sand operation and the heavy truck traffic that that generates. We can also easily imagine the environmental disruption and the impact on surrounding property values that could result from this. So trying to help municipalities respond in an appropriate fashion through a levy like this seems, at first blush at least, to be quite a reasonable tool to give to municipalities and one more thing they can use to manage their complicated lives.

The aspect of the bill that deals with linear assessments is quite different, and it raises a few questions for me. Linear assessments presumably don't just apply to pipelines, as the minister suggested, but also to any rights-of-way; for example, for power transmission or that kind of utility corridor. Of course, these are very important for municipalities, for all of us. They're the corridors that run in some cases right through neighbourhoods, certainly right through cities, that allow us to get the electricity that we value and allow Alberta's very, very extensive pipeline network to function. People also see on their monthly power bills, I think, some of the effects of – I don't know if they call them taxes – city rights-of-way fees for power companies that get passed on to power consumers and are an important source of revenue to municipalities.

I can't help wondering what implications this bill might have to the bigger debates around major pipeline development in the province, pipelines coming from the north or pipelines extending to the west coast. I don't know if there's any bearing at all of this legislation on those projects or, for that matter, on the possibility of exporting electrical power to the United States, the need for very significant extensions of rights-of-way for transmission lines either directly into Montana or east into Saskatchewan, which is probably unlikely, or west into B.C. So I don't know if there are some implications of this bill on those possible projects, and I'd be interested to hear from the minister at some point if there are.

The Crown lease assessments I will need to study more carefully to really understand what the implications of those are and will be taking some time, I hope, over the next 10 days or so to look at those. Crown leaseholds are sometimes the subject of real debate and controversy in how they should be managed and how much revenue should be charged or what responsibility should be placed on the leaseholder, what privileges people should have, what access issues there might be. I'll be perfectly honest; we haven't had time to look into all of those issues. If this bill will affect those, I don't know.

I think that what we've heard the most about is the question of the revitalization levy that this bill proposes and will present as a tool to municipalities. I've heard about this for some weeks or months now in talks with city councillors certainly in Calgary and elsewhere, and I know there are divisions on whether these are good ideas or not.

I'm all in favour of giving municipalities more tools to manage their affairs and to be creative and in Calgary, for example, to redevelop the so-called East Village. I can see why some members of city council are so keen to get that project going, and I could easily imagine that one might work in Edmonton as well in certain areas of east downtown Edmonton.

A project like that can stimulate new development, it can take a decrepit or old or underdeveloped part of a city and bring it new life. It can generate in the long term new tax revenues. It could even help combat urban sprawl by allowing the intensification of an urban centre and more and more people living close to the city centre where they don't have to place demands on transportation, on roads, on LRT, or on schools or sewers or all of those other costs that come along with urban sprawl. There's even potentially an environmental benefit to reducing urban sprawl.

So those are all good things and I think need to be seriously considered and could provide real opportunities.

There are, of course, as with everything two sides to the debate. To us in here, all of us generally privileged, well-educated, coming from reasonably prosperous households, the rundown areas of central cities look like a blight, but to people who live there, people who are very different from most of us, people who are maybe homeless or struggling to get along in life, those are actually their neighbourhoods. That's where they live. In both Calgary and Edmonton there are thousands of these people, and unfortunately they are frequently the victims of these redevelopment projects. They end up being displaced. They get pushed out to other parts of the city, maybe into neighbourhoods where they weren't welcome before and aren't welcome now.

The very extensive services that develop in these blighted areas to help those people, services like homeless shelters, like detox centres, social justice agencies, health agencies, all of those services that develop in these rundown, inner urban areas also get displaced, and they lose track of the population they're intended to serve. So that's one of the downsides of this legislation that would need to be considered, and hopefully any business case brought to the cabinet by a municipality asking for one of these revitalization levies would need to address that and address that very seriously.

Another question that comes out of this is that basically what this does is allow a municipality to go into debt. I have to ask myself why we're encouraging or facilitating municipalities to go into debt. We're all supposed to be thrilled that this government is so-called out of debt although there are many ways to measure debt, and there are cases to be made that we're not out of debt at all as a provincial government. But that's been an objective of this government. Why is it that we're now making it easier for municipalities in Alberta to go further into debt? I think we need to consider that. What's good for the goose should be good for the gander.

Certainly, the provincial government right now has the resources to take a different approach to this problem. Rather than forcing municipalities into debt, it may want to consider establishing a revitalization fund to serve the same purpose and prevent cities from having to go into debt. After all, as is often said, there's only one taxpayer. The citizens of Calgary are also citizens of Alberta and of Canada. If we're trying to get those people out of debt, then it's really a bit of a slight of hand to say that, well, they're out of debt as provincial taxpayers, but they're deeper in debt as municipal taxpayers. So I think there are some serious questions there and long-term risks to the municipalities if we allow them or indeed encourage them to go deeper into debt.

It also makes me wonder if there isn't some opportunity here for creative funding or creative financing. Maybe there is a role for the provincial government to establish let's call it an urban redevelopment fund. If we want cities to go into debt, they'd borrow from this fund at a set rate. Rather than going to the open market, they'd borrow from the provincial government's fund and then repay at a long-term, predictable, low interest rate. The risks to the municipalities from that sort of opportunity might be really diminished. I think historically senior levels of government have actually been quite prepared to establish those kinds of funds to allow municipalities to borrow and redevelop housing and other services. So perhaps there's some opportunity here for creative thinking.

I will be asking the minister if he's given some thought – and I'm sure he has – to where the financing for these levies ultimately will be coming from. Will cities be going to the bond market or to international lending organizations, or would they have the opportunity to go to a municipal government finance corporation owned and operated by the people of Alberta to help their own cities get stronger? I don't know. I'd be interested in the response to that.

I also note that there are divisions on Calgary city council on this issue. That's healthy democracy, but we'll be trying to reflect those divisions and work them through in the debate on this piece of legislation as it works its way through this Assembly.

So an interesting piece of legislation, an interesting bill that has four rather disjointed components to it. I'm sure the intent of the bill is to help our municipalities be better, stronger, more vital communities and more vital governments. If that's the intent, we support it. But I'm also going to watch carefully as this goes through the Legislature and listen to the debate and listen to the stakeholders and see if there aren't ways that we can actually make this a better piece of legislation.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll turn the floor over to some other member of the Assembly and listen carefully. Thank you.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I speak to this bill from two points of view. One is as the MLA for Calgary-Varsity – and this bill very much affects my city – and also as the opposition critic for infrastructure. This bill is an attempt by municipalities to generate revenue locally. Municipalities have lost this ability due to government centralization of services. For example, the Calgary board of education used to be able to collect 50 per cent of their operating budget through property taxes, which they then used to target specific urban issues like ESL and special needs.

When the government took over this form of taxation, the municipalities lost out. They fought the province hard and successfully not to have their revenue further eroded by a reduction in the portion of the pump tax that they receive. If the province properly shared the revenue which it extracts from municipalities in the form of taxes for education, health care, et cetera, this bill would not be necessary. The reality is that there is only one taxpayer, and whether the money is taken by the province or by the city, the money is gone.

I have no trouble taxing gravel trucks and operators. I'm glad that provincial parks are exempt because that would leave the province to be taxing itself.

I do have trouble with this somewhat desperate act on the part of municipalities to try and generate or replace revenue which should be forthcoming from the province's general revenue, especially given our series of billion dollar surpluses.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29 kicks in. Any questions?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I'm really glad to get a chance to make some comments on Bill 28, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2005. There's a lot of discussion in my household around the MGA, and although it's not my particular interest, I'm hearing a lot about it whether I want to or not. So I'm glad to be in the Assembly while it's being debated and to hear the different points of view that are being brought forward.

We actually have a number of people in the Assembly that have a lot of direct, hands-on experience in municipal government. I hope that we're going to get some of them up and speaking to this bill because I'd be delighted to hear what their point of view is on this. There's a lot of accumulative municipal experience here, so I'm looking forward to that, Mr. Speaker.

Where I want to start on this one is, really, we're looking here at the relationship between the province and the municipalities. Relationships often flounder on the rocky shores of money.

Dr. Taft: They founder too.

Ms Blakeman: Sorry. Exactly. I've been corrected already, and I'm not even three minutes into this.

I note that it's always interesting that we've had a lot of download from the provincial government onto the municipalities to take responsibility for delivery of services and of programs and/or the provincial government has withdrawn from a share of the funding formula and has drawn back in how much they're actually contributing. When we look at, for example, some of the programs around FCSS, which is meant to be an 80/20 split between the province and the municipalities, when the province sort of stayed their contribution to the formula, eventually it flipped right over. We ended up with the municipalities putting in 80 per cent and the province 20 per cent.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has the floor. Any member wishing to converse, we have a beautiful facility just outside this Chamber. Please excuse yourself and continue your conversation there.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have a relationship between the province and the municipalities around the distribution of responsibility for programs and for funding those programs, but we also have a disparity between the two on ability to fund those programs, essentially. Something interesting happens. The only tool that the municipalities really have is property taxes.

Both the provincial and the federal governments have income tax, and they get a bonus because when people earn more or when you have more people paying income tax, without doing anything, the province and the feds make more money. The more people earning money that gets taxed or people earning additional money and it's taxed as a percentage of their income, without doing anything, without ever appearing to raise any percentage or level of taxes, the province and the federal government benefit. They don't have to do anything.

The municipal governments, because it's based on a specific percentage of the property tax – and that does not rise just because you have more people working, for example – and even taking the market value assessment that we've moved to, it still doesn't automatically increase in the same sort of way, so the municipalities really get the raw deal. It simply does not increase for them. They have to be very visible and, frankly, accountable as well when they are trying to get more money. So they're kind of stuck whereas the other two levels of government get a bit of a free ride when they're looking for a source of income from income taxes.

The Alberta Liberal opposition has argued for some time that we need a new relationship between the province and the municipalities, and one that is, frankly, less paternal. It needs to recognize that our cities are our major economic drivers. You know, in some cases our cities are now larger than some other provinces in the country. We've got to take seriously their status in what we're doing, and I think that if we don't, we will end up with some of our cities – who knows? – maybe Edmonton, maybe Calgary, seriously investigating some of the other options that are being looked at in other parts of the world, like becoming a charter city where they essentially set themselves up on their own, and that takes them away from the control of the province.

I'm not saying that as a threat. I'm just making it as an observation that if you allow a situation to develop that is so inequitable, eventually people will find a way around it, and I'm always amazed at how ingenious people can be about that kind of thing.

So we need to relook at that relationship between the province and the municipalities. I mean, our Constitution sets out that there are really two levels of government in the country, the federal government and the provincial government. Therefore, the municipalities don't, sort of, figure unless they're thought of as entities of the provincial government. I think we've got to find a new relationship there and, frankly, put it into a recognizable form, and that may well have to do with amending the Alberta Act.

We have to be allowing the municipalities more tax tools, and I would argue some tax tools that are more akin to the income tax regime that the provincial and federal governments are able to enjoy. In particular, I think we need to recognize that municipalities along with a number of other groups in the province and in different sectors need to know that there is predictable funding, that there is stable funding, and that there is sustainable funding. Now, whether that's grant funding that's coming from the province to the municpalities or their own ability to collect money to provide the services that their citizens need, both of those need the predictability, stability, and sustainability that I'm talking about.

Now, one of the issues that I've addressed in the House before that links to this issue around flexibility of municipalities to work with the taxation tools that are available is around some wellness initiatives. You've heard me talk before about the ability of the municipalities to work with the education property tax and to be flexible about it, which has not happened. In particular, I'm talking about adult recreational groups here.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the House stands adjourned until 8 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 22, 2005 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 20050322
 [The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Good evening. Please be seated.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading
Bill 1
Access to the Future Act

[Adjourned debate March 15: Mr. Chase]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to see you there. It's my first shift in which you've been in the chair.

It's a privilege to rise tonight to speak to Bill 1, which is called Access to the Future Act. This is a bill that I made a particular point of coming in to speak to because of a number of reasons. One, of course, is personal experience. Postsecondary education is of real importance to me. I spent many years of my life in postsecondary education institutions, the great majority of the time as a student, but I did some research and a small bit of teaching as well, some publishing. Actually, my father taught in university for many, many years and ended up as a vice-president of a major university as well. He was part of a generation of academics post-World War II who played a key role in building the modern university system in Canada, and he would sometimes talk about the role of the university in society. So that's one of the reasons this piece of legislation is important to me.

Another one, of course, is that the largest postsecondary education institution in the province, the University of Alberta, is in my constituency. It's coming up soon to celebrating its own centennial, and it has established itself as one of the top universities in Canada. I think its ambition should be to be one of the top universities in the world, and they have tried that. They're working in that direction, but it's going to take time and will and resources from this government.

The U of A is a very large university. There are about 25,000 undergraduate students full-time. There are another 5,000 or more full-time and part-time graduate students. They grant between undergraduate and graduate degrees well over 6,000 degrees a year. Of course, they're a huge contributor to Alberta's cultural life, its intellectual life, and its economy. So I pay close attention to the University of Alberta. Hence, one more reason that I'm speaking to this bill.

There's another postsecondary education institution in my constituency of Edmonton-Riverview. It's the Centre for the Arts campus of Grant MacEwan College. Actually, it used to be called the Jasper Place campus, and it's on the far northwest corner of my constituency. I've toured that facility. It's got some wonderful programs, a good theatre program . . .

Ms Blakeman: It's moving downtown.

Dr. Taft: I'm told that's actually moving from my constituency to Edmonton-Centre, but so be it.

. . . and a great communications program there and other facilities and programs.

So personal experience, political commitment: those are two reasons that I'm speaking to this bill. I also happen to be a big proponent and supporter of the role of postsecondary education in society generally.

First and foremost, I see it as a major contributor to citizenship. Education isn't, in my view, first and foremost about getting a job. It's first and foremost about taking an active role and fulfilling your life as a member of a broader society, and I think that's a crucial role for all education, including lifelong education. Producing committed, informed, engaged citizens who build a better society is absolutely key to postsecondary education. Postsecondary education also contributes to our cultural life, the academic or intellectual mix of a society, and of course makes an ongoing contribution to our economic prosperity.

If we are to be competitive in the world, we need a well-educated populace. We need research. We need people thinking at the leading edge, people innovating, whether it's in medicine or engineering or in the humanities or the arts or film or music, whatever. All of those are important mainstays of our economy, and we sometimes think too narrowly about the role of education in economics, thinking strictly in terms of job training, education for teachers or doctors or engineers or for apprentices, for journeymen, for those kinds of jobs. But we should remember that the arts also play a crucial role in our economy, and one reason that Edmonton, for example, has such a strong arts community, which contributes so much to our economy and culture, is the strength of the postsecondary institutions producing those artists.

Maybe it's for those reasons that we as a caucus have made postsecondary education such a high priority and that the Alberta Liberals made it such a high priority in the election campaign last fall. One of the brightest lights in our platform was a commitment to stronger postsecondary education, and we got a tremendous public response. People everywhere we went were encouraged and excited and sometimes actually were spontaneously cheering for our policy. Through the election campaign I stopped at Peter's Drive-In on 16th Avenue in Calgary. Is that in Calgary-Mountain View?

An Hon. Member: Yes it is.

Dr. Taft: It is in Calgary-Mountain View. As I had ordered my food and was walking away from the wicket with a couple of other people who were with me, we got about 50 feet away and suddenly we heard this cheering and people calling out for us. We turned around and a group of students had recognized me from the campaign trail and were actually spontaneously cheering us on because of our postsecondary education policy. So we know it resonated. We even got a photo of the students, and they might be on our website, Mr. Speaker, should you ever be interested in looking at it.

Our policy included an endowment fund. It also included a commitment to greater core funding for postsecondary education, a freeze on tuition costs, and an increase in the number of places for students to attend. SAIT, I understand from meetings, as recently as last September turned away over 5,000 fully qualified applicants because there weren't enough spaces, and that's a shame. That's not only a betrayal of those students; it's a betrayal of ourselves and our future.

So I would like to see in legislation addressing postsecondary education something comprehensive, something that addressed the heavy costs that students and their families face in attending postsecondary training, whether it's NAIT or SAIT or other colleges or universities, something that opened up the number of spaces so that we didn't have a labour shortage, so that we didn't have to import foreign workers, so that we trained aboriginal members of Alberta and Canada and we trained our young people and we trained people who wanted to return to the workforce – why aren't we channelling more money to our technical schools instead of importing workers from, say, Venezuela? – something that addressed the issue of debt, something that addressed the issue of core funding, something that addressed the infrastructure decline in our postsecondary institutions, which is really quite dramatic and quite severe. I would have liked to have seen all of that, but until there's a Liberal government in Alberta, we won't. Instead, we will see somewhat more limited vision, and hence we end up with Bill 1, the Access to the Future Act.

Now, the Access to the Future Act has at its core a pretty good idea in fact, which is establishing an endowment fund, a very substantial endowment fund, to help offset the costs of postsecondary education either through supporting students or through supporting the institutions themselves, doing things like, I believe, endowing chairs, for example, and perhaps providing other services and supports to universities or colleges or technical schools.

This fund would be managed under the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, and while I can understand, on one hand, the reason for that strategy – I guess there's a claim that it will be somehow more efficient, save on administration – I do have a concern that we should in fact be establishing a separate endowment fund dedicated specifically to postsecondary education and without any cap on it. Why should we limit how much we're prepared to invest in postsecondary education, Mr. Speaker?

We could be building and we should be building the future of this province for decades and generations to come. In fact, we should be debating tonight what the people in Alberta will be looking at a century from now and judging us by because we do stand here from time to time and look back a hundred years and acknowledge the importance of acts such as that of the First Legislature, which established the University of Alberta. We say to ourselves: how farsighted. We should be asking ourselves: what can we do today that will be judged similarly a hundred years from now?

I think one of the things that would qualify for a good judgment a hundred years from now would be to establish an endowment fund without a cap. So instead of a $3 billion endowment fund let's establish an endowment fund that could grow to $3 billion and $5 billion and $8 billion and $10 billion and $20 billion and who knows how many billion dollars?

We know that investing in postsecondary education is key to building our future, and we should know that our oil and gas revenues, which bring so much prosperity to us today and will for the next few years, won't be there forever, or they won't be valuable forever. We might well find that new technology overtakes them, so we need to save what we have now and invest it in permanent prosperity through a much larger endowment fund than is proposed here.

I'm also concerned that one of the effects of Bill 1 is going to be to tighten – tighten – centralization and government control over our postsecondary education. That was actually a concern I had with a big piece of legislation that was brought forward I think it was last spring, the Post-secondary Learning Act. My concern is that instead of encouraging many voices and instead of encouraging a diversity of opinion as we centralize control in the hands of government and ultimately in the hands of a cabinet minister over our postsecondary system, we lose the vitality of our postsecondary education. We end up with a system that marches to the directions of a cabinet minister instead of marching to the directions of a thousand or 10,000 bright minds occupying the desks and classrooms of the province.

So centralization is a worry, and I'm not sure if that's an intent of this bill, but I think it could be an effect. We see it played out, for example, very early in the act: section 2, where the bill talks about establishing enrolment targets, and carries on through section 3 and section 4. You can almost feel the hand of the cabinet ministers tightening over the throat of the postsecondary education in this province.

I'm also concerned about the potential rise in the influence of corporations over our postsecondary education system. I happen to be a strong believer in education for the sake of education and of an independent and free academic voice in this province.

Those are some of my comments on Bill 1. We will be continuing this debate at some length, and I've really barely begun to scratch the surface. A lot of this bill leaves crucial things undefined, and that always makes me nervous. The measures to enhance interinstitutional transferability and the recognition of prior learning are undefined; relieve the measures to increase participation of disadvantaged groups, undefined. The mechanisms to establish institutional enrolment targets and admission requirements are undefined. Over and over and over we are turning the fate of our postsecondary education institutions of all sorts to regulation and, ultimately, to a cabinet minister, and that's a concentration of control and power that makes me nervous. Believe it or not, Mr. Speaker, I'm a skeptic of big government, and what I see coming out of this government more and more is exactly that, big government.

So, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to the debate. I'll listen to my colleagues. I'll read Hansard. I will study the many notes we have on Bill 1. Its intention may be good, but I think its execution is flawed.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Does anyone wish to speak on 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me start by saying something really positive about this government, positive as well as a misconception they are providing to the people of Alberta. The government promised the next Alberta will be a leader in learning. [interjections] Good. Good. The government promised the next Alberta will have a diverse and growing economy. [interjections] Good. The government promised the next Alberta will be a leader in Canada and the world. Finally, the government also promised that the next Alberta will be the best place to live, work, and visit and that all Albertans will share in the Alberta advantage. [interjections] Good. Good. This is the government's 20-year so-called strategic plan. [interjections] Shall I carry on?

However, through these plans the government is providing . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has the floor. We should let him speak.

Mr. Agnihotri: However, through these plans the government is providing false impressions to the people of Alberta. It's great to show the people an attractive word, but the words of the government have for the most part not had any credibility. [interjection] Listen, listen. Okay?

I'm pleased to say a few words with respect to Bill 1. First of all, I want to commend the government for a bold new initiative lifted from the pages of the Alberta Liberal platform that's then watered down. Albertans have been starved for the last 12 years of underfunded postsecondary education. The minister himself said that it is time to take postsecondary education off its starvation, maybe late but good to start.

An Hon. Member: Who was starving it?

Mr. Agnihotri: A PC, of course.

Taking initiative on the issue which is the top priority of Albertans, I'm glad the government has seemingly taken a renewed interest in postsecondary education with Bill 1. The government seems committed in principle but not firmly committed enough to put the money into the fund without capping the value of the fund. What is the future of this endowment fund if there is a downturn in the price of oil and natural gas and future budget surpluses evaporate? Students will either have no endowment fund at all or a smaller endowment than initially promised. Leaving contributions to the fund to annual budget battles is short-sighted and falls short of the commitment of the Alberta Liberals.

I would like to commence by outlining some of the concerns from my riding's point of view. My riding is culturally diverse. A large population of immigrants, different nationalities are settled in this part of Edmonton. Many of the immigrants have blue-collar jobs, and they want their children to get a higher education. This bill does not provide any opportunity for them. Some of my constituents have taken a second mortgage to keep their children in postsecondary education. Students are frustrated with the student loan system, which is inadequate, the burden of their debt, large classroom sizes, and high tuition fees.

We have shortages of skilled labour – engineers, doctors, nurses, scientists, and so on – but why? Not because our children do not want to learn or not because parents do not like their children to get educated. The answer is very simple. They were unable to get the space, and therefore they were unable to get the opportunity they deserve. Where is the Alberta advantage? Higher education is critical for meeting our demands for skilled labour and ensuring that our students are able to compete in the job market. If we had a long-term, independent postsecondary learning commission to do a full review of the whole system, we would be more likely to find a real solution to these problems.

We do not have a long-term concrete plan to provide resources to the areas that need it most. The Faculty of Arts, the Faculty of Science have the highest numbers of students. Therefore, these are the programs that need to be sustainable. However, evidently funding these programs is not what the government cares about. They continue to ignore the arts and social sciences and are not committed to the arts and humanities that the Alberta Liberals would like to see. We, of course, had a plan. Again, this part was not adopted by the government. We had a plan to put 5 per cent of every annual budget surplus into a fund to complement the federal Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council. We think the government should do the same thing, Mr. Speaker.

If the government really wants Albertans to dream about high-quality postsecondary education, they should start high-quality affordable education from early childhood education right through to graduate degrees. This would be the foundation for creating a society with equal opportunity for all. It's also vital to remember that such investments pay off not only in terms of economics but by creating a sustaining condition for a vibrant, diverse culture and democratic society.

I want to see some amendments in this Bill 1. The first amendment we will be moving will be to remove the $3 billion cap on the access to the future fund.

Number two. The second will put guidelines on the size and composition of the access advisory council and place some restrictions on the minister's ability to appoint whomever he wants. For the most part the advisory council members would be appointed by the minister from candidates nominated by others; for example, representatives from each of Alberta's public universities nominated by the boards of governors. There would also be council members chosen to represent public colleges and technical institutes, private not-for-profit colleges, faculties, sports staff, undergraduate students, grad students, members of the public including but not limited to the form of this amendment. It is still being fine-tuned, so I don't have exact numbers to share with you, but the information I have given should be enough to get you talking about this. I think that you should start working on this.

A third amendment will be required: the minister to bring accountability and transparency to the process by reporting on each new and ongoing grant made from the fund in the ministry's annual report.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Does anyone wish to rise on Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie would acknowledge, in the context of the comment he made about this proposal being lifted from the pages of the Alberta Liberal platform, that his own leader and party lifted the proposal they had in their platform from a resolution put forward by the PC Association of Edmonton-Riverview at the last annual general meeting of the PC Association of Alberta and, if not, whether he'll go back and do his research.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to respond?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on 29(2)(a)?

Mr. R. Miller: No, I'd like to speak to Bill 1.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on the bill, seeing no other people wishing to talk on 29(2)(a).

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I certainly appreciate very much having this first opportunity to speak to Bill 1, the Access to the Future Act. I think we can all recognize a good piece of legislation, and I will say up front that this is probably a pretty good piece of legislation. I think we can all recognize a good piece of legislation when all parties in the Assembly spend an awful lot of time trying to lay claim to it.

I am going to be speaking in favour of Bill 1 this evening, Mr. Speaker, with some qualifications. Since it was our idea, I would expect that I would be generally in favour of it. As others before me have said, I would like to remind all members that this was, in fact, Alberta Liberal policy during the past election when most people at the doors were telling us that the government had no policy at all. Now, our policy platform called for a full 35 per cent – and I think that was articulated very well – of any annual surplus to go into a postsecondary endowment fund.

According to a survey of Calgarians by the faculty association published last November, 45.5 per cent of those surveyed rated investment in university education as a high priority, and it followed only investment in health care and investment in K to 12 education, Mr. Speaker, in ranking.

Now, in the government's It's Your Future survey, that rather weighted survey, a full 50 per cent of respondents indicated that long-term investment in priority areas was something that they would like to see supported. So, quite clearly, accessibility, affordability, and quality of postsecondary education were indeed important issues in the election of last November. In fact, I would suggest that a number of Conservative members of this government lost their seats, Mr. Speaker, in constituencies which are home to a postsecondary institution. I'm very pleased to be able to stand here today and say that Edmonton-Rutherford is home to the Taylor University College and Seminary, which is among those postsecondary institutions on the list that I just referred to.

Since the current incarnation of this Conservative government has been in place, going back to 1993, funding for postsecondary education has not kept pace with inflation or enrolment increases. During the years 1994 to 1997, in fact, the government cut funding to postsecondary education by a full 21 per cent. Most postsecondary institutions continue to struggle to make up for that lost ground, and that struggle goes on today. Many of those same institutions in fact are predicting budget deficits in either one or more of the next few years. So, Mr. Speaker, I certainly applaud the government, as I said earlier, for taking a step in the right direction – and I do believe that this a step in the right direction – in an effort to address the concerns that I heard time and time again as I visited more than 10,000 homes last fall.

Now, it would be my preference, quite frankly – and I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie alluded to it – that there be no cap included in the legislation. I'm disappointed to see that. I think my colleague indicated that there will most likely be an amendment coming forward from the Official Opposition.

Ms Blakeman: That's a good idea.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you to my colleague from Edmonton-Centre for indicating that she, too, thinks that it's a good idea that that cap be removed.

Now, we continue to hear from stakeholders almost every day hoping and praying for long-term, predictable, and stable funding, and I'm sure that members opposite have heard that too. Three billion dollars is certainly a beginning. It's been said in here many times already. But just imagine, Mr. Speaker, if you would, if the world price of oil continued to soar as it is doing almost daily: $55 today; it could be $60 in a week or a month. Maybe $80 is the benchmark that some industry analysts are predicting.

An Hon. Member: It could be $10.

Mr. R. Miller: It's not likely to be $10 any time in the near future, although there are certainly those that might like to see that. I wouldn't expect, Mr. Speaker, that anybody on the government side would like to see oil at $10 a barrel because I have a feeling that their political fortunes might suffer if that were to be the case.

Nevertheless, industry analysts are predicting that it could go as high as $80 a barrel. Just imagine how this fund could grow if it were not capped but, rather, if it were allowed to do so. At $80 a barrel, you know, the sky is truly the limit in terms of where that cap could go and what it might do for us.

During the election campaign, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, who spoke to this bill a few minutes ago, dared to dream out loud about the possibility of Alberta being home to a world-class and world-renowned university such as Yale, Princeton, Harvard, Cambridge, or Oxford. Now, a $3 billion cap on this fund would never allow us to reach that benchmark, unfortunately. Again, if we were to allow the fund to grow and, in fact, encourage it to grow by removing the cap – $10 billion, $20 billion, $50 billion – in a number of years who's to say where it would be, and who's to say just what standard of postsecondary institution we might be able to achieve. So I certainly look forward to the committee stage when we'll have a chance to deal with that amendment coming forward from the Official Opposition, and I would certainly hope that all members will be supportive of it when we get there.

I would also like to address the fact that Bill 1 seemingly targets and by targeting seems to favour applied research initiatives and other high-priority programs which seem to be related to commercial potential. Specifically, section 4(2)(d) says that the fund is generally "to encourage the creation or expansion of industry funded and privately funded scholarship and bursary programs." Now, of course, the Alberta heritage science and engineering research endowment fund, otherwise known as the ingenuity fund – the idea of encouraging growth in those sectors and, in fact, legislating growth in that fund, those are both lofty goals. The program itself is a lofty program. Nobody on our side is going to suggest that science and research should not be a priority, Mr. Speaker, but nowhere in the bill – again, I think my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie mentioned this – does it talk about the arts and humanities, and I'm afraid that we're shortchanging our society if we don't address that particular issue.

Later in this spring session I understand that we're going to be debating a private member's motion. I believe it's Motion 505, Mr. Speaker. It's being brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont. This particular motion will call on the government to consider the merits of "requiring five credits in fine arts as a condition for high school graduation" in Alberta. Now, I think that would be a recognition, if it were to move forward, that our society is strengthened and, in fact, healthier and wealthier when we recognize and encourage the need for the advancement of the arts and the humanities rather than simply concentrating on science and economics and so forth.

Also, Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon myself and several of my colleagues had the opportunity to meet with a group of students from CAUS, the Council of Alberta University Students. In fact, I believe they were introduced in the Assembly this afternoon and some of them yesterday as well. They're on a tour, meeting with legislators across the province to bring forward the concerns that Alberta university students have.

For me one of the most interesting revelations to come out of the meeting yesterday was that approximately 50 per cent of student loan application denials come as a result of issues surrounding parental participation or lack thereof. That caused me a great deal of concern, Mr. Speaker. It's almost as if there's some sort of reverse discrimination taking place there. I'd like to explore the issues around that a little further, and I hope that perhaps the government will when they're developing their new tuition policy. Hopefully, we can have a serious look at just exactly what's happening and why so many loan applications are being denied on that basis.

Now, again, average tuition for colleges and technical institutes: the information I have shows that those tuitions have increased approximately 250 per cent since 1993. For some reason it seems like we're making it more difficult to access student loans rather than the other way around.

Moving on a little bit, in the bill section 5(2) allows for the minister to name the members of the access advisory council, and again I believe that both the Member for Edmonton-Riverview and the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie referred to this council, specifically the makeup of it and what the parameters would be surrounding how that council would work. We talk a lot about democratic renewal in the Official Opposition, and one of the things that I would hope for is that if there are going to be any members of this Assembly on that council, which often happens, the minister would ensure that there's representation from all parties on that council. [interjection] I don't believe the Alliance would qualify as a party in terms of recognition by this Assembly, so the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood probably doesn't have much of a concern in that regard.

Mr. Speaker, last night in this Assembly we began some debate on private members' business specifically related to private member's Motion 503, which, it was discussed last night, is remarkably similar, almost an exact duplicate in fact, to section 8 of this Bill 1 that we're discussing this evening. The only real difference is that Motion 503 clearly outlines a timeline for topping up the ingenuity fund to $1 billion from the current amount of $500 million, and in Bill 1, that we're debating tonight, that's left entirely up to the purview of the minister.

So although I'm not sure that we have an amendment coming forward from this side, I would certainly hope and I'll be encouraging the appropriate critic to make sure that that amendment does come forth because again I think that it would probably be better dealt with, quite frankly, as an amendment, that way ensuring that we have some solid guidelines in the bill for when that fund would be topped up as opposed to leaving it up to the whim, if I can say, of the minister.

In fact, I would like to see similar guidelines brought forward for the postsecondary endowment fund in general, to see some concrete legislation included in the bill that would outline when the money is going to be put in there. If we have to live with a $3 billion cap, which I'm hoping will be removed, we can outline for the minister what the timeline is to get to that $3 billion and get there just as soon as possible.

Now, Mr. Speaker, many of the members will know that I am the parent of two teenage children, one of whom is only months away from his graduation from high school. As a parent of two teenagers I certainly do share many of the concerns that I heard from the residents of Edmonton-Rutherford over the last six months or so specifically again regarding access and quality of postsecondary education but, most particularly, probably affordability. I don't imagine that I'm much different from most parents, especially if you have more than one child that you're trying to plan postsecondary education for, where affordability tends to be the number one concern for parents. I mean, getting in is one thing, but even if you can qualify for postsecondary given the high entrance requirements these days, there's always a question of how you're going to pay for it. As I said, I don't believe I'm much different from most other parents when it comes to that.

Now, having said all of that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to echo some comments that were made to me by Taylor University College and Seminary. As I indicated, this is a postsecondary institution that's in my constituency, and I thought it prudent to consult with them to get their input on this bill. They've indicated that from their point of view providing long-term secure resources to support higher education is a good way to use the wealth that Alberta enjoys as a result of the present exploitation of nonrenewable resources.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) there's a five-minute period for questions and comments if anyone has any. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you. I'm wondering if the member could just expand on the comments he was making on resources. I'd be very interested in hearing that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd be happy to expand a little bit upon what I was saying there regarding resources. In fact, they were not my words but the words of the administration at Taylor University College when they were indicating that providing long-term, secure resources to support higher education is a good way to use the wealth that Alberta enjoys as a result of the present exploitation of nonrenewable resources. Accordingly, creating endowments for future generations of Albertans from the current resource revenue is in fact sound policy, and that was the point that Taylor University was happy to have me convey to you. I'm almost finished here. I'm happy to have had the opportunity to address the question about resources.

As I said at the outset, I will be supporting Bill 1 in second reading and look forward to the point when it's at committee so that we can deal with some of those questions that I've raised. I certainly would hope that other members in the Assembly would support some of those very worthwhile and well-thought-out amendments that will be coming forward from the Official Opposition.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: On Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 1, the Access to the Future Act. It's a pleasure because it's a rare occurrence, at least in my tenure in this Assembly, to actually be able to debate a bill that talks about putting money into something like postsecondary education.

This is a real departure, I think, for the government, and I think that in that very broad sense this is an extremely positive bill and a tremendous sea change, I guess, in the government attitude. It's interesting that the Liberals and the Conservatives are fighting over the paternity of this bill, Mr. Speaker.

But there are a number of things here that need to have some scrutiny. You know, the fact that funding will be provided to postsecondary education needs to be carefully considered relative to some of the problems with this bill. First and foremost, Mr. Speaker, this bill is based upon unbudgeted surpluses, and we have had a concern in the NDP for years about the government's use of unbudgeted surpluses because we don't think that it represents very good stewardship of the province's resources.

The government has for years now lowballed – deliberately lowballed, Mr. Speaker – the energy prices in their budgeting and, as a result, produced multibillion dollar surpluses every year, which if they had accurate forecasts or reasonable forecasts for the price of oil and natural gas would not exist because those revenues would be captured within the budget. And they should be captured within the budget.

The first problem with this particular approach is it assumes that the government is entitled to continue to use inaccurate and far too low figures for the price of oil and gas as a way of budgeting for the province. It would be far preferable, Mr. Speaker, in our view, if you actually tried to accurately predict or as close as possible the real price of oil and natural gas and the royalties that flowed from that, and you put it into the budget, and you allocated that in the budget for postsecondary education rather than perpetuating the kind of shell game that the Conservatives have played for a number of years relative to royalty revenues. That's the first thing, that it perpetuates that kind of deceptive budgeting on the part of the government and, in fact, institutionalizes it. So that's a serious concern.

We understand based on conversations with the minister that expenditures made with this fund – and maybe the minister can respond to this – will have to be matched by private sources. This brings up a second serious concern we have with the way the postsecondary system in this province has been unfolding in the last number of years, which is the increasing role of fundraising and in particular private funding for our public institutions, which helps to establish the priorities both in teaching and research for those institutions and in our view distorts what the universities ought to be dealing with. So the growth of private-sector funding for our public institutions of higher learning is a serious concern for the NDP opposition.

Now, if I can get to the basic problem with our system here, Mr. Speaker, it's that there's not really an overall framework that's been established. We haven't looked at the entire postsecondary system as a whole and what we want it to do, where we want it to be in 10 years, where we want it to be in 20 or 30 years. We haven't in this bill really addressed the overall situation facing our postsecondary system, nor have we sought on a very broad and systematic basis public input and stakeholder input in terms of defining the goals of our postsecondary system into the future.

The Alberta New Democrats have put forward a proposal that there should be a postsecondary learning commission, similar in structure and process to the Learning Commission that I think was fairly successfully implemented as a result of pressure from the Alberta Teachers' Association on this government, and the results that flowed from that I think were really excellent. The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment says that they listen and they care, and they certainly do, Mr. Speaker, when their backs are to the wall.

This is where we think we should begin. We should start at square one with our postsecondary institutions. I think that it's important to recognize and I think the province did recognize in the election that postsecondary education is the cornerstone to the province's future. I think that the government is attempting to recognize this through this bill, but without a fundamental analysis by all concerned I don't think we're going to come up with the kind of postsecondary system that we want and need for our future. So, Mr. Speaker, I would say that we should be starting with a postsecondary learning commission as a way to map the future of our postsecondary system.

The second major concern I have, Mr. Speaker, is that the base funding of our institutions is inadequate and is not dealt with by this legislation. We need to be establishing and we ought to be establishing a base level of funding. There's no reason in this province that we couldn't do that, and in my view until the institutions clearly know what funding they're going to get over a long period of time, at least three years, they will be unable to plan, and we will be unable to build adequately our postsecondary system. So establishing base funding over a period of years, budgeting over three years at least, would be, I think, the direction that we ought to take before we get to the ideas contained in Bill 1.

The third point that I want to make, Mr. Speaker, relative to this is that while there is lip service paid to accessibility in this bill, there are no clear guarantees, and there's no clear understanding of accessibility as a fundamental problem of our postsecondary institution.

Student debt average is about $20,000 per student upon graduation. The tuition fees in this province have soared dramatically over the last decade, and university and even college and technical institutions are very, very expensive. This needs to be addressed more substantially than establishing an accessibility council. I guess, Mr. Speaker, that I've been here long enough to realize that little councils to talk about accessibility or to talk about some problem aren't really a way of tackling it, not really a way of solving it. It's a way, I guess, of putting some window dressing out there and saying that, yes, this is a big problem, and we're concerned about it.

I would like to see clear legislation that indicates that a freeze in tuitions, in fact a rollback in tuitions, should be the starting point of tackling the accessibility issue in this province. The government has the financial resources and will have the financial resources for a significant period of time, at least for the foreseeable future, and they could do that. We could put this in the legislation, and we could actually tackle it.

I'm really concerned, Mr. Speaker, about this so-called tuition freeze that we've heard from the government because it doesn't really freeze the tuition. It just says that the increase this year will be paid by the government. That means that when they stop paying at the end of this year, that increase will still be there, and there may in fact be another annual increase to the tuition fees, so the students will be faced probably with a double whammy, a double increase one year from now. This whole approach is not a serious approach to the question of accessibility to our postsecondary institutions. It is, in fact, just a political ploy to try and convince people that the government is actually caring and listening, and it doesn't seem that it is.

So that would be something I would like to see in Bill 1. I would like to see a real concrete and specific commitment to accessibility, starting with a rollback and freeze in tuition fees, followed by consultations with the public including students and student organizations to establish a reasonable, accessible tuition policy.

The Premier's address, so-called, on television, his infomercial that we saw just before the session . . .

Mr. R. Miller: Who paid for it?

Mr. Mason: The infomercial, that was paid for by the taxpayers, had the Premier talking about a new tuition policy for the province. One of the descriptors that he used, Mr. Speaker, to talk about this new tuition policy is that it would be entrepreneurial. When the Tories combine the word entrepreneurial with social services, I get the shivers because it makes me really, really nervous. We still don't know what that means, but we do know that this bill will not deal in any meaningful or concrete way with accessibility.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do want to say some nice things about the bill. I think that as far as it goes, establishing an endowment fund – which when topped up will provide about $135 million annually based on 4.5 per cent of the $3 billion – will increase funding to postsecondary education. The heritage scholarship fund will result in about $45 million in scholarships being available, and the heritage science and engineering research endowment will double existing funds for that. So I think those are positive things. I think that the creation of a single point of entry to institutions and a database for bursaries and scholarships is an excellent idea. It's a small point relative to the claims that are made for this bill, Mr. Speaker, but it is in fact a positive thing.

Just in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I think that while this bill falls far short of what could be accomplished if this government had real vision and a real commitment to postsecondary education, it represents a giant leap forward for the Conservative government of this province because for the first time that I've been here, we're actually debating putting substantially more money into our educational system, and I think that that is a positive step.

So in principle, Mr. Speaker, I'm prepared to support the bill at second reading. I think it's going to be interesting to see what amendments come from the various parties in the committee stage, but quite frankly I'm disappointed because the government has failed to grasp the real extent of the opportunity that it has, given the financial resources of this province at this time, to really, really embrace postsecondary education and accessibility. In my riding there are lots of working people who pay taxes for postsecondary institutions, yet their own children cannot afford to attend, Mr. Speaker, and that needs to be corrected, in my view. First and foremost, before we start talking about new Harvards and new elite institutions, we need to make sure that every person in this province who has the ability and the desire can get the postsecondary education of his or her choosing.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

9:00

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone wishing to rise under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

If not, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 1, Access to the Future Act. There's been a great deal said, and I may well repeat it. If I do, I think that it's worth repeating. Lifelong learning is important to all of us. There is no choice in today's world. We are constantly upgrading, and how hard or how easy that is is that's it's often impossible for single parents. It isn't just mothers that are single parents; men are increasing in numbers as the custodial parent.

I went back to school at 45, knowing that I was not an academic in high school. I wasn't there for the smart time. I was there for the good time. Then while I was raising my family, there was no need to punctuate the grocery lists. Therefore, I went with great trepidation. I got a loan, organized my daughters, and chose nursing because I knew that if I didn't get a job in my home province because of the cuts and the restructuring of the health care, I could go to the U.S., be welcomed with open arms, and be that foreign-trained worker willing to work for less because I had a job. So Bill 1, Access to the Future Act, is a very important document which includes the opportunity for our graduates to be global citizens.

Education is not just university, and I'm glad to see the word "apprenticeship" in this bill. The apprenticeship programs are in our schools, and I speak of the Lethbridge Community College, who have recognized trades programs and are capable of turning out highly trained, skilled workers, so badly needed in our economy, or at least we're led to believe that because of the request for thousands of foreign workers. I trust that these Albertan skilled workers will not have to leave their country to get a job. Mr. Speaker, this bill does not tell me that this government recognizes the need for leadership in working with industry to create apprenticeship spaces to allow graduates to actually be certified.

I would like to have seen at least some mention of police training colleges. In fact, at the Lethbridge Community College there has been work done to develop an accredited curriculum towards the Centre for Advancement in Community Justice. The police of today are dealing with very sophisticated crime syndicates with every available gadget to help them in their nefarious deeds. Crime is certainly global, and many of the crime rings are from different cultures. Surely the least we can do is to have highly trained and educated police for their sake and their safety as well as our safety.

We have aboriginal youth and those trying to do upgrading or to go forward into their careers or to have a career change or, like me, having to go back to school to return to the workforce.

I see that virtual classroom space is contemplated with this bill. In fact, my three-year-old granddaughter will probably get her undergraduate degree in her PJs and not have to leave her bedroom. On the surface it sounds great, but with the possibility of corporate donations for research and scholarships I fear for the autonomy of the university presidents and boards, whose culture and vision shape each university differently and therefore give students a choice of how they want to be educated.

Universities should establish minimum standards for entrance, which doesn't say a whole lot to me because of my experience. I found out that I was quite intelligent; I just wasn't educated. There are studies that show that high school marks don't always equate to university performance or, in fact, that first-year and fourth-year level marks often have no correlation to one another. Marks usually go up as the students become more proficient in writing papers, performing the necessary tasks to learn, and prove their expertise of their faculty.

University professors and researchers must be free to think and think and think some more without worrying that if they don't come to the right conclusion, they may be asked to consider early retirement. Free thinking and open discussion is imperative if we are to move forward in our growth as a society.

Going forward in the economy is not the only way to benchmark success. The reasoning behind the idea of central admission is easy to understand. However, there are ways in which it could be abused. Students may be excluded from a university of their choice because the seats were filled or they were the last to apply to the computer, and to the computer someone has to be last. Marks are not all to be considered.

How much does an adult return to higher learning? How much do they bring? I would say a great deal. But will those attributes get lost? Perhaps a computer has a way of degrading persons to square boxes. Now, perhaps a new department will just have to be formed to handle the appeals, and heaven knows how fast they would be heard or, in fact, that they would not be evaluated by another computer with different criteria. How would a certain university or college find the people, not just the scholars, that they would like to have at their institution? Will we create cookie-cutter institutions and cookie-cutter students?

The subtle pressures that are apparent when the golden rule is applied – he who has the gold makes the rules – is flawed when it is applied to social policies and especially to public education. It is imperative that universities and colleges retain their uniqueness and their autonomy. The University of Lethbridge enrolment has increased over the past five years by 30 per cent and is currently carrying about 1,200 unfunded enrolments. Deferred maintenance on facilities is estimated at $62 million. To balance budgets, it's often necessary to rob Peter to pay Paul.

Mr. Speaker, the endowment fund was a great Liberal idea, but how will this government use it? There is a lot of power being created by this bill for the Minister of Advanced Education. Having said that, this Advanced Education minister is knowledgeable and capable; however, it may not always be so. Where is the open, transparent, and accountable method to appoint the access advisory council? More backroom shenanigans, and heaven help us if academia is allowed to be overshadowed by who knows what or whom.

I would hope that this will never be a reward position and would be peopled by those with nothing to gain except the knowledge that their decisions were the best for all Albertans. How about a retired professor, a retired principal, and the current student body president? How about an open competition, not appointed, for the positions with an arm's-length body to determine the recommendations? These endowment funds, totally controlled by the minister through appointments, also give rise to second, third, and fourth thoughts.

Mr. Speaker, there is lots of good stuff here, but there is sure a lot of detail missing, and the devil is usually hidden in the details.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions?

Seeing none, is anyone wishing to speak on Bill 1? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on Bill 1, Access to the Future Act. Before I get to this discussion about the bill, I want to say how great the Alberta postsecondary education system is. Indeed, only a greatly successful business can attract more customers than it can handle. Our postsecondary education system, with many of its outstanding institutions, attracts more learners than it can handle.

Mr. Speaker, I had occasion to attend many high school graduations where the students received outstanding awards and scholarships, and I think that is the source of students attending postsecondary education. They are so happy, happy that they have great institutions in Alberta that they can join.

I also want to talk about an opportunity that I attended, a graduation at the University of Calgary. This is talking about affordability. I was invited to speak at the engineering faculty graduation, and because three of our children graduated from university, I just wanted to use the story of my family. I told the people that the average estimate to raise a child in Alberta from diapers to grade 12 – that's 18 years of raising children – if you take all the costs together, people say that it's probably around a hundred thousand dollars. Now, add another four years after that. I did an estimate myself. His earnings during summer holidays and my contribution, with all the expenses – car insurance, car repairs, expenses here and there – I just grossed it up another hundred thousand. So let's just assume that $200,000 is spent on a student from diapers to graduation from university.

With that cost, I also estimate that when the student graduates, they make on average – this is a gross estimate here – $50,000 a year for 40 years of their working life, so the estimate would be $2 million. So when you spend $200,000 and then the return is $2 million, that is a fantastic return just on the financial side. So the student, the parent, society invest $200,000, and then you have a $2 million return on it.

Let me not just talk about the finances but also the quality of life. When you have knowledge, when you have skills, then your quality of life is much better. So on this occasion I just want to use this as an example.

It's a great education system in Alberta, publicly funded. The students invest in it, the parents invest in it, and there's a great return. So this bill provides for the future investment, and I just want to emphasize that point, and I want to conclude with that. This bill, Access to the Future, is a great bill. With all of this detail coming up, I support it one hundred per cent.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: On 29(2)(a), anyone?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am very pleased with the preamble of Bill 1 and the excitement that it gives to young people wanting to further their education. I just want to reiterate a few questions that I have, that have been brought up several times already.

Under accessibility and affordability: "shall identify and establish enrolment targets and minimum entrance requirements." It's been brought up, and I just want to also reiterate that it seems to me that that should be something that the university should be doing, not the minister. I have concerns in that area and think that the micromanagement will cause problems rather than enhance it.

The other area that I guess is my major concern is the access advisory council. As it goes through the points there, the Minister may, with respect to the members of the Council,

(a) appoint or provide for the manner of their appointment,

(b) prescribe their terms of office, and

(c) authorize or provide for the payment of remuneration and expenses . . .

The Minister shall designate one of the members as the chair of the Council.

Once again, I'm concerned that we've got micromanagement here, that basically looks like it has complete control of this huge fund.

It's a concern to me, and I would like to see more involvement from the university level and perhaps each of them appointing someone on that advisory board and having the option of deciding how and where, which classes they want to expand, as we've seen with the University of Calgary bringing the veterinary school there. I think it's far more important that the universities decide where they want to go than to have us as elected members appointing them and telling them: oh, we think the future is here, or the future is there.

I do have quite a lot of concerns in those two areas. I hope that the minister will look at those areas and look at maybe how we can do better, have that fund more accessible to the university, and have the board of directors, then, rather than here, to this House, be accountable to the people through those who want to access the universities.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any comments or questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Mr. Mason: Yes. I'd like to ask the hon. member his view on the accessibility of our students to our postsecondary institutions and his view on tuition fees.

Mr. Hinman: I think the most critical thing is that they have the opportunity to get there. The bill is so open ended that I would like to see that when someone decides to go into university, they know for the next four years what their costs are going to be. I mean, many members have brought it up already. This year their tuition is paid for. Is it going to be tripled next year? Is it going to be quadrupled? What happens if the price of oil goes down?

So I think that, as with any good management, when someone decides to go to school and they look at what their summer jobs can be, they have to be motivated and have that desire. But I do believe that it's critical that we have a better budget plan in there where students can look and realize that it's going to cost $12,000 a year and not be worried about what inflation is going to do by year 3. I think that it's sad to see people start to pursue an education only to find out two and a half years later that they've got to back out for a year or two because costs have gone up. I would like to see some sort of long-term planning in there, where someone knows that this is what it's going to cost and can do some planning.

Accessibility. Like I say, I'd like to see that sitting at the university level, where they decide, you know, that they want so many engineers in electronics or whether they want more in pharmacy or in a veterinarian school, realizing that they want more in small animals. I just believe that you hire and have responsible people to make those decisions and not from the top down. It should be from the grassroots up.

I hope that I've answered the hon. member's question.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else on 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, anyone else wish to speak to Bill 1, the Access to the Future Act?

The hon. deputy House leader on behalf of the hon. Premier to close?

Third Reading

Bill 21
Hotel Room Tax (Tourism Levy)
Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 21 demonstrates that from now on the hotel tax will be referred to as the tourism levy. The rate is going down from 5 per cent to 4 per cent, and guests of Alberta accommodations will save approximately $11 million annually.

When we discussed this bill in second reading and Committee of the Whole, it was made clear that the charge that is collected as a result of these changes will determine the funding that will be allocated to tourism marketing and development for our province within Alberta, within Canada, and beyond to the international community. Based on estimates of hotel tax the government anticipates it will collect in 2004-2005, it is forecast that funding for tourism will increase by approximately 75 per cent. Mr. Speaker, I think we all recognize that this is a significant increase, and it will be well used to promote our great province.

I believe that all the hon. members who have spoken to this bill have commented on the beauty of Alberta, have drawn reference to the notion that we truly have a great deal to enjoy here, and are aware that we have a bounty to share with others who come to visit. It is easy to see how fortunate we are to live in a province with so many diverse and beautiful natural wonders as well as so many man-made attractions.

At this point I would like to note that consultation with key industry stakeholders over the past number of years has been pivotal to the development of the changes inherent to this act. Travel Alberta and the Alberta Hotel & Lodging Association have been particularly helpful. Numerous industry groups have worked with government on this bill to make sure it will benefit the needs of industry and government, and they worked with government to make sure that individuals who own accommodations in the province will be able to implement all changes as simply, quickly, and easily as possible.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this is a good bill. The changes that come from it will help bring us into Alberta's next century and will keep tourism a strong, continued source of pride and economic growth for all Albertans.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I move third reading of Bill 21. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. By and large I'm going to echo the comments of my colleague from Calgary-Lougheed. I believe, and I have indicated to my caucus that I believe, that this is generally a good bill. Certainly, I applaud the government and the minister responsible for the consultation that has taken place over the many years with the industry and the various stakeholders, and perhaps it lays out a plan and a format that should be used more often in terms of consultation with the various stakeholders and making sure that people are onside before the legislation ever comes to this House, although it does somewhat limit the comments that the opposition members might have to make when there's already so much buy-in from the public. But, certainly, I believe that in general that's a good thing.

Earlier this afternoon one of my colleagues – I believe it was my colleague from Calgary-Currie – referenced a long-time member of this Assembly who had advised him that when in doubt, he should vote no. Well, I can assure you that I will not be voting no, but I do have a number of guidelines given to me by another long-time member of this Assembly, who indicated that we should ask ourselves if there is a problem when we're looking at a piece of legislation, identify exactly what the problem is, and then address whether or not the legislation will actually go some way toward solving the problem.

In that vein, I'm going to just identify the fact that certainly there was a problem, and I think I spoke to it when I addressed the bill in second reading. The problem, basically, is that there was a tax that was a very unpopular tax. It's been there since 1987. The member that I referred to a minute ago indicated in her comments that she's been hearing complaints about the tax since 1996, some nine years now.

Actually, the references to tax prompt me to refer to the Oxford Dictionary, which one of the pages so kindly brought to me. Mr. Speaker, I thought I should look this up and just check because there's been a lot of talk about the levy being directed specifically to the industry and promotion of the industry. So I looked up the word "levy" and, not surprisingly, what it says is: the imposition of a tax. I guess, as my colleague from Edmonton-Centre indicated the other night, if it walks like a duck and it talks like a duck and everything else, it's probably a tax. Despite the fact that we're sort of dressing up the hotel tax by calling it a levy, I would unfortunately have to conclude that it is nevertheless still a tax. That I'm not so sure necessarily addresses the concerns of the industry, but nevertheless they have indicated that they're by and large happy with this, and so I will be too. That's the problem.

Now, the question is: will the legislation address the problem? Again, I think we've all pretty much agreed that by and large this legislation will go some way toward addressing that problem provided that – and, unfortunately, I wasn't here, Mr. Speaker, when the bill was addressed in committee – there's some sort of assurance written into the regulations that the money actually goes to where it's been widely rumored and widely published that it will go. There's nothing in this legislation, as I indicated when I spoke to it in second reading, that guarantees in any way that the money will go to promoting tourism. If it does in fact go to promoting tourism, I'm all for it.

We debated Bill 1 a few minutes ago, where there's a segregated fund being established within the heritage savings trust fund that will manage the monies that are being put toward the postsecondary endowment fund, and I wish that there was some sort of a similar fund established within or outside of the heritage savings trust fund that would manage the money that's going to be raised by this new tourism levy. Unfortunately, that's not the case. We're past the point where amendments can be made, so I guess it's not going to happen in legislation, but I certainly would hope that it does happen in regulations.

The questions around that, of course, are: who's going to determine what happens to that money if, in fact, it does go to promoting tourism? How is it going to be spent, and so forth? We talked a lot the other day in second reading about the fact that not only myself and members of my caucus but, in fact, members of the government caucus previously had indicated concerns that it not be spent on just promoting the so-called big three, i.e., the Banff-Jasper corridor, the Calgary Stampede, and West Edmonton Mall. Certainly, that would be a hope that we have as an opposition, that that money will be widely spread across all Alberta in terms of promoting tourism in this province and the province as a destination.

A question was raised in committee regarding the performance measurements of the promotions. Again, Mr. Speaker, nothing indicated in the legislation as to how we're going to determine whether or not we're getting a good bang for our 50 million bucks. Certainly, that would be a concern, and I hope that the regulations are written such that there are some very strong performance measurements in there to determine whether or not, in fact, the funds that are allocated to promoting tourism will be doing their job.

I'm just going to flip through a number of comments that I had highlighted earlier and didn't get a chance to reference when I spoke to the bill in second. Information here from Alberta tourism shows that in the year 2004 tourism jumped 10.9 per cent from the year earlier to somewhat over 1 million visitors to the province, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's a wonderful number, and it shows a good rebound from the rather drastic levels that we saw following September 11. I'm sure that all Albertans are pleased to see that taking place because certainly this is a growth industry in our province, and it's vital that we support it. I think I made that comment the other day as well.

I did mention in my comments that I wasn't sure, necessarily, that $50 million was enough, given that some other jurisdictions are spending two times or even three times as much on promoting their industry.

Ms Blakeman: Who would that be?

Mr. R. Miller: That would be Ontario and B.C. amongst others.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, yeah.

Mr. R. Miller: Certainly, while I suggested that I wasn't sure that $50 million was enough, at the same time I questioned whether or not there should be a tax at all. In that vein, as I was looking through some press clippings, I noticed that the previous Minister of Economic Development had indicated that his hope when he brought this forward, had he had the opportunity to do so, would have been to reduce the tax to somewhere in the neighbourhood of the 2 and a half per cent range. Obviously, that didn't happen. We're still at 4 per cent, and I guess a reduction to 4 per cent from 5 per cent is better than nothing; nevertheless, it's only a fraction of what the minister who was driving the bill at the time had hoped to see.

9:30

The other issue that, unfortunately, was not addressed in committee, Mr. Speaker – and I had certainly wished it would have been just from a purely procedural point of view – was the issue that was raised by the president of the Bed and Breakfast Association in Alberta regarding the apparent contradiction between this department and the health and human resources departments as to what constitutes a bed and breakfast versus a hotel or a motel, and specifically that was the issue of eight people versus four beds. I hope that at some point that doesn't cause some problems for the department.

Ms Blakeman: They did answer that.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, actually, the Member for Edmonton-Centre says that they answered it, but the only answer I saw to it was an indication from the mover of the bill that four rooms contemplates double occupancy, meaning eight people, but that's not in the legislation, so I'm not sure if that, in fact, answers it or not.

There was concern, Mr. Speaker, as well regarding the $25 commission that was paid to people that were filing, and the mover indicated that, unfortunately, that's just the cost of doing business. I can certainly say, as a small businessman who dealt with such filings over the years, although not specifically the hotel tax filing but certainly any number of others, that that so-called cost of doing business adds up awful quickly when you're a small businessman trying to comply with all of the government regulations.

Interestingly enough, one of my colleagues this afternoon, in talking about the interim supply bill, referred to the fact that in small business if you're late filing with your government filings, there is usually a rather stiff penalty, yet this government comes late to us with budget preparations, and there is no penalty at all. That's interesting from the point of view of a small businessperson.

That $25 commission: I think that there are going to be a number of small businesspeople who are going to miss it and rue the fact that they now have to prepare this tax return, or levy return, without receiving the commission. Nevertheless, I suppose their numbers weren't big enough to sway the committee that was looking at drafting the legislation to leave it in there.

I think that will conclude my comments, Mr. Speaker. As I said, certainly there is a recognition on my part and that of my caucus that Alberta has incredible bounty, as the Member for Calgary-Lougheed indicated, to offer both as a destination for foreign tourists but also, certainly, for Alberta tourists. My hope is that perhaps with this added funding that's going to be coming to promote the industry, we can maybe carry on in the vein of what was one of my favourite promotions when I was a youngster growing up, and that was the Stamp Around Alberta promotion, which I actually fondly remember. I think I still have a passport at home, probably filled out with every zone stamped. If we can, you know, carry on in that vein and encourage not only people from outside of our province and outside of our country but those within Alberta to visit every corner of this province, then I'm hopeful that the money will have been well spent.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude my comments and gladly support the bill with the qualifications that I indicated, hoping that there will be some very strong regulations written in to ensure that the money is wisely spent.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure we'll get it by the end of the session.

Mr. Hancock: I don't know if you'll ever get it.

Mr. Mason: Well, I enjoy the Minister of Advanced Education when he's witty, Mr. Speaker, but not when he's halfwitty.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise and speak to third reading of Bill 21, the Hotel Room Tax (Tourism Levy) Amendment Act, 2005. I want to say that my comments will be very brief. I will be supporting the bill, and we will be supporting this bill. Generally we're of the view that tourism is a good thing, and if, in fact, this money is put towards promoting tourism, that is also a good thing. The fact that it's a tax on the people who benefit directly from tourism and tourism promotions, particularly the hotel industry, is in our view also a good thing. So the principles of the bill are certainly congruent with the views of the NDP opposition relative to this.

I just want to say a few things about the bill. Certainly, the reduction from 5 to 4 per cent – that's a 20 per cent reduction, a significant reduction – is acceptable. The bill shows that the government is now becoming serious about systematically collecting this revenue and making sure that hotels and motels actually pay it. There is a strengthened ability to deal with potential fraud, penalties for late or nonpayment, and so on.

I just want to make one comment, Mr. Speaker, on something that I've heard in this House from some of the members opposite, that this is good because it will reduce the rates that people pay for their hotel and motel rooms. In fact, the government press release talks about this too. The government news release said that this tax cut – they called a tax cut, thereby admitting that it's a tax – will save guests $11 million. I don't know what kind of a fantasy world the government lives in when it comes to its understanding of how the private economy works, but the hotels and motels charge what the market will bear, and this doesn't change what the market will bear.

I will boldly predict, Mr. Speaker, that hotel and motel room rates will not come down, because that's based, really, on the relative supply versus demand and the available income that the tourists have to spend on hotels. But what it is is, essentially, increased revenue of $11 million for the hotel and restaurant industry. The idea that you cut taxes for private industry and they automatically pass the full savings on to the public is nothing but a Conservative fantasy, and it has no bearing on economic reality.

So with that particular point made, I will indicate that we'll support the bill, and I will take my seat.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for any questions or comments.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief. [interjections] Thank you. I just wanted to get a few comments out, and coincidentally who I would like to make them to is, of course, the Minister of Economic Development. As you all know, he's not only my colleague in the House, but we also share the representation in the same city.

I do feel very strongly about the fact that the dollars that are being taken from this levy should be put into a separate fund that we know for sure is going into tourism. As a municipal councillor I know that the Chinook Country Tourist Association would approach our council for the extra dollars for the amazing work that they were doing in southern Alberta. I think that if they along with all of the other smaller tourist associations in this province, regardless of how big or small, knew that those dollars, if they had dollars that were coming in on a regular basis, were being taken out of their work through the levy, they would be most appreciative.

The other point that I'd like to make and my hon. colleague has already spoken about is the commission for doing the paperwork. Although it doesn't sound like a lot, I can use my own personal example of going into nursing 16 years ago and actually nursing. At the end of the 16 years I swear I was spending an hour and a half a day on paperwork, so paperwork is worth dollars, and I'm not sure that it's given its proper appreciation. The $25 I think is important.

Just with those two comments, I thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone on 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, anyone else wish to speak on Bill 21? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Gosh, it seems everybody is so good. Is a person supposed to try and speak for 15 minutes? [interjections] I'll pass on it.

An Hon. Member: See if you can do it.

Mr. Hinman: No, I'll pass.

Two or three points that I want to bring up. The first and most important, I guess, is that it seems so often the government likes to govern from the top down. Out in the rural area that I am from, it's very frustrating for the towns, the municipalities, the library, whatever it is that's asking for funds from the government. It always comes in an envelope that says: yes, you may have this, but it must go towards this specific project. So I, like the others that have mentioned it tonight, would very much like to see a separate fund – what's good for the goose is good for the gander – so perhaps if the money is coming in, it is there, and we are totally accountable to the tourist industry and would have them participate in how they want that money being spent in order to promote tourism here in Alberta. They probably understand it and know what's best because they want the tourists to come here.

The other part. I guess that as I grew up, my dad always told me to use the KISS principle: keep it simple somehow.

An Hon. Member: That's not the way I heard it.

Mr. Hinman: Well, it changes as we get older.

The other thing, I guess, is that it seems like we have smoke and mirrors here and that we've changed. It was brought up again tonight that it was simple when we just called it what it is, a tax. To put in tourism levy I think was unnecessary.

The thing that I really want to address is how far this bill continues to go on. Obviously, there must be real problems in collecting the tax because it goes on for pages and pages. You know, even if someone owes something or expects money a year from now, they're still liable and responsible to make sure this money gets turned in to the government.

I would just really urge the government, when we continue bringing these bills forward, that we want it for the betterment of Alberta and to stimulate industry and to bring prosperity to our area and that we really try and reduce these bills and put it in there. To me, if you say that there's a 4 per cent tax on it that must be submitted quarterly or whatever we decide to do with it, then you go forward. It just seems a waste of a lot of paper and time and energy and reading to have so many different areas on how and where and if and when and why and who, that it should be collected and how they're going to do it.

So I'm in favour of it. I would love to see it in a specific fund and to let the tourism people be part of that fund and decide where to spend it: once again, to see it being driven from the tourism industry up and their having access and accountability on where the money is being spent.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone wishing to rise on Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Anyone else wishing to speak on the bill?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed to close debate.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. And thank you to our hon. members for Edmonton-Rutherford, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, Lethbridge-East, and of course Cardston-Taber-Warner for their comments and support of the bill. I will review Hansard, and I'm very happy to respond to these questions in writing.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I close debate on third reading of Bill 21.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a third time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 30
Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2005

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm really pleased to get a chance to speak in Committee of the Whole to Bill 30, which is representing the interim supply budget allocation, because I was not able to participate in the debate during Committee of Supply.

A couple of issues I'd like to put on the table and get some response back from the government side, and really what this is about is accountability. What I'm going to do is reference the Auditor General's report because I am very reluctant to allocate a significant amount of money without there being some detail given to us about what the money is going to be spent on. I think a number of my colleagues, if I know them, have probably spoken at length around this process, as they should have, because this is a flawed process.

The government is in complete control of the timelines on this. The government could have called us back into this spring session in December or January or February, but instead the government chose to call us in in early March. Generally, we get a budget speech two weeks after a throne speech. Well, that went out the window. That went out the window a couple of years ago. We stopped having that connection made. So now we're looking at having not only the budget speech months after the throne speech but well into the fiscal year for which we're trying to pass a budget.

It's become commonplace in my eight years here – commonplace, a regular part of our routine – to have an interim supply. I really feel strongly that this is very shabby management, but the government seems intent on that particular style of management. I believe that in the long run this will hurt them, but I will let the taxpayers of Alberta hold them to account on that one. Where I'm going to hold them to account is whether they have been successful in adhering to the recommendations made by the Auditor General in a number of departments.

Now, Mr. Chairman, you would say: well, that's what the Standing Committee on Public Accounts does. Very true. In the departments of Human Resources and Employment, Health and Wellness, Energy, Children's Services, Infrastructure and Transportation, Environment, Sustainable Resource Development, and Government Services, I indeed as a member of that committee will have an opportunity to question those ministers on their departments' spending, on their annual reports, whether they've been successful in implementing the recommendations from the Auditor

General. I will do that in the allocated meetings, following the schedule that has been put before us of when those ministers will be appearing before the Public Accounts Committee.

But for the rest of the ministries, Mr. Chairman, I will not have an opportunity to question them at all for the fiscal year that is before us in Public Accounts, and that's the year immediately preceding what we are looking at for interim supply. So I would like to go through, and for those departments where I will not get an opportunity to question them in Public Accounts, I'd like to put the questions on the record here and have them respond to those to have some measure of accountability as to whether or not they have been able to follow through and satisfy the requirements of the Auditor General for better accountability and transparency and overall management of the resources belonging to the people of Alberta.

I will start with the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, on page 80 of the Auditor General's report. Now, we have recommendation 3, recommending that the department complete a risk assessment that analyzes the probability and impact of major risks to the agriculture and agri-food industry in Alberta.

Based on the results of the risk assessment, the Department should also develop risk mitigation and response strategies.

Of course, I'm wondering whether the department has been successful in implementing this and addressing the risk mitigation and response strategies.

I'd also like to know if the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development has established "measurable targets for its emergency financial assistance programs," also appearing in the Auditor General's report for this fiscal year. Has that happened? We are looking at a request from Agriculture, Food and Rural Development for $160,600,000. When that kind of money is being asked for, do we have measurable targets for emergency financial assistance programs?

Here's another one. Has the department improved "its external accountability reporting"? Or a key recommendation from the Auditor General – and these are so important they get highlighted with little symbols beside them. Has the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, working with other governments and industry, developed and implemented "a contingency planning process"? Very important.

Has it, working with the federal Canadian Food Inspection Agency and the beef and related industries, ensured that "Alberta meets its contribution to Canada's BSE testing quota"? Well, are we using any of that $160,600,000 to do any of that? Is that what that money is being used for?

Do we have any answers to the recommendation that "the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation strengthen its internal controls and program evaluation for the Alberta Disaster Assistance Loan Program"? Has that happened? Is that what this money is being used for?

So if I can get answers to that either in this process of Committee of the Whole or through written response. But, you know, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to get written responses before I'm asked to vote on something. It's not very helpful when the government cheerfully tells me they'll give me a written response and it turns up four months later. If I'm supposed to be voting on this based on whether I feel that the government has met the tests, I'm putting it all out. They've had the Auditor General's report since September. They well know what they're supposed to be doing. So have they done it?

I am not in favour of this kind of sloppy management that has us approving – what is it? – 25 per cent of the budget for the whole year for two months, for one-sixth of the year. That's far too much money to be allocating here with absolutely no explanation of why.

Let's look at page 107 and on, which is the Department of Community Development, and the 107, of course, is referring to the Auditor General's report. Now, Community Development is asking for $90 million in expense and equipment/inventory purchases and $11 million in capital investment. So what's that money being used for? Have we satisfied the questions and reservations of opinion brought forward by the Auditor General?

Now, there was an unqualified report on the ministry and the historical resources fund. Some of the operations were "not recorded in Ministry financial statements." Some operations were "not recorded in the Fund financial statements." There's an information paragraph for the persons with development disabilities community boards, and these disabilities "did not meet the definition of a developmental disability, as defined in the legislation." So a couple of issues identified there. Have those been addressed before we go on to allocate more money to you?

Still with Community Development, recommendation 8, appearing on page 107. The Auditor General recommends that the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Provincial Board, in conjunction with the six Community Boards, reduce the risk of service providers breaching contracts by:

- performing a risk assessment to identify service providers with a high risk of breaching contracts; and
- auditing high-risk service providers to ensure that they spend funding according to their contracts and that they meet the other terms of their contracts.

Well, this is very serious, Mr. Chairman. There's money, taxpayer money, that's going out into the community. We keep hearing about accountability and transparency, yet here's something clearly pointed out by the Auditor General as needing immediate attention. Has it received immediate attention? It looks like they're asking for $101 million from us. Is that money to be met with the same laissez-faire attitude that this money was? Well, let's get the answer to the question.

There's also a recommendation that the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Provincial Board, working with the six community boards, "update and improve their contracting policies and procedures." I'm wondering if that has happened.

Key recommendation 9, appearing on page 111, recommends that the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Provincial Board, working again with their six community boards, "strengthen the monitoring and evaluation of the performance of service providers" by – and then there's quite a long list, Mr. Chair.

- requiring individual funding service providers to provide adequate financial reporting;
- obtaining annual financial statements to evaluate the financial sustainability of critical service providers;
- implementing a sustainable, risk-based internal audit plan;
- developing and implementing standard procedures to be followed when Community Board staff are in contact with service providers; and
- implementing a method to evaluate service provider performance.

We're not going to be able to examine this before Public Accounts. What can the minister or any member of the government tell me as to whether these issues raised by the Auditor General have been addressed, especially since they're asking taxpayers to fork over $101 million?

Let me go on and have a look at some of the others. Let's look at the Department of Environment, and I know my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View will be very interested in this. This is appearing on page 138 of the Auditor General's report, and indeed there are recommendations from the Auditor General.

I should note – I'm sorry – in passing that there were not any recommendations made for Economic Development, which is why

I have not raised that particular issue, so congratulations to Economic Development. They don't seem to have had any new recommendations. I think they have some that are flowing over from previous years.

All right. On page 138 for Environment there's a recommendation that the Ministry further improve its business plan by:

- clarifying its contributions to achieving the government business plan goals.
- enhancing the description of the significant environmental factors and risks, and their relationship to the strategic priorities in the plan.
- showing the corporate services areas as supporting all of the Ministry's core businesses.

Has this been achieved, Mr. Chair? Is the government able to give me any indication of whether that, in fact, has happened before we fork over $22,700,000 to the Department of Environment?

Okay. Let's see if they have managed to fulfill recommendation 13 from the Auditor General, which recommends that "the Ministry improve the process for developing new performance measures and ensure the measures in its business plan assess the results each goal aims to achieve." Mr. Chair, that is my kind of recommendation from the Auditor General because he's addressing everything we're concerned about here. Do we have the performance measurements that will ensure that the measures in the business plan "assess the results each goal aims to achieve"? That's exactly what we're looking for. That's exactly the kind of accountability that I want.

Great recommendation. Was it implemented, before we give them $22,700,000 for two months' worth of operation? Gee, that's like $11 million and change for each month, and we don't have a process for developing performance measurements and ensuring that the ones they have assess the results of the goal they're aiming to achieve. I would think that was a major problem that would need to be clarified, wouldn't you, Mr. Chair?

How about the recommendation that asks that "the Ministry clarify the goals, performance measures and targets in its human resource plan, and improve the quality of employee performance assessments and the method of feedback"? That appears on page 141 of the Auditor General's report for Environment.

So there are a couple of very good recommendations from the Auditor General, and I would be very interested in hearing whether those have been achieved before I vote to approve any additional money to this particular department.

Now, the Executive Council. Ah, yes. Travel and hosting expenses. Well, I'd be interested in knowing how much of the $5.3 million is going to be used for out-of-province travel. I would like a listing, preferably posted on the website, preferably in advance, that gives us the details of who is travelling, the purpose that they're travelling for, the position of the person that's travelling. I don't particularly need to know their individual name, but I certainly want to know their position. Why are they travelling out of province on the taxpayer dollar? What are they there to achieve? I'd like to know what their agenda is. Are they going to meetings? Are they private meetings? Who are they meeting with? What's the purpose of all of it?

If we're going to be okaying out-of-province travel – and sometimes that's a very necessary part of doing the business of government – I think that the taxpayers' patience for chartering private jets to whip people around the continent is increasingly short. I would like to know if any of this $5.3 million is going to pay for any charter jets, and as I say, I'd like to know the details in advance of every trip that's planned to take.

This is $5.3 million for two months, Mr. Chairman. Where the heck are they going to go, and how many people are going to go there, in two months for $5.3 million? That's a lot of bananas, and I want to know where they're spending them and on what. What's the benefit back to the taxpayer of Alberta? So if I could get that information.

How many years have I been trying to get that information, Mr. Chairman? But I live in hope. I am an optimistic person. I get up here every year, and I ask these questions because some day I'm going to be on the other side, and someone else is going to be asking me, and I will have the answers for them. There we go. All righty.

Now we're into the Department of Finance, appearing on page 152. I'm sure there will be very good questions. Oh, yes, there we go. A key recommendation, Mr. Chairman, indeed. This is for the Department of Finance, who is asking for $20,600,000 for expense and equipment/inventory purchases and $11,700,000 for nonbudgetary disbursements. Nonbudgetary disbursements. Okay. Help me with that one. What exactly is a nonbudgetary disbursement? It's not budgeted, but we're going to disburse it? It's one of those interesting little kind of finance terms. So if somebody would like to get up and elucidate that one, I'd appreciate it.

More to the point, let's have a look in here from the members of the government's side as to whether they have been able to achieve recommendation 14, on page 152, from the Auditor General, that the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions ensure that compliance staff:

- promptly review and follow-up on compliance information obtained from private sector pension plans

Oh, this would be a hot topic, Mr. Chairman.

- receive appropriate training to effectively discharge their responsibilities.

Yes. I know this one is a hot topic.

All right. Still, I think, on the same area recommendation 15, that the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions improve its processes for monitoring private sector pension plans by:

- preparing a risk-based annual plan for its compliance monitoring program that identifies resources required to effectively carry out the plan
- reporting the results of regulatory activities by compliance staff to senior management
- updating its policies and procedures manual.

So that's another question that I'm looking to have answered for the Department of Finance before we give it looks like about $33 million and change.

Those are two strong recommendations that have been made in that department. Oh, my goodness, here comes another one. Oh, another couple of them.

Recommend that the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions obtain audited plan financial statements from all employer pension plans.

Yeah, I told you this was a hot one. I know that this is really top of mind for a number of people, so before we allocate that additional $33 million and change, I'd sure like to know whether this has been addressed.

Additionally:

for high-risk employer pension plans, the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions obtain:

- assurance from pension plans' auditors on the plans' compliance with the Employment Pension Plans Act, Regulation and plan document
- information on pension plans' governance structure and practices.

I know that I'm going to run out of time shortly here, Mr. Chairman, and I have not been able to ask the questions for Gaming, Innovation and Science, Justice, Municipal Affairs, and Seniors and Community Supports. I will note, to be fair, that both the Solicitor General and International and Intergovernmental Relations did not have any new recommendations from the Auditor General. But all the rest of the departments do, and I'm looking forward to an opportunity to ask the questions on those before I approve their interim supply.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate that. I just want to raise one simple question, and I hope that we will get an answer either verbally or in writing, and that is to do with the increasing pattern of delays in bringing down the budget. The government has used the excuse in this case that the election timing meant that the Legislature convened late; therefore, the budget will be delayed. That's what they're saying this time, but the last two budgets have come down late. I believe that it causes significant problems in terms of the organization of the administration of the province among other things.

I would like to know from the government if they see this as a problem, if they're going to correct it, and whether or not they have a plan to make sure that the next budget of this province is brought forward in a timely way so that we don't have to deal with these interim supply issues. I hope that the government will respond either now or the Treasurer may wish to respond in writing, but I would like to know the government's plans for the next budget and whether or not they're going to bring it forward in a timely fashion or whether we're going to continue to see slippage. I agree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. It's just sloppy administration, in my view.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I won't presume to answer on behalf of the Minister of Finance for the timing of budgets in that respect but would like to just address the issue that's been raised a couple of times in the House now, at least the allegation that's been raised a couple of times, that this is sloppy practice.

There is nothing in parliamentary process which suggests a particular timing for budgets. If you look at parliaments across the nation and, indeed, in the Commonwealth, budgets are not necessarily brought in at any particular time. There are processes in place under our rules, one of which we're engaged in now, to deal with interim supply so that funds are supplied to government to run from fiscal year to fiscal year. But budgets are fiscal documents that come in at various times throughout the year depending on which parliament you might be in and what happens.

The hon. members opposite would seem to think that there's some magic to having a budget in February. There is no magic to having a budget in February. The magic to a budget is in fact in the business planning process that one engages in. In this government the business planning process that's engaged in is a very thorough and comprehensive one, normally starting about this time of the year for the next year in that the departments might start through their process of developing their business plan right about now for next year. Then in about mid-July there would be discussions around fiscal strategies that might happen.

I'm not sure that the members opposite have ever really appreciated the business planning calendar of a government because they've never had the opportunity to participate in one. But the concept of doing the fiscal strategies is in and about July. The annual reports, as they will know, come out in late August, and that helps to inform the business planning process for the following year.

Departments start working around the fiscal strategies to align their business plans with the fiscal strategies in the September-October time frame, and then Treasury Board begins to work with that in the November-December time frame so that you get the budget timing together in January and start finalizing the decisions process in January so that you can start the budget documentation process in February. It can take a month to a month and a half after you've made all the decisions just to compile the documentation and make sure that it's appropriate for entry into the House. So producing a budget is not something that you do cavalierly or that you do overnight. It's a long-term process.

Now, this jurisdiction, Alberta, is one of the only jurisdictions that has a three-year business plan process, so nobody has to wait for the budget to take a look at what is projected in spending. Now, granted, that spending profile can change, but the concept is that people have a three-year framework. Often we hear in this House that people need to know, people need some longer term certainty in terms of what their budget will be. Well, there is some long-term certainty in the business planning process that gives a three-year cycle. The problem is that most people don't like to live with that three-year cycle. They want those out-year projections, and quite appropriately so from time to time, adjusted on an annual basis when there's some certainty with respect to the income stream, when we know with a greater degree of certainty.

In addressing one of the comments about being out on the forecasts, when you're talking about oil and gas revenue and nonrenewable resource revenue, which is one of the most volatile revenue streams that a government can have, you can never know with certainty what that revenue stream is going to be. Therefore, you do have to, in all good prudence, project that conservatively.

Part of the business planning process, then, is to have that three-year plan that people can rely on but be able to adjust it annually and in the context of what the current realities might be. So I'd go back to where I started with this. It's not sloppy business planning at all. In fact, this government is probably one of the finest in the parliamentary system in terms of its business planning process, the length of the business planning process, the amount of time and effort that goes into the business planning process, and, quite frankly, the results of the business planning process.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, I appreciate the hon. Government House Leader's response, but it really sounds like he's saying that he doesn't think there's a problem. There was lots of bureaucratic gobbledeygook to try and explain how somehow three-year business cycles mean that they can't get the budget done on time. I would think that if you've got three years to plan – and that's not a bad thing – you'd be able to get your budget in on time.

I do believe that there's a significant impact on operations. You know, the government can't keep operating as if they're on a 13-month calendar, Mr. Chairman, because all the rest of us have to work on a 12-month calendar. I think the government needs to pull up its socks on this.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to echo the comments of my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, and at the same time thank my neighbour from Edmonton-Whitemud for the lesson in parliamentary budgeting. However, I'd like to point out that certainly the criteria he outlined do not apply to various health authorities, as an example, when they're expected to have their budgets on time and in place for the government to deal with. Likewise, school boards would be expected to have a budget plan in place and on time.

Mr. Mason: Municipalities.

Mr. R. Miller: Municipalities I'm going to get to in just a minute. Thank you to the hon. colleague from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Nongovernment agencies and volunteer groups, Mr. Chairman. I've been involved with many of these over the years. Especially when it came to our dealings with government, we were always not only recommended to have our budget plans in place and on time, but often it was a demand on which our funding depended. If we were late, there was no funding, and that was just how important the budget process was to us.

My colleague mentioned municipal governments. Certainly, I have a number of friends that serve currently on the city of Edmonton council, and they were astounded, quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, when they were first elected to find that the first week – the very first week – of their service on Edmonton city council they were handed budget documents to deliberate.

Frankly, I'm astounded, knowing that, that we've been here now almost a month and we have not seen a budget document to deliberate. Instead, Mr. Chairman, what I was handed the other day was a request – and bear in mind that this is coming from a small businessman – to approve $5.5 billion in spending with nothing more than one or two lines in the way of explanation. I am astounded at that, that this government, which brags about three-year plans in place – I will echo again the comments of my colleague in congratulating the government for having the foresight to move to a three-year budgeting plan. But if in fact that three-year budgeting plan is as effective as the hon. Minister of Advanced Education indicates it is, then it should make the preparation of a budget for this Assembly to deal with all the more simple and would, in my mind, negate the impact of things such as an election cycle. So I'm not sure that explanation that has been offered up many times would really be relevant in this case.

Mr. Chairman, I'm going to cede the floor again to any other colleagues who might wish to speak to it. I will just echo the fact that as a small businessperson who is used to having to deal with regular budget cycles and having them in place and on time, to come into this Assembly and be told that it's perfectly normal to be expected to approve 5 and a half billion dollars of spending without any more than a one-line explanation – I have trouble accepting that.

I'm not sure if the Minister of Advanced Education has had a chance to check Hansard, but I've referred a couple of times now to the fact that our sister province, Saskatchewan, right next door, which happens to be exactly the same age as this province, for the very first time ever in its history last year dealt with an interim supply request. That was the first time in nearly a hundred years that Saskatchewan had had to do that.

Mr. Mason: Those irresponsible socialists.

Mr. R. Miller: Those irresponsible socialists.

Here it is in Alberta. These supposedly fiscally responsible Conservative governments year after year continually overspend and continually come to us late with a budget which requires an interim supply estimate. In fact, Mr. Chairman, I think I indicated earlier this afternoon that one of my very serious concerns is that this particular document is dealing with only up to the end of May, and if we don't see a budget soon and have an opportunity to debate it soon, we might well be dealing with another one of these interim supply estimates very soon, and that would be a travesty, in my mind.

So with that, Mr. Chair, I will cede the floor to anybody else, but certainly I think this draws into serious question the practices of this government when it comes to budgeting.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Well, I've just been drawn back into this debate by the remarks from the Minister of Advanced Education. Where to begin. I cannot believe that he would get up and defend a practice and say that it doesn't really matter when budgets come down. If that's the case, then why do we have a fiscal year that begins on the 1st of April? Why doesn't it just start whenever we get around to it?

We've got a fiscal year that starts on the 1st of April and runs to the end of March, so it makes sense then – let's say that we want to go by logic, never mind by reality – that we would have a budget passed that allocates the ability to pass the budget before we get to the beginning of the fiscal year. So I have to disagree, with all due respect to the Minister of Advanced Education.

When he talks about business plans that are done in advance, up to three years in advance, again I have to disagree. I've seen those business plans. Sure, they're for three years. Then when I say, "How come the performance measurements are changing every year so that I cannot track this from point A to point B over a five-year time span because every year the performance measurements have changed?" well, I'm told that it's a rolling three-year plan, so that's why everything can change. Oh, really? Well, then that's not sticking to what the minister has brought up here: these three-year plans in advance, and we'll stick to that. No. It doesn't happen that way at all.

Finally, I want to raise the issues that have been raised repeatedly by the Auditor General around the budgeting process for the health authorities and the school boards. The health authorities are supposed to have their business plans and budgets approved in advance of that April 1 fiscal year, and that's impossible to do because we're not even close to having a provincial budget passed in that time. So the ministers responsible for those various areas can't turn around and then approve the health authorities' or the school boards' plans well into the fiscal year, and this is just poor management. I don't care how you cut it; that's what it is. It's putting a number of other agencies that we all expect to operate with integrity in the province – it jeopardizes them as well.

I appreciate that the minister is trying to defend the practices of his government, but frankly this is not unique to the government under the current Premier. When I was working with the Advisory Council on Women's Issues in the late '80s and early '90s, we were on exactly the same budgeting cycle that the minister just described, so there's nothing new there. That is not an invention of this particular government under the Progressive Conservatives and the various incarnations they have had. They have gone through this same budgeting process for some time, but it's only recently that we've made a habit of not coming anywhere close to getting a budget passed by the time we need to. Again, the government is in total control of the timelines here, absolute total control. They can call us in any time they want. They can move those timelines around for when deadlines happen any time they want, and they choose not to. I have to assume that they're choosing not to. They are certainly in control of all of that, and they are choosing not to.

Mr. R. Miller: Laurie, I was ready to go to work on the 1st of January.

Ms Blakeman: That's right. I think most of the new people who were elected were ready to go to work on the 1st of January, as soon as session was called in.

Okay. If I may, in the time that I have remaining – I had indicated that I'd like to go back and pick up, Mr. Chairman, on some of the unanswered questions from the departments that will not be examined by the Public Accounts Committee and, therefore, will not receive scrutiny or any kind of report back on, in fact, what's been done here.

On page 168 we're looking at the Department of Gaming and any of the Auditor General's recommendations that have been made there, and in fact there is a recommendation "that the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission (AGLC) improve the worker registration process, including controls to confirm the identity of gaming worker applicants." This is a fairly critical recommendation because it is around maintaining confidence in the gaming workers and the registration process for gaming workers. I'm wondering if it's possible to have any feedback or reporting back on whether that has been accomplished. I think that's all that's being raised under Gaming.

What's being asked for here as an interim supply is $38,200,000 for expenses, and the lottery fund payments are $316 million for two months. There has got to be front-end loading in that because that is a third or better than a third of the budget for that department for one-sixth of the year. So could we get some information on: what is the front-end loading? There must be anticipation that in these first two months there are going to be a lot of expenditures. Are there any programs that have particular deadlines or activities that are happening in April and May that would account for the fact that we've got a much larger percentage of money coming out of that lottery fund than one-sixth of the year would indicate? So if we could get the information on that, please.

For the Department of Innovation and Science, on page 227. Ah, yes, the SuperNet.

An Hon. Member: Which ministry is that?

Ms Blakeman: It's Innovation and Science.

What we had there was a plan. There was a recommendation for a plan for testing the SuperNet that was recommended. There's an indication from the Auditor General that the recommendation was implemented, and the ministry did extend the SuperNet completion date for one full year, which we're aware of in this House.

There has been a team to resolve – I'm sorry; this is with Imagis. They did follow those recommendations.

We're wondering about recommendation 25, appearing on page 231, recommending "that the Corporate Chief Information Officer implement a security awareness program for government employees." Was that implemented? If we could get some feedback on that, please.

In the Department of Justice, on page 242: "Ministry is following up on certain files and developing a monthly reconciliation process" on the maintenance enforcement program. But there is a note that "the Ministry needs to complete monthly reconciliations and complete its follow up of the 268 matched files." If we could get a progress report on that, please.

Auditor General's report for Municipal Affairs – this is around the computer control environment – there were weaknesses identified in security. The IT policies were “drafted, but compliance procedures not yet implemented.” There were “identified threats and impacts against IT assets,” but not identified was how to manage those risks. There was also “no assurance on its and service providers computer control environment,” and therefore we “cannot guarantee integrity and confidentiality of its data and systems.” Could we get an update on that, please? What's being requested here from Municipal Affairs is $31,600,000 for equipment and expenses and inventory purchases, so I'm assuming that this is going to have a lot to do with the IT purchases that are being recommended here.

I'm sorry. I missed the actual recommendation that the department approve its draft security policies and implement procedures so that only authorized users can access the ministry's systems and data. We also recommend that the Ministry strengthen controls over its information technology by:

- implementing a risk assessment framework to manage IT risks [and]
- obtaining assurance on technical aspects of the general computer control environment.

That's pretty important stuff, so I'm wondering if it has been implemented so that we can feel secure in allocating an additional $31,600,000 for new equipment purchases.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, under Seniors and Community Supports, which actually would have been just under Seniors, appearing on page 284, we had a recommendation that the Alberta Social Housing Corporation ensure its program objectives are supported by the appropriate business arrangements.

We further recommend that these arrangements be accounted for in accordance with Canadian Generally Accepted Accounting Principles.

What's being requested here for Seniors and Community Supports? That's a huge amount of money: $347,100,000. Why? That's a lot of money. Do we have any kind of an explanation on why that's so much money? There's got to be a front-end load on that, and why? There is no explanation for that, and I would sure be interested in it because that is, I think, more money than was allocated to come out of the lottery fund for two months. So $347 million for two months' worth is a rather staggering amount of money. Now, I'm sure that the seniors' benefit program, AISH, and PDD will all be coming out, but there has to be something that's front-end loaded on that. If I could get the information on what that is.

I think that we're still going to get an opportunity to debate in Committee of the Whole on supplementary supply, so I look forward to that. If I could just get the answers to my questions, I'll be able to make an informed vote on interim supply.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a few points, I guess, that I want to make. I struggle in the fact that we, as has been brought up many times, have an interim supply estimate of $5.5 billion.

We have in here support to the Legislative Assembly of $12 million. Since the last time we spoke to it, I went to Members' Services because we couldn't come to an agreement with the House leaders, asking for a very small amount in order to . . .

Mr. Lukaszuk: How much?

Mr. Hinman: Ninety-seven thousand dollars.

Mr. Lukaszuk: That's a small amount of taxpayers' money?

Mr. Hinman: I hope that can get on the Hansard. I appreciate the instructions from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

But we have $12 million – we have $5.5 billion here. I guess I always look at putting on the other person's shoe and having to walk down there. To me, if I was bringing this to the people that elected me and said that I was going to spend $5.5 billion and handed that to them, I'd be embarrassed to go there.

As a businessman when I'd go to the bank and we'd figure out the budget for the year, you'd want your budget good enough because your operating loan would be maxed out if you didn't adjust for fertilizer going up 20 per cent or something else happening. So to look forward and do that budgeting is a good business practice.

Many times we hear here that we have no business being in business. This is a huge business, a $23 billion a year business, and we should be looking at it and running it that way. The comments in the Members' Services Committee were that $97,000 to a new and starting party would be a waste of taxpayers' money, yet we have $5.5 billion that are unaccountable for and $12 million going to this House. I struggle with the fact that they're saying they're being good operators, that we're going to run this efficiently, that we've got a whole new portfolio to help run more efficiently: you know, we're going to restructure, we're going to be more efficient, and we're only going to spend $66 million waiting to get some better results.

So it's very frustrating to me as a new member here to look at something like this and be asked to vote on it. I just don't understand how someone can bring this forward and say: “Don't worry. This is a blank cheque. It's just a small amount, not $97,000 but $5.5 billion, and it's all being spent wisely, prudently, and there's no waste in it.” I would sure like to have a breakdown of the estimates in all of these areas and have something sensible to read and to look through and to be able to say: yes, I understand that these estimates are needed, that we do have to continue on with business, and there is no waste.

I would urge the government to bring forth documents that are meaningful and something that the people of Alberta can know that we are representing them, that we are scrutinizing where the tax dollars are being spent and have a handle on it and know what's happening because I certainly don't know what's happening with this document and would like to be given a document that means something. What is Restructuring and Government Efficiency going to do for $62 million? Where is Municipal Affairs going with $32 million? What are Seniors and Community Supports going to get for $347 million? Is that, you know, going to get them glasses? Is it going to get them dentures? What are we going to get for that? It needs to be itemized. It needs to be there and make sense to the members in this Assembly as well as to the citizens of Alberta.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 30, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2005?

[The clauses of Bill 30 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 27

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2005

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to the supplementary for Alberta Environment and acknowledge the many good initiatives that I see in the Alberta Environment department and recognize that the listed supplementary of roughly $8 million is identified under three headings, which include information technology, increased waste management, and water management. I guess I'm needing more information about where that extra need came from, and I raised this before and haven't seen any information on it yet.

More to the focus of my comments, though, is a recognition that this is the number three priority for Albertans, and it's receiving roughly 5 per cent of the budget of the government of Alberta. This, I guess, by many perspectives would constitute a starvation diet for what many people in Alberta feel is one of the primary ministries of this government.

They've developed a new water strategy, a very impressive document, two years ago, and I don't see progress on it. I wonder about the lack of resources to move that important planning document forward. They talk, indeed, about new treatment and monitoring standards, very important from a public health point of view. Again, where is the funding to support this and the staffing to monitor and enforce these important new standards?

There's been a five-fold increase in the last decade in oil and gas activity in the province. Where is the new capacity in the department to evaluate approvals, to monitor implementation, and to do testing and enforcement of agreements under this very low budget?

There's obviously a boom in Alberta, more construction both in terms of domestic and industrial activity. How can the Alberta Environment department possibly carry out to the satisfaction of Albertans the important role that it has in monitoring, assessment, and enforcement?

There's also an increased concern about intensive livestock operations. What impact are they having, and how are they being monitored, and what are air quality, water quality, and other concerns that we rely on Alberta Environment to monitor?

People in my constituency, which is an urban constituency, have raised the issue about recycling. Why are we still not recycling oil in this province on a consistent basis? Why are we not recycling, indeed, more than 20 per cent of all of the recyclables in our homes and in our industries and in our construction? Why is it that we're not hardly recycling or composting almost any of the organics when this is contributing hugely to landfill and to greenhouse gas problems?

Oil sands development has been raised a number of times in the House. How can Alberta Environment satisfy Albertans that cumulative impact and sustainable planning and monitoring are going on in this very important and very active part of the oil sector? I guess my main message today, Mr. Chairman, is that if Alberta Environment is overspent, who's surprised? They have basically a starvation diet to work with in terms of the importance of the ministry. So my main message today is that if the government is serious about addressing the issue of supplementary expenditures, particularly in this department, they need to seriously look at staffing and investment in this ministry for the protection of all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In terms of the supplementary estimates under Solicitor General there are two items which I would like to ask questions about. I don't think the Solicitor General has spoken about these items to the House.

One is $2,900,000 for the province's share of the costs of the RCMP task force investigating high-risk missing persons in the Edmonton region. Well, this is a very important undertaking, and my understanding is that it's an integrated homicide investigation, but it's not clear to me who the RCMP is working with. I assume that it's the Edmonton Police Service, but I'm not sure about the cost sharing involved.

So it's not clear to me when Project Kare began. And is it continuing? How many officers are involved in working on this project? One report that I read suggests that only three RCMP members are involved, but that surely doesn't add up to $2,900,000. So it must involve a lot of other kinds of activities, offices, and so on. I'm not sure where that project is at. I hope that Project Kare is more than just a public relations exercise to satisfy a concerned public. What progress has been made through the action of Project Kare, and how many arrests have been made through the activities of Project Kare?

The other item in the supplementary estimates is $6,877,000 for a "ministry-wide manpower and other pressures including security costs to operate additional court rooms in the Calgary Provincial Court – Criminal Division." Mr. Chairman, it's so vague. So my question to the Solicitor General is: what does he mean by "ministry-wide manpower and other pressures"? I don't know what those other pressures are.

When you look at the budget side, it looks like most of the costs are for correctional centres throughout Alberta. I don't know what that involves, whether there's a problem of prison overcrowding, whether there's a problem of having to increase staff. Are there issues of violence within the prisons that need increased staff? Those are specifics that need to be explained. So $5 million for adult remand and correctional centres in Alberta. It's my intention in the future as the critic for Solicitor General to visit these correctional institutes and to find out what pressures they face in Alberta.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, but under Standing Order 61(4) I must put the question proposing the approval of the appropriation bill on the Order Paper for consideration by the Committee of the Whole. Does the committee approve the following appropriation bill: Bill 27, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2005?

[Motion carried]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that we rise and report bills 27 and 30.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under careful consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 30, Bill 27.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Speaker: So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that the Assembly adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:47 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 23, 2005 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 05/03/23
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Renew us with Your strength. Focus us in our deliberations. Challenge us in our service to the people of this great province. Amen.

Please be seated.

Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a historic vignette for today. On this day in 1937 the late Hon. Colonel John Campbell Bowen was appointed Lieutenant Governor of Alberta. He was the sixth Lieutenant Governor of Alberta and served from March 23, 1937, to February 1, 1950.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly His Excellency Mr. Aly Diane, ambassador to the Republic of Guinea. With His Excellency today is the honorary consul of Guinea in Alberta, Mr. Giovanni De Maria, who is based in Calgary. The members for Calgary-McCall, Calgary-East, Calgary-Fort, and myself were pleased to host our honoured guests at an official luncheon earlier today. This is the ambassador's first visit to Alberta, and like Alberta, Guinea is rich in natural resources; in particular, bauxite, gold, and diamonds. I would ask that our honoured guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I would like to introduce 13 visitors from the Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock constituency and Tokoro, Japan. The town and county of Barrhead formally twinned with the town of Tokoro in 1991, and each year Tokoro sends a group of high school students to spend a week in Barrhead. They're seated in your gallery this afternoon, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two members from my constituency. They are part of a group of 58 people from the Lacombe upper elementary school that was supposed to be here today, but because of the weather the trip was cancelled and they could not be here. Present today and seated in the public gallery are Mrs. Sandra Scott and her daughter Talia Scott, who's in grade 6. They came in advance of the bad weather to watch Sandra's father and Talia's grandfather, the hon. Member for Highwood, at work today. They are accompanied by Mrs. Judy Groeneveld, wife of the hon. member. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a real honour for me to be able to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two young men seated in the members' gallery today. The first happens to be a young man who is 27 years old today. It's his birthday. He works for our Deputy Premier and Minister of Finance. He's worked for government for four years now. He is currently working on writing his GMAT at the end of March, and on top of that, because that's not quite enough, he decided that he would get married on April 9 in the middle of our convention this year. Seated with him is a young man who is going to very soon be a major part of his life as his stepson. His name is Austin Mulligan. He's seven years old. He's in grade 2 here in Edmonton, and he got an excellent report card last week. In addition to that, he's a hockey player, got his first hat trick about two weeks ago, and he loves reading. I'm very proud to introduce two very special men in my life, Mr. Jeff Haley and Mr. Austin Mulligan. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: I take it that the hon. member has announced today that she will soon become a grandmother.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, it's my honour and pleasure to introduce visitors from the international community of Initiatives of Change, a group working voluntarily for peace and reconciliation around the world and bringing spirituality to politics. I would ask them to stand as I mention their names: Catherine Linton from the United States via New Zealand, Chris Evans from England, and Niketu Iralu from Nagaland in northeast India. I'd ask the members to give them the traditional welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and all members of the Assembly some very special guests. Linda Trimble is a well-respected political science professor at the University of Alberta. In fact, she's so well respected that I believe this morning she learned that she's going to receive the Rutherford award for excellence in teaching, which, indeed, is a real honour. With her are a group of her students from the University of Alberta, 12 political science students as well as I think four graduate students. So I'd ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of all members of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly several former students and a colleague of mine from my days as a teacher at W.P. Wagner high school. They are joining us today to see democracy in action, so I hope we might serve them well in that regard, and I am delighted to have them as my guests. I would ask each of them to stand as I read their name: Naveed Chaudhry, Brendon Bruno, Chris Eddy, Brandon Fletcher, Cody Hooper, Chris Jenson, Alycia Knorr, Kyle Polacsek, and Chris Sager. Please give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a member of the executive board of the International Union of Operating Engineers and a very well-respected person in the construction community in Alberta, Lionel Laverdiere. Please stand and get the warm welcome of this House.

head:

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Securities Commission

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. There are now reported allegations that executive managers of the Alberta Securities Commission obstructed the work of enforcement staff by directly influencing whether the regulators would pursue cases against certain companies and individuals. One staff member was even quoted as saying: it was made clear that certain people and companies were not to be troubled and were being protected from regulatory activity. End quote. This would be corruption in its purist form. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister identify which people and which companies were being protected by Securities Commission executives and why? We would like names.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition that he himself in his opening statement said that there were allegations. Allegations are exactly that. They are allegations, and I don't think the hon. leader expects me to provide information that could have very serious repercussions to people, based on allegation.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, what I have done I think is entirely appropriate to what I should do. When I was made aware in early January that there were some concerns raised – that was brought to me through my deputy – I wrote to the commissioners. I'll be happy to table that letter with the Assembly at the appropriate time. In that letter to the members of the commission, I said that I had been advised that a member of the commission had brought forward some information regarding concerns. I suggested that this would bear some further investigation and asked them to do that and report to me through my deputy on what actions they were prepared to take.

The Speaker: The hon. minister will table the letter later, I gather.

Mrs. McClellan: I will.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: did members of this government or any of its staff in any way influence the executive managers to protect certain people and companies?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, certainly I did not. To the best of my knowledge none of my staff would have done that. I would remind the hon. member that the commission operates as a commission, certainly at arm's length from government. I am responsible for them in my department, but I have absolutely – absolutely – no knowledge, none, of my staff being involved in any of that. In fact, the first information that I have come through my deputy. I think he very appropriately raised this with me when he first had an indication of some possible irregularities.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that this alarming information would not have come to the attention of the minister or to the public light without six brave whistle-blowers, when will this government finally institute whistle-blower protection legislation?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have absolutely no information nor do I have any reason to believe that any of the persons who had concerns had any reservations about bringing them forward. None. And the staff and the members involved in this, I believe, will through my very swift action in responding to their concern continue to have confidence that if they have a concern in this area or any other area of this government, it will be responded to appropriately and quickly.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The securities industry works hour to hour, minute to minute, day by day. The timelines are tight; things happen now. The troubling report that this minister has referred to was presented six weeks ago. Who knows how many millions or billions of dollars have been traded since then? Why was the Finance minister sitting on this report for that length of time? Who is she trying to protect?

Thank you.

Mr. Hancock: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I guess the allegations have no boundary. I've made it very clear to the Leader of the Opposition that immediately upon receiving this complaint, I responded. I am prepared to table the letter. I read only portions of it to the Assembly, but it is the gist of the letter. I am quite prepared to share that with the hon. member. The Securities Commission continues to operate and operate, I believe, well.

When he talks about sitting on a report, there is a press release . . .

The Speaker: We have a point of order on that particular matter. The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. The letter is one thing, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister table this report in the House immediately? Will she table the report?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I think he's looking for reports that I don't have, but I will table the press release – I think I have every right to do this – that states that there are two reports that have been provided to the part-time commissioners, one on February 16 and one on March 21. It states very clearly that the February 16 report addresses the complaints, the March 21 report addresses the responses to the complaints – that is common practice – and that the part-time commissioners will be reviewing both of those reports and making their report to the minister shortly. I am sitting on nothing or hiding nothing.

Dr. Taft: Well, once again, then, if she's sitting on nothing or hiding nothing, to use her words, why won't she table the two reports she's just referred to?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, apparently the hon. Leader of the Opposition doesn't understand. I don't have the reports. The reports are in the hands of the commissioners, who requested those reports. The latest one, March 21: "The Part-Time Commissioners" – I'll read this – "will be reviewing the two Mack Reports and will be making their report to the Minister shortly." When I receive that report, I will respond.

The Speaker: The third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unemployed Alberta tradesmen and apprentices, aboriginals, youth, underemployed immigrants, and displaced farmers are all out of luck. They have all been incredibly shortchanged by this government's push to bring in you're-deported-if-you're-late three-year temporary foreign workers. The first 680 are already on their way. The instrument being used is the employer-dominated convenience association CLAC, which this government recognizes as a union. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: given that the Canada/Alberta agreement spreads the okay to all companies in the region if only one gets approval to hire temporary foreign workers, will this government rescind any approvals to date until all unemployed Albertans and Canadians are put to work?

Mr. Cardinal: Of course, Mr. Speaker, that's a very similar question that I got, I believe, Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday now. It is an important question. Employment of Albertans is important because that is our top priority. Employment of Canadians is important; that is still our top priority. Employment of the other people mentioned is our top priority. But I want to address one issue, and that is in relation to who does the approvals in relation to foreign workers coming into Canada or Alberta: the federal Liberals. It's the federal government. The federal government controls the temporary foreign workers program, and if you have concerns about the administration of that program, you should contact the federal government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A supplementary to the same minister: given that the Treaty 8 chiefs of northern Alberta after a unanimous resolution called this government's temporary foreign worker policy, quote, explosive, unquote, will this government withdraw its support for this policy and put real resources behind training aboriginal Albertans?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, of course, when you're dealing with the First Nations, for example, they are, I know for a fact – I used to be the MLA for that particular part of the province at one time – tired of living in poverty. They want to participate in the economy in Alberta and other areas of Canada. The only way to eliminate poverty is by creating jobs, and that's not easy sometimes. But the jobs are there in that particular region. That is why our provincial policy is to ensure that if an industry is looking for employees, Albertans be given the first opportunity, which includes the aboriginal people and Canadians.

Mr. Backs: A second supplementary to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: will this government stop foreign labour recruiters from promoting to Alberta contractors the 18,500 recently fired employees of the Venezuelan national oil company and, instead, push to get qualified Albertans and Canadians actually working?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, I think only the Liberals would micromanage private companies when it comes to hiring.

The concern you mention, of course, again relates to the federal government's approval process. I think I filed in the House the other day the process these private industries have to go through in order to get foreign workers into Canada and into Alberta, and you can be assured it's a complicated and costly process, and it is not a top priority for the companies. It's not the top priority for the employees. It's definitely not a top priority for our government either.

The Speaker: The leader of the ND opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Police Service Investigation

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Edmonton Police Service is now conducting a criminal investigation into Edmonton's two daily newspapers resulting from the publication of police radio transcripts of a stakeout at the Overtime bar. This criminal investigation was launched in response to three complaints, at least two of which originated from within the police service itself. The EPS decision to pursue the Edmonton media for exposing police wrongdoing raises important questions. My question is to the Solicitor General. What policy does this minister propose to prevent police services from conducting investigations in pursuit of their own political interests?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The issue that the hon. member brings forward is the fact that there is an investigation, the allegation is that of a criminal nature, and the criminal investigation is being handled by the Edmonton Police Service. Whether it was in regard to the information leaked or utilized through the Journal or through the Sun or whether it was information that was leaked regarding any other investigation, it's the breach of the laws that is being investigated, and it would be improper to really discuss the investigation itself.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Why does the Solicitor General refuse to recognize that in publishing the police radio transcripts, the news media performed a valuable public service and should not in turn be targeted by police?

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the member in the fact that the media have a tremendous role to play in providing information to all Albertans and all Canadians, for that matter. One of the issues in this case is the fact that there is respect of the freedom of information and protection of privacy over the police radio system. That's one of the areas at issue.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If this is indeed a legitimate investigation and given that the Solicitor General himself read and commented on the Overtime police radio transcripts, does this not now make the Solicitor General an accessory after the fact?

Mr. Cenaiko: Hundreds of thousands of Albertans out there read that same newspaper article, Mr. Speaker, so I really can't answer that question. I can tell you, though, that as the Edmonton Police Service receives any allegation of criminal investigation, they have to conduct an investigation to determine if in fact the allegation has any merit to it before they proceed with meeting with the Crown's office.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Taxation Policy

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has been leading the way in tax relief for big business and the corporate world because it understands the burden and drain on the economy of taxes. I believe Alberta is also leading the way with its fair flat tax and higher personal exemption of $14,500; however, on the 29th of January, 2001, Premier Klein promised Albertans that the only way taxes are going in this province is down. In the 2002 budget provincial taxes were raised by $541 million. Most of those tax increases are still in place today. Will this government fully reverse these tax increases in this our centennial budget? To the hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, there will be a budget in this Legislature in the very near future. In fact, I would be pleased to share with the House now that our intended budget day is April 13. At that time I would anticipate that all of those questions that the hon. member has raised will be deliberated.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. Will this minister take another major step forward to boost the economy here in Alberta by removing the burden and drain on the income of all hard-working Albertans by eliminating the health care premium tax and raising the basic person exemption to $20,000?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would ask the hon. member to just take some time prior to our budget deliberations to review what personal exemptions are in all 10 provinces and territories in this country. I think he would quickly find that not only are Alberta's personal exemptions the highest; we treat the spousal exemption much better, much differently than other provinces.

As far as a commitment, as I indicated, we will have a budget speech in this House on the 13th. We will have the required and appropriate days to deliberate that, and I look forward to the hon. member getting into that debate.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will ask the minister one other question. Will this government put the people of Alberta first, ahead of government and big business, in their centennial budget and resume its proper role as we go forward into this next century to serve and protect the freedoms of Alberta rather than tax and grow the branches of government by adopting a plan to increase . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, there are about four questions now.

Mr. Hinman: . . . per capita funding to local government, thereby allowing them to reduce the mill rate, stimulating the strengthening and growing . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I really look forward to the hon. member participating in the budget debate because I think he's got a good part of his speech on that particular section written. It will be very good, I think, to have that debate and that dialogue. But, again, before we enter into that, I invite the hon. member to become very well informed about the considerable tax advantage that people who work, live, and raise their families in this province enjoy today. It is envied across the country. There's no question about it.

Mr. Speaker, we have as a government and under the leadership of our Premier long stated that a good fiscal environment, that a competitive tax environment would indeed speed up economic growth. This province is sure evidence that good tax policies, good fiscal policies work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Automobile Insurance Rates

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On February 18, '05, the Minister of Finance asked the Alberta Automobile Insurance Rate Board to review premiums for compulsory auto insurance. I understand that today a response has been issued by the board supporting voluntary reductions that insurers are filing. My questions are for the Minister of Finance. What improvements will drivers see to their auto insurance premiums with the changes now being requested by industry?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, in fact I do have a news release which I will be pleased to table at the appropriate time for tablings in the House from the Automobile Insurance Rate Board. As I indicated to the hon. member opposite yesterday, I expected to have a response to this in the next day or two. Well, today we do have that response.

What the Automobile Insurance Rate Board informs all of us is that a number of companies, representing at least 50 per cent of the business in the Alberta market, have filed for premium reductions. They range from 4 to 7 per cent, and they will take effect between April 1 and July 1. Other insurers have also indicated that they intend to file as well. So for our insured public this means, I think, very good news and certainly rate reductions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: does this action go far enough? I mean, is this what was recommended by the Automobile Insurance Rate Board?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the rate board does comment in its news release on that specifically, and with your permission I would just read a very brief sentence. This is from the board chair.

With major insurers voluntarily reducing premiums on average in line with the board recommendation, it's not necessary to mandate reductions . . . At this time the board is recommending the minister accept reductions that are voluntary and reflect the individual positions of insurers, rather than mandate reductions.

So for this present time I will accept that advice.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

2:00

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister: will all drivers, including commercial drivers, see these reductions?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, these reductions apply to private passenger vehicle policies below the grid, which is about 80 per cent of the market. I think that is certainly what we expected to see.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Protection of Children Abusing Drugs

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Private member's Bill 202 has raised the hopes of parents across the province because it would provide them with a tool to parent their children who are experiencing a breakdown and abdication of their lives to a chemical. The government has recently stated that it will not support this bill with the legal backing it requires. My question is to the Minister of Children's Services. Given that this bill is not receiving the support that it needs, what are this ministry's plans to help parents aid their drug-addicted children?

The Speaker: Hon. members, this bill is still before the House. It's still in the process of being dealt with. We don't know what the resolution of the House will be with respect to this. The question is very premature.

Hon. member, go to your supplementary.

Mrs. Mather: To the Minister of Justice: given that the problem of crystal meth and other drugs has existed for years in urban and rural areas, why is this ministry claiming this bill has come too quickly?

The Speaker: Once again, this bill is still the property of the House. It's before the House. It hasn't been dealt with in the House yet. I think it's premature again.

Go to your third question, hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: To the Minister of Children's Services: given that this ministry is charged with the protection of children in Alberta, is there an intention to work towards receiving government support for the intention?

The Speaker: The hon. minister if you wish.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can let the hon. member know that the government of Alberta and the Ministry of Children's Services support all children who are in need. I think that reflects back on the PCHIP legislation when it hit this House as a private member's bill many years ago and then became a government bill. I can tell the hon. member that this minister supports the intent of the bill as do many members who are sitting around, and we'll look forward to the debate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Protection of Personal Information

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While not frequent, we do hear about public information entrusted in the hands of government making its way to the public. My first question is to the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. Given recent vulnerabilities identified federally and ongoing concerns about the security of private information, what are we doing to ensure that the Alberta government computer systems are safe from attack?

Mr. Ouellette: First and foremost, Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta places a high priority on protecting the privacy rights of Albertans. There are a number of measures in place to reduce risk. These include policies and standards, building a training and awareness program, designing a security architecture, and monitoring security attacks against our systems.

Over the last year there have been marked security improvements; however, it would be foolish to ever think any computer is invincible. The key is to stay one step ahead by continually changing and improving our computer systems and educating our workforce. We accomplish this in part by being one of the only jurisdictions in Canada to have information technology staff devoted exclusively to privacy protection.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is again to the same minister. What steps are we taking to protect personal information?

Mr. Ouellette: The government of Alberta is a leader in the development of information technology standards for personal information protection. In fact, its privacy design standards won an international award in 2003. We've just introduced a new privacy planning tool which gives ICT project teams for all ministries recommendations and advice on how to protect personal information at the earliest stages of project planning. This new tool, which includes an online questionnaire, is intended to be used by every ministry for all ICT projects. The new privacy planning tool has been almost two years in the works, and I'm confident that it will prove to be yet another successful project contributing to an effective, efficient government of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is again to the same minister. Recently, March 15 of 2005, the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner issued a news release warning that newer digital photocopiers and fax machines pose a security risk when returned at the end of their lease. How is the government responding to this latest risk?

Mr. Ouellette: This is a relatively recent discovery within the last year, Mr. Speaker, and I'm pleased to say that the Alberta government is out in front of it. In fact, it was my ministry that first contacted the Privacy Commissioner to advise that this might be a problem. Since the discovery my ministry has now made it standard practice to ensure that all hard drives and memories are removed from the digital photocopiers and fax machines prior to returning these machines to the vendors. I'm pleased to report that in its news release the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner singled out the Alberta government's actions against this potential security threat as a good example for other organizations to follow.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Fatality Inquiries

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Good governments have a reputation for being open and transparent. Unfortunately, this government does not. Now they are proposing government policy intended to seriously limit the role of the public in supposedly public fatality inquiries. My question is to the Minister of Justice. Can the minister justify the rationale behind prohibiting members of the media and others such as advocacy groups from being invited to participate in supposedly public fatality inquiries?

