I also thought I'd mention that there is, actually, a fairly broad stakeholder group that's been working on natural gas in coal to deal with all the access questions, the density questions, environmental issues, public awareness. That initial discussion will probably be coming back at the end of May some time. We are trying to involve a broader stakeholder group with respect to natural gas in coal. Being given an education component and awareness and support for this is going to be very key to realizing the potential in this very, very large resource of natural gas.

You mentioned about Enron again and public inquiries. You know, if it weren't for the fact that many parties have already monitored and looked at and watched day in and day out to see what's happening, specifically looked at a variety with Enron, not just the 1999 instance in particular – I'm not here to support Enron. Enron has done some things wrong and been appropriately judged and should have been. That's what happens to companies that operate unethically, and enforcement ought to be there to ensure that we don't promote or condone anything. But with respect to their activities here, in the first years, actually, legislated hedges prevented any material upside.

Before the power purchase arrangements were sold, we actually had in place mechanisms where the rates of the power for the generators that were here in Alberta were capped at how much would be paid for by the consumer. So if the retail market was behaving as in a transition period and getting used to new rules, a very small capacity came from these tie-lines from B.C. It was a very small amount of power that could have influenced the overall market. Therefore, a cap was placed on it, and Enron would not have been able to participate with any significant upside. They might have been able to do trade in a tight supply and have done some things to help, as anybody trading in the marketplaces might do some things that would lead to some volatility in that market.

But there's been quite a bit of examination already. The reason why the federal Competition Bureau was involved initially is we only had the jurisdiction in Alberta. Part of this deals with the tie-line into B.C., and we don't have jurisdiction there to really do any of the work on that. That's why it's a file of the federal Competition Bureau. Some of the recent inquiries or statements and allegations – and they are just that – in Washington state brought out some more information, and we thought: yes, the market surveillance administrator did make the right call. We want to make sure that we understand what's gone on and be clear about it and verify if the public safety has been protected in this case.

Many of the rules have been improved and are continually monitored to ensure that aberrations in the market or things that wouldn't make sense are corrected. So there's more transparency in the rules, a very complicated, really, market design if you get into the technical aspects of it.

I would tell you that when you look at those that have been involved, they know through tight supply that the market and the price curve is very much of a spike. When you get to the point where you have little supply, then the incremental power is priced very expensively because there's nothing left. Yet we demand and want the power when we want it. Therefore, it will be priced on those spikes.

Some volatility did happen through that period of time. I can't say otherwise. But I do want to make clear that the market surveillance administrator, AESO, and their oversight – certainly, in all of the reviews of this there's no new information to really bring forward.

Furthermore, you know, Enron is a bankrupt company. The Washington utility owes them a lot of money. Therefore, they're creating all of the innuendo and everything to get away from paying the bankruptcy credit trustees the monies that they actually owe. They're in a very different situation. We don't actually have monies that we owe to any party in particular, be it to Enron or otherwise. It's a bankrupt entity, no longer viable to collect and/or pursue.

I want to assure again that the market surveillance administrator, I'm going to continue to emphasize, has done a very excellent job in looking at and reviewing and has come to those conclusions and does not merit for reasons of trying to undermine the integrity of confidence – clearly, you might have an agenda that you don't want the deregulation to occur. So if you want to continue to put things to distill or destroy confidence in the market, I guess that you can continue to ask about the past and change everything. But the fact is that those that were aware have responded and can assure the public that at this stage, if evidence were ever forthcoming, they have acted on it and will continue to do just that. We have to look at facts, not just innuendo, but clearly they'll base their work on just that.

I want to state that it continues to be labelled improperly. We talk about maybe some of the concerns, but huge successes – I mean enormous successes – have happened in this marketplace with all of the generation that's come on in a short time and from a variety of sources, very much environmental kinds of sources, too, renewable sources. More wind power has been brought on in here than in any other jurisdiction in Canada. We have biomass as another alternative. We have numerous cogeneration kinds of choices. We have a greater diversity, probably more reliability in supply, than in any recent past, even with all of the huge growth that we've had.

We have a reliable supply of power in a growing economy that isn't equalled anywhere else in this country. We must remind ourselves that the consumer today is reaping huge benefits. There are great success stories. We could go on at great length to outline how much lower the prices are here in Alberta for nonhydro – and they are – than anywhere in Canada. We don't have the advantages of having all the water and the hydro here in Alberta, so truly we don't have that part of the advantage, but we do have a very good, reliable supply of power, and it is very well serving the public today.

You talked about transportation with respect to the pipelines. Getting the value added, clearly, is our policy and going to be actively worked on. I talked about an integrated energy policy that we are putting as a high priority of the work that we're doing in the ministry. That means that for some of the components, it includes very much that value-added question so that we're not just shipping raw bitumen out of the country, that we're not just shipping the raw resources, that we are looking to do all of the upgrading that we possibly can, that we look to using bitumen as a feedstock. In fact, we have a Hydrocarbon Upgrading Task Force, that is looking at how to use bitumen as a feedstock for the petrochemical industry. How do you put more use on other energy sources than use of just natural gas?

I guess we'll answer the rest of the questions in due course and supply them to you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate this chance to participate in this budget debate on the Department of Energy, and I will try to be brief.

My first question is with regard to the royalty tax credit program. In the minister's response to the Auditor General's recommendations the hon. minister accepted using measures to assess whether the program is meeting its objectives, which is recommendation 11 for 2003, and actually went ahead and drafted an objective and a list of performance measures. But in the response they indicated that they would have to work with Alberta Finance to get formal approval. So maybe this is an area where I need some clarification because, you know, you accept the recommendation, and then you go ahead and implement it. I'm not sure where the Ministry of Finance fits into this picture.

Many people are concerned, naturally, that the taxpayers of this province may not be getting their fair share. Royalties are in place to benefit every Albertan, and reducing them seems to be geared at maybe pleasing the industry. I really think that the difference between 1 per cent and 25 per cent is a huge and vast difference. My question naively will be: will these companies fold, will they go out of business, if they pay the 25 per cent? Are they not making handsome profits already?

This leads me to my second question, which is really with regard to the criteria for what constitutes an expansion and what is classified as a new project. Again, I would like some clarification from the hon. minister because it seems like, you know, you look at this, and it might be a way to get around paying the 25 per cent. Instead, they pay just 1 per cent, and they're happy.

Secondly, when I visited the Public Accounts Committee as a visitor last week I asked the hon. minister about his statement about how highly the industry thinks or approves of his department. I actually asked whether a similar survey was or is going to be conducted to ask the public what they think and how much they approve of the ministry or the government in general after deregulation. The minister indicated that because it's a policy question, it could not be answered efficiently or properly in the deliberations of the Public Accounts Committee. So I think today I would like to re-ask the hon. minister and revisit this question because it is a fair question, and it is a reasonable question to ask.

If we look at the industry as one client of this ministry, I would argue that the public is a bigger and more important client. So you asked the one client if they're happy with their government and with this ministry, and they said yes. I can't remember the exact figure, but I think it was in excess of an 80 per cent satisfaction rating. I would be very interested if we asked the general public a simple question on a survey: are you pleased with the Ministry of Energy? Are you happy with deregulation? How satisfied are you? Then we can actually solicit feedback and some responses from the general public.

My third question to the hon. minister, Mr. Chairman, is with regard to hopefully keeping the regulated rate option indefinitely. It's about offering choice to the consumers. I, for one, as a taxpayer and as a consumer resisted the one- or three- or five-year deregulated services contracts which I was bombarded with. I was receiving door knocks every second day, almost, from somebody who was trying to sell me a contract and trying to get me to sign on. I am, really, certainly happy to have resisted and rejected and declined those offers. I am currently on the regulated rate option, and I think many people are doing the same. Many of my constituents in Edmonton-McClung have approached me, and they said that they're worried that once this option expires and if it is not extended, they will be forced to surrender, succumb to paying higher prices, and we will all be at the mercy of utility companies with nowhere to go and no one to turn to.

I would urge the minister to consider keeping or extending the regulated rate option indefinitely for the benefit of all Albertans. Again, my approach is one of choice, offering choice to the consumers. It's a question that I get asked a lot, and I think today would be a suitable opportunity for me to present it to the minister. I would hope that he would offer a definitive answer there, please.

With that, I will take my seat, look forward to the answers from the minister, and invite further discussion. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think I may have missed some of this. If so, we'll look at Hansard and respond later.

Your first one I think was a question about the ARTC program, particularly with Finance and Energy jointly administering. The policy for the Alberta royalty tax credit lies in the Department of Energy as to its structure, program, and the like. The administration, because it's actually administered through the corporate income tax or through the Income Tax Act itself, is therefore actually audited and verified for compliance and all of that through Finance in the administration of the taxation. That's why Finance will look to the administration of the program, but in light of the program relating to energy the policy itself lies with the Department of Energy.

You talked about a fair share. As I caught the drift of the question, I think it was about the oil sands. Why not go to the 25 per cent now versus the 1 per cent of gross until payout and then go to 25 per cent of net after payout? The assumption is that profits are already there. I have to re-emphasize again that just in one month in particular the royalty rate is still on bitumen. It's calculated. The bitumen rate is not the west Texas intermediate rate you see posted. In fact, it's a substantial discount based on market prices. The real discount at least is going to reflect the cost of upgrading that to the light oil grades that is the west Texas intermediate grade.

So we've got to take a product that's bitumen. Those are very costly upgraders that they have to put in place. It is our wish and expressed policy to work with the industry to see that we do all the upgrading we can of that bitumen here. But while that's happening, simultaneously the demand for heavy oils at any one time has quite a differential based upon the supply of heavy oils versus light oils. Refineries can only handle so much capacity of heavy oils, so you can get a glut in the marketplace of heavy oils, which is what happened last December, for example. They were actually losing money through that month of December, not making any money, despite that you would have seen fairly high prices for light oils.

In that light, I would say that the risk is still very large for these industries to get payout when you're thinking – many of these projects, when you add the upgraders, $5 billion to $10 billion some of them recently announced, up front have a huge risk. These are going to take a long time to get back. It was designed about how you see, given that high risk, that we participate in the life cycle of the project with them also. It isn't a matter of always having to get it all up front, but you look at the economic rent available through the life of the project. That's how the regime was chosen: a deferral of some of it up front and participation after some of the large risk capital has been recovered.

I would still say that it has proven very successful in a high risk when these are 30- to 40-year projects, and the volatility of commodity prices can be anything over a fairly short time period. Yes, they're high today. The good news about that is that'll pay their projects out faster too, so we will participate even sooner with less bitumen being extracted. We will then have a larger resource we'll be participating in at the higher royalty rates. We are benefiting. All it's done is moving up sooner the time at which we're going to get there. So this is a huge win for Albertans, maybe not in direct cash today but coming to them very soon as a result.

When you think about these projects and when they're looking to attract capital, they have to compete with capital around the world for various competing projects even in the energy industry. These projects aren't actually raising capital upon a rate of return expectation higher than the normal conventional plays. In fact, they're actually still sold at a basis that's somewhat lower because you know the security of the supply, and therefore they're not really realizing this real windfall in the oil sands that some might believe that they are yet.

If in the future those things continue to hold out, I guess we can always review that down the road if the economics really change. We aren't there yet, and Albertans are benefiting by the fact of the huge amount of investment in jobs and in opportunity that's happening and being created in Alberta for a long time. You build those upgraders: good, highly paid, skilled jobs. Those are the things that build a lot of capacity for how we benefit not just in royalty structures but by employment, by personal tax, by corporate tax. We get that back in a lot of ways by having encouraged investment to continue to flood in. In fact, the more we can do to attract investment to this province, the more opportunity that we will have truly to be able to sustain all of the things that we value even in all of our other programs.

One of the questions I didn't get a chance to answer in the previous relates to the upgrading. Everybody mentions, yes, there's support of the upgrading to happen here. I just want to raise a concern that I still have with respect to the implementation by the federal government of this Kyoto plan. If we want to do upgrading, if we want the petrochemical industry here, if we want the refining here, those are industries that produce carbon dioxide in fairly substantial amounts. So if we want to go back to targets pre-1990 but have an industry in growth and population that is magnitudes larger than ever it was in Alberta itself, we put it at peril and risk because that will happen, that upgrading and refining is going to happen somewhere. The choice is: should we locate it here in Alberta?

I really worry about the application of the protocol, not so much that we shouldn't look at climate change and best practices in technology and carbon dioxide sequestration. It's not about that. I just think the methodology of the protocol itself is flawed, and the application of that by the federal government is very deficient and puts potentially at huge risk those kinds of questions. So I'm hoping, when we come back, that since there's such overwhelming support that we do that upgrading and the refining and the petrochemical industry, there's support for those kinds of questions when it comes to those challenges that we face, too, so that we're not just hitting the one side of the coin. It comes with both.

You mentioned the expansion versus new project, and that's very important. We do have quite a series of rules and regulations that outline what's a new versus an expansion program in the oil sands. It's not just a matter of them arbitrarily choosing. They are therefore also going to have to come back and prove that it really meets all the tests, that it's an expansion versus a new.

The net present value of that project is not to be impacted to Albertans, so there are even financial criteria in that that see that we're not harmed as one might be by clever arrangements, I guess, to try and call everything an expansion versus a new project. We are going to have to make sure we're very clear with industry that they can understand and have a predetermined awareness of what will be expansion versus new projects. That's why in the recent one with Firebag and Suncor the department ruled, given all of the criteria, that that's a new project, not an expansion.

You mention an awareness, a survey, the department looking to the public versus just asking the stakeholders. In this case I'm not certain if those are the questions or not. I do think I would concur that it's very important for us to have a greater awareness with the public. We have talked a lot internally about how we gain support from the public to continue to realize the opportunity that lies with this resource. It's probably only going to happen if we can continue to have the support of the public to do so.

When it comes to having to get access to the surface of the land, you want to take vast tracts of land in the oil sands area, and there's a life cycle kind of a question. You want to disturb that land for a number of years yet support standards to reclaim it, or you want to get access to the farmer's field for that natural gas and coal, or you want to think about sour gas, which is around the population everywhere – those wells are everywhere. Being able to do that is going to be very conditional upon the approval of the public. Therefore, our need to get out and talk and engage the public, I'd agree, is a very important aspect of what we must do in a greater measure. As to how that's framed and structured, whether it becomes questionnaires or other ways, I support the objectives to which you speak.

Therefore, we are working towards a higher awareness campaign, and it's not just to put messages out, but it's to engage people. It's to understand the issues. It's all about making sure that we have the confidence of the public to develop the resources that are theirs and to provide greater predictability, really, to everybody: Albertans, industry, investors, and clearly regulators.

With respect to the RRO being kept indefinitely and offering choice to consumers, I mentioned earlier that we were in the middle of some review of the wholesale market and retail market designs. We will continually be monitoring. I think these things are continuous. It's not a matter of events. You're always making sure that you have the best structures in place in any regulatory environment. In this case those are discussions that are on the table. I don't know the answers yet to what that'll mean in design. We plan to bring that back in the very near future for discussion.

As you know, the regulated rate option is scheduled to end on July 1, 2006. So in anticipation of that, we're reviewing those kinds of questions and will be happy to report back after we've finished some more due diligence on that topic.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a few more general comments and maybe a couple of specific questions at the end. I was interested when the minister was talking about budgeting. I remember the budgeting that he talked about in the '80s. As I recollect, it was a Conservative government then, too, and I remember us saying at the time: they're putting on rose-coloured glasses. The times were different then, and I think that they often overestimated the revenues, and then we'd end up with a deficit each year. It wasn't good budgeting. I agree.

[Ms Haley in the chair]

At the same time I think we've had a tendency here in the last number of years to deliberately underestimate the budget, so we get these huge surpluses that say: "Aren't we brilliant? We've got all this money rolling in." I agree with the minister. I think the minister used the term that we can err on the side of being conservative in terms of our estimates, and we should do that. We should do that in our own household budgeting, of course. You don't say: "Well, this is the best-case scenario. We're going to budget there." But at the same time you try to be as realistic as you can.

Now, I recognize that trying to figure out the price of oil and gas over a year is not easy. It's probably harder in this province than others because of that nonrenewable resource, but I think we can do better. I don't think it gives us a lot of confidence when all of a sudden we have billions of dollars in surplus after. Then we can begin to budget into the trust fund and other things that we should be doing, building that up.

So I'm not saying, you know, take the best-case scenario. It could be $50 or $60, or whatever it is. Surely the department is sitting down over a period of time and they have not the best-case scenario and not the worst-case scenario but what they think is going to happen. I think that's what we should be shooting for. I think that they've deliberately been too conservative, if I could put it that way, in terms of those estimates, and I don't think that's good budgeting either.

I'm not going to say a lot about deregulation. I'm always amused by watching government ministers come and go and talk about what a great success story deregulation is. The public just doesn't buy it. I think most people see it as a triumph of ideology over common sense or, maybe, Steve West's revenge on the government and the rest of us here. No matter how you spin it – and the minister is pretty good at spinning, you know – it just doesn't ring true with people.

Most people know that deregulation has not worked. It hasn't worked in California and most places because it's not the type of commodity where there is that – I mean, the private sector works well in the economic area where there is legitimate competition.

When you're dealing in a situation like this, it doesn't make a lot of sense, and the minister can say that with all the supplies coming on and all the rest of it, spin it however he wants, but the public knows. The public is well aware. You talk to anybody on the street, and they all say that it's been a disaster. That's spin from them and spin from us, and we can debate that for a long time.

I want to talk, though, very quickly about the tar sands. I see the government's strategy. Admittedly, the tar sands are very important to this province, but I see us sort of bent on moving as quickly as we can, no matter what happens, at getting the tar sands out. I believe now that's why Mr. Smith has gone to Washington. It's to get into that market as quickly as possible. So we wipe away any impediment to big oil to get there.

We've had this discussion about division 8 in the tar sands with the Horizon project coming up. I think that's going to be a major mistake down the way because the qualified people are the building trades people that are there, that are from the unions. They have the skill, not the other ones, no matter how much you bring in, and to have labour unrest at this time that the government wants to move ahead, I don't think it's very smart economics. I see this as all part of: let's get in there quickly, let's dig it out, and let's get moving as fast as we can into the American market. I think we have to temper it with fairness, and we have to temper it with some common sense if this is going to happen.

I want to tie that into the royalty rates. I was almost going to bring out my handkerchief and cry when the minister was talking about the poor companies losing money in December with their bitumen. You know, I thought: boy, maybe we should have a handout here so that we can give them some money because things are so tough. I admit that in royalty rates you have to find sort of that middle ground that's fair to the people of Alberta. It's their resource, and we should get a rent on that, the royalty rates, and enough incentive so that the companies will drill. I know that's not an easy situation, but I would suggest that any studies that I've seen – and the minister says: well, the money will go elsewhere. The figures that I've seen in Norway, where they have the equivalent, and Alaska, because there aren't a lot of places in the world that have similar heavy oil or bitumen to what we have – their royalty rates are much heavier than they are here, much more expensive than they are here, the rent is much more to those governments than it is here.

So I think that's what we have to look at, what our competitors are doing, and we should be at least competitive with them. I suggest to you that I don't think we are, and that hurts in the long run. Sure we've got money coming in right now. We've got a lot of money going through this province because of oil and gas and the tar sands. I will come to the length of time that we're talking about because I think it's alluded to in the budget statement in your department on page 203 where you talk about the future. It seems to me that one of the most important things that we have – and it was Mr. Lougheed that brought it in – for the future is a trust fund.

We have to grow that because there may be a point sooner than this government thinks – and I'll talk about that in a minute – when the oil and gas revenues start to dwindle and times change and technologies change and the rest of it. We have that trust fund there, and I think we should be growing it faster. That could be, if you like, what it was set up to be: our hedge for the future. We haven't grown it, as the minister well knows, for a long period of time. So it's been stagnant.

You know, the minister talks. I think in here it says: "Alberta's energy sector is not declining. It is on the verge of a transformation that will see Alberta emerge as a world energy capital." Later on they say that the "production of marketable oil sands is expected to reach two million barrels . . . to three million barrels per day by 2020. They talk about the next 20 or 30 years, that this will be there for us for sure – maybe – but I don't think anybody can say that with any certainty for some reasons. Whether we like Kyoto or not, that's a reality, and a lot of companies around the world are going to be changing their technologies. So I don't think we can be absolutely sure that this will be the case. Maybe so. Maybe it won't come on fast enough.

Alternate energy. We are doing something in alternate energy. I think we should be doing more to maintain our role as the energy capital of Alberta. Mind you, I said that 20 years ago when we were sitting in here, and I think we should be doing more, but I don't think we should have all our eggs in one basket. That's why I'm talking about growing the tar sands, and that means getting the best royalty rate that we can and still be competitive to go ahead with some of these projects. But let's not be so complacent to think that this is a truth just because we write it down here. I think we have to be cautious about that, Mr. Minister, because of what may be happening in the world with technology very quickly in alternate energy and the rest of it.

So maybe the minister's statements here or his department's statements might be right 30 years from now, but he or I might not be around 30 years from now to find out if it was right or not. If it's wrong, and we've thrown all our eggs in one basket, so to speak, it would be an absolute disaster for this province. So I'm saying: let's temper that, let's build a trust fund, let's get the royalty rates that we can, let's develop as much alternate energy as we can to maintain being the energy capital. That does not rule out moving on the tar sands, as we should, in a more moderate way.

The other point that I would like to make to the minister – and he correctly talks about things that we can also do in the tar sands: "The need to extract more oil from existing fields may be met by using CO₂ . . . while oil sands upgrading may provide new feedstocks for Alberta's refining and petrochemical industries." Fair enough. Good. But what are we doing now with the gas? One of Premier Lougheed's dreams at the time, as you recall, was that we weren't just going to ship the raw materials, sell it with the gas. So we set up a petrochemical industry.

Now, we're doing that with the pipeline, I believe. We're doing the opposite of what the minister is saying we should do in the tar sands. I think companies like Celanese, for example, that's one of the reasons that they're giving, that they no longer have to take the value-added products and do it here when we're going to be shipping this gasoline. That was our advantage. So I would really suggest that it's reasonable to talk about upgrading in the tar sands, but I think we've forgotten what we are doing in the petrochemical industry here in the province. I believe that that's costing us jobs. It certainly is one of the reasons, at least with the Celanese plant, that they're talking about.

The other point I would want to make – and we get into natural gas in coal. I don't know about this. There's a lot of argument. I'm sure that the minister will say that we can do this, that there's such a thing as clean coal, you know, in protecting the environment. There are many people, I'm sure the minister is aware, that argue that there is no such thing in terms of the environment. It can be better than what we've done in the past, but it's still going to be harmful for the environment. Again, the point I would make: if around the world people are worried about the environment and they're into the Kyoto protocol, and people are using coal here, there may be a problem in terms of marketing our product. I don't know.

I don't pretend to know whether there's such a thing as clean coal, if we can get it to that level or not. But, as I say, many experts that I've read about, I'm sure the minister is aware, would argue that point, that there is no such thing. So I just caution there.

Mr. Chairman, those are general comments, but a specific question, because it ties into what I was talking about, has to do with the last Auditor General's report and the government's response. I'm looking at number 10, oil sands approvals, where the Auditor General recommends that the Department of Energy "set expected ranges for analyzing the costs and forecasted resource prices submitted on oil sands project applications" and "incorporate risk into its present value test used to assess project applications." It says in the government's response that it's been accepted and that this will be developed in 2004-2005. I wonder if the minister had some general comments ahead to indicate to us how they're going to follow there.

Number 11, evaluation of industry reporting, says, "We recommend that the Department of Energy improve its documentation of its verification procedures for oil sands royalty information and its audit results." "Accepted. Several improvements have already been implemented." This would be more written material, I expect, rather than if he has some general comments, but I'd be interested to know what's happened there.

Finally, number 12, which we were talking about. The Auditor General says, "We again recommend that the Department of Energy document and communicate the objectives of the Alberta Royalty Tax Credit program and use measures to assess whether the program is meeting its objectives." Now, I stress that he says, "We again recommend." The government's response says, "Accepted. As noted in the audit findings . . . the department has developed a draft objective and performance measures." Well, obviously, I guess that the Auditor General didn't accept that. And it says that "the Ministry will work with Alberta Finance to obtain formal approval of the objective."

Mr. Chairman, I would like just to find out what is happening there. Again, if it's too long an answer, written answers later would be fine. Those are, I think, very important Auditor General recommendations.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As you mentioned, you had a number of statements throughout. Maybe I'll start with the Auditor General since I have those in front of me just right now. We will be happy to supply maybe a more detailed response in writing, I think, as an appropriate response.

Number 10. The information I have is that these ranges are still under development at this stage, but we'll be happy to expand upon progress and status on that one.

Number 11. He's taken some of the following actions, and he says: reviewed and updated file documentation standards to ensure that the project risk analysis and audit procedures are adequately documented; prepared a sample working paper file to be utilized as a reference for audit standards for oil sands audits – this will be used to assist in the training of new auditors – and created permanent files for each oil sands project to record the project's audit history as part of that.

Number 12. Likewise, we'll see that we get some written response to the Auditor General's comments.

With respect to the budgeting, you know, you pick a number, and I'm not certain whose you get, what satisfaction. I guess we could go into what's reasonable, what's realistic, what's too conservative. I don't think, actually, that Albertans are harmed in any way if you still continue to be fairly conservative on forecasting commodity prices given that they are so volatile. We've seen price swings of $5 in the last week, up and down. I just don't know how to pick a number. Therefore, I don't know how we'll ever come up with a number that will get everybody to say that they think it's too conservative or not. But I appreciate the comment. I think it is important that we give our best estimate given the nature, that in a budget you're trying to not overdeliver or overpromise on a forecast that could have severe impact.

On deregulation, that the public doesn't buy it. You know, it is clearly about: how do you provide adequacies of supply, which then delivers the price that people want? In today's market, really, what the public is getting is a very good, reliable product at a very affordable price. Therefore, those are things that they want and ask. I don't think the public ever wants to know how to do any of these things – I don't care to figure out how my suit was made – and what all the intricacies are.

An Hon. Member: Tell them the price of it.

Mr. Melchin: Of what? Our suits?

Clearly, I don't think it's the domain of the consumer to have to figure out the intricacies of how it's delivered, but they do want to see that they can have a variety, a selection, of products that can deliver the things they like. Some might be prepared to accept volatility, and markets do come with volatility. I think that's one of the things that should be clear about the design. All commodity prices bring some volatility, and therefore you need to provide products that, if people don't want to live on the spot markets, they have opportunities to have something that's more stable, more predictable, or longer term products to protect on volatility. Those usually in any format come with a premium of a hedge of some fashion. Regulated or nonregulated markets do similar things.

The oil sands. You know, you want to create a structure and a climate that allows activity to occur. I don't know how as a government you get in the way of causing it to occur or preventing it from happening. I'd be worried that we would get in the way, trying to prevent activity when the market conditions and the investment climate are there to do it now. That still means that we have to do some things in order. I don't think that means otherwise. I do think that means you have to see how we can accommodate the regulatory issues, the infrastructure-related questions around that.

It's going to take some time – these are long-term projects – to make sure that we've got it right with the integration of the upgraders being put into place. Not all of the people that are developing the bitumen in the oil sands are large players, and all of them don't have the capacity to look at the upgrading and committing capital upgraders. So we've got a lot of work to do, I think, to help facilitate and correlate that and put that in a fashion that can realize the benefits for Albertans. So I appreciate your concern in that respect.

When we compare rates, though, to Norway and Alaska, Alaska's fields, pools that they have were magnitudes of 10 times larger if not more – I don't have the specific number with me – than our pool sizes when you look at daily production volumes. Norway's are magnitudes of about a hundred times. I'm trying to think of the multiples. They're certainly a hundred times larger in pool size, some of the fields they have, than ours. When we look at competitiveness – that is, I think, the right question – you have to look at not just Norway and Alaska but, clearly, the Gulf coast and a lot of those areas around the world. Our royalty structures in comparison do put us in many respects on the more stringent end of the rate in the structures.

We look at the economic rent of the question, and that's what Alaska and Norway would look at too. They might be on the early side of some with some large pools. In our conventional sources we're actually on smaller pools, trying to get the most out of declining resources in the conventional plays, technology trying to improve the extraction of it. Therefore, really our largest ones are yet to be discovered in the conventional and/or the natural gas in coal, which is a large play but still has some technology in developing it appropriately. So you have to compare all of the factors of the economic rent, and they do come back that Alberta in various comparisons is not anywhere near the bottom of the list as far as most competitive. We still are on one of the studies put actually higher on the list.

As to the trust fund, you know, that's in another department's portfolio. I won't necessarily comment on it other than one comment about savings. We have actually saved substantially over this past decade. The vehicle was: do you save in the heritage fund? Do you build up assets or pay off debt? The net worth of this province has increased by $23 billion from debt repayment. That's now meant that our savings are unencumbered in total. That's a huge amount of savings. That went into a different instrument rather than the heritage fund, but it's the same outcome of net worth, improvement in the province.

We've also added the sustainability fund, 2 and a half billion. We've added to the medical fund and the ingenuity funds. You've got to add those funds up, but that's another $4 billion to $5 billion in savings very recently, and therefore those questions are appropriate to address: when you have surplus like this, how do you prepare yourself for the future? I won't continue to go down that given that it's out of the policy of the ministry that I'm in.

World energy capital. You know, I guess one of the messages I did want to place – and I do think you're right on some issues. This is supposition – I don't know for certain the forecast in the future – but you could find that the greater risk to our resources isn't that we will run out of resource as it will be in discovering new energy sources that might replace them at some stage or use renewable or other alternative energy sources. Therefore, we do concur that we ought to be positioning ourselves to be at the front of energy development in whatever the technology, build off the base that we have, and be at the forefront of leading technology in other forms of energy too. We ought to be an energy capital and use and build off the hydrocarbon base that we have.

With that said, in any foreseeable future, even if new technology was to come on fairly soon, the infrastructure to replace the hydrocarbon – you know, we're a long ways out. I mean, under almost any scenario that they can forecast, you're still decades out from replacing hydrocarbons. If you're looking at hydrocarbons and the worst-case scenario for hydrocarbons, short term we clearly have, you know, decades. I would think that 20 or 30 years would be a very positive outlook on the use and development of our own hydrocarbons. But I'd like to say that there can be and should be the opportunity to develop technology that says that these can be valuable resources in the energy mix forever, you know, for a long time. Use it wiser so that they can extend longer.

Also, addressing the environmental questions, they truly are technological kinds of questions where you lead into the clean coal. It's kind of the same question. I don't know how to answer that today either. We haven't got it to a zero emission standard today, though there are many things and projects that are looking at: how do you get to a zero emission question even on coal?

All of our energy sources today have environmental impacts and imprints in some fashion. There are various trade-offs. Even when you look at hydro, for example, as a source of electricity, it comes with huge environmental impacts of flooding vast tracks of land. So they all have various trade-offs, and I do think that with continuing to push and explore the technology, we could expand the life and opportunity of even the hydrocarbons to be part of that mix for centuries, not decades but a long life, and including technology to solve the environmental impacts and questions. We ought to. I don't think there's anyone here that would support industry or otherwise that wouldn't want to support a clean environmental approach to the development of that industry.

Oil sands. We do want to share the gas, for example. The one thing the Alliance pipeline did bring to us was that we had stranded gas in the province and were trapped at prices well below the market price that we could have, which has now realized in this past year magnitudes of $6 billion to $7 billion in royalties off natural gas, where without the capacity to export, we would be back in substantially smaller amounts. We have allowed for tremendous value to come to Albertans by allowing greater capacity. That said, we do want to take advantage of gas from the north and all those opportunities to build in extraction of those liquids here for the petrochemical industry. I fully concur that that ought to be our direction and is part of the integrated energy strategy that we wish to address.

With those comments, if there are some that we missed, we'll answer later. Thank you.

Sustainable Resource Development

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you, colleagues. I'm pleased to be here tonight to talk about the Sustainable Resource Development 2005-06 budget.

I'd like to take a moment to introduce our staff from my department who have accompanied me here tonight and are sitting in the members' gallery. We have Jamie Curran, my executive assistant; Brad Pickering, my deputy minister; his officials Stew Churlish, assistant deputy minister, strategic corporate services and senior financial officer; Craig Quintilio, our assistant deputy minister of public lands and forests; Cliff Henderson, assistant deputy minister of the forest protection division; Jerry Sunderland, acting assistant deputy minister for strategic forestry initiatives; Ken Ambrock, assistant deputy minister of fish and wildlife; Lesley Chenier-Aussant, manager of policy and planning; Joan McCracken, our assistant director of communications, who has done an excellent job in putting together our business plan and making sure that our notes tonight correspond with that business plan; and Paul Leeder, executive assistant to the deputy minister.

These are just a few of the folks and a handful of our 1,900 dedicated and professional staff who work in Alberta Sustainable Resource Development. Each and every day our people do excellent work that helps improve the quality of life in Alberta's communities. I'm proud that SRD staff are well known and respected by Albertans. They do an outstanding job day in and day out, and I commend them for the excellent work that they do.

Sustainable Resource Development has an important and far-reaching mandate. It's our job to ensure that Alberta's natural resources are sustained and properly managed for the benefit of future generations. To do this, we have to strike the right balance between conservation and development, and that means taking into consideration the economic, social, and environmental values of all Albertans. Important management decisions are based on these principles.

The ministry has key responsibility areas which, broken down in their simplest manner, are forestry, which looks after wildfires, timber allocations, et cetera; land, rangeland management, disposition management plans, et cetera; wildlife, fisheries, habitat management, et cetera; and quasi-judicial boards, the Natural Resources Conservation Board, the Surface Rights Board, and the Land Compensation Board.

The ministry continues to face a number of challenges in delivering its services, among them responding to increased pressure on the land base as a result of our booming economy, minimizing the industrial footprint, protecting critical wildlife habitats and increasing stewardship efforts, responding to increased demand for more resource managers. These are just a few of the difficult challenges we face heading into Alberta's next century. Albertans can be assured that my department will continue to deliver top-quality services that contribute to balanced and sustainable management of Alberta's natural resources. We want Albertans to feel proud about the incredible natural resources in this province and confident in the way they're being managed.

Budget 2005 will help us build on excellent work that has already been done. The department's 2005-06 proposed operating budget has been increased by about $20 million. The additional funding is great news not only for the department, but it's also great news for Albertans. We are targeting the money to Albertans' top priorities. It's something that they've been telling us for the past few years.

In terms of manpower one of these priorities is manpower. For a number of years Albertans have told us that they want to see greater department presence when they are enjoying the great outdoors. Some have expressed particular concern about the number of fish and wildlife officers and the number of people in the backcountry. I'm happy that the department is now in the position of addressing these concerns.

Money has been set aside in our 2005 budget to hire a range of new staffing, including up to 10 new fish and wildlife officers. This will help support all aspects of our wildlife management programs, including problem wildlife and illegal harvest. Five fish and wildlife staff will carry out important public outreach and education initiatives, and six biologists and one caribou/grizzly bear manager will conduct important scientific research that will help address the growing pressures facing Alberta's wildlife populations. We will also look at five permanent fisheries staff, who will conduct important fisheries inventories to ensure healthy fish stocks in addition to assisting with fisheries management.

We're also going to be looking at 16 seasonal forest guardians, who will help address the pressures of increased recreational use of public lands. We will use these guardians to educate the public about our respect the land stewardship program. So we'll have upwards of 40 front-line staff at the community level, and that's good news for Albertans.

Fish and wildlife. A key business of our ministry is the management of our fish and wildlife resources. Many Albertans have a deep-seated connection with this wonderful natural resource as it provides more than just personal enjoyment. It's their livelihood and a means to provide for their family. Alberta's fish and wildlife populations support more than 20,000 jobs in Alberta and generate in excess of $1 billion a year to our provincial economy. We recognize the importance of this valuable natural resource and the importance of ensuring that it's managed for sustainability over the long term.

Over the last year I've heard from a number of Albertans about the province's grizzly bear and caribou habitats, and I can say with certainty that Alberta Sustainable Resource Development is responsibly managing these wildlife populations.

Grizzly bears. In terms of grizzly bears there is more on-the-ground management in Alberta than ever before, including an ongoing DNA-based population census that will give us a more accurate picture of Alberta's grizzly bear population. It is incredibly difficult to estimate grizzly bear population numbers. They hibernate through the winter and roam over hundreds of square kilometres the rest of the year. Despite these challenges, we've been doing good work and a good job, and Alberta is internationally recognized for being a leader in grizzly bear research.

We've taken a leading role in protecting and preserving sensitive caribou populations. We've been at the table on a number of committees that have helped lead the caribou recovery team, and to protect caribou habitat, the department chose to rule out permanent timber allocations north of the Chinchaga and reduce the annual allowable cut in the E8 forest management unit by 30 per cent. We've also brought industry on-board by requiring caribou protection plans as a condition of operation. Over the last few years upwards of $1 million has been committed by government and industry toward monitoring and researching initiatives, more research and industry co-operation than any other jurisdiction, I might add, Mr. Chairman, and through Budget 2005 we will continue to support the long-term conservation of Alberta caribou and grizzly bear habitats.

We're setting aside an additional funding of approximately $600,000 to increase monitoring, research population inventories, and map habitats. This important work will help strengthen our understanding of Alberta's caribou and grizzlies and the pressure they face, and it is that knowledge that will help us refine our long-term planning goals to ensure the sustainability of these populations for generations to come.

In terms of species at risk the department also continues to make significant progress in support of Alberta's species at risk. Over the last year Sustainable Resource Development supported 14 recovery teams and over 16 stewardship, research, monitoring, and sampling projects. A draft woodland caribou recovery plan has been developed and is being reviewed by the department, and we will continue to commit in 2005, by setting aside an additional $130,000, to fund species-at-risk projects.

In terms of fisheries to improve our ability to manage Alberta's fishing resources, the department will commit an additional $2 million to our fisheries program. This money will help strengthen our fisheries population inventories and monitoring. It will also improve fisheries habitat, support the province's fish stocking program and disease testing, and implement the commercial fisheries rationalization program that was started. So far, the move to reduce the number of commercial fishing licences has been very successful. Since we began the program, the number of commercial operators has been reduced from 800 to around 200.

Métis harvesting. While on the topic of fish and wildlife I'd like to take a moment to touch on another important issue facing the department. Following a federal court ruling, the Alberta government entered into a harvesting agreement for Métis residents to hunt and fish for subsistence purposes. The issue has caused concern among many Albertans, particularly conservation groups and sport hunting and fishing organizations. The department is taking their concerns very seriously, and we will continue to monitor fish and wildlife populations to watch for any impact upon these resources. Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development is the lead department on this agreement, and they will continue to work with Métis leaders to educate Métis about their responsibilities as well.

In terms of education it's an important part of responsible resource management. Talking to people, engaging them on the issues that we face, is critically important, especially when it comes to managing Alberta's fish and wildlife resources. These are shared resources that require the co-operation of all Albertans to ensure their long-term sustainability. The department recognizes this and is committed to an additional half a million dollars toward educating Albertans about hunting and fishing issues and regulations. The money will help cover on-the-ground outreach initiatives in regions all across the province. The need for education is increasing every year. Last year over 201,000 sport-fishing licences were sold, and nearly 100,000 hunters purchased over 261,000 hunting licences, an increase of 2,700 hunters over the year before. Despite the increasing pressure our fish and wildlife officers continue to do an outstanding job, in addition to the hunting licences and fishing licences that are out there.

Over the past year we have been working on a number of priority projects, like the West Nile virus monitoring program and the chronic wasting disease survey.

Forestry is another priority area for the department. The Alberta forest industry is a significant contributor to the economy of this great province, with at least 50 Alberta communities being participants. The industry provides more than 50,000 jobs for Albertans and generates about $1.4 billion in household income.

Unfortunately, it's an industry at risk. The mountain pine beetle has the potential to devastate the Alberta forest industry. In B.C. the beetle has infested more than 14 million hectares of trees and cost the B.C. forest industry about $9 billion. As soon as the department identified the risk these beetles can pose to the Alberta forest industry, we took immediate action. We imposed a ban on the transportation of wood bark across the border between Alberta and B.C., and we continue vigorously to enforce this ban through weigh station operators who conduct truck checks and in the handling of firewood by campground operators and campers.

Through education we get the message out to Albertans from the ground up. We have expanded our surveillance and reporting programs to include the general public. Now Albertans can report mountain pine beetle cases through our eye in the sky program. We've also been working extensively with Kananaskis Country, with Parks Canada to identify and fight the spread of these forest pests. So far, our proactive approach has paid off. We've been able to cut and burn affected stands of trees before the beetle has had a chance to spread beyond our control.

We must not be complacent. The outbreak in B.C. poses a very immediate and serious threat to Alberta forests. Right now the mountain pine beetle is set to strike our mature forests along the eastern slopes. In fact, cases have recently been reported in Jasper and Banff, and every day the beetle is moving closer to the border near the Willmore wilderness area. Through Budget 2005 the department will step up its efforts to take immediate action to stop the beetle at the border, and we're allocating an initial $2.6 million towards strengthening, preventing, and detecting our control efforts.

Value-added strategy. The department is also committed to ensuring the long-term sustainability of our timber industry. We will continue to build upon our relationship with the industry to work towards ensuring this renewable resource is utilized to its fullest potential. In Budget 2005 we've earmarked $600,000 towards promoting forest products and market diversification. This money will go to strengthening our value-added strategy. To help us along, we're entering into a strategic partnership with Forintek, the national wood products research and development organization. Ultimately, we want to take a value-added approach that focuses on a higher dollar return for every tree that's cut.

Reforestation. To ensure the sustainability of our timber resources, the department is committing $1.5 million a year for the next three years to reforestation. The Forest Resource Improvement Association of Alberta is very successful delegating administrative organizations that promote responsible reforestation activities on behalf of small commercial operators with permits less than 10,000 cubic metres. It has three core programs: the forest resource improvement program, the wildfire reclamation program, and the community timber program. The funding is to be used to do some catch-up reforestation of older cut blocks held by community timber program permit holders and small quota holders. While the specifics are still being worked out, the funding will be directed in the areas that have the greatest potential to be successfully reforested.

Softwood lumber. The industry continues to show its commitment to innovation and to the future of our forests despite challenges like the softwood lumber dispute. SRD will continue to work closely with our colleagues in government, other provinces, the federal government, and the industry to find workable solutions to that trade dispute.

Capital spending. While I'm on the topic of forests, I'd like to take a moment to highlight capital spending that's been allocated to the department. Money will go toward two projects that relate to the province's ability to fight wildfires. As you may recall, last year's fire season was particularly bad in the northern part of this province. All told, the department fought more than 1,600 wildfires, which burned nearly 235,000 hectares of land, an area more than three times the size of Edmonton.

Air tankers. To help us more effectively battle these wildfires, capital spending will be used to upgrade three provincially owned CL 215 air tankers. These are commonly known as water bombers. The plan is to spend $28 million over two years, starting in 2006, to begin converting the plane's existing piston-powered engines to turbine power. These modifications will make the air tankers 32 per cent more effective and reduce maintenance costs. The conversion will also allow the airplanes to operate more effectively in higher altitudes and reload from a number of water bodies.

The second project involving upgrading for our firefighting is seven air tanker bases across the province: $12 million, or $24 million over three years, will be used to replace and expand the concrete and asphalt surfaces at these bases. The modifications are necessary to accommodate the weight and size of today's modern air tankers. Both of these projects are necessary to ensure that the department is well equipped to safely and effectively protect Albertans and their communities from wildfire.

Public lands. Each year the economy grows, and there continues to be an increased demand on Alberta's 100 million acres of public lands. A major priority for the department will continue to be the wise use of this land base. We've committed to a provincial land-use framework. Albertans have told us that they want to benefit from land today and tomorrow in a way that recognizes and adapts to the changing needs of the land base. We will work within government to flesh out this framework and create a sustainable land legacy where Albertans continue to live on the land, labour on the land, and leisure on the land. If the past is any indication, it's not going to be an easy task. In 2003-2004 the volume of dispositions on public land increased to more than 15,000 from 12,000 the year before, an increase of 24 per cent. As demand increases, we need to develop and implement policies, guidelines, and practices that will help minimize the footprint on Crown land.

Access management. We're making some very good progress by working with the public and stakeholder groups on a number of access management plans. The Ghost-Waiparous operational plan, for example, is nearing completion, and we expect to begin implementation later this year. It takes a lot of consultation with a range of stakeholders to develop comprehensive management plans that are the right fit. I'm proud of the work that has been done to ensure that there is a balance between environmental protection and recreational opportunities for Albertans.

Agricultural dispositions. We will continue to explore new ways of providing stability to Alberta's farm and ranch operators who rely on Crown lands to do business. We continue to show innovation in management of grazing lands and integrated grazing with other land uses to help Alberta's farming communities. We are in our second year of successful legislation to balance the needs of recreational access to leased agricultural land, and we are committed to the latest in rangeland practices that ensure rangeland health and show environmental and economic benefits.

To ensure that we continue to deliver the best quality services to Albertans, the department will invest an additional $1 million in our land management program, and we are committing $1.75 million to a digital disposition mapping system that will help us improve our resource activity data as well as speed up the process.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure this evening to introduce to you and through you Dr. Barbara Lacey, a constituent from Lethbridge-East, a friend, and my former colleague on Lethbridge city council. She presently sits as a four-term alderman on city council. Dr. Barbara Lacey has played a very significant part in the water strategy of southern Alberta and presently serves as the chair of the Oldman River water basin council. I know that she follows with interest the Water for Life discussions. I'm sure that my fellow House member from Lethbridge-West joins me in expressing our welcome. I would ask that she rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to rise today to discuss the impact of this budget, which is Sustainable Resource Development. I'm actually amazed and I think the public should be amazed or, at least, horrified that we talk about millions and millions of dollars that we're supposed to come to an agreement or an understanding on within about a two hour and 50 minute time frame. We're talking about the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development and their allocation request for $230.1 million.

There's a lot that the minister and his staff have actually put forward in the first 20 minutes. I'd like to talk about specific breakdowns by core business and the difference from the request this year to the request that was there last year.

Wildfire management. Now, I know that we have the threat of fires that are increasing every year with regard to the dryness and the conditions. Right now I believe the ministry is asking for $75.8 million. That's down $130 million. This leads to the supplemental requests that we have every year. I don't know why we don't accurately request what we know we're going to be using. If we're going to be down about $200 million, I think if we could come within a couple of hundred million, people would be a little bit more forgiving. But when we're lowballing it by $130 million, I don't find that good government. I find that being in fact not accountable to the taxpayers whatsoever.

Natural resources and public land management. The request is $130.7 million. That's an increase of $28 million. Land, access, and compensation boards: that's only up $0.9 million. As well, the ministry support services, which is up $0.9 million. Environment statutory programs: the request is $4.9 million. That's an increase of $2.6 million. Then the adjustments and other provisions. It's, you know, quite insignificant there.

The first question, again, that I would ask the minister is: why the discrepancy of what they know is to be used and what they're actually asking for? Why the big difference with regard to the supplementary requests?

Can the minister go through line by line the government and lottery fund estimates that they get from the lottery funds, and can they table a document that explains each line item and identifies exactly which programs are funded through which line item?

Program 1, ministry support services: the budget for both ministries is increasing modestly by about $20 million. Why is there new money being allocated to these offices, and what will the money be allocated for?

If we look at the human resources budget, it's being increased by almost $100,000. The ministry is reporting no new increases to staff. The question would be: why is this money being allocated to the department? What will the extra money be used for in the upcoming year?

Moving on to the strategic corporate services budget, it's increasing by approximately $383,000. Why does this line item require such an increase in funding, and what will the extra funds be used for?

These are some of the specifics, but they're not actually explained. They're embedded in there, and it's us as the opposition that are supposed to ask the questions with regard to these to find out the information that the public so dearly requires so we keep our accountability there.

The breakdown for $809,000 in the minister's and the deputy minister's offices. I ask for the cards and the salaries for the permanent positions for the ministers, the deputy ministers, the chiefs of staff because as they're carrying on the duties on behalf of this ministry, I think it should be incumbent on them to be able to produce the receipts as to what exactly these deputy ministers and these department heads are in fact using that money for, the salaries of the permanent positions, salaries of the nonpermanent position people, salaries of the contracted positions as well as the travel expenses, the advertising, telephone, communications, and hosting expenses. I mean, we can go on. How much was spent on, you know, bonuses for the previous year? What was the largest bonus given out, to who was it for, and what was it given for?

Moving on to program 2, wildfire management.

Mr. Dunford: This is estimates, not public accounts.

Mr. Bonko: Well, give me the information I ask for, and I won't have to go through the line by line item. Thank you for that, minister.

If we want to go to the firefighters, the ministry has asked for a supplementary request for approximately $125 million. He's answered some of the questions for the upgrading of bombers, I'm assuming, with regard to new technologies to be able to take the water and be able to disperse it. But will some of that money be used to buy new equipment for the firefighters? I know that they're expected to pay room and board. I'm just wondering about new equipment. When these people put their heart and soul into it, are they going to be provided with the equipment to be able to fight the fires as well?

Why is the government expecting such a decrease in revenues in premiums, fees, and licences? The ministry budgeted and it shows that it's expecting to receive $142 million in revenues from premiums, fees, and licences. Last year the minister took in $172 million. Again, is it expecting a decrease, then, from the premiums, fees, and licences? Is the ministry planning on decreasing the timber royalties this year compared to last year? What assumptions or criteria is the ministry using to come up with this estimated figure? Will any premiums, fees, or licences increase or decrease next year? Which ones, and how much?

I'm glad the minister did in fact mention some of the impact that industry does have with our land use. We talk about reducing the effect of the developmental footprint. I think that's why I was quite pleased to be able to have this ministry. When I'm able to go out and take my kids hunting or at least drive down the lands, I don't want to see the cutlines through the forest, which you do see, in search of that precious oil and gas reserve.

I think we're in between a rock and a hard spot trying to have balance with industrial encroachment which, in fact, impacts our wildlife such as the caribou, which is on the quarter. I hope we don't see the grizzly on it one day because of its extinction. It almost makes me wonder if, in fact, the caribou are there one day with regard to the encroachment and all the land development that we do have within the eastern slopes of this province.

The minister talked about having more conservation officers out there with regard to being able to do more monitoring towards harvesting. The word "harvesting" is, in fact, one of the terms in e-mails and letters and cries of concern that I have with regard to being able to talk about with the Métis harvesting. The minister talked about harvesting. Is this the type of harvesting that he is in fact concerned with? It leaves a kind of blank and asks a person to wonder.

With regard to the Métis harvesting, trophy hunting, or big game trophy, the big one that the lottery, in fact, attracts so many people from down in the States, this, in fact, I don't believe is taken in with the Métis harvesting agreement. We met with a group, and it wasn't even touched, and the minister from northern development and aboriginal affairs says that, in fact, the Métis harvesting agreement does not even touch on the fact of big trophy or trophy game. That's obviously concerning.

On page 352 under premiums and fees it states that for timber royalties and fees the government is estimating approximately $80.7

million in revenues as compared to actual figures of $116 million. Again, why is there such a discrepancy between the two figures? We've been at this long enough; certainly we can plan and be able to significantly come up with an accurate budget. Is this government planning to significantly decrease its timber royalties as compared to last year? One has to wonder. If not, why, then, such a low estimate? Can the minister provide a breakdown as to how much it has received in royalties in the past four years and from whom those royalties have come, which companies?

On page 353 under Revenue, internal government transfers from department for forest fires, the government is estimating approximately $16.7 million. Last year the actual budget was $148 million. That is an amazing difference. I'm not sure why. Every year when it comes down to the forestry fires, the government, again, still can't provide pure and accurate estimates with regard to year by year. Again, why the discrepancies?

This year it's again the same problem. On the same page the estimate for the year is $28.7 million as compared to last year's of $162 million. Can the minister explain the budgeting practice and how we come up with such a large discrepancy from year to year?

The business plan. What other innovative approaches is the minister considering to address the volatile costs related to fighting the forest fires? The minister states that part of the strategy was to "reduce the economic burden of wildfires on communities . . . by implementing the Municipal Wildfire Assistance Program in partnership with Municipal Affairs." Has this program been fully implemented, and what would be the timeline for that implementation? Can the minister offer what measures have been developed and the efficiency of this program when they're in place? How will they be monitoring that year by year?

The business plan states that the ministry wants to "provide a clear, balanced approach to forest and forest landscape management." That would be listed in strategy 2.1. What is the ministry doing to ensure that the oil and gas industry has the same responsibilities for reforestation as the forestry industry? Whose responsibility is that? It's well known that the oil and gas industry does have the same burdens placed on it in terms of forest conservation that the forestry industry does and is required to do under the timber management agreement. Why does the minister not comply with the oil and gas industry to make sure that they have the same standards that apply to the forestry industry?

What's the ministry doing to ensure the future sustainability of the forestry industry in Alberta when economic maximization of its reserves that drives the forest behind the policies – you know, again, supply and demand. I'm quite concerned about that whole particular piece. I want to make sure, again, that that forest we develop and we rely so heavily on is going to be here for the next hundred years. We have timber management agreements in place, in fact, for 30 and 40 and 50 years. How do we know that we're going to have that forest, that it's going to be there for that 40 and 50 years? Who's monitoring the timelines of the reforestation?

Strategy 2.2 states that the ministry wants to manage the insect infestation "through effective detection and management strategies." That was probably released, as well, with their document today when they talked about more money with regard to the mountain pine beetle, which I'll get back to in a little bit. Will the minister release the details for the strategy for the mountain pine beetle infestation that's threatening our province right now? During question period he talked about the $1 million allocated that is shared with B.C., and I told the minister that I thought that that was a token amount considering that the ministry in B.C. has allocated $150 million on top of the $1.5 billion, which is a long-term, 15-year plan with regard to the pine beetle there. It's already destroyed, as the minister has said, $9 billion worth of timber within that province.

Certainly, Alberta has just as much at stake, if not more, when we talk about the amount of people and the amount of resources that are at stake, just to mention natural resources. I'm not sure if the minister, in fact, can take some of that money that he is allocating to that program – why don't we find an Alberta-made solution? We have, certainly, some of the best and brightest minds within our universities. Why don't we in fact allocate a million dollars here to find a homemade solution with regard to the pine beetle right here in Alberta. I'm sure, like I said, that a million dollars wouldn't be wasted money. I'm sure it would be better than slashing and burning the trees, that he indicates is the best solution that he's found already.

Will the minister briefly elaborate the strategy that I've touched on right there. Maybe he'd like to specify something else besides the problem. What role is Murray Smith playing in the resolution with the softwood lumber? Certainly the ministry is aware of that. We have $4 billion, I think, tied up with regard to tariffs and court costs. I wonder what the minister over there in Washington is doing with regard to being able to find a resolution with regard to the softwood.

Strategy 3.2 states that the ministry will "ensure that wild species are sustained for future generations by encouraging land managers to conserve habitat; maintaining up-to-date management plans." I think that's commendable, but, again, how much is enough is enough? I mean, we talk about ensuring that there's wildlife not only today but tomorrow and for future generations. We've just begun to celebrate here in the province of Alberta 100 years.

I think that's, in fact, why the Métis harvesting agreement was put in place: to ensure that these aboriginal people do have their hunting rights for the next hundred. I think they can see something that the rest of us here on the Liberal side do, that conservation is not going to be enough, that the encroachment within the public lands and the sale of the public lands and the amount of development is going to in fact drive these animals – caribou, grizzly – to extinction. They want to make sure that if there is going to be hunting allowed, they're going to be the ones that are going to be able to do the hunting. That's why they're having this agreement now, that's going to be passed down through their generations over the next hundred years. They see something, I think, that the rest of us had better be taking quite a good point on.

Are we going to be "implementing species-at-risk initiatives through expanded partnerships with conservation agencies, industries, government and academia," with universities? How will the government encourage land managers to conserve the habitat, and what plan will that be for? How will that timeline be implemented, and will they enforce timelines with regard to that?

Why is the government condoning the spring grizzly hunt when their own scientists have stated that they are species at-risk? They've talked about, in fact, putting on more conservation officers, that they're going to be doing ongoing monitoring, but I believe that these same conservation officers, these same experts that they employ within their staff, have told them already that the hunt should be halted until there are more accurate records. The minister has said, in fact, that it's very tough to track them when they're in hibernation. I agree with that point wholeheartedly, but in the spring and into the fall they've got to have a little more accuracy with regard to how many grizzly bears there are, in fact, in Alberta.

Until that time I think there should be, in fact, a stay with regard to the spring grizzly bear hunt. I think they would do a disservice, again, to the people in their employment if they completely ignore the urges of their own people as well as world-renowned scientists, mentioning that David Suzuki, in fact, wrote the Premier urging him to cancel the spring hunt for grizzly bear that is threatened in Alberta. Why is the minister not postponing it again until the levels are more sustainable or can be more confirmed?

Moving on to another strategy, 4.1 states that the ministry wants to “provide a clear, balanced approach to rangeland management through a . . . framework that optimizes the long-term environmental, social, and economic benefits that Albertans [can] receive.” I, too, want to make sure that those are there, and that’s why I’m asking the questions I am today. Can the minister explain how the government policies are working to achieve this goal? What programs and/or initiatives is this government using to ensure that Albertans and their forests are protected? Can the minister provide a complete breakdown of what policies, legislation, regulatory provisions are being employed to achieve this strategy? Does the minister have any management plans with respect to the caribou?

I know I’ve touched on a number of specifics, more than I’m probably going to get answers to in the next 20 minutes, but I’m willing to sit down and hope that the minister can in fact enlighten me on some of the questions with regard to some of the questions that I’ve asked.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’ll look forward to it and will stand up again.

The Deputy Chair: Hon minister, do you want to respond, or do you want others to speak and participate at a later stage? What would you prefer?

Mr. Coutts: There are a number of questions that came through, and I’ll try to respond to as many as I can. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore spoke almost as fast in giving me the questions as I did in my initial remarks, so I was trying to write down here as quickly as I could. I’ll get as many questions answered as I possibly can. I was trying to write as fast as he was speaking.

The member opposite asked about lottery funding and where lottery funding might fit into our budget and some of the things that we might spend lottery funding on. He made sort of an inference that it might be hidden in some of our revenues and our expenditures. Well, there’s no hiding at all, hon. member. We don’t have and we do not use any lottery funding in our department at all, so that’s why you don’t see it there. We don’t go after the lottery fund, which is managed by our Department of Gaming. So that’s a fairly easy one.

You talked about ministerial staff and some travel and expense sheets and all the rest of that type of thing. I have to say that it did sound a lot like a Public Accounts question, but we’re very accountable in the department in terms of our expenditures and making sure that we have that. I’m sure at another time, when we get in front of Public Accounts, we can bring some of that historical data. But I can tell you that in this particular budget what we’re looking at doing is making sure that we’re being effective in the department. My deputy minister is a very good manager. He is a good administrator, and the people that he has behind him in human resources will make sure that those dollars go to the right place and to a very effective, on-the-ground management.

You talked about new staff and why we’re having extra dollars and you don’t see us hiring any more staff. Well, we’ve got a number of senior employees. As a matter of fact, we’ve got some employees that have been with us for 43, 44 years. Some of those folks are now retiring, and there’s some attrition going on, so the new staff that we have coming in for our fish and wildlife and some of those positions that we were talking about for biologists, some of the positions we were talking about for our education programs and our guardians – that’s the reason why we have no new net increase in our FTEs.

You talked about our wildfire budget and the $75 million that we need to get started, and you talked a little bit later, by your own admission, about the volatility of the fire season. Of course, a lot of that depends on whether or not we have a wet season, how dry it is in the forest, how dry it is on the rangeland, as well, when we’re close to the forestry. I’ll get to that in a minute about our FireSmart communities. But you talked, in addition to that, about the extra dollars for firefighting and upgrading equipment. Naturally, we want to make sure that all of our firefighters are very well equipped. We have to keep improving our equipment, and certainly as technology goes on, we have to keep up with that as well in making sure that our firefighters have the best equipment.

In terms of firefighting, just for interest, the number of wildfires we had in our wildfire year of 2003 was 1,188, and the number of hectares that were burned was 74,000, and that’s about 185,000 acres. Our five-year average is about 1,600 wildfires per year. So when you take a look at the number of wildfires that we have each year and you look at the $75 million that we have, that just basically gets us started and will help us defend some of those smaller fires.