Mr. Stevens: Well, Mr. Speaker, yesterday there was second reading with respect to amendments on the fatality inquiries legislation, and part of those amendments dealt with a provision which would define interested parties for those that have a direct and substantial interest. The role of the media in this public inquiry process is to attend and to report; in other words, to report the news with respect to this event. Parties who are interested parties or persons under the legislation have an opportunity to participate by having counsel asking questions, assisting in defining the scope of the inquiry. In my estimation, that is not the role of the media in a typical situation.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm not sure if this bill is before the House today or tomorrow, but if it is before the House, the purpose of question period is not to debate bills.

Proceed, hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: To the same minister: was the role of the media in previous public inquiries what prompted the change in direction of government policy?

The Speaker: Once again, now, we've got a bill before the House, and the purpose of question period is not to debate the bill. That's why we have an agenda for that.

So, hon. member, proceed with your third one.

Dr. B. Miller: Well, it's not up today.

The Speaker: Well, I'm sorry. It's before the House.

Hon. member, proceed with your third question.

Dr. B. Miller: Okay. The third question: can the minister explain to this House and explain to the members of the media who are asking the question – so it has some urgency – why this government is closing another door? Why is this government closing another door to open and transparent government?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, this question relates to something that is a public inquiry. It is open to the public. The public have the opportunity to attend. They can sit in and witness what is going on. They can report what is going on. There is absolutely nothing in the suggestions that we have put forward by way of amendment that in any fashion is going to impact upon the ability of the media or members of the public to sit in that courtroom and observe what is going on.

BSE Testing

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The BSE crisis has taken its toll on Alberta's producers. Producers are certainly feeling it in my constituency, in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. This past weekend I met with some very confused and frustrated farmers. They explained to me that the gold standard BSE testing in Canada is more sensitive, even as sensitive as 15 times that of what's used in the United States. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. If our beef industries are so linked, why are we not using the same standard of testing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question because it is somewhat of a confusion point amongst a number of our producers. I'd like to point out that the gold standard test that the member mentioned is a confirmatory test. In other words, we have preliminary tests that we do, and in both countries those preliminary tests are using the same methodology. So on the preliminary test we are the same, but on the gold standard test both countries are using testing standards that have been developed by the World Organisation for Animal Health, the OIE. On that basis, the guidelines allow for some variations on the gold test standards in the lab, but it would appear that both testing procedures will give you the same result.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, then, given that Alberta exports 75 per cent of Canada's beef, why is there not an Alberta solution to this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said in my previous response, the guidelines are set out by the World Organisation for Animal Health, or the OIE. Because we are trying to make sure that all of our science is transparent and be recognized in the world as following transparent science in relation to testing, that's the test that we follow. In addition to that, in Canada it's the Canadian Food Inspection Agency that directs BSE testing and ensures that all of the labs are conducting BSE testing at the same high standard.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, given that Alberta and most provinces import beef, then, from the U.S., will the minister press the Canadian Food Inspection Agency for a review of testing standards with the intent to harmonize the standard that's used in both Canada and the U.S.?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, as I said earlier, we are following OIE testing guidelines as is the United States, but as the member rightly points out, we are an integrated marketplace in North America. It would be beneficial if we were working from the same playbook, as it were, using similar protocols. I know that the CFIA is aware of these differences in the testing protocols between our two countries, and they are, as part of our ongoing negotiations with the U.S., working on harmonizing those protocols as well as other issues as it relates to trade.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Opening of Alberta Office in Washington

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government's hypocrisy is as blinding as the American Fourth of July fireworks display. If Ottawa gets within a country mile of provincial jurisdiction, the Tory caucus howls, yet this government feels free to track mud all over Canada's jurisdiction. Yesterday the Premier made a series of comments about Canadian foreign policy on issues ranging from missile defence and weaponization of space to oil drilling in the Alaskan wildlife refuge. My questions are to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Given the Premier's comment on missile defence yesterday, is it this government's position for Alberta to have an independent foreign policy?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the Premier yesterday attended the opening of our Washington office, which is collocated in the Canadian embassy, and had commented on various questions that arose with respect to federal policy. He made it very clear that although these are his own personal feelings, much of this rested either within the federal government jurisdiction or the American government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I ask the minister: is the Premier's attack on Canadian foreign policy on foreign soil a prelude to this government planning to announce a unilateral declaration of sovereignty?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, someone has to speak up for Alberta's interests, and the best person to do that is the Premier of this great province of Alberta.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, given the fact that yesterday's trade office opening, dismally planned by the man earning $450,000 a year, was held during the Easter break, when much of the Washington press corps was in Texas, will the minister share with this House exactly what the Premier's ghost town junket is accomplishing for the taxpayers?

Mr. Stelmach: With glee. Mr. Speaker, let me clarify the opening preamble, another mistake on behalf of the hon. member. About two months ago we actually issued a press release with all of the costs of opening the office in Washington. The salary of our envoy is that of a senior official within government, and it's within the $250,000 range with all of the expenses, not the $450,000 that the hon. member mentioned. The cost of the office – the start-up costs, staffing, two other people – is roughly $1 million, and that's what's been budgeted. Any other payments made to any other official, including our envoy, will be duly recorded and presented in this House in our annual reports. So I suggest that they read at least the press report, that we were very open with the total costs of opening the office, and they're nowhere near what the hon. gentleman has talked about.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Medication for Seniors

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A report released today by the University of Lethbridge found that approximately one-third of residents in 24 long-term care facilities in Alberta had received psychotropic drugs in the last two years. Last week when I raised the issue of medication for seniors, according to Hansard the minister passed the buck to the physicians and directed me to take it up with them. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given the findings of this report and given that this minister is responsible for the health care system, what is the minister doing to ensure that these drugs are being used appropriately and only when necessary?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The intent of comments made previously was to note that if guardians or families of persons in care are concerned about the prescriptions, they should check with the physicians. The physicians are responsible for prescribing the drugs.

But let me further expand on some of the issues surrounding accountability. The health region has mechanisms to monitor the appropriate use of medications. The Pharmacy and Therapeutic Committee, comprised of physicians, psychiatrists, pharmacists, and other health care professionals, develops clinical guidelines to ensure the appropriate use of all medications. These research findings that have been illuminated by the hon. member opposite will be reviewed by the committee. I'd say, further, that the region is implementing a number of additional practice guidelines to ensure appropriate use of medications.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. My supplemental question to the same minister: how does the minister explain the findings of the report that less than half of some psychotropic drug prescriptions had the accompanying documentation on why the drug was being used?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in the review I think that some of the detailed answers, such as the question that the member opposite is asking, will come to light, and I'd be prepared to comment at the time that we hear further from the committee.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Given that last reply, I would like one more thing for you to think about. Given that the report recommends further research, is the minister prepared to invest department resources into finding out exactly why seniors are being prescribed so many psychotropic drugs?

2:20

Ms Evans: I think the hon. member has made a very valuable suggestion. We can certainly look at that in terms of the increased and improved quality of care in long-term care facilities. With the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports we are working together to try and improve not only the continuum of care for those fragile elderly that need our support but to examine all aspects of drug use. Perhaps it's premature to say, but we are embarking on a further detailed examination of how drugs are used generally by seniors with a view to expand their learning about the appropriate use of drugs, not only those prescription drugs but those off-the-shelf drugs that frequently are prescribed as alternative therapies to seniors.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A constituent has informed me of a situation where a municipality is considering a bylaw that would require pawnshops to provide client information to the RCMP as part of an effort to reduce crime involving stolen goods. My first question is to the Minister of Government Services. Does the minister have any concerns about this as it pertains to Alberta's privacy legislation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All businesses within the province have to operate under the protection of personal information and privacy. As such, the operations have to only collect information that is necessary for them to continue operating their businesses, and if they collect that information, they have to be very, very careful how they store it and who they give it to.

I would be very concerned if a municipality was passing a bylaw that would require all of the customers to give the information that seems to be implied by the proposed bylaw because if they're collecting from all customers, then in fact they may be collecting information that is unnecessary and may be violating a person's privacy.

Mr. Johnson: My supplemental question is to the same minister. What should pawnshop owners or other businesses do if they are being asked by the police to disclose information about their customers?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, under the legislation there is the ability for businesses to give information to law enforcement agencies. However, once again, it is very specific. The police force or whatever law enforcement agency it might be could be operating under the provincial legislation, or they could be operating under the federal legislation. They would have to determine that. In any case, it would have to be very specific for the investigation of an incident. So I would really caution any municipality that's considering doing this that they be very familiar with the personal information protection legislation.

Mr. Johnson: My second supplemental question is to the Solicitor General. Even if there were no specific municipal bylaws, can the owners of pawnshops be required to provide police with personal information about their customers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's nothing in the province's privacy legislation specific to pawnshops, but as my colleague pointed out, Alberta's personal information legislation does provide the fact that they must disclose information to the police with regard to an investigation. So if it was required during the course of a criminal investigation, the information would have to be disclosed to them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Physical Activities in Schools

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The rising tide of childhood obesity is a threat not only to children's health and the future of the health system but also to their ability to engage fully in the learning opportunities at school. Many schools are struggling to accommodate the new requirements for 30 minutes of daily physical activity due to the lack of facilities, the lack of qualified teachers, and scheduling difficulties. To the Minister of Education: when will the government provide a solid action plan backed by adequate resources to implement the mandated 30 minutes of daily physical activity recommended by the Learning Commission and subsequently accepted by this government?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, obesity amongst children and, for that matter, amongst anyone in the population is a very important issue and one that we're taking very seriously. That is one reason why we have looked at one way of reversing that trend.

In response to the hon. member's question, I did send out a clarification on this issue a week or two ago to all the school boards and school trustees so that it could be communicated to the particular jurisdictions as to how we intend to proceed with the implementation of the required 30 minutes of daily physical activity as part of the school programming, starting in grades 1 through 9 this fall. In response to that, the public so far and the teachers and the parents and so on involved have indicated that it's a good idea to do that. I've also indicated that we would not be asking the day to be stretched or elongated to accommodate it. This will be done within the school day and at this point does not require additional facilities to be built or additional equipment to be bought or anything to that nature.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The message hasn't got out in St. Albert.

To the same minister: given the commission's clear intention that this activity be integrated into a larger wellness initiative and supervised by appropriately trained educators, why is the minister claiming in this Assembly that everything from recess and field trips to lunchtime roughhousing will fulfill the requirement?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member first of all to check with his local school board or school boards for the area that he represents. I'm sure that they've got the communiqué by now. It went out, as I say, a week or two ago.

Specific to his question, I think it's important to realize that in September '06 we will be bringing forward a new health and wellness framework, a new curriculum, as it were, that will take the best of what we are already doing in the school system and adding to it some new initiatives to help improve overall student health and wellness and their overall outcomes.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Supplemental to the same minister: how can you assure schools and parents that the activities will remain planned, supervised, and safe if indeed recess and lunchtime activities are going to fulfill this requirement of yours, sir?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I indicated in the communication – let's make it clear to everyone – to the school superintendents and to the school boards, who in turn will communicate the message to the teachers, that we're talking about daily physical activity, which in the simplest form can be as simple as bending and stretching and running and jumping and hiking and walking and so on or as complicated, on the other hand, as a full phys ed component, which is in the system now as well.

Now, should a field trip require walking to get to the location, that is a physical activity. Should recess involve some outdoor activity of running around the schoolyard, such as children are apt to do particularly in the younger ages, that too will qualify as will noon hour activities as will after school activities.

The important difference, however, is that we're asking teachers to simply make the explanation, to make the connection with students that what they are doing is a physical activity and alert them to the benefits of that activity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Border Closure to U.S. Cattle

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the minister of agriculture. As all members of the Assembly know, the United States border is closed to Canadian cattle. What members may not be as aware of is the fact that the Canadian border is also closed to U.S. cattle coming up here. For the most part that wouldn't matter except in specific cases such as a bull stud, for an example that I have in my riding. He is no longer able to import the Holstein bulls that he requires for his genetic bull stud. My question to the minister is: being that the CFIA said at the end of February that perhaps we could re-examine that, is this being done, and if not, are you as the minister lobbying them to open that border?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is just one of the many issues that is surrounding the BSE issue. I can certainly understand and sympathize with the producers who are suffering from a limited supply of genetics or breeding stock, but, you know, we have to be careful what we ask for. The reason is that the rest of the world is watching what we're doing in Alberta and Canada and across our border.

Throughout the entire process we have been working closely with the U.S. to harmonize our animal disease surveillance regulations. We've been ensuring our regulations are synchronized to make it much easier for other international markets to reopen their borders to North American beef. If we moved ahead without the U.S., I think there could be some very potentially negative ramifications to our other international trading partners, so we have to be careful about that. That could actually delay the border opening further for both countries, and that is a serious concern of ours.

Ms Haley: Well, my last question, Mr. Speaker, is this: we're asking the Americans to open their border. Is it not time or would it not be appropriate to start showing some good faith here and perhaps start to ease the restrictions of our own border closure?

Mr. Horner: Again, Mr. Speaker, we are working on pushing to reopen the border to our cattle because the science supports it. Likewise, we're working very hard to help the USDA with its legal challenges in that regard. If they're successful, it is going to allow them to implement their proposed rule permitting live young cattle crossing the border. At the same time we are working with the CFIA and the Canadian federal minister to work on harmonizing our regulations on both sides of the border.

To that end, Mr. Speaker, and in answer to the member's question, we are working on making sure that we're doing everything we can to ensure normalized trade relations as soon as we possibly can, but we don't want to do anything that's going to jeopardize either one of those two things happening.

Recognitions

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds I'll call upon the first of seven members to participate.

The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Jennifer Heil

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the outstanding achievements of a very special Albertan from the community of Spruce Grove. Jennifer Heil did Alberta proud last weekend when she won a gold medal in dual moguls while competing at the world freestyle skiing championships in Finland.

Mr. Speaker, Jennifer is a shining example of a world-class athlete and a fierce competitor, a true Albertan. She is leading the pack in her sport, and even though she has only been on the world circuit for four years, she has won nine World Cups and is the number one ranked female mogul skier in the world. She is absolutely outstanding, and we will all certainly have our eyes on her next year as she races for gold in the 2006 Olympics in Torino, Italy.

I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating Jennifer on her outstanding accomplishment. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mohamed El Mais

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise this afternoon and recognize the achievement of an extraordinary 6th grader from Calgary. Hailed as Calgary's CanSpell king, Mohamed El Mais won the 2005 Calgary Herald CanWest CanSpell regional championship last Saturday.

The final showdown came between Mohamed and runner-up Matthew Fergel, with Mohamed braving the pressure and edging out his opponent in an exciting finale. The win, Mr. Speaker, has earned Mohamed the opportunity to represent the Calgary area at the Scripps Howard national bee in Washington, DC, in May of this year. In addition, Mr. Speaker, the achievement has earned both Mohamed and Matthew the opportunity to compete at the CanWest CanSpell national spelling bee final in Ottawa in April.

We wish both boys the best of luck in the upcoming competitions. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Medicine Hat Boston Pizza Royals Hockey Team Foremost High School Falcons Basketball Team

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to recognize two teams from southeast Alberta.

The Medicine Hat Boston Pizza Royals pee wee AA hockey team won the provincial championship this past weekend in Fort Saskatchewan. The Royals, coached by Chad Stadnicki, Kelley Dean, Warren King, and Darcy Haaf, went two and one, losing their only game to St. Paul. In the final game against Fort Saskatchewan and going up 3-0, they fought off a late drive to win the final 3-2. I'd like to congratulate the Royals for their successful season and for winning the championship.

Mr. Speaker, the other team I'd like to recognize is the Foremost high school Falcons basketball team, who won the 1A provincial championship this weekend in Ridge Valley just east of Grande Prairie. The Falcons, coached by Garth Van Gaalen and Cole Dixon, went three for three, beating Hay Lakes in the first game, Ridge Valley in a close game in the second, and blowing away the team from Lundbreck in the final with good defence and pressure, winning 79-50. I'd like to congratulate the Foremost Falcons for their successful season and for winning the provincial championship.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Team Martin

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today to recognize some exceptional Albertans.

Last weekend two Edmonton-based rinks, skipped by Randy Ferbey and Kevin Martin, squared off in the final of the Canada Cup. Kevin Martin was successful, and not only did he win the Canada Cup but he secured for himself and his team a berth in the upcoming Olympic trials.

On behalf of this House and all Albertans I'd like to congratulate these fine Albertans. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Meals on Wheels

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with pride that I ask this Assembly to recognize an outstanding service, Meals on Wheels. Meals on Wheels is a not-for-profit organization that relies on volunteers to provide nutritional meals which promote health, well-being, and independence for their clients.

Volunteers who deliver meals include students gaining work experience, parents with their preschool children, retirees, corporate teams promoting community involvement, ESL students and new Canadians, and shift workers. Meals are heart healthy and diabetic friendly, tasty with generous portions and lots of choice, and are modified to meet individual needs.

This program offers more than just a meal. It offers friendship and connection with the community as well as independence for many housebound clients. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Justin Yaassoub

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the achievements of Justin Yaassoub. Justin attends Queen Elizabeth high school and I'm proud to say is a member of my constituency of Edmonton-Decore.

Justin was recently recognized as one of this province's Great Kids award recipients. Justin's involvement ranged from the Bright Nights festival, Food Bank volunteer, DARE program mentor with the Northmount elementary school, raising money for his renaissance program for the school, tsunami fundraising for the Red Cross, as well as involvement with the political process in the last provincial election and with the campaign as well.

I'd like Justin to receive one of the centennial medallions that we're able to hand out to distinguished Albertans. I'd like Justin to rise with his father, Ali, to receive the traditional warm welcome as well and be recognized.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Promotion of Peace

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize several groups in Alberta whose goals and demands are echoed across the globe.

On Saturday, March 19, peace activists around the world took part in rallies, marches, and other public protests to wage peace against the illegal and aggressive policies of the Bush administration around the world and particularly in Iraq. I took part in the rally and the march that was organized by activists here in Edmonton as part of a global day of action. Similar activities have been organized by groups such as CANDIL, Canada Democracy and International Law in Calgary, and the Wetaskiwin Citizens for Peace.

Right here in Edmonton there are a number of groups who deserve recognition for their efforts to promote peace. These groups include the Edmonton Coalition against War and Racism, Project Ploughshares, and the U of A Coalition against War and Racism.

This week saw the sad occasion of the second anniversary of the American invasion of Iraq. The war in Iraq, which was wholeheartedly supported by the Conservative government, has led to the deaths of tens of thousands of soldiers and civilians. Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition here from some good Albertans from Drayton Valley, Newbrook, Vegreville, Alder Flats, Chestermere, Redwater, Morinville, Spruce Grove, and Stony Plain calling on the government to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: [underemployed] Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have also a petition, signed by 104 Albertans. This petition reads:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

Thank you.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, as well, rise today to present a petition containing 103 names, and the petition reads:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

Mr. Speaker, these 103 names are comprised of mostly citizens of Calgary but also many from Lethbridge and other areas in southern Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to submit this petition with regard to the undersigned, approximately 106 signatures here of people who would “prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of the oil sands facilities.”

Introduction of Bills

Employment Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2005

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 35, the Employment Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2005.

This bill will allow private-sector pension plan members better access to information and more transparency. In addition, it gives the superintendent of insurance more effective ways of ensuring that their funds are secured and that the plans are properly funded and liquid.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 35 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 35 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have actually four tablings. I'll be quick. The first is the Automobile Insurance Rate Board news release that I spoke to earlier today.

The second is the report on premium redundancy, which I received from the Automobile Insurance Rate Board and which I have referred to in answering a number of questions.

Next, Mr. Speaker, I would like to table a copy of a press release from Alan D. Hunter, QC, who is counsel for part-time commissioners, regarding the Securities Commission discussion.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would table the required number of copies of the letter that I referred to earlier that I wrote to the members of the Alberta Securities Commission, requesting their investigation and advice.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I would like to table the requisite number of copies of responses to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre relative to questions in question period yesterday, essentially identifying that private CT and MRI clinics are not part of Alberta's public health care system. Questions about safety and value are medical issues, and we rely on the College of Physicians and Surgeons to determine the appropriate use of this technology. So I have those.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table the annual report of the Livestock Identification Services Ltd., which incorporates the Brand Act, the Livestock Identification and Brand Inspection Act, the Livestock and Livestock Products Act, and the Stray Animals Act, and their associated audited financial statements for the year ended March 31, 2004.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the required copies and wish to file the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy annual report 2003-2004.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the honour today of tabling the requisite number of copies of a unanimous House leaders' agreement relative to two items for the Standing Orders.

The first is relative to an agreement with respect to the Members' Statements and Recognitions which would give effect to an agreement whereby the current Members' Statements and Recognitions would be replaced by a new agreement for six members' statements per day, two minutes each, apportioned in accordance with the schedule attached to the agreement.

The second relates to Motions Other than Government Motions to be heard on Monday evening, such that one motion would be heard each Monday evening, debated for up to 60 minutes with five minutes for close, and then moving to government business thereafter. If a motion was dealt with earlier than the 60 minutes, it would automatically move to the government business thereafter. So the House leaders' agreement provides for those two changes and purports to come into effect immediately. In fact, it says it comes into effect on March 21.

So in tabling this document, there are two things I would like to point out to the House. First, I would want to request unanimous consent to putting into effect the changes proposed by the House leaders' agreement, copies of which the House leader of each party has and the independent member has, and secondly to address the issue of having it come into effect on April 4 rather than on March 21 as stated in the agreement. I think all members would agree to that. I would point out one error in week six and seven of the table, where numbers have been transposed, and I've corrected the numbers on the filed copy. It doesn't change the overall allocation other than to correctly give the third party an allocation where one hadn't been given, but it doesn't change the overall numbers.

So I'd ask, Mr. Speaker, if we could have unanimous consent for the House leaders' agreement to be put into effect effective April 4.

The Speaker: Hon. members, all of the documentation with respect to parliaments' historical citations and notations can be given by the chair with respect to this matter, but the chair is going to make comment before we proceed on this matter today.

The chair has indicated on several occasions that it is a positive step when House leaders can agree on how the business of the Assembly is to be conducted. I'm not sure if all members of the House have seen this agreement, and it's very difficult to deal with something that members haven't seen, so I'm going to sit down now at this point and see that the document be circulated to all members. Pending that, we'll recognize the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today to table the requisite number of copies of the memorandum of understanding for the entry of temporary foreign workers for projects in the Alberta oil sands, specifically referencing the fact of details of comprehensive plans to ensure that available and qualified Canadians are made aware of the employment opportunities in the project and have an opportunity to apply. I would really ask the members in the Legislative Assembly before they ask questions on matters such as this that they actually read the agreement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder: tabling returns and reports.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have several documents to table today, each of which is in protest of the recent dismissal of one Don Hill, who formerly hosted the Wild Rose Forum on CBC Radio. I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies, number one, of a news article by Penney Kome, dated Monday, March 7, 2005; number two, an open letter from Bev Muendel-Atherstone; and, number three, a second open letter, this one from Bob Ware and Diana Hobson, who are key organizers for The Friends of Don Hill campaign.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today before you and this esteemed Assembly to table, with permission, the appropriate number of copies of letters I received electronically from five concerned citizens of this province all expressing their support for a total smoking ban in public places. The first is from a Mr. Rob Virgil, and it's a copy of a letter that he wrote to the Premier urging him to show some leadership in this area and support a total ban; the second one is from Garry Dewar, and it's a copy of a message that he sent to the hon. Minister of Health, again supporting a total ban on smoking in public places; the third is from a Dr. Kate Reed, who is a physician, emphasizing the risk of second-hand smoke; the fourth is from a Ms Lois Kelly, who disagrees with allowing bars, casinos, and bingos to have smoking; and the fifth is a similar one, from a Ms Linda McGeachy, voicing similar concerns with bars, bingo halls, and casinos and supporting a full smoking ban in public places.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of correspondence to my office from a constituent by the name of Gloria Spooner, who is a teacher assistant at Ellerslie Campus North, and she's raising some serious concerns she has regarding what she perceives to be the lack of a coordinated distribution system of information and equipment resources for special needs students in the province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in this House and present five copies of a letter from the Minister of Human Resources and Employment to one of his constituents outlining the policy with the Alberta/Canadian agreement on temporary foreign workers and indicating that relevant construction unions must be consulted before a permit is issued.

Also, I'd like to present five copies each of five letters protesting the temporary foreign worker policy of the government.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today, which is a document from Enron Wholesale Services' legal department. It's a monthly report, November 2000, and it is a synopsis of significant transactions and matters.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier in question period today there was a question raised by the hon. the Leader of the Opposition to the Minister of Finance, and I'm rising under Standing Orders 23(h), 23(I), and 23(j).

Citation 23(h), Mr. Speaker, indicates that a member will be called to order "if, in the Speaker's opinion, that member makes allegations against another member." Under 23(I) it requires that the "member be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that member imputes false or unavowed motives to another member" and (j) "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm of a mind in raising this point of order, which I raised during question period, to also advise the Minister of Finance that she might consider raising this matter as a question of personal privilege. Under Beauchesne's 64, "the House has occasionally taken notice of attacks on individual Members," and if you look at other sections of Beauchesne's on pages 19, 20, and 21, it reflects on the integrity of a member, and it's clear from Beauchesne's in that context that castigations of the character of a member do impugn a member's ability to carry out their duty. I think the aspersion that was cast this afternoon is of such a significant nature that I will in fact be having a discussion with the Minister of Finance with respect to whether she should raise a question of privilege.

But I thought it was appropriate to at the earliest possible opportunity raise the point of order under 23(h), (I), and (j) because in the questions – and I even hesitate to repeat the allegation – centring around allegations that had been made with respect to the chair, I believe, and executive director of the Securities Commission – I believe that was the context – and allegations made with respect to their conduct, which the Minister of Finance had indicated she had referred appropriately for investigation, the hon. member asked: what is she trying to hide or who is she trying to protect? The words I wrote down were: "Who is she trying to protect?"

Now, in that context, Mr. Speaker, in the context of allegations – and I don't know what the allegations were, but they're obviously of a serious nature with respect to a body which is an independent commission to oversee the effect of our securities market in this province. Allegations of that nature are so serious as to go to the integrity of the person being addressed, and this question was posed in a manner in which it was very clear: "Who is she trying to protect?"

That is an allegation which if it was made outside the House might well be the substance of a lawsuit. It ought not to be made inside the House. I think it is so serious, Mr. Speaker, that I think the hon. member should be admonished now, and I would encourage or at least I would talk to the Minister of Finance about whether she should bring a question of privilege.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on this point of order.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, I rise and on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview withdraw that remark and apologize to the entire Legislative Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, one of the traditions here is that if comments are withdrawn and sincere apologies are offered, the matter is generally dealt with. The Government House Leader is quite clear that the statement that was attached – and this is not paraphrasing; this comes from the Blues – “Why was the Finance Minister sitting on this report for that length of time? Who is she trying to protect?” clearly would have violated all of our rules, all of our traditions, all of the historical precedents, and there would have been no alternative but to find the appropriate ruling that it was a question of order. Whether or not anything else transpires is subject to the future.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Railway (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2005

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm certainly pleased to move second reading of Bill 13, the Railway (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2005.

Mr. Speaker, this fairly short bill does three very important things. In the past there have been significant disagreements between railways and road authorities over the maintenance of rail crossings. The act currently provides a mechanism for resolving these disputes over the cost of construction of the actual road crossing; however, there is no mechanism that deals with the ongoing maintenance of the particular crossing. Bill 13 corrects this oversight and basically states that either party, either the railway or the municipality, can now apply to the Land Compensation Board for a ruling.

Under this bill disputes over construction costs will also be heard by the Land Compensation Board. They're currently being heard by the Surface Rights Board, and in reality the Land Compensation Board is a better board to deal with it as they're the ones that typically deal with costs. The Land Compensation Board has indicated that it will do this.

Bill 13 also sets out a 30-day time limit to appeal decisions made by the provincial railway administrator. What has been in place up to this point is that there has been no time limit on the appeal, so an appeal could occur six months to six years afterwards. This now sets it up for a 30-day time limit, again, which seems to be very consistent.

So, Mr. Speaker, there are only relatively few things that are done with this bill. It is a very important bill. I'll just put a plug in for short-line railways. They're very important to the future of this province, and I see a huge future for short-line railways in this province.

With that, I would like to move second reading of Bill 13, the Railway (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2005.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of concerns about this Railway (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2005.

I've given it two potential other names: the Alberta Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz or Government Planes, Trains, and Automobiles.

On the surface Bill 13 appears rather innocuous, much like the barely exposed tip of an iceberg in Canada's arctic waters. Bill 13's changes appear to be of the grammatical variety, changing or to and as well as spelling out the powers of the operator of the railway, the road authority, and the Land Compensation Board to resolve disputes arising from land acquisition rights where railways cross roads, this resolution to take place, as the hon. member, indicated within 30 days.

My concerns lie primarily with section 30, number 6 on the second page, which outlines the minister of transportation's role in making regulations affecting the Surface Rights Board and the Expropriation Act. Viewed in isolation, this act appears to facilitate land disputes. The other side of this Janus coin has to do with the government-sanctioned potential land grab. Whether given the season of Easter or in my role as opposition infrastructure watchdog, I'm going to play the role of a doubting Thomas and enter into speculation of the land variety. If my speculations come even close to the truth, then the value of Alberta muskeg is about to go through the roof.

While I do not normally engage in conspiracy theorizing, when you start to connect the dots, a pattern emerges which becomes a railroad-to-riches map leading to Fort McMurray. A number of questions have to be asked, the answers to which are currently cloaked under FOIP declarations. For example, what was Rod Love, who was a private consultant for a company promoting a rail link to Fort McMurray, doing on a government plane which flew to Fort McMurray the same week in which the Premier later floated the plan of a proposed railway to Fort McMurray? Was this chance circumstance, star alignment, or is the government back in the business of being in business, that it claims to have abandoned?

Unanswered question 2 has to do with another floated trial balloon. Is this an extension of the roads for royalties or a type of railroads for royalties spinoff? This wouldn't be the first time that a government regulation enriched government members and their connected Conservative supporters at the taxpayers' expense. In 1992 when Rick Orman reduced royalty levels by two-thirds, a number of government-seated MLAs, who were later referred to as Tory oil, benefited directly by the reduced royalties they had to pay on their gas and oil leases.

Is the royalty rail or road link to Fort McMurray already a done deal? Will it follow in the tracks of an already existing northern railway, or has an alternate route already been surveyed and staked? Has the land necessary already been purchased by a government-friendly P3 company in anticipation of being awarded a nonbid government contract?

Is the purpose of this act to give the minister the power of expropriation of the remaining parcels of land, which reluctant muskeg managers have refused to part with? How arm's length is the Land Compensation Board from the Alberta government? Is its arm's length longer or shorter than the supposedly independent Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, which receives 60 per cent of its operating budget from the private industry over which it sits in judgment? With other funding coming from the government, is it any wonder that in over 97 per cent of the cases the EUB rules in favour of private oil and gas drilling interests against the wish of affected public intervenors? Will this independent Land Compensation Board simply rubber-stamp government land expropriation grabs and decide on the level of compensation based on government connections and dictates?

Will this next in the long line of private ripoffs at public taxpayers' expense P3 projects be announced this summer during the beer and barbeque days, outside of this House's sitting, like so many other decisions made by this government, behind closed caucus doors?

Is this the Alberta government's muskeg equivalent of the Trans-Siberian railroad, or could it possibly be that on the issue of the Railway (Alberta) Amendment Act I'm simply off track? [interjections] Mr. Minister, if I could specifically have your attention because this is the most important of the questions.

If either or both of these road or rail projects proceed, will this minister commit to an open and accountable bidding and financing process?

I look forward to the minister of infrastructure's direct responses to my multitude of questions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I'm going to be somewhat shorter in my concerns. I know that gets some people on the benches opposite rather excited, that I should say I'm going to be short, but anyway.

Amendment 7 states that appealed presentations must be made within 30 days. I heard what the minister said and certainly appreciate his comments that the appeal period as it sits now is quite lengthy, and that's probably not fair, but I wonder whether 30 days is fair either. It's not a very long time, I don't think, for a person to put together adequate representation if they did wish to file an appeal on this. So my recommendation, should this come up for an amendment in committee study, would be that the appeal period be at least 60 days.

That's the sum total of my concerns on this bill, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If we remember our history, what an accomplishment the railway is. It connected our country from coast to coast. In bringing forward Bill 13, the question that comes to mind is: who's going to benefit from this bill? What provisions within this bill allow for the landowner to appeal after the 30-day decision with respect to the railway?

As farmland becomes more and more important in this country, it becomes a very real concern. Railways do carry goods of many values and for a variety of purposes and industries. Dangerous goods might be a concern, especially with travelling past towns, municipalities, and rich farmland. Is this where the bill could provide dispute resolutions for the landowner? If not, who is he or she to go to if they're not happy with the cleanup and the costs incurred with the cleanup?

Is this where it begins and ends: access and compensation? When does access for the purpose of advancement outweigh the rights of the landowner, in many cases generational landowners whose land remained clean and undisturbed? Creosote is a means of preserving timbers. It's the first concern of contamination. As a kid it never came out of my clothes. I can imagine the problem with soil contamination. Is this the part of the bill that would help the landowners and farmers reach resolve?

What about fires? When dry conditions occur in this province, which they do on a regular basis – you need only check the Farmers' Almanac; it's a reference that's been around for a hundred years, and it was a regular publication in my grandparents' house. If sparks occur when travelling past or going through towns or rich farmland and a fire is caused, who pays? How does one prove this?

These may be a stretch, but they are very real concerns, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to speak some qualified support for Bill 13. I believe that it is an indication that there is in fact some movement toward building railways in Alberta, and I think that this is something that's long overdue. We had a much more extensive railway network in the past in this province, and by forces that were not entirely looking, I think, at the best interests of Albertans, a lot of that railway has in fact been torn up over the last 20 years.

As we move into this next century, it's important for us to look for alternate transportation systems and systems that are giving us the most efficient use of energy and land as well. So a railway does qualify in both of those categories, and I think we would be well suited to make those sorts of choices in favour of railways in the future.

I do have some reservation, though, as I said before. You know, it just seems that there's a bit of a speediness built into this Bill 13 whereby, as the previous members have mentioned, there is a 30-day limit on being able to appeal railway crossings. Now, I know from my own personal experience that railway crossings in rural areas can be problematic and certainly potentially dangerous. As well, the question of maintenance, be it through erosion or snow removal or other forces, over time does in fact become an issue. Perhaps that might not become readily apparent to the residents in the area until a period longer than 30 days might arise. So, you know, it does put pressure on people living adjacent to railway crossings to actually make that appeal on a faster basis. Then, of course, when a new railway line is coming through, again this is going to be potentially problematic.

I think one of the things we are looking for in the future here is to have less level crossings across railways. Indeed, that's part of a viable and useful railway line in the future. But we do have to look for all of the ensuing problems that are associated with that. Railway lines for extended lengths without level crossings do have the problem of cutting communities and dividing communities with long stretches of track. You know, I just hope that we can be assured that Bill 13 is not rushing in the favour of some future railway project that will come across our path very quickly but, rather, that it's just a useful and practical tool, I suppose, for building railways in Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. members, if I call on the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, that will close debate at this point of reading. Any hon. member wishing to participate?

Then the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To everyone who commented, thank you very much. All the creative alliterations, the mixed metaphors, and the scintillating similes will certainly be sent to the presidents of the four major short line railways in Alberta – I will make sure of that – so that they can respond directly to the hon. members who made those statements.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will move the motion on Bill 13, second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a second time]

Bill 16Business Corporations Amendment Act, 2005

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 16, the Business Corporations Amendment Act, 2005.

The Business Corporations Act of Alberta came into effect in 1982, and it's not been substantially amended since 1987. The proposed amendments to the Business Corporations Act will allow Alberta's legislation to keep pace with those in other jurisdictions, and in particular it will help to harmonize the Business Corporations Act of Alberta with the federal counterpart, the Canada Business Corporations Act.

Some of the proposed changes in the bill would allow greater use of electronic technology to facilitate shareholder and director participation in the governance of the corporations. For example, shareholders will be able to participate electronically in shareholder meetings, and directors will also be able to indicate their approval by electronic means.

In addition, the major thrust of this legislation is the enhancement of shareholder protection. One example of this: adding the power for the court to require directors to disclose any profit or gain from corporate contracts. Secondly, directors would be required to comply with the new expressed due diligence provision, and that requirement would require directors to exercise their powers with the care, diligence, and skill that a reasonable, prudent person would have exercised in comparable circumstances.

The legislation also provides various strengthening of the accounting procedures and the accounting accountability for corporations. For example, if an accountant is disqualified by virtue of having shares in that corporation, they would no longer be able to act as the auditor of the corporation. Secondly, a corporation would be required to state, if they do replace their auditor, the reasons for replacing their auditor. In addition, the auditor would be allowed to comment on the reasons for the corporation's dismissal of the auditor.

There are also expanded disclosure requirements for directors and officers, and that would include any interest in material transactions as well as the material contracts.

The amendments would also enhance Alberta's act in a number of ways which would encourage corporations to incorporate here in Alberta. Some examples of these changes would be that proxy forms would only need to be sent in with a notice of meeting when the corporation has more than 50 shareholders. Financial statements of a corporation need not be tabled at the inception of a corporation until they have finished their first financial year.

Thirdly, only 25 per cent of the directors would need to be resident Albertans compared to 50 per cent at the present time, and that would bring us into conformity with the federal legislation, the Canada Business Corporations Act, which also only requires 25 per cent of their directors to be residents.

It would also cure certain inconsistencies and inefficiencies in rules regarding takeovers.

These amendments, Mr. Speaker, would allow for the first time the incorporation of unlimited liability corporations in Alberta. Currently Nova Scotia is the only jurisdiction which allows the incorporation of unlimited liability corporations, and these unlimited liability corporations are of special interest presently in Canada because of the preferential tax treatment in the United States. In the United States unlimited liability corporations are accorded a special tax treatment, and in effect they are treated as partnerships. Here in Canada they would be treated the same as any other corporation however. So there will be no net loss of revenue to the Alberta government. This would allow American corporations a more tax-friendly method to conduct business here in Alberta.

In addition, unlimited liability corporations would provide certain advantages in terms of borrowing because the shareholders of unlimited liability corporations would stand fully behind the liabilities and obligations of the corporations unlike the normal limited liability corporations, which, of course, shelter directors and shareholders from any liability.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, our legislation as well as introducing a new business vehicle in terms of unlimited liability corporations will support the government of Alberta's policy to enhance the province's reputation as being a business-friendly jurisdiction. It would also incorporate more businesses to participate in the Alberta advantage. In addition, there are significant new safeguards for shareholders included in the legislation, and this will enable shareholders to have greater confidence when they invest in Alberta corporations.

Mr. Speaker, this concludes my remarks in moving second reading of Bill 16, the Business Corporations Amendment Act, 2005.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and participate in the debate about Bill 16, the Business Corporations Amendment Act, 2005, as presented, and I listened to the hon. member with a great deal of interest. Certainly, these are noteworthy goals that the hon. member is promoting with these amendments: shareholder protection, new safeguards for shareholders.

These amendments are possibly a result of some of the unsavoury practices that have been going on across the border in America. We see WorldCom. We see the former executive – Ebbers? I should know the name, but it's escaped me. We need to ensure that investors have confidence in our regulatory authorities. That's only one spectacular corporate failure and scandal in America. Enron is certainly another one, and we all know and we're all astonished at the implications of Enron's failure even here in this province, Mr. Speaker. We have to restore confidence in the whole issue of corporate governance and the accounting profession, and hopefully this bill will do that.

But one must be very careful. These are detailed changes to the act, and we're going to have to have a close look at these amendments, and hopefully it is legislation that we can support. We on this side of the Assembly certainly have to look at this in detail. I don't know what sort of consultation has been done by the government in regard to the drafting of this bill. I would only think that it has been extensive. We're going to have to do some research on this issue over the break, and I look forward to further discussions in the Assembly in regard to this.

In conclusion, if this bill is what the hon member stated, then it is an improvement, certainly when you look at the number of years that have passed since there was an amendment to the Business Corporations Amendment Act.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I would adjourn debate on Bill 16. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 22Animal Protection Amendment Act, 2005

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and move second reading of Bill 22, the Animal Protection Amendment Act, 2005.

As I outlined when I introduced this bill, Mr. Speaker, it will update and strengthen the legislation to apply to anyone causing distress to an animal. It will help prevent animals from becoming distressed, and Bill 22 will provide protection for those who report an animal in distress. It also requires a person who is responsible for an animal to provide adequate food, water, shelter, and other essentials. Those who properly care for their animals are protected under this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the Animal Protection Act was enacted in 1967 and applies to all animals in Alberta, including livestock, companion, research, and zoo animals. The last major amendments to the act were made in 1988 and 1989. The expectations of Albertans toward the care of animals have changed over the last decade, and we are proposing changes to the legislation to meet these expectations. Albertans who are responsible for the care of animals in our livestock, research, education, and entertainment industries or institutions also recognize that expectations of animal care have progressed and that updates to our current legislation are necessary.

Mr. Speaker, we consulted with Alberta's livestock industry, provincial humane societies, municipalities, and other stakeholders in drafting these amendments. In fact, I'd like to thank former member for Leduc, Albert Klapstein, who led a review on this issue.

Last year the government of Alberta distributed a discussion paper to gather feedback from stakeholders on required changes. All of the input was taken into consideration when drafting this bill. The proposed changes strengthen the current legislation, that already effectively deals with animals in distress.

The duties of a person who is responsible for an animal will now be included in the act. This will help prevent animals from becoming distressed. It will also give peace officers the ability to deal more effectively with abandoned animals. Further clarification as to when an animal is in distress is also included in the bill.

In addition to protecting animals in Alberta, Mr. Speaker, we will also protect those who legitimately report animals in distress. The opposition members may call this whistle-blower legislation. This legislation will be strengthened to ensure that no action can be taken against any person who reports the distress of an animal to a peace officer unless, of course, it is done maliciously or without reasonable or probable grounds. Anyone who follows reasonable and generally accepted practices of animal care, management, husbandry, hunting, fishing, trapping, pest control, and slaughter will be protected from action under this act.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is a leader in animal protection, and these amendments will help ensure that both the welfare of animals and those who take proper care of their animals are protected in our province. I would urge all members of this Assembly to give Bill 22 their full support.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. It's a pleasure to rise and speak on Bill 22, the Animal Protection Amendment Act, 2005. In discussions about this bill earlier, it certainly is legislation that I would solidly endorse. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar and staff from Agriculture, Food and Rural Development for their time in providing a brief in regard to this bill. I appreciate that.

The Animal Protection Act is being changed because of the problems that exist on farms, unfortunately, throughout Alberta. The changes are a result of increased food costs and the inability of some farmers to take care of their animals. Farmers are stuck in a very bad situation with BSE. It's totally out of their control, and unfortunately there have been cases of some neglected animals. This act will provide tools to peace officers, give them the ability to rescue animals before they become further distressed.

Under the previous act it's been stated that the peace officer had to wait until an animal was in a state of distress before he or she could rescue it. This act provides officers the opportunity to use their judgment on whether an animal will become distressed and take it in to protective custody, I guess we could call this, before any further deterioration may occur.

This bill also puts more responsibility on all animal, livestock, and pet owners, not only farmers but pet owners too, so that they will have to properly take care of their animals. In conversations that have been recently held with the director of enforcement for the SPCA, that director stated that in recent years with the fall in value of livestock they are finding a few cases, some cases, where animals are being left without proper care – no feed, no water, et cetera – and this bill is the result of a need to aid those abandoned animals before they become distressed.

Certainly, I can only think of a former researcher with the Official Opposition who has gone on maternity leave. One would visit her office and you would see posters, not photographs but posters, of various cats and dogs and calendars with cats and dogs on them. This researcher was very respectful of animals, and I think that if I was not to support this legislation, I would hear from that individual.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I think it is time that we consider this legislation. I certainly hope all members of the Assembly will support the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar in this legislative proposal.

I would like to remind all members of this Assembly that these certainly are troubling times for some Alberta farmers, and we need good oversight to ensure that the animals are not getting harmed either through neglect or any form of abuse. Since the price drop in cattle and diversified livestock on game farms, there have been, unfortunately, as I said, some cases of neglect. There have been more animals in distress, and the peace officers involved should be able to immediately react to a situation or a perceived situation of coming distress before the animal is harmed.

This bill will change the previous legislation to provide more powers to peace officers so that they can perform their duties to protect animals. As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, the SPCA does not foresee large changes in their enforcement measures. Even with their new powers they believe that they will be able to react quicker. As I understand it, they are in support of amendments to the act, and so am I.

In conclusion, if we looked after our pets and we looked after our farm animals, there would be no need for this amendment, but unfortunately there are some situations where that does not happen. Again I would ask all hon. members of this Assembly to consider these amendments.

Thank you.

3:30

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Caldar.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon as well to speak in favour of Bill 22. I think that it's important that we stay, here in this province, on the same track as other jurisdictions across the country in regard to animal protection legislation. Indeed, you know, I think it's in a larger sense a positive thing any time that we reach out to other species that we share this province with. In fact, it enriches our own lives as well. So I applaud the breadth of this potential legislation, and with perhaps a couple of exceptions, as I say, I think that we can support it.

I think that one issue that is apparent with this more extensive legislation is that anyone who is causing distress to animals may be prosecuted as opposed to just the owners. I think that that is a very useful thing in the current state of our agriculture, with a lot of feedlots proliferating across the province. That gives us just a greater breadth, being able to prosecute people who are mistreating animals.

Including hunting, fishing, trapping, and pest control under the exceptions to the rule, I think, is probably somewhat appropriate as well. The extended ability for peace officers to seize an animal in this legislation is very appropriate.

Again, we've seen some horrific situations. Sometimes it's a combination of larger problems we see across the province with animal neglect on farms, where some farmers have given up the ghost, so to speak, on their ability to run solvent operations. Nonetheless, the results of some of these abuses to animals are quite horrific. So, you know, if we have something stronger in place, I think people might think twice before they leave their animals to starve in the winter and such things that we've seen in the last few years here in the province.

I believe that the farmers and animal rights activists and pet owners and all sorts of individuals across the province who are stewards and have a vested interest in the welfare of animals would be accepting this potential legislation, and I would like to stand behind it as well.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in support of Bill 22 as it reads, the Animal Protection Amendment Act, 2005. The purpose for this is, obviously, as it says, to provide protection for the animals.

I consider myself to be an animal lover, whether it be for personal use or whether it be for the means of farming or ranching. Game ranching may be the cause or a concern with regard to who is the loser in this particular case. When we look at game ranching, do we talk about the animal or the owner? What about elk velvet farms? In order to be able to get the velvet, one needs to be able to get the antler. Is this painful for the animal, and who is in distress? I would think so, but then, again, I'm not the animal. How would we address this particular concern with regard to being able to harvest a particular aphrodisiac for consumption? When the animal is in distress, would this act address this particular piece?

When we refer to section 10, Mr. Speaker, a peace officer may without warrant enter during business hours. We realize that the abuse doesn't normally take place during business hours. It takes place at all times of the day. Will this act be able to prevent such a thing? I don't know, but it certainly is worth raising a question for. Not everything occurs during the daytime hours, as I said, and I hope that this will provide more teeth because some zoos are being able to operate and have been around for many, many years.

One such zoo has been around. I'll refer to it as GuZoo. It operates here within Alberta, and it's very unfortunate, but this GuZoo has been around for a long time. It has been raised in question period by opposition members for many years now. In fact, I'm holding up a decaying carcass picture here that was taken at the GuZoo. Is this the method in which the animals are fed, off each other, or is this something which the bill will prevent happening: decaying, rotting corpses out there?

Mr. R. Miller: Will you table that picture?

Mr. Bonko: I will do that. Not today, but I will do that.

Elk running in decaying corpses as well as water holes not fit for human consumption, let alone animals. Wolves, which are in fact supposed to be in the wild, are in captivity with filthy water conditions and no shelters. We have pictures at GuZoo with oxen, which like to have it cool and be able to graze, but unfortunately there's nothing in this legislation or in this farm that allows for that animal to be able to seek such refuge with regard to shelter and/or water.

So these are just a couple of questions. I wanted to know if this bill would protect. In fact, that's why I raise this GuZoo. This has been allowed to operate and allowed to fly under the radar of this government for many, many years. I hope this, in fact, is raised and is certainly addressed within this sitting. I'm hoping it will provide the SPCA with more teeth as well as more special constables in the way of funding. Zoocheck Canada is an advocate which I'm sure will be watching and listening with great intensity as this debate continues and this bill continues to slide through further readings.

These are just a few comments that I have today, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29 kicks in. Any questions for the hon. member? The hon. Minister for Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I just had a question for the hon. member in terms of game farming, whether he supports the practice or whether he does not support the practice of game farming.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think with the line of questions that I've had up to this point, it's quite clear that not only my opinion but the opinion of my caucus is that we do not support game farming as it's not sustainable.

The Acting Speaker: Any other questions?

The chair recognizes the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise in support of this bill. I realize that might cause some confusion across the way, but I am concerned about animal abuse. I hope that there will be an amendment during the committee stage that would address the need for more enforcement officers, given the extent of the problem of animal abuse in this province.

There have been a couple of very sad cases of animal abuse that I don't believe were intended. There was one particular case where the rancher was so ill that his wife was otherwise involved in caring for him, and unfortunately no one in the community knew that their animals were starving. This was not deliberate abuse, but possibly through enforcement officers we could have further eyes and ears out in the community that could intervene and not only help the ranchers but help their animals through no fault of their own.

Another problem that rural ranchers have experienced with the closed border and the advent of BSE and chronic wasting disease is the foreclosures: the fact that they can't afford to keep their ranches. Their farms are being foreclosed at a very sad rate. What happens is that groups then take over the responsibility. When a bank forecloses on a ranch, there are potentially hundreds of animals dependent on the upkeep. Obviously, we've had this example of hundreds of animals dying because of an apparent feed mix-up. So it's rather important that when these animals are taken away from their owner, there's an appropriate mechanism to provide for their safety and feeding, and it looks like this piece of legislation will go a long way to addressing it.

Another concern I have is with regard to pet owners who by training animals, either by intent or by neglect, turn these animals into vicious beasts, basically. What happens as a result is that certain breeds get a bad reputation, but the problem more often applies to the owner's treatment rather than to the breed's characteristic. So, hopefully, some larger dog breeds will get a break, and it will be their owners that are put on the end of a government leash rather than the animals themselves.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29. Any questions?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to go on record as supporting my colleague from Calgary-Varsity in his call for a way to bring more enforcement officers on stream.

As we've discussed this bill – and in many respects I think this is a very good bill proposing some very good amendments – it does seem to focus on the troubles on the farm these days and the need to protect farm animals. I certainly do not want to downplay that, but I want to expand it and extend it a little bit if I can, please, to the protection of animals in urban areas, to pets primarily, obviously, and I want to bring it back to this issue of the number of enforcement officers that SPCAs around the province have at their disposal.

There are a couple of issues, actually. One is if an animal is being abused or neglected. Neglect is easier to prove, I would argue, than abuse is unless you catch the act of abuse as it is happening, and I'll bring up an example of that in a second. There's that issue. Then, of course, once you've removed the animal for its own protection, what do you do with it if you don't have appropriate facilities to look after the animals?

Those are both issues, I think, within the city of Calgary. Last year I became aware of a story of an incident in the city of Calgary involving some bad neighbours in a particular community. There had been quite a lot of trouble in the neighbourhood. Quite a lot of neighbours had felt intimidated by these particular people. It eventually came to my attention in the form of a complaint. There were a number of complaints around this individual, but one of the most severe ones – and, certainly, it relates to this bill, Mr. Speaker – was ongoing complaints from people in the community that this individual was abusing his dogs.

As is sometimes the case when we're dealing with abusive people and people who would abuse their animals, this particular individual seemed to be rather tuned in to knowing how to get away with his crime. So he might abuse the animal while the neighbours were witnessing this, but by the time the enforcement officer could get there, everything appeared to be fine. The animals in question were rather large dogs, and this individual, as the story was told to me by a number of different sources, was very good at abusing, intimidating, torturing, working the dog up into an emotional frenzy without leaving any obvious physical scars, so when the enforcement officer would show up, there would be no grounds on which to lay a charge. There would be no hard evidence.

The problem comes in that the humane society obviously wished to take action against the individual but couldn't catch him in the act because they only have, I believe – and I could be a little off and a little out of date in my figures – two enforcement officers for the city of Calgary. For a city of a million people and Lord knows how many million pets – dogs and cats and fish and birds and gerbils and ferrets all put together – two enforcement officers to look after all of that and all those complaints.

The other issue from a Calgary point of view, from an urban point of view, again involving the Calgary Humane Society, is a shortage of space in which to shelter the animals that they do seize or the animals that are turned over to the Humane Society. The Humane Society has been working, Mr. Speaker, for a number of years on trying to get bigger, newer, better facilities. Of course, the issue there is funding and being able to come up with the funding, and thus far they've been unable to do that. Although they have funding initiatives in place, they do not have the money yet, as I understand it, to go ahead and build a facility of the size that they need.

Bill 22, the Animal Protection Amendment Act, 2005, is I think very, very good as far as it goes. But I wonder if it might be possible, Mr. Speaker, to take it a little further and take into consideration as we get into committee study some of the urban issues, perhaps, that exist as well, or more specifically although it may not be exclusive to the urban experience, issues around the abuse and neglect of animals who are kept as pets rather than kept as livestock. Just a little more attention paid to that.

One other concern, if I may, Mr. Speaker, on this bill that I would like to talk about in perhaps a little more detail at the appropriate time, and that's the amendment that would remove the responsibility of the minister to pay the expenses of someone who takes in a distressed animal. I gather that the caretaker, whether it be a humane society or an individual, might be able to require the owner of the animal to pay out before that animal is returned to the owner.

A couple of questions about that. Does this now make the caretaker of the animal in distress responsible for retrieving the money from the owner of the animal? Of course, if the answer to that question is yes – and I don't know that it is – then the obvious follow-up question is quite simply: how is the caretaker going to get paid if the owner of the animal couldn't afford to take care of the animal or animals? That is the sad circumstance that brought these animals into the care of the caretaker in the first place. Will the owner of the animal want the animal returned if they already abandoned it?

So, Mr. Speaker, let me reiterate that I think that overall this is a very good bill, and I'm happy to support it in principle.

Mr. MacDonald: Is this the Rin Tin Tin bill?

Mr. Taylor: Well, you can call it that if you want, hon. member.

Although I'd be happy to support this in principle, when we get to committee study, I think these are some of the areas that perhaps we need to focus on a little bit more. With that, Mr. Speaker, I will close my contribution to this debate and congratulate the hon. member on bringing it forward.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29. Any questions?

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In general I think we all have the consensus here in this Assembly that we are concerned and care for the proper protection of animals. I guess from a rural aspect, though, I have to look and ask a few questions. The first one would be under section 1(2)(a) where they've expanded it from “deprived of adequate food, water, care or shelter.” I guess I just have to ask the question: why have we gone on to talk about “adequate . . . ventilation, space, food, water or veterinary care or reasonable protection from injurious heat or cold”? As we expand the list, it seems that we exclude more things, and perhaps it should be added on there inadequate sunlight, improper nutrition, insufficient exercise, or possibly even not sufficient companionship.

I often wonder why we expand, trying to include more when actually we exclude more. Perhaps just an amendment to put something in there for the purpose of this act that an animal is in distress if it is not being properly cared for. It goes back to, I guess, common sense. It seems like with the proliferation of laws and rules and regulations we get burdened down more and more. I guess I’d just like to see that common sense prevails more than words and statutes to try and do something. To me that’s the reason why we have a legal system and a judge is to bring people forward that we obviously have a difference of opinion with. Here, on different husbandry practices.

I’m from a rural area. I’ve got hundreds of deer that live on my property, and I can show you very distressing pictures of how cruel nature is and what goes on in nature. Animal husbandry people are trying to look after them, so I don’t think that it’s necessarily the job of this government to be running around with policemen and almost wondering if they’re pursuing and could take on a bounty-hunting job to go and find animals in distress and thereby be able to collect money from the government or the former owner. I just worry about which direction we’re really trying to go here in trying to protect the animals.

I would just hope that as we get into committee, that common sense will prevail, and we’ll try to keep it as simple as possible rather than trying to add to it. There are such things where I understand, you know, they’re necessary to change from the Lieutenant Governor to the minister, and I appreciate those things.

Thank you.

3:50

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29. Any questions for the hon. member?

Does anybody else wish to participate in the debate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My concerns with respect to the bill revolve around the exception provided under the proposed section 2(2) as it relates to hunting, fishing, and pest control. The exception is that reasonable and generally accepted practices of hunting, fishing, and pest control would be excepted from the requirement not to cause distress. The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor referred to a number of groups with which consultations had been carried out, and those included a number of groups in the agricultural sector and in the animal sector, including the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. I’m curious as to whether or not sportsmen’s groups such as the Alberta Fish and Game Association might have been consulted with respect to the provisions of this bill, the Trappers Association, the aboriginal and Métis communities with respect to the application of this.

My concern is that the definition of reasonable and generally accepted practices of hunting, fishing, and pest control is necessarily going to be interpreted by a court of law, and those reasonably accepted practices could vary according to different circumstances, different parts of the province. For example, in the far north in the aboriginal communities certain practices may be the norm whereas in the more urban areas around Calgary and Edmonton they may not be the norm.

Of course, in the course of hunting, distress is necessarily caused to an animal. I’m wondering how this legislation might apply to bowhunters, for example. Would they be required to use certain types of arrow tips? Would they be required to have a certain power, number of pounds of draw on the bow? Would they be required to accomplish certain standards of marksmanship? All of these would be within the definition of what might be reasonable and generally accepted practices.

So my concern is with respect particularly to how these things might be interpreted and how they might apply to the hunting, fishing, and pest control, as I mentioned, particularly to sportsmen’s groups, sportsmen, trappers, and the aboriginal and Métis communities.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a), any questions? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Possibly my fellow hon. member from Calgary could clarify whether it’s his interpretation that this bill has sufficient expansion to deal with wild animals – he pointed out examples of hunting, fishing, northern, southern – or is this bill primarily a domestic animal consideration? I’m just not quite sure about the interpretation of this bill. Possibly the presenter of the bill would wish to clarify further.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. My reading of the bill is that it is a broad application to any animal to be in distress. That would include wild animals or wild animals kept in captivity on game farms or the like as well as domestic animals. So it is certainly one of very broad application, and that’s why I’m concerned, particularly with the nature, the very general wording of the exceptions to causing distress to the animal. As I said, in the normal course hunters necessarily cause distress to an animal when they kill it.

The Acting Speaker: Any other questions?

Anybody else wishing to participate in the debate?

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor to close debate.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, let me just say that we’ve heard some sad stories today, which I believe shows the importance of passing Bill 22 as soon as possible. I would like to, first of all, thank all members for their input and their suggestions. I also thank them for their support. I’ve heard a lot of support today, but I’ve also heard a lot of questions, and I think they’re very good questions that the department and I will look into. We will go back and do some research on those, and certainly we will bring some answers forward in our comments when we go into Committee of the Whole. In fact, we will try to incorporate these comments and suggestions as much as possible in the next stage of the bill.

Therefore, I move second reading of Bill 22.

[Motion carried; Bill 22 read a second time]

Bill 14

Student Financial Assistance Amendment Act, 2005

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission, I rise to speak to Bill 14 and move it for second reading.

Bill 14 is the Student Financial Assistance Amendment Act, 2005. This amendment act proposes some minor changes to some sections of the Student Financial Assistance Act related to loan limits and regulation-making powers. The three housekeeping amendments proposed in Bill 14 are intended to add clarity and better reflect the current student finance operational practices.

The main amendments are to the section on loan limits. These amendments will help ensure that loan limits allow for some flexibility for extenuating circumstances, clarify ministerial authority, and amend how loan limits are based. As the legislation stands, the Minister of Advanced Education is allowed to establish annual and lifetime loan limits for certain categories of students. The bill proposes deleting reference to categories of students. The concern is that the current wording of this section makes it hard for the Minister of Advanced Education to use discretion, to make the kinds of exceptions that may be required on a case-by-case basis. By taking this reference out, the legislation will have the flexibility to determine how loan limits should be set and whether there needs to be an opportunity for the limits to be exceeded in some exceptional cases.

The second amendment looks at existing wording that says that lifetime loan limits are based on the "outstanding principle amount . . . owed by the student," which essentially amounts to a form of revolving line of credit. That's not the intent of the section. It's not the department's policy. It hasn't been consistent with the practices across the country. So we need to clarify that lifetime loan limits are based on the total aggregate loans received by a student over his or her lifetime.

The final amendment proposes a minor housekeeping change to add clarity to the section on regulation-making powers. We want to clarify that the Lieutenant Governor in Council has the authority to make regulations related to eligibility requirements for financial assistance and the establishment of loan limits, including providing the Minister of Advanced Education with the authority to set loan limits.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has one of the most generous student financial assistance programs in the country. These amendments will help to ensure that the program remains flexible and responsive to the needs of students. I would just add that these amendments being proposed now are being brought forward in order to clarify the existing student loan regime and bring the legislation up to the practice that we have in place and to make it more flexible.

I would advise the House, as I have on other occasions, that we are doing an affordability review this year. We will be involving stakeholders, students, parents, and others across the province in discussing how postsecondary education can continue to be affordable for students and how finances can be removed as a barrier to advancing an education. This bill is not the bill that's being promised to do that. That is to come, and we're going to do that after a thorough discussion involving anyone who wants to be involved in the discussion. So as we move forward this year, I encourage members of the House to bring to my attention any instances that they've heard of where the student finance system that we have in place now does not assist students or where there are real or perceived barriers to the success of students.

Mr. Speaker, I again indicate that's not the purpose of this bill. This bill is cleaning up what's in place right now. The affordability review is something that will take place over the course of this year and, hopefully, will result in changes, whether they need to be legislative changes or not, at a future session.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and engage in debate and continue debate on Bill 14, the Student Financial Assistance Amendment Act, 2005.

I guess that I want to start off my contribution to the debate with a question. If we're about to undertake a system-wide affordability review in advanced education in the province of Alberta, then unless the Student Financial Assistance Act is collapsing under the weight of its own flaws, why do we need this amendment act to take care of, by the minister's own admission, you know, some housekeeping, some tidying up of details, especially when some of the tidying up seems to be to bring the law in line with the ministry's practices? Because that suggests that the ministry right now is engaging in practices that are in contravention of this government's own law. Again, I suggest to you that if that's not causing a huge problem, if this affordability review is about to launch, about to begin, you really have to wonder what the urgency of this bill is.

Now, I must admit, Mr. Speaker, that I'm on the horns of a dilemma to a certain extent because, of course, we in the Liberal opposition support making postsecondary education more affordable. That not only includes such issues as affordable tuition and proper base operating funding of our colleges, universities, and technical institutes, which we happen to believe requires a substantial infusion of cash on a regular annual basis over the next few years, but it also includes reducing the debt loads of students. Part of affordability is taking into consideration before that debt load is amassed what the debt load of the student is going to be at the end of four years of university or two or three years of a diploma or applied degree program, something like that.

So in a sense, Mr. Speaker, this bill and this debate on this bill force me to argue against some of the very things that we believe in. But it does that because of another thing that we believe in on this side of the House, and that is that we want to support lifelong learning, lifelong access to education, lifelong access to affordable education. Given the current system, we think that we should be allowing students to receive the maximum allowable lifetime loans, pay all or some of them off, and then return again to school and be eligible for loans again. Well, that's a revolving credit scheme, I guess, because that sounds an awful lot like the way my personal line of credit works.

The minister opposite has made it clear already that this is not what he wants it to be. He does not want it to be a revolving line of credit for students, and that's the goal behind changing from outstanding principal to an aggregate amount that the student may receive during a student's lifetime. The only problem with that, Mr. Speaker, is that the student financial assistance regulation, section 27, itself uses the outstanding principal model of lifetime loan limits rather than the total aggregate amounts received.

So while we talk about wanting to bring what we're doing in this province in line with what other provinces in Canada do, we're also boasting about how generous the student loan program is in this province, and I would submit, Mr. Speaker, that you can't have it both ways. It's got to be one or the other. Either it's the most generous or one of the most generous programs in the dominion of Canada, or else it isn't.

Now, I quote from the regulations, student financial assistance regulation section 27(1).

Subject to subsection (2), a student is not eligible for a loan if that loan would result in the outstanding principal amount of all loans owing by the student exceeding the aggregate loan limit specified by order of the Minister or such higher aggregate loan limit as the Minister directs with respect to that student.

That gets to another issue that the minister brought up, which is his own ability, his discretion, to deal with some students on a case-by-case individual basis and determine extenuating circumstances and say: okay, in this particular case involving this particular student, I find it advisable to allow for a higher limit than we normally would.

The Student Financial Assistance Amendment Act, 2005, also talks about setting loan limits based not only on categories of students, and the theory behind this apparently is that categories of students make it difficult for the minister to use his discretion.

Now, I'm looking at the student loan limits order, section 1(4), and, Mr. Speaker, if I'm reading this correctly – and if I'm not, I stand to be corrected and certainly would be eager to be corrected, but until such time as I am, I think I'm reading it right – this order I think gives exactly this kind of ministerial discretion. It says:

In the case of a student enrolled in a masters, doctorate or other professional program, the annual loan limits set out in subsections (1) to (3) are subject to any increase the Minister makes on a case-by-case basis . . .

Let me repeat that: "Subject to any increase the Minister makes on a case-by-case basis."

. . . where, in the opinion of the Minister, there are extenuating circumstances that warrant higher annual loan limits.

So I don't know why we need to make this change to the act since it seems that the minister already has the – can I use the term in this House? – "wiggle room" that a minister would need in these circumstances. Nobody's called a point of order yet, so I guess we can use the term "wiggle room."

So I'm left asking the question: why are we doing this? Are we fixing something that's not broken, or are we breaking something that's not broken? If we are breaking something that's not broken, why are we doing that, to what end, to what purpose?

You know, the borrowing limits established under section 17(1)(b) of the act for the purposes of section 17(2) of the act are $40,000 in the case of most undergraduate students, $55,000 in the case of an undergraduate dental hygiene student, $60,000 for somebody enrolled in a school of chiropractic, $95,000 for somebody who wants to grow up to be a dentist – gosh, if it costs that much to become a dentist, no wonder every time I get a bill from my dentist and I submit it to our benefit plan, I end up having to pay a little extra, if they're that far in debt before they even start practising – $75,000 for law, $95,000 for medicine, and, Mr. Speaker, the list goes on: $50,000 for optometry and pharmacy and veterinary medicine and most masters degrees except for an MBA. An MBA has a loan limit of $60,000, a doctorate has a loan of $60,000, so on and so forth.

An Hon. Member: How much does it cost to be a talk show host?

Mr. Taylor: Oh, far less than it costs to learn how to be a dentist.

An Hon. Member: I'd like to get on your show.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry, but I can't afford to invite anybody to be a guest on my show today, so I will continue with the floor.

The situation here that I would lay out to you is this. You have a son or daughter, and your son or daughter is ready to go off to university and take a four-year undergraduate program, baccalaureate program, which, depending on the program that they're going to take, may or may not result in launching them on what will be their ultimate lifelong career path. But even if it does, there's a very good chance – we all know this – that at some point your son or daughter during the course of their working life is going to want to take a break from work and return to school to upgrade.

Maybe that upgrade is going to be a master's degree. Maybe it's going to be an MBA. Let's say that it's going to be an MBA. Let's say that they've got a four-year undergraduate degree, and some years down the road they want to go back to school and get their MBA, by which time they may very well be married with children of their own, financial obligations, a mortgage to pay, a loan on the car, et cetera. But they're building their career. They're building their net worth. They're building their family lives themselves.

Now let's say, Mr. Speaker, that your son or daughter is the son or daughter not of a parliamentarian necessarily but of somebody who hasn't been able, or perhaps willing, to afford to send their son or daughter to university and pay the bills themselves. Let's say the circumstances were such that that student has already topped out at $40,000, the loan limit for undergraduate students. But let's say that they, you know, have graduated, they have gotten a good job, they're on a career track, and they're absolutely diligent about paying back their student loans. So they've whittled the total debt that they've accumulated down significantly, and now they want to go back to university and get their MBA.

If they've paid back the money that they have borrowed from the people of Alberta, why shouldn't they be entitled to go back to the people of Alberta and say, "I want to improve myself, and I'd like your help to be able to do that, and I promise to pay the money back?"

How is that different, Mr. Speaker, from someone going to the bank, borrowing money, perhaps for the first time – I don't know – to buy a piece of furniture for their first apartment and paying it back, going back to that same bank the next time and saying: "I paid that loan back. Now would you give me a loan? I'd like to buy a car?" Then they pay that loan back, and then they go back to the bank, and they say: "Now, Mr. Bank Manager or Ms Bank Manager, I would really like it if you would give me a mortgage, and I promise to pay that back too. But perhaps before I get the mortgage paid off, I might come back to you again and say now I'd like to open a line of credit and borrow against that so I can renovate this house so that this house, in which you have an interest as my creditor, as my lender, as my mortgagor, is going to be worth more to both of us."

So how is it different? You know, we allow people to do that all the time in the private sector, and this government is so enamoured with the private sector that you would think that they would be falling all over themselves to adopt rules and regulations that mirror the private sector.

Mr. MacDonald: They don't like private-sector airplanes.

Mr. Taylor: Well, that's true, but you know that there's an exception that proves every rule, so I guess the airplanes are the exception. So why would this government on behalf of the people of Alberta, albeit with some prodding through the election and the success of the members on the benches on this side of the House, decide to make postsecondary education such a priority that they want to take it off a 12-year starvation diet? Why would they, having made it a priority, now want to make it more difficult for anyone in this province to get an education, especially when they say that access and affordability and excellence in postsecondary education are what they're all about?

I don't think it goes far enough. I think what we should have in this province is the postsecondary equivalent of Alberta's Commission on Learning, K to 12, to undertake a thorough, comprehensive review of the entire postsecondary education system to see what works like a charm, to see what actually stinks out the joint, and everything in between and make the needed changes. The Learning Commission was a big success K to 12. It would be an even bigger success if the government would hurry up with implementing the recommendations they accepted. You know, I think that approach to postsecondary education would be a stroke of brilliance. But failing that, I'll settle for a grade of B or B-minus or C. You know, that's better than an F, right? So the affordability review is worth, I think, at least a C and perhaps as much as a B if they do it right.

If they're going to do this affordability review – and they've said time and time again that they're going to. They've given every student in the province of Alberta a one-year tuition fee rebate this year while they, from the students' perspective, hold the line on tuitions. From the colleges' and the universities' perspective tuitions continue to go up of course. It's just that the government is paying the increase this year. They've given a one-year break, a rebate, if you will, on tuition while they conduct this affordability review. They talk about this a great deal. So if we're going to do that, then why is any of this necessary? Why is any of this necessary? I'm not at all convinced that it is.

So I won't be supporting Bill 14, Mr. Speaker. I'll be interested to hear what my colleagues and what the members opposite have to say about it, but I'm very skeptical about the intentions of this bill. I think it's unnecessary, and I don't think it would kill this government or the people of Alberta to leave this alone, pending the results of the affordability review.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 14, Student Financial Assistance Amendment Act, 2005. My esteemed colleagues must wonder how it is possible to criticize in detail such a thin gruel piece of legislation as Bill 14. I would suggest that the recipe for success would be to provide greater explanation within the bill in the first place so that I and other members of the opposition, which together represent the majority of Alberta voters in spite of the number of Legislature seats that we occupy, could appreciate the bill's intent.

My first question has to do with section 17(a), which states: "The Minister may, subject to the regulations, establish . . . the maximum amount that a student may receive in any one academic year in the form of loans". This is quite clear in its time period, but doesn't clarify what the maximum is or how the maximum is arrived at. For example, does it take into account local inflation rates? Does it take into account cost-of-living factors such as the difference between housing costs and availability in Calgary or Fort McMurray as opposed to Lethbridge? Do the loans take into account the cost of the particular faculty that the student is enrolled in? For example, medicine and law courses and accompanying textbooks would be considerably more expensive than other faculties.

The (b) portion of section 17 states that the minister may, subject to the regulations, establish "the maximum amount that a student may receive during the student's lifetime in the form of loans." I hope that this province believes in and would not restrict access to lifelong learning. Are loan limits going to be placed on a person's second or third degree, a master's, or a doctorate degree? At what point does a successful student cease to qualify for loans? For example, are loans as available to senior citizens as they are to recent senior high school graduates?

I also have concerns about the intent of section 22(1)(c), which has to do with "establishing different forms of financial assistance for some or all of the purposes of this Act." There appears to be a number of tiers, or levels, of financial assistance rather than a level playing field. This suggests that the government is recommending a two-tiered, third-way approach to postsecondary financing, which creates a series of different levels of funding.

How are these different levels of loans arrived at? For example, if it is determined that there is a shortage of geologists, students enrolled in these courses will receive loans at the expense of students, for example, pursuing a fine arts degree. Will that be the case? I hope that this is not the case as it would suggest a brave, new world approach to micromanaging education, which the Alberta government has frequently decried.

I also have concerns about the intent or meaning of the phrase "for some or all of the purposes of this Act." Which is it: some or all? What are some of the restrictions on financial assistance that are different from all for the purposes of this act? To facilitate understanding of the intent of this act, I would suggest that the hon. government members consider either providing more detailed elaboration or consider highlighting the amendment within the larger context of the appropriate section of the bill for further clarification.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to ask my hon. colleague – he referenced in the bill clause 17(b), which indicates that the minister may, subject to regulations, establish "the maximum amount that a student may receive during the student's lifetime in the form of loans." I'm wondering if my colleague is suggesting that perhaps the government has decided that it might not be worth investing in a student who has utilized the maximum financial aid, perhaps paid back their debts in a responsible fashion, and now requires additional support to further their education.

Mr. Chase: Well, you've grasped exactly what I was talking about. I'm a teacher. I've been a teacher for 34 years, and I'm sure hon. members across wish I was still a teacher. I've been engaged in the learning process, basically, for about 50 years of my life either on one side of the desk or on the other side. The idea of lifelong learning and the pursuit of excellence is extremely important to me. The notion that the government would arbitrarily determine at what point education is no longer important or should no longer be funded by the government, that to me is sort of a scary Orwellian scenario.

Did that clarify, hon. member, what you were hoping to hear?

The Acting Speaker: Does anybody else wish to ask a question? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: I just wanted to clarify that, yes, in fact that was the answer I was looking for. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to speak on Bill 14 with a general sort of supportive attitude. I think that, you know, it's in most respects just a question of perhaps some clarification of some ambiguities that did exist in the previous legislation. So we don't have a big problem with that as such, but I do want to draw the House's attention to perhaps a larger concern which this bill is addressing, and that's the whole question of student finances.

It seems to me that what we've done over these past 10 or 15 years is made postsecondary education unaffordable to a large sector of our population here in this province. You know, I think we are running into what would potentially be a crisis situation, where we're not allowing access to postsecondary education to quite a large sector of the population who simply sees it as being unaffordable. Now, it seems that in this session of our Legislature we're going to release money into postsecondary education. My concern is that it is not addressing the fundamental problem that is keeping more and more students out of postsecondary education, and that is accessibility and a knowledge that it will be affordable over the long haul for someone, say, on low income.

Myself, also having some experience in education, it tells me that more students are choosing not to go to university, for example, simply based on cost. You know, even the most conservative view of human beings would suggest that if you want to maximize your labour potential from your population, then you must make sure that you provide access to the people who are most able to be successful in postsecondary education regardless of their socioeconomic position in our society. So even looking at perhaps the most narrow or conservative or callous view of humans as being worker units, then denying access to postsecondary education to worthy candidates is inefficient at best.

This small amendment, really, to the student finance act also does have some troubling aspects in respect to having a maximum student loan amount for the entire lifetime of a student. Now, I recognize the practicality of that in some respects, but in other ways it sort of flies in the face of what we would hope to recognize as the purpose of postsecondary education, and that is to renew our knowledge and our employability, I guess, on an ongoing basis throughout our careers and lifetime. You know, who's to know where life will lead us in terms of postsecondary education, and who's to know what a maximum in fact is? I think we can leave that to financial institutions to look at individual circumstances of individuals and their financial state and make appropriate decisions based on that. So the maxing out aspect of this bill I have some difficulty with. Hopefully, we can resolve that before the bill is either passed or rejected.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions?

There being none, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to expand a little bit on a few of the points that have been brought up. I agree with many of the points that have been brought to this point, but I have one constituent who specifically approached me for the minister to take this into consideration. This idea of lifelong learning, as some of the other hon. members have brought up, it's a very difficult situation for a father who has three or four kids to go back to school. The loan requirements – this one specific constituent is not able to get enough of a loan to be able to go back to school because he has a family.

I'd just like the minister to be mindful of that and to realize that we are in a much different situation now with lifelong learning and needing to retrain. So perhaps some of those numbers need to be flexible and do it on a one-on-one basis in some of those areas.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

There being none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Bill 14, Student Financial Assistance, in the end who benefits from advancing these loans? Over several years they'll be paid off, but in the meanwhile who really benefits? Well, of course, small towns benefit, villages benefit, hamlets benefit, and large cities. There are these new graduates that come armed with the knowledge that they've acquired over several years, and of course with the knowledge comes the debt that they've incurred as well. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie mentioned thousands of dollars in debt, but it's not so much debt but investments that are incurred over the years, and they're going to be paid through services that these people seek.

If someone such as myself wanted to go back for the purpose of lifelong learning – we hear all this talk about lifelong learning, but when it comes right down to it, the government is more interested in pinching pennies in the loan program than providing students with the resources that they need – I would incur 40,000-plus dollars to be able to go back and finish a degree. Political science or if I decided to go for something different, for surgery – who knows? But, again, it's very expensive and the fact that the loans may not take into account being able to go back again once the loans are paid off.

We have talked about work shortages, people for retraining. If those people wanted to seek retraining and wanted to go into debt but later on, halfway through, paid off, to return to the workforce, to go back to try and do something else, they're going to be penalized. I'm not sure if that's the case in this particular case.

My own children, I've got two. Of course, as you know, children right now as they're growing up want to experience life and are not sure exactly where they want to go. If their feet are moving, they're going in the right direction, I always tell them. But if they decide to go back to school for postsecondary and incur loans, again as a parent with two kids – I can't imagine someone with three or four, the financial burden on them because the loan program won't guarantee them enough, because they'll be living in poverty long enough to be able to reap the benefits of it. I'm just concerned with regard to that.

Is this government really determined to find a fix? I think they have to find a more consultative process out there – we had members of the universities here as well – at least speak to those kids that are enrolled in these programs to find out the financial burdens that they're facing and find out one-on-one. They, in fact, indicated to us that they would like to be part of a panel process to be able to meet with the members, meet with the bill decisioners, to come and hammer this out so that we go through the process once and have dotted the i's, crossed the t's so that we're coming to a fully recognized piece that will become a bill instead of having to go back and review it once again.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, are you rising to ask a question or make a comment?

Mr. MacDonald: I'm rising to participate in the debate, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. There being nobody else wanting to ask a question or make a comment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. When we see Bill 14, Student Financial Assistance Amendment Act, 2005, it is with interest that I note that suddenly this government and this minister are interested in postsecondary education. Certainly, it has been referred to in this Assembly by another hon. member. There was a reference made to the starvation diet that postsecondary students have been on in this province for far too long.

This idea that before this bill becomes law, we have a commission or a study of the complete postsecondary education system and exactly how we can make it better is a very good idea, and I think it should be a top priority. It certainly took us on this side of the Assembly a long, long time and many hours of discussion before we could convince this government to go ahead with the Learning Commission, the blue-ribbon commission. The former Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods and a very distinguished educator, Don Massey, was promoting the idea of having a learning commission for the longest time, and finally this government did the right thing, and they implemented the Learning Commission.

Now they're having difficulty implementing some of the key recommendations of that commission, but it was a step in the right direction. Perhaps if we had a commission on postsecondary education, we would see firsthand just how skinny the students are after the starvation diet that they've been put on by this government.

Now, there are many different views on this, and certainly I'm quite familiar with the views of some of the government members, but accessible, affordable postsecondary education should be a cornerstone. It should be a basic cornerstone for all Albertans regardless of your age. Whether you're going back to school at age 35 or you're entering university from high school or whether you're entering a technical school or a community college, it doesn't matter. Those facilities have to be affordable, and they have to be accessible.

Is Bill 14 going to be an improvement? I don't know, but at a quick glance I don't think so. Here we have again more ministerial control without any specified guidelines. This government, it's been pointed out, likes to use ministerial discretion like it was some sort of royal prerogative. Specific rules and regulations help to establish accountability, and I'm disappointed – I'm very disappointed – that this government is again, it looks like, trying to do away with any of the rules around accountability.

How mysterious and how secret can ministerial control be? Well, for all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly, I did not know that a ministerial order did not necessarily have to be a public document. Now, perhaps I should have. Perhaps I had a great deal more respect for the system, if I could use that term, Mr. Speaker, than I should have. Perhaps I should have been a little bit more suspicious. I was disappointed, again, to realize that not all ministerial orders are public.

I found this out the year before last with a ministerial order, Mr. Speaker, to create this Utilities Consumer Advocate, this advocate that is still in hibernation. Hopefully, it's going to come out of hibernation soon and protect utility consumers. But this is an example of a mysterious process. Why should we give more ministerial control with Bill 14 without any specified guidelines? I'm going to have to watch this with interest and with caution.

Now, we hear all the talk about lifelong learning, but when it comes right down to it, this government seems to be interested in penny-pinching in one area and then living lavishly in another area. We're talking about lifelong learning. Well, let's use the farmers as a valid example. I have to return a phone call to a farmer later on this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, who is very interested in the idea of returning to school and getting trade qualifications so that he can work off the farm and participate in the oil sands construction boom that is currently going on. He wants to; he doesn't have the qualifications. I think we should be helping this individual along.

We should not be talking about lifelong learning and then signing some sort of deal last June to recruit workers on a temporary basis from foreign countries. Some of these workers, for gosh's sake, tried to overthrow a government in Venezuela, and they were sacked because of their activities. They tried to overthrow a government, and they lost their jobs. This is a pool of labour that this government would rather attract into this province than trying to help out our farmers who, through no fault of their own, have very little income.

If we're going to be serious about lifelong learning, let's help some of the farmers who are interested and some of their families who are interested in trade certification so that they can participate in the economic boom that is occurring. We have given tax concessions to many of the major oil companies. We have given massive royalty reductions to facilitate this construction. Let's make sure that we give the jobs to Albertans and Canadians before we go on these recruiting missions and then in the next breath talk about how important postsecondary education is to Albertans and how important lifelong learning is.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that's only one part of postsecondary education. There are those that would say that that is not part of postsecondary education, but I would certainly, hon. member, beg to differ.

We can't be creating a system that's going to exclude some students because of income. We've got to be very, very careful about this, what's good and what's bad public policy. When we look at the Student Financial Assistance Amendment Act, Bill 14, I don't think it is a step in the right direction.

Look at the amount of money that some students are burdened with upon graduation, and I know, again, that there are those that say: well, look at the increase in income level and how quickly they can pay that money back. But what about the people who could not afford to go there in the first place? What about all the students who just simply cannot afford to go? We're creating a postsecondary education system where there are many people who will not be able to go. They may have the ability, they may have the desire, but they don't have either the individual or the family income.

It has been discussed in this House, Mr. Speaker, by many people in the past about the economic miracle that has occurred in the last decade in Ireland. In the previous decade postsecondary education became affordable and it became accessible for all young people, and they have one of the most vibrant economies in all of Europe. I don't know if the Irish would appreciate this, but I was almost going to refer to it as all the economies in central Europe. I think they prefer to be a little distance away, and we've got to be respectful of all people who grow up on islands because certainly they're usually very independent, and they have their own opinions.

Now, when we look at some of the student groups – and there was one in here yesterday, Mr. Speaker – they have complaints. They have a wish list of what they would like to see occur with postsecondary education in this province. Are they concerned about the removal of reference to categories of students in the context of ministerial setting of loan limits? Are they concerned about this? Are they concerned about changing the lifetime loan limit from being defined as outstanding principle to amount received from the student's lifetime? They are, but they're more concerned about the cost of accommodation, the cost of tuition. They're more concerned about affordability and access.

Again, in conclusion, if we are sincere about improving our postsecondary education system, let's look at having a blue-ribbon panel, a blue-ribbon commission. In fact, we could get some former members of this Legislative Assembly to sit on that, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps we could get the former Member for St. Albert, Mary O'Neill, who I understand was a teacher. She may even have been a professor. I don't know. But certainly that would be one individual that, perhaps, we could get to sit on this blue-ribbon panel. I don't know if the previous Member for St. Albert has something to do right now or not, but certainly we could consider this.

The postsecondary education system: we could have a good look at it just like we did with the Learning Commission. It was another idea from this side of the House that I'm pleased to see the government adopt. I'm very interested to see how they're going to proceed with improving our postsecondary education system. Forget about making it unaffordable and unaccessible by high tuition fees. Let's change the policy and make it accessible and affordable by having tuition fees that people can certainly pay for, and they're not left after graduation with a huge debt.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a), questions or comments? The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was listening with great interest to what the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had to say, and he piqued my interest when it came to Venezuela as I've travelled to the country many, many times and used to do business in Venezuela and appreciate the hard work of those residents in Venezuela and the difficulties that they have. I'm just curious whether the member is aware of the history of their current president and how he came to power as well as whether he's aware of the direction his government is headed.

I just wanted also to thank the hon. member for his, I guess, endorsement of us appointing the previous MLA for St. Albert to help us in government in some committee. But I'd really like to know his comments on Venezuela.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, President Chávez was democratically elected by the citizens of Venezuela. A state-owned oil company, which certainly this hon. member doesn't endorse, is one of the largest employers in the country and also one of the largest sources of revenue for the government.

This hon. member can appreciate that we do not interfere with democratically elected governments. That is something that, perhaps, the Americans might not appreciate. But Mr. Chávez was elected. There was an attempted coup. He was put in a military base by individuals. Yes, he was held at a military base. Many citizens there without adequate food started to rattle and clang pots and pans in the streets, and the people who placed him in the military establishment, or the military base, decided it was in the interests of the country to release him. He was restored as president.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, this is supposed to be brief questions and comments. The chair recognizes the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar: I'm wondering how you would recommend empowering postsecondary students. How could they gain this government's ear in terms of whether it be financing or just input? How could postsecondary students receive input from this government? How would you empower them?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, certainly, I would hope that this government would implement, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie stated earlier, a complete commission to study postsecondary education. They could hold public hearings at the campuses: the University of Alberta, the University of Lethbridge, the University of Calgary, Athabasca University. They could also go to the community colleges. I would also like to see them go to the not-for-profit universities as well and hold a series of public hearings so they can see first-hand the experiences and hear from the students just how difficult it is to get an education without going into deep debt. So let's have a blue-ribbon commission that holds public hearings.

Thank you.

4:50

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A comment and a question. First of all, the comment is that myself and other government MLAs did meet with CAUS, the Council of Alberta University Students, this morning. As a matter of fact, they were very happy with Bill 1 and with what's happening in the Legislature and postsecondary education in general.

My question, though, is: you mentioned this farmer going to school, and I've noticed that the Liberals have been putting a lot of petitions in about displaced farmers. I wonder if the Liberals realize that farmers in Alberta are in fact still working. In fact, they're working very, very hard. They may not be making any money, but they go to work every single day. Yet it seems that the Liberals want to send them to school or off to Fort McMurray to do a trade or something. The farmers have to look after their farms so that they can raise the food for us to eat. I wonder if the Liberals realize that.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased. I don't know what part of the oil patch the hon. member worked in, but I worked all over the province in the oil patch, and some of the hardest working people that I worked with were farmers who had trade certificates and worked off their place.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the five minutes allocated for this section has expired.

The chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's interesting to be back and listening to the debate after 10 years. We start off in the Student Financial Assistance Amendment Act and end up talking about Venezuela and the foreign workers, but I guess that in principle on the bill, anything goes.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I know that this is a narrow bill and it's a housekeeping bill, and that's fine. But I think that the important point that we have to look at here – and we're into endowment funds, we're into this, and we're into that, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar talked about it – is that it was very much part of the NDP policy. The one thing: during the last election having an advanced learning commission was part of our policy.

It makes sense because I was there as a trustee, and we went through some very tumultuous times, you might say, with the teacher strikes. The one thing that the Learning Commission – and I have to admit that I was a bit dubious about where they would go to begin with because I thought, well, maybe the government will just bring in another bunch of government people, and it would be sort of a whitewash. But I was pleasantly surprised. The commission did a very good job.

The thing that was important with the Learning Commission, Mr. Speaker, is that it focused us on what was important in education. There are still a lot of things that have to occur. The job's not done by any stretch of the imagination in public education, but at least there's a bellwether there. We know what they should be doing so that the opposition and people in Alberta, anybody, can see if they've not followed through. For instance, a couple of things that they still haven't done for needy students is the junior kindergarten and kindergarten. It was very important to the Learning Commission. But now there is something that we can judge the government with.

I think for exactly the same reasons we should do this in advanced education. Sure we have the short-term problems that we have to deal with. The short-term problems, of course, are accessibility and the student debt that we're talking about. We have to deal with them. We don't need a commission to deal with that, and we know it in the short term. But in the long term I think – and I don't know whether it's the Member for St. Albert or whoever – we'd want the best minds that we could get to look at the whole advanced education system in Alberta, spend some time at it, and come back with some very serious recommendations.

Then it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we could decide: is an endowment fund the way to go? Is this the way to go? Is that way the way to go? In other words, we would have a plan, and again it would set a focus that all Albertans could judge the government on as they have in the Learning Commission. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that that's what we should be doing.

I'd say to the hon. minister that the approach so far is piecemeal. I'm sure that some good things will flow out of it, but is it the right thing to do over the long haul? Let's deal with the short-term problems, as I said: accessibility. Let's deal with student debt. We can do that fairly quickly. But over the long haul we need to know: should there be more money going into universities? Should it be going into junior colleges? What should we be doing for the high school students to get them ready? What sorts of programs should we offer? We don't really have a clue here. So I'm suggesting that we . . . [interjection] Well, then you're a smarter man than everybody else, Minister, because everybody I talk to doesn't think that we have a plan.

I think that some of the steps that we're taking are probably going to be good ones in the future. But the point is that if we believe the Learning Commission worked well on public education – and I take it the minister believes it does, and the government believes it does – then why would the same sort of approach not work dealing with advanced education? It makes a lot of sense to me. I think that the Learning Commission was a good approach for everybody as it worked out. I think the government believes it was a good approach. So again I ask the minister: why not? Before we start spending all sorts of money in all sorts of areas that may not be appropriate, we could take the time to take a good, long look at advanced education.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a), any questions or comments? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would be interested in the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview's experienced opinion of the free tuition Ireland model that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar mentioned previously.

Mr. Martin: Yeah, in an ideal world. Again, what we should start with is freezing tuition. We've had dramatic increases the last number of years. As I recollect, in the province of Alberta we've increased more than any other place in Canada. So at least freeze it and begin to work back in tuition. If we want to deal with our economy, our social and economic economy, the best way is to get as many kids there. It's part of the accessibility thing. The tuition is becoming a problem. It's especially becoming a problem for lower income kids, so I'm suggesting that this would be a good step. Freeze it, and work towards lowering it as quickly as we can.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2) the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: My question to the hon. member is: why is it that when you encourage the government to spend money on students' education, you want to call it an investment, but as soon as you consider the part that the student puts out, you call it debt when they're both exactly the same thing? They're both investing in their future. Why is it that when you deal with the student terminology, it's debt, but when government does it, it's investment? What's the difference?

Mr. Martin: Certainly, it should be clear even to this member that it's investment by both, but the reality is that these students are ending up with a lot of debt. It's not a very good investment for them. If they don't have any money and they can't get the jobs and they're in total debt, how do they invest in the economy? Many of them are not even getting the proper jobs that they're trained for because, again, we don't have a particular plan here.

I mean, the investment is the education. It's a good investment by government. It's a good investment by the student. If it's too high, the point that I'd make is that if the tuition becomes a problem, then only the kids with money or the parents with money will get there. So they will not make that investment in higher education if they don't have the money. That's when it becomes an accessibility problem.

I think we have to recognize that this is starting to happen, and putting our heads in the sand and denying it is not going to work. I guarantee you that.

The Speaker: Additional questions under the Standing Order section?

Then the chair is prepared to accept additional speakers. The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just generally looking at this bill, I would tell you that in my own lifespan, if it wasn't for the services – I went back to postsecondary and university level when I was an adult student, 21 years old.

One of the things that I'd like to mention regarding the bill is the fact of this information that you've made changes and even the loan factor that we've discussed this afternoon. I think it's very, very important to look at the business of communication to our student population. That's one thing that I think would be very, very important, trying to identify in terms of how this information will get to the student population.

Another issue, if I may just mention it, is the whole question of postsecondary institutions right now, and I'm thinking more or less of Grant MacEwan, the status of university degrees. It very much concerns me about what happens to a lot of students that want to come back to postsecondary in terms of diploma programs. I've asked the minister: what would happen to these students in terms of the transition that will take place? I think that's very significant.

It's also important that we look at the whole question of the total complexity of all the institutions across the province, and I want to compliment the government in terms of the number of parts of the Learning Commission that they've implemented. I think they're attempting to do a good job of that. But it seems to me that we should be looking at the complexity of institutions across the province and have a commission which would enable us to get a good vision of what every institution does, their specializations.

Therefore, I think this would be very much in order. So I just thought I'd mention that.

The other thing I'd just briefly mention. When I was at Red Deer College as the vice-president of student services, we started the first residence in Alberta there, sir. It does concern me that a lot of our information regarding residential housing across the province is the matter of Infrastructure. I'm not sure where that is, but I'd like to hear maybe the minister tell us where that is in terms of the residential housing for students and what's happening in that dynamic.

Anyway, I think that's about it, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for allowing me to share those few visions with you.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) kicks in. Additional speakers?

Shall I call on the hon. Minister of Advanced Education to close the debate?

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've certainly had some interesting comments about the full range, I guess, of postsecondary education in the province today, as one hon. member pointed out, ranging from foreign workers in Venezuela to what's actually happening here at home. I appreciate the comments.

I appreciate the fact that people are interested in postsecondary education, in advancing education, and making sure that Albertans have the opportunity to maximize the human capital, to be the best that they can be, and that's certainly what I aspire to as minister, that's what our government aspires to. I think that with the help of members in the House we can really make our postsecondary system, right from moving to literacy to moving to PhDs and beyond, sing in this province.

It needs to be affordable. It needs to be accessible. I think the comments that are being made this afternoon on those points are absolutely bang on. Every Albertan ought to have the opportunity to advance their education, and every Albertan is qualified to advance their education, so really the challenge to us is to make that system happen. Of course, that gets into the issue of how we allocate resources, how we can make sure that the resources that we have available are allocated so that the most people can get the best value out of the process.

Some comments were made about Ireland, for example. We have to look at the best practices around the world to see what we can bring into our system here, but we also have to be cautious not to jump to facile solutions. I'm looking at Ireland, for example, to see what's happened there. One of the things I'm given to understand – I'm looking for more research – is that in actual fact by lowering the tuition costs, there hasn't actually been an increase in the take-up. In actual fact I'm told that there's not a higher proportion of people going to advanced education there just because the tuition fees have been lowered.

Now, I'm looking for more information on that, and I think we ought to. I think we ought to take the time to explore and find the best practices around the world and see what we can do to make sure that our postsecondary system is leading edge and gives Albertans the opportunity to have the best education that they possibly can and lead in the world. So I think it's important to look around.

One of the members started talking about the fact that there needed to be opportunities for farmers who were struggling and perhaps should be getting a job in the oil patch, and we've had questions in this House about the foreign workers' agreement and what might happen with foreign workers coming in. The reality, Mr. Speaker, is that we do aspire to have every Albertan have the opportunity to take those jobs that are here. Those Albertans who want to, need to be able to step forward and access the opportunities that are there. I'm not aware of any of those Albertans being denied an opportunity to upgrade, to get into a process where they can get an apprenticeship job if they want. If people can sign up for a job and get an apprenticeship program, the space will be there. So, yes, Albertans have to take up. Yes, we have to make sure that the transition programs that are necessary for aboriginal people who need to upgrade can get that opportunity to do so. Yes, we need to do those.

However, Mr. Speaker, today we were talking, actually, about Bill 14, and Bill 14 is a very simple bill. It's not about changing anything that's happening, but it is about the fact that in the current act there are some things that are not as clear as they ought to be and can be interpreted in a number of ways.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie indicated and read some policy statements, and he was absolutely right about the policy statements and the way the act is being interpreted. But it's been brought to our attention that the act could be interpreted in another way to suggest that those policy statements might not be the right interpretation. So the purpose of this bill is not to do all the things we've been talking about this afternoon. We've committed to do a review, and we're designing the form of that review. It won't be necessarily the Learning Commission format, but it will be something I think similar in substance to do that so that we have a full and complete review with the opportunity for all Albertans to have input to it.

However, it is also important to make sure that our act is clear and that it can be utilized in an appropriate way and that when an Auditor General looks at what we're doing, the Auditor General can say: yes, what you're doing is in accordance with the act. If there are instances where that's not as clear as it ought to be, then it behooves us to move as quickly as possible to make those amendments.

So while the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie suggests that we ought not to be here doing this, quite frankly I would like to agree with him. I think these are minimal. They're not the most important thing we're doing in postsecondary education, although they did engender a good discussion this afternoon, but what they are is fixing the stuff that needs to be fixed so that the law that we have right now is clear and the policies we have are clearly policies which are being interpreted in accordance with the law.

Now, when you talk about people who ought to be able to come back into the education system for adult learning opportunities later on in life, absolutely they should. Absolutely. And if they haven't reached their lifetime loan limit, if they're moving into a master's program or a PhD program and those loan limits are higher, absolutely they should be able to access them.

So what we're talking about is that we ought to look at all of the policies and find out how we can make student loan policies that are affordable and make sure that resources are available. When we're establishing different forms of financial assistance for some or all purposes of the act, obviously what we're talking about is saying that a loan might not be the most appropriate way of financial assistance in all purposes. So for the purposes of the act we might need a different form.

All of those things need to be discussed. The purpose of this bill is to clear up perhaps the ability to interpret the existing act in a couple of different ways, and it should be clear which way it was intended to be interpreted.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a second time]

Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2005

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to move second reading of Bill 20, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2005.

Under the changes proposed the act will be amended to parallel recent changes to its federal counterpart. There is also some clarification needed of amendments made last year to the royalty tax rebate and some technical amendments to ensure that the act is consistent with the current administration.

The federal Income Tax Act changes regularly, and it is important for the smooth running of the tax system that Alberta's legislation be consistent in wording and intent. By changing our legislation to parallel its federal counterpart, we keep the rules consistent across the country and prevent a patchwork defect in legislation. Tax returns are complicated enough without that.

Among the changes to parallel the federal act the government is putting forward changes to relax slightly a definition of "impairment" used to calculate the credit for mental or physical impairment. Under the old wording a person had to have impairment in "feeding and dressing." Under the proposed new wording a person must have impairment in "feeding or dressing."

A further change to parallel the federal act and be consistent with the current administration affects the eligibility criteria for the education credit. The amendment requires that students be at least 16 years of age to qualify for the postsecondary education credits. In general, both the federal and provincial education tax credits are granted to students enrolled in postsecondary and vocational job training courses that qualify for the purposes of the tuition fee tax credit. In the case of vocational schools, fees paid on behalf of students who are under 16 years of age do not qualify for the tuition fee tax credit. This amendment clarifies that a similar restriction applies for the purposes of the education tax credit. Generally, young students taking accredited courses at colleges or universities will still be eligible for this credit. Young people in either basic or secondary school who also take classes for personal interest will not, even if the class is at a designated institution. It's also important to note that the act has been administered according to the federal wording, so there is no significant change in how the rules apply.

There are also proposed changes to the foreign tax credit. The intent of the foreign tax credit is to prevent double taxation of income from foreign sources. Among the changes under the current legislation the taxpayer must be a resident of Alberta on December 31 to qualify. People who leave Canada during the year are denied the credit. This means people are often taxed twice on income they earned while living in Alberta. The proposed change will correct this by allowing people who were residents of Alberta but have moved to a jurisdiction outside of Canada during the year to claim the credit for the part of the year they were resident in Alberta.

Third, there are proposed changes to the treatment of part-year residents. A part-year resident is a person who arrives in Canada from abroad or who leaves Canada for another country midway through the tax year. Among the proposed changes, section 40 of the act unintentionally provides preferential treatment to part-year residents of other provinces who have business income in Alberta over Canadians who live in those provinces full-time and have business income in Alberta.

Changes will ensure that the legislation dealing with the credits of past-year residents does not result in the part-year residents of other provinces being treated better than full-year residents of those provinces. As well, the legislation currently denies the pension tax credit to all individuals who moved from Alberta to a residence outside Canada. The credit is denied both when the individual was a resident of the other country and when the person lived in Alberta. The denial of the credit happens even though one person may have been taxed on enough pension income while an Alberta resident to make him eligible to claim the entire credit. The proposed amendments will rectify this situation and allow such individuals to qualify for the credit. These changes are consistent with the current administration of the act, and there is no change in how the rules apply.

Finally, last year's changes were made to the act to match amendments to the royalty tax deduction in the Corporate Tax Act. However, we found the legislation did not accurately reflect the intended calculation of amounts available for the credit, so some clarification is needed.

Mr. Speaker, the changes proposed in this amendment act will align the provincial act with its federal counterpart, prevent double taxation by ensuring tax credits are not unfairly denied, and clarify aspects of the Personal Income Tax Act. I look forward to hearing the debate on Bill 20. If any questions or concerns arise during the debate, I undertake to respond to them at the next stage of the bill process.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to indicate that I would agree with almost everything that the mover of the bill has indicated. It is primarily a housekeeping bill which brings some clarification to various aspects of the existing bill and parallels federal legislation. I would like to thank the Finance minister for giving myself and my staff the opportunity to meet with some of her staff to go over the bill, and it was very helpful for us in understanding some of those clarifications that are being made.

I do have a question regarding the . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hate to interrupt you, but under Standing Order 19(1)(c) I must now put the question on the following motion for consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's speech.

head: Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Lukaszuk moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 9: Mr. Hancock]

[Motion carried]

Government Motions

Address in Reply to Speech from the Throne

15. Mr. Hancock moved on behalf of Mr. Klein:
Be it resolved that the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne be engrossed and presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor by such members of the Assembly as are members of Executive Council.

[Government Motion 15 carried]

Second Reading

Bill 20
Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2005

The Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was a little caught off guard by all of that, but I gather that I get the rest of my speaking time, and I'm happy to have it. I was just getting into my comments on Bill 20, and if I remember correctly, I was thanking the minister for having allowed my staff and myself to meet with her staff and provide the . . .

An Hon. Member: It bears repeating.

Mr. R. Miller: So we'll have that on the record twice now, then, I understand. That's good.

As I had indicated earlier, that was quite helpful. I believe I was just about to ask or at least put on the record my question regarding the age limit of 16. I'll have to look into that a little more before we deal with this bill at committee, but I'm wondering if perhaps we might be somehow excluding bright young people under the age of 16 who would be attending some sort of postsecondary institution. That does, of course, happen on occasion although it might be rather rare.

Beyond that, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure that I really have an awful lot to say on this bill. I understand that at least one of my colleagues will have some comments on it, so I think I will cede the floor for the time being and look forward, as I said, to the opportunity to raise a question or two at committee level.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I won't take long because I know the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is just dying to get into it, and I don't think we'll get into foreign workers here.

The bill seems to be housekeeping. The only question that I have: I take it that the intent of this particular bill is to be revenue neutral. If that's not the case, I would like the hon. member to know that the only group that I can see that there is where it's not revenue neutral – and he mentioned that – was in terms of the foreign workers living in other places. I would hope that the minister or the member would talk about this if there's anything in there that isn't revenue neutral. That's my understanding of it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) kicks in. If there are questions – hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, are you participating in the question and answer portion?

Mr. R. Miller: Yes.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just going to ask the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview if he had been made aware of some electronic mail correspondence that my office had received from the Alberta director of the Canadian Taxpayers Federation indicating that, as far as they could see, this particular bill was in fact revenue neutral?

5:20

Mr. Martin: Yes. I am aware that Mr. Carpay said that, and I quote, as far as I can tell, it probably will not increase or decrease anybody's taxes. It looks like this bill will help to clarify certain ambiguities which have arisen over time, which often arise in spite of the best intentions of legislators to be clear. That's his assessment.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available.

If not, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this time I have some questions for the hon. member to get on the record, and I look forward to a timely response. My questions in regard to Bill 20, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, are around the new proposed section 25, and we're discussing natural gas or related hydrocarbons or mineral deposits and the royalties from such. There are some changes in here that may or may not be housekeeping changes.

Now, in regard to the attributed Canadian royalty income, we are making significant changes to the existing section. Who is to benefit from these changes and by how much?

Thank you.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Additional members that wish to participate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: This is strictly a question of clarification. The hon. mover of the bill put forward the idea that we can capture revenue from our, sort of, snowbirds. They go down to the States during the winter months to enjoy the warmer climes. I'm just wondering if within this bill we have the opportunity to derive revenue from what I would consider almost sunbirds; in other words, those coming up from the southern climes to Alberta's mountains to escape the heat that they're experiencing in the south. If they were to have a temporary residency in Alberta, would we be able to collect revenue from them based on their time and stay in this province?

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Hon. member, has the question been called? The question having been called, that's the end of it.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a second time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 8 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:24 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

The Deputy Speaker: Good evening. Please be seated.

Third Reading

Bill 2
Alberta Centennial Medal Act

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to move third reading of Bill 2.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said in the previous debate of this bill, we fully support this bill because it provides a tribute to Albertans who have made a significant contribution to make our province a better place to live in, to raise our families in, and to work in. This bill is a one-time commemorative medal that will recognize the honour and extraordinary accomplishments of nominated Albertans during the province's centennial year.

The Alberta Centennial Medal Act seeks to award deserving Albertans who have contributed to our province in areas such as community involvement, leadership, volunteerism, or outstanding personal achievements. This is an act that has as its motivation the celebration of our centennial year.

Some questions were raised during second reading. I think the first one was surrounding section 4 of the bill. I'm still not clear what exactly are the criteria in determining who these individuals and organizations are. Especially, how will the government determine which associations, governments, and other organizations will be designated as having the ability to nominate a recipient? How will the government determine which individuals can nominate potential recipients? What is the process for this?

Other than further clarification around these issues, I can see no other provision of this bill that needs debate, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's Official Opposition fully supports this bill. Its motivation is based upon celebrating the province's centennial through personal recognition of extraordinary Albertans. The special men and women and youths who will receive this award will no doubt be worthy of this special tribute. We are not here to complain and whine. We fully support this bill and are willing to work with the ministry in celebrating our centennial year.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be very, very brief. I just want to say that the bill has the NDP caucus support. I raised some questions during the second reading of the bill, and the minister was quite specific and addressed some of those concerns that I expressed. One of those I think he addressed by way of suggesting that some of those concerns will be taken care of in the writing up of the regulations, and if I recall correctly, he thought he'd be willing to share that information as that writing is undertaken or would certainly consult.

So with that, if I'm correct in my understanding and recalling of what the minister had to say on that day in response to my questions, I'm very happy to support this bill in its third reading.

Mr. Hinman: I would like to also thank the minister and to put the Alliance caucus support behind it as well. I think that it's important in this centennial year that we do look back and . . .

Mr. Mar: It was unanimous?

Mr. Hinman: Let me check. Absolutely.

It's important that we look back and recognize the great citizens that have contributed to this province and the sacrifices that they've made here as they came and they settled this land and worked hard. I'm just excited to see these awards get put out to deserving individuals, and I think that it'll boost the morale of the province. It's just exciting to see such awards going out to special individuals that have contributed so much to our province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development to close debate.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I believe that what my promise to the House was at the time in second reading was that I would convey the transcripts of Hansard to the drafters of the regulations so that they might contemplate the comments made in this House while they were drafting the regulations. So I have done exactly that. The drafters have in fact seen the comments that have been made by hon. members here, most of which I think we've been able to accommodate in the drafting of the regulation, which is not yet complete.

Apart from answering that question, I thank all hon. members on both sides of the House for their kind comments in support of this bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a third time]

Bill 27

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2005

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to move Bill 27, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2005, at third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to have an opportunity to participate in the debate this evening in regard to Bill 27. I was hoping to get an opportunity earlier to discuss this, but now is an ideal time.

I notice Bill 27 is slightly different than the supplementary estimates that were provided in the booklet form, certainly in regard to the reconciliation of adjusted gross amounts. When one looks at Bill 27, again we see money for the last fiscal year and lots of it, almost to the tune of $2 billion.

Now, I'm curious: in the supplementary estimates that were presented and debated in the Assembly in the past couple of weeks what is exactly the reconciliation about, and why is it not included in the bill? Certainly, I have been looking at previous government budgets, and I see where there is no reconciliation publicly listed from one year to the next. Research in the Legislature Library indicates that previous Progressive Conservative governments had a reconciliation from one year to the next, but it's a practice that seems to have stopped, oddly enough, at least publicly.

Now, I was surprised to see, Mr. Speaker, that there is a reconciliation listed in the supplementary estimates, and I was astonished not to see it in Bill 27. We see in the reconciliation that is listed in supplementary supply, Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, that there was a transfer to the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation listed. Children's Services is listed as a reconciliation. Community Development, there was a transfer to the Department of Seniors and Community Supports. Economic Development is listed. Education is listed. Energy is listed. Environment is listed, Executive Council, Finance, Gaming, Government Services, Health and Wellness, Human Resources and Employment, Infrastructure and Transportation, Innovation and Science, International and Intergovernmental Relations, Justice, Municipal Affairs, Restructuring and Government Efficiency received a transfer – and that in itself is interesting – Seniors and Community Supports, Solicitor General, Sustainable Resource Development.

The hon. members across the way can correct me if I'm wrong, but it's the first time I can recall or find a reconciliation of adjusted gross amounts listed this way in supplementary estimates.

Now, in regard to appropriation Bill 27 we are essentially adding on almost $2 billion to the budget. Mr. Speaker, usually in June of each year the hon. Minister of Finance releases the government of Alberta's annual report, and the annual report details the revenue and expenses of the Alberta government in a number of categories including by ministry and by subject areas: supply and services, salaries and wages, travel and communications, et cetera. In September of each year the government departments release an annual report for each department. Each of these reports goes into greater detail than the government's annual report, but each report should contain the same basic information that is in the annual report. All of the annual reports provide Albertans with a good idea of how each department works and what kind of activities they endeavour to pursue.

With Bill 27 here we just have a general list. However, Mr. Speaker, these reports provide very little information as to exactly where the money was spent. For example, one department might claim they spent $1 million on travel, but the annual report won't tell Albertans where they travelled to, how much was spent, or even who went. Now, that's no different than this bill we are discussing here this evening.

To answer the question, "Where exactly did the money go?" each May the government of Alberta releases the public accounts, also known as the blue book. The blue book lists selected payments made by the general revenue fund of the government of Alberta. It lists grant payments over $5,000 in one category and in another supply, services, purchase of capital assets over $10,000. Now, there's no such listing provided with this bill.

The public accounts document is prepared in accordance with section 17 of the Government Accountability Act.

The public accounts for a fiscal year shall include the following:

- (a) the consolidated annual report prepared under section 10,
- (b) the ministry annual reports prepared under section 14 . . .
- (c) any supplementary schedules, statements, explanations and financial statements that the Minister of Finance may require.

All three sets of financial statements make up the public accounts, so some time next year we will see where Bill 27 fits in this scheme.

Now, all three documents are interesting whenever they are compared. Upon comparing, Mr. Speaker, the amounts of grants and supplies and services listed in the annual reports with the amounts listed in the annual report, I have discovered in the past some inconsistencies.

Now, first one notices that the totals for each category do not match. For example, if we look at some of the past budgets, let's look at the figures for grants in the following table for the fiscal year ended March 31, 2002. It would be interesting to see how much of this money that we're discussing in Bill 27 is actually granted, Mr. Speaker, and how much is for supply and services. But for the fiscal year ended March 31, 2002, in the public accounts $13.5 billion was listed for grants, but the annual report has an amount of $15.1 billion. I'm rounding this off, but the difference is $1.5 billion. For the fiscal year ended March 31, 2003, public accounts states again for grants that there is $13.6 billion. The annual report indicates that there's $13.8 billion. That's a difference of $271 million. As you can see, the total amount of grants that the government of Alberta has given within the same fiscal year differs significantly.

The significant difference raises for this member a number of questions. Why are the numbers so different, especially considering that the transactions took place within the same fiscal year? Is there an explanation for the difference? Who or which parties were the additional funds given to? Perhaps most importantly, how are Alberta taxpayers' dollars being used? Is this good or bad public policy? We need to know how the tax dollars really are being spent. When we look at this bill here this evening, we have no idea. No idea. [interjection]

Now, the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti says that this is terrific, and I have to disagree, Mr. Speaker. I would say that these are very valid questions, and we need an answer. The Auditor General of Alberta and the Department of Finance are able to provide an explanation and a reconciliation for this discrepancy. The public accounts book is calculated on a cash basis, and the annual reports are calculated on an accrual basis. Accrual accounting means that income and expenditures are recorded when they are brought to account or a contract is signed and not when the money is received or paid. A payment shows up in the public accounts book when the cheque, as I understand it, has been cashed, and in the annual report when the contract has been signed.

This leads to even more questions in regard to this. Firstly, why don't all government financial statements use the same method of accounting? We have in this reconciliation a lot of the government departments but not all. We have none in Bill 27 here. Then, second, having financial statements that don't use the same accounting method creates unnecessary confusion and makes it difficult for the public to understand, and I will say that it makes it difficult for this hon. member to do my job and my obligation and my duty, which is to hold this government accountable.

Now, furthermore, if a reconciliation of the two documents is available, then why is it not made part of the public accounts book? The government's financial statements cannot be considered complete without a reconciliation between the two documents because without one, the government is keeping two sets of books. To put it another way, is this government practising an Enron style of accounting?

Additionally, there is a second, more troublesome layer to this problem in my view. When you examine each department individually, Mr. Speaker, it becomes apparent that the totals in the public accounts documents and the totals in the annual report document do not add up. Furthermore, the totals of each department are higher or lower by drastically different amounts. The comparison revealed no regularities, no uniformities, and led to more questions.

For example, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 2003, the public accounts book states that $545 million was spent on supplies and services, while the annual report states that $290 million was spent. That's a difference of $254 million, or 47 per cent. At first glance Albertans have no idea how to account for the difference. Is it because money was transferred, because cheques were cashed late, because contracts in a given year went over budget? Or is it for some other reason entirely? These questions also have to be addressed whenever we discuss Bill 27, Mr. Speaker.

The bottom line is that a reconciliation between the two different accounts is required in order for the government of Alberta to prove not only to this member but to everyone else that it is not practising an Enron style of accounting. Furthermore, Albertans need answers to these questions and reconciliations so they know exactly where their tax dollars are going. When we look at this bill, we have no idea where these tax dollars are going. I think it's unfortunate, and I think it is disrespectful to the taxpayers, and it is neglectful of this government to not provide a public accounting of all their finances.

Thank you.

Mrs. McClellan: You're saying this with a straight face?

Mr. MacDonald: You bet I'm saying this with a straight face.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I sent . . . [interjections] Yeah, you laugh. You've increased government spending from $14 billion to $22 billion, and you still have the same problems, whether they're with public education, public health care, or roads, or bridges. You want to close schools. You want to build casinos where we don't want them. I think you really should concentrate on building hospitals and maintaining schools and building schools on the edge of town and answering these questions.

Mr. Speaker, last summer I wrote the government and I wrote each respective ministry, and I have yet to receive a reply to my questions. These questions are as relevant now, when we're debating Bill 27, as they were last summer. [interjections] Oh, I'm going to look at my records and see exactly who I wrote to.

The Department of Justice is a shining example to you all. I think you should take the tour of the Ministry of Justice because it is one of the very few departments, Mr. Speaker, that in the fiscal year ended March 31, 2003 – John Carpay would be impressed with this. The total listed in the annual report for that department for grants: $28,980,000. The total spent by the Department of Justice according to the public accounts: $28,000,979, a difference of a wee amount of $329,000, and that is excellent. That is excellent. But I'm sorry that is one of the very few departments where the amounts balance between what was in the annual report and what is listed in the public accounts.

Now, the Solicitor General . . .

An Hon. Member: Children's Services.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, Children's Services. Oh, my gosh, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] The hon. member was not responsible, but for the fiscal year ended March 31, 2003, general revenue fund, details of expenditures by Alberta Children's Services: for grants there was, according to the public accounts, in total $568 million spent. I'm going to round this off, Mr. Speaker. This is a unique department because you have both a ministry and a department: total for the ministry; total for the department. I'm sorry; the books do not balance. So perhaps the hon. minister could work very diligently in the new portfolio and ensure that whenever I review this next summer, they do balance and there's a true accounting to the citizens.

Thank you.

Mr. Chase: Last Wednesday in this House I sort of joked that having done seven pages on the interim budget, I would just simply reverse the process and start from page 7 and work back to 1, but in honour of my esteemed colleagues I felt it was important to write a different speech. This presentation deals with philosophy and process as opposed to specific budget items, although I do refer to a number of departments. Please bear with me, and if you have any questions or comments in the midst of the presentation, please let me know. Also, I noticed that my hon. colleague from Calgary isn't here to check, but I am not packing Hansard. These are all my notes.