When we have a major fire – and we can never predict when we’ll have a major fire, and that goes back to the volatility that you talked about – we have to be prepared. We’re always prepared for a major fire, and our wildfire crews do an excellent job under the direction of Cliff Henderson, our assistant deputy minister. There are 40 years of firefighting experience just in that assistant deputy minister. His entire crew do a great job of looking after our wildfires, but if we have a big one, Mr. Chairman, and we go over this expenditure, what we do is go to the sustainability fund or an emergency fund to make sure that that fire is put out. If we go over our budget, then we can go to the sustainability fund and make sure that Albertans’ property is protected, our green space is protected, but also their homes and communities. So it’s a good system, and it works considering, by his own admittance, that there is volatility in the year.

In terms of additional dollars that we’re needing for our FireNet radio system, that’s another expenditure where we’ve got to have more reliable and improved safety and effectiveness in our wildfire operations. If you’ve ever been at a wildfire, you’ve got bombers coming in picking up water off lakes so that they can take it and put water on certain sections of the fire. Then you have other airplanes going to tanker bases and getting filled up with retardant. It’s a very sophisticated and very well-managed process to fight our wildfires. It takes a lot of dedicated people, and they do a really good job of that. The communication that’s required not only on the ground but also in the air is very, very important. Our new FireNet radio system will go a long way to making sure that we have a safe system in the future.

We talked about timber royalties, and I believe your reference was page 352. You talked about the discrepancy in the increase or decrease, and I wasn’t exactly sure about where you were getting all the numbers from, but just to let you know that there is an increase of $18.7 million from the 2004-05 comparable forecast of $113 million. You know, $2.1 million is for the general provisions of manpower and $4 million, again, for our fish and wildlife officers that we need, and $2.6 million for pine beetles.

Now, there’s an interesting scenario. The pine beetle, as I’ve said in this House, is the biggest threat that we have to our forestry industry and to our healthy pine forests. The hon. member talked about the $110 million that the B.C. government is putting into that, and I just wonder if he knows and understands that a hundred million of that came from the federal government to help them do some reforestation, help them clean up some of the salvage so that they can get their forests back to a healthy state.

We have worked very closely with British Columbia over the past five years. They notified us a number of years ago that the pine beetle was on its way. Now, I don't think the hon. member fully understands that the pine beetle is a difficult beetle to get rid of. What happens is that once it's finished destroying a tree, there's no natural food for it, so the pine beetle then goes to another tree. Very often the prevailing westerly winds can carry that beetle a good three miles, so it can hop and skip over a healthy forest and land about three miles away and then start infesting a new part of the forest. That's what makes it very, very hard to get rid of and very hard to detect. There's no way of spraying with chemicals for it because they do, as I say, get into the wind, and they're carried all over the place.

It's very, very difficult to get rid of. The best way to get rid of it is for us to continue doing the types of things that we're doing in terms of aerial surveys, making sure that we do on-the-ground surveys, looking at our own industry to help us identify where the pine beetle is because they want to keep it away as well, and taking those areas and those sections and cutting it and burning it.

Now, he asked about a made-in-Alberta solution. While I was in Washington, DC, I stopped in to see the director of forestry for the entire United States of America. That gentleman, Mr. Boswell, was stationed in Kalispell, Montana, where they have a lot of pine forest. This was before he got his job in Washington, DC. He accounted to me the various strategies that they tried to use in getting rid of the pine beetle infestation of about 20 years ago, and they were doing exactly what we're doing today. They had to identify, they had to cut, and they had to burn because there was no other way of getting rid of these beetles. He said that the best thing that could ever happen is if there was a continued five to six weeks of minus 30 to minus 40 degrees to get rid of the beetle because the beetle can't survive those kinds of temperatures.

The member opposite comes up with lots of good suggestions on how we might get to eradicate the beetle, but we do have a made-in-Alberta solution. It's taking best practices from other areas, adapting it to our landscape here, and making sure that we continue to preserve our forests.

He talked about our conservation officers and the additional number of conservation officers. As I mentioned, we're looking at a number of conservation officers. Yes, with the Métis agreement we certainly could stand a few more folks out there on the ground. One thing I'm hearing – and I've heard it for years – is that we need more conservation officers on the ground. One thing I'm hearing from the fishermen of Alberta. They're saying to me when I go out and visit with them: "I just want to be checked to see if I have a fishing licence. If I'm being checked to see if I have a fishing licence, I know that they're out there checking a whole lot of other people." That's the security that people need to see, that our fish and wildlife officers are out there checking creels and making sure that people have licences. That's part of our whole balance and our sustainability and our conservation messages and methods for the fish resource. So more conservation officers and fish and wildlife officers are definitely needed, and it's expected by Albertans, and that's what we're going to do.

In addition to that, because of the pressures that are on our fish and wildlife officers, we're going to have more folks going out there and doing some education and letting people know the rules and the regulations. That's a welcome thing in this budget as well.

Particularly this summer, when we have many of our experienced staff and our dedicated fish and wildlife staff off for their own summer holidays, we're going to have the guardians to take their places so that there is a presence in the backcountry, that there is a presence on the eastern slopes, particularly with access management plans. Municipalities and people that use the backcountry like to see some enforcement out there, and they've told me for a number of years in my own constituency, as a matter of fact, with the Castle access management plan: please, have some more enforcement on the ground. So that's what we're doing, and it's a good thing for Albertans.

I've got to go back to the timber dues because I got sidelined by the way all the questions were coming from different areas. Timber dues: basically, you'll see an increase projected due to higher commodity prices for our timber products. A number of years ago we put a timber dues process in place where the timber dues would be linked to the market. Of course, we have a very, very high market right now, and that certainly reflects the high market.

Some of the discrepancies that the hon. member is looking at: we've had a number of increases in land and grazing fees due to higher oil and gas activity on public grazing lands. So those are the reasons. We've also had decreases, primarily due to timber permit auction and bid and, certainly, higher commodity prices for timber products than in 2003 and 2004. Overall, that's the answer there.

Now, reforestation. I tried to explain reforestation. I thought I did a really good job in the speech. It was prepared by our communications folks, who did an excellent job because it really outlines exactly that in 1994 we turned over reforestation from the department to a delegated authority called FRIAA, and this was done to make sure that we sustain our timber resources. They've been saying to me that they need extra money to make sure that some of the cut blocks that were done prior to 1994, before the new timber dues came into place, get reforested as well as some of the areas that were hit by forest fire previous to 2004. So what we've done is that we've committed $1.5 million a year for the next three years in this budget to make sure that that reforestation goes ahead under the very capable direction of FRIAA.

They have three programs, and they have three separate accounts. They identify those accounts and where that money actually goes and how the money should get into the system and into the reforestation. They do surveys of cut blocks. They find out the type of soil and everything else to make sure that the species that they want to plant there will survive. They also take a look and see if there has already been growth and where they might have to do fill. They do evaluations of that, and if there's been a cut block that has had many years without any reforestation – maybe the conifer was taken off it but now the deciduous trees have taken over – they have to assess whether or not it's even worthwhile going in there.

It's a lengthy process, it's an expensive process, but they do a very, very good job on their timber resource improvement program, on their wildfire reclamation program, and their community timber program. There are those three programs, and they just do a really, really good job. They're dedicated industry people that know that the sustainability of the forestry industry relies on that reforestation, so they have a very strong responsibility there.

Now, let's talk about species at risk. The hon. member was asking some questions about species at risk, and the Species at Risk Act shows that the federal government supports the accord for the protection of species at risk in Canada. That was signed in 1996. However, in Alberta we had strong legislation in place at the time with our Wildlife Act. The Wildlife Act allows for nests and dens of both threatened and endangered species to be protected throughout the year. The Wildlife Act provides for penalties for killing and trafficking an endangered species of up to $100,000 in fines and/or two years in prison. So the Wildlife Amendment Act gives Alberta the authority to order penalties of up to $100,000 and/or two years for poaching and particularly for species such as grizzly bear.

Mr. Chairman, I could go on.

The Deputy Chair: Yes. Hon. minister, I'm really impressed that you're using the full 20 minutes.

Hon. members, we have now passed that first hour. The following hon. members have indicated that they would like to speak, and I'll recognize them in this order: Edmonton-Calder, Highwood, Peace River, Edmonton-Gold Bar, interspersed in between with the minister's comments. If anybody else wishes to speak, please draw my attention.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm very happy to rise to speak to the SRD budget, and I'd like to thank the hon. minister for a very complete presentation. His initial presentation was quite illuminating for me. Nonetheless, I do have a number of questions and areas to consider. I will group them together, and you can feel free to address them as you see fit, either orally or through writing or both.

In looking at the line items of this ministry's budget, one of the things that strikes me – and I know that it's by virtue of sort of the unpredictability of wildfires – is that you have such a high discrepancy between years of budgets. But, you know, at the same time I think that we can look over a longer time period and see that the ministry consistently underestimates the funds that are required to fight wildfires. Indeed, we are in a larger cycle of drier climate. Plus, the increased human activity in our northern boreal forest in particular results in more forest fires over time, over, say, the last 10 or 15 years than the previous 30. So I suppose that on a larger scale, perhaps nature's timeline rather than human fiscal timelines, we could probably more accurately predict that we do need more money to fight wildfires.

You know, in the 2003-2004 budget the ministry was almost 90 per cent overbudget for fighting wildfires, in 2004-2005 65 per cent overbudget. This budget devotes $14.6 million to the wildfire operations budget, while last year's actual cost was on a scale of $185 million. My first question – you can, you know, work with this later – is: why has the ministry consistently underestimated wildfire budgets? My feeling is that we could look at it in a larger sense and realize that we're going to be up against the wildfire problem in a large way over the next many years.

One thing that I find a bit disconcerting is that, you know, this will be often thrown in as a reason to alter the overall budget of this province. I know that our hon. Finance minister will bring it up as one of those things that needs to be addressed, and, well, we need to put hundreds of millions of dollars into forest fire fighting. Well, I mean we should know that from the budget from the beginning so that perhaps we could have a larger fund.

I don't know what an endowment fund to preserve our forests would look like, and that could include wildfire expenditures. I mean, this is not an unreasonable approach, I think, to be used, in a similar way that Advanced Education has created an endowment fund. We know that the forests are going to be under threat, and I think that we need more stable numbers here when we're doing budgets for wildfires.

Furthermore, in regard to the firefighting elements of this ministry, the men and women who put their lives on the line in order to fight these fires I believe – and correct me if I'm wrong – are being charged room and board to the tune of approximately $450 a month, or at least this was the practice in the past. Perhaps if I could just ask if the ministry still pursues this program, and is this part of a way to offset budget shortfalls to fight wildfires? I know, again, that it's a volatile situation and you have a seasonal labour market that is involved with this, but I'm just wondering how this fits in to the overall budget mix.

This year's budget included an additional $4.4 million to enhance outreach and education, resource management, and enforcement activities including the hiring, I believe from the release today actually, of 40 full-time and seasonal staff. According to the Edmonton Journal, Alberta fish and wildlife officers have found Métis citizens of this province to be shooting big-game animals out of season under the guise of their subsistence rights that they have recently won under the Powley agreement. Furthermore, we are quite concerned that fish and wildlife officers themselves may not be adequately informed or trained on the full implications and details of the Métis hunting and fishing agreement.

So my question to pose to you, then, is that perhaps the ministry should rethink the amount of funding that is going to fish and wildlife officers. My suggestion – and I think this same suggestion is echoed by many people across the province – is that we need to increase the ranks of our fish and wildlife officers in a very significant way, not just with larger numbers but refocusing the intention of the wildlife officers across the province, not just engaging in enforcement but in education and in conservation in the widest possible way.

I know from reading some criticisms from, say, for example, the different sectors that in order to properly enforce the wildlife rules and antipoaching activities, we do have to pay for it. I know that with increasing pressures on our wild areas in this province – our population is increasing, and northern activity is increasing geometrically – it's just absolutely necessary that we have a greater presence in the wild areas of this province in terms of enforcement and education and other conservation practices.

The fish and wildlife officers, I believe, are represented by the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, and one telling observation that AUPE did make in regard to fish and wildlife officers is that, you know, from the year 2000 – these numbers are to 2003 – the amount of contacts with the public that fish and wildlife officers were able to make was in the year 2000 approximately 230,000 contacts, which is quite healthy, and then by 2003 it was down to 70,000 human contacts with citizens. We all know that through either education or politics or whatever it is we're trying to do with human beings, you need that individual contact to have an effective impact on people's behaviour. Right? By cutting back the hours that fish and wildlife people have been allotted over the last five years and, presumably, the amount of officers in the field, the reduction in contact with citizens I think is somewhat troubling.

As the hon. minister pointed out, if people feel as though the system is working in regard to fishing – and I agree with this as a fisherman myself – if someone is checking their licence, this speaks very largely to the way that our society complies with the law in a general sense. The first rule of having your population comply with laws, in this case with fishing and hunting and conservation laws, is for the population to have the impression that the government or the governing body is there enforcing and protecting other people from breaking those laws. If somebody is out there fishing in his boat and they have that feeling in the back of their mind that Fish and Wildlife is in fact there protecting their fish from other individuals taking more than they should take, then they themselves will be less likely to go over their limit or to poach or whatever. It's all a question of confidence.

Unfortunately, with the lack of clarity in a number of different areas and then the lack of presence of fish and wildlife officers in the field over these past few years, I know from anecdotal experience and a systemic analysis of the situation that that confidence has been eroded. People feel that if there's less enforcement out there and the other guy might be taking more fish and maybe the Métis hunting rights are going to change the equation, well, I might as well go ahead and try to get away with it as well. This is an unhealthy thing, and we need to nip it in the bud.

I think a significant increase in fish and wildlife officers would really go a long way to restore the confidence of sportspeople across this province that, in fact, the SRD is serious about enforcing conservation measures in this province. So the $4.4 million to put new officers into the field I really don't feel is adequate. I would like to ask just a question of clarity. Are we going to hire 40 new people, or are these 40 sort of new FTE positions that we might be able to pull from different places? I think that that would be a useful clarification.

I think, as well, that you have to give some confidence through the ranks of the fish and wildlife officers. I know a number of officers in the Edmonton area, and there's a real sense that they have been hard done by in the last number of years. You know, I think they could really use a vote of confidence right now, and swelling the ranks to adequate levels would go a long way.

Other questions that I would just like to ask about with this year's budget. On the press release from today, I would like to know how exactly the money that's being allocated to increase outreach and enforcement is going to be disseminated. Through which arms of the ministry is that going to be spent, and what specific programs do you have in mind? I know you mentioned a couple in passing, but through what arms of the ministry will that education element be realized?

I think that there's a general feeling amongst the fish and wildlife officers that more and more is being asked of them over time. Say, for example, the officers were involved in the culling of deer along the Alberta-Saskatchewan border to try to guard against the CWD, chronic wasting disease, epidemic that was being passed through the deer in that area. You know, I think that whole CWD decision – I realize that it's a bit of a crisis, but it seems to be sort of an ad hoc way of dealing with this thing, and then, of course, the fish and wildlife officers were thrown into that. Perhaps a more systematic way of dealing with this whole issue would be in order, and a longer term plan that goes outside the SRD, I would suggest, would be in order.

On the topic of CWD, again, this disease may have devastating effects not only for Alberta's game farmers but also, of course, on Alberta's wildlife. Government officials have so far assured the public that CWD has not touched Alberta's game farms. If it does, the results could kill an already embattled industry. It's a cross-ministry problem, and I think that it doesn't just touch on Agriculture and SRD, but it's also a health issue, and I would like to have – I think the public would as well – more clarification on what the plan is for dealing with CWD over the next few years.

There's a welcome allocation of funds in this budget to fight the Rocky Mountain pine beetle infestation in our forests. I think that much of what the hon. minister had just spoken previously about answered most of my questions about that. I just would like to put it forward that we must realize that the pine beetle infestation is directly linked to climate change. With fewer cold snaps in the winter more of these beetles survive, and away it goes, as you have mentioned. Now, counterintuitively – and this is just something to consider – the government's efforts to combat wildfires may unknowingly aid the pine beetle infestation in some manner. Fires are a part of the natural cycle of healthy forests, and as we stifle fires, the forests become denser, and this makes it easier for the beetles to jump from one tree to another.

Although I'm certainly not advocating for more forest fires or even less wildfire combats, we would like to push for more research on the Rocky Mountain pine beetle infestation here in our northern climes. I think that we've seen this across North America. If we could allocate at least some of that $2.6 million and devote it to research, I think that it would not be money poorly spent, especially field research because, you know, the dynamic of each area, from Colorado, as you mentioned, or somewhere that Mr. Boswell was operating from too. Here in Alberta it's a different situation, and we fight these battles ridge by ridge, and it might be interesting to have more field study on that. Okay.

So I just would like to conclude my comments. Again, going back to the line budget items, you know, I think that amongst the different ministries that I have had an opportunity to review so far – and you can give me some clarification on this, hon. minister – this one has the widest variation in budget from year to year, not just in the wildfire management section but also in your overall ministry expenses. Going from the 2004-2005 to now 2005-2006, there's just a massive variation in the numbers. I would like to seek comment on that. Besides the vagaries of fighting wildfires, there must be other things that would, you know – my understanding is that there's a 40 per cent change here from last year to this year. So I am curious about that.

I would invite your comments, and I thank you for your time.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coumts: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I know the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore wants to ask a few more questions and maybe some clarifications, and I've got a few more answers for him that I wasn't able to get to in my first responses.

But the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, I'd like to respond to his questions. Hon. member, you made a number of comments, and I want to thank you very much for your comments about our fish and wildlife staff. You hit a number of issues, you know, and challenges that they have every single, solitary day in trying to make sure that we can serve and make sure that our fish and wildlife are going to be there for generations to come and the pressures that they have.

Certainly you're right. The $4.4 million that we're getting for fish and wildlife officers is really, really important. Could it be more? Would it be better to have more? Would it be nicer to have more? Absolutely because, you know, we've got 3 million people in the province now. Our population is growing. We have an educated workforce. Albertans have a lot of time to go into the backcountry. They like their toys, and they want to be able to go back there with families and camp and fish and hunt, and they want to make sure that that's preserved for future generations. It's something that we're going to have to keep our eye on in terms of the manpower that's needed.

You asked whether these are new positions. Yes, they are new positions, up to 10 new fish and wildlife officers to help with our management programs and including, you know, the enforcement side to make sure that there aren't poachers out there and that we have people that deal with the illegal harvest and those kinds of things and to make sure that our wildlife problems – some of the things that we're experiencing now in the cities, and we work with recreation departments in the cities.

You've seen the coyote, sort of, epidemic over the last few days and the cougar attacks in the backcountry. We talk about the education component, letting people know when they go into the backcountry what they might be able to experience and how they should maybe defend themselves against bears, against cougars, and that type of thing.

Our fish and wildlife staff, five more of those will help with those. As well, our outreach and education folks will help deal with, you know, taking some of the pressure off our enforcement guys to make sure that they can get out there and do their job. At the same time, the education goes on to help people contend with the issues in the backcountry and the issues that we find right in our own river valley parks.

So it's welcome, the $4.4 million, and I have to thank the Treasurer and Treasury Board for that. Those are all new positions.

In addition, five new, permanent fisheries staff, and they'll conduct the surveys. I think the surveys are really, really important in terms of making sure of the inventories for our healthy fish stocks and our programs to assist in our fish management and to make sure that we do have a lake and that the habitat will make sure that the fish that are stocked in there will have a fighting chance of surviving so that years down the road the fish stocks will remain. So it's important that we have those.

There are 16 new positions for seasonal forest guardians. We have young people that are just itching to get into the business of conservation, and this summer they'll be out in the backcountry doing some education, doing some interpretation for folks that have questions about fishing regulations, hunting regulations, and things like that. Talking to people about our respect the land program will be very, very valuable in helping to preserve our stocks for the years to come too.

You talked about the firefighting wildfire budget. Some years are lower; some years are higher. It depends on the number of wildfires we have. But on the average it costs about $195 million a year to fight fires and protect people's property and make sure that we save lives in this province. We talk about that being underfunded. Well, the nice thing about having the availability of the emergency fund, or sustainability fund, to supplement when we have a big fire is, certainly, the security that Albertans like to have. They know that when a fire comes, our staff are out there, and the people are out there to get the job done. So we do get the dollars if we need it for emergencies.

Talk about our room and board policy for our firefighters, and it is a new policy. The changes came into effect April 1, 2005. Basically the changes will apply to about 975 seasonal forest protection staff and all department salaried staff. Emergency firefighters and lookout personnel will not be affected by the change, but staff who choose to use the department's accommodation and meal services will be charged about $450 a month. A daily rate is also available: $15 a day for meals and $5 a day for accommodation. This applies to sustainable resources department staff working in Alberta.

The policy was updated to make the meals and accommodation charges fair and reasonable, and these fees for meals and accommodation are comparable to other provinces. For example, British Columbia charges staff $200 per week per pay period for the same type of service. Saskatchewan charges their staff $18 a day, and Ontario charges their staff $20 to $30 a day. Staff that may want to use – they may choose to use what services they want and the applicable rates will be deducted, certainly, from their paycheque. You know, the province will recover up to about a million and a half dollars as a result of that policy change.

The chronic wasting disease. You brought up a very good point about a preventative measure that was used with the threat of chronic wasting disease that appears in Saskatchewan deer herds and particularly up in the Chauvin area. During the summer deer from the Alberta side of the border and the Saskatchewan side of the border go along the river valleys, and there is some contact made with Saskatchewan deer. So a preventative thing is to make sure that the deer are culled on our side when we get too many deer because if we get too many deer and there's a threat of that disease coming into Alberta, it will threaten game farms as well. We want to protect not only the domesticated game farms but also our wildlife. Let me reassure you that the animals that are culled will be tested, and if they found out that there is no disease, that meat will be used for the needy.

You mentioned pine beetle again, and just let me make it very, very clear that the strategy that we have for pine beetle is to stop the spread of pine beetle coming over and threatening our healthy pine forests. B.C. presently has about 300 million cubic meters of dead pine forest over the past 10 years, and along our eastern slopes we have about 300 million cubic meters of healthy pine forest. Some of that is in parks. Some of that's in our own provincial parks; some of that's in our national parks. If the pine beetle comes in and all that turns red, all those trees are dead, it's going to ruin our scenery; it's going to have an effect on our tourist industry as well. As well, when it gets down into some of the FMA areas, it's going to have a devastating effect on our timber industry. So the best thing to do is that we want to stop it at the border, and we use the tactics as I mentioned earlier in answering the Member for Edmonton-Decore.

I think that just about sums up most of your comments. Again, I want to thank you for your comments about our fish and wildlife guys. They work very, very hard in trying to protect the fish and wildlife stocks, using conservation methods, so that our children and our grandchildren will have that resource down the road. And with this extra manpower that we're getting, we see, hopefully, a definite improvement not only in the education but also in making people realize that there are enforcement people out there and, of course, in stopping the poaching and that type of thing. So thank you very much for that comment.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the Member for Highwood, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly a person who was my first campaign manager on my first political campaign.

An Hon. Member: Oh, no.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

It was a successful campaign in grade 10 in Souris regional high school in Prince Edward Island. It was a very modest campaign, Mr. Chairman. She took bristol board and black magic markers and convinced enough of the student body that I could make a good treasurer of the high school. She compared me to Edgar Benson. I would now ask my sister, Dianne MacDonald, who is in the city this week on business, to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It just quickly pops to my mind, for the benefit of the poor sister, that you can pick your friends but not your relatives. I'm sorry, hon. member.

Anyway, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to thank the hon. minister for his concise presentation this evening and certainly congratulate him on the knowledge of the issues contained in his ministry. However, I do have one question, and rather than a shotgun I'll just use a single shot here, Mr. Minister. Many Albertans, including those in the Highwood constituency and I'm sure those in the Livingstone-Macleod constituency of yours, continue to be interested in the Alberta grizzly bears, including their management and the annual spring hunt. Albertans simply want to see these bears remain on the provincial landscape in sufficient numbers for future generations. I know the Member for Edmonton-Decore touched on this briefly, and you answered some of the questions. But, Mr. Chairman, can the minister please explain how the department's new budget will enhance the grizzly management?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. When it comes to grizzly bears, this is a very emotional and sensitive issue for Albertans. It depends on what side you're on. If you're on the preventative side and want to see the grizzly bears saved, which we all do – we want to make sure that grizzly bears are on the landscape – you will not want to see a hunt. On the other hand, if you're a farmer in Twin Butte, Alberta, and your kids are on their way out to meet the bus, your wife is standing at the kitchen sink looking out the window, and your children are about, oh, a quarter of a mile away, and between you and your children there is a grizzly bear and her cub going across the path, then you have a concern. So it's different for different people in different circumstances.

We believe that the grizzly bear hunt is part of the management of grizzly bear in the province, part of the management because Gord Stenhouse in the Hinton office has done just a tremendous job of grizzly bear research, probably ground-breaking research on grizzly bears: their habits, their habitat, their territorialism, everything about the grizzly bear, particularly in Alberta and on the eastern slopes. He is the foremost authority in North America on this issue, and some of the things he's come up with, like DNA testing, are helping us to decide exactly how many grizzly bears there are in this province. But it takes a long time to determine that.

We took a number of projects. Part of our management was to preserve the grizzly bear. We shortened the grizzly bear hunt by two weeks. We increased the fines for poaching. Poaching for grizzly bear is a huge problem, but last year there were no grizzly bears taken by poaching, so we think the $100,000 fine and/or two years in jail is a big deterrent. That's a huge part of our management program as well.

Can Gord Stenhouse in Hinton use some help? Yes, he can. One of the biologists that we're going to hire with these extra dollars this year will help co-ordinate our cariboo and our grizzly bear research, that will help address the issues associated with grizzly bears. Approximately $350,000 of the budget will be used to make sure that we increase our grizzly bear monitoring, to research our populations, and to try and map habitats. And we can try and track the grizzly bears from that standpoint. We believe that with this extra staff and the sensitivity around grizzly bears we will strengthen our understanding of grizzly bears and the pressures that they face with human contact.

I met with a group of PhDs over at the university here a couple of weeks ago, and their assessment is that the biggest threat to grizzly bears is the human contact. Grizzly bears like to eat by the side of the road, et cetera, because it's wide open. Some of the cut blocks that we have where vegetation has started, they like to eat there, and it's wide open. It's the human contact that is the biggest threat to grizzly bears.

So we will be able to continue with the grizzly bear inventory that we began in 2004 based on that good, sound DNA that is now an example for North America. Other jurisdictions are starting to use it, like our folks in British Columbia, so that we can compare. We have systems now where we can compare DNA, so we can track the bears going over the border into British Columbia. We also know that the bears go down into Montana. As a matter of fact, you will see bears go all the way from Sundre way down into Glacier park and further south. So the DNA is the best way to track our grizzly bears, and this is what this extra biologist will help us do to make sure that we know the numbers and keep that research program going.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I should say at the outset that I'm a professional forester, and I've been employed in the resource management industry in Alberta for 16 years now. I'm happy and lucky, I guess, that I've had two jobs in my life that I've absolutely loved and one that I absolutely didn't, so I guess I'm ahead in the game.

Being involved in forestry, I've met some just great people in the industry and some of them are seated in the gallery behind me still, I think. I've met a couple of real characters, and at least one of those is seated in the gallery behind me, as well. Being involved in this industry, I just want to stress that I don't agree with some of the negative comments and the criticism that come from the opposition benches here. There's always room for improvement, and I think the department is seeking that.

I've done things in my career here that I couldn't have done in any other province or maybe even in any other country, being involved in the conservation strategy and the establishment of the sustainable forest management network. There are some wonderful things that have happened in this province and continue to happen. I had the incredible honour a few years ago of travelling to Boston with some department staff, when I was employed in the industry, to deliver a lecture at Harvard University about some of the things that happen in resource management. Alberta is leading in North America, so I don't agree with some of the negativity. As I've said, there's always room for improvement, and I believe the department and the staff are trying to achieve that.

I did have a few questions for the minister. I want to focus, I guess, on what I believe is $10.3 million on the operational side of the funding here, the $10.3 million identified on page 347. I have a few questions about programs, I guess, sort of in relation to that.

First of all, the mountain pine beetle, and the minister correctly identifies the potential threat there. I thank the minister for his comments in answer to the Member for Edmonton-Decore. I wholeheartedly hope that we reject a made-in-Alberta solution in that it would be insanity for us to reject the tremendous body of academic and operational research that's out there already. I don't agree with the other hon. member who pointed out that our conditions are different. There's been a tremendous amount of research done on the reaction of pine beetles to various temperatures, altitudes, wind directions, and all that stuff. We'd be insane to reject that out of hand.

In the pine beetle program I'm wondering how much of the funding is targeted at – the minister identified $2.3 million. Are there actual staff commitments there, research commitments? With respect to the $100 million that the federal government supplied to B.C., that's necessary because of the serious situation that B.C. is in. We're not in that situation yet, and we're not going to expect those kinds of costs if we can stay ahead of the beetle, which is the trick in pine beetle infestations. But I am wondering: is the federal government ready to commit or talk about any commitment to Alberta? Is that possible at all?

With respect to reforestation the minister identified $1.5 million per year over three years. Does the minister believe the department has the adequate monitoring systems in place to ensure that reforestation is happening in the province, not just the reforestation that the province does but the vast majority of which is industrial reforestation? Given that there's quite a shift in philosophy about reforestation over the last few years with respect to ecologically based standards or specific standards, does the department intend to focus any additional resources into research to adjust its standards over time?

The interim Métis harvesting agreement has been mentioned a few times tonight, and the minister mentioned 10 new additional officers. Maybe I do agree with a member of the opposition here about: is that sufficient? Is the minister confident that the enforcement end of it can be accomplished? He spoke at length about the monitoring end of it. Also, is the minister contemplating any research like additional wildlife inventories, or anything like that?

The last area, I guess, is the area of forest tenure, and the minister didn't address that tonight. It wasn't asked. How does the department plan to respond to pressures on the tenure system from such things as the softwood lumber dispute that we're having and the pressures that the Americans are putting on our tenure system? New ways of practising forestry, like ecological management. The pine beetle could have an effect on our tenure system if we want to adjust to meet the demands that we're going to face there.

Also, we're seeing a consolidation in the industry, partly in response to the softwood lumber dispute, and that's put pressure on local communities and on our tenure system. I wonder if the minister could say anything about how we're planning to respond there.

Lastly, I had a question, and this is more of a plea, I suppose, than a question. The minister talked about improvements to airports and to the water bomber fleet. I wonder if I could ask the minister on a personal note and on a constituency note that the department sometime this year review the fees that the department pays for airport use. We're an incredibly significant user of northern airports in particular and in my constituency Manning, Fort Vermilion, and High Level, and I feel that we should ensure that the department is paying fair and competitive rates for airport use there when those small northern airports, that are so important to the north, are under such pressure.

I'll leave my comments there and invite the minister to respond.

The Acting Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman, and thanks to the hon. Member for Peace River. I want to thank the hon. member for his valuable input to our ministry and to me personally. Your expertise in the forestry industry over the years in some of our talks certainly has helped me with some of the decisions that we've had to make, and I really, really appreciate that. I know that you have a passion for the industry, and I know that it's an important industry for your area, and you represent your constituents well in terms of what forestry means. More importantly, what I've found is that the long-term sustainability of the forestry industry is important to you, and you really do express that well not only to me but to members of this House.

You talked about making sure that our forests are healthy forests, about our ForestCare, that you had a big part in, and conservation, that the research that's gone into all of that is used wisely and that it's used by the department. Absolutely. It's an ongoing initiative on behalf of the department: looking at certification, looking at standards, making sure that our forest companies are all part of that, looking at our reforestation, monitoring, making sure that the surveys that are being done by FRIAA actually fit the bill, and making sure that the reforestation is done in a sustainable way because that is big. Not only is the pine beetle going to have an effect on our resource and our annual allowable cut in the future but also the reforestation and the speed with which our forest grows as well.

You talked about the federal government, their commitment of the $100 million to B.C. Has the federal government committed any dollars directly to Alberta? We're doing some monitoring, particularly in our parks, which the federal government is responsible for, and that monitoring will decide whether or not the federal government participates. We'll certainly make sure that we continue the dialogue with them to make sure that not only their forests are protected but also that when and if – and we hope it never happens – it does get to the national park boundary on our side, it doesn't spill over into our forests. So that is something that we continue to monitor and work with the federal government on.

Métis harvesting. This also responds to Edmonton-Calder and Edmonton-Decore about Métis harvesting and the number of people, the extra enforcement officers, that we would have. Right now I'd like to report to the hon. member that certainly in terms of big game, Métis, if they've taken a trophy sheep, for example, have got to register it with us. The same thing for goat and the same thing for cougar and grizzly bear and that type of thing. They have to register.

In terms of: has it escalated beyond the capabilities of our enforcement officers to keep up with it? Up till this September 145 bighorn sheep were taken in the province, and of that, seven were taken as declared by Métis. Now, the thing is that we don't know whether those Métis were in previous years normal hunters. Right now we don't see a proliferation of taking some of these trophies by the Métis. We feel that we have a right balance between the number of enforcement officers out there and the numbers of wildlife that are taken, but it's something that we have to continue to monitor and manage, again, for future generations. If we need more enforcement for that type of thing, if we see a proliferation of it, then of course we have to react to that.

You talked about tenure. The 20-year tenure system has worked well for certainty not only for the companies on wood supply and management plans. It's given them the opportunity to come up with cutting plans, et cetera, et cetera, and you're more versed in this than

I am. It provided certainty for the company, but more importantly it also provided certainty for Albertans that their resource was going to be reforested and that the annual allowable cuts wouldn't be exceeded, et cetera, because the industry itself wants to make sure that it's sustainable for the future.

In 2006 we're going to see a tenure renewal pretty well across the province. We're not going to change that because it's worked well. The 20-year tenure has worked well. It might look somewhat different but not a lot different. We've got to make sure that we keep the innovation and that the research that companies like you were working for and the research that's shared with the department and the new technologies that are out there are taken into account. Plus, as you mentioned, the softwood lumber negotiations that are going on stream: we also take that into account and whether or not some of the exit ramps that we're looking at for the duties that are being put on and the negotiations that allow those exit ramps to come off would be incorporated into the tenure.

There are a couple of other things that we need to address as well. We've got a value-added, secondary manufacturing industry that is looking for fibre all the time. In order for them to survive, they need fibre, so there's been an initiative under way. In the tenure should we put a provision that they must sell to our secondary manufacturing? Those kinds of negotiations continue to go on.

A review of fees for our airport use. I'll certainly take that up with the department. You talked about the viability of your northern airports, and that's the responsible thing that you should do as an MLA, so we'll certainly review that.

Thank you very much for the questions.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I hear that the members across are wanting questions, and I'm willing to give some more.

Just to get back to the minister with regard to some of his comments that he had for me. I appreciate that he does have some people with 40-plus years of experience. That's how this industry is able to remain strong and vibrant, because of that ongoing expertise. I commend him in being able to attract and retain people for that long.

With regard to understanding the pine beetle, I did have an opportunity to speak with the Member for Peace River, who did give me a bit of an understanding that you just cannot spray these pests as they do in fact bury themselves within the wood itself. I asked the member and quoted to him: the enemy of my enemy is my friend. Is there, in fact, a natural predator that can be released with regard to taking out the pine beetle? You didn't think so. In fact, you've got to worry about introducing another species because that would have an effect on that as well.

Cold weather. We realize that it's going to take cold weather for five to six weeks to be able to kill off the beetle. You know, my memory goes back, and I don't think we've had cold weather now for a couple of years. I believe that if we do get it, it may be a freak occurrence now. The weather is getting warmer. The seasons are not like they used to be 20 years ago. That's just a fact. So it's certainly nothing that we can rely on. I think that if we're going to get a cold snap, it might be every five or six years if we're quite lucky.

The reforestation on burnt-out lands. I'm not sure, in fact, as to who's responsible for that. If it's the ministry itself and they will in fact hire this FRIAA to do some of the reforestation and have them go in and monitor, I'd appreciate that information. I would appreciate a little bit more background with regard to FRIAA and their overall impact and what their intent with regard to the industry is.

The biggest threat, I think, that we have with regard to wildlife and land use remains basically the development and the encroachment with our industry. Again, as I indicated earlier, that puts us between a rock and a hard spot because our economy is basically driven by the natural resources that are out there with oil and gas, and we have to be able to maintain a balance. Education is one of them but, again, balance and to be able to extract what we need in a reasonable process, keeping people employed but, again, respecting the environment. That's the biggest thing right there, and I'm quite concerned that we're able to have some of the lands and the resources and the natural habitats, the wetlands, around for future generations.

Education is certainly part of the picture. I'd use education the way that this ministry used it to warn Albertans with regard to West Nile. I thought it was a good communication strategy. In fact, I saw the commercials throughout the summertime. So a commendable effort on that particular piece.

We talk about the early spring awakening, or the thaw, with regard to the grizzlies. We were able to in fact feed these bears so they weren't going to go off too much out of their regular migrating season or area. We were going to be giving them roadkill, or at least that's what I anticipated or heard. It was roadkill. When we get some of this roadkill that we are feeding the bears because of a lack of food with regard to their early hibernation, do we test this roadkill for CWD as well? That way, we have an idea as to how much of it exists within the wild.

I appreciate some of the comments with regard to the cull on the Saskatchewan border. I'm just, again, skeptical. Obviously, the deer cross in more than just one path, but research has told this ministry that this is a good indication that they should be going here. They did take about 300 deer, which is quite a large number, but what about the vacuum effect? I've heard that industry people have talked about that once those deer disappear, there are going to be more that are coming across. How do you, in fact, effectively monitor the migration? Some had indicated that they are only within a one kilometre radius, and I've had others that say that they can migrate more than 300 kilometres. I mean, who do you believe on that particular thing?

Again, if I could make another plea with regard to the grizzly bear. We appointed a grizzly bear recovery team that called for the postponement of the spring hunt, and the reasoning was that they found that the present number of the grizzly bears in Alberta was around 500. I realize that we are in fact talking about DNA analysis. I'm not sure if we're setting up barb tests for that and then individually picking out the hairs and doing DNA samples on that or if it's through other means of DNA samples that they're able to do this.

The team recommended that the number of grizzly bears should be placed at about a thousand to be able to warrant a hunt. A thousand would be a healthy population. Even this number, according to the World Conservation Union, would still be listed as vulnerable and would still therefore be considered facing a high risk of extinction in the wild. The whole crux of this is this government's refusal to listen to not only, as I mentioned before, science but the Albertans who have also demanded that the spring hunt for the grizzly bear be suspended. I would again urge not only on behalf of my constituents but other Albertans that have written me and e-mailed me even through the election and just after I raised it within this House, that are still very much concerned about making sure and maintaining these wild bears in their natural habitats. Those would be a couple of specifics that I would just ask the minister to comment on.

Then, finally, the lowballing, again, of the overall budget, with an explanation as to how we come up with about a 30 per cent or a 40 per cent difference with regard to even the fighting of the forest fires. I know that there is, in fact, about a $110 million shortfall in some cases, and that's when the supplementary request comes in.

I've asked a number of questions again here right now, and I'm hoping that the minister will be able to answer them for me. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(4), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration for a department's proposed estimates, I must now put the following question after considering the business plan and the proposed estimates for the Department of Sustainable Resource Development for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006.

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$219,215,000
Capital Investment	$20,500,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the Committee of Supply rise and report the estimates of the Department of Sustainable Resource Development and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, for the following department.

Sustainable Resource Development: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $219,215,000; capital investment, $20,500,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate April 18: Ms Evans]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise this evening to speak to Bill 37, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2005. I would just like to comment that of the several bills that have been presented so far this sitting in the Legislature under the guise of housekeeping, this one is, perhaps, most appropriately described that way, and I will be recommending to my colleagues that we support this bill. [some applause] Thank you. It is, indeed, as near as I can tell, a housekeeping bill which allows the government to enact various other pieces of legislation that have either been passed or will undoubtedly be passed in the next few weeks.

Having said that, there are a couple of items that I'm sure you're all anxiously awaiting my comment on, and in particular, I think, would be the striking out of the $4 billion capping of expenditures of resource revenues and lifting that to $4.75 billion. I found that really interesting in the government's press release, where it described that the spending of resource revenues would be limited to $4.75 billion, and it didn't actually refer to the fact that we're raising it by $750 million. So it was sort of interesting the way that that was spin doctored, if I can say so.

It really does beg the question as to whether or not this government has any sort of a concrete plan for budget surpluses, and again I'll cite the Alberta Liberal Bill 203, which is before the House right now and which refers to a solid plan that deals with surplus revenues and how we believe that they should be dealt with in order to ensure that there is, in fact, a legacy for not only today's residents of this fine province but, in fact, for our children and their children and their children. Unfortunately, I don't see that we're addressing that by lifting by $750 million the amount of resource revenue that the government is allowed to spend, so I would certainly like to point that out.

The other thing that I find interesting, and perhaps when we get to the committee stage, the minister will enlighten me on it, is the fact that we are including under this proposed act now the provision for adding settlements with First Nations as an expense that would not be – sorry. I don't have the exact wording here, and I'm looking for that. It would not be an actual expense of the government and, therefore, would not constitute a deficit if, in fact, it were to go over the estimates. I guess the question, really, in my mind is: why was this not in there before if there's so much concern?

The minister is indicating that it was in there before, but that's not the way I read the bill. If you can explain for me, you know, when we get to the committee stage or at some point, I would be interested to hear that because I'm just wondering if it was an omission when the bill was first drafted or if, perhaps, there was something on the horizon that I'm not aware of that caused some concern and prompted that particular provision to be added into the bill now. If the minister is indicating that it was there in some other fashion before, and she would provide that information for me, I would be interested to receive it, for sure.

Beyond that, Mr. Speaker, as I said, it does appear to be truly a housekeeping bill. I could comment on several aspects of it, the $3 billion cap, but of course we've had ample opportunity to mention that before. I'll just briefly say again that I do believe that capping it at $3 billion is, in fact, a mistake. If anything, we should have set that as a floor, not a ceiling, and I am disappointed in the budget that we're only committing $250 million to it this year when at that rate it will take us 12 years to reach the ceiling. The government's own projections show only an $11 million return on that investment this year, which is, quite frankly, a pittance to postsecondary in the way of an endowment. So I'm disappointed in that. Nevertheless, the act will be passed, and this will allow us to put that $250 million in there. It is important to at least begin with that, so I'm not going to hold that up.

The other thing that I am pleased about, something that I've been talking about both personally and now more recently in my capacity as an MLA and the Finance critic, is that we are taking some steps to inflation-proof the heritage savings trust fund, and I'm certainly pleased about that.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will recommend to my colleagues that we support this bill. I see several others anxious to rise and speak to it as well, so I will take my seat. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am happy to rise and speak in favour of Bill 37. I find it refreshing that we see at the heart of this bill an increase in utilizing nonrenewable resource revenue to increase our program spending in this province. I think that it's a useful and necessary thing to do at this juncture given the practical, other details of this budget but also as a way to set a precedent to place more of this money into program spending.

You know, it's important, though, at the same time to realize that we need to come up with a longer range plan by which we cannot just spend or put away this money in the, sort of, post debt scenario in this province but also to put away and make a plan for a post oil and gas era for Alberta as well. I mean, I realize that that is a long-term planning thing to ask for, but I think we owe it to the future generations of this province to have a plan like that in place and for our own peace of mind, to know that we are not spending away the assets that we currently enjoy in this province at the expense of future generations.

I think that one aspect of this act, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2005, that I would perhaps like to bring forward – and we can discuss it in third reading or committee stage – is putting some of the money that we have as surplus back towards the heritage savings fund. I think that, you know, the heritage savings trust fund has been languishing somewhat in these past years. When we build a budget and if that budget is reasonable to meet the programming needs of our province, then it seems reasonable that the heritage trust fund should see some of that surplus to build for the future.

As well, I hear a lot of talk from the two other parties in this House about using surplus funds for planning for education or for other aspects of our jurisdiction here as a Legislature. But if we planned for the way that we should program in the first place, then it would seem to me that, you know, we would be more responsible in funding programming such as postsecondary education and not just sort of leaving it up to the vagaries of surpluses to build the proper foundation, say, for an expansion of our postsecondary education or, let's say, our public health regime that we have or public education from K to 12, et cetera.

In a way I'm hoping that Bill 37 might be a bit of a contagious act, Mr. Speaker, in the sense that we can be more honest in looking at what our true revenues are going to be instead of being so notorious in our lowballing of those revenue numbers and then coming back later in the year to announce to the grateful public that we have such huge windfalls. You know, I'm hoping that this precedence, I suppose – that Bill 37 suggests that we spend more money on programming in the first place, I think that that is an altogether more honest and realistic way to budget for Albertans and show transparency for Albertans to see where their money is going.

So, again, just to conclude, we are certainly in support of Bill 37, and we'd like to see more of these proper program funding increases in the budget in the future.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In regard to Bill 37, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2005, I just have one question that hopefully will be answered during the course of debate. That question would be around the accumulated debt. It's slightly less than $3.5 billion, and one of the concepts that we're looking at here this evening is to lock by law the final $3.5 billion to retire the debt into the debt retirement account in a fashion that, I think, is going to continue right through until 2017. Some of these instruments are long term, and they don't come due until that time. It could be even later than that.

But what, exactly, is going to be the manner in which the interest is going to be used on this account? There have been discussions in the past, certainly whenever the government was so reluctant to adequately fund the public school boards to settle the issue between the teachers and the school boards. There was a suggestion from this side of the House that some of the money that had been previously set aside, the interest from that could be used. This could be a lot of money generated in interest revenue from this. Exactly what is that money going to be used for? Certainly, whenever we consider that it's this government's policy that it's forcing the public board in the city of Edmonton to close four good schools to save in operations costs anywhere from $140,000 to $90,000, perhaps some of the interest that's accumulated in this account could be used to support neighbourhood community public schools.

I look forward to the answer from the hon. minister. We could be talking about a considerable amount of money here, and I would like to know how that's going to be used.

Thank you.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, there have been some excellent comments and questions, and I think I understand from the members who have asked that they would be quite pleased to entertain some further dialogue in Committee of Supply, and as I introduce it in Committee of Supply, I will make comment and answer questions and all of that.

Those would be my closing comments on Bill 37.

[Motion carried; Bill 37 read a second time]

Bill 29 Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Amendment Act, 2005

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this evening to move second reading of Bill 29, the Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Amendment Act, 2005.

This important amendment will offer a new personal income support program for AISH recipients through the introduction of supplementary benefits. As you know, when the Ministry of Seniors and Community Supports was created last fall, it was the first time that responsibility for adult disability programs was placed within one department. In responding to the recommendations of the MLA committee reviewing the AISH program, we knew the importance of addressing the recommendations in a comprehensive and coordinated way that is responsive to the needs of people who rely on our programs.

All members know that there have only been two types of benefits available under the AISH program. The first is the living allowance, which I announced last week would be increasing to a maximum of $1,000 by next April. The second is the comprehensive health benefit package, which is provided at no cost to AISH clients and includes full coverage for their health care premiums, prescription drugs, as well as full dental services, eye care, and essential diabetic supplies. That package is worth approximately on average about $300 a month.

Last week I was pleased to announce that this year we will introduce a new benefit for Albertans on AISH: the personal income supports through supplementary benefit program. This minor legislative change outlined under Bill 29 will allow us to offer this new benefit which was previously not available under the AISH program component. This new benefit will help make AISH a more holistic program and be more responsive to our client's needs.

The new supplementary benefits will cover a variety of costs, and I'd like to briefly tell you about just a couple of examples, Mr. Speaker. There are more than 1,000 single parents on AISH as well as about 400 couples with children, and we've heard that some have had difficulty making ends meet when it is time for their children to go back to school each fall. In addition to the living allowance increase, which would help ease some of the pressure, the client will now be able to also apply for the new supplementary benefit to help cover the cost of school supplies or school fees. Previously this was not possible under AISH because the program didn't have a separate, flexible benefit category to offer that coverage.

Clients could also apply for additional financial assistance to cover such costs as wheelchair repairs or wheelchair batteries, which, as you know, can be very expensive, in some cases up to $400. For those clients looking to enhance their skills so that they can work, this benefit would also be used to cover such costs as transportation to employment or training programs that may help the clients improve their skills.

I could go on, Mr. Speaker, but given the hour, I won't. The reason I could, though, is because the coverage that will be offered by the new supplementary benefit program I think will be as unique as the needs of the clients. Through this new personal income support we will offer supplementary benefits and be better able to assess and address the needs on a case-by-case basis. At first the benefits are expected to provide an average benefit of about $180 to $200 a month for eligible clients.

It is important to note that these supplementary benefits will be available for all AISH clients who have less than $3,000 in liquid assets. That's approximately 80 per cent of the client base. To be clear, we are referring to liquid assets. This does not include the individual's home, their vehicle, or other items in trust. This was the level that was indicated by the MLA committee, and we spent a lot of time carefully choosing that figure because, as I said, it's approximately 80 per cent of the client base that would be eligible. Most importantly, it will help ensure that those who have few resources to cover unexpected costs will have some extra help.

The supplementary benefits will be made available for AISH clients later this year. This fiscal year it is expected that these benefits will cost approximately 10 and a half million dollars. It's actually beginning immediately, but it takes time for the IT and whatnot to be set up, which is why it won't begin this month. Next year, the first full year the benefits will be available under AISH, it is expected to cost approximately $25 million.

So, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, last Friday I did announce the renewal of the AISH program, and that renewal included an unprecedented investment in the AISH program, which was an $80 million increase in the budget, bringing total program spending to $488 million this year. In addition to the new funding, as a result of the MLA review process we are making important changes that will make this program more responsive to AISH clients. The renewed AISH program offers clients a significant package of benefits, especially with the new addition of the supplementary benefits through this personal income support program. And that, as I said, will address the clients' needs.

So with that, I would move adjournment on Bill 29, the AISH amendment act, for discussion at a later date. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Stettler Regional Water Authorization Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to move third reading of Bill 11, the Stettler Regional Water Authorization Act.

I'm very pleased to have the support of the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler for this bill. This bill will ensure a safe, secure water supply for approximately 6,000 Albertans across nine communities in central Alberta. This act will allow Alberta Environment to issue a water licence, Mr. Speaker, to transfer treated drinking water from the town of Stettler to the communities of Donalda, Big Valley, Rochon Sands, White Sands, Byemoor, Endiang, Erskine, Nevis, and Red Willow.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to this bill, and I will just make a couple of comments because I know that we discussed this in great length, which I think was one of the better debates that I've heard since I've been in this House. There was a great deal of information shared. There were a great deal of concerns expressed from this side of the House that were answered, and I think that made me a little more comfortable with this. There were three things. The Liberals certainly wanted a water protection plan with a conservation act that went with it, and I believe there was some good discussion around that conservation. I'm not altogether sure that this bill totally addresses how deep I would like it to have gone, but it certainly is a start.

Another thing that was discussed that is very alarming, or could be alarming, to me is – and I'm hoping that we have that assurance that we would be protected and not ever sell our water so that we would become involved with a NAFTA problem that could blossom into a softwood. We certainly don't want to go that route.

The other thing that I think is very good about this bill is that any time there is a water transfer in water river basins, it must be approved by this House. I think that from all Albertans' point of view, because this is so very, very important and we are changing the way our whole geographic and environment works, it must come to this House.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat to close debate?

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat has moved third reading of Bill 11, Stettler Regional Water Authorization Act.

Mr. Eggen: I don't know if I caught you. I was going to speak.

The Acting Speaker: I did not recognize you, and I'd already recognized the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat to close debate, so I don't think there's provision that I could come back to you now.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a third time]

Securities Amendment Act, 2005

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tuesday night I spoke in response to questions regarding Bill 19 during Committee of the Whole, and I hope I was able to clarify some of the concerns the hon. members had about this legislation. However, my colleagues will be very disappointed, but I must confess an error. Bill 19 will require ministerial approval of remuneration for the chair, vice-chairs, lead independent member, and commission members. For the record I wish to clarify a remark that I made during Committee of the Whole when I noted that remuneration would be vetted with an OC at the ministerial level. No OC is required, but ministerial approval will be required.* This will provide for an appropriate level of government oversight through increased accountability and minimize potential conflicts of interest.

Before we proceed to third and final reading, I would briefly like to highlight the importance of this bill. As I've stated, this legislation helps to fulfill a commitment we made with our provincial and territorial partners in a memorandum of understanding to reform the existing securities framework and inspire greater investor confidence. In order to provide more consistent regulation across Canada, this legislation will further harmonize various provisions of the Alberta Securities Act with those of other jurisdictions.

The recent allegations against the Alberta Securities Commission, though unrelated to this legislation, have nonetheless highlighted the importance of enforcement. Mr. Speaker, Bill 19 gives the commission more bite, as one of the hon. members commented, by enhancing enforcement and compliance powers through a variety of means, as I outlined during second reading and in my comments Tuesday. It sends a message that the government of Alberta takes security legislation very seriously and is working to improve our ability to enforce those laws.

Tuesday night some of the hon. members also repeated their assertion that we should pursue a single securities regulator. I responded to this during committee, but I would like to just repeat that the memorandum of understanding focuses on steps we would need to take if in the future the provinces and territories wanted to go that way.

In any event, Alberta remains committed to working with the other provinces and territories to improve securities regulation that inspires investor confidence and supports competitiveness, innovation, and growth through efficient, streamlined, and cost-effective securities regulation.

I urge all members to support this important legislation that makes it easier for businesses to access capital markets across Canada while at the same time ensuring the highest levels of investor protection.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I move third reading of Bill 19, the Securities Amendment Act, 2005. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I indicated when

I spoke to this bill in second reading that I was willing to accept that it is better than nothing, and it certainly is a step in the right direction. I recognize that the passport system, while it might not be the single entity that I would personally prefer, certainly is some ways along that route. In fact, in a personal conversation I had with the minister, there was some indication that there may be some possibility at a future date of having an overriding, overarching umbrella that would operate above the various provincial commissions.

So I'm a little confused, quite frankly, because the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky indicated in his comments during committee that there was absolutely no way ever that this government intended to look at a single commission, yet tonight he seems to have maybe backed off on that a little bit. I'm not sure if that's what he meant or not. I hope it is because I think there is value, at least, in considering that based on some of the comments that we've had from various stakeholders that that might have been their first choice in a perfect world and given that the political will wasn't there to proceed in that regard, this is a good alternative. So I'm just hopeful that that's what he meant tonight when he made his comments in third reading.

I appreciate his recognition of the fact that there was an error in his comments the other day. I think I indicated that I was actually pleased to see that the minister has final authority in setting the remuneration of those various members because I do believe that there is value in that in this particular case. The fact that the minister would have final say I believe is a good thing.

The fact that this takes us into a situation where we're in line with what other commissions are doing across the country and allows for a more seamless approach by various investors when they look to do business in Alberta I think is a good thing. I've mentioned that already.

Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, although it might not be everything that I would have hoped for, it certainly is not a bad first step. Given those comments, I will again be recommending to my colleagues that we support this bill, and I look forward to seeing, hopefully, the positive effects of it.

The last comment that I would make, Mr. Speaker – and, again, I think I made this comment when I spoke to it in second reading – is that when we were speaking to stakeholders, there were allusions to the fact that maybe some of the enforcement changes in here didn't go quite far enough. At the time I wasn't necessarily sure why we were hearing that because nobody was coming right out and saying: you should do this, or you should do that. There were sort of veiled concerns that maybe it wasn't quite enough.

In light of some of the stories in the news now and the fact that the minister has requested a review by the Auditor General, I'm hopeful that, in fact, these changes will be enough. I'm also looking forward to the report from the Auditor General, which the minister has indicated will be tabled in the Legislature and available for all Albertans to see. That is a good thing because it's paramount that investors have every confidence in their investments in Alberta and in the commission that overrides the Securities Commission. So I'm hopeful that the bill will accomplish those things and address the concerns that we were hearing in a sort of veiled fashion from some of the stakeholder groups. If it doesn't, I suspect we may be back here a year from now looking at further amendments to address that, but I'm hopeful that, in fact, this will accomplish that.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to recommend to my colleagues that they support the bill, and I look forward to any further debate. Thank you.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, had made rather extensive comments in regard to Bill 19 during second reading. The main issue, my main concern, I guess, with Bill 19 was in regard to how it was going to flow through and indeed support and encourage the development of a national securities regulator. That's not to say a federal but a national body that could oversee the securities exchanges of each of the provinces and territories.

Considering that we didn't receive entirely a clear answer to that, I do have a notice of amendment that I would like to pass out to each of the members now. This amendment from my colleague, Mr. Martin, is to move that the motion for third reading of Bill 19, the Securities Amendment Act, 2005, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 19, Securities Amendment Act, 2005, be not now read a third time because it inadequately addresses the need for a national securities regulator."

The NDP opposition has during earlier stages of this bill highlighted the need for a single national securities regulator to better protect investors and catch corporate bad guys, so to speak. It's important to note that a national securities regulator does not mean a federal government regulator. In fact, a single regulator would be a collaboration of the 10 provinces and the three territories modelled somewhat along the lines of the Securities and Exchange Commission in the United States. Nor does a national securities regulator mean that all of the activities will take place in Ontario. While SEC's head office is in Washington, DC, in America, it has a number of regional offices located in other centres more or less proportionate to the amount of capital market activity that originates there.

When it comes to investor protection and pursuing corporate crime, Canada is a rather small player compared to the much tougher laws in the U.S. Enron, WorldCom, Martha Stewart, and Tyco have all been prosecuted in the United States, where they take corporate crime very seriously and have the tools to pursue it. Let's take the comparison to the track record that we have here, let's say, for example, with Bre-X, which arguably was one of the biggest scams in corporate securities history. Due to Canada's weak securities laws, none of the Bre-X principals were ever held accountable for their crimes.

A big part of the reason for this patchwork quilt of securities regulation in this country is because of this provincial regulation that we adhere to. I don't think Bill 19 will do much to improve the situation. In fact, the passport system implemented through Bill 19 could, I would suggest, even make things worse. According to Wayne Alford, the former director of enforcement for the Alberta Securities Commission, the passport system could contribute further to, as he said, a race to the bottom. Alford notes that with 13 jurisdictions the incentive is to lower standards in a province relative to other provinces in order to attract capital market participants. Of course, this is not necessarily in the best interests of any investor anywhere.

I want to briefly quote from a guest column Mr. Alford published in the October 2004 Economics Society of Calgary newsletter. In it he states:

The Passport System will perpetuate many of the current complaints. There will still be infrastructure duplication. There will still be thirteen regulators who can make whatever rules they see fit. There will still be inconsistent investor protection and enforcement. Government oversight will still be inconsistent.

For the above reasons, I urge members to support this amendment at this time, and I invite you to reflect on it and make comment as you see fit.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, just for the record, this reasoned amendment that you moved was moved on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. Is that correct?

Mr. Eggen: That's correct. That's right. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, we have a reasoned amendment before us. Anybody wish to participate?

[Motion on amendment lost]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a third time]

Administrative Procedures Amendment Act, 2005

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General I move third reading of Bill 23.

As he indicated during second reading, the bill is in response to two Supreme Court rulings that have made it necessary for provincial governments across Canada to specify the authority of tribunals in their jurisdiction. The bill streamlines the regulatory process, preserves access to justice for the boards that have the capacity to handle constitutional issues. Bill 23 ensures that boards up to the task of determining these complex issues will have the jurisdiction to do so and makes very clear that boards that do not have that same capacity will be free to do what the Legislature needs them to do. The bill will cut down on unnecessary litigation concerning the jurisdiction of Alberta tribunals and will save time for the litigant as he or she will not have to have the question of jurisdiction slowly winding its way through the various appeals.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, Bill 23 is a necessary piece of legislation that will greatly enhance the administration of justice by clarifying the roles of our boards and tribunals while at the same time maximizing meaningful access to justice.

I'd ask all hon. members to support Bill 23 at third reading.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've been following – I don't want to use the word monitor – the progress of Bill 23 through this Assembly since the day it was introduced, and I'm not convinced that this bill is necessary at this time. Now, the hon. Minister of Advanced Education spoke about the need for this bill and specifically section 12 and the notice of question of constitutional law, but I'm not convinced that we need this at this time. I'm not convinced that the reasons that the hon. minister has just recently given are in this case valid.

We are looking at what has been described to me as an unusual procedure, and it's also being described in the research that I have done to be an elaborate legal stunt. I would certainly caution all Members of this Legislative Assembly before Bill 23, the Administrative Procedures Amendment Act, 2005, is passed into law, that we reconsider this. I know from my time in this Assembly that this will not happen, but I just find at this time in the history of this country and as the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms continues to be defined by various levels of our parliamentary process that I don't understand why this is necessary.

With that, I will take my seat, but I'm not convinced that this is something we need at this time in this province as we see the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms unfold. I don't understand why we need it.

Thank you.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker: The question has been called. Hon. Government House Leader, would you like to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a third time]

Bill 32 Animal Keepers Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 32, the Animal Keepers Act.

As you know, this act will replace the Livery Stable Keepers Act to better reflect its extensive use by the cattle industry while retaining its clarity and ease of use by animal keepers. Extensive public consultations were undertaken, and I'm confident that we addressed any concerns that were raised about Bill 32 during these consultations and also in committee. I believe this legislation reflects the needs of today's livestock industry, and stakeholders will welcome its proclamation.

I want to thank the staff of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development for their help and guidance on this bill. I do appreciate the excellent comments and support from the members of this Assembly for this bill. That being said, I'd like to move third reading of Bill 32, the Animal Keepers Act.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes, Bill 32 certainly seems to be an improvement, and anything we on this side of the Assembly can do to assist, we're quite happy to do it. The process to date certainly seems to have been more than fair. Everyone has had an opportunity to have input into this change. I almost think it is just an update, really, and would be glad to support that.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For someone who has difficulty keeping goldfish, I obviously had to make many phone calls to find out what this bill was about.

An Hon. Member: What happens to the goldfish?

Ms Pastoor: My goldfish run away.

The people that I did speak with had nothing but good words for this bill, that they are updates that were way behind. So I stand up to support this bill, and I do have the support of many of the people that I spoke with that are in the livestock industry behind that.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to reiterate some of the comments I made when we were back in committee, I believe it was or perhaps in second reading, and that is to compliment the minister and his ministry for the tremendous job they did in consulting with stakeholders.

I would hope and plead with him, actually, that he would implore some of his colleagues to do the same when they're developing bills in the future because it is a comment that we do hear from time to time, that various stakeholder groups have not been consulted enough. I'm thinking particularly of Bill 15, the amendments to the WCB act.

This is such a pleasant thing. As opposition when we're contacting stakeholder groups to see what comments or input they may have, and they indicate to us that they have been fully consulted by the department, that is really pleasing for us to hear. It does in fact make our job as opposition that much easier, too, to know that there has been an effort to include the various stakeholders.

So I would just like to once again commend the minister and the ministry for doing that and again would encourage all other ministers to do the same because it really does, I think, contribute to the democratic process.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace to close debate.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd now ask for the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 32 read a third time]

Bill 33 Stray Animals Amendment Act, 2005

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 33, the Stray Animals Amendment Act, 2005, on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

I'd like to thank all members of the Assembly for the debate on this bill at second and in committee. I understand that the minister was able to answer all the questions that were raised. We believe it's a solid bill after consultation with the stakeholders and would ask the Assembly to agree to third reading.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development has answered the questions that were presented earlier in debate, and there are no problems on this side of the House with the Stray Animals Amendment Act, 2005.

I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to pass this bill immediately because there seems to be a need for this legislation on the far reaches on that side of the House. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 33 read a third time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the hour I'd move that we adjourn to 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:56 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Title: Thursday, April 21, 2005

1:30 p.m.

Date: 05/04/21

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. As we conclude for this week our work in this Assembly, we renew our energies with thanks so that we may continue our work with the people in the constituencies we represent. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Order of Excellence is the highest honour that the province can bestow upon a citizen, and today it's my honour to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a distinguished group of Albertans seated in your gallery. They represent the 2004 inductees. I would ask yours and the House's indulgence to just say a few words about each of these distinguished people because their contributions to our province have been considerable. I'll ask them to stand as I call out their names.

Ann McCaig is a dedicated fundraiser and advocate for a wide range of Alberta organizations. Her focus has largely been on education and children. Over the years she has lent her tremendous energy and support to organizations such as the Alberta Children's hospital, the Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre, the Banff Centre, and the University of Calgary.

Eric Newell is someone members will know as a leader in the development of Alberta's oil sands. Eric served as president, CEO, and chairman of the board of Syncrude before retiring in 2003. He is now chancellor of the University of Alberta. In addition to his work with postsecondary education, Eric continues to provide community leadership in areas such as workforce development, the aboriginal community, and the environment.

Bryan Perkins is a farmer who represents the best of Alberta's pioneering and entrepreneurial traditions. Bryan's innovative approach to his own operation near Wainwright has grown into a new model of farming that's benefiting hundreds of families across the province. Over the years Bryan has also made significant contributions to industry boards and organizations.

John and Barbara Poole are dedicated supporters of a wide range of social, educational, cultural, and environmental causes across Alberta and Canada. While a large portion of their work is done anonymously and without fanfare, I can tell members that there aren't many arts or postsecondary institutions in this province that haven't benefited from their support.

Mr. Speaker, accompanying these distinguished guests are members of the Alberta Order of Excellence Council. I would introduce council chair Dr. Bob Westbury, council members Bunny Ferguson of Edmonton, Jack Gorr of Three Hills, Harley Hotchkiss of Calgary, and Harold Storlien of Medicine Hat.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask all members to give these distinguished visitors a hearty welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two very distinguished and respected Albertans, Dr. Sandy Mactaggart, chancellor emeritus of the University of Alberta, and his wife, Mrs. Cécile Mactaggart. The Mactaggarts are no strangers to members of this Assembly. They are leading Edmonton businesspeople and philanthropists. Sandy is an officer of the Order of Canada and a member of the Alberta Order of Excellence.

The Mactaggarts are respected and admired throughout this city, across this province, and throughout Canada not only for their impressive and inspirational business success with Maclab Enterprises but, more importantly, for their vast charitable and philanthropic efforts, that have improved this community and our province in so many ways. Yesterday the Mactaggarts took their charitable efforts one giant step further with an impressive $37 million donation of rare Chinese artifacts and collectibles to the University of Alberta. [applause]

Mr. Speaker, I can only then thank the House for the way in which they've warmly welcomed our respected guests.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you well know and as do all members of the House know, this Assembly works in partnership with municipal elected leaders throughout the province. Looking up into the members' gallery this afternoon, I'm very pleased to see that Mr. Bob Hawkesworth, president of the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, AUMA, and his executive, who have been visiting with ministers throughout the Legislature Building over the past few days, have joined us for question period today. I would like to introduce Mr. Hawkesworth, who is a former MLA of this Assembly, and also as part of the delegation another former MLA, Mr. Ed Gibbons, councillor for the city of Edmonton, as well as all the other members of the executive of AUMA. I'd ask all members to join me in welcoming them. I'd ask them to stand and receive the traditional recognition of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I would like to introduce to you and through you 20 grade 8 students from Jarvie school, which is located in the Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock constituency. They are accompanied this afternoon by teachers Len Seatter and Mrs. Debra Jackson and parent helpers Colleen Chapotelle and Robert Cardinal, who is the brother of our distinguished Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Among the students is Alissa Cardinal, niece of the hon. minister. They are seated in the public gallery this afternoon. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly four very special guests seated in the members' gallery. They're members of the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations. I would ask them to rise as I call their names: Ms Heather Edwards, Ms Kelly O'Donnell, Mrs. Holly Solinski, and Mr. Bin Lau. I'd ask this Assembly to give them a traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly two Human Resources and Employment department communication staff who are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. Fiona Wiseman and Jason Maloney are both new to Human Resources and Employment and are here to observe question period. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and a privilege for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members 56 of Alberta's brightest and best students from Calmar school. These students are Mrs. Biddell's and Mrs. Wilson's grade 5 and 6 classes. Their guide today is Natalie Wilson, a former page of the Legislative Assembly and Mrs. Wilson's daughter. The parent helpers with this large group are Mrs. Karen Stepanko, Mrs. Crystal Fandrick, Mrs. Laurie Workun, Mrs. Pat Carson-Handley, Mrs. Michelle Erickson, and Mrs. Denschikoff. I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am really honoured to be welcoming two of my constituents from Edmonton-McClung who are seated in your gallery, Michael and Mary-Louise Mitchell, who are the parents of Chelsea Mitchell, who is an Assembly page with us and one of the most energetic and most helpful pages in this Assembly. They live in an area of Edmonton-McClung called Rio Terrace. It's an area in which I door knocked very heavily during the campaign, but in case I missed you, I would really like to invite you to visit me at the constituency office. If we don't talk about concerns or issues or suggestions, we can spend half an hour talking about Chelsea and how wonderful she is. I would invite them to stand up, and I would invite the hon. members to join me in welcoming them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly the Sir George Simpson grade 6, 30 wonderful students, and their teacher, Lindsey Anderson, and helpers or volunteers Annie Gouldson and Charlene Marklund. Would they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two guests to introduce today. The first is Joanne Jarvis, who currently works as a guard at the Bashaw RCMP detachment and is involved with the Lutheran local council as a choir director for ecumenical services. She is accompanied today by Jim Graves, who ran for the NDP in the riding of Lacombe-Ponoka in the previous election. I would ask that Joanne and Jim rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a very well-liked and successful student leader, Paul Zits. Paul is the outgoing president of the Grant MacEwan College students' union here in Edmonton and has served as the chair of Alberta College and Technical Institute Students' Executive Council, known as ACTISEC. His continuing efforts to promote a more accessible and affordable system of postsecondary education is commendable and much appreciated. I'll ask now for Paul to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Hank and Sharon Hoekstra from my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. They're the proud parents of Elaine Hoekstra, one of our very talented and wonderful pages. Sharon is a kindergarten teacher at Earl Buxton elementary school, a great elementary school that also happens to be located in my constituency. She's been teaching for 30 years. Hank retired this past fall from nearly 30 years of service at the University of Alberta's instructional resource services centre. Mr. Speaker, they're seated in your gallery, and I'd ask that they please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome and thank you from our House.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it's always an honour to introduce a school class, and, again, today I have the honour of introducing to you and through you to members of the Assembly students and teachers and parent helpers from Morrin school. Morrin is located just north of Drumheller. This group has as its accompanying teachers and leaders Bev Deschenes, Mr. Harvey Saltys, Hiruki Kanazawa, Mrs. Dawn Herd, Mr. and Mrs. Jim Richmond, Mrs. Susan Doyle, and Mauricio Rincón. I would ask, if they are in the Assembly, in the public gallery perhaps, to rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mactaggart Art Collection

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today and have the honour and privilege of acknowledging and celebrating the generous and impressive donation of rare Chinese artifacts to the University of Alberta announced yesterday by Sandy and Cécile Mactaggart, a donation that will serve as the foundation for the university's new centre for Chinese studies.

Over the years the Mactaggart family has demonstrated in countless ways their commitment to this city and to this province. They are among Edmonton's leading business success stories and have used that success to make their community a better place in so many ways. Yesterday they demonstrated their immense generosity and vision once again by donating a rare collection of Chinese art and artifacts to the University of Alberta, a donation which has been valued at over $37 million and comprises the largest private donation to the University of Alberta in its history.

The collection includes over 700 items of east Asian art, textiles, and costumes. It will be housed in the University of Alberta's museum collections and will be named the Mactaggart Art Collection. The collection will provide the basis for the university's new centre for Chinese studies, which will house the world renowned expertise on Chinese culture and history.

Members will recall that in the Speech from the Throne the new access to the future fund is intended to support innovation and excellence in postsecondary education, and the creation of this new centre for Chinese studies at the University of Alberta was specifically referenced in anticipation of this gift. We had the honour of having Mr. Mactaggart and his daughter Fiona here on the floor of the Legislature when the Speech from the Throne was read. In fact, it is fair to say that the promise of the access to the future fund played a role in ensuring that this collection, unique in North America and courted seriously by institutions in Toronto, New York, San Francisco, and elsewhere, remains right here in Edmonton, in Alberta.

This new landmark institute will help to promote greater understanding of the culture, language, and history of China, one of the world's largest and growing economies and a country with which Alberta has long enjoyed a special economic and cultural relationship. The centre will anchor current initiatives between the University of Alberta and China and take those initiatives even further. It will serve as an excellent means of strengthening academic research, business, and cultural ties between Alberta and China. It will also be a means for Albertans to learn more about China and to connect with Chinese people both here at home and abroad.

Given the increasing importance of international connections in the global economy and increasing importance that China is playing in that global economy, an economic opportunity, I can tell you, that is recognized in our government's new 20-year strategic plan, this centre for Chinese cultural studies will be a most valuable and strategic addition to Alberta's postsecondary system and to Alberta itself. Mr. Speaker, the Mactaggarts have been strong visionary advocates for this new centre for Chinese studies, and they've backed up that vision with a donation which will go down in history as one of the most generous and, I believe, meaningful donations ever made to a postsecondary institution.

The Mactaggarts and the University of Alberta – and I might say that the chancellor of the University of Alberta, Eric Newell, has joined the Mactaggarts today as he also joined the Alberta Order of Excellence inductees – and all of those involved in the planning and development of the centre for Chinese studies deserve to be commended for their vision and innovation. In the years ahead it will undoubtedly be seen as one of the world's best, if not the best, Chinese cultural institutes outside of China itself.

Mr. Speaker, once again, may we thank the Mactaggarts for their visionary contribution to this province of ours. [applause]

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As with the Minister of Advanced Education, it is my great honour today to rise to acknowledge and celebrate the largest single donation to the University of Alberta in its entire history. The Mactaggart family's unprecedented donation of a $37 million Chinese art collection is really a priceless gift to the people of our province. This collection is one of the finest in North America and includes paintings, calligraphy, scrolls, and silk robes. The collection will form the foundation of the university's new centre for Chinese studies. This exciting initiative will be the most impressive Chinese learning centre in Canada. The students, faculty, and community will benefit enormously from this first-rate facility. The centre will bring researchers from all over the world to study the Mactaggart collection's unique items.

I'd like to commend and recognize the family responsible for this extraordinary gift. Sandy Mactaggart was 11 years old when he was shipped to Canada as an evacuee during the Second World War. He went on to graduate cum laude from the Harvard Business School before coming to Edmonton in 1952 with his business partner the late Jean de La Bruyère.

The company they established, Maclab Enterprises Ltd., has contributed enormously to the landscape of this city, and it's founder, Sandy Mactaggart, has always been a triumphant supporter of postsecondary education, as has his accomplished and always-elegant wife, Cécile. From 1983 to 1994 he served on the University of Alberta board of governors and chaired the university's real estate advisory committee. He went on to donate the 257-acre Mactaggart nature sanctuary to the U of A and the city of Edmonton. Then in 1990 Mr. Mactaggart held the respected position of university chancellor for four years. For countless reasons Sandy Mactaggart was inducted as an officer of the Order of Canada in 1997 and into the Alberta Order of Excellence in 1998.

Cécile and Sandy Mactaggart along with their family have shown true vision in this unprecedented donation. They have recognized that our society's most important asset is its students. By contributing this selfless gift, they continue to make the University of Alberta a better place.

My thanks and the thanks of all MLAs to them.

The Speaker: I have received notification: the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner would like to participate. Unanimous consent would have to be given.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It would be amiss to not be able to stand up and congratulate the Mactaggarts for this wonderful gift to the province and to the University of Alberta. It's a wonderful way to start off our centennial celebrations with such a gift to go into the next century, and philanthropists in the past have made a great part of Alberta. I'm grateful also, as all MLAs are, for such a wonderful gift and hope that that will help us as we go forward and to continue to trade and to work with the Chinese government and to continue to work and to make our world a better place. I'd like to thank them also.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Securities Commission

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance has called in the Auditor General to, in her words, dispel concerns about the Alberta Securities Commission. We don't need the Auditor General to dispel concerns as if this were simply a misunderstanding. We need someone who will get to the bottom of these problems. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. Given that the Alberta Auditor General has been the auditor of record for the Securities Commission and has repeatedly given the commission unqualified audit approval, will she do the right thing and bring in a genuinely independent out-of-province investigator?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, unlike the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition I have the utmost confidence in the Auditor General, who, I might remind him, is an officer of this Assembly, and I find it distasteful, unusual that such a comment would be made in here of a person of such a respected position.

Dr. Taft: To the same minister: will she admit that the Alberta Auditor General has no credibility on this issue given that year after year his office has given the commission a clean audit report?

Mrs. McClellan: I would absolutely not agree with that statement. Again, I find it unusual and distasteful that an officer of this Assembly would be questioned in this way. The Auditor General of the province of Alberta has provided great service to this government and to this Assembly. His report will be presented to the Assembly through you, Mr. Speaker, and I have the utmost confidence in this gentleman's work.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Again to the same minister: will she admit that the only reason she has asked the Auditor General to prepare one report for her and a separate one for the Legislature and the public is to keep the public in the dark about the real goings-on at the Alberta Securities Commission?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, that speaks to how little the hon. Leader of the Opposition understands, one, my letter to the Auditor General, which I presented in the Assembly yesterday.

I am almost speechless at his attack – I have to call it an attack – on the credibility of the Auditor General.

Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General, as I indicated yesterday, was going to do an audit of the Securities Commission as part of his business. This was identified in January. On April 13 I wrote a letter to the Auditor General and asked him that in view of the lingering concerns out there, despite the report that was issued that identified that the regulatory process was being handled in an even-handed and fair way, identified that there were some human resource issues which are being addressed, Mr. Speaker, because of the importance of the Alberta Securities Commission to the business and investment community, if he would do his report in a complete and timely manner and that he would present that report to me and to the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The situation for employees at the Alberta Securities Commission grows worse by the day. Senior management at the Commission have now hired KPMG to conduct a forensic audit of employee e-mails. This is just another example of the fearful and intimidating climate that ASC whistle-blowers, many of whom came forward in response to a request from the Minister of Finance herself, are being forced to work in. To the Minister of Finance: will the minister do the right thing, protect whistle-blowers who came forward in good faith, and order an immediate end to the KPMG witch hunt?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, again the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition shows a great deal of ignorance of the manner in which this is being handled, and I would like to help him with that. The internal audit that is being done, the forensic audit, is to protect the security of the systems at the Alberta Securities Commission. In fact, he should be applauding that rather than suggesting that it's a witch hunt.

Mr. Speaker, this very same leader was the one that wanted me to table reports in this House, which I refused to do to protect the anonymity of these very employees.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the KPMG witch hunt will give both the chairman and the executive director of the commission the names and e-mails of employees who have spoken out against misconduct at the commission, will the Minister of Finance ask the RCMP to investigate the e-mails of the chairman and the executive director?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about the integrity and the good reputation of the Alberta Securities Commission. As I have indicated time and time again in this Assembly, this is a very, very important institution to the business and investment community. I am going to continue to conduct this in a professional manner rather than making allegations and attacks against people where there has been no foundation laid.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what guarantees, if any, can the Minister of Finance give Securities Commission whistle-blowers that they will not suffer any reprisals for their efforts to bring attention to the problems at the Commission?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I have already proved to the employees of the commission that came forward that I will protect the confidentiality of them bringing it forward, unlike the hon. member who wanted the report with names and whatever in it laid before this Assembly. That is what he calls protection. I call protection respecting the confidentiality, respecting the anonymity, and I have not had any concerns from those employees that they are worried about coming forward because of repercussions from this minister.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Marketing

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2002 TransAlta admitted to the U.S. Federal Energy Regulatory Commission that it used some of the same questionable electricity trading schemes that Enron used in California during 2000 and 2001. [interjection] He may laugh; consumers do not. These dubious tactics, dubbed "ricochet" and "megawatt laundering," unfairly drove up electricity prices. During that same time Alberta electricity consumers saw power prices triple. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. What evidence does the minister have that TransAlta did not use the same tactics here in Alberta to drive up prices?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, he's comparing it to the same tactics of, I guess, another company, which at this stage no investigations have proven has done things to warrant manipulation of the market.

That said, clearly at that time when deregulation occurred, there were shortages of supply, the primary reason why prices increased. Today we actually have the converse. We have an excess of supply, were very successful at having brought on over 3,300 megawatts of power. Today consumers are enjoying the lowest non-hydro rates around the country.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that the EUB told this Progressive Conservative government that TransAlta unfairly overcharged Alberta electricity consumers $3.7 million in the year 2000, why were TransAlta's trading activities never the subject of a full, independent, public investigation?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, there is continual monitoring of the marketplace. The market surveillance administrator continues to act on that behalf. If he has some specifics relating to something that goes back, he says, to 2002, I guess we'd ask that he forward it to us, and we'll take a look at it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the evidence is tabled daily.

Again to the same minister: is TransAlta a part of the investigation into market manipulation here in Alberta currently being conducted by the federal Competition Bureau, or is it just Enron and their activities to manipulate prices here in Alberta?

The Speaker: I'm not sure the minister can answer that question, but try.

Mr. Melchin: I'm not. I don't know exactly all the specifics; therefore, I won't.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Border Closure to Canadian Cattle

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government's inaction in getting the border open to cattle exports to the United States is very disappointing. First the government forgot to provide input during the first USDA consultation on border reopening last year, and then Alberta's $400,000 man in Washington was not able to find his way to the Montana courtroom where R-CALF got its injunction in early March. Now the provincial Tories are being put to shame by their federal cousins, who are applying to intervene in the July injunction appeal. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Why did the government fail to pursue the option of intervening in the appeal of the U.S. District Court injunction, which is scheduled for July 27?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's unfortunate that the hon. member doesn't understand a lot of what's happened in the last two years, given this particular case. The Alberta government has been and will continue to be a provider of information and resources to the various numbers of groups and individuals who are working to help us open the border; namely, the United States Department of Agriculture, the United States government, the National Cattlemen's Beef Association, the Alberta Beef Producers association, the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. Those are the groups that have the best impact in these court cases because it's their courts.

We sympathize, and we appreciate the bid by our federal Conservative Party. The amicus brief application that was done previously failed in what I would consider, Mr. Speaker, a hostile courtroom. The chances of anything further than that are somewhat slim, so we are putting our resources into the appeal process, where we believe we're going to have a better effect.

Mr. Mason: Excuses, excuses, Mr. Speaker.

Why does the government remain on its collective duff instead of pursuing every available legal option to ensure that the views of Alberta cattle producers are actually heard in the U.S. courts?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously the hon. member has not spoken to the industry. We met with them last night and continue to meet with them on a daily basis. The Alberta Beef Producers, the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, who are the industry the hon. member is talking about, are working with us in partnership. We are exploring every available means to try to get the border open and every available means to be successful in the court case.

As to the Washington allegation, Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations would like to supplement that answer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Why has this government chosen to blame bad science and R-CALF for this crisis instead of actually working to resolve the political and legal problems that have actually caused the problem in the first place?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, that's got to be one of the silliest questions I've heard in this House. We are working together with the industry, and we are working together with our American partners in this issue to resolve what is a North American integrated market problem. I believe that we're on the right track with the industry, working in partnership not only to sustain our industry in Alberta but to build it, to make it stronger, to make it more aggressive, to make it more flexible. I believe also that we're working in a cohesive effort with our American government counterparts in this issue against what is a left-wing, socialist, protectionist group in Montana using their own court system against us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

ESL Funding

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Northeast Calgary has a rich and diverse ethnic/cultural component. In most schools in my riding some have more than 70 per cent of their students coded as ESL students. In fact, in some schools over 30 different primary languages are spoken, and English is not one of them. The Calgary board of education earlier this week passed a motion urging our government to lift the five-year cap on ESL funding because this diversity leads to educational challenges. My question is to the hon. Minister of Education. Considering that by the minister's own admission Calgary has over 50 per cent of the ESL-coded students in the province, would the minister consider raising the amount of money he provides to students and school boards for ESL programs in Calgary?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, the intention of our ESL, or English as a Second Language, program is to help students become fully integrated into our K to 12 education system, and that is why two years ago ESL funding was increased by about 71 per cent. In the budget provided just last week, there is a further increase of another 30 per cent. So we are providing over $40 million now for ESL programming to school boards. In addition to that, we've also provided a significant per-student funding increase as well, so the member should be happy to see that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that statistics and educators in the field of ESL program delivery have told us that the five-year cap on funding can limit their later success in school, would the minister lift the cap to provide funding as needed for individual students?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the funding cap that was introduced last year came in at the same time that our renewed funding framework came in. Whereas it was deemed appropriate to set a five-year cap on the standard ESL program, so too was it deemed important to increase the rate of funding and the overall funds for standard ESL programming. However, if within that envelope of time the students in question haven't shown the appropriate progress that teachers feel and that families feel they ought to have shown, they certainly could be looked at for additional funding under our enhanced second language funding program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell the House what other supports are available for ESL students and their families so they can become productive members of our society?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I suspect, Mr. Speaker, that one of the best places to turn would be to the school principal and/or, in turn, to the school superintendent and see how the enhanced second language programming dollars might be employed to help those children in need. It was always the intention of the education system to see as full an integration as possible of these students within a three-year window. However, five years may be more appropriate for some. In other cases it might actually take longer than that because we know that in some cases students, unfortunately, come from a totally illiterate background, and that doesn't just mean English. It could be in the home language. They could have severe literacy problems in their home language as well. So we do provide additional funding under both scenarios, and we just instituted an additional package of monies. I think the total now is about $357 under the enhanced portion over and above the standard.

2:10 Workers' Compensation Appeals

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Long-standing contentious claims with the Workers' Compensation Board continue to be a huge burden for many Alberta families. Previous ministers have at times dangled the carrot of hope before these many thousands of Alberta families by saying that something would be done. Then they backed away. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Will this government finally begin some meaningful process to at least move forward slowly on these long-standing contentious claims?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question, and the answer is reasonably short. It is a complicated issue, it's a challenging issue, but it is an issue that I feel and the organization, which is an arm's-length operation, feels the existing appeals processes that are in place can deal with the existing long-term cases that are out there, and they are being dealt with on an ongoing basis.

Mr. Backs: Most people don't believe that, Mr. Minister.

A further question to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: will the minister have the Appeals Commission budget moved from being funded by the WCB to his general budget so that there's no connection between the two and so there's no charge to employers and workers for this arm's-length service?

Mr. Cardinal: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Backs: A further question to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: what is the government trying to do to reduce the incredibly long wait of more than a year and speed up actions brought to the Appeals Commission for workers' compensation?

Mr. Cardinal: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is not true because the appeals process that is in place is working very well. In fact, we do get very, very few complaints through the MLAs. The complaints have been reduced considerably. The existing process works very well as it is.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Highway Construction

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Highway 19 is a very busy road that runs from Nisku to Devon and contains a lot of industrial and heavy traffic. This highway is a source of frustration for many of my constituents who use this highway to commute to their jobs in Nisku or Edmonton. In fact, there was a very serious accident just two nights ago involving a transport truck and a vehicle containing a young pregnant mother and her small child. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. When will this highway be twinned in order to make it safer and more efficient for passenger and commercial traffic?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member knows and I'm sure is fully aware, twinning a road will decrease the traffic accidents by about 47 per cent, so you're seeing a significant decrease in traffic accidents by twinning a road.

Also, as the hon. member I hope knows, we have just done a functional inquiry on that particular road, and indeed it is nearing the level at which we will twin. There are some significant issues that we have to work on, one of them being land acquisition for the twinning, but certainly it has been suggested that that road will be twinned in the near future. The definition of the near future depends on a lot of things such as funding as well as the land acquisition costs that are out there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A supplementary to the minister then: are construction priorities set in stone, or is there some flexibility and ability to change current construction plans?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, in Alberta we have such a buoyant economy that we see a lot of needs changing, and we attempt to have at least a three-year plan or, potentially, a five-year plan. We actually do see priorities change. One of the issues, obviously, that is out there as well is funding. As funding becomes available, there will be more and more roads that are going to be paved, that are going to be twinned, that are going to be put into better condition.

So the short answer to the question is yes. Priorities can be changed, and we look at each one on its individual merits.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister for those points.

My final supplemental: how does his department set priorities for these types of projects?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of different ways that we can do it. First of all is condition of the existing road. What takes priority first is that if you have an existing highway that is deteriorating, we don't want to lose that particular infrastructure. Apart from that, the most obvious one is utilization. How many vehicles are actually utilizing this? How many people are actually utilizing this highway? There's a wide myriad of reasons and rationales as to why one particular road is put to the top, but those are probably the two largest ones that we use right now: the number of people and the condition of the existing road.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Oil Well Drilling on Crown Land

Mr. Bonko: All right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The second clause of the EUB's Guide 56 well site application states that consultation with affected land stakeholders is required prior to clearing land. In addition, according to the EUB's Informational Letter 2001-5, section 11, clearly prohibits "preparatory or incidental" operations before a well licence can be issued. Rules have been broken. Albertans want answers. My question to the Minister of Energy: why did the government say that all the proper procedures have been followed by oil and gas companies operating at Sawn Lake when this was obviously not the case?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, with respect to this clearing in particular, information we received at the time is that the mineral rights have been granted, the surface rights leases have been granted, so those permits have been in place. With respect to the well application we said at that time also that the well application licence was yet to come forward. We are going to continue, and we have been, as ministries, the three departments in particular, working cooperatively on this to ensure that all rules in place have been followed. If not, we will continue to enforce the appropriate standards.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since Guide 56, schedule 4, states that consultation with the affected land stakeholders is required prior to development, why, then, were the Lubicon not notified about the loss of their traplines and hunting grounds?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, we'd be more than happy, in particular if it comes into traplines and so forth, to gather that information and complete facts surrounding the issue and report in due course.

Mr. Bonko: My final supplemental to the same minister: can the minister table these documents completed by all companies operating at Sawn Lake, proving that all the steps, including the EUB's Guide 56, were met?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I think it is important that the EUB does act in making sure that all the rules and requirements are met; likewise among our various departments with SRD. We'll be happy to report complete aspects of the details of this case.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Dental Assistance for Seniors

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After giving so much to the province over the years, a number of seniors in my constituency – and there are many – remain concerned with the level of assistance they receive from our provincial seniors' programs. In particular, I've received complaints about the lack of assistance for dental care provided by the province. My questions today are for the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Can the minister tell the members of this Assembly which seniors will actually benefit from the new dental assistance program she announced on budget day?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We do recognize that dental health is an important part of healthy aging, which is why we have put in place a new dental assistance program for our seniors. There are approximately 267,000 seniors, which is 80 per cent, that will be eligible for this new program. Full coverage will be provided to seniors that have an income of up to $20,000, full coverage for a couple with an income of up to $40,000, partial coverage for seniors with an income of up to $30,000, and partial coverage for a couple with an income of up to $60,000. This program has a total coverage for seniors of $5,000 over a five-year period, which is fairly significant. I hope that assists your constituents, hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will signing up for this program be complex and involve more confusing forms for seniors to fill out?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, no, Mr. Speaker. Actually, it won't be complex. It's fairly straightforward and accessible for our seniors. We do have seniors that are in our Alberta seniors' benefits program. There are approximately 220,000, which then means that they have already signed onto the program. Also, we've been assured by dental offices that they will assist seniors with knowing who is eligible and how they can apply for the program. Those that are not already a part of our Alberta seniors' benefits program can call our seniors' toll-free line at 1-800-642-3853 in order to help them with the application process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister also tell us what types of dental services are covered by this program?

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to know that the program came about with the assistance of the Alberta Dental Association and College as well as the Alberta College of Denturists. Their assistance helped us to be certain that the program is a basic dental service program. Included in that, hon. member, there are various services offered, which are diagnostic services such as examination and X-rays; preventative services such as polishing and scaling; restorative services like fillings; oral surgery; endodontics, more commonly known as root canals; periodontics for gum disease treatment; and full and partial dentures.

Also, Mr. Speaker, seniors can receive more information regarding that list from their dentists.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Education System

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I like to give credit where credit is due. After much pressure from parents, teachers, school boards, and the Official Opposition, the government has finally evolved its way to scrapping its achievement tests for grade 4 students in favour of more meaningful diagnostic testing. Since the government appears to be so open to our advice, I thought I might offer some more. My first question to the minister: given that the funding to public schools is scheduled to increase by little more than 3 per cent for years 2 and 3 of the fiscal plan, how does the minister expect school boards to implement diagnostic testing at the K to 3 level?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the pilot test that was conducted last year in June was done entirely for the right reasons, and that was to try and help remediate those children who, unfortunately, did not do as well on their literacy and numeracy tests at the grade 3 level as was anticipated. So in order to not let three years go by before they were retested, a pilot program of testing was brought in. I have reviewed those pilot test results, and I've spoken with teachers and with parents and other administrators and trustees and so on over the past several months, but I don't ever recall having heard of this matter from the opposition. Nonetheless, I accept the kudo that this was an appropriate move to make at this stage.

The challenge now, Mr. Speaker, as the questioner has correctly identified, is to bring in some form of replacement, a new remediation program that would help these students achieve the degree of literacy and numeracy that we would all expect. There will be monies to help do that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why are private schools receiving a 17.4 per cent increase over three years when public school boards are only receiving 12.5 per cent? Public schools should be made the schools of choice, sir.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the questioner has apples and oranges mixed up in the same basket, unfortunately. I don't mean to deride the question or the questioner.

The point is to make it clear that we provide about 60 per cent of 100 per cent of the funding for educational programming needs, and we provide zero funding for capital and plant and operation and maintenance needs for private schools. So to make that kind of comparison of statistics is simply unfair to both the public system and to the private system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: when will the minister provide real direction on issues such as wellness, English as a Second Language, fine arts education, and speech therapy so that boards, teachers, and families know that there's an educational plan from this minister?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's a very sound educational plan that is yielding the best results in Canada. You might like to be reminded of that. In fact, when it comes to mathematics and reading and problem solving, generally literacy and numeracy, we rate either first, second, third, or fourth in the whole world. So obviously there's a plan, and obviously the plan is working well.

There will be additional information coming out in time for the health and wellness curriculum for September of '06. I'm working with the Minister of Health and Wellness on that now. There will be additional information as well, some of which has already gone out, but there will be more going out on the second languages programming as well as on fine arts – we just had a motion debated in the House to that extent – and on other important programming needs for all of our children because we want them to continue being the best.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Highwood.

Community Policing

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today concerned Albertans attended a memorial rally for the latest woman involved in street prostitution to be brutally murdered and left for dead near Edmonton. Now, obviously, we all want the police to get this killer or killers as soon as possible. My question is to the Solicitor General. The budget had no new funding for community policing in our major cities even though we've had a raft of these horrendous murders, at least in Edmonton. My question is simply this: why has the government refused to provide extra funding in the major cities for community policing, which would help protect these most vulnerable citizens?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The budget provided over $6 million to municipal services throughout the province with populations over 5,000. The two largest cities, Calgary and Edmonton, were looked as having the tax ability to provide the resources they need with regard to policing, but this year we provided almost $15 million to the city of Calgary and over $10 million to the city of Edmonton to provide funding with regard to policing services within the city of Edmonton. In addition to that, this year's budget provided 40 municipal officers in addition to the $25 million that I just mentioned to provide an integrated response to organized crime. Part of that organized crime that the hon. member speaks about may include homicides and serious crime in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The point I'm trying to make is that we're saying: direct it to community policing. My question to the minister is simply this: would he not agree that community policing in these areas could help prevent the crimes to begin with and perhaps give us some leads on the previous murders?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The $10 million that we are providing to the city of Edmonton can be used towards community policing initiatives if that is the choice of the city council and the Edmonton Police Commission. Those dollars are used for policing initiatives, for new resources, for their policing budget, and that's the determination that the city and the Police Commission have to make.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, beyond the policing I'd like to direct the third question to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. My question is simply this: when will this government raise Alberta's woefully inadequate social assistance rates so that vulnerable women are never again forced to make the choice between letting their children go hungry or prostituting themselves in the streets?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, that's a degrading question. As you're aware, the welfare caseload at one time was over 97,000 cases, and a high percentage of those people were young, single, employable people using up those dollars. Through the welfare reforms we managed to move dollars; for example, children's services has a budget with a ministry, persons with developmental disabilities has a budget with a ministry. The rates themselves, the core rates, because we've changed the system so successfully that the persons that are really in need – the caseload at this time is only 11,000, and I have started reviewing the core benefits for those rates. In fact, they've gone through the process already, and we will be looking at them in the near future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Wild Rose Agricultural Producers

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Wild Rose Agricultural Producers has been active in Alberta for a number of years, operating under the banner as Alberta's only real umbrella farm organization. Funding has always been an issue for this organization. My questions are for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Is the government considering a funding formula for this producer group?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe this issue has been raised and been around for the past 15 years or so and has been brought forward by the Wild Rose Ag Producers and its predecessor, Unifarm, over those number of years. It is an umbrella organization. It has, as I'm told, approximately 1,000 farm unit members, and certainly they have been quite vocal in raising the issue of their finances with this government, but as an umbrella organization we really do believe that it's appropriate that the funding for Wild Rose would rest with the commodity organizations and the producers that it represents. We would encourage Wild Rose to work with those commodity organizations and other groups and, certainly, the individuals that are going to support its ongoing work.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is for the same minister. If Wild Rose is unable to garner resources from its membership, is the province considering a check-off of licence plate sales to support its work?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, a general check-off actually might be possible under the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act to provide funds for things like marketing and research purposes. However, the Wild Rose Ag Producers would have to demonstrate that the majority of the province's farmers agree with the concept before we would consider it. I understand that in previous years this organization has held a lot of public meetings and made some effort to gain some popular consent in rural Alberta, but we haven't seen that support materialize.

Mr. Groeneveld: My final supplemental, Mr. Speaker: if the Wild Rose Agricultural Producers feel that they are financially strapped to the point where they are unable to represent producers, who will speak for Alberta's farmers?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me be very, very clear. The Wild Rose Ag Producers do have a voice with this government, and they have been heard. But there's also a whole chorus of other voices in this sector, and we're well served by them. There are volunteers and there are staff people in a lot of the commodity groups. We have, certainly, feeder associations, cattle associations, ag societies, even groups like 4-H, who all have a strong voice with this government and the rural MLAs that they represent.

In fact, early in my tenure as agriculture minister I convened a meeting of some 40 representatives of different farm groups so that we could sit down and talk about solutions and moving forward with the ag industry in Alberta. In fact, Wild Rose Ag Producers had representatives at that meeting along with the other 39 different organizations that we had at the meeting in Government House. It's a diverse industry, Mr. Speaker, with a lot of diverse industry views and a lot of diverse industry challenges, and we listen to all of them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Government Efficiency

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a show of unbelievable arrogance the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency said last week in the House that he hopes the government can "get so efficient that I can sit with my feet up." Well, taxpayers don't pay the hon. minister's $123,000-plus salary so he can sit with his feet up. To the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency: can the minister name five solid actions that he has taken since becoming minister that have made this government more efficient?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I'm very sorry that the hon. member misunderstood my statement last time. I meant that if we could get everything very efficient and I didn't even have to have a job, that would be a good thing. But, you know, I would always – always – be working towards finding efficiencies for all Albertans.

Mr. Elsalhy: Given that the minister also said that "we run the smallest government in the country," how is it true with 24 ministries compared to Saskatchewan's 16 or British Columbia's 19, for example?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, there's an awfully big difference between the population of Saskatchewan and the population of Alberta. I think it's three times, to be exact, and we definitely don't have three times as many ministers. And the activity that's happening in Alberta is probably 10 times.

Mr. Elsalhy: To the same minister then: couldn't this government have spent the $45 million it gave to horse racing more efficiently by reducing Alberta health care premium taxes for all Albertans instead of collecting $1,056 every year from every family in this province?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I think it's been said to the hon. members across that we don't give any money to horse racing. They actually earn their money, and they do a good job in Alberta. The minister of agriculture would like to supplement.

Mr. Horner: If I may, Mr. Speaker. The horse-racing industry has taken some hits in this House of late, and I wanted to bring the House's attention to the fact that this industry generates in our economy over $295 million annually, provides over 7,000 jobs to Albertans. This is an industry that is valuable in this province, that contributes to the economy, and contributes to the lottery fund in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Motorcycle Driver Licensing

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is an increasing number of motorcycle accidents in Alberta involving inexperienced operators that are causing serious injuries and deaths. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Based on the ever-increasing number of motorcycles being registered, is the minister considering a review of the legislation regarding the licensing of operators?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes, indeed, we are considering that. As a matter of fact, we are actually doing that right now, and we hope to have the report done by the end of the year. What we're taking a look at is what is happening in other jurisdictions, both national and international, and then determining, quite simply, if there do need to be changes to the motorcycle licensing. Certainly, I have seen, especially this time of year when motorcycles come out, that there seems like there are an inordinate number of traffic accidents involving motorcycles. So it is time that we did take a look at it. We are doing it, and hopefully we'll have an answer by the end of the year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental is to the same minister. Will the minister consider introducing legislation to make motorcycle operating safety training a compulsory component of the licence qualification process?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I truly believe that that will be included in the review that we're doing, and that could indeed be an outcome of that review, so I'm not entirely ruling it out at all. I am leaving it to the people who are doing the review to bring the recommendations to me, and if, indeed, they are recommending legislation, then we will put in legislation. I have no problems in doing that. But we need to see what is being done in other jurisdictions, both national and international, and attempt to follow suit on this very, very important issue.

Physiotherapy Insurance Fees

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, there's an interesting correlation between health care reforms from the province and continued deals for the insurance industry. Neither bode well for Albertans. We get less health care; they make more profit. The latest is reduced fees paid for physiotherapy treatment by insurance companies under automobile insurance reform and a cap on the number of treatments. My questions are to the minister of health. Why did the government allow this reduction in treatment to Albertans injured in car accidents?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, this is a question for the Minister of Finance.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I think I addressed this question in the House some time ago, actually maybe as much as six or seven sitting days ago. What is first anticipated and attempted is a negotiation between the practitioners and the insurance companies. When they are unable to come to an agreement on fees, then we are asked to step in.

What I will tell you is that we have set the fees. This was some weeks ago. In fact, what we've tried to do in coming to a resolution of this difficulty when the insurance companies and practitioners themselves were unable to was to review what other fees were paid and to try to introduce fairness. We looked at WCB fees. We looked at what regional health authorities pay and other payers. Even though these fees are somewhat less than they were, they are the highest paid in Canada that we can find anywhere.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Back to the minister of health again. The physiotherapists feel strongly that they were given an edict rather than allowed to negotiate these changes. Can the minister tell us what went wrong?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Well, yes, Mr. Speaker. I do not do insurers. I'm not sure whether or not that reference was, in fact, to the minister of health or to the Minister of Finance.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Minister of Health and Wellness: is allowing a reduction in physiotherapy fees, likely forcing some therapists out of business, part of the government's health workforce planning strategy?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, if we're not talking about insurers but if we are talking about what the Capital health and Calgary health region have done, I could advise that physiotherapy services provided in those areas are still provided to those who are low income who need the services. The dollars that are being expended on these allied services – which, incidentally, are supplementary to medicare kinds of coverages but at the discretion of the provinces and the authorities – are focused on providing the maximum coverage for those that are most in need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Species at Risk

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question today is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. The federal government's Species at Risk Act came into force on June 1, 2004. Did this affect Alberta's efforts regarding protecting species at risk?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, the Species at Risk Act shows that the federal government supports the accord for the protection of species at risk in Canada that was signed by all the provinces in 1996. However, Alberta has strong legislation through our Wildlife Act. In our Wildlife Act we have the kinds of provisions that allow for nests and dens of threatened and endangered species to be protected throughout the year, and that's an additional protection. Among other things our Wildlife Act provides for huge penalties for poaching. So, actually, Alberta has been very active in managing its species at risk for over 25 years, and we've done it in a very responsible way. That's why we have the kinds of protection under the Wildlife Act that we do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. Some people criticize Alberta for not enacting a stand-alone species at risk legislation. Is such a piece of legislation necessary?

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, we believe that in Alberta we have something better than stand-alone legislation, and our efforts are a model for all jurisdictions across Canada. We have a number of amendments that have strengthened our Wildlife Act. You know, you can have all the legislation in the world. You need good legislation, but more importantly you also need the resources to go behind that legislation to make sure that you enact and enforce the legislation. In enacting the legislation, our wildlife officers are on the ground. We also do research with universities and that type of thing on endangered species. Also, our budget this year allows for another $100,000 in addition to the $300,000 that we have for species at risk, plus another $300,000 for caribou work, which is vitally important for that endangered species.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the same minister. What successes has Alberta achieved when it comes to species at risk?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, in the last 30 years we've restored the peregrine falcon, as a prime example, from less than 10 breeding pairs in 1970 to 48 breeding pairs in 2001, and we have hundreds of species that have three approved recovery plans and 11 recovery teams at various stages. So we have very good success with our legislation and our regulations.

Speaker's Ruling Referring to a Legislative Officer

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm rather concerned about the first series of questions today in the House. I want to refer the House leaders for reading, please, between now and Monday to Beauchesne 493, all sections related to it, and to the booklet House of Commons Procedure and Practice, particularly the section on page 524, Reference by Name to Members of the Public. Now, it's very clear that one should be very, very careful about any comments of any kind of a suggestive nature which may be questionable by others to individuals who are not part of this House.

In the first series of questions today, however, these questions were about an agent, an officer of this House. In the years that I've had the privilege of being in the chair, I do not recall any such line of questioning of any such type of suggestive behaviour. I've also been a member of this House since 1979, and I do not recall questions that even came close to the type today.

So I'm going to look at the Blues over the weekend, and I would invite all of the House leaders to look at them as well, as well as the citations in the text with respect to this. I'm also going to ask the chair of the Legislative Offices Committee to undertake a similar review herself as the officer in question is an officer of this Legislative Assembly, the Auditor General, and has no way of defending himself. This is serious, in my view.

Education Week

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Next week, April 24 to 30, is Education Week. This year's theme is Public Education: Proud Legacy, Inspired Future, a theme that recognizes our centennial year.

In 1905 part of the establishment of our new province was the development of a school system and a unification of education efforts of schools, large and small, in all corners of the province. That year 121 school districts were inaugurated to serve students in both rural and urban areas.

For many years Albertans were served by one-room schools, that provided a place for learning for children and also served as a community centre for gatherings, town meetings, social functions, fundraising events, theatrical and musical events. Many new ideas and initiatives were launched within the walls of these early schools. Many young scholars found inspiration for a life of achievement in the arts, sciences, medicine, engineering, politics, business, or community service. Many a dream was fulfilled, many a romance began, many an antic was hatched, much laughter was heard, and some tears were shed in our schools over the years.

Mr. Speaker, these stories and the events of our centennial year in the classroom and in communities across Alberta will help students to reflect on the past and provide an opportunity to learn more about their province. At the same time as they see how the stories evolved and how people lived their lives and faced their challenges, they will be inspired to think about their own legacy to our history and their potential to shape our future.

I ask all members to take time next week to celebrate learning, to honour our students' achievements, to commend our teachers and school administrators, who contribute to our world-class education system, and to mark Education Week.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Leduc/Grimma Partnership

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 19, earlier this week, at the Leduc-Nisku Economic Development Authority partnership breakfast in my constituency a joint declaration of co-operation was signed between the city of Leduc, Leduc county, and the city of Grimma in Germany. This breakfast was attended by almost 400 business and political leaders including the hon. Minister of Education, the hon. Minister of Economic Development, Consul General Hans-Michael Schwandt of the Federal Republic of Germany, Honorary Consul Fritz Koenig, myself, as well as the mayor of the city of Leduc and the reeve of Leduc county, and many other city and county officials and staff.

The partnership began several years ago, Mr. Speaker, after the city of Grimma was flooded in August of 2002. Mr. Koenig toured the affected area and upon returning to Alberta secured some $50,000 in financial support from the German-Canadian business association as well as $25,000 from the government of Alberta. Through Mr. Koenig the Leduc-Nisku EDA invited Matthias Berger, the bürgermeister, or mayor, of Grimma to tour our region and enter into an economic partnership. However, it quickly expanded to include a full delegation of 23 political and business leaders from Grimma. This delegation was hosted at a luncheon by the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations and introduced to this House.

Mr. Speaker, the province of Alberta and the province of Saxony in Germany already have an established relationship of co-operation. The city of Grimma and the area comprising Leduc county and the city of Leduc have many similarities, including farming, a large industrial park, and an airport. This co-operation agreement is a great example of how Albertans continue to think outside the box and find opportunities throughout our global village to continue to enhance the Alberta advantage. Congratulations to Leduc county, the city of Leduc, Leduc-Nisku EDA, and our German partners for this great initiative.

2:50 Stollery Children's Hospital

Mr. Ducharme: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to rise and inform the Assembly about an important fundraiser currently going on for the Stollery children's hospital. The Stollery Children's Hospital Foundation radiothon began yesterday, April 20, and continues today and tomorrow. Children, families, and health care professionals gather each year during the radiothon to share their experiences, showing what makes the Stollery a special place of hope and healing.

Last year's radiothon raised over $1 million. Over 80 families and hospital staff shared their experiences on the air, and the community responded with 5,674 pledges in support of the Stollery children's hospital.

Mr. Speaker, over 80,000 patient visits occur at the Stollery children's hospital each year. Children come to the Stollery to receive the very best in state-of-the-art pediatric health care.

I would like to thank all the sponsors of the radiothon for their hard work in making this very important fundraiser happen. I also want to thank the Stollery Children's Hospital Foundation for its efforts in helping to save the lives of children. Without the efforts of the foundation the hospital would not be where it is today, a national leader in specialized children's health care.

The foundation raises money for miracles, Mr. Speaker, so I urge Albertans to call in and make a pledge. Let's beat the million dollars that were raised last year. To make a pledge, the local number is 407-5437 or toll-free at 1-866-407-5437.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Legislation

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe in the power of members' statements, and I would like to thank the Speaker and the House leaders for the continued evolution of this kind of private members' avenue for expression in the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, as you remarked last Thursday regarding the unanimous consent of the House to waive Standing Order 8(3) to allow for the consideration of Bill 202, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act, this was an historic occasion. The all-party consensus was, to use your words, a great "example of parliamentary co-operation, the highest form of democracy."

I wish to sincerely thank all who had a hand in making third reading of Bill 202 possible. What is left to do is royal assent and proclamation. Before the end of the spring sitting, royal assent will occur. Hopefully, not too long thereafter the bill will be proclaimed into law by cabinet.

What happens between royal assent and proclamation is the good work of preparing Bill 202 to be functional in law and administration, and I ask all who are anxious to see the fruits of this bill to be patient as all stakeholders move assuredly toward seeing the first of many young lives saved by the empowered intervention of their parents, the resources of the province, and caring professionals. Mr. Speaker, what better work can we do here than this. Last Thursday we saved young lives.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Democratic Renewal

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to address the topic of democratic renewal, one that is important to many of us in all parties on both sides of this House. I want to start with a fundamental of democracy, the franchise. In our secular, pluralistic society there are few things that truly bind us together except for our quest for security and material well-being. The exercise of our free will in voting is one of the few values that connects us all. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms includes a five-year limit on Legislatures and general elections as part of a list of democratic freedoms. It is on this freedom that I wish to focus.

Mr. Speaker, how can we assure that the ballot is truly a free expression of a public that is being consulted and not merely polled and manipulated? First to be looked at is the date we go to the polls. It is not government for the people if a vote is timed to favour an incumbent government's chances of re-election or an opposition's chance of unseating a government.

Second is the need to make sure that public funds are not used to favour one interest over another. To ensure this, a sitting government must bring down a budget well in advance of a scheduled election, with no additional expenditures, grants, or handouts while a campaign is on.

Third is the need for a public audit before a campaign begins. Knowing the state of the books beforehand will make it harder for a party to make rash promises to get elected and then renege on those because the cupboard is bare and harder for a government to stash away surpluses that can be doled out to cover programs not discussed in the election.

It is barely 100 years that we've had the secret ballot, less than that since we've had universal suffrage. Let us look on those past achievements as examples of and as a spur to a government that is truly of, for, and by the people.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Raymond Comets Cardston Lady Cougars

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to stand and recognize the outstanding achievement of two high school girls basketball teams in my constituency. The first is the Raymond Comets, who won the 4A provincial championships last month. The Comets represent a fine example of Alberta spirit: no challenge is too big, and never give up. The Comets hail from a small 2A school of 230 students. Nevertheless, they choose to compete in the 4A league and go up against the largest schools in Alberta. The Comets are a fine example of rural Albertans, people who accept challenges even when they are faced with overwhelming odds. The Comets were able to defeat E.P. Scarlett, a Calgary school with approximately 1,500 students, 73-64 in the final. This David and Goliath story shows just how much team spirit, good coaching, and dedication can achieve.

The second team is the Cardston high school Lady Cougars, who won their second straight 3A provincial championship. The Cougars won their first provincial championship 50 years ago; however, this time it only took a year to repeat the feat. The Cougars defeated Springbank community high school 77-69 in the final.

Both of these schools have very talented and dedicated athletes and coaches, who played a very vital role in their march to their respective championships. As Wayne Gretzky once said, "The highest compliment that you can pay me is to say that I work hard every day, that I never dog it." That is exactly what these young ladies and their coaches did this year.

I would like to express my appreciation to the players, coaches, and parents for the fine example of commitment and hard work. I am honoured to recognize the Raymond Comets and the Cardston Lady Cougars for their championship season.

Thank you.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition from a number of good Albertans from the communities of Wetaskiwin, Camrose, Fort Saskatchewan, Ponoka, Evansburg, Mundare, and Edmonton. It reads:

There are 104 on this petition.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present this petition of 106 residents of Alberta that urge the government to "declare the Grizzly bear an endangered species in accordance with recommendations made by the Endangered Species Conservation Committee, scientists and other wild life experts."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the hon. leader of the ND opposition I would like to table a letter from the Calgary Local Council of Women. The council would like to see the Alberta minimum wage raised to $9 per hour to ensure a living wage for low-income workers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is a document titled: Is Your Public School at Risk? Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, the historical comment for the day. On April 21, 1971, two retiring cabinet ministers were made honorary life members of the Alberta legislative press gallery. Provincial Treasurer and Member for Alexandra Anders O. Aalborg and minister of mines and minerals and Member for Lacombe Allen Russell Patrick were awarded the membership. Mr. Aalborg was a cabinet minister in the Social Credit government from 1952 to 1971 and Mr. Patrick from 1955 to 1971.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2005-06

Finance

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to introduce these estimates by introducing some very talented people in the members' gallery who are responsible for putting together the budget and the business plan for Alberta Finance. We have present with us Mr. Robert Bhatia, who is deputy minister of revenue. I understand that Deputy Minister of Finance Mr. Brian Manning is going to join us. We have Tim Wiles, our comptroller. We have Rod Matheson, treasury management; Lukas Huisman, ADM in revenue; Peter McNeil, chief administrative officer of revenue; Bonnie Lovelace, senior financial officer; Darwin Bozek, financial services; Juliette Blair, business planning and reporting; Richard Shelast, financial services; Linda Chupka, office of the Deputy Minister of Finance; Richard Purnell, office of budget and management. I'm particularly pleased to introduce Nicola Sargeant from financial services, who is our co-op student. I welcome Nicola to what I'm sure will be an exciting afternoon. We have also in the gallery from my office Maureen Osadchuk and Jeff Haley.

Mr. Chairman, this is a pretty straightforward set of estimates. It's in support of a financially strong, sustainable, and accountable government. Our strategic priorities in our business plan will be focusing on a number of key areas, particularly our fiscal framework. Now that our province is debt free, we have to make changes to our legislation to ensure that the money that's set aside in our debt retirement account is locked in. Of course, we reference also in those changes the commitment to adding to our endowment funds, to our capital plan, and of course savings.

Pensions, Mr. Chairman: we've seen in this House policy changes that will better reflect the changing needs of plan members, administrators, and the industry as a whole.

Mr. Chairman, another item that we've debated in the House through legislation is the provincial/territorial initiative to establish a passport regulatory system in Canada. We are also making what some may call – and probably they are – housekeeping changes so that our securities legislation is in sync with Canadian jurisdictions. All of these things we think will ensure consistency for market participants and investors.

Mr. Chairman, we also intend to continue to maintain our tax advantage. Albertans and Alberta businesses pay the lowest overall taxes in Canada. We hear from time to time that if you take some very specific areas, there may be some tax discrepancy between provinces, but I don't think anybody can legitimately argue that Albertans do not pay the lowest overall taxes in Canada. We intend to continue that.

The heritage savings trust fund in this business plan begins to be inflation-proofed. As all members would be aware, there was a commitment to inflation-proof the heritage savings trust fund once the debt was paid. That obligation begins now.

I'm not going to go into a lot of detail in the various estimates. I thought I would try to pick out some areas that I thought would be of interest to members. Our overall budget in some areas is down. Where we have increased spending is in areas to implement our automobile insurance reform and the Automobile Insurance Rate Board. The Insurance Act enables recovery of costs from the industry: pension, insurance, and financial institutions. We still have to show that as an expense even if it is recovered.

The other area where we're increasing some spending, and I think members will agree it's an important area, is to enhance our investment capability, capacity, and quality assurance. This will allow us to invest in alternate asset classes and introduce specialized products to generate higher investment returns. Again, about 50 per cent of this is recovered from clients outside of government.

Further funding is in one of my staff upstairs' favourite places, improved compliance and audit coverage tax and revenue administration. This is in direct response to a recommendation from the Auditor General. An additional $350,000 is also identified in the tax area, which is required to administer the tax-exempt fuel users program, or as we affectionately call it, TEFU.

Mr. Chairman, there are some further small additions in the investment administration division, and the increase there is offset by a $7.8 million reduction in budgeted debt servicing costs. Statutory spending, pending legislative approval, will increase funding to the Alberta heritage savings trust fund for the access to the future fund and the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research endowment fund. I think all members would agree that the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research is a fine example of what can be achieved by investing funds for tomorrow. Additional funds for the Alberta heritage foundations, of course, are also included in science and engineering research.

We have an increase for the Alberta Securities Commission, and that relates to the FTE increase to strengthen enforcement in capital market resources.

Revenues: the increase in department revenue is primarily from personal and corporate income taxes. That is not due to increasing taxes, of course, in this province, but it's due to a very strong growth in personal incomes, high energy prices, and healthy corporate profits.

The implementation of the tourism levy is also found in this budget, and it is to provide funding for tourism marketing and development, as tourism is a very important part of our economy.

Fifty-two of the 86, or 60 per cent, of the FTEs that are identified here for externally funded agencies. I'll mention those: the Alberta Pensions Administration Corporation, the Alberta Securities Commission, and the Alberta Insurance Council. Of the remaining, 17 respond to an Auditor General's recommendation on audit and compliance, and six are for the new rate board.

That is a very quick overview of operations and estimates. We can certainly go into these in more detail as you bring forward your questions. As always, I make the commitment that if I do not answer your questions in the House today for lack of time or, in fact, not having the answer at my hand, I will make the commitment to have that answer back to you in writing, and those responses will be back to you before our budget debates in this Assembly are concluded.

So, Mr. Chairman, I think that with those comments, I'll take my place and await your comments. I do want to just close hoping that all members present would acknowledge the hard work of the staff that are in that gallery. I don't think anyone will disagree that we had very tight time frames for putting together a very complex and large budget, and they did yeoman service. In fact, I was kidding, but it wasn't a joke, that the Easter bunny had to deliver the Easter treats to the Terrace Building this year and other finance and revenue offices rather than their homes. They do a great service for us, and I thank you, and I think all members of the Assembly do.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased and, in fact, honoured to have the opportunity to rise today and speak on behalf of the Official Opposition to the budget estimates for the Department of Finance for this current fiscal year.

I, too, would like very much to make some introductions, Mr. Chairman. I would very much like to introduce my researcher, David Kincade, who has worked yeoman hours himself trying to prepare me and make me sound like I have some reasonable understanding of this document today. Unfortunately, David Kincade is the only researcher I have, and in fact I have to share my researcher with two other MLAs. He's busy today tearing into his next department, so I'm left to do this on my own.

I would also like, Mr. Chairman, to introduce my communications staff, particularly Josh Stewart. Unfortunately, I share Josh Stewart with about seven other MLAs, so he can't be here today. I would very much like to introduce my administration staff, who support me and make sure that the material that comes out of my office looks professional and represents the Official Opposition well. Unfortunately, I also share Mark with seven others. So none of those people can be here today. I appreciate very much the thanks that the minister has given her staff, and I can only hope that some day I may have that number of staff working for me.

Mr. Chairman, it does beg the question, and this is the first question. I'm going to first of all comment on the fact that although I very much appreciate the absolutely astounding gift of the Mactaggarts to this province, the extra-long festivities today did cut into my time. I'll try to be fairly brief, and I'll try to hurry along, and I hope that I don't speak too fast for the minister, because that comment was made last night in budget debate. If I do, please let me know, and I'll give you some of these questions in writing.

I also very much appreciate her comments regarding getting answers back in writing. She has held to her word up until now. I appreciate that very much, and I expect that she will do the same again.