Tonight I want to look at the derivation of a number of terms as they apply to the budgetary process. To begin with, I want to examine the definition of the term "supplemental," which comes from supply, in this case additional supply. I also want to discuss the meaning of the term "liberal," which is used frequently in this House in a disparaging, derogatory, demeaning fashion, especially when referencing federal Liberals, who are referred to as – insert the adjective of your choice – cousins.

If you look up the word "liberal" in the dictionary, you might get the sense of free flowing, for example. A liberal outpouring suggests turning on the tap and letting it run. "Conservative," on the other hand, suggests holding back, saving for the future, which brings me in a somewhat roundabout way to our discussion on the supplemental budget tonight.

Words like "perception" can be deceiving and subject to misuse. A supplemental budget suggests money in a separate account, perhaps in Switzerland or in some offshore location. It also makes one think of socking away funds or going to the mattress. Alberta's bountiful natural resources provide this province with an unusual problem, and that is money management: a balance between spending, saving, and investing. It is here where the traditional definitions of conservative and liberal no longer apply.

An individual who fits the traditional conservative definition to a T was Alberta's first Conservative Premier, the Hon. Peter Lougheed. Mr. Lougheed shared the same financial approach of the Biblical Joseph, who is renowned both for his coat of many colours and for his conservation approach. Joseph advised the king to store away provisions against the day when famine might savage the land. Likewise, Premier Lougheed came up with the notion of the heritage trust fund. In good times he set aside a figure which approached $13 billion. This princely sum was to be left to grow in the form of an invested savings account which would be there in times of shortage such as declining resource royalties.

Unfortunately, a different form of Conservative philosophy followed, one that appeared from a Liberal point of view to be liberal in that rather than allowing the fund to grow, as was the case with Norway's fund, a series of Progressive Conservative caucuses kept raiding the fund, which at one point due to poor investments dropped to $11 million. About that point, the more conservative Liberals suggested the need for an additional savings fund, a notion that the liberal Conservatives readily adopted. In this case, the idea or philosophy was worthy of adoption.

Another Conservative notion that appeared to make great sense at the time, in 1992, was the idea of providing temporary relief to oil companies when the price of a barrel of crude dropped out of sight by reducing by two-thirds the royalties oil companies were required to pay. Unfortunately, from a savings investment point of view the royalties remain reduced and continue to be at the same percentage established in 1992, although the price of a barrel has risen from the basement in 1992 through the roof now in this year of 2005.

One of the offshore neoconservative philosophies that this government adopted as a quick fix was the New Zealand model courtesy of Sir Roger Douglas. Rather than coming up with a fiscal philosophy that was relevant to the Alberta resource-rich experience, the government saw an opportunity to dramatically reduce the $23 billion debt that they had run up from being in the business of underwriting a series of bad business investments. However, rather than taking a cautious conservative approach, the government raced ahead with liberal abandon, cutting and slashing health care, public and postsecondary education, welfare, seniors, AISH. Hospitals and schools were closed. Infrastructure was put on hold. Seniors lost their health and dental benefits, which they and I are very glad to see restored a decade later by this government.

A funny thing happened on the way to the slash-and-burn forum in 1994. Thanks to the recovery of the world price of a barrel of oil and the rising cost of natural gas, we recorded our first billion dollar surplus. This signal of a turnaround in our economy wasn't sufficient to stop the axe or the social program chipper. In the name of the Holy Grail of debt reduction school boards lost their ability to levy local property taxes, which provided them with the ability to address local issues and accounted for 50 per cent of the revenue. Also in the name of efficiency, an Orwellian code word for control, the number of school boards was reduced and health regions amalgamated. The salaries of all public employees were cut back by 5 per cent for the next five years. Kindergartens were cut back, and instead of fireworks to celebrate . . .

Mr. Herard: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Standing Order 23(d) is one particular issue as well as relevance. We are in third reading, as I understand it, of a bill, and when we are in third reading of a bill, the debate has to be on the bill. In other words, it's no longer about what the bill should be, what it could be, what it should have been. It's what the bill is. I've really been enjoy listening to these speeches that the hon. member puts together, but I think that the hon. member has to learn that in third reading on a bill, he has to speak to the bill such as it is, not read some entertaining piece of literature that he's created. So, Mr. Speaker, I believe that you have to call this member to order.

The Deputy Speaker: Do you wish to speak on the point of order?

Mr. Chase: I've been trying to relate it to various departments. If you like, I'll literally cut to the chase, come to the conclusion, and hopefully you see the relevance.

The Deputy Speaker: I, too, have been listening and have been waiting patiently for you to tie this back to the bill, so if you would continue and speak to the bill.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. What I'm trying to get at is the whole idea of supplemental. I'd like to think that we could get a value to begin with so that we know an accurate amount, and therefore we don't have to add extra to it after the fashion. I hope you see this as relevant. It has to do with the Public Accounts Committee and perceptions.

Debate Continued

Mr. Chase: A week ago today I asked the question in the Public Accounts Committee as to what the dollar value of parks and protected areas was as we hadn't conducted a recent inventory. Therefore, we had no record of the infrastructure deficit or what supplemental monies were required to bring the parks and protected areas back to their past precut glories.

This past Thursday, Friday, and Saturday I along with the hon.

Member for Battle River-Wainwright attended a great parks and protected areas conference in Canmore, during which the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright presented a report on water strategies. In the sessions that we shared, I brought up the need for a water inventory so that we could track what supplemental budgeting was required to conserve and preserve the quality of this resource. While I don't want to commodify water as a sales item, I do believe we need to account for our water resources, which are depleting naturally and through man-made requirements.

I very much appreciate the members' patience, and I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Egmont for keeping me on track.

At this point I would like to adjourn debate on Bill 27.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 30

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2005

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to move Bill 30, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2005, for third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's again a privilege to get to participate in the debate on Bill 30, which is essentially – well, I'll put it to you this way. It's like giving your teenage son an allowance before he shovels the walks. You don't know exactly what he's going to do first. This bill is no different than a teenager with their allowance. You have to make sure they do the right thing with it.

Now, this also could be considered an advance on that allowance, but we've got to look at how all this money is controlled, how it's accounted for. We were talking about that earlier, ironically, with Bill 27. When this government comes before the Assembly and asks for, actually, money to essentially run for the first three months of the fiscal year while they're sorting out the budget, that is considered a usual practice, but when you examine the public accounts of this government – and this bill is going to next year appear in the public accounts.

The public accounts is a very interesting document, Mr. Speaker. I was curious last year, when the Minister of Finance appeared before the Public Accounts Committee and was making a very eloquent speech about accountability, why the blue book is listed alphabetically from A to Z for not only grants but also for supplies and services. Why wouldn't it be like Bill 30 here? Why would it not be like Bill 30 and each department that has money would be listed? I realize that if you go through the public accounts books for grants and supplies and services, you will see an alphabetical listing and then you will see the respective department on the right-hand side of the page. But why couldn't it be listed by department?

Now, I didn't think for a minute: what's this government trying to hide? Why is it listed alphabetically? But I thought I would change that and do it by department. It took quite a bit of work, but there was no snow to shovel, fortunately, last summer, so we got at it, myself and a very capable and able researcher, and I was astonished with our results.

If we are to look at, for instance, Community Development – and Community Development is certainly going to get money in Bill 30. Community Development is going to get $101 million. Now, if we look at the grants for Community Development, we see very worthwhile organizations. We even see the Beaumont municipal library board getting a grant, and it's good to see library boards getting grants. We see cities; we see counties; we see different organizations. But there is a difference at the end, again, from what was stated in the annual report and what's in public accounts, and I'm still without an explanation to this. Now, this is in grants. Maybe supplies and services, Mr. Speaker, would be different.

We look, for instance, at Bill 30 and Government Services. Government Services is going to get $17.6 million to get by on for a little while, and it's a relief to know that the utilities commissioner is not involved in that amount. Now, let's just have a look at this. You'll have to be patient with me for a minute. I just have home-made tags here. Through the general revenue fund, details of expenditures by Government Services – and this is Government Services alone. I would gladly give the Minister of Finance a copy of my work if she desires.

We start off with Government Services with an outfit called 1 2 3 PC Inc. A service was supplied, and the total amount was $171,000. Now, we get down here to – and I believe these are information technology companies, but one doesn't have to go too far to add up significant tax dollars here. There's an outfit called Acrodex Inc., $1.1 million. Never heard of them. There's BMC Software, $355,000.

The Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Herard: Beauchesne 459. Mr. Speaker, if anyone in this Chamber has been here long enough to know what the rules are in third reading, this hon. member should. I've been looking at the bill, and I've been looking for references to what he's carrying on about, and I find that all of that is totally irrelevant. This is not a forum for his complaints about what he's able or not able to do in Public Accounts. This is about an appropriation bill, and I would ask that you enforce the rules.

The Deputy Speaker: On the point of order.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, in defence I can't help if the hon. member, after all these years in the House, does not understand interim supply. I'm sorry. We were talking here about $17 million which is going to be voted on probably tonight to the hon. minister's department, and we do not know how this money is going to be spent.

The Deputy Speaker: Are you speaking on the point of order?

Mr. MacDonald: I certainly am, and I feel very strongly, Mr. Speaker, that I'm entitled to continue.

The Deputy Speaker: Please do continue but continue speaking on the bill and keep your comments more focused to the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. So for all those who are listening, Government Services is to receive in expense and equipment/inventory purchases $17.6 million in this bill.

Now, where have they been spending the money, and why should we vote this amount to them? In the past they have spent, for instance, CGI Information Systems and Management Consultants, $1.6 million. We see another computer services limited company, close to $500,000. We see Dell Computer Corporation, $545,000. We see EDS Canada Inc., $24 million. That's greater than the amount that is listed in the interim supply estimates. We see Global Direct Corp. getting $3.6 million. We see IBM Canada receiving $28 million. We see Imaging Solutions Ltd. receiving $2.4 million. We see Intellex Systems Group receiving $327,000; LogiCorp Data Systems Ltd., $684,000.

An Hon. Member: Is Enron in there?

Mr. MacDonald: Now, the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti said, "Is Enron in there?" No, we have to go back two previous fiscal years before we see an entry for Enron, but if the hon. member would like to see it, I could certainly find it and I will show it to him in due time.

Microserve business computer services received, Mr. Speaker, $1.2 million; Oracle Corporation Canada, $434,000; Neopost Inc., over $2 million. This is all from one department. We are asked here in one line item, hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, to provide Government Services over $17 million in this interim supply bill. There is no detail here, but there is detail in previous public accounts documents as to where this money is going to wind up. You can shake your head, but there's an issue of accountability.

An Hon. Member: Sad.

Mr. MacDonald: It certainly is sad whenever this government is no longer accountable to the taxpayers. You bet it's sad, and I'm disappointed.

Now, information services, again: Rational Software Canada . . .

An Hon. Member: So move.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Speaker, an hon. member says that perhaps I should move.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Herard: Beauchesne 459. Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely nothing relevant about last year's public accounts and this year's Bill 30, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2005. Now, you know, it may be a lot of fun for some people to get up and make all these statements about last year, but it's got nothing to do with this year's bill, and I think we're here to try and do the business of this Legislature, not entertain people who want to read in all kinds of things that are not relevant to the discussion.

Please, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I will read Beauchesne 459. It starts out by saying: "Relevance is not easy to define. In borderline cases the Member should be given the benefit of the doubt, although the Speaker has frequently admonished Members who have strayed in debate." I would say that there has been some straying from debate, and I would ask that the member focus more clearly on the bill instead of continually straying.

On the point of order, Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Possibly I can help the Member for Calgary-Egmont to see the pattern that is trying to be achieved here. We get a series of one-line statements . . .

Mr. Herard: Mr. Speaker, is he speaking on the point of order?

Mr. Chase: I believe I am.

Mr. Herard: I don't think he is.

Mr. Chase: The point of order has to do with relevance, does it not?

The Deputy Speaker: If you wish to speak to the point of order, speak through the chair.

Mr. Chase: Sorry. I'm used to speaking to the person who brought up the problem as opposed to the protocol. Excuse me, sir.

What we're trying to achieve is not a series of rambling comments. We're given by this government a series of one-line items. We have no idea what these one-line items are. There's no justification for the items: $17 million for this; $24 million for that. We need the details, and this is our attempt to get out the details.

The Deputy Speaker: You asked to speak on the point of order, not to continue with the hon. member's speech, so I'll go back to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to continue his speech on the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. I will continue on the bill.

Now, Government Services has asked for $17 million in this bill. Let's go to another department. We did Justice earlier. We can't do Restructuring and Government Efficiency because it's a new, expanded cabinet. Certainly, there are less government members in this term than there were in the last, but the cabinet grew, to my surprise, and it grew through Restructuring and Government Efficiency.

Now, Innovation and Science receives $35.4 million; Education receives $665 million; Energy, under $60 million.

Economic Development, a small department, receives $3 million less than Government Services. For a small department they get a significant amount of money, but I suppose the former Minister of Energy, Murray Smith, has to make sure that there's money in the bank whenever he gets his cheque. There has to be a lot of money in the bank because his cheque is pretty big. There are other activities going on with Economic Development that we could certainly talk about at this time, and that is the opening up of yet another trade office.

We're opening trade offices where 10 years ago a group called the Deep Six – now, the Deep Six were concerned about accountability and the wise and prudent use of tax dollars, and I'm disappointed that now we are not. I don't know if the Member for Calgary-Egmont was a member of the Deep Six. I forget.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. MacDonald: No, but Mr. Smith certainly was. The Deep Six has become part of history. The flip side of that: there's a 180 degree turn from government efficiency, wise and prudent use of tax dollars, to trade offices in places like Washington, Mexico City. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Economic Development can fill us all in on where they are because we're opening them so fast, I can't keep up. You know, the envoy, I believe the former member in here is called: well, that's an expensive word for ambassador. A very expensive word. We'll see how all this works out here in a year or two, perhaps, with this new office in Washington and see what happens. But we're spending a lot of money on that, and a portion of it would be coming, certainly, from this line item.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when we look at Bill 30 here, and we compare it to past government expenditures, and we look at how the accounting for other government expenditures worked, we can only ask ourselves how this money is going to be spent. Again, the hon. member is quite willing to participate in debate, in my view, but when we present this bill and ask for billions of dollars to carry us over until the budget is presented by the Minister of Finance and debated for a very short period of time publicly, you're asking for essentially a blank cheque for each one of these departments.

You, hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, may not understand – I don't know – public oversight, but it is perfectly valid to ask questions as to how this money is to be accounted for.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Could you direct your comments through the chair instead of debating with another member?

Mr. MacDonald: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. I apologize.

So when we casually look at this bill, and we look at all the amounts that are to be spent, Mr. Speaker, we should have the right, the duty, and the obligation to scrutinize each and every dollar. That's what one of our jobs is here. Not only should we spend money; we must spend it wisely, and we must be accountable for where it went. This system that is set up, that is currently employed by this government, in my view is not adequate. It is deficient, and it needs to be improved.

Now, the questions I've asked this evening: I expect and demand, respectfully, an answer. I have been waiting since last August for an answer. I have been waiting shorter than that, since September, from the respective departments where there have been deficiencies located, and it has been nothing but silence from the government benches.

In conclusion, I would like to say that in other matters that I have dealt with with the hon. Minister of Finance, correspondence has been answered straightaway, but with this matter it has not. I and the taxpayers of this province deserve an answer. Thank you.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I would like to adjourn debate on Bill 30, please.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 5 Family Law Amendment Act, 2005

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise to begin discussion in committee on Bill 5, the Family Law Amendment Act, 2005. I have tabled with the House amendments to the act that I'm introducing this evening. If they could be handed around so that members will be able to follow along with my comments, which in large measure will relate to the House amendments.

My comments in second reading were extensive and in large measure dealt with the substance of the bill, so tonight I intend to speak principally to the House amendments and to questions or comments that were raised by hon. members in second reading. I think that the clearest way to deal with the House amendments will be to discuss them in terms of the original section as I go from the beginning to the end of the bill itself.

I will however make a couple of initial comments on the House amendments. First of all, as I said at second reading, the Family Law Act is a major piece of legislation, and we're committed to ensuring its successful implementation. We proceed with implementation activity, and as we continue to have the formal and informal consultation on the legislation, we are continuing to see ways in which the legislation can be strengthened. That is the reason I am bringing these House amendments in tonight to the amendment act.

The second comment that I have is that I would like to point out that a number of the House amendments change references to prescribed forms and procedures to words such as "designated" or "provided for" or "respecting."

If hon. members would look at section 107 of the Family Law Act, they will see that that section gives the Lieutenant Governor in Council the power to make regulations over a number of things, including procedural rules in subsection (I) and forms in subsection (m). All of the regulatory powers in section 107 are powers to make regulations respecting the matters specified. Only the powers with respect to rules and forms are powers to prescribe.

The problem with saying "prescribing" is that it is very specific. Every time a rule is to be changed or a form has to be tweaked, the request will have to be brought to cabinet and an order in council will need to be obtained. Members will appreciate that this is a relatively cumbersome process and that it's not necessary. The Department of Justice has existing processes such as through the Rules of Court Committee to develop procedures and forms and to make them available to the public. The department has advised me that it does not know why "prescribed" was used in the context of rules and forms but has asked that a more flexible regulatory provision be provided to allow the existing processes for developing rules and forms to continue to be used without having to run everything through cabinet.

Also, before I proceed to look at some of the other House amendments, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora asked during second reading about implications of the marriage legislation before the House of Commons. I'd like to expand on the answer that I gave to the hon. member. Guardianship under section 20 of the Family Law Act pertains to the two natural parents of a child. Where one of the parties to the relationship is not a parent of the child, section 20 would not apply to that person, and the nature of the gender relationship wouldn't matter. Where one of the parties is not a parent but wants to be a guardian of the child, an application for appointment as a guardian would be made under section 23 of the Family Law Act. A more common approach would probably be for the nonparent to apply to adopt the child under the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. Once an adoption order is granted, that person becomes the guardian of the child. There is no distinction made on the basis of sexual orientation under the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act.

House amendment A adds a new section 4.1 to the amendment act. Section 4.1 would amend section 12(5)(b) of the Family Law

Act, which is a section dealing with the consent form to be signed by the surrogate mother in a surrogacy situation. Rather than prescribing the form by regulation, we will provide for the form in regulation thus giving the increased flexibility to deal with this form that I spoke about earlier.

House amendment B would amend the proposed section 20(1) by deleting the words "or agreement to the contrary between the parents of a child regarding the guardianship of a child" and replacing them with the words "regarding the guardianship of a child." We wanted parents to be able to agree to include one of the parents as a guardian even if the necessary relationship or residency criteria wouldn't be met to make that parent a guardian automatically. In other words, rather than force the parents into a court application, they could agree to share guardianship.

As drafted, however, the section will have too broad an application. The parents would have the ability to enter into an agreement to make a third party guardian or to terminate their guardianship. Third party guardianship is dealt with by court order in section 23 and the termination of guardianship in section 25 with conditions to ensure that the best interests of children are protected. Rather than give parents a general ability to contract about guardianship, we are proposing to give them a limited ability to agree that both parents should be guardians. After deleting the general provision in subsection (1), we propose to add a more restricted agreement provision by adding a new subsection (5), which reads, "Despite subsection (3)(a), if both parents so agree in writing, both parents continue to be the guardians of the child even after the child begins to usually reside with only one of them."

At second reading the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora expressed some concern about the expression "substantially equivalent periods of time" in section 20(3)(b). That subsection provides that both parents are guardians if the child lives "with both parents or alternately with each parent for substantially equivalent periods of time." The hon. member gave an example of one parent working in the north and only being able to reside with the child for 25 per cent of the time. He wondered if that would be an equivalent period of time and if not, would that be a fair result.

This is an issue that was considered. We considered whether we should try to define what a substantially equivalent period of time was, but we felt in the end that no definition could sufficiently accommodate all of the situations and circumstances that will be sure to exist. The saving grace is the parents will be able to agree to share guardianship. If they can't, they will have to go to court. Over time courts will develop principles to apply when there is an issue about substantially equivalent periods of time, but there will always be some people that will need the assistance of the court in resolving that issue.

Section 6 of the amendment act amends section 21 of the Family Law Act. Currently the Family Law Act lists the responsibilities and powers of guardians together in section 21(5). The intention of the legislation is that guardians have certain responsibilities that are mandatory and that they have a number of powers that may be exercised in order to fulfill their responsibilities. To ensure that the difference between powers and responsibilities is sufficiently clear in the legislation, the proposed amendment separates the two. Responsibilities will now be found in subsection (5); powers will now be found in subsection (6).

During second reading an hon. member expressed support for the concept that all parents in Alberta should become aware that there are responsibilities and there are powers in the exercise of being parents. That is precisely the intent of this section. We feel that the amendments clarify as to what is mandatory – the responsibilities are mandatory – and what is discretionary. In order to fulfill the mandatory responsibilities, the guardian has a number of discretionary powers that can be exercised.

Currently the exercise of powers is to be done in a manner consistent with the evolving capacity of the child. That remains unchanged although this is now placed into its own subsection, subsection (7). As indicated at second reading, this means that a guardian is expected to treat an infant differently than a five year old, a five year old differently than a 12 year old, and so on. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora wondered how it would ever be enforced. For most parents and children it's just a reminder that one of the responsibilities of guardianship is to guide the child toward independent adulthood. Obviously that can't be done if a parent always treats a child as a five year old.

An example of enforcement, however, would be in the area of medical consent. The courts have developed a principle known as the mature minor principle so that a child who is under the age of majority but who is found to be mature and competent by a court can generally give his or her own medical consent to a proposed course of treatment. The general statement about exercising powers in a manner consistent with the evolving capacity of the child continues the ability of the court to determine whether a child is a mature minor. These types of cases do not happen very often, and they have to be determined by the courts on a case-by-case basis, but it is an important power to leave with the courts.

House amendment C would have section 7.1 added after section 7. Section 38(1)(c)(iv) allows regulations to prescribe who is an enforcement officer for purposes of enforcing an access order. This amendment would allow us to designate those persons rather than prescribe them, giving us more flexibility than is provided by a formal order in council.

House amendment D adds a new section 8.1 to the amendment act that amends section 65(1), (2)(c), (4), and (5)(b) by replacing the word "prescribed" with "provided for." These sections all relate to describing the type of financial information that must be disclosed for a spousal support or child support application. Subsections (1) and (4) relate to the disclosure of financial information by one party to another, and subsections (2)(c) and (5)(b) relate to the disclosure of financial information held by a third party pursuant to a court order. This is an example of something that we might wish to see in the Rules of Court rather than in a separate order in council regulation. It is an area where we would like to have greater flexibility.

House amendment E would see a section 11.1 added after section 11 of the amendment act. Section 11.1 would amend section 98 of the Family Law Act by striking out "prescribed" and substituting "provided for." Section 98 allows the court to require parties to attend any course or program prescribed by the regulations. An example is that the Court of Queen's Bench requires divorcing or separating parties to attend a parenting after separation course before their court action can proceed. This requirement is currently found in a practice note to the Rules of Court. We would like to continue to be able to use existing procedures for establishing courses and programs, and so would like to have the increased flexibility that the amendment would allow.

House amendment F strikes out the current section 12 of the amendment act and replaces it with the new section 12. The new section 12 amends section 107(1) of the Family Law Act by seeing a lot of different things which are quite detailed.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I can advise you and through you to members of the committee that we are working with the legal profession and with the courts on many details involved in proclaiming the act of the magnitude of the Family Law Act. We will be continuing that consultative process as we move toward proclamation, which we have tentatively set as October 1 of this year. I anticipate that as we move closer towards proclamation, and particularly after proclamation as we gain experience with the legislation, we will find other areas that have to be fine-tuned.

Those are the comments that I have tonight, Mr. Chairman, and at this time I would ask that we move to adjourn debate on this matter.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Alberta Order of Excellence Amendment Act, 2005

The Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to speak to Bill 18. This bill proposes to amend the Alberta Order of Excellence Act.

Mr. Chairman, the Alberta Order of Excellence is the highest award that can be bestowed on any Albertan. Since 1979 there have been only 58 awards given in the 25 years of this award, with the current bill allowing only for a maximum of five awards per year. This Bill 18 proposes to amend the Alberta Order of Excellence Act to allow that in particular in our centennial year we will be able to award 10 recipients of this act.

Mr. Chairman, any concerns that this provision will water down the significance of this recognition I would suggest are without foundation as there is a very rigorous process that leads to the awarding of these awards and that is intended to continue.

So I look forward to any other debate on this bill, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to speak on Bill 18 again, the Alberta Order of Excellence Amendment Act, 2005. We fully support this bill. This is the highest honour the province can bestow on a citizen. I agree with the hon. member. I am really glad to support this Bill 18 that will allow 10 Albertans instead of five to be honoured every year. There are many great people in this province that deserve to be honoured by this award. We already have given the green signal to go ahead with this without any delay, so I don't want to say anything further.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Chase: I just briefly want to speak in favour of this bill as well. Again I refer to my teaching background. Many times a number of students are worthy of rewards through academic proficiency, through physical proficiency, but because of restrictive programming we're not allowed to recognize these students. Increasing the number of excellent Albertans is a wonderful idea, particularly in the centennial year, and I thank the member for bringing forward this terrific recognition legislation.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would thank the hon. members for their support, and I would move that we close debate on Bill 18, the Alberta Order of Excellence Amendment Act, 2005.

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 3 City of Lloydminster Act

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Chairman, it's always a wonderful opportunity to get up and talk about the wonderful city of Lloydminster.

An Hon. Member: Tell us about it.

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, now, I'd love to.

But also the wonderful thing is that occasionally we have a bill in front of us that really doesn't need a lot of debate. This bill is identical, with the exception of the names changed, that Saskatchewan passed last year to identify the need in the city of Lloydminster to work with its changes to the charter. This bill, with the exception of the provinces changed, has been there. It's been through the stages.

The reason that they need the change is because probably, Mr. Chairman, oh, 60 or 70 years ago there was much more growth on the Saskatchewan side, so as they developed the city, the growth was patterned after Saskatchewan acts. Well, anybody who's been to Lloydminster knows that now about 10 times the growth happens on the Alberta side. That's very evident, and an example would be that if they last year built 300 homes in Lloydminster, 290 would be built on the Alberta side. So they've started to adopt more and more of Alberta models to deal with these changes in their city.

An Hon. Member: Is this relevant?

Mr. Snelgrove: Yes, very relevant.

I will be interested to hear any of the comments from all hon. members and try and answer any questions they may have about Bill 3.

Mr. Chase: Just one sad commentary that the city of Lloydminster represents. It used to be that when you drove out of Saskatchewan and into Alberta, you could tell by the conditions of the roads, but as the critic for infrastructure that difference no longer exists. It's unfortunate. We seem to be following Saskatchewan's example rather than leading by Alberta's wealth.

Mr. Backs: Mr. Chairman, I'm pleased to speak on this truly important piece of legislation for the great Alberta and Saskatchewan city of Lloydminster. It is an important piece of legislation.

I have relatives all over western Canada, and travelling to see them and on occasional work opportunities, I've come to be in Lloydminster on a number of occasions. I can certainly remember a couple of times I stopped because of weather and overnights and other times where I've stayed a few days. Each time I've remarked on the warm hospitality of the good folks in Lloyd.

Mr. Chairman, Lloydminster has the advantage of being just far enough away from larger centres to develop its own unique community life. From the many performances at the Vic Juba theatre to the plays and such of the Lloydminster Blazers and all the activities at Lakeland College Lloydminster offers a vibrant community life to go with its many business opportunities.

Oil and gas service industries, agriculture, and the biprovincial upgrader are just a sampling of some of the economic drivers in the Lloyd area. I think the biprovincial upgrader has been an especially fine example of co-operation in industrial construction as contractors and tradesmen from the Alberta side have often found substantial work there. Interprovincial mobility of labour can work, and I haven't heard much call for temporary foreign workers in that area.

I'll be brief, Mr. Chairman, but I must note a couple of interesting events upcoming in Lloyd. There's certainly the meeting of the Saskatchewan and Alberta provincial Chambers of Commerce there very soon. They will be meeting on Tuesday, May 10, through I believe to the 14th, and many people in Alberta and Saskatchewan are looking forward to that meeting.

As well, many people, I think, in Canada will appreciate the upcoming unique centennial hockey challenge, which is a centennial project for both Alberta and Saskatchewan. It's a unique concept where you get to see some of the best players in the WHL play a provincial competition between the best from Saskatchewan and the best from Alberta. To quote from WHL Commissioner Ron Robinson: we're fortunate that this game is a joint project of the Alberta and Saskatchewan centennial committees, and they're both going to be supporting the event along with the CBC in both their radio and television coverage of this event. It's expected to be quite historic for the local area. Many people will be attending that, and the eyes of the country will be on Lloydminster. It will also serve as a warmup for the city as it prepares to host the Allan Cup, the Canadian senior A hockey championship, from April 19 to 24. I look forward to this.

I support this bill, Mr. Chairman, and thank you for your time.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and speak briefly to Bill 3, the City of Lloydminster Act, at committee. Certainly, Lloydminster is unique in its relationship with both the province of Alberta and the province of Saskatchewan, and as I understand it, this legislation will be very compatible to what the province of Saskatchewan passed last spring.

Now, the city of Lloydminster received its operating authority from the Lloydminster Charter and the Lloydminster Municipal Amalgamation Act in 1930. The charter served as a municipal act for the city since it is situated on the border between Alberta and Saskatchewan.

There are many similarities, Mr. Chairman, between the Saskatchewan side of Lloydminster and the Alberta side of Lloydminster, but there are some differences too. Certainly, one doesn't have to go to Maidstone, Saskatchewan, to enjoy cheap automobile insurance rates. All the people on the eastern side of Meridian Avenue have much cheaper insurance rates for their automobiles than Alberta consumers enjoy.

In fact, this point was brought out I thought quite effectively by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, who actually travelled to the city and compared auto insurance rates. Consumers enjoy much cheaper rates. I would think that if we're going to look at Lloydminster, we could also take into account not only the differences but the similarities, and we could enjoy almost as low an insurance rate in this province as the consumers currently enjoy in Saskatchewan with the public auto insurance.

Now, public auto insurance, Mr. Chairman, would be an ideal thing. Should we just bring it in entirely in the Lloydminster area? Should we start there? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster says no, but I'm sure that the consumers there would say yes. They like to save a dollar as well as the next person. Perhaps if the government here were to implement public auto insurance and they were to implement it in stages, well, because of the unique situation in the city of Lloydminster it would be an ideal place to start. Ideal.

Surely we all notice the growth in the area, and sometimes I find it astonishing that members on that side of the House are so quick to condemn government involvement in economic development and economic planning. I was listening with interest in here the other night to a debate, Mr. Chairman, in regard to the $100 million that was set aside for tar sands research over two decades ago and how that investment in research had paid off. It had paid off in enormous returns not only to the Treasury but to the citizens of this province. That was government involvement by a Progressive Conservative government. Certainly, there have been some other involvements that have not been nearly as successful. They have been downright first-class boondoggles. Some of them have been quite spectacular. The hon. member pointed that out in debate, and it was successful.

Now, another success story – and this was not without significant taxpayer loss by not only the province of Saskatchewan and the province of Alberta but also the federal government – which certainly worked out for Lloydminster and the surrounding areas, was the support that was shown for what was called at the time the Husky upgrader. That has certainly paid off locally, and that was a form of government help.

Now, certainly, whenever the Progressive Conservative government was in power in Ottawa – I'm not talking about the one in Saskatchewan where a lot of them wound up trying to cash their severance cheques at the provincial jail canteen, but I'm talking about the last government of Mr. Mulroney. There were some significant cabinet ministers from that area. If one went around North Battleford, I believe there was a Mr. McKnight. There was certainly Mr. Clark, and there was Mr. Mazankowski.

I drive out there to visit relatives all the time, and I see the lovely twin road, and I think to myself: thank you very much. You can get to Lloyd in two hours, and maybe some day I will visit my sister in Saskatoon. The total trip from Edmonton will be five hours, and I won't be breaking the speed limit.

So those are examples of government involvement that have helped an area, and I think this bill will certainly clarify some things for the city of Lloydminster. I think that it will continue to grow and be a very prosperous part not only of Alberta but certainly of Saskatchewan and will make a significant contribution to the entire economy of western Canada.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I certainly would support this bill. It is interesting that things are developing in this way for the citizens of that municipal district. Hopefully, the government will at some point consider public auto insurance for the consumers of this province, and they too can enjoy the wonderful insurance rates that the motorists in Saskatchewan enjoy. So the citizens of Kitscoty will have the same rates for their insurance as those further east in Maidstone.

Thank you.

Mr. Snelgrove: This will be very brief. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning for portraying many of the showcase things we've got. The only one I don't think he said was the Western Premiers' Conference that's going to be held there on May 4 and 5, kind of an important thing for our area. But we appreciate the walking billboard. [interjection] Well, you've got to be sharp on these things.

The one thing I could agree with the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar about the people in the Lloydminster area is that they do elect good politicians. There's no doubt about that. We've got to go with that one.

Also, to the hon. members, when I was a wee lad, there were 6,000 people on the Saskatchewan side and only 2,000 in wee, little, Alberta. Now there are 7,000 on the Saskatchewan side and 16,000 on the Alberta side. It's got to be that government insurance that's attracting them. Well, now, just a minute. I think it does have to be that government insurance that's attracted those 1,000 people in the last 40 years.

So I think it's fair to point out that, you know, 20 blocks this way of the border they've got a hundred million dollar shopping mall development and expansion. Twenty blocks on the Saskatchewan side: well, for the last 10 there's nothing, and then there's Travel Alberta. That's just an example of why we have the Alberta advantage.

I really do want to thank the hon. members for their most productive comments on Bill 3. Thank you.

Health Statutes Amendment Act, 2005

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First off, I'm pleased to rise and address some of the questions related to Bill 7 that were raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre during yesterday's debate.

The member asked why miscellaneous amendments such as name changes and case changes in the names of the colleges were included in this bill and not in a Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act. These changes are clearly miscellaneous in nature and could have gone into a Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act. However, since other changes were being made to the Health Professions Act, it makes sense to group all of the changes to one act together in one amendment act. This streamlines the drafting process and is more easily tracked.

For instance, the question regarding the lower case of "the" was specifically requested by the colleges as the colleges want it that way for legal reasons so that the word "the" wouldn't be part of the official title of their organization.

The member asked why we were removing the terms "prescribe, dispense, compound." First and foremost, the terms "prescribe, dispense, compound" are not being wholly removed from the schedule as a restricted activity; they're being removed only from section 2(1)(h) with respect to vaccines and parenteral nutrition. This would leave the administration of a vaccine or parenteral nutrition as a restricted activity. Since vaccines and parenteral nutrition are scheduled drugs, the activities of prescribing, dispensing, and compounding are addressed in sections 2(1)(f) and (g).

The dispensing and compounding of schedule 1 drugs are further regulated by the Pharmacy and Drug Act and the Pharmaceutical Profession Act. Amending section 2(1)(h) serves to clarify and remove the conflicts.

Regarding protection of the term "specialist," the member was asking whether consultations occurred beyond the Alberta College of Pharmacists. Consultation with all of the health professions currently under or targeted to come under the Health Professions Act have taken place in respect to all of the proposed amendments in the Health Statutes Amendment Act. The amendment makes the title of “specialist” a protected title. This will impact all health professionals governed by the Health Professions Act as they will not be allowed to use the title “specialist” with respect to health care provision unless they’ve been authorized to do so by the respective professional regulation. The amendment does not however force any profession to make such rules.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre asked whether the term “specialist” was being used inappropriately by some health professionals and what prompted the need to legislate this term as a protected title. This issue was specifically raised by the Alberta College of Pharmacists, who expressed concerns that pharmacists may claim to be specialists in a particular area of practice. This amendment was put forward to protect the public, and there was no negative feedback on it during consultation.

Regarding the nurse practitioner regulation and the registered nurses profession regulation, nurse practitioners will be regulated with other registered nurses under the registered nurses regulation of the Health Professions Act. This regulation is currently targeted to come into force in the fall of 2005. When the regulation is ready, an order in council will be issued to bring into force the relevant sections of the Health Statutes Amendment Act so that they will be brought into force concurrently with the registered nurses regulation. Therefore, there will be no gap time as the relevant repeals will be simultaneous with the coming into force of the regulation.

The registered nurses regulations of the Health Professions Act are currently being drafted in conjunction with the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses, the regulatory body for nurses in Alberta. The content of the regulations will be similar to all of the other health profession regulations in that they will reflect the association policies in the areas of registration, continuing competence, restricted activities, alternative complaint resolution, titles and abbreviations, and reinstatement. Because this is a regulation, it will not be tabled in the House. Once drafted and completed, Alberta Health and Wellness will present the regulation to cabinet for final approval, at which point it will become a public document.

In relation to the Member for Edmonton-Centre’s question about who was consulted on regulation development, Alberta Health and Wellness has facilitated the drafting process, providing drafting instructions to Legislative Counsel that reflect the policies and procedures of the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses. This is an ongoing process, with the association reviewing any number of drafts. The association is the regulatory association that licenses and represents over 26,000 nurses in Alberta.

As with all regulations under the Health Professions Act all stakeholders are consulted on their proposed policies to be reflected in the regulations. Once the regulations are in draft stage, all stakeholders are consulted again. In this case stakeholders include all health professionals under the Health Professions Act, other impacted government departments such as the Ministry of Advanced Education, and regional health authorities.

The member’s issues relating to workforce planning and the succession planning were noted and would be more appropriately addressed by the minister at a future time.

Mr. Chair, as the members who spoke yesterday indicated, Bill 7 is straightforward and deals with technical amendments. I ask the House to support Bill 7, the Health Statutes Amendment Act, 2005.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I want to thank the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat for his remarks and his answers to the questions raised by my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. I think those answers take into account most if not all of our concerns, and I would be happy to go ahead from this point.

Thank you.

Bill 13

Railway (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2005

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I just want to clear up any confusion from this afternoon that might suggest that I’m opposed to road or railway development, particularly as it relates to Fort McMurray. What I’m concerned about is that projects of the magnitude that would be required to either improve the road or add a rail link are going to cost billions of taxpayer dollars, and it’s very important to me that projects of this magnitude be discussed and debated within this House as opposed to behind closed caucus doors. These are the concerns I raised.

I’m hoping that should a road or a railway be considered in the future – and I have spoken in this House about the need for improvements in, for example, both highways 63 and 43 – I would look forward to twinning and improving those two major roadways. With regard to the railroad I believe the group that would benefit most from this road would be the industries associated with Fort McMurray. I’m not sure that there would be as great a benefit for the individuals living there.

Thank you very much.

Alberta Science and Research Authority Amendment Act, 2005

Mr. Doerksen: I just want to address some of the questions that were raised at second reading and make some comments here on Bill 4, the Alberta Science and Research Authority Amendment Act, 2005.

As I’ve said before, there are significant opportunities that exist in the province for both ICT and the life sciences. In establishing the life sciences, the research institute will provide strategic advice and direction, and that’s a logical, necessary step to ensure a strong, prosperous future for the province.

There were a couple of items that were raised during second reading. First of all, the long-term goals of both institutes will not only have a positive impact from an economic development perspective, but the institutes also have a key role to play in enhancing our quality of life and benefiting the public good. A good example from the life sciences would be in bioproducts. Not only will investment in this area spur the agriculture and forestry economies in Alberta; it will reduce the environmental impact of certain practices and ensure the sustainability of this important industry. For example, we'll be able to convert agricultural waste into new products such as straw-based fibre products and generate energy from animal waste.

With respect to the ICT institute our investment will not only facilitate the economic future of Alberta's ICT sector, but it will also help support the growth and sustainability of the ICT infrastructure that is so important as we work to develop new knowledge and technology solutions. It will build on the good work being done by the Alberta informatics circle of research excellence, also known as iCORE, and increase the ability to attract and retain world-class researchers. It will build on the work done by organizations like TRILabs and universities and their commitment to ensuring that we have the necessary infrastructure to remain a leader in ICT.

Under reporting issues, an item that was raised in second reading, the Alberta Science and Research Authority Act clearly outlines the reporting requirements for the three existing research institutes. Under the act the agricultural, energy, and forestry research institutes are accountable to the Minister of Innovation and Science and are included in the ministry's annual report. Additionally, each research institute is guided by a strategic plan and prepares an annual report of key activities and initiatives.

These strategic plans and reports are available in the publications section of the Innovation and Science website, which of course is at www.innovation.gov.ab.ca, as well as in the publications sections of the research institute websites. The Forestry Research Institute website is currently under development, but its strategic plan and the annual report can be found on the forestry research section of the Innovation and Science website. The information can also be obtained directly from the research institutes. This same model of accountability and transparency will continue with the ICT and life sciences institutes.

The issue of board appointments was also raised. Board members are appointed based on their knowledge, their experience, and their ability to further our innovation agenda. MLAs are important members of these boards as they are a connection to the government and to their constituents. The innovation agenda is just one component of a long-term plan for the province. It will help to create opportunities for all Albertans in many areas and help solidify our foundation for the future. That future includes building a thriving province in all aspects, from a strong research system to world-class health care and education to a rich social and cultural environment.

So, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I again encourage all members of the Assembly to support this bill and to move it into third reading. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. All of the matters that have been referred to me on this particular bill by my colleague, the Official Opposition critic in this area, the Member for Edmonton-McClung, have been covered. The Official Opposition supports this bill, and I would like to just say that.

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. At this time I move that we rise and report progress on Bill 5 and report bills 18, 3, 7, 13, and 4.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 18, Bill 3, Bill 7, Bill 13, Bill 4. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 5. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 19
Securities Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to move second reading of Bill 19, the Securities Amendment Act, 2005.

As I explained during the introduction of this legislation, Bill 19 follows up on a commitment we made with the signing of the provincial/territorial memorandum of understanding regarding securities regulation last September.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain some of the history behind the agreement. Early in 2003 Canada's provincial and territorial ministers responsible for securities regulation agreed to work together to make important reforms to the existing framework. They set the goal of developing an improved framework that inspires investor confidence and supports competitiveness, innovation, and growth through efficient, streamlined, and cost-effective securities regulation.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation before us for second reading will facilitate the establishment of an innovative passport system for securities regulation, a key commitment in the memorandum of understanding. The passport system will provide market participants with a single window of access to capital markets, reducing complexity and costs. They will be able to do business across most of the country by dealing with only one regulator and one jurisdiction's rules. At the same time we are making it easier for businesses to access capital markets across Canada. It is important we also ensure the highest standards of investor protection.

Bill 19 enhances enforcement and compliance through a variety of means, including more broadly prohibiting misrepresentation, fraud, and market manipulation. The legislation increases maximum fines and administrative penalties and provides the Alberta Securities Commission with the power to order those who benefit from illegal activities to forfeit their gain. It also prohibits the unethical practice of front running to ensure that those who provide trading and advisory services to Albertans put the interest of their clients ahead of their own or the firm when trading. In order to provide more consistent regulation across Canada, this legislation will further harmonize various provisions of the Alberta Securities Act with those of other jurisdictions.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I would simply like to say that this legislation makes it easier to do business in Canada, while providing greater protection for investors.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I would move we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Third Reading

Bill 27
Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2005

Mr. Chase: I will attempt to stay as focused as possible and just simply appeal that in order for opposition members and, I would suggest, government members to feel involved in the process and so that the public in general can at least be considered to be part of the process and informed in a transparent manner, please in future supplemental budgets indicate where the money is primarily intended to go so that we and the public that we all represent in this House have a sense the purpose of the supplemental budget. If it's not completely clear to the people who have been elected to represent their constituents, I think the constituents that much further removed from the process must have a whole lot of questions themselves.

We have the wonderful circumstance in this province of having the money we need to carry out a variety of projects, whether it be education, health care, social welfare, regardless, but we need to know and the people need to know where that money is being spent and the justification for those expenditures.

Thank you very much.

Bill 30
Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2005

[Motion carried; Bill 30 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We did some very good work tonight, and at this time I would move adjournment of the Assembly until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 10 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Date: 05/03/24
[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We give thanks for our abundant blessings to our province and ourselves. We ask for guidance and the will to follow it. Amen.

Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, on this day in 1930 the Edmonton Grads beat the Seattle Ferry Lines by 59 points over two games to retain the Underwood Trophy and the women's international basketball title.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I would like to introduce to you and through you 81 grade 6 students from Westlock elementary school, which is located in the Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock constituency. They are accompanied this afternoon by teachers Dan McDonald and Maggie Cournoyer; student teacher Melissa Nesbitt; program assistants Heather MacKenzie and Marlene Davis; parents Kathy Prodanuk, Curtis Snell, Cheryl Frose, December Brown, Lori Glebe, Irene Empey, and June Kandt; and bus drivers Margarite Riopel and Dee Kibler. They are seated in both galleries today, I believe, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 30 of the most outstanding Albertans this province has ever seen. We have students from Coronation school, my home town, and they are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Dan Kinakin, and parent helpers Gail Dabbs, Kim Thulien, Joan O'Toole, Donna Hawker, and Jo-Ann Sieger. All members should be so lucky as to have constituents like these. I ask them to rise and please receive the warm welcome of the members of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege and an honour to be able to rise in the House today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three more outstanding Albertans, who happen to be the three most important people in my life. My wife, Martha, my son Scott, and my daughter Jennifer are here from Calgary today to view the proceedings and probably pass comments to their husband and father on them later. They are seated in the members' gallery because they're going to be a tough audience today, and I would ask them now to rise, please, and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Pith! is a play that was created here in Alberta. It's had a successful run in New York City, in fact so successful that the cast and crew have been invited back to New York, and then they will be continuing on to Ottawa for the Alberta Scene. We have some cast and crew members here in the gallery today. I like to introduce them to you and through you to all members of the Assembly. I'd ask you to rise as I call out your names: the playwright, Stewart Lemoine; the always elegant Davina Stewart, who's a performer; Leona Brausen, doubly talented, a performer and the costume designer for the show; and Ian Rowe, the stage manager that wrangles them all into organization. Please congratulate this very talented group of people.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Securities Commission

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Maintaining the integrity of the Alberta Securities Commission is crucial. Our economy depends on it, as do members of the public and a great many honest and ethical corporations and dealers who rely on the ASC. My questions are to the Finance minister. Can the minister tell us if there has been any political interference in the appointment of members of the Alberta Securities Commission, or were all members properly recommended through the ASC search process?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell the hon. member at this point exactly how in the past members have been appointed. My understanding is, though, that there are recommendations from the board or from the commissioners, from the commission themselves, and then they're duly appointed. I would be pleased to search that information and respond at an appropriate time.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Again to the same minister: can the minister inform us about the composition of the search committee for the new ASC chairman and assure us that there are no political appointees to that committee?

Mrs. McClellan: I can tell the hon. member that the search is being handled by an external group. Beyond that, I have absolutely no information on who they have received applications from and/or what point they are at in their search.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. In light of the information the minister has received about interference in investigations, will she direct the Alberta Securities Commission to review recent high-profile cases involving ASC violations?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, to date what we have are allegations. These are serious. I expect a full and proper assessment from the commission when they've had an opportunity to review the information that they've received. I am expecting, from what they have stated themselves publicly yesterday, that they are going to make recommendations to me very shortly. We'll proceed from there when I receive that report from them.

The Speaker: The second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Automobile Insurance Rates

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 22 in this Assembly the Finance minister indicated that there are some 72 companies that provide auto insurance in Alberta. According to the Automobile Insurance Rate Board website, there are only eight companies volunteering with premium reductions. One company has rolled back their rates by only 1 per cent. To the Minister of Finance: since the minister has only made the premium reductions a volunteer exercise, why didn't the minister make the cuts mandatory in order to protect all Alberta consumers?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I asked the Automobile Insurance Rate Board for a recommendation and advice in this matter. They clearly recommended yesterday that we accept the voluntary commitments to this point, the companies that have filed. They expect others to file in the very near future.

I want to remind the hon. member that what we did indicate yesterday was that it was about 50 per cent of the clients that would be within the companies that have already filed. So while it may be 8 per cent of companies, it's 50 per cent of clients, and they do expect others to follow shortly.

Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, I've accepted the rate insurance board's recommendation, and we will watch the market forces at work with interest. I have no doubt that if it is necessary, the Automobile Insurance Rate Board will recommend further action.

Dr. Taft: Well, that's very interesting, Mr. Speaker. Given that the auto insurance rate board that the minister refers to is dominated by industry executives and the Morgex Insurance CEO recently admitted industry executives are, and I quote, all card-carrying Conservatives, what is this minister doing to ensure that the interests of the consumers and not the auto industry are being defended?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, fortunately for us there are an awful lot of card-carrying Conservatives in this province. However, I assume they do that because they agree with and believe in the policies and good fiscal management of this government.

Mr. Speaker, I am fully satisfied that the Automobile Insurance Rate Board has looked at this matter very carefully. They have said very clearly that they would recommend that we accept the voluntary reductions, that we watch the market forces at work and, if necessary, would follow up with further action. I would further remind the hon. member – and I'm sure he would recall this – that there will be a complete review done by the Automobile Insurance Rate Board this summer, and their final determination of what reductions should take place on the compulsory insurance will occur this fall.

Dr. Taft: Very disappointing, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister then for a change, here, do the right thing and remove industry representatives from the auto insurance board or at least provide an equal number of consumer representatives?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have absolutely no reason to believe that the members of that board are not carrying out their duties faithfully and in the interest . . .

An Hon. Member: Could you put a Liberal on there?

Mrs. McClellan: It's hard to find one of those, if you heard the aside, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I don't hold with casting aspersions on the names of good people who put their service available to the people of this province. If the hon. member has any concern with any member of that board, he should do the right thing and bring it forward with the reasons for that rather than blanket doubt on good people.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview just mentioned, Thompson's World Insurance News, a well-respected insurance industry journal, recently reported that Alberta's Conservative government will lose long-time supporters in the insurance industry if it unilaterally rolls back auto insurance rates. My questions are for the Minister of Finance. Was the decision to allow voluntary reductions in auto insurance made to avoid alienating the Conservative government's core supporters?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure that question really deserves an answer.

Mr. R. Miller: Mr. Speaker, will the minister now admit that the decision to not significantly cut premiums was due to the industry having the ear of the Automobile Insurance Rate Board?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, again, casting aspersions on good people who have allowed their name to stand and be a part of a board to act in the best interests of the consumers of this province I think is despicable. Again, I don't think the question dignifies an answer.

Mr. R. Miller: Let's let the consumer have a say.

Mr. Speaker, in light of the circumstances, then, would the minister now consider finally – finally – creating a lobbyist registry in this province so that we know who has the ear of the rate board?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, again, I have extreme difficulty with members standing in this House casting doubt on the good work and the good name of people who serve the people of this province. If they have any evidence that any of these people are not working to the terms of their placement with that board, bring them forward. But to continually stand in this House and cast aspersions on good people for whatever gain I find reprehensible.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The great Alberta car insurance rip-off continues. Just last year the private auto insurance companies made profits of $4 billion. Even the Conservative's own toothless Automobile Insurance Rate Board says that compulsory auto insurance rates are way too high and as recently as last month was calling for mandatory rate rollbacks. Instead, the government is leaving rate reductions up to the companies themselves, and that means, of course, that most people will get no rate reductions whatsoever. This question is to the Minister of Finance. How can the government justify letting Alberta drivers continue to get ripped off when its own rate board found that premiums are at least 12.7 per cent too high even after allowing for normal industry profits?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll go through this one more time. The $4 billion that the member refers to refers to the industry as a whole, not strictly automobile insurance, and to infer otherwise is really quite, quite wrong and unfair. I asked the Automobile Insurance Rate Board, which was put in place for expressly that reason, to do an interim review to see whether rates should come down in the short term. But I would remind the hon. member that that rate board will be reviewing all of the information this summer and will be coming back with a recommendation as to whether there should be further reductions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's time this minister was fair to the drivers.

Why is this government allowing U.S.-based insurance giant State Farm Insurance to continue ripping off drivers by agreeing to reduce premiums by a token 1 per cent and allowing other companies . . .

The Speaker: There is a question there. The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, I haven't finished.

The Speaker: Well, I'm sorry. You only get one question, not three.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I again will remind the hon. member that in October of 2004, when reforms came into place, companies were at a different point in setting rates. Some had already had reductions in place; some had not. The 5 per cent applied overall.

Frankly, today an automobile insurance company can go to that board and ask to have their rate reviewed as to whether they want a reduction in the rate or feel that they should not have a reduction because of the point that they came into this with. So for the hon. member to try through his question to make the inference that everyone was on the same level when this started just simply speaks to his lack of knowledge about the actual reforms.

Mr. Mason: When is this minister going to find her spine, stand up to the insurance industry, and reduce rates for compulsory insurance by at least 12.7 per cent in excess profits?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I will just say one more time: the Automobile Insurance Rate Board has recommended to the minister that we accept the voluntary reductions, which range generally from 4 to 8 per cent. We expect that other companies will file. I will remind the hon. member that when they file, the Automobile Insurance Rate Board will review their business, and they will determine whether 1 per cent is appropriate or whether 4 per cent is appropriate or whether 8 per cent is appropriate. They will continue their review as they had planned this summer, and indeed we may see further reductions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Senate Appointments

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has consistently affirmed its support for a Senate that is equal, elected, and effective, most recently by holding a free and fair election for Senate nominees. Unfortunately, the Prime Minister has again chosen to make his own appointments to the Senate. To the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Affairs: how will this latest development affect federal/provincial relationships?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, while this government will not criticize the people that the Prime Minister has appointed or their abilities, we really feel that the Prime Minister has missed an excellent opportunity to appoint from the list that was provided to him by the Premier. That list was the result of 700,000 voters participating in the Senate nominee election.

Prior to the federal election the Prime Minister had also referred to western alienation, saying that if he didn't deal with it positively, then he would look at his term in office as unsuccessful. Well, Mr. Speaker, this has done nothing to restore confidence in Albertans and build upon positive working attitudes with the federal government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental today is to the same minister. Given that the Prime Minister has chosen his own Senate representatives, who won't face election for at least another twenty years, how will the Alberta government ever achieve Senate reform?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we will continue to do whatever we can in order to move this issue on the agenda of not only the Council of the Federation, meaning all of the 10 provincial Premiers and the territorial leaders, but we will also have our Senate nominees participate as ambassadors in talking about Senate reform and talking about Senate reform not only to every Premier and caucus in this province but to any other organization that's interested in Senate reform. And we will continue to push this agenda with the federal government because it is in the best interests of all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton Gold-Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

TransAlta Utilities

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Progressive Conservative government is so weak and so ineffective that Albertans have had to turn to American authorities to find out about the marriage of convenience between Enron, the corporation with the crooked E, and TransAlta. Only a full, independent, judicial public inquiry will determine if TransAlta ever said: I do. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that this week an ineffective Progressive Conservative government has ignored the EUB's findings that TransAlta's past pricing strategies were unfairly overcharging Alberta consumers for power, why is this government failing to investigate TransAlta's relationship with Enron?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's important that before we answer any questions, we correct the preamble. It's very fortunate that Albertans have seen once again to elect a very strong majority, 62 members of this House, to return and form the government. Albertans continue to see that we're acting very much in their interest on this and in many of the issues if not all of the issues.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans see that you're weak and ineffective.

Given that in the year 2000 TransAlta spent as little as one-tenth of 1 cent for electricity that they would sell for up to 50 cents per kilowatt hour, why did the government so generously give the hydropower purchase arrangements to TransAlta for very little money, for next to nothing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been a number of statements made about a marriage of convenience. They were taken from some transcripts. Those are things that have been brought forward, as he mentioned, from the Washington utility. Those have been examined by the market surveillance administrator. They've also continued to do the right things. The organizations that are in place to protect Albertans, being the watchdog, are acting, are watching, and are ensuring that these documents are reviewed, and that's why some of the information has gone to the federal Competition Bureau.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is also to the Minister of Energy. What role did the former vice-president of TransAlta, Jim Dinning, play in the hydropower purchase arrangement auction deal that was so sweet for TransAlta and so sour for the electricity consumers in this province?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I would invite him to go ask that question of the individual himself.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Diversified Livestock Industry

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the last couple of weeks the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has claimed that the threat of chronic wasting disease is so great as to merit the dissolution of Alberta's entire deer and elk ranching industry. He's even gone so far as to point to studies from Health Canada that back up his claims. As an elk rancher myself I know that there is no question about the safety of either the meat or the velvet products. However, I am concerned that this study will cause Alberta's diversified livestock industry harm in the long run. All my questions are for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Does the minister know if this report is valid?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess in a word, as to the report, no. As I understand it, based on the quotes that have been provided to us, the report touted as presenting the truth about TSEs is in no way a valid scientific study. It's a draft report prepared for Health Canada which was found to be lacking in any scientific credibility whatsoever.

The scientific peer review, Mr. Speaker, performed by scientists from Health Canada and the CFIA found unanimously that while the report did consolidate some useful information, it was lacking in several key aspects. Not only that, Mr. Speaker – and it's important that this is out there – it lacked veterinarian and animal health perspectives. It also failed to have any understanding of the practices of either the rendering or the abattoir . . .

The Speaker: I'm sure we'll get back to it in supplementals. The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What will the minister be doing to try to repair the damage done toward diversified livestock producers and to their industry?

Mr. Horner: Well, part of the problem is the idea that this report had any kind of credence, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned before, the scientific community found that this report lacked all critical review.

I've written a letter to the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, asking for an immediate public apology for his comments. I'm also asking, Mr. Speaker, that he remove all mention of this report from the Liberal website although I understand that you can't connect to it anyway. His comments have hurt our industry and our producers, and he needs to rectify that damage that has been caused.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question: does the minister know if the current science shows that there is any health risk at all from deer or elk products?

Mr. Horner: Well, as I've said many times in this House, Mr. Speaker, in response to questions from the other hon. member, all current published scientific studies show there is virtually no risk to human health associated with CWD or Alberta's elk and deer industry. Even recent current scientific studies clearly show that there is no risk from elk velvet. To suggest otherwise is totally irresponsible and damaging to this industry, and I would urge the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View to apologize to our diversified livestock industry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution-related Offences

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To be effective and do their job, the laws that this Assembly passes to serve and protect the citizens of Alberta need to be proclaimed. Private member's Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003, received third reading in this House on November 24 of that year and royal assent less than two weeks later, and it still has not been proclaimed. My question is to the Solicitor General. What hasn't it been?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The transportation safety amendment act will be coming before this House. I'd ask the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation to supplement.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There are about three or four amendments to the Traffic Safety Act that will have to be done to enable Bill 206 to be enacted. I personally feel that this is a very important bill, and it will be before the Legislative Assembly this year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll direct this question, then, to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Can the minister explain, given that such laws are already in place in Manitoba and Saskatchewan and apparently working quite well, what the problem is with the Alberta version of the law that his amendments seek to address?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my understanding that the Manitoba government has had to change some of the laws enacting that. It has to do with the seizure of a person's private property. We have been looking at this over the last two years, and we are bringing forward amendments that will enable this to happen. Again I'll reiterate: this is a very important bill; it's something that's going to help society significantly.

Mr. Taylor: All right. Mr. Speaker, then I'll direct this to either the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation or the Solicitor General, whichever one prefers to answer this. Can either minister tell this Assembly when this legislation will be proclaimed? Can they give us a date?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before the legislation can be proclaimed, as I was saying, the traffic safety amendment act will have to be put forward on the floor of the Legislature. We anticipate that that will occur this spring. If the Liberal opposition were to pass it immediately, then I think the bill could be proclaimed immediately.

The Speaker: Well, just so there's no innuendo here, it is not just one caucus that can pass it. The Assembly would pass it.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

2:00 Automobile Insurance Rates

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Automobile Insurance Rate Board announced that many drivers will be seeing lower auto insurance premiums soon. Rather than hear the political spin on it, I think my constituents want to know what the facts are. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. Why is there no reduction for drivers on the grid?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the reductions will apply to all private passenger vehicle policies below the grid. That makes up about 80 per cent of drivers. The remaining 20 per cent have rates that are already capped by the grid. The grid that was established in October provides new and less experienced drivers with fair and affordable premiums. As well, drivers that have at-fault claims and violations pay according to their records. Drivers below the grid received a 5 per cent rollback in October, and those drivers will continue to see benefits or further opportunities for savings.

Mrs. Ady: With companies representing half the driving market having put forward reduction requests, what is expected of the remaining insurers?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, we look forward to further requests. The Automobile Insurance Rate Board has indicated that they have indications from other companies that they will be coming forward, filing for changes in their rates, and the Automobile Insurance Rate Board will be letting me know what further reductions come in over the next two weeks.

Mr. Speaker, I've made it very clear that if I feel there's further action required or the rate board tells me that they believe there's further action that's required to make sure that drivers benefit from this, I will move very quickly with action.

Mrs. Ady: My final question to the same minister: does the report by the board mean that premiums will come down further in October?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, there's no way that I can anticipate for sure what would happen, but what I can tell you is that the Automobile Insurance Rate Board will begin their deliberations in June. This point I'm going to make is very important. The public will have an opportunity to provide input during this period, and I fully expect that they will. Any decisions that come out of that review will be announced in August and will take effect in July.* Now, that sounds a bit odd, but that's the timing that the rate board has established.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Wild Rose Foundation Grants

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Wild Rose Foundation uses lottery funds to provide grants to volunteer, nonprofit organizations. Continually, however, opposition MLAs hear reports about the involvement of government MLAs in the granting and distribution of Wild Rose funds, potentially tainting the process with political favouritism. My questions are to the Minister of Community Development. What role do government MLAs play in approving Wild Rose Foundation grants?

Mr. Mar: None that I'm aware of, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Tougas: Again to the same minister: what role do government MLAs play in the distribution of Wild Rose Foundation grants including handing out the cheques?

Mr. Mar: Occasionally, from time to time, Mr. Speaker, MLAs are asked by groups throughout the province to support a particular cause. As good MLAs would, we respond to them. There are times when cheques are distributed by MLAs to such groups throughout the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What processes or systems does the government have in place to ensure that Wild Rose funds go to the appropriate organizations for the approved purpose?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, there is an auditing procedure that's put in place. It wouldn't be any different for the Wild Rose Foundation than for any other government-funded agency, board, or commission that distributes money to groups throughout the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have seen in the last 14 months a 6.1 per cent unemployment rate in the construction trades, and recently an internal Suncor communications document says that there is no shortage of construction workers, only a shortage of workers willing to work under the Christian Labour Association banner. To briefly quote from a March 9 Suncor memo, "There are shortages within CLAC because many [Alberta Building Trades Council] members will not work on a CLAC site, hence the need for foreign workers." My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. In light of the Suncor memo, will the minister now admit that the construction trade shortages are not a labour problem; they are a CLAC problem?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, to start with, like I've clarified in this House the last four days, I believe, in relation to the issue of foreign workers, one thing I want to clarify again is that recruitment of foreign workers is under the full control of the federal government. The employers here in Alberta have to do an exhaustive process to hire local people, Albertans, Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, if anyone can show me an example of a qualified person that applied for a job and was turned down for a job with a company that is hiring temporary foreign workers, then let me know. Bring that person's name, and I guarantee you that I will personally take it to Ottawa.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, this is the old dodge from this government. I quote from Alberta Labour Force Statistics, an Alberta government document.

The Speaker: Hon. member, hold on. Attention une minute, s'il vous plaît. There's a rule about preambles, a very, very definitive rule about preambles.

Second question. Please proceed.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, the dodge is simply this: since a 2001 Alberta government document says that it's policy to facilitate the entry of temporary foreign workers in the construction trades, why does the government keep insisting that it's only Ottawa's problem?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, to start with, you cannot at the provincial level approve temporary foreign workers. So whose problem is it?

Mr. Martin: I'll make it clear, Mr. Speaker. The point is that the government pushed for this. Why did they push for this then?

Mr. Cardinal: All I can say, Mr. Speaker: the government can take credit for a strong, good, well-diversified economy with thousands of jobs in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Road Safety

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Best practices in other jurisdictions have shown that the best way to reduce the cost of auto insurance and to substantially reduce the cost of health care is to reduce the number of injury accidents on our streets and highways. Recently the McDerimid report dealt with similar issues. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: what are your plans to reduce the number of injury accidents on our highways in response to the McDerimid report?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think for the benefit of the House the first thing that we have to do is establish the magnitude of what we're talking about. Each year in Alberta there is roughly $3.9 billion of cost through auto accidents. A considerable portion of that is actually in our health care system.

Mr. Speaker, the McDerimid report was quite a revolutionary report in how it came out and how it was done. One of the aims of this report is to decrease automobile accidents in Alberta by 30 per cent by the year 2010, so five years from now we will see a decrease of 30 per cent. There are other elements of savings, but this savings purely from a monetary point of view will be $1.1 billion for the citizens of Alberta and close to $500 million in the health care budget alone, so my congratulations to the people who put together the McDerimid report.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: has the minister compiled a list of high-collision locations throughout the province where infrastructure improvements may help to reduce the number of injury accidents and the cost?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much. Yes, we have, Mr. Speaker. First and foremost we attempt to do upgrades at those intersections, at those areas of road that have the highest number of fatalities, the highest number of accidents. We tend to do those first, and we do have a list that identifies all of these different areas on roads.

Again, Mr. Speaker, it's critically important. The safety of the roads, the safety of the people driving on the roads is something that's very, very important to this government, and we will continue to ensure that we have the best record in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is to the Solicitor General. Since traffic law enforcement is key to reducing the number of injury accidents, what is this minister prepared to do to improve enforcement of our traffic laws to help reduce the number of injury accidents and thereby help to reduce auto insurance rates and health care costs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. The law enforcement community in this province is working with residents and the municipalities to look at those issues regarding where traffic enforcement should be set up, so there's that partnership between the community and the police.

I'd also like to state that the Solicitor General's department is co-chairing the Alberta traffic safety review with the departments of Justice and Transportation, and we're also on a subcommittee that is reviewing the best practices for the most effective enforcement strategies throughout this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

School Infrastructure

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The conditions at the Montgomery junior high school in my constituency of Calgary-Mountain View are deplorable. The government's own 1999 School Facility Evaluation Report characterized the school as dilapidated to the point of being unsuitable for public school use. Despite this, the government has done virtually nothing, to the detriment of the students and staff. My question to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: can the minister explain why they have not taken action on these infrastructure deficiencies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We work in close conjunction with the various school boards around the province. Certainly, our top priority is the schools that are in the worst condition, and we're attempting to work down the list. We now have some schools that have audit scores of around 1,050 to 1,200. We're working right from the top and moving down to the bottom.

The key element to all of this, though, Mr. Speaker, is that the particular school board in the area has to be cognizant of this and has to put it together as to when and where they want their schools to be done. We have built roughly $2 billion worth of schools and projects in the last several years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this report indicates the presence of asbestos in the school as well as exposed lead paint, how can the government ignore these potential health threats?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, if there is asbestos in these particular facilities, there are a lot of different things that can be done in order to alleviate the concern. Health concerns are our biggest single issue when it comes to renovations of schools, and it's something that we take very, very seriously.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Calgary public school board has nearly $400 million in deferred maintenance costs for the public system alone, when will this government make good on its commitment to deal with the infrastructure debt in schools like Montgomery now that it claims its own debt is gone?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the things that we're dealing with in the system in general is basically an increase in the amount of space within the system. In Calgary public right now we estimate there are around 44,000 square metres of excess space. One of the things that we have to take a very serious look at is exactly where the schools are located, and we're presently doing that.

To give another order of magnitude, in Edmonton public there are roughly 168,000 square metres of excess space there today. The population of students is declining, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Marijuana Grow Ops

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The safety and security of neighbourhoods are very important to my constituents. During recent meetings in the community their concern was the proliferation of growing marijuana, or grow ops, in private houses. These grow ops bring with them violent crimes, drug production, trafficking, and deadly shootings in public. My question today is to the hon. Solicitor General. As the top cop of Alberta, so to speak, what tougher measures are you taking to deal with this proliferation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Large-scale marijuana cultivation is indeed a major problem not just in Alberta but throughout Canada as a whole, and it does place a great strain on the health care industry, the policing resources that are out there as well as the education resources and Children's Services.

This government has provided $5 million a year to the integrated response to organized crime, which is police officers working in an integrated model to combat those grow operations throughout the municipalities and throughout rural Alberta. We also are providing another $2.4 million to Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta, which provides the intelligence-led information that's gathered throughout the municipalities.

Two statistics, Mr. Speaker, that I'd just like to provide to you. In 2002 $18 million worth of marijuana was seized by the southern Alberta integrated green team. In 2004, after IROC was formed, that increased to $101 million, a 500 per cent increase.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I have heard from the law enforcers is that there are more suspected grow ops than they can deal with, so my question is to the Solicitor General. How do you plan to solve this situation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, the ability to integrate services, the ability to share resources between the major and the smaller policing community agencies that we have in Alberta has already started to show where we can and will be going in the future. I advise the hon. member that the Deputy Premier and Minister of Finance will be releasing her budget in a few weeks, and at that point in time we'll be seeing where our plan is going to be going in the future to enhance our response to organized crime and grow operations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are an increased number of shops set up to sell greenhouse equipment, supplies, and fertilizer, and I believe that tracking the purchase of . . .

The Speaker: Remember the preamble rule.

Mr. Cao: My question is again to the Solicitor General. Do you have any plans to register and track these purchases, similar to monitoring the pawnshops?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, greenhouse equipment is used for legitimate purchases, especially this time of year, obviously, with the spring season coming and under way. But, no, we don't have any plans with regard to setting up some type of a model to track, I guess, the sale of legitimate greenhouse items at this point in time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Age Care Ltd.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In January the Calgary health region announced that it would be partnering with a private company, Age Care, to construct one new long-term care facility and upgrade two others. This private company, however, has a former chief medical officer, Dr. Jivraj, and a former board chair, Mr. Jim Dinning, on its board of directors. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Was the minister aware that a former board chair and a former chief medical officer were involved with Age Care when in January the minister referred to this partnership as innovative?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, whether I was aware or not aware does not subtract from the idea of an innovative partnership to provide long-term care. I was not aware of that position, but I was never given any cause for concern that that might be a compromise situation as it results in delivering quality health to those that need it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: is this government's third way a way for former public managers and directors to profit off our health care system? [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I spoke last Friday to the Alberta Medical Association on the ideas surrounding the third way, and I'll reflect back on what our Premier said about the third way. It's not about one big bang or one particular idea; it's about a thousand good ideas. It is about all the good things that we can do in Alberta to be innovative and creative and come forward with new ideas to not only improve access and shorten wait-lists but ensure that Albertans continue to be the healthiest people in Canada, that we target to be even healthier.

Mr. Speaker, there has never been any deleterious implication, as the member suggests, surrounding the third way.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: why is there no moratorium on public managers and directors prohibiting them for a certain period of time from becoming involved in commercial ventures with the same government entities they recently left?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I am really at a loss to respond to what I'm hearing across the House, which sounds to me like a bit of a drive-by shooting on good people who apply to do jobs in a legitimate fashion. Those kinds of allegations or insinuations do not serve the health care of Albertans. We should be building upon the best, and when we have the best who continue to be involved in the delivery of health care, why should we insinuate and damage, potentially, the careers of good people who are trying to continue to do good things?

Highway 8

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents in Foothills-Rocky View are concerned about traffic safety on highway 8. Highway 8 is the road that connects highway 22 in the west to the southwest corner of Calgary. In recent years there's been growing traffic on this road, particularly truck traffic, resulting in an increasing number of accidents, some very tragic. My question is for the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Mr. Minister, could you inform this Assembly what is being done to improve the traffic safety situation on highway 8?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's actually very interesting what the traffic accidents are due to on highway 8. In doing a comprehensive study, what we found was that 43 per cent of the traffic accidents were actually due to wildlife coming onto the road.

In saying that, though, there are a significant amount of other issues that are on that particular road. We're presently up to about 8,000 vehicles a day. At the intersection of 8 and 22 what is happening is that people who are turning left when there is someone beside them in the right lane cannot see if anyone is coming from the north. So this year, Mr. Speaker, we will be putting in a turn lane, which will enable much better vision and much better safety at that particular intersection.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, my constituents include those wildlife, so I'd like them looked after as well.

My second question to the same minister is: what is being done specifically at the intersection of highway 8 and 101st Street, which is the border of the city of Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my job to ensure the safety of people who are driving on that road. Unfortunately, there are animals that do come onto it.

The intersection of 8 and 101 is another one of these examples where simply doing things like putting in different signage or putting in different blinking lights, for example, will certainly help. One of the issues that we have with this particular intersection, though, is that it is also under the jurisdiction of the city of Calgary, so we're working closely with the city of Calgary to ensure that there is something done on that intersection. I can assure the hon. member, who is very concerned about his constituents, that there will be something done this year. Signage is probably one way to go, but we certainly are working with the city of Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Morton: Thank you. My final question for the minister is: what are the implications of the new ring road in the southwest section of Calgary for the future of highway 8?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you. That's an absolutely excellent question, Mr. Speaker, because obviously the ring road is going to go right through highway 8. What we anticipate is that this will take a considerable amount of truck traffic especially off 8. Right now what is occurring is that a lot of the trucks are using highway 8 as sort of a shortcut to both highway 22 and highway 1. We hope that the ring road, when it is constructed, will actually take a significant amount off that and, indeed, may actually delay the amount of time that is needed for four-laning that road. I think it's going to make it a much, much safer road for the citizens of the hon. member's constituency.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

SuperNet

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After numerous delays and months of setbacks the SuperNet file was removed from the hands of the Department of Innovation and Science and placed into the hands of the newly formed Ministry of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. That transfer has given this new ministry its heaviest and, as far as we can tell, its only workload. My questions are to the Minister of Innovation and Science. Can this minister explain to the House what went so wrong with the SuperNet that it had to be removed from his department and transferred to the superministry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Doerksen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'm very pleased to answer that question. The SuperNet contract is probably one of the best examples of a partnership arrangement with private companies to deliver a service to all Albertans across this province, in every rural community that has a school, a hospital, a library, a government building that will allow digital traffic and actually renew the economies in both our rural areas and our urban areas. I'm proud to say that the government signed a fixed-price contract, and any overruns on the contract were borne by the private-sector company.

Mr. Elsalhy: To the same minister: were any jobs in his department affected due to SuperNet's move to this newly created entity?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, if I understand the question, when the corporate information officer went to the new department, those staff members would have gone over to that new department and currently are the responsibility of the department of restructuring.

Mr. Elsalhy: Given that the Ministry of Innovation and Science has not decreased in size despite the largest file being taken away, how is it, then, that this government is efficient? Why do we need two ministries to look after one file?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, I just answered that question. All of the personnel that were involved in that file under the corporate information officer were transferred to the department of restructuring, and we did not refill those positions in Innovation and Science. We've maintained the same staff load that we had to cover the other important areas of our ministry, which talk about the importance of delivering innovation and creating the opportunity for Alberta companies to compete globally, to provide an excellent lifestyle for our citizens, and, more importantly, to prepare the future for our grandchildren.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Minister of Finance would like to supplement an answer given earlier in question period.

That's a permitted procedure we have. It also then allows the originator of the question to ask a supplemental as well.

Automobile Insurance Rates

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for this opportunity. I really want to make a correction to when the rates would come into effect from the summer review, and in fact they would come into effect in October, not July. If you recall my answer, I questioned myself on it at the time, but it is October.*

Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I will call upon several members to participate.

I'd also like to advise all members of the House that the television cameras in the Assembly will continue to roll until after the departure of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor this afternoon.

Thirty seconds from now I'll call upon the first of four.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

www.opentheborder.com

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The March 4 Montana court ruling was just another obstacle this province's cattle industry has had to deal with since a cow in northern Alberta was discovered to have BSE on May 20, 2003. We have all been affected in some capacity after the discovery of an infected cow, especially our rural communities and rural businesses. One might have expected our rural communities to be torn apart after they lost one of the largest economic contributors to the rural economy, but that has not happened. Our communities, both rural and urban alike, have come together in support of each other through countless initiatives.

One of these grassroots initiatives is the Open the Border website launched in Cochrane last summer by Cochrane Dodge dealer Alex Baum and retired pro wrestler Dan Kroffat. This website continues to raise awareness about the challenges our ranchers face during this difficult time and also provides Albertans with the latest information regarding the border closure. Through this website these two individuals have captured over 150,000 signatures on a nation-wide petition in attempts to make a difference and ensure that resolving BSE issues remains a priority for politicians on both sides of the border. Last fall they travelled to Ottawa and personally delivered the petition to Members of Parliament, gaining much national media attention.

On behalf of everyone in the Legislature I would like to thank and acknowledge Alex and Dan for providing inspiration to our communities. They understand that Canadians for the most part feel helpless in the plight of our cattle ranchers and have found one way that all of us can say that we care.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Market Value Assessments

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Spring is slowly returning to our province, the days are getting longer, the temperature is inching upwards, and in Calgary's and Edmonton's inner-city constituencies homeowners on fixed incomes are reeling from the effects of market value assessment. Market value assessment is kind of like the schoolyard bully that picks on the little kid. Every spring it creeps up the front steps, crosses the veranda, knocks on the door, and punches homeowners on fixed incomes right square in the nose.

*See p. 457, right col., para. 4, line 7

In the city of Calgary this year, Mr. Speaker, the average residential assessment has increased 4.4 per cent, almost double the inflation rate, and in the inner city 1 in 10 homeowners will see their assessment jump by more than 10 per cent, which means that property taxes will climb that much as well.

Now, some people will say that folks whose assessments go up by that much have nothing to complain about. Market value assessment is a valuation of property based on real estate prices in any given community. So if your assessment jumps, it probably means that the value of your house has jumped and your net worth is a good chunk more than it was last year, which is okay up to a point: if you're still working, still building net worth, still in the game. But if you're not, if you're retired, on disability, or on fixed income of any sort, an increase in your real estate value is only of any use to you if you sell your home.

Mr. Speaker, I've heard from many senior constituents who feel the very real dilemma of being forced to sell their cherished home just to pay the taxes on it. That's wrong, and that's unfair to the people on fixed incomes, to inner-city neighbourhoods, to the environment because it encourages urban sprawl, and unfair to cities, which are the economic engines of this great province but do not have the authority to raise the revenue they need to sustain themselves.

We need a change in the relationship between the province and its municipalities. It's time to find a better way than market value assessment and time to stop punishing the inner cities and the residents of urban Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Parent Link Centres

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today and recognize the 20 parent link centres that are up and running across our province. Parent link centres are community planned and community based. They are centres of excellence that provide parents and families with comprehensive support in the form of four core services: parent education, early childhood development and care, family support, information and referrals.

These centres, which are funded by Alberta Children's Services, will serve approximately 5,000 children and their parents. In our rural communities family and community support services have taken the leadership in implementing the parent link centres.

I'm pleased to say that my own community and my own home constituency have responded to the parent links in a very innovative way. The community parents have created a network between St. Paul, Lac La Biche, Bonnyville, Cold Lake, and Plamondon. By sharing resources, they are able to offer all four core services across these communities that are geared for local needs. For example, in St. Paul they are offering parent education workshops by working with the Boys and Girls Club and the local daycare centre.

Parent link centres bring new programs and resources to parents living in communities right across our province. Mr. Speaker, the parent link centres are not just about building more; they are about building better. By 2007 a network of 44 centres, firmly rooted in our communities, will provide information, education, counselling, and resources to help parents and their families raise healthy, well-adjusted children who can become great citizens of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Air India Flight 182

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been 20 years since the largest mass murder in Canadian history, 20 years since the world's second most deadly terrorist attack after only the attacks of September 11. September 11, 2001, is seared into the consciousness of every Canadian. Unfortunately, June 23, 1985, is not, yet it should be. It is the day that 329 people were killed on Air India flight 182 in a premeditated terrorist attack. A similar number of lives on another Air India flight were spared because a bomb exploded prematurely, killing two Tokyo baggage handlers.

Most of the people who were killed on Air India flight 182 were Canadians, Mr. Speaker. The terrorist attack was launched from Canadian territory, yet in the aftermath of the Air India mass murder the response of the government of Canada stands in sharp contrast to its response to events of September 11, which took place in another country. After September 11 the Canadian government pulled out all the stops to assist the U.S. government in its investigation. It adopted antiterrorist legislation which infringed on the civil liberties of Canadians, it increased border security, and it increased co-operation with American security forces, even collaborating in the deportation of Canadian citizens to third countries for interrogation under torture.

Contrast this to the bungling and inaction of the Canadian government after the Air India terrorist attack. The RCMP and CSIS investigations took years to get off the ground. Evidence was deliberately destroyed by CSIS. We still don't know why. Twenty years later justice has yet to be done.

The families, friends, and loved ones of the Air India victims deserve justice. That's why the NDP opposition supports the call for a public inquiry into this tragic event. It is unacceptable that the federal government, in particular public safety minister Anne McLennan, has rejected calls for a public inquiry. Only a public inquiry will answer crucial questions about the failure of Canadian justice in this case, including why warnings from the government of India were ignored and why critical evidence was deliberately destroyed. Most importantly, it may help ensure that such a tragedy never again befalls our fellow Canadian citizens.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition signed by 102 members and citizens of this province urging the government to "prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of [our] oil sands" unless all efforts have been exhausted in employing Albertans and Canadians, aboriginals, unemployed youth, underemployed landed immigrants, and displaced farmers.

Thank you.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table with the House five copies of a petition I received from One Big Voice, an association dedicated to assisting seniors not only in Alberta but in all of Canada. The association is asking both provincial and federal governments to raise the minimum ceiling on monetary allowances while not reducing CPP or disability pensions. They’re asking for programs that ensure that all seniors’ homes meet national building . . .

The Speaker: Okay, okay. Let’s table it and move on.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is from a constituent, Mick Beale, with concerns about the situation of highway 63, noting that another young man had died on the highway and asking for the government’s support in fixing the road.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling three messages which I received from three people in my riding urging the government to support a full smoking ban in public places. The first one is from a family physician, Dr. Donna Manca, the second one is from another family physician, Dr. Nigel Flook, and the third one is from the executive director of the West Edmonton Business Association, Ms Karon Kosof.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present the latest letter from a University Heights constituent expressing concerns about development. To quote Patricia Muir, “this project is being rammed down our throats and for what?”

The Speaker: I think the hon. member just heard me caution the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. The same thing applies. Table it, and let’s move on.

Mr. Chase: Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of the Thompson’s World Insurance News edition of March 14, 2005, which I referred to during question period this afternoon.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of tablings. I spoke yesterday about the deplorable conditions at the GuZoo, and these are the pictures to back up the statements then.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to rise to present five copies of five letters from government members’ ridings protesting the importation of temporary foreign workers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. I'd like to table, first of all, copies of the communications plan from an internal Suncor document where it says that there are no shortages, that there are shortages within CLAC, that I referred to.

I'd also like to table a government of Alberta document entitled Prepared for Growth: Building Alberta's Labour Supply, which documents this government's involvement in paving the way for temporary foreign workers to come to Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table for the information of the Assembly the Fact-finding Investigation of Potential Manipulation of Electric and Natural Gas Prices. The Speaker: Hon. members, shortly I'm going to announce Orders of the Day. But prior to that the Lieutenant Governor will be attending to the Assembly in the next few minutes, and this will be the first opportunity for Her Majesty's representative in Alberta to do it. So remember – and I advised before – that laptops should not be in and operational when the Lieutenant Governor is here. And if I announce Orders of the Day, that means you can all bring in coffee. But may I just ask you very politely not to do that until after the Lieutenant Governor has appeared and departed.

head: Orders of the Day

Royal Assent

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor will now attend upon the Assembly.

[Mrs. McClellan and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

The Speaker: Hon. members, while we await, just a couple of updates in terms of Her Majesty's visit in May. You've all been invited to attend the Assembly on that special day when Her Majesty does attend and invited to bring guests. If there's any clarification required with respect to who those guests might be, just kindly contact our office. But they're people that you choose to bring, and that's basically the ultimate decision with respect to that.

In addition to that, have a very, very safe, family-oriented Easter weekend. We'll see you back in 10 days.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: All rise, please. Mr. Speaker, His Honour the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

The Speaker: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit His Honour the Lieutenant Governor.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, and Mrs. McClellan entered the Chamber. His Honour took his place upon the throne]

2:50

His Honour: Hon. members, please be seated.

The Speaker: May it please His Honour, the Legislative Assembly has at its present sitting passed certain bills to which and in the name of the Legislative Assembly I respectfully request Your Honour's assent.

So, really, I think that what I'm suggesting here is that although this Bill 10 may be a good first step – and I'm really thinking about supporting it; it's a good step in protecting both the tenant and landlord – more discussion is needed to determine the factors or the causes of why tenants and landlords run into problems in the first place, why they're met with difficulty.

There is also the angle which I think was missed not only in this act, but I think it was missed over and over. By that I mean the mediation or intervention between a landlord and a tenant. Now, I myself being an MLA have intervened at least twice over the past two or three months to facilitate and encourage compliance by the two tenants whom I spoke to while also urging the landlords to show some empathy and patience. Both situations involved tenants who were having difficulty paying, and I think it was mainly after the Christmas holiday season. They were low-income people, and they just couldn't pay their rent. They were served with an eviction notice. The people were just desperate, so they approached their MLA, and I picked up the phone and spoke to both landlords. Although the official answer was, "No. The notice was served, and we can't do anything," unofficially they showed some empathy, and they extended the grace period by 10 days or two weeks, if I remember correctly, and the situations were both resolved. Both tenants continued to be tenants, and the landlords are happy because they got their money.

Now, I'm proud to say that. You know, I'm very happy to have been successful, but this is not really the job of an MLA. An MLA should not be mediating in residential tenancy disputes. There should be a board or a committee mandated to mediate and intervene so that tenants and landlords will not resort to using the legal system unnecessarily. The government has a responsibility and a role to step in, I think, and rectify this.

We have to protect good tenants from bad landlords just as much as we have to protect good landlords from bad tenants. I am encouraged to learn that these amendments were proposed after consulting with the landlord associations and the tenant representatives in Edmonton, Calgary, and Medicine Hat. This is actually a positive and healthy sign.

I think that I would close by saying that I support this bill. I reiterate my position with regard to mediation and intervention, and I urge the government to consider putting this into the regulations if it's not in the act itself and allow people to resolve their differences peacefully without resorting to the legal system. Again, maybe to emphasize that anything we do here under this dome, be it for this particular act or for anything else that we discuss, it has to be clearly and promptly communicated to the affected parties. It's good that we consulted with the landlord associations and some tenants' representatives, but everybody needs to know so that the landlords will understand their duties and their responsibilities, and then the tenants would understand their entitlements and their rights. So I support this bill, and I would urge the government to consider my recommendations.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When looking at Bill 10, Residential Tenancies Amendment Act, 2005, I'm prompted to think about my own experiences when I rented, and I'm sure most of us have rented at least one time in our lives. I wouldn't know what was allowed and what one could get away with; for example, the use of water for lawns and/or trees. The place should be provided with that, but should that be tacked onto the utility bill as well as the power for the washer and dryer? One could state that because the property looked so nice, it might have created the urge to apply and rent. So does this again justify the cost that one would pay with that being wrapped into the rent?

Now, with this bill a person could object and file with 14 days' notice, which would give a little bit of a level playing field to the tenant, in fact, if they don't feel that the landlord is realistic. In several high-profile cases within Edmonton and surrounding areas there have been such examples of that, but I won't name them though. I'm sure we all recognize which ones they are.

One question I do have in mind is the change in the way that the deposit cheques are returned. Now, landlords currently are required to be certified cheque or registered mail. I'm asked: why the change? I was given a preamble by the hon. member. One reason was because it's costing too much to send these out. One would ask how many people come and go in a year that the landlord would balk at the cost and perhaps prompt this change. What kinds of conditions exist that there is this kind of constant turnover? I'm not a tax expert, but I'm sure that this would come under the operating costs of a business that one could apply at the year-end for a tax return for the landlord or the owner. I'm not suggesting in any way that the mail would not get there, but through registered mail there is a guarantee with the signature, therefore eliminating perhaps a dispute in receiving the deposit. Or, you know, "It's in the mail." How many times have people heard that line, that the cheque is in the mail? This is just an amendment, but it could allow for this concern to be raised. Right now I'm just speaking on this concern, and I've raised this for consideration.

Overall, I think the bill does have some merit, and I would support it as I do feel that it does have balance between the two parties.

One could also argue for change with regard to when the deposit does not meet the amount of required repairs that are left from a neglectful tenant. There could in fact be something where the tenant and the landlord have to be brought back to the table to figure out and find resolve with regard to the outstanding damage. They could in fact have some sort of remediation with regard to this in the bill. Overall, like I said, I think it does strike a balance between the two parties, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 10 this afternoon with sort of mixed feelings. While it does have some aspects of the landlord tenancy act that are long overdue in terms of concerns that both landlords and tenants have had over the years, at the same time there are a couple of pieces of this potential legislation which I have difficulty with. First off, the provision for tenants to be able to move out based on the Public Health Act standards within seven days, I think it says, is definitely a positive.

You know, we have a wide variety of literally thousands of different rental accommodations available in Alberta, and there are just a real wide variety of standards that both are given to tenants and that are laid out to the landlords. So having sort of an independent standard from the Public Health Act really will assist, I think, people to even realize what they are entitled to have through their rental agreement.

I know from my own renting experience through the years and then also through working in my constituency that there are just some literally appalling – appalling – places that are rented out here in the city of Edmonton. For a lot of people they just don't know, for one thing, what the standards might be for them to be able to rent.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

A second problem for people in marginal rental circumstances is that they literally don't have any other place to go. You know, they get stuck in a place where the landlord knows pretty much that they're not providing the minimum standards for human habitation. At the same time, they also know that the tenants that they have enlisted for their properties really don't have much choice for whatever reason. There's maybe a shortage of low-rental accommodation available to them, or perhaps they've had some difficulties in the past with rentals. Whatever the reason, there are just literally hundreds of people living in this situation.

I'm hoping that this amendment act can reach out further and provide minimum standards that the renters can recognize from landlords and for those people to fix those places up and still allow the tenants to have a place to stay. This is the big problem that I'm seeing in many cases with low-rental units. I think it should be addressed here, but it's not being necessarily.

On that same topic, I would like to just also mention that, you know, the shortage of affordable housing in our large urban centres and other centres across this province is becoming an increasing problem. We see an acute shortage in Fort McMurray; in both of our larger urban centres, Edmonton and Calgary; Red Deer; Lethbridge to some extent; Lloydminster; and other places. Without being able to provide adequate places for our citizens to live in, I think that we're just leading the way to a whole host of other problems that we will have to deal with as a province down the road.

To have adequate shelter for a human being to live in I think is a basic human right, and it's a right that extends to all of the other sort of rights and needs for human beings to live a good and decent life. By shortchanging the opportunity to have decent habitation in low-income units for our citizens in Alberta, we are simply going to have to pay down the road, Mr. Speaker. Health concerns, health problems that are associated with inadequate housing include, you know, lung problems, catching colds, bedbugs, and all of these sorts of things, respiratory problems, and we end up paying. We think that perhaps we're saving money by not providing low-rental units in this province, but in fact down the road we all end up paying much, much more.

Specific to this bill, another aspect of it that I have difficulties with is changing the amount of time that it takes – if a tenant is not paying their rent, they're only given 14 days after which they can be evicted. Now, currently I believe that the law allows for the tenant to write a letter explaining extraordinary circumstances that might delay the payment of rent to the landlord, if I'm reading this correctly, and I would like clarification on this, if I may, from the hon. member supporting this bill. Is this an arbitrary sort of thing that's set in stone, and is there any other way, then, that a tenant can look for some appeal process if they're going to be potentially evicted from their property if they're not paying their rent after the 14 days?

I think that we can all think of a myriad of circumstances that would cause people to perhaps not be able to pay their rent, loss of a job or other extenuating circumstances, and 14 days just seems rather short to sort of have other means of income or social assistance or whatever to kick in to bridge the gap, let's say, if someone loses their job.

We have to remember at the end of the day that we have a fundamental responsibility for each human being in this province to have a decent place to live, and if circumstances are that someone is renting and they might lose their income for a period of time, it's important that we show compassion and realize that these circumstances do exist for some people and that they're able to have decent accommodation for a period of time. The present legislation, in allowing someone to write a letter, I think is appropriate. It acts as an appeal process, and I would like to see further clarification in regard to this bill.

Finally, I think that, you know, people who engage in the business of being a landlord are in a special sort of business. They have to remember that they're not selling pizzas; they're not renting plots somewhere for people to rent for business. They are providing a place for human beings to live their lives. We have to have special circumstances in those regards, and the people who enter into landlord contracts have to realize that right from the beginning. This is the place, here in this Legislature, where we can make that crystal clear, that each Albertan's right to a place to live is sacrosanct.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder?

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, you've been recognized to participate in the debate.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to speak to Bill 10, Residential Tenancies Amendment Act, 2005. The main object of this amendment act is to allow landlords to deliver the security deposit by regular mail, to allow tenants to move out if a landlord doesn't comply with the Public Health Act standards, and to streamline the process for landlords to evict tenants who don't pay rent. The Residential Tenancies Act was passed in 2004 and came into force last November. The changes are the first to be requested by tenants and landlords.

The government says that it consulted with the Calgary Apartment Association, the Edmonton Apartment Association, and the Medicine Hat landlord association for landlord feedback, and the Boyle Street Co-op and the Calgary low-income tenants association for the tenants' perspective. Both sides agreed on these amendments, they said. The University of Alberta legal studies program also helped with the amendments.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta Liberals always believe in protecting the rights of both tenants and landlords. This bill allows landlords to object to a tenant's 14 days' notice of tenancy termination, making it ineffective if the landlord has complied with the public health order or been granted a stay of the order. This bill also retains the tenant's right to object to a landlord's 14 days' notice of termination unless the breach is nonpayment of rent.

This bill also allows landlords to return the tenant's security deposit by regular mail, not just certified or registered as before.

This act will change the wording of the section regarding the tenant's 14 days' notice to terminate tenancy based on the landlord's failure to comply with an order under the Public Health Act. Now it requires the landlord to serve the tenant with a written objection within seven days on the grounds that the landlord has complied or been granted a stay of the order or has complied or received a stay at the time of serving notice. The landlord's notice to terminate the tenancy is rendered ineffective if the tenant serves the landlord or pays the rent. Nothing in this act affects any notice given under the Residential Tenancies Act before this act comes into force.

I personally believe that tenants require certainty before relocating. If the landlord objects at the last minute, the tenants may have already committed to another residence, paid a security deposit and some moving expenses too.

The proposals also encourage landlords to communicate with tenants about public health orders and efforts to remedy them. The proposed amendments would provide landlords an opportunity to object without placing undue hardship on tenants. Perhaps a booklet of guidelines could be given at the time of the rental agreement, therefore setting the record straight between the two parties.

Mr. Speaker, I think this bill strikes a balance between the rights of landlords and tenants, so I fully support this bill. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions?

There being none, the chair recognizes Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak on Bill 10. Landlord and tenant issues are things that cross my constituency office's threshold only second to maintenance enforcement issues. The Member for Edmonton-McClung said that he had two issues he had to resolve. He's lucky that he's had so few. I've had many more.

Quite often they come from landlords with problems with deadbeat tenants and how to deal with the legislation. Many Albertans have worked hard over recent years, maybe bought an apartment and are looking to find ways to deal with the issues that arise from them. They generally have ways to do so. There have also been a number of cases of people coming and asking about problems they have as tenants and with difficult landlords.

Just a comment before that though. One of the major complaints I get from time to time is from people who have moved from Fort McMurray because of the great increase in rents. Some places have gone 100 per cent or more in terms of increases in the last six to seven years, and many tradesmen, many skilled people have moved out of there in order to get away from those high, high costs. It's a problem in getting skilled labour for Fort McMurray. It's one of the disconnects we have in that region.

One particular case – and I won't name names – here in Edmonton was somebody with a similar problem. It was in my constituency. They had their rent increased by 50 per cent in order for what seemed to be the owner's interest in selling the property. There is provision in the act for dealing with condo-ization and what happens with that and protecting the interests of the tenant in that, but it doesn't deal with condos that are already condo-ized but rented out by owners, and then they want to sell them and perhaps improve them in order to make the sale.

This particular issue was resolved by the person going to the media. With some help from some service clubs in the area in getting her moved and some other landlords in the area that offered her decent accommodation at a good price, the issue was resolved. But it did not deal with the problem of using huge increases as a way to jump somebody out of their home. I think that a mediation service or something that somebody could go through, as mentioned or advised by the Member for Edmonton-McClung, would be a good thing to look at in any future amendments to this law.

Another thing. You know, there are some irresponsible landlords. I had one particular case where the individual had come to Edmonton some years ago, come into a very – I don't know if you'd call it cheap – inexpensive apartment dwelling and working for minimum wage, having a very difficult time, a single mother. She was proud to ensure that she was working and making her own income and making her way in life. She managed to save some money to buy some new lino for her floor and to paint the walls, and the landlord increased her rent because he said it was a better place then.

She came to my constituency office on a night that was 40 below complaining that the landlord had cut off her car plug-in electricity because it was too expensive. I said, "Well, go to the landlord and tenants; is it in your contract?" da, da, da. She said she had, and she said it was very difficult to complain because this particular landlord just wouldn't do things.

She also related a litany of problems with the particular landlord. She asked: can they come into the apartment? I said, "Well, only in emergency processes; the act outlines it," and all the rest of it. She said this landlord and his sons were using her bathroom. I said: "They're using your bathroom? That seems a little odd." She said it was costing her a lot in toilet paper, and she was not very well-to-do. She said she'd even managed to go to a pawnshop and get a cheap security camera and hooked it up, and they broke it on her. You know, they had a key for things.

She said she went to the police, and the police said that they did not have the time to adequately deal with this type of a case. It wasn't serious, and it's for her to deal with. She said it was very difficult for her to actually make complaints and let it be known to the landlord in that way because the landlord's sons were involved in the drug trade and could be violent sometimes. This is one of the problems that sometimes people in very low rental accommodations run into with the people that they're dealing with. No way for that person with low income, low power to deal with a problem. They're afraid to go to the media even because they're afraid of what might happen because of the activities of the landlord's family, and the police said they couldn't really deal with it. Somehow these people are lost in the system.

My best advice to that person was to cut her losses and leave, just for the good of her children. But I believe that there should be at least some mediation, some other process in landlord and tenant issues, understanding, of course, that as the other members have quite rightly said, most landlords are very responsible, most tenants are very responsible, and for the greatest part of the system it works. It's just those few situations where it doesn't that we run into problems, and there is no way out for these people.

That's all I have to say, Mr. Speaker. I support this bill.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions for the hon. member?

There being none, the chair recognizes the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just have a few short comments to make on it. One, I too am generally in favour of this bill and think that it's important that we get a fairer system. There are definitely some inequities when it comes to renting, and it seems like the renter often is on the short side.

I guess the one comment I have to make is that in section 28(1) it talks about if "the landlord commits a substantial breach of the residential tenancy agreement" or if public health has basically closed it down. I still have to wonder why a person would have to give seven days' notice. I think it's an improvement to go from 14 to seven, but when they're in such a bad situation, I think they should be able to leave and go there when they've got that.

The other one that I'm somewhat concerned about is the registered letter. I realize it costs some extra money and a few other things, but it's just important. As our mail system is, letters don't always show up, and I like the idea of having to sign at both ends, knowing that the letter was in fact received, and then the question isn't there. To me it just adds one more thing that they can argue about, go to the courts saying: "Well, I didn't receive it. It wasn't there." I think that perhaps we should consider putting back in the registered letter. I know it's an extra cost, but it does put some finality on it. You understand that it did get sent and it did get received. I'd like them to consider that amendment, the registered part. I think it's not maybe the best way to go to just send by regular mail.

Thank you.

3:30

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions?

There being none, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, like the Member for Edmonton-Manning I, too, end up dealing with a lot of rental issues coming from both landlords and tenants, but I have to say that the pendulum swings more to the side of the tenants. I tend to get more concerns being raised or more requests for help coming from tenants than I do from landlords.

I can speak from personal experience, having been both a tenant and for a short while a landlord. You certainly have to understand from the beginning that it is a contract between private parties in which each is agreeing to abide by certain provisions that are set out, but because it's involving housing, we have the government get involved to make sure that things are fair and that there is a reasonable amount of notice that's given to both sides.

You know, there are three areas that the Human Rights Commission gets involved in around discrimination: housing, employment, and access to government services. Those are the areas where if something has been prohibited as a grounds for discrimination, it's specifically prohibited as a grounds for discrimination in those three areas. We recognize that housing is integral in this society, especially in a northern climate. You can't not have housing here.

Having said that, we know that we're still dealing with an enormous housing problem in this province and in the city. I think from the last homeless count it was identified that we're now in need of some 6,000 units of housing, affordable or subsidized or even shelter spaces and transitional spaces in the province, and every year that we don't create those spaces, there are more spaces that need to be added to that number. The first time I did the homelessness survey, in 2003, I think, or 2002, we needed, like, 5,000 spaces, and now we're up to 6,000 and still counting. So we recognize as legislators in this government that it is something that needs consumer protection involved both for the landlord and for the tenant.

I argued very strongly last time and, in fact, was successful in getting an amendment through that essentially came down on the side of the landlord. I was arguing that if we wanted to get away from the adversarial system that we had set up for dispute resolution between landlords and tenants, we had to give people more time to work things out. I'm pleased to see that there has been no negative reaction to that amendment because it is noted, I think, in the comments from the sponsoring member that the changes that are proposed in Bill 10, the Residential Tenancies Amendment Act, 2005, are what we see before us today.

Those are around adding the reasonable grounds, that the "tenant believes on reasonable grounds" that the landlord has failed to comply with a public health order, and changing the notice to terminate "within 7 days from [when] the landlord receives the notice, the landlord serves the tenant with a notice in writing objecting to the termination," et cetera, et cetera, and noting that the failure to pay the rent is not accepted as a reason for objecting.

You know, I've just come through the season of door-knocking, Mr. Speaker, and I have to admit that sometimes I find some of the landlords a little draconian in the way they deal with things. I mean, on the day that the rent is due, if you're going through some of these apartment buildings, the "you're evicted" sticker goes on the door at five minutes after 12. You're looking down the hall and the whole hallway is papered. They actually stick the notice right to the people's doors, and you think: Okay, well, that was a bit dramatic.

But having been on the other side of it, where I'm trying to collect rent from a tenant who always seems to have another excuse day after day after day, and eventually it's me and my family that are out the money because we're having expenses, I have a bit better understanding of why the landlords move so quickly now to use every available protective device for them in the Residential Tenancies Act. I have a better understanding of that now.

On the other hand, generally speaking – and this is a very general statement – often those that are in a rental situation do not have the wherewithal to be able to purchase if they wanted to. So you may well be dealing with people who have a lower income or are struggling financially. Those people are often left with very few options when things go wrong for them, so they really need the protection that's available to them in the act.

The Member for Edmonton-Manning had outlined a number of scenarios that he'd already dealt with in his office, and all of them sound familiar to me, especially the ones around public health where, you know, a good tenant has moved in, things don't go well for them, they've got the landlord coming into the premises when they shouldn't, the place is filled with bugs and creepy-crawly things, the public health units have been alerted, and now the tenant has got to find additional money to help them move again. Worse than that, they've probably got creepy-crawlies in the rest of their furniture and in their clothing and everything else, and that costs them money to get rid of that, and they didn't have a lot of money to begin with. So they're literally out of pocket because they rented in that particular place. Those are often the times when they can't get their damage deposit back either.

What I'm trying to say, Mr. Speaker, is that we really need to strive to achieve a balance of protections for both the landlord and for the tenant when we look at the Residential Tenancies Act and anything covering that. Particularly, we have to be sure we're doing that around any kind of subsidized housing.

I have a couple of different kinds of subsidized housing in my constituency. We have the Greater Edmonton Foundation working in partnership, which is provincial money and some municipal and nonprofit management, to subsidize housing mostly for seniors but in some cases for citizens who are not seniors in entire units of subsidized housing. They're paying 30 per cent of their income for the rent, and again that's not covering the phones or the cable TV in those places, which I would argue should be included because in a lot of cases with seniors a telephone is not a frill. It's a necessity, especially if they have to be able to order prescriptions or food and have it delivered. If they have one of those MedicAlert alarms that works through the phone system, they have to have a phone system to make it work. So I would argue that we need to be looking at what we include in that subsidized rate a bit differently. But I digress, Mr. Speaker.

I also have the Capital Region Housing, which of course all of us have access to, which is subsidized housing for lower income individuals and where either there are entire buildings that are subsidized or social housing. But often they will sign contracts with landlords who will allow, you know – whatever – 10 per cent of the units in a given apartment building or five apartments in a high-rise apartment building are subsidized, and the rest are not. You've got to have both the apartment subsidized and the individual approved for subsidy, have those two things go together. If the individual leaves that apartment, they may not necessarily get another subsidized apartment.

We need to be careful that we are protecting those people, particularly when we're looking at very low vacancy rates. The Member for Edmonton-Manning referenced the situation in Fort McMurray where people are – I know this is hard to believe – leaving that city, even though they've got good jobs, because they can't find housing options. My brothers, who are in the trades, and their families have lived for years in Edmonton, and they do the old up on Sunday, back on Friday night. And they've done years of that. It's not an ideal lifestyle, but at least they have a good home here. But they are separated from their families for long periods of time.

So the act is looking to change just a few things. The security deposits being delivered by regular mail: it doesn't take away the option of using registered or certified mail. It just adds regular mail as a possible option. I know that the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner was arguing that the registered mail should be kept. Well, it can be if people still want to do that, but they can use the regular mail.

I'm pleased to see the section that's allowing tenants to move out if the landlord doesn't comply with the Public Health Act standards because that's going to help my tenants. I have certainly dealt with cases where that's what's happened to them, and now they're out the money for the rent, they're out the money for the damage deposit, and as I described, they're looking at paying more money for moving costs and another damage deposit, and they can't disentangle themselves from the current situation. So I'm pleased to see that assistance being offered to tenants.

I'm also sympathetic and supportive of the process to streamline for the landlords to evict tenants who don't pay. You know, I did argue very strongly that we should try and make the system less adversarial if we really mean it when we say that we want people to work this stuff out themselves and have less of everybody rushing to lawyers or rushing to small claims court to have this dealt with. That's true; we need to give people the methods by which they can resolve that.

We want to encourage more reasonably priced rental accommodation, and often that comes from individuals renting a floor of their house or even owning a small apartment building. I've got a lot of those three-floor walk-ups. You know, they've got four apartments on each of three floors, 12 apartments in all. We want to preserve that kind of housing stock and even encourage more of that housing stock, and that's very difficult to do when you've got landlords who feel that they keep getting shortchanged by tenants who aren't paying the rent. They need to be able to move faster on evicting them for nonpayment. I'm supportive of that. That is the contract. That is the deal between the two of them. The tenant gets a place to live that they should be able to call their own, and in exchange the landlord gets the cash. If the person is not paying the rent, that places a hardship on the landlord.

I'm more concerned, especially in the cities, that we continue to have less expensive rental accommodation available, and that is about the small apartments, that is about apartments and suites in houses, especially in the inner city. That's where a lot of our accommodation is available, and you're dealing with small proprietors then. You're dealing with individuals in many cases, and I don't want to discourage people from making this kind of rental accommodation available. That's what I'm trying to say. It is discouraging to them if they end up getting ripped off a couple of times. They're going to withdraw from the housing market, and I don't want to see that happen. So in this case I think this is a good idea.

All in all, the member has obviously identified what the pressing issues were with this legislation. Somewhere I read that the government had consulted with a variety of apartment associations in Edmonton and Calgary and Medicine Hat and some of the low-income organizations in Edmonton and Calgary like the Boyle Street Co-op.

I think these look like reasonable amendments. I think we need to continue as legislators to be vigilant in ensuring that it is a fair playing field for both sides of this arrangement, and I think that we particularly need to look to ensuring that we have enough housing stock for people. In particular, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to plead the case for transitional housing, whether that is bridge housing for those with addictions that are moving from treatment centres back into the regular working, living world or women's shelters.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a): any questions?

Does anybody else wish to participate in the debate?

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead to close debate.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm certainly pleased with all the questions that were answered. But I guess I'd like to bring to everybody's attention, number one, that there was a full consultation with all the residents and tenants and landlords in the spring of 2004, and of course when it came into effect on March 1, 2004, there were some of these items, as I explained earlier, that really were what they wanted to do. So it was a give-and-take on both sides. I think what we've got arranged now makes it good because everybody was working together.

Just one comment on the registered mail for return of deposits. I guess they both agreed, number one, that it would cost more for the landlords, and somebody has to pay for that, and the tenants didn't want to pay for that.

In closing, I would like to thank the Member for Edmonton-McClung for being the critic for Government Services and coming down to discuss this. I think it's very helpful for both sides.

At this time I'd move second reading. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a second time]

Bill 28

Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2005

[Debate adjourned March 22: Ms Blakeman speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had begun my second reading debate on Bill 28 the other day and didn't mark my notes, and I apologize if I repeat slightly, but I don't think it will be by too much. I'm very interested to speak in second reading to Bill 28, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2005, although I will note that I think I have spoken to an amending act for the Municipal Government Act every year since I got elected – or at least that's what it feels like – which I hope is a positive sign that we are continuing to fine-tune the relationship between the province and the municipalities.

Sometimes I worry that there's not enough communication between the government and the municipalities, particularly the metropolitan municipalities of Edmonton and Calgary. I think what we're really needing to look for here is a redefined relationship, perhaps a constitutionally redefined relationship, between the province and the municipalities in this province. It is not an equitable relationship at this point, and it does not recognize the current realities of the size and the economic power of those two large cities. I should also include cities like Grande Prairie, Medicine Hat, Red Deer, and Fort McMurray. They are in their own regions becoming just as much of a driving force.

We now have 80 per cent of the population of Alberta living in a city, and 20 per cent are rural. We have completely reversed those designations over the last 25 or 30 years. Eighty per cent of our population now lives in what's classified as an urban centre. So to have that constitutionally entrenched relationship where the municipalities are viewed as the children of the province is inappropriate in this year of 2005. I've now gone through two campaigns where my party has very clearly stated the need for a redefined, renegotiated relationship between the provincial government and the municipalities.

One of the places that is most obvious for inequities is around the economic realities, the taxation base, the amount of funding that is available for the cities to do the work that they are assigned or delegated to do. There are two parts to that. One is that there has been a great deal of delegation – whether it was appropriate or not I will leave to another discussion – from the province to the municipalities to carry out various programs and services that used to be not only paid for but also administered by the province. Those were delegated to the municipalities, I would argue, most times without the complete amount of funding that was needed to provide the program or service. So then we have the situation – oh, I did remember saying this before – where we've got, particularly, nonprofit agencies that have accepted some of the services out fundraising to deliver a program or service that the province used to do, which is a lot.

But the relationship between the municipalities and the province is a very unequal one for funding. One of the places that this shows up the most is in the taxes because the cities really have to rely primarily on property taxes. The provincial government and the federal government actually both have a number of other sources. So part of the ongoing requests for consideration coming from the municipalities has been: "Give us other tools by which we can raise money because we're kind of stuck. We've got property tax that we can raise money on but no other way." Frankly, some of the other cities in the world are looking at things like a civic sales tax. I don't know if that's being considered here in Alberta, but I know that other cities in the world are looking at it.

There are other drivers there that need to be considered, or we will continue to create a situation that, I think, eventually our municipalities, particularly the metropolitan ones, will just say, "That's enough; we're getting a raw deal here," and do something like declare themselves not city states but – I'm not going to remember the term. I'll have to come back to it. I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. They started to do it, I think, in the U.S. and Australia as well, where they're incorporating themselves with a legal definition that makes them a different kind of entity than what they are now. I'll try and find the definition and come back to it.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions?

Ms Blakeman: Was that 15 minutes?

The Acting Speaker: You had six minutes left, Madam.

Anybody else wish to participate in the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just have a few brief comments about Bill 28. I know the planes are on the tarmac ready to go and everybody wants to hit the road for the long weekend.

Mrs. McClellan: Some of the tires are on the Corvette too.

Mr. Tougas: Ah, very good. I don't have a Corvette.

Mr. Speaker, overall I'd have to say that anything that gives municipalities these days the additional tools to raise revenue is something that we can all get behind on this side of the Legislature. The fact is that most Albertans live in cities, and cities are under tremendous financial constraints these days despite the fact that the provincial government is awash in excess money. It's my understanding that the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and the Alberta association of rural districts and counties are both supportive of the provisions in this bill. And why shouldn't they be? For years now the urban and rural share of the provincial tax pie has been shrinking, forcing the local governments to look for new ways to raise revenue.

The government is very fond of saying that in Alberta the only way that taxes go is down, which is not entirely true if you live in Edmonton or Calgary or Red Deer or Lethbridge or Medicine Hat or just about any of the municipalities in the province where city taxes have to keep going up all the time. Municipalities do need some new tools to create new revenue sources that go beyond the traditional methods of property taxes and user fees.

I see that there is something called the "community aggregate payment levy." As a city slicker I have no idea what that's all about. It does appear to be almost a levy on nuisance businesses, which is kind of interesting. So I wonder if you could apply that to the 7-Eleven and all the garbage that they leave behind, but that's for another debate altogether.

[Ms Haley in the chair]

Certainly, the most interesting of all these plans is the community revitalization levy. There are some concerns about it, however. As I understand it, this levy would allow for a property tax freeze for 20 years to encourage revitalization of the area. Now, the problem that most certainly will come up is literally: where do you draw the line? You could have one street with a property tax freeze while perhaps a block or two away the residents there would face their usual annual tax hike. Then again there is the question of a tax freeze, which some see as the equivalent of a subsidy for a developer. Also, there is the continuing problem of if an area is revitalized, then where do the poor people who were living in that area go? I think this is called gentrification. How things change. I guess there's not much you can do about that, but it is a concern.

Overall, Madam Speaker, the plan seems to allow for manageable debt and sensible repayment. In general, it appears to be an innovative plan, at least – I'm sorry; what is this one called again? – the community revitalization levy. It seems to be an innovative plan that could, if used properly, revitalize some decaying neighbourhoods. While the province of course has to sign off on any business plan, the onus falls on the local governments to make sure that the community revitalization levy is applied properly.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I encourage the government to continue to explore innovative ways for municipalities to raise revenue, especially since the government appears to have abrogated its duties to Alberta's municipalities.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Under Standing Order 29 are there any questions or comments? You have a question?

Mr. Flaherty: No. I was going to speak to the bill.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. I just wanted to cover Standing Order 29, if there were any questions or comments on his speech.

If not, would the hon. member please go ahead.

Mr. Flaherty: Yes. Madam Speaker, we're talking about Bill 28 here, I believe. The question of property tax in St. Albert, Madam Speaker, is a very big concern for us because of our senior population. We're praying every day that the government will give us more money for our megaplex and also for our highway 2 designation because right now I believe our taxes are around the 13 per cent. So I'm hoping that the whole question of property tax can be looked at here in terms of the education tax on seniors because we're certainly finding that many seniors in my constituency are having difficulty existing with the high tax rate. Therefore, we hope the government will look at the tax aspect to give our seniors some relief.

The other question I'd like to bring to your attention is the question of infrastructure. This was – and I don't want to be disrespectful – a very big, contentious item in our constituency during the election. Dr. Gibbins spoke to the Chamber of Commerce. I was lucky enough to sit on the panel, and I noticed that the main candidate was not in attendance this day, and I don't know why.

Dr. Gibbins pointed out that across the province of Alberta we have an $11 billion infrastructure problem. I hope that the government will look at his study because it does talk about relief for this in terms of how it can help the constituencies across the province, the towns and municipalities. He has a suggestion that we look at the Manitoba plan. The Manitoba plan I believe talks about taking a percentage of the gas tax off, 2 to 3 per cent, and helping us with the infrastructure problem with a 10-year plan. It's been very successful. If I'm not mistaken, they're in their third year with this plan. So I'm really saying that I hope the government will look at Dr. Gibbins' suggestion and utilize that to take a look at the relief of the infrastructure problem across the province.

There is another area here, Madam Speaker, that I'd like to talk about, and that's the whole question of a community revitalization levy. It says this: the amendment will allow municipalities to retain the education property tax and the tax increment of a tax equivalent to finance as well the municipal increment currently being used. Well, community revitalization in St. Albert would mean that some of our older communities would be revitalized and help our seniors, again, stay where they are. I think it has some good possibilities, but the thing that I think would be important is that we get some relief through the seniors being considered in terms of some relief there with the education tax.

So, Madam Speaker, I know people are anxious for me to sit down in light of the holiday coming up. I think it's important, though, that we look at these suggestions, and I do appreciate you giving me the opportunity to do so this afternoon. Happy Easter to you.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29 are there any other questions or comments with regard to what he has just said?

There being none, I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Ms Speaker. It's very refreshing to have someone of the female gender up there. That's great.

I would like to make a few comments on Bill 28 here this afternoon. There seem to be some very positive changes made through Bill 28, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2005, and some that are in fact long overdue. The first change, it seems, ensures that commercial use is not exempt from municipal assessment and taxation simply because it's located in provincial parks or recreation areas. In addition to private residences on such lands, which have already been subject to municipal taxation, this amendment will add commercial use such as ski hills, golf courses, restaurants, or stores.