One of the comments I'd like to make is that because of the fact that we're not likely to see Finance come up in Public Accounts, some of my questions may actually be more appropriate for Public Accounts. If the minister can accommodate me, given that we won't have the opportunity to ask those questions in Public Accounts, I would very much appreciate that as well.

The first question I would have is: $645,000 for the communications budget for the ministry, and I'm wondering if she could share with us just exactly how many staff are involved in communications with her ministry. In fact, Mr. Chairman, one of the questions that I had hoped to ask was which companies, which ad agencies the ministry uses. I'm not sure if that's something that I would be able to get an answer to as well, but if possible I would like to have that.

I mentioned last night in debate around Bill 37 – and I know that the minister has committed to answering it when we get to committee on Bill 37, but I'd like to get it on the record here as well – the very effective use of communications in her department. In particular, I'm referring to the fiscal plan, page 30, where there's discussion about the lifting of the cap of expenditures on resource revenue to $4.75 billion from the current cap of $4 billion. Interestingly enough, both in the press releases and then in this document it refers to the fact that “amendments to the Fiscal Responsibility Act will limit the amount of non-renewable resource revenue that can be used for budget purposes.” The wording, obviously, would lead the untrained eye to think that we're keeping things down whereas, in fact, what we're doing is lifting the cap by $750 million. Again, on behalf of the minister I'd compliment the communications staff for their effective use of the English language in that regard.

Now, I just want to touch on taxes briefly. There were in this most recent budget basically no tax breaks for Alberta taxpayers. That certainly causes me some concern. One of the things that I had suggested – and I think it's perhaps in a motion that is on the list but won't likely see the light of day in this legislative sitting – is that we could consider lowering the flat tax from 10 per cent to 8 per cent given the fact that we're experiencing, you know, absolutely tremendous resource revenue right now and oil and natural gas prices are at the highest they've ever been. If we're ever going to give the citizens of this province a tax break, now might well have been the time to do so.

The other thing we could have looked at, of course, would be to lower the income threshold for low-income earners to once again give them some recognition for the fact that they've paid the price over the years in terms of cutbacks. Given the current fiscal situation that the province finds itself in, now would have been an appropriate time to do so, I think.

One of my colleagues from the NDP caucus mentioned the other day that when you include the health care premium tax that we charge families in this province – and I think my colleague from Edmonton-McClung suggested that it's $1,056 per family every year – you can actually find many situations where we're paying more tax in Alberta than Ontarians do. So it's certainly debatable as to whether, in fact, we do have the lowest tax regime in the country.

There's nothing in this budget that provides any relief for small business. I've mentioned before that I'm a small businessman, so I recognize the struggles that small business has in this province. It's not to say that it isn't a very good climate to do business in, but certainly there are challenges for small business, and corporate tax is one of them. There's nothing in here that addresses that. I'll speak to that a little more in a few minutes, Mr. Chairman.

A hundred and eighty-six million dollars collected in the coming fiscal year on the insurance premium tax. Again, I've suggested that if we want to give Alberta drivers a break and, in fact, if we were to eliminate that, it would benefit not just privately owned insured vehicles but small business vehicles as well, which everyone will know is a cause that I've been on this week.

The hotel tax, or levy as it's now called, the minister referred to in her opening comments. You will know or you can certainly check Hansard where I complimented the government for, in fact, reducing the rate of that tax and still finding a way to make sure that that reduction would result in more dollars for the promotion of tourism. However, at the moment it's not clear whether or not consumers are actually going to benefit from that reduction as we have several groups including the hoteliers' association in Edmonton musing over collecting a 1 per cent tax to promote themselves. So, in fact, we may not see any reduction at all. Although the Alberta government may collect less tax, the end result for the consumer might not be any different whatsoever.

I'd referred a few minutes ago to the lifting of the cap on resource revenue expenditures to $4.75 billion, and it gives me one more opportunity to reference Bill 203, which is a private member's bill from our Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar which brings forward the Alberta Liberal's plan for a legacy act and would have seen 35 per cent of any surplus revenue put into the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, 35 per cent into the advanced education endowment, 25 per cent into addressing the municipal infrastructure debt, which we've calculated to be somewhere in the area of $8 billion, and the remaining 5 per cent of any surplus to go into the arts and humanities endowment fund.

Just to use this year as an example – I know we don't have the final fourth-quarter results yet – it's looking like probably somewhere approaching $6 billion in surplus. Using that number, Mr. Chairman, had we had the Alberta legacy act passed, you would be looking at $2.1 billion this year going into the heritage savings trust fund and an equal $2.1 billion going into the advanced education endowment fund, which, quite frankly, would dwarf the $250 million that this government has committed to put into the fund this year. I think when you look at $2.1 billion that could have gone into the advanced education endowment fund, you can see why we were suggesting that a $3 billion cap is not really appropriate because we'd get there in a year or two without any question.

I'm going to move into the books now and just kind of whip through them, and I'll have some questions for you. I hope I don't go too fast, and as I said, if I do, please let me know. The first comment is that the revenue assumptions were based on a crude oil price of $42 a barrel. I've gone on record as saying that I'm actually surprised that the minister chose to use a number as high as $42. Not that I didn't wish she would use a higher number, because I suspect that something more along the lines of $45 or $48 might be more realistic, but I had expected, quite frankly, that she would be down around $40, so I was pleased to see that.

For the coming two years, '06-07 and '07-08, we're using the figures of $32 and $31, and I'm not so sure, again based on some of the recent projections we've heard from industry analysts that are predicting a spike as high as $105, whether or not $32 and $31 are going to be terribly realistic, but I will be the first to admit: who knows? I have said before, and I will say it again on the record in this House, that one of the reasons I'm an Alberta Liberal is because I became very, very frustrated in the late '80s, when the Treasurer at that time and the Premier were forecasting oil at $30 a barrel and basing their budgets on $30 a barrel when, in fact, we were looking at $16 and $17 world prices. So I would certainly much rather have this problem than that problem, and I'm not afraid to say that on the record. It's certainly much better to have money left over than to come up so short as we were doing back then.

The other thing that catches my eye when I'm looking at the economic assumptions is that this year we're basing the assumptions on a Canadian dollar valued at 83 and a half cents American, which is perhaps a little low based on what's happening right now, but we're certainly likely to hover somewhat above 80 cents, so it's probably reasonable. The following two years we're using projections of 85 cents. I'm not sure whether or not that's realistic. It might be. I suspect it's a little high, but certainly it does impact on the overall financial picture. In fact, most of you will recognize that if it ends up being somewhat lower, our numbers look better in the end because of the fact that we're a resource-based economy, so it may be one more way in which we can sort of lowball the bottom line and end up at the end of the year with an even bigger surplus than we might have predicted.

Mr. Chairman, I'd also like to just touch briefly on the heritage savings trust fund. I know the minister did as well in her comments.

Actually, first, before I do that, I'm going to just talk very briefly about the Auditor General's recommendations – and she did indicate that most of them have been accepted and that there is some money in the department's plan to address those – particularly, though, number 16 from last year's AG report, where the recommendation was made that for high-risk employer pension plans, in those situations, that the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions obtain:

- assurance from pension plans' auditors on the plans' compliance with the Employment Pensions Plan Act, and also

- information on pension plans' governance structure and practices.

The minister has indicated in the fiscal plan that plans are under way to reach those recommendations by March 31 of 2006, and I'm just hoping that she can update us as to exactly where we are at with that because although it says that we'll get there by the end of this current fiscal year, I'm curious how far along that road we are at this point in time.

Also, the AG's recommendation 17 indicated "again." When they use the word "again" in the Auditor General's report, I'm assuming that means the recommendation had been there previously and hadn't been dealt with. I could stand to be corrected, but that's certainly the way I read it. They "again recommend that Alberta Treasury Branches ensure its lending officers comply with corporate lending policies." Certainly, in here it indicates that the government's response has been to accept that recommendation and that, in fact, most of the significant changes will be implemented by June of this year. But given the fact that we are now not much more than two months away, I would hope that we could be updated on that and just be assured that we will in fact meet that target since it's obviously not the first time that it has appeared in the Auditor General's report.

I'm going to move now to the business plans of the ministry, Mr. Chairman, and touch on some questions that I have there. The first thing that jumps out at me is business goal 1, which calls for "a financially strong, sustainable and accountable government." I'm sure we all would like to see that. Everybody in this House would like to see that.

In the performance measures it's referenced that when surveyed, the "percentage of Albertans who think they get enough information on the government's financial performance" – the last actual year that we have data for that was '03-04, and it was only 57 per cent of Albertans who felt that way. The target for this fiscal year is 70 per cent, which I suggest is laudable. My question would be: what plans does the government have, what plans does the minister have to get us there? Is there an advertising campaign involved, or do they have some other plans to get to that point?

Then I'm also wondering if we had actual measurements for 2003-04. I'm going to assume that there may be measurements coming for '04-05, but there was no target for 2004-05. So I'm just wondering. Not that there's necessarily a discrepancy, but it does cause me to question: did we decide at some point that we didn't need that information last year or that it wasn't valuable enough to include it as a target to improve on that number of 57 per cent in the last fiscal year? I'm not sure. So if the minister could provide some clarification on that, it would be helpful.

Goal 2, Mr. Chairman, calls for "a fair and competitive provincial tax system." When I was referring to that a minute earlier, I suggested that if ever there were to be a time when we should be considering a slight decrease in personal income taxes, I would have thought that it would be now given that, in fact, the government does have the money in the bank to pay off the debts as those instruments come due and given the fact that even in this budget we are projecting a 1 and a half billion dollar surplus. If we're ever going to make any move towards that, even just a small token move, at least some show of good faith to Alberta taxpayers, particularly low-income earners, that in fact they can benefit in this way as well from the so-called Alberta advantage, then I really believe that this would have been the time to do it. So I'm a little disappointed to see that we didn't take that step now.

The other thing is that strategy 2.1 on that same page refers to the implementation "as affordable" of the business tax plan, which, I mentioned earlier, would have reduced the corporate income tax from 11.5 per cent to 8 per cent. I understand that it's still a strategy that you're working towards, but perhaps you could provide us with a timeline; you know, whether that's something you hope to have in next year's budget or the year after. Or is it still sort of a pie in the sky thing that we hope to attain some day? Again, given the current fiscal situation, I would have thought that perhaps we could do it now.

I'm going to jump over a few and go to goal 8, which calls for "reliable and competitive financial and insurance products and services," and just highlight one line in there, where it says that "Finance will monitor the availability and cost of other general property and liability insurance for businesses, non-profit organizations and individuals." In other words, other than auto insurance here's an opportunity for the department to address some of the concerns, I believe, that I've been raising this week in the House as it relates to small businesses and nonprofits and the tremendous burden that they carry right now as it relates to all forms of insurance, not just auto insurance.

Goal 9 talks about having quality and competitive financial services available and accessible to all Albertans. In particular, it refers in here to the Alberta Treasury Branch and the services that they provide to rural Alberta. I'm not going to suggest for one second that they don't provide a very valuable service to rural Albertans, but I did notice this year, when the Alberta Treasury Branches announced their expansion plans, that they're concentrating very, very heavily on expanding in, primarily, Edmonton and Calgary and other urban centres, with very little expansion planned for rural Alberta. Given the fact that we have suggested in the past that we're out of the business of business, I would have hoped that we would have moved into a situation where we were going to expand more in rural Alberta and address some of the concerns of those smaller communities.

Mrs. McClellan: I'm going to cover just a few of the items. It might help with questions that other members have. I'll try and be brief.

You asked how many communications staff I have in Finance. I hope you'll remember that we manage a budget of just under $26 billion when I give you the answer. There are 6.4 FTEs in my communications department in Finance, and there are two staff that are assigned from the Public Affairs Bureau. That is the sum total of those wonderful people that try to ensure that people are understanding well what we're doing.

I appreciate your comments on Bill 37 and the limit: $4.75 billion. I guess I like the wording that I used.

Taxes. I've got to take a little exception to you saying there's no tax break for Albertans because I think you're really ignoring that tax breaks that are in this budget are targeted, and they're targeted to the very people who most need those tax breaks. If you are a working family with an income of some $32,000, $33,000, I suggest to you that the employment tax credit that we implemented, increasing the number of children allowed under that from two to four, lowering the threshold from $6,000 to just over $2,000, was incredibly important to those people.

I guess that when I search my conscience and my thoughts, if you had to make choices, which is what this budget really was about, choices of investing in health, investing in advanced education, investing in infrastructure, which I think you've all agreed were good investments, investing in increasing benefits to AISH – and I have to really applaud our Minister of Seniors and Community Supports for the package that AISH recipients got because it is very complete. It is about more than just a cash benefit. When you look at the additional services and programs that they have eligibility for, I think she's done a fine, fine job in that area.

But it was about those choices. We did remove the health premiums from all seniors. Again, I think that for people who generally – I say generally – are on fixed incomes, this was a good move. To freeze the property tax for seniors, who again are quite often on fixed incomes and have trouble adjusting to these fluctuations in costs, I think was a good move.

So if I had a choice – and I did – of lowering perhaps the corporate tax rate a half a per cent or giving the tax break in the areas that we did and still being able to invest in those important programs, I believe we made the right choice. Of course, we all have the right to our own opinion.

To consider that because we're forecasting a surplus, we could have done a tax break is very unwise, and I think the hon. member actually would agree with that. You do not want to do a tax break unless you can ensure that those dollars will be there in the next year and the next year and the next year. The one thing you don't want is to be going back and forth on this or reducing programming spending to keep your tax break in place.

We have said very clearly that we will continue our program on reducing corporate tax to 8 per cent as we can. This year was not the year. The 13.4 per cent to Advanced Education, the 7.1 per cent to Education, the increase to AISH recipients, the abilities to assist those who are more vulnerable in our society with tax breaks were, in our view on this side of the House, the right ones to do this year.

When we do introduce a tax reduction – and we will. I've said that I'm all for it. I pay taxes the same as everyone else in this Legislature. I'm right in the front of that parade. But when we do that, they will be sustainable, and they won't be at the cost of services to students or to people who need health services. So it was about choices. I think that was pretty transparent. I think I was pretty straightforward in that.

The 3 per cent insurance premium has come up. Again, look at it as part of a tax package that we can do. I'd like to be able to do that as well or, at least, lower it to the cost of providing the service. However, I want to ensure that if we do, that reduction actually flows to the consumer, and the ditch isn't filled. The hon. member himself raised the question as to whether the hotels are going to fill a ditch, an area that we removed ourselves from. So that's important.

You also mentioned a private member's bill, and I appreciate very much the principle of that bill. However, for me to support it and vote for it, there would have to be a change in the bill because I am in disagreement in one area. I think you tie your hands too much by putting specific percentages in because it may be that you need more money in capital. I raise the Fort McMurray presentation that was made, that we talked about in the House, where they have high growth and some big challenges. You may want to put it all in endowments in one year. You may want to put more in capital, less in endowments.

Certainly, our desire is to get those endowments to the full figure as quickly as possible, but I don't agree with tying your hands on absolute percentages because, you remember, we're talking about unbudgeted surpluses. We're talking about future surpluses and choices of where you put them. You may decide to put more in science and engineering, more in the arts and humanities, more in the scholarship funds, maybe, a novel thought, more in savings to actually gain a revenue stream for future years. So I agree with your bill. I don't agree with the percentages, but we'll have more discussion on that.

Forecasting oil and gas prices: well, an interesting exercise. I could go back in Hansard and go back in news clippings and point out to the hon. members how many times they were wrong last year, but that would be kind of a useless exercise, wouldn't it? We use the best information we have from the best analysts we have, the same people that you talk to, I'm sure. The only thing I was interested in was on the future years because, frankly, I can't find an energy analyst that's really comfortable about forecasting out in the second and third years, and I think you'd find the same thing.

I've said that this is a reality budget. It's transparent. It's straightforward. It's putting it on the line as we see it, and our best information from our analysts in all information was that the low 40s was probably a pretty prudent place to look at oil.

Now, I'm going to get picky here. If I heard this right – and I'm going to read Hansard over; I always do – 83 and a half per cent is too low. I heard that. I might not have heard it right – it might be lower, something like that – and 85 per cent might be high. I'm going to suggest that the hon. member is splitting hairs and getting picky.

Mr. R. Miller: I said that 83 and a half might be a bit too high.

Mrs. McClellan: Yeah. I'm not sure because you didn't tell me exactly where it should fall. But, again, we use the best information we have. Today it was just under 81 cents. It fluctuates, but it has stayed maybe a little lower than I had thought it would the last couple of weeks.

Heritage savings trust fund: total agreement. We need to inflation-proof it. We need to continue to grow that fund and have those targeted investment dollars available for future years.

Auditor General, pensions. We're continuing those consultations. Our stated goal is still our stated goal of March 31, '06.

For the ATB we think that those targets can be met. I have no indications that they can't be.

We will continue to monitor other general property taxes and so on.

What I haven't entirely come to any conclusion on in my own mind is what you could do or should do or how much intervention or interference you have as the government into what is a private market. I've said consistently that we felt that we should enter the automobile insurance area under public liability and property damage because we say that you have to have those before you operate a vehicle, and of course we were finding that a number of people were not insuring their vehicles because of the cost of insurance. So we'll monitor it and go on from there.

You had the target on the number of Albertans who think they get enough information on our financial performance. The 2004-05 target was published in Budget 2004. That target was 70 per cent in '04, and we're still on target for that for '05 to '08. We don't have our actual results audited for '04-05, so I can't be any more specific in that area. It should be available in our annual report later this summer.

The last one quickly: ATB, cities expansion. I think if you look at the capital investment that ATB has done, they did the majority of their investment of capital in rural and now are attending to urban, which is an important part of their portfolio. Now, I'm not sure, when you say that we talk about not being in business, whether you have anything further to say on government participation in ATB or not, but I'll look forward to that in your next line of comments.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I can't believe how quickly 20 minutes goes by when you're having fun. Must be having fun.

The next question that I had for the minister. On page 247 of the business plans under Ministry Statement of Operations, net income from commercial operations, I'm curious what that is because I did mention getting out of the business of business. I see that in the last fiscal year, '04-05, the forecast was for a net income of $155 million from commercial operations. That jumps to $167 million in this coming fiscal year and goes all the way up to $214 million in the years '07-08. I referred to being out of the business of business, and then I noticed the commercial operations. I would like some clarification from the minister as to exactly what commercial operations we're involved in that we're realizing a revenue of $214 million by the year '07-08.

Now, I did want to jump to the heritage savings trust fund and, in particular, talk about ethical investing for just a minute because this is an issue that I've raised before. In the business plan it talks about varying the allocation of assets to enhance returns, and it says, "Based on the outlook for financial markets, Alberta Investment Management may vary the allocation of liquid assets to enhance returns.” Certainly, this is a concern for myself. We talked before about ethical investing and the fact that we currently hold about $11 million worth of shares in tobacco companies in the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. My line of questioning a couple of weeks back in question period was to try to determine whether, in fact, there was any limit as to where we would put our investment or was it solely based on return on the investment. To this point the minister’s answer has always been that it’s return on investment that is the primary consideration when we make those decisions, and that causes me concern, quite frankly. I’d just like to be on the record as saying that at some point I would hope that we can move to an ethical investment model.

As an example, when we’re talking about tobacco companies, we know the damage that tobacco causes, we know the cost to the health care system and to society in general, yet here we are heavily invested in tobacco companies, reaping benefits from not only their success but then also taxing the product and putting an awful lot of money into the coffers that way as well. So that’s a concern I have, and I would hope that at some point we can address it.

Now, I’m going to try to quickly rip through some questions here because I know that my colleague from Edmonton-Centre has some questions that she’d like to get in as well.

In the estimates book on page 156 – I know that the minister has mentioned that the debt-servicing costs are down, but just for the record I want to remind all Albertans that this year, even though our debt is in theory paid off and we have the money in the bank to pay those instruments when they come due, we are still paying $45 million in debt-servicing costs this year, and it’s a pretty big number. So, again, the communication staff, even if it is only 6 and a half of them . . .

Mr. R. Miller: . . . or 6.4, whatever the FTEs were.

Nevertheless, they’ve done a very good job in terms of managing to convince a number of Albertans that, in fact, we don’t have a debt anymore, and those of us in this Assembly know that we really do still have debt. We also have money to pay it off as it comes due, and that’s not a bad thing, but in the meantime we are paying this year $45 million in debt servicing. It’s a substantial amount, and I want to be on record as having noted that in this debate.

On page 160 under Financial Sector and Pensions I notice that last year we spent $4.2 million, and that I’m quite sure includes the $1.4 million from the supplementary estimates which was for the advertising campaign on the auto insurance reforms. We’re down to $2.827 million this year, which I believe the minister indicated reflects the fact that she has no plans to conduct a similar promotional campaign this time around. I’m just wondering whether or not her thoughts on that have changed in the last couple of weeks given some of the changes in the insurance industry and the reaction from the industry when the mandatory reduction was announced . . .

An Hon. Member: Rollback.

Mr. R. Miller: It’s not a rollback; it’s a reduction. We wish it was a rollback, but it’s only a reduction.

. . . and the fact that I’m hearing from some consumers that it’s still not enough given that premiums climbed anywhere from 20, 25 per cent all the way up to in some cases 45 or 50 per cent in the two years prior to the freeze in October of 2003. So I think that even though the minister was very kind in sending me a letter showing that the number of contacts with her department has dropped since the 5 per cent rollback and then now a further reduction, nevertheless I’m not sure that that’s an indication that people are necessarily completely satisfied. Perhaps they’ve just given up, maybe resigned to the fact that this little bit of a reduction is all that they’re going to get.

Another question I have. On page 162 under Statutory Programs the interest payments on corporate tax refunds – and I have to acknowledge here that I was blown away by this number – the forecast for the last fiscal year: $30 million. It’s in this year’s budget to bring that down to $20 million, and then it doesn’t have any estimate for the year after. Even $20 million – I mean, obviously, I understand that if it was $30 million last year, it’s good for us to try to get it down to $20 million. But I would like some explanation as to why we ended up paying $30 million in interest on corporate tax refunds, whether or not there’s something we could be doing better as a department to make sure that we get those refunds out quicker, or what. I’m not sure. But that certainly caught my eye.

Page 166, department statement of operations, under Income Taxes. The minister mentioned that we’re collecting more money in tax even though the rates didn’t go up, but one thing I did notice here is that personal income tax in this coming year has only gone up a hundred million dollars. That surprised me. Since we know that there hasn’t really been a reduction in income tax, and the government talks a lot about the number of new jobs and the fact that people are coming to Alberta from all across the country and even from Venezuela, apparently, to work here, I would have thought that our personal taxes would have gone up dramatically, and they’ve not. So I’m kind of curious about that.

In fact, since 2003-2004 there’s only a very modest increase in the amount of personal income tax that’s being collected. I’m a little surprised at that. If, in fact, we’re seeing the number of new workers that the government likes to reference, why isn’t that number higher? I would have expected it to be.

I wouldn’t mind a quick explanation from the minister, if she has time, as to what the statutory debt-servicing costs are because that number is $238 million. So we have, you know, the $45 million that I mentioned for debt-servicing costs, but then also there’s stat debt-servicing costs of $238 million.

On page 169 under Heritage Savings Trust Fund we’re forecasting an investment income of that fund this year of only $684 million, compared to just over a billion dollars in the previous year. Perhaps, if she has time, she can provide a quick explanation as to why that number has dropped so dramatically given the fact that the world economy seems to be on pretty solid ground right now.

On page 174 there’s a reference under Expense for the Alberta Insurance Council, special projects, this year totalling $65,000. Last year it was $34,000. I know that it’s not a big number, but it is more than double what was there last year. Those are the kinds of things that jump out at me as a layperson when I’m reading this document, and I wouldn’t mind an explanation as to what special project is being undertaken there.

Briefly, I’ll just comment on the FTEs. She mentioned that in the department they’re up 34 FTEs, which is somewhat less than 10 per cent. It’s probably about 6, 7 per cent. The Pensions Administration is going up 37, and ASC, 17. I’m not going to quibble with either of those because I recognize that in both cases we’re trying to enforce regulations and make sure that we have confidence in those two, the corporation and the commission respectively. Certainly, I’m not going to quibble with that because I’ve gone on record in the House as suggesting that we need stiffer enforcement in both of those areas. So I’m comfortable with that, but perhaps a little more explanation as to the 34 FTEs being added to the department itself.

With that, I will take my seat and look forward to some answers. Thank you.

Mrs. McClellan: I'm just going to reference that there were a lot of questions, and I think I can respond very well in writing. I know there are others anxious.

I do want to make a comment just in one area that's more of a policy area than a detail, and that's in ethical investing. I have not said that we should simply look at rate of return, but I think that's something that we really have to have some conversations and discussions on because what I may consider ethical investing may not always be agreed to by others.

I do want to say this, though. In the scope of our investment division we are not heavily into investment in tobacco companies, in the scope of the whole investment picture. Tobacco sales are a legal entity. We all know the damage that use of tobacco can do to people, but nobody has ever had the courage to take that issue head on; you know, maybe ban it outright. I don't know. Prohibition didn't work when it was tried.

I have had some experience in ethics as minister of health and working in health ethics. It's a field that really does require a larger discussion by a number of people and the investment community, perhaps, in the whole country to look at what is ethical. We can all pick something that we don't agree with or we don't like for philosophical, ideological, or personal reasons. So I certainly don't want it left on the record that this government is uncaring about the issue of ethical investing. We are very much.

The corporate tax refund: that was probably due to a very complex negotiation. As you know, the federal government collects our taxes, and we're sometimes vulnerable on their time frame on getting information, but I will make sure that you have the exact explanation on that and also on the statutory debt servicing because there is a difference between debt servicing and statutory debt servicing.

I think I will let the Member for Edmonton-Centre have a chance to get some questions in, and then we'll see where we go from there. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. There are four areas that I wanted to cover with the minister this afternoon. They are risk, the issue of insurance for nonprofits, the health care premium tax, and funding for sexual assault centres.

Mrs. McClellan: That wouldn't be in my department.

Ms Blakeman: No, but I'm going to once again talk about your leadership and prevail upon you on that one.

So starting with page 243 of your business plan, I'm looking at goal 7, the proactively managed risk section. I note that the last actual data that is noted here as a performance measurement was $15.8 million, and the target for this year is $6.9 million. My question is: why is the risk more than double the target? If we could get an explanation on that.

The minister's staff has always been very good at getting those kinds of detailed questions answered in a very quick turnaround, and I've always appreciated that. But as with the other ministries I'm asking if we could please get that information before we have to vote on the appropriation bill in a couple of weeks. I'd appreciate that.

Second to that particular question then: what is the minister's plan or the government's plan to mitigate this risk? To my eye this risk is more than double the target. I understand you're working with figures that may not be up to date, so perhaps the '04-05 actual figures are lower and start to come into line with the target. But, boy, that's way out of line. So why is that risk that high, and what is the plan to mitigate it?

Mrs. McClellan: Give me that page, please.

Ms Blakeman: Page 243.

Finally, I'm wondering if the ministry has looked at the potential cost to taxpayers for risks not being mitigated. Does that expose them to any real cost that could be mitigated in any way, and what are the plans for that?

So that's the series of questions under risk.

I know that the minister is not responsible, that there is no legislation that covers the mandatory provision of insurance other than for PL/PD for automobile insurance, but this is the only place that this issue can come up. I think that there is increasingly a crisis being created in the not-for-profit sector, and I am talking across the board: social service agencies, advocacy groups, arts and culture, sports and recreation. I have heard from all of them over the last 18 months. Actually, I think it was almost exactly a year ago I was at a media conference for HIV Edmonton, whose insurance had gone from I think it was $4,000 to $20,000 in a leap, and actually they were having trouble getting coverage at all.

I'm wondering if there's been any consideration by the government to looking at some kind of regulations or consumer protection that could be put in place by the government because the insurance companies seem to be trying to squeeze the nonprofits to the point where they give up and don't have insurance because it's so expensive for them to carry it. Maybe the insurance companies want out of the business of offering that kind of regular insurance to these groups. If so, they're going about it in a strange way.

But costs have risen. The costs that I've looked at have gone from double to fivefold, and these nonprofits, you know, get limited government funding and have to fund raise privately for the rest of their dollars to provide services. And I don't think I'd find anyone in here that would argue with me that these services weren't needed and valued. This is an enormous strain on them, and once again they're out there trying to fund raise dollars not to provide a service, not to provide counselling for a battered woman or recreation for a child or, you know, STARS ambulance service. No, no. They're trying to raise money to pay the insurance costs to keep the doors open. Here I'm talking about the regular public liability, you know, if you stumble on the sidewalk kind of insurance.

In some cases some social service agencies, particularly, for example, foster parents, are expected to carry a level of insurance to make sure that they're covered in case something goes wrong while they have children in their care, and that's substantial. The insurance that midwives are now carrying – I mean, in every case the insurance is just going up and up and up, and I don't know why it's happening.

This is the only minister that liaises on a regular basis with the insurance industry, and I don't know what to do anymore. There doesn't seem to be any stopping it. A few insurance companies have stepped forward and said, "Well, you know, we'll try and cover this particular agency." Okay. Great. What do we do about the rest of them? I'm not particularly in favour of more legislation, but I don't see that we see an end to this. When it starts to impact the service and opportunities for Albertans, then I'm going to raise it, and I've raised it.

So I'm looking for something, anything that this minister can try, any suggestions at all to see what we could do to be able to get a handle on this. Maybe the insurance industries have their government liaison people read Hansard will read this and come back to me with some suggestions or explanations about why these rates are going up so much. This is creating more than a difficulty, and I think this is a consumer protection issue.

I know the government has made a choice not to eliminate health care premiums, which we view as a tax, but I have to put on the record the concerns raised to me by my constituents with their extreme unhappiness about this – what's the word for it? It's not a progressive tax; it's a flat tax because, you know, a family pulling in $100,000 pays $1,056 a year, and a family that's pulling in $30,000 pays that same rate. It is an additional tax. It does cost the government money to collect it. It's not dedicated revenue for the department of health. It does go straight into general revenue. I still argue that it should have been eliminated, and so do many of my constituents. I was obliged to get that on the record with the minister to underline again how unhappy people are with this, and they do feel that it is – oh, what is the word I'm trying to get? – a discriminatory tax. It differentially impacts the middle-income earner much more than a higher income earner because it's essentially a flat amount of money.

The last issue I want to raise with the Finance minister both because she ultimately controls the purse strings – she leads the Treasury Board – and she is the lead female on that side. There's no question the power and influence the Minister of Finance holds with that caucus. [some applause] Heartily agreed to by a number of her colleagues. I'm once again appealing to her for some way to fund the operational funding of sexual assault centres in Alberta. I talked to her about this last year. We have not had any movement on it.

I know that the government feels that they offer some funding through the victims of crime fund. It's very limited funding. It only applies to counselling offered to people that are in the court system. I'm sure the minister is well aware that the percentage of women who have been sexually assaulted and the percentage of women who are seeking support from sexual assault centres, the ones that actually go through to a court process, is very small. And that's really the extent of the formal funding that these centres get.

Now, beyond that, they apply to Wild Rose, they apply to CIP, they apply to CFEP, they apply everywhere, try everything, and in some cases they are able to get funding through the department of health. But in each and every one of these, you know, clearly those programs are set up to say: don't come to us with ongoing operational funding; come to us with short-term finite projects. So they have to keep reinventing a new reason to apply for these funds. And we have the administrators of these centres spending all of their time trying to raise money through different project grants to fund this.

I don't understand – and the government has never been able to give me a good reason – why we don't fund the operations of these centres. So maybe you can convince me this year why you don't fund the operations of these centres, but it would have to be a darn good argument because I don't buy it. I think they've fallen between the cracks for years. I think they were lumped in with battered women's shelters for years, but they're not that. Then there was an attempt to sort of put them in with family violence and bullying. They're definitely not that. You know, they do have a higher percentage of stranger assault, but, yes, it also involves family members at times. It involves younger people and older people. They just don't fit in the categories the government's got.

I will appeal to this minister, and I have already spoken to the minister of health. Somehow this government has got to find a way to address this problem. As I say, I look to this minister with the influence that she has in this caucus to try and find some funding somewhere that would be ongoing operational funding for these centres in Alberta.

So those were the four issues that I wanted to raise with the minister. I think we're all aware of the number of people that want an opportunity to question her, so I'll leave that with her. If she wants to try and answer some of those now, that's great. If not, I'll accept it in writing after the fact.

Thank you.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, I'll be quite quick so that others can get in, and I'll write you something more detailed on the risk side, but generally it is because we expect higher settlements, and the cost of repair to damaged property, as you know, is increasing for repair and replacement. But I will give you a more detailed answer on that.

I wanted to just touch on a couple of areas because they're areas that I've been concerned about. Insurance costs for nonprofits: we all face that, whether it's our riding arenas, our swimming pools, our hockey rinks, our Cub Scout houses. You know, for a long time – I can speak to rural more than urban – the town carried these various groups on their insurance as a rider. Unfortunately, the concerns in that area in liability have increased so much that some towns, not all but many, have said: we can no longer carry you; you are going to have to get your individual insurance. Then it really gets high.

We had this issue with our ag societies, big time, and there are so many of those out there. What we were able to do in that area was get the ag societies to come as a group because there is a general association of those and then work with them through the department of agriculture, through the support area that we have for ag societies and then look for an insurer that would do a group insurance to try and make this manageable. It was difficult because the ag societies are all different sizes and shapes, and that's the strength of them and the beauty of them and the effectiveness of them: they reflect their community. So it was a tough one, but we were able to do that.

This is increasingly a huge problem. Once you have to start covering the costs of operation with the higher costs there, you either have to charge more for people who are using them, which makes them less affordable, or you're out there fund raising. And you're right; we get applications to every program we have for help in that area.

I think the one thing that you can do with groups that are common across the province is what we did with the ag societies: try and find a group type of insurance. There have been one or two companies that were pretty good to work with in that area. So I wish I had the answer because if I had the answer, I wouldn't have the question at home in my constituency. And you can well appreciate that I have a lot of them.

Now sexual assault centres. I'm not going to take a lot of time here, but I will have a discussion with both the ministers of Seniors and Community Supports and Health, and I will involve the Solicitor General as well in the discussion. I think you may have hit on the issue though. It's because it doesn't fit in any one of the particular boxes we have or compartments or lines. I know that they perform a very, very important service in the community. It has to be one of the toughest areas for anyone to either work in or have to seek help for, and I will certainly endeavour to carry on the discussions you've had with those ministers and see if there's a way that we can make them fit.

Now, I am assuming that the municipalities contribute to those, as well, through our tax base. I assume that when I'm here paying taxes, some of those dollars go to contribute to centres like that and other community services that we enjoy here. I would hope so. I guess what I need to understand better and, I admit, I don't understand well is just where they receive their funding today, and maybe you could help me out on that and what level of funding and from whom.

So I'm going to let somebody else ask some questions, and I'll give you some more detail in some of those other areas.

I'm not going to ignore the questioner, but I am going to slip out just for a minute. I'll be right back, and I'm going to ask my colleague to take notes while I'm gone.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I know some of the questions that I wanted to ask were previously asked and put on the record, but I can just maybe re-emphasize how important they are and maybe shed some more light on them.

One of the issues that was touched on was the issue of the health care premium tax. The hon. minister said that, you know, it wasn't a priority, that it wasn't deemed to be an item high on the agenda, and that, in fact, it's useful for providing all those health services, and so on. I agree that maybe we need to provide those services because Albertans deserve it. This is one of the richest places on earth. And $1,056 per family per year seems like a lot of money. But when the government keeps bragging about how taxes can only go down in this province, and so on, I think this is one area that they could have attacked first, you know, because many people, not just from the opposition benches but many people on the street, if you asked them, would say that it's an unnecessary burden given the wealth and the richness of this province.

Also, the other question which was touched on was ethical investments. The hon. minister indicated that the definition of what's ethical or what's moral varies from one person to the next. I agree, although I and many of my colleagues disagree with investment in tobacco companies at all. Also, we disagree with investment in weapons companies and arms manufacturers, and so on. So I don't think it's really a matter of interpretation or personal values; it's just something that is either right or wrong. But having said that, I notice that of the eight companies that received the $11 million investment, one is Canadian and seven are from the U.S. So if we absolutely have to invest in a tobacco company, why can't we invest more in Canadian companies than ones in the U.S.?

Now, my main question is really the trend that is obvious in off-budget spending. Every year the government, like my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford indicated, lowballs the estimates for prices for oil and gas, and then at the end of the year they post a huge surplus. Being a first-term MLA, I noticed that during supplementary supply we were okaying billions of dollars in supplementary supply. I put it on the record during that debate, and I'm going to repeat that today: it really is a deficit. As a businessman you have a budget. Myself, I have a budget. And then I stick to the budget, and if I'm really close to it, I'm proud of myself and the work I have done and my team. My accountant would not allow me to be off budget by more than maybe half of 1 per cent, which is acceptable, you know, in the business environment. But now this government is off the mark by $1.8 billion or $2 billion, and they bring it into the House, and we have to agree to pass the supplementary supply bill in a day or a day and a half or two days, and then that's it.

Mr. R. Miller: An hour and a half.

Mr. Elsalhy: Or an hour and a half even, and then that's it.

I don't think this is acceptable. I mean, we're lucky we have the surpluses, and we have the oil and gas riches, which is really an act of God. I mean, we're just purely lucky. The ruling Conservatives have this approach that it's illegal to run a deficit, and I commend them on it. However, it's I think a matter of spin doctoring or, again, propaganda. We have people working in the communications departments, people working in the Premier's office to modify or present the facts.

Mr. R. Miller: Almost 300 people.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes, the Public Affairs Bureau.

What we're doing here is taking all those riches from the surplus and putting them into the capital account and the sustainability fund. Then when we spend a little more than what we have budgeted for, we take it out of the capital account and the sustainability fund and inject it into these areas. And then, voila, we don't have a deficit or we don't show a deficit, but I really maintain that we do. We run deficits every year, and this is contrary to the accounting practices that the Tory government brags about.

My next question is with regard to investing in the heritage fund. I noticed that the hon. minister didn't think, again, that this was a top priority in this budget. I beg to differ because the oil resources and the natural resources that we have in this province will eventually run out. Now, I listened with keen interest I think it was yesterday when we discussed Energy, and the hon. Minister of Energy indicated that we have reserves to last us for God knows how many years, which is good. However, they are destined to be depleted, and they will run out. Unless we find alternative ways of producing energy and alternative sources of revenue and income, what we have as a boom today will be a bust tomorrow.

Why do we Liberals care about investing in the heritage fund? Like I say, it's investing for the rainy day. It's investing for a day when we have to rely on alternate sources of revenue. How much would we have invested? I noticed that last year the government budgeted the annual revenue at $22 billion but ended up with $26 billion, so that's a $4 billion supposed surplus. Now, that would have meant that if we had forecasted this more accurately, we would have invested $1.4 billion into the heritage fund.

Mr. R. Miller: It's actually a $6 billion surplus because of the $2 billion in supplementary supply.

Mr. Elsalhy: Well, here you go. So $4 billion on the record, $2 billion off the record. The total would be $6 billion. That's 6,000 million dollars. That's nine zeros after the six.

So how would we compare against other jurisdictions which are similar to ourselves? I would compare Alberta to a place like Alaska or Norway. Alaska's petroleum fund, which began the same year as our own heritage fund, is almost triple our value. Norway's fund, which is 16 years younger than ours, has more than $120 billion U.S. in their bank account. We are nowhere close to that. Are these people more prudent? Are they more worried about their future? Maybe, but I think we should be as well.

With Alaska, again, I pose this theoretical question to the hon. minister: would Alberta ever consider giving dividends to its people? We cannot expect cash handouts all the time, but I think what we are asking for is a fair share of the boom. The industry is producing. They are making money, and our surpluses keep growing. What does the average Albertan expect if we're not giving them a tax reduction, if we're not allowing them to pay what they consider fair on their utility prices, if they are paying through their noses at the pump? So maybe, possibly, consider the Alaskan model and offer them dividends. That's just a theoretical question, but it's really an intriguing one, and I would definitely appreciate an answer to this.

My next question is more of a policy question to the hon. minister with regard to the AISH payments and the health care premiums, again, because I just want to know: who makes the call? Who decides whether we waive or do not waive the health care premiums? Would it be a recommendation from the minister of health; that is, around your caucus table? Would she say, "No, Madam Minister, we don't think we should waive the Alberta health care premiums"? Or is that a decision that is made by the Ministry of Finance based on revenues and estimates and expenses and so on?

Also, I know that you indicated that you are going to increase payments to AISH immediately by $100 and then after that by $50 the year after, and so on. Again, who makes this decision? Would it be the Ministry of Finance, based on budgeting considerations, or would it be the minister responsible saying, "No, I think we should only pay them $100 dollars this year and $50 the next and then whatever else the third year"? Who decides?

Also, the assistance for persons with developmental disabilities budget funding is increased by 4.5 per cent in 2005-06. Again, that's positive. That's commendable. But why only 4.5 per cent? Aren't we rich enough to double that?

I know some questions might not be readily answerable today, but I would definitely appreciate any feedback I receive from the hon. minister, and I thank you for your time.

Mrs. McClellan: I'm going to be brief and give you a detailed answer. You asked a question on health care premiums. Yes, $1,056 a family is a lot of money, but so is the excellence in our health system. I haven't run across a lot of Albertans that pay health premiums that have accessed services that consider it a burden. Obviously, all of us would prefer not to.

I don't know if any of you had an opportunity to listen to the Stollery children's health centre radiothon that's on CHED today and yesterday and will be on tomorrow. I recommend to anybody to listen to some of those stories that parents tell about the young person who's had 11 surgeries, I think it was, in 12 years. Very sad, but isn't it wonderful that we have these facilities. I've heard nothing but praise for the people who work in those facilities and who access the services we have, especially children's leukemia. The strides that have been made in the very recent years, just very recent years, where there wasn't even a treatment just short years ago. I invite anyone who's used the health system to ask for a copy of their statement.

So, you know, I'm not making excuses for health premiums. I think it was designed first to pay 50 per cent of the cost of I think it was just doctors' services. It's one-ninth of our budget today of all health services that we provide. We provided just around three-quarters of a billion dollars for Health for additional dollars this year. Health premiums are around $1 billion, just under, in revenue. Should we have gotten rid of premiums and not given Health that money? It was about choices, as I said. I want tax reductions as bad as anyone else, but when we do it, I want them to be sustainable, I want them to be affordable, and I don't want to cut necessary programs to do that. So it's choices.

Ethical? Moral? You made a very good point there. You have your beliefs. I don't think I'd be far off from agreeing with you on some of them. As I said, I think that's a bigger discussion that we all need to have.

Heritage fund investing. I've kind of covered that. We're inflation-proofing that now. It will increase each year. There is the opportunity to add to that if we have the dollars available.

Alaska and Norway. I hope you had that discussion when the Minister of Energy's estimates were up. I didn't hear it come up. We read a lot about Alaska and Norway, but we forget that you can't compare oil and gas development and activity and recovery in this country, or at least in this province, with those two because they have a totally different product, a different cost associated with retrieving it. I don't think anybody is going to argue that the oil sands, which do have a higher cost of recovery, haven't been a huge benefit. At least, you shouldn't argue that there hasn't been a huge benefit if you live in Edmonton because this region really does feel a great deal of the advantage in that investment there.

So you could take somebody else's model in Canada – that's what I'd rather you did – where you have more similarities and say: does our model work better or does theirs, where they tax them heavily and don't have any development? I don't know. Obviously, I'm agreeing with the model we have, where we have a balance between good return and strong activity, because we all benefit.

Would we consider giving dividends to Albertans? Well, you know, what Albertans told us in It's Your Future is: "Don't send us a cheque. Lower our taxes. Make sure that we have the excellence in health services, the excellence in education programming. Make sure we help those who are most vulnerable in our society. But you can give me the dividend in my paycheque by lowering my taxes." I think that's important.

I do want to make a point because we talk a lot about taxes, and I wanted on the record to make sure that we all understand. There are some good graphs in these books to back this up, but if we taxed at the level of the next closest province to us, not the furthest out, not the middle but the next closest, we would collect $7 billion more tax in this province. Well, we'd have $7 billion more revenue, but conversely Albertans and Alberta companies would have $7 billion less to invest in our province.

So I asked my department if that gap is narrowing. We have seen moves, and I applaud them, in other provinces and federally to lower taxes, although the federal lowering of taxes is sort of, well, the layaway plan – you really see the benefit in about five years – whereas what you see here is immediate. In fact, they tell me that the gap is widening, that we are maintaining and growing our tax advantage, not losing it. So that's important to know.

As I said earlier, you can be selective. I know one of the hon. members will get up and be selective and say: a family of this, this, and this in B.C. or Saskatchewan. But they forget to add that they have a PST added to their costs. They can't buy anything, virtually, that you might want to buy other than food without paying it [interjections] – I'm getting them going – and that's important. But you have to look at it on the family side, too, where we treat the spouse the same as the other partner. That doesn't occur in very many, if any, other provinces. That is also in here. So we have a significant tax advantage here. We want to grow that tax advantage. I think it's important.

You asked a question on AISH payments. I want to reiterate: don't look at only the cash benefit in AISH. That was important, and it's significant to those folks – that's for sure – but I think the other improvements that the minister made in access to other services, whether they were in health services or dental or drugs, other supports, are incredibly important as well. The ability to earn more money without it being clawed back I applaud heartily because I think there should be the ability for people to go out and earn money and not have it all clawed back. So when you look at the AISH package, I encourage you to look at the whole package because it's pretty significant.

Certainly, some of it is about budget as to how you implement it, but again it's making a package that's most beneficial. There was a great deal of work done by the review committee in consulting with the people who use those services, and generally I have heard back from them that they like what we've done. But the minister is the one who designed the package through her consultation and made those decisions. Could she have done more if she'd had more money? Obviously, yes is the answer, but within the dollars she had – and that's the case in each department. They have the best information, the most knowledge, and they definitely are the ones that should make the decisions as to how to use the dollars that are allocated. They do make their case on the number of dollars that they get on the program that they want to provide, and that is debated long and hard, and it's quite an interesting exercise.

Ms Calahasen: She's tough.

Mrs. McClellan: She's not very tough; she's soft.

But I think that one of the things that we really tried to do in this budget on the tax side was assist the lower income earners. It was targeted, and I think Albertans told us that if there was limited flexibility, they wanted those dollars or those abilities to keep dollars, which is really what tax reduction is about, for our lower income people and people who are on fixed incomes.

You do know that on health premiums there is a sliding scale, and if you are at a low income, you don't pay. Now seniors pay none, but there is for the working family as well. Are those thresholds right? Are they, you know, as they move, right? We could debate that. We talk a lot in this about seniors and so on. I suggest that working families, especially young families that have two, three, and four kids, really needed this break as bad as anyone in our society. So that's where we chose to put it in this budget, when we had limited ability, and I don't apologize for that. I think that when faced with a choice, it was the right choice to make. I will give you some more detail in a written response.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. I'm pleased to get up and make a few comments and ask a few questions with respect to the estimates for the Finance department and for the minister.

I want to start out, I guess, with a few things about taxes, and I want to again distinguish the position of the New Democratic Party on corporate taxes from the position of the Liberal and the Conservative parties, who favour continuing with a plan for reducing corporate income tax. This plan was initially outlined by Steve West when he was the Minister of Finance just prior to the election in 2000, and it would have the corporate tax rate paid by the larger companies decline steadily from what was then 15 per cent to 8 per cent. I think we're somewhere around 11 and a half now, and there's not a further reduction in this budget, and that, in our view, is a good thing.

We do not support the further reduction of the corporate income tax in this province. We think that it's important that there remains a good balance between sources of revenue and tax burden, and we think that given the province's dependence on oil and gas revenue, which can be volatile, to reduce our standard tax base too far puts us at risk. I still recall the difficulty that the government found itself in when there was a sudden drop in oil and gas prices. A number of social programs had to be cut on a fairly emergent basis, and I don't think we should be putting ourselves in that kind of vulnerable position. So maintaining a reasonable tax base with balance and fairness is an important priority for us.

I notice that the Deputy Premier and Minister of Finance talked about that if Alberta tax rates were set at the level of the next highest province, we'd have $7 billion of revenue that would otherwise be available to Alberta companies to invest in Alberta. I think that I got that right. Except that the point I would like to make is that these are not necessarily Alberta companies, and they don't necessarily invest that money in Alberta. There's a certain amount of profit-taking that takes place by American companies in particular, which dominate our oil patch, and some of that money gets returned to parent companies. So I think that's an important point that needs to be made.

The other tax policy issue where we have a significant difference with the government and apparently at least some of our Liberal colleagues has to do with a rate charge in the flat tax, and we don't support the flat tax. One of the reasons that middle-income Albertans pay perhaps more than their fair share and certainly more than they might in some other provinces is because the flat tax benefits primarily very wealthy people, and the government has of course supplemented that with a significant increase in the personal exemption. We can't argue that the poor are being hammered by that. But the wealthy are certainly getting off very, very lightly and not contributing their fair share, and the result is that middle-income Albertans pay proportionately more. So we don't support the flat tax.

I guess the minister anticipated some of my comments with respect to the tax burden on people in the middle-income areas. Certainly, if you add in – and we got this out of the ministry statements directly. This is not original research. The budget documents show that middle-income Albertans can pay significantly more if you include the health care premiums than they would, say, in Ontario and somewhat more than in British Columbia. Health care premiums, of course, cost a typical family of four over a thousand dollars a year, and that's paid regardless of income, so that's a very flat tax. That's not even a percentage. That's an absolute payment. So I want to come back to that.

I want to address the minister's comments about sales tax as being an offsetting factor relative to what middle-income people pay. I think that's an incorrect placement of that question because the lack of a sales tax in Alberta was always attributed to resource revenues. It was not attributed to other aspects of the taxes that are paid, income tax and corporate tax. It was always argued that the reason Alberta doesn't have a sales tax, doesn't need a sales tax is because of the extra resource revenues that we receive. So I would argue that it's not correct to include that in the calculation.

I want to come to health care premiums because I'm a little bit puzzled about this. They are very significant. There are only two provinces in Canada that have them, including British Columbia. Of course, what really happens is that the provincial governments pay the health care premiums into the federal system so that effectively there are no health care premiums in eight of the provinces. But our take is very significant. It's not a billion dollars, but it's getting up there. This is not allocated towards health care specifically. It goes into general revenues, and of course if you pro-rate it, some of it pays for health care, some of it pays for roads, and some of it pays for other government programs.

Given the wealth of the province and the extra revenues that we have, I am at a loss to understand why the government stopped short of cancelling them for all Albertans. They did move in the right direction with respect to seniors. I think that was a good move. But the government can afford to do this. This is perhaps the least fair tax that is imposed, and it's not related to health care. It's a general revenue tax. So my question is: since we can afford to do it and since it's unpopular and, you know, since even some members on the other side have advocated this, why not just get rid of it?

I want to talk a little bit about securities, and I have a couple of questions. First, on general policy, and this relates to some of the controversy whirling around the Alberta Securities Commission right now. I'd like to know what progress is being made in terms of establishing a national standard or a national organization to regulate securities, and I don't mean federal. I don't mean that the provinces should just turn this over to the federal government but, rather, establish a national agency. I know there are some discussions around that. I don't know how the minister feels about that. It really seems to me that in this day and age of rapid international investment and globalization and so on, the concept of each provincial government regulating securities in their own province is maybe a little bit outdated. I think we could just move towards a national regulatory framework there. Certainly, I'd like to be brought up to date.

I have another specific question with respect to some of the activities of the Alberta Securities Commission with relation to the present controversy. I don't share the view that it's inappropriate for the Auditor General to look into this; I think it is. That may not be the end of it though. Once the Auditor General's report is received, then I think that we need to assess whether or not there should be something that goes a little bit further. I am a little bit concerned about the forensic audit that KPMG has been asked to do in terms of leaks and so on.

The minister invited people who had concerns to, you know, get in touch, and I've got it here. On the 12th of April:

Well, Mr. Speaker, if you have actual examples of enforcement issues, I would certainly deal with those. I don't mean one or two, given the number of files . . . because I think everyone understands that you can have those concerns. What I would be most concerned about is if people brought concerns forward and they were not dealt with.

The minister basically asked for people to submit evidence. Now, legitimate security concerns on the e-mail system are one thing, but I'd like assurance from the minister that, you know, having invited these people to come forward, she's going to make sure that this forensic audit or other actions by management there do not punish people who heard what she had to say and responded in good faith. So that's that point.

I want to I guess deal a little bit with insurance. I'm curious about the decisions around asking for a voluntary reduction in rates and then why that became a mandated reduction of 6 per cent. Why was 6 per cent chosen when the report that was done for the insurance review board said that rates were 12.7 per cent too high? Why was the reduction only 6 per cent?

I'd like to know a little bit about the process that's going to be used for the rate review. There are going to be public hearings, but I note that these public hearings are set for summer months and are only going to be held in Edmonton and Calgary. There's a considerable process around these, so it's not the kind of thing where people with their private insurance rates in their family going up can go down to a hearing in Lloydminster or in Hinton or even Lethbridge or Red Deer or Medicine Hat and express their concerns. They're very formal. There are steps that have to be taken in order to be heard. They're in the summer, and they're only in Calgary and Edmonton. So I guess that's number one; I have a concern about the process. It doesn't look particularly accessible to me.

Secondly, I'd like to know from the minister what exactly the process is intended to do and what powers the review board has. Would they be able to roll back insurance rates even further or to recommend that? What sort of framework do they work in?

Those are the concerns. I could hector the minister about the advantages of public auto insurance, but I've done that enough. She knows what the right thing to do is. Nevertheless, I'll spare her today with a view to maybe getting out of here. It's such a nice day.

Thank you very much, Madam Chairman.

Mrs. McClellan: I'm going to just cover a few things. You're right. I do know the right thing to do, and it's not proven anywhere that I've seen that public insurance is a better thing.

In fact, much has been said about B.C.'s system and how much cheaper it is. You know, one of the problems you have when you drive as much as I do is you get a lot of time to listen to the radio. I was listening to a talk show and just have to share this.

An Hon. Member: Was it Rutherford?

Mrs. McClellan: I can't remember. It was an afternoon, I think.

There was a gentleman who came on. He had moved to Alberta from B.C., and he said, you know, that he had heard all the horror stories about the insurance costs in Alberta, so he hung on to his insurance as long as he could, right to the last day. Then he went and got his insurance, and he just kicked himself all over the place because he could have saved so much money by insuring in Alberta as soon as he got here. I mean, you can find that, and you will find somebody else.

Well, one of the things we've tried to say in this whole thing is that you've got to look at the driver, you've got to look at the record, and you've got to look at their driving habits and their patterns. It's easy for me to pick that person or you can pick somebody else who would pay less in B.C. or Saskatchewan, but the main thing is that Albertans are seeing a reduction in their rates. They are able to afford their insurance. It's a little like taxes. I always get a kick out of this. If something goes down $5, it's minimal. If it goes up $5, it's like, you know, Mount Everest. It's over the top. That's what we do in this business, I guess.

On the process this summer: it is pretty clearly laid out. I think there is an ability for people to put submissions in writing if they can't put them in any other way. This review was planned; the interim reduction was not. So the 6 per cent now mandatory was not planned. It was planned that any change in rate would have been this fall, but given the appearance and, subsequently, the knowledge of profit, which is not a bad thing – excessive profit is – it was determined that you would reduce the rates on an interim basis for those drivers. There will be an adjustment made again this fall if it's warranted, one way or the other, so if the 12 point whatever per cent still holds, that will happen then.

On the forensic audit that's happening, I heard you say that you agreed we had to be concerned about breaches in the security system. That is, as I understand from the commission, what they are reviewing. It would be very serious if the system was breached in any way because of the confidentiality of the material there, of course, and we want to maintain the confidence of the investment community.

People who have raised concerns do not have any fear of reprisals from me. I think they are confident that I will treat information that they want to share with me by e-mail or letter or by phone confidentially, but I do appreciate that people will come forward and, if they have concerns, have them addressed. I think the important thing that I said in that response in Hansard was that it isn't whether it's one or two companies that have a concern. The point is that if they have a concern on how their case was handled, that has to be dealt with. They may not get the answer they want in the end, but they have to feel that they have had a satisfactory review of that, and that's how you have confidence in the system. So I maintain that.

We're not going to ever quite agree on taxes. We know that, and I appreciate that. But I do think that you would agree that we should not lower taxes of any kind at the expense of programs, and that continues to be my point. Would I like to remove the health premium? Would I like to lower taxes? Yes. But given the choice of funding health this year and advanced education, which would be pretty near exactly the amount of the health premium reduction, I couldn't make that choice in this budget time. Certainly we intend to continue to lower taxes in any way we can over the next while. B.C. and Alberta are the only ones that have health premiums, but I live very close to Saskatchewan, and they have a personal sales tax, which they consider goes to health and education. At least that's the way it used to be. I don't get over there much now, as much as I used to. Their personal tax was really dedicated to paying the costs of some of those important programs. So you can use words and semantics; the fact is that every province in Canada has services that they need to provide to their citizens, and we all, in each province, search for the best way to provide those services to our citizens. We have chosen this way.

I don't think anybody can argue that lowering taxes in Alberta hasn't paid dividends. The growth is substantial, the confidence in companies. We want companies to come here and do business. We want them to be profitable so they can pay their employees and invest further in our province. I said that $7 billion – I said Albertans and Alberta companies because the $7 billion I referenced, we all get the benefit from that. It's not just simply companies.

So I think, as I say, we've agreed that we're not going to philosophically or ideologically or in almost any other way come to a total agreement on tax policy. But I appreciate being challenged on ours. Every time you choose to do that, you make me think, and that's what it's really all about.

Securities. National standards. That is the aim. All of the provinces in Canada support the passport system, and the passport system is having national standards. It still allows you to do your regulation in your own province, but if a company anywhere wants to invest, they will know what the standards are. They would be consistent across Canada. The only province that does not agree with the passport system to date is Ontario. I'm not sure what they really want at this time. They haven't completely filled me in on that. So the passport system is, we think, a good system.

I have had the opportunity to talk to investment companies, banks, and if they start out saying, "we'd like a national system," and you ask them about a passport system being implemented successfully – would it be as good? – they generally agree that that would work. What they want is national standards, and they want national standards adhered to. I'm quite relieved that you don't want to just turn it all over to the federal government.

With that, I'll give you some more detail on some of that, and I'll let somebody else have a chance.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner has been . . .

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much . . .

The Acting Chair: It's Cardston-Taber-Warner, hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: I won't be long enough, probably, to take up all the time.

I appreciate the opportunity, Madam Chair. There are a few things that I would appreciate to address. It seems like we're going over some things many times, and we probably will continue to do that because we all have diversity of thought here.

I want to start, though, by reading from page 238: "review policies to ensure a fair and competitive tax environment in Alberta." I'm very pleased with the steps that we have taken so far and the targeted tax reductions that have taken place, but I must say that I am concerned that we're not continuing to be as competitive as possible. In any competition when one sits on his laurels, it isn't too long before someone passes us and we realize that we've lost the advantage that we've had.

So I would urge this government to continue looking at being as competitive as possible in our tax regime and not just saying that we are the best. If we can do better – and I believe that we really can – I would like to see those great strides being taken, including the reduction on corporate tax. I think that it has been proven throughout the world that whenever countries reduce their corporate tax, it is to the benefit of the citizens there because corporations are in the business of making profits, and if their taxes go up, so does the expense to the people. So I'd urge the government to fast-track to the 8 per cent as I believe New Brunswick is leading us now in that area in attracting business to that province.

I just want to touch base on the auto insurance for a minute. We seem to be batting this back and forth. The government this week announced that they're going to have a mandatory 6 per cent rollback. I don't see any reason why in that 6 per cent rollback – the minister has mentioned many times that if they took the 3 per cent off, how would they ensure the consumers would reap that benefit? I think it would have been just as easy for the minister to announce a 9 per cent rollback and tell those corporations that that 3 per cent was in the government, and we could have received that $171 million back to the people. If they can mandate 6 per cent, I think 9 per cent would have been just as easy to do, and it would have been a benefit for all Albertans.

I've really had to struggle, I guess, with the development of a new ministry to have Restructuring and Government Efficiency. It does not seem efficient to expand in order to look at trying to reduce that, and the money that's being spent there and the extra bureaucrats that are being hired and the wages and things there, I think that each ministry has within itself the ability to be efficient and should look at reducing that. It seems like it's almost a confession that we don't know how to analyze our own area and we're going to get someone else to. I think that we can be more efficient through having internal audits and looking at those areas.