The Alberta Assessors' Association found that municipalities were losing millions of dollars of property tax revenue due to their inability to assess commercial uses in provincial parks and recreation areas. Not only will this amendment stem this leakage of badly needed municipal revenue, but it will also level the playing field between businesses located in provincial parks and recreation areas and businesses not located on provincial lands.

The second amendment on Bill 28 creates a provincial registry for so-called linear properties. Linear properties such as power lines, pipelines, and telecommunication cables often cross municipal jurisdictions. A provincial registry will make it a lot easier for municipalities to properly assess the value of linear property within their jurisdiction and tax them accordingly. Such a registry will establish greater certainty for both utility companies as well as municipal governments, and it seems like a worthwhile initiative.

The third amendment to Bill 28 establishes a new tax on gravel and sandpits based on the tonnage extracted. Called a community aggregate levy, municipal governments will be given the option of implementing such a levy to a maximum of 25 cents per tonne on the basis of that. Given the impact of gravel and sand extraction on municipal roads and other infrastructures, it seems reasonable to allow municipalities to impose such a levy to offset some of these infrastructure costs.

So all of these above amendments seem positive for the municipal governments. The one proposed Bill 28 amendment that the NDP opposition does have questions about is the proposed community revitalization levy. This levy is intended to spur redevelopment in so-called blighted districts. It would allow a municipality that invests in redevelopment in such districts to recoup the expenditure by taxing the difference between the predevelopment and postdevelopment value of the property.

Before taking a firm position on the community revitalization levy, there are a number of questions that need to be answered; for example, a municipality would have to apply and get cabinet approval to put a community revitalization levy into effect. They would have to demonstrate that there would be, in fact, an increase in property values post development in order to make it possible to recoup their investment.

There has been a considerable amount of experience with these types of levies in the United States, where it is known as a tax increment financing, or a TIF for short. The record of tax increment financing in the United States is decidedly mixed. TIFs have been successful in increasing property values. However, the impact of a higher property value is not always positive. For example, higher property values can negatively impact affordable housing in favour of higher end housing. While higher income residents gain, this can be at the cost of displacing lower income residents. These concerns are being raised by the Calgary Drop-in Centre as a possible negative impact if a community redevelopment levy is applied to the East Village development proposed in downtown Calgary.

Moreover, research on the impacts of TIFs in Chicago, Illinois, has shown that this type of levy has not led to a net increase in employment in the effected areas. Also, this type of levy tends to favour bigger, more profitable businesses at the expense of smaller, less profitable family businesses. Since a municipality's ability to recover its expenditures depends on the increment between pre and postdevelopment property values, there is an understandable concern that municipalities will favour higher end developments at the expense of such lower end developments as affordable housing.

These are the questions that require answers before the NDP opposition will be prepared to support community redevelopment levies as a municipal revenue option for Alberta municipalities.

Thanks.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29 are there any comments or questions on the member's statement?

If not, I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak on this bill. You know, I see that many of these areas are just an ability to let municipalities have some more tax room, and maybe that's a good thing. In reality, what this reflects is just the sheer need of municipalities to deal with the growing deficit problems that have been unloaded on them by the provincial government because of their lack of support for municipalities.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

You know, we see the community aggregate payment levy. It's going to be two bits a tonne, which is actually quite a bit – people don't think that's much – on gravel operators to help pay for roads that aren't being funded by the province. It's going to increase the cost of housing in new subdivisions. It's going to increase the costs of roads in rural areas and such by this levy, but in reality it's necessary because municipalities need this.

The community revitalization levy. It's an innovative and another way for communities to seek to pay for things that aren't being helped for them by the provincial government. These provisions will help municipalities encourage investment and redevelopment in specific districts that do need help. With provincial approval the municipality would maintain fixed property tax assessments for up to 20 years, limiting regular property taxes for school and municipal purposes from the area. However, as redevelopment occurs and assessed value of the property in the target area rises, a special levy would be collected on the increased property values. The revenue from this special levy would be put into a separate fund to repay the municipality for its infrastructure upgrades and its other redevelopment expenditures in the target area.

This proposal, also called tax increment financing, was brought forth by the mayor of Calgary, who wanted to employ this method to revitalize and redevelop Calgary's troubled East Village. Under the scheme the city of Calgary would borrow $70 million to pay for infrastructure upgrades in the city's dilapidated east core. This will presumably encourage new development from which the taxes would pay the debt.

Tax increment financing has been widely used in the United States, and it has rejuvenated some of the worst neighbourhoods, particularly in Chicago. The province of Ontario is also looking at using tax increment financing to assist their municipalities with remediation costs of many brownfield properties.

This amendment is necessary because the MGA, the Municipal Government Act, has provisions in it that limit the amount of debt that municipal governments can incur. You know, I worked for a long time with Laurence Decore, and one of the great legacies for many years in the city of Edmonton was the fact that this city did have no debt. He was, I think, very innovative. The city of Edmonton won international awards for its debt policy and for its prudence in dealing with municipal financing and dealing with the growth of the city of Edmonton.

The necessity of many municipal areas to not finance because of their restrictions in financing in this area maybe has been a good thing. Nobody likes increases in property taxes. As the Member for St. Albert especially underlined, it's a huge difficulty for many that are seniors. There were, you know, some further items raised in a member's statement by the Member for Calgary-Currie about how the tax system is pressuring seniors who are on fixed incomes, who cannot get increases in their incomes and are finding that they have to move out of their homes because of this tax pressure.

The need to I think look at some of these things is that problem of lack of support in terms of this provincial government for its municipalities. I believe that has to be increased in the near future.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29, any questions?

If nobody else has any questions, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not going to take much of the Assembly's time. Many of the points I wanted to raise have already been raised. I recognize the merit behind this bill, and I appreciate the fact that it's time to allow some flexibility and some autonomy for the municipal governments in this province to exercise the powers that they were elected to in making decisions locally, decisions that pertain to day-to-day activities, taxation: things that they were elected to do. Yes, maybe this is the time to try to decentralize and reduce or eliminate the power of the province over its municipalities.

Municipal governments are duly elected bodies. I don't view them as being inferior or, maybe, any less important than the provincial government, just the same way that we don't view a provincial government to be inferior or less important than the federal government. All three levels of government should ideally work together. There is one taxpayer. There is one customer or client that all three levels are catering to. So, yes, I sincerely support any measure that would allow co-operation between the three levels of government. The end result is to benefit the taxpayer, of course.

I appreciate that this bill was brought forward after consultation with the municipal associations from both urban and rural and also the Federation of Canadian Municipalities – so that adds the federal angle to it – but I should probably comment that consultation is not only with the people running the show, the people who are elected to be in council, like city councils, or the people who are MLAs sitting in the provincial Assembly, or MPs representing us federally. I think we should go to the grassroots and ask people what they think. Many people have commented on the issue with the market value assessments or the property values and property tax estimates. Many times we've heard that people do object to the estimates because they feel that they increase the value of the property on paper when in fact the property value itself did not. It actually either stayed the same or maybe even devalued with age and time.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie commented that market value assessments themselves have to be reassessed. Maybe we should look at a city-wide average instead of a street-by-street average. You know, maybe the house down the road from me is worth twice my house. That shouldn't mean that my house is more valuable than it is. Seniors are particularly affected, and I think we have to understand the problem, listen to them, and maybe act on it.

Also, the thing about the infrastructure debt, which was referenced many times. We do have roads which are crumbling. We have old buildings which need revamping and maintenance. We have hospitals and schools which need work. The infrastructure debt should not be delegated to the municipalities to find innovative ways to deal with it and then have the provincial government say: "Okay. It's your domain now. It's your turf. You decide what you want to charge. You decide what taxes you want to collect. We're out of it.” Then people would look at them as the villain, or the bad guy. The province still has a paramount responsibility to support its municipalities and to come to their rescue when municipalities are having a difficult time justifying raising taxes and justifying collecting more from the taxpayer.

I’m an MLA, I’m an elected official, and I realize the difficulties faced by the municipalities. I trust that people sitting on city councils in Edmonton and Calgary and all the other major cities and even in the small towns and villages – the majority of those Reeves and mayors are responsible and decent people, and they wouldn’t just haphazardly and indiscriminately raise taxes for the fun of it. They’re faced with shortages and with deficits, and those are situations which they have to handle and deal with. They’re faced with tough decisions, but they still have to look to the provincial government for support and help. I know that maybe I shouldn’t tell them to rely too much on the government, but it’s still part of the formula, an integral part if we’re looking at this from a team approach. The provincial government is one key team player, the municipal governments are another, and then the federal government is the third one.

There’s also the thing about the community revitalization levy, which was mentioned two or three times this afternoon. The one area which I would like to comment on is that, basically, I would hate for it to be perceived or to be used as a subsidy to the developers. These people are typically well off, and they don’t need subsidies that were meant to be passed on to the end user, to the consumer or the taxpayer. A homeowner is paying $1,200 a year for property taxes, and then we say: “Okay. We are eliminating the provincial component of your school tax levy, and it should stay with the municipal government.” It should not be passed on to the developer because, first, they don’t need it; second, it wasn’t meant to go to them. That’s maybe the homeowner in me that is speaking now, not the MLA in me.

Lastly, I think that a partnership has to be defined between the municipal governments of this province and the provincial government in that it’s not only money that we’re talking about. We need to sit at the table and say: “Okay. What are your problems? Which areas would you like us as the provincial government to intervene in? What else do you need from us?” By passing laws that just say, “Okay, it’s your responsibility now; you go and explain it to your citizens and your constituents,” doesn’t really display or portray the right image. Consultation has to continue. We might tell them: “Yes, go ahead. Charge all you want for taxes, but we’re still here when you need us.” We have to show them that.

In closing, I would emphasize that, yes, this is a good piece of legislation, but consultation has to extend to the average Albertan, not just the people in power on municipal councils. We have to explain to the end-user or the taxpayer that this is how much impact it’s going to have on you, this is how much of that tax that’s going to the provincial government, this is how much of it that’s staying in your city or your town, and this is how much of it that might be going to a developer or a landowner and provide that clarity and that information to the taxpayers so they’re at least comfortable with the amount of taxes that they’re paying.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:20

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions?

Does anybody else wish to participate in the debate? The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I’m pleased to rise and speak to Bill 28. I want to say from the outset that I think there are aspects of this bill which just clean up a number of things, which clarify exemptions to municipal taxes, which create a registry for linear property, and I think that’s going to be very helpful for municipalities in particular.

Linear property, of course, is an important point of contention for municipalities. Many private companies make a great deal of money by using rights-of-way and so on in municipalities, and I think it’s important that municipalities have a clear knowledge of the linear property that exists and the various rights-of-way. This will be helpful.

The community aggregate levy is a tax on gravel and sandpits based on the tonnage that’s taken out to a maximum of 25 cents a tonne, and of course that’ll be up to the municipalities, so that’s a positive.

The one issue that’s contentious or may create a controversy in this is the community revitalization levy. This has been tried in other places. It’s been tried in the United States, in Chicago and so on, and as my colleague from Edmonton-Calder indicated, it’s had mixed results. It’s essentially an additional levy or an additional tax that’s placed on the people that own property within a fixed area within the city, and then that revenue is used to improve the area. That’s going to be a mixed blessing.

The problem that I have with respect to this, Mr. Speaker, is that the government is allowing municipalities to make the decision and then reserving to themselves, that is to the provincial government, the authority to approve or not approve any bylaws that might exist. In the review of the law that I did, there is nothing to indicate that the people to whom the levy is applied have any ability to approve it or challenge it or prevent it from happening or, in fact, conversely, to initiate it themselves. I think that that’s the weakness here. It shouldn’t be imposed on people without giving them first an opportunity to express their views, at least input, and if not outright require their approval. I think this is a weakness in this particular section.

There are pros and cons to the idea of a community development levy, but it really smacks a little bit of Big Brother here, that between the city council and the provincial cabinet they will decide whether or not areas are redeveloped and whether or not the people in there actually have to make a contribution towards that. You know, the old rallying cry of the American Revolution was no taxation without representation, and maybe it applies here, Mr. Speaker. I think this bill could be significantly democratized if it required municipal councils to get the approval of the ratepayers within the area or approval of the residents within the area that is going to have the additional levy. If it did that, it would not be nearly as controversial.

Urban redevelopment is important, and it’s important that municipalities have tools to promote it, but it’s very much a two-edged sword. The important thing is that it should be focused on the improvement of communities rather than on the improvement of property values. The two aren’t exactly synonymous, Mr. Speaker.

We have seen some cases I think in the United States where these things have been initiated primarily in the interest of outside private developers. Expenditures are made, property values increase dramatically, the profits flow to the companies, to the developers, and people are displaced from the community because they can no longer afford to live there. So it can become a real tool for gentrification, and it can in fact transform communities quite radically. To have that power without the capacity of the community to say no I think is wrong. So I would hope that we’ll be able to deal with some amendments that would make this provision more democratic and still allow that tool to be in the hands of municipalities who want to use it.

I’ve been involved for many years in attempts to revitalize communities, whether in the Alberta Avenue-Norwood area or in the Beverly area, and it really is a struggle. In my view, Mr. Speaker, it needs to be done by the local people working with their local small-business communities, and it needs to involve everyone. The city can be a partner in it, but you should have the community directly involved in those kinds of activities so that they can have a say in the future direction of their own community.

That's a way to go, I think, that's very positive, and it can increase property values, particularly along commercial strips. It can be very positive for small businesses. It can change the nature of the community, but it does so gradually. By moving out pawnshops and second-hand stores and getting a better variety of storefront businesses in the community, it can be extremely positive, and communities welcome that. But if all of a sudden you're coming into an area and tenants have moved out because the landlords have sold their land to a developer who wants to construct condos or some commercial development, then the results can be very negative for the people in the community.

Just to come back to my main objection to this, Mr. Speaker, those kinds of changes ought not to be forced on people in a community. The people need to have some control, and this bill doesn't give it to them. That's, I think, the fatal flaw in this particular area, and if it could be corrected through amendments, I think that it would be seen as something that's beneficial for all communities. Certainly as someone who represents older inner-city communities with older business strips which need revitalization, I would be very interested in supporting a bill like that, but if it's going to be something that takes control away from people and away from communities, it's not something I can in good conscience support. That will conclude my comments.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood?

There being none, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In speaking with regard to Bill 28, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2005, I think everyone recognizes the costs of doing business as a municipality. They're becoming more and more expensive, especially here in Alberta as we attract more and more people, so you have to put that infrastructure in place. We could take Fort McMurray as an example: just affordable housing. I'm not sure how this would apply with regard to Fort McMurray, to be able to designate areas, because in that particular case there are no slum areas or devalued areas. It's the opposite up in Fort McMurray. In fact, it is on fire, if I could use that term. Affordable housing, or at least being able to find affordable land – the development up there is at an unprecedented rate.

Here in the city the municipality had to borrow to be able to finance certain projects. I'm not sure if this particular bill would allow for that case, the fact that municipalities are not being supported by the government. It's costing more and more money to put certain pieces such as the ambulance authority, the fire department, as well as the police department in place. They need to be able to be supported not only by their local tax rate. I believe that. You can't continue to go to the single, only source, which was pointed out. You need to in fact be able to be supported by the government, and that is what we're talking about right now.

We had lunch the other day at the Shaw Conference Centre. It was a mac and cheese lunch. There were a number of government officials there as well as city councillors, and I find it odd that they weren't aware of Bill 28, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2005. So I'm just wondering how much consultation did take place with regard to our elected officials and how much input was allowed. They were I guess caught off guard or not aware of some of the implications here which rested on them. I would just ask that all parties that were included should be at least given an opportunity to be able to have direct input there.

Those are just some of the comments that I have with regard to that, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions for the hon. member?

Does anybody else wish to participate in the debate?

Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, would you like to close debate on behalf of the Minister of Municipal Affairs?

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a second time]

Bill 26

Corporate Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2005

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of areas that I'd like to just go over with members in introduction to second reading of this.

One area is the area of notices of objection. These are some notices of objection that we're proposing the industry be required to file. It's aimed to help the province stay informed of contentious issues and help forecast corporate tax revenue. It does not impose an onerous burden on industry. It simply involves that they would copy the Alberta government on the federal notice. We're not requiring a separate notice; simply a copy of the notice that they would file with the federal government.

In this bill we are proposing some steps to encourage compliance. That would be thus: if a notice is not filed with the province, any refund interest payable on the amount resulting from the reassessment would be reduced by the lesser of either 5 per cent of the interest otherwise calculated to a maximum of $10,000. These changes would come into effect on proclamation. I would ensure that industry and related stakeholders would be informed of these changes through publications and special notices before they took effect.

The other area of, I think, primary interest in this bill is the area of assessment against non arm's-length recipients. We're proposing changes that would allow assessments against any non arm's-length individual or business that receives corporate property at less than fair market value when the corporation disposing of the property is unable to meet its provincial tax obligations.

To give you an example of a situation where this might occur: a corporation sells land worth $10,000 for $1,000, for example, to a company or individual not at arm's length for the purpose of reducing company assets and therefore amounts available to pay against the tax obligation it owes. This will ensure that companies do not try to avoid tax by disposing of assets improperly. If assets are disposed of at fair market value to a non arm's-length or arm's-length recipient, of course this section wouldn't apply.

Mr. Speaker, the changes that are proposed to the Alberta Corporate Tax Act and the ABC Benefits Corporation Act facilitate the smooth running and effectiveness of the tax system.

Thank you for the opportunity to provide these comments. I look forward to future debate on this bill, and at this time, Mr. Speaker, I would adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 34
Insurance Amendment Act, 2005

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand today to move second reading of Bill 34, being the Insurance Amendment Act, 2005.

During the introduction of this legislation, I outlined that the government is following through with a commitment made as part of the automobile insurance reforms that went into effect last fall. This government also said that the legislation would need to be amended to allow public insurers from neighbouring provinces to enter Alberta's competitive auto insurance market. One key point that Alberta motorists have to understand. If public auto insurers decide to enter our province's auto insurance market, they will be forced to follow the same rules and regulations that are currently in place for private insurers in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation before us for second reading also outlines that insurance companies are not entitled to compensation for lost revenue resulting from the government's auto insurance reform amendments. When the reforms were being developed, the government clearly stated that any costs associated with the new system would be covered by the insurance industry. This amendment confirms that.

When the automobile insurance reforms were passed in December of 2003, they were designed for insurance on private passenger vehicles only. A proposed change within this bill will clearly indicate that the all-comers rule, which doesn't allow an insurance company to refuse insurance or cancel a policy, addresses insurance on private passenger vehicles only.

Bill 34, Mr. Speaker, also provides better protection for consumers. Last October a consumer dispute resolution mechanism was established. Consumers who disagree with how their premium for basic coverage has been calculated, who allege that they were refused coverage, or who had their policy cancelled have access to a three-step process for resolution.

The first step is for consumers to talk to their broker or agent. If they aren't satisfied, then the consumer can file a complaint with their insurer. A complaint liaison officer will review the case and issue a letter stating the company's final position. If the consumer is unsatisfied with that final position, the next step involves the General Insurance OmbudService, or GIO. Professional mediators will work with both sides in the dispute to reach a solution that is in the best interests of both parties in a fair, independent, and impartial environment. It is important to note, Mr. Speaker, that Bill 34 states that every insurer with a licence to sell automobile insurance in Alberta must be a member of the GIO.

If the problem can't be resolved at that stage, the mediator will prepare a report suggesting nonbinding recommendations.

The third and final step in the process is for the consumer to apply to the Automobile Insurance Dispute Resolution Committee. This committee will review the case and attempt to resolve the dispute. If resolution is still not possible, it will either recommend that no further action be taken or refer the issue to an arbitrator. The arbitrator's decision will be binding.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 34 would also give the Minister of Finance the authority to place specific terms or conditions on the licences of insurance companies. These terms or conditions could be determined on a case-by-case basis and will provide for more effective regulation of the industry.

Mr. Speaker, another change would see the superintendent of insurance have the authority to provide interpretative bulletins and guidelines on various aspects of the act. This is consistent with the practice in other jurisdictions.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to say that the government is following through on commitments related to the automobile insurance reforms and proposing changes that will provide better protection to consumers.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would like to wish you and all members of this Assembly a happy Easter, and I would now move to adjourn debate on Bill 34.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Bill 6
Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to speak in Committee of the Whole on the Fair Trading Amendment Act. As I indicated in second reading, I will respond to questions raised during debate during second reading.

In regard to concerns raised on moving parts of the act into regulation, all areas in the act are being repealed and will be placed in the regulations. Full consultation will be done with all stakeholders prior to any changes being made to the regulations, and consultation will include industry, consumers, and government departments.

The Fair Trading Amendment Act will not be proclaimed until all applicable regulations are ready to be passed; therefore, there will be no gaps in protection for consumers. The information that a credit reporting agency can and can't include in its reports will be moved to regulation. Moving these provisions out of the act and into the regulations will provide flexibility to deal with future issues.

In addition, we have strengthened consumers' rights by requiring their express consent before their credit reports are assessed. Demanding that a reporting agency disclose a person's file to that person on request and disputing the accuracy or completeness of information in a person's file will both appear in the regulation.

Mr. Chairman, Government Services is co-chairing a national committee that is examining credit reporting legislation and looking to other jurisdictions for examples of best practices. It is expected that many of the committee's recommendations will enhance consumer protection as it relates to credit reporting, especially in the area of assisting consumers who have been victimized by identity theft.

In regard to receipts issued by collection agencies, the regulation will clarify that receipts are required for cash payments to a collection agency, and collection agencies will continue to be required to provide statements of accounts to debtors.

We have added failing to comply with other legislation as a reason to refuse to issue or remove or suspend or cancel a licence. This addresses situations where a person requires a certificate and/or must meet other requirements under other legislation that directly applies to the activity licensed under the Fair Trading Act. An example would be that an automobile repair business licensed under the Fair Trading Act would also be required to have a journeyman mechanic licensed under the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Act.

Regarding the provisions on property freeze orders, the director can freeze property but cannot dispose of it. Persons affected by a freeze order can apply to the courts to have it varied or cancelled. If property were to be sold, it would have to be done by a receiver who is accountable to the courts.

If there are any further questions from the hon. members during the committee stage, I undertake to respond to your questions at the next stage of the bill process.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, had already spoken to Bill 6 in second reading, and back then I expressed my support for the intent and the merit behind Bill 6. Even privately I have communicated with the hon. government whip that we support the amendments in principle. However, now that we are at the committee stage, I would like to maybe request some points of clarification, some things that caught my eye. I appreciate his offer to address and respond to every question that is raised by the opposition. This is, again, a good sign.

First, there is section 4.1, which is in the proposed amendment that reads: "The Minister may make regulations respecting the establishment of minimum standards for specific types of business that are subject to this Act, without requiring them to be licensed." So maybe that's an area that I would like some clarification on. First, you know, what would be an example of a business that would be subject to the Act but would not be required to be licensed? I, again, being a layman here, and maybe when I explain it to other laymen out there: what's an example of a business that might fall under the authority of this act and be governed by it but then is not required to be licensed?

Maybe even the bigger picture would be that I am concerned that it puts too much power into the hands of the responsible minister. As a citizen I always question, you know, the amount of power that a cabinet minister would have because too much power is not a good thing. So maybe a point of clarification here.

Reading into the proposed amendments more, there is section 7.3(2), which again I need some clarification on. It reads:

If an agreement under a consumer transaction to which section 7 applies has been assigned, or if any right to payment under such a consumer transaction has been assigned, the liability of the person to whom it has been assigned is limited to the amount paid to that person by the consumer.

I honestly didn't understand what this meant, so again any clarification would be tremendously appreciated.

Moving on, there is section 13, which basically says:

Section 29(6) is amended by striking out "Housing and Consumer Affairs Division of the Department of Municipal Affairs" and substituting "consumer services division of the department whose Minister is responsible for this Act".

I read this at least twice, and then my impression is: why is it being offered so flexibly? If it traditionally was the Department of Municipal Affairs, why are we offering this flexibility so it can be freely moved from one ministry to another? Should it stay with one minister? Should we not know where it's supposed to stay? So again maybe a point of clarification there. It didn't make sense to offer it so loosely and say: whoever is the minister at the time, you know, this is where the correspondence should go.

Again moving on, section 18. I am questioning the impact of this change because the new wording leaves it open for this information to be included in the regulations, which is fine. The hon.

government whip indicated that they will not proclaim the law unless and only after all the parties have been consulted. That's fair, and I appreciate that. But the wording reduces the definition of credit information so it excludes occupation and employers and place of residence and, you know, other pieces of information. It allows the minister, again, to have control over this. I can't tell if this is better or worse till I see the regulations. So maybe if the sponsoring MLA would promise to show us the regulations as soon as possible, that would be tremendously appreciated.

Section 20, which is on page 11 of the proposed amendment, takes out the list of information an agency can and cannot include in the reports and, again, puts it into the regulations. So I have mentioned that already. I am not going to know how to feel about this till I see those regulations, and maybe then I can make up my mind whether it was a positive move or was a negative move.

Section 21 – and I mentioned this in my response during second reading – which appears on page 12, and then also section 23, which appears on page 14, are now being repealed, and the hon. member assured the House that maybe they will appear again in the regulations. I'm concerned that when section 46, at least, is repealed, there is nowhere else yet in the act or the amendment that requires a reporting agency to disclose to an individual or maybe to that individual's representative what's on his or her file. Again a point of clarity.

These regulations have to be courtproof, you know. So if we're working towards making this act better, we should allow those regulations to be challengeproof by not cancelling the essence that was actually in the old act. Usually amendments are meant to improve on pieces of legislation, not to make them weaker.

Similarly, with section 48, which is now being repealed, as proposed by section 23 in the amendment: is there anywhere else in the act or in the amendment or in the proposed regulations, which will soon follow, that allows an individual to dispute the information on his or her file? I am really sensitive to this because, you know, I feel that it's only fair to allow a person to dispute or contest the information that might be on his file. Typically, credit reports are meant to be long term, so a person has to be able to say, "This is not entirely true," or maybe offer a clarification or contest it outright and say: "This is not valid. This is wrong or maybe even old, and I have since fixed my credit rating." And it should reflect in their report.

Moving on to section 36. Section 36 in the amendment repeals section 113 in the old act, and I'm going to actually read what was in the old act so the people would follow, you know, now that it's being repealed, what it means. Section 113 reads:

Every collection agency must acknowledge the receipt of any money that the collection agency or the agency's collector or the employee of either of them collects or receives from a debtor for distribution to the debtor's creditors by means of receipts that meet the requirements of the regulations.

So, really, my question in plain English: would this mean that they don't have to issue receipts now for payments made? I am concerned. If there is a person who owes money – and we all know how much harassment and maybe abuse a person who owes money is subjected to to pay up sometimes – now that he is making a payment, we have to prove to him that here is the receipt for this payment.

So now this section is being repealed. I am just concerned for the average citizen, you know, who might be having some difficulty but then is trying really hard and honestly to rectify and remedy the situation. Why are we taking away this guarantee or this proof that he made a payment?

Section 37 in the amendment repeals sections 115 and 116 in the old act. Again, I would like to read from the old act to comment on this. Section 115(1) reads:

- (a) within 120 days after the end of its fiscal year [the collection agency must] provide the Director with a report of its financial affairs in the form established by the Director and signed by an auditor acceptable to the Director, and
- (b) provide the auditor with access to every book and record of the collection agency that, in the opinion of the auditor, is necessary to carry out the examination.

So why are we repealing this? Why are we allowing them to be less accountable?

Section 116(1), again reading from the old act:

- (h) make any personal call or telephone call for the purpose of demanding payment of a debt on any day except between 7 a.m. and 10 p.m.

Again, this section is being repealed, which, I think, would open the door for more harassment, midnight or even later after that. Why are people asked to be subjected to this ill treatment?

- (i) directly or indirectly threaten or state an intention to proceed with any action for which the collection agency or the collector does not have lawful authority.

Again, we're removing this guarantee, which might open the door for threats which are not justified or not founded.

- (j) make telephone calls or personal calls of such nature or with such frequency as to constitute harassment of the debtor, the debtor's spouse or adult interdependent partner or any member of the debtor's family or household.

People are complaining as it is. So now we're removing this to allow them to face this more and more. Again, the hon. member might say, "Okay, well, this is going into the regulations." But why are we actually removing the meat from the act and putting this same meat into the regulations? It just doesn't make sense.

- (k) give any person, directly or indirectly, by implication or otherwise, any false or misleading information.

So now we remove this, which in essence tells them that it's all right to provide false or misleading information, unless again the hon. member would say, "Well, it's going to be in the regulations," forcing me to question again why it is being moved from the actual act into the regulations.

Moving on:

- (m) contact a debtor's employer, spouse or adult interdependent partner, relatives, neighbours or friends unless and it provides these specific criteria. Again, this is being repealed. It doesn't make sense.

- (n) contact a debtor at the debtor's place of employment if the debtor
 - (i) requests the collection agency or the collector not to contact the debtor there,
 - (ii) makes reasonable arrangements to discuss the debt with the collection agency or collector, and
 - (iii) discusses the debt with the collection agency or collector in accordance with the arrangements.

I think this was worded to provide a means for, maybe, working things out, and now it's being removed, in essence allowing the collection agency to be on the back of the person owing the money without allowing them a civil way to deal with the problem.

- (o) discuss the debt of a debtor with any person except
 - (i) the debtor or creditor of that debt, or
 - (ii) for the purposes of obtaining information respecting the debtor.

So maybe again I'm thinking more with regard to privacy and the protection of personal information. This section is being repealed. It might end up in the regulations, like the hon. member suggested, but till then it shows that this information is not restricted or not controlled to the debtor and the creditor. Now it's available. More people can get access to it.

Moving on to section 44, which appears on page 27. It says that "section 127(b) is amended" mainly by adding the following after subclause (v): "fails to comply with any other legislation that may be applicable." I was listening to the hon. member explain in his introduction to Committee of the Whole that other legislation might be in place that might take possible precedence, or there is overlap. But who determines if the other legislation is applicable? Is there a list of what's deemed applicable? Again, maybe taking this back to how much authority and how much power the individual minister would have, I think maybe a consultative process should be implemented to allow for more direct input by people who are affected by this law.

Third reading in general is a positive move, and I think the government, like I mentioned before, should be encouraged to take this forward. I truly support most of what the bill is proposing, but it's just these little concerns, you know. I still fail to see the merit of moving the substance of the act from the act itself into the regulations, which is usually a licence to change these regulations behind closed doors and without real or significant interaction with the stakeholders. So I would urge the government to listen to these concerns and maybe offer clarifications whenever possible. Again, in essence we support the bill, but we just want it to be even better.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. members, before I call the next bill before us, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of this House a very successful businessman from Lethbridge and a community leader. Mark Switzer is with us today here in the members' gallery. Mark is an owner of a number of businesses and land in Lethbridge but is also very, very active in the community up to and including a great assistance to me in my association in Lethbridge-West. So, with that, I'd like to have all of the members provide Mark with the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Bill 20

Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to address a few of the questions that came up yesterday during second reading of Bill 20. First, I can confirm that this bill is revenue-neutral. It serves to clarify existing administration.

Second, a question that was raised was whether we are excluding from the education credit any people under the age of 16 who are pursuing postsecondary education. The answer is generally no. If, for example, a 14- or 15-year-old person is brilliant, has completed high school and moved on to an accredited postsecondary institution, that person would be eligible for the credit. However, if a 14- or 15-year-old student in high school is taking a dance class for personal interest at a vocational school, for example, the person would not be eligible. The Canada Revenue Agency deems that to be personal interest and does not permit the education credit in such a case. I also want to point out that the education credit is being administered in the way we are proposing to amend the act so there will be no change in the administration.

With regard to section 25 these are purely housekeeping changes. Last year changes were made to the Corporate Tax Act that need to be in parallel in the Personal Income Tax Act. However, when the change was applied in parallel, a mistake was made. This change corrects the error. No definitions are changing, no policies, and no calculations.

Finally, a question about snowbirds and sunbirds was asked. The rules for part-year individuals deal with situations where individuals actually move into or out of Alberta; for example, emigrants or immigrants. Snowbirds and sunbirds do not typically lose their primary resident status. When they go on extended vacation, they typically remain a resident of the country they initially resided in. Consequently, in general the part-year resident rules will not apply to these individuals. As a result, this bill will generally not change the treatment of snowbirds or sunbirds.

The changes proposed in this amendment act will align the provincial act with its federal counterpart, prevent double taxation by ensuring tax credits are not unfairly denied, and clarify aspects of the Personal Income Tax Act.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to speak briefly. I know that the Official Opposition critic for this bill has already spoken in second and has expressed generally the support of the Official Opposition for this bill. We do note that it is technical and administrative in nature. The stakeholders that we consulted did not raise any concerns with this bill aside from those that have already been raised and, indeed, just addressed by one of the government members.

I personally am pleased to see the clarification around the restrictions with persons with disabilities tax legislation, which should improve access for individuals with a disability. I have a number of people living in Edmonton-Centre that have disabilities, often with mobility issues, so any relief that they are able to achieve is always welcome and often even clarification is very welcome.

The member just partially addressed not my specific question, but I think there is some confusion generated out of section 16(2) of the original act around the clarification that the individuals described there are attending designated educational postsecondary institutions and have attained the age of 16 years before the end of the year. I don't think that this is connected – but I'll look for clarification – to the issue that arose in the fall when the changes in the social assistance rates for individuals 16 and 17 were changed if they were attending an educational institution.

It most affected constituents of mine and an organization existing in my consistency, Terra, where we had teenage mothers who were attending special schools and were living on their own. Their funding from social assistance was cut off because through a glitch in things they were no longer eligible. I wrote a letter of protest, as did many others, and indeed the organization of Terra worked closely and quickly with the minister.

I need to note that this has not been resolved, and we have now lost a full term. I think that that affects our larger society as a whole, that we would not have addressed that issue more quickly to be able to get those students back in school and continuing with their education. Here we had these young women who have now lost a full year of school, two terms in essence, because of this funding, and they were specifically cut off specific to their situation, which I think is very poor judgment on the part of the government. So I'm wondering if this section has anything to do with that and if that's how they're trying to fix it, but it looks like it has more to do with postsecondary.

So, as I say, we're understanding that this is largely housekeeping and administrative to catch up with changes that have happened in various tax laws. On behalf of the Official Opposition I would like to get the answers to the questions I've raised particularly before voting on this in third reading. We are happy to support it at this point in Committee of the Whole.

Thank you.

City of Lloydminster Act

Mr. VanderBurg: I move third reading of Bill 3, City of Lloydminster Act, on behalf of the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to give accolades for this particular bill and suggest it as an example of intergovernmental co-operation. As a result, I would like to recommend that there is a high school built right on the border shared by Alberta and Saskatchewan, the specialization which would be studying interprovincial arrangements, and that would be cost-shared of course. The other thing that I would like to suggest is that taxes from Saskatchewan be given to Alberta this year in '05, and in '06 we reciprocate.

So, really, I'm suggesting it's a wonderful example of intergovernmental co-operation, the governments of Saskatchewan and Alberta, and I think that it clarifies things and certainly clarifies a lot of ambiguities.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne to close debate.

Mr. VanderBurg: I'd call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a third time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to the Easter break adjournment motion previously passed by this Assembly I would first of all like to extend very warm wishes for those who are celebrating Easter this weekend, and secondly, I would like to move that we now call it 5:30 and adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Monday, April 4.

Thank you.

His pontificate showed him to be a man of true greatness. He changed the world for the better. We have been touched by his love of all people.

In a moment of silent prayer, may I ask all to remember His Holiness Pope John Paul II and to offer a silent prayer in your own custom for his eternal salvation. Rest eternal grant unto him, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon him. Amen.

Hon. members, would you now please remain standing and join Paul Lorieau, who will lead us in the singing of our national anthem. Please participate in the language of your choice.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you another one of my favourite schools from the constituency of Edmonton-McClung. This particular one is the Rio Terrace elementary school, and today we have 20 students and two teachers who are on their tour of the Legislature. The first teacher is Mrs. Sara Wanner, and the second one is Miss Ann Claire Magnier. I particularly have a soft spot for this school as well because these students are wonderful, their parents are great, and these teachers are truly outstanding. I would ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly as well a family from Spruce Grove who are in the public gallery today to observe the proceedings. They are all very active New Democrats and strong supporters of social justice in Alberta. With them is daughter Hayley Phillips, the NDP candidate for Edmonton-Spruce Grove in the last federal election, and she's currently a student at Concordia College. Finally, their other daughter Shannon Phillips is our NDP caucus communications coordinator. I would ask them to rise now, please, and receive the strong welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also have two introductions today. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly some important guests who have a keen interest in the Smoke-free Places Act before the House today. Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Confidentiality of Health Records

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 670,000 health records that were lost last month are another example of the Tory government fumbling health care reform. This government has failed to thoroughly safeguard the personal information of Albertans, and now we learn that there is more. A recent ruling by the B.C. Privacy Commissioner has indicated that section 215 of the United States PATRIOT Act gives the American government, including the FBI, access to Albertans' personal health information through IBM, the company this government hired to handle our health records. To the minister of health: given that the government chose an American company to handle this province's health records, how is it ensuring that American intelligence agencies do not have access to the personal information of Albertans without even asking permission?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, first of all, let me say on the missing records – and I examined what those records have. They have the name, and they have the health care number. They don't have a personal address, and they don't have a social insurance number. They have gender.

I am not telling you that to dismiss the importance of this issue. We take it very seriously. We look after and are the custodian of those records in a very serious fashion. Those records, through the contractor that manages this information – that is, IBM – on behalf of government, were being microfiched because it was tombstone data; in other words, not addresses, but it's serious what was there.

The latter point that the member opposite addressed relative to the potential – and it's unconfirmed for me at this point – of American access to data through any agency or organization is unbeknownst to me, and it may be a federal matter.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Madam Minister. It's a bit shocking that she's not aware of this risk.

To the same minister: given that this government has exposed

Albertans to this invasion of their privacy, does she have any idea which American intelligence agencies are drilling into our private health records and what they would be using the information for?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, a very speculative question here, making a number of assumptions, leaping ahead. Would we, in fact, approach the federal Deputy Prime Minister with the same attack and assumption that this hon. member has just made? I am committed to looking into what is being managed, how our records are being managed. These records were being transported by our contractor through other subcontracts, in our best acknowledgement, by a contract that would not have permitted access to any other offshore or federal agency. So what has been supposed by this member in this allegation is something I know not to be true.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will table the ruling so that the minister can be informed.

The Speaker: No preambles, okay? Please.

Dr. Taft: Will the minister now direct Alberta's Privacy Commissioner to investigate the potential violation of Albertans' privacy under the U.S. PATRIOT Act?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Privacy Commissioner has been engaged from the point of our understanding that there was an issue with this entire missing tape. I can assure this Assembly, this House, that if there is cause to be concerned under the issues that have been raised by the member of the opposition, then that duly will happen. Our Privacy Commissioner does not need further direction on how to conduct his investigation. He is most capable of doing it.

The Speaker: The second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Joint Fire and Ambulance Services

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another day, another Tory health care fiasco. This government's continuous mismanagement of ambulance services is beginning to show serious consequences. The city of Medicine Hat is now concerned that they may have to shut down fire halls because this ministry did not take into account that some municipalities have EMS services in place that include both fire and ambulance services. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister explain how the department overlooked the fact that in many municipalities the fire and ambulance services work together to provide emergency services?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously there was no oversight in terms of looking at how the services were provided. That was not the issue when we suspended the transfer to the regional health authorities and moved to discover what was happening. The issue was that the costs that were being ascribed for this year's budget were considerably higher than what had been attributed to the initial report and the initial findings of the report relative to governance and operations of the ambulance system, not addressing the fire department or any other EMS service. In fact, Medicine Hat and any other jurisdiction that has questions will have an opportunity through the committee on governance, policy, and standards to represent their own issues relative to that.

May I remind this Assembly that at least 300 municipalities this year received $55 million towards their ambulance operation, monies that weren't there previously.

Ms Blakeman: Seventy-seven didn't.

To the same minister: why didn't this government's pilot projects in Palliser and Peace country health regions take into account the joint fire and ambulance services model that municipalities have used successfully for years?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is an attempt to pre-empt something that only began on April 1, a couple of days ago. On April 1 the discovery projects of this whole integration will take place, and allegations of things that aren't going well or that might not go well or weren't taken into account will be discovered during this period of integrating that service delivery in a collective fashion. I don't think people should be pre-empting it; I'm sorry.

Ms Blakeman: They don't have enough money to do it. Again to the same minister.

The Speaker: The preamble thing is something that I have to enforce. Would you co-operate, please.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister: why didn't the department, since you had four years of study, clarify earlier that there would be no funding for joint ambulance and fire services so the municipalities could adjust their funding accordingly?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, the whole of the delivery system varied between a number of places. The issues that may have been raised by Medicine Hat will be not only discovered this year, but on Wednesday I'm meeting with the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association with at least one or two other municipal leaders. We will further converse on issues that they are raising already relative to either the pilot or other provision of ambulance service.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that what the health authorities' intent was with the original report was to help co-ordinate an efficient, cost-effective ambulance service delivery system, and in the best interest of the patient that's what we still intend to do.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mount Royal College

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One month ago the Minister of Advanced Education rose during question period and confirmed that Mount Royal College in Calgary needs to have an answer to its request for university status by early May and promised to "try and accomplish both the full and complete discussion and their timeline if at all possible." To the minister. My constituents are eager to know: is he going to make the deadline?

1:50

Mr. Hancock: I don't think so, Mr. Speaker. What I had indicated was not that they needed a decision by then but that they would desire to have one by then so that they could do the appropriate planning for programs to put it in place for the 2006 year. In response to the question at that time I also indicated that the decision as to whether or not Mount Royal transitioned to a university had to be made in the context of the overall postsecondary system, and we had promised a review of that system. That review will be comprehensive, will involve all the stakeholders, and will take a little bit more time than from now till May 1.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, given that people at the college were given to understand last week that the decision is now likely to be delayed until this fall and given the minister's answer, I'm wondering: is the minister suggesting that he's about to announce a commission on postsecondary education similar to the Learning Commission for K to 12?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will be meeting with representatives from the college this week, in fact, and discussing further the process that will be undertaken both in terms of the comprehensive review and in terms specifically of the Mount Royal decision and how that fits into the process. I will not be announcing a postsecondary learning commission, but we certainly will be having a process of looking at our postsecondary system in this province, the advanced education system in this province, how people access opportunities to advance their education in this province. It will involve a discussion with Albertans and with all the stakeholders.

Mr. Taylor: Okay. Mr. Speaker, given that the government has had this file on their desk for about two years now, can the minister assure us that the decision, whenever he makes it, will be based on the merits of the proposal and not on the mood of anti-Calgaryism apparent in some quarters of the Conservative caucus?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, one thing I can assure this hon. member – he obviously hasn't been here for very long or he would know – is that there is no anti-Calgaryism in this caucus. This government prides itself on serving all Albertans well and taking into context and making decisions in the interests of all Albertans, not the parochial interest of any particular area and particularly not the parochial interest that's been expressed by this member for his particular corner of the world.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Missing Health Records

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, personal health records containing current data on 670,000 Albertans may well have fallen into the hands of parties unknown who may be using this information to commit crimes like identity theft. The tapes containing these health records went missing over three weeks ago, yet this Tory government tried to keep things quiet, and the government only got caught thanks to a news media leak. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that a senior member of the Edmonton Police Service has publicly said that these records could be used for purposes such as identity theft, why did the minister fail to report the matter to the police for investigation?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, it's my understanding, when I first heard about it, that the reason it had been in fact transferred to the responsibility of the Privacy Commissioner was that there was not yet any concern that that tape may not have been still in part of the stream or system of delivery, that IBM may not have had it, that the subcontractor may have had it. There was a search that was being conducted.

The first alert that it was missing was in fact forwarded to the Privacy Commissioner, and we will await his recommendations. If, in fact, there is a need for police involvement or any other kind of review, then we'll do that, but there was not a supposition made that there was anything beyond following up on the privacy and making that early alert, getting that investigation under way, and leaving ourselves open to expanding that investigation if necessary.

On another point . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, we'll go on. I'm sure we'll have a supplement.

The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How can the minister claim that there is no need to report this matter to the police for investigation when she ought to have known that any delay in reporting possible crime gives the bad guys a better chance of covering their tracks?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I did not say that we had made a decision not to give it to the police or to turn it over to the Solicitor General. What I did say was that it was immediately forwarded to the Privacy Commissioner, and if there is a view that this investigation should be expanded – there was never any intent to keep this from public information or from the media or from anybody else. There was a need to identify what happened, what occurrence, the events that took place, and whether or not that tape was actually in the government's possession through one of the subcontractors. That's how it started.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Premier. Given at least three serious privacy breaches in less than a year, why is the government failing in its duty to safeguard the personal information of Albertans from those bent on stealing people's identities?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, we are safeguarding as best we possibly can the private information of all citizens. As much as I hate to say it – and it does happen in society – those with a criminal mind will find a way to undermine the system. When a criminal mind is at work, that's when the Solicitor General will come into play, and that's when the police will come into play.

Now, the only supposition of a criminal mind here has been raised by the hon. member of the ND opposition. He has created this suspicion. To my knowledge there has been no criminal involvement. If there is criminal involvement, if people commit a crime, if someone shoots someone or someone robs a bank or if someone breaks the law, the police will be in there like a dirty shirt, Mr. Speaker. But they are not going to act on the suppositions of the NDs. I'll tell you that for sure.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Definition of Marriage

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents in Peace River are closely watching the progress of the federal government's Bill C-38, which proposes to legalize same-sex marriage in Canada. They continue to express their support for Alberta to maintain its position of supporting the traditional definition of marriage in this province. My first question is to the Premier. Can the Premier update Albertans on the government's policy with respect to maintaining the traditional definition of marriage in the province?

Mr. Klein: Well, I can tell you that the whole issue of the traditional definition of marriage, TDM, was discussed at A and P, Agenda and Priorities, later at cabinet, and later at caucus today, and there was a good, lively discussion. First, I can tell you that this government strongly reaffirmed its support for the traditional definition of marriage; that is, that marriage is between a man and a woman. Mr. Speaker, I know that that is contrary to the position of the opposition Liberals and NDs. I know that that is contrary to their position because they will stand up and say: we support changing the traditional definition of marriage.

Second, I can advise that no legislative action will be taken at this time pending developments at the federal level regarding legislation that the Liberal government may introduce. Well, it has introduced it, but it may pass it. It doesn't have to. That is if the Liberal government survives, which is a question.

There's a third point.

The Speaker: Okay. Well, we'll probably get it in the supplementary.

The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: I'm afraid not, Mr. Speaker. My first and only supplemental is to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Given the Premier's answer, in the event of a legal challenge to Alberta's Marriage Act how will the government of Alberta respond?

Mr. Stevens: Well, I think, Mr. Speaker, I can speak as to the current situation in Alberta, and that is that the common law in Alberta has always recognized marriage in the traditional sense as a union between a man and a woman. It is our intention to oppose any court application through the courts that would change or purport to change that definition.

The Speaker: Did the hon. Premier want to supplement the hon. minister's answer?

Mr. Klein: I don't mind supplementing. I can tell the hon. Member for Peace River that the Minister of Justice and Attorney General will be canvassing members of caucus to ensure that while we await developments at the federal level, all our options will be clearly investigated.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

2:00 Fort McMurray Infrastructure Needs

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While communities throughout Alberta are suffering from a provincial government infrastructure deficit in excess of $8 billion, this neglect has reached intolerable proportions in Fort McMurray. The sewage treatment centre, hospital, and schools are literally bursting at the seams. My question is to the Premier. Will the Premier, in recognition of Fort McMurray's acute infrastructure deficiency, provide immediate financing for the necessary upgrades to the sewage treatment facility to avert a health care crisis?

Mr. Klein: I don't know where we are relative to sewage treatment. As the hon. member points out, and rightly so, there are a number of infrastructure pressures being brought to bear on Fort McMurray with an anticipated $97 billion worth of new construction. I say "anticipated" because some of it is already under way, and some of it will take place down the road.

Relative to infrastructure – I see the hon. minister is not with us.

I'm sorry. As the hon. minister is not here to reply, I'll have the MLA for the area supplement.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I want to say that we've been working together. We have a cabinet committee that the Premier has formulated. The Minister of Energy as well as the members for Vermilion-Lloydminster and Bonnyville-Cold Lake, the Minister of Infrastructure, and the Minister of Finance are on that. In fact, tonight I invite people to come. There's a standing policy committee tonight where a business case is being brought forward in terms of a framework that can work in terms of municipalities that are being faced with this $97 billion that has been mentioned relative to dealing with something that one size doesn't fit all. Truly, if every Alberta city had $97 billion taking place – it's showing that the Alberta advantage really is working, and we want to do it right.

Mr. Chase: It seems that in Fort McMurray it's going down the sewers.

Mr. Boutilier: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Chase: Will the Premier commit to providing the necessary ongoing infrastructure funding that Fort McMurray has requested?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the hon. minister, although he is not the minister directly responsible, has pointed out that there is a meeting tonight involving all of the players relative to how to address the infrastructure needs. But I can tell you that in a number of areas – and I don't know about sewage in particular – the infrastructure problems are already being addressed. I know that the department of infrastructure is addressing the problem of transportation with the upgrades of highways 63 and 881. I know that the department of seniors has worked with industry to accommodate affordable housing in the area.

Mr. Speaker, we are working hand in glove with the industry to address these infrastructure problems, and I would strongly suggest that the hon. member take some time at supper and attend the meeting.

The Speaker: There was a point of order raised as well.
The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Along the housing concerns, how will the Premier guarantee that teachers and health care workers are able to find or afford housing in Fort McMurray?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out – and this is what's so frustrating because they do not listen. They do not listen. They just, you know, want to go like this all the time. They don't listen. I just said that the hon. minister of seniors has been working with industry to address the housing problem and make available land for affordable housing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Greenhouse Gas Emissions

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has recently become apparent that the federal Liberal government is trying to sneak its Kyoto plan into effect by amending the Canadian Environmental Protection Act as part of its budget legislation. If passed, this amendment could be devastating to the Alberta economy, not to mention my constituents of Drayton Valley-Calmar. My questions are for the Minister of Environment. What is Alberta's position on this approach?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in this Assembly to the members, we had meetings last week in Ottawa with the federal Minister of the Environment, the federal Natural Resources minister, myself, and the Minister of Energy from Alberta. I want to say that our three-hour meeting was very instructive in terms of Alberta's position. Without question the province of Alberta has been a leader in Canada in terms of what we have done. We have the only piece of legislation that was freely debated in this Legislative Assembly. Our encouragement to the folks in Ottawa is, number one, that the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, the act that is under the budget, cloaked in the budget, is not the right way to go. That was our message. It was clear, concise, and asked them to follow Alberta's leadership on this important environmental matter.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: well, then, what will the Alberta government do to protect our industry and economy if they succeed in passing the budget with this amendment?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, Albertans care about the environment, as does every single member of this Assembly. We want a plan like Alberta's that makes good sense, s-e-n-s-e and c-e-n-t-s, where we can marry together environmental principles and economic principles in a way that makes good sense in helping the environment and at the same time not jeopardizing the economy. We have taken that balanced approach. We have freely debated it in this House. We're encouraging the federal government to do the same.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this could cost millions, what can Alberta do to provide industry with the certainty it needs to minimize its costs around reducing greenhouse gas emissions?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, at the COP 10 in Argentina at Christmastime I had an opportunity to present a technology intervention. We want to mitigate uncertainty not only just to industry but to all Albertans in terms of what we're looking for, and I know that clearly the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers has indicated to the Minister of Energy that they want certainty like Alberta has provided. I think what is so important is that the technology in renewable resources that we're looking for in the future is the way to go, where we do not want one single cent from Canada, from Alberta to leave this country or this province to go to another country to buy a piece of paper called a carbon credit when we want it invested right here in Alberta universities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Oil Well Drilling on Crown Land

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three years ago and $3 million ago the government of Alberta announced a consultation process to help with land development issues between First Nation bands and oil field contractors. This agreement has yet to be put in place, and oil companies continue to develop in disputed areas without first consulting First Nation peoples. To the Premier: why was the Lubicon Lake band not consulted about oil and gas activity on disputed Crown land in their area?

Mr. Klein: I don't know that to be true or not, but I will take the matter under advisement, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. McClellan: Ron can answer it.

Mr. Klein: Oh, Mr. Speaker, I'm advised that the Attorney General and Justice minister may be able to provide an answer.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In this particular case negotiations involving the Lubicon were last held some many months ago. I believe it was 15 to 18 months ago. Negotiations relative to the Lubicon are the responsibility of the federal government. If we are asked to participate, we do participate, and that is the current status of the matter.

Dr. Swann: Again to the Premier: why has the government not completed the consultation and report in its commitment of 2002?

Mr. Klein: Again, I don't know if the allegations are true, but I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, at this particular point in time there is a consultation policy that is being reviewed. It's currently in the final round of focus group meetings with the First Nations and the industry.

As it relates to the Lubicon matter, Mr. Speaker, I can advise you that the negotiations did not, according to the information that I have received, involve any matter relative to the lands where these proposed oil wells are to go forward. In any event, before oil companies can drill, they have to go to the EUB and receive approval. That particular matter, of course, is under the auspices of the Minister of Energy, and he may wish to supplement.

2:10

Dr. Swann: Again to the Premier: will your government stop development in the Lubicon Lake area until a full consultation with native groups has been completed?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again, I don't know the situation relative to the Lubicon, but I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Stevens: Well, as I indicated, Mr. Speaker, the consultation process per se is in the final stages of approval.

With respect to the issue that the Lubicon have advanced, it is not with respect to lands that have been the subject of any discussion of potential settlement. That is not what we are talking about here. We are talking about some other lands. There is, to the information that I have received, absolutely no basis relative to the claim that there is some special protection associated with these lands. In any event, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in the previous answer, the oil companies do have to make application to the EUB, and the Lubicon can make their case at that time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Attempted Child Abductions

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Parents and children in northeast Calgary, primarily in the community of Abbeydale, are frightened because of several attempted abductions that have recently taken place. These attempts have occurred while the children have been travelling to and from school. Many parents are keeping their children inside and not allowing them to walk to school for fear of the next attempt. My first question is to the hon. Solicitor General. What actions are the Police Service and the ministry taking to make sure that the individuals responsible are apprehended as soon as possible, before they are able to successfully abduct one of our children?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to assure the member that these types of incidents are taken very seriously by every police agency in the province and as well by every parent in this province. I as well want to assure the member that the Calgary Police Service has committed five officers to work on this case. They've received over 200 tips from the public so far. They are investigating each one of those tips that are coming in. As well, they have a composite sketch of the perpetrator, that has been provided to them by two of the young witnesses.

Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to advise you, though, that on this case as on other cases throughout the province of this type or nature, the policing agencies and communities work together in providing information and/or intelligence with regard to similar incidents that may have happened in another location in the province. So that information is there. The police agencies work together, and we hope to see this resolved in the near future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the Minister of Government Services. Given that the children have been able to provide a very clear description of the vehicle that has been used during these attempts, could a vehicle registration database be used to assist the police in tracking down these persons?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, the registry could be used. The more information, of course, that we have, the better. But the police forces have access to that registry at any time. As the hon. Solicitor General has indicated, there are a lot of tips already. The more that we get, the better, even if it's just the colour, the year, the make, any of those kinds of things that we know about the vehicle. Even a partial licence plate is of a great deal of assistance. Of course, it's somewhat limited with what we can do, but certainly every vehicle, the colour of it, the year of it, the make are all registered. So as we put it together, we possibly could get a better lead.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the Solicitor General. Given that these attempts are occurring near schools, is there anything that can be done with the schools to increase the safety of our schoolchildren?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can tell you that the Calgary Police Service works in conjunction and in partnership with the Calgary board of education security co-ordinator with regard to this case and throughout the year as well. With incidents of this nature or other serious incidents they work together to determine an effective course of action as well as effective courses of crime prevention within their community. So there is a close working relationship between the police service and the board of education as well as the other areas within the police service regarding the community liaison officers, the school resource officers, and other investigators throughout the police service.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Problem Gambling

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week at a conference sponsored by the Alberta Gaming Research Institute, known as AGRI, some rather startling figures regarding problem gaming were revealed. According to the AGRI study, from 30 to 40 per cent of Alberta's gambling revenue comes from problem gamblers, who themselves constitute just 5 per cent of all gamblers. My questions are for the Minister of Gaming. Does the government accept this study as accurate?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Graydon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was also at the conference and heard the report that was given; however, we've been unable to this point to get a copy of that particular study. We do know that a couple of years ago – actually, I think it was in 2003 – the same research institute did a study and came up at that time with a figure of 30 per cent as opposed to 39, which was reported last week. We also know that that number is consistent with other jurisdictions across Canada, so it's not that Alberta is out of line with other jurisdictions.

We are addressing the problem of problem gamblers. We take it very seriously. Just in the past year we started a new division in Alberta Gaming called the social responsibility division, and their sole task is to work with AADAC, to work with problem gamblers. We made a lot of changes to the displays on VLTs, et cetera. So we are hopefully addressing the situation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the government still has not made good on its 1 and a half million dollar commitment to AGRI for last year's budget, why is the government dragging its heels over the continued funding of this world-class research organization?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Graydon: Yes. No question that it is a world-class organization – we heard that many times at the conference on the weekend – recognized by people from Australia, people from the United States, people from eastern Canada.

On the question of the budget we'll have to wait for a couple of weeks to see how they make out in this year's budget. The contract with that institute is up for renewal, and that is being renegotiated as we speak.

Mr. Tougas: My final question, Mr. Speaker: will the minister assure this Assembly that the government will not interfere with the independent and arm's-length research done by the AGRI?

Mr. Graydon: Well, that's a very easy promise to make. We will certainly not interfere with the results of any investigations that are done or any research that is done. I do believe we have a responsibility – we're funding that group – to ask what we want researched, but as far as the results that they come up with, there'll be absolutely no political interference in those results.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Securities Commission

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has known for over a year about serious allegations of wrongdoing at the Alberta Securities Commission. In a January 9, 2004, letter a former ASC enforcement director told the government what had long been suspected; namely, that there is a two-tiered regulatory regime with one set of rules for normal Albertans and another set for insiders and the powerful. The letter further warned that a failure to act on these serious allegations would bring Alberta securities laws into disrepute if not open ridicule. My question is to the Minister of Finance. Why has the government for the past 15 months been covering up serious allegations of wrongdoing at the Alberta Securities Commission?

2:20

Mrs. McClellan: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I'd say that one of the most serious allegations is the one that this government has been covering up anything at the Securities Commission. That's absolutely incorrect and untrue.

Mr. Speaker, when the first issue was raised, there was a review done, and we were unable to find any evidence strong enough or in any way to carry this forward.

Secondly, when this surfaced most recently, I made it clear that certainly I couldn't and that I didn't think the commission could react to rumours, but I indicated that if we have a complaint that is signed or brought forward by someone in an appropriate manner, it would be dealt with. Well, indeed, that happened. The week before last, you will recall, Mr. Speaker, I tabled the letter that I wrote to the commission, I tabled the response from the commission, and I told them that I expected a report in short days and, in fact, have that now.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the point I'd like to make is this. Given that small investors have to have faith in the regulatory system, why has the government failed to protect the small Alberta investors by not telling them over the 15 months of serious allegations of favouritism and lax enforcement at the highest levels of the Alberta Securities Commission?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I'll repeat it one more time. That was investigated last year. It was investigated, and the allegations could not be substantiated, and they have been again investigated by an independent party that was brought in by the Securities Commission to review this.

I will say this. I have received the information. It is subject to solicitor-client privilege, so I cannot release to you the report, but I will provide you with what the report indicates on what you are raising because this is a very serious allegation, that there are improprieties on the regulatory side. The report indicates that the enforcement policies . . .

The Speaker: I'm sorry, but we're trying to maintain a 45-second rule, back and forth.

The hon. member.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, we'll give her the opportunity. When will this report be released, and could she continue giving us an idea of what it's saying then?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I just indicated, first of all, that the report has been provided through my deputy and the information to me. It has been provided on the basis of solicitor-client privilege, and I think that's very appropriate for the people who are involved in this report, who came forward with their concerns, but I can share with you what the report indicates.

The report indicates that the enforcement policies of the Alberta Securities Commission have been applied and continue to be applied consistently and fairly and with an even hand, and I think that's what's important. I think that's what this member wants to know, I think that's what the Official Opposition wanted to know with questions that were directed in the last week of the sitting, and that's what the investors in this province want to know. Today they know that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Agricultural Assistance

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier last week the federal government announced a $1 billion farm aid package, aid that was directed at more than just the cattle producers this time but also for the grain, hay, and oilseed producers, who've also seen their input costs grow at a staggering rate as well as the extremely low commodity prices. The federal government encouraged the provinces and territories to participate in this program, contributing the historical 40 per cent provincial share over and above the federal contribution. My question today is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Given that the Alberta government has been quite clear they would not participate in the federal program, what are we going to do provincially to address the depressed grain, hay, and oilseed prices?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed true that our grain producers and really our rural community are kind of experiencing the perfect storm, if you will, of low commodity prices, a rising Canadian dollar, higher input costs. It really is a national challenge as opposed to a provincial challenge. We're looking for long-term solutions as well as some short-term relief.

Certainly, under the ag policy framework that's where we're headed with the CAIS program. It's really two components. One is production insurance; one is the CAIS program. Indeed, with the CAIS program for the 2004 advances, Mr. Speaker, we've already kicked out a little over $260 million to get those dollars out into the producers' hands. We are looking at some other things that we can do with the CAIS program to ensure that that cash flow is out there.

Mr. Marz: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: will future income support be channelled through the often confusing Canadian agricultural income stabilization program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the hon. member makes a good point. The CAIS program is under review. The ministers from across Canada are all going to be meeting to discuss how we might make that program a little more responsive for producers. I believe as do the other provincial ministers that CAIS is the program for the future, and I think I can safely say that after a little bit of tweaking, we're going to be using that program a lot more in the future. I would encourage producers to look to the program as their basic risk management program for the future in our agriculture community.

Mr. Marz: Well, given that some producers have reported to me that they've still not received their 2003 payments through that program, what is the minister doing to accelerate that process?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of complaints on that program with regard to getting the payments out. As I've said in the House, we've had a fairly large influx of applications all at one particular time. I think we're working our way through that, and the indications from AFSC, or the group that handles the CAIS program for us, is that producers will start to see a lot of those cheques coming out this week and early into the next week. We are working to make the program easier to understand, easier to apply for, and more responsive to the producers. Like any new program we're going to have some bumps in the road, but given that the program is going to be I think the basic risk management tool for our producers into the future, we have to get over these bumps in the road, and then the program will be responsive.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

TransAlta Utilities

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When Mr. Jim Dinning, the current front-runner in the Progressive Conservative leadership race, was a vice-president of TransAlta – [interjections] some may laugh – this government sat silent while that company on occasion charged Albertans 50 cents per kilowatt hour for electricity that cost less than a penny per kilowatt hour to produce. The government continued their silence when the EUB found that TransAlta's pricing strategies were unfairly overcharging Alberta consumers for power. My first question is to the Premier. Why did this Progressive Conservative government allow TransAlta to overcharge consumers for their power?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll respond to the political part of the preamble. I don't know if Mr. Dinning is the front-runner or not. My job is not open, for one thing.

With respect to the second part of the preamble, the actual question, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

The Speaker: Briefly.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, there are procedures in place and certainly control mechanisms, the market surveillance administrator being one of them. There is also the Energy and Utilities Board. All of these groups do act to protect consumers and to see that they are charged fairly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier:

why did the Progressive Conservative government allow TransAlta to acquire over 700 megawatts of hydrogenerating capacity in one giant power purchase arrangement giveaway instead of separating the hydro capacity generating units so they could be sold separately, as was suggested to the EUB by the industry?

Mr. Klein: Again I'll have the hon. minister respond.

The Speaker: Minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Those power purchase arrangements were put out in an open auction, and clearly they had the opportunity along with anybody else to bid, and they were the recipients and were awarded some of those contracts.*

2:30

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: given that this Progressive Conservative government was warned in 1999 that large generation blocks of electricity could result in market power abuses and Power Pool increases of 200 to 300 per cent, why did this Progressive Conservative government give TransAlta over 700 megawatts of hydro capacity for next to nothing?

Mr. Klein: Well, I don't know that to be true, Mr. Speaker, but I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, it's easy to make allegations. TransAlta or other companies may charge beyond what he said was related to cost. The real fact was that when we went through deregulation, it had much to do with supply and demand. During that deregulation period there was quite a shortage of power. One of the great successes has been that we have had over 3,300 megawatts of new generation come on, and no one's bemoaning the fact now that TransAlta is actually not even recovering their costs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

EPCOR Energy Bills

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For months my constituents and all Albertans being served by EPCOR/Fortis have received monthly bills that have had energy and delivery charges for different periods. I've heard that the Department of Energy is working towards a solution. To the Minister of Energy: has your department found a way to resolve this confusing issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member had mentioned, in the EPCOR/Fortis area of Alberta one of the improvements that has been made was to ensure that the energy and delivery chargers coincide their billing periods to make sure that the bills were more understandable and transparent to the customers. In that regard, there is going to be an alignment of that in the EPCOR/Fortis area. We've delayed that from April 1 to July 1 to help facilitate consumers at a low charging period, when the electricity usage would be lower, so that their bills would be less impacted.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you. That's great news. But given that this regulation will cause some financial hardship to many of those on fixed income, will you advise the utility companies to be flexible during the months that these new, aligned bills arrive?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In that regard, I think that it is very important that the companies – and we have spoken to the companies in particular – work very closely with those customers. A number of them will be charged additional dollars for the catch-up period. Therefore, if there are problems in that regard, we will certainly work very closely with Albertans to ensure that it's fairly implemented.

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, finally, to the Minister of Government Services: given that our phones will once again light up with calls from constituents that do not understand this alignment, what will your department do through the utility advocate's office to help?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, we've been talking to EPCOR because, of course, they're the folks that generate the bill, and it's our understanding that already in the March bill there will be an insert that will give a lot of information as to what has happened. We will be also trying to get the message out that this is going to be a one-time thing. In fact, it will make it much easier to follow exactly what is happening with your energy costs when you relate both the transmission and the energy cost on one bill as opposed to the way it is now, where you can't follow because they're on different days. Quite frankly, it'll reflect more closely exactly what the costs are.

Recognitions

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds I'll call upon the first of seven members to participate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Pope John Paul II

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The world today is a much emptier place. Humanity has lost an ambassador of peace and hope, over a billion Roman Catholics have lost our spiritual leader, Poland has lost its favourite son, the Vatican has lost a dignified statesman, and Canada has lost a friend. All of these losses came about with the passing of one great person: Karol Wojtyla, better known as John Paul II.

Mr. Speaker, the Holy Father's pontificate was filled with many accomplishments of historical magnitude. He was the first non-Italian pope in four centuries, was the third longest serving pope in over 2,000 years, he contributed to the collapse of the Iron Curtain, he was the most-travelled pope, and he was the first pontiff to enter a synagogue and establish relations with other world faiths. But perhaps most importantly, he was a man of strong moral principles who challenged all humanity to self-examine its conduct.

Mr. Speaker, Karol Wojtyla has left this world a better place, and on behalf of the Alberta Roman Catholic community I thank him for that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Innisfail Meats/Mad Butcher

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to congratulate Innisfail Meats on launching their new brand name, the Mad Butcher, and on receiving two provincial awards for 2005. The Mad Butcher, located in Innisfail, is a great source of pride for the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

The Mad Butcher, which distributes its products province-wide, has been presented with the 2005 grand aggregate award for the best overall sausage at the Alberta Food Processors Association convention at Kananaskis and the best overall sausage at the Alberta Pork Congress specialty meats challenge held in Red Deer.

The owner of the Mad Butcher, Ron Burndred, credits the work of his 40 staff members, including several meat cutters, the deli staff, and two master sausage makers, for winning the awards. The Mad Butcher gives us another Alberta example of what can be accomplished when entrepreneurs are free to pursue their dreams.

I would like to ask all of my colleagues to join me in congratulating Innisfail Meats, or the Mad Butcher, for its outstanding accomplishments.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

U of A Golden Bears Hockey Team

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I attended one of the most exciting, well-played hockey games I've ever seen. I'm speaking of the championship game of the 2005 Telus University Cup, won by our University of Alberta Golden Bears.

University hockey has been a part of this province for 97 of Alberta's 100 years, starting at the University of Alberta in 1908. You might say that the team, the university, and the province have all grown up together. Edmonton and Alberta were proud to host the Telus Cup this centennial year and were even more proud to see our own team take home the trophy for a record 11th time.

The NHL lockout may have denied hockey fans a professional game, but more fans turned to the university game and gave our Golden Bears the attention and fan support they so richly deserve. They brought us all the skill and adrenaline of hockey and played only for the love of the sport, pride of the team, and honour of the university. And a game does not get much more exciting than a tie-making goal with 23 seconds left in the third period and a winning goal in overtime.

On behalf of all Alberta hockey fans, University of Alberta alumni, and this Assembly I congratulate coach Rob Daum and the University of Alberta Golden Bears on their 2005 Telus University Cup.

The Speaker: Well, I certainly hope that the Assembly will not censure me for what I'm going to say, but the hon. member is absolutely correct: that's the best hockey game I've seen in the Edmonton area in 15 years.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday the Calgary Immigrant Aid Society held their annual immigrants of distinction awards. Honours in community services went to Marichu Antonio from the Philippines, Dr. K.W. Chang from Malaysia, and Dinesh Dattani from Uganda. Honours in distinguished professional went to Dr. Farideh Jalilvand from Iran, Dr. Daniel Lai from Hong Kong, and Dr. Adam Moscovitch from Romania.

I would like to ask the Assembly to join me in congratulating these outstanding Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

2:40

Sandy McCallum

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize an exceptional woman from my constituency. Sandy McCallum of Beaumont is competing in the Desert Grand Slam, which is a gruelling series of three marathons covering over 800 kilometres through the Sahara Desert. Sandy will be the first Canadian to attempt this feat, and on behalf of this House and all Albertans I would wish her great success.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Pope John Paul II

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This weekend thousands of Catholics in Alberta along with the world mourned the passing of Pope John Paul II, the Catholic Church's spiritual leader for 26 years.

John Paul II will forever be remembered as the pilgrim pope, a leader who ventured beyond the confines of the Vatican to embrace the world with a message of unity and hope. Today we remember a man who displayed an unswerving kindness to all he met, whose common touch drew the adoration of crowds wherever he travelled. He was a revolutionary who took a strong position on human rights, becoming a friend to those in poverty and advocating for bridging the gap between the rich and the poor. Pope John Paul II opened dialogues with other faiths and sought to bring unity to Christians of the world. It is this commitment to forge new relationships of love and peace with all faiths that will be remembered as one of his greatest accomplishments.

Today we mourn the loss of a man of vision, a man who changed the face of the world through a dedication to encouraging a renewal of faith. He will be remembered in Alberta for embracing the traditions of aboriginal people and promoting in his appearance in Edmonton the hope that all people in the world can live together without conflict.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Tobacco Use

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. April is Cancer Awareness Month, and the Canadian Cancer Society is making cancer history in their efforts for reform in the area of tobacco control. Tobacco use claims the lives of 3,400 Albertans each year, representing 20 per cent of all deaths within the province. Smoking is estimated to cause 82 per cent of all lung cancer cases, and it also causes cancer of the throat, mouth, tongue, lip, larynx, pharynx, bladder, kidney, and pancreas.

The illnesses associated with tobacco use, including cardiovascular disease, cancer, and lung disease, result in tremendous pain and suffering and are very costly to treat. This needless loss and suffering places an enormous burden on individuals, families, communities, the economy, and our health care system. I am sure there are many members within this House who have personal family loss stories due to cancer similar to my own. I lost my grandfather and uncle and my father-in-law and mother-in-law to cancer.

Health Canada estimates that at least 1,000 Canadians, including 100 Albertans, die from exposure to second-hand smoke annually.

One in five Canadians has a pre-existing health condition that is affected by second-hand smoke. Research shows that there is no safe level of exposure to tobacco smoke. Reluctant bar, bingo, and casino operators could do themselves a financial favour by directly appealing to the 80 per cent of Albertans who don't smoke while assisting the 20 per cent of addicts to wean themselves of their deadly habit.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East on a petition?

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to stand to present a petition with 101 Albertans' signatures urging the government to "prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers."

The Speaker: Others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition from a number of good Albertans from the communities of Stavely, Okotoks, Sherwood Park, Spruce Grove, and largely from Calgary calling on the government to "prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on a petition.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate it. I have a petition as well to present to the Legislative Assembly, and it reads:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

There are 120 signatures on this petition.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Bill 36 Police Amendment Act, 2005

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table Bill 36, the Police Amendment Act, 2005.

These amendments will bring greater openness and public accountability to the investigation of complaints against the police. They also reflect recommendations accepted by the Alberta government following the release of the report of the MLA Policing Review Committee. The MLA committee's report was the first comprehensive review of the Police Act since 1988.

Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 36 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Bill 38 Pharmacy and Drug Amendment Act, 2005

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce to the Legislature Bill 38, the Pharmacy and Drug Amendment Act, 2005.

This bill proposes to update the Pharmacy and Drug Act to reflect current pharmacy practice and to clarify regulation requirements for pharmacies and drugs in Alberta. Changes will allow the Alberta College of Pharmacists to set standards and regulations for categories of pharmacy services and will strengthen the rules that govern the operations of pharmacies and the practice of pharmacists who work in these operations. I move for first reading Bill 38.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 38 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 38 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: 2:50 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on behalf of the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Blakeman: Yes, indeed. Thank you, very much. On behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of the document referred to; that is, Privacy and the USA Patriot Act: Implications for British Columbia Public Sector Outsourcing, October 2004, produced and distributed by the Information and Privacy Commissioner for British Columbia.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table today pursuant to some questions that were asked on Tuesday, March 22 of this year, by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar – it was with respect to TransAlta's hydro pricing strategy back in 2002.

I will correct, actually, a statement I had in question period. They weren't in an open auction. That's correct. They were held back and excluded from the auction because of the unique structure and so that the benefits of the hydro PPA would continue to flow to customers until 2020 as the Balancing Pool holds the hydro PPA.*

I would also state that these same questions were asked to the Premier back in May of 2002, so I'm tabling just to refresh everyone's memory and to update any pertinent information.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table copies of two letters today. The letters detail the heartbreaking conditions that exist in long-term care facilities in Alberta particularly due to the lack of adequate numbers of properly trained staff. These letters are particularly disheartening considering the increased levels of service that were promised when the government hiked long-term care fees by 50 per cent.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a letter from Dr. Andrew Affleck, president of the Canadian Association of Emergency Physicians. Dr. Affleck indicates his organization's support for a complete ban on workplace smoking and notes that the CAEP recently passed a motion stating that they will schedule future annual meetings in those jurisdictions where "legislation ensures a 100% ban on smoking in indoor public places."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a letter from the Youth Emergency Shelter Society of Edmonton indicating that the shelter does not receive funding from the family and community support services. I have the appropriate copies.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today in regard to Enron's activities in North America. The first is an e-mail dated July 24, 2000, and it is from Maureen McVicker to Robert Hemstock, Richard B. Sanders, and Richard Shapiro, to mention a few. This is in regard to Project Stanley.

The second e-mail is a privileged and confidential solicitor/client communication from Enron, and it is also in regard to Project Stanley, and it is encouraged reading for all hon. members of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling with permission the appropriate number of copies of a letter I received from a Mr. Stuart McGrandle, dated February 22, 2005, in which he voices his frustration with this Conservative government's push to recruit temporary foreign workers to work in Fort McMurray and his concern that there's a lot of misinformation out there with regard to the alleged skilled labour shortage and what he refers to as the supposedly first-class living conditions in the oil sands workers' camps.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of five letters from concerned Albertans indicating that there is not a shortage of skilled industrial tradesmen in the province and calling for the prohibition of the use of temporary foreign workers in the oil sands.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Hon. members, I have some tablings today. First of all, pursuant to section 44(1) of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act I'm tabling a letter from the Chief Electoral Officer, dated March 24, 2005, transmitting a list of those candidates in the November 22, 2004, general election together with the names of their chief financial officers who failed to file campaign financial statements with the office of the Chief Electoral Officer on or before March 22 as required by section 43 of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act.

I'm also tabling a letter from the Chief Electoral Officer, also dated March 24, 2005, indicating the name of the candidate in the November 22, 2004, Senate nominee election and the name of the chief financial officer who failed to file a campaign financial statement on or before March 22, 2005, as required by section 43 of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act.

Pursuant to the Legislative Assembly Act I am tabling with the Assembly the appropriate copies of the following Members' Services orders: number one, Members' Services Committee Order 1/05, transportation amendment order (No. 5), which is deemed to have come into force on November 22, 2004; number two, Members' Services Committee Order No. 2/05, constituency services amendment order (No. 14), which comes into force on April 1, 2005; number three, Members' Services Committee Order No. 3/05, constituency services amendment order (No. 15), which is deemed to have come into force on November 22, 2004, and the schedule to section 1(3) of the constituency services order; number four, Members' Services Committee Order No. 4/05, the transportation amendment order (No. 6), which comes into force on April 1, 2005; number five, the Members' Services Committee Order No. 5/05, members' allowances amendment order (No. 9), which is deemed to have come into force on November 22, 2004; number six, Members' Services Committee Order No. 6/05, members' group life insurance and members' group plans amendment order (No. 1), which comes into force on the date it was passed: March 16, 2005.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk on behalf of the hon. Mrs. Forsyth, Minister of Children's Services: the Social Care Facilities Review Committee semiannual report, October 2002 to March 2003.

The Speaker: On a point of order, the hon. Minister of Environment. Citations are very helpful.

Point of Order Insulting Language

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I quote 23(j), “insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.” I want to say that it certainly created disorder for this particular Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo when it was said that my city was in fact going down the sewer. In having understanding of the exchange, I want to say that I acknowledge the good work that has been taking place dealing with the infrastructure that has been developing in the Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo area. To say that the city is going down the sewer – as a former member of city council and its youngest mayor for over 12 years I can certainly say for the members that served on municipal council that is, shall I say, insulting to any elected member no matter what order of government. I do understand, though, since this motive is to help in getting infrastructure. I understand that the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity expressed an interest in attending the meeting tonight of the standing policy committee dealing with this specific issue. I’d ask the hon. member to withdraw his comment pertaining to my city.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I think we may have a situation here where 494 may be helpful to us because, in fact, the note that I’ve had from the Member for Calgary-Varsity – and the Blues are not available to us. He was referring to the Alberta advantage going down the sewer. He did not specifically name the city of Fort McMurray. [interjections] Not in that phrase. He did not. So it may well be that we will have to fall back on Beauchesne’s 494 in this particular instance, noting that “statements by Members respecting themselves and . . . within their own knowledge must be accepted.” I note that “it is not unparliamentary temperately to criticize statements made by Members as being contrary to the facts,” but “on rare occasions this may result in the House having to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident.”

Mr. Speaker, I would put it to you that that is the situation we have here today with two separate claims being made. I will accept the word of my colleague from Calgary-Varsity that he did not make the comment – and I’ll put this in quotes – going down the sewer in reference to the city of Fort McMurray, but it was in fact in reference to the Alberta advantage.

An Hon. Member: Context is everything.

Ms Blakeman: I’m hearing from across the way that context is everything, and I think that’s true. Accuracy as to what was said or heard to be said is also extremely important, and in this case we have two different versions of what in fact was said.

I will take my seat with that, Mr. Speaker. I think we clearly have two different versions of the same incident. Thank you.

3:00

The Speaker: There are others on this point of order?

Mr. Chase: Just to clarify. I support the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, and I would not say anything to malign his constituency nor the hon. member. As the critic for Infrastructure I would support all his efforts to improve the infrastructure of his constituency, and I realize that is his major concern and his major task. I support him.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, in light of the context of what the hon.

member has said and the clarity of what he has said, I’ll withdraw my point of order.

Speaker’s Ruling Preambles

The Speaker: Having said that, the Speaker is still going to make a comment. There was a point of order here, but it may not be the point of order that the two hon. members are talking about. The point of order has to do with preambles.

Now, if a member didn’t use a preamble, a member wouldn’t get into trouble. This is not the only member. He’s just the only one who got caught today. In this case the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity in his second question, where there are to be no preambles – everybody agreed to that, right? Three House leaders signed their names on a document, which means that they’re in charge of enforcement within their caucuses, right? Sure. So the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity starts off, “It seems in Fort McMurray it’s going down the sewers. Will the Premier commit to providing the necessary ongoing infrastructure funding that Fort McMurray has requested?” So yes. If we don’t use preambles, we don’t get into trouble. It’s pretty simple, basically. It’s a form of discipline that gets all of us. Just try and abide from time to time.

So having said all of that, all the other citations that I had to enforce this particular point of order, I guess, I won’t have to give today. I’ll save them for another day.

Mr. Martin: Point of order.

The Speaker: You want a point of order?

Mr. Martin: Yes. Just on your comments.

The Speaker: There’s no point of order on the Speaker’s comments.

Mr. Martin: I want to make it clear. In the House leaders’ meetings we did not agree on this. We couldn’t get an agreement, so it went back to the old way about preambles. I want to state it clearly . . .

The Speaker: No. I’m going to make it very, very clear. This Speaker has been going on with the tradition of this House. The hon. member wasn’t in the last two parliaments. Agreement in this House for a great number of years has been that there will be no preambles on the second question and the third question. That was basically indicated by the Speaker in a letter to all members prior to the commencement of this Assembly. It has been repeated on one or two occasions since then, and that is the manner in which we conduct ourselves.

head: Orders of the Day

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, March 24, it’s my pleasure to move that written questions appearing on today’s Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, March 24, it's my pleasure to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 1 and 4.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

The Clerk: Motion for a Return 1.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The document requested in this motion has already been tabled in the Assembly and referred to the Members' Services Committee. In light of this, I would like to respectfully withdraw this motion for a return and encourage the Members' Services Committee to give careful consideration to the report.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a unique situation, I guess, in which this motion was written prior to something happening, so there's a withdrawal request being made. I gather that all members would give their consent to having the motion withdrawn?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Speaker: Anybody opposed? Okay. So be it.

Tobacco Industry Representatives

M4. Dr. Pannu moved on behalf of Mr. Mason that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing for each of the fiscal years 2001-2002, 2002-2003, and 2003-2004 an itemized list of all groups and individuals representing either specific tobacco-related companies or any association, group, or organization representing the interests of the tobacco industry who have met with the Premier, the Minister of Health and Wellness, the Deputy Minister of Health and Wellness, the Assistant Deputy Minister of Health and Wellness, or any Alberta standing policy committee.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to respond that the government will be prepared to accept that motion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to conclude the debate.

Dr. Pannu: I thank the Minister of Health and Wellness for accepting the motion, Mr. Speaker.
Thank you.

Bill 201 Smoke-free Places Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Good afternoon and thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to introduce some necessary and important amendments to Bill 201, the Smoke-free Places Act. Would the chairman like me to wait until they've been circulated?

The Deputy Chair: Just give a couple of minutes for them to be distributed, please.

Hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, you may proceed.

3:10

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As we have heard, Bill 201 is a hot issue for many members and their constituents. The proposed amendments to this legislation, although numerous, propose basically one simple change. Instead of making all public places and all workplaces in the province smoke free, it makes public places and workplaces that permit minors to be smoke free. Outside of that change, there is a section of Bill 201 which was clarified, and I would like to mention that before I continue with my remarks regarding the inclusion of minors.

Section 11. Although the purpose is still the same, it has been cleaned up significantly, and we hope there is no longer any confusion on what it says, partly because this is an extremely important part of this legislation. As amended, Section 11 reads:

- (1) Nothing in this Act affects a municipality's power to make bylaws to regulate, restrict or prohibit smoking.
- (2) Where there is a conflict between a provision of this Act and a provision of the municipal bylaw that regulates, restricts or prohibits smoking, the more restrictive provision prevails.

Mr. Chairman, it doesn't get much clearer than that. This proposed legislation will be a province-wide minimum prohibition against smoking in all public places, workplaces, and public vehicles as defined in the act.

Also, Mr. Chairman, we have eliminated section 8. Section 8 referred to "a manager of a public place or workplace must not permit ashtrays or similar receptacles to be located in a part of the place where smoking is prohibited under this Act." It was just common sense that someone who inadvertently would find themselves in a position they shouldn't be in would have an opportunity to be rid of their cigarette without causing damage to property or a mess. In fact, many of these ashtrays or similar type devices collect litter, gum, packaging, and other things, and it was simply not well thought out.

Reality being what it is, Mr. Chairman, there are of course exceptions, those being group living facilities, hotels, and public places and workplaces that do not permit minors. By instituting a minimum standard for all Albertans, we would be promoting a healthier lifestyle while maintaining the status quo of choice for business, for municipalities, and for some community groups. This is an important choice for all Albertans, and one that I believe should not be taken away without seriously looking at the consequences of that action.

The time spent debating Bill 201 and the inadequate public consultation that has been done are not enough to convince me that a complete province-wide smoking ban is necessary, nor do I believe it is what all Albertans want at this time. I know that the town of Peace River doesn't want it, neither does Rocky Mountain House nor Wainwright. They are just a few examples, Mr. Chairman. It is obvious that more consultation needed to take place.

I therefore see these amendments addressing at a minimum three areas of concern that have come to light since we began debating this legislation. The main compromise these amendments bring with them is that a minimum standard is being set concerning smoking in public places and workplaces across the province. While accomplishing these amendments, it also safeguards a municipality's right to implement their own more restrictive provisions. Currently section 7 of the Municipal Government Act gives a council the authority to pass bylaws for municipal purposes respecting "the safety, health and welfare of people and the protection of people and property" as well as "people, activities and things in, on or near a public place or place that is open to the public." Mr. Chairman, municipalities are more than capable of making appropriate decisions for their individual constituents, and I believe they are successfully doing that now and will continue to do it successfully into the future.

Secondly, the proposed amendments align Bill 201 with government policy instead of forming government policy, which is exactly what private members' legislation was designed to do.

Mr. Chairman, this is an issue that should not be taken lightly. We have seen in the media and through calls and e-mails to members' constituency offices that this issue is important to all Albertans. I believe it is important that the necessary consultation take place to ensure that government policy is in line with public opinion, as it should be.

Finally, the proposed amendments support the health and well-being of Alberta's children. This is a fundamental part of government policy, and any additional support this House can provide to support the health and well-being of Alberta's youth should be welcomed with open arms. It may be ludicrous to consider that anything can be done to prevent parents from putting their children's health at risk by smoking in their private residences or private vehicles, but those are the two places that children's health is at the greatest risk of being negatively affected by second-hand smoke. The proposed amendments do not restrict smoking in private residences, but they do help protect children in public places and workplaces. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendments are a step in the right direction, and the debate that is taking place here is healthy and necessary.

Many have tried to make this issue an issue about leadership. Well, enacting legislation without proper consultation with a callous disregard for the financial effect to our business and tourism industries while infringing on the municipality's right to make decisions for their individual constituents is not leadership at all. As a matter of fact, it's dangerously close to dictatorship.

I encourage all members to support these amendments. In doing so, they will be supporting the right of municipalities to choose what is best for their communities as well as help protect the health and well-being of Alberta's children.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we shall refer to these amendments as amendment A1. Hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, I presume you wanted all the amendments to be dealt with together and a collective vote at the end.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I haven't had a chance to look in detail at the amendments, but let me say that raising the question of consultation in the context of this amendment or indeed the bill itself is a false concern. Indeed, we've been consulting Albertans for the last 30 years about what they think about tobacco in public places. They have said repeatedly and increasingly that they're anxious and frustrated that the provincial government will not take leadership on this issue of environmental tobacco smoke. This is not fundamentally about any particular age group or gender. This is about human beings being exposed to a carcinogenic substance in the workplace. Let's be very clear about it.

This government has said that it's committed to health and has commissioned a number of reports, including the Mazankowski report, that have said repeatedly: we need provincial legislation to ban public places exposure to tobacco smoke. It's time for this government to show leadership. Indeed, the population has been calling for this, as I say, for many, many years. This is inefficient and so far unfair to business to ask each municipality to draft unique and variable legislation to protect nonsmokers and workers in the workplaces. We have said repeatedly and recent polls have shown that 500 different organizations in the province, health professionals, and two-thirds of the population have indicated, when asked specifically about public places including nightclubs and bars, that they want to see the smoke banned from these places.

Let's be very clear what we're dealing with here. Albertans are frustrated at the slow progress of legislation in this area. The majority want to see this human rights issue, this public safety issue, and health issue dealt with in a responsible way that will not disadvantage any businesses because everyone will be on the same playing field. The existing status quo is not acceptable. Let us be clear: if this government defeats this bill or creates these amendments, this will be a real knock in their vision of health for all Albertans and respecting the human rights of all workers in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, I just wanted a clarification from the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. You did send me a note that you wanted to speak, but I'm not very clear. Did you want to speak on the current amendments or deal with your amendments later on?

3:20

Mr. Hinman: I'll deal with my amendments later on because their amendments look like they're going to cover what I was . . .

The Deputy Chair: Right. Yes. That's the procedure. Thank you so very much.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to address the committee today regarding Bill 201, the Smoke-free Places Act, during the committee stage. There is no question that this bill has captured the interest of Albertans, and rightfully so. To some, smoking is their personal right. To others, it's a nuisance and a health hazard. Everyone has an opinion on this issue, and many have had a stake in this debate. Smokers, nonsmokers, restaurant owners, bar owners, casinos, and bingos have all had their opinion. Sometimes forgotten, but children have an opinion in this debate too.

Many of these interests and opinions are competing, and no matter what decision we make in this Assembly, we will not satisfy them all. This is not a new dilemma. We often have to make decisions that please one group while upsetting another. As MLAs we have been able to go out and talk to our constituents about their feeling on this issue, but Bill 201 has only been on the radar for a couple of months. Furthermore, because of it being a private member's bill, the government has not had a complete, comprehensive look at all of the issues regarding the second-hand smoke. So it is up to each member to seek out their own feedback from their constituents or to increase funding to programs to help these Albertans who choose to stop smoking.

For these reasons, I am not convinced that the government nor the members of this Legislature have done their due diligence on Bill 201. I, like most of you, have had an opportunity to talk to as many stakeholders as possible over the past couple months regarding Bill 201.

As I mentioned previously, nearly everyone is a stakeholder when it comes to second-hand smoke. Smoking is about more than just second-hand smoke or about where and when it should be allowed. We also need to look at tobacco taxes, minors smoking, and much more. This includes looking at the current funding levels for programs to help individuals who choose to stop smoking. Yet right now and right here we are going to have to make a decision as to what we do in the interim.

When considering what I believe we should do, I thought about the competing interests and what effect we may have upon them depending on what decision we make. If we accept Bill 201 in its current form, we are eliminating choice for individual adults, for communities, and for business across the province. We are not really addressing the need to help individuals stop smoking. We are just moving the location where they will smoke.

In a recent discussion with an individual who lived in New Zealand, she talked about the effect the abandonment of smoking in a facility had on her. When the smoking bylaw came into effect, all of the individuals who were in the bar came out onto the street to have their smoke. At that time what happened is that she was approached when she was walking down the street where she walked regularly with her child. Her child was, let's say, addressed, and she didn't think that that was a proper form of regulation.

Governing is about finding a balanced approach. I believe we need to find an acceptable midpoint that takes into account a need to protect those who cannot protect themselves while considering the damage that we may do to charities and adult-only establishments. Adults know, or at least they should know at this point, that smoking is unhealthy and that inhaling second-hand smoke can be just as bad. Children, on the other hand, may not know the repercussions of second-hand smoke, or even if they do, they may have little choice and are unable to avoid it.

While I don't believe that adult Albertans need to be told to come in out of the rain, nor do I think they need to be told to get out of the smoke, some people choose to live in rainy environments even though they might be risking catching a cold, just as some people choose to stay in smoky environments knowing the dangers of second-hand smoke. We shall be narrowing our focus to provide support for those who can get out of the rain.

I support the amendments for Bill 201 to focus on protecting children from second-hand smoke. Children by law are not allowed to purchase cigarettes, nor are they allowed to smoke. By making it such that the public places, including restaurants, have to designate their premise either as smoking permitted or not permitted, there is no question as to allowing minors in. If you choose to allow smoking, there are no minors allowed. Period. It is that simple and that clear.

Furthermore, I support the amendment to give the option of allowing smoking in a workplace that is not open and accessible by the public. One of the concerns that I have heard was regarding those people who use their private vehicle as their workplace or those who use a company vehicle as their workplace not being allowed to smoke anymore under Bill 201. Some long haul truck driver who has smoked for 40 years in the confines of his own truck being told that he cannot smoke, when the smoke and the second-hand smoke is only harming the primary user, is in my opinion getting a little bit ridiculous. Why would we bother to protect a smoker from their own second-hand smoke?

By amending section 5 with the addition of subsection (4), we will allow some leeway in situations like this, especially where an unsuspecting member of the public is not going to wander into the workplace, nor are they invited to have access by right or by express or by implemented invitation. Furthermore, there are many similar situations that this amendment will address to allow some choice, especially in the workplaces that are generally not open to the public and are only occupied at one time for one or very few people.

I am also in support of the amendment to change the wording of section 11. I believe we need to make it clear that municipalities should not be restricted from making tougher bylaws. As I am sure that many members here can attest, what one community or municipality feels is appropriate when it comes to smoking, another may not. If communities like Edmonton, Calgary, Sherwood Park, or others want, as many already have, to hold their public places to a more restrictive standard, the citizens of those communities should have that right. But just as we allow these communities to decide if they want a tougher standard, we shouldn't force other communities to live up to that same standard.

We allow municipalities to make many decisions when it comes to quality of life issues and the protection of citizens. We allow them to make decisions as to what level of fire protection service they have. We allow them to make decisions as to what level of police service they may have. We allow local school boards and health authorities to make local decisions regarding education and health care. As a provincial government we set standards for them to meet, but we don't hold them back from exceeding them. This is what the amendments to Bill 201 achieve. They set a baseline standard that we expect every public place and workplace in Alberta to meet, and we allow for local municipalities to exceed those standards.

I support the amendments for Bill 201. I would encourage all members to support them as well. Thank you so much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. For the first time in my political life, having gotten elected and into this House, I had a sense of what could be accomplished within this House. I heard government member after government member speak eloquently about the need for a total smoking ban. What the member has proposed in the way of an amendment is not an amendment. It is a complete rewrite of the bill. It is a complete denial of the intention of this bill. It is not an amendment.

3:30

What I don't understand – and forgive me for my lack of understanding because I'm new in this process. It has been declared over and over and over again through research, through poll, through public opinion that the public, 80 per cent at least of Albertans, want an all-out smoking ban. This is the 80 per cent that I referred to when I gave my Cancer Society awareness month speech. For the lofty reason of health care prevention, for the cost of treatment it would seem to me that it's logical to support an amendment that discourages smoking, that prevents people from contracting cancer from second-hand smoke. For lack of a better word, it seems like a no-brainer that we would be supporting a healthier Alberta.

From a more base point of view I cannot believe that members opposite, who in most cases have much more political savvy than myself, would vote against their constituents' wishes. We were elected to bring the concerns of the majority of our constituents to this House, and we were doing marvelously. In the first round only three speakers spoke against it or voted against the total ban. To do anything less than approve a total ban in smoking would do Albertans of all ages a disservice. Watering it down to protect a person in the first 18 years of their life, and then they have their birthday and they turn 18 and they're no longer protected, is like tag: you're not it now; you're safe; now you're it. We have to think about the well-being of this entire province.

As to the economics I don't know how many studies need to be conducted, how many examples. We've got examples within this province, Banff, where a bar owner indicated that after the township imposed a total smoking ban, his business went up by 15 per cent. We've got a closer example right here in St. Albert. The notion that certain bar owners or bingo hall operators or casino operators stand to lose money is absolute baloney. What they stand to do is to increase their number of patrons. From 20 per cent of the population they have the potential to go after 80 per cent.

As I mentioned in my comments on Canadian cancer awareness month, there is absolutely no valid reason – no one can give specific statistics in any country, in any city where smoking has had an adverse economic effect on the population. But the reverse is true. People live longer. The quality of their life is better. They can go to the bar, enjoy a drink of whatever type they wish. They can enjoy the pleasure of the music. The notion that we're just going to protect 18 year olds – in other words, for the first 18 years of your life you're safe, but after that you can risk a killing cancer in this province of Alberta because we don't have the guts as legislators to put forward a total smoking ban.

Please, government members, I hope you are not being handcuffed by a forced vote. I hope you have the ability within your conscience and within your caucus to vote as your constituents would have you vote.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak in Committee of the Whole on Bill 201, the Smoke-free Places Act. There are three things regarding this act and this amendment that are important to me: the first is the health and safety of all Albertans, the second is a level playing field for all businesses in Alberta, and the third is responding to the evidence that proves beyond a doubt that second-hand smoke kills and that the legal liability that exists when ignoring the evidence will create problems for all of us.

Mr. Chairman, I would have been pleased to have voted for a bill that would have stopped smoking in all public places. I believe that it's just a matter of time until all Albertans recognize the dangers of second-hand smoke and agree with smoke-free places. At that time Albertans will make the choice not to impose second-hand smoke on other people. They will recognize that the health of others and the fairness of a level playing field for all businesses is important. They will recognize the liability that exists if governments or businesses allow second-hand smoke to affect others.

Mr. Chair, I know that some of the strongest chain-smokers are capable of giving up smoking during their working hours. Due to the volatile nature of the solvents that are used in the manufacture of fibreglass, the business that guy was involved in, it was necessary to impose a no-smoking rule at work. Our employees managed to wait until their breaks to smoke. Many of these employees thanked us for helping them to reduce their smoking levels significantly and in some cases to even quit smoking.

Although I do not feel that these amendments are strong enough to protect all Albertans, I'm willing to accept them in order to protect children and to begin a smoke-free policy province-wide.

In the city of Red Deer a smoking ban was issued for some workplaces. It was not all-encompassing, and businesses that did not allow children on their premises were exempted. Businesses that could afford to build smoking rooms separate from other rooms could invite smokers to enjoy their services. Businesses that could not afford to build designated smoking rooms were out of luck. The city of Red Deer is now ready to go to the next level and to ban smoking from all public places. The concern now is: what about those businesses that paid for separate smoking rooms and that will now be paying for an obsolete option?

I believe that it's better to go to the second step right from the start. I also believe, however, that it's more important to do something than to do nothing. I would therefore support these amendments knowing that this may be the only way to begin a smoke-free-places policy in Alberta province-wide. We can start this way, as the city of Red Deer did, and then we can move to the next step, which will be a total Smoke-free Places Act. We need to help all Albertans to make this choice to prevent second-hand smoke from affecting others. This time will come, although not fast enough for some.

Mr. Chair, in order to arrive at a complete Smoke-free Places Act without taking choice away from Albertans at this time, we need to start by accepting these amendments. Like the city of Red Deer we can start this way and in time have a complete ban. This way will be better than doing nothing.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I thought I had to do a double take for a minute when I heard the mover of the amendments say that we haven't had enough time for consultation. I remember being here a few years ago, and we were being lobbied – I think probably they're here – by Mr. Hagen and ASH. I know that he's been at it for a long time. If there has ever been an area or an issue that we've had a lot of consultation about, surely it's smoking and having a smoking ban in this province. To think that this just came up, you know, a couple weeks ago with Bill 201 is ludicrous in the extreme. The point that I'm making: it's not because there has been a lack of consultation; it's because the government doesn't want to deal with this issue in a serious way.

Now, the point that I would make, and it's been talked about – and the minister of health I'm glad is here. I know she's looking at her papers. I'm sure she's embarrassed by these amendments, and she should be, Mr. Chairman, because she has said very clearly that she believes that there should be some sort of ban.

You know, we've talked about and the Premier has talked about the costs of health care, you know, that we have to privatize, that we have to do all these things, that it's so expensive, and that we should be looking at prevention. Well, here's a bill that could deal with the prevention in the most immediate way and down the way save a lot of money. I can't think of any other prevention that could save our health care money, if that's all we cared about beyond the deaths and the other things that occur with smoking. So surely we should be promoting this as a prevention that will ultimately save health care money, save lives, save agony, save sickness: all the rest of the things. It seems to me to be self-evident. As one of the members said, a no-brainer.

To talk about the economics of it, I've had businesspeople in Edmonton say that they're worried because Edmonton will have a patchwork compared to others. If they go into the bar there and they can't smoke in Edmonton, they may move out to other municipalities. It doesn't make sense to have a patchwork across the province with various municipalities doing this and another one across the way doing that. That's unfair economics as far as I'm concerned, Mr. Chairman. The simplest way is to have a province-wide ban. Everybody plays, then, under the same rules. It's a level playing field, and the economics seem to me to be self-evident.

You know, to say that there's not consultation, again, every health care professional that I know of, people in the Cancer Society, every other group is saying: go ahead with this. As the Member for Calgary-Varsity said, 80 per cent of the people want it. So why are we not doing it?

The other thing is: why are we having amendments on a private member's bill coming from the government? I take it that the whip's on here. It seems to be. I don't think we're going to have a free vote here by what I see. I hope I'm wrong. I hope I'm wrong. The Member for Red Deer-North spoke very eloquently about why we need a provincial ban, and she said, and I think I quote: doing something is "better than doing nothing." Well, this is basically doing nothing. It's a status quo. Let's be real about that. We are doing nothing with these amendments.

I would hope that the government members would screw up their courage, Mr. Chairman, if they believe there should be a provincial ban, and vote that way instead of having a private member's bill with the whip on. I find that unfortunate and sad in many ways if this is supposed to be a democratic vote. It's not a government bill. It's a private member's bill. Again, to say that there's not been consultation on this is just absolutely ridiculous.

I want to say just in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that this is a chance for this Legislature to do something very, very significant, and it's a chance for government members to do something very, very significant. You know, the whip should not be out on this. Do we care about health care? Do we care about fair economics? Are we concerned about second-hand smoke? We say, well, we're not going to have the young people there. What about the people that have to work there? I noticed that many of the labour leaders are saying the same thing. It's almost universal except in this Legislature that we need a provincial ban, and it's going to be very, very disappointing if the government members that know how they should vote, vote under a whip sort of approach here today. I would hope that they wouldn't do that.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure for me to rise today to speak to the amendments proposed to Bill 201, the Smoke-free Places Act. I'd like to point out that I still have concerns with the intent of this bill. I believe that the full intent of this bill is to make people quit smoking a completely legal product, and it's guised under the premise of making all Albertans healthy. I believe that trying to make all Albertans healthy, trying to force people to stop smoking is not our place. It's a slippery slope, as I mentioned in my previous remarks, that can lead to much more drastic measures.

What would be next, Mr. Chairman? If the health of Albertans is strictly and fully our responsibility, do we start to legislate what we should serve in public restaurants? [interjections] I can hear the other side groaning, but we know that obesity is the greatest epidemic in this province. It's across North America. In fact, I read some information that one-third of Albertans born in the year 2001 and thereafter will acquire diabetes in their lifetime because of their diets, what they eat and how much they eat, and the lack of exercise. If the health of Albertans is our concern and we're supposed to make Albertans become healthier, do we legislate what they eat and how much exercise they get?

Mr. Chairman, I believe the best way to approach this – and I'm not saying that we shouldn't encourage Albertans to stop smoking; I believe that we actually should. We should provide incentives through health care to make sure that smokers have access to subsidized treatment programs. I don't want to name any brand names, but, you know, you can go to the pharmacist and get prescriptions.

An Hon. Member: The patch.

Mr. Griffiths: The patch. Okay. Thank you. I'll say the patch and gum, likewise, to help people stop smoking, but there are no incentives to provide benefits to people to get them to use those sorts of initiatives, Mr. Chairman.

I also believe that health care premiums should be upped for people who smoke. They are an increased risk of a drain on the health care system, and I believe health care premiums should reflect that increased risk. I also believe it should reflect the increased risk of people who are obese, don't eat properly, don't exercise properly. I believe it's the job of this government to have those people pay more. That would give them more incentive to eat properly, quit smoking, and maintain a healthier lifestyle than the government telling them that they can't. We're not their parents.

I also believe, Mr. Chairman, that for employees who work in smoking environments, WCB premiums reflect the risk in those working environments. I still encourage that WCB premiums should be reflective of nonsmokers working in a smoking environment. I honestly believe that that would give businesses incentives to go to nonsmoking environments, and they would make the choice instead of the provincial government telling them what's good for them.

I hope that those initiatives will be adopted whether this legislation passes or these amendments pass. I hope that those sorts of initiatives are pursued, Mr. Chairman.

I did say in my previous remarks that I could support this bill if amendments made this legislation focus on smoking in public places in the presence of children. I still believe that. These amendments have done just that while still allowing flexibility to determine if smoking or children will be permitted but neither at the same time nor the same place. Mr. Chairman, that I can support. I know that there are places in Edmonton right now that allow minors onto the premises and into the business until a certain time in the evening, when then smoking is allowed and minors are not. The two do not coexist.

This bill has become one I can support. Though I am not pleased with telling businesses what they can do, in general, I understand this bill to provide businesses with significant flexibility so long as smoking and minors are not permitted on the same premises at the same time. With that understanding, Mr. Chairman, I endorse the amendments proposed by the Member for Vermillion-Lloydminster.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have thought a lot about Bill 201, and I have heard from many constituents. As I considered my position, I first of all looked at the past, the present, and where we're going.

Looking at the past, what was smoking like 30 years ago? Smoking was socially acceptable. The dangers were not scientifically made public. Lots of advertising was around to encourage smoking: magazines, billboards, and sporting events. It was socially acceptable to smoke. Film stars and famous people such as Churchill with his cigars were seen smoking.

Today: it depends on whom you ask. Many groups have formed to try to eliminate smoking. Many commercial interests want to retain smoking. Some try to argue that smoking laws are an infringement on personal freedom. Some argue that they have the right to a smoke-free workplace. Smoking bans elsewhere – California, Victoria, and Honolulu – show no loss of revenue for bars and restaurants. There are huge tax levies on smoking products.

Where are we going in the future? I think smokers will likely be penalized: different health care premiums, different medical coverage, for example. They may be ostracized; it will become unacceptable in most social circles to smoke. Even more intense efforts will be made to stop young people from beginning to smoke, and selling cigarettes may become illegal.

Then I looked at how it affects me and my friends and others. I refuse to go into restaurants where smoking is allowed. Some of these places I'd like to go to because I hear their food is very good, but I will not go there. I ask for nonsmoking taxicabs. I resent having to go through the front doors of a business where a lot of smokers are gathered smoking. I ask for nonsmoking hotel rooms when I travel, and I don't allow smoking in my home.

It's difficult for some people to stop smoking. I realize this because I know of someone who has had three cancer operations and is still unable to stop smoking. She is constantly apologizing for continuing to smoke. She goes to great lengths to tell people how she is controlling the habit. She is a sociable individual, and I'm sure that she would dearly like to stop. This is an example of how terrible this addiction can become.

How does smoking affect all of us? We all pay higher taxes to cover the medical ill effects of smoking on people in Alberta. For example, we need more doctors, we need more hospital facilities, and we need medical staff. We pay higher insurance premiums as a result of smokers who have caused fires and fire damage. We pay higher education costs for the programs in place to try to stop people from smoking. Those who choose not to smoke have their health impaired by second-hand smoke. We are unwilling partners in unethical practices when our government invests in tobacco companies for profit, for example the heritage fund.

I agree very much with this bill. Places where the public attends in Alberta should be smoke free, and here's why. Research has proven past a doubt the ill effects of smoking. Smoking causes lung disease. Smokers die earlier, often painful deaths. Smoking robs families of fathers, mothers, sisters, and aunts. Smoking forces us to spend much-needed health care dollars on caring for smokers' health when those dollars are badly needed elsewhere. Smokers have a choice. Those suffering from many other illnesses do not. The smell on people's clothing, in cars, and in smoking rooms is repulsive, and I don't want my family exposed to the damaging effects of smoke.

Taking a look at a logical reasoning approach here, smokers cost us all money; for example, worker absenteeism, fires, disability, lost income due to death and health care. For example, in 1992 smokers cost Alberta taxpayers $215 million in direct health costs. Aside from the personal and societal losses smokers cost all of us money that could be used for better purposes.

Another point is that smoking has been proven scientifically to be hazardous to our health. At some point there was a question as to whether or not this was true. Large-scale statistical studies, beginning in 1952, by the American Cancer Society have proven a direct relationship; 3,500 Albertans die each year from smoking, including strokes, heart attacks, and cancer. There is no longer any argument. The link between smoking and health has been documented and is no longer open to question.

As I look at what is, smoking has been proven extremely hazardous to human health. Smoking is allowed in public establishments across the province. Nonsmokers are exposed to second-hand smoke. We pay a high cost for smokers; for example, health care, fires, work loss, and premature deaths.

What should be? As a first step smoking should be banned from public places. We should protect the innocent from the evils of smoking. Buildings paid for by taxpayers should not make people sick. Commercial businesses should not expose their employees to smoke nor customers who are nonsmokers.

What should be done? Bill 201 should be passed without amendments. Let's find the courage to do that. Ways to prevent people from starting to smoke need to be examined. Workers' rights should include the right to a smoke-free workplace, and research into successful strategies that may be used to help smokers stop should be conducted.

My support is for Bill 201 without amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise with pleasure to speak at this Committee of the Whole stage of Bill 201, the Smoke-free Places Act. I commend the Member for Calgary-Lougheed for getting this bill to this stage, allowing for continued discussion surrounding some of the contentious aspects of this potential piece of legislation.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 201 has been a difficult piece of legislation from the get-go. People have different ideas about placing limitations on freedoms and have argued that we should only place restrictions on smoking to the extent that it protects the health of children. Although I would much rather support the bill in its original form, I think it's important to support the proposed amendments to get this bill through the House. I've learned in this job that a compromise is often better than no deal at all. The amendments on the floor will at least protect children from second-hand smoke, and this is an important cause. I see it as a first step and only a first step, but it's a big step in this important cause of protecting all Albertans from second-hand smoke.

At the end of the day we must decide if we should place restrictions on businesses. We as a province have always proudly given business owners as much freedom in decision-making as possible because we follow the belief that they are in the best position to make decisions that affect their operations. This is part of the Alberta advantage. Bill 201 may be straying away from this tendency, and this is the point of one of the amendments we are discussing. As long as an employer does not have employees under the age of 18 and as long as the employment area is restricted to persons 18 years or older, the manager will be able to decide whether the employees can smoke or not.

Now, this has always been the Alberta way. We recognize that adults are capable of making adult decisions, and we give them the freedom to do so. Although I personally hope that they will choose health over wealth, Mr. Chairman, I understand the need for this amendment. One of the proposed amendments is to section 5(3), which if amended would read: a person may smoke in a public place not referred to in subsection (1) or (2) if minors are prohibited from entering or being in the public place. Then a further subsection would read: by declaration of the manager of the public place.

So an example of an area where this subsection could apply and where adults should be able to make decisions as to whether they could smoke or not is automotive repair shops. Most shops have a separate garage area for fixing automobiles and a separate area for an office. The general public is allowed to be in the office and is occasionally permitted to go into the shop area for inspection purposes. However, the public is generally not allowed in the shop where cars are actually being repaired. Furthermore, the manager could simply never allow children into this area, especially since it is dangerous and they are not needed there. For insurance purposes the public is specifically restricted from entering the shop areas without the express consent of the manager because of liability issues since mechanical shops are inherently dangerous.

Mr. Chairman, if the mechanics that work in this area, where members of the general public are generally restricted from entering and children could be reasonably excluded, want to smoke, then they may be permitted to do so. This is especially true if the shop area is closed off from the office area, which is usually the case because automotive shop owners and dealerships don't want to expose their customers to other dangers.

The reality, Mr. Chairman, is that the air quality in a mechanical shop is already poor due to vehicle fumes, the various gasses that are used for welding, vehicle brake dust, and several other sources, yet we don't make laws against these. So why are we wanting to create a law that will prevent these mechanics from lighting up in their workplace?

If the point of Bill 201 is to protect our workforce from the harmful effects of poisons in the air, then we should place much greater restrictions on all harmful substances that could be found in various work environments, which is, I think, ridiculous. We don't want to go there. But if the point is to try to listen to certain interest or lobby groups who advocate for the elimination of smoking in workplaces generally, then we should do so with a careful look at the balance between restriction and choice.

What has traditionally made our province strong and its people successful is the maximization of choice in every circumstance. If Bill 201 is going to take the choice away from our citizens, then we must take a very close look at our motives, and we must look for a balance between what makes sense and what doesn't.

I ask, Mr. Chairman: if a group of adults decide they want to smoke in their workplace, which I think is a bad choice, should we be telling them that they cannot do so? Is it not hypocritical to allow for the sale of tobacco products but to arbitrarily restrict where they can be consumed? This seems to be what the original wording of Bill 201 was doing. I would much rather that Ottawa ban the product altogether. However, we now have to decide if we want to amend the wording to allow for choice.

Of course we should be restricting smoking where children are allowed to be. Just like we restrict the sale of tobacco products from minors, we should minimize the second-hand smoke they breathe. This limitation is reasonable; it protects children.

Another amendment that would allow for the mechanics to smoke in their workplaces, if they so choose, is the proposed change which would say that a person may smoke in a workplace if the workplace is one "to which members of the public [do not] have access as of right or by express or implied invitation."

Mr. Chairman, as I said earlier, members of the public are generally not allowed to enter shop areas due to liability issues. So why shouldn't mechanics be able to smoke there if they so choose? An even more important question is: what right do we have to allow the sale of cigarettes and then come to their workplaces where children and public are not allowed to enter and fine them for smoking?

What's next? Are the police going to come to my house and fine somebody who may be smoking in my house, which they don't do, but . . . Mr. Chairman, this idea is as crazy to me as the federal Liberals allowing for the use of medicinal marijuana, a drug that is illegal to sell and possess. Clearly, we are much more rational than the federal Liberals.

Another situation where it may not be practical to restrict smoking is in lounges. Lounges are places where only people who are over the age of 18 are allowed. We purposefully restrict minors from entering these areas because we want adults to be able to have a place to interact with other adults, a place where there are no children. Well, in these places adults are free to make adult choices, like to have a drink or perhaps a cigarette. We allow adults to buy cigarettes, and we give adults a place to be away from children. Maybe then we should be allowing adults to smoke there. Or is it better for adults to choose to smoke in their homes where there may be children present? It is possible that adults go to these lounges to have a place to smoke away from their children.

A proposed amendment to Bill 201, which I reluctantly support, is with section 5(3). The wording I'm referring to states that a person may smoke in a public place not referred to in subsections 1 or 2 if minors are prohibited from entering or being in the public place by reason of a licence under the Gaming and Liquor Act. This is a situation where, again, the individual business owners will be able to choose whether they allow smoking.

There are already lounges in Alberta where the owners have decided not to allow smoking, and that's awesome. Many of these do well because they attract a nonsmoking crowd. But the key is giving those lounge owners a choice. By giving the owners the choice as to whether they should allow smoking or not, we are allowing those businesses to operate according to their own circumstances.

Mr. Chairman, let me give you an example of what I mean. Let's imagine a lounge located in a town where, say, 90 per cent of the residents do not smoke. In fact, these residents who don't smoke actually hate smoking, and they hate having to breathe second-hand smoke. So by allowing smoking in this lounge for the few per cent of people who actually do smoke in this town, the lounge owner will be hurting his business' chances for success. Naturally, this lounge will become nonsmoking without government interference. This is because going nonsmoking would be a prudent business practice for the lounge owner. The owner will have more customers by not allowing smoking than by allowing it. So we should be allowing lounge owners to make these decisions on their own, and that's why I can support this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, before I conclude my remarks, I would like to add another comment about a proposed amendment. Section 11(2) would read "where there is a conflict between a provision of this Act and a provision of a municipal bylaw that regulates, restricts or prohibits smoking, the more restrictive provision prevails." The fact is that many municipalities around the province already have smoking bylaws in force. If it is not the individual business owners who decide whether smoking should be allowed, then it should be municipalities or individual communities. Again, the local body knows best. The reason for this is that every community is different and should therefore decide for itself how far to go with their smoking legislation.

This is a much more democratic and representative method. In Drayton Valley, where I come from, the mayor and council decided to go smoke-free, and that's awesome. I'm happy to live there. I like this amendment because it essentially says that the province is going to have this general piece of legislation that protects children and respects choice, but municipalities are able to administer stronger legislation. Usually a municipality would choose to implement a tougher smoking bylaw if it has the support of the community. This is the democratic process at work, and it makes more sense than having the provincial government dictating how people should run their businesses and how municipalities should operate.

Mr. Chairman, Alberta has always been a land of choice where its citizens have historically been provided with choice. As we can see by Alberta's strong position in Canada, this approach has worked very well. Albertans have proven that when left on their own, they will make the best choices.

I supported Bill 201 in its original form; however, the amendments put forward seem to give us a balance between protecting the health of children and allowing the freedom of choice to be strong among adults. The bill is not going to be as strong as originally anticipated, but at least it is a step and, like I said, a big step in the right direction. So I feel that we must move forward with this. For these reasons I urge all my colleagues to join me in support of the proposed amendments to Bill 201.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm rising to speak on the amendments to Bill 201 in their entirety, I suppose. I'm rising reluctantly to have to say these words because, you know, for a while I really believed that this Assembly had a real sea change, so to speak, in dealing with smoking in public places legislation. The strength of the original Bill 201, which we were very prepared, myself and my colleagues, to support was very refreshing, and I think that most Albertans would have agreed with it in its previous condition. But, then, seeing these amendments appear today, it's disturbing, and I think it's disturbing to the majority of Albertans as well because we were expecting that Alberta was going to move along with the rest of North America in putting some real anti-smoking legislation into place in public places.

As we move along in this afternoon, I think that the flurry and swirling of misconceptions and confusions that I'm hearing from different hon. members is just getting worse, and quite frankly perhaps we would be better off to say less about this amendment, but you know there are just some glaring things that need to be addressed here. First of all, I think we all know the reason why smoking in public places is being targeted in such a specific way, and I don't want to have to go over that again. It's the leading cause of cancer in our society, it's costing us hundreds of millions of dollars in health care, and as we say, we're losing our family and loved ones prematurely as a result of smoking. It's not just the people who are smoking that it's causing those difficulties with, but it's the people who have to live in that smoking environment.

So what we were trying to do with Bill 201 – and that's why I support it – is limit that second-hand smoke from drifting out and poisoning people who are not smokers but have to be in that environment. Now, that is a very large distinction, Mr. Chairman, from other forms of debilitation that some other members have mentioned here. One does not get fat from being in proximity to fattening foods, say, for example, right? You have to eat it in order to have that problem. But with smoking, you just are breathing, and you have no choice in that matter. So, I mean, arguments like that are not only spurious, I would suggest, but misleading as well and do us no favours here in this Assembly.

One of the issues that I would like to bring up as well, Mr. Chairman, is that almost all other jurisdictions that are addressing smoking of tobacco in public places are realizing that you have to go the full way to make it effective. So, you know, at the end of the day I can't help thinking that I'm going to be standing and speaking on this again some time in the future, making a proper ban on smoking in public places. Why don't we just do it now? Why don't we bite the bullet? Lord knows we're all democratically elected here. Look at the statistics. If you're worried about getting elected again, the vast majority of individuals in this province do not smoke and would welcome Bill 201 as it stands without these amendments. So don't worry about not getting elected. Even in the rural areas people will thank us for it later.

The role of the legislator in this province is to make the best decisions for all of the people in the province, right? We're not meant to look too narrowly and focus on some small group that might be pushing forward their thing, but rather we're looking for the broadest possible democratic representation for the best interests of all people. Amending Bill 201 goes against that fundamental principle. Again, I suggest that we're going to end up coming back to this in a few years, so what's the point? Let's do it. Let's do it now.

In terms of smoking in workplaces, again it's a question of majority, and it's a question of the vast majority of individuals in a workplace that are not smoking. You know, in terms of defining what a workplace is I would suggest that that is part of what the legislation can do. So a previous member, for example, mentioned, you know, banning an individual from smoking in his commercial truck or vehicle. I mean, that's absolutely, patently outside of this whole thing, and it does not exist in the bill as it stands. Certainly you can define those parameters quite easily through other legislation of what a workplace actually is.

Again, some of these comments on anti-smoking and freedom of expression and what are they going to do next, I mean, those are only misleading sorts of ways of taking up time rather than dealing with the issue which is to keep this bill as it is without the amendments, and I guarantee that all Albertans will look back and be very proud of us. I know that it's difficult. I'm starting to smell a whipped vote in this whole thing, but let's look past that and look ahead a little bit. Be forward thinking, Mr. Chairman and all of my members, and let's vote for the bill without the amendments.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. You know, a lot of discussion today is about representing your constituents, and that's exactly what I'm here to do. These amendments are absolutely on the mark to reinforce the bylaw that's in the constituency where I live and grew up and have raised my family. That's in Whitecourt. The community is the only municipality in my constituency that chose to put in place a smoking bylaw. The other 27 communities have not – 27 communities have not. But these other communities right now are in many cases really concerned. They just have one restaurant, one hotel, one legion, or one community hall. Many of my small operators are very nervous with this legislation. So am I. I'm married to a smoker.

Smoking, without a doubt, is a bad habit, and I hope that some day all Albertans that smoke quit, period. The fact is that smoking is legal, and to enact a bill that prohibits an adult to smoke in an adult establishment is going too far at this time. I do believe that in many parts of Alberta it's the will of the people of these communities to enact smoking bylaws of different nature. I'm supportive of these amendments because it continues to recognize the voice of local municipalities and makes a bold move to protect our youth from second-hand smoke.

I had a conversation on the weekend with a fellow from Whitecourt. His name was Brian Elko, from my constituency, and he stated that the government of Alberta entered into a partnership arrangement with hoteliers in this province for the operation of video lottery terminals and the collection of the 5 per cent hotel tax, soon to be 4 per cent tourism levy. Well, under this arrangement the hoteliers have operated, balanced, and provided the manpower and daily cash flow and have collected and remitted to the Provincial Treasurer substantial revenue generated by these two programs.

He further stated that Bill 201 as now proposed, to totally ban smoking in all facilities throughout the province, is like a slap in the face to our joint partnership in these programs. Revenues from these two sources will severely adversely affect both our businesses and the Alberta treasury if this bill is allowed to go forward as now proposed with a total ban on all smoking facilities. He shares the concerns of those who wish to restrict exposing minors to alcohol and tobacco product. That's why he wholeheartedly supports a proposal to ban smoking in a facility where minors are present.

He's absolutely supportive of the town of Whitecourt's recent smoking bylaw, which reflects this approach to restricting smoking to adults-only facilities. Brian asked me, when this bill is brought before the House, that provisions exist for smoking to be permissible in bars, lounges, and specified smoking guest rooms. Again, he felt that if this bill should be passed as now proposed, without adult-only facilities exempted, the impact would be felt not just by hoteliers but also on the two government programs in which we partner.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. On this side of the House we were expecting some amendments to be made to this bill, but we weren't expecting it to be essentially gutted, as we've seen here. It's been really eviscerated, more than anything else.

I'd just like to address a few of the points that some of the members have brought up here. I think there was some discussion that the law would restrict someone from smoking in the cab of their truck. Well, this is ludicrous, okay? It's not in there, it never was in there, and to think that this law as it stands would have made someone a criminal for smoking in their truck is absolutely ridiculous.

There was also some comment that the bill would force people to stop smoking. Entirely untrue. There's nothing in this bill that says you can't smoke. It says: you can't smoke here. There's a major difference between saying, "You cannot smoke" and "You cannot smoke in this room." Major differences there.

I believe it was the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar who said that this was a first step. This is not really a first step. I mean, it's basically status quo. What we have here is a patchwork quilt of laws regarding smoking, and we're keeping it. It's an ugly patchwork quilt, it doesn't work, it looks awful, but this is what we're keeping essentially. Now, why don't we take the big step instead of this proposed baby step and go all the way and be a smoke-free province? This just doesn't make any sense to me at all.

I believe the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar was also talking about a shop, like a mechanic's place or something along those lines. What happens if he has an apprentice who is 16 years old? I mean, does he have to ban smoking in his place until the guy turns 17 or 18, and then they can light up?

Now, this provision about 18 year olds, I don't understand that either. I mean, so you're protected from second-hand smoke for the first 17 years, 11 months, and 364 days of your life, and then the split second you turn 18, well, that's okay; you can start walking into a bar filled with smoke. There are just so many holes in this thing now; it's just absolutely amazing to me. It was a good bill as it stood, and now it's just not much of a bill at all.

The main place that the average Albertan runs into cigarette smoke is a bar, restaurant, casino, that sort of place. Not that I go to casinos, but any of those places that's where you're going to run into second-hand smoke.

An Hon. Member: You don't smoke either.

Mr. Tougas: No, I don't smoke either. That's right.

But this is where we're running into it now. Where you're going to run into it is those locations. Now they've been given carte blanche to continue with the smoking. It's just an amazing thing to me, actually.

The fact is that we are moving inexorably towards a full public smoking ban in North America, in Alberta, Edmonton, across Canada. It's going to happen, and you can put up these little changes to it and try to stop it, but it's not going to stop.

I don't support these amendments at all, and I think we should really maintain the bill exactly as it is. I'm very disappointed that this has been changed, and I certainly hope that the government members will vote this down.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Government Services, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

4:20

Mr. Lund: Mr. Chairman, it is a great pleasure for me to have this opportunity to make a few comments in Committee of the Whole on Bill 201, Smoke-free Places Act. Just to set the stage a bit for myself, I'm not a smoker. I never was. No one in my family smokes, no one in my immediate family smokes, but certainly there are a number of friends that smoke, so I am around some smoke. On our farm we don't allow any of the hired men to smoke in any of the vehicles and/or on any of the machines. Of course, that, once again, can be accomplished. That's one of the reasons that I support the amendments because the way the bill was written before, an employer didn't have any option. It was black and white: you just cannot smoke in this location. But with the amendments now an employer can do what we have been doing for some period of time.

I find it rather amusing when people talk about: isn't it amazing that you're protected up to 18, but then beyond 18 there's no protection? Well, I can tell you, Mr. Chairman, that in my own case, unless I'm with a number of people that insist on going into a facility that has smoke, I simply won't go in there. Nobody's forcing someone to go in just because you're 18. You know, I thought we believed in having some choices, and certainly I exercise that choice.

Now, I hear people talking about: well, 80 per cent of the people want this ban to be in place. Well, if that's true, then why is it that all of the businesses that currently have smoking don't move over and ban smoking? Their business should pick up. I think it's very simple, that it would take care of itself in that form.

We've also heard a number of comments about the number of people that support it. I was elected and continued to win all of the polls in my constituency because I've always believed that I'm here to represent the people that elected me, and I'm fortunate that in the last municipal election in Rocky Mountain House there was a vote. There were three questions on the ballot. There was a plebiscite on whether there should be smoking or not. It's unfortunate that there were three questions and that one of them was not: should there be no control at all?

But I just want to go through these because it's quite interesting. It's true that only 30 per cent of the eligible people voted, but it was well advertised. This was a big issue, so there was a pretty good turnout relative to what there has been in the municipal elections in Rocky. I've also got to make the point that the rural area didn't get in on this vote, and they were extremely upset because they were actually quite afraid that Rocky was going to have a smoking ban.

I'll run through these. The first question was: the town of Rocky Mountain House should propose a bylaw to prohibit smoking in any indoor place accessible to the public. Thirty-six per cent voted for that one. The second one: the town of Rocky Mountain House should propose a bylaw to prohibit smoking in any indoor place accessible to the public where individuals under the age of 18 are allowed. Twenty-one per cent voted for that one. The last one: the town of Rocky Mountain House should maintain its present policy where each individual business regulates smoking in their establishment. Forty-three per cent voted for that one.

What this all tells me, Mr. Chairman, is that, yes, the people in Rocky Mountain House believe that there should be some form of control on smoking in public places. Certainly, if you add the numbers, you'll find that the majority of them, really, I would suggest, 64 per cent, are suggesting that it should be a place where, if people under the age of 18 are allowed in that facility, there should be no smoking.

These amendments that we've got before us today fit right into what the people in Rocky Mountain House said in their plebiscite, which is not a poll. It's a plebiscite. The people had an opportunity to come voluntarily. They weren't phoned. They came voluntarily to voice their opinion, and this is what they said. So I think that the amendments really, really improve the bill. I've heard some comment that it doesn't go as far as some would like. Yes, we acknowledge that, of course. And there are going to be those people that don't believe there should be any type of control on it.

I like the amendment dealing with the municipalities as well. You know, it's interesting. People talk about it being a patchwork when municipalities can pass their own bylaws, but we do that in so many areas. We allow the municipalities to decide, which is good because now you've got the local people making a vote right in their own municipality on how they want to see their municipality run. Once again I've got to go back to the comments about it being a patchwork. Well, in fact, if there are so many people out there that think that there should be a total ban on smoking, then the municipalities or the business people in those municipalities should make sure that the bylaws fit into having them represent these locations that have absolutely no smoking.

There was somebody on the other side that made a comment about a whip being on or something along that line. Well, I can tell you that there's no whip on this for me. If there was a whip that said that the amendments were to be defeated, I guess I'd really have a problem with it. The fact is that these amendments in my opinion set the benchmark across the province. I would really urge people that would like to see less smoking – I would like to see less smoking – let's get out there and do the education thing. Let's talk to the young people, really discourage them from ever getting started smoking, in fact, so that they don't, when they get much older, find it very difficult to quit.

Thinking of my own constituency, when I first saw this bill, I was thinking of the Legion where a number of elderly people have done this for years: they've come down to the Legion, they have a suds or two, they visit, they play cards, they do all those things. But lo and behold, they do smoke as well. I would find it very difficult if we all of a sudden said to those folks: "No. We know best. This is really bad for you. You're in your 80s, well up in your 80s, and your health is pretty good, so we're going to make sure that you don't smoke." I think that that is absolutely going in the wrong direction.

So I would urge members to support these amendments.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Minister for Restructuring and Government Efficiency.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll make my comments reasonably short because we have been debating these amendments now for quite some time. We've explored quite a number of areas, quite a number of points of view, I think, and I'm sure that there are more to come, more amendments to debate as well on this, so let's not eat up all the time on this.

I do want to say, referring back to the comments of the hon. Member for Red Deer-North, who said that it's better to do something than to do nothing, that doing something wrong, doing something in half measures is not necessarily better than doing nothing. We have a patchwork in this province. We have a number of municipalities in this province – the hon. minister's constituency may not be one of them – who in fact for quite some time now have been calling on the government of Alberta to do something about making a consistent smoking law that applies equally, equitably to everybody across this province. Still the government hasn't done it. They've left it up to the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed to show the foresight – I would suggest to this House the courage – to bring this bill forward, and they now seek to amend it in such a way that it pulls the teeth out of that bill.

Look, this is not about protecting the rights of the smoker. This is not a rights issue. You do not have a right to smoke. It is a legal product, yes. So provided you comply with the laws, if you're a smoker, around where you can smoke, how old you must be before the law recognizes that you can smoke, and so on and so forth, you have the same, I suppose, privilege to smoke that you have to drive a car once you get your driver's licence. But it's a privilege, not a right, and let's not confuse those two issues. It is a privilege, and it's a privilege that exists only to the extent that the smoker is willing to comply with the laws of the land, whether those are the laws of Canada, the laws of Alberta, or the bylaws of every individual city and town in this province, because this House has yet to work up consensus around what smoking control legislation in this province should look like.

This is not about protecting the smoker. This is about protecting the worker. This is not about protecting the 83-year-old veteran in a legion hall who has managed, as do many smokers who live to the age of 83, not to develop health problems from smoking: good luck, good genes, whatever. This is about protecting someone much younger, potentially without the same great genes and the same great luck, who's standing behind the bar pouring the beer for the veteran in the legion hall. It's about protecting that worker, and we can't make exceptions to that. We mustn't make exceptions to that because regardless of their age, regardless of their workplace, regardless of what city or town or village or hamlet they live in, all workers deserve the same protection from a known carcinogen and a very hazardous substance, second-hand smoke.

So I don't support this amendment. There are clauses within this amendment that I might support should they have been presented on their own, but this is presented as a package with some good ideas in it to encourage us all to vote for the very, very bad idea, which is that we should create exceptions to a province-wide, uniform, equitable ban on smoking in public places and smoking in workplaces.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed had the right idea when he brought this bill in. This amendment is the wrong idea. I will vote against it, and I hope that everybody else in this House will too. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As you know, I voted against this bill in second reading even though I supported the intent of the bill, but I couldn't support the bill in the form that it was in. Therefore, I'm quite happy that these amendments came forward because I believe that we do need to protect our children, but I also believe that we have to protect choices and choices of adults in this province.

You know, I think that I can step up to the plate and anyone else in here can and make a choice of not going into a premises or going into one. If I were to go out and purchase a piece of land and invest $2 million or $3 million dollars building a roadhouse, a restaurant, a whatever, I agree that we have to protect our children. Therefore, if I'm going to allow smoking in there, we can't have any children in there.

So when you say, "Well, I have a place. I'm only allowing people over 18 in. No one has to come into my premises. They can go down the street." If I as a businessman all of a sudden see that I'm not getting any business because I allow smoking, I'll probably quickly change my sign. But the big thing is that I've allowed people that choice. I've allowed people the choice that if they invest $5 million, let them make the decisions on their destiny, on how they want to achieve their end.

I'm going to give you an example of that, Mr. Chairman. I think that I first started going to Disneyland in about 1979. At that time when you walked anywhere you wanted in Disneyland, you could smoke. As the years went by, when my children were small – the first time that I took them there was probably in the mid-80s – you all of a sudden noticed that not very many people were smoking. And probably by 1999 or 2000, the last time I'd been to Disneyland, there was smoking hardly anywhere. The very next year I got on an airplane and took my kids to Florida to Disney World, and the tourist situation there was different. They were bringing Europeans over, and you could even smoke in lineups in Disney World in 2001. That may have changed today.

I guess what I'm getting at is: we have a wonderful, beautiful province here also. We're pushing to have more tourism and bring visitors in to show them our beautiful province, and I think that we have to allow people that cater to those visitors, whether they're from out of country or out of province or wherever they're from, choices, allow them to have choices and make choices. This bill actually really allows choices, and it also protects our children.

I think that's the main issue here: protect our children and allow people choices. And if you don't want second-hand smoke or you don't like second-hand smoke, you have the choice not to go into the premises that allows it. So I don't think I have to go on and on about that. I think everybody realizes my point of view.

I will support these amendments because I think that they're very good to the bill and they keep an open mind and open choices for Albertans to follow. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the Minister for Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and participate in this debate this afternoon on amendment A1 to Bill 201, the Smoke-free Places Act. Certainly, I'm surprised at how this bill, this fine piece of legislation which passed comfortably at second reading in this Assembly – I could stand corrected, but I think that there were only three hon. members that stood against Bill 201 in its original form.

Now we have this amendment, which one would think is the Smoke-free Places Act Lite, Mr. Chairman. That's the only way to describe it because we have taken very sound legislation and lightened it up.

Rev. Abbott: Less is more.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar is talking in the background about less is more. Well, this is a case where less is not more. I'm sorry; I cannot accept that. This is an exception, and it's an exception that should not be allowed.

I can't for the life of me understand why the amendment A1 has been introduced at this time. I'm going through the bill, and I'm listening to the debate, and I'm wondering what influence the gambling industry has had in the production of these amendments. Hopefully they've had none, but whenever one looks at some of the implications that are going to come about as a result of these amendments, you have to look at who would benefit from this.

Certainly – I'm not going to be generic and say the gaming industry because it is a gambling industry – the gambling industry in this province is changing, and there are more and more First Nations people interested in having casinos and gambling places on their property. They are, as far as I know, totally exempt from this bill. Is this bill now being watered down so that casinos anywhere in the province that are not on First Nations land would then be able to have the same smoking rules or laws as those that will be constructed and operated on First Nations land? If this is what this is all about, I think hon. members across the way, and in particular the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, have some further clarification to make at Committee of the Whole in regard to amendment A1.

This is a series of exceptions that should not be allowed. As soon as we allow one exception, we will have requests for more. Where would the exceptions end, Mr. Chairman, once we begin allowing them? If we water down this bill now, further dilution will occur later I'm afraid. If this was asbestos, for instance, another carcinogen or some other workplace hazard, we wouldn't even be having these discussions about these exceptions. Smoking in the workplace is a workplace hazard and should be treated as one, no exceptions whatsoever. We should remember that this isn't about protecting the smoker. This is about protecting the worker and all Albertans. We cannot allow exceptions, because we need to create a level playing field for all businesses.

Now, I heard this afternoon in the discussion around amendment A1 as to how we had to respect the bottom line for businesses. That's noteworthy, but the businesses will survive, and they will prosper in this province with the original intent of Bill 201 and not the intent of this amendment. By allowing exceptions, we're placing different businesses in different categories, and we are picking winners and losers. Again, this is something this government has said. I realize that this bill is a private member's bill, but this government has stated that what they're not interested in doing is picking winners and losers.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, a complete ban is necessary to level the playing field for all businesses. With that I will cede the floor to another hon. member of this Assembly. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister for Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is the first time that I've had the opportunity to speak not only to the bill, but I will limit my comments, I guess, to the amendment as I should based on the rules.

Mr. Chairman, smoking is obviously a terrible thing to become addicted to, and I know that from personal experience as someone who has struggled with it for years and years and years and continue to do so. I made the choice as a parent that I would not smoke in my home, that I would not smoke in front of my children, that I would not smoke anywhere where other people's children were going to be. I did that because I think it's fairly well known that if you come from a family of smokers, it's a lot more likely that you may become addicted to it as well, simply, I think, not so much from the second-hand smoke aspect of it but more from, you know, we do what our father does in a lot of ways. I'm actually quite proud that I do a lot of the things that my father did, but that's not one of them that I'm proud of.

I think it's important we recognize that, as representatives, this is something that will affect the entire province of Alberta. We all represent our individual areas and our constituencies, and I'd have to say that in my constituency overwhelmingly the constituents want us to act on some form of a province-wide basis that the municipalities can build from.

I think we've done that with these amendments, Mr. Chairman. Both of the major municipalities in my community have smoking bylaws that will probably be stronger than this particular legislation, so those bylaws will be the bylaws to be followed based on the amendments or based on the bill. I think the residents are comfortable with the bylaws that have been passed, and the businesses are adapting to those bylaws.

I'd have to agree with some of the comments that have been made by some of my colleagues that the marketplace will adjust the smoking habits of a number of individuals. I can remember, Mr. Chairman, travelling quite a bit as I did in my previous existence as an international trade executive. When I started travelling at length in South America, as an example, all of the planes had smoking on them. I found it quite interesting that I didn't really appreciate having to sit on a plane and to be in the smoking section, although I'd still every once in a while have a cigarette on a four- or five-hour flight. But it didn't take very long for the market to dictate to the provider of that service, the airlines, that a nonsmoking flight was a better way to go from a business perspective. Certainly, I think that has kind of shown us the path, if we can manage this situation as we did with seat belts. It's a good idea to wear your seat belt. It's a good idea not to smoke. It's a good idea not to smoke where kids are because we want to protect kids, and that's really what this whole issue is all about: protecting kids, Mr. Chairman.

At the same time, we need to make sure that we are not inhibiting the choice that a municipality may want to make. We've heard from some of our colleagues where municipalities have had plebiscites on this issue and have said that they don't want to go down this road. So I think that we need to establish a base from which the municipalities can build. I think a lot of the municipalities are in a position where they may look at this legislation and say: that's as far as we want to go. Some may look at this legislation and say: we want to add our own bylaw that is going to be stronger than this.

As the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, Mr. Chairman, I've also heard from a number of rural communities, and a number of our colleagues have talked about what this may do to some of our rural communities and our tourism industry. I think it's important that we understand and have some form of cognizance of what this may do to rural Alberta, where maybe there's only one restaurant in town. Maybe the curling rink has always been historically the place that people go. They go upstairs, and they're going to have a cigarette up there because there's alcohol served. I know that many of the members have been in the local curling rink, and most people understand that if they're going to go upstairs, there's going to be smoking there, there's going to be alcohol served, and the kids don't go up there.

I think it's important that we understand that rural Alberta has a lot of common sense to it, as does urban Alberta, and I think we need to let those municipalities, those institutions, really, make that decision based on the market, based on what the residents of the community are looking to have.

So, Mr. Chairman, I guess very briefly to put my comments kind of in summary, I agree that we need to do something. I agree that the amendments that are being proposed here will make this a much better blanket-type legislation for the province from which municipalities can then build on should they so choose, and in that regard I will be supporting the amendments.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to rise and speak to Bill 201, the Smoke-free Places Act. For the past 40 years smoking was far more acceptable because the consequences were not made public. Moreover, there has been plenty of advertising in magazines, on billboards, during sporting events, et cetera, that directly and indirectly encourages smokers.

Smoking is viewed in a different light today. Depending on who you ask, there are groups formed who try to eliminate smoking. There are many commercial interests who want to retain smoking. Some try to argue that smoking laws are an infringement on personal freedom. Some argue that they have the right to a smoke-free workplace.

In the future smoking will likely be viewed in an even different way than today. Smokers will likely be penalized; for example, different health care premiums, different medical coverage. Many smokers will feel ostracized as it may become unacceptable in many social circles to smoke.

There have been many, many intense efforts to help stop young people from beginning to smoke or pushing for the selling of cigarettes to anyone to become illegal. I refuse to go into restaurants or bars where smoking is allowed. Some of these places I would like to go to because they are known for the good foods they serve. I ask for nonsmoking taxicabs. I ask for nonsmoking hotel rooms when I travel. I resent having to walk through the front door of a business where a lot of smokers are gathered. I don't smoke, and we don't allow smoking in our homes.

It is difficult for someone to stop smoking. I have a close friend who has had two cancer operations and is still unable to stop smoking. He is constantly apologizing for continuing to smoke. He goes to great lengths to tell people how he is controlling the habit. He is a sociable individual and I'm sure would dearly like to stop. He's an example of just how terrible this addiction can become.

Mr. Chairman, we all pay higher taxes to cover the medical effects of smoking on people in this province. We need more doctors, hospital facilities, and medical staff. We pay higher insurance premiums as a result of smokers who have caused fires, fire damage. We pay higher education costs for the programs in place to try to stop people from smoking.

Those who chose not to smoke have their health impaired by second-hand smoke. We are unwilling partners in unethical practices when our government invests in tobacco companies for profit, for example the heritage fund.

Workplace smoking bans really work in protecting employees. According to a joint study by the Centres for Disease Control and Prevention and the Rosswell Park Cancer Institute, workplace smoking bans really do work in improving the air quality and protecting employees. In July of the year 2003 New York state introduced a ban on smoking in indoor workplaces and public places as well. According to this study, the ban greatly improved the air quality and reduced exposure of second-hand smoke.

Mr. Chairman, a workplace smoking ban does not hurt businesses. According to the New York City department of health and mental hygiene, in the year 1998 all California restaurants and bars went smoke free. According to the California Board of Equalization, the sales at places selling beer, wine, and liquor increased every quarter in 1998, 1999, and in the year 2000, the last period for which data are available. What's more is the sale increases at all other types of retail outlets. The experience in other jurisdictions is that once a workplace smoking ban is in place, support for it grows among bar patrons.

Again according to the New York department of health and mental hygiene, smoke-free workplace legislation has become increasingly popular. While 65 per cent of bar patrons in California strongly or somewhat approved of the law in 1998, almost three-quarters, 73 per cent, felt that way by 2000. Also, by 2000 87 per cent of bar patrons in California reported that they were as likely or more likely to visit bars since they had become smoke free.

A province-wide workplace smoking ban could even be beneficial to businesses. Businesses with smoke-free policies experience less absenteeism when nonsmoking employees are no longer exposed to second-hand smoke, which can trigger asthma attacks and other respiratory illnesses. Employers also see lower housekeeping and maintenance costs because they no longer need to clean ashtrays, sweep up cigarette butts, replace burnt carpeting, or clean fabrics and other materials nearly as often.

According to Health Canada, in addition to the cost benefits studies show that smoke-free policies reduce costs for cleaning and fire insurance, and there is less damage to equipment and furniture. It is often argued that service industry businesses such as restaurants, bars, and hotels will suffer if smoke-free policies are introduced. However, studies in Canada, the United States, and Australia all show that smoking bans do not result in lost business. Indeed, every objective study using official sales tax data shows that smoke-free policies have a neutral or positive benefit in the long term for businesses such as hotels and restaurants. Smoking cessation programs in the workplace may also achieve substantial cost savings as well as productivity benefits. Workers who have stopped smoking for at least one year lose significantly fewer days of work and have fewer admissions to hospital than those who continue to smoke.

I will vote for this bill only if it offers a total workplace ban without exceptions. As soon as we allow one exception, we will have requests for more. Where do exceptions end? Once we begin allowing them . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, the allocated time for you has run out, I regret.

The chair recognizes the hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm privileged to rise today to continue debate on Bill 201, the Smoke-free Places Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed. Today we're discussing some important amendments that I believe need to go forward. If passed, these amendments will allow people to smoke in a public place if people under the age of 18 are prohibited entry. As a result, the owner of a restaurant would then have the option of allowing smoking or not within their establishment. Under the proposed amendments the people's right to choose would be protected. Without these amendments this Assembly would be restricting the rights of Albertans.

I would point out that the hon. member opposite here indicated earlier that a person does not have a right to smoke. Wouldn't it be lovely if the world were so black and white, and we could take such decisions so easily? The fact of the matter is that governments have to deal with conflicting rights and conflicting interests and find compromise solutions, and I believe that's what this bill represents. I would point out to that hon. member that you don't have a right to enter a bar either.

Personal choice is an important element of our society, Mr. Chairman, and something that this government supports. The role of government should be to enhance personal choice and freedom, not hinder it unnecessarily. It is important that business be allowed to operate without unnecessary restrictions on the choices that they can offer their customers. Businesses should have the ability to choose whether or not they wish to operate as a smoking establishment. The marketplace will then dictate whether a business succeeds or fails. Allowing business the choice between allowing minors in their premises or allowing smoking in their premises will ensure that supply and demand determine the success of a business, not the government. If there is no demand for bars or restaurants that allow smoking, then I'm sure that such establishments will no longer exist. It is doubtful that a businessman would continue to allow people to smoke in his workplace if no customers entered that workplace because it was designated as an establishment that allowed smoking.

Despite the fears the opposition seems to have of a free-market economy, I would not want to live in a society that does not have a free-market economy. Mr. Chairman, the marketplace should determine the success or failure of a business, not the government. That is why it's very important for these amendments to be passed in their entirety.

Mr. Chairman, the government does have an obligation to protect to some extent the health of all Albertans. Skydiving can be dangerous, for example, but we do not prevent people from doing it. We can create regulations to increase the safety of people engaging in that activity. The amendments proposed by the hon. member share this logic by preventing children from entering areas where smoking is permitted.

Every year the Department of Health and Wellness spends a significant amount of money educating Albertans about the negative risks that are associated with exposure to second-hand smoke. From radio and TV advertising to classroom information, every Albertan has been educated to understand the risk of smoking. The government has a responsibility to people to ensure that they are aware of potential risk before they are exposed to that risk. After providing people with information, they can then make informed decisions. This is where personal responsibility enters the equation. The role of government is to provide the necessary information and allow for adults to make an informed decision as to whether or not it is safe to work or visit at facilities that allow smoking. You must be personally responsible for your actions as the government cannot and should not be involved in every aspect of your life.

The government does have responsibility to protect those who cannot protect themselves. In regard to second-hand smoke, children may lack the information necessary and the ability to make informed decisions about whether or not they are safe entering an establishment that allows smoking. It is already illegal for minors to purchase or possess cigarettes, so it makes sense that they be prohibited from entering facilities which allow smoking.

Mr. Chairman, the more laws that are made, the fewer freedoms remain. Personal responsibility is equally as important to the protection of choice as government intervention is. Government is not designed to solve all the ills of society. As government becomes more intrusive in regulating behaviour, it creates more problems than it solves. Gerald Ford once said that if the government is big enough to give you everything you want, it is big enough to take away everything you have. It's important to remember this sentiment when we discuss these amendments on Bill 201.

In its unamended form, Bill 201 leaves no room for personal choice. By amending 201, we can allow for citizens and entrepreneurs alike to make the choice about what is in their own best interest. I firmly believe that individuals are best able to determine their own course of action. Amending this bill, Mr. Chairman, to include allowances for managers and municipalities to decide the smoking issue still protects the children of Alberta. Children will not be allowed in a smoking establishment.

The proposed amendments should be adopted by this Assembly. The long-term goal of reducing smoking is something that I am supportive of. However, I am uncomfortable with the government being overly aggressive and interfering with personal choice. I believe that these amendments will protect children, help reduce smoking over the long term, and preserve the integrity of Alberta's free-market economy.

Mr. Chairman, I would point out that I believe I am acting on behalf of my constituents in taking the stance that I have. As I pointed out to some of the proponents of the smoking bylaw in Peace River, sometimes when you go for all or nothing, you get nothing. I don't deny that there's an evolution going on in society with respect to smoking, but it's far from complete. Smoking is a legal activity, and I believe that the compromise proposed in these amendments represents a fair and reasonable and commendable approach.

In closing, I would ask all members to support these amendments. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My understanding is that we're going to be under time restraints, so I would ask that this friendly amendment be distributed to everybody so they can look at it.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we still have an amendment on the floor, so we have to deal with it.

Mr. Hinman: I'm just going to speak to it. This is just something . . .

The Deputy Chair: We need to resolve the amendment that's before us before we can introduce a new amendment, unless your amendment is a subamendment to what we have before us.

Mr. Hinman: It is.

The Deputy Chair: Is it?

Mr. Hinman: No. I'm not putting that amendment forward. I'll just speak to it, and people are free to pick it up.

The Deputy Chair: You cannot speak to a new amendment.

Mr. Hinman: Okay. I'll speak to this amendment that we're talking about right now.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Go ahead.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. Even if we were to pass the original bill without the amendments, we would still be failing to protect the most vulnerable in our society. The thing that I'm most concerned about here is that we need to protect those who can't protect themselves. We've had some very good points brought up with parents who say they don't smoke around their children, they don't smoke in the house and those areas. A complete workforce ban would be an honourable thing to be working toward, but it seems quite evident that we're not going to achieve that, so we need to make compromises. We're stuck in our society here in a situation where we have a legalized substance that's both addictive and carcinogenic, and we're trying to deal with that in the free market because it is a legalized substance.

The comments that I would like to make are in regard to 3(a), where it says, "No person shall smoke in the following places." Then in the amendment in 5(3)(a) it refers to: "A person may smoke in a public place or workplace or part of a public place or workplace if the manager of the public place or workplace . . ." Then it goes on to give some designated reasoning there. I believe that we need to change that wording and to change it in such a way that it would say: a person may smoke in a public place or workplace or part of a public place or workplace where minors are prohibited by law. If we were to put that in there for section 5(3), it would therefore be much more conclusive in protecting those who cannot protect themselves. I feel that it would be a good move for third reading for the government to consider putting that in there.

I'm greatly concerned with this substance being able to be used of our own free will in the workplace currently. To be able to eliminate that is good, and I would urge that we consider keeping the bill that was originally brought forward but do understand the problem that it is a legal substance.

The other point that I'd like to make is the point of those who cannot protect themselves, and those are minors again. I very much would urge this government to make it an offence to smoke around minors and therefore protect them. Just as we protect them with seat belts and we protect them with bicycle helmets, we should protect them and make it an offence for anyone to smoke around minors in Alberta.

With that, I'll sit down and let the vote go forward. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have spoken in support of the principle of Bill 201 before, and I would like to speak again on the subject of smoking. I had a brother who died early because of disease caused by smoking. He stopped smoking when he realized it was bad, but he was short by two years of seeing his daughter graduate as a medical doctor. It was a very unfortunate situation in the family.

During the previous Legislature I had the honour of carrying the government bill to increase tobacco tax as a preventive measure to keep people from smoking. My preference is to ban smoking in public places and workplaces. This is to protect people from suffering the second-hand smoke impact, particularly protecting people who have not much choice. However, changes in society need transition. From what I've learned in life and from lessons of history, many human behaviours can only be changed effectively permanently by evolution and not by revolutionary measures, which politicians love to take and fail miserably. My experience in law-making tells me that there are many ways to get to the objectives, and we cannot rush with legislative half measures as they affect many constituents with different interests across the province.

Mr. Chairman, I never smoked. I drink tea at home, and we do entertain guests at home over cups of tea. At times . . .

5:10

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, but under Standing Order 8(5)(a)(ii) and 8(5)(b), which state that all questions must be decided to conclude debate on a private member's public bill which has received 120 minutes of debate in Committee of the Whole, I must now put the following question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 carried]

Alberta Ingenuity Fund

503. Mr. Knight moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to consider the advisability of increasing the value of the Alberta ingenuity fund to $1 billion over the 2006-07 and 2007-08 fiscal years.

[Debate adjourned March 21: Mr. Goudreau speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace? Okay.

Anybody else? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to join the discussion surrounding Motion 503, increasing the value of the Alberta ingenuity fund.

Mr. Speaker, Benjamin Franklin once said: "If a man empties his purse into his head, no one can take it [away] from him. An investment in knowledge always pays the best interest." I believe this quotation to be true, and I also believe it applies very well to Alberta's current financial situation.

Alberta is in a good financial position at the moment with strong finances. However, with strong finances come continued requests for funding. Most governments would take this opportunity to spend, fund everyone that asks for money, support absolutely every initiative, but this should not be the nature of a conservative government. Conservatives should follow concepts like fiscal prudence, responsibility, and accountable spending. Although some spending is definitely needed and planned, we must be very careful in choosing where to spend. We have worked too hard in the past decade to blow our good fortune.

Mr. Speaker, adding $500 million to the Alberta ingenuity fund is an example of fiscal prudence, it's an example of careful spending, and it is an example of responsible and accountable financial policy. This is especially true for a province that relies so heavily on its natural resources as a source of wealth. Doubling the size of the ingenuity fund doubles the advantage.

The first advantage to grow the ingenuity fund to $1 billion is that we are essentially using energy revenues to do so. In essence, this gives our province some insurance when good times go bad. If we can no longer rely on our energy revenues and when times really get tough, we will have a billion dollars to have access to. Of course, this is not the full purpose of this fund, but at least this possibility exists for extreme situations.

The second advantage of using energy revenues to add $500 million to the ingenuity fund is that the money raised by this fund can be invested in science, adding value to our resource base. Thus, the money comes full circle, from energy to science related to energy, and the best part is that we don't actually spend the money to do this.

A great example of how this money is used to add value to Alberta's resources is the scholar program. The purpose of this program is to create strong recruitment packages to help Alberta attract the world's best research leaders or emerging leaders. These key people strengthen already outstanding research groups through ingenuity centres or build new research programs in strategic areas that benefit the Alberta economy.

For example, funding from the scholar program has recently attracted two research stars to the University of Calgary. Dr. Pedro Pereira Almaso from Venezuela and Dr. Steven Larter from the United Kingdom are working together as coleaders of the new Alberta Ingenuity Centre for In Situ Energy to study improved methods of recovering and upgrading bitumen resources.

Support from the scholar program was also instrumental in bringing three international scholars to the University of Alberta whose work will have a direct impact on Alberta industry. Dr. Steve Kuznicki was recruited as a top senior scientist to develop separation technology that may lead to a cleaner, more efficient oil sands industry. Dr. David Coltman was recruited to Canada from the United Kingdom to research how the development of natural resources impacts our environment, and additional support is expected to attract high-rated German researchers to research agricultural by-products.

In total, the scholar program supports five international scholars with a commitment of $3.9 million. By doubling the size of the ingenuity fund, this number will also grow. Considering the potentially devastating impact of the Kyoto accord, the importance of these types of research cannot be overstated.

Mr. Speaker, by design the ingenuity fund is very safe. It operates at arm's length from the government, is governed by a board of trustees and headed by a president or CEO. These people work together along with the International Science and Engineering Advisory Council to make decisions as to where the interest from the endowment should go. All research applications are evaluated using a peer review system, and each application is assessed for quality by external experts and a review committee with representatives from Alberta and elsewhere. This is a rigorous process behind every application for funding under the ingenuity fund. It is prudent and responsible, and it produces excellent research and attracts the best people. This creates a snowball effect that benefits all of Alberta's postsecondary institutions, Alberta's economy, and the government. It's truly a win-win situation.

In addition to this, the endowment process is set up so that the fund creates maximum interest. The investment is managed by the investment management division of Alberta Finance. These are professionals whose job it is to ensure that the fund grows at an optimal rate. I am confident that this is a very safe use of the government's money.

The final procedural measure that has been put in place for the ingenuity fund is to ensure that the money is used properly and is accountable. Alberta Ingenuity reports to the public and the government of Alberta through the Minister of Innovation and Science. The fund has an annual report, that is submitted to the Legislative Assembly, and every three years a more comprehensive report is produced. Finally, an international board of review assesses the fund's operation every six years.

Mr. Speaker, as you can see by this process, those that receive funding through the ingenuity fund are the best of the best. They must undergo an impressive amount of scrutiny, and they must produce world-class results. With this type of system in place I cannot think of a more fiscally prudent, responsible place to invest. With these points in mind, I urge all of my colleagues to join me in supporting Motion 503.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I speak in support of the concept of this fund, an ingenuity fund. For far too long Alberta has been dependent on our natural resources, as the hon. member across the way mentioned, and without diversification we're not going to grow.

I had the opportunity along with a number of members to attend the presentation of the Fort McMurray people, and it was a wonderful presentation. There were representatives from health care, from education, and, of course, from a number of the major tar sand oil producers.

One thing painfully obvious, though, is that the producers mentioned the fact they felt that there were at least another hundred years of refineable oil available in the tar sands. The forecasts that I have seen for natural gas, which is used as part of the process for extracting this oil, unfortunately seem to be at the potential of nine years, if that, for gas that's been discovered. Unless we through the ingenuity of this organization come up with alternative methods of extraction, we're going to run out of gas long before we can turn many more barrels of oil. Likewise, we need to be looking through the Ingenuity organization at cleaner ways of producing power.

Kyoto and the problems of Kyoto were mentioned in kind of a disparaging manner. Well, organizations that were represented today – for example, Shell and Suncor, to which I'll add BP Petroleum and Petro-Canada – have already reduced their emissions beyond the level that is required by Kyoto. So we already have technology to reduce CO₂ emissions. Where I would like to see this ingenuity fund come into play is coming up with technology that can deal with the cleaning of our coal.

Apparently, in Alberta we have 200, 300, 500 years of bituminous coal that we need to develop to a greater extent if we're going to continue to progress as a profitable province. This is a very cheap form of energy. The CO₂ that's produced is amongst the lowest amounts world-wide, and we need to tap this resource, but unless we have the knowledge and the ingenuity, which exists in the oil refining process, we're not going to go any further. We need to be using this coal-fired power as a future development for drawing out the oil from the tar sands. As I mentioned earlier, we can't just keep burning natural gas.

Of course, the other problem is where ingenuity is required. While all of these projects are proceeding in the Athabasca area, the accompanying natural gas projects have been shut down for fear that they would be taking pressure away from the necessary extraction. So we have to come up with some form of balance whereby we can use our cheap power, which is certainly not gas, use that cheap coal power to draw the oil out of the sands. We're gifted as a province that we have these resources, but if we don't have organizations such as would be funded by this ingenuity fund to create the new methodology for cleaner, more sustainable development, we're doomed to failure.

This ingenuity fund will hopefully be used to come up with support for health care development, new forms of techniques that will hopefully not only prolong life but prolong the quality of life. We need to be looking at new forms of education. We have to look at not strictly a technical education, Brave New World khaki workers, everybody up to Fort McMurray and the geological developments, but we have to look at visions for Alberta. That vision through the ingenuity fund will provide the education for the scholars, and it is that kind of investment that is absolutely necessary if Alberta is going to progress.

We have blessings, as has been pointed out by the hon. member, in the form of our natural resources, but we have harvested to such a large extent resources such as our timber. We have this habit of sort of mowing down but not keeping up with the replanting. Hopefully, within this ingenuity fund we'll come up with a truly sustainable resource plan because the one we have right now is basically pillage and plunder and let's hope that the consequences don't catch up with us in the near future.

With the ingenuity fund increased to a billion dollars, we have the same sort of principle of investment that the Liberals proposed with the sustainability fund in the first place. As was pointed out by the hon. member opposite, this is money that comes from our current resource development, and it makes absolute investment sense to use this investment to triple our billion dollar initial layout, quadruple, quintuple, et cetera. This is seed money, and the farmer knows the value of seeding the ground and then reaping the crop that is produced. The ingenuity fund will provide this investment money, this seed money, and like the member across the way I am pleased to support the idea. Alberta needs diversification. Alberta needs to progress. We can't simply rerun the old once tried and true examples that no longer apply as we enter the 21st century.

Ingenuity: bring it on.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and good evening. It's a pleasure to rise today and join debate on Motion 503, which urges the government to consider the advisability of increasing the value of the Alberta ingenuity fund to a billion dollars over the next three fiscal years.

The ingenuity of Albertans is the pillar of our province's success, Mr. Speaker. We rely on the inventive skills and imagination of Albertans to drive Alberta's economy, ensuring a prosperous and sustainable standard of living for all of our citizens in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago we heard His Honour the Lieutenant Governor speak about the past hundred years of innovation in Alberta. In his remarks he stated that back in 1905 Alberta was developing a telephone system. Well, in 2005 we see the completion of the SuperNet. When I say that the province's ingenuity is the pillar of Alberta's success, I am referring to examples such as these.

Mr. Speaker, that is a huge accomplishment in a mere 100 years. I'm proud to say that it is the inventive skill and imagination of every Albertan that allows our province to be a world leader in so many areas. I find it extremely important that the Alberta government continues to support and encourage the imagination and innovation of Albertans.

Just think, if we were able to come this far in 100 years, imagine what the next 100 years could bring and will bring if we stay the course and ensure that endowment funds such as the Alberta ingenuity fund continue to grow and continue to provide the necessary funding for current and future research projects. I'm happy that the government of Alberta has recognized this, and through Bill 1 they have committed to increasing the ingenuity fund by $500 million to support basic and applied research in the province. The additional funding will double the size of the fund, building on its activities and accelerating innovation in the province.

That sounds familiar because it's exactly what Motion 503 is urging the government to do. It's good to see that everybody is on the same page on this one. What Motion 503 adds to the commitment made through Bill 1 to double the ingenuity fund is that it complements it by setting a reasonable timeline to accomplish this goal. Motion 503 urges the government to consider doubling the fund, a commitment made by the government through Bill 1, over the 2006-07 and 2007-08 fiscal years. I believe that's a very reasonable timeline, especially if we consider what this type of research means for our province and all Albertans. Remember, telephones to SuperNet.

Not only is the ingenuity fund supported in current government legislation, but it's also part of Alberta's 20-year plan to unleash innovation in the province, as we heard in the 2004 budget, and I hope we'll hear about it again when the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler brings forward the 2005 budget. The Alberta government has said time and time again that the key to maintaining a strong and vibrant economy is the ability to create new opportunities by applying knowledge and technology. But as Albertans work to unleash their full potential, we must also manage our resources wisely for future generations. This is the commitment the province has made through the 20-year plan, to renew the government's commitment to investing in research and innovation that helps provide Albertans with a superior quality of life.

Mr. Speaker, this commitment can be seen every day through examples of continued research into alternate sources of energy, as the hon. member talked about, improving energy efficiencies and pursuing new emissions reduction technologies. In addition, we're seeing new and improved institutions that guide research and innovation as well as link, co-ordinate, and encourage cross-sector research and development in a number of Alberta industries such as information and communications technology, agriculture, environment, forestry, health, and bioenergy. Along with these initiatives we are seeing increased investment in the health research innovation centres in Edmonton and Calgary, the Alberta Heart Institute in Edmonton, the National Institute for Nanotechnology, as well as, as I mentioned before, the finalization of the Alberta SuperNet, which brings high-speed broadband service to Albertans across this province.

Motion 503 complements the past commitments made by the government of Alberta by putting a timeline on doubling the ingenuity fund to a billion dollars over the 2006-07 and 2007-08 fiscal years. I believe this to be a reasonable timeline and an initiative that this Assembly needs to support to ensure that Alberta remains a world leader and the best place to live, work, and play in North America, if not the world.

I encourage all members, Mr. Speaker, to support Motion 503. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in support as well on Motion 503, and I echo many of the statements of the previous speakers on this motion. This process of endowment funds is a wise and prudent use of our surplus in these times of great royalty surpluses and other things that are coming into the process to the government of Alberta and to the people of Alberta.

Perhaps it just doesn't go far enough. The Alberta Liberals worked hard on a surplus policy and spoke at length on it in the last election. The purpose of these things, I think – to look to the future, look to the children, look to developing our economy through the use of our scientific research – is just incredibly important. It has worked for many, many years in medical research. You know, the former Premier in the '70s worked hard at that I think and really established some great precedents, and it has paid off in spades for Alberta, for Albertans, and for Canada – for the world, for that matter.

The types of research that can be brought forward in this I think are really important because they can help in developing the oil sands; they can help in developing the really new technologies in scrubbers in the coal and in the oil sands. You know, some of the stuff in Syncrude and Suncor and Albion Sands over the last decade have been remarkable improvements, and if some projects in terms of research can be brought forward to look at that even more, sequestration of carbon dioxide, we can probably even look to making money off of some of the environmental advances that are possible.

You know, we look to the children. My nephew won a science fair award for Canada for grade 8 on an agricultural project for his science fair. It was phosphorus indicators on BSE prions in a nanotechnology science fair project. That's grade 8. You look at our young Albertans coming up, looking to develop ways to deal with BSE, for example, to identify a cheaper test, an easier test through the use of phosphorus indicators with nanotechnology is incredible.

You know, some of these Alberta kids and some of the people that are brought in to look at these types of research I think can only advance our society and advance our economy and advance the way we do things, not only in the real boom areas like the oil sands but to revitalize agriculture, to look at all the other areas that have been mentioned by some of the previous speakers.

The R and D in Alberta has been low. We have not been coming up to the numbers for the rest of Canada and certainly not to many of the western nations for many years, and I think this can hope to begin to improve that. I again say that I am in support of this motion, and I look forward to it being passed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, but under Standing Order 8(4), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a Motion Other than a Government Motion to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky to close debate on Motion 503.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 503 carried]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, at this time I would seek the unanimous consent of the House to revert to private members' business under private members' public bills, particularly second reading on Bill 203.

Bill 203
Report on Alberta's Legacy Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I'm very pleased to stand and move second reading of Bill 203, the Report on Alberta's Legacy Act, on behalf of my colleague, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

This proposal that is found in Bill 203 is an important part of the Official Opposition Liberal policy that we developed and, in fact, which had great response during the last election. A number of my new colleagues that have been able to join us in the Assembly I think would credit this policy with helping to get them into these seats.

In essence, what's being proposed here, Mr. Speaker, is that we would acknowledge that there was a particular policy of investment for any surplus, so the bill is creating a surplus investment policy. What we are setting forth in the bill is that of any surplus – and we identify what would be the surplus because, of course, we're taking out the $2.5 billion that goes into the sustainability fund. That initial $2.5 billion always goes off into the sustainability fund. Any monies after that would be allocated in the following manner: 35 per cent into the heritage fund . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, we are in Assembly right now. It's not committee stage. People should be seated in their own places, please.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, you may proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was outlining the allocation of surplus funds, and it would be as follows: 35 per cent of any surplus would go into the heritage fund; 35 per cent into an endowment fund for postsecondary education; 25 per cent into a capital account for infrastructure; and 5 per cent into an endowment fund to support the humanities, social sciences, and the arts.

I'm just going to loop back a bit here, Mr. Speaker, and note that the idea of the 35 per cent into an endowment fund for postsecondary education I believe has been picked up by the government and, in fact, was a prominent part of Bill 1, the flagship bill from the government, for their access bill, which was all about a postsecondary endowment fund. So you have the allocation. We know that this appeals to the government at least in part because they've already taken part of what our suggestion would have been.

The second part of what we're looking at being proposed in this bill, Mr. Speaker, is that there would also be a report that's required by the Minister of Finance. At the end of each fiscal year, starting with this fiscal year, March 31, 2005, the bill would require that the Minister of Finance prepare a report on how the financial affairs of the government would have been affected if the surplus investment policy was implemented. It requires that this report that the minister does would be made public, and as you know, that kind of accountability and real transparency is a trademark of the Alberta Liberals, and something we feel very strongly about. We push the government to do the same thing on their side, and we're very happy to lead by example with what we're proposing, in fact, in this bill.

As part of making the bill public, we would require that the report be tabled in the Assembly at the first opportunity, and if the House is not sitting, that a copy would be tabled with the Clerk and a copy made available to each member, which is a process that's available as a way of doing a tabling when we are out of session.

We've also made a provision because the 5 per cent allocation for the endowment fund to support the humanities, social sciences, and the arts is a fairly small allocation, and we've allowed that when that fund exceeds $500 million, then the minister would supplement any additional funds available by allocating back to the other three funds. We lay out a proposal for that there.

Finally, we put in the act that there would be an automatic review of the act at the end of five years from it coming into force. That review would also be submitted to the Legislative Assembly within a year of beginning the review. In other words, five years from now we begin a review process that within a year must be completed.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, I've outlined what's being proposed in the bill, and I think what's important about it is that certainly when I was out during the campaign talking to people door-to-door, people were really captured with the idea of a vision that moved beyond today. Everyone recognizes that we have enormous revenues available to us right now and for the short distant future coming from our natural resources, and what they most wanted to know was: is something going to be done with this money that will have a lasting effect, that would affect my children or my grandchildren or even my great-grandchildren? They wanted to know that it was being planned in a way that we wouldn't just look up 20 years from now and go: "Whoops, what happened to it all? I don't know." They wanted to know that there was something specific that it was being directed towards.

People were really captured, really caught by the idea of allocating it to these various funds. Everybody liked the idea of the postsecondary endowment fund. I suspect that that's why the government has picked up on it and in fact introduced it in their own Bill 1. But they also liked the idea of investing in and expanding the heritage savings trust fund. The choices the government has made over an extended period of time now have not grown the heritage fund. In fact, it's about the same amount of money as it was in 1986 or something, so it hasn't even replenished itself. It hasn't even kept pace with inflation. People really wanted to see that happen; they wanted to see that fund grow. So they like the idea of setting aside a certain percentage of money that would go there.

Certainly, most people recognize the need for investment in infrastructure. I've heard the figure of an $8 billion deficit in infrastructure repeatedly, and we need to work hard to pay off that deficit now. People were certainly willing to give the government credit for paying down that deficit that was owed by the province, but they also were recognizing that in doing so, other deficits were created. One of the big ones was an infrastructure deficit. They really welcomed the idea of directing a certain portion of any surplus towards addressing those problems that have been created.

Finally – and this is a particular interest of mine – we have a lot of interest and there is certainly a lot of encouragement from the government right now to invest and bring in other partners to enhance our postsecondary educational institutions. I always have a caution there because there's a worry that we end up basically having mortarboard factories, that we're producing little engineers and little nurses and they all come out like little widgets, rather than concentrating on a good education and the ability to think and research.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak in second reading to Bill 203.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I join the debate on Bill 203, Report on Alberta's Legacy Act. In reading this bill, I fail to find where and how it would benefit Albertans.

As members of this Assembly we have been entrusted with the solemn duty to represent our constituents' interests as well as the interests of all Albertans. I believe that each of us here is working in the interest of our constituents regardless of what side of the Chamber we sit on. Often there are disagreements about how to best serve this province and what course of action will offer Albertans the greatest benefit, but I believe that we are all working towards the same goal. This goal of working for Albertans has been evident in almost all of the legislation that I have seen in this Chamber, even those which I don't agree with. I'm sad to say that this has come to an end with Bill 203. Mr. Speaker, Albertans will realize absolutely no benefit from passing Bill 203. None.

This bill asks the government to prepare a yearly report on what might happen if the government directed a possible surplus in a specific way. This bill is so fraught with errors that I hardly know where to begin. The bill asks the Legislative Assembly to approve the perpetual funding of research into an Alberta Liberal election platform. Perhaps next the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar will put a bill before the Assembly asking the government how the Alberta party can pay off their debt.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is requesting that Alberta taxpayers pay to research an idea the opposition was trying to convince Albertans to accept not five months ago as being viable for the future of this province. I find this exceptionally suspect. First, asking taxpayers to pay for a campaign tool calls into question the ethical implications of this bill. Secondly, putting forward this bill essentially states that the Liberals have no idea what effect this policy would have on our province had they actually formed the government. I guess this shows that the members over here feel that touting some plan, any plan, is fine even if you don't know the consequences. Plans such as these would endow Albertans with quite a legacy. Quite a legacy indeed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, all questions of intent aside, I have a great many concerns about the content of the Report on Alberta's Legacy Act. Firstly, I am uncertain of what, if any, benefit would be realized by creating a report on something that the government is not currently engaged in or looking to as a possibility. It would seem that this report would be superfluous, especially in the face of the numerous budget documents that the government currently publishes. The budget, quarterly updates, and the annual report all give to Albertans a detailed accounting of the government's expenses and clearly outline the government's spending priorities.

Discounting the fact that creating a report of this nature would not benefit Albertans, I will briefly discuss the investment plan around which the report would centre. This act is focused on the use of Alberta's budget surpluses, and I would like to begin my comments here. At the risk of sounding redundant, I feel that it is necessary to point out that unbudgeted surpluses are exactly that: unbudgeted. They constitute unpredicted and largely unpredictable excess revenue coming into our provincial coffers. The majority of revenue streams on which a government traditionally draws are largely predictable. Corporate and personal income tax revenue, investment revenue, and most other revenue streams can be predicted. However, natural resource revenue is volatile and generally difficult to predict.

The budget surpluses that Alberta has enjoyed in the recent past are directly related to energy prices. Past experiences have proven these prices to be exceptionally volatile, and they tend not to be sustainable for long periods of time. So while we have recently had the good fortune to enjoy surpluses, they cannot be predicted with any degree of certainty into the future, and to suggest that they could would be certainly foolhardy. What would be even more foolhardy would be to entrust the realization of Alberta's priorities to budget surpluses. Yet this is what Bill 203 appears to do.

This bill would dedicate surpluses to the heritage fund, two funds dedicated to postsecondary education, and the capital account. These are concerns that have been raised by Albertans, and consequently they are being addressed by the provincial government. Mr. Speaker, postsecondary education has been identified by Albertans as being one of their top priorities. Alberta's future strength as a member of the dominion as well as a member of the international community is dependent upon the diversification of our economy. We can use our current and historical strengths in primary industries to build secondary and tertiary industries here at home.

Alberta's postsecondary education system is good, but there's always room for improvement. The provincial government has responded to this by bringing forward fiscally prudent and financially viable strategies to ensure that Alberta students will never be at a loss for postsecondary education due to spaces or financial circumstances. The creation of a fund dedicated to postsecondary learning, increasing the value of the Alberta heritage scholarship endowment fund, and increasing the value of the Alberta ingenuity fund exemplify the government's continued commitment to postsecondary learning in our province.

It is important to note that these initiatives are not dependent on the posting of a budget surplus to be achieved. The government is not gambling the future of Alberta's postsecondary institutions on $57 a barrel oil and equally high natural gas prices. Bill 203 has all the appearances of doing just that. Albertans have said that provincial infrastructure is an issue which needs to be addressed. The government has responded by committing an initial $3 billion to municipalities to assist in relieving pressure on their infrastructure system. Again, this measure is not dependent upon a budget surplus to ensure that this happens.

Mr. Speaker, a provincial budget surplus due to higher than predicted energy levels is a great thing. It indicates that Alberta's economy is on track and that Albertans are in a position to benefit from resource revenues. However, a budget surplus is not something to build future spending upon; nor is it something that can be depended upon. Albertans learned this lesson 20 years ago, and we are quite unlikely to forget it.

Mr. Speaker, passing Bill 203 would enact a law that would require a report on something that may or may not exist five to 10 years from now. That would be quite the report to have tabled in the Legislature. I can see the title now: Report on Budget Surplus that Does Not Exist.

Because of these few reasons that I have outlined as well as other reservations, I will vote against Bill 203. It is a law that will not realize benefit for Albertans and therefore serves no real purpose.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Another name for this act could be: A Future Formula. The hon. member who spoke before me suggested that surpluses in the future were not a guaranteed circumstance. Yet tonight we've been talking about vision, we've been talking about ingenuity, and we've been talking about renewal. I mentioned earlier on the notion that we heard from the members of Suncor, Shell, and a number of the plants that are working up in the tar sands, that they estimate that there are billions of barrels and therefore multibillions of dollars discovered, waiting to be extracted, and this is what our act is looking at.

In terms of value for money, this government over the last 12 years in royalties alone, oil and gas royalties, earned $69 billion. Is there some sense that this government is going to stop managing the affairs of this province to the point where these record surpluses will no longer be there? That's what the member has suggested, that all of a sudden these surpluses are going to dry up and that we can't count on them.

What the Alberta Liberal Party is doing, rather than looking back, is looking forward. We're looking at the basis of research that has been provided by a variety of oil exploration companies, by a variety of natural gas companies. They've indicated to us that we're not at the end of the boom; we're basically at the middle or the beginning of it. If we can sustain the types of exploration and extraction, keeping in mind doing it in a safe, environmental manner, then basically the sky is the limit.

Premier Lougheed created the heritage trust fund. That was a vision. We're building upon Premier Lougheed's vision, and we're saying: let's take that vision, but let's not only build the heritage trust fund, which we would do by the expenditure of 35 per cent of future surpluses. We would also deal with the problem that, unfortunately, the government has failed to deal with, and that is the growing infrastructure problem. Three billion dollars over five years is not going to even deal with past projects, never mind keeping up with present and future projects. We need a guaranteed revenue source beyond just the general revenue. We can't keep upping health care taxes indefinitely. The government in its wisdom forgave seniors having to pay premiums, but we have to now come up with some other way of supplementing that income, and it's through ingenuity and through vision that we'll do this.

The idea that this is not a visionary move, that it's questionable, that we don't have the facts and figures: there's a reality. With the exception of one postsecondary constituency in the southern part of this province, every other postsecondary constituency obviously bought into the idea of a legacy fund.

I, for example, represent the constituency of Calgary-Varsity, in which stands the University of Calgary. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie represents Mount Royal College, which we hope will soon receive university status with funding based on our legacy fund. We have another representative from Calgary-Mountain View, who represents the Southern Alberta Institute of Technology and the arts college. Of course, Edmonton-Centre: Grant MacEwan College, Alberta College, NorQuest. We have our hon. leader representing the constituency of the University of Alberta and on and on and on. Each of the postsecondary institutions, at least seven out of the eight, are represented by an alternative viewpoint, which obviously sold in this past election or we wouldn't be here.

This formula for the future spells out the answer to a number of problems that have been created by this government. First off, it deals with postsecondary. It offers 35 per cent. It doesn't offer it as a one-time. It doesn't offer it as a "Here's your $3 billion." It doesn't say, "We'll temporarily freeze tuition for the fall of 2005, but, you know, we're going to review it." What it offers is in perpetuity, into infinity. As long as we manage our resources and provide a continual royalty stream, then we can rebuild the institutions.

That's where the vision is lacking. We've talked about $3 billion. The government has talked about $3 billion for infrastructure over five years. The government has talked about $3 billion in terms of postsecondary. But these are one-shots. These aren't into perpetuity. They're not into the future. They do not address infrastructure.

In fact, the three of us from Calgary had a meeting this past Friday with representatives from the Southern Alberta Institute of Technology. They talked about their infrastructure problems. We've had similar meetings with the University of Calgary. We've had meetings with Mount Royal. We had meetings with – I'm trying to think of the name of the institution that provides postsecondary training – Bow Valley College. Excuse me for temporarily forgetting that name. But these various organizations have come up with unique ideas of joint shared responsibility where all campuses could come together in a downtown version where Bow Valley College, the U of C, Mount Royal, SAIT, the College of Art could all be sharing space in a very novel approach. That requires funding. That requires vision. So we have provided that vision with the 35 per cent we've suggested for postsecondary.

Infrastructure, the area that I'm the critic for. It has been brought out numerous times that it's an $8 billion deficit. Well, I would suggest that that deficit is closer to the $10 billion surplus that we're projected to receive this year. Unless we start dealing with the past problems, if we don't deal with the operating grants of the colleges, if we don't fix the decaying infrastructure that they're currently experiencing, we can't move ahead to the future.

That is why as a Liberal party in the election when we went door to door, we suggested that there be 25 per cent of future surpluses set aside for infrastructure because we recognize that it's basically been abandoned for the last 12 years. The beauty of setting aside 25 per cent, which when you look at it in terms of these dollars that were existing, would be in the area of $2,500,000,000 of this projected surplus that we're talking about for this fiscal year. Can you imagine what we could do in terms of repair? In fact, $2,500,000,000 in a single year would be almost the equivalent of what our honoured members are proposing for a three- to five-year plan. Three billion over five years. Here, in a single year we could accomplish that.

That's the type of vision we need to be looking at, a vision that takes us into the future by first dealing with the past. Repair the mistakes, repair the neglect, build the various areas back to the state that they were prior to us dumping all our money into paying off the deficit and the debt. These are great, lofty ideas. We've had billions of dollars, but we're now still setting aside money to pay it off eight years from now based on the slow process of paying it off.

One of the biggest areas – this is another area of concern for me personally because I'm also the critic for parks and protected areas. I give credit to the idea that they're talking about a $42 million investment in tourism. That's a great idea, but what happens when they get here? What happens when they drive out into the wilderness, and they see the deteriorated condition of our parks and protected areas?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to join debate on Bill 203, the Report on Alberta's Legacy Act. Since becoming MLA for the constituency of Battle River-Wainwright in 2002, I've read and spoken to many pieces of legislation, including numerous private members' bills and motions. There have been plenty of good and timely pieces of legislation that generally addressed important issues affecting Albertans. Many helped raise awareness or potential concerns. Others served to improve how this province is run and managed.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, there have also been some not so timely or helpful pieces of legislation that not only didn't help address any issues or needs in particular but, in my humble opinion, wasted the time and the resources of this Legislature, time and resources which could have been devoted to other, more important issues such as rural development.

Having said this, I do not want to point fingers at any particular side of this House, Mr. Speaker. We've all been guilty of this. However, I am a firm believer that we as representatives of the people of this province should bring forward and pass laws that make a real difference to Albertans so that when the legislative session wraps up, we can be proud not of the number of laws we passed but, rather, the quality of laws enacted.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 falls in the category of bad private member's legislation. It is not the most efficient use of our time and resources. I say this because not only does Bill 203 deal with fiction, but worst of all it deals with bad fiction. The entire Liberal bill calls for a coulda, woulda, shoulda report. This should be called the Liberal Hindsight Report: Governing out of Your Rear-view Mirror.

We already have a report that tells how our financial decisions impact this province. It's a very good report, Mr. Speaker, one that is thoroughly informative and, most importantly, based on a true story. It's called the government of Alberta annual report, and I invite my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar and the members of this House to give it a read. It reflects the favourable fiscal situation Alberta currently finds itself in, i.e. the best place in Canada to live, and it is indicative of what our province has been able to accomplish through responsible fiscal policies and careful use of taxpayers' dollars.

The report also is a reflection of the fact that this government does not deal with fictitious situations and what-ifs. It's a reflection of the fact that the government's role is to govern and govern effectively by making sound fiscal decisions. Wasting time pontificating on what might have been is not a Conservative practice. Should we adopt this bill and pontificate about the choices this member would like to see made? Perhaps we should do several reports evaluating multiple scenarios. Perhaps we could have 83 different reports. Where would it stop, Mr. Speaker? And what would be the benefit to Albertans?

Mr. Speaker, the government needs to make the best decision possible with the information available and not constantly second-guess and pontificate to the point of becoming Mr. Dithers. That's the Liberal thing to do, not the Conservative way. The opposition can govern by hindsight saying, "We would have done it differently," but that's always looking back. That's always hindsight. To be honest, we know one thing for sure: even without this bill the Liberals would have spent, spent, and spent some more regardless of the revenues.

Albertans expect the government to be responsible and sensible with the funds they endow us, and it is in turn the responsibility of the government to give back to Albertans as much as possible through promotion of our economy, job creation, effective public services, and lower taxes. I know this is completely foreign to the Liberal agenda, but wouldn't it be logical to perhaps use portions of future surpluses to relieve the tax burden upon Alberta's families? After all, the whole concept of a surplus, Mr. Speaker, is that we took more than we needed. With the debt paid off, this is an opportune time to give back to Albertans what is rightly theirs.

Having said this, we on this side of the House and our Conservative colleagues across the way believe that the best place for Albertans' hard-earned money is in their own pockets because it is them and not us who ultimately make the best decisions as to where this money should be spent. Consequently, I believe that in times when we have large surpluses, the government should take it upon itself to consider taking a portion of the surplus and devoting it toward some type of tax relief. This is almost necessary as the federal Liberals tax us and all Canadians because they can only spend, spend, and spend some more regardless of revenues.

I agree that we have to continue to support and invest in our education system, maintain and expand our infrastructure, and contribute more investment dollars to the heritage savings trust fund, and we're doing it. We don't need another report to tell us what will happen.

As I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, we have a report that tells us what happened over the past years as a result of our prudent fiscal policies. As a matter of fact, this year we have made a final move on our debt and eliminated one of the major fiscal liabilities that has been hanging over the heads of Albertans for decades. We will establish the access to the future fund, which will help us invest into our higher learning system and ease the cost burden on our students. As was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, the government will strive to create 60,000 new postsecondary spaces by the year 2020, 15,000 of which will be created over the next three years.

From the investment side, we will inflation-proof the heritage savings trust fund, which will grow the account over time and provide us further investment income to fund priorities including health care, education, infrastructure. Despite what federal or provincial Liberals in this country want to do, Mr. Speaker, we'll provide opportunity for us to allow tax relief to Albertans.

From the infrastructure side, the government has transferred $1.1 billion into the capital account from the sustainability fund and is working with our municipal partners to alleviate the municipal infrastructure debt by providing a further $3 billion directly to municipalities, Mr. Speaker.

We will also be further supporting our postsecondary education system by investing in humanities, social sciences, and arts through the proposed access to the future fund, which will generate an estimated income of $135 million a year, every year, to advance postsecondary education opportunities in Alberta including those in humanities, social sciences, and arts. As well, Mr. Speaker, the government will create the Lois Hole humanities and social sciences scholarship program, which beginning in the next academic year will provide some Albertans with a $5,000 scholarship toward his or her postsecondary studies.

As you can clearly see, contrary to what the Liberal opposition would have Albertans believe, we are investing intelligently and responsibly in Alberta's priority areas. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, for the last 30 years Albertans have trusted the PC government to manage the public money wisely and responsibly. I suggest the Liberal opposition write their own fictional Liberal report outlining could have, should have, and would have. Might I even suggest a title: What Ifs and What Nots, Liberal Ideas in the Absence of Reality.

For reasons I have outlined in my remarks, Bill 203 is a reflection of bad legislation, one that is redundant and out of touch with reality in almost every way, Mr. Speaker. With this in mind, I cannot support Bill 203, and I urge all sensible members of this House to join me in doing the same.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words on Bill 203 here this evening. It's a little bit confusing, I think, for us over here on the ND side because, of course, between Bill 1 and Bill 203, while there seems to be a great gap, a chasm of differences here as outlined by the previous members, in fact as far as we're concerned, both Bill 203 and Bill 1 are more similar than dissimilar. May I remind the Member for Battle River-Wainwright where, in fact, these monies do come from.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

Second Reading

Bill 11
Stettler Regional Water Authorization Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to move second reading of Bill 11, the Stettler Regional Water Authorization Act.

Albertans are becoming increasingly aware of the value of a safe, secure water supply. For many communities across the province, particularly in southern and central Alberta, water is blue gold. Specifically, Mr. Speaker, nine communities in the county of Stettler are facing serious potential drinking water shortages because of drought and increased growth. The Stettler Regional Water Authorization Act will allow Alberta Environment to issue a water licence to transfer treated drinking water from the town of Stettler to these communities. This will ensure that approximately 6,000 Albertans living in the communities of Donalda, Big Valley, Rochon Sands, White Sands, Byemoor, Endiang, Erskine, Nevis, and Red Willow will have access to the safe, secure water supplies they need to survive and to thrive.

Because some of these communities are in the Battle River basin, which is located in the North Saskatchewan River basin, Mr. Speaker, and the town of Stettler's water source is the Red Deer River basin, which is located in the South Saskatchewan River basin, this special act of the Legislature is required. The transferred water will be treated drinking water, not raw water, so there will be little risk of interbasin transfer of biological organisms.

Public consultations conducted throughout the region by the Stettler regional water services committee show support for this proposal. Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to ensuring safe, secure drinking water supplies for all Albertans. It is the key goal of Water for Life, which is North America's most comprehensive water strategy.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me remind this House that secure water leads to healthy local economies. Sustainable water leads to people and business choosing to invest in the local community. This bill will ensure a safe, secure water supply for approximately 6,000 Albertans across nine communities in central Alberta. I'm pleased to have support from the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler for this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand in discussion of the second reading of Bill 11, Stettler Regional Water Authorization Act. The bill authorizes the transfer of water between the South Saskatchewan River basin and the North Saskatchewan River basin as has been indicated. This is due to the fact that the Stettler region has been experiencing problems with quantity and quality of water from their existing potable water supplies, and the licence is for a transfer.

We must recognize, however, and we have in a number of places in our policy recognized, the danger in the precedent and, in this case, the repeat of this kind of a transfer between basins. Such decisions especially have to be made with caution due to some environmental issues, health issues, and clearly the questions around sustainability of this kind of a practice. Is this a one-time intervention, or is it a preamble to permanent interbasin transfers? Is there any reason to think that the kinds of water conditions that we've experienced in the last few years in the presence of climate change are going to improve? How are communities going to maintain themselves in the absence of this until and unless we as government and members address what is a sustainable water supply in a particular area?

I alluded to the fact that this was a repeat. In 2002 the government passed Bill 33, the North Red Deer Water Authorization Act, which was exactly the same and had a greater volume of water, in fact, transferred to some different communities.

I have some questions about it. How will the water be used? Alberta Environment is the provincial department responsible for water resources and under the Water Act governs the allocation and management of water and requires individuals, corporations, and municipalities to apply for a licence that authorizes the diversion or use of a specific amount of water, surface or groundwater. Under each licence a set amount of water is allocated, which represents the maximum amount of water that can be used or diverted. All allocations and licences remain under the authorization of the province.

Alberta Environment evaluates the water licence application based on the potential impact of a new licence on the needs of the environment, the amount of water that needs to remain in the watershed, the amount of water required to meet the apportionment agreements, and the amount of water being used by existing water users. There are already areas in the province where maximum allowable allocations and even above-maximum allocations have been reached. As Alberta grows and water demand rises, this evaluation process becomes absolutely critical that we get it right.

The Alberta Liberal opposition in general is opposed to interbasin transfers. The rationale is that they are potentially environmentally damaging, and they are extremely expensive. In general, major water diversions and storage projects significantly compromise aquatic and other ecosystems. They're not an acceptable alternative to sound conservation practices. They are, indeed, a crisis management and a challenge to all of us to learn and to plan to live within the limits of our resources in a sustainable fashion.

In addressing supply issues, interbasin transfers are unacceptable as an alternative to conservation and planning, and the use of interbasin transfers as a management tool is contrary to the government's own Water for Life strategy, based on the goal of watershed level management. Any need for interbasin transfers indicates a failure of water management planning.

We cannot plan for every crisis, but repeat requests must raise serious questions about our capacity to manage. Here are some of the questions. Does the new transfer affect the rights of existing licensees? What is the impact of the transfer on aquatic and riparian ecosystems? What is the possibility that it may lead to nonnative species entering watercourses with possible negative impacts on the new water system, recreational and commercial fishing, and other ecosystem health?

Planning requires adequate data. This is another area that we need to address. There is a lack of adequate data in Alberta Environment to determine how much water is actually being used. There are records kept on how much water is allocated, but it's not clear how much is actually used, and it's impossible to create a water conservation plan without an inventory of what's there and how much we actually use, both surface and groundwater. This is absolutely vital to move forward in a sustainable way.

Another concern is the commodification of water under these licences. This bill, which allows an interbasin transfer between the North and South Saskatchewan river basins, could force Canada to export water under the NAFTA bills that authorize the transfer of water between major river systems even within Alberta, and this could open up the trade agreements to water exports and access by trade agreement partner countries to Alberta water. I don't know about that as a reality, but I need to be reassured that this is not the case. The transfer of water in its natural state can be seen to make water into a product much the same as oil and gas and allow it to be subject to international trade agreements and commercialization.

The objection, then, that needs to be raised must address the failure of the province to implement a watershed level management strategy that would be sustainable into the long-term future. We must move forward on the water strategy, and there needs to be more investment in this in our view.

Having given those provisos, it seems clear that for humanitarianism and the case of sustaining these communities, we may have little choice this time, but I did feel the need to register serious objections to this being a repeat of a previous problem that has apparently not resulted in the kind of changes that we would like to see for a sustainable water management plan.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

9:10

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Thanks to my colleague for Calgary-Mountain View for laying out the concerns that he has as the Official Opposition environment critic around this bill. I note his caution at the end.

Boy, I'm really uneasy about this bill, Mr. Speaker. I have to admit this. It's one of those awful catch-22 situations. I mean, I know that we are talking about water for citizens of Alberta who need it because their own water system is no longer potable or is not reliable. But on the other hand, you start fooling around with Mother Nature, and she's going to get you. When you start talking about interbasin water transfers, that's what we're doing. We're fooling around here. To continue my analogy, if Mother Nature was going to effect these kinds of interbasin transfers, it would have happened over a very long period of time and quite possibly not connecting these two water basins.

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View, you know, talks about the possibility of nonnative aquatic species entering different watercourses and the effects that can have. In fact, we know from infestations that have happened in other parts of the world what starts to happen. We had that whole thing with the zebra mussels in the Great Lakes and enormous environmental and economic repercussions as a result of that. So this is a very, very difficult situation, and I honestly couldn't tell you right now if I was going to vote to support this bill or not.

I'm really concerned that I don't see an overarching plan coming from the government that really integrates the rural strategy, or whatever they're calling it, their rural enhancement, the rural pep-it-up strategy. I don't see it being integrated with an economic strategy, with an environmental strategy. I see all of these things operating separate from one another, and I think that is very dangerous for us, and I think that results in the situation we get here.

This is now the second time that there's been an interbasin water transfer requested of this Assembly. I know that I spoke to this last time with the same kind of reservations, and I think that in the end I ended up voting against it because I was concerned that this is what would happen, that we would end up with a second and maybe a third and maybe a fourth request coming through to here. We cannot go forward like this.

It is not giving us any kind of a conservation strategy, and I think we really have to question – this is the difficult part, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to put the question out there anyway because I think we have to think about it. I don't want to go to any community – and I don't even know these communities, to be honest with you – and say: you don't deserve to exist. I don't think that's the question, but I do think we have to say: if we have them situated in a place where the land itself will not support them, should we be making extraordinary efforts to now change that very land, that very water system, aquatic system, water table system in order to keep those people in that place? Maybe that isn't a great place to have people living. Maybe there are other better uses for it that wouldn't involve fooling around with Mother Nature so much.

I don't see those kinds of questions being asked and answered here, and it may well be that there is no answer, Mr. Speaker. You can tell that I'm struggling over this. Maybe there is no answer to this, but I'm really concerned when I just see: "Well, we'll do it again. We did it before; we'll just do the same thing again." I've seen nothing else happen in the interim.

I'm sorry; that's not quite true. In fact, the Water for Life policy was introduced between the last time we talked about an interbasin water transfer for Red Deer and what we're looking at today. That Water for Life, I would have said, as I understood it when I read it – and I did read it – that it would have precluded this. So I'm not understanding how we could have that Water for Life policy brought in and then have another request for an interbasin water transfer because that Water for Life was talking about managing for the long term. It was talking about managing for ecology.

To be honest, Mr. Speaker, we don't even know how much water we have. We know how much is above ground. We don't know how much water is below ground, yet we are embarking and we're taking another step here, saying, "Okay, we'll move waterways around and access to water around in this province," which is what's being contemplated here, when we still don't know how much water we've got. We're not going back and saying: is this appropriate?

Let me give you another example of what I'm talking about. We keep making choices to plant grass, not even particularly prairie wild grass, definitely not prairie wild grass. In some cases we still plant Kentucky bluegrass in our boulevards and along the side of our freeways. And what does that mean? Well, that kind of grass requires a lot of water. So now we've got to water the dang stuff, and we've got to cut it, and it costs our municipalities money to control that now. Why do we keep planting species of grass that requires water to keep it going when the natural water that falls isn't enough to keep it in good shape?

There are choices like that that we're making that I have to really question and say: Why do we keep doing this stuff just because we did it before? Maybe we should be looking at some other kind of groundcover that doesn't require a gas-powered lawnmower and the staff to run over it once a week to cut it down. Then we've got to have watering trucks come out and water it if it doesn't get enough natural rainfall. That's just bad planning, in my opinion, and it's certainly not conservation.

So I'm really torn with what's being proposed here because I don't see any improvement, and I don't even see the government following its own Water for Life management strategy in bringing forward this proposal. I see it responding to the requests, I'm sure the heartfelt dire requests, of these towns and villages to get them potable water so they can keep living where they're living. But I don't see it coming with it in this bill. I mean, let's face it, Mr. Speaker; the bill is one page and two sentences. So I don't see coming in this bill anything else that's talking about a larger strategy. I don't see anything that is addressing any other kind of water conservation to reduce the amount of water that would be required.

If we're going to take it as a given that the government's decision is, "We will bring water to these locations; we will provide that water to them," I would have thought that along with that would go, "Okay, and while we're doing that, we're going to have a conservation plan in place so that less water will be required." Could there be initiatives for the kind of plants that were there so that they didn't require additional water or a requirement to collect rainwater or grey water to wash people's cars and water the plants in their front yard?

There's no attempt at recognition that water is a finite source. It is a finite source, and we're doing nothing to try and conserve our usage of it or to cut it down in any way, shape, or form. We just go: "Oh, gee, you're out of water. Let us get you some more from somewhere else.” Well, what do you do when somewhere else starts to run out of water? Then are we going to have another bill back here saying: okay, we’re now going to move water from place A to place B to place C? When does it end? There’s no other policy that’s being talked about in conjunction with all of this that starts to move this in the other direction.

I think we do need to have the discussion about, you know: do we want to continue with a rural strategy that says that even if you’re living in a place that the land doesn’t support anymore, we’ll now bring everything to you to continue to allow you to live there? Would those people have a better quality of life if they had incentives to move somewhere else that didn’t require that kind of extraordinary support? I don’t see that being discussed. I just see a mentality here of, “Well, we did it before, so we’ll do it again,” that I think is wrong, and I think it’s dangerous.

So I’ll be listening intently to the other speakers on this bill to see if I can find any reassurance for myself from the other speakers on the government’s side that this request is part of a larger cohesive strategy that brings together environmental conservation concerns, the Water for Life management strategy, the rural strategy, and some of the other things that I’ve talked about here. If I don’t hear that kind of thing, I’m going to find it difficult to vote in support of this bill because I just don’t see the government doing the job they’re supposed to be doing. But at the same time I’m really aware that this is, you know, a legitimate need from the people that live there and is really going to affect them, and I feel for them. I don’t want to cut them off unnecessarily, but I don’t see anything else happening that would stop this situation from being recreated.

So I’m looking forward to hearing the rest of the speakers on this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) kicks in. Any questions or comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. I listened with a great deal of interest to her concerns in regard to this bill. I certainly didn’t hear it from the other side of the House, so perhaps you can help me, hon. member. Will this bill, which is similar to the one that we discussed here two years ago, the North Red Deer Water Authorization Act, force Canada at some time to export potable water to the United States? Do you have any concerns about that?

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Good question. It’s a good question, and it’s one that should also be considered as part of the mix that I was talking about there because that is a concern, that as soon as you sell water ever, it’s already in NAFTA that then everybody gets to sell water. So what we have to be very careful about here is that we don’t accidentally or deliberately stumble into putting a price tag on any of this.

Where that gets close for us is metering. Metering is part of the conservation effort, but metering is about saying that you need to know how much water you’re using so that you can use less of it and that we have some kind of a benchmark and a measurement of it, not that we would then use the metering to charge people for water. Right now what we do with metering is charge people to get water to them. It’s for the transportation or the distribution, but it’s not for the actual water.

We have to be very, very careful about that. We always forget, but that was prenegotiated in NAFTA. It’s quite clear that as soon as anybody sells water – it’s why everybody gets so nervous when in Newfoundland, another big island close to where Edmonton-Gold Bar came from, they start talking about dragging the icebergs and melting them and selling that. Same problem. As soon as they do that, it opens it up for everybody else in Canada. So everyone sits there holding their breath, waiting for that one to pass by again and hope that nobody actually does it. But it’s a serious concern because we would all be affected by it.

I’m sorry, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to address that.

The Acting Speaker: Any other questions or comments?

There being none, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier on I had not intended to stand up and talk about this bill, but I feel that I must say a few things. I’m from Lacombe-Ponoka, and we’re just going through the process of building a waterline from Red Deer to Blackfalds to Lacombe to Ponoka and possibly to the First Nations at Hobbema. Many of these questions that are being asked by the members on the Liberal side here have been asked and dealt with on the waterline that we’re building from Red Deer north.

Some of the questions about the transfer of organisms and biological organisms from one basin to another have been answered. The water is being treated twice. First of all, when the water is used, it is treated in Red Deer for Lacombe, and I think in Stettler it will also be treated. So the water that is being distributed to different households and consumers will be treated. It’ll be filtered, and it’ll be chlorinated or treated so that there will be no organisms in it. Once the water has been used, it goes back into a waste-water treatment facility. It’ll be treated again before it’s released into the other basin. So there’s absolutely no possible way that any biological organisms can travel from one basin to the other unless there is some kind of a breakdown in the system, and that probably won’t happen because it goes through your tap first or your waste-water system first. So that is not a problem.

The concern about the use of water, the amount of water that’s in the river and that’s actually available for use, has been dealt with. The hon. members of the Liberal Party are concerned that there’s not enough water in the river. In fact, we have a strategy in Alberta where we have storage dams. We store water on the Red Deer River in the Dickson dam. This stores water from the spring runoff and holds it there for the entire season. This water then is being used for the city of Red Deer, other towns and villages both north and south. There’s the Anthony Henday pipeline, I think, that goes south to Olds and some towns south. This has been in use for many years. The water storage looks after Red Deer, and it looks after all the petrochemical plants in Joffre and Prentiss in the Lacombe county. So there’s plenty of water there.

Under the agreements that we have interprovincially half of the water that’s in all of our rivers that go across the border must go to Saskatchewan. So the Red Deer River, half of that water must go to Saskatchewan. I think at this point about half of the remaining water is allocated to the municipalities that already use it and some agriculture users. Of the balance that’s not allocated, I think the Red Deer north system uses about 1 per cent of the flow of the river. So there’s an adequate amount of water there. The Stettler system is actually less than 1 per cent, is less than the amount that’s going to the Lacombe/Ponoka system. So I believe there is enough water.

This has been studied extensively. There are many, many years of records that are available that show that the water is adequate and there is plenty of flow even in the lowest times. I can just tell you from the experience of the town of Lacombe that they are currently using about a billion litres of water per year. This is not an unusually high amount of water per person. It’s about 220 million gallons for 10,000 people, and the aquifers that the town currently draws water from can handle about 7,800 people.

So what happens if you have natural growth and natural development in an area? Lacombe is more than a hundred years old. You can't stop development, so there are more and more people, and there is more and more demand on the aquifers. At some point you actually start to mine the aquifers, and the aquifers start to go down. This affects the water in the outlying areas: the rural areas, farms, and acreages that are near the town. This is happening in all these places, in Stettler and some of these other towns that are mentioned. It happens in Blackfalds, in Ponoka, as well as in Lacombe. What it does is it starts to affect the wells on the farms that are near the town. This is a problem that has been recognized for some years.

The solution is to manage your water, build these dams on the rivers. We have a dam on the North Saskatchewan River for Edmonton. We have them on the Bow River and the South Saskatchewan and the Oldman rivers for these different municipalities. We've been doing this for many years. Now it's the turn of the people in central Alberta. They must be able to access this water. There are other plans for water in Alberta to promote rural development. If we do not do this, you actually have to start depopulating these areas. I don't think that any member across the floor would say: you should go first, or you should go first. I don't see anybody putting their hand up and volunteering to leave these areas because these are good areas to live.

The water is there. We must use it judiciously. We must be very concerned about the environment, and I appreciate their concern, but I think the questions have been answered. They talk about: how will we ever limit the use of water? Price will limit the use of water. The cost of the service will limit the use of the water. If you have to pay a dollar and a half or $2 a metre for water, you won't be watering huge lawns. People will get used to having lawns the same in town as they do in the countryside. If it doesn't rain, it doesn't rain.

So I think the actual cost of providing services will limit the use of water to a reasonable amount, and if it gets beyond that, it'll be rationed. It'll be rationed equally between all users. This is an agreement that we have in Red Deer. If there's not enough water in the river and it has to be rationed or the use has to be limited, it'll be equal across. It will be rationed equally. Water is not being sold, but the cost of the water is going to be determined by what it costs to process it and deliver it. That's why it'll never be sold. It'll never become a NAFTA issue because the water services are being marketed as to the cost of delivering the services, not the water. They get the water out of the river for free, and the consumers get it only for the cost of service.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think many of these questions have been answered. This is an absolute necessity for these towns, and we must go forward and support this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) kicks in. Any questions or comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the hon. member. The hon. member was talking about users of this water or this resource, and the licence, as I understand it, for the transfer of water is not to exceed 2,941 cubic decameters annually. What percentage of that water that's going to be transferred is going to be used for domestic residential purposes, how much is going to be used on farms, and is any of that water going to be used for irrigation purposes?

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I don't have exact numbers for that, but I think there would probably be none used for irrigation purposes as this is treated water, and the expense of it wouldn't allow for that. There might be a small amount of this water being used on farms, but I don't think it would be used for extensive livestock operations because, as in the Lacombe case, it just doesn't pay. You can't afford to be feeding this expensive water to livestock. The balance would be all used for municipal and residential use.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. I have a couple of questions. For starters, I'm wondering if the member would be willing to share with us, to table in other words, documents that show that the treatment of the water is eliminating all organisms, including any that could come up during a transfer. My example was the zebra mussels. I think he's talking about bacterial, but can he produce the documents for us that show that absolutely everything is killed?

Mr. Prins: I don't have those documents, but I'm sure they're around. If the member really would like to see them, I'm sure we can find them and present them to you.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just have actually a quick question to the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka. Is the water that's being transferred to these various municipalities being treated, and is it a tertiary treatment level before it goes back to the rivers?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Yes. I can only speak for what's happening in the Lacombe-Ponoka situation, and the water for sure is being treated in the city of Red Deer. The water that's going down the pipeline towards Blackfalds, Lacombe, and Ponoka is actually city water from Red Deer, the exact same water. If you would be in Red Deer, you'd open your tap, and that's the exact same water that goes to Lacombe. The pipeline was extended. Then it goes through a waste-water treatment in each of the towns downstream. It goes through a waste-water treatment plant and a lagoon system, and it will be discharged into where they discharge now, and it has to meet all the criteria that Alberta Environment would put on it now. It would be no different than it is presently.

Dr. Swann: Can I ask the hon. member, then, if he's talking about a perpetual plan to continue and increase interbasin transfers of water in the province?

Mr. Prins: See, that's something I can't answer because I would never say that it's a perpetual plan, but I'm thinking the Lacombe situation is a plan that has a lifespan of 25 to 50 years. If it goes for 50 years and there's a need to expand it, then you'll have to go back to the drawing board and see if you can actually then expand it. If you cannot expand it at that point, that would cap the amount of development that can happen in these communities. But I think that in 50 years there will be another generation of people that will look after that problem.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. I'm wondering. The member talked about that they could measure the amount of water that's in the river, but again there's nothing in the bill that's requiring a measurement, as part of the bill, of the underground aquifers. We know how much is above ground. We don't know how much is below ground. He was very descriptive in describing what starts to happen to the wells and some of the underground aquifers. Why is there nothing in the bill that starts to measure the underground aquifers?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka in 10 seconds or less.

Mr. Prins: I think what we have to do is focus on the bill, and all this bill is about is transferring water to authorize the Stettler regional water system. I think that some of these other questions could be discussed in a committee format but not right now.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. I guess the time is over.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Excuse the voice. There seems to be conflicting information between the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, who is proposing a basin transfer, and the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, who sort of suggested to me that the small draw on the current river would be such that there is sufficient water already there without requiring a basin transfer. What this comes down to – and this has been brought up by previous speakers – is that we don't have a water inventory. George Bush's WMD stood for weapons of mass destruction. In Alberta WMD stands for water of mass demand. We're putting a tremendous demand on water.

If we'd listened to Captain John Palliser when he talked about the dryness of the Palliser Triangle and so on, we probably wouldn't have had any southern settlements whatever. Through a degree of ingenuity we've managed to survive as long as we have for the past 100 years, but ingenuity can only stretch so far. We can have the odd dam, but if we overdo it, that water evaporates because it's collected in a still area and it doesn't replenish. We know that in Calgary we have the example of the depleting runoff from the glaciers. We know that due to global warming the glaciers are depleting in a rapid fashion. Therefore, the Bow and the Elbow are threatened by not being refilled.

The Water for Life strategy to me is a good policy, and I credit the Member for Battle River-Wainwright for having explained it at a conference that I attended in Canmore. But nowhere in that Water for Life strategy was there any discussion of interbasin transfers, and that is a major concern of mine. What we had was that over the last number of years we would have a drought in the south, and then it would be suggested that we draw water from the north. Then what would happen two years later is that the drought would appear in the north. Simply trying to manipulate the basins – you know, do we have taps at either end? We draw it one year one way, and then we draw it back the next year to suit the needs of less than brilliant irrigation methodology.

We should be asking ourselves: why is Stettler facing the shortage that it is currently facing? Part of the answer to that problem could lie in the drilling and the use of nonsaline water that's being injected into wells, that is no longer recoverable. If part of the policy for the future of this government is coal-bed methane extraction to get that last little remnant of potential gas supply, then we're going to be putting our water in greater danger into the future. We have to have an inventory of water, and until we develop that inventory, the idea of drastic changes, of drawing water from one basin to another, just doesn't make sense.

We've had examples of both good and bad planning. An example of bad planning is what happened just outside of Stavely. Engineers, geologists recommended to the government of the time that the Pine Creek coulee that was a reservoir area should be lined. Unfortunately, at the time when it would have been considerably less expensive, that idea wasn't taken into account. What happened was that the water from the coulee kept disappearing, basically leaching into the numerous farm wells in the area and basically ruining the quality of the water. Of course, the farmers were then trying to redrill wells and get below that aquifer level, which was basically being polluted. So that's an example of a strategy that doesn't work.

Let me give you an example of water legislation strategies that do work. At that same Canmore conference that dealt with parks and protected areas, representatives from the town of Okotoks put forward a requirement on developers. They said: we have a water shortage here; we have to think in the future. Up until that time developers had only been required to put three to six maximum inches of topsoil back on basically land that was of a clay base. So what was happening was that the water was running off; it wasn't settling into the ground. It wasn't doing what it was intended to do, but the alderpersons and the mayor of Okotoks came up with a strategy where they required the developer to conserve water by putting a foot of topsoil into the new developed areas. By putting that water conservation strategy into place, the town of Okotoks was able to conserve water and save a considerable amount of money.

Another very positive example of water conservation is what's being proposed with the replacement of the current weir in Calgary. What they're going to be doing is creating a natural series of ponds where the fish will have the chance to go down the river and, in fact, come back up. That's the key part: the spawning aspect. It used to be sort of a one-way trip for the fish. Well, now, thanks to the new approach to the weir, the fish will be able to come up. So what we need is creative thinking where we conserve water, where we don't put one basin at risk by drawing from another basin.

Another concern I have is what has happened in the past. I remember very well when the dam at the Oldman River was proposed and increased in size. There was tremendous conflict at Brocket. It was actually an armed conflict, and it reminded me of what happened later on in Quebec at Akwesasne because the First Nations people did not feel that they had been sufficiently consulted in the building of that dam, and a shot was fired. Fortunately, no one was injured in that altercation, but it was based on a lack of consultation. There wasn't a plan in place, and that plan was not developed in a collaborative, consultative manner. As a result, misunderstandings occurred.

We have the Water for Life strategy. It makes a whole lot of sense, and I would just urge the government to take into account its own strategies. Water basin transfers are very suspect at best.

Another concern I have: I mentioned the business of the leaching effect on water in the Stavely area thanks to the Pine Creek coulee. We need legislation to govern the 600,000 separate wells that we have in this province. We have no regulations on how much water can be extracted. We have this principle whereby the first person to own that property is able to sell the rights to that particular water, but as the previous speaker from Edmonton-Centre mentioned, we have no idea how much water is there. We can't commodify that water. We can't, then, transfer it or sell it because we have no inventory that would tell us to what extent this water could be used.

Right now we have great draws on the water, at least in Calgary, from a whole variety of bottling companies where makers of Pepsi draw the water, which obviously does not go back into the system and forms a large percentage of the soft drinks that are manufactured. This is water that, well, does not go back into the river in the same fashion in which it was drawn. Therefore, we have sewage treatment systems that, again, are very costly, and we don't limit the demands.

Another problem we have with water – and this is one of the reasons the gas-fired plant was turned down for being built in Calgary – is the tremendous amount of water required in the process of cooling the generators. If we don't take into account what we currently have, and if we fiddle by taking from the north to the south, then basically we're going to do ourselves in.

So I want Stettler to have the quality of water that Edmonton has, the quality of water that we have in Calgary. But I would like to think that that quality of water was something that we didn't have to continue to screen and strain and pour through a series of costly chemical treatments, that we would preserve the quality of that water that comes from the mountains, that comes from the Arctic Ocean, that comes from the Pacific, that comes from the Rocky Mountains: all these wonderful watersheds that we currently have.

If we don't come up with a strategic manner of conserving this water, then we're in deep trouble. We've taken our natural resources – and Water for Life is such a terrific title because without water it doesn't matter how much natural gas we have, how much coal we have, how much oil. Without the sustainability of water, I'll use the example of the Midas touch: what good is all this gold if we can't drink it, and we can't eat it?

We must come up with an inventory. We must come up with a Water for Life strategy. We cannot condone as a Liberal Party the unsustainable thought of drawing water from one basin to another. We're putting the lives of all Albertans, both in northern and southern Alberta, at risk if we start playing God. We can have various forms of ingenuity, but when we attack Mother Nature, we realize what happens.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments? Hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, did you have a question or comment?

Ms Evans: Just a brief comment. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my previous lifetime, I spent time with a number of municipalities engineering what was the second waterline to be built in Alberta connecting potable water from the city of Edmonton all the way out to Ryley. It was second to the Henry Kroeger line that was previously built. It was in some respects similar in design because it was taking good-quality water to people that required it at, hopefully, an affordable price.

I think that on all sides of the House we've had a lot of questions and comments tonight, but I can suggest that if we had had that same interest in the times that we were building that waterline, perhaps there would have been differences. However, at that time we were looking at PFRA for federal support of such programs and such program development as a waterline, and here, when local people define the interest and show the initiative and are willing to pay for and develop the line, I think they have probably addressed and asked these questions many times over that have been posed in the House.

The one caution I want to bring to this Assembly is this: if we, in fact, show a lot of assertiveness to go out and define where all of our water basins are, where water exists that's in good quality, et cetera, there may be a suggestion that we start paying for and providing that new infrastructure across Alberta, and that would be an incredible and huge investment that we may not be able to bite off until we look at a long-range plan for the economics of it.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Maybe in a kind of reverse questioning, I wonder, minister of health, if when these water pipelines, these sort of aqueducts were created, did it involve an interbasin transfer, or was it within the same water table or water area? I'm thinking that geographically speaking, it didn't involve an interbasin transfer. It drew from an existing basin.

The Acting Speaker: Does anybody else have a question or comment? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: I think we're talking about some very important things, but I have one question for the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity. I'm a little bit concerned where he referred to Milton Born with a Tooth and referred to the fact that we hadn't consulted, possibly, long enough. I have to question that, whether we talk for rest of our lives because we can't come to a unanimous decision. But I'm just wondering about his personal experiences with Milton because I found him a militant who there was no dealing with. Your discussion, saying that we hadn't discussed long enough: I think that we discussed it a long enough time. Maybe a comment to that.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much for that question or comment. Milton Born with a Tooth, that was just described, was the individual who was charged with firing the rifle, but he wasn't the man who single-handedly drove all the bulldozers, built the ramps of land, and for time on end, month after month prevented developers and the dam crew from going onto his territory.

This wasn't the action of a single individual. This was a concern that the First Nations in the Brocket area had. While this one individual may have taken things to an extreme level, he would not have been able to continue and express these concerns if other members of the Brocket reserve had not supported him and had not held off, basically, development for several months.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah, thanks. I appreciate all the comments tonight, and I thank the hon. member for again bringing forward second reading. I think it's important, though, to recognize – and this goes back, in actual fact, to the early '90s, when the then minister of environment in terms of the issue of interbasin transfers had the foresight to realize the important issue and the recognition of the valuable asset that we have with water and, of course, the then minister of environment was the Premier. In the environmental protection act of Alberta he, in fact, recognized that the exact debate we're having tonight is taking place right here, openly, in the Legislature.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, the five minutes allocated for this section is over.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, you had indicated that you wanted to speak on this bill.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with pleasure to speak on this issue this evening. I find it interesting. Something twiggled my memory about Rochon Sands and the White Sands area, Donalds, and Big Valley. So before I begin, I just would like to remind the Assembly that, in fact, we did have a Tory water program of sorts here in this area several years ago, when I believe the hon. Don Getty moved down to Buffalo Lake under duress to some extent, and they wanted to make sure that the lake was sufficiently full for the Premier to live down by Buffalo Lake. So we have seen . . . [interjections] Yeah. So we have seen some water programs down there before for sure.

I think, you know, we see all across central Alberta that there is a difficulty with the water table lowering. There's no two ways about it that, you know, from Lacombe, as the hon. member mentioned earlier, all the way up through Red Deer and over to Stettler and these affected areas, the water table is decreasing, and there's no doubt that the quality of drinking water from wells and the existing systems is diminishing as well.

So I do support this bill in the sense that I think it's important for us to develop a regional water strategy especially for drinking water because, you know, people do live there and will continue to do so, and it's important to have quality water in those places. But as has been discussed here previously this evening as well, my main concern lies around this sort of transfer between the water systems of the North and the South Saskatchewan rivers. Now, while the amount of water that is being suggested in Bill 11 is significant, it's not overwhelming. I think that we do need to remind ourselves just as to the potential peril and hazards of interbasin water transfer.

You know, while we like to look at the North and South Saskatchewan river systems as sort of our last great hope for clean water through many parts of the province, it's important to note that both of these rivers are down significantly over the last hundred years or so that they have been monitored. The North Saskatchewan, say for example, in the summer is down 40 per cent over the last 20 years, and the South Saskatchewan is down up to 65 to 70 per cent over the last 20 years. These rivers are fed during the drier seasons from glacial water, and these glaciers are retreating at an alarming rate. Also, we can see that the snowpack in both of the systems in the mountains has been decreasing at an alarming rate as well. So while, you know, one little bit here and one little bit there – certainly it's useful and necessary for people in these areas to have good, safe water – I think that we need to have a larger strategy in place so that we're not nickel and diming these river systems to their ultimate peril.

I think it's important to recognize that, indeed, we are just sort of coming out of a period in this province in general of relative wetness in terms of precipitation. I think that there's a very long, standing study that's just come out looking at the sort of algae development and remains in the bottoms of lakes as well as tree ring studies that suggest that really we're in a much drier province than we might have seen since the period of recent European settlement. In fact, the tendency seems to be moving into another dry period.

So while these larger, I guess, forces of nature we must just live with and adapt to, I think that it's important for us to realize that our own human impact on these things is significant as well. You know, sooner or later in this century we're going to really have to deal with what water shortage is about here in this province, Mr. Speaker, and the sooner we deal with that in an honest and comprehensive way, I think that the more reassurance that places like Rochon Sands and Stettler and Lacombe and Taber will have that they can have sustainable development in terms of water.

Otherwise, as I said before, putting in regional systems to ensure the integrity of the water I think is important. So I do support Bill 11 in that regard because, you know, upgrading the Stettler water system to supply these larger regional areas I think will mitigate potential problems in terms of smaller water systems or well contamination, so people in these areas could count on a consistent supply of water. But, you know, once again, as different places around the province look for a reliable and safe source of drinking water and water for the town's general use, I think that perhaps we could look at other forms of water use.

One of the things that I think we're having to come face to face with is the fact that, you know, we supply this water that we're all reaching for here this evening, for example, fine, fine drinking water that otherwise you could bottle and sell just as easily, and I suspect that's exactly what most companies do. But to use this water that's brought up to such a high standard for anything but drinking water purposes I think perhaps is something we need to look at in the future, in the immediate future, Mr. Speaker, because in fact the amount of energy and the amount of effort and processing required to build our drinking water systems might be excessive for the other uses of water that we use domestically in the cities and the towns of this province.

As several hon. members mentioned across the way here earlier this evening, by putting a price on water and that price being variable and ultimately increasing, we will set up a natural system for water conservation in this province through pricing. Well, I think that once again this invisible hand that the hon. members across the way like to use with impunity, you know, doesn't take into account all things and all situations in our province. Certainly, at the end of the day we have to make sure that everyone has access to good quality, affordable drinking water, and just allowing the price and the market to come to bear and let the chips fall as they may sounds rather irresponsible to me.

So at the end of the day I think that this Bill 11 on its own sort of stands in a small way, in a very practical way, to supply the regional water services for this area, but as I said before, I would like just to reiterate some of these larger concerns that many people are having across this province in terms of water management.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a), any questions? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Just wondering if the hon. member knows of any communities that use a two-water system and could report on how that's working between treated and untreated water.

Mr. Eggen: I like this question system. I think these guys use it quite a lot over here, where you have a question, you set it up, and there it is.

Yes, in fact I have seen that system used in other countries. You know, I had the very unique and interesting experience of living in a country where there were serious water shortages, in southeast Africa, setting up a complementary grey and drinking water system in a town that I was familiar with. While initially it was more expensive to set up, while they were building this town, you could in fact set it up. Using the grey water to flush toilets and to water gardens while keeping a separate drinking system ultimately proves to be more economical.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Another question for the hon. member. I share the same concerns you have about commodifying. If you start putting price tags on things and, as you pointed out, the market drives, then we're in trouble. But I'm just wondering how you feel about the need for some type of water inventory so we know what kinds of resource we have, and if you have any suggestions how we could develop that inventory.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks. That's a very, very good question. I appreciate it.

This is fun. I can get into this for sure.

Yes, absolutely. I mean, that's a huge problem that we are not facing with the water strategy as of yet. You know, I think it is important that we do look at water, as with other things as well, as a regulated commodity. Once again, we've been dealing with this in terms of energy. Water, I think, has to fall under a similar category.

For example, the city of Calgary, without a metering system the average Calgarian uses 800 litres of water, I believe, while the North American or even western standard for a large urban centre is only 300 to 400 litres. So you need that sense of regulation and a price to be put on these things, but ultimately people need access to good, clean water. We need to know how much is there and where we are going to put it in the next hundred years or so. And right here in this place, in this Legislature, is where that regulation has to start.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else wish to participate in the debate?

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat to close debate.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This has been a most interesting debate. Just a couple of points and then I certainly look forward to discussion in committee. This system here is actually less than .1 per cent of the average annual flow of the Red Deer River. The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka wasn't sure of the amount. It's actually less than .1 per cent.

I've been involved for many years, Mr. Speaker, with development of large regional waterlines, so that's why I said that I find this very interesting. I look forward to the committee and the discussion of the committee. I will certainly answer the questions that came up here, and I might add that a lot of those questions, just for a lot of the members as information, were also brought up during the water strategy. In fact, all the basin advisory committees that are out there now actually are looking at these same questions that were asked here tonight.

With that, I might add just for information that the North Saskatchewan basin and the South Saskatchewan basin are really a part of the Saskatchewan basin as are the Oldman basin, the Battle basin, the Bow basin, and the Red Deer basin. They're all part of the Saskatchewan basin, and in the end they all join in one Saskatchewan River and flow into the Hudson Bay.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'd move that we call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a second time]

Bill 12

Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2005

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to move second reading of Bill 12, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2005.

The purpose of these amendments, Mr. Speaker, is to clarify the basic principles of justice for victims of crime. No one expects to become a victim of crime, but in one black moment it can happen, and your life is changed forever. It's not just the fallen body that is a victim; it's the family that cries over that body that are also victims.

In 2002, 25 per cent of Albertans reported being direct victims of crime. A caring community provides services and support for victims of crime. The province of Alberta has been helping victims of crime through services and support since 1969, when the first piece of legislation, known as the Criminal Injuries Compensation Act, was passed. Twenty-two years later the Victims Programs Assistance Act created a fund to support programs and services for victims of crime. In 1997 the Victims of Crime Act consolidated the two former acts and established a 15 per cent surcharge on provincial offences. This money was directed to a regulated fund known as the victims of crime fund, separate from the government budget.

With the additional revenue, services to victims were enhanced and more money became available to assist crime victims. By working with our communities to help victims of crime, we make a difference in the lives of the many Albertans who, when they least expect it, become victims of crime and look to their community for assistance.

Today the Victims of Crime Amendment Act includes specific information in clear language to modernize and clarify the previous principles enhanced in this act. Mr. Speaker, this amendment act revises the basic principles that apply to the treatment of victims, that were endorsed in the new Canadian Statement of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime. These changes will help to provide better and more effective services to victims of crime in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn the Assembly until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 10:11 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 5, 2005

1:30 p.m.

Date: 05/04/05

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. From our forests and parkland to our prairies and mountains comes the call of our land. From our farmsteads, towns, and cities comes the call of our people that as legislators of this province we act with responsibility and sensitivity. Grant us the wisdom to meet such challenges. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly 56 students and one adult from the Sturgeon composite high school. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I have a second introduction. It's my pleasure again to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 12 staff from the Edmonton west office of Alberta Human Resources and Employment who are here today to tour the Legislature. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a group of energetic and promising young people from Lac La Biche-St. Paul constituency. Today we are honoured to have the grade 6 class from the Vilna school observing the proceedings along with their teacher, Mrs. Jean Muzyka, and Mrs. Roseanna Garner, Mrs. Sue Novosiwsky, Mrs. Shelley Gerlywich, and Mrs. Wendy Cozicar. Vilna school is a very diversified learning program and experience for their students. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just over 20 years ago I graduated from Winfield high school in Winfield, Alberta. [interjections] That's right; believe it or not. Now, today I have the privilege of introducing a group of grade 6 students from that very school. Included in this distinguished group of 16 visitors are the school principal, my former French teacher and basketball coach, Mr. Elwood Johnson, teacher Mrs. Cocke, and parent helpers Kathleen Zimmerman, Lisa Keirle, and Robert G. Lowe. I'd ask them all to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a member of the council of MD 23, the MD of Mackenzie, who is in Edmonton to attend the AAMD and C conference. I would ask Mr. Ed Froese, seated in the gallery, to rise and accept the traditional welcome of the House.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Growth Pressures in Fort McMurray

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday evening a unified delegation from Fort McMurray consisting of representatives from major oil sands companies, the mayor, the board of education, the health authority, business and First Nation leaders, who had obviously all done their homework, presented a business plan and an investment infrastructure plea to this government. The development of Fort McMurray is key to the prosperity of the whole province, but this government's lack of planning is putting that in jeopardy. My first question is to the Premier. Would the Premier briefly describe the government's vision for the residents of Fort McMurray as it relates to maintaining the Alberta advantage?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I had the honour of attending a very fine presentation that was made by the group from Wood Buffalo. Indeed, it was an updated business plan because what the group from that area found was that their business plan that they'd presented to us had rapidly become outdated. They felt that it was important that they come and, indeed, brought a great number of people to that from the health authorities, the school boards, the advanced education area, the energy area and gave us a great review of what has happened, what is happening, and their projections for the future.

I would say finally, Mr. Speaker, that a number of ministers affected were in attendance at that. We heard their comments, and we'll be responding to them.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: when municipal, health care, and other grants are provided to authorities in Fort McMurray, will the government now take into account the 7,000-plus workers who live in the surrounding camps?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, as I indicated, Mr. Speaker, in my first comment, a number of ministers were in attendance. A number of MLAs were in attendance last night. We received a very comprehensive document from the group, and the assurance has been given them that the appropriate ministers will work with them to work through this document to understand their issues around water treatment plants, waste water, housing. The minister of infrastructure has commented directly on land that could be available to them for housing.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. To the Premier: given that the people who work in and around Fort McMurray generate huge revenues for this government, why doesn't this government ensure that they have public services that are up to the standards of the rest of the province?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Deputy Premier pointed out, we're working with industry on accommodating their infrastructure needs. Just to indicate one component of what is going on in the Fort McMurray area, we'll talk about housing, for instance. The minister of seniors recently awarded something like 700 acres to accommodate 2,000 affordable housing units. There are another 400 about to come on stream pending the bid process, so this is an area where we're working. In the area of transportation we've already committed funds to upgrade highway 63 and highway 881. So a lot of work is being done, and a lot of work will be done in the future.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Securities Commission

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Securities Commission has been under intense scrutiny since a report was leaked last month indicating serious allegations regarding a two-tiered enforcement system, sexual impropriety, and workplace harassment. Yesterday the Minister of Finance said that she had received a report and seemed to indicate that she felt all was well at the commission. To the Minister of Finance: would the minister please clarify which report she based her comments on, the report prepared by Mr. Mack or the report from the Securities Commission to the minister?

1:40

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the first report that the hon. member refers to was exactly that. It was the initial report. As I indicated in my answers to questions in the House previously on this matter, there were, indeed, two reports prepared by Mr. Mack. The later one was received on the 21st of March. The commission dealt with the matters in both reports and then reported to me through my deputy. In that finding, they clearly stated that the reports indicated that the enforcement policies of the Alberta Securities Commission have been applied and continue to be applied consistently and fairly and with an even hand. I think that was an important message from those two reports.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How, then, will the minister address the very serious discrepancies between these two reports, or is she saying that the first report was completely off base?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the first report dealt with issues raised by persons who had concerns. The second report dealt with those concerns from more of a management level. As I indicated in my previous answer, on the regulatory side, the enforcement side the commission is confident that the workings of the commission are in order.

Mr. Speaker, they did raise in the initial report and responded in the second report to issues around human resource problems. The commission also responded to that in their report to me.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that up to 30 people are reported to have raised concerns about the management of the ASC and those complaints have occurred for years, how does the minister expect a report she won't even make public to allay all those concerns?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, first of all, as I indicated yesterday, Mr.

Speaker, it's not within my purview or my authority to release that report. It was released to my deputy, through my deputy to me, under the condition of solicitor/client privilege. That is, of course, to protect the people who brought concerns forward.

Mr. Speaker, the concerns that were raised on the human resource issues will be dealt with. The commission has assured us that their human resource committee takes these concerns very seriously and will be responding. I will be following up in that area.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As indicated by the minister, there have also been serious allegations surrounding the workplace environment at the Alberta Securities Commission. Mr. Mack's report indicates that the workplace culture was threatening and, indeed, unsafe for numerous employees. My question is for the Minister of Finance. The minister has responded to the enforcement allegations. Will she now report to the Assembly the commission's report on the questionable management practices and the oppressive workplace atmosphere?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I believe I just, in fact, did that. The report that I received from the commission, from the part-time commissioners, indicated that there were indeed some human resource issues. They also indicated in that that they took those very seriously and would be responding.

Mr. Speaker, I'm reviewing that section of the work and instructed my deputy to contact them yesterday so that I understand how they intend to proceed with those human resource issues. This is a professional organization. It is a very important commission, and I expect that it will be operated in a very professional manner.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister then: how can current and future Alberta Securities Commission employees be assured of a safe and harassment-free environment?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do believe that the employees at that commission understand that if they have issues, they feel very free in bringing them forward, which they did, and I appreciate that. Now the important thing is that these issues are dealt with and followed up, and I have given the Assembly and the members questioning this the assurance that I will be ensuring that there is a follow-up and that the appropriate steps are taken to correct any malfunction in the workplace.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister inform the House what those appropriate steps would be to ensure that the employees have a safe and appropriate workplace?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, as soon as I have an indication from the part-time commissioners as to how their human resource division is going to proceed with this, I would be most pleased to inform the House.

Missing Health Records

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, it's been a month since the health records of 670,000 Albertans went missing and were possibly stolen.

Instead of notifying the police before the trail goes cold, ministry spin doctors spend their energies crafting elaborate talking points in case news of the missing tapes leaked out. Well, it did. Instead of trying to solve the crime, the Tories have spent their time weaving a bigger rug to sweep this mess under. My question is to the Premier. Given that identity theft has become a major problem, why has this government failed in its duty to protect the personal information of Albertans and then failed again to take immediate action to recover the lost or stolen information?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I dispute the remarks that action was not taken.

I'll have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness respond as to what action has been taken.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated yesterday, there was a review of what was actually occurring, whether or not the tape was in possession of one of the contractors entrusted with conveying the tape for microfiche.

In large part, the release of the information was pending the review of whether or not it was located with IBM, where it was located, and whether or not we could report it as missing or whether or not it was something that had already had some fraudulent or misconduct associated with it. We have had no evidence of that thus far.