This government continues to increase. My understanding is from the budget that we're looking at 1,000 new bureaucrats. I don't believe that they're necessary. I think this government should be looking very strongly at attrition and trying to reduce the size. We have the highest number of bureaucrats per capita anywhere, I believe, in North America now. I believe that's getting close to 150 to 1, and that's not something I want to be proud of and say that we're leading here in Alberta.

I guess an area I want to talk about a little bit is just with health care. One of the things that doesn't seem to have been brought up recently is this question on how many health care cards we have out. We just went through an enumeration recently. I thought this government would maybe be looking at that and tracking down, and perhaps they are, and if they could tell us that they are doing that, but it is a question on whether we have a lot of health cards out there. I've heard some very extreme numbers, as high as 80 being issued to one individual. Perhaps with our recent enumeration we could somehow be efficient and check that. We've made great strides with the Alberta driver's licence, and perhaps we could look at something to continue that security and do that with the health care system. If there is a lot of fraud going on there, let's identify it and make the health care really be working for all Albertans.

We've talked many times, and Albertans are always appreciative of the one-time spending that we have, whether it's in infrastructure or whatever area that it is. When we recognize a problem, and I think that Albertans are – well, they understand enough that if, in fact, we were to have a surplus, there would be nothing wrong with one-time tax cuts, even if it was only perhaps for one year. But I think history has shown us that when tax cuts are implemented, even though the cuts are taken there, revenue actually increases. That's been shown in many places in the world, and I would urge this government to take some leap of faith with that, whether that's in education property taxes to leave the money in the people's pockets, or I would really continue to urge on health care premiums, that we would see the increase in tax revenue even though we've reduced it. We would therefore be further and faster and more efficient than other areas in the world at what we're doing.

I've been disappointed again in that there seems to be very little to address the packing industry. This government understands and we see the benefit of those whether you want to say relief in tax royalties, in capital expenses in the oil and gas industry and exploration in minerals, and I really feel that it would be no burden to taxpayers. I realize that part of this is a major fight with Ottawa, and I feel that Alberta could lead much stronger debate with Ottawa in demanding some tax reform to spur business, especially in the cattle industry.

I mentioned on another occasion about during the drought period and how those ranchers were given a break in not having to immediately replace their inventory. Things like that would really help the cattle industry. I know many, many feedlots last year that went out and had to buy cattle because if they didn't, they were going to have to pay because of the reduction in inventory. I feel that this is a battle very worth taking to the feds and getting a concession there and perhaps even waking them up because they're naive to the problem. I would love to see that go forward.

It would be very nice to see concessions to capital money going into the packing industry. We talk about value-added products and how that helps our economy. You talk about the horse-racing industry earning $45 million. I'd like to see this government become innovative and see a way for the beef industry to earn $45 million by increasing capital expenses in packing plants or something else. Let's be innovative and give Albertans the opportunity to invest in some good business that really is for the benefit of all Albertans.

An Hon. Member: You can't race cattle.

Mr. Hinman: Oh, you've never chased one.

I want to talk a little bit about the heritage trust fund and perhaps what could be an Alberta opportunity. We know that history repeats itself. It wasn't that long ago, in the '80s, when we went through horrendous interest rate spikes. Something that alarms me to a great extent here in the province and throughout Canada now are the short, open-ended mortgages that people are faced with when buying their houses. The incentive is to go short-term, perhaps only one to three years, to renegotiate those terms. When I was young and working with my father, a 20-year mortgage, locked in, was standard in the industry, and they wouldn't even consider going shorter. That's not even accessible in our market today.

We have two banking institutions here in the province, the Alberta Treasury Branches and the credit unions. If we were to put the money from the heritage trust fund, perhaps like we've done in the past and felt it was to our detriment, where we locked in long-term loans out of province, if in fact that money was to go into our local banks with the mandate that it was to go to long-term mortgages for housing and locked in at 6 or 7 per cent, that would stop inflation, which we're sure to see around the corner. We don't know when. It would really help disperse that bubble that could come in the real estate industry. So I would be very pleased to see something for Albertans to be able to go in and lock in a 15- or 20-year mortgage at the ATB or credit unions here in the province.

I guess that the thing I want to go back to again is the federal government. If we fail to stand up for ourselves, we'll fall for anything. It seems like we're falling for the leadership of the federal government to spend, spend, spend and more and more programs. Our equalization payments are huge. It's no longer, I feel, equitable that this is simply a transfer of wealth from one area to another with no accountability to Alberta on where that money is going. I would like to see a strong Finance minister that would really go to the table . . .

The Acting Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but our time has expired on this. Pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 p.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoons, I must now put the following question after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Finance for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006.

Agreed to:

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$123,381,000
Nonbudgetary Disbursements	$69,651,000

The Acting Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would move that the committee now rise and report the Department of Finance and beg leave to sit again at another time.

[Motion carried]

[Ms Haley in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: I call on the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The Committee of Supply has under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, for the following department.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? Carried. So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's been a very, very interesting and thought-provoking afternoon with very much information exchanged on both sides of the House, all of which provided greater clarity for the emolument of all members, and because of that, I move that we now call it 5:30 and adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Monday, April 25.

[Motion carried; at 5:17 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The islands of Indonesia and landlocked Alberta have much in common, especially a healthy reciprocal trade, growing economies fuelled by energy, and a wish to further our relationship. It is my great privilege to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly representatives of Alberta's 14th largest trading partner. We have the consul general of Indonesia, Mr. Saptomo; the consul, Mr. Djundjungan; and vice-consul, Mr. Pringgau. The consul general is on his first official visit to our province. He was appointed just this January and has made Alberta one of his first stops. We welcome this opportunity to say in person that our thoughts are with the Indonesian people as they rebuild. I would now ask the three gentlemen from Indonesia to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What an honour it is today to introduce some amazing and enthusiastic students from my constituency of Sherwood Park. They are from Madonna school, and they are going to spend almost a week here at the Legislature learning about various parts of our government. Their group leaders, of course, are teacher Pat Rykes and education assistant Don Ireland. They have parent helpers Francine Jans, Lynnette Kaminski, and Annette Bunnin. Please join me in welcoming almost 40 in the delegation from Madonna: 32 wonderful students plus their five helpers.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 48 grade 10 students from Tofield school who are seated in the public gallery. They are accompanied today by teachers/group leaders Mr. Fred Yachimec, Mr. Rick Bobier, and Mrs. Anne Digout. As I say, they're from Tofield school visiting our Legislature today, and I would ask that everybody welcome them with a very warm, enthusiastic applause.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to inform the Assembly today that we have some RAP-ers in the House. No, it's not what you think. With us today are seven guests who play important roles in the apprenticeship and industry training system and, more specifically, in the registered apprenticeship program, or RAP, as it's commonly referred to.

The government has announced that the number of available RAP scholarships will increase significantly from 50 to 500. Mr. Speaker, this is outstanding news for the 1,200 high school students who are currently enrolled in RAP as it gives them an even greater opportunity to receive a scholarship that will help them continue their apprenticeship training after graduation. And it's great news for industry in Alberta, that is experiencing or expecting an increase in demand for skilled labour. I met with these guests earlier today to discuss the exciting announcement and was very impressed with their dedication to apprenticeship and industry training in Alberta.

With us today are two past recipients of a RAP scholarship, Scott McManus – I hope he's been able to join us – and Brad Olynyk. Scott is a second-year plumber and gas fitter second class apprentice, and Bradley has completed his apprenticeship and is now a certified journeyman welder. In talking with him earlier today, I learned that because of the amount of time that he was able to put in while still in high school, he achieved that status before or upon the age of 20, which is remarkable. We also have two current RAP students from Edmonton, Nicole Diogo and Jacob Pelletier. Nicole is a structural steel and plate fitter apprentice, and Jacob is a cook apprentice, both of them remarkable role models for students in their schools.

Also joining us today is Don Oborowsky, CEO and co-owner of Waiward Steel Fabricators. Don has been hiring and training apprentices for many years and is a great example of why Alberta's system is one of the best in the world. Also with us to celebrate this announcement is Deb Meraw from St. Joseph high school in Edmonton. Deb is the RAP co-ordinator, working very hard to promote the trades to young people and get them set up in the program.

We also have Rod Moore, board member of the Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board. The board played a key role in making these 450 new scholarships a reality, and they work continuously with industry and government to make our system better. And last but certainly not least, the Assistant Deputy Minister of Advanced Education responsible for apprenticeship and industry training, Shirley Dul. I'd ask that all guests rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly two constituents from my riding of Dunvegan-Central Peace. It's not very often that I get to introduce individuals from the Peace, so I look at it as a real privilege. The first is Mr. Walter Doll, reeve of the MD of Fairview, and the second individual is Mr. Robert Jorgensen, chief administrator for the same MD. They were here earlier meeting with the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Both are standing in the members' gallery, and I would ask that we extend the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like my hon. colleague across the table it is certainly my honour and the first time that I've had this opportunity to introduce someone from Lethbridge. It is a group of grades 7 and 8 students from the Gilbert Paterson community school. They're not only bright students, but they also are a band that has been here performing in Edmonton at the canto band concerts. They're accompanied by their teachers, Doug Scales and Tom Spackman. The parent chaperones are Wendy Funk, Evelyn Dreilich, Laurie Haig, and their bus driver is Franklin Kuehn. I would ask that they stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two very special guests today: Naomi Mackin, director, Old Strathcona Youth Co-op, and her colleague, Karen Leighton, an outreach worker. The Old Strathcona Youth Co-op is located in my constituency, and my constituency office had some modest role to play about seven years ago in the establishment of this very valuable agency, which provides services for youth in need. I would like to express my appreciation for the work of the co-op and ask Naomi and Karen to please rise to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to be able to introduce to you today my nephew Mr. Kevin Niddrie. Kevin is just finishing his co-op degree with AGLC as an auditor in the forensic audit department, and he's going to be employed in about a month's time with the accounting department of TransAlta. I would ask Kevin to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased and honoured this afternoon to have the opportunity to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a gentleman who is not only a very valued and experienced campaigner but a trusted adviser and certainly a true friend. Mr. Marion Semaniuk is his name, and he is seated in the public gallery. I would ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Securities Commission

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the same day the Minister of Finance stood in this Assembly and assured me and assured all of us that there wasn't going to be a witch hunt at the Alberta Securities Commission, going as far as to tell me that I should applaud the forensic computer audit, the first axe dropped on an ASC employee. I'm sorry, but I'm not going to applaud the firing of Alberta workers who stand up for what they believe is right. To the Minister of Finance: will this minister categorically deny that the firing of a senior official of the Securities Commission last week was a result of his coming forward with allegations of wrongdoing at the commission?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can neither deny nor confirm it because the persons who came forward came forward on the basis of anonymity. I do not know whether that person is one that came forward. Newspaper reports might suggest that, but I have absolutely no knowledge of that person or the names or identities of any of the other persons who came forward.

I will stand by what I said last week, and that is that no person who came forward will be penalized for coming forward with concerns. I cannot say that no person will be terminated or rebuked for acts that were unprofessional or perhaps illegal.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Will this minister explain to this Assembly and to all employees of the Securities Commission what she will be doing to finally protect the rights of employees who followed her instructions to come forward with information about wrongdoing at the Securities Commission?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I stand by my last statement: no employee will be terminated or rebuked for coming forward to raise concerns. However, I cannot guarantee that there will be no terminations or rebukes of employees who may have acted in an improper manner.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, given that coming forward with the information she asks may put an employee's job in jeopardy from the chairman and the executive director, how in the world is she standing back to let this whole thing play out?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, one, I don't cast aspersions on people on the basis of rumour. I don't stand anywhere and besmirch a person's good name without a strong foundation for doing that. That would be substantiated information or evidence. The Leader of the Opposition may feel comfortable in that role. I do not.

The Speaker: The second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a significant sector of Alberta's economy and business future is at stake here and at stake in the proper running of the Securities Commission, has the Minister of Finance made any inquiries at all into the dismissal last week of a senior official of the Securities Commission? Has she looked into it at all?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have had a conversation with persons at the commission. I have been assured that the matter was handled not on the basis of any allegations coming forward because, frankly, the persons who would have brought this action forward don't know the identities of the persons who brought the complaints forward. I don't know them. They don't know them. I have researched the documents entirely, and there is not one identifier in those documents that I can find that gives the identity of any of the complainants.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why, given all the allegations of enforcement and human resource problems at the Securities Commission, did this minister allow the people at the centre of the controversy, the chairman and the executive director, to be involved in the KPMG e-mail witch hunt?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is making an assumption that, in fact, these people are involved. Maybe he would like to show me his evidence that that is the case because what I have from the part-time commissioners does not indicate that in any way.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why – why? – is this minister opposed to a full forensic audit of the Securities Commission, including an investigation of files where enforcement irregularities are alleged?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have been the one in this House who has supported the investigation. There is a forensic audit going on now. That's the subject of the discussion here today. So if the Leader of the Opposition picks his type of audit, it's okay, but if the commission moves forward with an audit, it is not okay.

Mr. Speaker, I have said consistently that the Alberta Securities Commission is very important to the investment community, the business community in this province. We do need to know if there are improprieties there. We have been assured that the enforcement and regulatory activities are being handled properly, even-handedly. We have been informed that there are human resource issues there. The commissioners have engaged an external company to assist them in dealing with those. I think that to this point that is what we would want to see happen.

The Speaker: The third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Utilities Consumer Advocate

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On February 23 of this year the Utilities Consumer Advocate released a report indicating that the main thrust of the Department of Energy is the promotion of retail competition without consideration for consumer interests. As is typical practice of this Tory government, any information critical of this government is kept hidden from the public and government critics. My question is to the Minister of Government Services. Will the minister finally make public this report by the Utilities Consumer Advocate of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's pretty important to point out to the member how unfortunate it is that the Liberal researchers don't do their work. The fact is that what they are commenting on and what was in the paper is simply a report by an advisory committee, and it's in response to a paper that was put out for discussion purposes – discussion purposes – by the Department of Energy. I really take offence when it sounds like the advisory committee is attacking the Department of Energy because that is not true. The fact is that it's a response. The paper that somehow was leaked is a draft. It is not the final paper.

Mr. Elsalhy: To the same minister: given that this government seems very eager to win the approval of the energy industry and not that of the Alberta public, does the minister have or plan to obtain approval figures from the general public on how electricity deregulation was forced upon all of us?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I think it's really important to point out that there have been a lot of gains made since there was restructuring of the electrical industry. As a matter of fact, the ability to generate electricity has increased dramatically over that short period of time. As far as gathering information to see what the public wants, there's the advisory committee. They've been holding some hearings around the province, and the discussion paper by the Department of Energy is out. They're getting feedback from all the consumers, from the generators, from the transmitters, and from all the people that are involved in the electrical industry.

Mr. Elsalhy: To the same minister: given that the Utilities Consumer Advocate's expenses are fully recovered from utility industry funding, when will the minister fully fund and empower the Utilities Consumer Advocate so that he can operate at arm's length from the government and truly help and advocate for the helpless consumers of this province?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I think that's just a horrendous leap to ever suggest that because there's funding coming from the Balancing Pool to pay for the work of the advocate that, in fact, the advocate is in some way unable to do his or her work. The fact is that the advocate is there to help protect the consumer. As a matter of fact, the advocate, through the intervention and hearings with other stakeholders, has in fact taken some $85 million and passed it back to the consumer, rates that would have been increased by the generators. So to ever suggest for one minute that the advocate is not doing their work is absolutely wrong.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government has been consistently wrong in its claim that competition would lead to lower electricity rates when, in fact, the so-called retail electricity contracts are a consumer rip-off that have institutionalized higher electricity rates for residential, farm, and small business customers. Now it seems that government proposals would extend this to all consumers. When the utilities advisory committee issues a report about utility customers getting ripped off by the Tory deregulation scheme, the government suppresses the report. My question is to the Minister of Government Services. Why is the government hiding a report which has been done for the Utilities Consumer Advocate advisory council that has concluded that all future options for residential electricity sales will penalize bill payers and benefit the electricity companies?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is an even worse stretch than the first line of questioning because the fact is that the report that the gentleman is referring to was a draft report and it was in response to questions that were asked through a discussion paper from the Department of Energy. Through the fullness of time the final report from the committee will be out. It'll become part of the discussion as it relates to the discussion paper put out by the Department of Energy, and in the fullness of time they will see the report. In fact, I hope that they will feel a bit ashamed for the comments that they're making today because that is not a final report.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's the government that should feel ashamed for hiding this report.

Will the minister please tell the house why, in fact, the government is stamping "draft" on this report? Is it so that you can simply change the conclusions before the public sees it?

Mr. Lund: That's so interesting, Mr. Speaker, because when that draft report came through, the government didn't put "draft" on it. That was a report that came from the committee, and it's a draft because they're still working on it. They're still holding public meetings, and there's one coming up at Bonnyville – I believe it's on May 12 – and I would encourage people in that area or I would encourage the hon. member to go out and see what happens at that meeting.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Is the government simply trying to hide bad news about its failed electricity deregulation scheme and keep such information out of the hands of Albertans, or will the minister table that report immediately?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, we're not hiding anything. Draft reports are just draft reports. The fact is that there's been in excess of 3,000 megawatts of power generation that has happened since the restructuring of the industry. Someday if the member cares to have a 101 on electricity and how the whole system works, I'd only be too happy to provide it to the member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The two previous questions kind of lead up to my question except that I'll be looking for some facts and asking a sensible question. In 2003-2004 I sat on the advisory committee that recommended that we have a Utilities Consumer Advocate made up of everyday Albertans, and you know, the government responded, and we got that body that's getting all this criticism right now. I'd like the Minister of Government Services to tell me and all Albertans: who are the members that sit on this committee?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, we're extremely fortunate to have 10 people that are very clear-thinking average Albertans. As a matter of fact, the composition is made up of three farmers, three people that are just residents, and then four people who are business/residents. So we have a broad range of people that are in the category of under 250,000 kilowatt hours per year, and those are the ones that are currently under the regulated rate option. Certainly, I think this advisory committee does an excellent job of representing those people.

Mr. VanderBurg: Again, Mr. Speaker, given that these advisory members don't get their information out of the newspaper, I'd like to know: other than Bonnyville where do these members travel to, and where do they get their information from?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, they've held three other meetings: one in Hinton, one in Vauxhall, and I'm sorry, but it slips my mind where the other one was held. What I've asked them to do is to make sure that they hold one or two hearings in all of the service areas where we have the different generators and the different systems and operations so that they'll get a broad cross-section from all corners of the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Horse-racing Industry

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and ask some real questions now. Last week in the Legislature it was established that the government leaves behind 66.6 per cent of the revenue from gambling machines at racetracks that goes to Horse Racing Alberta and to the facilities that host the gambling machines. My question is for the Minister of Gaming. Can the minister tell us exactly what percentage of those funds go to Horse Racing Alberta and what percentage goes to the facility operators?

Mr. Graydon: Well, Mr. Speaker, another week, another day, and another attack on the horse-racing industry, one of our proud agricultural industries in the province, but I am pleased to answer his question. As noted, 33 per cent goes to the Alberta lottery fund, 15 per cent goes to the facility, whether that be Northlands, Stampede Park, or whatever, and the balance, if he cares to do the math, would go to Horse Racing Alberta.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister give us some actual dollar figures, rather than just percentages, based on last year's numbers?

Mr. Graydon: Well, we have a number in the budget, but it's not a firm number because it's based on revenue generated. So the number in the budget, which they bring up daily, is $45 million, I believe, to Horse Racing Alberta. That is not a firm number. It could be much less than that if the activity is less at the race tracks.

Mr. Tougas: Well, in that Edmonton Northlands and Stampede Park are in line to receive more than $10 million each from the lottery fund on top of their take from the gambling machines, is this not a case of double-dipping into the lottery jackpot?

Mr. Graydon: Well, both Northlands and Stampede Park, again, while their primary focus, I would say, is agricultural activities, they certainly provide a broad range of activities. There are many user groups there every single day of the year at those two facilities providing entertainment, education to groups all the way from 4-H clubs, youth groups, to lots of seniors' groups. They're very well-used facilities, and they deserve the support of this government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Funding for Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Health care remains a very important topic to all Albertans, and in our recent budget a very large increase was devoted to health care. However, it also showed a difference in how the money is allocated to the different regions in Alberta. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Could she explain or help us to understand how the regions that received a 4.2 per cent increase, as opposed to a region like Calgary that got a 12 per cent increase, can be expected to deliver the same services or continue operating in the same system?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, one of the other facts that I should point out is that this year with the allocation to the health authorities, on average East Central is funded on a per capita rate at $1,652 per person, which is higher than the provincial average of $1,276. The population-based formula is adjusted for age, for income, and for the capacity each region has. Simply put, in the smaller regions in the outlying areas there is not the capacity, because there's not the population, to deliver the same kinds of services.

So, Mr. Speaker, health care has been organized so that province-wide services are delivered largely in two centres, like the Calgary health authority and Capital health, but we do try to pay attention to the innovative projects from various regions who come forward with niche markets, which they can use to support their own health care.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question. The import/export dollars that the regions use are taken from the budgets of the smaller regional health authorities, and we are very appreciative of the services we get in the larger regions. My question is to the minister. What innovation or what policies is she bringing forward that might allow these regions to deliver the services in their areas?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. The chair for East Central has discussed with me a number of the initiatives, including working to make sure that MRI services can be available, working to make sure that there's a plan, if necessary, to provide mobilized services, and to recognize some of the other kinds of supports we can offer the community. In this year's budget the capital for East Central will include a 48-bed long-term care facility in Vermilion, 2 and a half million dollars in Vegreville for their care centre.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member makes a very good point, and that is that we have to continually examine the capacity of the import/export formula to deliver the services and work to unleash innovation in the regions so that where they can increase their performance, it will be done.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Arts Funding

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a fact of life in Alberta that the funding for organizations through the Alberta Foundation for the Arts is simply not enough. Alberta is floundering behind other provinces when it comes to funding for the arts and for the book publishers. This is a sad reality given our vast resources. My questions are to the Minister of Community Development. Given that per capita cultural expenditures by Alberta are the second lowest in Canada, can the minister inform us if there are any plans to address this funding inequity and strengthen the arts in Alberta?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the arts are a very, very important part of the culture and the fabric of the province of Alberta. The reality is that they are a very important part of an economic driver in this province. Albertans themselves are among the best attenders of theatrical performances, cultural festivals, and other such elements of the arts life of the province of Alberta. They're very supportive. They're very strong supporters of the arts. People are voting with their feet, and they're going to these things in record numbers.

So to suggest that we're not doing enough for the arts I think is wrong. We have done much for the arts that has allowed it to flourish over the last 20 years. As an example, in 1982 there was just a handful of cultural festivals in the province of Alberta. Now, some 20 years later, there are over 500. Mr. Speaker, we can always do more for the arts, and clearly the arts community themselves would argue in favour of greater support. I can say in answer to the question that we have done much to work with Community Development through the budget process to do much for certain elements of the department like . . .

The Speaker: Thank you. We'll just go on to the next question.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister: can the minister tell us why the funding for the book publishing industry in Alberta lags behind that in other provinces in Canada?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, as I was concluding my first answer, I'd like to say that what we have done in the area of Community Development's budget has been dramatic in terms of increases in the budget for certain elements of the department.

To have 10 priorities is to have none at all, and in this department we have focused, in particular, in this budget cycle on our parks. Our parks are like embassies. They're like signatures of the quality of life in the province of Alberta. I don't discount the importance of the arts and the role that it plays in the quality of life in the province of Alberta, but we have quadrupled our funding for parks. This was a very important area, the highest priority within the Department of Community Development.

Mr. Agnihotri: Again to the same minister: couldn't this government use some of the $45 million given to horse racing to support book publishers and struggling Alberta artists?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I think clearly this question falls within the difficulty of a non sequitur. It had nothing to do with the original question and, furthermore, contrary to the rules of this House, calls for an opinion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Class Sizes

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. About 18 months ago the Alberta Commission on Learning released its report regarding basic education in Alberta. One of these recommendations covered class size. Last September, in 2004, approximately 1,250 new teachers were hired to reduce class size. In my constituency I've certainly seen that in the kindergarten through grade 3 sizes. My questions are for the minister of learning. In this year are we going to see more teachers hired, and would we see those class sizes reduced, say, in grades 4, 5, 6, maybe up through junior high?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the class size reduction initiative has been one of the most successful programs ever in the former ministry of learning and even today in the Ministry of Education. The reason is because the school boards have been given the flexibility to employ those dollars – in this year's budget alone it's about $110 million – in whatever way they wish.

Flexibility is the key to the success of this particular program. We have neither placed specific directions nor any restrictions on it other than to endorse what the Learning Commission had said, and that was to please look at the K to 3 system first, and if you're okay at that level go to the next, then go to the next. School boards have the entire flexibility of working with their own superintendents and school principals to make those kinds of decisions, and when they're made, school boards do report back to us annually. So we have a pretty good handle on it. We're pretty comfortable with the success and the future direction of the small class size reduction initiatives.

Mrs. Ady: To the same minister: in some of the schools in my constituency those buildings are just full, so when it comes to trying to meet class-size targets, as well, must students bus out to other schools within the jurisdiction when they face challenges in classroom space in order to meet these class-size guidelines?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that the school boards have to bus students out, but certainly the option is there should they wish to do that. Nonetheless, we did recognize that there was a bit of a difficulty in this area. So in the current budget I was successful with the support of all my government colleagues in adding about $6 million, over and above the $110 million I just recognized earlier, as a one-time initiative to address specific problems, should there be any, with respect to things like transportation services, with respect to other things that help out our school boards.

So the short answer: no, we're not compelling anyone to do that, but they do have the option to do that if they wish. Let's remember that the small classroom size initiative is a three-year program. It was five. We've sped it up down to three, and it's been very well received out there.

Mrs. Ady: My final supplemental is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. What is this minister doing in order to help schools that are squeezed for space but need to meet classroom size targets?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Included in this budget, which will be debated later this week, are 45 new schools as well as 109 new school projects of major renovations. So there's a lot of space going into the system. We are also prepared, though, to add portables because one of the issues is, quite simply, that in many locations the school space is not necessarily where the students are. So we are adding a considerable amount of portables. We hope that we will be able to accommodate it this year. If not this year, certainly next year the accommodation will be there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Water Strategy

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has repeatedly stated that the protection and sustainability of Alberta's water resources are a high priority. The hon. Minister of Environment reinforced his commitment last week at the environment conference. However, the recent budget has left Albertans wondering if it's all talk with no capacity to deliver. My first question to the Minister of Environment: given the grossly inadequate budget for the Water for Life strategy, can the minister inform all Albertans what concrete actions he's prepared to take in achieving this goal?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member and other members of this Assembly who attended the first environmental conference of its kind in Canada right here in our province last week. I want to thank the hon. member for attending, like my other colleagues.

Here are some concrete actions that we are taking in the Ministry of Environment. A comprehensive water treatment facility review, of course, across the province's water facilities is taking place as we speak. We have over 500 water treatment facilities in our province. Over the next two months these will be reporting back to me as the Minister of Environment. It's a good example that when we released our Water for Life strategy, that was one of the first identified priorities that we wanted to undertake.

Also, I wanted to say that our water councils, of course, are in place, which is so important, another part of our Water for Life strategy unmatched anywhere in North America.

Finally, if I could give you one more concrete example, the water use stakeholder group reported and recommended phasing out water use for oil field injection. Of course, this is under way as we speak. Again, it's part of our Water for Life strategy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a full inventory of Alberta's water resources is essential to a long-term water conservation plan, is the minister prepared to allocate the necessary resources to gain an accurate measure and report on the sustainability of Alberta's surface and groundwater supplies?

Mr. Boutilier: Well, Mr. Speaker, a very good point and a good question. First and foremost, the short answer is absolutely yes. We intend to allocate the necessary resources in fulfilling our mandate that has been established in Water for Life.

If I could, though, one of the key points is monitoring, which we are doing. Last Friday, in actual fact – and members may not be aware – the North Saskatchewan Watershed Alliance issued their first report. Of course, these water councils are so important because they're right on the ground level in terms of what's taking place in their communities. Identified were some weaknesses in terms of agricultural practices that we need to improve, which we're committed to. Also, from a municipal waste-water perspective we need to look and see how we can conserve our water even more so because it truly is our blue gold of this province.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that the allocation for Stettler county referred to in Bill 11 far exceeds what the population level requires, can the minister explain what rationale was used to allocate nearly 2,500 cubic decametres of drinking water, which is twice what the usual population would consume?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you, and I want to thank the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, who, of course, was carrying Bill 11. I want to say this. I can assure all members of this Assembly that in a growing province such as ours, in communities such as the hon. member has made reference to – this is treated water, and this treated water supplies water for areas like Donalda, Big Valley, and other areas. That is so important in the Stettler area because when they turn on their tap, they require drinking water. So what we've tried to do in that bill is deal with not only the pressures of today in a growing economy and the conservation principles that are so important but also deal with the future growth that's taking place, so we've planned for over the next 20 years, to the hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Charter Air Travel

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Conservative cabinet ministers, MLAs, political aides are corporate high flyers with little or no regard for what their extravagance is costing the taxpaying public. The information tabled Thursday on chartered jets and airplanes is frankly shocking: 258 air charters in a little more than a three-year period, costing taxpayers over $1 million. All aboard Air Tory. My question to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: how can the government justify chartering aircraft on no fewer than 258 separate occasions when the government has its own fleet of four airplanes and these planes fly empty over 300 times a year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The majority of times that aircraft are chartered is when one of our own aircraft is down. As the hon. members on the government side certainly know, our King Air 350 has now been down for about eight or nine weeks. The reason we have four planes is because we need these planes, and that's consequently what we're looking at. These charters are very important and were subsequently followed through because the people on this side, the people in the government of Alberta, have to get around to see Alberta.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the aircraft must be down a lot.

The question I have to ask this minister is: how can the government justify, at the cost of several thousand dollars a trip, chartering aircraft to ferry cabinet ministers and political aides to places like Vegreville, that are within an hour's driving distance of Edmonton, especially when these same ministers get expensive cars and SUVs courtesy of the taxpayer?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I cannot comment on each individual flight. For example, the flight to Vegreville may well have continued on to Calgary or other parts of the province, so I think that's a very unfair question. Our members certainly on this side utilize those planes in the best possible fashion, and it would be very difficult for me to comment on each individual circumstance.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, does not the minister see that the taxpayers would be offended by this gross waste of public money no matter what he says about tootling all over the province?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, does the hon. member not see that it's very important for our ministers to get out around the province and to go all over the province and do our job?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Agricultural Assistance

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A couple of weeks ago the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development announced a reduction in the producers' share of the spring price endorsement premium, but many producers in my constituency are wondering why, given the low commodity prices and high input costs, they should even bother putting seed in the ground this year let alone buy crop insurance. My question is for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Why should producers buy into this program?

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member brings up a very good point and a good question. The spring price endorsement and the risk insurance coverage are two production insurance options that were implemented to deal with exactly the scenario of low commodity prices and higher input costs. If commodity prices were to continue to drop, that would trigger a payment. We are working hard to respond to market conditions by giving producers a break on this risk management tool and reducing the producer's share, or portion, of the premium from 50 to 30 per cent and increasing the benefits under the risk insurance coverage from 50 to 70 per cent.

Our goal is to make it more attractive for the producers to participate in the programs because we want them to have a backup, and we want them to have something that they can have confidence that if crop prices do drop, they will have something. We have asked the federal government, Mr. Speaker, on a number of occasions to help with the other premiums and the other insurance. To date we've not heard anything back.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental is for the same minister. Do producers have some time to consider their risk management options?

Mr. Horner: Well, I believe that the hon. member is referring to the deadlines, Mr. Speaker. I didn't quite hear the whole question. They do have to move quickly because the deadline for the options to be undertaken is April 30, which is this Saturday. I would certainly encourage producers to drop by their AFSC office or to call the AFSC call centre to see if this option truly does fit for their farm and to see what kind of benefit they may be able to get out of it in the event of lower commodity prices.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Apprenticeship Training

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Later this week we will mark the International Day of Mourning for workers killed on the job. At the same time, with industry whispering in its ear, this government is considering lowering even further educational and safety standards in the apprenticeship training system. The proposed reductions will almost certainly result in more workplace injuries. My question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. Can the minister explain how moving from three journeymen for every apprentice to one journeyman for every apprentice, in effect tripling on-the-job class size, will support maintaining or improving the quality of training for Alberta's apprentices?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unlike the hon. member opposite I don't prejudge the experts that we get to review these issues, to have discussions with industry on all sides, both employers and employees, and to make recommendation. The hon. member would know, if he's had anything to do with this discussion at all, that the matter is currently before the Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board and that they do a thorough analysis of these issues and talk to all the stakeholders before they bring forward recommendations. He will also know that in the historical context many other trades have moved ratios from more than 1 to 1 to 1 to 1 without a significant disaster or any disaster at all, as the hon. member pretends. In fact, the whole premise to his question is absurd, that anybody would change ratios with the knowledge that it was going to affect safety on the job.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Advanced Education then: given that the provincial apprenticeship committee voted unanimously to retain the current 3 to 1 ratio, if the minister can get past the absurdity of my previous question, would he support worker safety and training standards by committing today to retaining that ratio?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the toughest part of that question is indeed getting past the absurdity of his first one. However, as I said in my answer to the first question, I do not and this government does not prejudge the issues that we ask experts and people involved in the business to give advice on. It's before the training board. I will look forward to the training board's report before I make any determination or act on any recommendation. I don't know what their recommendation will be, and neither does the hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment then: given that a disproportionate number of workplace injuries occur during the first year on the job and two workers die every week in this province, why is the minister considering changes that will almost certainly result in more workplace accidents and fatalities?

Mr. Cardinal: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course we wouldn't encourage more fatalities. We are reviewing the Employment Standards Code now, and the things we do presently are the hours of work, overtime, vacation, general holidays, maternity and parental leave, and termination of employment.

In addition to that, the other thing we're looking at very closely is that a lot of the accidents that happen are not on the work site. Sometimes there is a misunderstanding and people think that because there's an accident, it's on the work site. Mr. Speaker, a high percentage of the accidents happen on the road to work and back home, and we are looking at that very closely to try and define and target where the problem is.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Minimum Wage Rate

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment. In February 2005 the minister announced that Alberta's minimum wage would be raised to $7 an hour. This is good news for low-income, hardworking Albertans. Today the minister announced that this increase would be introduced all at once in contrast to the idea of a staggered increase. So reflecting the inquiries from business owners in my constituency, I would like to know why the minister has decided to increase the minimum wage all at once?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, that's the best question I've had in this House so far. First of all, I'd like to advise the Assembly and the member that all Albertans were given an opportunity to participate as to how the minimum wage of $7 an hour would be implemented and when. Nearly 2,000 inquiries came in with recommendations, and 40 per cent of the 2,000 were employers. About 30 per cent felt that it was not necessary to put in a phased-in program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Some Canadian provinces such as Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia have set different categories of minimum wages such as entry level or workers receiving gratuities. Will the minister consider a similar approach for Alberta?

Mr. Cardinal: Another good question, Mr. Speaker. No, absolutely not. The government abolished the tiered minimum wage back in 1998, and it seems to work very well. Alberta's minimum wage rate of $7 an hour will apply to all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you. The last question is to the same minister. What will you do to ensure that employees are not laid off and employers not forced out of business because of the increase in payrolls?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. Of course, there will be some additional costs to employers. That is why we've given four months for an employer to make the necessary adjustments. I believe the new rate is also competitive with other jurisdictions in Canada. You know, the average wage in Alberta right now is about $18.50, and the average wage for a youth is over $11.50.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Health Care Staffing

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Even though new graduates will soon be entering the workforce, we still haven't addressed the serious shortage that resulted from the slashing of jobs across the health sector during the 1990s. Almost a decade has passed, and we have yet to recover. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given all of the resources available to the government, why has it done such a poor job of anticipating future staffing needs?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would think there's at least one area that should be looked at very favourably, and that is that this past year we graduated more registered nurses than ever before. We exceeded a thousand. We are working with the learning institutions, with the universities and colleges, and with the professional associations themselves. In fact, Mr. Speaker, contrary to the hon. member's opinion, in Alberta we are head and shoulders ahead of many other jurisdictions in Canada.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: why doesn't the minister adopt the Alberta Liberal opposition's recommendations on long-term and stable health workforce planning?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I know that I should be faulted for saying this, but I've never read the Alberta Liberals' position.

Ms Blakeman: You would learn a lot.

Again to the same minister: given that the long-term care sector has asked to increase the hours per patient per day from 3.1 to 3.6, why did the government decide on an increase to only 3.4 hours of care per day?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm delighted that the hon. member opposite has asked me about staffing for long-term care because we are working with the regions on this. We are talking about it from several vantage points. In one instance you will have a facility that has patients with a significant degree of acuity – in other words, they need additional staffing – and our regions, with their standards and with the work with private, not-for-profit, and publicly funded facilities, work with that facility to make sure that the care plans in those facilities for the people that are involved are appropriately staffed to the acuity required for that patient.

I see that you're not anxious to hear the rest of my response, but . . .

The Speaker: Hon. minister, that's totally inappropriate. We have a guideline of certain sections, and there's going to be no filibustering in the answer period as well as the question period.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Access to Postsecondary Education

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Northern Alberta is experiencing serious shortages of trained tradespeople and professionals in many areas. While there are a number of colleges in the region, the number of programs that are available are limited, and the cost of attending postsecondary training is a financial barrier that keeps many students from pursuing an education. My first question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. What plans does the minister have to increase the number of educational opportunities or options available to students being educated close to home?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government certainly recognizes that Albertans in rural and remote areas of the province do face greater challenges in obtaining postsecondary education, and I can speak from experience on that, having travelled some 500 miles from home to go to university. That's why when I talk about access and when we talk about access, it means more than just opening more classrooms in universities. It means improving access for Albertans who don't live close to a postsecondary institution.

There are several programs in place to help Albertans access postsecondary learning opportunities close to home. Athabasca University, for example, has distance education courses in many degree programs as well as a group of colleges and technical institutes working together under the umbrella of eCampusAlberta, developing even more courses for online delivery. We've recently announced that we'll allocate $90 million to the access growth fund to achieve the target of adding 15,000 postsecondary spaces over the next three years. We're committed to making sure that there's a place for every Albertan who wants to advance their education, whether that's in a physical seat or a virtual seat, a rural seat or an urban seat. We support the efforts of postsecondary institutions in rural areas to work with regional industries to meet labour market needs and to work within the regional economy.

So, Mr. Speaker, there's quite a number of programs and opportunities to expand the opportunity for education in the rural areas.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, my first supplemental is to the same minister. He did mention industry. Could I ask the minister: in which way is he working with the industry and other employers to make sure that the number of students required fills the needs of Albertans and, in particular, northern Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are listening to industry, we're listening to people involved in postsecondary institutions, and indeed we're listening to students and to parents and to communities. Based on what we've heard, we've agreed to boost postsecondary funding significantly. As I've mentioned, we have targeted some of that funding to the high-demand areas. We're encouraging and supporting institutions to develop and deliver quality learning experiences. For example, we've provided $1.5 million to Athabasca University to accelerate their program development and $1.2 million to eCampusAlberta.

At the other end of the spectrum we have our community learning centres, and the budgets for the community learning centres are going up as well so that they can assess what's needed in their neighbourhood, what's needed in their community, and make sure that programs are brought in or access to the programs are made available. So it's a wide spectrum. In addition, there are things like Alberta-North, a consortium of six northern colleges and Athabasca University, to support the delivery of learning opportunities in more than 50 communities.

Mr. Speaker, there's a wealth of opportunities we're working on, and we're looking for more ideas from Albertans to help make that happen.

The Speaker: The hon. member I'm sure has another question.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: more specifically, how does the minister plan to address the acute shortage of skilled tradespeople in the north, that is adversely affecting the commercial and residential development?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just today we announced the increase in the RAP scholarships, and we had the RAP scholarship winners in the gallery this afternoon. Five hundred registered apprenticeship program scholarships issued this year as compared to 50 last year, a significant increase. Over a thousand apprenticeships and technical training classes; 16 per cent of the currently scheduled classes will be offered north of Edmonton.

Establishing the Alberta aboriginal apprenticeship project, which helps aboriginal people enter and complete apprenticeship programs. The youth apprenticeship program, which is a pilot in northern Alberta, helps students in grades 7 to 12 explore career options. Promoting the registered apprenticeship program, which allows people to start their apprenticeship training while still in high school. Increasing access to training in the trades by recognizing prior learning and work experience.

An Hon. Member: Four more years.

Mr. Hancock: I'm glad that he would want four more years.

As the Minister of Education would want me to say, it's a great question and a great program in Education Week, that we're sponsoring more apprenticeships and starting right in grade 7 and moving up. Skills in Alberta will be having a competition of Olympic-style proportions to demonstrate the value.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the chair is aware that there is a full moon out.

Thirty seconds from now I'll call upon the first of half a dozen members to participate.

Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, this historical vignette of the day may be of particular interest to those interested in water in the province of Alberta.

On this day in 1914 CPR President Thomas Shaughnessy formally opened the Bassano Dam on the Bow River, a project to provide water for the eastern irrigation district, an area over 600,000 hectares. The earthen dam has a 107-metre wide base and extends over 2,150 metres beyond the spillway, which can handle a flow of 3,000 cubic metres of water through the sluice gates.

Almost 300,000 cubic metres of earth were moved to build the dam, which in 1914 was referred to by the Scientific American magazine as "America's greatest irrigation project."

Lois Hole Centennial Provincial Park

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Earth Day 2005 the Alberta government announced our province's newest provincial park, the Lois Hole centennial provincial park. This park honours a remarkable woman's love for the land and her commitment to our children and their future. It also honours our earth and Alberta's centennial.

Mr. Speaker, the park lies next to Edmonton and the Hole family's hometown of St. Albert, and it includes the former Big Lake natural area. The site is globally recognized as an important bird area for its nesting and migrating waterfowl and shorebirds, attracting bird watchers from around the world. For 144,000 school children in the area it is an unequalled outdoor classroom. As a provincial park it will enjoy a high level of protection and recognition.

Our former Lieutenant Governor once said, "If we hope to preserve our way of life," we need to "rediscover our respect for the land, the water, and the entire natural world." Mr. Speaker, the Lois Hole centennial park is a place of life where we remember a great Albertan who celebrated life and who wanted to celebrate Alberta's centennial.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ian Seright

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize a true friend to the residents of east Calgary and to the people of Alberta. Mr. Samuel Ian Seright passed away peacefully last Wednesday, April 20, in Calgary.

As a long-time resident of Calgary-East he gained the title of the unofficial mayor of Forest Lawn. Ian proudly served as our dedicated and enthusiastic centennial ambassador and had often proudly remarked that he looked forward to adding the title of Premier to his lengthy contributions to this great province.

Ian was married to Dorothy for nearly 50 years before her passing. He was both a dedicated father and a loving grandfather. The love and dedication that he demonstrated towards his family was much like that which he dedicated to our province: unparalleled and truly genuine. His uncanny ability to remember the slightest details about all of the people whose lives he touched will forever remain in the minds of those who knew him. His ability to remember meetings, birthdays, anniversaries, and other important events was what made Ian a true friend to those who knew him.

Following his retirement from the city of Calgary, Mr. Speaker, Ian continued to celebrate all aspects of life: family, friends, politics, religion, and community service. His love for the residents and community of Forest Lawn and the people of Alberta were beyond measure. A sympathetic and sensitive person, popular with the people of Calgary-East and the greater Forest Lawn community, cheerful and enthusiastic in all his endeavors: that was the Ian that we all knew.

He was proud to be an Albertan, and today I am proud to speak of his contributions and his dedication to this province. I believe that if Ian were listening today, his warm smile would be evident, and he would want to reassure all of us that the world will go on as usual, that this tragic event is nothing out of the ordinary, and that, in fact, all is well. God bless you, Ian.

Colleagues, please help me recognize the contribution of this great Canadian.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

School Closures

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are 35 public schools in and around Edmonton which are eligible for closure according to enrolment or utilization criteria. These schools and the communities where they are located could be the next victims of the provincial government's school space utilization rate as defined by Alberta Infrastructure. There are over 6,700 children attending these schools.

The school closure process not only affects the communities of Wellington, north Edmonton, Terrace Heights, and Strathearn but communities across the city. The following public schools in Edmonton meet the school board's criteria for closure. I hope your school is not on this list: Balwin, Braemar, Duggan, Eastwood, Gold Bar, Grovenor, Hardisty, Horse Hill, John A. McDougall, King Edward, Malmo, McKee, Mill Creek, Queen Alexandra, Rio Terrace, Ritchie, Rutherford, Stratford, and Talmud Torah.

The only positive benefit that has occurred as a result of the Edmonton public school board's recent cluster study regarding school closure is the recognition for immediate changes to the entire process. Parents and communities feel that their issues and concerns are not being addressed. The closure process is proceeding too fast.

The province of Ontario has recently approved a policy on school closure that examines as mandatory considerations prior to closure the value of a school to the student, the community, the school system, and the local economy. Notice of a year must be given if a closure is to be considered. Moreover, a task force headed by a trustee with board membership is mandated to hold public hearings, solicit feedback, and gain community consensus, including consideration of the value of the school to the local community. A school can only be considered once in a five-year period for closure.

The frustration expressed by parents regarding Edmonton public's closure process sends a clear signal that we can and must do better. The public school system and the closures that surround it affect us all. Why are we forcing one community against another?

Thank you.

Registered Apprenticeship Program

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the announcement from Advanced Education that 10 times as many scholarships, worth half a million dollars, will be available to students in the registered apprenticeship program, more commonly known as RAP. This is great news because, as we all know, Alberta's economy is strong, and the demand for skilled tradespeople is high. Alberta's innovative RAP program is a win-win opportunity for students and employers. Students are able to start a career in the trades while completing high school, and employers have the opportunity to train future workers.

RAP is a program that allows high school students to become employed as apprentices and get on-the-job training hours while they complete high school with no delays in graduation. Students also earn an income of at least minimum wage while they are working. Students from across Alberta have said that RAP provided them with an extra incentive to do well in and graduate from high school. They've also said that RAP has helped them become more aware of the career options that are available to them.

The RAP scholarship is a $1,000 award based on letters of recommendation from employers, teachers, and counsellors, comments from the student indicating their interest in a career in the trades, and the student's academic marks. The purpose of the scholarships is to encourage students to continue with their apprenticeship program after high school. Increasing the number of RAP scholarships from 50 to 500 is a great way to highlight apprenticeship training as an exciting postsecondary education option.

I commend this government for demonstrating such a strong commitment to addressing the increased demand for skilled workers as well as a strong commitment to young apprentices in Alberta. These scholarships will encourage even more young Albertans to see apprenticeship as a rewarding career pathway.

Thank you.

Wes Montgomery

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, sadly, today Edmonton and all of Alberta has lost a broadcasting icon. Wes Montgomery, a popular radio morning man and sports dinner master of ceremonies extraordinaire, passed away at the age of 66. Wes began a 47-year career in radio at CKYL, Peace River, a station which was owned at the time by a former member of this Assembly, the late Al "Boomer" Adair. CHED, K-LITE, CISN, CFRN, and for the past 12 years CFCW listeners woke up to Wes Montgomery morning shows for just about as long as anyone can remember.

There are few personalities in radio who are recognizable in just about any northern Alberta community they visited, and Wes was one of them. That's because at some time in the past he accepted an invitation to emcee a sportsmen's dinner or a local fundraising event whether it be for an agricultural society or a charitable organization, or more than likely he took part in a bonspiel and all the other stuff that goes along with bonspieling.

Wes was an unabashed supporter of Edmonton, the Eskimos, and, of course, the sport of curling. He had no time for those who wanted to put things down and had no time for media smear campaigns, but he would spend endless hours on air talking about people of all walks of life who did good things. Many times those endless hours of storytelling were to the chagrin of the station manager.

There are few people who enjoyed every day of life more than Wes. From the days of the Point After to the Riverbend racquet club to a curling rink somewhere in the province there is a better person today because they knew Wes Montgomery. To Wes's mom, two sisters, eight children, and eight grandchildren our deepest sympathies, but knowing Wes Montgomery, he would be proud if this tribute were signed off by simply saying: have a happy doorknob.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mayor's Luncheon for Business & the Arts

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Along with my colleagues from Calgary-Mountain View and Calgary-Varsity last Thursday I had the honour of attending the 12th annual Calgary Mayor's Luncheon for Business & the Arts. The luncheon celebrates the arts, artists, and partnerships that are forged between business and the arts. I believe it was Denise Carpenter of EPCOR who said that the businesses represented at the luncheon get it. They understand the value of arts and culture to a civilized society.

There were three major artists' awards. The Enbridge emerging artist award was won by Michele Decottignies, who, among many other things, is the founder and artistic director of Stage Left Productions and Balancing Acts, the longest running disability arts festival in the world. The Telus artistic innovation award went to EMMedia Gallery and Production Society, a nonprofit media arts organization that provides equipment, technical support, and programs for independent video, audio, and multimedia artist-producers. The EPCOR established arts award was given to artist, mentor, innovator, arts administrator, educator, curator, writer, and community activist Sandra Vida, who has arguably done and seen nearly everything that is possible for an artist to do and see in her 35-year career.

Oh, there is one thing Sandra Vida has not seen in the last 17 years of her career, and some of the people she mentors are young enough that they've never experienced such a thing. That would be an increase in provincial government funding for arts and culture in Alberta. There hasn't been one since 1988 even though funding for arts and culture doesn't come from tax dollars. It comes from gambling revenues, which I'm willing to bet have climbed dramatically, phenomenally, astronomically over the last 17 years.

Mr. Speaker, EPCOR's Denise Carpenter says, and I quote: as times have changed, the arts have increasingly converged with business and everyday life; art teaches important lessons about adaptability, flexibility, critical thinking, and problem solving, characteristics that enhance our employability and ultimately our citizenry. EPCOR gets it. So do Telus, Enbridge, and dozens of other Alberta businesses that do their part to support the arts. The question is: why doesn't this government?

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition from a number of good Albertans, largely from Fort McMurray, Calgary, Edmonton, Sherwood Park, and a lot of other communities in Alberta, and it reads:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aborigines; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

There are 101 good Albertans on this petition.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a petition with 100 signatures on it. The petition notes that Alberta's labour community was not properly consulted before the introduction of Bill 15, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2005, and asks that the bill not be passed by this Assembly.

Alberta Pharmaceutical Savings Commission Act

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce private member's Bill 206, the Alberta Pharmaceutical Savings Commission Act.

Pharmaceutical drugs represent the fastest growing cost in our health care system. Not surprisingly, it is also the most privatized component of health care delivery. Bill 206 would take the first step in reducing these costs through such measures as reference pricing, bulk purchasing, and reductions in demand that, unlike user fees and copayments, do not punish the sick and the elderly. I would therefore like to move first reading of Bill 206.

[Motion carried; Bill 206 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Bill 207

Alberta Association of Former M.L.A.s Act

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 207, the Alberta Association of Former M.L.A.s Act.

This bill will create a nonpartisan association of former Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. Membership would be open to all individuals who have been but are not currently a member of this Assembly. This association would be able to use its knowledge and experience to promote the ideals of parliamentary democracy in Alberta and throughout the Commonwealth.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two documents to table today. The first is a letter from Mr. Stan Buell, the president of the Small Investor Protection Association. His letter condemns the recent firing of the director of administrative services at the Alberta Securities Commission and asks that the minister intervene to protect whistle-blowers.

The second item I have to table today is a letter from Mr. Paul Pomerleau. Mr. Pomerleau points to the role of unions in creating the so-called Alberta advantage and raises concerns about foreign temporary workers and other issues facing Alberta's working people today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is an e-mail from a Calgary-Varsity constituent, Mark Hambridge, that was sent to the Premier. Mr. Hambridge identifies himself as a concerned citizen who is among the many who are bitterly disappointed with the decision to "allow smoking in certain public places, contrary to the wishes of the vast majority of Albertans."

I am also tabling five copies of the program of the 12th annual Mayor's Luncheon for Business & the Arts, at which Calgary's Liberal caucus clearly heard the arts community's plea for provincial funding support.

Speaker's Ruling

Referring to an Officer of the Legislature

The Speaker: Hon. members, the other day, Thursday, at the conclusion of question period statements were made by the chair with respect to the conduct of a certain member with respect to certain questions that were raised and innuendo with respect to an officer of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta. Comments did arise, and I invited members to return on Monday, that being today, to offer suggestions with respect to this matter. Should hon. members choose to participate, I'm now offering them that opportunity. I do have a statement that I intend on making at the conclusion of hearing those members who wish to participate.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When you rose and requested that we review this matter, I would advise you that I was at that time in discussion with the Minister of Finance about whether or not a question of privilege ought to be brought. I have not brought the question of privilege because the process which you put forward would have pre-empted that process, or it would have been premature. I still have the intention, subject to what you have to say today, to bring forward a question of privilege to be determined if that's the appropriate course.

The reason I say this is this is not a matter which is being overstated, to say that the comments that were made are, in fact, a breach of the privileges of this House. Just to refresh so that we can speak to this in context, at page 947 of Hansard, speaking with respect to April 21, Thursday, the comments in question are the phrase:

Given that the Alberta Auditor General has been the auditor of record for the Securities Commission and has repeatedly given the commission unqualified audit approval, will she do the right thing and bring in a genuinely independent out-of-province investigator?

And a second statement at page 948:

To the same minister: will she admit that the Alberta Auditor General has no credibility on this issue given that year after year his office has given the commission a clean audit report?

Those were statements made by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. They were made last Thursday afternoon and provoked quite a deal of outrage in the House and comment by yourself, and rightly so because the Auditor General is an officer of this Assembly. The Auditor General, however, is not in this Assembly, cannot respond to those sorts of comments, nor ought to be called on to respond to those sorts of comments.

It's not to say that auditors general or other officers of the House or the subjects that they deal with are not properly the subjects of questions which can be brought before the House. In fact, I think most parliamentarians challenged to do so could raise the issues without slugging the character, reputation, independence, or otherwise of the individual involved, in this case an officer of the House. So it's not to say that there should be a shutdown of questioning but, rather, that questions or comments, for that matter, outside of question period must always be put in an appropriate manner because the one thing that all members of this House and all officers of this House have is their integrity, their character.

When the character of a member of this House or an officer of this House, even the employees, quite frankly, is drawn into question in the manner in which it was put forward, it brings the whole context of governance into disrepute. There's one thing that we ought to do as members of this Assembly, in my humble opinion: it's to raise the level of respect for this House, not lower it. We should constantly be on our guard to ensure that the public knows and understands that each and every member of this House and that each officer that serves this House is here to do the best for Albertans. We can have a difference of viewpoint as to whether we are doing the best for Albertans or what the right thing is, but we ought not to be bringing our character into disrepute in the manner that was suggested.

Mr. Speaker, it's my humble submission that this is a matter which is far more serious than just a point of order or just a comment made in question period. In fact, I would suggest that it's far more serious than one in which the normal process of this House might be that a person would rise and withdraw the comment or apologize.

We saw that happen in this House on March 23, page 410 of Hansard, where a point of order was raised when the same member, the Leader of the Official Opposition, in a question to the same minister, the Minister of Finance, said, "Who is she trying to protect?" A point of order was raised because, again, although the issue that the hon. member was trying to raise might have been perfectly appropriate, the manner in which he raised it called into question the character of the minister. That was drawn to the House's attention by way of a point of order, which was referred to at page 420 of Hansard that day. Then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar rose and on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Riverview withdrew the remark. The Member for Edmonton-Riverview didn't show up in the House himself to withdraw the remark but had someone rise on his behalf and withdraw the remark.

In my humble submission, Mr. Speaker, that would not be the appropriate way to deal with this. In fact, I would refer us to Beauchesne's 24.

Parliamentary privilege is the sum of . . . rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and . . . enjoyed by individual Members, because the House cannot perform its functions without unimpeded . . . services of its Members; and by each House.

So it's not necessary for a question of privilege to be raised against an individual member. It can be a question of the privilege of the House, and in this case I think it is appropriately so.

I won't go on at length to speak about the question of privilege because I think that would be more appropriately done if, Mr. Speaker, when you make your comments, you indicate that that's an appropriate course of action. However, I do believe that we should speak to the question of privilege on this matter as outlined, as I said, by Beauchesne's 24, 25, and 60.

I think we should also be looking at Montpetit 524-525 in that context in talking about the protections of officers of the House, and in that context I would even quote page 524, chapter 13, of Montpetit.

This is a longstanding tradition in our Parliament that we be cautious when we attack individuals or groups, particularly in the judiciary, and those who are unable to come in here and have the same right of free expression as we enjoy with impunity here.

That quote, by the way, is a quote from one of our own previous members, McClelland, who at that time was sitting as the Acting Speaker in the national House. The quote is a very important one.

Montpetit goes on to say:

While it is permissible to speak in general terms about the judiciary or to criticize a law, it is inappropriate to criticize or impute motives to a specific judge or to criticize a decision made under the law by a judge.

Now, that's with respect to the judiciary and judges, but I would suggest to you that the same logic applies with respect to officers of the House. They can't be here. They can't defend their reputation on the floor of the House. The issues are important, but the manner in which they are raised is so very important because all we have is our character, our good name, and if we want the public to respect this institution and to respect governance and to be involved in the process, we have to raise, not lower, the standards.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the appropriate way to deal with this matter would be to refer it to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing or to Leg. Offices or both because Leg. Offices is the appropriate place if one does have a concern about the competency or the independence or the aspects with respect to an officer of the Legislature. There is an appropriate way to deal with it, and that would be through Leg. Offices, raising it at Leg. Offices. But in this case, raising it in the manner that it was raised in order to make a partisan political point denigrates this House, denigrates the members of this House, and breaches the privileges of this House and ought to be referred to the appropriate standing committee for a discussion about how we would deal with those sorts of circumstances, how we can ensure that the rules clarify that it's not appropriate to act in that manner, and to sanction the member.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this is an interesting thing, the opportunity that the Speaker has presented to the Assembly, in that it is not a point of privilege that is being discussed but a general discussion of the point of interest raised by the Speaker. I'm in somewhat of a quandary on how to respond to what has been placed before us now by the Government House Leader. I'm not responding to a point of privilege, but that's certainly what is underlying the comments that he's made. I assume that if a point of privilege is indeed made, the proper notification will be given, and I will be given adequate and fair opportunity to respond exactly to the point of privilege.

Which brings me to the discussion today. The Government House Leader raised a number of issues, and if I may, I will go through and respond to some of them. In particular, the Speaker had referred all members of the Assembly to review Beauchesne 493 and Marleau and Montpetit 524. I think what's important here is to look at the wording that was used by the Leader of the Official Opposition very carefully. The specificity of language is important in these cases. At no point was the Leader of the Official Opposition impugning directly on the individual but on the office and on the work of the office.

In the directives of Marleau and Montpetit 526 directs us to look at “the tone, manner and intention”; in other words, the context of the comment. In this case the preamble was clear that our concern was not with the Auditor General, his professional abilities, or his integrity.

Our concerns were threefold. First, the formal mandate and power of the Auditor General is very restricted.

Secondly, the minister had artificially restricted the scope of his investigation by already putting parameters around it, encouraging the Auditor General to prejudge the investigation specifically “to dispel concerns,” which is a direct quote; in other words, the government’s publicly stated expectations. Our concern was with those publicly stated expectations rather than with the Auditor General’s character or professionalism. That’s not what we were questioning. We were questioning what the government had set out.

Third, perception is everything, and in this case it’s in the vital interest of the province that the public’s confidence in the ASC be restored. It is not impugning the character or professionalism of the office of the Auditor General to insist that it is best done with an investigation carried out by someone with no previous history with the Alberta Securities Commission. That’s not impugning anyone. It’s saying that if we’re going to have someone that’s truly independent look at it, then the public perception of independence can best be assured if the individual comes from without.

The issue of credibility has been raised, and I think that we need to reaffirm that credibility is by definition not an individual virtue but rather about an individual’s ability to instill confidence in others. In other words, we’re claiming that the office of the Auditor General’s audit is not likely to have the desired effect of restoring public confidence not because we think that any results would be fudged or any past history would leave lingering doubts, but it’s exactly because there have been repeated audits done, and we believe that in the minds of the public that would leave lingering doubts in the minds of the investment community. It is vital to Alberta’s interests that full confidence be restored. This is not a happy situation, to not have that public confidence firmly in place. That’s why we were clear to say that the situation with the Auditor General’s office did not have the required credibility.