We initiated the investigation, and I assure you and this Assembly that if there is evidence that we need to pursue with the police, that will be done.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the health records of 1 in 4 Albertans may have gone missing, why has the government failed to notify these Albertans that their personal health information may now be in the hands of parties unknown who could be, as we speak, using the information to steal their identities?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the very day, within the very hour of hearing about the loss, I phoned the vice-president of IBM. I had that same question about what could be done. Although at that time I wasn't fully aware of what was on the tape, I was aware of the fact that these secured tapes had been developed with very specialized equipment, that it would take a mainframe computer – there are three such computers in Edmonton that may be able to read such a tape. Since then and in this House I believe I have confirmed that only the health care number and the name is actually on the tape along with the gender. But I have never diminished the importance of tracking that information, no matter how little or how much is contained.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, why doesn't the government have a responsibility to notify those whose health data is missing or stolen, if for no other reason than to let them know how they can best protect themselves against identity theft, something this minister doesn't seem to understand?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we're very concerned about the loss of the tapes, unproven as to having been stolen as yet. The investigation is there. However, if it is imperative for us, in the opinion of the Privacy Commissioner, to contact every Albertan that may have been listed with their health number, as per his requirements to fulfill our duty and our filial responsibility, we will do that. Presently, however, we are still investigating the matter. When we have more to report to Albertans, that report will be made.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Lynnview Ridge

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have raised this issue before in the House, but it has yet to be resolved. My constituents have been very concerned and frustrated about the contamination of their properties in Lynnview Ridge. So my question today is to the hon. Minister of Environment. Can the minister update the House on this serious concern?

1:50

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to inform this Assembly and the hon. member that we have in fact reached an agreement pertaining to the mediated settlement as early as 11 o'clock this morning. It's a great pleasure for me to say that this has been taking place for numerous years, and I want to say that the mediated action between Alberta Environment and Imperial Oil has been successful in protecting the environment and in protecting the interest of the citizens in Lynnview Ridge.

Mr. Cao: Well, that's great news, Minister.

My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Given that my constituents in the Lynnview Ridge area have been living with this contamination for too long – and I'm ready to celebrate the completion of the cleanup too – can the minister tell us when we can expect the cleanup to occur?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to say from the onset that I'm going to be so pleased that I perhaps will not have to be answering any more questions from the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort on this important issue.

I will say without any fear of contradiction and to all of the members of this House that Alberta Environment will not be paying for this cleanup. The mediated settlement has indicated that Imperial Oil, as stewards of the issue in dealing with the residents, will be doing this. In actual fact, we want to ensure that with any soil that has contaminated property, Imperial Oil will be beginning the cleanup as soon as, shall I say, at the very least, this spring and early summer. I think that's very important.

Mr. Speaker, let me conclude by saying that Alberta Environment is participating so that the residents in Lynnview Ridge, who have been very understanding and co-operative, can enjoy their properties now and into the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the same minister. Given that Alberta is proud of legislation saying that the polluter pays, why is Alberta Environment contributing to the cleanup of Lynnview Ridge?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. I just want to clarify that in fact the Ministry of Environment is not. We have participated in a very small portion of the funding, but ultimately I want to congratulate Imperial Oil. They have agreed in the mediated settlement to cover the cost of this remediation to the benefit of all Albertans and the citizens specifically in the area that is in the hon. member's constituency.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Water Strategy

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fresh water is a diminishing resource essential to the very survival of all life. Albertans are becoming increasingly aware of and anxious for strong leadership in the province on its water resources. The government's water for life strategy provides the vision, but without resources and legislation no action and strategic direction can follow. My question to the Minister of Environment: given that measurement of Alberta's water supply is essential to making effective water management decisions, when will the government accurately measure the total water supply in Alberta, both surface and groundwater?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you. A very good question by the hon. member. I want to say that Alberta's water for life strategy is one of a kind in all of Canada, which really is demonstrating the leadership of the province of Alberta. The water strategy has three outcomes: safe, secure drinking water; healthy rivers and lakes; and reliable quality water supplies for a sustainable economy into the future.

Now, the Alberta Water Council, which the hon. member and I have discussed, and the watershed planning and the advisory councils are key in terms of the water strategy success in collecting the data that the hon. member has made reference to because when we're doing this, we want to do it right the first time.

Dr. Swann: To the same minister: given that the government has a policy allowing interbasin transfers, which indicates a failure of water management and planning, will the government commit to implementing legislation to make watershed planning management mandatory?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I want to first and foremost say that I am very proud of the environmental protection act that we have in Alberta. It's viewed by the majority of provinces across Canada as a leader.

One of the reasons for interbasin transfers is specifically – we're debating in this House now, in fact, one of those transfers. No matter how small or how large, it's accountable back to this particular Legislature, and I think that is clearly a strength of the legislation that we have in place. In fact, that was put in place when the then Minister of Environment, our Premier, led in terms of the importance of these initiatives.

As we go forward in collection of the data in terms of what the hon. member is asking for, I think it is going to be critical that we continue to report back to our Water Council people, that are involved directly at the grassroots of the forefront, the importance of this important resource, that we will continue to ensure that the water in the province is managed in a proper and orderly fashion to ensure that it's for the long term and into the future of the strategy we have.

Dr. Swann: Again to the same minister: given that the transfer of water can be seen to make water into a product or commodity potentially subject to international trade agreements under NAFTA, can the government absolutely guarantee to Albertans that our water will not be sold to the United States?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, under supply . . . [interjection] Well, the hon. member says: just say . . .

The Speaker: Through the chair.

Mr. Boutilier: Through the chair I'm not going to say what she would like me to say. I'm going to simply say that we are going to manage our water in a proper, orderly fashion. One thing for sure, Mr. Speaker, is that Albertans value what I refer to in this House as blue gold. That blue gold is something that we will cherish, we will conserve, we'll use as good managers of now, today, and into the future without any fear of contradiction.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Forest Sustainability

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night during debates in this House the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity outlined his belief that the harvest of Alberta's forest is proceeding at a faster rate than reforestation. He used the words "mowing down" to describe the harvest and went on to use the words "pillaging" and "plunder." My questions are for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Are forest companies being allowed to pillage and plunder Alberta's valuable forest resources?

Mr. Coumts: Mr. Speaker, absolutely not. I can assure this hon. member, I can assure this House, and I can assure Albertans out there that this industry, which is an important industry to the province of Alberta, is responsible and is committed to sustainable resource management. Our industry leaders consult with the public in developing management plans that go well into 200 years, and our forests grow more than they actually cut. We grow 44 million cubic metres of forest and only cut about 24 million cubic metres in Alberta. Our companies use the latest information and the latest technology, and, finally, they meet international criteria, which has been pointed out by an independent report published by Yale University professors who concluded that Canada's forest practices are among the most progressive and the best in the world.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. To the same minister: what checks and balances are in place to ensure that reforestation efforts are adequate in Alberta?

Mr. Coumts: Mr. Speaker, Alberta has some of the best managed forests in North America, and each year the amount of timber that is harvested in our province is less than the forest actually grows. Reforestation is mandatory in Alberta, and it has been that way since 1966. [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, this maybe isn't very important to the folks across the way, but it is important to the industry and it's important to the 50,000 people that work in the forest industry. We have a delegated authority that looks after reforestation in this province. It's the Forest Resource Improvement Association, and we require companies to follow clear, defined legislative requirements to make sure that reforestation is done on public lands.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again thank you to the minister. To the same minister: what recourse does the government have in the apparently unlikely event that a forest company does not comply with reforestation requirements?

2:00

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, there are timber management regulations in place in this province that clearly state what the industry must do in terms of reforestation and making sure that the forest is sustainable for years to come. Companies could face significant monetary penalties as well as reductions in annual allowable cuts. As I mentioned earlier, Alberta's reforestation policy is designed to ensure long-term viability of our province's valuable forest resource. This is hardly plunder and pillage.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Wild Rose Foundation Grants

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Registered societies in this province qualify for Wild Rose funding because they register and file their annual returns with the province. Societies that do not file their annual returns with the province are designated as struck and do not qualify for Wild Rose funding. My question is to the Minister of Community Development. Why is it important that the Wild Rose Foundation prohibit funding to societies that are labelled as being struck?

Mr. Mar: I'm not sure I heard the last part of that question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Agnihotri: Why is it important that the Wild Rose Foundation prohibit funding to societies that are labelled as being struck?

Mr. Mar: I think I did hear the question that time, Mr. Speaker. I don't know what the answer is. I'd be happy to entertain the member's question. I'll have to take it under advice right now.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister: is it acceptable for a struck society to obtain its Wild Rose funding through another registered society?

Mr. Mar: I'm not sure if that's the practice or not. Again, I'll entertain that question under advice.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister: beyond accountability reports can the minister explain what kind of follow-up is done to ensure that organizations that have received Wild Rose funding use the money for the purposes that are stated?

Mr. Mar: There is a follow-up audit on all monies that are distributed through the Wild Rose Foundation, and there is a process by which the entities receiving monies must demonstrate that they are used for the purposes for which they are given, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Major Alberta Projects

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As mentioned before, last night residents of Fort McMurray told the government's standing policy committee and many other interested observers about the issues they face as a high-growth community. This morning the government released information that there is more than $100 billion in major projects under way, with a lot of these projects related to Fort McMurray. My first question is to the Minister of Economic Development. What is the province doing to ensure that the economic growth is spread fairly across the province?

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, $100 billion on our 100th birthday. What a centennial gift to the people of Alberta.

In the report that was released this morning on behalf of Economic Development and, of course, for the government of Alberta, talking about $100 billion worth of projects, clearly the majority of that development is going to take place in the Fort McMurray area, and that's why the people that came in from that centre last night to make their presentation are to be congratulated. Of course, as the Premier and others have said today, there is a challenge there for us to deal with.

Now, as far as the rest of the province there are developments that are taking place, especially the Edmonton-Calgary corridor. But even in my little old Lethbridge, you know, there's a vibrancy now that is taking place, and congratulations to all that have been involved in it and especially the government of Alberta for creating the climate for investment.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Due to the strong economy and activity in the oil sands, skill shortages are occurring in that industry. What is the province doing to help the industry in the Fort McMurray area during these shortages that they're experiencing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. Of course, I've said before that Alberta is committed to further developing the skills base of Albertans so that they can compete internationally. Presently my department spends $280 million a year in training to help Albertans develop skills that are in demand. In addition to that, of course, we fund over 4,600 apprenticeship spaces along with advanced ed and career development. We have 56 employment centres across 43 communities in Alberta that provide various forms of employment support programs to Albertans out there.

In addition to that and the most important part, Mr. Speaker, if you'll give me a brief moment, we are also working with industry to develop skills for some of the groups that continue to be underutilized, including aboriginal people . . .

The Speaker: Hon. minister, thank you. It may be helpful to address the most important point first.

The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question and second supplemental is to the Minister of Energy. What is the province doing to ensure that we are doing more with our resources than extracting them and shipping them without benefit to Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've heard about the $100 billion potential investment in the oil sands area over the next 10 years and substantial opportunity for centuries yet to come. It is important that we set the framework and the groundwork so that we do more than just extract bitumen, that we have the opportunity to do the upgrading, the refining, and even working towards using bitumen as a feedstock for the petrochemical industry. These are all things we're working on very closely with the industry in particular. The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo continually works with them in bringing those issues forward.

My one concern about this still comes back to this Kyoto issue. One of the clear problems of the Kyoto protocol, while it is very substantially flawed, is that you can and will potentially see the upgrading of the bitumen happening in the U.S. or China. Countries that are not signatories to the protocol do not have to comply with the standards that we have. We'll see more carbon dioxide emission and a greater global problem than by our using the right standards to do that upgrading and that refining right here in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Youth Emergency Shelters

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Children's Services said in answer to previous questions about youth shelters that family and community support services provides funding for youth shelters. This is not the case. Family and community support services does not provide funding to shelters because shelters don't fall under the FCSS's definition of preventative services. To the Minister of Children's Services: why does this ministry not define youth shelters as a preventative service when they clearly are preventative?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the question from the hon. member. The government under FCSS does provide youth emergency shelters funding. We provided $21,250 for public awareness and education in 2003.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. To the same minister: will the minister commit to a new funding regimen for youth shelters since they are not part of the FCSS definition of preventative?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, thank you. That's a good question. The ministry is going to be looking this year at how we fund youth shelters, so I'll be pleased to accept her recommendations. It's something that we are going to be doing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. Regardless of the semantics, you will then make sure that your ministry does ensure that shelters get funding?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, we're going to be reviewing how the youth shelters in this province are funded. I can tell her that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. From Bre-X to the Boyle brothers a rogues' gallery of con men and scam artists have slipped through the fingers of this province's toothless securities regulator. Meanwhile, small investors are supposed to be satisfied with the vague assurances from the Minister of Finance to not worry and be happy despite overwhelming evidence to the contrary, including documented evidence sent to the government 15 months ago by the Alberta Securities Commission's former enforcement director. My question is to the Minister of Finance. Why is the minister refusing to make public the very report she earlier claimed would clear the air?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have answered this question I would think maybe five times in the last two days. The information that was provided was provided under a solicitor-client relationship. This is to protect the anonymity of the persons who brought those complaints forward and to protect the reputations of persons that may have been referred to improperly.

Mr. Speaker, we have treated this very seriously. Immediately upon receiving the complaint, I wrote to the commission and asked them to investigate this matter. They did that. They employed an external, very well-respected person to do the investigation and provide the reports. What I have answered is on the basis of that. If the hon. member has a problem with the person who did that investigation, he should stand in this House and say so.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I know the minister's little exercise, but the small investors are the clients, it seems to me, and my question to the minister is simply this: how can small investors have any confidence at all in view of what's happened when the minister refuses to get to the bottom of it and make this report public?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, we have gotten to the bottom of it. As I indicated, the commission has acted very responsibly. They employed an external person, a very well-respected person, to conduct the investigation. They have taken the information from that investigation, and they have said clearly – I will read it one more time – that the report indicates that the enforcement policies of the Alberta Securities Commission have been applied and continue to be applied consistently and fairly and with an even hand. That is an important statement. We have FOIP legislation in this province, and we abide by legislation, and we abide by solicitor-client confidentiality.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, if the minister can't make public this internal report, why doesn't she order an independent investigation of the Securities Commission to get to the bottom of the serious allegations that still threaten to undermine investor confidence in this province?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the commission hired an independent investigator well respected in this province. I do trust him, and if you have any reason not to, I think you should say that rather than make asides outside this House.

Mr. Speaker, the Securities Commission and the work they do is very important. For that reason I requested they do a review. They've done the review. They hired the external investigator. They have the report. They have made those findings public in this way. I see no value, frankly, in somebody sitting across the way reviewing what has already been reviewed by very, very, very credible people.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Health Services in Calgary

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Friday, April 1, the hon. members for Calgary-McCall, Calgary-Fort, and myself met with members of the Calgary health region at the Peter Lougheed hospital in Calgary. At that meeting we were informed that the population-to-physician ratio in northeast Calgary is 1,521 to 1 while in other parts of the city it's 600 to 1. My question is to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. What is the department doing to rectify the situation so that hard-working, taxpaying northeast Calgary residents can have quality and easy access to health care?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite a national shortage, Alberta has done better in attracting physicians than almost any other part of Canada. For one thing, we have one of the best compensation packages in Canada. Our eight-year trilateral agreement is applauded.

We are working with the Calgary health region, who has initiated a project quite specifically to examine the northeast region. It is true. The figures represent a significant demographic shift there, and we'll take a look at both the needs of that region as well as the particular population groupings there so that, hopefully, we'll find the right mix. Mr. Speaker, the primary care initiatives, which will see teams of professionals work on-site in places like the northeast, might well help us to overcome some of the deficiencies of having a lower physician-to-patient ratio.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is the department doing about the shortage of 260 acute-care beds in Calgary and southern Alberta?

Ms Evans: Recently Alberta health officials and Alberta infrastructure officials met with the Calgary health region to take a look at this problem. Obviously, with the high-growth areas of the province, keeping apace with the bed needs is an important element. We have initiated and sponsored redevelopment work on the site in the southeast quadrant, which is by design easily accessible for parts of the north and the southeast. More than that, we're reviewing redevelopment plans at the Peter Lougheed centre, the Foothills medical centre, and the Rockyview hospital, and last year we approved a total of $125 million of capital projects for phase 1 redevelopments of these sites.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

Enron Activities in Alberta

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Time and time again in response to questions on the Enron scandal in Alberta the Minister of Energy asks for more evidence. Every day the Official Opposition has provided this House with transcripts, e-mails, and other court evidence regarding Enron's electricity price-fixing schemes in Alberta. The tabled material proves at the very least that a full, independent, public inquiry into Enron's dealings in Alberta should be launched immediately. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Has the Department of Energy analyzed the evidence tabled in this House or otherwise revealed by American authorities regarding Enron's electricity price-fixing schemes here in Alberta?

Mr. Melchin: I'd be delighted to repeat some of those answers that need, I guess, reinforcement, Mr. Speaker. In this sense, we have been out in front of it. The market surveillance administrator does that precise work all the time. They specifically requested from the utility in the state of Washington all of the transcripts. It's those transcripts that have been reviewed. It's from those transcripts that there were some assessments. All that's in there thus far is a little bit of information, not enough to collaborate that there was any collusion or any of those kinds of things, but that's why they have asked the federal Competition Bureau to investigate.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that Albertans look to the minister, not the federal Competition Bureau, for leadership, why is this minister refusing to live up to his responsibility to protect Alberta electricity consumers?

Mr. Melchin: We look very much to the market surveillance administrator as experts, which they are, very qualified to look into these issues. They can assess the merit of whatever is on those transcripts and take appropriate actions. In this case, it involved parties that were outside of Enron and other parties that were outside of Alberta over which we don't actually have any jurisdiction to continue the investigation. That is why the federal Competition Bureau is involved.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: how can the minister deliberately ignore the evidence that has been provided when Albertans are concerned that they may have lost millions and millions of dollars because of Enron's price-fixing schemes?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are deliberately protecting the interests of Albertans, and we are going to continue, in that regard, doing all that we can to ensure that Albertans are protected. It is actually the actions of this department and the market surveillance administrator that has been in front of this and has provided so that they could have access to the transcripts.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

GuZoo Animal Farm

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. There has been much ongoing criticism of an Alberta roadside zoo facility called the GuZoo. Recent news reports indicate that the facility has recently had its zoo permit renewed. Given the somewhat checkered history of this facility, can the minister advise the Assembly what information was used to issue that permit and whether the facility presently meets all the standards required of it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to be clear here. There have been many public complaints received not only in our department but also in our office. The department also has some concerns about GuZoo. Recently GuZoo's zoo licence was extended for a short six-month period under some very strict conditions and very strict guidelines. The operator has acted on many of our requests for improvements over the previous three-month licence that was given, and these are showing up in his annual zoo plan, which we asked him to do. Our department continues to investigate GuZoo, and we have given the zoo operator written warnings regarding the specific conditions where we weren't satisfied with his performance, so we continue to monitor him.

Dr. Brown: Can the hon. minister advise whether or not there's a plan for ongoing monitoring of the compliance with the requirements of the department?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, we want to make sure that we don't continue to just take the operator's word that improvements are being made. Our department staff are inspecting GuZoo on a monthly basis, and we will continue to monitor, along with our other partners like the SPCA, Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, as well as Environment and the regional health authorities. We work in close co-operation with them, and we'll take whatever actions are necessary with our partners to see that the operator continues to make the required improvements that are needed to follow the conditions that are set out in his zoo permit.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, my final question for the same minister: does Alberta's legislation and regulatory framework have enough teeth when it comes to enforcing these requirements?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question that has been brought forward. We're trying to take a very proactive approach on this issue, along with the SPCA and our other partners, to work within the mandates that we individually have, and we would like to certainly work closer together. Alberta's roadside zoos have all been issued only six-month permits while we work on developing zoo standards.

Our goal is to develop clear guidelines and standards for all roadside zoos and provide options for enforcement. Once the standards are completed, Mr. Speaker, the zoo operators will have a phased-in approach to meeting those standards under their plans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Gaming Research Institute

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Gaming said that the government would not interfere in the results of research done by the Alberta Gaming Research Institute. However, the minister also said that the government has a responsibility to direct the AGRI to answer government questions, noting that the contract for the organization is up for renewal. My questions are for the Minister of Gaming. Do the minister's remarks yesterday indicate that the government will now start telling the AGRI what kind of research it wants done as a condition of its grant renewal?

Mr. Graydon: Mr. Speaker, I don't believe it will be a condition of renewal, but I think we do have a responsibility, providing $1.5 million annually for that institute. There are things that we want researched, so we will give them a list of things that we would like them to have a look at. They may have some things on their own list as well, but certainly there are areas that we want researched, and I think it's only prudent that they would research those items for us.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: is the government seeking more control of the AGRI because some of its past research has made the government uncomfortable?

Mr. Graydon: No, absolutely not. If the research makes us uncomfortable, so be it. We don't direct the results of that research, but we do have a responsibility to the taxpayers of Alberta to see that their $1.5 million investment is secured.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the government gave out $40 million in supplemental funding to seven regional exhibitions in Alberta, why is the government taking so long to give the AGRI its last year's grant of $1.5 million?

Mr. Graydon: Two very separate issues, Mr. Speaker. The $40 million that was distributed to seven regional agricultural societies from the Alberta lottery fund – another good example of lottery funds at work – was approved in this House by a vote under the supplemental requisitions. I think that explains where the $40 million came from. It was identified in the third-quarter update as being surplus monies at that point in time, and we felt it only prudent to distribute it to some very worthwhile groups.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I'll call upon the first of four members to participate.

In the interim might we congratulate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs on reaching a milestone today and call on the hon. Minister of Advanced Education for an introduction.

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to introduce a class of students that has joined us during question period. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 42 enthusiastic grade 6 students along with their teachers, Mr. Bill French and Ms Colleen Reeder, and parent helpers Dave Baker and Gillian Drever from the George P. Nicholson elementary school in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. They're here today to observe and learn with keen interest about our government. They're seated in the members' gallery.

I might say that from George P. Nicholson elementary school in the Twin Brooks area of my constituency, George P. Nicholson being a trustee of the Edmonton public school board is one of the few people that I know that's had a school named after him while he's still serving as a trustee and therefore the respect that is accorded to him. I just wanted to mention that as I ask these students to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Allan Brown

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sixty years ago today the greatest conflict in the history of humanity was drawing to a close. Seventeen thousand Canadian airmen perished during World War II. In the air over Germany in the early hours of April 5, 1945, 60 years ago today, men of 6 Group, Bomber Command, Royal Canadian Air Force, were dropping 5,400 tons of bombs on oil targets in Germany.

One of the aircraft on operations that night was a Halifax heavy bomber piloted by a young man from Midnapore, Alberta. After losing a third engine over the target and leaving for home, the aircraft was descending into the night. The pilot gave the order to bail out, and the pilot was ready to exit the aircraft, at which time he looked over his shoulder and saw his mid-upper gunner with his parachute hopelessly tangled in the fuselage. The pilot returned to his operations seat. Unable to put on his operating harness, he took the autopilot off and brought the aircraft down to a crash landing at night in enemy territory.

On exiting the aircraft, he noticed that there was not one of his aircrew present in the aircraft but three. It was only then that the aircraft caught fire. The men left the area, and five days later they were able to get back to the Allied lines. Meanwhile, the three crew members who had bailed out were taken prisoner of war.

The pilot officer of that night received the Distinguished Flying Cross for his coolness in bringing down the aircraft in enemy territory with only an aircraft airspeed indicator, a compass, and an altimeter. There was not a single light shining in that territory that night, and there was not a single loss of life.

That pilot was my father, Allan Brown.

Infrastructure Spending

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It occurs to me that the people of Alberta may be wondering why 12 MLAs from the Edmonton area, three from Calgary, and one from Lethbridge keep asking so many questions in this House about Fort McMurray. Well, it's because we believe that Fort McMurray and the challenges that it faces are in fact symbolic of the provincial Conservative's neglect of urban Alberta.

The province of Alberta is debt free in large part because a portion of its debt has been effectively downloaded onto municipal governments, regional health authorities, school boards, colleges, and universities in the form of infrastructure that has at best been neglected and at worst destroyed without replacement. Over the past decade inner-city schools and hospitals have been closed. Where are their replacements? Out in the suburbs where the growth is occurring? No. Not so much. People are still waiting for the new ones to be built.

Municipalities of all sizes throughout this province have suffered from the withdrawal of a variety of taxes, user fees, or in the case of Fort McMurray royalty profits without the proportional sustaining increase in grants which accurately reflect their rapid growth. Their populations explode; their infrastructure expires.

Back to Fort McMurray as the most glaring example of the Tory neglect of urban Alberta. Fort Mac's water treatment plant was designed to accommodate a population of 40,000. Today the population exceeds 55,000. Two new schools are needed along with health care facility expansion to cope with the oil sands driven population boom. The province drags its feet on releasing land for housing construction so that it's almost impossible for teachers, health care workers, and other community service providers to find let alone afford accommodation.

Canmore residents are also experiencing a housing shortage. At the same time, their property taxes go through the roof. Calgary is reeling from the loss of half its hospitals, driving waiting lists to all-time highs. There is a growing disparity between the revenue this government sucks out of urban Alberta and the inadequate grants it returns. The result in cities like Calgary, Canmore, Fort McMurray, and many others is private-sector prosperity coupled with the public-sector status of a have-not province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

High School CPR Program

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with pleasure that I rise today to speak about a national nonprofit organization which is partnered with schools in my constituency to give students the opportunity to learn a valuable skill. The Advanced Coronary Treatment Foundation, or ACT, is dedicated to helping high schools nation-wide implement a core curriculum CPR program. In order to facilitate this, the foundation establishes partnerships with communities so that CPR mannequins, teacher materials, and the CPR agency cost of teacher training is supplied.

The Shock Trauma Air Rescue Service Foundation, more commonly known as STARS, has partnered in this endeavour and has helped to ensure that the tools and training necessary for this program to be a success are available. This has included the donation of teaching mannequins and teacher training.

I am pleased to announce that the ACT Foundation has been and still is active within schools that are in my constituency. This foundation has partnered with both the Wetaskiwin regional school division as well as the Battle River school division. These partnerships will result in many students learning this valuable life-saving skill each year in these school divisions.

Students are taught not only the mechanics and techniques of cardiopulmonary resuscitation, but they also learn to recognize a developing emergency and the importance of reacting immediately and appropriately. In addition to this, students also learn the risk factors that are associated with heart disease and the importance of making healthy lifestyle choices. Being taught these skills not only equip our students with the knowledge necessary to save someone's life, but they also gain self-confidence from learning and possessing such valuable skills.

I'd like to acknowledge and commend the work of the ACT Foundation as well as the STARS Foundation for the work that has gone into this program.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Heckling in the Legislative Assembly

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to say just a few words about heckling. Heckling is defined as verbal interjection by another speaker in public. All parties I'm aware of have participated in heckling, and in no way do I intend to make this a partisan issue or to point fingers. Often comments are sarcastic, insulting, derisive, humiliating, or meant to unbalance a speaker and perhaps expose a weakness or gain advantage. Not all Legislatures in the world allow heckling. It is a tradition, however, of the British system, and it's our decision in Alberta whether to continue in the practice.

I'm not aware of many positive aspects to it, but the negative aspects that I see are: the issue at hand may not be constructively addressed, trust is undermined, credibility of both parties is diminished, there is an increased level of stress, and public cynicism and lack of confidence among children as well as adults about the political process and the unwillingness to become involved in political activities may be a result with the democracy deficit we've talked about.

Heckling is a choice for us individually and also collectively. I've met with the Speaker to seek guidance on how to sufficiently block interactions across the floor and, in fact, to have these comments banned. This would be a first that I'm aware of in Canada. The Speaker or his designate could provide the appropriate interventions, and I'm not exactly sure of how the enforcement and identification of heckling would be worked out, but I'm sure that creative minds could be put to this.

After a hundred years of heckling, heckling is an imbedded tradition in this province, and if we choose, we could be leaders in Canada. What might be the benefits? Public dignity enhanced, better human relations in and out of the Legislature, more honest debate and constructive outcomes, and increased public confidence.

The Speaker has suggested this issue go to the House leaders of each party for discussion. I would simply ask that all members consider it fully. Again, I advocate this as strongly as possible. We have an opportunity here to serve the Legislature, the people of Alberta, and democracy more fully.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition from Albertans from the great Alberta communities of Didsbury, Busby, Camrose, Onoway, Ardrossan, Willingdon, Edmonton, and Calgary petitioning the government with the following words:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition to present to the Legislative Assembly and it reads:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

This petition has been signed by 86 Albertans from all over the province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition this afternoon that I'd like to table in the Assembly. It reads:

To the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, in Legislature Assembled: We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

Mr. Speaker, this petition is signed by 103 Albertans from across the province.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of an important report that was just finished. It's titled the Mega Project Excellence: Preparing for Alberta's Legacy, An Action Plan. This document initiated and funded by the government of Alberta is the culmination of discussions that began in May of 2004 with major energy producers to develop solutions and strategies to address the megaproject cost overruns and skilled labour shortages, the major emphasis being unique demands in Fort McMurray.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a letter signed by Georgina Szoke. Ms Szoke is concerned that the decision of the Canadian Cattle Identification Agency to require cattle sold by September 1, 2006, have an approved RF ID tag causes duplication and further expense to already beleaguered cattle producers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a couple of documents here. One is the latest Stats Canada figures on construction unemployment in this country by province. Some figures, for example, are 37.9 per cent in Newfoundland, 23.4 per cent in Nova Scotia, 14.8 per cent in Saskatchewan, 16.4 in Manitoba, and also five copies of each of five letters from people protesting temporary foreign workers in the oil sands in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is a letter dated March 21, 2005, to the hon. Minister of Energy from myself requesting the resignation of Mr. Martin Merritt, the market surveillance administrator, and his quick response on March 23 to my letter, indicating that he would not do so.

Thank you.

Second Reading

Bill 26

Corporate Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate March 24: Mrs. McClellan]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to participate in second reading of Bill 26, the Corporate Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2005. As with many of the bills that we're dealing with in this spring sitting of the Legislature, this particular bill appears to be primarily of a housekeeping nature bringing Alberta into line with some of the changes that have been made at the federal level. I can indicate right up front that I will be recommending to my caucus colleagues that we vote in favour of this particular bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Is the whip on?

Mr. R. Miller: The whip. Well, that's a good question. The whip is on, Hugh. The whip is on. I'll take great pleasure in providing you with a whip if that's what you're looking for. [interjections]

An Hon. Member: Focus.

Mr. R. Miller: I'm trying very hard to focus.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford does have the floor.

Mr. R. Miller: I thought I did, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I understand from the comments of the Minister of Finance when she introduced the bill the other day as well as from some of the research that I've been provided with that primarily this bill will command companies to file a notice of objection with the provincial government, or at least a copy of their notice of objection that they file with the federal government must be provided to the provincial government as well. The bill introduces penalties for corporations that do not comply with that provision and as well addresses various tax evasion potentials, I suppose you could call them, for corporations transferring property to other corporations that may not necessarily be at arms length for less than what would be considered to be a fair market value.

I do question a little bit the need for commanding an Alberta corporation to provide the Alberta government with a copy of that notice of objection when, in my mind, it might have been easier just to have the federal department responsible CC the Alberta government when they receive that, thereby removing the onus on business to do that. I know that the minister in her comments the other day indicated that she didn't think this was an onerous task to ask Alberta businesses to do, but I would suggest that perhaps if we would work on fostering a better relationship with the federal government and its various departments, we might be able to convince them to supply that information to us as opposed to demanding that local businesses do so.

As well, the penalties for not complying with that seem to be particularly harsh, Mr. Speaker: a percentage of the refund – I believe it was 5 per cent – up to a maximum of $10,000. If the task is not so onerous, certainly the projected penalty would appear to be quite onerous.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a couple other questions I suppose would be relevant in terms of asking. As always there's a question as to what exactly constitutes an arm's-length corporation versus not an arm's-length corporation. I understand that some of that is addressed in the legislation, but certainly there would be room for debate and perhaps some amendments at committee stage. Then, of course, the question of what is fair market value and how that will be determined.

I can say that my researchers and myself consulted with a number of stakeholders – particularly, the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, and the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers – all of whom indicated that they had no particular concerns about this bill and understood that, in fact, we were in compliance with federal regulation and toughening up some of the regulations in terms of making sure that companies aren't hiding or evading property in order to avoid paying their corporate income tax obligations to the province.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I think I'm going to take my seat and allow any others who have any comments to make them at this time. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't have a great deal to say other than some clarification. As the previous speaker mentioned, it's mainly housekeeping to bring us closer to federal regulations, which seems to make sense. What also seems to make sense is that it seems to be closing some tax loopholes. I suppose that allowing companies a little more leeway with respect to filing or refiling their tax assessments may eventually lead to greater compliance with existing tax laws. So, all in all, as I say, it's a housekeeping bill.

The question that I have, which I hope the minister would refer to when she goes through the Blues, is on the one change allowing corporations to report changes in the reports after they're filed with the Alberta government by giving the minister the ability to waive or postpone. I don't know what would cause that, that we'd go back. It seems to me somewhat unusual that we hand in a report like we do with the Chief Electoral Officer or somebody else, and then after the report is over, we can waive it and change it. There may be very good reasons to do this, but they escape me at the moment. So that's sort of one of the questions I'd like to put on the record, Mr. Speaker.

The other falls along the same line. Under 5(3) on page 4 this bill also allows the minister to postpone fines for a period of 12 months for corporations that fail to comply with reporting procedures or make mistakes or find new information with respect to their tax assessment. I guess in a world where we're all taxpayers, we'd like to postpone our fines for 12 months if we owed money to tax collection. Again, there may be a legitimate, very good reason for this, but on the surface it seems to be somewhat favouritism that others of us won't have. But I'd be interested, Mr. Speaker, in the minister's reasons for those two areas.

Other than that, I don't think there's a great deal here that concerns us, and I'll allow other speakers to participate in the debate. Thank you.

2:50

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

If not, then I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My suggestions have to do with clarifications, things that I would like to see included in the corporate tax amendment bill. One of the corporate taxes that I see in this province as being unnecessary is health care premiums. A number of corporations as well as individual Albertans have to pay hundreds of millions annually in terms of health care premiums, and this is one form of tax that I would like to see abolished both for individuals and businesses. We have the royalties in this province to offset those costs, and I would like to see them offset.

Another area in the area of taxes that I see is the potential for a royalty review. In 1992 Minister Rick Orman, at the time when the price of a barrel of oil was considerably low, reduced the royalties by two-thirds, and they haven't been increased since. I'm not suggesting that the government should unilaterally raise those royalties, but given the price of a barrel of oil being over $50, I think it's time for Albertans to capture a greater degree of their nonrenewable resources. I think the government, instead of talking about reducing royalties further with schemes like roads for royalties or rail for royalties, needs to with industry input consider: should these royalties be reassessed?

I'm also concerned about the lack of clarification when it comes to collecting these corporate taxes, these royalties. There doesn't seem to be a delineation between what is an old tar sands project that is simply being added to and what is a brand new project. This is the Firebag business that came out. What muddies the whole process further is that Peter Elzinga at one point was advising the Premier while also being a consultant for the private oil company who was claiming that Firebag was simply an extension of an ongoing project. So if we don't know exactly what is new and what is old, Albertans are not receiving their royalties, and I'm very concerned about that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Additional members?

Hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, did you want to close the debate?

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to close the debate on second reading of Bill 26. As has been mentioned in some of the previous discussions, a number of these amendments are in fact housekeeping, but there are a couple of significant amendments to the bill. I would encourage all hon. members to support second reading.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a second time]

Bill 31 Real Estate Amendment Act, 2005

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to move second reading of Bill 31, the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2005.

Just a bit of background. On July 1, 1996, the Real Estate Council of Alberta, also known as RECA, became responsible for administering the Real Estate Act. RECA is mandated to protect consumers involved in real estate transactions and to provide services that enhance the industry and the business of industry members.

Now, an assurance fund was established for real estate agents in 1985, and mortgage brokers were included in 1998. The assurance fund is financed by levies placed on industry members and pays judgments to a regulated maximum. Mr. Speaker, key elements are proposed to ensure that protection under the Real Estate Act is confined to consumers in keeping with the original intent of the act. The amendments will clarify the intent of the assurance fund and preserve its viability for consumers.

The Real Estate Act currently does not specify who is entitled to claim from the fund. The proposed amendments would specify that the following persons are not able to claim from the fund. They are financial institutions such as banks, credit unions, and loan corporations, or any person who in the opinion of the Real Estate Council knowingly participated in the fraud that led to their claim or was wilfully blind to the fraud that led to their claim. The documentation requirements for claiming from the fund are presently set out in the real estate ministerial regulation. The proposed amendment will move these requirements to the Real Estate Act. This is to strengthen their legal effect.

Mr. Speaker, in addition, amendments are proposed to the regulation-making powers in the act to provide clearer authority for some existing regulations and to delegate the authority of four regulations which are being brought into the act and to create new regulation powers.

The remaining amendments are housekeeping and will clarify how the court judgment becomes final. The proposed amendments will not affect any applications made for compensation based on judgments already issued.

Now, in summary, the proposed amendments will ensure that protection under the Real Estate Act is confined to consumers in keeping with the original intent of the act and ultimately preserve the assurance fund's viability.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to contribute to the debate on Bill 31, the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2005. Going over the proposed amendments, I don't really disagree with the hon. minister. I think that by saying so, I am proving once more that our purpose or our role as opposition is not, as some people would make the public think, to complain or stall. We're here to advise and facilitate when good legislation is needed. This is one more example of such a situation, and I commend the hon. minister.

The ultimate goal is always the protection of the consumer or the taxpayer or the citizens of this province by strengthening legislation that achieves this outcome. I am for it and I support that.

This bill actually excludes banks and financial institutions and trust corporations and big entities from being able to access the real estate assurance fund. I think not only as a legislator but as a layman or as a consumer myself I would support this because when I as a consumer or as a potential buyer of a house or an apartment enter into a transaction and then am faced with an unscrupulous broker or agent who defrauds me of my money – and, you know, to a consumer or a citizen this is their life savings, for example – it is tremendous. It is sort of a life-or-death situation.

A bank or a granter of a loan or mortgage: yes, they suffer losses, but I don't think that it's as detrimental to them as it is to a person or to a citizen. I don't want to sound like I'm trying to exclude them from reclaiming or regaining some of the damages that they might have incurred, but really I think that first and foremost we have to look after the citizen, the private person, the taxpayer, the person who entered into such a transaction, because they're affected more. Their suffering or their pain or their loss is more pronounced. It's more detrimental to them.

So, yes, I agree with the intent of this bill. You know, the banks or the mortgage granters or financial institutions or trust companies, these big entities have other ways of recuperating their losses or their damages, and I think they can also afford insurance on their own whereas a person, like I mentioned, you know, entering into a transaction like this doesn't have that luxury. I think they should have first access, or first dibs, into this fund.

I know that this fund is not big as it is, so it might not be adequate to repay or compensate more than maybe 10, 15, 20 fraudulent transactions per year. If the banks or the financial institutions try to access this fund, they will probably totally deplete it within one or two transactions only. So I think this negates the purpose of the fund, and that's why I emphasize my support for this bill. It really clarifies who has access to this fund and who shouldn't.

I just have one question very briefly. Section 4 amends section 84 of the current act in subsection (g), which used to prescribe the times within which a claim against the fund could be made, and now it's removed. I know that maybe the rationale would be that it alleviates the concern that, you know, some people would challenge the timeliness of these decisions, but I'm also concerned that by doing this, we might be cutting off some people who might have been delayed for some reason or another, like maybe they didn't file because they didn't know that the fund existed.

Maybe we need to advertise more, you know: "Have you been victimized? This fund is there for you and for your protection." Maybe they weren't aware of it or maybe they had other things that prevented them from filing in an appropriate time. By removing this and maybe moving it into the regulations – I'm not sure what's happening there – this could possibly undermine some people's ability to access the fund, or it might actually cut them off altogether. So I think maybe this is a point of clarification.

As with any piece of legislation, I'm a little uncomfortable. Usually the trend now is basically to strengthen regulations and maybe make the act smaller or more bare bones. I can see it sometimes being necessary when things are evolving and changing on a day-to-day or a month-to-month or a year-to-year basis, and the government doesn't want to amend the law every time. Fine. But in situations like this, I think the essence is clear, the mechanism is clear, so why go to regulations with such fervour?

Having said that, I think again I emphasize that I support this bill. It's good, and it makes sense to me. I would take my seat and allow other people to participate in the debate.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise this afternoon in support of Bill 31 with some reservations, but I suppose that's the function of second reading, to seek some clarity, perhaps, in bills in general and 31 specifically here. I think that as the previous speaker had noted, this is a way to keep the real estate fund viable. My understanding is that there was quite a large lawsuit from banks from September or from August that had the potential to actually break this fund. By removing banks, loan corporations, trust corporations, credit unions, or treasury branches from being eligible for compensation from the real estate assurance fund, I think that this leaves it open as a safety mechanism for individuals to be protected from fraud or indiscretion in the real estate market. So this certainly is a useful thing.

I think it's fine to see the government exercising its regulatory powers. Once again, as I've said many times before in the last few days, in fact the function of this House is to regulate different industries. There's nothing wrong with that in any way. You know, this helps to make the real estate board a much more viable operation. While perhaps banks and lending institutions may be less than happy with this change, I think that these institutions have the capacity to protect themselves through their own insurance systems and resources, so I don't think we need to be so concerned about that.

There are, as I said, some clarifications that I would like to bring forward at this time. For example, I think that under this new bill any applicant to this real estate assurance fund would only have a year to do so. I think that one of the arguments from the court case with the banks was that their case was too complex for resolution within even the three-year time period. Moving it down to a one-year time period I think has some further potential problems because, of course, real estate and civil suits can be indeed quite complex and take up a lot of time. So perhaps one year before a deadline is not enough for an applicant to receive judgment from this fund.

Other than that, I don't see a great deal of difficulty with it, although I think that we need to seek clarification on the issues that I've brought up. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

On the question-and-answer period, Edmonton-Decore?

Mr. Bonko: Not so much a question, Mr. Speaker, but just to add to the discussion.

The Speaker: We'll make sure that no one wants to participate in the question and answer. None? Then we'll recognize the Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak on Bill 31, the Real Estate Amendment Act, and I'll try not to repeat things that have already been said. I think first we have to recognize that we're talking about the single largest purchase that an individual or a family may be making. They'll spend a great deal of time researching their purchase, but the market moves so fast and is based on the emotions of anxious people: the lender of the money, the bank or the broker; secondly would be the client; and third would be the agent.

There tends to be pressure. Banks want you to lock in for a time certainty to ensure that the lending rate does not move up, causing the client to pay more as a result of a percentage or two. The agent might want to apply pressure to the clients, indicating that others are wanting to view the place and maybe accepting offers. As well, I'm sure everyone's heard this line before: "What you look at today and what you're considering sleeping on, someone has looked at yesterday and has already slept on it. Your tomorrow is their today. So you'd better sign on the dotted line and make an offer."

When money is involved, rational people become irrational, and they get caught. This act states that it will be providing some protection against unscrupulous people. There are many examples. People have bought homes three or four times between themselves and flipped them, making a good profit, leaving a large mortgage in its place with only three-quarters of the value. Now, this wouldn't protect the banks but would in fact protect the consumers. There are a lot of potential places for abuse. The most well known was the Alberta Treasury Branches and West Edmonton Mall, but this will probably remain on the X files for some time.

I mentioned earlier mortgage fraud in Edmonton. We have a very limited ability to track and work with property and mortgage fraud because of the lack of resources or people in place. This bill could also expand to include mortgage fraud. It also sets the base to perhaps add to this bill or to create a new bill to include mortgage fraud. The bottom line is that consumers need to have assurances that there is legislation in place for protection for the consumer that would in fact provide compensation for them in the event of fraud.

Who are these consumers that I speak of? Well, Mr. Speaker, my constituents of Edmonton-Decore and, of course, other constituents here within the Assembly. As I mentioned in my maiden speech, there are areas within my area that are being developed and are already developed, and this act does in fact enforce for misleading promotions. One that would attract buyers, when I look at the map of new developments, would be clients considering purchasing a brand new home. They come to the location, and in fact when you go into the show home, they have a map drawn out with the vacant lots and proposed school sites.

Now, I know full well from being on the school board that we don't have that many school sites available. When I was campaigning as a trustee, I came to several new, developing areas where they asked, "When is the school going to be built?" They were sold the home on the pretense of the potential school site. I think the act could go as far as having the broker or the builder for the home consult with schools so that they do not have included on the maps potential school sites knowing full well that there will never be a school built in this area. I think it's misleading, and to not inform the consumer of that could be a grey area that could be in fact brought into this bill.

Just a few examples, Mr. Speaker, as to things that this bill could be looking at and that I would hope that the members would be looking at as the days lead on.

I'd move to adjourn debate, then, when done, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion to adjourn debate lost]

The Speaker: Additional speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess I'm rising to speak to Bill 31, the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2005. I believe that a lot of the points that I would like to touch on perhaps have already been mentioned by some other hon. members, but it really does call into question a number of things that I would like to reiterate.

Particularly, my hon. colleague from Edmonton-McClung asked again: why the rush to move so much, apparently, from legislation into regulation? Yet in one particular instance we're actually, to the credit of the minister, moving a regulation into the act. I would suggest that in the interests of democracy and openness and transparency for all Albertans, this is the direction I would like to see us taking much more often, not just in particular with respect to Bill 31, Mr. Speaker, but in fact with any number of bills that we're debating.

I have made the argument many times in the past that it seems to be the pattern of this government to move more and more legislation out of the act and into regulation and thereby have it dealt with behind closed doors by Executive Council without any input from the public, without any public debate, without any transparency for Alberta taxpayers and Alberta citizens to see. Certainly, that would be my major concern with this particular bill, that once again we seem to be moving more and more legislation out of the act and into regulation. I'm really not sure why.

Since second reading is to speak to the principle of the bill, that would be my concern: the principle of moving all of these various areas into regulation. I'm not sure what the rush is for that, and I really question whether or not it's in the best interests of Albertans and the various stakeholders in this case to be doing so.

Those would be my comments, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the minister is here, a couple of questions. Clearly, this group was self-regulating, and obviously they couldn't self-regulate because of the suit. I believe it was the Royal Bank that created the problem.

I'm wondering. On the surface it always looks good that we are going to protect the smaller people with their mortgages, and we're going to go after the banks, you know, the bigger banks because they can do their own insurance and the rest of it. I certainly have no problem with that, but I always know that where there's a yin, there's a yang. I wonder if the minister, when he concludes debate or somewhere along the line, would indicate to us: what is the possible implication? I'm sure that he's had some discussion with the banks. If they're not able to access this fund, what have they said that they would do? How could that impact people that have mortgages within the bank and the rest of it? Is there a problem that the banks could come back on individuals that we're trying to protect here in a different way? I'm sure that the minister has had some discussion, probably had some concerns about that. I'd be interested in him bringing it back to us.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Mr. Chase: I hope that within the act itself and within the amendments to the act there is protection for the property owner in terms of the possibility of identity theft and, in this case, property theft. We've had examples in Calgary where seniors have gone south only to find that their property had been falsely put up for sale in their absence. This kind of concern was brought to me by one of my constituents. Along the line of identity theft I'm hoping that within the Real Estate Amendment Act there are titles and searches that are required and identification that the individual actually is the owner of the property so that they don't have any surprises when they get back from a vacation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Then, shall I call on the hon. Minister of Government Services to close the debate?

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 32

Animal Keepers Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development on behalf of the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to rise today and move second reading of Bill 32, the Animal Keepers Act.

The current act, the Livery Stable Keepers Act, stipulates that any person caring for animals can put a lien on those animals and then sell them at a public auction in order to recover unpaid costs associated with their care. This proposed act, the Animal Keepers Act, will replace that legislation, providing simpler, more modern, and straightforward language. The new act also includes revisions to deal with surpluses and dispute resolution.

The primary objective of Bill 32 is to provide animal keepers with a mechanism to recover costs associated with stabling, boarding, feeding, and caring for an animal. Under the act the person caring for the animals can put a lien on the animals and sell them to recover unpaid costs associated with their care such as feed, labour, and facilities. The act's strength lies in the fact that these liens have priority over existing liens or security interests as defined under the Personal Property Security Act.

The current wording of the Livery Stable Keepers Act best reflects application within the horse industry, although the act is used extensively by the cattle industry. For that reason, we consulted extensively with the cattle industry and other stakeholders in drafting Bill 32. As a result of these consultations, the proposed wording better reflects the application of the act by the cattle industry and other keepers of livestock. For example, the proposed act provides for flexibility in the method of sale to better reflect the method of sale common to cattle and hog producers. Animals can now be sold through public auction or in a commercially reasonable manner.

As well, provisions have been made to accommodate a sale of only some of the animals to satisfy an outstanding lien. Proceeds from the sale are applied against the animal keeper's lien and towards any costs associated with the sale such as advertising or transportation. Any surplus is then directed to the owner or another party who claims the surplus.

The current act specifies that surplus proceeds not claimed by the owner go to the Minister of Finance, and after one year unclaimed surpluses flow into the general revenue fund. The proposed changes would see unclaimed surpluses directed to the minister of agriculture instead of the Minister of Finance. These surpluses would be held in general revenue for one year, after which unclaimed funds would remain in general revenue.

While the proposed act is easily interpreted, we made sure to include a specific definition of animal to ensure that this act is narrowly applied to livestock rather than all animals. The changes mean that animal keepers can implement the act themselves at minimal cost and with little involvement from the legal system or government. As a result of the changes I have outlined, Mr. Speaker, the act is much more straightforward and should be easily interpreted by animal keepers.

Mr. Speaker, that sums up the nuts and bolts of the proposed act, and I encourage all members of this Assembly to give their full support to Bill 32.

I am moving second reading. Thank you.

Mr. Chase: Again, this is more in the area of clarification, and it may come out in the Committee of the Whole. Given the types of animals that are kept and nondomestic – I'm talking alpacas and llamas and our disputes over whether elk and deer should be kept and, of course, bison, and so on. I'm assuming that these types of animals that are produced for either their meat or their wool would fall under this act. So possibly at some point that clarification could be provided.

Also, in the Animal Keepers Act it appears, just basically as the member opposite stated, that after a year following a sale of animals potentially taken in the event of a farm collapse or a failure, if members of the immediate family didn't lay claim to the residual funds, they would be out of the loop, so to speak, within that time period. I'm just wondering if there are any safeguards within the keepers act whereby there is a notification of the extended family that this money is due to them or if that's strictly their responsibility to find that information out.

So any clarification along those two lines would be appreciated. Just what are concerned, animals for sale versus the domestic? I realize that it's kind of a rural versus urban question, but I do appreciate the information.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the minister: we appreciate that Mr. Goudreau took some time to advise us, to go through the bill with our staff. That was appreciated. The bill seems to make a lot – if it's common sense, then we should support it.

I'm just wondering, though, in terms of the need for the bill, why it's being brought forward now. Are we facing some more serious problems than we faced in the past because of the BSE crisis or anything like that? Or has this been on the line for a while? It seems to me to make sense. As I understood it, before there was no flexibility at all. You sold, and that was it. This way there's some flexibility, which is probably good for both parties. I take it that that's the nature of the bill, but I was just wondering if this had been a growing problem recently, if that's why we brought in the bill. Or is it just, as I say, housekeeping?

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

There being no additional participants, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a few comments in regard to Bill 32, the Animal Keepers Act. Certainly, the first part of my remarks would be to express gratitude to the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace for being kind and gracious with his time in regard to Official Opposition staff.

Whenever we're looking at repealing the Livery Stable Keepers Act, I thought it would be interesting to see how long this statute had been on the books, so to speak. Certainly it goes back to 1980, but I suspect it goes back a lot further into this province's history. It may be one of the very first statutes that this Legislative Assembly debated. It's kind of ironic that after all these years and the anniversary of our centennial, here it is being repealed, and it is being replaced by Bill 32, the Animal Keepers Act.

Certainly, as I understand it from the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, the main idea of the Animal Keepers Act is to clarify payment of liens for care of animals to animal keepers, and this could include stable owners and feedlots. It changes the requirements of the act before animals can be sold to cover defaulted payment.

Now, there are some changes in this act when you compare it to the repealed Livery Stable Keepers Act, but market changes in the sale of animals from public auction, which the bill demands when certain livestock are sold, is part of this. This new act allows for different types of sales that are more common. Times have changed, as I say, since we introduced this act. I have had a review of this section analysis, and I think it is acceptable. There are some needed updates from the previous legislation, as I stated, and these updates are needed to move this piece of legislation into the modern marketing practices of farming.

I do have one question for the hon. minister at this time, and if we could perhaps get the answer in committee, that's fine. In section 7 we're laying the groundwork for another delegated authority, and that could be established under the Livestock Identification and Brand Inspection Act. This has been an idea that has been discussed in this Assembly in the past, and I would have to ask: why do we need this delegated authority when we need to ensure confidence, particularly with cattle, in our identification system?

I think our identification system is far superior to other jurisdictions', certainly jurisdictions across the border. Our identification system has been declared excellent by many bodies, including international organizations, which are very confident that this identification system should be employed by other jurisdictions. So we are setting the groundwork for delegated authority to perhaps, as I understand it, take charge of this. I don't know, in light of the BSE issue, that this is a good idea. If the minister could clarify that for me during committee, Mr. Speaker, I would be very grateful.

Overall, I think this act is a step forward into the modern practices of agriculture in Alberta. Hopefully, all animals which are mentioned in the definitions will be included certainly in its scope. An animal is referred to as "cattle, horses, swine, sheep, bison, deer, elk, goats, mules and asses."

Now, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity has a very good question there, and I would be interested to hear the answer in regard to llamas and alpacas and those animals who are now routinely seen in the Alberta countryside as one drives around. I, too, would be interested to know if they're covered under the definition in this act.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat, and I will look forward to continued debate on Bill 32, the Animal Keepers Act. Thank you.

3:30

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner on the question and answer section time. Do you have a question?

Mr. Hinman: No.

The Speaker: Okay. Are there any questions?

Then we'll recognize the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few questions that I would like to ask the minister. I haven't had the time to read it as closely as I wanted to, but one of the concerns in rural areas quite often is that we definitely have some animal owners that don't keep up their fences and understand the importance of this act.

Just going through it quickly – and like I say, we're moving along so fast today I'm not keeping up to the things that I wanted to do – the question that I have is: I don't see notification to the owner, to try and find the identification and notification of the owner. Sometimes there are also those neighbours that go out of their way to round up and to bring cattle in, and the notice isn't given to that owner until there's a fair substantial bill on there. Then the debate is, you know: where and how did these animals get out? If that notification is in here, I'm grateful for it, but if not, I wonder if they'd consider putting something in there to have due diligence to make sure that those animals are tried to trace back and the owner given notice as quick as possible.

Generally, I'm pleased with the overall bill and think that it's great that we're looking at trying to shortcut areas and to reduce the necessity of going to the courts to recuperate money when people are in the problem of having stray animals and having to look after them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My comments will be brief, and I'm sure the members opposite will appreciate that. I'm going to primarily just echo the comments of my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar in that I think this is, in general, a good bill and probably, as he suggests, brings us up to speed on a version of a bill that has likely been around for a hundred years.

I really only have two points that I would seek clarification on when we get to committee stage, so hopefully I'll have the opportunity to be here for that. If not, I'd like to put them on the record now, and then perhaps the minister or the member who moved the bill would be able to address those.

There's been a little bit of discussion already, Mr. Speaker, about the definition of the word "animal," and I understood from the mover that a great deal of time and effort went into identifying and clarifying exactly what is meant by the term "animal" in this bill so as not to include pets or smaller animals like chickens or hamsters or something, I'm sure. A number of members have mentioned llamas and alpacas as livestock or potential livestock that should perhaps be considered in this act. While I was sitting here listening intently to the debate this afternoon, I was also in my own mind thinking of emus and ostriches. I'm not sure whether or not they classify necessarily as livestock, but certainly in terms of size and strength and agility they would most likely require the same sort of attention that is afforded to cattle and horses and so on as outlined in the bill.

So I would hope that once we get to committee, there can be some addressing of that definition and perhaps a broadening of it to include all large livestock and game that might be raised for a commercial purpose.

The only other thing that kind of caught my eye, Mr. Speaker, was that the Livery Stable Keepers Act, as it's currently called, has requirements in it for the cleaning of barns and fines for not completing that cleaning. I note that the fines were, I believe, $10 and $25, which obviously must date back to at least 1980 if not farther. I don't dispute the need to either dispense with identifying a particularly low number or perhaps dispense with identifying the fine at all, but I do question why we would remove the requirement of barn cleaning given that we've seen some particularly horrendous examples of livestock that were not looked after in this province and the devastation that can be caused to the herd if, in fact, we don't provide them with a safe and healthy place to bed down at night. So that would be the other thing that I would hope that once we get to the committee stage can be addressed as to why we're leaving out that particular requirement.

I note that in the new bill that's come forward, the Animal Keepers Act, we simply define the animal keeper as being "responsible for the proper care of the animals in accordance with accepted industry standards." Now, perhaps this is another example of where those standards are going to be defined in regulation as opposed to having them defined in legislation, but I guess I'll have to wait until we get to the committee stage to hear the answer on that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Shall I call on the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development to close the debate? The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some very good comments, and I'll be very brief. We will talk a little more about some of the questions in Committee of the Whole. I certainly took note of the very generous comments as to the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace and the consultation that he did with members of the opposition. I also want to commend him for doing that.

Just a couple of notes on notice. It was raised a couple of times by some of the members, Mr. Speaker. In the bill sections 7 and 8 are the sections where notice is applied, if the members wanted to have a look at that prior to us going to Committee of the Whole.

Aside from that, Mr. Speaker, I thank all members very much for their support on the bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 32 read a second time]

Clerk of Journals: Government Bills and Orders for second reading. Bill 33, Stray Animals Amendment Act, 2005. The hon. Mr. Horner.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call on the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, just an update. The distinguished young lady at the Clerk's table today went away last week to Jamaica and came back married.

Bill 33 Stray Animals Amendment Act, 2005

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: I didn't get my invitation, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Pardon?

Mr. Horner: Sorry.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and move second reading of Bill 33, the Stray Animals Amendment Act, 2005.

As I said during first reading, Bill 33 will clarify the use of the Stray Animals Act and will provide regulatory authority to protect property and promote public safety. Most of the changes proposed in this bill will simply improve the operation of the act that originally came into effect in 1977. Through the years various amendments have been enacted; however, the basic principle of the act remains the same. Under this act the owner of the animal in trespass continues to be liable for damage and/or expenses attributed to the livestock.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Bill 33 is a money bill because the amendments address how reasonable expenses in relation to livestock trespass can be recovered. Public monies collected through the sale of stray animals by public auction will be held in a trust account. These funds can then be drawn upon to address the expenses and damages associated with an animal in trespass. If the funds from the sale of an animal do not cover the expenses attributed to it, the owner will continue to be responsible for reasonable expenses incurred by the individual capturing the stray animal.

Under the act a person who captures and confines livestock in trespass must notify an inspector. A statement of capture sent to the inspector details any expenses incurred by the person capturing the stray animal. Expenses may be incurred and recovered in relation to capturing, confining, impounding, identifying, maintaining, transporting, and selling livestock in trespass. Identification expenses are included as a valid expense. For example, the expenses that may be incurred when identifying livestock with Canadian Cattle Identification Agency tags. As well, expenses incurred to ascertain the owner of the livestock are included. The act also proposes that the person capturing the animal must notify the animal's owner if known.

Bill 33 will also provide regulatory authority to control designated species in order to protect property and promote public safety. An example of when we would enact this is in the case of wild boar that have escaped confinement, a major concern in some communities. Under the act if necessary the province would be able to enact a regulation to register wild boar producers, identify their animals, and deal with wild boar running at large. The act will allow the province to be much more effective in controlling these designated species.

In preparing the amendments to the Stray Animals Act, we consulted extensively with our stakeholders and believe we had their full support. Recently, Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and Livestock Identification Services undertook a joint legislative review of legislation relating to brands and brand inspection in Alberta. The Stray Animals Act was also included in this legislative review process.

As part of this legislative review, two stakeholder consultation processes occurred. In January 2003 a discussion paper and questionnaire were distributed to 225 industry organizations and other stakeholders. In December of 2004 a second discussion paper and proposed amendments were distributed to 310 stakeholders, and four public meetings were conducted. We consulted with Alberta's livestock organizations, municipalities, counties and municipal districts, breeders and pedigree producers, cow and calf operators, feeder and background operators, licensed livestock dealers, and auction marts.

The proposed amendments were well received by stakeholders, and their input was taken into consideration when drafting the bill. For instance, several municipalities requested that the act provide for a grazing use exemption so county road allowances need not be fenced off. As a result, we included this exemption.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I believe the proposed changes strengthen the current legislation and effectively deal with animals in trespass. That being said, I would encourage all members of this Assembly to give their full support as I move second reading of Bill 33.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and participate briefly in the discussion this afternoon on Bill 33, the Stray Animals Amendment Act, 2005. The highlights of this act, as I understand it, are to set up a trust account for the Crown to pay for damages caused by stray animals, and it removes the role of the assessor from the act.

Now, the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development has certainly outlined the consultation process that has taken place prior to this legislation coming to the floor of the Assembly, and I'm certainly impressed with the discussion paper that was circulated and the draft amendments that were distributed to over 300 different parties. They were posted on both the hon. minister's website and other websites. Public meetings were held in the northwest corner of the province, here in Edmonton, north of Calgary, and also in Lethbridge. The feedback that we've had on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, indicates that the proposed draft amendments were very well received by the stakeholders. I think this is a very good consultation process.

I'm disappointed that the hon. minister's seatmate, the hon. Minister of Energy, wouldn't have more open discussions involving electricity deregulation, particularly the export of electricity. That seems to be going on without any public consultation, and I'm disappointed. So hopefully the Minister of Energy can take a page out of the minister of agriculture's operations manual and have full public consultation as part of his department's future endeavours.

Now, we'll have an opportunity in committee to do a section-by-section analysis of this bill, but on first glance it certainly is worthy of support. I believe that this bill updates the legislation that we are currently operating under, and it will provide a method for the hon. minister to limit the liability of the government by using a trust account to pay the claims from farmers that have had their property damaged by not only stray livestock but, I believe, waterfowl as well. If we could clarify that, I would be grateful.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, certainly, that's all I have to say in regard to Bill 33, and I look forward to further debate as this bill progresses through the Assembly. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, almost all these bills seem to be almost companion bills, updating. I was interested also in the consultation with the various groups, and it seems to me that they've come up with a good bill. I don't see much that I could argue with here even if I wanted to. The bill certainly makes it easier for people. I take it that in some parts of rural Alberta that is a fairly major problem, and this bill will make it easier for people who have to deal with stray animals to care for these stray animals.

I might want to add to the consultation groups that the minister talked about. You'll be surprised. You've even got another group that we checked with. We gave a call to the Edmonton humane society and talked to the executive director, Stephanie McDonald, and she is pleased with the bill. Now, I think that's something, when you get ranchers and the humane society and everybody agreeing that this is a good bill, so I have to compliment the minister in being able to do that.

She said that expediting captured animals that have gotten loose and then returning them to their owners as quickly as possible will save the animals some suffering. She indicated that she believed that the public grazing issue was never followed or enforced with the original legislation, so it's better that it's changed. So add that as one other group, as I said, Mr. Speaker, that is pleased with this particular bill.

I think that when you can do that consultation, and you've got everybody on board, far be it for us on the opposition side to not support this particular bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand and join the debate on Bill 33, Stray Animals Amendment Act, 2005, a very constructive building upon previous legislation, from all that I can see. As indicated in the past, the assessor role was removed, and I among others would be interested in knowing the implications of that. It's not clear to me what the role of the assessor and eliminating that would mean for the effectiveness of the bill, not knowing enough about that process and placing it all in the hands of the minister. It may well be constructive. I'd just appreciate some discussion about it. Indeed, who would deal, then, with any conflicts between the investigator assessment and the individual who is claiming expenses?

Another area of question in my mind in reading it is: what animals were included, and what animals were excluded? Maybe that's been answered in the previous bill that was discussed. Specifically, are game-ranched animals included in this?

It clearly is a very constructive bill that adds clarity, surety, and due process to people who are trying to act responsibly in the face of a stray animal and sets out the rules for where the money will go and where it will come from. The trust account gives a sense of confidence and clarity to all involved.

It places in regulation for the purposes of public safety animals that are designated dangerous. It requires persons who import designated animals to obtain a registered certificate, keeping designated animals confined. Inspectors can inspect the site where the animals are kept. This is eminently sensible.

It allows for the trapping of designated animals and the means around which an animal can be hunted, trapped, captured, or destroyed. These seem to be very important dimensions for animal handling, animal maintenance, and animal care.

So I look forward to the discussion and appreciate the opportunity to discuss further this useful bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to also rise and contribute to the debate on Bill 33, the Stray Animals Amendment Act, 2005. Yes, I have enjoyed listening to some of the previous hon. members who have raised most of the points I was going to raise, but I think it will not harm to re-emphasize some of them. I keep mentioning that any bill I study or go through, I approach from a layman's standpoint. You know, my approach is definitely one of trying to clarify to my constituents or to the public in general what things mean, what the law meant before, and what this amendment means to them and their daily lives and their day-to-day activities.

So I share the concern that by omitting the definition or the responsibility of an assessor, there is no clarity as to what we're doing instead. Are we delegating those duties and responsibilities to somebody else, are we asking the investigator to maybe fill in this role as well and wear two hats at once, or are we in fact putting it into the hands of the minister and saying: "Okay. You eliminated the assessor. You act in that capacity now." If that is, in fact, the case, I would argue that any situation that allows the minister to concentrate too much power would be ill advised.

Also, the aspect of moving the meat or the substance of the act from the act itself into the regulations. I appreciate that this might be necessary in some cases, but I don't think it should be the norm, and it shouldn't be the preference that every bill has to be scaled down and then the regulations expanded.

So my issue with the assessors and my issue with the regulations.

Also, there is the definition of the priorities as to which people are paid out of that fund and the order that they go in: which one takes precedence, which one is second important, which one is the third important, and so on. Actually, just going over it, I noticed that in the previous act the first person that would be paid out of the fund would be the person who is selling the livestock. Nothing wrong with that, but then second to that person or that party would be the person capturing and confining the livestock. Now this is being suggested to be modified from number 2 on the list to number 5. So my concern, again, is that if I'm a farmer or rancher and I notice the stray animal, what is my incentive now if I am moved down the list of priority? Now I'm fifth, so four people come before me in trying to recover those costs or the expenses that they incurred.

One notorious phrase that many people are aware of might be applicable here: shoot, shovel, and shut up. You know, if I'm not going to recoup, what's my incentive as a person to capture that livestock and care for it and store it and then hopefully report it to the investigator and then deliver it to the person who might care for it a little more and then sell it. I don't think we're sending the right message there.

Possibly also the idea of testing it while it's in captivity. Now, that would be a good opportunity for testing for communicable diseases that might transfer or jump from one animal to another or might, in fact, actually jump from an animal host to a human host. This would be an opportune scenario to actually investigate and test during that time of captivity.

With that, there is that definition of livestock. I think one of my hon. colleagues covered that or touched on it. Why are we moving the definition of livestock from the act itself to the regulations? Would that change? We know what livestock is, and I don't see that we would omit from it unless these animals become extinct or we would add to it unless maybe we're doing some genetic engineering. So why are we removing it from the act when it should be a solid, nonchangeable definition into the regulations allowing the minister to add to it or remove from it? Again, I would appreciate some clarification there.

I just have to revisit the idea of what incentives we are giving to people to try and capture those without overburdening them and without having them down on the list of people to be compensated.

There is also the fact that there is a section that is being repealed, and it's section 40 of the previous act, requiring a person who captures one of those stray animals to report it to an investigator. Now this is being repealed. So that fits with my argument. Are we not requiring them to report it? Are we discouraging them? You know, they used to be asked to report, and now we're saying no. So I would appreciate some clarification as to the rationale behind repealing this section.

I would close by saying that this act is noble in purpose and I support it in principle, but just maybe the point of clarification so I can be more comfortable with it and know that I supported a good piece of legislation. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, does the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity wish to speak on the bill?

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm speaking in favour of the act as well. What I appreciate about the bill and hope that it will address is the complication associated with under whose jurisdiction or whose responsibility the stray animal appears. For the last three springs and summers I had primarily the joy of working operating a wilderness camp in the southeast Kananaskis. One of the problems I had was the fact that in the camp I was running, the infrastructure from Community Development had not been maintained over the years, so my wilderness campground was frequently under what I would call bovine attack.

The roadbeds and so on had filled in, and therefore the cattle had easy access. Whenever the creek was down, I would find up to 60 head of cattle sort of mingling with my campers, which caused no end of confusion, particularly at 2 in the morning, when a camper would find a 500-pound beast using a tent peg as a scratching post, and his wife and children were somewhat alarmed by this bull wanting to join the family in the back of the tent. So the notion of the jurisdiction is very important to me.

One what I now look at as a very amusing circumstance occurred, again, where jurisdiction came into play. A large steer had the misfortune to die half on land and half in the creek, and I reported this death to the conservation officers. Then, in the days that followed – and I should add that it was two days prior to the first of the trans-Rockies road races through the Kananaskis, which has become an international event of great renown. We had this steer half in the water and half on land.

So the following day the road above the creek basically became a parking lot. We had trucks from Community Development there, and we had Sustainable Resources, and we had conservation; we had fisheries and forestry. And it was to a degree somewhat comical because while the various organizations were working together, some with a great deal of equipment and some without, in the intervening time a young grizzly had claimed the carcass of this dead cow.

It added greatly to the complications, under whose jurisdiction the animal now was. Clearly, based on the size of the young grizzly, it was under the bear's jurisdiction. He claimed that he had captured it and was very loathe to relinquish it. So if you can imagine a number of young conservation officers, some equipped only with their radio because they were seasonal and others equipped with a variety of shotguns with heavy shot and rifles, tiptoeing along the creek, keeping an eye out for the grizzly. Of course, their comrades at the top of the road couldn't help but growl encouragement every once in awhile.

Eventually we contacted the rancher. With all the equipment we had on hand, we were able to winch the steer out of the creek, so the fisheries truck was able to go home. Once we got it out of the forestry area, the forestry resource officer was able to go home. Sustainable Resources wished the conservation officers well, and they departed. Eventually, with the help of the rancher, we winched the steer's carcass into the back of his horse trailer, and the various officials sort of bade a fond farewell. But the whole business of the jurisdiction and who was responsible came into account here. It was a little bit like the red hen asking who was going to help plant the corn but then everybody wanting in on the harvest credentials.

So thank you very much. The Stray Animals Act will hopefully clarify the complications that I personally experienced and will make other park operators that much more appreciative of the government's efforts on their behalf.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't have an anecdotal story such as that to share with you, unfortunately. I wish I did, but I don't.

I really hate to sound like a broken record, but I'm going to sound like a broken record. I know that my colleague from Edmonton-McClung mentioned it when he spoke to this bill as well, but once again we have a situation where we're moving stuff from legislation and into regulation. In fact, it seems to me that it is inconsistent with the bill that we debated just a few minutes ago, the Animal Keepers Act. I'm really curious why in the case of Bill 32, the Animal Keepers Act, we have the definition of an animal in the legislation, and then in Bill 33, the Stray Animals Amendment Act, for some reason we're moving the definition, which as near as I can tell would be virtually identical, out of the legislation and into regulation.

So, again, I suppose, Mr. Speaker, we'll be looking for some clarification of that when we get to committee as to why in the one instance we're leaving it in legislation and in another instance, which I think one of my colleagues had mentioned a few minutes ago – actually, it was the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview who mentioned that the two bills, 32 and 33, seem to be companion bills, yet we're dealing with the definition of animals in a different fashion. I'm certainly curious as to why that might be the case and would hope that when we get to committee stage, perhaps we can have an amendment to leave the definition of animal in the bill itself.

Mr. Speaker, there's been some discussion as to the need to have that in regulation. In fact, I believe the website that was referred to by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar talks about the need for flexibility and therefore the reason to move the definition into regulation. This Assembly, as you will know, sits every year for sometimes both a spring sitting and a fall sitting, and that would indicate to me that at least twice a year there's an opportunity to deal with changes in that definition if in fact there were a need to do so. I would think that nothing would be so urgent in terms of the definition of an animal that we couldn't deal with it once every six months or so. So when we get to the committee stage, as I say, that will be the position that I would take and I would expect our caucus will be taking as well, that we should be leaving that definition in the legislation and not moving it into regulation.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, anyone else wish to speak on Bill 33?

I'd ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development to close debate.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks to all of the hon. members who participated in the debate. Some good questions, and we'll certainly be bringing forward some responses to those questions in Committee of the Whole. With all this support from the other side I may have to rethink the legislation – just kidding – but I do appreciate the support and call for the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 33 read a second time]

Bill 15

Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to move second reading of Bill 15, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2005.

Mr. Speaker, these legislative amendments are largely of a housekeeping variety. Overall, this legislation is good news for workers on two fronts. This legislation would also serve to extend the same protection to community-based members of the WCB's board of directors that virtually all government boards and agencies receive.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment proposed in section 17 of the WCA is aimed at clarifying an oversight that occurred when the corporate structure of the WCB was changed to a board-governed model. Section 17 clarifies the wording to make clear that there shall be immunity for members of the board of directors. WCB employees are immune from court action as long as they act in good faith. With this amendment the same protection would now be extended to board members.

Good faith is a legal test that can be established by a weighting of evidence. The proposed amendment to section 17 would not provide members of the board of directors a one hundred per cent blanket of immunity. Acting in bad faith or illegally voids that protection; both are defined under law. Mr. Speaker, such an amendment would bring the same level of protection to these board members that essentially all members of board-governed agencies in Alberta enjoy. To be clear, we are talking about persons from various communities in Alberta who provide board oversight to the workers' compensation system in addition to their regular day jobs. Virtually all legislation in Alberta that creates authorities, boards, or commissions contains a provision that grants immunity to the appointed member provided they are acting in good faith.

Mr. Speaker, moving on to the second theme of these legislative amendments, third-party actions in the WCB's relationship with private legal counsel and pursuing said third-party actions. Section 22(1) through (12) and section 23(2) and section 31(1) and (2) all deal with clarifying the decades' old parameters governing the relationship between the WCB and private lawyers on third-party actions. Bill 15 would clarify the long-standing practice for how lawyers are paid for third-party actions involving WCB claimants. These amendments would close the door on a loophole that a few lawyers are attempting to exploit as a result of a single court case in 2003. This series of amendments will require private practice lawyers to observe certain standards and, perhaps most importantly, will regulate the fees they can charge.

Bill 15 also clarifies and confirms the worker's requirement to cooperate with the board on third-party actions. On third-party actions this legislation would confirm what has been happening for years in practice and what was intended, that the WCB retains and instructs the lawyers and that lawyers or firms are not allowed to charge the client more than a 25 per cent contingency fee.

Also, this would prohibit the practice used by a very few very recently of double-charging the WCB and the worker. By capping the contingency fee that legal counsel can take, this ensures more funds flow to the worker, who gets a minimum of 25 per cent of a court award. The injured worker would also be entitled to the remainder of the settlement once the cost of the action and the cost paid on the claim from the WCB's accident fund are recovered. Also, this is an employer-friendly move because more money is recovered to offset the amount of premiums that employers must pay to finance the 100 per cent employer funded system.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the third area addressed by the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act relates to allowing WCB to pay cost of living increases, or COLA. The proposed amendment to section 60 of the WCA deals with temporary disability benefits. This legislation will permit the WCB to pay cost of living increases to workers who are on extended temporary partial disability benefits. This amendment levels the playing field so that workers on temporary disability are all treated the same benefitwise, regardless of whether their benefits are partial or total.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, this bill clarifies wording around the immunity for the board of directors of the Workers' Compensation Board. It confirms that the WCB can co-ordinate the action and regulate the fees charged by private lawyers working on third-party civil actions and permits WCB to pay cost of living increases to workers who are on extended temporary partial disability benefits.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unlike the previous bill, where there was consultation, this is exactly the opposite. This is how not to bring legislation into this Legislative Assembly. This is not a routine bill as the member has indicated. This is a very significant bill.

Mr. Speaker, just in terms of consultation, since we've got this bill, we've checked with a number of different groups, certainly labour groups and workers that would be affected by this bill. Nobody's talked to them, nobody at all. Most of the people, if I can do a couple of quotes from the Federation of Labour, have big problems with the provisions in subsections (9) and (10) that force a worker to be involved in the proceedings against the company by the WC Board. In other words, the draconian part to this is: let's say that they don't want to be involved; they have to be. They may want to go back and work with that company down the way, and they don't want to be on the opposite side there.

This is draconian and unnecessary. Just because the WCB lost a court case is not reason, then, to come in with draconian measures like this and take away people's rights. Before one brings in a bill – I thought we had an example, a very good example, Mr. Speaker, from the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development about consultation. This is exactly the opposite: no consultation at all. WCB loses a court case, gets angry, and comes to the government and says: change this.

And there's a retroactive feature to this. Any legislation that's retroactive is wrong, as far as I'm concerned. This is draconian and unacceptable, and I'd hope that the government, if they're serious about consultation as we just heard, would go back.

Other people that we've talked to say that the tying of full co-operation to entitlement to continued benefits in section 10 is draconian. These are the words that people are using. If that was not enough, they have enabled themselves – they're talking about the WCB here – to declare past compensation to be a debt owing that is collectible. What is there in current legislation that's been a problem that there needs to be correction? I mean, this is like, you know, overkill, totally, because the WCB lost a court case. We should not be allowed to come back here and give them this sort of power. Every person that we've talked to – we did do the consulting, certainly with labour groups – they're not happy about this, and they're going to make it clear.

I just suggest to the member: where's the consultation? Unlike the previous bill, probably a lot less controversial bill, where they took the time to do this.

To come to us here today and say that this is just a housekeeping bill is absolute nonsense. This is much more than a housekeeping bill, and the member must know this. I just can't believe that the board and only the board can have sole control over whether or not to pursue any claim on behalf of a worker. A worker has no rights. WCB says, "I'm going to do it," and you have to go along. Then they give the board the power to force a worker – to force a worker – to co-operate fully in the investigation, meetings, arbitration, medical examinations, even if the worker wishes not to do so. That sounds almost like a police state to me. And you call that a routine housekeeping bill? To give that sort of power to the WCB?

Then it goes further. If the worker refuses to fully co-operate, the board may withhold payment from the worker, recover previous payments to the worker, and then eventually, if they co-operate, they may get 25 per cent back.

I guess the point I'm making is that because the WCB lost a court case, maybe they should look at their practices. If an impartial court ruled that they're doing things wrong, then perhaps they should change the way they do things, Mr. Speaker, rather than bringing in this type of legislation that takes people's rights away.

I would suggest to the government that perhaps this needs to be – we're only at second reading now, Mr. Speaker – at least thought about and some consultation with groups, not just the friends of the government but some other groups that are impacted by this. I think this member would be surprised. They do not see this – they certainly do not see this – as housekeeping.

This is a major bill, and I think that the government must understand this. I would say that discretion should be the better part of valour here. But take some time and begin to do some consultation because this bill is unacceptable, to me at least, in this Legislature at this time.

We will certainly be opposing this in the most vigorous possible way that we can. It's not that we want to oppose for the sake of opposing, as we just dealt with other bills, and the member knows that. But we see this bill as terribly flawed, unnecessary, and I'd hope that the government would have some serious second thoughts about it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time I move that we adjourn debate on this matter.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Third Reading

Bill 6

Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As promised at committee stage, I undertook to reply to any opposition questions on Bill 6, the Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2005. It is now my pleasure to do so.

Mr. Speaker, an example was requested of a business that is subject to the act but not required to be licensed. An existing example is a time-share. Time-shares are required under the Fair Trading Act and its time-share contracts regulation to provide certain disclosures and cancellation rights, but they are not licensed. A future example could be moving companies, where the minister may want to set some standards without creating a licensing requirement.

Mr. Speaker, clarification was requested on the following sections of the bill. Section 7.3(2). This section limits the assignee's responsibility to compensate the consumer to the amount the consumer actually received, and as such it operates to exclude amounts paid by the consumer prior to the assignment.

Section 29(6). Consumer services has been assigned to several departments over the years and is currently part of Government Services. This amendment provides flexibility in case consumer services is moved to another department in the future.

Sections 46 and 48. The repeal of these sections will coincide with these sections appearing in the regulation. Consumer protection will not be lost.

In regard to concerns on credit reporting, Government Services is currently working with the other provinces, territories, and the federal government on a national template for credit reporting. This is likely to include a harmonized definition of credit information. This process will also include consultation with the credit industry and other stakeholders.

The collection practices regulation will be going through an amendment process that will be completed when the Fair Trading Amendment Act is proclaimed. An expected outcome of the amendment process is that receipts will only be required for cash payments. Collection agencies will still be required to provide a statement of account to a debtor when one is requested.

Failing to comply with other legislation has been added as a reason to refuse to issue or remove or suspend or cancel a licence. This applies to situations where a Fair Trading Act licensee is not in compliance with other legislation. This addresses situations where a person requires a certificate and/or must meet other requirements under other legislation that directly applies to the activity licensed under the Fair Trading Act. An example would be that an automobile repair business licensed under the Fair Trading Act would also be required to have a journeyman mechanic licensed under the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Act.

In regard to concerns raised on moving parts of the act into regulation, all areas in the act that are being repealed will be placed in the regulations. Full consultation will be done with all stakeholders prior to any changes being made to the regulation. Consultation will include industry, consumers, and government departments, and the Fair Trading Amendment Act will not be proclaimed until all applicable regulations are ready to be passed; therefore, there will be no gaps in protection for consumers.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that I've answered all the questions that were asked at committee stage. Therefore, I move third reading of Bill 6, the Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2005.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I have spoken quite extensively on this bill, Bill 6, the Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2005, in the previous stages, and I generally indicated my support for it. Any legislation that promotes or enforces fair trading would be advisable, and I would support it.

I appreciate the explanations that the hon. member gave, and I sincerely thank him for taking the time to research it and to come back to the House with these answers. I would still urge and take this opportunity to reinforce my request of this government and this department to try to communicate in a timely fashion and as clearly as possible with the public and with the stakeholders what each amendment means. Because the public doesn't read the bill and the public doesn't understand lawyer language – they want it in plain English, and they want it in clear terms – before we pass anything or after we pass anything in this Chamber, just tell the public what it really means and how it affects their lives and how they conduct business and how their day-to-day activities might change with that.

Also, again, I appreciate the explanation that the regulations will have to be passed before the final version of the law would be proclaimed, and the hon. member generously offered to share and consult with the stakeholders. He mentioned industry, and he mentioned government departments, but maybe I can challenge him to include the opposition in that list of consultees because, you know, we have ideas that might offer a positive addition to any piece of legislation that is being discussed. We might have an idea that might have been accidentally overlooked by the government and would enhance or strengthen the legislation.

I think, again, my rider is that the utmost goal of any discussion we have here under this dome is basically to improve and enhance and simplify people's lives. When business transactions are being scrutinized or being looked at, I think it's in everybody's interest to try to research and consult every possible source that might add to the discussion.

So, with that, I think my final comment would be that we've supported this bill in second reading and in committee, and we support it in third reading, but I would again emphasize my challenge to the hon. member and to the government to try to seek answers from the opposition whenever it's feasible and whenever it's convenient because we might actually add something to the debate that might have been accidentally overlooked, as I mentioned.

With that, I thank you, and I invite other people to participate. Thank you.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I just have a couple of comments before the member adjourns debate. The current legislation states that it's unfair to charge a customer a price that "grossly exceeds," I think the term is, the price of similar goods and services. Now we're dealing with legislation. I guess that it's always in the eye of the beholder what is gross in terms of excess need. So is there any attempt to sort of deal with this term? I'm not sure that in legislation it's particularly helpful just to throw out a term like that. It should perhaps be a little more specific about what we mean by "grossly."

The only other comment: under 24(c), (g), and (m), Mr. Speaker, there are the definitions. We've had a fair amount of discussion in this House about identity theft. My understanding about this is: I think we underestimate the ability of some very skilled people with computers to take a very limited amount of personal information and get a lot more if they have it. I go back to the discussion we've had over the losing, at least, of the health care records. I guess that I'm asking if the definitions regarding identity theft are added, what procedures in this case do we have to make sure that that doesn't happen? Definitions are nice, but what will we do about it? What can we do to protect that identity?

So just a couple of comments, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to make. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions, comments.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to get an opportunity to participate in the debate on Bill 6, the Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2005, as proposed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. Certainly, I believe the hon. member was a number of years ago responsible for the first version of the Fair Trading Act, and whenever we look at the history of this legislation, it was needed then, and it is needed even more now. In the past we have seen some rather interesting cases brought before our court system as a result of this legislation. Hopefully, we are going to strengthen this legislation even more. But have we strengthened it enough? That is another question, Mr. Speaker.

Certainly, as recently as last summer the Alberta government had laid over 125 charges under the Fair Trading Act against four travel and time-share companies and a director for allegedly misleading consumers and refusing to provide refunds. Now, the parties that were charged in this matter include the Royal Club International A World Of Timeless Vacations; Resort Condominiums International, LLC, Mr. Speaker; the third enterprise, RCI Canada Inc.; and the Royal Club Resorts Inc. Now, Alberta Government Services under the Fair Trading Act launched an investigation after several consumers complained that they didn't get their refunds after they had cancelled time-share and travel services purchased.

The first provincial court appearance occurred in Canmore, and it's interesting that it would occur in Canmore because every hon. member of this Assembly knows that there are a fair number of time-shares in that municipality. The parties faced various charges, and they were dealt with. They were dealt with under this act.

Now, there are other examples. Certainly, you know, we've heard in this Legislative Assembly as late as question period today discussions around personal information that had been misplaced by the department of health. This is not the first time this has happened. Now, I'm not suggesting for a minute, Mr. Speaker, that we have the department of health charged under the Fair Trading Act. I'm not suggesting that for one minute.

If we go back a little further to last year again, we see where for some members of Alberta's fine civil service some of their information had gone astray, and that was disturbing to say the least. It certainly wasn't the number of files such as the department of health misplaced, but it was significant. I understand on recollection, Mr. Speaker, that this information was being divided up by criminal elements in a hotel or a motel. Who knows what they were going to use it for?

In the debate, as we conclude debate on the Fair Trading Amendment Act in third reading, I don't think enough discussion has been given to the protection of personal information. Should it be limited? Should it only be limited to respective acts? Perhaps we should look at this whenever there is a violation under the Fair Trading Act. Now, there are shrugs. I don't think we can dismiss this, Mr. Speaker, because unfortunately personal information is being used in the marketplace. Is it being used fairly? Is it being used with permission of the individual? In some cases I would say no. It is something that I think we should look at and consider.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung was talking about ideas to improve the bill. Well, that's something that I think we should consider. Certainly, there are many people, many individuals, many companies that provide credit information and credit ratings, and the accuracy of those credit ratings can sometimes play an important part in a family's or an individual's ability to borrow money at reasonable market rates.

Now, sometimes those ratings are very inaccurate. I know the hon. Member for Edmonton – I always want to say Edmonton-McClelland, but I know that's not it.

An Hon. Member: Rutherford.

Mr. MacDonald: Edmonton-Rutherford. Of course.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has been telling caucus about some of the inaccurate ratings that auto insurance companies give their consumers, and sometimes rates are driven up regardless of the good driving record of the consumer. Have we talked about maybe implementing that in the Fair Trading Act? That would be something that I think we should have a serious look at because the current set-up I don't think is adequate enough for consumers.

Now, as we walk through this bill and we see how consumers should be protected, there are still improvements that can be made to this Fair Trading Act, Mr. Speaker. There certainly are some new sections to it. We have a new section that clarifies that a court or an appeal panel "consider the real substance of the entity or the transaction" as opposed to the form to determine if the act applies to the entity or the transaction. That is new in part 1.

In part 2 we have three new sections. Provide that a consumer and a supplier can agree to amend the estimate if the consumer requires additional or different goods or services: that's a new part.

Also a new part to this act is to prohibit a business from charging a fee for an estimate unless the consumer is told in advance that a fee will be charged and the amount of the fee, Mr. Speaker.

Also a new section of part 2 is to prohibit a supplier from automatically renewing a contract without prominent and full disclosure of the details and the consumer's express consent in a verifiable manner. Now, this is a step in the right direction, but perhaps, hon. members, it does not go far enough because included in these suppliers are the natural gas marketers and the electricity marketers, and I don't think we are being adequately protected.

Now, of course, the hon. Minister of Energy is going to tell us in due time that we have the Alberta Utilities Consumer Advocate, which is protecting consumers for both natural gas contracts and electricity contracts. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity was talking a little earlier in debate about bears, and I think, Mr. Speaker, that the Alberta Utilities Consumer Advocate is like a bear because hibernation occurs in the coldest months of the year. We have one of the most shocking disclosures in this province in a long, long time with the disclosure of the documents indicating Enron's activity down at the Power Pool in 1999, the year 2000, and again in the year 2001. I'm not satisfied with the silence of this Alberta Utilities Consumer Advocate.

Could we get more protection for the consumers with Bill 6, Mr. Speaker, the Fair Trading Amendment Act? I think we could and we should because certainly it is not adequate. We can make the argument that the Alberta market surveillance administrator is going to protect consumers with electricity contracts and with natural gas contracts. I don't see that. I don't see that happening at all. We have the consumer choice website customerchoice.gov.ab.ca. Sometimes months go by. Months. You'd almost think that I was the one that was responsible for updating that website. I do a very poor job of it. Sometimes I forget to do my own for long periods of time and that website is very similar to mine. It is not updated often enough.

The Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. Well, of course they are to protect the public interest, but there were claims, and they were verified, of overcharging for electricity by various utility companies, and the EUB ordered that money to be given back. Two of those orders, if my memory stands correct here: one would be Engage Energy, the former employer of the current market surveillance administrator, and the other would be TransAlta.

We've discussed all these issues in the Assembly. Consumers don't seem to be getting the protection that they deserve from this government. While we're in third reading here on the Fair Trading Amendment Act, I'm disappointed that we haven't made another new section to protect natural gas consumers and electricity consumers from the whole idea of these marketers coming around to the doorstep, knocking on the door, and wanting to sell you a one- or three- or five-year contract. I don't see anywhere in this bill a proposed section that would say that.

I know that we have the 10-day cooling off period in here, but let's recognize that the natural gas market and the electricity market are very volatile, and it's a gamble. There are enough Albertans going to the casinos and putting their money in the VLTs and in the slot machines and on the blackjack tables and all that sort of stuff. If they want to gamble at the casino, they shouldn't have to gamble with their utility bill. In order to protect them, I think on the anniversary of the contract Alberta consumers should be able to exit those contracts without any financial penalty whatsoever. This is one of the ideas that we could implement to improve Bill 6 at this time.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung is promoting ideas to improve this bill. Well, that is one. It would be an excellent solution to some of the concerns consumers are facing because, Mr. Speaker, this new era of competition that has been discussed at length in this House for electricity and natural gas is creating plenty of dark clouds for consumers. There are lots of warnings here. Certainly, the Alberta government has advised consumers to take a good hard look before they sign the deal. You've got the 10-day cooling off period.

The new agencies that we talked about here are not working out in my view. That's why I think the Fair Trading Act, even at third reading – maybe we should have a hoist amendment and move it back and have another look at this. Perhaps that's what we should do. We could do a referral. It doesn't matter to this hon. member, but I think maybe it's time we had another look at this to protect energy consumers in this province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: I will make this extremely brief, and this is designed to be helpful. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung made the point that at times opposition parties have a role that could contribute. Unfortunately, we didn't have an opportunity yesterday, when Fort McMurray representatives came to town, to contribute at that meeting, but here we have the opportunity.

It's the electronic fair trade that I would recommend. A larger portion of trade is now being done electronically, and the Fair Trading Amendment Act doesn't deal with the potential for false advertisement, false contracting, basically fraud from electronic sources. So I would just suggest that the hon. member look at the electronic aspects because a larger portion of business is now being conducted electronically, and we need to make sure that this Fair Trading Amendment Act takes into account the modern methods of trading and assure people that they're not going to be ripped off electronically as they might be in the older fashions.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) for questions or comments.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to have to pull out my whip here and chastise my colleague from Calgary-Varsity for stealing my thunder. I had whispered to him that I had some serious concerns about electronic fraud – I know that there are many members anxious to see that – in particular, concerns about Internet fraud. [interjections] I hear somebody kibitzing in the background about eBay. That is certainly one area where there are concerns about whether or not legitimate business practices are taking place.

As somebody who ran a small business for the last 25 years or so, I can tell you that there wasn't a day went by that I didn't have an opportunity to participate in some sort of scheme that would have, for the small investment of my banking information and a few thousand dollars, returned $20 million to my company. For some reason I foolishly never chose to participate in those activities, but those opportunities arose almost daily.

In fact, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity referred to electronic fraud. When these things first started, of course, it was something that we saw coming in by mail usually. Then as technology improved, we started to see opportunities such as that appearing on the fax machine, and for many years it was almost a daily thing on the fax machine. Now, more recently, and again in fact almost every day – and I've even had one of these e-mailed to my Legislature account, Mr. Speaker, an opportunity to invest in some sort of Nigerian opportunity that would return several million dollars, in U.S. dollars I might add, to my personal account. So as we've seen in other areas regarding the Internet and the unscrupulous activities that may take place on the Internet, certainly business fraud and misrepresentation are things that are happening on a regular basis and causing a great deal of concern to me and isn't mentioned specifically in this bill at all.

Now, with technology changing as quickly as it is, Mr. Speaker – just as an example, in the area of child porn we've seen local law enforcement agencies struggling to keep up with how quickly things change there. They're constantly demanding more and more resources to deal with that. Likewise the fraud department. The last time I spoke to them, which is not that long ago, probably in the last 18 months or so, the fraud department at the Edmonton Police Service indicated to me that they were finding it virtually impossible to keep up with the number of complaints they were getting regarding Internet fraud. So I would have hoped to have seen something in this bill that would address in particular the instance of Internet fraud.

Now, here I go again talking about regulations versus legislation. But I noticed that at the committee stage the mover of this bill from Bonnyville-Cold Lake said – and I'm going to just quote directly from Hansard, if I can find it. He actually reiterated it today, so maybe I can just ad lib and copy what he said today. He was saying that the reason for moving things out of legislation and into regulation was in fact to allow for flexibility and that consumers and industry and government departments would be consulted. As has been pointed out now by at least two speakers prior to me, there was no mention in there of consultation with members from the Official Opposition caucus.

I will acknowledge, Mr. Speaker, that as a new member to this Assembly I'm not completely clear on how changes to regulations come about, but my understanding is that they don't involve consultation with the opposition caucus. I think that when we're addressing issues like democratic deficit – and I've raised several times the concern in this Assembly about transparency and openness of government – the fact that we're once again moving things into regulation, out of the public eye, out of the full view of the public and the opportunity for debate, that always causes me concern.

[Mr. Speaker in the chair]

Again, given that we're here twice a year, I certainly would think that we would be able to provide whatever flexibility is required within a six-month period to address any concerns that might come forward. I would really, really prefer to have seen those various areas not moved out of legislation, left in the bill, but given that that is the case and we're now at third reading – and I obviously can't change that anymore – I would hope that the mover and the minister responsible would give serious consideration to the suggestion from the members for Edmonton-McClung and Edmonton-Gold Bar and at the very least consider including the Official Opposition in the group of stakeholders when they get to developing the regulations so that all views can be represented fairly when it comes to drafting those regulations. Perhaps the Official Opposition could thereby shed a little light and a little public participation as opposed to just participation from the stakeholder groups that the government might choose to select.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat and look forward to any further debate.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Additional speakers?

Shall I call on the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake to conclude the debate?

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'd like to thank all the hon. members that partook in the debate. I'd like to send out a thank you to the Minister of Government Services for having entrusted me with sponsoring this bill on his behalf, and I'd now ask for the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a third time]

Bill 20

Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2005

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As promised at committee stage, I undertook to answer any opposition questions on Bill 20, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2005.

Mr. Speaker, there was only one question asked by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre about section 16(2). The issue raised is not connected to the personal income tax, and in fact Human Resources and Employment has addressed the concern through a regulation change which was announced via a news release on March 15, 2005. Also, I would refer the hon. member to review Hansard of March 22, 2005, when the Human Resources and Employment minister answered this very question.

Mr. Speaker, I now move third reading of Bill 20, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2005.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I had indicated previously, this is one of those bills that the opposition has absolutely no problem with. We consulted the Canadian Taxpayers Federation and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, both of whom indicated that they were completely comfortable with the bill and the amendments that are being made to the Personal Income Tax Act.

Certainly, the fact that this bill accommodates paralleling federal legislation makes perfect sense to us. Something that we strongly support is the idea that we're ensuring that individuals will not be double-taxed on income. I don't know anybody who likes to be taxed, let alone double-taxed, so this is something, again, that we strongly support.

Mr. Speaker, that pretty much is the limit of what I have to say. It's a good bill. It accomplishes what it set out to do. I think I had indicated previously that the Minister of Finance had made available some of her staff to brief us on this bill, and they were very accommodating. I would like at this time to just express my thanks to them for having done so and would hope that we continue to see that sort of co-operation in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Very briefly, the bill, again, as near as I can tell, is a housekeeping bill. It makes common sense. I think I asked the question earlier on, but I'll repeat it. As nearly as I can tell, this bill is revenue neutral. If that's not the case, if it's not revenue neutral, I wonder if the member could indicate to us whom it might impact. I believe that I asked those questions before. If it's revenue neutral, if it's not impacting anybody, that's fine. Generally, again, it's a common-sense bill, and certainly at this end of the House we will be supporting it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) kicks in.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Just in keeping with an attempt to be helpful and indicate that the opposition does have worthy ideas, whether that opposition be from our hon. members from the New Democratic Party or from the Liberals, one of the suggestions that I would encourage for the Personal Income Tax Act – and this goes along with and I think would potentially be supported by the minister of health – is the idea of an exemption for registration in a community sporting activity specifically for children. Much in the same way that you get an education exemption for courses taken at the university level, you might consider the exemption for a physical activity such as a soccer registration or a registration in a community baseball team.

This promotes fitness. I hesitate to use the sports analogy, but it literally does create a level playing field for parents who due to financial constraints might not be able to enrol their students in sporting activities. Again, in terms of a potential income tax deduction for the future please consider the idea of sports registration in community programs to give parents a bit of a break and also encourage wellness and physical activity.

Thank you very much.

5:00

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) kicks in.

Shall I call on the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake to conclude the debate? The hon. member.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again I'd like to thank all of the hon. members that partook in this debate, and I'd like to thank the Minister of Finance for having entrusted me with the opportunity to sponsor this bill. Now I'll ask for the question.

Thank you.

Second Reading
(continued)

Bill 35

Employment Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2005

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm standing this afternoon to move second reading of Bill 35, the Employment Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2005.

As I stated during the introduction of this legislation, this act will allow the private-sector pension plan members better access to information and more transparency on the plan's financial status. It will also provide mechanisms to give the superintendent of pensions more effective ways of ensuring that the pension plans are liquid and properly funded.

Mr. Speaker, we've all noticed in recent years the increasing focus on pension plans. There have been downturns in the investment markets and low interest rates, which have hurt pension plan funding. The result of those factors has been that some of the surpluses of the 1990s have often turned to shortfalls in the pension plans. So people are naturally concerned as they get near retirement age that their pensions are properly funded.

Also, pensions that are in private employment pension plans are the largest source of retirement income for a great many people, so it is important that Albertans feel confident in the security of their private pension plans. That is why the government is moving this bill to ensure that plans are properly funded.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation will provide the superintendent of pensions with more effective ways of dealing with and monitoring funding of the plans, as I said, and this will be taken into account in the enforcement provisions of this proposed bill. The superintendent will require most plans to file audited financial statements on an annual basis. He will also have authority to demand evaluation or assessment of the plans by an independent third party if need be.

Trust and insurance companies that hold pension funds would be required to notify the superintendent if an employer is not making the required contributions in time or in the correct amounts. This additional information along with the actuarially based reports every three years and the annual financial information would provide the superintendent with a complete and up-to-date picture of the plan's financial health.

Regarding enforcement, the superintendent will have the power to remove the administrator in extreme cases and to appoint a new one if the administrator's actions or inactions are jeopardizing the security of a plan. The superintendent would also have power to appoint an outside party, for example a forensic accountant, to investigate plans and require individuals to be interviewed as part of the investigation.

Bill 35, Mr. Speaker, also focuses on giving plan members better information so that they can see for themselves that the plan is liquid and running properly. Plan members will have access to the audited financial statements, any management reports that the superintendent of pensions has delivered following a plan examination, and they would also have advance notification of any proposed amendments to the plan which could adversely affect their benefits; for example, if the rules for taking early retirement were to be made more strict. These amendments would put the members in a better position to monitor their pensions long before they need them.

As well, Mr. Speaker, these amendments update the act to reflect changes in the pension community. Pension partners, that is spouses, will be able to waive preretirement death benefits. Many people have been asking for this flexibility now that there are many two-income couples and many people in second marriages with financial arrangements that they may want to maintain from their previous relationships.

At the same time, people signing these waivers of death benefits or survivors pensions will be required to provide proof to the plan administrator that they've received independent legal advice about signing such a waiver. In response to calls for more flexibility in dividing pension benefits on marriage breakdown, these changes would also enable couples to divide pensions based on an agreement rather than having to go to court to get a matrimonial property order.

Administrators of terminating pension plans, after conducting a thorough search for missing plan members, would be able to apply to the court to transfer the funds of missing members to the Public Trustee for safekeeping indefinitely, allowing the administrator to wind up the plan. The superintendent would make sure that Albertans, however, are aware that their funds may be with the Public Trustee.

Plans for business owners will no longer have to file documents with the superintendent, and this will relieve them of an administrative burden that, in our view, is not necessary because business owners are well able to look after their own interests and do not need the superintendent's oversight.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to sponsor this bill because it addresses some very important issues in the lives of thousands of Albertans: their pensions. The bill would make the employment pension systems better by giving the government better tools to monitor pension plans and to intervene if problems arise, and it will also give the plan members more information about their plans so that they can monitor them and be more confident that their retirement funds are being properly managed. I would urge all members of the Assembly to give their support to Bill 35.

Mr. Speaker, I move that debate on Bill 35 be adjourned.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we call it 5:30 and reconvene this evening at 8 o'clock in Committee of the Whole.

Bill 12
Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate April 4: Mrs. Jablonski]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Question.

Mrs. Jablonski: Question. Yes, that's what I want. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Did the hon. Member for Red Deer-North want to move second reading of Bill 12?

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was able to do that last night, so I've completed my speech. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to speak about Bill 12, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2005. This bill updates the principles of justice applying to the treatment of victims, and as was presented by the hon. member in her introduction of this bill, it's bringing together a number of bills from the past.

The background to this bill, as was mentioned, is first of all the Criminal Injuries Compensation Act of 1969, which assured assistance to victims of crime in Alberta. Then many years later the Victims Programs Assistance Act was approved, which created a fund to support programs and services for victims of crime, and in 1997 the Victims of Crime Act consolidated these two acts and created the victims of crime fund, which was a very important step to ensure that victims of crime are compensated for their losses. Now we have the amendment before us, and it expands on the key principles recommended by a review committee of last year, 2004, the Alberta Victims of Crime Consultation Advisory Committee. So many of the additions to this amendment act are based on recommendations of that advisory committee.

When one compares the amendments with the present act, it is obvious that many of the principles that were in the act are just continued forward and are perhaps listed in a more clear fashion so that we could see all of the principles listed from (a) to (k). Quite a few of them are simply just repeated, and some of them are new. So I'll just make a few comments on especially the new ones.

Section 2(c) is new, that "all reasonable measures should be taken to minimize inconvenience to victims," and that elaborates on the theme of courtesy and compassion and respect. The gist of the feedback of the report, the 2004 report that I referred to, is that victims feel that the "criminal justice system is not always sensitive to and respectful of the needs [and concerns] of victims." The system seems to be focused "more on the rights of the offender than the rights of the victim." So these principles, if they are put into practice, would correct the perceived imbalance.

It is important that (d) is continued; namely, that "victims should promptly receive . . . financial benefits for the injuries that they have suffered." I assume that the goals and procedures of the victims of crime fund are outlined elsewhere in the Victims of Crime Act or in the regulations. As of last year this fund was at $16 million, and one wonders whether the money is in fact promptly and efficiently allocated to the victims of crime. So the word "promptly" there is very important. I'm glad it's there.

The principles listed in other sections, (g) and (h) and (j) and (k), are also new. Section (g) ensures that victims be informed of all aspects of the process of the investigation; (h) ensures that victims be informed about all the services available to victims; (j) focuses on the needs, concerns, and diversity of victims. And especially when you think of the diversity of victims, I'm mindful of the needs of children, who really deserve special attention when they are the victims of crime. Section (k) ensures that victims are informed about the options that they have if they believe that the principles outlined in this amendment are not followed. Then they have recourse for appeals. So all of these themes are important.

The only point that I wish to raise of a critical nature is in respect to the issue of restorative justice. Now, there isn't much in these principles about restorative justice, and I'm disappointed in that. Section (h) refers to information being provided to the victims about services that are available, the victim impact statement program, and it uses the expression "requesting restitution." So there is a mention of the whole theme of restorative justice, but it's not enough. This is a very important issue, and it's a growing issue in terms of the treatment of people who are the victims of crime.

Addressing crime in a meaningful way requires society to focus on the harm done to individuals and communities. A focus only on the punishment of the offender is an inadequate response to addressing the harms done by crime. So holding an offender accountable for the harms they have caused and insisting that the offender make amends for the wrong that they have done in relation to the victim is to move away from punishment to restorative justice, and I think that's very important. The offender has an obligation to the victim and a responsibility to make amends for the wrongs he or she has done.

The 2004 report was very good in outlining the whole issue of restorative justice, and I'm disappointed that more of that did not get into these principles of justice. The report indicates that restorative justice is really important, in fact, for a victim and that "a victim may request a meeting with the offender if the victim wants to explain to the offender the impact the offence has had on the victim," and so on, and that can be arranged even if the offender is in a correctional centre. That kind of process is extremely important.

So what is it that we want to see happen when a person commits a crime in our community? There are actually three parties involved. There is the offender and the whole question of his or her accountability for the harms they have done. There is the victim and the whole question of the harms done to him or her, and this amendment outlines all the necessary points to consider in helping victims. But there is another party involved, and that is the community as a whole. What we want in Alberta is the creation of safe and healthy communities. What we want is a process of healing and the integration of both victims and offenders back into the community. What we want is restorative justice, and I don't think this list of principles is strong enough in emphasizing the need for restorative justice.

The advisory committee put it very well. "Alberta supports restorative justice programs in which victims feel safe and empowered, offenders are held accountable and communities are involved.” But in order for this to happen, in order for restorative justice to happen, there has to be adequate funding for all the programs that help victims. So this victims fund has to be adequate and has to promptly deliver what victims need. There has to be adequate funding of sexual assault centres, for example. There are not enough restorative justice programs; for example, sentencing circles, alternative ways of bringing about mediation. The 2004 report recommends the reinstatement of long-term funding for restorative justice programs in Alberta. Such funding was eliminated in the 2002-03 budget.

Recently, coming from the United Church of Canada, we have begun to learn more and more about restorative justice because of the issue around residential schools and all of the harm that was done to students in residential schools. The United Church and other denominations throughout Canada have appointed people to learn how to carry out mediation, how to enter into dialogue with victims and bring about reconciliation, bring about restoration. And I think that’s extremely important. My concern for restorative justice is rooted in my understanding of all of the religious traditions which undergird our western traditions of justice and law, mainly that retributive justice is not enough. So much of the emphasis of our justice system has been on retribution, and that’s not enough. The ultimate goal of all world religions is the kind of forgiveness which restores and reconciles people.

So my reflections on this bill do not lead me to reject this amendment because I think it’s a very important elaboration on the principles of justice applied to victims. It’s a good start. I think we are on a long road towards shalom, towards reconciliation and peace. We have to learn and experiment more with restorative justice, and eventually our legislation will be more reflective of the goals of restorative justice. But this is fine as far as it goes.

So, Mr. Speaker, I recommend that we approve this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to make brief comments on Bill 12, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2005. By and large, I’m going to be speaking in support of the elaboration of the principles that underlie this piece of legislation.

I remember the very fruitful exercise when an all-party committee of this Legislature – I think it was the 24th Legislature, if I’m correct – went around the province to hold public hearings on reforms needed in our justice system. During those hearings members of the committee were very much impressed by the participation by Albertans in large communities and small, by groups and individuals, first of all participating very seriously and giving advice and making recommendations, and secondly, urging us to move in new directions in order to make our communities healthy and safe.

Two issues on which not only individuals, community leaders, and municipal government representatives spoke were the issues of restorative justice and community policing coupled with it. In order to make our communities safe, we need several things. We need community policing orientation, a change of direction in that regard so that we can prevent harm and injury, the creation of victims, if you wish; secondly, once a crime has been committed, then of course to compensate victims, make sure that they maintain their dignity and have our respect and our attention and responsiveness; and thirdly, to do this in the context of community participation in the compensation for victims through restorative justice.

RCMP presentations to us, I recall, emphasized very much the model of restorative justice that had been I think adopted already by then – I’m talking about 1999 – in places like Australia. So the RCMP presentations in particular focused on the importance of moving towards restorative justice.

When I see the principles enunciated here, they certainly are an expansion on the existing principles, and that certainly is an improvement. But when I look at section 2(g), the focus still seems to be on the retributive aspects of justice, and I think we need to move beyond that to what my hon. colleague for Edmonton-Glenora has already stated quite effectively: towards restorative justice.

Community policing is important, Mr. Speaker, although it’s not directly related to the contents of this bill. If we are to focus attention on merely the compensation of victims, their protection, their dignity, and not pay attention to how we can reduce the incidence of crime which produces victims, I think we will have failed. So that’s where community policing comes in: to make our communities safe. We need to both make sure that offenders pay for the infractions of law that they are responsible for, that they do so in a sort of community context reflecting community values and responding to them genuinely, but also what we need to do is make sure that there is a model of police services which prevents the incidence of crime which produces victims.

So community policing is an important but missing piece that should be related, I think, to the issue of compensation for victims of crime because it will speak to the way in which we can in the first place reduce the number of victims who need our care and our attention and respect and services.

On the victims’ side I notice again that we focus on the correctional system here. I suggest that victims can be, of course, of actions taken by state agencies. I think we need to broaden the scope of consideration of victims and compensation and protection for them regardless of whether these victims are the result of crimes, violent or otherwise, committed by individuals or by groups including the state and its institutions. So that is a bit of a lacuna here in the bill, that it focuses on, essentially, individuals committing crime against other individuals and not paying attention to that crimes can be committed against individuals and that victims can be produced by public agencies, including the agencies of the state.

Having made these few observations, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the bill makes an attempt to move forward in terms of elaborating and adding to the principles underlying the Victims of Crime Act presently in place, so I speak by and large in support of the bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 29(2)(a) up to five minutes are available for questions or comments.

Seeing none, I’ll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I feel that there are some good ideas contained within this bill. I think we can all in fact recognize victims of crime. I mean, they happen almost every single day in our community. Whether it be the simple stuff from a store to a house broken into, everyone has that feeling of violation from the simplest to the most complex cases, and I do have a complex case that I will revert to a little bit later.

I think that the principles are respecting the rights of the victims of the crime. The role of the victims in the past has been limited to involvement in the criminal proceedings as a witness. The victims themselves have always claimed that the system is balanced in favour of the offender because the victims themselves have not been able to have free access to counselling, education, and a variety of supports that are provided to the offender.

This bill clearly states that the victims of crime have a variety of rights including a right to safety, security, prompt financial benefits for the injuries they've suffered, and are entitled to the release of the information as to the offender, as to the investigation as well. These principles are crucial to giving victims a stronger voice within the criminal justice system. It's a crucial first step to establishing stronger support for victims of the crimes, confirming that these people should always be treated with compassion and respect first and foremost.

I spoke about a case, and I think everyone can recognize it. Just to give a little bit of history on that, it was Dougald Miller, who for all intents and purposes led a healthy, full life. He was, I understand, a caretaker. He went to check on a building one day, and unfortunately on November 21, 2000, he was left permanently brain damaged by a psychopath, Leo Teskey. This attack left Dougald unable to talk, eat, move, or do anything for himself. Unfortunately, this individual, Leo Teskey, was a well-known criminal with 164 charges and 34 convictions. He's now a dangerous offender, and he's jailed indefinitely.

The fact remains that this couple, the Millers, are victims of crime. In this particular case, how does one seek mediation? How does one begin to repay in a countable way for Mr. Teskey there? How does he begin to give back anything to these people? They've got to live now being robbed. The state that Mr. Miller is in right now is considered a locked-in syndrome. He's only able to communicate with his wife through a series of blinking, and that's it.

Right now the system allows, I think, for a one-time maximum payout for victims of $100,000. Well, in this case the Millers have used most of that money if not all of it in being able to in fact find supports. As well, they were at one time asked to pay room and board for assistance. The government recognized their responsibility in that and helped them in that particular case but not before they exhausted that one-time money for the victim.

I think that in this case right now the Millers have to pay privately for therapists to make the husband more comfortable for the health care system does not support them and pay for this, which is very unfortunate. I would hold the government responsible for their care, for the health care and therapies, right now because they did not put this criminal away 10 years ago. What's happened to the Millers, unfortunately, could happen again to other people. I think that if the government recognizes once a pattern is appearing, they should act on it.

What, in fact, could happen to the Millers here? Like I said, there's a $16 million surplus fund, apparently, that's put aside, and how was that fund established? Apparently, the government, when criminals are convicted, does charge these criminals approximately 15 per cent, which is topped up into this fund. But what happens if they go to a number of convictions where the people do not have money to make restitution to build into this fund? This fund will continue to be depleted. So I think there has to be another way, in fact, for this fund to be created. It must be supported by government in cases where the victims and the criminal have no means of restitution.

In this case, in fact, restitution is still being sought after by the Millers. There is, like I said, only one way for the husband right now to communicate, and it's through an eye tracking device that would help him communicate with his wife. Unfortunately, this costs approximately $16,000. They're in no position right now to pay for that. It would be a perfect example of how the victims in this case could continue to be funded with regard to this surplus fund, in ongoing supports with regard to a compassionate way of life, at least in the simplest form: for communication. I think that would be, first and foremost, a good start for restitution by this government.

There are so many other issues here that one can't help but feel sick for the fact of what Mrs. Miller is going through. She's now left alone. In fact, this year they're going to celebrate their anniversary, but what an anniversary to be able to celebrate here in this upcoming year: nowhere to go, no one to share those experiences. They're here on their own out of their native homeland, Scotland. They're the only ones here to support each other.

It's unfortunate, like I said, that she has no other way right now to communicate with her husband except for the blinking. This device, which I spoke about earlier, would certainly help the Millers be able to at least get a little bit of normality back in their life. It certainly in no way is going to undo what's already been done. This is just one example, I think, that the Victims of Crime Amendment Act could certainly look at.

Has the committee considered using, in fact, actual victims in the extreme case? Would they be able to give some experiences as well as perhaps some ongoing dialogue as to where supports could be? Right now the supports within the system are run in some cases by volunteers, but if the volunteers aren't there and there's no funding for them, I'm not sure where the system is going to go after that. It's going to fail.

Overall, this city continues to grow, the province continues to grow, but then with the growth come the problems associated with growth, with greed and crime. Crime is exactly what we're talking about here tonight. So those are just a few things to consider with regard to this bill then.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone on Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess that I'm a little bit concerned with some of the comments that have been made and the continual onus on the government to look after these victims of crime. I guess that I want to go back and relate a story of an older gentleman that I knew some 20 or 30 years, when I was 16 years of age and had the opportunity to work with him on a farming operation. He had gotten drunk back in the '40s and had killed an individual. The long and short of it is that for the rest of his life he had to pay into the victims of crime fund, and there was a monthly charge.

When someone has become an offender or perpetrator, they've stepped out of their bounds, and they owe a debt to that victim or to the society as a whole. We continue to seem to put the onus on government to have to make up for those, and I think that the first onus should in fact be on that perpetrator that has committed the offence. I would like to see some resolution go forward or something changed more to realize that the perpetrator is, in fact, accountable.

Under Principles 2(1)(e) says, "The safety and security of the victims should be considered" – and I think that perhaps that should be changed to something like "will take precedence" – "at all stages of the criminal justice process, and appropriate measures to protect victims from intimidation and retaliation." Then perhaps it should be added in there again: from the perpetrator or any of their associates.

I have two accounts in my constituency where young offenders became very obnoxious and a problem to the community. The common joke amongst those two was that after they'd committed a crime – and of course being young offenders, they got special treatment – they thought nothing of going up and down the streets in their small community. To anybody who wanted to speak out or against them or who would say, “You shouldn’t be doing that,” they were very bold and obnoxious and would come over and flat out tell them: “Do you realize that I know where you live? Do you realize that I have gas? Do you realize that I have matches?” Very intimidating.

I think that we need to seriously consider putting the onus back on these perpetrators. When we talk about people that are intimidating or showing retaliation, even if it’s verbal, they should be held accountable and that debt to society be held there and not just waived to the side after they’ve spent a little bit of time in jail or whatever it is for the offence. So this Victims of Crime Amendment Act I’m very much in favour of. I’d like to see it strengthened, and I would like to see the onus put on the perpetrator. As long as there’s an individual, perhaps, that needs an expensive device or something else, these perpetrators should be contributing to that victims’ fund and not be let off the hook after they’ve done a short amount of time.

Thank you.