When we look at Marleau and Montpetit 524, the text does not prohibit referencing members of the public. It merely discourages doing so, strongly discourages it, but it discourages it. It specifically permits it “in extraordinary circumstances where the national,” and I would argue provincial, “interest calls for the naming of an individual.” Now, we of course didn’t name the individual. We were talking about the office of the Auditor General and the work of the individual that heads that.

It can be argued, perhaps, that we have such a situation here. We are very aware on this side that this situation has now been discussed in the national press around confidence in the Alberta Securities Commission. I think that that is a fairly extraordinary circumstance and one that affects the well-being of all Albertans.

I’ve already pointed out that the Leader of the Official Opposition did not name any member of the public, but he did name an officer of the Assembly, who is charged with doing the business of the Assembly. If I may, that office is an employee of the Assembly and answers to the Assembly, and if we cannot criticize the work of an employee, who can in this context? That employee, that office does report through the Legislative Offices Committee but does work for all of us in this Assembly.

I believe that members of this Assembly must be permitted to question whether charging that officer or that office with a specific task is the most prudent action to take by the government. The public interest here is not only getting to the bottom of the matter but also to be seen by the public and the investment community to be getting to the bottom of the matter. I would argue that the minister’s comment about dispelling concerns along with the historical connection between the audits done by the Auditor General and the ASC make it impossible to achieve the latter even if the office is fully capable of achieving the former; that is, the audits that have already been performed.

The Leader of the Official Opposition did not slander or slur the Auditor General directly or indirectly as a person. [interjections] There seem to be a number of people who wish to join in this discussion, and I’m sure that the Speaker will recognize them when they choose to be recognized.

Finally, if I may, Mr. Speaker, looking at Beauchesne 493(3), the use of protected persons and the phrase “those of high official station” has never been fully or finally defined. The example that we’re given is that it deals with “senior public servants,” and that may well be determined to cover the office of the Auditor General and the staff therein.

Again, this attack was not on the individual but on the suitability for this specific task at hand. The question was specifically around that if audits have already been done and been given a passing grade repeatedly, to ask them to do another one in which there may well be improprieties places that office in a very difficult situation. They’re either going to have to contradict themselves now or before, seeing as those audits exist and are on the public record.

I would argue that the questions that were asked by the Leader of the Official Opposition are not appropriate to be referred to the all-party committee on privileges and elections. Neither do I think they constitute a point of privilege individually or collectively, Mr. Speaker. It is the function of the Official Opposition to hold the government accountable. There were repeated attempts to in this case hold the Minister of Finance accountable for decisions that had been made, and given the context, we had to reference the work of the Auditor General and the staff therein and the work that was cited. There was no intention to directly comment on anyone’s character, but there is an issue of credibility that needs to be addressed, and I would argue that it is significant enough to fall within the parameters of what had been outlined in M and M 524.

So I look forward to the Speaker’s comments on the situation that has been brought before us, but I maintain as the House leader for the Official Opposition that we must have the latitude, respectfully of course, to question the government on the choices and activities that it engages in. That includes, I believe, specific to this case because it was raised, in fact, by the minister, that we had to be able to discuss the activities and credibility of the office of the Auditor General in context with the issue that was before us. To not have done that, we would not have been doing our job in asking the questions that needed to be asked around that issue.

Thank you for the opportunity to be able to discuss this on the record. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I won’t take a great deal of time because both members, I think, went to the appropriate 493. I think just on the legal aspect of this 493(3) says that “the Speaker has traditionally protected from attack a group of individuals commonly referred to as ‘those of high . . . station.’” I think the key point here – at least to my knowledge we have not done that in the Alberta Legislature – is that “the extent of this group has never been defined. Over the years it has covered senior public servants, ranking officers of the armed services.” Obviously, it’s not appropriate to here. Perhaps at some point we should decide in this Legislature who we are talking about, and the Speaker has cautioned members to exercise great care. The other reference is vague in this area too.

So I go to the Hansard and look at the questions. I take it that there are two things that seem to have caused some concern.

Given that the Alberta Auditor General has been the auditor of record for the Securities Commission and has repeatedly given the commission unqualified audit approval, will she do the right thing and bring in a genuinely independent out-of-province investigator?

Then the other one probably is that the Alberta Auditor General has no credibility on this issue given that year after year his office has given the commission a clean audit report.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that perhaps we could say that the questions were intemperate, perhaps a little careless, but I think we do have to err on the side of free speech as much as we can in this Assembly. I would interpret this that it was not the Auditor General that the Leader of the Opposition was going after. He was suggesting that we needed a more public – and I’ve said the same thing – audit than necessarily the Auditor General.

Admittedly the language here, if I may say so, is careless, but I think that if every time in this Assembly somebody uses careless language, we’re going to go to privilege, that’s all we’re going to be doing time after time after time. I know that the Speaker has alerted our attention to this matter, and I think that’s a lesson that we can all perhaps learn, but I would think it’d be overkill, to say the least, if we went to privilege and wasted a lot of the Legislature’s time.

The point, Mr. Speaker, that I’m making is that you brought it to our attention, and perhaps we need to take a look at 493 in terms of what are the officers that we’re talking about here, because that’s very vague, and perhaps learn from this situation rather than taking a sledgehammer to sort of knock in a nail here. I’d be very careful. Once we go down this slippery route, then I think that it creates a lot of extra time. I say to members that we should always in this House err on the side of free speech and not try to control people.

You could take the interpretation, I suppose, in one way. The government did. I took it another way. For that reason, I don’t think that we should be having to go through that whole privilege motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, who is also the chair of the Legislative Offices Committee.

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is in that capacity as the chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices and as past chair of the all-party search committee which recommended Mr. Dunn’s appointment as Auditor General in March 2002 that I would like to add a few comments to the record regarding some comments by the member, the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, that appear to be questioning the credibility of the Auditor General.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Dunn’s appointment was recommended and approved by a unanimous decision of the Select Special Auditor General and Information and Privacy Commissioner Search Committee, which included the hon. member in the membership. Mr. Dunn’s career achievements and community service were well documented in the search committee’s final report, which was the subject of Government Motion 23, passed in the House without debate on April 15, 2002.

Since his appointment as Auditor General Mr. Dunn has also received the highest honour available to a chartered accountant, which was his election as a Fellow of the Chartered Accountants in February 2003. This recognition by his peers where his career, professional, and community achievements – and I quote from the Chartered Accountants of Alberta website – “have brought honour to the profession” confirms that Mr. Dunn is held in the highest esteem and would also appear to indicate that his character is above reproach.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any other member wishing to make a comment on this matter? Well, then, hon. members, on Thursday last the chair was very, very dismayed by the tone of the questions, so then looked in Hansard on Friday to make sure that, again, this was not a mistake and looked at Hansard again on Sunday and then looked at Hansard again today, and after those four reviews still comes to a conclusion by looking at Hansard on page 947 and quoting the following, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview:

We need someone who will get to the bottom of these problems. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. Given that the Alberta Auditor General has been the auditor of record for the Securities Commission and has repeatedly given the commission unqualified audit approval, will she do the right thing and bring in a genuinely independent out-of-province investigator?

Further, the next question:

To the same minister: will she admit that the Alberta Auditor General has no credibility on this issue given that year after year his office has given the commission a clean audit report?

Go on to the next question. Once again the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview:

Again to the same minister: will she admit that the only reason she has asked the Auditor General to prepare one report for her and a separate one for the Legislature and the public is to keep the public in the dark about the real goings-on at the Alberta Securities Commission?

I’m a pretty imaginative person, but I cannot believe that we’re talking about any person other than the Alberta Auditor General in any of this. There’s only one Alberta Auditor General, and the Member for Banff-Cochrane has clearly identified who that Auditor General is and the process by which the Auditor General is among us.

Now, I do want to expand upon some of those comments that were made last Thursday, especially reflecting officers of the Legislature, and it is on the point of officers of the Legislature that I make my comments. I started off by saying that perhaps this was still early in the life of the 26th Legislature, but the fact is that this is not early in the life of the 26th Legislature. This is day 27, I believe. Including the evening sittings probably makes it 54. So the time for inexperience and the time for being a novice and the time for being a rookie is behind us. That’s not an excuse anymore.

The chair wants to identify for members that the officers of the Legislature are the Auditor General, the Chief Electoral Officer, the Ethics Commissioner, the Information and Privacy Commissioner, and the Ombudsman. These individuals are all appointed or reappointed on the recommendation of a special search committee or the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices. Each and every appointment is the subject of a motion in this Assembly. All are debatable, and all are amendable. These five officers occupy positions that by statute are independent of government. The fact that the sums required to run these offices are not part of the government’s estimates but those of the Legislative Assembly reflects this principle of independence from the government.

Last Thursday the chair referred members to paragraph 493 of Beauchesne's and page 524 of Marleau and Montpetit, House of Commons Procedure and Practice. The same principle of not reflecting on certain persons in debate is found in Erskine May, the 23rd edition, at pages 438 and 439. If there is any doubt after reading those authorities, it is the chair's view that the officers of the Legislature in the province of Alberta occupy positions of "high official status," as the term is used in Beauchesne 493(3), similar to judges and senior public servants even though they are not specifically mentioned. To be absolutely clear, this chair will not tolerate personal attacks against officers of the Legislature.

Hon. members, so that there's no misunderstanding, the chair is not attempting in any way to become involved with questions on the grounds that they deal with sensitive issues. This was not the reason for the chair's comment last Thursday. The chair intervened because it was the chair's view that there were allegations or innuendos about the individuals who serve as officers of the Legislature. This chair takes very seriously the rights of members to freedom of speech in this Assembly. However, it is the chair's role to ensure that this important right is exercised fairly and within the limits that have been recognized in this and other Assemblies over many years.

The chair also wants to take this opportunity to say that for the most part the use of language in this Chamber and the decorum of members is of a high standard amongst jurisdictions in Canada. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview cautioned us about having to deal with this on a regular basis. The fact is, hon. members, that we deal with this on a very infrequent basis. If hon. members want to go back in Hansard, hon. members can go back to 1999, when to the chagrin of most of us, on November 23, 1999, when one hon. member was providing to the Assembly the report of the information and privacy committee, the then member for Edmonton-Riverview said, "Whose pocket is he in?" in reference to an officer of this Assembly. That created quite a commotion in this Assembly on that day in 1999 and led to considerable anxiety amongst the various members. It led to a retraction, and the retraction came before further serious damage could have been done to a particular individual.

Then from 1999 we switch to March 23, 2005. Hardly a frequent occurrence, a very infrequent occurrence. On March 23, 2005, another Member for Edmonton-Riverview used the following phrase in saying this about another member: "Who is she trying to protect?" That led to a discussion and was dealt with by a two-line retraction on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

So this is not a frequent thing. This is an infrequent thing. The House is not wasting its time in dealing with these matters. The House's time is well used in terms of dealing with this.

I repeat: for the most part – and this is the 99th year of history of this Assembly – the use of language in this Chamber and the decorum of members is of a high standard amongst jurisdictions in Canada. In fact, I believe the highest standard of decorum of any jurisdiction in Canada is found in this Assembly, and that's good. However, members may have recently noted that the tone and content of proceedings in other Assemblies in this land may not today be of the similar high standard that they were accustomed to seeing even in those Assemblies. There has been a deterioration in two Assemblies for sure, but that deterioration is not the tradition and it's not the practice in this Assembly.

I believe that people of Alberta expect members to conduct themselves in the best traditions of parliamentary democracy. This chair intends to meet those expectations for the good of this institution and for the good of all of its members.

The chair views the question of what constitutes proper parliamentary language in an Assembly in the 21st century as such an important matter that I'm now going to make a suggestion to the Assembly. Regardless of whether or not a motion for privilege is proceeded with – and I would hope, in fact, that on the basis of what I've said, that we've now entered a new century, perhaps there is an important time every once in a while to stop and review everything that we are doing and ask ourselves the question: is this appropriate for the time that we're now in?

I'm going to ask the hon. members through the various House leaders to consider a motion to refer this whole matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing or by creating a special select committee to look at this and other parliamentary issues as was done in 1993, when the chair was the Government House Leader, to review in particular the language, such things as put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, the specific identification, even though the chair has already indicated that in his mind the officers of the Legislative Assembly are those people who meet those offices of high standard, and generally to review this whole question of decorum and decorum in our Assembly.

We'll soon be entering our 100th year, and I believe that there's a caution that must be given to all members that we have to be better than what some members would see us be on any given day. I think the people of Alberta expect that of us, and I think that if there's any gift we can give to the people of Alberta on our 100th anniversary of this Legislative Assembly, it is to recognize that the highest calling in the land is to be an elected person, and we should be expected to act in the highest possible standard.

I want all members to know that if there are questions such as the type that were raised in this Assembly last Thursday, there will be an immediate intervention from the chair henceforth, and if that means that that time is now lost in the question period, that is the way it will be. Those questions will be ruled out of order, and the member will also be told that that's it for his or her participation in the question period on that day. There will be a vigilance. I will not allow people who are officers of this Assembly to be chastised in this Assembly.

Thank you.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Appropriate notice having been given on Thursday, April 21, I now rise to move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

head: Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Appropriate notice having been served on Thursday, April 21, it's my pleasure to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 24, 25, and 26.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I would like to request unanimous consent to reduce the time between division bells to one minute specifically in connection with any divisions which may or may not arise during Motions for Returns this afternoon.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there is a motion before the Assembly. The chair can only assume that there has been some discussion between various House leaders with respect to this matter. The motion basically is that if there is a division, shorten the time between bells to one minute. So there's anticipation there's going to be a division. It would be shortened to one minute. That's the motion.

Anybody want to participate on this? It's a debatable motion.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would have to suggest that at least on the first division we should not agree to that because members are perhaps not aware that the bells would be shortened, and it would be unfair to them.

Now, there may have been a lapse of communication this morning. I understand from discussion just now across the House that it was raised with my executive assistant, but this is the first that I'm aware of the request, and certainly I have not taken the opportunity to apprise caucus members, so they may be anticipating that they would have the full 10 minutes to arrive.

Now, after that happened, I wouldn't have any objection once members had been in the House, had been called, and were aware of the process for the afternoon. Shortening the bells at that time would be quite an appropriate process.

The Speaker: Okay. Normally these motions are not debatable because it requires unanimous consent, but because I saw so many heads shaking with respect to this and in the light and the continuation of what I said about harmony in the Assembly just a few minutes ago, I allowed that interjection of the Government House Leader.

So we have a motion which requires unanimous consent. Not a problem. If you're opposed to it, you've already said it.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, do you wish to continue?

Temporary Foreign Workers

M24. Mr. Backs moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of any and all documents pertaining to the June 2004 memorandum of understanding between the government and the federal government regarding foreign temporary workers.

[Debate adjourned April 18: Mr. Backs speaking]

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We spoke to this particular motion for a return quite extensively last Monday and ended the session with it. I just have to say that it's a very legitimate request that would be in the public interest to show Albertans that any and all . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, excuse me.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Point of Order

Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On a point of order. If I could ask the Speaker to clarify that last ruling. I'm confused as to whether or not the motion was debatable. If it was debatable, I certainly wanted to debate it.

The Speaker: It was not.

Mr. Mason: It was not?

The Speaker: No, it was not.

Mr. Mason: Thank you.

Debate Continued

Mr. Backs: Just to continue, Mr. Speaker, we spoke this through quite a bit last Monday, and a number of speakers spoke to it. The key issue is that these documents should be released in the public interest. That there would be things that were submitted in confidence that would be released by letting this go forward I think is questionable to me. It would be certainly in the public interest to do so. I think that this request should go forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Motion for a Return 24 on behalf of the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment I just wanted to reference for everyone's attention that this particular motion did receive considerable debate.

The Speaker: You know what, hon. member? When I recognized the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, it was to close the debate, so I now have to call the question.

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:38 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

For the motion:

Backs	Hinman	Miller, R.
Blakeman	MacDonald	Pastoor
Bonko	Martin	Swann
Elsalhy	Mason	Taylor
Flaherty	Mather

3:50

Against the motion:

Boutilier	Johnson	Oberle
Cao	Johnston	Pham
Coutts	Knight	Renner
DeLong	Liepert	Rodney
Evans	Lougheed	Snelgrove
Forsyth	Magnus	Stelmach
Graydon	Mar	Stevens
Griffiths	Marz	Strang
Groeneveld	McClellan	Tarchuk

Herard Horner Jablonski	Mitzel Morton	VanderBurg Zwozdesky
Total	For – 14	Against – 34

[Motion for a Return 24 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to just take the Government House Leader's lead one step further and now make the motion that subsequent division bells, should there be any for the remainder of the afternoon, be limited to one minute in duration. I believe all members have now had a chance to understand and hear what the intention behind that shortening of division bells was all about. I would put that motion forward for consideration at this time.

The Speaker: Hon. members, such motions that require revisions to the routine require unanimous consent. Is there any member opposed to this motion put forward by the hon. Government House Leader?

Ms Blakeman: Yes, sir. I'm opposed to it.

The Speaker: Okay. That's it.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Department of Energy Salary Contracts

M25. Mr. MacDonald moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the salaries of contracted employees and/or consultants employed by the Ministry and Department of Energy during the 2003-04 fiscal year broken down by amount and position title.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would appreciate getting this information from the Department of Energy. We know that in one case – I believe it's the business unit manager for electricity that is a hired hand from California, and I just wonder how many more hired hands there are in that department that do not work directly for the department through the normal hiring processes around our civil service.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Now, precisely how many contracted employees there are I think would be interesting reading. We know what the costs for civil servants' salaries are, but in a lot of cases we don't know what the costs of these contracted employees or consultants would be, what costs would be involved, and how many other consultants there are in that department. We know that that department has been having a great deal of trouble figuring out what to do with the mess over electricity deregulation.

Mr. Speaker, there is trouble in that department. There seems to be a great deal of trouble, and I for one can't understand why we would need to hire an expert from California. Surely to gosh there would be some home-grown help here that could try to fix these problems. I don't know. Maybe they could even read our low-cost energy plan and have a look at that and use that as a model to get out of this policy dilemma that we're in with electricity deregulation.

Certainly, that would be my interest in seeking this information at this time, Mr. Speaker, to find out just how many contract employees there are, how many consultants, and how much they're getting paid. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Boutilier: Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure. Based on the motion on the record pertaining to that of contract employees and consultants employed by the Ministry of Energy during the fiscal year broken down by the amount and position title, the government is quite prepared to accept MR 25.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that. I would like to thank the hon. Minister of Environment for that information, and hopefully I will not have to wait through the fullness of time to receive that information because I'm very interested in having a look at it quite soon. Thank you, and I appreciate it.

[Motion for a Return 25 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Minister of Energy Noninternational Trip Expenses

M26. Mr. MacDonald moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a detailed breakdown of all expenses incurred by the Minister of Energy, his staff, and/or designate on noninternational trips during the 2003-04 fiscal year.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, whenever we talk about noninternational trips, we are talking about, of course, travel within Canada. We on this side of the House on more than one occasion check out respective ministerial websites just to see how much money has been spent on international trips. The last international trip by the Department of Energy is one that's going on right now, and it's costing over $8,000, a trip to Washington, DC. I don't know whether it's to check up on our envoy or our ambassador there – is there a mid-term report card on the ambassador? – or what's going on. I thought the ambassador could look after things in Washington, and the Department of Energy could spend less time travelling there because the agent was in place, the job details had been described to us, and the man was going to get to work, but now we find out that $8,000 has been spent on international trips just recently.

With noninternational trips – that's trips within the country – it would be great to find out just what is going on with this department. I was astonished to find out in question period this afternoon that one of the King Airs was worn out, that it was on a 10-week maintenance schedule. I can understand that with all the trips the government members make in these airplanes, it would need a lengthy maintenance overhaul because, certainly, with our government airplanes, they're up and down. They take off and land more often than a crop-duster would. Some of these take-offs and landings would be on trips that are occurring within this country, and certainly with the Department of Energy it would be good information to receive just to see where and when the Minister of Energy is flying within in the country and with whom.

Thank you.

Mr. Boutilier: I don't have much experience with crop-dusting, so

I can't offer any more insight into the hon. member's comments. Clearly, in the government's spirit of openness and transparency, which is important to all Albertans and that I know all members of all sides of the House certainly adhere to, it's indeed my pleasure on behalf of the Minister of Energy to again indicate that the government is quite prepared to accept MR 26 as was requested relative to showing "a detailed breakdown of [the] expenses incurred by the Minister of Energy, his staff, and/or designate on noninternational trips during the 2003-04 fiscal year." That's something that I think should put a smile on everyone's face in that spirit of openness and transparency accountable to all Albertans.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I'd just have a question for the person sitting over there: who are you, and what have you done with the real Minister of Environment?

Mr. Boutillier: Mr. Speaker, I could potentially call the hon. member on a point of something, but I will not. To the hon. person on the other side I want to say: I hope you're enjoying this beautiful day that God and the Ministry of Environment delivered today outside. He might consider going outside for a breath of fresh air and to contemplate the beautiful day that we enjoy.

Mr. Mason: That's the minister that I know and love, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: You've already spoken, so you can't speak again.

Mr. Mason: Sorry, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else on the motion?

[Motion for a Return 26 carried] head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 201
Smoke-free Places Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and good afternoon, everyone. It is a pleasure to rise today and introduce third reading of Bill 201, the Smoke-free Places Act. As sponsor of the bill it should come as no surprise that I would have preferred an unamended version in third reading, but I want to point out that I'm very appreciative of the work that was done to find a wording that could be agreed upon by the majority. I'd therefore like to thank the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster for bringing forward the amendments during Committee of the Whole debate. I would also like to thank all of the other hon. members who participated in the debate.

I believe Bill 201 in its current form supports and reflects AADAC's Alberta tobacco reduction strategy as well as government policy. This is an important aspect of any private member's legislation. Bill 201 also respects the authority of municipalities to make what they think are the best decisions for their constituents and for their local business community.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to acknowledge the remarkable debate which has taken place on this issue over the past couple of months both in the Legislature and throughout the province of Alberta.

Upon reviewing Hansard, I was encouraged by the level of debate which took place. I also recall the number of members who in their maiden speeches and replies to the throne speech called for a session full of lively and productive debate, and I'm pleased that this bill provided an avenue for exactly that. I believe that this has at least in part inspired the majority of Albertans to take again an active interest in the proceedings of this House, and that can only be a very good thing.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to acknowledge all of the Albertans who have called, e-mailed, and written letters to me over the last number of weeks. It's evident that this is an issue Albertans are concerned about and have an opinion on.

Finally, I would like to acknowledge the support of my colleagues. It's unlikely that Bill 201 could have made it to third reading without the work that the members in this House have done to establish a compromise that is acceptable to the majority of Albertans both urban and rural.

Mr. Speaker, there are individuals who feel that this legislation is not going far enough, and I will not disagree with that opinion. However, the fact of the matter is that not every Albertan is ready for an extensive, province-wide ban on smoking quite yet. What may be most important to this process, however, is the increased awareness of the impact of second-hand smoke, the increased support for the wellness agenda, and the increased personal interest in a healthy lifestyle by Albertans. I believe that the amended bill does at least two things extremely well. It protects children and respects choice, and these are both extremely important ideals.

I do not believe that the Smoke-free Places Act as Bill 201 was in its original form would have received majority support anywhere in Alberta 20 years ago. However, an increase in information and education concerning the hazards of smoking and the health effects of second-hand smoke has resulted in smoke-free places being established throughout the province in the last while, and I find that extremely encouraging. Cities such as Edmonton and Calgary have reached a point where they along with their constituents are ready for an extensive prohibition on smoking in public places and workplaces, as are the municipalities of Banff, Airdrie, St. Albert, and others.

However, there are other jurisdictions throughout Alberta that have held municipal plebiscites on this issue which did not pass. So it is clear that these areas are not yet ready for an extensive prohibition on smoking in public places and workplaces. I am confident, however, that in a short amount of time these jurisdictions will be ready. In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, it is not the duty of this Legislature to force all Albertans to prohibit smoking. Instead, it is our duty as stewards to provide the tools necessary to promote a healthier province.

At this point I would like to remind our hon. members that although this legislation is in a sense a smoking ban, it is not about forcing smokers to quit smoking. Rather, its focus and purpose is about protecting the health and rights of nonsmokers who are involuntarily exposed to second-hand smoke. Unfortunately, this basic objective of Bill 201 may have gotten lost during debate from time to time. It's crucial that we keep this objective of protecting nonsmokers from second-hand smoke as the priority of this legislation. Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 is not about protecting the health of smokers or taking away the rights of smokers. It is about protecting the health of nonsmokers and protecting the rights of nonsmokers.

There is no doubt that smokers put a strain on Alberta's health care system, as do alcoholics, and obesity is also considered a strain on the health care system. In fact, many consider that it is quickly becoming a major epidemic. However, the difference between these afflictions and those of second-hand smoke is that drinking alcohol and problems with weight are more often than not addictions and health problems that are isolated to the individual.

Exposure to second-hand smoke is different from these diseases in that it does not just affect the individual who chooses to smoke and put their own health at risk; it also affects individuals in the area around them, especially children. It's important that we make this distinction between affecting the rights of smokers and protecting the health of Albertans, especially children, who are involuntarily exposed to second-hand smoke.

I'm confident that Bill 201 in its current form establishes an acceptable provincial baseline throughout Alberta concerning smoking in public places and workplaces. It provides the bottom rung of the ladder, which municipalities, the province, and our country will hopefully continue to climb one rung at a time soon.

While this legislation has been altered from the original intent, more importantly, it is a step in the right direction. One of the most important lessons I've learned in life is that overcoming obstacles is best achieved through the utilization of careful, well-thought-out strategies. I've also learned that achievement is gained in increments with both individual responsibility and team effort that allow for proper consideration for the consequences of others.

I'm confident that our municipal partners will continue to institute smoking bylaws which reflect what is best for their constituents and their areas of business. I am confident that Alberta will one day soon see a province-wide smoking ban equal to the original intent of Bill 201. Until that time I know that we will continue to move forward in small steps, and I hope that all members will agree that prohibiting smoking in establishments which permit minors is an appropriate step at this time. While we protect the health of Alberta's children and respect the choice of Alberta's municipalities and businesses, we continue to move toward the ultimate goal of a healthier, safer Alberta for all Albertans.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would again like to thank my colleagues for their support and consideration. It's been an incredible experience, and I'm honoured and humbled to have been a small part of it. I look forward to this last stage of debate of Bill 201, the Smoke-free Places Act, and I encourage all members to support this legislation as a sign of our mutual progress towards a healthier Alberta and a step in the right direction.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to have this opportunity to participate in debate on Bill 201 this afternoon, the Smoke-free Places Act. I was listening with a great deal of interest to the sponsor of the bill, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, and his explanation as to why we should support this bill at this time. Certainly, the hon. member's presentation has some merit, but when we look at Bill 201 and we see Smoke-free Places Act as its title, unfortunately after the amendments that were passed by this Assembly, the bill now reads Some Smoke-free Places Act in this province. We have completely changed the whole intent of this bill from a total workplace smoking ban without exceptions to what we have now.

If we look at what AADAC had done whenever they conducted a poll in 2003, they found that a large group of Albertans, nearly 80 per cent of people, across the province supported banning smoking in the workplace, and 77 per cent supported the prohibition in restaurants. These numbers varied little, it is interesting to note, across the province, whether it was in rural or urban areas. So we proceeded, as everyone knows, with this private member's legislation, and I was surprised whenever it was amended and it then became Some Smoke-free Places Act, not a total smoking ban.

Certainly, there were concerns raised by many hon. members in this Assembly that a workplace smoking ban would in some cases protect some employees but not all employees, but if we had a total ban, we would really be protecting employees. Now, is there going to be, as a result of this amendment, a change in WCB premiums? Are we going to have restaurants that have employees that work in the nonsmoking section or a bar or in any other public place employees that work in the nonsmoking section – are they going to pay less WCB premium than those that have to work in the place where there's all kinds of second-hand smoke? I have not heard an answer to that in the discussion to date on Bill 201.

We also have this idea that a workplace smoking ban, if we went ahead with this bill as it was initially drafted, would be bad for business. Well, experience shows that customers may be turned away, for instance, from a bar on a temporary basis, but they come back, and they adjust, and I think we're all better off for it.

Now, there shouldn't be any exceptions, Mr. Speaker. We can't just start making exceptions to smoke-free places. As soon as we allow one exception, we will have requests for more. Where do the exceptions end once we begin allowing them? If this were asbestos or some other comparable toxic workplace hazard, we wouldn't even be having these discussions about exemptions, and I think we're forgetting too quickly some of the nonsmoking advocates who have been pleading with not only Albertans but Canadians to quit smoking. Smoking in the workplace is a workplace hazard, and it should be treated as one. There are no exceptions. This isn't about protecting the smoker, I don't think. This is certainly about protecting the worker. A complete ban is necessary to level the playing field for all businesses.

Now, when we look at this, we remind ourselves again and again that most Albertans are ready for a smoke-free environment. If Bill 201 in its current form is acceptable, it is unacceptable to the grassroots Progressive Conservatives, the majority of the Progressive Conservatives from Alberta who attended the policy convention the first of this month. There was a vote. There were perhaps one-sixth of the delegates – I wasn't at the convention. I would like to have free observer status to the Tory convention sometime. I'd like to go, but it'd have to be free.

Mr. Graydon: We'll work on that.

Mr. MacDonald: I'd appreciate that. If you could work at that, I would be grateful.

There was a policy session there, and grassroots party members voted 250 to 4 to support a smoking ban in all public buildings. The same idea was expressed originally by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Now, at this time, Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce an amendment at third reading here to Bill 201 to give all hon. members of this Legislative Assembly a second chance at giving the Progressive Conservative grassroots members their wish. I will take my seat, Mr. Speaker, until the amendment has been circulated to all hon. members of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The amendment that is being circulated I would like now to read into the record. I'm moving an amendment that the motion for third reading of Bill 201, Smoke-free Places Act, be amended by deleting all the words after “that” and substituting the following: “Bill 201, Smoke-free Places Act, be not now read a third time but that it be recommitted to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of reconsidering section 5(3).” That section 5 has to deal with the exceptions that we talked about earlier.

When we look at this, I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to have a good, hard look at this amendment. Now, I was stating earlier that the Conservative Party delegates resoundingly backed a resolution demanding much stronger antitobacco laws from the government than it is going to pass with this Bill 201. The Premier stated this: “It can’t be done in this legislative session.” The Premier told some reporters that were assembled at the close of the Conservative Party convention.

This amendment in third reading to recommit this bill to Committee of the Whole gives this Legislative Assembly another chance at this time. It’s sort of the equivalent of the patch, but in this case this is a political patch because we can repair a bill. We can stop the process of this bill, and we can move it back, and we can repair it.

Now, as I said earlier, the majority of Progressive Conservative grassroots delegates that were at that policy session strongly endorsed a smoking ban in all public buildings. Also, it is interesting to note that the Premier stated at that policy convention that there is little that he can do to tinker with Bill 201, the Smoke-free Places Act, because it is too far through the legislative process to reconsider a blanket ban. Well, it’s not. We’re not all the way there, and hon. members we can move this back. We can have a look at the exemptions under section 5 and perhaps abide by the wishes of not only the citizens that are expressing their interest in a total smoking ban with AADAC but also the members of the Progressive Conservative Party.

Thank you. Please vote for my amendment.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the amendment that has been made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I think that it certainly reflects the thinking in the New Democrat caucus as well, that we ought not to read this bill for the first time, and it should be recommitted to the Committee of the Whole.

I think the motion that has been made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar doesn’t go far enough, Mr. Speaker. So I would like to propose an amendment to his amendment, and that amendment would read as follows: “Bill 201, Smoke-free Places Act, be not now read a third time but that it be recommitted to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of reconsidering sections 5(3) and 10.”

So I’d like that motion to be distributed as well, and when members have it I’ll speak to it.

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, Mr. Speaker, I’m not sure whether we have to deal with the second amendment or the first amendment, so I’ll deal with the first amendment.

At that convention that the hon. member talks about, there were over 1,800 people, one of the biggest political conventions in this province’s history, and they dealt with a lot of issues.

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: You don’t have the floor.

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, I’ve got it over you.

The simple fact is: if we start to revisit these bills, where does it quit?

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe I have the floor.

Point of Order Subamendments

The Deputy Speaker: Perhaps if you would allow me to read what you’re doing.

The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster is asking for clarification.

I would ask the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood: is this an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. Mason: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: So it’s a subamendment to the amendment.

Mr. Mason: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. So we would speak on that first when we decide to speak on it, after everybody’s got a copy of it.

The hon. Minister for Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I just wonder if I could get some clarification from the floor. These are somewhat unusual amendments. Can you advise if there is further debate allowed on this bill after these amendments have been dealt with, or if these amendments would be treated in a similar manner to a hoist amendment, in which case there is no further debate after the amendments have been dealt with? I think it will make a difference on whether or not members wish to participate at this stage or at a later stage, after these amendments have been dealt with by the House.

The Deputy Speaker: There would be a vote on each of the amendments, and then there would be further discussion on the bill as amended or not, but there would be no immediate question as in a hoist.

I could provide some further clarification to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. This is an amendment in itself, not an amendment to an amendment. So we would have to deal with the amendment on the floor first. Then if you want, introduce this as an amendment, but this is an amendment to the bill, not an amendment to the amendment.

So we are back speaking on the amendment as proposed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for that. Then I’ll continue with my comments, and maybe you can reset my clock.

Debate Continued

Mr. Mason: I want to just indicate that I will be supporting the amendment put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and indicate that while I think this section 10 should be added as well, this certainly will do the trick.

Now, I want to indicate that, Mr. Speaker, in fact, I was extremely disappointed with the amendments that were made to the original bill. If we go back to just before the session, the New Democrat opposition had a news conference at which we outlined plans to introduce the following motion to the Assembly, Motion 507: “Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to prohibit smoking in public buildings and indoor workplaces.”

Shortly after that, Mr. Speaker, there was quite a bit of interest in the introduction of Bill 201, which proposed to do exactly the same thing as the motion that we had put on the Order Paper for this session of the Assembly. We all know the reasons why that is, and I think that the real question here that we need to focus on is whether or not people who are employed in an employment capacity should be exposed to second-hand smoke.

Now, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed has indicated that some parts of the province are not ready for this, and the question is: whether or not parts of the province are ready or not, should they then be permitted to expose others to second-hand smoke? Whether or not those people want to or not, they are exposed as a result of their employment capacity. So should we then allow majorities in certain parts of the province to override the concern that we have for our workers who may work in bars and at bingo halls and so forth?

Mr. Speaker, I think that there are not very many times that I agree with the Conservative Party's delegates at their convention.

Mr. MacDonald: Their grassroots.

Mr. Mason: Their grassroots, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar reminds me. This is a government that prides itself in keeping in touch with the grassroots. Yet shortly after the confusion of the Conservative government and caucus over what they were going to do with this bill and the Premier's statements that swung back and forth like a weather vane for a month or so there, then they finally decided that they were going to amend this bill and essentially gut it, essentially take out the important aspects of the bill and allow, basically, smoking to take place in workplaces. Then, sure enough, the Conservative grassroots in a rare flash of logic indicated that – they passed a motion. They voted, in fact, 250 to 4 to support a complete smoking ban in all public buildings. So, obviously, the government and the Conservative caucus are offside with their own delegates to their own convention.

In a further demonstration of irony, Mr. Speaker, at the very same time that this bill was watered down, the state of Montana – which has served as Marlboro country in magazine ads which depict rugged cowboys puffing on cigarettes while riding a fence line – has moved to outlaw smoking just about everywhere but the great outdoors. The state Legislature voted earlier this month to ban smoking in all enclosed public places, including bars and restaurants. The Senate of that state passed the measure 40 to 10. Now, the governor has also said that he's going to sign the bill. I think that it's interesting that the lawmakers in that state have "acknowledged the health dangers of secondhand smoke and instead argued over whether the ban is the kind of heavy-handed government action that riles Montanans, who have long admired the rugged individualism represented by cowboys."

Now, Senator Joe Balyeat of Bozeman – and he's a Republican, Mr. Speaker, so, I mean, he's, you know, a sort of a distant cousin of members opposite – said, "Smoking is just plain stupid. But if this Legislature decided to outlaw stupidity, I think two-thirds of us would be behind bars. I just don't think we can legislate against stupidity." So he mirrors or echoes the statements of our own Premier, but he is not at all in the majority down there, and common sense has prevailed in Montana.

So I want to just suggest to members opposite that we should send this bill back to Committee of the Whole and reconsider the amendments that have been made by this Assembly, which I view as ill advised and not productive. Now, I know I have a lot to say about smoking and the effects of smoking and the public policy as it respects smoking, but I think, Mr. Speaker, that those points have been made before, and so I will take my seat.

Thank you.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, briefly on the amendment. The amendment suggests that we should send this back to the committee. There is so little time in this House that we get to use for private members' business that I'm quite frankly surprised that the opposition doesn't seem to have any problem wasting Monday after Monday on questions they may feel are important. We've passed one private member's bill after a very passionate plea from the sponsor, and now we're caught up finally, getting close to having resolution on a second bill, and we want to go study it again. Well, to the colleagues from your side and the colleagues from this side that have their own private bills that are very important to them too, they deserve the time in this House, and one bill shouldn't take all our time.

So if you think that we have more duty to one private member than the other by giving more time for private bills, I disagree. I think the time that the private members have in here is too small as it is. We should deal with this matter and get on with other more important issues.

Dr. Swann: Well, with all due respect, I think there are some bills that are more important than others. This is a critically important precedent in Alberta, the first provincial bill that I'm aware of that would regulate smoking in public places. I think that anyone who has worked with people with sensitivities to tobacco, anyone with chronic lung disease, anyone with allergies, anyone with cancer or who has watched someone die of cancer has to recognize that this is a critical time for Alberta to take some leadership. I know that you can, and I know many of you want to. I guess I would just encourage the Assembly to take this opportunity and review this once again.

In that context, I just want to say a few things about what it means to me as a physician and what I think it means to most Albertans, as indicated in many of the polls, and particularly in the workplace, where we are exposing young people, pregnant women, and unwilling nonsmokers to a carcinogenic substance and a substance that actually aggravates asthma, chronic lung disease, and heart disease.

It's unconscionable that we wouldn't take the next step, as many jurisdictions are – and we're far behind some jurisdictions already at this stage – that we wouldn't honour the commitment that the original mover of this Bill 201 had in mind when he suggested that all people's lungs, whether young or old, deserve to be protected from environmental tobacco smoke. I know that most of you have indicated that in the first and second readings of this bill.

It's clear, also, that the economy will benefit from this legislation, not only the local economies, but also our health care budget would be less impacted by removing second-hand smoke from those who are wanting to avoid it. The health of people, a fundamental ethical issue promoting the health of our population: this flies in the face of investments in cancer therapy when we know that this is a cancer-causing agent and we are yet not prepared to reduce that possibility of impacts on young and older employees in the workplace.

I would just simply ask sincerely that all members give this amendment due consideration and consider the possibility of really showing some amazing leadership in this province to give it yet a second review and help us to move Alberta into the forefront in Canada.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed for bringing Bill 201 forward originally. I supported this bill because I believe it is the right thing to do. I'm disappointed that this bill has amendments that result in a watered-down version of the original.

We have lots of research and evidence that smoking is harmful to smokers and to those who experience second-hand smoke. We also know that health-related costs for smoking are enormous. Bill 201's original intent was to make a real difference for our society. We know that smokers who work in an environment that's smoke free are more likely to quit smoking. There are other studies that show smokers have decreased productivity, extra time taken on smoke breaks, increased sick days, increased health care costs.

There's evidence that a workplace smoking ban doesn't hurt business. I was looking at a report on it from 1998. All of California's restaurants and bars went smoke free. According to the California Board of Equalization, sales at places selling beer, wine, and liquor increased every quarter in 1998, 1999, and into 2000, the last period for which data is available. What's more, sales increases at these establishments outpaced by nearly 8 per cent increases at all other types of retail outlets.

Again, according to the New York department of health and mental hygiene, smoke-free workplace legislation has become increasingly popular. While 65 per cent of bar patrons in California strongly or somewhat approved of the law in 1998, almost three-quarters, 73 per cent, felt that way by 2000. Also, by 2000, 87 per cent of bar patrons in California reported that they were as likely or more likely to visit bars since they had become smoke free.

I quote also from the New York City department of health and mental hygiene.

Businesses with smoke-free policies experience less absenteeism when non-smoking employees are no longer exposed to second-hand smoke, which can trigger asthma attacks and other respiratory illnesses . . . Employers also see lower housekeeping and maintenance costs because they no longer need to clean ashtrays, sweep up cigarette butts, replace burnt carpeting, or clean fabrics and other materials nearly as often.

Smoking cessation programs in the workplace may also achieve substantial cost savings as well as productivity benefits. Workers who have stopped smoking for at least one year lose significantly fewer days of work and have fewer admissions to hospitals than those that continue to smoke.

This is about protecting the worker and not about the smoker. The evidence behind a total workplace smoking ban is clear.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we're speaking to the amendment to the bill, not the bill itself.

Mrs. Mather: Okay. I'll go to that.

I referred back to the intent of the original bill and that the amendments that we were going to be looking at today have watered this down considerably. It is with that that I need to say that on the basis of discussion with parents and students in my constituency I want to support this amendment because it will give us some real meaning, some real teeth. I believe that the watered-down version does not do justice to the intent of the original bill.

So I support the amendment to Bill 201, as I see it as addressing a smoking situation which has created a huge health concern in our province. I see this as a small step towards a province-wide smoking ban and better health. The amendment, however, can result in a larger step and, I believe, make a real difference.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Calgary-Lougheed, who brought forward a good bill, seemed to indicate that he's somewhat satisfied under the circumstances with getting what he can. I'd say to the hon. member that you're easily satisfied. I honestly believe that these particular amendments that were brought forward on the original bill gut the bill totally.

In terms of the 5(3), which the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is asking go back, it "designates the public place or workplace or a part of the public place or workplace as a place where smoking is permitted." Well, virtually a whole town could set up a number of places that they could designate as smoking. I mean, it's almost an encouragement to set up these places if you want to, and many of these places where they want these particular bars or whatever the case may be, they're going to do it. As a result, we're not going to be any further ahead, I don't believe, because a good bill has been gutted.

I know that it's not easy being a member of the government when this happens. But there are some times, hon. member, that you can't come back and say that you're satisfied because you can't be satisfied with this particular bill. I know, Mr. Speaker, that you have to go along, I guess.

I'm surprised because I think there's an opportunity for the government. It was mentioned that there were a couple things that happened. I don't think it could be clearer than when a Conservative convention votes 250 to 4. That's a pretty strong message that they're sending to do something. They're sending it to this caucus and this government. I would've thought cooler heads, the idea that we can't do anything at this stage – the amendment from Edmonton-Gold Bar is that we still can do something about this bill, and we'd be satisfying the grassroots of the Conservative Party and Albertans, generally, with this approach.

I see, as my colleague talked about, the Marlboro place, you know, moving ahead; other provinces are moving ahead. Here we're going to be Alberta, the home of smoking, compared to other places.

The reality is that part of it is the second-hand smoke. I know that the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed is well aware of that. It's second-hand smoke that people, if they want to work in a certain place that's been designated as smoking, are going to have to inhale it or they don't have a job. For many people that's not an option. But we've allowed them to go ahead and do this with this amendment. The Senate – I shouldn't say it. I won't even talk about that. There should be something of some sober second thought here in this Legislature. We still have the opportunity to do this.

Those things have occurred: the Conservative convention and Montana moving ahead. Those are two significant events that have happened since we debated this bill. If, as my colleague said, they care about the grassroots and what the people at the convention are saying, they should be prepared to go back and redo this.

The other point about it beyond the health hazards and the smoking is that what has happened in this province is a checkerboard economically. If you happen to be in one municipality that's outlawed smoking and there's another one close by, that's created some economic hardships for people in that municipality. Well, this is still going to do that. One municipality says: oh well, we're going to have this smoking; we'll vote on this; we're going to designate this as smoking where minors can't come in, and this one and this one. The same thing is still there. We're still going to have a checkerboard. Some businesses where municipalities have done the right thing and banned smoking are going to be still at a disadvantage economically if they live closer to another area because those people can just drive out. Say it's Clareview or Beverly. They can drive out to Sherwood Park or others.

I guess we haven't accomplished what the members set out to do in this bill. I know that we've put on our rose-coloured glasses, and we try to say: well, it's a step in the right direction. I honestly don't believe it is. I honestly believe that this bill has been gutted, and the same things will occur that occurred before because it's going to be an easy thing to designate a public place or workplace or part of a public place where smoking is permitted. So as I said, the check-board is there, Mr. Speaker. I don't see that anything has really changed with this bill.

That's why the amendment should get some serious second thought from members over there, so that we can go back and bring the bill back to the Committee of the Whole. Do what the Conservative grassroots want, do what Albertans want, do what the opposition wants, do what I believe the minister of health and the Minister of Community Development the first time they voted wanted, do what the Member for Calgary-Lougheed wants and have a bill that we can be proud of.

Mr. Speaker, through you to the hon. member, this is not a step in the right direction. It is the status quo as far as I'm concerned. For that reason, I would hope that the members would take a look at this and refer it back to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of reconsidering section 5(3).

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak against the amendment, and there are a number of reasons that I would like to do that. The main reason I would like to speak against the amendment is because I think that the most important thing is to get Bill 201 passed. The reason I think that's important is because just as my city of Red Deer, the city of Edmonton, and the city of Calgary have gone about this thing in stages, I think we need to do that for the rest of Alberta as well.

Red Deer has the law right now where if you have anybody coming into your facility under the age of 18, there's no smoking allowed. I think it's worked in a wonderful, wonderful way because there is no restaurant in Red Deer that you can go into that allows smoking. I suppose there may be a smoking room to the back or to the side which I've never experienced, but in all restaurants when you walk in, there is no smoking. So it's done a marvellous thing for the locations where you'll find children most often. Within the next year I believe that Red Deer is going to move to a total ban. It's going to be something that our city council is going to decide, and I'm very proud of that.

I'd like to see a total ban in the province, but I think it's unfair to expect communities that haven't taken the first step to go all the way to the other end without going through the stages as well. I do remember going to some of our rural areas and into the restaurants and choking on the smoke that's in those restaurants. I'm going to be very glad to see that we take the first step, the first stage, because I think that the majority of restaurants will no longer have smoking. I think it's a good first step. I think we need it.

There are three things that I've always been concerned about. I think that even though this bill doesn't go as far as most of us want it to go, it still goes to that first step that I think is critical and urgent that we pass in this Legislature as soon as possible, and that is to stop the smoking in most workplaces. I know it will follow. I know it will come in time. Red Deer is going to a total smoking ban, I think soon. I think Edmonton is, and I think Calgary is, and I'm not sure who else. I believe that when you take this step, the next step comes. Yes, the next step is the most important step, but I don't think you can get there without going here first. Certainly, it's not fair to allow the communities that we also have to listen to that haven't even taken the first step.

Although I'm not happy that this bill doesn't go all the way, I think it's really important that we pass it the way it is so that we can get started. Who knows? Maybe it will be back again next year, and we'll go all the way, or in two years. Whatever it takes. Right now I think it is important that we pass this bill and get the first step happening and have a healthier workplace for the majority of places even though it's not for all places.

One of my colleagues mentioned in the first debate on Bill 201 that sometimes when you go for all or nothing, you get nothing. I'm not happy to settle for nothing. I want something. I think this is a good first step. That's why I would not vote for this amendment but indeed vote for this bill in third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung on the amendment.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. I am standing to support the amendment as proposed by my hon. colleague for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Why do I do that? As a pharmacist I think we should not be allowing smoking in any public place whatsoever. I think the amendment allows us to bring it back to committee and debate it some more. Also, because the constituents in Edmonton-McClung were about 99 and a half per cent in support of a total smoking ban as represented in their e-mails and letters to me, I am very comfortable making that presentation today.

What we're discussing is an issue of health promotion and disease prevention. We're not discussing what's good for business or what's not good for business. We're not discussing what's good for rural versus urban zones in Alberta. What we're discussing is second-hand smoke. What we're discussing is safety, health, disease prevention, and so on.

I commend the hon. member who sponsored the bill. I commend the brave hon. ministers who supported it in its initial stages of debate and swam against the current and stated their minds. I commend and applaud the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar because now he's allowing them to bring it back to the table and debate it some more, to listen to the grassroots as was previously mentioned.

I would urge all members to support this amendment, and let's debate it some more. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand to speak in favour of this amendment, and I do so, I think, with a certain sense of urgency at the importance of this amendment. The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster said that it was not important. That's not what the constituents of Edmonton-Manning have told me. They have told me very, very clearly that these amendments have indeed made this bill nothing from what it was originally intended to be and originally hoped for by many of the constituents of Edmonton-Manning. Certainly, it does not seem to be what was hoped for by many members of the Progressive Conservative Party.

On Monday, April 11, 2005, there was a report in the Edmonton Journal. Some parts of it I'll quote.

Premier Ralph Klein said Sunday his government will not rush to change its position against a province-wide smoking ban, a day after one group of Conservative party delegates resoundingly backed a resolution demanding much stronger anti-tobacco laws than the government is poised to pass.

"It can't be done this legislative session; it simply is not possible," Klein told reporters at the close of the Conservative party convention. "So it would be another year anyway. I will leave it up to caucus, but I doubt very much if it's going to be raised again."

Mr. Speaker, I think it's clear that this amendment leaves open an option to deal with this, and the Premier was wrong in his statement that was quoted in the newspaper.

Another quote from that article:

"It was approved for 99 per cent of us, and this gives you some food for thought," said one delegate.

Others underlined the importance of the party to heed the delegates' message following a Saturday renewal session in which the party committed to a decentralized form in which top officials take direction from the base.

There again, Mr. Speaker, I believe that it's very important that this broad cross-section, broad multiparty support for a full ban as originally intended in the original bill is what Albertans really desire on this.

I think that in terms of business, realistically what we need is to have a stable business climate where the rules are clear considerably into the future, not where we will be looking to doing something again next year, as the Member for Red Deer-North put forward. That we do this in steps is I think irresponsible to our business owners. It's really, as the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview mentioned, the helter-skelter, hodgepodge network of municipal laws that will create situations where people will go outside of the boundary and leave one business that's one block in and go to one business that's one block out in order to take care of their habit. This can only create problems for those businesses within those areas.

Of course, it's a workplace issue as well. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar mentioned the WCB potential problems, you know, where we will have different jurisdictions having different wellness and different health concerns, really, with the way that they are dealing with the smoking issue.

The necessity of bringing this back to the Committee of the Whole, as envisaged in the amendment, I think is proper and necessary and, indeed, supported, I can only say, by the majority of Albertans. I would ask all members to support this amendment in its entirety and to look toward a much more realistic debate, for the government members of the Progressive Conservative Party to look to their own members and their own members' motion in that it clearly gave them some direction on this matter, and that we move on this as a means to also better the health of all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much, sir. I, too, would speak to the Smoke-free Places Act and the amendments put forward by my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar to take it back to the Committee of the Whole. In my constituency of St. Albert 70 per cent of our constituents supported the original bill, and 30 per cent suggested – and these were fundraising people, and I think this is very important. Fundraising groups in St. Albert were somewhat reluctant to support the bill because they were worried about their nonprofit ability, the ability to raise money for their kids' recreation. I think this is a very risky situation for them, that they would go out and have to raise money and risk their health for the well-being of their children. I think that's one of the reasons we're for the bill being accepted as it was put forth after the adjustments were made to the bill.

I think there's another situation here in terms of the group called Smoke-free St. Albert. This was a group that lobbied hard in the community of St. Albert and brought forth the realization of the changes in the workplace as of July 1, 2005. Their wish was to push on this, and they actually got it approved at city council. Their wish now is to have protection for all citizens applied on a provincial scale. They say that there's no doubt that the research shows that exposure to second-hand smoke is a major health hazard and that eliminating this risk in public and workplaces should be a top priority of this government. The savings to Alberta health care could be enormous. Many other Canadian provinces and other countries have already gone this route, and it's time the Alberta government stopped dragging their feet and did this job for Albertans.

I think that what happened in Ireland is also significant. I say with some pride that the tough Irish smoking ban implemented last year paid off and made the smoking ban the most popular move by the government of that day for all of Ireland.

So I'm speaking in favour of this bill going back to Committee of the Whole, and I think all rational research suggests that for the good of our children and our families this is the way it should happen, and this should take place.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a geriatric nurse who has nursed many people with lung cancer and mouth cancer as they lay dying, I think that further discussion on this bill is certainly warranted. I've had numerous e-mails and contacts through my office with overwhelming support for Bill 201. Since the newspaper articles have been published regarding the grassroots vote by the PC Party at their convention, there have been even more from people, who understood that Committee of the Whole from third reading could go backwards, mainly asking if, in fact, there could be no changes made at this late date.

Discussion in Committee of the Whole could bring out even more facts in support of Bill 201 in its entirety and unamended by the first amendment. I would trust that the mover of the . . .

Hand-held Cellphone Use while Driving

506. Mr. Chase moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce amendments to the Traffic Safety Act to prohibit the use of hand-held cellular phones while operating a motor vehicle.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. members opposite and throughout the House will permit, I have a number of statistics and names, and I would like to refer to the sheet to provide you with the specifics of why I feel that this motion is important. It falls, to me, in the same line as Bill 39 because the intent of this motion is to prevent injuries and accidents and also, with luck, to save lives by putting a greater onus and an efficiency on the person who is operating a vehicle.

Like any new technology cellular wireless phones bring with them a mixed bag of benefits and potential problems. Some of the dangers associated with using cellphones while driving include missing exits and traffic signals and then attempting to overcorrect, failure to yield, failure to adjust speed to conditions, and becoming involved in more near collision incidents with other vehicles or simply running completely off the road. More incidents of speeding, following too closely, and running red lights have been noted with people using cellphones.

A Transport Research Laboratory study in the United Kingdom found that a driver travelling at 70 miles per hour who is using a mobile had a braking distance that was 46 feet longer than one who was not and 33 feet more than that of a drunken driver. Also, just the idea of using a cellphone in itself is distracting. Driving, whether it be in the city or on the highway, takes a great deal of concentration, and if you allow yourself to be distracted by the use of a phone, then obviously you're not being efficient.

The other distraction that cellphones provide is the ringing. That ringing has a jarring effect to it. The response is almost the equivalent of Pavlov's dog. You have this immediate need to answer that ringing or at least to turn it off, and that can distract you and basically shock you. Phone calls are interactive and draw the driver's attention. Sometimes we wonder when we're driving the highway how we got from one place to another. It seems at the time that driving does not take a whole lot of mental capacity, but the reality is that if you slip for the slightest part of a second, you can be involved in or cause an accident.

The people who are most at risk are the young, and they're partly at risk because of the fact that they're just learning to drive, but they are the most likely to be involved in accidents caused by cellphones. We know that drivers aged 16 to 24 use cellphones more than any other age group, and as a result they are more likely than older, more experienced drivers to be involved in collisions that result in death. That information comes from the Insurance Bureau of Canada.

Learning to drive requires a person to do many things at once [such as] steering, braking, shifting gears and watching for traffic . . .

When a novice driver adds a distraction like talking on a cellular phone, a task that in itself requires variable levels of cognitive effort, the results can be disastrous.

That quote comes from an ongoing study by University of Calgary associate professor Jeffrey Caird. Jeffrey's work was acknowledged by the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation in this weekend's Herald articles. Jeffrey Caird is the director of the Cognitive Ergonomics Research Laboratory at the University of Calgary, and part of his studying equipment is a driving simulator. His study, which is currently under way, is the first of its kind to focus on novice drivers and will have its results issued as of this August.

The younger generation is also fond of text messaging, which is extremely dangerous while driving. It's bad enough to carry on a conversation, but if you're trying to dial and send off messages while driving, then the amount of distraction is extreme.

Studies show evidence of accidents due to cellphone use. According to an article by the CBC, the laboratory of transport safety at the University of Montreal found that cellphone users have a higher crash risk than non-users. The North Carolina Highway Safety Research Center found drivers using cellphones nearly twice as likely to be involved in rear-end collisions. A 2002 study by the Harvard Center for Risk Analysis, part of the Harvard University School of Public Health, found that drivers using cellphones cause 1.5 million accidents annually, resulting in 2,600 deaths and 570,000 injuries. A similar study in California by the California Highway Patrol found that at least 4,699 accidents were blamed on drivers using cellphones and that those accidents killed 31 people and injured 2,786. The study period was only nine months. If you project those rates, the total number of accidents involving cellphones could be well over 6,000 for the year.

Listening and responding to relatively complex messages as might occur when using a hands-free cellular telephone to conduct business or deal with important domestic issues was found to significantly degrade driving performance in a series of driving tasks. My motion puts forward hand held, but there is also distraction associated with hands free.

Medical opinion is in favour of the ban. Canada's top medical journal is calling for laws restricting the use of phones while driving, arguing that it's, in quotes, a no-brainer that using one behind the wheel is risky. According to the National Post, the Canadian Medical Association Journal calls for the ban. This goes back to the year 2001.

I won't go through all the countries that have banned cellphones, but let's just say that at the beginning we go to Australia; in the middle, Norway; ending up with Turkmenistan, United Kingdom, and Zimbabwe. These countries have all done what I am recommending we do beginning tonight in the Assembly.

I am hoping that the medium, in this case myself, does not get in the way of the messaging. This is an important motion. To me it will not only reduce accidents, but it has the potential of saving lives, a number of those lives being young people who we would like to see productive and continue on to our age and, obviously, to old age. With that, I encourage debate and discussion.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased tonight to participate in the debate on Motion 506. This is an important debate because in many ways it tends to differentiate those who believe that government should be regulating more and more individuals' lives and freedoms and those, like myself, who feel that individuals need to accept responsibility for their actions.

Mr. Speaker, technology advances are moving at a rate that this Assembly, attempting to pass laws, will never be able to keep up with. Technology is going to continue to move forward, and we must embrace it, and we as legislators must be very cautious when creating laws surrounding such technology. Our motives might be in the right spot, but the outcomes we get from these laws may not be what we expect. This motion, which is to prohibit the use of hand-held cellular phones while driving, gives us a perfect example of such a situation. There is no doubt in my mind that there have been people who may have caused accidents because they were driving with a cellphone in their hands, but there have also been accidents caused by people who were thinking about their day at work, others who may have been trying to quiet their children in the back seat, and still others because they were just simply daydreaming and not paying attention.

One has to ask: where does common sense prevail? Recently I was driving down Crowchild Trail in Calgary and noticed this young lady passing me who was talking on the cellphone, driving with the other hand, and holding a cigarette between her fingers. She was speeding as well because she passed me. However, I caught up to her at the next light, and while stopped, I noticed that she was also drinking a soda. As she pulled away from the stoplight, I also realized that not only was she talking on the phone, smoking a cigarette, having a sip of soda pop; she was doing all of this while driving a stick shift, and I thought: that is multitasking. I just wished that she was doing it on something other than driving. My point here is that no law would protect people from such stupidity. It would, however, prohibit legitimate cellphone use, which I will deal with later.

Mr. Speaker, science does not agree that banning the use of hand-held cellular phones will effectively eliminate the dangers of driver inattention. Furthermore, according to scientific studies driving and talking on a phone is not necessarily dangerous because of the physical act of holding the phone but, rather, from the mental act of having a conversation. To legislate against the physical act of holding the phone, then, seems to be somewhat counterproductive.

This view is supported by both the Canadian Automobile Association and the Alberta Motor Association. Their recommendations about driver distractions state that legislation that only bans hand-held cellphones is discouraged as research shows that the intensity or nature of the conversation is the primary cause of driver error. The associations do suggest, however, that the use of cellphones is dangerous while driving and further recommend that drivers should pull off the road and stop in a safe location before making or answering a cellular phone call. Additionally, they proposed that voice mail services for cellular phone subscribers be promoted as a means of eliminating the need to answer phone calls while driving. Mr. Speaker, these recommendations are consistent with the views of Alberta Infrastructure and Transportation, who strongly encourages drivers to wait until they can safely pull over to use their cellphone or have a passenger make or answer calls.

Cellular phones have become a very effective tool for police in recent years, and according to the Solicitor General, police caution that they receive many calls from motorists using cellphones who report traffic safety issues, including impaired drivers, and they would not like to see legislation of this nature hinder this current practice. If members from the Liberal caucus would like to know more about this, I suggest that they speak to my colleague from Edmonton-Castle Downs, who has himself made this type of call to police from a cellphone.

Mr. Speaker, these are the different views on this topic. Technology is both a gift and a curse, and as legislators we must find a balance between practicality and safety. We must also base legislation we create on scientific evidence. The bottom line for Motion 506 is that science does not support the claim that the use of hand-held cellphones is a greater cause of accidents than any other driver distraction.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw all members' attention to some pieces of information that I find helpful in understanding this issue. There is a lot of literature written on this topic by many different organizations like the AMA, the CAA, Transport Canada, the Insurance Corporation of B.C., and the Independent Insurance Brokers Association of Alberta. They all come to the same conclusion. The literature from all sources urges the government to follow those conclusions instead of going against them.

I think we should look at urging government to address all driver distraction. As well, we should urge the government to continue to conduct public awareness and educational campaigns regarding driver distraction, which includes cellphone use. Even better, we could urge the government to create more of a focus on this topic in driver education programs and driver licence examinations. Maybe government should even examine whether insurance coverage is breached if it is clearly proven that an accident was caused by cellphone use although I have my doubts that this could ever be proven.

An unfortunate part of life is that accidents do happen. More unfortunate is that most of these accidents are preventable since the majority are caused by human error. As Conservatives we believe in educating people and trusting that they will make the right decisions. Unfortunately, sometimes they do not, and people suffer as a result. But we learn from these instances, and we pass on these tragic stories and hope that others will learn from them as well. It's called living in the real world and not in a bubble.

I don't agree with the policy of legislating people to the point where they are so constricted and restricted that they can't hurt themselves or others. According to this philosophy the best way to avoid accidents in vehicles is to prohibit driving altogether, and perhaps the best way to eliminate danger generally is to never leave home. We must come up with more acceptable strategies to address the root of the problem.

We should be prudent when making legislation around technology, and Motion 506 is not prudent. In fact, it goes against reason and science, and that is why I urge all of my colleagues in joining in voting against this motion.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's disappointing that the Member for Calgary-West was so negative with regard to the particular cellphone piece. He says that, in fact, people should be monitoring or governing themselves with common sense, that government has too much control of their lives. Hence, today we passed a smoking bylaw. We did not leave it up to the public to decide for themselves whether smoking is hazardous or healthy, but instead we passed another amendment here as well. [interjection] That's right, that the members, in fact, voted for.

We also did in this session crystal meth with regard to that.

Seatbelts are another thing that's legislated. People would be able to make up their decision on that, but again we have a law that governs safe driving and mandatory seatbelt use.

You know, we talk about drinking and driving. People still do it. Common sense doesn't prevent them from doing that.

This particular piece too. I think that people can in fact have safe driving as well as doing hands-free. Hands-free is the key, not a total ban of cellphone use within the vehicle, for being able to use it in emergency cases, which will prohibit the police from using it as well or, as the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs mentioned, from phoning on a vehicle that was driving erratically. I, myself, have used that same apparatus, a cellphone, to phone on a vehicle that was being driven while impaired.

I think it's absolutely a necessity. In fact, it's a communication device that has been given to us, and it's to be used responsibly. We can use it hands free. There's new technology, which is Bluetooth, that's out there, which allows the individual to use it and still keep constant communication while having both hands on the wheel. Watching people drive was mentioned by the member across. I do it daily coming to work. People are either putting on make-up, they're catching breakfast, they're talking on the cellphone, or they're doing both and driving with their knee. It's amazing how these people don't get into accidents.

Do we have to have a law that puts two hands on the wheel? I don't think we need to go that far, but as I said a good piece of it is keeping people and their attention. They've got the radio going. They've got the cellphone going. People have a conversation with themselves. Unless they've got a hands-free thing, you've got to wonder what's going on there. But I think, again, this would certainly speak to the safety issues.

Edmonton is getting busier by the year with economic prosperity coming. Fort McMurray, Calgary, all surrounding areas are in fact having an influx of people. So there's more traffic coming into these cities and surrounding areas. Now, that's more people to have to contend with. I think that people need to be fully aware of their surrounding environment and what's going on. As well as the increase in traffic flow, you've got to worry about the weather.

One less thing to worry about would be the cellphone. If a person finds it absolutely necessary to talk on a cellphone, again, as I mentioned, there is hands-free technology out there relatively cheap. I, myself, would be inclined to in fact stop using the cellphone on the earpiece and go right to the hands-free if this law was passed.

I admit it. I'm one of those people that does occasionally drive and talk on the phone too. I'm not saying that I'm perfect. I do in fact find myself able to do it, but I would be far more comfortable if everyone was off the cellphone and had one hundred per cent concentration while driving. You can't protect yourself from someone coming from behind you as they're reaching down dialing a number, and you're sitting at a red light, and you get rear-ended while they're trying to make that phone call or text message.

Technology is becoming increasingly convenient, but unfortunately so are some of the nuisances and distractions. They also have digital dash DVD players now that take the driver's attention away from the road scene and in fact put them right there on the newest DVD that they can play right on their in-car dash. Now, I realize that police are pulling people over for that particular distraction. That is, I would argue, just as distracting if not more distracting than a cellphone.

You have the rings going off. You've got people in the car. Maybe there could be four or five conversations going. That's all distracting for the driver, but again they could have hands-free, and I stress hands-free.

I think it would amiss to not give this good consideration. Perhaps the member from across the way isn't aware that the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation is in fact quoted with a study, that they are looking into or at least talking about the ban of cellphone use. Maybe it's because it has come from across the floor that the idea isn't palatable. I would hope that that wouldn't be the case. I think the idea has got good merit regardless of who puts it forward. If it's going to benefit the public and a safe and a good environment for driving, then I think it should be explored, not just because it came from one opposition member or another. I think that's quite petty, and the public is not served best in that particular way of dealing with things.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I think I would urge the other individuals out here to support this particular piece that is before us. In fact, it would come with more education. He certainly mentioned about education within driver's ed, having people in fact explicitly giving a particular piece with that driver component about the pitfalls of cellphone use.

Again, I would urge the fellow speakers who are coming behind me as well as those maybe not able to get up to speak to this tonight to consider it and the merits about it and not just because science or the studies don't say that it's of merit. There are other countries in the world here that are in fact recognizing that it is a distraction. It's an idea whose time has come. I guess the idea is now to recognize it and ban cellphone use before more people are hurt or injured. We talk about the busy highways, in fact trying to twin them because of the congestion. Cellphone bans would certainly help with that as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise this evening and offer my remarks regarding Motion 506, which urges the government to prohibit Albertans the use of their hand-held cellular phones while driving. I acknowledge the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity for his intention on traffic safety.

From what I understand, this idea is not new in this House. In fact, in 2002 the former member for Lacombe-Stettler introduced an identical idea in the form of a private member's bill which, if passed, would have banned the use of hand-held cellular phones during the operation of a motor vehicle. But this Legislature at that time felt that such legislation was flawed from the beginning.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that the use of hand-held cellular phones by careless drivers has caused traffic accidents, some of which have been extremely tragic. However, I also realize that passing laws every time we have an issue in our hands is not the best or the most appropriate way for us to govern. It is very reactionary for us just to jump on the bandwagon and argue that Alberta needs legislation banning cellular phone use in motor vehicles because it can cause accidents.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, I agree that talking on hand-held cellular phones while not paying attention to traffic can be distracting and can cause accidents. By the same token, drivers do many other things while driving, including playing with the radio or talking to their passengers, which can be as distracting as conversation on the cellular phone. However, nobody has suggested that we make those activities illegal.

Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but there simply isn't any sound proof that cellular phones constitute a major cause of traffic accidents in the province or elsewhere. No doubt, there have been studies that have found that cellular phones can hinder one's reaction time because they tend to take away some of the driver's attention.

One of the more recent studies on this particular subject came out from the University of Utah just this year. Its conclusion was rather surprising. It found that the reaction time of a 20-year-old driver with a cellular phone was comparable to the reaction time of a 70-year-old driver without a cellular phone. Concerning, Mr. Speaker, perhaps. However, reading further, the study also finds that hands-free phones were just as distracting to drivers as hand-held phones and that any conversation that the driver may be involved in, be it on the phone or with a passenger, is likely to impair his or her driving abilities.

Does this mean that we should ban passengers from vehicles since they assuredly could distract the driver or cause a collision? Perhaps we should also consider banning radios, CD players from vehicles because they, too, can be distracting to drivers.

Mr. Herard: Don't forget seniors.

Mr. Cao: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont also talks about seniors driving too.

Maybe we should also ban drive-throughs as they promote eating and driving, which can be as distracting as talking on a cellphone. So where would this end, Mr. Speaker?

At the end of the day the fact is that we simply don't know how many collisions in Alberta have been caused by cellular phone use. According to the Alberta traffic collision statistics report last published in 2003 by the department of transportation, the leading causes of driver's actions contributing to casualty collisions in the province included following too closely, running off the road, turning left across oncoming traffic. Nowhere does the report mention categories like distracted by cellular phone or was talking to the wife or that playing on the radio caused a collision.

With that in mind, Mr. Speaker, it is very easy for us to sit here and say: well, here's a potential problem; we really don't know how bad a problem it is, but we'll pass legislation just in case. If the government operated in this manner, I doubt we'd be allowed to do anything, let alone own a cellphone or operate motor vehicles. If we don't have hard evidence suggesting that cellphone use is a major cause of accidents, I believe that banning the use of cellular phones exclusively, without looking to other distractions, would be rather biased and shortsighted.

Having said this, Mr. Speaker, I am also of the opinion that Albertans don't need another law telling them what to do. I believe that the majority of Albertans are responsible drivers who recognize that one should be careful when using a hand-held cellular phone or pursuing another activity while driving. There is a law against undue care in driving.

I trust that the majority of Albertans do drive responsibly, pay attention to driving conditions, refrain from using their phones or other devices in situations when their undivided attention is most required. Albertans don't need this government constantly looking over their shoulder and telling them what they can and cannot do. I trust their judgment to do the right things, and I don't think that the poor judgment of a few should spoil it for the rest of us.

I would support this motion if it just urged the government to investigate or to explore the use of cellular phones while operating a vehicle, and indeed I read that the ministry of transportation has been doing something in that regard. Therefore, I encourage the member to withdraw this motion.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate having an opportunity to speak briefly on Motion 506. I find this motion intriguing, and I appreciate as well the comments from the Member for Calgary-Fort, the very latter part of his comments; that is, that he would consider supporting this motion if it, indeed, urged the government to further investigate this problem of people using handsets while driving. You know, I sort of see the spirit of this motion as being that. Thus, I do in fact support this motion as it's worded.

I think that every time new technology is introduced into our society – perhaps I'm showing my age to suggest that, you know, hand-held devices are a new technology, but it's still emerging as to how we use it in our society. In fact, we can see cellphones evolving literally by the month with new sorts of additions to entice people to use them, with cameras and text messaging and whatnot.

So, you know, still looking at it as a reasonably new technology, it is, in fact, our duty in this Legislature to look for responsible ways for that technology to be used in our society. I object to this categorical idea that "less government is better, and don't tell us what to do, by golly, and away we go" because, of course, that goes against the very existence of this Legislature in the first place as being a place to put forward responsible ways by which people can live their lives, in this case using handsets and using cellphones in vehicles.

I think perhaps we have somewhat of a dearth of information, specifically here in Alberta, that might suggest how many accidents are specifically caused by people using cellphones while driving, but we can almost guarantee that the insurance industry is gathering that information in a comprehensive manner because, of course, every accident that takes place is a financial issue for insurance companies. You know, it's an easy thing to track in a way because, in fact, if you have your hand-held device and you are in an accident and that phone call is terminated, then you know exactly what that person was doing up to the point where the accident took place, and indeed the line could still be on.

So it's not any different from any other investigation of an accident where an officer can lay the charge of undue care and attention. What we are doing, simply, with something like this is focusing that issue of undue care and attention and targeting probably something that does in fact cause a lot of accidents on our roads today.

I mean, I can use my own anecdotal evidence, watching for people who are doing things on the road that they shouldn't be doing. If you watch carefully – and I would invite all members and those listening here this evening to just watch. Watch when you see an infraction on the road for the next week or so, and just make a note of whether that person has their cellphone up to their ear at the same time. I think you'll find it quite startling that for lots and lots of infractions, lane changing and not taking a look and speeding and whatnot, those people have cellphones stuck to their ears at the same time.

Myself, as a bicycle commuter I make a special point of watching for the whites of the drivers' eyes as I'm negotiating the streets of Edmonton because, of course, a small accident in a car with a bicycle can be fatal. Again, I see more often than not that someone who does sort of a grossly negligent lane change or whatever will have a cellphone attached to their ear.

You know, enforcement of a ban like this would be difficult, but one of the things about laws is that when people realize or feel as though a law is just, then they will police themselves. I'm starting to see an increasing amount of people who will choose not to drive and use their cellphone at the same time because, you know, it's becoming increasingly obvious and apparent that it does take away your abilities to concentrate on the road, especially in urban areas. I think all of us, if we are honest inside our hearts, would realize and we would say that that is true.

You know, there are a number of studies. One study I found very interesting, not a study, I should say, but a law, in the otherwise quite libertarian state of Colorado in the United States. They have a graduated driving licence system. In other words, people who pick up their licence, for the first couple of years, usually young people, are only allowed to drive during the day or not drive on certain freeways, et cetera, et cetera, and they're also not allowed to use cellphones for that first two-year period while driving.

So, you know, there are a lot of different ways to approach this, and I think that that is an innovative and interesting possibility. They've had quite a high degree of success in targeting the sector of the population that has the most accidents – and that's why they pay the most insurance – which is the people from 16 to 24 years of age. I mean, this is a way to perhaps deal with this as well.

Let's not forget – and I don't want to go on all night about this – that across this entire country 3,032 Canadians died in 2001 as a result of traffic accidents. I mean, the rate of carnage on our roads is something that we seem to take for granted because, like, it just happens all the time, and, you know, it's so sad for the people who are losing their family members and whatnot. But until we start to address this carnage on the road and this loss to our society in a systematic way, in a responsible way in provincial Legislatures across this country and in the federal Legislature, then I really don't think that we are doing our jobs.

To lose 3,000 or 3 and a half thousand people per year across the country on the road is simply abhorrent, and it's immoral, unacceptable. I believe that investigating the possibility of limiting the use of handsets and cellphones is a step in the right direction. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Motion 506, which pertains to urging the government to introduce amendments to the Traffic Safety Act to prohibit the use of hand-held cellphones while operating a motor vehicle. The objective of this motion is to prevent collisions on the road, to make the province safer for everyone.

Lately there has been a lot of talk about the dangers of cellphone use in automobiles while driving. A growing debate has arisen concerning whether the use of cellphones by drivers leads to more accidents. Several studies have shown that driving while talking on the phone increases the risk of a collision. Drivers have difficulty multitasking, and it poses a significant distraction, the leading cause of a number of accidents. These studies also have found no meaningful advantage for hands-free phones over hand-held phones. However, whether it is hand held or hands free, the issue lies in the multitasking thinking process that, apparently, increases the risk of a collision. The more heated the conversation, the greater the risk. I, for one, can attest to driving while under the influence of a cellphone, and there have been numerous situations where being on the phone could have caused a negative situation on the road.

Cellphone use makes life more convenient, no doubt about this, and safe, no doubt. Clearly, there are benefits of having a cellphone in the vehicle in case of emergency, but it should be turned off and available only if need be. People can co-ordinate their schedule with friends and families, parents can check up on their children, stranded motorists can call a tow truck or get help in an emergency, and motorists frequently use cellphones to report accidents and fires to the police.

More than 40 countries have restricted the use of hand-held cellphones in automobiles. On April 1, year 2003, Newfoundland became the first and only province in Canada to do so. More than 95 per cent of the population had supported such a ban prior to its implementation. Over a dozen countries, such as Australia, Brazil, Spain, and Switzerland, prohibit the use of hand-held cellphones while driving. Israel, Japan, Portugal, and Singapore prohibit all cellphone usage while driving. Drivers in the Czech Republic, France, the Netherlands, and the UK may face fines if they cause crashes while using cellphones. Drivers in the UK and Germany can lose automobile insurance coverage if they cause a crash while using a cellphone.

Mr. Speaker, I support a total ban on using cellphones while driving automobiles, with no exception, even if stopped at an intersection or in a traffic jam. Brief conversations, in my opinion, also should be banned, such as a motorist asking a caller to hold while he pulls over. There would be no exemptions for emergency services, although transport officials will consult on such details.

I urge all the members of the Assembly to support this motion. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to have the opportunity to join the debate on Motion 506 tonight. I guess the old saying that there are no new ideas, just new politicians, holds some truth. I believe this idea was last debated in the House in 2002. It was voted down at that time, and I hope it will be voted down again tonight.

My reasons for not supporting this motion are many, but I first want to clarify that I certainly support the hon. member's intentions. I assume that the hon. member's intention was to see a reduction in the number of traffic accidents that occur due to drivers being distracted by the use of hand-held cellular phones.

Mr. Speaker, it's very important to look at the facts, to avoid being distracted by perception only. I want to thank my researcher, whom I share with four other MLAs, for getting the facts for me, just the facts.

Traffic accidents cost Albertans millions of dollars each year and hundreds of lives. Without question we need to be diligent in our efforts to eliminate traffic accidents, particularly those that are preventable, but we need to start by separating perception from reality. In a 2002 study completed by the Traffic Injury Research Foundation, it was reported that half of the survey respondents felt very strongly that legislation was needed to ban the use of all cellphones while driving. It was also reported that respondents felt that using a cellphone while driving was more dangerous than poor road conditions or vehicle defects. This, Mr. Speaker, is the perception out there.

In the same study it quotes a study done in the U.S. in 2001 that analyzed the causes of 32,000 traffic crashes. Only 8.3 per cent of accidents were attributed to driver distraction. Of those, only 1.5 per cent could be attributed to the use or dialing of a cellular phone. Adjusting the radio or changing CDs accounted for 11.4 per cent of the same accidents, and being distracted by other passengers accounted for 10.9 per cent. So to put it in other terms, out of the 32,000 traffic accidents investigated, less than 40 of them could be attributed to cellphone use. Over 300 of them could be attributed to adjusting the radio and changing CDs.

Mr. Speaker, this is exactly what I speak of when I state that perception does not meet reality. The reality is that changing CDs and being distracted by other people in your vehicle are causing many more traffic accidents than using a cellular phone, yet about half of the Canadian population believe that using a hand-held cellphone is much more dangerous.

Mr. Speaker, you can't legislate against every single distraction. It wouldn't make sense. As soon as you prohibit one, you have to prohibit all of them. You can't legislate against people changing their radio or CD without legislating against talking to another passenger in the vehicle.

There are many distractions that have been identified by various studies. In addition to the aforementioned, looking for an address, looking at a map, programming a GPS device, adjusting climate controls, smoking, drinking coffee, and even sneezing have been identified as causes of motor vehicle accidents. Some people have even been seen shaving, doing their nails, reading the newspaper, changing clothes, and other very distracting actions while driving. Again, we cannot make separate laws for each and every one of these possible events. As soon as we prohibited one, some drivers would just find another. That's why we already have a law in place in Alberta that fines drivers who are driving carelessly.

As I've mentioned before, I am a strong believer in education programs that promote wellness and injury prevention. This Assembly might find it interesting to know that traffic accidents, while quite costly, are still not the most frequent preventable injury in Alberta. In the 1997 Alberta injury data report created by the Alberta Centre for Injury Control & Research, it quite clearly states that falls are the number one cause of preventable injury. Between '93 and '97 over 50,000 Albertans were hospitalized because of a preventable fall. During that same period just over 16,000 Albertans were hospitalized due to motor vehicle related incidents. I point this out not to say that motor vehicle accidents are not a problem; they certainly are. But we have other preventable injuries that are even more of a problem.

When considering the hon. member's motion, I had to think that we are not looking at the big picture. Preventable injuries are an epidemic in Alberta. Focusing our efforts on outlawing an action that is not even one of the major contributors to traffic accidents seems to be very short-sighted. I would akin it to us banning people from using ladders because often people fall off them, causing injury. As I pointed out earlier, if we begin to ban one distracting action, we should too be banning other distractions, especially those that have proven to be more distracting than talking on a hand-held cellular, such as changing CDs.

Passing this motion would be an example of poor lawmaking, and as it has been pointed out in this Assembly on many occasions, we are not in the business of making bad laws. I applaud the hon. member for his intentions. I share them and know that he will provide valuable input in future discussions regarding the general theme of reducing preventable injuries. But unless we are willing to legislate against all distractions while driving, I would encourage all members not to support this motion.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will try to keep my comments brief. I find this the height of hypocrisy, quite frankly, when I listen to some of the comments coming from the other side. The Member for Red Deer-North just spoke about the fact that this bill was debated in this House two years ago and that it's inappropriate for us to be debating it again, yet we've had several examples in the last week, including one this afternoon with the smoking bill, where members opposite were suggesting that they didn't get what they wanted this time but that they'll be back next year. How is it any different?

An Hon. Member: You're right.

Mr. R. Miller: Absolutely.

Unfortunately, I cannot help but think that my colleague from Calgary-Varsity was correct when he suggested that, in fact, the opposition we're hearing might be due to the fact that this motion is coming from this side of the House. Given the fact that we saw some tremendous co-operation last week on a bill dealing with crystal meth, which again didn't go as far as had been hoped and is going to be coming back to the House at some future date to hopefully extend it and accomplish everything that was hoped to have been done with it in the first place, I'm just astounded, quite frankly.

I'm going to suggest that if we were to believe the arguments that we're hearing from the other side tonight, we would not have passed the smoking ban tonight, we wouldn't have a seat belt law in this province, we wouldn't have a bicycle helmet law for youth in this province right now, we wouldn't have PCHIP legislation, we wouldn't have passed the crystal meth bill, and on and on and on. At some point you have to do what you know is right, and I think everybody in this room in their heart knows that banning hand-held cellphone use in a car is right.

I'm going to use some anecdotal evidence here. I know that anecdotal evidence is not necessarily something that some members pay a whole lot of attention to, but quite frankly we're not experts in this Assembly. We can all find websites that will support our argument, whichever side of it we happen to be on. There isn't one person in here who hasn't seen examples of cellphone use that scared the bejabbers out of them.

I'm just going to cite one that I saw last year while travelling in Salt Lake City. It's interesting that this comment about how cellphone use hasn't been proven to be any more dangerous came out of Salt Lake City. Here I am in Salt Lake City – and I'll admit it; I was speeding. I was doing 135 kilometres an hour, which is a little over the speed limit down there; not much over, mind you, because their limits are higher. A Cadillac Escalade passed me. He was doing about 160, in one hand a cellphone and in the other hand a hamburger. Now, you guys have all seen examples like that.

I know we can't legislate against stupidity, but the bottom line is this. Given that there are many people in this room who travel back and forth on highway 2 between Edmonton and Calgary, it might well have been one of you that I saw, but I saw somebody the other day reading a newspaper as they were driving to Calgary. I mean, these sorts of things happen. But the bottom line is this: every day you will see not one person reading a newspaper or not one person with a pet on their lap or not one person changing a child's diaper as they're driving, but you will see literally hundreds of people distracted while they're driving because they've got a cellphone in their hands.

I mean, we can all find examples of people doing stupid things when they're driving, but this is one that we all see time and time and time again. So it's gotten to the point, I'm afraid, where it's out of hand, and at some point legislators do have to act. Legislators do have to get involved because, quite frankly, people just aren't getting the message.

The Member for Calgary-Fort talked about accidents having been caused by people turning left in front of traffic or unsafe lane changes or driving too fast. Unfortunately, the stats aren't kept as to why they're turning in front of traffic or why they're changing lanes unsafely. Very often, I suspect, it's because they're talking on the phone. Those stats aren't kept. That information has come out from the other side tonight.

So just to suggest that because this has been dealt with previously, it's wrong for us to be talking about it in here again tonight I think is really, quite frankly, a sad comment. I just can't help but think that the real reason is because the motion is coming from this side of the House.

The other thing – and somebody pointed it out already – is this: this is simply asking the government to look at the situation. We're not even talking about passing a bill. We're just saying: give it some more thought, give it some more study, and if in fact it's true that there hasn't been enough information looked at yet, maybe it's time that we did that. That's all we're asking the government to do: some sober second thought. Perhaps two years ago we made a bad decision. Maybe it's time to look at it again. That's all we're asking to do. So I don't think there's anything wrong with that.

I will take my seat quickly because I know that there are at least two other members that wish to speak to this. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise and join the debate on Motion 506. Motorists on Alberta's roadways who do not pay proper attention to the road when they are driving are a hazard to other motorists. Speaking on a cellphone, tuning radio stations, eating food, drinking coffee, shaving, and even watching movies as more vehicles are being equipped with DVD players cause a driver to be distracted.

While looking into this issue, it's quite apparent that studies are unable to confirm or deny that hand-held cellphones are any different than the countless other distractions drivers are faced with each and every time they get into their vehicles. When I say that studies being done are unable to come to a consensus as to whether there is a concrete relationship between hand-held cellphones and collisions, I don't mean that the cellphone industry is conducting studies saying that driving and talking on the phone is safe.

The studies being done are from independent and generally unbiased groups. These organizations are just trying to find out whether using hand-held cellphones while driving increases the risk of collisions enough to warrant a separate piece of legislation. Insurance associations, national safety councils, and universities and colleges from countries across the world cannot reach an agreement on whether banning hand-held cellphones while driving would be effective in reducing collisions. While almost all the studies completed on cellphone use and driving indicate that cellphones can be a distraction, they are just not conclusive enough for us to enact special legislation to address hand-held cellphones.

Mr. Speaker, there is already a law in place to deal with motorists who are not operating their vehicles with proper care and attention. Charging drivers with undue care and attention is an option our law enforcements do have if they believe a motorist is operating their vehicle without the attention necessary. If drivers are not paying attention and weaving all over the road, the police need to pull them over and give these people tickets, and the police will pull over these individuals who aren't paying attention regardless of whether the driver's attention is being distracted by a hand-held cellphone, radio, or DVD player.

I don't think we should put forward special legislation against one specific type of distraction when that type of distraction still hasn't been proven to be any different than all the other forms of activities that drivers do when they're on the road. I think it would be a very slippery slope to start legislating certain types of behaviour because they are perceived to be more dangerous.

I do not feel that it's this government's job to legislate against common sense. Pulling over and having a long conversation on a cellphone makes sense, and many Albertans do so. We should be encouraging Albertans to do this more often and increasing the use of hands-free devices as well, not dictating to them what they have to do when it hasn't been universally proven to be any more dangerous than having children fighting in the back seat of a car. Albertans should have options like hands-free devices brought to their attention. As responsible as Albertans tend to be, I am confident that the majority of Albertans will make a common-sense decision to use hands-free devices more often.

Since it's already illegal to be operating a motor vehicle with undue care and attention, creating another law would just be a process of redundancy. Instead, we should be encouraging the creation of more awareness campaigns to help educate drivers about the increased risks associated with talking on a cellphone, reading, or eating while driving a motor vehicle. We certainly see through other vehicle safety campaigns that drivers do take notice and change their behaviours once they are aware of the risks associated with their actions.

AADAC, Mothers Against Drunk Driving, and various other agencies have been doing an excellent job in Alberta educating drivers about the danger and risks associated with drunk driving. I think the education and awareness campaigns put forward around drunk driving have done an excellent job in helping to reduce the number of deaths and injuries on Alberta's roads by reducing the number of people who choose to engage in drunk driving. What wouldn't be as effective as increasing the awareness of the dangers of drunk driving would be to create an additional piece of legislation stating that it's illegal to drive your vehicle while intoxicated with shots of vodka. Putting forth such a piece of legislation would be equivalent to Motion 506, which is redundant in nature.

Creating awareness and reducing the number of collisions on Alberta's roads is something we should look into doing more often. I see great benefit in having drivers become more aware of the risks associated with talking on a cellphone and driving their vehicle, but it's also just as important to make drivers aware of the risks to them and other people on the road when they engage in other distracting practices.

I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-Varsity for bringing this motion forward, increasing our awareness, but I don't see the benefit of encouraging the government to amend the Traffic Safety Act to specifically indicate that hand-held cellphones are a distraction. This motion is encouraging redundant laws, and I feel that Albertans will feel that creating redundant laws would not be a very efficient use of our time and the time of the government employees. I feel that the best way to address improving safety on Alberta's roads is through awareness campaigns, not the creation of more laws which are very similar to the laws we already have in place.

I will not be supporting this motion, and I encourage all of the members to do the same. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't going to get up on this bill because I thought it was fairly straightforward. I commend the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity in wanting to bring this forward, but I can't help but think that there's some road I can't remember that's paved with good intentions.

My first question to every member in here is: how many people – and we all talk about all of these things, knowing in our heart that it's not right – can stand up and say, "I don't drive with a cellphone?" I think the responsibility of driving is serious. It's important. There are far too many deaths on the highway, but the fact of the matter is that 90 per cent of all accidents are preventable. They're from undue care and reckless driving, and there are, as mentioned several times, laws out there regarding that.

I also feel that we've got far too many laws on the books already, so I have to ask the question. If we really are concerned about safety – and this always seems to be the intention of government in its bills and its regulations: safety, safety, safety – well, then, perhaps we should ban vehicles altogether and go back to horses. There weren't so many deaths. Or go back to the '20s and '30s and perhaps lower the speed limit to 30 miles per hour. How many accidents are fatal over 30 and under 30? There are many things that we can look at.

The fact of the matter is that we're supposed to be responsible when we're behind the wheel of a vehicle, and I expect each and every person to be that way, and we have laws in place. So I'll sit down, and I'll vote against this motion, though I understand the good intentions of it.

Thank you.

9:00

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity to close debate.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As to individual responsibility this province sees fit to set age limits for voting, driving, drinking, et cetera. We legislate seat belts. We legislate helmets. So we do actively intervene when we consider either age a restriction or safety a concern.

As to embracing technology, yes, let's look at technology, but as the member behind noticed, there is the possibility of hands-free cellphones.

In terms of multitasking I would suggest that the least appropriate place for multitasking is behind the wheel of a car.

As to the idea of the difficulty primarily being with the conversation that's being held on the phone versus the phone itself, I would suggest that if you weren't holding the phone, you might not be carrying on the conversation.

The notion of reporting traffic problems: you can do that once you've pulled over.

Education and public awareness are important components and for this motion to be successful would be a necessary part of the promotion of this motion, but they're not exclusive to active law enforcement.

The idea that came from the Calgary-West MLA that says that this goes against reason and science: I would suggest that the hon. member appears not to have heard the scientific information and research that I've provided.

Obviously, we need exceptions for specific groups, such as law enforcement officers, and that could be part of the motion when brought to law.

Extreme arguments like the best way to avoid driving accidents is to stay at home add nothing to the debate. Exaggerations or comparisons like banning radios and CDs are far removed from the active participation involved in dialling and text messaging.

How many deaths and accident statistics does the minister need before acknowledging the threat that cellphones pose and passing similar legislation? Other governments have done the investigation and research. It's about time this government recognized the value of other countries' studies rather than claiming that Albertans deserve special rights or exemptions due to their obvious or professed superiority. Alberta is already perceived by many as having a maverick mentality, which is different from rugged individualism. Alberta laws prevent passengers from riding in the box of a pickup truck because of the perceived danger. I would suggest that some of these ministers opposite would find that a restriction of an individual's freedom. This government is prepared to limit a number of rights when it suits them, such as access to information.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North recognized the risk of crystal meth to young people. I would suggest that in terms of injury prevention and death, we would be more likely to save young people with this legislation than by keeping young people off the street for five days in a detox cell.

What have falls and slips got to do with driving a half ton of metal while talking unnecessarily on a cellphone?

It is unfortunate that passing a motion which would have a measurable result on reducing injuries and death is viewed by the members opposite as restricting individual freedoms.

This government has turned down opposition proposals on wellness, the promotion of literacy through a free library card, and now accident prevention. Albertans want to hear from all voices with the hope that all parties can work collaboratively for the betterment of this province. While a degree of progress was initially made on the smoking ban and the crystal meth bill, even those government member initiated proposals were severely watered down, rendering them considerably less effective than they were initially intended. Albertans expect more from their elected MLA representatives than they are currently receiving.

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2005-06

Economic Development

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Economic Development. [some applause]

Mr. Dunford: Thank you. Thank you, kind colleagues. Mr. Chairman, I want to begin tonight by using a prop. This T-shirt, which reads "Biotech Rocks," was presented to me earlier today by an organization representing young people, high school people, that are in a competition that was displaying various work that they've done in biotechnology at the University of Alberta. I have to tell you that of the 12 exhibits that were being shown, I understood very little about any of them. I do know, though, that what that tells me is that there is a lot of good and neat stuff going on in biotechnology that we need to celebrate. I wanted to begin that way just in case we had high expectations about the knowledge that I might have about biotechnology. So I want you to be gentle over there.

Also, we have a number of people that have given up time with their families tonight in order to be here, and there are two purposes for this, Mr. Chairman. One, of course, is to provide technical advice to me if it is so required, but also it's a learning and training experience for people within our department so they see how the political system works. It's a constant reminder to them that they don't work for a car manufacturer. They don't work for a biotechnical company. They work for a political business. I think it's important that they have the reminders of just how this thing works, and of course it will be encouraging to them to see the level of intellectual intelligence that springs back and forth across the floor this evening. [interjection] Well, we have high expectations of some of you. Absolutely.

Let me introduce these folks to you. Rory Campbell is the deputy minister; Bob Scott, assistant deputy minister of tourism marketing and development; Rick Sloan, assistant deputy minister, industry and regional development division; Janice Schroeder, communications director; Susan Cribbs, executive director, business planning and knowledge management; Mike Shyluk, director, financial services; Georgina Riddell, human resource director; Duane Pyear, executive director, policy and economic analysis; Shelby MacLeod, my executive assistant; and Warren Chandler, assistant in our office.

Now, we're here collectively tonight to request the nearly $80 million required to implement Alberta Economic Development's 2005-2008 business plan. Our vision is that "Alberta is the best place in the world to live, visit and do business."

Before I talk about what we will achieve with this three-year plan, I want to outline how we do our work. We use a business model that seeks to facilitate economic growth by the private sector. This government is not in the business of business, but we are in the business of helping business be better. I want to highlight that we are a catalyst and not a banker. We are the catalyst who encourages the private sector to invest in Alberta, helps them address specific constraints, and works with other departments to ensure that the business climate is strong and that the Alberta advantage is effective. While Alberta is blessed with natural resources and our economy is firing on all cylinders, we are not complacent. We are continually looking for ways to improve our business climate and economic outcomes.

Economic development is about teamwork. We team with provincial departments on key cross-ministry projects like upgrading oil sands to refined products and petrochemicals. We work with Infrastructure and Transportation and our counterparts in British Columbia on issues relating to moving goods through the congested ports of Prince Rupert and Vancouver. We work with municipal and federal governments on regional development.

Much of our work is focused at the strategic level. We don't offer extensive programs. We have developed and are implementing Securing Tomorrow's Prosperity, Alberta's international marketing strategy. We work closely with Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and other departments to implement the Place to Grow rural development strategy.

We have lead responsibility for the tourism industry, and a major focus of the department is on marketing the province internationally and at home. In this centennial year we plan to promote Alberta as the best place to take a vacation.

Our most important stakeholder is Alberta employers, from the smallest new company to the largest oil sands investors. These employers, the jobs they create, the goods and services they produce underlie this province's wealth. When the economy is strong and productive, the government has the revenues which enable us to provide the priority programs. A strong economy is what pays for our hospitals. It's what pays for our educational system. It's what pays for our social programs. When we make Alberta the best place to work and to do business, then quite naturally flowing from that we also make the province the best place to live.

The department's three core businesses help to achieve this vision by, first of all, providing "strategic economic leadership and business intelligence"; second, increasing "industry and regional development, trade promotion and investment attraction"; and third, facilitating "tourism marketing and development." Staff in 11 regional offices across the province, in headquarter offices in Edmonton and Calgary, and in nine international offices are how those core businesses become real.

Core business 1: "Provide strategic economic leadership and business intelligence. First to provide strategic economic leadership in business intelligence; in other words, first to ensure that we have the right fundamentals for a prosperous economy and then to provide the information and advice people need to make better business decisions. On a broad scale, Securing Tomorrow's Prosperity, the value-added strategy, is the economic pillar of our government's 20-year plan. This strategy is the cornerstone of our department's business plan, and many other departments have initiatives to support it. Our future prosperity and economic diversity depend on our ability to move up the value chain towards products and services that are of greater value to our customers and, of course, to customers right around the globe.

The energy sector drives our prosperity. To make all Alberta prosperous, we need to grow other sectors in step: transportation, logistics, business services, manufacturing, processing, et cetera. The opportunity facing the province is huge: how to lever our strengths in primary sectors and grow globally competitive in other sectors, in value-added energy products, agrifood, building products, information and communications technology, biotechnology, environmental technologies, and, of course, tourism. There are broad issues which determine the effectiveness of the Alberta economy and the success of Alberta companies in getting their goods to market. Alberta Economic Development advances the province's interests on those issues.

For example, the announcement two weeks ago by the federal government and the government of British Columbia for $60 million in funding to expand the container port of Prince Rupert is exciting news for Alberta. This combined with rail improvements will improve access to Asian markets and reduce the congestion that west coast ports are experiencing.

The need for infrastructure to support economic growth, the role of air travel, and the issues facing megaproject development are all examples of the large issues the department helps government to address.

Besides keeping our eye on the big policy picture, we also support Alberta's business climate in more immediate ways. This leads, then, to our core business 2, "increase industry and regional development, trade promotion and investment attraction." AED provides support to help individual business growth. The business link in Edmonton and the Calgary Business Information Centre, which we operate in co-operation with the federal government, are important resources for entrepreneurs. These centres provide advice, training, and practical assistance. Thousands of Alberta entrepreneurs and small-business people phone and, of course, surf for information. For example, funding enables brown-bag sessions where people can learn about starting a business, exporting, marketing, and managing cash flow. We help people figure out the rules so that they can focus their energies on making their business successful.

To encourage industry growth, AED has established sector teams. They develop strategies and activities to address industry needs, things like business growth and expansion, investment attraction, and information needs. These teams provide advice to the government, work with industry players and projects, and identify where the government can play a role in increasing the growth, the diversification, and the competitiveness of their sector. They identify the strategic issues, and they deal with the nuts and bolts realities of what companies need to grow. New initiatives will include increasing the expertise we provide to some key value-added sectors such as petrochemicals, transportation, and value-added wood products.

Here is a practical example of how we can help manufacturing companies be more productive, and that's our lean manufacturing assessment initiative. Our staff provide information and training to small- and medium-sized Alberta manufacturers. The program is very effective and helps the businesses find ways to improve their productivity and competitiveness. I'm pleased to report very positive results, including a manufacturer of custom-printed circuit boards that was able to reduce production space by 1,500 square feet. In another example, an industrial firm in the oil and gas sector has reduced production time for one of its manufactured components by 20 per cent. These results are very encouraging for the business, and it speaks well for Alberta's ability to compete globally.

Film is another sector with growth potential. The movie business is a clean industry with business opportunities in a number of areas of the province and possible spinoffs in tourism. The film commissioner provides that programming.

The department also supports regional growth. To help extend the Alberta advantage to all regions of the province, the department provides administrative and financial support to regional economic development alliances. Currently about 90 per cent of Albertans are represented in these alliances, and significant work is under way to expand their regional economies.

In rural and urban economies alike an important component of successful business is people. Employers are saying that they can't get the skilled people that they need. Naturally, our preference is that they hire Albertans for the work and make the most of the people who are already here. When that's not an option, employers need to look beyond our borders. Lots of people have chosen to come to Alberta from other parts of this country. However, there are still areas where employers cannot find the skilled people they need. The provincial nominee program helps them recruit foreign workers to high-needs areas. The program has been a pilot, and it will be important to continue its work. Specific efforts are also being made to involve aboriginal communities in regional alliances. With new funding we are increasing our work with existing alliances and expanding the number of alliances we support. The department also promotes Alberta as a place to invest because investment is an important part of economic growth.

On the investment front Alberta is doing quite well. The Toronto-Dominion financial group recently singled out Alberta, and particularly the corridor between Edmonton and Calgary, as a strong economy. They call us the western tiger. This is a reference to Alberta's explosive economic and population growth that rivals many U.S. metropolitan areas for productivity and high standard of living.

These are key considerations for companies considering investment in our province. We have seized this opportunity and devised an innovative campaign featuring a tiger for our investment attraction efforts in the United States. Our message is simple. Alberta has the human energy, the highly skilled, well-educated people who make up Alberta's dynamic workforce. Alberta has the business energy: entrepreneurs who are innovative, determined, and competitive. But most of all we want people to know that Alberta means business. People are not wasting their energy by exploring opportunities here.

To help drive exports, the department also operates nine international offices. In the past year international offices have co-ordinated nearly 200 seminars, trade shows, exhibitions, and outreach programs. They have brought more than 300 investors and companies to Alberta, and they have organized delegations abroad for more than 400 Alberta companies. Trade promotion staff help export-ready Alberta companies by making sure their products and services are known in key markets. We partner with industry to showcase Alberta capabilities at events like the World Petroleum Congress, which will be in South Africa later this summer, and the Offshore Technology Conference in Houston, which is on next week.

We're also the eyes and ears of small- and medium-sized companies. The electronic business intelligence system, EBIS, or "e-biz," as we call it, is one of the ways we disseminate market intelligence. The focus of EBIS is on the energy goods and services and environmental goods and services. Opportunities are mainly in Mexico, and we have piloted e-business in other markets such as India, Russia, and Kazakhstan. We continue to refine our focus.

Now, Mr. Chair, it's a circle. When staff help companies be successful, more companies want them to help. As business opportunities increase, the use of international offices by Alberta companies, educational institutions, and other departments increase.

Our third core business is to facilitate tourism marketing and development. Industry and government promote Alberta as a world-class tourism destination. These joint efforts are co-ordinated through the Strategic Tourism Marketing Council. The government budget for tourism marketing will increase by 75 per cent to $42 million with the conversion of a 5 per cent hotel tax to a 4 per cent tourism levy. At the same time this will provide an $11 million savings in the cost of accommodation here in Alberta. Realistically, this is an $11 million reduction in taxes. Of course, we all know that the only way taxes go in Alberta is that they go down. Funds from the levy are being used for tourism marketing and development to make sure that our industry is competitive with other provinces.

Centennial celebrations will offer great opportunities to promote more in-province travel. Travel Alberta has developed programs like electronic postcards and the travel cards that offer online specials to encourage Albertans to do just that, and of course we will continue to market Alberta as the premier vacation destination to international travellers.

Plans are also in place to further develop Alberta's convention and incentive travel business. We will contract new sales reps in Toronto and Washington, DC. We're also planning more comprehensive research to better understand our markets and customers. The website travelalberta.com will be upgraded to add a mapping feature so that visitors can search and map out their vacation plans. The department supports tourism through the Travel Alberta collection of spectacular photographs and videos. It's an online library with thousands of pictures of the province's landscapes, attractions, and people. That library helps tour operators get the images they need to promote their areas.

I've talked about how we get the visitors to Alberta. Now I want to touch on how we get the maximum economic benefit from their visit. Our key resource is well-trained, knowledgeable travel counsellors. We run the Alberta visitor information program and provide training and support to over 90 community visitor information centres throughout the province, and those centres will be opening in about a month's time. Community counsellors can also attend Travel Alberta training sessions and attend an Alberta visitor information provider conference each year. But not all the counsellors can travel for training, so we created a training video called The Promoter and a CD-ROM, Experience Alberta, to bring the information to them.

I want to conclude my remarks by saying that our economy is hot. We see job ads, cranes, growing communities, and lineups. The province has just marked a milestone of a hundred billion dollars in major projects on the go. So we're in great shape, and I hope to be able to convince everyone of that this evening.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to speak on such an exciting and dynamic portfolio here that the minister has outlined there as well. The vision of the ministry, it says, is: "Alberta is the best place in the world to live, visit and do business." I tell you, I get goosebumps when I read that particular part.

We talk about some of the specifics here.

Mr. R. Miller: It's the air conditioning.

Mr. Bonko: That's right. It could be the air conditioning as well.

We talk about unleashing innovation, leading in learning. Opportunity 3 is "competing in a global marketplace" and opportunity 4 is "making Alberta the best place to live, work, and visit," as mentioned in the vision statement.

If I go to some of the specifics there, I'd like to say that, in fact, I was a little disappointed that the ministry had not adopted some of the more adventurous ideas such as implementing a 10 per cent provincial credit for eligible expenditures in scientific research and experimental development as well as implementing a 30 per cent provincial tax credit for investment in the qualified early stages of Alberta-based technologies. As the Liberal Party these are some of our platform particular pieces. We asked about creating a $150 million Alberta technology venture fund funded jointly by the industry, universities, and of course government to generate venture capital in the industry. Now, that wouldn't invest in individual businesses. Rather, it would ask them to create opportunities for further investment.

Another particular point that could have been in the overall portfolio was creating a provincial technology program to harmonize technology and commercialization programs across the province.

Lastly would be introducing a 20 per cent Alberta film and television tax credit for Alberta-owned and -controlled production companies. We've seen some of these particular movies come, and I'll mention some of those a little bit later on.

If this government and the ministry are serious about unleashing innovation, why doesn't it provide tax incentives for companies to invest in research and development? Technology start-ups are leaving Alberta for other jurisdictions which have friendlier tax regimes and have more access to venture capital. Why is this government not following behind other provinces and allowing some more lucrative deals and keeping the incentives here? What steps has the ministry taken to increase access to venture capital in Alberta, and what plans are in the works in the future for those?

Other particulars around that. Does the ministry keep stats on how many start-up firms leave Alberta for other jurisdictions that have better access to the venture capital? This is even more reason to adopt the particular bullets that I read previous to that for Economic Development policies. I do think there is some merit. Regardless of where they come from, I think they could at least be explored and considered.

We talk about the role of arts and sports, recreation, and economic drivers. I know one of my other colleagues would like to speak on that, so I won't particularly speak on that one.

What does the ministry do to improve Alberta's quality of living to attract and retain young, knowledgeable workers? I know that it's a great place to live. There's an abundance of recreational spots, and it's just big sky. But what do we do?

Young, knowledgeable workers value a strong, diverse arts scene as well as ample opportunities for sports and recreation. How does the ministry work with the Ministry of Community Development in order to support the Alberta arts and recreation sectors? Is this minister acknowledging the strong role that arts and culture as well as sports and recreation play in the economy? We've got professional sports teams in Edmonton and Calgary. We've got the centres. We have the Winspear here, that was donated by Francis Winspear, that is a hallmark of centres, as well as the Jubilee Auditorium, that is undergoing renovation as well, but we also have that down in Calgary. Again, we have to recognize that there are, in fact, opportunities to increase that with regard to the arts portfolio.

International and interprovincial trips. How does the minister know or how do they measure how successful international trade missions are? Does the minister measure the increase in trade after a mission? At what level has it increased the trade? How does this minister consider these trade missions a success? By a 5 per cent or a 10 per cent increase? How does the minister perform a cost-benefit analysis after these trips have been completed?

Tourism is also a big driver of the economy here as well. How does this compare to years ago, say, even five, 10 years ago? Over the past 10, 15 years how much has tourism grown here in Alberta?

We talk about film, and I think that's in your portfolio on page 180 with regard to some of the core business. Recent economic development markets have been attracting film companies such as Snow Day, that was shot here in Edmonton, and Unforgiven, attracting stars such as Clint Eastwood and Morgan Freeman. I know I saw the film, and I was taken by just the whole majestic sunsets and the overall display of that wilderness. I realized that it was shot right here in Alberta, and it made me even prouder. Why can't we attract more businesses and films like that?

Recently the Calgary Herald had an article that stated that the film industry here in Alberta is losing approximately $200 million because over the past 12 months they've been driven to more incentives from other provinces and cheaper labour elsewhere. What would the ministry do to reverse those particular trends in that area of film? Does the minister introduce a film and TV tax incentive like every other province? I'm not sure why we haven't got one, but certainly that should be considered. Why are there no performance measures related to film and television production in Alberta in the ministry's business plan; as an example, the number of film or television projects with total dollars invested here in Alberta? What drive does that have on the economy, and what sort of market does that have with employability? I wonder if the minister could comment.

He's requested right now about $79.75 million, and that's just estimates. But there are differences with the percentages. Ministry support services is getting approximately $4.8 million. That's an increase of about 2 per cent. Industry and regional development, trade and investment is about $26 million, and that's up about 15 per cent. But the biggest one, tourism marketing and development, is at $42 million, an increase of 74 per cent. So those are some increases, but you know, they're broken down. Maybe just give me some more specifics as to some of them.

There is reasoning beside one, which is, as I mentioned, strategic economic leadership and business. The budgets for international trade development and relations are slightly down from last year, and I'm not sure why that is. I didn't see any specifics with regard to that budget, so I'm wondering if the minister could comment on that as well.

As well, the budget for regional development is seeing approximately I think it's a 58 per cent increase from last year. Can the minister provide some details as to the large budgetary increase? What's the reason behind it? Specifically, where would the monies be going? What tangible results can Albertans expect to see from this overall increase, and how will success be measured? Again, it's all that measuring. How do we know that we're getting good value for that dollar being spent?

On page 106 of the budget, investment and industry development has increased by 25 per cent. How exactly will that money be used? What will that funding be used for?

In terms of funding for industry development, what industries get the most support from the government? How does the budget for industry development help Alberta's film development and television industry or our high-tech industries?

One of the other ones emerging from the budget: overall tourism, like I said, is up about 74 per cent. The budget for emerging opportunities is down 35 per cent though, so we have, you know, varying degrees right there. What causes that particular decrease in that emerging opportunities area? What kind of industries or businesses will be affected by that decrease? Should the Ministry of Economic Development be seeking emerging opportunities and not turning them away? As we said, we're in the business to promote business. Turning away or putting up roadblocks certainly wouldn't be reading with that statement. This decrease is obviously disappointing. It exhibits a lack of economic leadership on this government's part.

I know that there are a number of questions within that piece there, so I'll sit down and look enthused as I hear some more information here.

Mr. Dunford: Well, you can be enthused. You don't have to even look like it. Just let it happen naturally.

I want to first make it clear that tax credits and tax incentives have been very, very difficult for this government. There's a philosophical problem, there's a problem in terms of ideology, and there are some practical problems with it. So when you come to a situation like we faced in 1993, where we had looked at a previous administration that had done a number of things to diversify the economy and tried experiments in some other areas – and most of it worked. I think it was a very exciting and a very challenging time, of course, for them, but it left the Alberta taxpayer in a financial situation that those of us that were elected in '93 deemed a situation that had to be rectified.

So what we did then was first of all attack the deficit so that we'd stop the bleeding in terms of the debt, and once we had that in hand, then we started to challenge the debt. When you have a government focused, as this government was, on getting the debt to zero, then there wasn't a lot of room for some of the more exciting things that you maybe brought up in your remarks. I have to tell you that despite the items that you listed that were perhaps in your Liberal strategies in the past – and of course we've heard about those before – we just simply weren't in a fiscal position to be able to entertain that kind of thing.

Now, I think that to our credit we have not tried to hide those facts. I think that we've been open and up front with businesses in Alberta, with businesses in Canada, and with businesses, really, in the rest of the world. I could provide anecdotal evidence of where we have lost businesses coming to this province because we simply refused to subsidize.

Now, there are companies that make a practice of going around to all the states in the United States, to all the provinces in Canada just to see what kind of subsidy arrangements are available. Alberta, my understanding is, again anecdotally, from reports from those companies is that we basically stand pretty much alone because we have maintained over that now 12-year period that we are not in the business of doing business. So tax incentives and access to venture capital, these kinds of things, basically have been a different situation in Alberta than elsewhere.

You began your opening by making reference to our business plan, and I thank you for that. But if you went to page 4 of the business plan, you would see at the bottom of that page under Benchmarking Alberta's Performance, I think, that we're quite up front with you, with people that will be reading Hansard, people that will be reading our business plan, that when we compare ourselves to other jurisdictions in things like research and development intensity, you'll see under chart 2, venture capital, those kinds of things, that we are far, far below the average.

So now this is something that we have to of course deal with as we move forward. We have shown in the past that we have the ability to do that. There's no question that at one time, at one particular point in our fiscal history, we removed the access to government funding in terms of the film business. We saw, of course, what happened in that particular instance, where our film industry dropped dramatically. So we had to recognize that with film we have a special situation, and we have to provide some consideration in that area. To this government's benefit, of course, we did then start to put money back into the film and TV business and have been able to retain the previous levels of that particular industry.

Now, there's more to go. There's no question that other jurisdictions have gotten very aggressive in these particular areas. But what is so frustrating to me as a steward of taxpayers' money is that these other jurisdictions providing these incentives, you know, are running deficits and running a debt. We know how they do it, of course, and that is just simply to do it, to start writing the cheques and make them available, but it's difficult for those of us that have gone through the rapids, so to speak, of the 1993 to '96 era in Alberta to understand how they can get away with that kind of thing while they have debt.

We've moved from that. We're now in a position where I believe the Minister of Finance has said publicly that we will be reviewing our tax policy here in Alberta. So there are some tremendous opportunities, I think, for people within this Assembly, then, to provide the kinds of direction that they think we should go forward in the future.

The venture capital situation is basically the same. Again, we've not provided the tax credits that other people have and, especially for my labour friends, my social democrat friend, have not given the boost to so-called labour funds, that has happened in other jurisdictions.

One of the beliefs that this government has is that the government does not create jobs. We create the climate that will allow businesses then to expand their operations, to move to Alberta, and it provides, then, the opportunity for young knowledge workers. Just an example I might give you: Dell Computer of Austin, Texas, decided to get involved in Alberta. Again, it's not Economic Development's job to say, "Come to Edmonton" or "Come to Tofield" or "Come to Lethbridge." It's our job to say, "Come to Alberta," and then allow the business and the municipalities to work together to finally define the location.

But we had a tremendous day at the ribbon-cutting for Dell Computer. They had originally estimated, as I recall, something like a nine-month period before they would get to 500 employees. At the time we were talking, they were already there after I believe it was three months, and they had actually developed plans then to go to their corporate board looking for another 250 people to work here in the city of Edmonton for Dell computers. Again, just a tremendous example of how when you have a climate, business will respond.

I absolutely agree about the role that arts, culture, and sports will play within not only the Alberta that we know today but the next Alberta. It would surprise many here in the House, perhaps even the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, to know that there are over 105,000 workers that make their living working full-time in the arts and culture industries here in this province. It's a tremendous economic driver, but it's two things. Of course, it sets up the kind of communities that people want to live in. We've learned in Economic Development that there's a lot to say about subsidy arrangements, there's lots to say about economic climate, but where businesses flourish and where they expand and they grow is where the managers and the owners and the investors want to be associated, where they want to live. There's been a sea change in how we've looked at that situation over the last 20 years. So there's no question about that. We have to believe in the role that arts and culture will make.

As a matter of fact, part of the vision that I have in the developing of Alberta is that along with all the oil and gas and all the agri-food situations and the petrochemicals and all of that, a couple of additional areas that people need to think about: I think we're going to see the development of Calgary as a further financial centre here in western Canada, and I believe that Edmonton will challenge Montreal as the festival city of Canada. I think this is a part of a vision that we should have. The situation here in Edmonton, such a cosmopolitan centre and all of the activities that are going on – the critical mass is really here to make this a dynamite city for an economic development driver that is in arts, culture, and sports.

Now, I don't want to start getting calls from my constituents in Lethbridge and constituents in Cypress Hills. You know, this goes all over the whole province. I'm simply speaking about how dramatic the situation could be in the future here for Edmonton.

As far as the international trips and how we measure and the cost-benefit analysis, it's very difficult because things usually don't happen overnight. Most people, I think, would understand that. For an example, on a recent trip to Germany we got talking with an individual who would like to come to Alberta not because Alberta has a huge population base and would be, you know, a huge customer, but they need a certain resource called peat that we have in Alberta. Basically, he wants to focus on the California market. Of course, with the free trade agreement, the NAFTA agreements, and the I-15 highway system in the States, with the Canamex system coming out of Alberta, he sees a real role, then, for his business.

Now, the only thing is that we need some assistance from our friends in Sustainable Resource Development, and maybe we can make this happen. So who knows? I mean, I might be able to stand in here at some point, hopefully, introduce a person in the gallery from Germany, and announce that we have a peat moss plant. We don't know, but I can tell you this: had we not gone to Germany with our maps, I'm not sure that we would be accomplishing what we hoped to. So it'll be difficult.

You know, the accountants that are only interested in black numbers on white paper I think will find all kinds of opportunities to criticize me as the minister. I learned in business that promotion and marketing were very, very important, and it didn't happen while you were sitting on your fat ass in your own office. You had to get out and promote yourself.

An Hon. Member: Unparliamentary.

Mr. Dunford: Oh, can I say that in this House? I guess I've already said it. [interjections] I was talking about mine. I personalized it, so I guess it's all right.

In any event, if there are people in the House that don't think I should travel, I'm going to give you lots of room to criticize because I'm going to be out promoting Alberta as best I can. We're going to go to areas where we think we'll have the most impact. Those areas, of course, are available to you, hon. member, and to others here in the House, right throughout Alberta within our AIMS document, the Alberta international marketing strategy, so you can get an idea of where it is that we'll be heading.

As early as next week I'll be heading to Houston to attend the Offshore Technology Conference. I'll be going then to Austin to drop in and say thanks once again to Dell and then on to Denver as a follow-up to the recent meeting that we had where Colorado public officials and Colorado business investors came up to look at the oil sands and some of the other opportunities that we were able to show them on their particular visit.

Tourism was identified and, again, the 74 per cent increase, which represents now the tourism levy, Mr. Chairman. Of course, there's a situation there where the industry challenged the government for a number of years, saying that the hotel tax is a tax that should be provided, then, to the tourism industry. We accepted the challenge, reduced the tax, and now make the challenge back to them in the sense that they can grow their business, similar to horse racing. You know, the opportunity is there, obviously, to have more people in the accommodation facilities around the province, to market not only their facility but to market, then, the whole province and increase accommodation, thus increase the levy, and increase their ability to market in the future.

You're right: we don't have performance measures based on the film industry, but that's something, now that you've raised it, that we'll want to have a look at.

You asked about some tourism numbers. I have a document that is called Tourism Insights. It's from Travel Alberta. You can go to travelalberta.com and receive the same information that I have in front of me. It's the May 2005 issue, and it talks there about entries into Alberta and some of the accommodation indices. You'll see that we have a rise so far in 2005, but I want to tell you, hon. member, that there were a couple of tough years in Alberta: of course, the 9/11 situation; also SARS, that appeared mostly down east; again, the jitters that arrived over the mad cow issue and people, especially in the United States, not understanding that particular issue.

In terms of the questions on the estimates, the international budget we've kept the same. We think that we wanted to focus this particular year not just because it was centennial year, but we wanted to focus on Alberta. We felt that there was work that had to be done in this particular area. So the increase in the industry and regional development and trade was primarily due to increasing the funding for the regional alliances.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm an Albertan by choice, not by birth. I was born in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, but most of my life and my whole working life and university have taken place in Alberta. Alberta offers an unbelievable tourist potential. We're more than just a movie backdrop, but we do that very well when subsidies are provided for film companies. Prior to the last couple of years a lot of American film companies came up north, and we had Canadian investment as well in Alberta, but that has dried up considerably based on the lack of subsidy and promotion of the industry.

Alberta does provide an unbelievably dynamic natural variety, but unfortunately we don't seem to have sufficient pride or sufficient forethought in terms of preserving our natural beauties. For example, the Cypress Hills, a historical site: whisky traders, the wild west, a very unique natural area where we have grasslands, we have the cypress trees, we have a lake. You name it. Everything possible is there within that one circumstance, yet we're talking about having wind farms set up for alternative energy in the midst of the Cypress Hills grasslands.

We have the Whaleback. Again, absolutely fantastic western, just right out of the movies type of scenery comparable with the mesas in Arizona, but right now the Whaleback continues to be threatened by further sour gas exploration as we try and get every last drop of gas squeezed out of these natural areas.

Jasper, a world-renowned tourist destination, is being threatened by mining.

Horseshoe Canyon: at one point the government was considering letting this go for a golf course, and now the area is being threatened by coal-bed methane exploration.