8:30

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone wishing to speak on 29(2)(a)? The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A question for the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. In a situation such as that referred to by the Member for Edmonton-Decore where a victim is left desperately crippled and compromised and the perpetrator has absolutely no resources, do you expect, then, the victim to go without, or do you expect that in those cases society should step forward and fill the gap?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. A very good question. No. To clarify my statement, the first onus should be on the perpetrator. That’s the reason why we have society. That’s why we step in. No, absolutely. That’s why I say the perpetrators need to contribute to that fund throughout their life and to increase the fund. No, I would expect that fund there for those – too often those perpetrators are of little income and little productive lives, and they cannot compensate their victims. But I do not like to see them continue on with their life whereas their victim is strapped for the rest of their life, and the perpetrator after a short stint in jail gets to start over with no long-term consequences.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Yes. Mr. Speaker, just a further question to the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. In the case of some individuals, you know, maybe they should be locked up to some degree and the key thrown away, and they will not ever have any income. How do you envisage them compensating individuals? How could the individuals who are the victims, in fact, get some sort of justice in terms of their own selves in those cases other than the government?

Mr. Hinman: Once again another excellent question. I guess it goes back to I believe that all human beings can be productive whether they’re in jail or not, and perhaps they should do some work, and the fruits of their labour should go towards those victims. But, once again, many times those perpetrators, those offenders are not very productive individuals, and that’s why we have the victims of crime fund, so we can look after them. I just want those people to be held accountable and pay their debt to society. Often that continues for many, many years because we still have to continue looking after these people that have been affected with lifelong debilitating problems whereas, like I say, the perpetrator is off scot-free. There is no true restitution there given back by the perpetrator.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else on 29(2)(a)?

Anyone else on the bill? Does the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie wish to speak on the bill?

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m pleased to rise and speak to Bill 12, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act. A victim of crime is anyone affected by a crime, from a person who loses his life in an act of violence to someone who has a bicycle stolen from a backyard. It also includes people who are indirectly affected. The parents of a teenager who is assaulted and the co-worker who witnesses a robbery are also victims of crime.

Bill 12 speaks clearly to strengthening the principle of justice for victims of crime. It’s a critical step in establishing stronger support mechanisms for victims of crime and confirming that these people should also be treated with compassion and respect. This bill updates the principles of justice for victims of crime. This amendment is the result of a 2004 report of the Alberta victims of crime consultation that recommended the incorporation of these principles. Mr. Speaker, this amendment came from consultations with victims of crime as well as those who work with victims of crime. It addresses many of their concerns and is part of a long-term commitment to giving victims of crime a stronger voice in criminal justice proceedings.

However, even though this amendment is a good first step, there are issues with whether this step is enough to address the ongoing problems surrounding the victims of crime fund. The victims of crime fund as of last year has been estimated to have approximately $16 million in a surplus fund. This fund is designed to give grants to various victims services programs and also to offer financial compensation to victims and to help with expenses related to judicial operations that could be incurred by victims.

There is a 15 per cent surcharge that is levied on fines against people that have been convicted, and the money collected from this goes into the fund. So there is money accumulating in this account, and it is accumulating year after year after year. I would like to know where these surpluses are going. Are these going back into general revenue, or are the surpluses used in some other programs?

The question that must be asked is: why is this government not allocating the money in this fund more efficiently? There are numerous organizations in the province that are in need of increased financial aid in order to deliver programs to victims of crime. Many of the programs are run by volunteers. If there is a surplus in that fund of approximately $16 million, then why is this government not using this surplus, which is supposed to be dedicated to be used with victims of crime, to provide funding to organizations like the sexual assault centres, the John Howard Society, and the Crossroads program so that they can focus their efforts on assisting victims and not worry about how to pay their bills from month to month?

This government needs to use the money in the victims of crime fund to fully fund community organizations and sexual assault centres so that they do not have to struggle to survive. These organizations need ongoing, sustained funding instead of funding that is tied to the delivery of client services in specific programs.

These are recommendations from the government's own reports as well as the sentiment of stakeholders who deliver supports to victims of crime.

Mr. Speaker, I support Bill 12 as it's a very good step to enhance the ability of victims of crime by participating meaningfully in the criminal justice system. However, there is much more that needs to be done by this government than just simply restating the principles respecting the rights of victims of crime.

The other point that I wanted to make pertains to the helpless victims of crime who are overlooked by this bill; for example, parents of teenagers who are assaulted, victims who are too scared to speak out because of fear of the reaction of the community, a lack of financial support, or perhaps even language barriers. Moreover, this bill does not cover all of the recommendations of the review committee formed in 2001. For example, certain groups of people, like aboriginals, may have specialized needs that are not always met by the current government. This bill is not inclusive to address the complication arising in the federal and provincial jurisdictions.

The good thing about this amendment is that victims of crime have a variety of rights, including a right to safety and security and financial benefits for the injuries they have suffered, and are entitled to the release of information about all aspects of the investigation and status of the offender. It also solidifies in legislation full access to information regarding the victim impact statement program. These principles are crucial to giving victims a stronger voice in the criminal justice system.

Thank you.

8:40

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone on 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I think the important thing on any of these types of bills that look to compensate victims is that we should be seeing that they increase the ability of citizens in our society to be free from fear and to feel secure in their society. I'll just quote a few clauses from the United Nations declaration on basic principles of justice for victims of crime and the abuse of power.

Victims should be treated with compassion and respect to their dignity, and are entitled to prompt redress for harm caused.

Victims should be informed of their role and the timing and progress of their cases.

Steps should be taken to minimize delay and inconvenience to victims, ensure their privacy, and protect them from intimidation and retaliation.

States should consider incorporating into national law norms proscribing abuses of power, including political and economic power. They should also provide remedies to victims of such abuses, including restitution and compensation.

I think some of those clauses in the United Nations declaration speak to some of the issues of timeliness, which I think could be stronger in this bill in terms of, you know, getting things very, very quickly to victims. In terms of the restitution I believe that the hundred thousand dollar limit is certainly not sufficient in many cases, and it doesn't speak to some of the difficulties one might see in political and economic crime or, indeed, some of the abuses we've seen with pension funds and such by some people in the past.

But that said, Mr. Speaker, I'd move adjournment of this particular bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 17
Agrology Profession Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I speak in favour of this bill. Generally, it's supported by the community and has a number of benefits for the profession, both in the professional designation and in the technical or technologist designation. There's some opposition in a few areas, but they haven't voiced it very strongly, and I support this bill.

The Chair: Anyone else wishing to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'm looking at Bill 17, Agrology Profession Act, and under section 101, the penalty, it says:

A person who contravenes section 100 is guilty of an offence and liable

(a) for a first offence, to a fine of not more than $2000.

So by reading this, it could be a fine as little as $1. Am I correct in reading that? Then:

(b) for a 2nd offence, to a fine of not more than $4000.

So that could be $2,001.

I think they should have a base or minimum instead of a maximum, which you could put to the minimum of a dollar. So that could certainly be one of the first amendments that I would recommend, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you.

The Chair: Anyone else wishing to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to speak in Committee of the Whole on Bill 17, the Agrology Profession Act. Bill 17 is important legislation because it will strengthen the agrology profession.

Alberta has over 1,500 professional agrologists, who apply standards in science to every facet of the agricultural industry, from livestock breeding to food processing to soil protection. During the second reading of Bill 17 I outlined several reasons why this legislation is important to Alberta's agricultural and environmental sectors. I'd like to revisit some of those key highlights in this legislation.

Bill 17 seeks to repeal and replace the current Agrologists Act with new legislation that provides for greater public accountability, transparency, and equity in the governance of Alberta's agrology profession. This act strengthens the Alberta Institute of Agrologists, the professional organization that ensures that its members are qualified and competent to provide information and advice on agriculture, food, and associated natural resources. Bill 17 elevates the professional conduct of the institution members by specifying the requirements for complaint investigation, hearings and appeals, the use of alternative resolution processes, and the procedures relating to the decisions on disposition of records. The act also requires that the institution comply with the record retention requirements of the Personal Information Protection Act to ensure personal privacy and follows other professional legislation in allowing complaints to be referred to the office of the Ombudsman.

Another highlight of this legislation is that it specifies the protected titles, words, and abbreviations which may be used by the institution members. They also have penalties and injunctions associated with illegal use of such titles, words, and abbreviations. The postnominal PAg is afforded only to those who meet the highest standards of the agrology profession.

These are just some of the main reasons for my strong support for this bill. By strengthening the agrology profession, we are investing in Alberta's agricultural sectors and our environment. I am proud to say that the Alberta Institute of Agrologists as well as stakeholders, private industry, other professional associations, and academic institutions strongly support this legislation.

In summary, the Agrology Profession Act responds to public expectations for more transparent and consistent professional legislation while strengthening a profession that provides vital services to Alberta.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

8:50

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I've got a question, actually, for the sponsor of the bill, the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul. It's on page 68 under Penalty, section 101. Again, I think this government is setting fines, but really in some cases, like for CEOs, the fine maxes what a paycheque is for a week. In this particular case, I don't know what an agrologist makes on a professional level, but it says, "for a first offence, to a fine of not more than $2000." So like I said before, it could be as little as $1. Would the member be willing to make amendments so that it would be a substantial fine and couldn't be as little as $1? If an offence is just a slap on the hand, what's the sense of even having, in fact, a fine, then, if it will never even achieve the maximum amount there?

Mr. Danyluk: The offence is going to be relative to the penalty, so if there is a higher offence, of course there's going to be a higher penalty, and that gives it the latitude and the flexibility for the penalty to be in accordance with what may be the correction as necessary.

Mr. Backs: Just another question for the mover of the bill. What is the difference between this and other organizations such as CECAB or ASET, the engineering technologists?

Mr. Danyluk: I'm sorry. With your acronyms I'm not sure who you're meaning, but you're asking what the difference is. This is very similar to the forestry professions act, and I would say that in most cases it very much mimics it and follows its direction.

Mr. Backs: Mr. Chairman, specifically to the mover as well. ASET is the association of engineering technologists, and they do represent some agrologists in the course of their organization, actually quite a large organization of technologists. They're currently lobbying for registration under an act similar to this or the Health Professions Act or something of that nature. How will those people be affected by this, or will they be taken out of that membership completely?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, first of all, there is no doubt that the membership of ASET would like to have its own accreditation. I mean, they are striving to go in that direction, and the department is presently looking at it and from what I understand will continue to look at some of the concerns and the challenges that ASET has.

Mr. Backs: Mr. Chairman, another question to the mover: does the government in moving this bill envisage that the agrologists who remain with ASET might have a similar sign-off authority on some of the projects that they work on?

Mr. Danyluk: I would just suggest to you that in consultation with the technologists in the Agrologists Act, they have very much requested to be in this association, to be represented by this association, and to be under this professions act.

[The clauses of Bill 17 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 32 Animal Keepers Act

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Very briefly. I've been through this bill section by section. I see absolutely nothing in here that causes us on this side of the House any problems whatsoever, and I would recommend that we go ahead with it.

Mr. R. Miller: Obviously, Mr. Chair, I did not have quite enough time to consult with my colleague before he made those comments. I was just curious if the minister might be able to address a couple of the concerns that were raised this afternoon regarding the definitions. If the minister wouldn't mind addressing those concerns that we raised this afternoon, I know I would appreciate it.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am truly happy to rise in committee today to respond to Bill 32, the Animal Keepers Act, on behalf of the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Before I do that, I'd like to introduce some folks in the gallery who are with us tonight from the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Rick Frederickson is the head of the beef branch in our livestock development division. Jo-An Christiansen is a legislative review officer in our regulatory services. Jason Krips is my executive assistant, and Cheryl Ryder also works in my office. If they could rise, and maybe we could give them a little thunder there. Thank you very much.

As I mentioned this afternoon, the proposed legislation will replace the Livery Stable Keepers Act and provide simpler, more modern, and straightforward language. The primary objective of Bill 32 is to provide animal keepers with a mechanism to recover costs associated with stabling, boarding, feeding, and caring for an animal. The proposed wording better reflects the extensive use of the act by the cattle industry and other keepers of livestock. The new act also includes revisions to deal with surpluses and dispute resolution.

I would like to address some of the comments that were made this afternoon during second reading of the bill. The hon. members for Calgary-Varsity, Edmonton-Gold Bar, and Edmonton-Rutherford raised some questions regarding the definition of animals in this act. Animals defined under the act are restricted to those species raised commercially and most likely to be boarded by others. The proposed legislation would be unlikely to have any application to the animals that were mentioned by the hon. members.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity also raised a question about notification of immediate family or others that may have claim to surpluses. The responsibility for collecting surpluses lies with the individual or individuals that have a claim to them.

The hon. members for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview and Edmonton-Gold Bar asked: why now for Bill 32? As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar did mention in his speech this afternoon about how far back this legislation dates, well, the answer is quite simple. The Livery Stable Keepers Act dates back to 1897, when it was proclaimed as law in the North-West Territories and applied to the area that would become Alberta. So it goes back a long ways, Mr. Chairman.

Various amendments have been made to the act over the years, the most recent one in 1980, but I'm sure my colleagues in the Legislature will all agree that the Alberta agricultural industry has changed dramatically since 1897 and even since 1980, and now so must the pieces of legislation that regulate it.

Earlier the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar raised a question regarding delegation of authority in section 7 of the proposed act. With sales of cattle and horses there is a requirement for brand inspection at sale under brand inspection legislation. This authority is delegated to Livestock Identification Services by the minister of agriculture. As part of the notice of sale clauses 7(2) and 8(2) allow for Livestock Identification Services to be notified to ensure that they are aware that a sale under this act is pending and that the sale proceeds would be claimed by the animal keeper to cover liens. This will prevent confusion at the time of sale when brands or documentation of ownership will not match the consignor's name.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner had some questions regarding animals under trespass, and I believe that he may be referring to Bill 33, which is up for discussion this evening as well.

Finally, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford wanted to know why a section regarding the cleaning of barns was removed from the act. In the proposed act obsolete procedures such as the requirement for cleaning with a mercury-based cleaner were omitted. This clause was removed because proper care of livestock is contemplated under other legislation and accepted industry practices. In addition, the use of a mercury-based cleaning solution is not an environmentally sound practice; hence, it was removed. As well, animal owners have a responsibility to ensure the proper care of their animals. As an animal owner if I'm not happy with the quality of care and the cleanliness of the facility, I have the option of boarding my animals with another keeper.

9:00

I believe this covers all of the points that were raised this afternoon or earlier today, Mr. Chair, and I hope I have been able to provide some clarification for the hon. members across. Overall, I am very, very pleased with the level of support expressed by members of this Assembly for Bill 32, and with that said, I would again urge all members of this Assembly to support Bill 32.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 32?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was just wondering if the minister might be able to address for me, because I wasn't sure if he answered it just a minute ago, the discrepancy between Bill 32 and Bill 33 in terms of one having the definition of animal in the legislation and the other, which we're going to talk about in a minute, having the definition of animal moved to regulation?

Mr. Horner: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The difference is that there is not a wide range of animals that are kept in boarding, commercially raised animals that are normally put in a boarding facility. The industry wanted us to narrowly define that so that we can have more clarity in the act. For that reason, we did not include the wide range of all animals or any of those sorts of things.

In addition to that, it doesn't apply to things like a dog kennel, where pets or household animals might be kept. We wanted to maintain a very narrow definition of livestock, and that was the reason for the definition, Mr. Chair.

Dr. Pannu: I have a question for the minister, Mr. Chairman. Looking at the act, the section that deals with Option To Limit Lien. This is on page 3.

3(1) When an animal keeper has a lien on more than one animal or gear belonging to the same owner, the animal keeper may choose to limit the lien to one or some of the animals or gear towards satisfaction of the debt incurred for all of the owner's animals or gear that are or were in the animal keeper's custody and possession.

The question is about the use of the word "may." I would have thought that the keeper would sell only as many animals as would be needed to meet the debt obligations. What if the keeper chooses, in fact, to not just limit the sale to the limits of the debt? How is that addressed in the act? Some clarification, I think, is needed.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member raises a very good point. In the previous legislation, as I understand it, there was no "may." In other words, the keeper would have to place a lien on the entire consignment of the animals. This caused some uncertainty in the industry and certainly some angst with some members who might have a large number of animals under boarding but only a small amount of debt. Therefore, we wanted to have the option for the keeper to allow him to only take a lien on those animals that would cover that debt. So this is a step forward in the legislation, hon. member, as opposed to adding anything in there that might restrict.

Dr. Pannu: On the same point, it seems to me the language would suggest that the act is rather one-sided. It really leaves all the options in the hands of the keeper rather than putting some limits on the manner in which the keeper can deal with the issue of lien and at the same time protect the residual interests of the owner of the animals. So it seems a little one-sided. I wonder if you would like to respond to it.

Mr. Horner: Well, depending upon whom you're asking that question of, I think it's the idea that the money is owed to one person, not owed to the other. You want to be able to give those persons the ability to recoup their costs of taking care of those animals because they're under obligation to take care of those animals under another piece of legislation, which actually is before this House as well this spring. The fines and all the liability then rest with the keeper. Therefore, I think it's fair to say that they should have that amount of flexibility to ensure that they can regain any debts or expenses that may be incurred on their behalf in taking care of those animals.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm just going through this, listening to the debate, and I appreciate the candid answers from the minister. I'm wondering what effect, if any, this legislation would have on a situation such as occurred through this winter with Bonnett feedlots north of Ponoka, where a significantly sized feedlot went bankrupt. There continues to be contention over who owns the animals. We're also concerned about, well, how the animals were fed after the receiver took over the operation. So I'm wondering if this legislation would have any effect on a situation such as that.

The Chair: Before the hon. minister answers that, I'd just like to remind all the members of Beauchesne's 336. It's found on page 100. It refers to excessive chatter.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Chairman, I thought you were going to remind us about commenting on items that are before the court, which indeed the situation which the hon. member referenced is currently. So I'm going to very, kind of, in generalities talk about that.

I think the reality is that that's a reverse situation in the sense that the keeper went out of business. I don't really want to get into some of the other stuff that was mentioned with regard to allegations of improper feeding except to say that there is another piece of legislation that's before the House now, hon. member, that does look to the proper care of animals either on farms or in boarding areas, and the Animal Protection Amendment Act, I believe, is the proper name for it.

In the sense that we talk about branding and livestock identification, we do have another piece of legislation that was part of the review that both of these acts came forward with but is still under review in stakeholder consultation. It is, I guess, fair to say that we are monitoring the situation over there very closely because it may lead us to some more changes in that other piece of legislation but not necessarily this piece of legislation.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, would like to acknowledge the willingness of the minister to address these seemingly minor questions.

This afternoon during second reading the minister was nodding his head when both myself and another colleague from this side of the House raised the issue of a couple of other large species which, in my mind, might be just as likely to be held by a boarding house as an elk or a bison. In particular I'm referring to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, who asked about alpacas and llamas, and then I referenced as well emus and ostriches. I'm just wondering if you could clarify for us whether or not there was any consideration given to those four rather large animals as well.

Mr. Horner: As I mentioned, Mr. Chairman, in my earlier statements, those animals, exotic animals as you might refer to them, are not normally boarded because of their value, because of the fact that the herd size is usually not as large as, say, are the elk. Today I'm not aware of any situation where these animals are boarded.

Down the road if that was to become a normal commercial practice in the industry, we would consider then adding those animals to the list. But, again, to clarify and keep a limited or tightly defined group of animals so we don't blend off into the pets and kennels and other situations that are out there, based on the stakeholder consultation that we did, these are the definitions that the industry wanted us to go with at this time.

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 33

Stray Animals Amendment Act, 2005

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm also pleased to rise in committee this evening to speak to Bill 33, the Stray Animals Amendment Act, 2005. This afternoon I described how Bill 33 will clarify the use of the Stray Animals Act and will provide regulatory authority to protect property and promote public safety.

Most of the changes proposed in this bill will simply improve the operation of the act that originally came into effect in 1977. The act provides a mechanism to recover costs associated with capturing, confining, impounding, identifying, maintaining, transporting, and selling livestock in trespass. Under this act the owner of the animal in trespass continues to be liable for damage and/or expenses attributable to the livestock. Bill 33 will also provide regulatory authority to control designated species in order to protect property and promote public safety.

I'd now like to address some of the concerns that were raised this afternoon when we were talking about it in second reading. The hon. members for Calgary-Mountain View and Edmonton-McClung wanted to know why the role of the assessor has been removed. The explicit definition of an assessor is being removed to improve the clarity of the Stray Animals Act. The detailed description of the role of the assessors will no longer be included. However, in section 4 we'll continue to provide the minister with the authority to appoint persons as required.

The member also inquired about the resolution of conflicts. As section 22 states, the minister has the final authority to determine what expenses are reasonable in the case of a dispute.

The hon. members for Edmonton-Gold Bar and Calgary-Mountain View raised questions of whether waterfowl and game-ranched animals, respectively, were included in the definition of livestock. At this time neither waterfowl nor game-ranched animals are included in the definition of livestock in the Stray Animals Act.

Further to that, I would address the hon. members for Edmonton-McClung and Edmonton-Rutherford's concern about the definition of livestock being removed to the regulation. It is essential for this definition to be flexible so that the species included in the definition can be adjusted to the needs of Albertans. As was raised by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, the animals included in the definition could be adjusted if deemed appropriate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford points out that this is an inconsistency with the proposed Bill 32, Animal Keepers Act, and at the current time regulations under the Animal Keepers Act are not envisioned. The Stray Animals Act does and will continue to have them exist for the reasons that I mentioned before. Flexibility in a definition provided through regulatory change is deemed in the best interests of Albertans. The strength of the provisions and the coverage of species are not impacted by this change.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung also raised some concerns about the order of priority of payment. Expenses for transporting and maintaining the livestock have increased in the order of priority while expenses incurred in capturing, confining, and impounding the livestock have moved down. Stakeholders support this order as it is often the individual involved in maintaining the livestock that is impacted the most. As well, section 21 states that “where livestock are sold by public auction . . . and the proceeds of the sale are insufficient to pay the expenses referred to in section 19(2), the Minister may pay the expenses out of . . . the trust account.”

He also inquired as to why section 40 is being repealed and whether this may discourage the reporting of stray animals. Section 40 did provide a notification as the person finding the stray livestock is required to notify the brand owner or an inspector. However, in the interest of clarity, section 8(4) has been added. This new subsection requires the capturer to notify the owner of the livestock as soon as possible of the capture and confinement of the livestock. It appears directly under the notice to the inspector under those sections.

Finally, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity told us a very interesting story this afternoon regarding a dead steer and the issue of jurisdiction that it raised. Whether the rather large grizzly that he spoke of had jurisdiction or which department, given the circumstances that he related and if the bear was still there, I would suggest: don't argue with the bear. However, I believe that this issue is addressed in the destruction and disposal of dead animals regulation, not in the bill being discussed this evening.

So, Mr. Chairman, I believe that does address all of the questions and concerns that were raised this afternoon during the second reading of Bill 33. I appreciate the support expressed by members of all sides of this House for the extensive consultation undertaken in developing and ensuring that Bill 33 is a strong, modern piece of legislation that's fully endorsed by all stakeholders that we consulted. I would therefore encourage all members of the Assembly to support Bill 33, the Stray Animals Amendment Act.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise again and speak very briefly to Bill 33, the Stray Animals Amendment Act, 2005. This act outlines the procedure for determining liability, compensation, and penalties that will be imposed for livestock which have strayed onto other people's property. It also outlines the rights of the livestock or domestic fowl owner in destroying stray dogs.

This bill updates the legislation and will provide a way for the minister to limit the liability of the government by using a trust account to pay the claims from farmers that had their property damaged by stray livestock.

Mr. Chairman, I fully support this bill, but I have a few possible questions to the mover of this bill. The first question is: why did the assessor role get removed from the act? Can you answer, please?

The Chair: Hon. member, do you want to ask all of your questions and the minister can respond? You have to sit down in between if you want him to respond individually.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would just mention that I did touch on the explicit definition of the assessor being removed. It was for clarity in the Stray Animals Act, and the detailed description of the role of the assessor is no longer included. However, if you refer to section 4, that will continue to provide the minister with the authority to appoint persons as they are required in the Stray Animals Act.

Mr. Agnihotri: My second question is: with the increase in power for the minister, who is going to be the go-between when there is a challenge of what the investigator assesses? Will the farmer now have to take it to the courts?

Mr. Horner: No. As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, the minister has the final authority on those issues, so it would be an appeal to the minister.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, if I can just go back to the dead steer and the grizzly bear. I would certainly concur with the minister. I think the bear wins that argument every single time. But in reference to my colleague from Calgary-Varsity, who told the story, I'd just like to share with you that as the whip sometimes the Member for Calgary-Varsity wins the argument every time too. We all enjoyed listening to his tales.

If I could just briefly ask the minister as it relates to Bill 33 and the responses that he has given. I'll be very honest with you: I think my question just slipped from my mind. The one thing that I did want to mention is that I appreciate, again, the candour and the willingness to answer the questions.

I understand the minister's comments that the definition of animal in this particular case needed to be a little more flexible, but I would certainly like to reiterate my concern for moving things from legislation into regulation. I'm not completely convinced that there's a need to alter the definition of animal in the case of this particular bill more often than every six months or however often it is that we would be convening in this Legislative Assembly. I still have a concern about that despite his assurance that this is in the best interests of Albertans.

If I think of my question and I have the opportunity, I'll jump back up. Thank you.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, one point that I did not cover that was raised this afternoon. The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner was talking about concerns relating to Bill 33 in that they didn't address notification of stray animals under the bill. The notification section is, as I mentioned in my other points, under section 8(4). I just wanted to point out to the member that if the owner of the animal is not known, then under section 17 notice is provided as will be specified in the regulation, which would be what is deemed appropriate; i.e., newspapers, notice at auction marts, that sort of thing. So notice is included in the legislation. I just wanted to make sure that the hon. member had his answer.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to thank the minister for stalling for me so that I could recall what it was that I wanted to question him on. He referenced my colleague from Edmonton-McClung and his question this afternoon regarding the fact that the capture of the stray animal in question may now be moved down the ladder in terms of being paid. I just wanted to clarify that the point the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung was making is that in order to have the animal in captivity in the first place, somebody has to do the capturing. If there is very little or no incentive for a farmer, for example, to corral this stray, then there is concern that the animal may do a certain amount of damage, somewhat more than would have been the case previously. That was the reason why we were questioning the moving down the ladder in terms of paying the capturer.

I'm not sure. I would certainly agree that once the animal is in captivity, there are likely to be more expenses incurred by whoever is holding the animal as opposed to expenses incurred by whoever captured the animal. The question is: is the animal going to be captured, or is it going to be left to roam free until it's hit by a pickup truck or does a certain amount of damage if we're not providing enough incentive to somebody to go out there and capture the animal in the first place?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A couple of comments. First of all, many times it's the animals causing some damage or causing some other problems to the landowner, so his incentive is to stop that from happening. Therefore, there's his incentive for capturing that animal, but also stakeholders do support this as it is often the individual involved in maintaining the animal who is usually at the most risk. Also, section 21 states that "where livestock is sold by public auction . . . and the proceeds of the sale are insufficient to pay the expenses referred to in section 19(2)," the minister may pay the expenses out of the trust account.

We're going to try to capture all of the expenses, but I must reiterate that in most cases where an animal is out stray and roaming around, usually the landowners want to catch them to stop whatever damage or whatever other concerns there may be in that regard. So there is already an onus built into the system. But to answer the concerns of the hon. member, expenses will be taken care of.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I understand the point that the minister is making. I just want to make sure that my point is made as well. Through personal experience over the years – and it has happened several times – I have actually been involved in the capture of stray animals. In every instance that I can remember, the effort to capture was done out of a sense of duty, a sense of neighbourly responsibility, and a sense of compassion and humanity for the animal that might be in distress or in danger and not necessarily out of concern for damage that might be caused by the animal.

Again, I'm just not sure that moving the rights of that person who's involved in the capture so far down the list will allow that neighbourly charity to continue to take place. However, I understand and I appreciate the fact that the minister has been involved in careful consultation with the stakeholders, and I'm certainly willing to take his word that the stakeholders are supporting this.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will cede the floor and not ask any more questions. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. I guess that as a stakeholder I'd like to speak also and just for general information. It is the landowners that generally take the biggest hit, and they're very much motivated to get the animal in, and it would no longer be neighbourly or charitable if you weren't helping. So we can't have one or the other if you want to be compensated. Generally the landowner is more than willing, and if he's not capable of doing it himself, he will hire someone to help him capture it, and then he'll get paid for doing that.

But I think that first on the priority list is the landowner where the damage is being done, and I support this bill and the intent thereof to protect the landowner from the damage done by stray animals, which does cause a lot of problems and has been a problem throughout history here in this great province of ours.

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 28

Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2005

The Chair: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, just to remind everyone, this is a bill that deals with a number of separate amendments to the Municipal Government Act. The variety of the bill was referred to by a number of speakers, and I just want to remind everyone that there are a number of provisions in the bill; first of all, a provision to allow municipalities to set and collect a community aggregate sand and gravel levy.

Secondly, there are amendments that will clarify issues relating to the flow of linear assessment and jurisdiction.

Next is clarifying the intent and assessment of Crown-owned property held under lease, licence, or permit in provincial parks and recreation areas. This is to reaffirm the existing policy.

The next provision is enabling provisions for a municipality to pass a community revitalization levy bylaw subject to provincial approval.

Finally, there is a regulation-making authority for the Lieutenant Governor in Council to establish any area as a community revitalization levy and set out the specific conditions that will be required.

Mr. Chairman, there were a number of speakers who spoke to this bill in second reading. I'm not going to repeat everything that was said, but for the most part I was pleased that there appears to be fairly good support by members on this bill. There were some questions that were raised. The Leader of the Opposition raised a number of questions, as did the Member for St. Albert, and I'd just like to take a couple of minutes to address the questions that were asked.

First of all, the Leader of the Opposition asked if the bill would have any implications on the issue of rights-of-way for transmission lines. That would fall under the provisions in the bill that deal with linear assessment. The bill itself has nothing to do with the location of lines. It only has to do with the determination of the value of those lines and the assessed value for tax purposes. The section on linear assessment deals only with streamlining the process for determining the value and creating a system that is very similar to the traditional real property, the buildings and land that everyone is familiar with, so there will be a registry of linear property in the same way as there is a registry kept for real property like you have on your house or a piece of land. That's the provision here.

The second question that was asked was with respect to the provision of Crown leaseholds. The question asked was: will this bill affect Crown leaseholds? I'm assuming that the leader was referring to grazing leases and that kind of thing, and the answer is no. This only affects leases that are within provincial parks or recreation areas. It has to do with commercial. By way of explanation, when the Municipal Government Act was passed back in '94, there was a move to change to plain language so that the wording changed on the provision of the assessment of Crown leases within provincial parks. That wording was intended to reflect the same policy. But in changing the wording, the courts determined that there was a change in policy, and there were rulings made that in fact exempted a number of taxpayers who were never intended to be exempted. This has escalated over time to the point where we essentially have to close that loophole, return the taxing authority back to where it was originally intended to be.

While there will be some taxpayers who will begin paying tax and who haven't been for the last couple of years, it's not because of a change in policy; it's because of an enforcement of the existing policy that was changed as a result of court decisions. The government's opinion is that if there is going to be a change in policy – and arguments have been made that perhaps some of these should not be taxable – that should be a decision that's made by this Legislature upon appropriate reflection, not by an arbitrary decision made by the courts trying to interpret what the Legislature perhaps meant when the wording was changed.

The next question the leader asked was: who will municipalities borrow from if they use the tax increment financing? Municipalities have natural person power and can borrow from anyone they choose to borrow from. Historically, municipalities have found that the municipal financing provided by the province is probably as economical as any, but if they wish and are able to negotiate loans or debentures or any other financial instrument that is advantageous to them, they're free to do so. That's a decision that they make, and there's nothing that would be within this legislation that would commit them to one form or another.

Finally, the Member for St. Albert asked: will the bill look at municipal tax rates? The answer is no. There is no intention to deal with municipal tax rates in this bill. The only reference to municipal taxes is in the tax increment financing, and the bill indicates that mill rates established within the zone would have to be at least as high as tax rates throughout the rest of the municipalities so that there is no tax incentive for developers to locate within the zone. The incentive that is there is the enhanced aesthetics and the basic infrastructure that has been invested by the municipality.

So I believe, Mr. Chairman, that answers the questions that were asked, and I look forward to further comment and question.

The Chair: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I genuinely appreciate the helpful information from the minister. I really have two comments. In going around, you know, the normal activities of the opposition, I've bumped into a number of city councillors and have been surprised that they themselves haven't been directly aware of this piece of legislation. I know, clearly, the AUMA was consulted and, I think, actively engaged – well, I'm sure they were actively engaged – in developing this legislation, and they're inside, and I suppose it's reasonable of the minister to expect the AUMA to represent its membership. But I suppose as a piece of information I've been surprised at how low the awareness is among some city councillors. I know at least one other member of my caucus has found the same thing in people she's spoken to: how low the awareness is of this legislation. I just provide that as information.

The only other question I have right now really comes under the community revitalization levy. I know it could become controversial when a city tries to enact that, and I think we talked in the debate in second about people being displaced from lower socioeconomic areas as those are redeveloped and controversies that could arise there and the perception that this could be seen as some kind of subsidy to developers.

All of that aside, I'm really specifically most interested in how this bill will affect the province's portion of the education property tax or what formula or methods might be brought forward or used for addressing issues concerning the education portion of property tax. If the minister can fill me in on that now, that's great, and if he wants to come back later, that's also fine.

Thank you.

Mr. Renner: It's up to the members opposite. Would they like me to take notes and answer all questions after all have spoken, or would you like me to respond now?

Dr. Taft: We're not going to have a lot of questions.

Mr. Renner: Okay. Then I'd be happy to respond. The issue of education property tax is that the education portion of the property taxes is dealt with exactly the same way as the city's portion of the property tax. It is diverted into this fund that is used to pay down the debt that is incurred by the municipality. So, in essence, what it means is that on incremental development the province agrees to participate with the municipality to the extent of the education property tax. In fact, it would apply to any other authorities that have requisitioning, so it would also apply to – there's some seniors' homes that have requisitioning powers in some municipalities. It would apply to them because the assessment is frozen at today's rate.

The thing to keep in mind, though, is that particularly from the point of view of education, the education property tax that goes into the foundation only constitutes a small portion of the total funding that flows through to our school boards to deliver education. The funding that is delivered to school boards is on a per capita, per student basis and is not in any way related to the funding that is collected through the education property tax. So I don't want to let anyone think that this is going to in any way jeopardize funding that would flow through to school boards. Let's be clear that that's part of the reason why the legislation is necessary, and that's why the cabinet has to also agree to the designation. The province does participate in this scheme.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you to the member for some of the questions that were asked the other day and some clarification. The Member for Edmonton-Riverview did ask some of the specifics that I was going to ask with regard to consultation between municipalities. I mean, certainly, we can recognize the difference: Calgary has different needs than Edmonton has different needs than McMurray. It's good if we do an all-around consultation with the members of those municipalities because each municipality represents the different needs of those members there. In fact, with regard to the school issue act – yeah, thank you for that clarification as well.

The community revitalization levy – that's the one – I was just tonight at a potential school closure, and people are always concerned with regard to school closures, in fact, devaluing property. Then what happens: you have depressed areas there, and people are reluctant to move into those areas because there is no school. People are no longer wanting to move in there, so they're talking about areas becoming depressed.

So now the scheme which was devised in Calgary. The mayor is in fact asking for approximately $7 million to build up depressed areas within that city. The same could be used throughout the province. In Edmonton we've got areas that are depressed areas, but again there are concerns here. If you're on one side of the boulevard compared to the other, what happens if the property tax is frozen for a couple of years – and I've never seen it done, so I'm not sure why it would happen now – while on the other side of the street the development continues to grow? At what point does the one side of the street catch up to the taxes on the other side of the street? There's where you're going to have disproportions and you're going to have concerns with regard to a $500 increase in tax by the time it's able to catch up.

So those are just a couple concerns with regard to the community revitalization levy. I'm not sure if the member wishes to comment with regard to those concerns raised.

Mr. Chairman, I will adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: Shall progress on Bill 28, Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2005, be reported when the committee rises? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Carried.

Bill 1 Access to the Future Act

The Chair: Is there anyone to speak on behalf of the sponsor?

If not, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Now, I know that things haven't moved along quite as quickly so far tonight as I think all sides of the House had hoped, and so we may not get as far in committee study of Bill 1 as we had all hoped tonight, but we will get a start on it here at least and try to move on from there.

I spoke at some length at second reading on Bill 1, as did a number of my colleagues on this side of the House, and I think the government now has probably some idea of the issues that we have with the bill. I want to acknowledge first of all that Bill 1 does signal renewed focus on and support for advanced education, and we're very pleased to see that.

However, we do have concerns, and they fall I guess generally into three areas. Reporting and accountability: we think that postsecondary institutions are burdened by numerous accountability and reporting requirements, and we think that there needs to be some equity and accountability and reporting between the institutions and the ministry as well, and we intend to address that. The issue of ministerial control versus institutional autonomy: there's a delicate balance that needs to be struck in our public institutions, we believe, between ministerial control and institutional autonomy, and as we move forward in committee study of Bill 1, we will be wanting to introduce that as well. The third area of concern in order of the way I'm introducing them tonight but really first in terms of our level of concern is the money.

Now, Bill 1, the Access to the Future Act, does a number of things, but primarily what it does is establish the access to the future fund, a postsecondary education endowment fund done somewhat differently than the way we would have done it had we been elected to the government in that it's done sort of within and under the heritage savings trust fund. We would have done it separately, as I've discussed here before. Nevertheless, it's being done, and that's good. What's not good about it in our view is the cap, the $3 billion cap on the endowment fund, the size to which the endowment fund is being allowed to grow.

With that in mind, Mr. Chairman, I would like to move my first amendment to Bill 1, the Access to the Future Act. I would move that Bill 1, the Access to the Future Act, be amended by striking out section 4(5). Now, section 4(5) says very simply: "The maximum amount that may be allocated under subsection (4)," the subsection that establishes the account for the endowment fund, "is $3 000 000 000." Mr. Chairman, $3 billion sounds like a huge number even in 2005, even with the extent to which we've seen inflation over the years eat away at the purchasing power.

The Chair: If I could interject at this particular moment, we will call this amendment A1.

Mr. Taylor: Okay. So $3 billion, as I was saying, still sounds like a huge amount in 2005 even after all the erosion in the purchasing power of the dollar that we have all seen over our lifetime. But to put it in some context, it really is not a huge amount by any stretch of the imagination when the goal – and I believe that this government is sincere in its goal in Bill 1 – is to establish excellence in postsecondary education in the province of Alberta.

Three billion dollars even at current enrolment levels, when divided by the number of students in postsecondary and advanced education in this province, amounts to an endowment per student of less than $17,000. I think everyone in the House would agree that $17,000 does not go very far in this day and age. In fact, one might be tempted to say that for all the good $17,000 will do an average student in the province of Alberta, rather than striving for excellence, we might be better off just forgiving $17,000 worth of student debt or maybe just giving them the $17,000 in the form of – I don't know – a new Toyota Corolla. That's about the suggested retail price of a new Toyota, stripped down, basic model, mind you, but $17,000 will get you pretty close to getting a new car.

By comparison, at Princeton University, which has, admittedly, the richest per-student endowment on the North American continent, Princeton's per-student endowment is approximately $1.3 million. Seventeen thousand dollars in Alberta across four universities and all our colleges and our polytechnical institutes; $1.3 million per student at one university.

So, Mr. Chairman, $3 billion is not enough. Three billion dollars is a great start, but in our view that's what it must be, a start, especially given that there is no absolute commitment on the part of the government to put any money into the fund. We trust them. We believe them. We take it in good faith that they will contribute money to the fund. But $3 billion as a cap is the wrong way to go. Three billion dollars needs to be viewed as a start to this postsecondary education endowment fund if, in fact, we want it to foster excellence in advanced education in the province of Alberta.

The fund needs to be contributed to not only this year and next year and perhaps the year after that till the $3 billion cap is reached, but it needs to be contributed to every year in perpetuity. Perhaps – I don't know – 20 years, 50 years down the road, perhaps at that point a government in that time, the government of that day will say: "You know what? There really is enough money in the fund now to generate, at 4.5 per cent of the endowment, the funds to provide sustainable excellence in postsecondary education in the province of Alberta." But you're not going to reach that at $3 billion, nowhere close.

So amendment A1 seeks to strike out section 4(5) by removing the $3 billion cap and allowing this endowment fund to grow the way it really was envisioned to grow by those who envisioned it first.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. For the past decade and more postsecondary education has endured a funding drought that has left our system impoverished and struggling while the demands on it continue to increase. The message from stakeholders and voters during the recent provincial election was clear: reinvestment in postsecondary is overdue. Finally the provincial government seems to be responding. We face many significant problems exacerbated by years of neglect, deferred maintenance of infrastructure, the urgent need to attract and retain new faculty, and the struggle to keep up with advances in technology to name just a few. What we need now is rational, predictable, and sustainable funding from government, which will allow us to overcome these challenges and provide the postsecondary education Albertans want.

The proposal to uncap the proposed $3 billion funding limit – that is, amendment A1 – is more than a matter of figures. It is a shift of mentality as much as of money, from a perspective of spending to one of investment. I point out a parallel in the energy sector. With world oil prices rising, development and production are not falling off. In fact, investors are borrowing to get a piece of the action when the projects they are backing come on stream. They recognize that rising costs reflect accelerating demand, and this creates a future.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to see us take the same view when it comes to the human energy generated by education. For more than 30 years economists have been virtually unanimous in recognizing that it is not resources or technology that create wealth but people. If there is any one area that deserves our attention and support, it is the drawing out of our people into their fullness, which is what the word "education" means.

Resources will eventually be expended, infrastructure and technology will become obsolete, but human potential is unlimited. I've spoken of human potential in quantitative economic terms, but it is far more than that. The human is the end and focus of our political, economic, and cultural activity, and education is a means of maximizing our humanity.

So finally I say: let us commit ourselves to investment in education, therefore, with the same unrestrained abandon with which this province has facilitated the energy sector. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on amendment A1.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I can never speak quite as eloquently or with such heartfelt warmth as my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods, but I would as well like to enter into the debate on this particular amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the other day I made a comment in this Assembly in reference to the price of oil. I indicated that industry analysts are suggesting that oil could reach $80 per barrel. I was heckled and almost shouted down at the suggestion that oil might go to $80 a barrel, and the next morning there was a news report from some industry analysts suggesting that in fact there may well be a spike on the horizon of somewhere in the order of $105 per barrel of oil.

Now, I'm not sure, Mr. Chairman, and I'm assuming that we'll find out in a week and a day what number the government is using in their budget forecasts, but I suspect that the number is going to be somewhat less than $80 a barrel and certainly nowhere near $105. I'm guessing that probably more likely somewhere in the area of $40 a barrel is the number that the government is going to be using when they make their budget forecasts. So given that every indication is that we're likely to remain somewhere in the area of $50 to $60 a barrel, perhaps $80, maybe even, heaven forbid, $105 per barrel, a $3 billion cap, although as my colleague from Calgary-Currie suggested, a very big number, is almost like we're putting an artificial limit on a fund that could do tremendous things for the future of this province if we would allow it to do so, especially if we should be so fortunate as to see oil skyrocket, which there is some possibility it might do.

Given that, I would suggest that it would be prudent to remove the cap, as this amendment would allow us to do, and let the fund rise to whatever level it may rise based on the possibility of some rather incredible surpluses over the next number of years. If for some reason it starts to get to such a big number that it's not prudent to have that money in that fund anymore and it could be better used somewhere else, if we suddenly find ourselves with the very best postsecondary education system in the world and we realize that there's more money there than we can reasonably use, we can certainly find other things to do with it. I hear an hon. member behind me suggesting perhaps free tuition for all. Boy, wouldn't that be a wonderful thing?

So, Mr. Chairman, those would be my comments speaking in favour of the removal of this cap, and I look forward to continued debate. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll be brief. I rise to speak to amendment A1, which seeks to remove subsection (5) of section 4 in Bill 1, Access to the Future Act. I think it's to be noted that there's a developing consensus in this House and across the province that we have been underinvesting in postsecondary education for the last 10 to 15 years. That underfunding and underinvestment has caused serious problems within the system. Accessibility and affordability are just two symptoms of the larger problem.

Although the rate at which high school students graduate from this province is deplorably low, even many of those who graduate don't end up in the postsecondary system to take advantage of the education and training facilities that it makes available. In spite of that, we have an accessibility problem, a shortage of spaces, and a problem of affordability. Imagine if we were to successfully manage to encourage high school students to stay in school, complete high school, and then move on to a postsecondary system. The numbers wanting to get into postsecondary institutions would be much greater. In other words, those numbers are very dynamic. How many people, how many spaces there will be in the system is likely to grow, and if that happens, then the $3 billion figure may look already out of date within the next four to five years.

So I think this amendment is good in the sense that it says that $3 billion may not be enough. My only concern is that if we remove the reference to the $3 billion here, that might be interpreted by some in this House and outside that we need less. Let me make it very clear that I will be supporting this amendment on the assumption that the amendment seeks to have a much larger amount given that the demand on the system and the participation in the system is likely to grow and grow very rapidly in the coming several years.

So that being the case, of course, you know, $3 billion looks arbitrary without really asking the larger questions about the shape the system will take in the next few years. I've been talking about the need to establish a commission which looks at some of these important questions of affordability, accessibility, funding, the governance of institutions, the role of private, for-profit institutions within the system, and we can go on and on. So we will need, in fact, a serious examination of the system, and only at the end of that should we be coming to some sort of determination of what amount should be in this fund that will be adequate, that will be sufficient.

In light of all these considerations, I'm happy to support this amendment that's being put forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Obviously, I support the amendment as well. We pushed very hard on the idea of a postsecondary endowment fund last fall. We had a wonderful reception to it. There's a sense in Alberta that people want to grab the future. They have a feeling that we're changing chapters or we're moving to the next chapter in Alberta's development, and they see postsecondary education as absolutely the key topic of that chapter.

As my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods said so eloquently, education is about our humanity and investing in our humanity. It's about our children. It's about our future. I don't see why we should put a cap on that. We have a potential here to do something genuinely dramatic, as has been made clear by the Member for Calgary-Currie.

There are individual universities in North America and others that I know of in Europe with endowments that would dwarf this $3 billion. If we're going to have a postsecondary education system that takes its rightful place with the MITs and the Harvards and some of the universities in Texas and the Cambridges and so on, we're going to need to provide those kinds of resources and those endowments. We need to stop thinking of this as an expenditure. We're not saying this is an expenditure. We're saying: put this into a savings account, a savings account dedicated to the children and to the future of this province through postsecondary education.

If we're making that investment – and it's widely understood by economists, by tax people, by public policy experts that this is perhaps the best investment a society can make – why would we put a cap on that? Why would we do that? Why would we limit how much we can put into education and postsecondary education? The evidence is very clear that in the long term for every dollar that we put into postsecondary education, a society will get many dollars back in taxes and in productivity improvements.

So I do not see any justification for putting this cap in place and would encourage all MLAs – I can see they're closely paying attention – to support this amendment to Bill 1. It would take Bill 1, which has a good heart to it, and make it a better bill.

On that note, I would like to move adjournment of debate.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: Shall progress on Bill 1, Access to the Future Act, be reported when the committee rises? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? It's carried.

Bill 5

Family Law Amendment Act, 2005

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Minister of Justice did bring forward some amendments. I'm assuming that the amendments are not up for discussion right now. That's my understanding, that I don't have to address the amendments at the moment but that I could address the substance of the bill.

The Chair: There are amendments on the floor.

Dr. B. Miller: There are amendments on the floor, so the amendments are what is to be discussed. Okay.

Well, the amendments that were presented by the hon. Minister of Justice are mostly housekeeping items. They're very complicated, and they're amendments to the original Family Law Act. The first amendment, section A, is really just changing language, and actually the same language is changed in different parts of the act, striking out the word "prescribed" and substituting "provided for."

Now, I don't think there's anything substantive in this change at all. I think the understanding that the minister communicated to the House is that the word "prescribed" seemed too specific, perhaps too harsh, and didn't give enough flexibility so that every time the rules are changed under the regulations, there has to be a rushing to the cabinet for a decision. In order for that not to happen, the words "provided for" are added. So I've no problem with those kinds of housekeeping changes.

In the amendment section B, section 5 is amended in the proposed section 20 by striking out "or agreement to the contrary between the parents of a child regarding the guardianship of the child" and simply substituting the words "regarding the guardianship of a child." I think that's trying to make this whole section simpler. This section is subject to any order of the court in regard to the guardianship of a child, so it's pretty straightforward. I think the understanding of the minister was that the longer sentence was making it too broad, allowing parents to perhaps agree that even a third party could be the guardian of a child, and that makes it too broad.

There's the adding of subsection (5), that if parents "agree in writing, both parents continue to be the guardians of the child even after the child begins to usually reside with only one of them."

Now, this whole bill is very complicated because of the legal language that needs to be in the bill to protect those involved, especially to protect the child. I've been reading the amendments and also the bill from the point of view of using as a threshold test: is this in the best interests of the child? It seems to me that that is the most important question in a bill that tries to define guardianship. Is this in the best interests of the child? The second principle that can be applied to this bill is the principle of gender equality so that both the father and the mother are equally regarded in respect to the definition of guardianship.

Then going on to amendment C, which again is just a housekeeping item of changing the language in respect to enforcement officers and using the word “designated” instead of “prescribed.” The same with amendment D and the same with E. So these are all housekeeping items.

A question I have for the Minister of Justice, when he can respond to this, is under section F. It’s a bit of a puzzle to me what this means. There’s the addition of a clause “respecting financial information to be provided under section 65,” which has to do with financial support or financial agreements in respect to guardianship, and I’m just not sure how that fits in. I need some clarification, some explanation why there is a need for this amendment. That’s amendment F.

Those are my only comments on these particular amendments, and I would like a response to a couple of those points before we can go ahead and put them to a vote.

10:10

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to Bill 5, Family Law Amendment Act, 2005. I want to start by acknowledging the fact that the minister did brief . . .

The Chair: Are you speaking on amendment A1?

Dr. Pannu: Are those the amendments that are before us from the minister?

The Chair: Yes. We’re speaking to amendment A1 to the Family Law Amendment Act.

Dr. Taft: Those are from the minister.

Dr. Pannu: All right. I’m sorry; I was under the mistaken impression that those amendments were not to be under discussion until the minister’s convenience allowed it.

Yes. Many of the pieces of the amendments that are proposed in A1 are fairly straightforward. One of the places where amendment A1 attempts to amend the proposed act is in section 20(1), which currently reads: “This section is subject to any order of the court or agreement to the contrary between the parents of a child regarding the guardianship of the child.” This section 20, by the way, deals with the guardians of the child. Now, the amendment proposes to strike the last part of this first statement, so the section would then read: “This section is subject to any order of the court,” period, I think. So I have no particular concern with that change being proposed.

The other part of A1 speaks to amending section 20(4), Mr. Chairman. Section 20(4) at the moment in the proposed legislation reads as follows: “Despite subsection (3), a parent with whom the child has usually resided for one year is a guardian of the child even if the child no longer resides with the parent.” I think the change, the amendment being proposed to 20(4), says: “Despite subsection (3)(a), if both parents so agree in writing, both parents continue to be the guardians of the child even after the child begins to usually reside with only one of them.” That causes some concern. It makes the matter of who is the guardian of the child less clear than is the case in the present legislation and, I think, will cause lots of problems for the child and the mother, particularly if the child is very, very young, was born in the hospital, and there’s a dispute over who the child’s guardians are.

So, Mr. Chairman, I find it difficult to support the proposed changes in 20(4) as part of amendment A1, so I won’t be able to vote in favour of it. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Yes. Mr. Chair, I think it would be appropriate for us, since we need to get some clarification from the minister about some of these points on his amendments – I would like to adjourn debate so that we can continue at another time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: Shall progress on Bill 5, Family Law Amendment Act, 2005, be reported when the committee rises? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Acting Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report bills 17, 32, and 33 and report progress on bills 28, 1, and 5.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 17, Bill 32, Bill 33. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the committee concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 20 seniors from the Rendez Vous Centre in Morinville, which is located in the beautiful constituency of Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. They are participating in a tour of the Legislature today and are seated in the gallery this afternoon. I would like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions to do today. The first one: I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly 15 students from the R.A. Reynolds school from the constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake. They are accompanied today by teacher Anna Laplante, and Anna is a former classmate of mine. She's also joined by parents Bob Cochrane and Brenda Bischke. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The second introduction I have, Mr. Speaker, which I wish to make to everyone here in the Assembly, is municipal leaders from the municipal district of Bonnyville. They are accompanied here today by their leader, Mr. Ken Foley, the reeve; councillors Judy Cabay, Werner Gisler, Andy Wakaruk, Ed Rondeau, and his wife, Annette. I ask you to please give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a good friend and former colleague of mine, the reeve of Lacombe county and providing good governance, Mr. Terry Engen. He actually lives in the constituency of Rocky Mountain House but provides good governance to the whole county. He is seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask him to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly representatives of Lakeland county who are in Edmonton also attending the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties spring convention. Joining us today are Reeve Peter Kyrlychuk, Phil Lane, Robert Richard, Greg Bochkarev, Eugene Ugancz, Todd Thompson, Barry Kolenosky, and Chief Administrative Officer Duane Coleman. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, and I would ask if they would rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Don Good, a councillor from the town of Peace River, a friend, and a former colleague. Don flew into Edmonton this morning for meetings. He's visiting us here in the Assembly today, and then he's going to fly home tonight, a feat that would not be possible without access to the City Centre Airport. I would ask Don to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly Cathy Bartlett. She is the mother of Leah Halliday, who is a page in the Assembly. Leah is very polite, hardworking, and conscientious, and she's a credit to Alberta's youth. Cathy Bartlett is in the Speaker's gallery, and I would now ask her to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly His Excellency Mr. Snanchart, ambassador of the Royal Kingdom of Thailand. With His Excellency today are the first secretary of the Royal Thai Embassy, Mr. Chatchai, and the honorary consul general of Thailand in Edmonton and, of course, a former member of this Assembly, Mr. Dennis Anderson.

Mr. Speaker, this is the ambassador's first visit to Alberta. In addition to our trading relationship, Alberta's postsecondary institutions have strong ties with Thailand in numerous disciplines. The people of Thailand have been in Albertans' thoughts after the west coast of Thailand was hit by a tsunami. The people of Alberta donated generously in helping with the reconstruction of the affected areas.

They're seated in your gallery, and I would ask them to rise, Mr. Speaker, and also ask for the very warm, traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me untold pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a rather large group of students from the wonderful school of St. Teresa Catholic elementary in my constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. We have a total of 72 students this afternoon comprising three classes as well as 10 accompanying adults with them. I'd like to just name the teachers and teachers' assistants as well as the parents that are with them this afternoon. We have, seated in both the public and the members' galleries, teachers Mrs. Thérèse Coates, Ms Lucy Roberts, Mr.

Charles Stuart, as well as teachers' assistants Mrs. Lois Boxall, Mrs. Debbie McDougall, and the parent helpers Mrs. Miller, Mrs. Pilger, Mr. MacLeod, Mrs. Ross, and Mrs. Colwell. I would ask that they please all rise and receive the very warmest welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three wonderful people from my own constituency. They are Mr. McGowan, Mrs. Marlene Deregowski, and Darlene Treder. Mr. McGowan has been the president of the Edmonton-Ellerslie Liberal association for many, many years. I request them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly two members of the parent advisory committee of North Edmonton school, which is of course located in my constituency. They are here to show their opposition to the proposed closure of their children's school, North Edmonton school. It's worth noting that this school was praised for its good work by the chair of the Learning Commission. The members here are Pam Bellamy and Adele Woo, and I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to all hon. Members of this Assembly Ms Jette Badre and Ms Birgit Wildenhoff. She is also a founding member of the Danish library.

Mr. Speaker, I'm delighted to add that the Scandinavian Trade and Cultural Society will be holding a midsummer fest in Rundle park in Edmonton on June 23 to celebrate Alberta's centennial. These two guests are seated in the public gallery, and I will now request them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Darren Popik, who is seated in the public gallery. Darren worked for Dale Johnston, MP for Wetaskiwin. Darren has been active in provincial politics as well. I would ask Darren to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Securities Commission

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Concerns continue about the Alberta Securities Commission. Yesterday under questioning the Minister of Finance said, "the commission is confident that the workings of the commission are in order." Well, what else are they going to say? It's the public and the investment community who need to be confident that the workings of the commission are in order. To the Minister of Finance: given the seriousness of the allegations, including regulatory favoritism and employee harassment over a period of years, and the fact that up to 30 interviews were held, is the minister confident that Mr. Mack in three short weeks had enough time and resources to thoroughly complete his first investigation?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is asking me for an opinion on judging how Mr. Mack utilizes his time. I would assume that Mr. Mack had the amount of time that was required. I don't believe that there was any time frame put on him.

Secondly, I should say again that it was the independent, part-time commissioners who submitted their findings to me based on some 700 pages of information that they perused.

Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member has any correspondence with the investment community that they are concerned or dissatisfied with this report, I would appreciate receiving it because I am not getting that message from the investment community. In fact, that message is coming from there only.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: has the minister spoken directly to Mr. Mack to discuss his first report and confirm that he had adequate time to complete his investigation?

Mrs. McClellan: No, Mr. Speaker. I have not nor do I think it's necessary or appropriate. Mr. Mack was employed by the Alberta Securities Commission's part-time members to investigate a complaint. I am sure that Mr. Mack was accorded the time that was required. If Mr. Mack had a concern about the time that he had, felt that it was important that he involve me, I'm sure that he would contact me. My address is quite available.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Finance Minister: given the threats to whistle-blowers in the ASC, including being publicly dismissed as cowardly and depraved by their bosses, why didn't the minister bring in an independent body to respond to Mr. Mack's report on the commission instead of allowing the commissioners themselves to prepare the report?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the hon. member does not seem to understand that it was the independent, part-time commissioners that responded to this report – independent, part-time commissioners. I find it interesting that he is concerned about these employees and their ability to bring forward complaints, yet doesn't want me to respect the solicitor-client relationship on which basis of anonymity they brought forward their complaints. A little contradiction here.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Mack's first report was immediately turned over to the ASC commissioners, who were given more than five weeks to prepare a response. To the Minister of Finance: what were the roles of Mr. Sibold and Mr. Linder in preparing the second report, which dismissed the concerns of regulatory interference?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll repeat one more time. There were two reports. The first one was a report Mr. Mack prepared on interviews with persons who brought forward concerns. The second report, which brings the balance, was the interviews with persons who would have been involved in those complaints on the other side. That report, as I indicated prior to that, was released on the 21st. I will repeat one more time for the hon. member, and I will say it very slowly: it was the independent, part-time commissioners that responded to me. Now, if the hon. member thinks that Mr. Sibold or Mr. Linder fit in that category, perhaps he has answered his own question.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Were the independent, part-time commissioners unanimous in their conclusions and in their production of the second report?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, they sent me the report. I didn't ask them if they had voted on the content or on the release of it, but I am assuming that when they forwarded it to me, it was a report of the body that sent it.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the nature of the allegations brought forward about the chairman and the executive director of the ASC and the relationship between those men and the part-time commissioners, how can the minister assure investors that these two men have not influenced the report delivered by the commission?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess I respect the integrity and professionalism of these people who have agreed to serve in this capacity. I would expect there's a little more trust on this side in that integrity and that professionalism. These are very respected persons who sit on that commission.

The report has been clear in two areas: one, on the regulatory side that things are being handled consistently, fairly, and even-handedly – that was very important to the investment community – and secondly, there are some human resource issues within the commission. The part-time commissioners have made it very clear in their report that through their human resource division they will be dealing with those immediately.

I would just close with this, Mr. Speaker. I indicated yesterday that I asked my deputy to speak with that division to get a work plan or a timetable to ensure that that is carried out expeditiously and thoroughly.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Oil Sands Employment

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. StatsCan information for February of this year reported high construction unemployment across Canada. For example, Newfoundland and Labrador stood at 46.7 per cent for construction unemployment. Nova Scotia was at 23 per cent. There was equally high unemployment in construction across the other provinces. There's clearly no present shortage of construction labour in Canada. The great challenge is connecting Canadians and Albertans to oil sands jobs. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Will this government require employers to provide the same transportation and accommodation costs to qualified unemployed Canadians that would be spent to attract temporary foreign workers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is a reasonable question. Again, when you're talking about the issue of labour shortage in Alberta, I'd just like to indicate to the opposition how lucky we are and how blessed we are to live in such a fine province with a strong, diversified economy with thousands of jobs there for everybody.

Mr. Speaker, one thing we've said all along – and I've had a lot of questions on this issue since the House opened – is that the top priority is still Albertans, Canadians. Those have to be looked after first. The employers, who are the people that are responsible in hiring foreign workers and local workers, have to exhaust all avenues available to hire and train local people.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance: will this government call on the federal government to increase the northern residence tax deduction for Fort McMurray residents and workers and provide matching Alberta tax relief?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, we consistently and constantly pray on our federal government to reduce taxes in all areas. If we continue to do that and actually get some response in those areas, we will continue to ensure that the federal government understands that the economy grows better and works better and is more effective through a lower tax regime.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: will this minister look to provide travel allowances or tax relief for all those Albertans who travel the long, weekly trek to the oil sands in Fort McMurray?

Mr. Cardinal: Well, Mr. Speaker, this side of the House would not go into detailed micromanagement of private companies out there. Private companies deal with these issues very effectively.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Oil Sands Bitumen Export

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in reply to a puffball backbench question the Minister of Energy raised the spectre of Kyoto as an excuse for allowing the export of raw bitumen from the oil sands. The government's policy of allowing wholesale ethane exports to the U.S. is already costing 400 Celanese workers their jobs. Now the government seems prepared to put oil sands upgrading jobs at risk as well. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Will the minister today make a clear commitment that the export of oil sands bitumen to be refined and upgraded outside Alberta will not be allowed by this government?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, it has been and continues to be the policy of this government to support all the value-added opportunities that can and will exist. We continue to encourage the upgrading to happen from the Fort McMurray oil sands. We've got a Hydrocarbon Upgrading Task Force that's working on a very good project, using bitumen as a feedstock for the petrochemical industry. There are many things that we're actively doing to make sure that Albertans get the best value from that bitumen.

Mr. Mason: I didn't hear a clear commitment, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta already allows raw gas and petrochemical jobs to be exported down the Alliance pipeline, won't it take a clear position against allowing jobs in the oil sands to be exported as well?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I think we've been very fortunate to have set the right policies and climates to attract the billions and billions of dollars of investment into this industry. We're looking in the oil sands industry at potentially a hundred billion dollars over the next 10 years, and that's just in the oil sands. This is an amount of investment that's happening throughout this province to see that we as Albertans get the best value.

With respect to access and export capacities, clearly we want to have the opportunity to export. Even for the natural gas, before that capacity was there, we had a stranded value. We were getting prices substantially lower than what you could realize in the United States market. We this past year had about 6 and a half billion dollars in royalties from natural gas as a result of being allowed to trade with our partners.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That troubles me very much. Why is the government then giving massive royalty breaks to these oil sands companies, and it won't stand up and say that the bitumen must remain in this province to be processed?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I want to clarify again. This is our policy, and we continue to work very closely with industry to do everything we can to see that the economics are right to upgrade and refine those products right here from the bitumen. We are doing just that. Companies are actively working on many of the upgraders. Suncor recently announced one of their expansion proposals for upgrading capacity for their project. That's just one of numerous proposals that are coming forward for upgrading capacity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Definition of Marriage

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It seems that those who say we need more tolerance are often the most intolerant and seek to take away the freedoms of conscience and religion as well as the freedoms of thought and expression from others, though we protect theirs. Last week the Alberta Human Rights Commission received two complaints over the beliefs expressed by Bishop Fred Henry of Calgary. My question is to the Premier. What is this government going to do to protect our freedoms of conscience and religion as well as our freedom of thought, belief, opinion, expression, and freedom to publish and communicate in peaceful assembly with our associates?

Mr. Klein: Well, as much as I hate to say it, Mr. Speaker, I agree with him. I have made public statements that although I don't agree with all the points raised by Bishop Henry, he certainly has every right – every right – to express those views.

I can tell the hon. member that relative to maintaining the traditional definition of marriage, we're on the same wavelength.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. Again to the Premier: will the Premier today tell Albertans and this Assembly how many citizens, how many thousands of citizens, a number, how many he would like present on the grounds of the Legislature on the 7th of May, 2005, at 1 p.m. in order for the Premier to perform his final flip on the issue and bring to this Assembly a marriage act that will declare that notwithstanding the definition of marriage . . .

The Speaker: We should have a question sometime.

Mr. Klein: Well, first of all, I wasn't aware that hundreds or thousands of people were going to converge on the Legislature on May 7. I have no idea what day that is. I have no idea where I'm going to be at that particular time. But to answer the question, if there was indeed a question in the preamble, although we believe in maintaining the traditional definition of marriage – by the way, so does the Parliament of Canada. As of 1999 they did, the result of a motion that passed, well, not unanimously but by a huge majority.

Mr. Speaker, we can't invoke a law that is unenforceable, that is unlawful. We are lawmakers, not lawbreakers. Now, if the hon. member wants to be different, that's entirely up to him, but I would remind him that he is here to make laws, not to break laws.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: will the Premier lead the parade of two-thirds of Albertans for their traditions and values and not Joe Clark's parade and replace the constitutional featherweights who say that they can't win this fight to defend traditional marriage and put in heavyweights who not only say that we can but will win this fight?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I think that this government has led the parade. Absolutely. In terms of political action, in terms of exploring what appropriate legal action we can take, I have written to every Member of Parliament, including the Prime Minister. I have encouraged all Albertans to write to their Members of Parliament to have this bill killed or at least amended so that the government responsible for jurisdiction over the notwithstanding clause can invoke it. So we have indeed led the parade. Other provinces have succumbed to the will of the courts. There's never been a court challenge in this province, but we are firm in our resolve to defend with great vigour the traditional definition of marriage.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

2:00 Softwood Lumber Trade Dispute

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's softwood lumber continues to pay huge countervail and dumping duties to the United States. Under the U.S. Byrd amendment the U.S. government can redistribute those duties to the U.S. timber companies that claim to be injured by the Canadian trade practice.

My question today is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. The Canadian government has announced retaliatory measures against the U.S., including 15 per cent duty on live hogs and cigarettes. Can the minister tell if the Alberta government was consulted on this retaliatory action?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the WTO, World Trade Organization, ruled some time ago that the Byrd amendment contravenes all existing trade rules. They also ruled that Canada can put forth various retaliatory measures such as the hon. member had mentioned. We were consulted as the provincial government. I was on the phone a couple of times with the Minister of International Trade, Mr. James Peterson, and we did have a discussion on this particular area.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: does the Alberta government support this retaliatory action by the Canadian government?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, retaliation when it comes to trade is a last resort. Given the fact that there was support from other countries, I believe about seven, that through the World Trade Organization were prepared to do something in this regard – although it is a retaliatory measure, we hope that the American government would see that it is time to repeal the Byrd amendment and come to the table and try to resolve some of these issues.

I know that on the issue over softwood lumber presently they're sitting on about $4.3 billion of tariffs collected, and I don't think we'll see a solution to this recent effort in trying to resolve this issue unless they return that money to Canadian producers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What is Alberta's share of duty paid to date that the Byrd amendment would like to redirect to the United States forest industries?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our forest industry has been paying cash deposits on a daily basis of about half a million dollars, which amounts to about $180 million a year. Since the duty has been put in place, that has resulted in about $500 million of Albertans' money that is there. We've been working with the industry as well as our partners to make sure that we can find ways to bring those deposits back to our industry. As part of the overall negotiations we're looking at ways and options of bringing that money back to Alberta. Our industry has been negatively impacted by the duty and what we think is an unreasonable Byrd amendment.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Water Strategy

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Economic Development released figures Monday reporting a record 946 projects worth $107 billion, mostly nonrenewable energy resources, in Alberta.

Alberta's most precious and diminishing resource, fresh water, is under a constant threat from drought worsened by climate warming, population growth, and resource extraction. My first question to the Premier: with no significant increase in funding to Alberta Environment in a decade, when will this government commit to adequate financial resources in the Ministry of Environment so it can do its job of water management and protection identified in the Water for Life strategy?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. minister pointed out yesterday, I believe, the Water for Life strategy is one of the most comprehensive of any jurisdiction in Canada. I would ask the hon. member to wait and see what is in next week's budget before accusing this government of not backing the Department of Environment as it pertains to the Water for Life strategy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: will this government here and now guarantee to Albertans that our water will never be subject to NAFTA and sold to the highest bidder?

Mr. Klein: That is a very interesting question. I don't know what the rules are relative to water and NAFTA, but quite clearly the policy of this government is that there be no interbasin transfers to send water to the United States. That's not to say that commercial bottlers of water can't sell bottled water to the United States. But there will be no interbasin transfers. I was contemplating just the other day – and I've got to research how that policy applies and whether it's a legislated policy or not. But if it's not legislated, then we'll make sure it is legislated.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: will the Premier inform all Albertans whether maximizing economic growth will continue to override water protection policy into the future?

Mr. Klein: No, Mr. Speaker. I can't advise them on something that is absolutely untrue and false. I can't advise them on false assumptions of the opposition. I can advise them that the Water for Life strategy is a good strategy that strikes the right balance between industrial use and those who are concerned about the use of water, irrigators, those involved in the agricultural industry, those involved in the petroleum industry.

Mr. Speaker, there is a great demand for water in this province. The hon. member knows. He knows very well that this is a treasured resource in our province. You know, it's often been said that whiskey is for drinking; water is for fighting over. But we want to end the fight, and that's what the Water for Life strategy is all about: to strike the right balance.

Métis Hunting Rights

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, several of my constituents are concerned about the interim Métis harvesting agreement and would like to know how the Powley decision impacts Métis harvesting in Alberta. The first question I have is for the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. Did the Powley decision restrict Métis hunting to traditional lands or place any restriction on where Métis may hunt?

The Speaker: The hon. member should be aware of Beauchesne

408(1)(c), which says that questions cannot involve a legal opinion. So I don't know if we're on that one or not, but, hon. minister, proceed with some care.

Ms Calahasen: Okay. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the court didn't make reference to site specific, but clarified this – and I think this is really important – by saying that the rights are the same as that of First Nations members. However, in the Blais case the same day it said that Métis were not Indians under the natural resources transfer agreement. The limitations to subsistence hunting on unoccupied Crown lands are in the natural resources transfer agreement, and this left the possibility that these limitations would not apply to Métis hunters. Therefore, we needed to clarify these kinds of unresolved issues as determined by the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Lougheed: Well, to clarify further, to the same minister: under the interim agreement can Métis hunting in Alberta occur in a more extensive region than that guaranteed by these decisions? Where in Alberta can Métis hunting occur?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll make every attempt to answer the question as to where they can. In order to reconcile Métis rights with Indian rights, which is what the Supreme Court directed us to do, we broadened the decision in some areas and narrowed it in others. For example, the decision left open the possibility of commercial hunting and might not have been limited to unoccupied Crown lands. Our agreement prevented these interpretations from occurring. In fact, we negotiated an agreement consistent with the Supreme Court decision by confirming that Métis, like Indians, can hunt for subsistence purposes on unoccupied Crown lands throughout Alberta.

Mr. Lougheed: To the same minister: under both the Powley decision and the interim agreement are there any restrictions on when hunting may occur and on what animals, like sheep, caribou, and grizzlies?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Powley decision did not limit the hunting rights by species. In fact, the matter of endangered species will be taken up in ongoing talks with the Métis Nation of Alberta and the Métis Settlements General Council. Under our agreement, however, harvesting rights are clearly subject to restrictions for conservation purposes and safety closures. Hunting can occur during any season of the year but subject to conservation and safety closures.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Highwood.

Policing Services

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In recent years public confidence in the integrity of our police services has been undermined by numerous incidents involving police misconduct. There has been an erosion of public trust in our police that must be restored. My questions are to the Solicitor General. What concrete actions will this government take to restore the public's confidence and trust in our police services?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As you know, Bill 36 was introduced for first reading this past Monday and will be entering second reading tomorrow afternoon, but I can add to the hon. member's question. Consultation throughout the province began in 1999, and over the past six years hundreds of submissions were received in ongoing consultation with the stakeholders throughout the province. The Alberta Association of Police Governance, the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police, the Alberta Federation of Police Associations as well as members of the public have provided information to us with regard to what the legislation should look like in the future. This act is 18 years old, and it has been presented and is before this Legislature now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Solicitor General: given that the public and police commissions as well as the government's own reports called for a full public oversight of investigations involving complaints to the police, why does the government persist in refusing to implement a public civilian oversight process?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are four components of public oversight. Two additional, new components are going to be addressed. There is the Police Commission, which is an appointed body. There is the public director, which is a new position which will receive all of the complaints. There is the new position with the member or members of the public being appointed to oversee the integrity and the process of an investigation. There is also the Law Enforcement Review Board, another public body that's there to review appeals. There are two new, additional civilian oversight areas. We are one of only a few provinces that have this additional legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the public can't investigate criminal activities. They don't have the experience. They don't have the skills. They don't have the training. Police officers, trained police investigators have to investigate criminal activities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Solicitor General explain to this House as well as the public how his recent fact-finding trip to Las Vegas and Phoenix will improve the effectiveness of policing in Alberta?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, the intent of the trip was twofold. One was to look at the program that they utilize there for the retention and hiring of officers in two of the fastest growing cities in the United States, one being Phoenix and one being Las Vegas, where they have 6,000 people moving into their city per month. That puts a huge strain on the infrastructure of the municipality but, as well, a huge strain on hiring resources, hiring police officers. We received information from them with regard to how they look at their potential new recruits coming in-line and staying within a police service, their retention programs, their education programs, their training programs. As well, we looked at the corrections facilities, the tent city that has a remarkable background, with corrections officers and a thousand inmates that sleep under the stars or under the tents every night.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Highways 2, 7, and 547 Interchange

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been a high number of accidents during the past few years on highway 2 at the Aldersyde intersection south of Calgary, crashes that have resulted in serious injuries and, in too many cases, deaths. In fact, we had another bad one last week. This intersection is a junction of three highways, and there's a lot of heavy truck traffic due to the presence of a trucking company nearby and various industrial and intensive agricultural operations. People in the area and the rural municipality have been calling for an interchange in this location for many years, and one was promised back in 2003. My question is for the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Could the minister update this Assembly on the status of this interchange?

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much for that very concise question. It was absolutely wonderful.

It's an incredibly important issue in the member's particular constituency. This has been an interchange that we have been planning for the past couple of years and, indeed, have been in negotiations with landowners. It is fairly complicated because there are numerous landowners. But through to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, that is one that is going to be going, and it should physically start happening as soon as we get the land purchased and hopefully will be in the ground in 2006.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Why has it taken the department so long to build the interchange given that the problems at this intersection have been obvious for so many years?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Quite simply, the traffic in southern Alberta has changed significantly over the past four or five years. We have understood this, and we have undertaken to purchase the land. Because of all the various landowners that surround this, because of the businesses that have to be relocated – there's also a railroad that goes fairly close to this as well – it has been a complicated issue. We're proceeding as quickly as we can, and as I said in the first part of my answer, we hope that we'll be starting construction on the interchange next year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is also to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. How much safer will the interchange be than the existing interchange that requires people to cross four lanes of highway-speed traffic?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, this is one of the most dangerous intersections and interchanges in Alberta at this time. Eighty-three per cent of the accidents involve a T-bone type of collision, which is someone going across the traffic and all of a sudden being hit by a car that's going 110 or 120 kilometres per hour. These are extremely serious issues. These are extremely serious accidents, and the sooner we can get this interchange under way the better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Energy and Utilities Board

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you ask Albertans in communities across this province, the Energy and Utilities Board is nothing but a toothless tiger serving the energy industry at the expense of the environment and of public safety. Now, in the name of streamlining and so-called efficiency, the EUB is proposing to further weaken its powers to enforce compliance with EUB rules. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Given the words of a respected environmentalist that the new policy will become a walk in the park with the EUB and industry holding hands, why is the government letting the EUB compromise public safety by further weakening its enforcement policy?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, that's absolutely false in preamble, in statement, in fact. The Energy and Utilities Board acts very judiciously in respect of Albertans to protect their interests. If it were a matter of just complying with the companies' requests, then we wouldn't need them, but they are there to ensure that we have the right enforcement, the right level of regulation, and the right balance so that we can both encourage development and ensure that the public is protected.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. To the same minister: why is the EUB pushing for a new compliance policy based on voluntary industry self-disclosure when this approach failed famously last December, when Acclaim Energy failed to notify authorities of a gas well blowout in Edmonton, leaving public health officials to learn about it from the news media?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware specifically of the instance he's referring to.

They are continually reassessing processes. You always have to ensure that you've got the right processes, and that is a reflection that they would be doing on an ongoing basis. I would encourage them continually to look at how to improve their processes for both the public and the companies.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. Same minister: what action, then, will the government take to put a stop to the EUB adopting a new enforcement policy that increases risks to both public safety and the environment here in Alberta?

2:20

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, the Energy and Utilities Board is acting to ensure that the public is protected. They are taking action to see that safety, environmental standards, any of those things, are not compromised. They are ensuring that there's an appropriate balance, that there's an appropriate window, an opportunity for people to know where they should go, the right body. So, in that respect, you always look for a better way and a more improved methodology to accomplish that task.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Fort McMurray Infrastructure Needs

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. According to Fort McMurray industry representatives, residents, city officials, and local First Nations, the province's infrastructure plan isn't going to work. The province is only promising a fraction of the $1.2 billion needed to improve the quality of life in Fort McMurray. To the minister of health: given that Fort McMurray is the only Alberta city of its size without an MRI unit, will the minister commit to funding one in this year's budget?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, there's been a lot of work done by the regional health authority to analyze its needs both from a long-term perspective and for the diagnostic imaging equipment. We are looking at a number of innovative ways to deliver that service, perhaps even between more than one authority in order to save costs. There's a private entrepreneur that I met the other day that was showing me a travelling MRI that they are attempting to work with in some of the regions so that we can accommodate some other options. So we are looking at options to fulfill the need for patient diagnostics, as the member has asked for.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. To the minister of infrastructure: why is this government failing to be proactive in funding a water treatment plant so that Fort McMurray doesn't end up becoming another statistic like Walkerton, Ontario, or North Battleford, Saskatchewan?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to water treatment, when it comes to the whole water issue, it's extremely important for our communities. Fort McMurray on Monday night put forward a proposal for around $94 million for a water treatment plant. That's the first time that they have actually addressed that with me. I agree that if that is needed, we certainly will be there as a partner in funding water treatment in Fort McMurray.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. To the Minister of Finance: if it isn't acceptable for the province to be in debt, why has this government forced Fort McMurray residents into shouldering a debilitating debt?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's a very interesting question. As I indicated in the House – I think it was yesterday – I had the honour and pleasure and privilege of joining many of my colleagues, including most of the cabinet ministers in this government, in a session with a group from the Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo area. Included in that were their regional health authorities, their advanced education people, the school system – the superintendent was there – plus multi-companies. In fact, the presentation was made by a member of industry up there. That was Monday evening.

They gave us a very comprehensive report, that they had put a great deal of time and energy into. They had updated the report which they had given us two years ago and brought that to us. Mr. Speaker, we made a commitment at that time to work with them in all aspects of that report, and even the people of Wood Buffalo have not expected that they would have an answer by 2:25 on Wednesday from a Monday night presentation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Regional Water and Sewer Systems

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The North Red Deer River Water Users Group plans to build a regional waterline that will supply water from the city of Red Deer to the towns of Blackfalds, Lacombe, and Ponoka. The group did receive funding from this government for the project, but the funding is now not enough to allow construction to proceed. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Could the minister update this Assembly as to the status of this project?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When the project was initially put forward, the cost was anywhere from $17 million to $20 million. That project cost has now increased and ballooned to over $30 million. We gave the commitment of funding 51 per cent of the original project, of the original program. Recently, through to the hon. member, I met with the mayors of these communities, and I again committed to retain the 51 per cent. So instead of being 51 per cent of $20 million, it will be 51 per cent of $30 million at this time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister: given that Alberta has reached a stage of development where we should have a provincial plan for regional water and sewer systems, does the minister favour regional water and sewer systems over single community systems?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, as a general rule I think it makes sense. Obviously, there are exceptions to every rule, and I think there are probably some areas in the province where a single system makes more sense. But as a rule the more that we can get together, the safer the water supply, and, quite simply, the larger the economy of scale, the more money that is saved for the taxpayers of this province. As a general rule we like to do that, but I'm sure that there are going to be specific areas where a single water system will make more sense.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister: what has his ministry done to encourage development of regional water and sewer systems?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, what we have done – I alluded to it in the answer to my first question – is we've increased the percentage of the actual project to 51 per cent for regional usages, and it's around 40 per cent for those that are single usages. Again, it is an important element. It's not necessarily the answer to everything, but it's pretty darn close.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

School Utilization

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Conservative government continues to lurch from crisis to crisis, providing partial fixes to problems of their own making. Most recently the government has claimed that it's evolving – not fixing, mind you, but evolving – its school utilization formula that pits community against community. The latest game of survival of the fittest is being played out in schools like Strathearn, Terrace Heights, North Edmonton, and Wellington. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Given that the minister indicated previously in this House that the schools in Edmonton are being closed for the right reasons, does this mean that the current utilization formula is working well for Alberta kids and communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Edmonton we have roughly, according to our estimates, 160,000 square metres of unutilized space in our school system. That type of space costs money to heat, costs money to utilize, costs money to upkeep. What the Edmonton public school board is currently doing is looking at a rationalization through what they're calling a cluster approach, where they look at a cluster of schools and decide what the best way is for learning opportunities for those kids. I really must say that I commend the Edmonton public school board for their initiative in this. They're actually taking a look at how we can move students around to improve the outcome for the students, and that's, quite simply, the way it should be done.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister commit to adopting a school utilization formula similar to our community schools concept in which a partnership with community organizations can help keep schools open and surrounding communities vibrant?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, we are open to almost anything when it comes to partnerships. I think that's the key to the future for us in Alberta. It's partnering with our municipalities. It's partnering with our school boards. So the simple answer to that question is that we will take a look at anything.

What I'm attempting to do, though, is to put the onus on school utilization and school operation and maintenance where it should be, which is down with the school boards. So we are looking at a formula that will enhance the ability of schools to respond to the learning needs of their students.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's good he's open to ideas.

Mr. Speaker, will the minister commit to a moratorium on school closures pending the announcement of his new utilization formula, just as the government did with increases to postsecondary tuition fees pending the development of a new tuition fee policy?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, as I explained, there are roughly 160,000 square metres of unutilized space in Edmonton, and that space is going to cost money regardless. There is no formula that is going to pay for unutilized space, for space that is not being used by students, and I don't think anyone in Alberta expects that to be done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

2:30 International Airport Vicinity Protection

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The airport vicinity protection area, or AVPA, regulation for the Edmonton International Airport is currently undergoing a review. The current draft has created a lot of anxiety amongst residents and businesses in my constituency. My question is for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Can the minister assure this House that the revised regulation, while protecting the viability of the International Airport, will not unduly sterilize lands and stifle growth in Leduc and the surrounding areas of Leduc county?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The issue of the airport vicinity protection area is not a new issue. In fact, the review that is under way now is having a look at a policy that's been in place since 1981. The purpose of these plans is to allow for a co-ordinated development approach between the airport and the municipality, and it certainly is not the intention of the regulations under review to sterilize any land from future development.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplementary to the minister: will the minister commit to further public input from stakeholders prior to the finalization of the new regulation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, as the member knows, public meetings have been recently conducted on this particular review. Those meetings resulted in some very valuable input from a number of stakeholders. That input is now under review. It will be reviewed with the city of Leduc, the Airport Authority, and other municipalities within the affected region, and they will then have an opportunity to revise the proposals that are under way.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Recognitions

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

PCL Construction

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For the last 100 years Alberta has been host to a great number of companies and organizations that have helped build Alberta into the province that it is today. One such company has also been around since the very beginning. PCL Construction will be celebrating its 100th anniversary in 2006.

In the first three months of 2005 PCL has already received a number of awards: declared one of Canada's top 100 employers for the fifth consecutive year by Hewitt Associates; ranked 10th by the Globe and Mail's Report on Business of the 50 best companies to work for in Canada; acknowledged as one of Canada's 50 best-managed companies for 2005; a Platinum Club winner by Deloitte & Touche, CIBC, Queen's School of Business, and the National Post; awarded the Canadian Construction Association's 2004 national safety award and 2004 general contractor award of excellence. The CEO, Ross Grieve, received recognition with the University of Alberta's School of Business 2005 business leader award.

I congratulate PCL for all of their accomplishments, and I encourage all the other members to bring forward and recognize all of Alberta's success stories as we celebrate. Alberta is very fortunate to have a company of PCL's calibre.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Tartan Day

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has become home to families from all the nations of the world. My own family's ancestors include Langs, McCrays, and Crawfords from Scotland, so it's an honour for me to address this Assembly today, April 6, to recognize Tartan Day across this province, this country, and many parts of the world.

Tartan Day is celebrated to commemorate the signing of the declaration of Arbroath, which is also known as the Scottish declaration of independence, on April 6, 1320. This important day in history has been recognized by many around the world as one of the earliest expressions of the right of humanity to a peaceful and productive life which is free from oppression. This is, therefore, a significant day for Scots and non-Scots alike.

Tartan Day also gives us an opportunity to recognize the tartan as a symbol of Scottish culture and Scottish clans. I have prepared commemorative ribbons which consist of traditional Scottish colours pinned with an Alberta coat of arms pin to symbolize the recognition of this proud day for Scots in Alberta. I hope that all members wear these pins proudly and that the members of this Assembly join me in recognizing this important day.

Thank you.

The Speaker: To the hon. members for Lethbridge-East and Edmonton-Mill Woods: you each have an additional 30 seconds.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Under-18 International Curling Championship

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend in Calgary at the North Hill curling club and the Calgary Curling Club the 2005 Optimist Under-18 International Curling Championship took place. Fourteen male and female teams took place in the tournament, and the team representing Alberta won gold after a thrilling 7 to 5 victory over the team from Ontario.

Our Alberta team was made up of players from the Lethbridge Curling Club. The team is comprised of skip Casey Scheidegger from Diamond City, third Katie Wilson from Coaldale, second Jennifer Coutts from Fort Macleod, and lead Jessie Scheidegger, also from Diamond City. Their coach is Don Scheidegger, who is the father of two of the young girls.

Mr. Speaker, I along with the hon. minister from Lethbridge-West and the hon. minister from Livingstone-Macleod, who also happens to be the very proud uncle to one of these team members, would like to say congratulations on a job well done to the Scheidegger rink.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Jessica Robertshaw

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize a brilliant young constituent of Calgary-Lougheed, Miss Jessica Robertshaw. Jessica has won awards in 15 speech competitions and placed in over 30 debate tournaments both as an individual and as a team member.

Recently this grade 12 student from Bishop Carroll high, which is a school I was fortunate to teach at in my prior career, won the CanWest National Public Speaking Championships in Winnipeg, and this past Sunday at a speech and debate tournament in Cyprus she was named the third best speaker overall out of student champions from across the globe, and she captured the title as the best young impromptu speaker in the world.

In addition to all of this, Jessica has starred in several school drama productions, and she volunteers with the youth justice committee in Calgary southwest. I'm very proud to have Jessica Robertshaw in my riding, and I trust that all hon. members will join me in expressing appreciation for this incredible young Albertan.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Alberta's Promise

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's Promise is a movement to do more for Alberta's children and youth, and this movement is growing at a rate beyond expectation. In Calgary last Friday and then here in Edmonton yesterday the Premier, Mrs. Klein, and the Minister of Children's Services presented 128 new partners with their little red wagons to recognize their commitment to increase their support for children and youth programs. This brings the total number of Alberta's Promise partners to 246.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government made a promise to Alberta's children in 2003. This centennial year is the time to renew our commitment to the Alberta's Promise movement and to the children of Alberta. It is with pleasure that I ask the Assembly to recognize the 128 new Alberta's Promise partners, who have committed to making Alberta the best place in the world to raise our children and our youth.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, I appreciate the comments from the hon. Member for Calgary-West. From his training as a radio man in the past, he understands completely what a minute means. Well done.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

LaBelle Triplets

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and talk about a much lighter subject than we would normally discuss in the House. I speak of a phenomenon of nature that occurred in my constituency of Lethbridge-East, and I would like to inform this Assembly of that phenomenon and congratulate and recognize the people involved as I am also sure that I share this congratulatory message with my colleague across the way from Lethbridge-West.

On March 21, '05, Kevin and Karrie LaBelle had triplets: Emma, Olivia, and Samantha. The babies are all doing fine, and Emma, the last one, went home today. All is well. However, perhaps the parents may question that. The triplets also have an older brother, Cameron.

I would suspect that they may be the only triplets in this province for this year, the first in the next hundred years of this province. We can only guess at the changes that they will see in their lifetime.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Birth to Three Society

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with pride that I bring recognition of the Birth to Three Society of Edmonton to this Assembly. All children deserve a successful start in life. For some children, especially those with developmental delays, early support makes a tremendous difference.

Edmonton's Birth to Three Society offers two excellent programs to help these children and their families, the Edmonton early intervention program and the early Head Start. These programs have served over 700 children and their families in the Edmonton area to improve the quality of life by providing parents with resources and skills to enable their children to reach their full potential, individual screening and family support plans, information and education through regular home visits and parent sessions, occupational therapy, and speech language pathology consultation through Capital health.

There is no cost to families for the services provided. Partial funding is received from Capital health and the Edmonton and area child and family services authority. Additional funding is acquired through grants, sponsorships, and fundraising.

It is my hope that the members of the Assembly will join me with pride in recognizing the Birth to Three Society.

Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, our historic comment of the day. On April 6, 1967, George Brinton McClellan, former commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, was named Ombudsman of Alberta. Not only was Mr. McClellan the first Ombudsman of Alberta, but he was also the first Ombudsman in Canada.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition signed by 103 Albertans, and it reads:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise to present a petition, which reads that the undersigned, which number 107, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to "prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers" when in fact we have a large glut in our unemployed in Canada.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three documents to table today. First I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter signed by over 150 Albertans urging the government to "recognize the importance of community schools and to make proper investment to protect the long term viability" of community schools.

The second is a news release distributed by Martha Kostuch regarding EUB proposals that will weaken the enforcement policy of that institution.

Finally, I have an EUB bulletin dated March 21, 2005, which outlines the EUB proposals that I just mentioned.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have three tablings from my Calgary-Varsity constituents urging the government not to water down the smoking ban legislation. Dr. Liam Martin of the University of Calgary's Faculty of Medicine states: "It is time to ensure that Albertans have the same opportunity to work in a smoke-free environment as other members of the Canadian population."

In e-mails received from Bistrin Opacic and Floyd Paxman, the authors point out that by only protecting youth under 18, the province is compromising the health of the majority of Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I wish to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter dated April 6, 2005, from me and addressed to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie in response to a question that he raised yesterday in the House that I undertook I would provide him an answer to.

Thank you.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 31

Real Estate Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate April 5: Mr. Stevens]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Yes. On this particular bill, Bill 31, Mr. Speaker, the relevant stakeholder groups have been consulted. We found that there has been very little to speak against this bill, and we stand in favour of it, and I support this bill.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Additional speakers?

Would the hon. Government House Leader like to conclude debate on this bill? Then the question will be called.

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a second time]

Bill 34

Insurance Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate March 24: Mr. Oberle]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had addressed my comments prior to adjourning debate, and I'd be pleased to listen to the learned comments of members from all sides of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to lead off the debate for the Official Opposition on Bill 34, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2005. The mover of this bill, the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, has indicated twice now, I think, both in his opening comments and when he spoke to second reading, that the government is following through with commitments that it made last fall to reform automobile insurance in Alberta.

It would be my representation that, in fact, what is meant is that the government is trying desperately to fix the mess that was created by the Premier. While his Minister of Finance at the time was in the middle of negotiations and consultations to reform auto insurance in this province, the Premier said that Albertans would have the lowest insurance rates in western Canada, and he ordered an immediate rollback. As a result, he left the industry and the ministry scrambling trying to make that happen. Mr. Speaker, you and I and, I think, all Alberta drivers know that this has not occurred, and in fact many believe that the reforms have been a disaster for the average Alberta driver.

Mr. Speaker, one of the so-called highlights of this bill is that it will open up the Alberta market to public auto insurance companies from the neighbouring provinces of B.C., Saskatchewan, and Manitoba to set up shop and sell auto insurance in Alberta. I would suggest that this is a good step, albeit a very small step, in the right direction. However, the reason I refer to it as a so-called highlight is that, in fact, these public insurers have already indicated that they are not likely interested in operating in Alberta under the current conditions.

It's quite clear to most that would look at it, I believe, that in fact public auto insurance operates successfully under the monopoly situation that we see in those three provinces that I mentioned earlier. The fact that they have a monopoly is what allows them to be successful both financially and administratively. As I've already said, all three indicated that under the current circumstances they're not likely to even consider coming into Alberta.

Now, I'd just like to point out that if we look at the situation in British Columbia as an example, the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia, ICBC as it's more normally known, operates using a tort system without any artificial caps on injuries, Mr. Speaker. In the business year ended December 31, 2004, they declared a net income of $389 million. Of this $389 million, they use that profit to build their retained earnings, they use it to enable a low and stable rate of auto insurance, and they actually spend millions of dollars – now, this is the insurance company – on safety education and accident prevention initiatives. [interjections] Mr. Speaker, I thought that I had the floor, but perhaps some members across the way feel differently. I'm not sure.

Mr. Speaker, the province of Alberta continues to promote and support an open market that favours the industry, yet when it comes to the consumer, we've adopted a modified no-fault system that seems apparently to penalize the victims of accidents by failing to provide adequate claims compensation. In fact, in meeting with Kathleen Ryan of the Alberta Civil Trial Lawyers Association, she has indicated that she believes we probably have the worst possible combination of those two systems.

The government continually claims to be doing what is in the best interest of Albertans, and it would be my belief and certainly that of my caucus colleagues that if, in fact, we want to do what is in the best interests of all Albertans, we should be looking seriously at instituting a fully public auto insurance system modelled after the British Columbia example; in fact, ICBC, which has for many, many years provided both stable, low auto insurance rates and very reasonable claims under their tort system.

I'd just like to speak to the claims, Mr. Speaker, because when the $4,000 cap was introduced on soft tissue injuries in Alberta, one of the arguments we heard time and again from both industry and the government was that claims were spiralling out of control. I look at the example that's coming from B.C. In the year 2004 their claims were a total of $2.5 billion, which is roughly the same as they were in the year 2003. Certainly, it would appear to me that with a well-managed and well-legislated public auto insurance system – that is, a fully public auto insurance system – there's very good control of the claims history. It certainly seems to work both in terms of protecting the insurance company and also, as I suggested, protecting the consumer.

The controllable costs that the ICBC had in the year 2004 were actually 25 per cent lower than they were in the year 2000. Again, this is where the economies of efficiency are recognized, when you have a single public insurance company operating with a monopoly as opposed to inviting them to come in and operate under the current Alberta system, which really doesn't present much of an opportunity for them and, as I indicated, we're not likely to see.

Now, I mentioned the claims cap of $4,000, Mr. Speaker. I have had so much correspondence to my constituency office both from constituents and from Alberta drivers across the province who are outraged, quite frankly, at the profits that we're hearing about in the insurance industry at the same time as they've been limited with this artificial cap of $4,000 on soft tissue injuries, which even the medical community acknowledges are quite difficult to substantiate. So I really, really question the rationale for that to begin with.

Mr. Elsalhy: An arbitrary number.

Mr. R. Miller: It is, as my colleague from Edmonton-McClung has suggested, a very arbitrary number.

Another thing that the mover of the bill indicated when he spoke to it in second reading is that the legislation as it's presented to us now will clarify some of the rules regarding the all-comers rule in that they specifically only apply to private automobiles. Mr. Speaker, I think I mentioned in this Assembly the other day that as a small businessperson I have serious concerns as to why all of this legislation is applying only to private automobiles, and we seem to be ignoring small business, which is truly the backbone of the economy in this province.

I can certainly suggest, as an owner of a small business who has some experience with these matters, that the cost of auto insurance is one of those costs that has been literally spiralling out of control for small businesses over the last several years at a rate much higher than the 3.17 per cent rate of insurance that was reflected in the members' services allowance increase that we received from this Assembly the other day. In fact, most of the businesses that I've consulted with are experiencing somewhere in the area of 20 to 25 per cent increases in their auto insurance over the last several years. So this is a serious concern, and I would suggest that we should be doing something in this legislation to help out small business as well as the owners of private automobiles, Mr. Speaker.

Now, probably the most contentious part of this bill in my mind is section 5, where the government takes the almost unprecedented step of legislating against action brought to it by anybody in this province. I note in the press release that was done by the ministry that they talk specifically about outlining that insurance companies are not entitled to compensation for revenue losses caused by the government's premium freeze. In the press release it specifically says that they're referring to insurance companies, but when I read from the bill, section 5 of the bill is much, much more broad than that and, in fact, causes me untold concern. I was shocked, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, when I read this.

Mr. MacDonald: Appalled?

Mr. R. Miller: I was appalled. I was shocked. I was more than dismayed.

Clause (2) under section 5 says, “No liability attaches to the Crown for any loss or damages that have arisen or may arise in respect of the reform amendments.” And then it gets even worse, Mr. Speaker, because in clause (3) it says, “All existing and future causes of action in law or in equity against the Crown in respect of the reform amendments, including, without limitation” a specific action number “are extinguished without costs.” But the first part of that clause says, “All existing and future causes . . . against the Crown.” All. It doesn’t say all brought by insurance companies. It says all.

What that would indicate to me, Mr. Speaker, is that anybody who might be contemplating bringing an action against the government for any reason related to the reforms of the insurance industry have now had their right to the courts taken away from them if we pass this legislation. It is, as I suggested, almost unprecedented in Canadian legal history that a Legislature would pass a law like this and get away with it, if I can use that terminology.

The research that I’ve been able to do to this point would indicate that only twice in the history of this province have we specifically legislated against an entire group of people bringing a legal action against the government. I have to admit that I had some trouble finding out the second of those. At this point I don’t know which it is, but the one that certainly causes me to recall the events surrounding it was in the late 1990s.

A group of sterilization victims that had been resident at Michener Centre in Red Deer had brought action against the Alberta government for the fact that they had been sterilized and not informed of that action in their adult life. The Alberta government moved to legislate against their claim. This caused a huge uproar, Mr. Speaker, to the extent that within a matter of hours, literally a matter of hours, the Premier backpedalled, and the legislation eventually disappeared and was not brought forward.

I’m not going to suggest for one second that in this particular case an insurance company or any other insurance company that might bring forward an action would garner the same level of sympathy and probably shouldn’t garner the same level of sympathy that those sterilization victims did from the public, but I think the principle is exactly the same, Mr. Speaker, in terms of legislating against somebody’s right and access to the courts.

Now, I’ve had opportunity to consult with, I mentioned earlier, the Alberta Civil Trial Lawyers Association and also with some legal representation for the company that is cited specifically in section 5. Mr. Speaker, I’d just like to refer to my notes that came out of that meeting. I think I mentioned already that I certainly believe and it would be the representation of the legal firm representing Kingsway that this particular section of Bill 34 is designed particularly to save the government and the Premier the embarrassment of having announced a rate freeze without first consulting the Minister of Finance when she was in those negotiations that I referred to earlier with the industry. In fact, I believe that announcement from the Premier was made without any real thought to the legal implications that might result as a result of his demand for a rollback.

I’m not here to make the legal argument for Kingsway. Certainly, that matter is going to proceed at some length in the courts, but it would seem to me that by naming a particular action, it’s quite clear that the government is in fact aiming clause 5 at one particular company. Again, Mr. Speaker, as the owner of a small business I was beyond shocked to see that the government of this great province would specifically name a company and, to quote the bill, extinguish their action. This is an action that has been on the books and in front of the courts now for 14 months, well before the Premier made his comments about a rollback.

I think this is something that should concern not just the representation for Kingsway, not just the members of this Assembly, not just the owners of small businesses in this province, but every single Albertan I really believe should be very, very concerned by the fact that we have an example here of the government legislating the end to a legal action that was in place prior to the government making changes to a law.

As I said earlier, I’m not a lawyer. I don’t necessarily understand a lot of the legal implications here, but I can’t imagine as a citizen of this province that my government, which I now find myself a part of, would take what is almost an unprecedented step in the British parliamentary system to legislate against an action that I have legally brought forward prior to changes that that Legislature would make and then extinguish it and, in fact, extinguish not just the action but all costs that might be associated with it.

Mr. Oberle: Point of order.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River on a point of order. Proceed.

Point of Order Sub Judice Rule

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the hon. member I refer you to Standing Order 23(g), which prohibits against the mention of “any matter pending in a court or before a judge for judicial determination.” It says, “Where there is probability of prejudice to any party but where there is any doubt as to prejudice, the rule should be in favour of the debate.” I submit that by mentioning the company name and dragging on, as it were, and repeating the government’s unprecedented actions, we’re bordering on prejudice here. I would ask the Speaker to caution the member.

The Speaker: The hon. member on this point of order.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to the point of order. I think that under normal circumstances my hon. colleague might be correct. Unfortunately, as I’ve indicated, I don’t view this as a normal circumstance. In fact, I view it as an extraordinary circumstance to the extent where, although the name of the company is not mentioned in here – and I can certainly refrain from using the name of the company – the specific action is referred to in the legislation. I do believe that that qualifies as an exceptional circumstance in this case, and certainly if the action number is referred to in the legislation, then I don’t see why I should be limited in speaking to that particular action in my comments when I’m referring to the bill.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Peace River, we’re not going to have a long debate on this. You’re still on the point of order. That’s fine. Go ahead.

Mr. Oberle: If I may, I just want to point out yet that the company is not named. The action number is named in the legislation. The fact that it’s, according to the member, unprecedented, although it’s not – it’s not mentioned in the legislation, nor is any of the ensuing debate mentioned in the legislation. As I said previously, I believe we’re bordering on prejudice here.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, it certainly is opportune and correct for an hon. member to rise on a point of order should the member feel moved, and Standing Order 23(g) is very clear. It says, "Refers to any matter pending in a court or before a judge for judicial determination." There are two subsections to it. One is, "Of a civil nature that has been set down for a trial or notice of motion filed, as in an injunction proceeding, until judgment or from the date of filing a notice of appeal until judgment by an appellate court," and then, "Where there is probability of prejudice to any party but where there is any doubt as to prejudice, the rule should be in favour of the debate."

So before the chair today are two hon. members, the word of whom, both, the chair must accede to. The hon. Member for Peace River suggests that there could be prejudice. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford suggests that there could not be prejudice. The chair has to accept both views as both members are honourable, but we'll exercise a caution and rule in favour of the debate continuing.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It would be a suggestion that has been made to me by several of the legal consultations I've had that, in fact, section 5 violates the rule of law by depriving access of one particular company but not just that one particular company but by depriving access of all to the courts for the taking of their property. In fact, I understand that there may be a constitutional argument here as well.

As I've indicated earlier, if the government can do this in this one particular action that it references in the bill, it can do it to anybody. It could do it to me. It could do it to you, Mr. Speaker. It could do it to the company that I own. It could do it to the company that my colleague from Edmonton-McClung owns. It could do it to anybody in this Assembly, anybody outside this Assembly. That is really the argument that I'm making today, that we are taking a step here that I believe crosses the line in terms of the rule of law but probably more importantly just the rule of common sense. To suggest that anybody should be barred from a rightful action in front of the courts just doesn't make any sense to me.

Now, I wonder as well, Mr. Speaker, if this particular clause might not be bad for business in Alberta. When any given company might be looking at moving to Alberta, we always talk about being, you know, the best place in the world to do business. I don't necessarily disagree with my hon. colleagues when they throw that out and when they talk about the Alberta advantage. At times we have certainly questioned who the Alberta advantage is for. Nevertheless, it is a pretty darn good place to do business, certainly a great place to live, and we want to make sure that we do everything within our power to attract more business and make sure that companies look at Alberta as a great place to locate.

When companies start to see that if they were ever to bring an action against the government for any reason whatsoever, the government may just pass legislation that would invalidate that action even if, in fact, it was brought forward on a matter that was subsequently changed in legislation, they could have their action quashed, they could have their right to the courts quashed, and they could have their costs stripped away from them – I believe that that will seriously harm the so-called Alberta advantage when companies are looking to us as a place to potentially open up their business.

The Speaker: Others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung caught my eye first.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to take this time to briefly comment on Bill 34, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2005. I listened very carefully to the remarks that were made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, and I would have to say that although he is my caucus whip, he didn't really require me to agree with him, but I totally agree with him because he made darn good comments. He made sense to me.

To start, I would emphasize that my understanding of this bill when I read it – and I read it very briefly. The first thing it's trying to do is to open the door for those extraprovincial insurance providers to enter into this lucrative Alberta auto insurance market. While I admit, like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford commented, that competition is usually viewed as healthy and useful, I am, in fact, a little puzzled. How will the private-sector companies from within Alberta or from outside compete amongst themselves to offer public auto insurance in Alberta? Are we talking public delivery of auto insurance, or are we talking private, for-profit auto insurance mechanisms? Is this government still expanding its current deregulated, charge what you can get market design, or are they backing off a little and trying to reinstate some degree of public control? I think this is a point that needs clarification so Joe Average out there or Martha and Henry would understand.

My simplistic definition of public auto insurance is that the government allows competition, yes, but stipulates acceptable or maximum ceilings to premiums, allowable profit margins. We've heard of that report – some of us actually read that report – that detailed the profits that were posted and the earnings that were made by the insurance companies in this province, and they were able to recover their costs and pay all their claims and then have 20 per cent of pure profit on top of that. We're not really against the private sector, and we're not against market forces, but we're really against extravagant or exaggerated profits when the public is not seeing any of that benefit.

With opening the door for out-of-province companies to enter our market, I need to be reassured that this competition would in fact lead to better service or more choice or more affordability. I would hate for it to be a mechanism by which we're opening the door to offer the consumers choice, but we're offering them a choice to either die by the electric chair or by the guillotine or by lethal injection. I don't think that this government will be able to demonstrate to us the insured or the public or the policyholders how this may be beneficial to us and to our pocketbooks. Again, I keep emphasizing that I'm not against those extraprovincial insurers moving into Alberta. In fact, I would probably be the first one to welcome them at the border with open arms if they bring insurance costs down and if they offer better service or more choice for the taxpayers and the consumers of this province.

The Official Opposition, of course, supports or prefers a public auto insurance approach – and this is well known and documented; I'm not saying anything new – while this government does not. They prefer the current deregulated model. Some people agree with the government, but I believe most don't. This could probably be easily verified with a simple yes/no survey if the government is really serious and sincere about asking for input and seeking guidance and direction from the people.

Now, having said that, I think what is really alarming about this proposed piece of legislation, as was talked about by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, is that it stipulates that insurance companies and the public are not entitled to sue the government for costs or damages incurred from or because of this Conservative government's auto insurance reforms. I know the hard-working Hansard staff would probably question that, but I'm going to spell it for them. It's d-e-f-o-r-m-s, so it's deforms.

This is serious business, ladies and gentlemen. If we allow a governing party to rule and dictate how we lead our lives, how much we spend, and which services are available to us, then I think that the least we could do is to hold them accountable. They have to answer to the people. They have to explain their actions.

I'm going to use a business model like my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford used. Let's assume that this is a company. Then the public represents the shareholders of this company. The cabinet, or the various government ministers, would represent the directors of this company. They're entrusted as leaders, as powerful people to lead and to make decisions and try to make our lives easier.

Now, if those directors misbehave or make the wrong decisions or if the shareholders start to lose on their investments, then these very directors are either questioned, disciplined, or ultimately fired. This proposed amendment though, much to my surprise – or, really, I shouldn't be at all surprised – immunizes the government from having to answer to the people. It negates the very essence of being accountable and responsible.

A couple of weeks ago and then also as late as yesterday we were debating right here in this Assembly and under this dome the amendments proposed to strengthen our fair trading provisions so that the people out there don't fall prey to unscrupulous business practices. We were offering victims of fraud, for example, a tool to have some recourse and possibly get some compensation.

Here, on the other hand, the government is telling insurance companies and the general public that if they disagree with the current deforms or if these companies and people were hurt by these decisions, they do not have any recourse. They cannot touch the government. The government is untouchable. How many times was it okay or allowable for any government to hide behind a cloak of legislation to protect itself from liability which is clearly stemming from its own ill-advised decisions?

Now, to generally comment on the insurance landscape in Alberta, almost every single Albertan is insured for something or another. Insurance companies, of course, are very important, and they play an integral role in day-to-day transactions be it home insurance, auto insurance, business insurance, malpractice insurance, et cetera. But, again, the outrageous profits that they have been bringing in and the ridiculous or minuscule so-called rebates or rollbacks that they give back to the consumers definitely and clearly highlight an injustice.

I for one have been driving for almost 11 years, a clean record, no accidents, good driving habits. My premiums kept creeping up. Then finally when I did get a rebate, it was really a joke, but I wasn't laughing. I got less than $5 per year.

Mr. R. Miller: How much did you get?

Mr. Elsalhy: Five dollars of rebate per year. That was, like, good for a coffee and a doughnut. [interjection] Well, I have to walk now.

Many people share this concern, Mr. Speaker, but they feel helpless and abandoned. I am luckier than most. I can stand here and talk about it. Most out there are really helpless, and they have no avenue for expressing their disgruntlement and their frustration.

Maybe we should be open to the suggestion that these so-called government reforms were ill advised, or perhaps the way they were administered or implemented was contrary to public interest and definitely contrary to public opinion. I will be the first person standing in line to congratulate and commend this government if they genuinely and honestly decide to revisit their position on auto insurance. Voluntary rate rollbacks, as is preferred by the hon. Minister of Finance, the Deputy Premier, in my opinion, sound like a bad joke and certainly are not entertaining.

I will end, Mr. Speaker, with something I found in this bill which is positive, and by that I'm referring to the consumer dispute mechanism that is being introduced. I have advocated previously, before and after I became a member of this esteemed Assembly, that we have to facilitate conflict resolution and dispute solving in all government departments so that our taxpayers and citizens are not forced to resort to the legal system and the courts unless absolutely necessary and as a measure of last resort. So this is one area that is positive about this bill, introducing that consumer dispute mechanism, and I commend the sponsor for having this section in there, which sort of offers a little sweetness about a bad deal.

I will now take my seat, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for this chance to register my opinion.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung a question. He said in his comments today that he and his colleagues have support for market forces in the insurance industry but that they are opposed to the excessive profits that have been taken by the insurance industry. During the previous term of this Assembly the Liberal opposition adopted a strong position of support for public auto insurance, and that, in fact, formed part of their platform during the most recent election. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung if that is still the policy of the Liberal Party.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes, sir, in fact it is. By accepting market forces and by encouraging competition, we are in no way going back on our dedication and our commitment to having a public auto insurance system in this province.

What I said in my presentation, my debate on Bill 34, is basically that I would welcome any competition that results in rate reductions. If we're allowing companies to try to offer choice and to offer reduced rates for Alberta drivers, then why not? Public auto insurance has enough room for private providers if they fall under that ceiling which I referred to, the allowable maximums, the reasonable maximums, because 20 per cent on top of their claim expenses and on top of their typical operating expenses is really outrageous.

So, yes, we are committed and we are dedicated to having a public auto insurance system in place. We said that before the campaign, during the campaign, and after the campaign.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. A follow-up, Mr. Speaker. Given that the position, as I understood it, of the Liberal Party as well as the New Democratic Party in the last election was that public auto insurance meant that, in fact, the public system had a monopoly on the sale of automobile insurance in the province, how does the private sector and the market forces allow that? How can you have a public monopoly system and private competition at the same time?

Mr. Elsalhy: That's a fair question, and I think I can probably borrow from the Minister of Finance when she said that we have some 70-plus companies offering insurance. If these companies are looked at as brokers or as resellers, then we can probably allow them to resell the commodity under a fully public system. So I don't think there is any contradiction in my approach to the registered Liberal Party platform. They are here. We can't really deny that they're here, and they're probably here to stay, so what we can do is make them work under a fully public system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on the Standing Order 29(2)(a) section.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to ask my colleague from Edmonton-McClung if what he meant to say is that we would prefer to see a fully public auto insurance system in this province? If for some reason we can't convince the government that a fully public . . . [interjections] I said if for some reason – if implies a question mark at the end. If some for reason we cannot convince this government that fully public auto insurance is the best system, if he meant, then, that we would accept public auto insurance if it will help to reduce premiums, which is really what this debate is all about.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes, sir. The hon. members across are probably following this with keen interest because now we have both opposition parties trying to reiterate and reconfirm their positions from after the campaign. Yes, sir, we would really prefer to have a fully public auto insurance system, as we do prefer to have a fully public health care system, and as we do, you know, not prefer to have schools closed, those ill-advised decisions that the government keeps bombarding us with.

However, like I say, failing that, and if the government keeps adamant about rejecting our positions and our suggestions and insists on going about with their typical approach and their preferred way of doing things, then we have to be realistic, unlike the ND opposition, which doesn't even accept suggestions of different points of view. I think we have to modify our approach to some extent.

The Speaker: Additional speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to speak to Bill 34, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2005, because this is very important to Albertans. I have a friend who was ticket free with an older vehicle but experienced two small increases in premiums since the provincial freeze on rates was applied. In both cases he managed to get the increase rescinded by waiting on the telephone for over an hour to get a review. The review supported his concern about increases in his premiums. My point is that the insurance companies may become as irresponsible as other monopolies in applying rate increases and charges across the board and expecting consumers to justify why they should not be charged rather than justifying their increases before the fact and clearly communicating to the consumer.

That made me take a look at this bill as carefully as I could in the time I had, and I'd like to make a few points about some sections that are proposed in this amendment that I do not support, although I realize that there are a number of points which deserve serious debate.

I oppose this bill because the government would be allowing Crown insurers – B.C., Saskatchewan, and Manitoba – into this province, but this policy does not address the root of the insurance problems. As former president of the Alberta Civil Trial Lawyers Association Kathleen Ryan argues, competition will not resolve the serious problems associated with the small claims cap of $4,000, competition will not address the obscene profits made by this industry on the backs of Alberta drivers, and competition will not improve driver safety policies in this province. As one who has experienced injury due to a car accident, I can say without a doubt that $4,000 is not adequate in many cases of injury.

I, too, question section 5, the Crown immunity and the use of the word "all." This section exempts Albertans and industry from seeking compensation from the government for its auto insurance reforms. Preventing access to the court borders on criminal contempt of court. I believe section 5 can only be bad for business in Alberta. Out-of-province companies will be reluctant to invest more in Alberta if they can't sue the Alberta government for its wrong against them. Existing Alberta businesses, too, should take warning because the government can punish them if they are displeased with it. If the government of Alberta has caused anyone compensable damages, it should abide by the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta in order to preserve the honour of the Crown and the confidence of the business community.

3:30

These reforms should be debated in the Legislature and not behind closed doors in regulations. The government appears, I think, to be clearly favouring insurance companies on the backs of Alberta consumers. For example, the Automobile Insurance Rate Board is dominated by industry executives seven to one, and the AIRB has made the premium reductions voluntary reductions, and the minister is abiding by their recommendations.

We need to clean up this auto insurance mess. Unlike the poorly managed existing policy in Alberta, this government should develop an auto insurance policy that puts consumers first with real choices.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Then I'll call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to speak on Bill 34 with some hesitation. I'm finding that amongst all the bills that we've seen here this spring, this one certainly is one of the most, sort of, ad hoc and confusing of the legislation that we have to deal with here.

I think it's, quite frankly, a reflection of how poorly the Alberta government has dealt with the insurance issue here in the province over the last few years. This is another stopgap measure, I believe, to try to make some small attempts at regulation, but I would say that these are regulation without responsibility, Mr. Speaker. You know, regulation without responsibility is simply words and idle things on paper as opposed to anything substantive. I think that, really, Bill 34 as it stands is not deserving of support.

Just looking through various sections of the bill, Mr. Speaker, I think this idea of disallowing companies to sue for loss of revenue from this legislation is certainly a way to cover the legal options, but you know it's a reflection of just how on the fly this sort of legislation seems to be. In other words, it's being created as a reactive measure as opposed to proactive in trying to solve the problem of auto insurance, which has been, quite frankly, a blight on the people of Alberta for a number of years.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

I think it's worthy to note that everyone here knows as an elected member that auto insurance was a big issue in this past election, and by now refusing to deal with it in any substantive way, I think that it's only going to compound the problem and make it worse. Rest assured that I don't think the Conservative government managed to pick up any seats or votes as a result of insurance, and, you know, I think it only can get worse.

I think it's a basic tenet of any government that if you have a law in place where you are obliging the population to have insurance, to have a certain commodity, then it's the responsibility of the government to provide an affordable, reliable, and functional system that they can plug into. You cannot simply tell people that they need auto insurance, and they require it by law, but then throw them into an extortionate market where they are not being served either through the premium rates that they have to pay or by the claims that you're running through the system. Let's not forget that, you know, we're all mostly fortunate to not have to take claims, but if you do have a catastrophic event with your vehicle, then, you know, that insurance is the very most important thing that you own.

So by not having consistency, by not providing the ability for someone who has had a catastrophic event to properly go and go through a due process and get the compensation that is fair to them, then, really, we are doing less than a disservice. We are providing the potential for disaster of anyone who has a catastrophic event with their vehicle here in the province at this time. So I know that there are various solutions out there.

One of the things I find the most insulting, quite frankly, about this Insurance Amendment Act, Bill 34, is allowing the idea of public auto insurance to be entering into the marketplace but not visiting the true spirit of what public auto insurance means. Public auto insurance comes from provinces that have made a commitment to their population that they're going to provide a stable and functional and reliable and affordable system for their population, for the people in their province. I believe we have such public auto insurance institutions in British Columbia and in Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

Now, if those public auto insurance carriers decide to enter the Alberta market, they're only going to do so to supplement the service that they provide back to the people of their own population, Mr. Speaker. So, of course, they're just going to enter the Alberta market as another competitive market player. I know that there is some propaganda built into this idea that: oh, here's the public auto insurers maybe playing in the markets in Alberta, and – look – they're providing the same rates as private providers. But in fact they're just here to make some extra dollars to help provide the money to provide an affordable rate for the people back in Saskatchewan or from Manitoba or in British Columbia. Indeed, we don't even know, clearly, if they will enter the market. It would be just a speculation on their part. You know, it goes around, and as I said, I find it slightly as an abuse of the whole concept of public auto insurance or misrepresenting public auto insurance to Albertans.

I think that most people are coming around. I can tell you from anecdotal evidence that more and more people are coming around to the idea that public auto insurance would be the best provider for auto insurance here in the province of Alberta. We owe it to the people of Alberta, Mr. Speaker. Since we put in a rule that you have to have insurance, then it's our responsibility as legislators to provide something that's affordable for everyone. That's where public auto insurance can come in, and it's really quite a functional system. I know that vagaries of the private system sometimes on rare occasions provide something cheaper, but for the most part, over a long period of time, public auto insurance in British Columbia and Manitoba and Saskatchewan has been far superior to the service that we have been provided here in the province of Alberta under our current system.

So with that and a number of other things, I have serious concerns with Bill 34. I think that we could go a long way to clear up all of these problems, this myriad of the need to regulate. I mean, it's not even fair to the private providers or the personal tort system, the personal injury claims system that we have in place here. Everybody is looking for something that resembles clarity, and without clarity it's very difficult to make a long-term business plan. It's very difficult to build a strategy for how you might penetrate markets because the system at this point in time is not being dealt with in a proactive way by this government. I find that difficult to believe why exactly.

I suspect, you know, the fact that insurance companies are still making dramatic profits from our population here might have something to do with it, even with the uncertainty. But I think that at the end of the day we need to have balance, we need to build a system that provides adequate insurance and the peace of mind that comes with that, and we do need to provide it through a publicly funded system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) kicks in. Any questions or comments?

Before I recognize the next speaker, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to introduce today through you and to all members of this Assembly Mr. Ian Blue, who is a lawyer with the firm Cassels Brock in Toronto. I'd like to welcome him on his visit to Alberta and ask all Members of the Assembly to give him the traditional warm welcome of this House.

Second Reading

Bill 34
Insurance Amendment Act, 2005

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to make a few comments on Bill 34. It's nothing we haven't heard before in the last few minutes, but I think they bear repeating. There are some very serious concerns with this bill.

3:40

I think a lot of these bills are sort of disguised as being innocuous. There's not much to them. It's called the Insurance Amendment Act, but inside these things are little tiny nuggets, little time bombs, that we have to be very careful that we watch for.

An Hon. Member: This is an atom bomb.

Mr. Tougas: An atom bomb.

We have to keep an eye out for these things because they're very serious. They have long-term implications even if it's just one or two lines in a document in this form.

First of all, regarding bringing public insurers into the province.

If this works to bring down insurance rates in this province, that's tremendous. We're all in favour of it. I don't think it will because there's nothing to indicate that public insurers will come into Alberta. It just doesn't seem that they have any great interest in it. Even though we have this province that is the wealthiest in Canada and people are driving around in brand new pickup trucks left, right, and centre, these guys are not going to show any great interest in coming into Alberta. And why is that? It's because they're playing by different rules.

You can say insurance is insurance, but it isn't really if they're playing by essentially different rules. I think you can equate it to a Canadian Football League team and a National Football League team. They're playing football, but they play by different rules, and you can't put them on the same field because the rules are different. It just doesn't work. Just for the record, by the way, private insurance is the NFL because it's bigger, stronger, hugely profitable. Public insurance is the CFL because it's user-friendly. It's like a community-owned team like the Saskatchewan Roughriders or something. So, I just thought I'd throw that in there for any football . . .

An Hon. Member: The Saskatchewan Roughriders?

Mr. Tougas: Well, that's a community-owned team. That's the big difference. The Eskimos are too profitable to put into that listing. [interjections] I'm not. I'm just throwing that in there for some reaction here. I just wanted to see if you guys are awake or not.

An Hon. Member: You got the reaction.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you. Any Eskimos stockholders in here? No? Okay.

On to other items, though. It would be great, as I said, if they do come in and bring their expertise. That would be wonderful. I question whether it's going to be anything more than window dressing and an attempt to sort of paper over some of the flaws in the insurance legislation.

Another matter of some concern is section 8. This hasn't been mentioned yet. Section 8 strengthens the Crown's authority by allowing it to impose terms or conditions on licences at any time it considers appropriate. Up until now, prior to this amendment, the Crown could only make such decisions at the time of issuing or renewing a licence. So what does this mean for consumers? I mean, if I can continue with the football analogy, is the government going to be allowed to change rules in mid-game? What does it mean for consumers? What does it mean for the insurance companies?

I would like the government to perhaps provide an example of where the Crown would change a licence at its whim and why? So it seems to be just another little piece of legislation that if they feel like it – nobody seems to really know why – they'll throw it in. A little bit worrisome as well for the insurance companies.

The big problem in this bill, though, as has already been mentioned, is section 5. This business of liability. It's amazing to me that the full weight of the provincial government, this Legislature, would be brought to bear to quash one lawsuit, and that's essentially what we have here. It's even mentioned by number if not by name. We're being asked to approve a piece of legislation that overturns a company's right to sue the government in an active lawsuit that's happening right now. This is an incredibly ham-fisted piece of legislation.

Now clearly it's intended as a way to quash a lawsuit launched by one company in one specific suit, but surely it's up to the courts to decide if this lawsuit has any merit whatsoever. I can't see any particular reason why the government of Alberta should be injecting itself into this one specific case.

It also gives the government a surprising amount of immunity from lawsuits. I don't know why the government should have that right. If the government makes mistakes, if the government fouls up, well, they should be held accountable in court just the way anybody else is.

This is a very disturbing piece of legislation in many ways, and I certainly hope that the government will give some serious consideration to eliminating at least parts of this section from the bill because it is very, very disturbing for the long term. It's not just an insurance matter. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford said, it could be applied to perhaps other lawsuits. I hope that we don't get to the point where the government decides that they can start tabling legislation to wipe out any sort of suit that they just find irritating or vexatious or anything along those lines.

Mr. R. Miller: They've done it before.

Mr. Tougas: Yes, they have done it before.

This is a very serious piece of legislation here sort of hidden away into an innocuous insurance bill that does have some long-term implications. It's very serious. I certainly hope the government will give it some serious thought and decide that maybe this is not the way to go because it is not something that, I believe, the government should be getting involved in at this time or at any time, for that matter. The courts have a role to play, and I don't think the government should be interfering in that role in this fashion.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) kicks in. Any questions or comments?

If not, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Further comments on Bill 34. As I see more bills going forward where this government is actually legislating itself out of any responsibility for its own action, I always wonder about people or institutions that hide behind laws that only pertain to themselves and that the people who this government is responsible to and for appear to be totally irrelevant to the process.

In section 8 there is mention, it would appear, that midstream, so to speak, insurance contracts would be changed at any time that the Crown considers it appropriate. I believe that insurance contracts are already obtuse enough as to what's really covered, and the poor consumer only finds out what they didn't understand when they have to file a claim, and often it's too late. I would like to ask the Member for Peace River partly for my own clarification just what would be an example of what would change a licence in midstream of a contract that someone feels is set for that particular time frame that's been signed for and if he really believes that that sort of behaviour is fair.

The government seems to want all the power to make the rules but without the responsibility. I'm suggesting that perhaps they might like to grab a little backbone and actually run this industry themselves; i.e., public auto insurance as it has been proven to be successful in so many other jurisdictions.

I just would like to again refer to the hon. Member for Peace River. During the second reading on Bill 34 he said – it was on page 476 – that “the legislation before us for second reading also outlines that insurance companies are not entitled to compensation for lost revenue resulting from the government's auto insurance reform amendments. When the reforms were being developed, the government clearly stated that any costs associated with the new system would be covered by the insurance industry. This amendment confirms that.” What I’d like to know is: is that statement correct, and will the government cite chapter and verse, a copy of the speech, press release, whatever, where the government has actually said that the costs associated with the new system would be covered by the insurance industry?

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Anybody else wish to participate in the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s an honour and a privilege to get to rise this afternoon and discuss the Insurance Amendment Act, 2005, Bill 34.

Certainly we haven’t had much time to digest the most recent attempt by this government to reform the auto insurance industry in this province. Whenever there’s this short period of time, Mr. Speaker, one has to conclude that the previous insurance reforms were inadequate, done in haste, and not in the interests of consumers and, certainly in light of what has been discussed here, not considerate of the bottom line of consumers.

Now, we are allowing public auto insurance providers into the province with Bill 34, we are giving the province legal immunity from being sued by insurance companies and Albertans that had suffered at the expense of the government’s insurance reforms, and again we’re going to have a shifting of responsibility to regulations. I was left with the impression during the auto insurance reforms that we were going to have a more open, transparent process, but that, Mr. Speaker, doesn’t look to be the case. Certainly, I was surprised.

It was discussed in this Legislative Assembly during question period whenever Kingsway insurance contemplated and then filed a legal action against this very government over the previous insurance reforms. Then in this act we have the government inoculating themselves from that action and further action. Now, regardless of what we think of the insurance industry and their high profits these days, usually they stand behind their product. In that way they’re a lot different from this government because this government is now not standing behind its legislation.

I wonder how many other court actions may have been pending or there may be as a result of the reforms to the insurance industry that Bill 34 is going to stop if we pass it into law. Not only is Kingsway insurance a victim here, but there may be other victims of this Insurance Amendment Act that we are yet to be aware of.

Now, I think we have to be very, very concerned about the government’s direction here. I don’t think this is a confident government. I don’t think this is a government that has put enough into the insurance file. We had a long, serious debate, yet here we are with further amendments. That does not give this member confidence in the insurance reforms.

I got a cheque for $12, $1 for each month of the year, as a result of these insurance premiums. Many Albertans saw these insurance rates for their auto skyrocket, and then we get these measly cheques. In fact, I’m not going to cash my cheque. I think I’m going to frame it and put it up on the wall.

Mrs. McClellan: That’s a good idea. Would you write us a letter telling us that so you can get it off your chest?

Mr. MacDonald: Perhaps the hon. minister could visit the constituency office in Edmonton-Gold Bar after I get it framed, and I can show her because I’m going to show this to the constituents who come in and say: this is the result of the province’s auto insurance reforms.

We talk about this freeze as: zap; you’re frozen. Yet we all know that the auto insurance freeze, the premium freeze, was just a political tease to get this government through the election period, Mr. Speaker. Meanwhile, the election is not over for six months; we’re back here with a series of amendments.

Now, public auto insurance is certainly the way to go. The majority of consumers are going to see direct substantial savings. We talked earlier, before the spring break, about the city of Lloydminster and what should be done there to make it easier for the administration of that municipality that straddles the border. Everyone knows that the citizens of Lloydminster have considerably less insurance costs for their automobiles than the people in Alberta. It’s public auto insurance. British Columbia, of course, has a system of public auto insurance. It works rather well, and British Columbia reinvests . . .

Mr. Dunford: No, it doesn’t.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, it certainly does, and not only that, it operates at a profit.

Mr. Dunford: I’ll get my son to write you a letter.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I’d be delighted to hear from him.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, through the chair, please.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to just check out the Consumers’ Association of Canada’s website and compare rates for insurance: various age groups, various districts, and also various automobiles. Not everybody has the luxury of going to the government car pool and getting a fancy luxury car. A lot of people can’t afford that, so they have more modest vehicles. A lot of people don’t have the risk management fund paying for their auto insurance either, you know. I would urge all members to have a look at the Consumers’ Association of Canada’s website and comparatively shop between various cities in British Columbia, Alberta, Manitoba, and also Saskatchewan and see who’s getting the real deal on savings for their auto insurance because it’s significantly cheaper in those places regardless of which form of public auto insurance is implemented.

Now, the public insurers have said that they’re not interested in coming into this province with this sort of arrangement. I can’t understand why this government is so opposed to public auto insurance when we have crop insurance. Crop insurance is certainly subsidized by the taxpayers. There’s no way around this. ICBC has a program of auto insurance that is not subsidized by the taxpayers; the same in Saskatchewan and the same in Manitoba. So if it’s good enough for crop insurance, perhaps it’s good enough for auto insurance.

Also, the co-operative spirit is alive and well in rural Alberta, Mr. Speaker, with gas co-ops, with electricity REAs. That service, that product, if you want to call it such, is delivered on a not-for-profit basis, on a cost-recovery basis only. So why could we not deliver auto insurance in that same manner to the consumers in this province? I don’t understand the reluctance.

What’s going to happen here: the citizens are going to see that Bill 34, Mr. Speaker, this Insurance Amendment Act, is not going to change anything other than restrict and limit companies' ability to go after the government for their mistakes. That's all that's going to happen here, and they're going to finally tweak that perhaps we should implement public auto insurance. In fact, I've been reading some of the auto insurance trade manuals, and it has been suggested in there that if this series of reforms doesn't work in a year or two, then the Progressive Conservative government of Alberta is going to have to have a serious look at public auto insurance.

Now, we are also with the bill here – in the time that I have left, Mr. Speaker – going to make some changes to provide the Minister of Finance the authority to place terms and conditions on the licence of insurers at any given time. Perhaps the Minister of Finance can explain this, but what difference is that going to make to the Automobile Insurance Rate Board?

I'm looking forward to the annual report, and I'm astonished. It may have been tabled here, and a guy missed it, but I'm always anxious to get my hands on that report and read it because I find it quite interesting. I think it's been a while since we've seen that annual report or the latest version of it. In fact, we may be two years in arrears. I could stand corrected on this, Mr. Speaker, but there are a couple of annual reports on the auto insurance industry that are under the authority of the Minister of Finance, and I'm most anxious to see the latest version of those. Usually they're tabled in May. I realize that it's not quite May, but in light of the high cost of insurance and in light of the fact that many of the bigger operators in the auto insurance market in Alberta have made significant profits, table those reports.

I don't know how this rate board is exactly working. I hope it's working more effectively than it has in the past. I had suggested some changes to it. One of the changes was implemented, but I think we still need more consumer representation on that rate board. I would like to know how often it is now meeting, how long the meetings last, how many rate applications are denied, how many rate applications are approved, and how much time is spent on each application.

Now, I thought at one time, Mr. Speaker – and I don't see this in the bill, and it would be great if it was there – that whenever a rate application is made, there would be an advertisement on a website. You know, the website might even read: notthecheapestinsuranceinwesternCanadaBut.com. This website could alert consumers to the rate increase applications and which respective auto insurance company is applying. And if a consumer or a consumer representative wished to go – maybe the Consumers' Association of Canada would send a person – if they knew the time and the date and the location of the meeting, they could go, and we could have some public scrutiny of this whole process because it's still, as far as I understand it, a mystery, Mr. Speaker, how all this operates with the rate board. There have to be significant rate increases here in this province because the profits have just been up and up and up. Consumers are still not satisfied. They're still not convinced that this is going to work.

We're having this amendment to the Insurance Act, but I don't see any end to the discrimination against Edmonton drivers in here, Mr. Speaker, and that disappoints me. Edmonton drivers are no better or no worse than drivers in any other parts of the province, but we have this system of districts. For instance, Airdrie, Cochrane, and surrounding communities are not included in the city of Calgary district to set auto insurance rates, but in Edmonton we have Sherwood Park and we have St. Albert included in the area. The hon. Minister of Government Services shrugs, but if you were to work, say, in the city of Calgary, in the central district, you'd have less time to commute, less distance than you do from Sherwood Park to the city of Edmonton.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

Anybody else wish to participate in the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I would like to move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 15

Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate April 5: Mr. Stevens]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you. I rise as critic for the Official Opposition on this bill. I don't know if I'm out of order, but I must compliment you, Mr. Speaker, on your fine tartan tie on this Tartan Day.

I look at this Bill 15, and I see a number of causes for great concern. It is not simply a housekeeping bill. There are a number of factors, however, that do appear to be housekeeping. You know, the measures for the protection of board rights, of course, are in there. It appears that the cost-of-living increase is certainly something of merit and should be dealt with, but there have been a huge number of concerns brought forward to me from a number of different sectors both in the business community and in the labour community.

A number of questions arise that I would certainly like to see answered in Committee of the Whole. Which stakeholders were actually consulted in the drafting of these amendments, if any? I really haven't seen that. Who endorsed these amendments other than the WC Board itself? In what ways does the government believe these amendments will change current practices? How do these amendments help workers who are injured by third parties gain timely compensation? How will these amendments affect long-standing contentious WCB claims?

A number of specific questions arise. One is, you know, because one of the sections deals with the 25 per cent rule on third-party claims. Where did that come from? Why does the WCB only give 25 per cent? What's the justification for that? If an award in an insurance claim is $400,000, the worker can only get $100,000 if that, in fact, was coming out the way they would subrogate it. Some of the questions deal with the surpluses coming from some of these insurance awards. Do they actually accrue to the worker if the WCB award amount or the amounts costing from it are of a lesser amount?

A number of businesses and, you know, members of chambers of commerce and certainly municipalities have not really known that this was coming down. Some of the members of the construction owners, some of the members of the Construction Association, aboriginal employers organizations: many of them have not seen this. There has not been proper consultation. For many of them there is great concern that there are some issues that could affect them directly.

The funding of the Appeals Commission. The Appeals Commission is looked at in this particular bill. Why is it actually funded by the WCB? Through that, in fact, is a charge to employers. Is this not a problem for what's supposed to be an independent body? In fact, why does this not come from general revenues or some other source in the department?

Also, in some senses can the third-party actions actually increase the costs to employers because of the fact that the lawyers are funded indeed by the WCB itself? And will employers get a rebate if a WC award is reduced, if some years down the road the worker's actual award is reduced and, in fact, his award was taken from an insurance claim in the courts?

One of the other groups that really raised some concerns was the Alberta Federation of Labour, which is usually consulted in these matters and was not in this case. Some questions that they have brought forward are: how does Bill 15 change the current practice? Where is the worker's role in this? In other words, does the WCB co-operate with the claimant in third-party actions, or does the board simply act unilaterally? Why were stakeholders not consulted? Why is the bill being brought up and pushed through the House so quickly? Could the bill be left on the Order Paper until fall in order to give stakeholders time to assess the changes? I think there are some very real and valid questions in that group of questions.

One of the things that very much – very much – has put exclamation points behind the desire to have this looked at maybe more thoroughly and perhaps over a longer time is the recent decision by the Hon. Madam Justice Moen in the Ana Gutierrez case, handed down just two weeks ago, which in fact gave punitive damages to the solicitor for Ms Gutierrez in that the WCB was in a conflict of interest and that the WCB was wrong. This type of 100 per cent payment of solicitor/client rates in that particular case is almost unheard of, and it raises great cause for concern.

As well, the bill has serious ramifications for thousands of Alberta workers. It expropriates retroactively the property rights of these workers. While every other Albertan has recourse to the courts with independent counsel when their lives have been damaged or ruined by careless or drunk drivers, Alberta workers are inexplicably singled out for heavy-handed paternalism by the board. By retroactively expropriating the rights of workers, these workers not only lose control over the recourse which they have in the courts, but they also lose the right to the assistance of independent legal counsel.

This is not only of academic interest. The board, as it was in Ms Gutierrez's case, may well be in a fundamental conflict of interest between its previous claim decisions and the worker's interest in that tort claim. The board attempts to solve this problem by legislating conflict of interest and any duty of care it may have to the worker out of existence by the use of this bill, Bill 15. The board has never had such power.

The Gutierrez decision has affirmed this. When board counsel argued this matter before the Court of Appeal, they were unable to articulate any public policy considerations that might support such broad powers. The board furthermore acknowledged that its demand to be the client rather than the worker is, quote, unnecessary to protect its interest in any litigation undertaken by the worker, unquote.

If the board has never had such power and cannot justify to the highest court in Alberta why it should have it and concedes that it does not need the power, then why does the board come to the Legislature for such power instead of cleaning up its administration of section 22 claims as the court has directed? If the board acquires the power that it seeks under Bill 15, it will have succeeded in creating the most draconian and most repressive system of its kind in Canada.

There are other Canadian jurisdictions where the Board does indeed have vesting power. Madam Justice Moen in her meticulously researched decision pointed out at page 64:

These cases are all distinguishable because they involve a different statutory structure in which the worker elects to either sue in tort or to seek compensation under the workers compensation system. None of these jurisdictions have a legislative provision comparable to s. 22, giving the worker the right to take an action, subject to the Board's consent and terms.

In my opinion, this unique feature of the Alberta legislation is significant, and indicates a different legislative intention within the subsection governing subrogation. However, the overall legislative intent in both Alberta and the other "election-type" jurisdictions is similar. Under either approach the legislation provides a worker with the ability to bring an action herself.

With Bill 15 the board wants vesting power without giving the worker the right to elect under which scheme he wishes to seek compensation, WCB or tort law. No other Canadian jurisdiction has seen fit to give their boards this kind of power. The reason for this is that neither rationale nor public policy can justify it. There are many, many considerations, and many people have raised that over the whole Gutierrez decision and some of the costs and unfairness that it could incur to workers and to employers.

A number of other seemingly innocuous areas seem to come to the fore as one looks through the bill even though some are, of course, of a housekeeping nature. The nature of the annual general meeting, 7.1, is generally a new and a positive step, but under subsection (4) it can discuss "any matters raised in relation to the reports by those present at the meeting." It doesn't really speak to public input. It doesn't speak to: will time be allotted in the agenda for questions from the public? What is the purpose of this meeting if there is no input from the public? Are stakeholders allowed to raise issues of importance to the board? Does the board require notification of such issues? In general, there's no clarification as to the purpose of the annual general meeting in public other than to allow the board to be heard on issues it desires and report it to the public via the open annual general meeting.

Some of the issues in 24(1), the firefighters legislation: badly needed, but the eligibility for compensation under this section is left to the board under the general guidelines and includes Métis firefighters.

You know, the government under section 24(4) is given the task of determining the regulations under which firefighters receive benefits after receiving a report from the WCB on the issue of determination of an occupational disease. There are many other problems that relate to firefighters such as loss of taste, smell, and other indirect problems that have arisen from job-related issues. These need further clarification. The WCB should be given direct responsibility to determine the compensable circumstances that would be acceptable under this section. Any report brought through under this section – and this bill should clarify that – should see what detail these benefits would have under this section.

Time limits, of course, are always a concern to many injured workers. You know, some of the 53,000 outstanding long-term, contentious claims that are out there are a problem of, indeed, people not knowing the time limits or being able to deal with them correctly.

Sections 46(1) and 46.1(1) refer to the establishment of a new review body as opposed to the previously existing Claims Services Review Committee. The board is paying the costs of the Appeals Commission from the accident fund of the WCB. Where, again, is the arm's-length process here? How is this totally separate from the board? Does the piper play the tune when an appeal is supposed to be seen to be independent?

Again to the annual general meeting, 13(1), 13(3), and 13.5 speak to: the Appeals Commission must hold an AGM open to the public. The board itself is bound by the Appeals Commission decisions.

Consensual resolution is privileged. The latest AGM of the Appeals Commission was held on a Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock and was published in a small column on the back pages of a newspaper. Questions were allowed from the floor, and the answers from the board of directors were not published or reported. In addition, copies of the annual general meeting with all of the questions and answers were not made available to the public. There must be an accounting to the public. Indeed, no MLAs or their staff were present at the annual general meeting.

The time frames for implementations of the Appeals Commission decisions are generally well adhered to within 30 days. However, the board does not report back to the Appeals Commission to ensure the completion of the implementation. Sometimes all aspects of the Appeals Commission decisions are not completed, and the claimant is unaware of any deficiencies. Follow-through must be noted by the WCB and Appeals Commission. Currently, no follow-up is done.

4:20

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, the allotted time has run out. Standing Order 29(2)(a), any questions or comments? Hon. Member for St. Albert, are you rising on a question?

Mr. Flaherty: Yes, I am.

The Acting Speaker: Yes. Go ahead.

Mr. Flaherty: I would just like to ask the hon. member – and I'm sorry about my lack of knowledge. You referred to the board. How are appointments made to the board, and are workers involved in setting policy of the board? Could you clarify that for me?

Mr. Backs: That's something, I think, that should be raised and are good questions for Committee of the Whole. It speaks to some questions as to the AGM.

You know, the AGM really doesn't look to these matters. I think the review body, which I mentioned, should look at that. The new review body that's in this act is simply a method of ensuring, really, quality assurance in a weak form of dispute resolution without the presence of an apparent arm's-length appeal. The new review body is being used to attempt to demonstrate that a review mechanism is in place. However, the actual mechanism of review and/or dispute resolution is not . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, this section is for brief questions and comments.

Does anybody else have any questions? Hon. Member for St. Albert, did you have another question?

Mr. Flaherty: No. I was going to speak to the bill.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. If there is nobody else, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your allowing me to speak. Let me just comment, if I may, about the staff of the WCB. I had the pleasure of doing an evaluation of the employee assistance program of the WCB with several colleagues at the university, and I want to go on record as being very positive about these people and the good work that they do. Many times I think they're dealing with very difficult situations, and we don't give them the support and the accolades that I think they deserve. I'm thinking in particular of one of my constituents from St. Albert when I say that.

Let me then comment on 7.1 of the bill, which refers to public input into the matter of when the board meets, to the agenda. I think there it says: are stakeholders allowed to raise issues of importance to the board? Does the board require notifications of such issues? In general, there's no clarification of the purpose of the AGM in public other than to allow the board to be heard on issues it desires to report to the public via the open AGM. So I think there we're talking about public involvement.

We look at sections 12(1), 12(2), and 12(3). These sections are supposed to take responsibility of the Appeals Commission away from the WCB and transfer it to the minister. Under this administration 12(1) and 12(2) allow the Appeals Commission to appoint officers. The costs of carrying on the operations of the Appeals Commission are paid by the minister. However, the sentence in 12(3) states, "Be reimbursed quarterly to the Crown by the Board from the Accident Fund."

I think one of the things that concerns me, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that there is an arm's-length question of the minister's dollars being interpreted the wrong way. So I think there's a need there for some arm's-length funding, if you will. This would mean that the government through general revenues would cover the costs of the Appeals Commission to ensure that there is a clear separation. Therefore, that could, I think, be looked at.

If we look at 13(1) and 13.3 and 13.5, the Appeals Commission must hold an AGM open to the public. The board is bound by the AC decisions, and this is significant. Again, it's important, I think, that the public and the stakeholders get access and that the workers be represented.

I think that in sections 19 and 20 the board has been given wide powers of investigation, and "employer" is under section 18. I think the above two sections are good. The employer, to give this information further under section 20, now has the power under the Public Inquiries Act to complete the investigation. I think those are good moves.

Of course, my colleague mentioned the business of the firefighters. I think that's a good change and one of the things that caught my attention. The time limit of three years to report these injuries from the time of the legislation is a good move.

Section 46 to 46.1 talks about the new review body as simply a method of ensuring a quality assurance and a weak form of dispute resolution without the presence of the apparent arm's-length appeal. The new review body is being used to attempt to demonstrate that a review mechanism is in place. However, the actual mechanism of review and dispute resolution is not decreasing the number of appeals that are going to the Appeals Commission. In fact, the number of appeals has increased.

The review body is a watered-down appealed review that the case managers use as a vehicle to discourage further appeals. It is not functioning, it says here, as it was originally intended. The WCB believes that the decision review body is an effective tool to allow claimants to proceed to the Appeals Commission much faster. While that may be true, the actual review mechanism is faulty at best.

Let me just close here, Mr. Speaker, and mention one other section: 157.1. This section was to deal with the contentious issues of all claims and should be examined for what it does not say about the mechanism to handle this outstanding issue. The general impression of 157.1(2) is that this is woefully inadequate to address the issues that have arisen from many claimants. It states that "the Lieutenant Governor . . . may make regulations."

The rest of the section explains why the government will not fully address these potential claimants' issues in a manner that will solve the problem and not attempt to avoid them. This section should be deleted and totally rewritten to enforce the obligation that the WCB has to deal with these claims in the form of a proper assessment, a plan of action, and a determination of entitlement and solution that is equitable.

Those are just some of my comments, Mr. Speaker, so I'll just sit down. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a), any questions or comments?

There being none, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. This is a really important bill. When an individual is injured, it is a cost in many ways: to the injured, of course, the families, employers, health care, insurance companies, et cetera. In my own case, I was in a car accident after the unsatisfied judgment fund was removed by the provincial government. The individual who caused my accident was an assigned risk driver who could not get insurance and who did not have assets. The small settlement I received went to lawyers' fees and then Alberta Health to pay for my six months' hospitalization.

Something like WCB would have been a valued backup. I did not receive compensation coverage in my situation. However, I recognize the importance of WCB as one of the pillars of our safety net along with health care insurance and pensions that are needed in a compassionate society. It is important that we guard this pillar so that it can be all that we intend for Alberta workers.

I have some questions because I want to make sure that the rights of injured workers are protected. I need to understand the reasoning behind the proposed changes to the current legislation. For example, subsection (7) states that if an injured worker obtains a lawyer for a personal injury lawsuit that somehow involves the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act, the board will not pay any legal fees for that lawyer. It's unclear whether this subsection is actually a change in policy or whether it's simply clarifying an existing policy. If it's a change in policy, this could be controversial, and we need explanation. So I'm asking: is this the current practice or not?

Under subsection 11(d) the board can regulate the fees charged by private lawyers. Is this common practice? What are the typical fees for private lawyers? In what way does the board regulate those fees? How often does the board retain private legal counsel and under what circumstances? If the fees charged by private lawyers are more than the board regulations, who picks up the difference? Is it the injured worker, or is it the employer?

Then section 6 repeals section 31 of the act respecting a worker's right of action outside Alberta. Why is this being repealed? How is it going to affect the rights of workers who are actually injured in another province or country?

I am happy to see section 7, that says that the board will apply cost-of-living adjustment increases on extended temporary partial disability. This is a reasonable and necessary amendment in my view.

As we're going along, I don't want to repeat some of the concerns expressed by my colleagues. I wonder about the fact that workers or employers cannot opt out of the legislative requirements in terms of the third-party actions. That needs some explanation to satisfy my concerns.

This bill has serious ramifications for thousands of Alberta workers. It expropriates retroactively the property rights of these workers. While every other Albertan has recourse to the courts with independent counsel when their lives have been damaged or ruined by careless or drunk drivers, Alberta workers are inexplicably singled out for heavy-handed paternalism by the board. By retroactively expropriating the rights of workers, these workers not only lose control over the only recourse which they have to the courts; they also lose their rights to the assistance of independent legal counsel. This is a concern to me.

I note that the board has acknowledged that its demand to be the client rather than the worker is unnecessary to protect its interest in any litigation undertaken by the worker. If the board has never had such power and cannot justify to the highest court in Alberta why it should have that power and concedes that it does not need the power, then why does the board come to the Legislature for such power instead of cleaning up its administration of section 22 claims as the court has directed?

With Bill 15 the board wants vesting power without giving the worker the right to elect under which scheme he wishes to seek compensation: WCB or tort. No other Canadian jurisdiction has seen fit to give their boards this kind of power. The reason for this, I believe, is that there is neither rationale nor public policy that can justify it.

This bill requires detailed study. It requires a lot of input from a lot of people whose rights are going to be damaged by these amendments. It requires convincing justification for these amendments, and ultimately any changes to section 22 should be carefully designed with full consideration of their overall repercussions. This bill reduces the accountability of the WCB and provides for it to act in its own interests and not the interests of the workers of Alberta. The government has failed to consult with stakeholders and interested groups that would be directly affected by Bill 15. The government has furthermore not allowed sufficient time for proper public scrutiny.

This bill will provide legislative sanction to the board to make decisions for the injured worker that include who and what to sue for and what settlement is acceptable without regard for the worker and their interests. Payment of compensation to the worker will be under the complete control of the WCB. Payments will only be made after the board has recovered its costs and legal fees have been recovered.

I go back to my opening statements about the importance of the WCB as one of the pillars of our safety net for Albertans just like health care insurance and pensions. These are needed in a compassionate society. I cannot support the suggested amendments to this bill because I do not believe it demonstrates that compassion.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: I might be out of order on this, but a quick comment to the mover of the bill. First, just a thanks for some of the consultation, answering of the questions. Secondly, I commend you on your tartan tie. That's for the Member for Calgary-Foothills on this Tartan Day.

Just a question to the previous speaker: do you think that the bill and the sections in it really in any way deal with the long-standing contentious claims issue?

Mrs. Mather: I'm sorry. I need you to repeat it.

Mr. Backs: Do the provisions in this Bill 15 deal in any real way with the long-standing contentious claims issue, and will it move to reduce that backlog of 53,000 cases in any way?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. I can't answer that. I don't see that it will help. I need more information.

The Acting Speaker: Any other questions?

There being none, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am rising to make comments on Bill 15 here today again with a rather heavy heart because, you know, since I've started this new position as MLA for Edmonton-Calder, it's come to my attention that amongst all of the various jurisdictions that this government has in this province, the WCB, the Workers' Compensation Board, is specifically one of the least functional and most problematic arms of the provincial government. The growing, mounting, evidence that the WCB is in fact causing more difficulties than benefits to the workers of Alberta is becoming more apparent every day.

So when I saw that we had a bill coming up to amend the Workers' Compensation Act, I was hopeful that we might see some clearing of the air in regard to the Workers' Compensation Board, but instead what I see here is further muddying the way by which we deal with our injured workers in this province. In fact, it seems as though we're moving the injured workers into some special category which is outside the law in a way. Where most regular Albertans might have the ability to go through a judicial process or a civil process, we have some extrajudicial creation here, which hardly seems democratic and will simply add to the pain and suffering that so many people are subjected to when they have to face a WCB claim.

At the heart of this matter I believe is that, you know, this bill has been brought through without consultation with any of the parties that might have some significant contribution to make it a better bill or to add to the bill in some way. As New Democrats we have consulted and been consulted very strenuously on Bill 15, and almost every worker group and law firm and building council and unions are all in firm agreement, yelling loudly and clearly that this Bill 15 must not go forward.

You know, at the very least, besides what they're actually telling us, Mr. Speaker, I think that the due process of a responsible government is to consult these various groups before you bring in legislation. If you're not making that consultation, then it's only exacerbating the conflicts that might ensue from provisions in this bill that are not in the workers' best interest, and at the end of the day we'll simply have to go back and revisit these at a later date, you know, trying to undo the damage that might be done. So my very first and most strenuous point is that consultation has not been carried out in a reasonable way before this Bill 15 has come forward to this House, and for that reason alone we cannot as New Democrats support any aspect of it.

Now, there are a number of specific concerns that we have with Bill 15, and again these are things that have been brought forward by various stakeholder groups. I think that the heart of the most ridiculous, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, aspect of this bill is that it retroactively expropriates the rights of workers to retain counsel and control their own injury claims by so-called vesting all existing and future actions in the boards. This vesting will indeed give the board ownership of the injury claim of the workers against the nonworkers.

Now, you know, this sort of goes against a very basic principle of law where you're entitled to be in control of your own file and look for resolution of that file. By putting it now into the hands of the WCB, which we're required to do, by the way, Mr. Speaker, then we're simply left with no recourse whatsoever, and a whole section of our population is cut out from the due process of the court of law.

This idea of tying full co-operation to entitlement in section 10 of this bill is described as draconian at best. If that is not enough, the WCB has enabled themselves to declare past compensation to be a debt owing that is collectable by the board. What is there in the current legislation that has been a problem for them to suddenly need this collection, I would hasten to ask, and certainly I think it would be difficult to find a reasonable answer.

Also, the question of conflict of interest in Bill 15 is another point of contention. No matter how much conflict of interest there might be between a board decision on a claim and a worker's actual injury and losses, the concept of conflict of interest here has simply been erased – right? – annihilated and taken away from the due process that should be existing in the Workers' Compensation Board. So, again, I find this very difficult to believe, and in fact it gives this whole bill the feeling of some sort of unreality or, you know, as I said before, creating an alternate system, a parallel system for citizens as if we're not all equal under the law here in the province of Alberta.

You know, when you come across bills like this, one can only hope that the best thing for it is to go back and make a proper consultation process with all of the parties that have a vested interest in the Workers' Compensation Board in this province, Mr. Speaker, and that is, at the end of the day, the majority of the working population of this province. They are well represented, as I say, by workers' groups and associations and unions and legal associations. So I think that the most logical and the most reasonable thing to do is to go back and make consultation before this bill goes forward through second reading.

So in keeping with that, I would like to make notice of a reasoned amendment to Bill 15, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2005, and I'm doing this for the benefit of Mr. Martin, our labour critic. He is moving that the motion for second reading of Bill 15 be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 15, Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2005, be not now read a second time because full consultation with appropriate stakeholders has not taken place."

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, we need to have the amendment circulated, so we'll just give the pages a minute or two to distribute them. Thanks.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, you may proceed now.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. As I'm just circulating the reasoned amendment then, you can see that what we're asking for – and I don't think it's unreasonable – is that we go through a proper consultation process with the various groups that could give us the most clever and reasonable vision of how the Workers' Compensation Board might be able to function.

Please understand, Mr. Speaker, that my comments in regard to the Workers' Compensation Board as an entity certainly do not suggest that we do not need this institution in our province. Quite on the contrary. It's a very fundamental part of an insurance policy that we provide to workers in this province and an assurance to firms who are employing people that they will not lose everything in the event of an accident through their workers.

The potential for the Workers' Compensation Board is enormous, and I believe that the ability they have to educate and to reduce accidents in the workplace is enormous. I believe that the peace of mind and reasonable compensation that they can provide in the event of injury is absolutely necessary in a just, humane society and that businesses deserve to have some collective agreement both to protect themselves and to offer safeguards against injury claims for themselves as well. What we do see here in 2005 with the present system and with this bill, no help at all, is a system that is in terrible need of fixing. I see little or nothing in Bill 15 that might fit that bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This amendment I think should be considered thoughtfully by all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly. I listened with interest to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview the other evening in discussing Bill 15 at second reading and was startled to hear from that hon. member that there had been less than a full consultation process.

In regard to Bill 15, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2005, certainly I was surprised to learn that the Alberta Federation of Labour and other labour groups were not aware of the intention to introduce these amendments. Mr. Speaker, I would think it would be respectful and courteous of all hon. Members of this Assembly to hear exactly what those groups have to say, not only in regard to what's in this legislation but also as to what's not in this legislation and perhaps what should be in this legislation. If we had a consultation process with the appropriate stakeholders, then we could proceed with debate on Bill 15, but as far as I know and understand, that has not occurred.

Now, I heard that there was some sort of fancy meeting at the Royal Glenora Club with the WCB and government members tonight. I'm not on duty tonight, Mr. Speaker, so I don't know what will be the results, but I've heard that. If you're going to have a consultation with the board of directors of the WCB and all the movers and shakers of the WCB, then perhaps we should set aside some time, even if it's not at the Royal Glenora Club – maybe you could go to Tim Hortons – and discuss the implications of the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act with some of the respective groups that will not be at the country club. A great number of Albertans don't grace the doors of the country club. In light of that, we could perhaps consider the reasoned amendment provided to us this afternoon by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Another reason, another good reason, why we should consider this amendment is that during the last election it was advocated by the Official Opposition, the Alberta Liberal Party, that there be a full independent public inquiry into all aspects of the Workers' Compensation Board. We have been asking for nine years, Mr. Speaker, for a full independent public inquiry into the Workers' Compensation Board.

Now, a little meeting down at the Royal Glenora Club doesn't cut it. That's not a full independent public inquiry in my view, and certainly when you talk to the workers in Alberta, it wouldn't be their view either. The WCB has made some steps in being more accessible to the public – that's true, Mr. Speaker – with their annual general meeting, which is usually held in Edmonton or in Calgary. I suspect that at some time they will perhaps go to Grande Prairie or to Lethbridge, maybe to Medicine Hat, who's to say, to have their annual general meeting. Those meetings are public, and that is a step in the right direction, and I think we should commend the WCB for that.

In light of so many complaints that not only hon. members get but the Ombudsman – there are respective legislative offices, Mr. Speaker, that get complaints from workers who simply have fallen through the cracks. Not all of these complaints are frivolous. Some of these injured workers have been frustrated repeatedly by the entire process. I know that we tried to fix the process. I know that we've had some consultation processes in the past. The hon. Member for Red Deer-South was involved in one. Certainly, a retired justice, Samuel Friedman, was involved in another. There have been various consultation processes, but there has never been a full independent public inquiry into how the Workers' Compensation Board in this province is functioning and how we could improve it.

So we're looking at this Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2005, and we're looking at this reasoned amendment, and I think it would be very worth while if we were to support this amendment and have some real sound public consultation. We could implement a full independent public inquiry. It could report to the Legislative Assembly. It could go to various towns and cities across the province, including Rocky Mountain House. There are a lot of workers in Rocky Mountain House that are phoning our constituency offices. They're frustrated. There's no doubt about that. They feel left out of this whole process. They feel that it's not fair. The public inquiry could make a stop there. Yeah. We could have a restoration of confidence in our entire workers' compensation system.

For those two reasons, Mr. Speaker, I would urge all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly to support the amendment as it has been presented by the Member for Edmonton-Calder. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In speaking earlier to the bill, I indicated that I didn't think through my communications that there had been proper consultation with many different groups, including many businesses in the province, many municipalities, cities as well, and certainly business groups. It's quite remarkable that there's been such a low level of consultation on this particular bill. I think that there is real reason to support this and to put it out into a wider consultative process in the province so that, indeed, we can come up with better legislation. I believe that is incumbent on us to be responsible in such a manner to do so.

I had proposed, you know, and notified the mover that I would be looking to amendments in committee. This would, in fact, preclude that if passed. I didn't know that we could move amendments on second reading, to be truthful, but it's an interesting amendment that I believe is worthy of support. Without amendments, if it were to go to committee, the Official Opposition could not support this bill. I ask that members look that we give people a second chance to see this and that we have the Legislature look at a better bill in a second opportunity.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else wishing to participate in the debate on the amendment? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I just would like to make a couple of very brief remarks on why I think it's very important that this be held off and that we actually pass this amendment. One of the things that actually frightens me as a nurse and as someone who has worked in geriatric care whose back obviously is under stress at many, many points is the fact that I always tried to stay away from WCB because, frankly, all of the paperwork scared me. I just didn't think that I could handle all the paperwork. So what did I do? I went to my chiropractor and I went to physiotherapy because I knew what would help my back and get me back to work right away. But guess what? Both of those have now been cut back. So I may well have to end up going to WCB.

However, another thing that frightens me is the fact that as a worker I would not have a choice to either tort or actually go with the WCB, and then had I chose the tort method, I might not have had full access to my record. My record, to me, under WCB is exactly the same as my record under health care. That's my record. I want every single sentence. I want every single comma turned over to me because I own that file. No one else owns my personal file. That's why I think it's very important that this amendment be passed, so that we can take another good look at this bill.

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 15 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the debate on second reading.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 15, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2005, certainly merits further discussion at this time, I believe, not for what exactly is outlined in the bill. Certainly, it has been promoted as a housekeeping bill, but I think it is more than a housekeeping bill, and I think it is time we give it some further debate, not only of what's in it, again, but what's not in it.

Certainly, we are clarifying wording around immunity for the board of directors of the Workers' Compensation Board. It clarifies the rights of all concerned when a third-party action is taken under the act. It confirms that the WCB can regulate the fees charged by private lawyers working on third-party civil actions and also permits the WCB to pay cost-of-living increases to workers who are on extended temporary partial disability benefit. But if we could do that cost of living increase – and I'm disappointed that I don't see any reference to this in the bill, and I think we could put it in there.

The whole issue, Mr. Speaker, around the long-standing contentious claims has been an ongoing concern. I spoke earlier on the reasoned amendment on the need for a public inquiry. We've had various inquiries in the past. There was a commitment made – there was without a doubt a commitment made – to address the issue of the long-standing contentious claims, but that hasn't happened, unfortunately. As each and every hon. member of this Assembly knows, there is probably once a week a visit to our respective constituency offices from someone who would fit into the category of having missed out and perhaps once and for all could have their issue resolved one way or the other through a tribunal on these long-standing contentious claims.

Now, there are various statistics in regard to how many Alberta workers injured on the job through no fault of their own who have fallen through the cracks would fit into this category. There are some that would say it's 3,000 workers; some will tell you it's 7,000 workers; some will say it's as high as 15,000 workers. We don't know. There have been a number of estimates on the number of injured workers, but we don't know. At least, this hon. member, Mr. Speaker, does not. Bill 15 in no way addresses this.

There's also the concern of: where are you going to get the money to pay these people out if it is found that, yes, there is validity to their claim? That amount varies anywhere from $20 million to $230 million, depending on who you talk to. Businesses who fund the WCB through the payroll tax have valid concerns about this payment. But to my amazement the WCB changed their accounting practices and did away with a fund, a nest egg that they did have that could be used for this purpose. I think it's a debt we owe the injured workers. If it can be proven that they've been injured on the job and that after all these years all the suffering they have endured is a result of that workplace injury, then I think we owe them a significant debt, and I think we should make every effort to finally settle these claims. That's not in the bill.

It is interesting also, Mr. Speaker: I hear from workers and their families all the time about their exposures to toxic substances in the workplace. The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill worked very hard to help one group out, the firemen, and that was only the first step. There are lots of different trades, professions, and occupations in this province, lots of people employed in those trades, professions, and occupations who unfortunately come in contact with toxic substances in the line of their work. I would like to know why those injuries would not be considered in this legislation. If we're going to amend the Workers' Compensation Act, now is a good time to consider those workers.

We have welders – welders are a fine example – older individuals who have been in the trade for a number of years. Some of them have expressed considerable concern to this member that their lung capacity is reduced. The risk of cancer is increased. They notice that the cancer rates among some of their contemporaries are very, very high. Quite frankly, they're afraid, and they shouldn't have to be afraid. We should address this issue and address it now. There is no doubt that some of these older workers, before we improved our methods of protecting the workers from exposure – We have also better policed the job sites so that there has been enforcement of the rules, which not only convinces the employers that it's in their best interest to protect their employees, but also it's in the worker's best interest to wear the equipment to protect them from welding fumes or any other toxic airborne substance.

We need to look at this. There are too many workers with their lives suddenly cut short as a result of their occupation. We have a bit of a fund set aside for that, and I believe it is related to asbestosis. Perhaps it's time that we increase the amount, Mr. Speaker, that's in that fund. This is a ticking time bomb on Alberta workers as the workforce ages. I don't see anything in this bill that would improve that for welders or any other individual that is exposed to smoke that is created as a result of striking a welding arc.

Now, we could also look at the NORMs. I don't see any direction in here on NORMs, which are naturally occurring radioactive materials that are in industrial process streams and fertilizer plants and in refineries, in the tar sands developments around Fort McMurray. These are naturally occurring radioactive materials, and whenever workers do routine maintenance on those facilities, whether it's the pressure piping or the pressure vessels, they routinely go inside. Some corporations in this province have to their credit developed regulations. But what does the WCB have to say in this? I think it's very important, and they have said nothing, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, in regard to this issue in Bill 15. I'm disappointed in that.

I know that in the past Alberta Human Resources and Employment has been working on some regulation. There has been a group working on this regulation to deal with this whole issue of NORMs, but I haven't heard a word in a couple of years. Hopefully, some hon. member of this Assembly could update not only myself but the public and the workers of the province on exactly what is going on with this regulation on naturally occurring radioactive materials in the workplace.

Now, Mr. Speaker, Bill 15 certainly is meant to clarify wording around immunity for the board of directors of the Workers' Compensation Board, but we have to consider the background in this. I would remind all hon. members that the WCB and its employees are currently granted immunity from lawsuit for actions and decisions taken in good faith.

Section 22 of this bill protects the rights of the WCB and the accident fund in situations where an accident, whether it's a motor vehicle, a slip, or a fall, products liability, medical malpractice, entitles an injured worker to a personal injury lawsuit against someone who is not an employer or worker as defined in the Workers' Compensation Act.

Now, these actions, as everyone knows, are referred to as third-party actions. It's interesting that in third-party actions the WCB is giving certain rights. These rights allow the WCB to recoup the costs for the accident fund, thus reducing costs to the workers' compensation system for all Alberta employers. Most times this works out, but it's surprising that 15 per cent, 20 per cent of the time it doesn't. Injured workers get immediate payment through compensation benefits without having to wait, and compensation is treated in this case, Mr. Speaker, like an advance. We have to ensure that the system will run effectively. It won't burden the employers with a great increase in premiums, and it won't deny the employees the benefits that they themselves are entitled to.

I have some questions that, certainly, I would like to get on the record at second reading in regard to this bill, and they're similar to what others have asked, but whenever the constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar, who feel very frustrated with the system, come in I know that they're going to ask about this bill. They're still asking about the last series of amendments that moved through this Assembly, and they're not satisfied that that has worked out.

On their behalf I'm going to ask formally: what is the reasoning behind the proposed changes to the current legislation? Does this bill signify yet another change in policy by the WCB? We heard about the stakeholders that were not consulted. Which stakeholders were consulted in the drafting of these amendments? Who endorsed these amendments? In what ways does the government view that these amendments are significant and will change current practices? Again, Mr. Speaker, how do these amendments help workers who are injured by third parties and hopefully gain timely compensation?

We certainly dealt with the issue of the long-standing contentious claims from the WCB, which are not, in my view, addressed in this amendment to the Workers' Compensation Board Act. Some people have said – for instance, a Mr. Adrian Gracy from the Alberta Building Trades Council has stated in consultation that he was pleased with this, I believe.

The Speaker: Hon. member, Standing Order 29(2)(a) now kicks in.

Mr. MacDonald: At this time I would like to adjourn debate.

The Speaker: Sorry. Your time is gone. We're now at Standing Order 29(2)(a).

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning. I'm sorry; you've already participated.

Mr. Backs: Can I ask a question?

The Speaker: Yes, you can.

Mr. Backs: Mr. Speaker, I'd just like a little bit more elaboration from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the issue of long-standing contentious claims.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Well, thank you very much, hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, but the whole issue of long-standing contentious claims . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hate to interrupt, but the time for the afternoon's business has now evaporated. The House now stands adjourned until 8 o'clock this evening.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 6, 2005

8:00 p.m.

Date: 05/04/06

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

Hon. members, before we proceed with the proceedings of the evening, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to the Legislature a group from the Edmonton-Glenora constituency, the 146th LDS Scout troop, eight scouts accompanied by their leaders, Eric Petersen, Keith Fields, and Kurt Kronebush. They are in the public gallery, and I'd ask them to stand and receive the traditional welcome of the House.

head: Government Motions

Special Sitting for Royal Visit

16. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that notwithstanding whether or not the spring sitting of the Assembly has concluded, a special sitting of the Assembly be called the day of Tuesday, May 24, 2005, at such time as the Speaker may determine, for the sole purpose of the attendance by Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II on the Assembly and any normal sitting scheduled for that day be suspended.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a historic occasion in which the Queen of Canada will be attending on Alberta to help celebrate Alberta's 100th anniversary, our centennial. It's an opportunity that we will only see once in our lifetime, and it's an honour and a privilege for members of this Assembly, in my view, to have the opportunity to be members of a Legislature, a parliament, where the Queen visits in person.

We've had the pleasure and the honour and the privilege of having our past Lieutenant Governor, Lois Hole, attend on this Assembly and represent the Queen many times and our current Lieutenant Governor, Norman Kwong, now in place, but we rarely and few parliaments ever have the privilege of having the Queen attend. We have that opportunity on May 24, subject, of course, always to confirmation by Her Majesty's office, but as we understand it, it will be possible for her to attend on the Assembly on Tuesday, May 24.

In the context of the motion we've left the time at the Speaker's discretion in order to accommodate the scheduling of Her Majesty and also have indicated, because of course we currently have a session on and normally Standing Orders would prevail, to suspend the normal sitting of that day if, in fact, there is one or to call a sitting for that day if, in fact, we're not sitting at the time so that we can have the honour and the privilege of the attendance of Her Majesty on the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am rising to support Government Motion 16. More than that, I agree with the hon. House leader: it is a special opportunity for all of us and one that I know we're all looking forward to. I'm hoping that I am going to be able to bring my 8-year-old niece to attend and perhaps watch from the gallery, which would be a very special occasion for her.

I know that the Member for St. Albert is very excited about this special sitting and has spoken at length about how proud he is of his granddaughter. I believe that she is performing for the Queen at some occasion in Calgary, and we've all heard a lot about that in our caucus because he's a very proud granddad. I know that he was looking forward to speaking to this motion, so I wanted to make sure that I put on the record how proud he is.

It's one of the great privileges and the great treats of being an elected member in this Assembly that every now and then you get to do something really special. This is something that I qualify as being really special. I'm very much looking forward to it.

I certainly appreciate all the efforts of the many people that have pulled together to organize the visit of the Queen and the special sitting and, I'm sure, thousands of hours of volunteer time. We're very good at volunteering in Alberta. We've showed that to the world over and over again, starting with the Calgary Olympics and the Universiad and the Commonwealth Games and the Masters Games coming this summer. We're exceptionally talented there, and I think we all need to be very grateful, I'm sure, in advance for the many thousands of hours of volunteer expertise that's going to be brought to this event and others around our centennial.

As I said, I'm rising to speak in favour of the government motion. I'm very much looking forward to the special sitting, and I will support the motion. Thank you.

Mr. Hinman: I also would like to speak in favour of this motion. It seems like the members of this Legislature are often accused of having a little bit of nepotism. I'm going to be guilty of grandmatism. My grandmother is 90 years old, and she's very excited about coming and meeting the Queen. She came from England, and she drinks her tea three times a day. It is exciting for all Albertans, and it is definitely a privilege to be here. I'm grateful that the Queen would take the time to come and visit this Legislature. We're very much looking forward to it.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I, too, rise to support this motion. The age of a number of members in this Legislature I think is very similar to mine. We all went through school starting off quite often with O Canada, followed by the Lord's Prayer, and in any kind of assembly we did, we usually ended that program with God Save The Queen.

Like a previous speaker, my grandparents were – I guess you'd have to call them monarchists because my grandmother had the Queen's plates, the Queen's teacups. She came from Armagh, just outside Belfast, Northern Ireland, and was very much in favour of the royalty, almost possibly to a fault. Likewise, my paternal grandfather played semipro soccer for the Norwich-Norfolk team. So my ancestry stretches from Northern Ireland through England, and it is with great pride that I support this event.

I'm looking forward to again seeing the Queen. It's been my privilege to have seen the Queen and been a participant at least as a spectator in a number of royal visits.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill during a member's statement yesterday recounted the heroic activities of his father during the Second World War. My father had similar experiences as well flying in Burma and managing to land his plane. He was the only one in 12 flights that managed to make it through a monsoon and land safely along with the crew. He was ferrying victims from the front with the Burma-Japanese war going on at the time.

The reason I bring up my father in connection with the Queen is that we were stationed during the '50s at Namao, just outside the city of Edmonton. My dad was the pilot of what was called a Flying Boxcar, a C-119. These were the big, old, fat planes that were the forerunners of the Hercules. My father had the honour of being the person who transported the Queen's vehicles throughout that particular Canada tour at that time.

When the Queen landed at Namao air base, we were lined up just outside the hangars on the tarmac anxiously awaiting to see the Queen. My father, who had had personal contact and had been able to speak with her, was anxiously awaiting to see her and present his family at the time.

I doubt very much that there's still any resemblance, but back when I was about 8 years old, Prince Charles' proboscis and mine were very similar. So when the Queen and the Prince were walking along the tarmac and came to myself and my brother – of course, we were both wearing our little blue blazers with the British ensign on it and the matching caps with the ensign and the Union Jack – the Queen and Prince Philip both did a dead stop. They looked down at me, and it was like: I thought we left him with the Queen Mother back at home, but he seems to have made his way onto the tarmac. So this royal tradition that we follow within our system within this Legislature, I am very glad that we're honouring.

We've been very fortunate, as was mentioned, with our former Lieutenant Governor, Lois Hole, and all the wonderful aspects and qualities that this very kind and loving lady has provided us. Throughout our nation we've had a series of Governors General, and lately there seems to have been a great deal of controversy about selections, but with Lois Hole there was no doubt about it whatsoever. With Normie Kwong we have another wonderful Alberta example worthy of the Queen and her representation.

The thought of being able to bring my wife and my daughter and my grandson to speak with Her Majesty is absolutely exhilarating for me, and I consider that one of the pluses of being elected.

I'm also very thankful to the Speaker, who sent out a notice to all the constituencies saying that we're allowed to bring one outstanding young person and one senior citizen obviously of worth. In my case, the young person that I was able to select was a student who I had taught, a young man by the name of Vin Mahtani. He demonstrated tremendous leadership throughout my experience at F.E. Osborne, my old junior high school. He was a great wrestler. He never gave up. He was a top academic throughout all his subject areas. It was wonderful when I had the opportunity to phone him this past week and ask if he would like to participate. Here we have a very young generation, but this individual was absolutely thrilled and excited about the opportunity to be in the presence of Her Majesty.

Thank you very much for giving us this opportunity. We are so fortunate to be in this province to celebrate our 100 years and to have a monarch of the great stature of our Queen Elizabeth to come and speak to us. Thank you very much.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I want to just briefly add my support for this motion, and I want to do it on behalf of the rural members of our caucus. I had the honour and the privilege of meeting Her Majesty when she visited our province a few years ago, and the things that struck me were, first of all, her personal interest in each and every person that she met, and secondly, but dear to me, her interest in all matters of agriculture and rural affairs and her knowledge of agriculture and rural affairs, particularly animals, cattle and horses. The horse is a favourite of hers. She had such a keen interest in the agricultural community in Canada and in particular, at that instant, in Alberta.

I, like the member opposite, recall most of the community occasions that began with the singing of O Canada and closed with God Save The Queen, and I'm pleased to note that many of our rural agricultural organizations still hold that tradition. I've attended a number of functions where the singing of God Save The Queen closed the function, whether it was an annual general meeting or a conference. There's a lot to be said for holding those traditions, especially with our close ties to the Commonwealth.

It's wonderful for our province to have Her Majesty visit us in our centennial year, wonderful for all of our citizens and for our sister province of Saskatchewan. I've indicated that I live about 15 miles from the Saskatchewan border in sort of the south central and had many opportunities to visit with people from that area, and they're very excited as well to have Her Majesty visiting their province. It's wonderful for our province, it's wonderful for all of our citizens and certainly special for us that she will attend upon the Assembly, but I think it's especially wonderful for the schoolchildren of the province. It will remind them of our history and of our close ties with the Commonwealth.

Others have mentioned this, and I will too. It's going to be sad for us that the late Her Honour the Honourable Lois Hole will not be with us for this occasion. She was so looking forward to the Queen's visit. We are privileged that we have our Lieutenant Governor, Norman Kwong, who will, I know, find this a very special occasion as well.

So, Mr. Speaker, with those brief comments, I want to add my support to the government motion.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else wish to participate in this debate?

The hon. Government House Leader to close debate?

[Government Motion 16 carried]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, I had a note, and I just forgot about it. May we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you on behalf of the Member for Sherwood Park a group of young Pathfinders from Ardrossan. There are 14 Pathfinders, and they're accompanied by their leaders Ms Shannon Stannard, Ms Dawn Sutton, and Mrs. Bernadette Villeneuve. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they stand and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Could I add to the introductions? Have we moved on from that?

The Acting Speaker: Yes, you may proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. On behalf of the Member for St. Albert I would like to introduce Kaley Pederson, who is the identical twin sister of one of our pages, Jenelle Pederson. Could I ask Kaley to please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Second Reading

Bill 12

Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate April 5: Mr. Backs]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I will continue the debate on Bill 12, Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2005. Mr. Speaker, I was looking forward to this act with a great deal of eager anticipation, and I have to say that I'm disappointed when I actually read the bill because this bill was supposed to be so much more.

We had a victims of crime review, that was charged by the previous Solicitor General. It was put under the leadership of the Member for Calgary-Shaw, and that, I believe, was in 2001. The report itself was actually in the hands of the minister in about September 2002. I asked about that report repeatedly through 2003 and 2004, and the Solicitor General would not release any information or details or, in fact, the report itself.

I now see that the report has been released because I finally have at least a copy of the executive summary. So obviously it got released in late 2004 or 2005. I've gone through it, and some of what's been recommended by the review is, in fact, in this bill, but a lot of it is not. Considering the things that I was led to believe would be covered, would be dealt with, the outstanding issues that I kept asking about that I was hoping would come to some fruition and was led to believe would, in fact when we saw the results of the review and the accompanying legislation, it's just not here. I mean, Mr. Speaker, this bill is a page long, two pages long if you stretch it, including the principles. So it's mostly principles, and at the end it says, "Victims should report the crime and co-operate with law enforcement authorities." And that's the bill.

When we're looking for the action that the government would take around this and the changes that the government would make to facilitate better flow of information, more action, and directed funding, even the definition of victim, none of it happened in this bill. This is pretty thin stuff. Why the heck did we spend four years on this? There was a year in the development of that report, and then the minister carefully sat on it. Why? I mean, yes, the principles are important, but what about all the rest of the action that was supposed to happen?

I've spoken with a number of members on the other side, and I know there was some quiet frustration over there about the need to move this stuff forward. I repeatedly asked about the victims of crime fund that the Solicitor General was hoarding – I think it was up to $13 million the last time I looked; it's probably about $16 million now – money that was supposed to be directed towards some of these new plans that could be made possible because of the changes in legislation. Well, nothing that's in this legislation is going to enable that.

So I'm disappointed, really disappointed, because there are a number of people that were counting on the victims of crime fund review and on changes in this act to really make a difference in their lives, and it's not there. I get angry when I see that the government has pussyfooted around something. If they've got a reason for it, then stand up in this House and tell us why they won't be doing those things. But to just come forward and give us, you know, the principles – as I said, very nice but lacking completely the action that we were anticipating and that we had been led to believe would flow from this review – it angers me, and I know it angers others in the community.

I haven't counted, to be honest with you, but I think there were something like 39 recommendations, and all of them could have been funded from that money that has been accumulated and set aside – I kept calling it hoarding – by the Solicitor General. So I guess that now I'll be told I have to wait until the budget on the 13th to see if any of it is going to flow. But I don't know what it would flow to.

An Hon. Member: You'll have to wait until the budget.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, I'll have to wait until the budget. Thank you.

There's no change in the definition of victim. I know I've been told that part of what was holding up some of the funding for other programs was that the definition of victim was too restricted. Well, that hasn't been changed here. There's no change in the definitions in this amending act at all. So that log-jam, that problem, still exists. Well, why? Tell me why. Why didn't you change that when you had the opportunity, when this act is before us? Why are you not doing that when it's something that clearly needed to be done? That's coming from the community, so if you've got a reason for it, get up and tell me. Put it on the record here, and explain why you've chosen not to do that.

That money that's been collected, that is sitting there targeted for this, is money that came from fines that were levied against people that have been convicted of certain crimes. It flows from the federal government, it comes to the provincial government, it is tagged for victims of crime, and it is sitting there. Every year the government spends less than it receives, significantly less, like at the 50 per cent mark, and every year I ask why you are not spending it all, and I've had a number of different answers. [interjection] Well, I'm hearing from the Solicitor General, and I'm looking forward to him participating in this. This is his bill. It's been sponsored by another member, but it's coming under his auspices. So let's hear the answers to the questions that I'm asking here. I want this done in public so those groups can understand why these choices have been made.

There was $13 million the last time I looked, and that had been accumulated over four years, so that means it's accumulating to the tune of about $3 million a year. That's significant money for the organizations that we're talking about here. I want to know: what is this legislation? Is it going to make any difference? Are these programs going to flow from it in any way?

I want to know why there was no change to the definition of victim that came through in this bill. Why were those choices made? Why was that not followed through on?

I want to know why there is nothing here that will facilitate the funding of sexual assault centres. Those sexual assault centres do not get operational funding from this government. They get piecemeal funding if they go and apply for a project grant from Health and they apply for a project grant through FCSS and they apply for a special temporary funding of some sort; you know, a volunteer co-ordinator through Wild Rose. There's a little bit of funding that comes through the victims of crime fund. It's for the counselling of victims, and it's only for the counselling of victims who have gone to court.

Well, in sexual assault cases there's no guarantee that they are ever going to choose to go to court. So those sexual assault centres apply for that money and get a little bit of money to counsel, but they can only use it in counselling. Out of their entire roster of clients, they can only pay for counselling for those that are actually proceeding through to court or proceeding through to court in this fiscal year.

So it's useful money, and they're really glad to have it, Mr. Speaker, and they wouldn't want to see it disappear, but it's not fulfilling what this government should be doing for sexual assault centres, and I want to know why the government is choosing not to fund sexual assault centres in a fully operational way. You know, they're not even funding them to the tune of what they're funding battered women's shelters. They're not even coming up to that mark, and frankly I would argue that that mark is not high enough. But they're not even coming up to that by a long shot.

I want to know why the government is refusing to fund sexual assault centres for operational funding. They make the administrators, who are there as good administrators to administrate a sexual assault centre – they put those administrators in the position of spending 80 per cent of their time scrounging for money. Is that really what we want these trained professionals doing: writing grant proposals to five or six different government departments and agencies, trying to cobble together enough money to operate? Is that a good use of these people's time?

This is the kind of short-term, poor planning that I'm getting increasingly frustrated with from this government. You've got agencies out there that know how to do this work. They're trained at it, they're good at it, they're delivering a good service, they have accountability up the wazoo for it, and they're happy to give you their audited financial reports. They're doing exactly everything the government says they want to see happening and not getting support. There's a choice that's being made here, and I want to know why that choice is being made. So a couple of questions I've raised then. Why did we get no action being brought forward? Why have we had no change in the definition of victim as far as meaning for funding out of the victims of crime fund?

See, part of the problem with the funding of the sexual assault centres, Mr. Speaker, is that nobody is taking them on; nobody is their champion. And every time I ask, I get bounced around. "Go to the Solicitor General because they're in charge of victims of crime." "Yeah, but they're only going to fund for people that are in court." "Okay, well, maybe try Health." So I go to Health. They are supposed to be the lead ministry in the intergovernmental agency or co-operative committee or whatever they call it. The cross-ministry initiative; there we go. So I go to them and say: "Okay, how are you leading? What's happening here? Where are you driving this to?" "Well, we're not really doing that. Go and check with Health." So I go to Health, and Health goes, "Sorry, we can't fund them because of the way . . ." "Well, okay. Fine. Where do I go?" "Go to Justice; see if Justice can fund them." Excuse me? Why am I doing this? I thought that's why you had an interdepartmental, cross-ministry initiative happening here.

Nobody is taking responsibility for this, and the buck has got to stop somewhere. If the Solicitor General is that interested, I'm asking him to step up to the plate and do something meaningful and make this happen because bouncing the ball around and constantly punting it to someone else is getting real tiresome. The truth of the matter is that this is primarily women's lives that are being punted around from ministry to ministry here. We are not providing the kind of programming support that we should be providing as legislators, and I want to know why. I want to know why that choice is being made by the government to fail these people and to fail these agencies. I've been talking about it for three years now. I want to start hearing some answers from the other side.

So when I look at the executive summary of the things that were suggested, I look for things like "Explore the feasibility of providing emergency funding for victims of crime where critically needed," and that's not in the bill. You know, there's some good supporting information about it. When they're a victim of crime, especially those people on limited income, they may not have the wherewithal to find some emergency dollars or to borrow emergency dollars to get themselves through. Excellent idea. Why isn't that in the bill? How is that supposed to come into being? This isn't even a shell bill, where everything is being empowered to the minister to do something whenever they feel like it behind closed doors later on. There isn't even that happening here. I never thought I'd be proposing that as a step up or a step forward, but there you go. So what happened to that? What's the update on that?

"Increase funding to police-based victim services units." Okay. Is that coming in the budget? I guess I'll have to wait, but there's nothing that's being funneled through this bill that's indicating that that's going to happen. They acknowledge victim service units as "the backbone of support for victims of crime in Alberta." I'm on page 2 of the executive summary for the Alberta victims of crime consultation. Yeah, good. Absolutely good point. They've obviously been out in the community. They found out what people want, so where is it?

They talk about developing "standardized training for those providing services to victims of crime." Well, that doesn't necessarily have to be in legislation, Mr. Speaker, but where is it? What's happening here? Where's the rest of the announcement? I mean, I have certainly seen that in legislation, so they could put it in if they wanted to. It would have fleshed the bill out past a page anyway.

They're also talking about helping "communities develop, promote and support effective programs and services that assist victims of crime who have unique needs, particularly Aboriginal communities." They acknowledge that "'one size fits all' does not apply to victims of crime. Certain groups of people (e.g., children) have specialized needs that are not always met by current programs and services." Excellent point. Good consultation. Where's it reflected in the bill? It's not.

I mean, it talks about providing information, information being made readily accessible. Okay. Yeah, fine. Good idea. It doesn't cost very much at all, but where's the meat of what was supposed to happen out of this consultation? Why was all that time spent and, one presumes, government resources and interest? Why? For this? There were so many people that have waited so long for it. In 2001 we started on this road. Why are we still waiting? And we are still waiting. It's 2005, and we've got principles that say that people should be treated with respect and dignity. Absolutely. I would have thought that went without saying. Okay, you want to put it in your preamble. Okay. Good. But let's have the rest of the action.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Standing Order 29(2)(a). Hon. Solicitor General, did you want to rise on a question and comment? Any questions or comments? The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to clarify for the hon. member across the way. The purpose of these amendments as they were brought in at first reading was to clarify the basic principles of justice for victims of crime. The lead regarding the principles that we introduced was led by the federal Liberal government with regard to these recommendations that have come forward. So what we're doing is that we're clarifying the picture here.

Now, the hon. member spoke as well about the lack of assistance to sexual assault centres, and I want to disagree with her on that because I've worked with the provincial Association of Sexual Assault Centres as well as the Calgary Sexual Assault Centre very closely. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I've investigated over 600 sexual assaults in my career. It's not just money that they need. It's not just money. It's the issue of working with them: different aspects in the community, different organizations working together to provide a service for those victims. It's not just dollars and cents. It's organizations working together to provide services for those victims, which we do, and we will continue in the future.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you so much. So I'll put the question to the minister again. Why was the choice made not to follow through and implement the action that was recommended from the victims of crime consultation? There is no action in this bill, and we waited four years for this. Where's the action? Where's the funding? And I take your point that . . .

Okay. That's my question one. For the second question I'll come back.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, again, I'll remind the member across the floor that the reason this bill was introduced was to clarify the principles which were led by the federal government and the federal Minister of Justice and the provincial and territorial ministers of justice to make it standard across the country.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. If that's the reason, then what is the result of the victims of crime consultation that was done by this government? Because if that is not reflected in this bill, and that seems to be now what the minister is telling me, why is it not reflected in the bill, and when are we going to see the action from the victims of crime consultation?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes, the report has been done. It was completed. It was provided to the Solicitor General some time ago, I believe two years ago. The report was taken into consideration and I believe has gone through the government process.

Mr. Mason: So, Mr. Speaker, to the Solicitor General: given that there's been extensive consultation among Albertans with respect to this, why is he instead taking his lead on the definitions from the federal Liberal government?

Mr. Cenaiko: We're not taking our lead from the federal government, but they did lead the process with regard to the federal/provincial/territorial meetings, Mr. Speaker. The issue was to ensure that each province and each territory had the same standards of providing services to victims across Canada.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. So the only purpose to this bill, then, was to follow up and to follow the lead of the feds. The minister seems to be clearly stating that there's been no attempt to move any of the recommendations from the victims of crime consultation into legislation and implement it. So when are we going to see the result of the victims of crime implementation at all, in any way? Who is going to take leadership on that side for the funding of sexual assault centres, which has been bounced around from all of the departments that I just talked about? Are you going to take responsibility for funding these people fully? I want an answer. All it does is get punted around.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I'd like to remind the hon. member across that the sexual assault centres have received funding from various government departments. They get funding from the community initiative program, from a number of programs throughout the province. There's a large association that just was formed last year, that I supported wholeheartedly, who are now organizing so that they can provide province-wide services and contacts throughout Alberta to ensure that victims of sexual assaults have the ability to have the needs that they require, whether it's psychological issues or whether it's the issue with assistance in attending court. These are some of the things that they need. It's not just dollars and cents.

She spoke earlier about volunteers in Alberta. Well, I can tell you this. The victim assistance units that are related to all the policing organizations throughout this province have in excess of 2,000 volunteers that assist police services here, and those are part of the resources that we use as well.

Dr. B. Miller: Now I'd like to ask a question. I raised this already in addressing this particular bill. In the report that's being referred to, there was a great amount of suggestions about restorative justice and the fact that restorative justice programs were also not funded anymore. The recommendation was that that funding be restored. You know, restorative justice is a new way of approaching the concerns of victims to not just stress retributive justice but restorative justice, to bring offenders and victims together to talk about reconciliation, sentencing circles, mediation. I wonder if the Solicitor General would comment about the future of the emphasis on restorative justice.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the five minutes allocated for this portion of Standing Order 29(2)(a) has run out.

Does anybody else wish to participate in the debate?

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North to close debate.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 12, Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2005, does clarify the basic principles of justice for victims of crime and adopts the revised Canadian standards, our statement of basic principles for victims of crimes, that were endorsed in October 2003 by all the federal, provincial, and territorial ministers in Canada responsible for justice. Just before I conclude, I would like to state that it's very important that victims of crime be treated with respect and consideration along with the principles that are outlined in this act.

In Alberta there are 96 youth justice committees as well as 107 victims' services volunteer units and a number of restorative justice committees for young offenders. These committees are beneficial for both victims and offenders. They bring healing when possible.

I think that it's important for this government to continue to lobby the federal government to support stronger sentences for violent and sexual crimes and that neither violent nor sexual offenders be allowed to serve conditional sentences in their communities.

The questions that have been asked from across the way came from a very passionate member who supports sexual assault centres, and I think that we'll be able to review more of those questions in Committee of the Whole.

I would like to address the question of prompt payment, which is referred to in 2(b) of this act, and 2(b) states on page 1, "Victims should promptly receive, in accordance with this Act and the regulations, financial benefits for the injuries that they have suffered."

Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to call for the vote on second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Bill 10
Residential Tenancies Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. As I stated in second reading, there are only three different items that need to be corrected on this bill, that was previously done in the spring of 2004 and came into effect on November 1, 2004.

At this time I'd like to take the time to answer some questions that some of my colleagues asked. I guess the first one is from the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung. Government Services is working with stakeholders to create a dispute resolution service to offer a user-friendly process other than the court system for hearings that will focus on resolving relevant residential landlord and tenant disputes. This service will be user friendly in that it will strive to offer consistent and fair decisions combined with cost-effective, informal, and expeditious resolutions of residential landlord and tenant disputes.

Now for the answer for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore. We have been advised that landlords experience a 40 to 50 per cent turnover rate during a year. Security deposit refunds are without problem in most instances. Landlords with large rental inventories advise that the high cost of registering mail, which is $6.42 plus considerable time spent filling out postal forms and trips to the post office, compared to 50 cents for regular mail, is unfairly punishing the majority of landlord and tenant relationships. Requiring registered mail will not resolve the two usual causes for nonreturn of security deposits within 10 days: tenants not leaving a forwarding address and bad landlords who do not want to comply. All jurisdictions that have security deposits allow refunds by ordinary mail.

For the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder. Communications between both parties resolving issues of extending the due date for rent owed by tenants is a usual circumstance. Landlords can apply to the court to give them 14 days' eviction notice to terminate the tenancy. Under the court process for these evictions it is more costly and time consuming for both the tenants and landlords. The notice is void if the tenant pays the rent due. The most important obligation is for the tenants to pay the rent when due. Landlords have significant challenges in dealing with ongoing delinquent rent payments. The proposed change will do nothing substantial to harm honest tenants.

For the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning. As noted earlier, an alternative service is being worked out, and there will be a stronger stakeholder support for this option, including Alberta Justice.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think probably one of my main objections is that I feel that the landlord doesn't have enough – what's the word? – power or enough permission to be able to actually get rid of a tenant. There are many tenants that we don't want, and I think the process is far too long. Being able to give 14 days is fine; however, if it's because of no payment, they can give you the payment, and then it starts all over again. I would like to see something a little bit stronger in this bill to protect the landlords.

Sending back the security deposit by regular mail. I have a little bit of experience with tenants, and, gosh, I have never known a tenant that was willing to wait for their security deposit to be returned by mail. They wanted it the minute they walked out the door. So I'm not altogether sure that that makes any sense to me. Registered and certified, of course, take far too long, and it's an expensive proposition when it can be done in cash. I think that just the fact that they could return it in cash should be more than sufficient.

I think those were just my few comments on that bill. Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 10 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 11
Stettler Regional Water Authorization Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First off I'd like to thank the hon. members for the questions they asked, and I'd like to answer those questions for them. There were several.

The first question was: is this bill a one-time intervention, or will it lead to permanent interbasin transfers, and how are the communities going to maintain themselves until they address a sustainable water supply in a particular area? Well, the water is authorized under a special act, and a licence will be issued that permanently assigns the right to that water until the licence is either cancelled or transferred to another user. Sustainable water supplies in particular areas are difficult to predict and subject to variability. The smaller the area, the greater the variability. Under the Water for Life strategy Alberta Environment is embarking on water use reporting initiatives that will provide greater certainty to the amount of water used and greater predictability of the water remaining in use.

On the question regarding whether this new transfer would affect the rights of existing licences. The new transfer and subsequent licence does not impact existing licence-holder rights. In the current system of priority set by date that the water is licenced or applied for, this water will be junior to the other existing licences. Existing licence holders are protected under the Water Act and will be respected.

What is the impact of the transfer on the health of ecosystems? Because the transfer is treated water only through the Stettler drinking water treatment facilities, there is little risk of the transfer of any organisms.

On the question regarding whether this bill could force Canada to export water under NAFTA. No. The Water Act, in fact, prohibits the export of water outside of Canada. That's under section 46. We are not selling water or exporting water even outside of Alberta. We have done this before, and we have said before that it will not force us to export water into the United States or any other country either under NAFTA or not.

Regarding the question of what percentage of this water that is going to be transferred will be used for domestic residential purposes, farms, or irrigation. The water is treated drinking water, and the proposal is that it be used for domestic purposes only and does not consider uses like irrigation, large livestock operations, or industrial uses. The volume wouldn't allow for that anyway. It would not preclude the use by small hobby farms, et cetera, for watering a few livestock, but the intent is for human consumption and daily needs.

With regard to the question: are there documents that show that the treatment of water is eliminating all organisms, including any that could come up in a transfer? Treatment is to the level of the Canadian drinking water guidelines and the Alberta standards and guidelines for drinking water, waste water, and storm water systems. The type of organisms, if any, that pass through the treatment system would not be a risk to the natural environment of the Battle River basin.

With regard to the question: is the water that's being transferred being treated, and is it at a tertiary treatment level before it goes back into the rivers? The water is supplied from the city of Red Deer drinking water facilities – we were talking about the Red Deer system at this time – and is treated to a very high standard. Any waste water from the municipalities undergoes a high level of treatment. Not all communities require tertiary treatment plants but can provide treatment equivalent to that with existing facilities.

With regard to the question: why is there nothing in the bill that starts to measure underground aquifers? The bill only authorizes Alberta Environment to issue a licence. The licence is where terms and conditions require reporting and monitoring of water diversions and would require flow measurement. A strategy under Water for Life is to further the collection of information on groundwater resources in Alberta.

With regard to the question: why is Stettler facing the water shortage? Water shortages occur for two reasons: number one, growth of the communities and, number two, drought conditions result in the loss of temporary water bodies such as sloughs for livestock watering, which increases the dependence upon wells, which further increases the impact.

Next question: when these water pipelines were created – and we're talking about the one from the city of Edmonton to Ryley – did it involve an interbasin transfer, or was it from the same water table or area? The line to Ryley and the regional system supplied by EPCOR is still in the North Saskatchewan River basin.

To the question: are there any communities that use a two-water system that could report on how that's working between treated and untreated water? Mr. Chairman, no municipalities have a two-water system in Alberta. We have areas with irrigation systems separated but not a two-water system in residences.

The next question: is there a need for a water inventory so we know what kinds of resources we have? How could this be developed? Well, Mr. Chairman, through Water for Life, water use reporting and an inventory of groundwater and surface water supplies, an inventory or understanding of available water, is being developed.

Mr. Chairman, with that, I welcome any further questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to ask the hon. member about the use of water resources in that region by the petroleum industry. He mentioned two causes for a shortage of water. One was the growth in population and the strain that that puts on available water resources, and the other one was ongoing drought. But we also know that the oil industry, in order to recover additional oil from depleting wells, is increasingly using fresh water down these wells as a means of recovering the remaining oil. I'm asking the hon. member if in fact there is any of this activity in this area and if he could comment on that as a potential third source of shortages of water in this province.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There may be a potential for using groundwater or surface water for enhanced oil extraction in that area, but to my knowledge the use of that water is going down. I think that there's every indication that it's going to be looked at and perhaps be reduced more.

[Mr. Lindsay in the chair]

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

9:00

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you very much to the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat for clarifying some of the questions that have been plaguing us around the issue of interbasin transfers. I'm reassured by some things and not others.

I guess a more specific question would be: if the existing agreement with water users is entrenched in legislation, how could we possibly make the changes that are needed to make the system more sustainable, in other words to actually require users to review, to reduce, and to possibly change their use of water at the present such that it might be more sustainable in the future?

Mr. Mitzel: Mr. Chairman, I think that in order to be able to do that, further development of the water strategy would address that very question.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. All life needs water. It's transparent to say that where there is shortage, we have to replenish it. Why would anyone oppose this? The danger here is in allowing not once but repeatedly this extraordinary practice and expensive practice and environmentally risky practice of interbasin transfer to become the new normal, which seems to be happening here in Alberta.

I quote the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, who Monday night indicated: "You can't stop development, so there are more and more people," and there is going to be "more and more demand." We have to start mining the aquifers, and "the aquifers start to go down. This affects . . . outlying areas." So we have to continue to build dams, and this we will continue to do for many years. If there's not enough water in the river, then we have to begin to drill, and the cost of water is going to determine – well, this sounds to me, Mr. Chairman, as if interbasin transfer is the new normal for Alberta. This is not what many of us had hoped to hear.

What I hear being discussed is the establishment of pipes and storage tanks and pumps. Far from being an extraordinary measure, interbasin transfer is now a way of life planned into the future of a number of communities in Alberta. The old saying is: technology will solve it. Well, technology has created the problem and unsustainable expectations of what we can have, how much we can consume and continue to manipulate nature in the interests of short-term, self-centred lifestyles. We need to look at the bigger environmental pictures. We have choice. We can continue to misuse and overuse our resources, and we will kill the very source of life if we don't learn the lessons.

I want to just quote a study from the University of Arizona. Karl Flessa reported that in his examination of the Colorado River and the expenditures on the damming and water diversions, he calculated that society is losing $2.4 billion per year, and it's drastically reduced water flow and productivity in the river system. Using the monetary values that other researchers have applied to services provided to society, he compared the dollar value of ecosystem services provided by the Colorado River delta region before all the dams and after to current land-use types. The difference between the two figures is the benefit lost to society, and in this case he calculated it at 6 cents per 100 gallons of water, or $2.4 billion annually.

Upstream dams and diversion projects trap and divert much of the Colorado River sediment load, important for growth. The day-to-day functioning of ecosystems in the absence of diversions provides benefits: waterfowl, fishing, et cetera. "The original ecosystem services provided are worth more than the ecosystem services we now get from the transformed landscapes" downstream.

He indicated that these types of projects fail to consider three critical elements, Mr. Chairman. The in-stream flow needs and how a critical level may be easily reached at which the ecosystems begin to decline in that area. In this article he referred to the Red Deer River Basin Advisory Committee. The in-stream water conservation objectives have to be clear, and they have to be consistent with the Water for Life strategy, which is in contradiction of these very activities.

The second aspect of appropriate cost-benefit analysis is full cost accounting. The full cost of the project needs to be assessed, including the loss of ecosystem services. "There would be limited economic return for the public commodity of river water."

The third has to do with ecological integrity. Portions of the river basin become degraded and further impacted as the proposed project gets more and more demanding over time due to unsustainable practices that are depending on it.

I appreciate the comments earlier with answers to some of the questions, but if drought is the new normal in Alberta, with the expectation that climate change and global warming is producing, we have to create a new normal expectation around some of this and look for new ways of living and new ways of land use and new restrictions on water use. It does mean government taking leadership. Are we overallocating the resource? What is the management plan, including growth projections? What do we know of the full inventory? It was alluded to earlier that an inventory of the water is being established, but when is that going to be done? How can we make decisions now that have long-term implications under law and under community expectations if we don't have that to plan with?

We should be very cautious about making these decisions without that information. How will this interbasin transfer affect the whole ecosystem? Are we robbing Peter to pay Paul? Surely this will perpetuate an unsustainable management plan as long as we continue to fulfill the expectations of local regions. Have we examined ways of reducing the demand and improving efficiencies, changing the land-use practices, or do we simply carry on with whatever is being done at the present time? What would be the cumulative impact of this practice? Why are we not beginning to measure the cumulative impact of each of these technological events that we're implementing in our society?

The Water for Life strategy is a direction; it is not a plan. We need to see concrete funding, intersectoral planning as if people's lives and livelihoods matter and we depend on it. This is the test of government leadership. When we face the limits of growth, which we are doing very clearly in these particular areas, do we persist in the blind belief that we can defy nature, or do we recognize the limits to human intrusion on finite resources and learn to live as we all must do in our personal lives, within our means?

The environment is increasingly in debt, and there are few to speak on behalf of sanity and sustainability. Technology is a false solution. It is human beings that must change and commit ourselves to reduce, to reuse, to recycle with renewables as well as nonrenewables, Mr. Chairman. What is the plan for this? Will we be voting on this again next year, another special bill? Interbasin transfer is an emergency last resort. It must continue to be that.

I want to be on record as giving only provisional support, conditional on the government committing to further legislation, number one, to ensure that interbasin transfers are only for emergency situations and, number two, to require from all such communities requesting this assistance a regional plan to ensure sustainable water management in the future.

I thank you for the opportunity to participate, Mr. Chairman, and with that, I'll sit down.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll try and answer some of the questions that were raised here by the hon. member. The only way any additional water projects such as these can be approved or even considered is if, in fact, there is more water in the system than is presently allocated. This is the case in this system here. For a matter of record also, if there was not any more water to be allocated, there would be a moratorium on any further allocations as happens in southwest Alberta in the three rivers system.

The Water for Life strategy. In that committee the basin advisory committees have very much input into the very things that the hon. member mentioned, the in-stream needs and the aquatic environment.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I think that given the strategy that's there – the basin advisory committees that are set up to address some of the concerns that he has, the moratorium on further allocations if, in fact, in the minds of Environment there is no additional water – these do go a long way to answering the concerns that the hon. member has.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The question, again, that gets raised is that we are making decisions assuming that we know something about the resource. We clearly do not know what the capacity of the resource is. We haven't done the inventory yet. So I'm speaking about surface and groundwater, and as you indicated, that's being done. But we are making long-term decisions on the basis of inadequate information, it seems.

Mr. Mitzel: Mr. Chairman, in this case here we are talking about surface water, and in fact to the best of my knowledge there is a method of determining how much water is available, how much the stream flow is at any particular time, including the measurement of the snowpack on a year-to-year basis. So with that and the fact that they do know that there is an unallocated portion in this river system, that is why this project is even being considered.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First off, I want to thank the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. As a teacher I give my kids a whole series of questions and hope that they answer them. I give you an A on your effort. I'm holding back the plus because there are still some questions to be answered, but I do appreciate your efforts.

To me the interbasin transfer of water is really another example of robbing Peter to pay Paul, and in the end both Peter and Paul lose. What I still don't understand – it goes back to Monday night, and the understanding may be my problem, but I believe I heard the figure of the water transfer being somewhere in the nature of .1 per cent. Am I right in that? I'll sit down just to give you a chance to collect your thoughts on that.

The Acting Chair: Is the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat ready to respond?

Mr. Mitzel: I'm just trying to find the number. It is .1 per cent of the average annual flow of the Red Deer River. That's correct.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. The point I'm trying to make here is that if it's such a small percentage, could that water, that small amount that's being transferred not be allocated from the existing basin source? This is what I'm wondering. You know, is the transfer necessary? Could we get it somehow from existing water?

Mr. Mitzel: Mr. Chairman, to answer that question, I think that what we're looking at is water from the town of Stettler, potable water which is treated. There is no other treatment facility anywhere near any of that area, the nine small towns and perhaps some of the farms and in between. There's no other source of treated water. In that case, it doesn't transfer all of it there, but there are two or three of the small, little communities that are in the other portion of the basin.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much again, Mr. Chairman. You've heard me go on at great length in this Assembly about the Fort McMurray water treatment plant, and what I'm getting at is that you were mentioning that there weren't sufficient treatment facilities in the surrounding Stettler area to treat the necessary amount of water. It made me think: is there the possibility of fixing the problem by creating greater water treatment potential within the Stettler community and then drawing from the local river and resources?

Mr. Mitzel: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think that's exactly what we're doing. The town of Stettler actually does have the capacity to supply that extra amount of water, and it is treated. What I meant is that there aren't any treatment facilities anywhere near that. I'd have to get the map out to find the next town that would have a facility. Drumheller perhaps would be the next town, and that would certainly be a lot farther away.

Mr. Chase: The point that my hon. colleague from Calgary-Mountain View and I were trying to make: we look at the idea of a water basin transfer as an absolute last resort. I was thinking that if we could improve the facilities within that regional basin from which Stettler normally draws its water and then supplies it out to the surrounding communities that depend on Stettler – I gather that Stettler is the nucleus of the supply – could we not, by upgrading that system, avoid the transfer or at least – sorry; if I could offer another option – avoid future transfers by solving the problem locally?

Mr. Mitzel: Mr. Chairman, it would be nice if they possibly could, but the fact is that the town of Stettler actually resides almost right on the edge of the basin between the Battle River basin and the Red Deer River basin. It's almost right on the dividing line. You've got communities in one basin and in the other, so it would be rather difficult to try and even consider something like that because what you'd be looking at, to answer that question, would be actually having to have two more systems: one to cover these three or four communities, which take a very minimal amount of water in the big scheme of things, and four or five communities in the other region, that take, similarly, a minimum amount of water.

Mr. Chase: I want to follow protocol. This is not to prolong the discussion. It's brainstorming, and we're participating in it as members of the committee.

I'm urban based, and I'm not familiar with rural growth other than, you know, the bedroom communities developing around urban centres because the quality of life is often more enjoyable in rural centres. Do you think that for any of these small towns in the area of Stettler there is sufficient resource, sufficient energy, sufficient economic drive for them, that expansion is expected or is being promoted to the point where we could then justify another water treatment plant within the area?

Mr. Mitzel: Mr. Chairman, that's a good question, and it's a very, very short answer. It's what is happening in all of rural Alberta, rural Canada, rural North America. The very simple answer is actually no. What this water is going to be doing is actually perhaps sustaining those communities that are presently there rather than having them deteriorate any further. Especially in our lifetime I don't see a big economic boom in a lot of those smaller communities.

Mr. Chase: Thank you for helping me to understand that. That's always the hope of revitalizing rural areas, by having tertiary industries or whatever, and I would certainly promote that idea.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood brought up the point that seemed to be missing as to the amount of water that was potentially lost due to oil well injection, and my understanding is that when you inject water – and my big concern is fresh water – this water is lost forever. Would you be able to comment on that concern?

9:20

Mr. Mitzel: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is correct. That is exactly the case. But as I mentioned before, that problem is an issue. It is being addressed, and hopefully the amount will continue to be reduced.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I don't know if you can push for it within this basin transfer Stettler water agreement or not, but the sooner we outlaw the injection of fresh water into wells as a method of recovery, the better we'll be. My understanding is that we have a tremendous amount of saline water. At this point it's of considerably less value than fresh water. Is it not practical to use a saline water alternative so that we don't draw from this fresh water?

Mr. Mitzel: Mr. Chairman, I can only speak personally on this here, and it's really not to the transfer. In fact, yes, you're probably right. But at the same time – and this is my personal opinion – it is probably not economical at the moment, and this is maybe why there is some reluctance for industry to consider this. Also, in some cases it is not as easy to be able to acquire this type of saline water.

Mr. Ouellette: You know, I'm not exactly sure what saline water or any of this stuff has to do with this bill on a basin transfer. I think you've answered the question, and I guess I'm asking you again. You've stated that fresh water in use for oil flood systems or whatever has gone way down. I think the reason for that is they are using brackish water or saline waters, but I don't know if it has anything to do with this actual bill on basin transfer.

Mr. Mitzel: Mr. Chairman, the hon. minister is right. It does not. The question that was brought up really was asking an opinion, and I stated my opinion on this.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Mr. Chair, the reason I brought up the need to reconsider this potential for water transfer and the reason I bring up saline water is that if we can conserve the existing water within the basin by using alternatives such as saline water – or CO₂ injection seems to be another method of withdrawing oil and at the same time getting rid of CO₂ emissions – it seems to me that we should use our modern technology to every extent that we can to preserve what we have in the way of water. That's why I made that comment with regard to saline. To me it is directly related to this interbasin transfer.

The question I would like to know – again, I'm not familiar with waterworks, and I'm sure the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat is considerably more knowledgeable – is: how is this proposed transfer of water to take place? What will be the vessel or the methodology used to do the transfer?

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think that just to follow up on the comments regarding saline water, if the people could find a way of desalinating the saline water that's there, perhaps that's an alternative. But, in fact, the question is with regard to how this water will be transferred. It'll be done by pipeline. I believe it'll be done by pipeline. It's a water pipeline transfer. It is a closed system. It is closed to holding facilities within these communities and at the farms.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Could I ask if the hon. member is aware of a plan to prevent this from happening again next year? In other words, we can't control droughts, but is there a plan in relation to these communities to reduce the chances of this happening again next year in the particularly drought-stricken areas?

Mr. Mitzel: As I mentioned before, Mr. Chairman, the allocation is there. The allocation will be a transfer of allocation of the licence of water. Is there a plan to not do it again? It certainly depends on the need of the community, it depends on the needs of the area, and it also depends on the amount of water allocation that would be available because these people also have to be able to live in their community. Water, as the hon. member mentioned, is what sustains life.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Dr. Swann: Just a quick follow-up. What I'm asking is: is there any reason to expect this community to change the way it's using water in the future such that it won't be as likely to require a transfer next year, or are we simply going to continue to follow the same plans?

Mr. Mitzel: Well, Mr. Chairman, as I mentioned, the water allocation is there. The ability to move the water is there. The ability to actually treat the water is there. The pipeline will be in the ground, and in fact those people will be receiving water from the treatment plant from Stettler for years to come.

Chair's Ruling Relevance

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, just as a caution. When we are in committee stage, the intent is to go line by line. While I appreciate that we have a fairly open latitude to try and ask many questions, generally we deal with line-by-line items of the bill. So we should try to stay within the scope of the bill, but you may make comments about issues that you do have. Okay?

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I've been listening carefully to the exchange on this bill and am moved to make some comments relative to the fact that it would appear from the questions and comments that have been made that members of the opposition have a significant misunderstanding or perhaps a wilful misunderstanding of what's actually being contemplated by this act.

This is a very simple process. We have a law in this province and we have a policy in this province which says that we don't have interbasin transfer. The only way that you can have any interbasin transfer is if a specific act is brought before the Legislature. So here we have an act, which is being sponsored by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, to allow for a specific transfer of water on a licensed annual basis. It would be expressly for the sole purpose of allowing municipalities in a particular region of the province to enjoy a safe water supply.

It's not an interbasin transfer in the context that seems to be discussed here. It's not an interbasin transfer. Nobody ought to be alarmed about piping water from one basin to another on a regular and continuing and expanding basis but, rather, talk about municipalities in our province, the people who are living in those municipalities needing a supply of adequate, appropriate, and treated water and the fact that the water is drawn from one basin but serves communities who are in the other basin and that the outfall or the excess of water that results from a domestic water supply might end up in a basin other than what it was drawn from.

It's a very simple act, but because we have such strong protection against interbasin transfer in this province, it requires that it come to the Legislature to deal with it. I think members opposite are missing the point on this rather dramatically.

9:30

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, I'm compelled to enter into this particular debate based on the comments of the Minister of Advanced Education. I would argue that the members on the opposition side do not misunderstand at all what is happening here. The government has repeatedly said to us that it's so important that we understand that interbasin water transfer should not happen that there is therefore special legislation brought before the Assembly in order to deal with it. Our concern is that we are seeing a trend. This is the second application, the second piece of legislation brought before us within a very short period of time, and that causes us great concern.

We hear that this is so important they have to produce special legislation. Yes, we understand that, and we very much agree that extreme caution should be taken. We would prefer not to see interbasin water transfer. It's part of our policy around water management. Our concern is that this is the second time we've seen this in about as many years. That to us starts to say that this is being used more often as a solution than we are comfortable with.

Our questions are around: what else are you doing to make sure that this is not before us in a third piece of legislation next year? It's the demand side. So in the context of what's being discussed here, that is why we are expressing such concerns, and we are broadening and asking the questions around: what other issues have you looked at? What other methods have you looked at to address the reason, the demand for this interbasin water transfer becoming necessary? Because if nothing else is done in context here, if nothing else is done to address the demand, if nothing else is done to address the conservation and we end up with a third request coming forward, then we definitely have a trend. Then I would argue that, in fact, that has become the government's solution to dealing with this issue.

It is around conservation. It is around water use. It is around involving the municipalities. It is around the saline water. It is around how we are using water for industrial use and how we are using water in the municipalities. So this is a much larger discussion because we're agreeing with the government that this is so vital that we be so careful with water management and with interbasin water transfer.

We are concerned because what we see is the government starting to use this legislation as the solution, as a simple answer to a complex problem, as the norm, and that's what our concerns are around. So we're questioning the government closely, and I have to commend the hon. sponsoring member, who has been game to get up and do his best to answer back. That's why we're doing it.

You know, this is why we discuss this line by line, clause by clause, because what's being discussed here leads to a larger context, and this is the forum to be deciding that in. Second reading is on principle. Third reading is on effect. Committee is line by line, clause by clause, and that includes all of the context that's being discussed here.

I sense that the government is annoyed with us, but frankly that is why we have a forum to discuss this in large and small detail, and that's why we're doing it. Thank you. [interjections]

I'm sorry. Now there are more people involved in the discussion.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I just want to draw everyone to Beauchesne 688. If you take a few moments to read that, it will clarify the purpose of committee stage.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Chairman, I just want to enter the debate and hopefully can be of some help and clarify some of these issues. I think it would be extremely useful for the members of the opposition, particularly the urban members, to familiarize themselves a bit more with some of these rural challenges and talk about solutions because the solutions are very limited.

I am as guilty as anyone. While I am in the city of Edmonton, I know that I can turn on the tap. There will be water. We sit on the North Saskatchewan River. When I'm in the city of Calgary, we're sitting on the Bow River. I am proud of the conservation efforts of our cities, as I am of our rural communities'. I recall in the drought years when the city of Calgary implemented voluntary restrictions on the use of water. I did not hear complaints from the citizens of that centre when that occurred.

When you move out of the urban areas – and particularly those of us who are in southern Alberta are maybe very conscious of this because there really are not any natural lakes. They are man-made. It would be extremely beneficial and I think everyone would enjoy understanding what wonderful things have happened in water conservation and water management, and I speak more about the south because, of course, I am more familiar with that.

You look at the McGregor Lake irrigation project. You look at the Newell Lake water conservation wetlands. Look at the Kinbrook park water conservation wetlands projects. None of these are man-made lakes. They are done, many of them, with PFRA, the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, in days gone by – unfortunately, they're not involved in that as much anymore – and with Ducks Unlimited and other groups that are interested in this.

It is a real issue. The interesting thing is that it is expanding across the province, and one of the things that we want to ensure is that wherever you live in this province, you have the opportunity to have quality potable water for domestic use in particular. That is really what this is for.

This is an area of my constituency which came into my constituency just in the last election, and I can assure you that the challenges that the people who live in those communities have on quality water for domestic use are huge, and they have every right to have a solution to that. We've done extensive work with Environment Canada over the years through PFRA again in doing what we called monitoring wells to see if we could find better groundwater solutions for some of these issues. We were fortunate in a few, but unfortunately not as fortunate in many.

So for these communities this is the solution, and what we are talking about is utilizing about .1 per cent of the flow of a river. I think in every year we pass more through than we need to pass through under our agreements on interprovincial transfers. There's no question that in this province we have got to take a very serious look at how we manage our water supply. That's what the Water for Life strategy is all about. We are going to have to find more ways of capturing water in peak flow times for utilization when flows are lower.

I think that if one studies the water management practices in this province, one could be very proud. My predecessor, Henry Kroeger, who was the MLA for the area, minister of transportation, did extensive work particularly on the South Saskatchewan basin, left me all of his materials, and it's fascinating to see what types of water management projects have happened. We had a lot of discussion around the Oldman River, and it was startling for some people to understand that if it wasn't for water management, the fish in that river would die because there would be no constant flow.

You look at the Red Deer and what the dam has done for that. There is no flooding in the town of Drumheller. Well, very little. There's a ravine that sometimes in a heavy rainfall causes us a little problem, but the river doesn't. That's managing that flow, and while it manages the flow, it also affords opportunities for recreation and quality of life that people appreciate and utilize.

This is a small amount of water, but I want to assure the members that in this project and in the other one that was the Lacombe area, there is the greatest and utmost care taken in how that water is transferred and the disposition of the waste water that would come off of that.

I think it's important that when these do come forward, they need to come to this Legislature. I think it's important that we have the opportunity to discuss them and understand how we're managing this water, and I compliment everyone who has come to their feet in this discussion to try and better understand that this is a safe way to transfer water, and that all – all – other opportunities to supply that water have been looked at. But this is a life and death matter to these people, and it is for many, many of our rural communities.

I happen to be in the area where one of the first major pipelines was done. Water was brought up from the Red Deer River to the plant at Sheerness, and again through the foresight of my predecessor, the hon. Henry Kroeger, a large, oversized pipe was brought from Sheerness to the reservoir at Hanna, where there was a treatment plant that could treat all of the water that would be required to service the communities east of that. That pipeline originated and started, fortunately, mainly on a gravity flow so not a high-cost one to operate. It takes water to communities right down the line to Oyen. That has expanded since and has gone west to communities like Delia, Craigmyle, and so on.

I can tell you that at times our hospitals in Oyen could not develop X-rays. We had to close schools because there wasn't sufficient water to flush toilets to operate washrooms. That's something that for those of us who are here and will go home tonight and have a shower and not think about an interruption or not be concerned about the quality because we know that the treatment systems here – we may get a little odour once in a while from heavy runoff or something. But we're confident that when we utilize that water, it's safe. For these other communities, unless we do projects like that, they don't have that confidence.

It shouldn't matter where you live or what nature has done in the makeup of our province. To say to people: well, you can move or move your town. Well, I can tell you that you can't move this area, and we shouldn't. It contributes in a huge way to the economy of this province, and this project will allow those citizens to have what many of us take for granted.

So I support it. I hope that some of my comments have been helpful to the members opposite to understand this and would invite them, certainly, at any time to visit those communities and try to understand the challenges that they have and the depth that they have gone to in looking at other solutions. This is the only solution in this instance that makes any economic sense, but more than that, probably the only way to deliver water to those communities that is safe and reliable.

I have every confidence in the people that will manage this supply, that they will do it with great integrity because nobody understands the value of water more than those of us who don't have much of it. If you look at the efficiency of the water management – and I said again that I speak mainly about the south – it is one of the greatest stories that could ever be told, and we should be so proud of it. Four per cent of our land is under irrigation, provides almost 25 per cent of the crop product in this province, and has allowed us to go into new crops and diversify our economy such as two potato plants to provide jobs and economy. I look at what the irrigation community has done in efficiency of utilization of that water, and it is an amazing story. For those of you who live in the south – and I know one of your members does – and look at the aqueduct, which was really maybe the beginning of water management in the south, we've come a long way, and we're always searching for new ways.

The hon. member who brings this bill forward has many examples in his area in the greenhouse industry of wonderful utilization and conservation of a very precious resource. Again, if you ever have an opportunity to see the utilization of hydroponics in that area and understand how every drop is important, it would be a useful experience for any of you.

So I urge you to support it. I urge you to continue to question how we utilize water. When we move along this path of the Water for Life strategy, we should all be involved. We're very fortunate in this province to sit on perhaps the greatest supply of fresh water there is in North America. It is in our best interests, and in fact it's our responsibility to manage that resource well.

Thank you for the opportunity to contribute.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm not going to echo the minister's comments, but I'd like to assure the hon. members who asked the questions tonight that I truly appreciate the questions that they've asked. From my dealings with the environment and everything else I really appreciate the fact that this legislation is here so that we can debate like this any project that may come up on a case-by-case basis. I think that is so important.

One of the things with regard to this project is the fact that I think there are four main factors that have been considered by Alberta Environment that make the passage of this bill a requirement, a need, and I think it should be approved. First off, is the water available? Secondly, would any existing licence holders be affected? Thirdly, will we still maintain enough water to meet our agreements with Saskatchewan and Manitoba? Fourthly, will we still have enough water to meet the needs of the ecosystem? Those questions have been answered, and the answer is yes. In fact, the Red Deer River does have the amount of water that answers all those questions, and the town of Stettler does have the ability with their infrastructure to provide the water that's required in order to meet the requirements of this project.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I very much appreciated the discussion on this bill from both sides of the House to this point. I think that there are some very reasonable questions that have been answered. Whenever we consider a piece of legislation that authorizes an interbasin transfer of water, it should be carefully scrutinized, in my view.

I recognize that in this case, like the previous case that we debated in the House, we're talking about water that is for human consumption that will be filtered and chlorinated according to national standards. Essentially, the water from the tap comes from one basin, and when it goes down the drain and it's treated, it ends up in the other one. That's the type of interbasin transfer that we're talking about.

I think that as we see changes in rural Alberta, we're going to see more rationalization of our water systems, and we may well see more of these. But I do draw a distinction between that type of interbasin transfer, which makes the transfer of organisms or different life forms from one basin to another extremely difficult, if not impossible – it's different from the wholesale transfer of raw water through pipes that may completely cross-contaminate the biological ecosystem of one to another. So we draw a distinction in this particular case, and we recognize the importance of providing safe potable water to Alberta communities. In this case, we're in a qualified way prepared to support this bill.

Nevertheless, there are real, significant challenges facing Alberta in terms of its water supply. I have to disagree with the hon. Minister of Finance about sitting on the greatest freshwater resources in the country. I think, in fact, Alberta is perhaps the driest province in Canada and has more challenges relative to water supply and surface water than some other provinces. There are some significant problems. We've touched on the whole question of using fresh surface water in order to bring up depleted oil wells. I know that the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat has talked about his hope that this is continuing to decline. Mr. Chairman, we need more than hope on this question. We need a clear policy and strong direction from the government because this is water that we cannot afford to use in this way, and it should be completely eliminated as a practice as quickly as possible, in our view.

There are real challenges with the continuing growth of the population of this province and continuing urbanization and changes to agriculture. The demand for water is increasing very rapidly, yet the ability to meet those demands is declining. Not the least of the challenges is that posed by global warming. The government has admitted that global warming exists. That took some work on the part of the opposition during the last term of the Legislature, but they have acknowledged that this is fact. In fact, one of the problems that we have is that the droughts are becoming longer, and they're becoming more sustained and deeper. So that dries out the province. It dries out forests. It dries out agricultural regions as well. And that trend will continue if not accelerate.

Furthermore, much of the water in Alberta comes from rivers that are glacier fed, and it's the fact that they're glacier fed that makes them all-year rivers rather than seasonal rivers. In fact, the glacier feeding the Bow River is expected to be gone entirely within 35 years, I was told, and I think that's correct. Other rivers in this province that are glacier fed, like the North Saskatchewan, are going to become seasonal rivers within 50 to 100 years when the glaciers feeding them are completely melted. So what we're heading for, as demand for water increases and supplies of water decline, is a very serious crisis in this province sometime in the future, and we need to be very aware of that.

One of the things that we can do aside from eliminating fresh water use in oil recovery is to become stronger in terms of conservation. I'm not in any way attempting to suggest that the Stettler area has not taken vigorous conservation methods, but I think there's an example from my experience with the city of Edmonton that's very interesting. About 1995 the administration of the city of Edmonton proposed a very large expansion of the E.L. Smith water treatment plant, something, as I recall, in excess of $200 million to expand that and to build a large treated-water pipeline from the Rosedale water treatment plant as well, which added another 50 or so million dollars.

A number of councillors got together and pushed council for an alternative. The alternative was a water conservation program in the city of Edmonton. It was voluntary in nature but involved some changes to standards for construction, new homes and so on, and it talked about the reduction of water in a number of ways, including for the watering of lawns and so on. The result was, Mr. Chairman, that we were able to defer the construction of this plant, which has never been needed since that time, and we're looking now almost 10 years back.

Not only did we defer that cost, which would've been passed on to ratepayers in their monthly bill; we were able to save ratepayers over a five- to seven-year period about $3 a month on their bill by simply implementing a voluntary conservation program. So not only is water conservation important for preserving our water supplies and meeting our needs into the future; it's a very important way of saving money for ratepayers as well.

I think the government could go much farther in encouraging industry and municipalities to implement these kinds of water conservation programs and may allow us to postpone or completely eliminate the need for some of these projects. Again, I'm not saying that this particular project would necessarily qualify under those terms, but it is something that we should be vigorously pursuing because it's the kind of policy that doesn't cost the government money. It actually saves the government and taxpayers and ratepayers money right across the board. I think that the government should pursue this kind of approach most vigorously as one element in a water strategy for this province.

So with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will indicate that we'll support this bill although we are concerned about the direction here, and I take my seat. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just one comment to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood that, indeed, in the case of this project and for perhaps all of eastern Alberta and all of southern Alberta the people who live there are in a water conservation mode at all times. That's a way of life for them.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'll wrap up very quickly. I want to again thank the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat for being so willing to answer what we believe are important questions. These are not intended to be clock stappers.

I also want to thank the Minister of Finance for providing the type of clarification that helped me with the decision. It is my intention to do just as you've recommended, to visit a number of the rural communities both in the south and the north. I'm looking forward to it in terms of the parks and protected areas as well as in my role in infrastructure.

The other quick reason for standing up is that I didn't want to appear in tomorrow's question period as: according to the debate last night, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity wants to keep Stettler from having a viable fresh water supply. I want the quality of life throughout all the municipalities maintained to the highest degree, keeping in mind the conservation methods I'm very pleased to hear about. I never suspected that Stettler wasn't, you know, being very responsible in its water usage.

There is a temptation when something is said – for example, when I talked about sustainable resources and ingenuity, I made a comment with regard to a specific forestry practice which I was concerned about. I've since had some interesting chats with members from the forestry association, who have assisted me with my understanding of the global process in Alberta. I still have concerns about the specific area of the Kananaskis, but I do appreciate the clarification. I do appreciate the offer to have a complete discussion. I wouldn't say tonight was debate; I would say it was more along the lines of discussion.

We're the members that the people of Alberta have entrusted with the well-being of their futures, and if we don't hold these discussions within this Legislature, my concern is that the discussion doesn't get held.

Thank you very much.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to have 20 guests with me from the Kneehill Christian school, which is in the community of Linden. The students today are accompanied by Miss Terri Miller, a teacher, Miss Dana Toews, a teaching assistant, as well as parents Glen Regehr, Mrs. Lois Regehr, Mr. Steve Berniko as well as Cheryl Berniko and Beverly Cottier. They're all seated in the public gallery, and I'd like the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege for me today to introduce a very large group from the Evansview school. They're accompanied by teachers Darlene Haggart, Bonnie Perrett, and Carol Baksa, and at this time I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce a group of students from probably one of the biggest school areas in Alberta. In fact, they're taught by the School of Hope, and only the school is centred in Vermilion. The children are home-schooled all over the province. They're here today with their group leaders Monika Poland and Chuck Marple and their parents Wanda Auld, Allison Mohr, Sharon Robertson, Kelley Thompson, Harvey and Val Younker, and Tammy Younker. I'd ask them and their students to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 18 of Alberta's brightest students from my constituency of Highwood. They are visiting the Legislature today from the Edison school, just north of Okotoks, and have come to see question period. The students are accompanied by their teacher, Joseph Smith and five parent helpers: Diane Duncan, Candy Erikson, Elly Singer, Karen Hodges, and Syl Mortensen. They are seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask that they rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my distinct pleasure that I introduce to you and through you my baby sister from Manitoba, who is a highly respected and prominent Liberal organizer in Manitoba, and also my nephew Michael Brennan. My sister's name is Florence Eastwood, and Michael is from Leduc-Beaumont-Devon. I would ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a longish introduction. With your permission I take pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Ruth Maria Adria, a highly respected elder advocate. She is accompanied by 13 other very concerned family members, many of whom happen to be seniors as well. The Elder Advocates of Alberta held a press conference this morning highlighting the following concerns: problems with Bonnyville health care centre . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, with the utmost respect, this is an introduction, not a ministerial or member's statement. There is an opportunity later this afternoon or next week if the hon. member wants to provide a statement or a recognition. So let's get on with it.

Dr. Pannu: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll take your direction.

The names of the guests, Mr. Speaker, are Yvonne Nadeau, her husband Guy Brookes, Flora L'Heureux, Audrey Johnston, Louis Adria, Gordon Haig, Brenda Haig, Ed Marcum, Orpha Donnelly, Katherine Kutt, Joseph Green, Eva Makowichuk, Anne Romanow. I'll ask these guests to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: To the hon. members for Edmonton-Centre and Cardston-Taber-Warner, are your guests here now, or do you want to do the introductions later?

Mr. Hinman: Later on.

Ms Blakeman: I'm not sure if they're here or not. I will go ahead with it if that's all right with you.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, I'm very fortunate in having a wonderful postsecondary institution in my riding, and I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a social studies 10 class from NorQuest College. I believe they're in the public gallery, and there are 11 students here today accompanied by their instructor, Michelle Tracy. If they're in the gallery, I would ask them to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly. I don't see them rising, so I'm assuming they'll come in later, and I'll send them the Hansard to let them know.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Others? The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you two individuals that are very close to me. In making the first introduction, I will be invoking the legislative immunity that we enjoy by sitting in this Assembly as it is the birthday of my wife, who is sitting in the Assembly. At risk of dire consequences to myself I will ask my wife, Evelyn Oberg, to please stand. Sitting beside her is a resident of the Calgary-Glenmore constituency who has been very active down there and is somebody that is extremely wonderful. It is my wife's mother, Mrs. Katy Walter. Could you please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, 23 individuals have advised me today that they would like to participate, so brevity would be really helpful.

The first Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Securities Commission

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Finance assured this House that she trusted the full independence of the report compiled by her nine commissioners from the Alberta Securities Commission, yet former and current employees with that organization have indicated that the commissioners together with Mr. Sibold and Mr. Linder, the chairman and executive director, are a tight-knit group. What still remains to be seen is why this government continues to take the word of these part-time commissioners, paid $288,000 a year, over the word of 30 employees who came forward and braved threats from an employer who publicly called them cowardly and depraved. To the Premier: what does the Premier have to say to the employees of the Alberta Securities Commission who want to come forward and speak out against the toxic work environment there but can't out of fear of legal threats from Mr. Sibold and Mr. Linder?

Mr. Klein: I don't believe that to be true, Mr. Speaker, but I'll have the hon. Minister of Finance speak to it.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have commented on this in the House prior to today. I think that it's obvious that the members of the commission staff feel quite comfortable in coming forward with their concerns, which they have done, and the commission in receiving that and, in fact, a letter from me requesting it launched an investigation with an external person to provide information on this.

The other point I want to make again is that the hon. member opposite keeps asking for this to be made public, when, in fact, these persons came forward on the basis of a solicitor/client relationship and anonymity. So, Mr. Speaker, I don't think the employees at the commission are in any way inhibited from coming forward with their concerns.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, she's out of touch.

To the Minister of Finance: would the minister please explain why a number of enforcement employees at the Alberta Securities Commission were not even aware of Mr. Mack's investigation into the enforcement problems of the commission? What is the secret?