Writing-On-Stone, in the south near our Alliance member's area, has only recently had its petroglyphs protected. There was a considerable amount of vandalism being permitted and allowed, and it's only recently that it has been fenced off.

I think we undervalue what it is that we're trying to sell to the world. And what I find interesting is sort of the paradox. We've just increased our tourism budget by 74 per cent, but when people get here, what kind of support do they receive? If they're strictly coming to a convention in Calgary or Edmonton or Medicine Hat, and they don't leave those cities – they fly into the airport; they get a taxi to their hotel; they attend potentially the Calgary Stampede, or they go to Klondike Days or one of the local music festivals – if that's the extent of their tourism, then we have the hotel hospitality, we have the restaurants, we have the service industries to provide them.

But what happens if they want to venture out onto our roads and go to some of our parks and protected areas? Well, the reality is that this province has only set aside 4 per cent of our land use for provincial parks and protected areas, and even within that land use that's supposedly set aside and designated for protection, we still have, as I pointed out before, clear-cutting in the surrounding areas. Not only do we have clear-cutting in the surrounding areas, but once the large companies have done their work, then the smaller companies go in and pick up the remnants.

I mentioned specifically what happened in the area of Cataract Creek. Not only was the cutting permitted throughout the night all summer during a fire ban, but the following summer a company was allowed to use the trails, the roadways within the park, bulldoze out one of the optimal sites so that they could, then, clear-cut and access forestry on Mount Burk and down to the Cataract Falls. This same company that did the majority of the cutting in the area, with only minimal reforestation, I might add, has the contract to cut all along highway 40, which is the back door to the Kananaskis.

So what happens? We encourage people to get to Alberta, and we encourage them to rent RVs, especially our European tourists, who are looking for the last remnants of the old west and for whatever reason choose to come to Alberta because they consider it a smaller population and potentially safer than some of the crowded Disneyland/Disney World type western destinations in the States. They choose Alberta, but what do they find when they come here?

It used to be when we were growing up that you would go into a park and you'd have an interpretive centre, and there would be a wildlife show, and you'd be taken on a trail for a hike, and you could count on a couple of these shows at least every week. Well, given the cutback in park staffing, this no longer is possible.

Safety is a concern. A number of the foreign travelers don't realize that if they get off the trail or into the wilderness, they better find a conservation officer first to report where they're planning to hike because they're basically dependent on self-rescue. We have cut back conservation officers and conservation offices and tourist information within the close vicinity of the parks to such an extent that people are left to their own devices. Sure they can pick up a pamphlet here or there, but they would like to see a friendly face and know that they were safe, and it could be an enjoyable experience heading into the background and the backcountry.

One of the major attractions for tourism to Alberta would be a strongly funded Alberta arts and culture. A number of local areas have had to cut back on their festivals due to lack of support. A number of country initiatives are doing their best, and they're basically doing it on their own with very little funding from this government. An example would be the Rosebud Theatre. Recently I had the opportunity to travel down Drumheller way to East Coulee, and basically the local organization with volunteers has provided the majority of the funding for their East Coulee coal mining museum. Likewise, they're trying to restore a wash house.

These are all local initiatives, and while I applaud local initiatives, there is a role for the government in terms of providing support. We have the potential of expanding our museums and getting more out of the box and onto the display case, but again that requires funding. In Calgary, for example, we have the Museum of the Regiments, which receives very little funding in terms of the total percentage from the provincial government. Likewise, we have our art gallery located in the convention centre in downtown Calgary. It's a wonderful site, but because we have to have so many of the displays packed up in back rooms because there isn't sufficient expansion to show them, this is a sad circumstance.

We still haven't got to the point where we feel that we need to preserve our public land. It's still being sold off. Ranchers who would like to purchase it or at least continue to have their grazing leases when they can't afford to buy the land are frequently being denied access, and that's because the land is being packaged and sold off for potential development that is not in keeping with the natural surroundings, whether it be ranching or agricultural uses.

Alberta requires an investment. We need to move forward, and in order to do that, we need to consider subsidizing local industries, made-in-Alberta solutions. I know the government is wary of such subsidies. There have been mistakes with MagCan. There have been mistakes with Daishowa. Most of the mistakes have occurred when we've invited foreign investment, but we have laid the majority of the money down for these foreign investments, whereas there's been no proportional investment in made-in-Alberta solutions, and this is why the hon. member brought up the need for subsidies, whether it be for films or whether it be for local industries.

Alberta has unbelievable potential. We need not only to market it, but when people arrive, we have to promote it. We have to have roads that are safe to drive on to access the backcountry. We have to have trails that are safe to hike upon. We have to have benches that are no longer decaying. While I worked in my particular park at Cataract Creek because there was very little, if any, budget for replacement, I took down more staircases, patched up lookouts than I could possibly replace. The fact was they were a safety concern, and there wasn't sufficient reinvestment. People were charged a fee, two and a half dollars of which was supposed to go back into maintaining infrastructure, but despite the $45 million announcement for parks and protected areas, very little of that money is actually going back to restoring and renovating parks. With the exception of the recent announcement with the Lois Hole that took over the name from the Big Lake, there are – at least, they are yet to be mentioned – no plans for further extension of parks and protected areas beyond our current 4 per cent.

As I've mentioned – and I will shortly sit down – there does not appear to be sufficient appreciation for protecting the little bit of wilderness that we have remaining. There has to be a balance between nature and industry, and unfortunately that balance hasn't been achieved at this point in this province.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. I just need a minute here. A number of things that the hon. member discussed I want to reply to. In the film area I'd like to draw the attention of the Assembly to the fact that we have a DVD that is ready to be circulated. In fact, a staff member of my office was working on it earlier today. It provides a view, first of all, of some of the many movies that have been made in the last little while although when you're my age you can look back with some affection on a movie that was called River of No Return, not only with Bob Mitchum but Marilyn Monroe. She just looks as fresh today in that video as any of them. It's an excellent, I think, production that we have, and as I say, it will be circulated. It might surprise you, first of all, not only the range of film that has been done in Alberta but, actually, the quality of those films as well.

One of them that was on there was Kevin Costner, who, of course, I think produced and directed as well as starred in the film Open Range. I know that people have often talked about how a film done in New York, it was just like New York became almost a character in the cast. I think we can say that in Open Range that magnificent country southwest of Calgary was really a character in that movie. It was just tremendous.

There's no question about movies, the impact that they can have on the tourism industry. I don't know if you've seen the film Sideways, hon. member. Recently produced, it's a story about a couple of guys on a little tour, you know, as a stag almost before marriage, and they tour the wine country of California. Pinot Noir was highlighted as a wine. It's just been absolutely amazing. Two things that have happened since that movie is all the people doing the wine tours, and of course Pinot Noir, you know, has just taken off. I don't drink, myself, but I'm told that Pinot Noir has taken off now as a product.

So we will be looking at ways to further enhance the movie business in Alberta. There's no question about that. I think we can agree that we have to do this. Where the disagreement might come at some point is: how do we get there? But we're on the same page as far as trying to magnify that industry here in the province.

You mentioned Writing on Stone, and I wanted to highlight that because, again, part of our tourism objective is to do two things at the same time. One is not to diminish the Big Three in the province, which is, of course, the city of Calgary, the city of Edmonton, and the Rockies, but also to expand the tourism product in areas, then, outside the Big Three and particularly east of the so-called corridor between Edmonton and Calgary.

Some of the things that we're going to be looking at are the enhancement of the Canadian badlands, the Dinosaur Trail, which, actually, will have its genesis, I guess, at Writing on Stone, somewhere in that particular area, maybe at Devil's Coulee at Warner – I'm just not exactly sure – but certainly in the Cardston-Taber-Warner constituency. Then it will run in a northerly direction up, of course, through Drumheller, and then it's going to cross the corridor into the dinosaur tracks at Grande Cache and then on up to the River of Death, as they call it, near Grande Prairie. This is a phenomenal site. Who knows what happened way back when dinosaurs roamed this part of the country. Something happened, and there was a whole herd – or is it a flock of dinosaurs? [interjections] What is it? Well, they say that dinosaurs led to birds, so let's call them a flock of dinosaurs.

I wanted to point out also the tremendous – and the member talked about it. When they come to a convention in Calgary, it's not just that they're in Calgary or they're just in Medicine Hat and then they leave. We have to capitalize on giving them reasons to move around while they are here. Looking forward from here to 2010, we're going to of course try to find ways to capture the imagination of foreign travellers coming to Canada for the Olympics in British Columbia in the year 2010. We'll do that not only as a province, but we'll try to do it as a region, to include British Columbia, perhaps Saskatchewan, but also through our membership in PNWER, which is the Pacific Northwest Economic Region, to capture that whole area of opportunity, then, for a person from Germany or Latvia or Russia, that when they're going to be in Canada, there would be opportunities here in western Canada.

We talk about it being a small world, and there's no question that information technology has made it a small world, but it's still a big world. When you are in Germany, for example, and you look at what you have to do in order to get to the 2010 Olympics, then you're going to have to come to, you know, a particular spot, a little dot on the map, but obviously we need them to expand their vision and, of course, expand their travel.

Quite a bit about parks. We are very supportive of the Ministry of Community Development and the focus that they've had on parks this year. There's no question that the parks need upgrading and more support. That, again, is part of tourism, not only the fact that it would attract campers from beyond our borders, but still the biggest tourist in Alberta is an Albertan. While I don't camp, others of course do and in great numbers, so it's obviously something that we need to do.

In arts and culture you mentioned the Rosebud Theatre, and as a matter of fact just last Friday Mr. Owen, the federal Minister of Western Economic Diversification, and myself were announcing a western economic partnership agreement, and Rosebud Theatre was actually part of this. About $500,000 of Canada and Alberta funds are going to expand the meeting rooms, dining facilities, kitchen, and an investment centre. So again both levels of government have recognized what a little gem that Rosebud Theatre is and are moving forward on that.

You digressed a bit, I think, from the estimates to talk about MagCan and Daishowa, and I think the record needs to be straightened out for the purposes of those people that might be reading Hansard. I don't think I would disagree with you about MagCan being an experiment that failed, but with Daishowa I don't know that there were government dollars that went into that operation back whenever it was that Alberta was intrusively trying to diversify the economy.

I have a note from my colleague that indicates that it's the fourth largest company now in terms of revenue generation, a major timber-rights holder in Alberta, controlling, managing 1.75 million cubic metres of annual allowable cut through the Peace River pulp. I mean, all of this is meaning employment, so perhaps it was just said in error, trying to show where there has been failure. I don't know that anybody on this side of the House would include Daishowa in any sort of list of that order.

With that, I think we've approached at least most of the comments that you made. What we've missed, not only for you, hon. member, but other speakers that were previous or will come later, we of course will research Hansard and provide answers to the appropriate questions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm very delighted to rise and speak in regard to the budget estimates for Economic Development this evening. As I have previously, I'll ask my questions in clusters, so the hon. minister can answer them here this evening or in writing, however he might see fit.

I am encouraged by the overall numbers of the Economic Development ministry. My understanding is that we see a 37 per cent increase in the budget this year from last, and the bulk of that increase in spending is going specifically to tourism marketing and development. You know, it's been my belief that over the past number of years we have not been marketing Alberta as a tourist destination sufficiently in the international markets. Hopefully this money will target North American travellers from other parts of Canada, from the United States, Europe, and Asia because, of course, we have a tremendous product, if we could call it that, in our province as a tourist destination, but there is a great deal of competition in the tourist industry internationally.

We have to have a product that meets the level of advertising that other provinces and destinations around the world are marketing. I think we have to look no further than, say, the Newfoundland and Labrador advertisements that have been out in the last couple of years. You know, we just don't have that level of effectiveness with our own Alberta marketing. With this new money we should perhaps step up to that level because, of course, consumers look at their tourism dollar just like any consumer choice. The level and quality of advertisements really do make the difference to attract or not attract people to our province.

The hon. minister, of course, pointed out that the majority of the tourism trade in this province is coming from Albertans themselves, but you want to keep people longer in different destinations. You want to move them to areas where perhaps they haven't been before. Again, in this age of advertising and sort of a level of advertising we have to meet those expectations in order to attract people to perhaps new areas in the province that they haven't visited before and such things like that.

I'm very encouraged to hear that the hon. minister is less inclined to have Economic Development be in the business of being in business. Certainly, it's our position as a caucus that some of the businesses that our provincial government has endeavoured to support and subsidize in the past have been unmitigated disasters. You know, by being once burned twice shy, I hope that we will continue on our path to stay out of open and sort of large-scale subsidies of businesses in this province because, indeed, at the end of the day it usually turns out less than favourably.

I have a number of questions just in regard to the different areas that Economic Development is controlling, so I'll just go through these reasonably quickly, I hope. Within the Ministry of Economic Development, under the deputy minister's office, there is a service known as corporate communications. My question, looking at the larger function of other parts of the government here, is: what's the difference between corporate communications within the deputy minister's Department of Economic Development and then the office of the Public Affairs Bureau? As far as I can read, their descriptors have almost exactly the same sort of mandate. I think that perhaps some differentiation would be in order between these two. I would appreciate some information in regard to that.

Perhaps this is a place where we can look for redundancies because, of course, communications within this government employs a tremendous amount of people, and I believe, as we like to say or as the hon. member's party likes to say, that they want to stay out of the business of being in business. Perhaps they can pull back in some of these areas of communications, of which we have legions, I believe, in this government.

My next sort of grouping of questions is to do with trade mission offices. I know that this government has pulled back from their trade mission offices in past years for the sake of efficiencies, but now we're seeing these offices opening again in new and different places. Certainly, our caucus recognizes the value of having trade mission offices in various locations around the world, but I just wanted to get some clarification on some of these offices.

For example, I would like to know why there are two international offices in the city of Beijing in China. Now, of course, China has surpassed the United States as the world's largest consumer of raw materials, and again Alberta cannot ignore China as a potential and real market for expertise and goods and services. However, for the sake of efficiencies, perhaps we would be better served by a single office in Beijing and perhaps another one in another Chinese city such as Shanghai, which is another focus of great economic development in this country, or perhaps, you know, in Guangdong province, which is a special economic zone in southern China that we might be focusing on, or our sister province in China. I believe Harbin is the capital, so our representation is there.

Another trade office or special office to the province, of course, is the recent one that was opened in Washington and I believe is housed in the Canadian embassy in Washington. Again, you know, I think it's a useful thing to endeavour for greater and better trade relations with the United States, especially at this juncture in our history with that country. I'm just curious about the operation of this trade office in Washington. Last week Greg Melchin, the Minister of Energy, travelled to Washington to get in front of the regulators, quote, from his press release. I'm thinking that perhaps Murray Smith, who has been in Washington for some time now, would be the point man for such operations in Washington. Furthermore, when Mr. Smith did go to Washington, he said that his focus would be, in fact, energy, the portfolio for which he was the minister before he left to go to Washington.

Perhaps, you know, we could be looking at some efficiencies in regard to this trade mission and, specifically, different jurisdictions. I think that Washington is certainly a great centre of lobbying as well, probably the very biggest one in the entire world, and there are many professional lobby outfits in Washington. Perhaps we could find efficiencies through hiring people who are, in fact, paid professional lobbyists in Washington.

Just very briefly looking at some of the other trade missions in Korea, I think that this is a fine place, certainly, to have a trade mission. If I could just point it out to the hon. minister, and perhaps someone can look at it. I couldn't help but be somewhat critical of the website for the Korean trade mission. You know, it just didn't seem to be at a level that other websites that are produced by this government are performing at. It's just very difficult to use and quite amateurish and has lots of grammatical mistakes and things like that. In Internet-savvy places such as Korea this is the first face that our province has given to potential investors and tourists and whatnot, and perhaps this website could be revisited.

Through a number of the interactions here previously this evening the hon. minister mentioned the potential for Prince Rupert as a port for our province. I, too, and our caucus are very excited about this potential. I think it's a strategic move, and it's a fantastic economic move as well, but we have to be careful to make sure that our interests are best served through this endeavour. My own constituency has the main line of CN running through it, so I know some of the political things that are going on with CN in regard to building this port in Prince Rupert and how Illinois Central's purchase of controlling interest in CN is very much a part of this development of Prince Rupert as a port.

Again, I applaud it. Certainly, the potential is enormous, but, you know, when I speak to some of the CN people, how they describe it, particularly through Illinois Central's perspective on it, is that they look at Prince Rupert as being 72 hours from Chicago, Illinois. Right? This is their focus, which is fine. From Prince Rupert to Chicago, 72 hours, moving goods and services back and forth. I just want to remind the good people at CN and then hon. members here as well that we're in between those 72 hours, and for us to be able to have goods and services stopping and interacting with our economy in the best possible way is very important.

We have to be very firm in our negotiations with the Americans with their intentions of the Prince Rupert port because I know that they're looking at it as a strategic port for their own interests, of course. But we have to do hard negotiating. It's like the pipeline with the gas coming through our province. We have to make sure that we negotiate, that we take a portion of that value to develop value-added industry in our own province rather than just having the pipeline pass on through.

There has been quite a lot of discussion about film. Again, it's a difficult industry to break into, I know, and we have had some degree of success in the past with some filming. I think it's more by virtue of our specific settings that filmmakers might be looking for, certain landscapes that we have or beautiful places and vistas that they're looking for, rather than a focused effort to build a film industry here in the province. I know that this is a two-headed beast because, of course, you want the potential for film development in this province. It really does bring in a lot of money. We have to look no further than British Columbia to see what it has done for that province's economy.

But so often the film industry is a bit of a race to the bottom to attract filmmakers and to have them stay and work in your city or your province or your locale. You know, I really object to this bending over backwards, so to speak, giving tax breaks and special provisions and whatnot to companies, which at the end of the day are subsidies by any other name. I would like to make sure that filmmakers are coming into Alberta and paying their fair share for what they are taking from the province.

Most of all – and this hasn't been discussed too much, but I hear it from local film people. They've asked me specifically to bring it up: to have specific provisions to hire local talent for these productions. So often these guys are bringing in the whole kit and caboodle from Hollywood or from Toronto or wherever and setting up without producing appreciable lasting jobs for our local actors and actresses and film workers of all sorts. I don't pretend to know the industry so well, but certainly hiring Albertans first should be a priority at all stages along the way.

Finally, economic development, you know, is a funny thing. Sometimes right means left and left means right. I'm a firm believer in allowing, certainly, businesses to sink or swim on their own accord. For certain essential services we require that our electricity be affordable and that we have water and accommodation and adequate healthy food to eat and all of that kind of stuff, but for other businesses certainly the market should dictate and must dictate. So I hesitate at allowing and giving large tax breaks to different sectors and all of this kind of thing, but I think that we do need to look at diversification. We all recognize that as a pressing need for future generations as our energy-based economy changes. We want to be ahead of those things.

So one thing I would like to suggest in terms of a long-term economic plan for budgeting for economic development in conjunction with energy is that if we could take a specific amount of energy monies, look to perhaps increasing the royalty rates that some energy producers are paying for our oil and gas, and encourage industries that produce alternative green technologies made in Alberta. I think that the combination of sort of using that old energy money and investing it in new renewable energy technologies is a very appealing plan. I think that we could go a long way to diversifying our economy and building something good for future generations.

I was in southern Alberta about a month ago and looking at the wonderful wind generation capability down around Pincher Creek. Almost all, I think, of those turbines are either produced in Europe or they're produced in the States, a few of them – right? – and it would just be such a wonderful thing to take some of that old energy money and put it into building our own wind turbines here in the province. You know, it's just one small way by which we could diversify our economy. I know that we don't want to be getting into central planning and five-year plans and stuff like that. I know that makes you guys itchy, but there are lots of reasonable, capitalistic ways that we can do that by having this money enter into our money markets and by allowing businesses to diversify and build a strong economy for the future.

So I do have some praise for the minister. I think that he certainly feels better to me than the last Economic Development minister. Let's put it that way. I encourage him to move forward and be successful in his endeavours.

Thank you.

The Chair: I would like to remind the hon. member of Beauchesne's 484, which refers to referring to another member of the House by name.

Mr. Dunford: Well, I'm going to accept the compliments of the member and point out that there's quite a bit of difference. I am not running for the leadership of this party.

I also want to thank the member for his support for the tourism dollars. I think that this has been a good move for everybody concerned. As far as I can tell, taxpayers of the province, my constituents, and people here in the House have really supported this. I don't know if I've heard anybody that's been opposed to it. So I think it's gone well for the tourism industry, but the challenge, of course, is that they use it and that they actually make it grow. That's what we're really after.

Corporate communications. I think it's an excellent question, but in a sense the answer is one that would remind the member about the complementary nature that there would be in terms of communications. The Public Affairs Bureau, of course, is there to promote the government of Alberta in some of the 60,000-foot level kinds of things that government would do. As a matter of fact, our communications people in the individual department, at least some of them, are actually employed by the Public Affairs Bureau. Then, of course, we have people within our communications branch that report to us and are paid by us.

I don't know if you've heard any of my speeches in public, but when I stick to the script, they're great speeches. Where I get in trouble is when I start to digress or when I make it up off the top of my head, although that's being open and transparent because you can see the top of my head. [interjection] I knew it. I knew it. It works every time, that one.

But I'd like to remind all the members of the House, then, that at the ground level, where we as the department and the minister operate, there are specific details that we feel are important in providing information not only to other members here in the House but to the general public or to specific public. I sometimes tease my staff by indicating that we must be the ministry of reports. We have a tremendous number of reports that are circulated, and I think they are excellent documents.

We noted your criticism on the website on Korea. Certainly, as I was making notes, I glanced upstairs to see that they're making notes, and I'll be getting a briefing, no doubt, in a day or two on that particular website. These are the kinds of things that we get involved in. I have to tell you, hon. member, that I can't believe the activity that we have. As the previous Minister of Human Resources and Employment we had over a billion dollar budget. We had all kinds of things that we were trying to do in terms of reforming and changing and improving, yet I never got asked to go and speak hardly anywhere. I'm not sure how to explain that. I guess it was just the kinds of things that we were dealing with. We tended to be more reactive than proactive. But now, within Economic Development, I mean, you have a budget that's 95 per cent smaller than what we had previously, yet it's unbelievable the invitations, the requests for Economic Development and, thus, the minister to appear and to speak.

As we stand here, I can't really tell you on a daily basis how many people are actually working on speeches for me, but I don't know if a day goes by that I'm not speaking, you know, to some group. I've had days when there were five speeches that were prepared for me and were presented, obviously with the little note: check against delivery. [interjection] You got that, did you?

Certainly, on the trade missions: again, this is an area where I will be open about what we're going to do, and of course I'll be open to criticism for what we are doing. I don't know how else to deal with it except that when my time in this department is over, I want it said of me that he wasn't afraid to go, you know, into the lion's dens around the world to promote Alberta. As I said, we'll be doing it next week in Houston, the week after that will be a tourism function in Saskatoon, then on to Ottawa to talk to federal counterparts, and then on to Montreal to see what we can do about biotechnology in this province. Quebec is probably the leader in the country. I don't know that we can operate the way that Quebec does, but I want to look in people's eyes and see if there's some kind of model that we can come up with to inject some more energy into our biotechnology areas.

I want to say that when I started this evening, I poked fun at myself about the biotechnology area and the function that I was just at. But the young people, these high school students that were there and the fact that they were working on ways to identify and control breast cancer cells, the fact that they were looking at various ways to enhance canola, the fact that they were involved in other communicable diseases and that sort of thing: I mean, I didn't have to understand the science necessarily behind it to know that here were these young people that are working right at the cusp of modern science and research as it relates to primarily medical factors. In biotechnology what we're doing is that we're taking the science of biology and then combining it with technologies that are available and moving forward.

So I need to actually give myself, I think, a little more credit, Mr. Chairman. I'm not as dumb as some people might think I am in this particular area. But I did like having a bit of fun with it.

On the two offices in Beijing it was astute, of course, to recognize it. For a long time we have had a combined organization that is the China-Alberta petroleum corporation, so that's one of the offices that we have in Beijing. Then, of course, the other is co-located at the Canadian embassy and provides, then, normal kinds of services. Your pointing out Shanghai I think is something that this minister or ministers that will follow me are going to really have to have a look at because that's a very, very exciting place right now if for no other reason than just to tie it in again with the B.C. ports strategy.

When we were out touring Prince Rupert and the port of Vancouver a couple of weeks ago - I guess it was during the Easter break - everything we heard about in terms of containers had a tie-in to Shanghai. Everything we heard about the huge tower cranes that are used to load and unload container ships onto container ports: Shanghai. Just a little anecdote. You might find this interesting. As we speak, ships are being built in Shanghai that will carry 8,000 containers. These ships are so big that they will not be able to get through the Panama Canal. So that's going to create some interesting dynamics, of course, for the western part of the U.S. and Canada.

But the port of Vancouver, both in Burrard Inlet and also at the Delta port, is expanding and, of course, they need more of these cranes. Of course, to get into Burrard Inlet you've got to get underneath the Lion's Gate Bridge. These cranes are so huge that they will not be able to get under the bridge in the final constructed frame. What they will have to do is that they'll have to wait for low tide, and they've also had to not finish off the construction of it so it can get under the bridge. So you're getting a tour of the harbour, and you're looking up at the Lion's Gate Bridge, and you think: well, that's a long way up there. You can just imagine the size of some of these structures. Shanghai is likely going to have to be a possibility in the future.

I don't like passing the buck. I'd like to take the buck. I'd like to have the Washington, DC, office but that's Ed Stelmach's area. [interjections] Oh, I'm sorry. Did I just do that? The Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations has that office.

The Chair: Hon. minister, just a reminder that it's Beauchesne's 484 if you're interested in looking it up later.

Mr. Dunford: Yeah. Actually, I need to do that, don't I?

On the comments about Prince Rupert, again you've recognized, as we have, the importance, and certainly we're following the CN situation and looking for opportunities that that might be able to present. About 60 per cent of those containers that are coming back from the Memphis area up to Chicago and then west, as I remember from our briefings out in the ports, are going back empty, so tremendous opportunities for Alberta products to be in containers that are already built, and of course in terms of back-loading prices.

I agree with you absolutely about the jurisdictions and trying to compete for film. You termed it a race to the bottom. I agree with that, and I don't understand how they can do it, but clearly money goes to where it's welcome. Again, it's going to be a constant challenge, I think, for any jurisdiction trying to get film. You know, it is a great industry in that sense.

Before politics I did a number of things, and one of them happened to be providing some management assistance to a number of small businesses in High River, Alberta, in 1990 or '91. I forget which year exactly. Unforgiven was being filmed in that part of the world, and it was just phenomenal what it was doing for the motel business and the restaurant business in that area not only in High River but in Longview as well.

I'm not sure how we could deal with your thoughts about siphoning off some of the energy stuff to invest in a particular business, but certainly the green technologies are part of the future of Alberta. I would just remind the hon. member and direct him, actually, to the EnergyINet. This is an initiative that I'm incredibly excited about. To have all of those reserves that we have here in Alberta, it'll make us the energy capital not only of Canada but of the world. The fact of the matter is that each technology we will use will be greener than the one previously used and that at some point in time we're going to have huge energy coming out of this province and zero emissions. Now, there's a vision.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate being able to get up and talk about our economic development here in the province. We definitely do have a province where the economy is booming. We have increased industry, as the minister has mentioned. Economic prosperity and diversification are coming forward. He referred a little bit to greater value to our customers around the globe. He has talked about value-added product instead of exporting our raw materials, attracting investment from international markets. He has been travelling around the world. I do appreciate that and him being willing to take on, as he says, the tigers. I didn't see any claw marks or teeth marks, though, so I don't think they're that unfriendly.

He commented, though, earlier in the area where I want to get to. He says that they don't participate in subsidies and tax incentives, and the area I have to question the most is that where our economy is booming the best and doing the best and you're making your trips and putting in a great deal of effort, and that is in the oil and gas industry. We've got an absolute boom and, as has been mentioned, a hundred billion dollars worth of investments coming up there.

It just appears to me that one has to ask the question: do we have to have such great incentives for them to come with their capital expenses? They're giving away a lot there, and I guess what's even more disheartening is that it's obvious there's a major rush for those commodities. It seems like we're saying: you can have the commodities for free at 1 per cent royalty until you've paid off your capital investments.

We've got such a boom that we can't even keep up with the infrastructure there. There isn't enough land available. There aren't enough workers available to do it. The infrastructure isn't there to even accommodate that many people, but we're going gangbusters there. The incentives are so low, we're on sale and, like I say, giving away our products.

I guess what I want to turn that to is your talk about the tiger in Alberta. It seemed like the tiger is claiming our land, and it's not leaving any room for the beef industry. That's the area where I'd like to focus in all of that. You've made many trips to different areas in the world. You're going to make more. I would ask that you would put the beef industry and the packing industry in the top of your priority list.

This is a billion dollar industry. We've talked about a lot of smaller industries. They're all good and important, but the packing industry and cattle, specifically, is one of our largest ones, and we've been devastated. I've referred to it before that we've had a tsunami that's come across our land, and it's wiped out a great deal of the money in the industry. It's gone to big business, specifically to packing plants that have a monopoly on exporting our beef. No one has, so I've asked the minister to please put very high on his priorities to try and focus and take all of those innovative and initiative ideas that we've had in our other industries and try to attract business in cattle.

I specifically want to point out that I'm very worried that our efforts have all been to focus on opening up the U.S. border. They've got chronic waste disease in their wildlife, and for them to continue to say that they don't have any mad cow – we don't want to be the fools lined up to get in there, only to be locked up with them with trading in the rest of the world. I would urge this government and this minister to go to those areas.

In goal 3 you specifically have in there that Economic Development has developed Alberta's international marketing strategy and target priority markets for investment attraction and trade. We need that in the cattle industry. Out in the rural areas they're getting very discouraged, especially trying to get up the small packing plants. They continue to be told what they can and cannot do specifically when it comes to testing BSE.

In every disaster there's always something good of it, and I feel that what would be most critical and important is that we are to go out and develop new markets in the Middle East, China, Japan. There have even been delegations from Europe come here and say that we can export into Europe even with the ban on hormones because we can ship out natural beef.

In closing, I just want to reiterate, I guess, the distress that rural Alberta is in. Their perception of the cattle industry in rural Alberta is that this government is declaring losers, and those losers are small businesses in rural Alberta. They're willing to help big business, big cities.

Perhaps your vision would be best described for many rural Albertans: Alberta is the best place in the world to live, visit, and do business unless you own cattle. We've got to change that around. The mission to many of the rural areas and small businesses and small packing plants that are trying to get up and running is to facilitate big business and prosperity in our cities. I ask the minister on behalf of the cattle industry in rural Alberta to please focus on them. We know that we have the product here, and if we put our minds to it and be innovative and seek and put an effort into that, we can see the cattle industry prosper again.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. Quickly, to focus on the beef industry, to make sure that I get those comments in, certainly, there are two areas. First of all, on the slaughterhouse side I agree about increasing the domestic slaughter capacity, and that fits two of our initiatives. It fits the value-added initiative, and it fits the rural development strategy. So we'll be working in that particular area. Where the difficulty comes, of course, is: how do we inject money into an enterprise?

Also, I would remind the hon. member that – and, first of all, I agree in diversifying the export of beef into other countries, and in order to do that, while we wouldn't invest in an actual business, we did provide $30 million to the Canadian beef marketing organization. I don't remember its exact title. Then this was followed up, I don't know, a week or so later by $50 million from the federal government.

Basically, we recognize the need to diversify not only our own economy but to diversify our export relationships, especially in the area of beef. I don't know that we'll agree on all areas as to how we get there, but certainly I think we can start from the same base, anyway, in terms of how we would deal with this area.

I think our regional development alliances are important aspects of the rural development strategy. As I mentioned in my opening remarks, something like, I guess, 90 per cent of Albertans are now covered by a regional economic development alliance. Of course Calgary and Edmonton each have theirs. You are aware of SouthGrow; you've attended the meetings. I don't know if you've had a chance to attend the Palliser economic development region, but again there they are. They're people at the ground level, people that are aware of the kinds of facilities, the kind of inventory that's already within their community, so they're trying as best they can, then, to come up with the kinds of ideas, the kinds of initiatives that they can support at the local level and that we can support at our particular level.

The royalty structure, I think, is the most misunderstood issue in Alberta right now. I don't think it's nearly as bad as what opposition members would tend to have us believe, and I think that at some point the Minister of Energy – I don't know if his estimates have gone on already but . . .

Mr. Coutts: Yes, they have.

Mr. Dunford: Have they?

Mr. Coutts: Yes.

Mr. Dunford: Okay. Well . . .

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. minister, but in accordance with Standing Order 58(4), which specifies that a "vote on an estimate before the Committee of Supply shall be called after it has received not less than 2 hours of consideration," I would now call the vote on the estimates of the Department of Economic Development.

Agreed to:
Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases $79,750,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It has indeed been a very enlightening evening, and the Minister of Economic Development has done his usual great job explaining it all, and for that we are all grateful. I would, therefore, move that the committee rise and report the budget of Economic Development and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, for the following department.

Economic Development: expense and equipment/inventory purchases $79,750,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? Carried.

 Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'll call the committee to order.

Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2005

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I don't know where to begin because I had three particular questions. [interjections] Now, don't encourage me, guys, because otherwise I'll take my whole time. I'm quite willing to stand here and use my time if that's . . .

An Hon. Member: Filibuster.

Mr. R. Miller: I will filibuster. I will learn very quickly how to filibuster, if there's a need to do so.

Mr. Chairman, in second reading, there was a commitment made by the minister to answer three particular questions at the committee stage, and I'm hoping that we'll be able to fulfill that commitment tonight. In particular, they were regarding the raising of the cap on resource revenue spending from $4 billion to $4.75 billion, the fact that the native land claims were being added in as a consideration outside of the regular government spending, and on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar a question as to what would be happening to the revenues generated by the funds that are to be set aside in the debt retirement account.

Assuming that we can hear some answers from the members opposite as to those three particular questions, I had already recommended in second reading that we were willing to grant our approval to this bill.

So it looks like I might well be receiving those answers, and I look forward to that.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chair. To the hon. member asking the questions, I just wanted to indicate for him and for other members here that the Minister of Finance will, indeed, during her remarks in the next day or two specifically answer the questions that have been referenced and will elaborate further at that time.

Mr. R. Miller: Is it my understanding, then, that we're not going to get the answers to those questions before we're expected to vote this bill through committee?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I think the intention is to finish with committee tonight and then move on to third reading hopefully by not later than Wednesday, and during her remarks on Wednesday prior to the vote you will have the answers to the questions you require.

Mr. Chase: I'm wondering if at this point, then, we should adjourn the Committee of the Whole so that we can have those answers as part of the process rather than proceeding to the third vote. I'm just suggesting that we adjourn at this point, then, the Committee of the Whole so that we can have those answers.

I move that we adjourn the Committee of the Whole so that we can have the required answers before proceeding to the third stage.

The Chair: I believe the proper motion would be rising and reporting progress out of committee, not to adjourn it.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Agreed. Why don't we do this – I understand where the hon. members are coming from – I will undertake to get them those answers before third reading starts, so that they'll be able to be guided. The answers are very straightforward, but it will be up to the Minister of Finance. She did have some other urgency tonight and apologizes for not being able to be here in person to provide them. But I'll undertake through her office to get it to all the members, especially the two members questioning it tonight, if that alleviates their concerns, and I hope it will.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm not going to belabour the point at length because I understand that, in fact, the Finance minister did have some other urgent matter come up. It's just a little frustrating, quite frankly, because I am aware of the fact as well that there were negotiations going on between our House leader and the assistant to the Government House Leader in this matter. At one point this bill was taken off the agenda for tonight, and then it was put back on. It was off, and it was on.

My understanding, when ultimately it was put back on, was that we would be receiving answers to the questions that were asked at second reading before we were expected to pass this bill through committee. Obviously, we're not going to win any vote anyway, quite frankly, but I'd just like it to be on the record that I'm a little frustrated with the fact that a commitment had been made that we would receive these answers before the bill was voted at committee. I do appreciate the hon. Education minister's commitment to make sure that we have them now in advance of third reading. I certainly hope that that does take place because as I had indicated in second reading, I have no intention of holding up this bill. It is truly a housekeeping bill, but at the same time a commitment was made, and I had hoped that it would be honoured before we would be asked to vote in committee.

Having said that, I will continue to recommend to my colleagues that we support this bill, having noted that I'm somewhat less than enamoured with the fact that we didn't get the answers that we hoped to have received tonight. Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 37 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would move that the committee now rise and report Bill 37.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I'd like to remind everyone before we proceed that tomorrow the Forum for Young Albertans will be taking place here in the Assembly, so if everyone could remove everything from their desktops tonight, it would be much appreciated. It won't be there in the morning if you don't.

The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 37.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Second Reading

Bill 35
Employment Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate April 5: Dr. Brown]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me pleasure to be able to rise this evening and open debate on behalf of the Official Opposition on Bill 35, the Employment Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2005. This bill, on the surface at least, appears to be a positive step forward, particularly as it refers to private pensions. I understand that it is designed to increase the superintendent's strength for monitoring and enforcing private pensions, designed to increase employee access to information for pension plans, designed to facilitate provisions for dividing pension benefits on the breakdown of a marriage, and designed to allow terminated pension plans to be turned over to the Public Trustee on behalf of members that cannot be located. These, as I said, certainly would strike me as being good things, yet having said that, there are certainly going to be a number of questions that I would like to see addressed before we grant our approval of Bill 35.

I know that I've been accused by some members opposite of sounding like a broken record already, but once again in this bill we do find an awful lot of situations where legislation is being moved into regulations. I'm on record many times already as indicating the concerns I have for that and questioning whether or not it's really necessary or if it's simply a matter of convenience. It certainly causes me concern when we take things out of legislation and thereby, whether intentionally or not, limit public scrutiny and public debate. So that is one negative comment that I do have about this bill.

It does, however, appear to relieve some basic administrative burdens, and I think any time we can eliminate paperwork, especially for small business, that's something that I'm passionate about, having operated a small business for 25 years. So that's certainly something that I would be supportive of.

I'm just going to quickly rip through some of the questions regarding various sections. I would expect to dig into these with a little more voracity or in a little more depth once we get to the committee stage, but I can sort of run over them quickly now.

Section 2 talks about clarifying and defining terms. One significant change in section 2 is that a person who does not contribute to a pension plan for 52 weeks would not have that pension plan terminated. In particular, this reflects federal changes as far as maternity benefits, and I think that that's a good thing, of course.

In section 8 we strengthen the act by legislating that all pension plan documents have to be within the scope of the act, and if, in fact, there are documents that are not a part of the act, the superintendent has the authority to make them comply. Again, on the surface that would appear to be a good thing. I would be asking when we get to committee whether or not it could be explained to us exactly how the superintendent would in fact enforce administrators of the pension plans to comply with that particular section of the act.

Included in section 11 is more information that would ensure, again, that all pension documents are within the act. It does raise a couple of questions in terms of why it's so important to have all of the pension documentation comply with the act, what sort of documentation is going to be considered, and what might actually be considered to be outside of the act, and it raises some questions, in my mind at least, about privacy issues and who might have access to all of those documents and so forth.

Section 13 gives members the power to access their pension plan, and that would, in my mind, be a good thing. It would outline that they'd have to be notified of changes to the plans. Particularly, I think that if an employer were to make changes that might be disadvantageous to the employee, there's a requirement that the employee would have to be notified. So, obviously, this is a good thing and certainly will have my support.

One question that's raised in my mind there is that if the law is going to stipulate that employees do in fact have more access to the statements of their pensions, we're wondering what assurances the member can have that employers or custodians will actually provide the information to the employees and what remedies there might be for employees if, in fact, they feel that the employer is not making that information available.

Again, in section 13(e) more employer access is allowed to pension documents. A question arises there about privacy as well and whether or not, in fact, the employees would be protected if perhaps there was information in those documents that they might not want their employers to have access to.

Section 23 allows funds to be unlocked by expatriates, thereby in theory at least making it easier for people to access their money and perhaps move their pensions into a plan in another country. I certainly think that that would make good sense, Mr. Speaker.

Section 31 again appears to strengthen the enforcement provisions of the act, and I would support that although a couple of questions again. There's a discussion in this section about stress tests, as we're calling them, where cabinet can actually pass additional plans to test a pension, for example, to see whether or not there are, you know, sufficient funds in a plan or what would happen if a plan were to suffer some sort of a calamitous drop. It does beg a couple of questions, whether or not Executive Council would in fact apply those stress tests evenly across all private pension plans, and again I think sort of mirrors some of the concerns or some of the questions that I heard when we were dealing with Bill 19, the Securities Amendment Act, 2005, and exactly who might have authority there and whether or not that authority would in fact be arm's length from the government.

Section 33 talks about a pension fund. If it's not receiving appropriate funding, the trustee must inform the superintendent, which would seem to be a good thing. Even though there may well be good reason, Mr. Speaker, for a plan not to be performing well for some reason, I think it would certainly be in the employees' best interests to be notified of that. One of the questions, certainly in my mind, would be whether or not the superintendent . . .

An Hon. Member: Are you nodding off?

Mr. R. Miller: I am nodding off, actually. The note from my researcher isn't making sense in my head, and I'm thinking: why would I read that to the Assembly if it's not making sense to me? So I think I'll just skip to the next one. We'll just leave that alone for now, I think. Hopefully, I'll figure it out either in my head or in my researcher's head before we get to committee.

Section 49, Mr. Speaker, provides the superintendent power to go out and investigate a plan, such as appointing a forensic auditor, and it requires people to be interviewed during these investigations. Again, I'm just wondering about privacy issues, and we will dig into those a little deeper when we get to the committee stage.

I would just like to acknowledge some of the stakeholder groups that we spoke to in investigating this and, again, provide some accolades to the government for also having done what I would suggest appears to be a good job in terms of contacting stakeholder groups as well.

We spoke to the Association of Canadian Pension Management, the Pension Investment Association of Canada, Benefits Canada pension magazine, Ken Smith with the Alberta Society for Pension Reform, and the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. In most cases, again, these groups seem to indicate general approval of Bill 35 and what it would appear to accomplish, and certainly that goes a long way toward allowing me to recommend to my colleagues that we would most likely be supporting this bill given that the stakeholder groups that we've consulted seem to be in general agreement with the bill as it's presented to us.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to ask that we adjourn debate, and I'll take my seat.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Third Reading

Bill 5
Family Law Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 5, the Family Law Amendment Act, 2005.

As I've indicated previously, this act strengthens the Family Law Act before its proclamation in October of this year. The amendments will give mothers and fathers a more equal opportunity to be guardians of their children. The amendments also clarify the powers and responsibilities of persons who are guardians of children and correct other small errors and oversights.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora advised the committee that he was considering the provisions of Bill 5 in the context of the best interests of the children. I appreciated hearing him say that, and I believe that that is the approach that was taken by all hon. members with respect to this legislation.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre raised some issues with respect to how the Family Law Act dealt with same-gendered couples. She had concerns about the presumptions of paternity that continued to exist in section 8 of the act. She suggested that the act should speak of parents rather than mothers and fathers.

The purpose of the section is, however, not to speak about parents but to speak about fathers. Except in the case of surrogacy it is always clear who the mother of a child is. It is not necessarily clear who the father of a child is, so the law has developed common-sense rules to say who the father is. Section 8 provides those common-sense rules so that we don't in every case have to make purported fathers take a blood or DNA test. For the overwhelming majority of parents there continues to be a need for common-sense rules that define the legal status of the male parent. I don't believe that we are discriminating against female parents because we continue to have presumptions of paternity for male parents.

When the hon. member criticizes the guardianship provisions of section 20 for the same reason, she is forgetting that section 20 deals with natural parents only. Where a proposed guardian is not an actual parent, section 20 does not apply, whether that proposed parent is a member of a same-gender or a different-gender couple. A proposed guardian who is not an actual parent has to apply for guardianship or apply to adopt the child. This is not a matter of discrimination against same-gendered couples.

The hon. member says that some aspects of the law may have to change to recognize same-gendered couples if the federal government proceeds with its legislation. I believe that hon. members could disagree with her suggestion that sections 8 and 20 of the Family Law Act are sections that would be included in such a process of change.

I'd like to thank hon. members for their interest in the well-being of Alberta families and children as has been expressed in debate in committee and in the House. Although there were some disagreements over amendments, the discussion was always in the context of what was in the interests of the families and in the best interests of the children.

So with thanks to all members for their considerations I would urge the members of the Assembly to vote in favour of Bill 5.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. For the record I want to point out that the Family Law Amendment Act does not take into account the very vital role of grandparents. I am concerned that grandparents, particularly in somewhat estranged family relationships, are considered guilty until they prove themselves innocent when it comes to having access granted to be with their grandchildren. As a grandparent recently myself I feel that this Family Law Amendment Act should at least in future amendments consider the vital role of grandparents.

In the Speech from the Throne the notion of entire families being responsible for the raising of children was brought out, yet grandparents, while being stated as an important part of a child's rearing and growing, are ignored in this Family Law Amendment Act. For the record I would like it noted that grandparents deserve greater credit for their role, and they deserve greater access to their grandchildren. Quite often for whatever reason families that have become dysfunctional end up punishing grandparents and denying them their vital role in raising their grandchildren. To me the Family Law Amendment Act does not sufficiently address this concern, and hopefully in future revisions it will do so.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to all members for the excellent progress tonight. With that having been said, I would move that the House now stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 11:36 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly an impressive group of 45 senior high school students from across the province. These students are participating, as they do annually, in a nonpartisan learning experience called the Forum for Young Albertans.

As students do each year, they come to the provincial capital to learn first-hand about the day-to-day workings of the provincial government. The students are working with politicians and representatives from the public service, the legal community, academia, and business to examine and review political concerns of the day. This week these students are breaking bread with all Members of the Legislative Assembly at a special dinner. On Friday the group is holding a model parliament in these Chambers, Mr. Speaker, and I trust that the members of this Assembly will remember to model first-class parliamentary behaviour for the students today.

The students are seated in the members' gallery and the public gallery, as I understand. Mr. Speaker, I won't mention each name individually, but I'd ask them all to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Madam Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of 15 staff from the Public Affairs Bureau touring the Legislature today. I won't list each name individually, but I can tell members that the group includes communications staff from Children's Services through to Infrastructure, Seniors and Community Supports, as well as staff from the Alberta call centre and the Queen's Printer bookstore. These valued and dedicated staff are seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it's my pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly, from the oil sands capital of the world, the regional municipality and city of Fort McMurray, two grade 6 classes here today with parents and teachers from l'école Dickinsfield school and Boréal school. They were actually rock climbing last night. I didn't get a chance to rock climb with them, but I look forward to doing that in the future. I'd like to ask the students and teachers and all the parents that are with them on this important trip to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Jodie Bakker. Jodie is a graduate from the University of Alberta criminology program. She spent the last year working for Alberta Justice as a research officer in management and leadership services. Jodie took the initiative of doing an e-mail to my office asking if she could job shadow for a day because she was interested in learning what the minister did and to see the political process in action. She is with us today visiting the Legislature. I'd ask Jodie, who is in the members' gallery, to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you a member from my constituency of Calgary-Shaw. His name is John Bachynski. There are two things noteworthy about him. He lets me put a big sign in his yard during elections, which I appreciate, and the second is that he's the father of a constituent of mine who is now 6-8 and growing. He's 15 years old, and Centennial high school is basing a lot of their future basketball hopes on him. I'd ask him if he'll rise, John Bachynski, a member of my constituency.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a good friend of mine from Lloydminster. Mr. Glenn Soloy has spent many, many years working with the governments of Saskatchewan and the Northwest Territories both in restructuring and in many of the affairs with the First Nations people. Glenn is here to watch proceedings today. I'd ask Glenn to rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you two members of my constituency seated up in the public gallery, and the third member is my secretary. Kim Hutchings is the secretary for the Douglasdale community association. She's been there for 16 years. She was one of the original founders of the Douglasdale Estates Community Association. As well, Darrell Hutchings. If they could rise. And the person that keeps me organized daily, Donna Elms.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you 21 visitors from the Trochu Valley school in my constituency who are visiting the Legislature today, accompanied by their teacher, Bill Cunningham, and parents Ruth King and Kathy Samson. Although they're not in the Assembly right now – well, five are in the gallery, and they've already been introduced by the Premier as young Albertans in the Forum for Young Albertans. The rest will be in during question period, but I'm sure they would appreciate the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, your group is not in right at the moment. We'll do it later.

Ms Evans: Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Office of the Chief Internal Auditor

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To give the impression that someone is guarding tax dollars, this government created the office of the chief internal auditor, which they refer to as their own CIA. When you look at the committee that oversees the chief internal auditor, you see that the only two public members are both high-ranking PC Party insiders. To the Premier: could he explain how appointing the PC Party's vice-president of finance and one of the Premier's closest buddies as the only public members on the government's internal audit committee provides objective oversight of the government's expenses?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, the chair of the finance committee would have some financial knowledge. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition has not named the other person. If he names him, I'll find out if he is, in fact, a close buddy. Lots of people purport to be close buddies. Maybe he is a close buddy. The only other person I can think of is Mr. Halpin, who's a fellow of the Institute of Chartered Accountants, very qualified, but he happens to be a friend too. Nothing wrong with that.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given that official government of Alberta documents state that the Auditor General is expected to "rely on the work of the [chief internal auditor]," isn't this just a way to have the PC Party insulate this government from the efforts of the Auditor General?

1:40

Mr. Klein: No, Mr. Speaker. That's wrong. The answer is wrong – or the question is wrong. The answer is right, of course. Jack Halpin I don't think is on the audit committee any longer. I think it's George Cornish he alludes to. George Cornish was the former chief commissioner of the city of Calgary, a very knowledgeable individual.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Finance: given that the committee of the internal auditor is chaired by the Deputy Minister of Executive Council, what role does the office of the internal auditor have in the investigation into the Alberta Securities Commission?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, none at this point.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Securities Commission

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in this Assembly the Minister of Finance said in regard to the Securities Commission controversy that she has personally "researched the documents entirely" and that she could not find one identifier in those documents "that gives the identity of any of the complainants." It's right here on page 974 of Hansard, actually. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. Given that no complainants are identified, why won't she, in the interests of openness and accountability, release those documents publicly?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I think that if he'd have researched Hansard back maybe a week or two ago when I answered this question previously, I explained very clearly that those documents were provided to me on the condition that they would not be released by me under solicitor-client privilege. I accepted those documents under that understanding and that undertaking, and I remain committed to that.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A simple question to the Minister of Finance: who is the client in that arrangement?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the clients, in my understanding of that undertaking, are the persons who came forward with complaints.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. To the same minister: will the minister categorically deny that there has been any interference in enforcement and investigations at the Alberta Securities Commission?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a couple of things very clear. First of all, the Alberta Securities Commission is a quasi-judicial body and operates at arm's length from this government. In most instances that's what the opposition would want. Therefore, I do not involve myself in the day-to-day operations of that commission, nor do I think it appropriate.

Secondly, the issues that have arisen at the commission, primarily, as I understand it, in the human resource area, did not come up in one day. Certainly, it'll take probably more than one day to fix them. I am pleased that the commission has brought in some external management consultants in the human resource area and have given me every undertaking that they wish to resolve these issues as quickly as possible.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Deregulation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Even top Tories cannot support their flagship policy, electricity deregulation. Top Tories are reluctant to gamble on long-term electricity contracts because they know that electricity deregulation has driven the price far too high. My first question is to the Premier. Why is this government continuing to penalize electricity consumers for the benefit of electricity companies?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that is false. What we want to do is to let the private sector prevail in accordance with our government's policy of promoting entrepreneurship and free enterprise. The hon. member is obviously alluding to media reports that stem from a draft discussion document, as I understand it, that was prepared for the Utilities Consumer Advocate. So nothing is final yet, but when the final report comes in, either the Minister of Energy or the Minister of Government Services or both will be reviewing those recommendations and subsequently will be making recommendations to cabinet and caucus.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the Premier: given that top Tories are not interested in buying into electricity deregulation, why is this government continuing to force expensive long-term electricity contracts onto reluctant residential electricity consumers?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is totally false. Customers have the choice. I'm the top Tory, and as far as I know, I'm still on the regulated rate. I don't pay that much attention to it, but I can tell you what my bill is for my condo here in Edmonton. It averages about $24, $25 a month. Now, admittedly, I'm not there that much, but I keep the air conditioning going, and I keep the fan going. [interjection] Yeah, the fridge is going, and when I'm home, I watch television, leave the lights on. I try, you know, and conserve energy when I can.

But I'm the top Tory, Mr. Speaker, and I'm on the regulated rate, so no one is forcing me to do anything.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the top Tory: why hasn't the top Tory purchased a long-term electricity contract if it's such a good deal? Why do you expect Albertans to buy into it when you won't?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, they have a choice. They have a choice, and that's what this issue is all about. It's about choice. Certainly, there is nothing wrong with choice.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Utilities Consumer Advocate Advisory Council

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP opposition has obtained and will table the report on retail electricity options that the Minister of Government Services tried yesterday to dismiss as a draft. This final report of the advisory council is a scathing indictment of the deregulation of electricity. The advisory council expresses disappointment that consumer protection is not even on the radar screen of the government, and instead electricity policy is being driven for the exclusive benefit of companies. This is to the Minister of Government Services. Why is this government hiding, deflecting, and spinning a report from its own advisory council that concludes, "We are surprised and disappointed that consumer protection is not even a decision criterion considered by the Department."

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, that is a draft report that the member has. As a matter of fact, that report is dated February 23, and on February 17 the committee held another public hearing in Vauxhall, so of course they didn't have time to incorporate into the draft report the results from that meeting. As a matter of fact, the final report, after it has gone through the whole process, will be out for public viewing. This is in response to a discussion paper that the Department of Energy has issued. This is the committee's draft response to that discussion paper.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, it doesn't say "draft" anywhere on it.

Given the advisory council's scathing criticism of Conservative deregulation policy, will the minister start doing the right thing on behalf of smaller electricity customers and stop forcing Albertans to choose electricity retail options that even the minister himself admits are a bad deal?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, that last part of his preamble – I haven't even discussed publicly and/or with the minister the issue about whether I have a contract or not. Clearly, since the restructuring of electricity started to occur, there has been some 3,000 megawatts of generation created, and there is not one bit of public debt connected to it. That is just one. We'll readily admit that the retail section of the restructuring has not matured yet, and of course we're looking at the possibility of extending the RRO. That's what this discussion paper is all about.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, will the minister admit that he's misled the House about this being a draft and admit that he's forcing the committee to rewrite it to suit the government?

Mr. Hancock: Point of order.

The Speaker: There's a point of order recognized.

Does the hon. minister want to respond to the question? There were three questions in there. Take the first one.

Mr. Lund: Well, maybe I'll deal with the first comment, about misleading. There is nothing misleading about what I said yesterday nor what I'm saying today. That is a draft report, and there will be another report that will be dealt with. That one is simply a report that was sent in originally.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Griffith Scott Middle School

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents in Millet are interested in the future infrastructure improvements at the Griffith Scott middle school. Could the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation inform this Assembly what government is doing to replace or renovate the school?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On March 22 of this year I met with the Wetaskiwin school board to discuss this very issue. This issue is a very pressing issue as the audit score of this particular facility is 1,040, which is actually one of the highest audit scores that we have in the province. They have subsequently put this school forward on their capital list, and we're certainly going to be looking at it.

Mr. Johnson: To the same minister: since, as you mentioned, the audit score is 1,000 or higher, why has this school not been renovated prior to now?

Dr. Oberg: That's an excellent question. In 2001 this school was actually awarded money to be replaced, but the school board came to us and said that rather than replace the Millet school, they would sooner build a new school in Falun, which is also within the school board area. The money was subsequently transferred to Falun at that particular time. The Millet school has now come back on their priority list, and we're currently considering that.

Mr. Johnson: My final question to the same minister: how is it determined whether the school will be renovated or replaced altogether?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a couple of answers to this one. First of all, the typical answer is that if the cost to renovate a school is 75 per cent of the cost of a new school, we will undertake building a new school. The school board has asked us for $2.7 million. It's estimated that a new school would cost about $5.7 million.

The interesting component of this, in talking to the school board – and this is where the hands on of talking to the school board actually helps – is that, apparently, this school is built on a zonolite formation, which has caused it to shift almost continuously. It will bulge and then decrease. So I think that what we have to do in this particular case is take a very serious look at the engineering diagrams and see whether we should replace it purely because of where the school is as opposed to the actual cost of doing this because it may well benefit us in the long run to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Missing Computer Tapes and Microfiches

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Information and Privacy Commissioner released a report on the investigation into the loss of computer tapes and microfiches containing personal and private information on 77 Albertans. The shipments of these tapes were not tracked. The Alberta Pensions Administration Corporation was not even aware that the microfiche copies were being produced of each pension cheque and that the microfiche processing was done by a private-sector vendor. My questions are to the Premier. How will this government protect the private information of Albertans and prevent further incidents of information loss or even theft?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know whether the hon. member is talking about health tapes or pension tapes. In either case I'll have the appropriate ministers respond. I can preface it this way. Whenever these matters come to our attention, we take whatever steps are deemed necessary to protect the rights of individuals and the privacy of individuals. But I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, on the pension tapes I can tell the hon. member that the Alberta Pensions Administration has accepted all of the Privacy Commissioner's recommendations. The Privacy Commissioner did say that there was a limited amount of personal information on those. In fact, the APA, or Alberta Pensions Administration, did individually talk to or inform each of the affected individuals, and the APA will be working with IBM to develop better processes, ensuring that this doesn't happen in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So given that no action against IBM, the information records private contractor, has been taken and that the loss of these private records was discovered in January but not reported to the government till March, can the Premier tell us how the government plans to react when another breach occurs? Will these private contractors ever be held accountable?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again I'll defer to the hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, the very best action to take in this is the action that has been taken, and I believe that making sure to the very, very utmost of our abilities that there are no further breaches is the best way to respond. As I said, we have accepted all of the Privacy Commissioner's recommendations. We are working with IBM to ensure that there are safeguards, that there are checks in place to ensure as much as you humanly possibly can that this breach does not occur again.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you. Given that IBM and the Department of Restructuring and Government Efficiency both confirmed that producing the microfiche copies was a continuation of an old practice, will the Premier or the hon. Deputy Premier instruct the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency to stop this costly, unnecessary, and potentially risky routine?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I can tell the hon. member that that has already occurred. It was identified that it was not necessary today to retain microfiche, and that practice is not intended to continue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

School Construction in Calgary

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier our government announced a $9.2 billion capital investment in infrastructure for the next three years, including $3.1 billion in municipal infrastructure, $2 billion in highway construction, $1.6 billion in health facilities and equipment, and $1.1 billion in schools and postsecondary institutions. This is very good news. Reflecting the inquiries from my Calgary constituents, my question today is to the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. What is the capital investment in infrastructure for education at all levels allocated to the Calgary area?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Included in this particular budget is roughly $175 million for K to 12 school infrastructure. Those are projects that, yes, have been announced before, but these are schools that will either be started or finished within the next three years. Through to the hon. member, there are 16 new schools that are included in those 20 projects.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental question to the same minister: hon. minister, given that you base the sharing of $3.1 billion in capital investment in municipal infrastructure on population, how do you allocate the $1.1 billion capital investment in infrastructure for education in a highly populated area like Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much. The simple answer to this, Mr. Speaker, is: on need. When we look around the province, we see schools of different ages and different conditions. Quite simply, there is a higher need in some areas than in others. If we had all of the school districts on the same need, then I think there's a lot of merit to what the hon. member is talking about, on a per capita type of funding scheme. But, unfortunately, at this particular time we do not have that, so therefore it is based on need.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question to the same minister: hon. minister, in terms of investment in education, how do you plan to address the pressing needs from the fast growth area of Calgary, Alberta's strong economic engine?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I recognize that the hon. member is from Calgary, which is certainly a booming part of the province, but in reality there are a lot of booming parts of the province, including northern Alberta, including southern Alberta, including central Alberta. It's a very nice problem to have, but we do have to keep on top of the educational needs. We do have to keep on top. After paying off the debt, this has freed us up significantly for some of the things that we can do. Again, we're going to be looking very, very closely at the school needs of all the school boards in the province because, realistically, the whole province is a strong economic engine at this particular point in time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

AAA Cattle Company

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week this government disregarded its own processes when it approved the feedlot development of AAA Cattle Company near Didsbury. The company had expanded beyond the terms of its approval, and the Alberta Court of Appeal also ruled against this, stating that there had been no proper assessment of risk to the environment. My first question to the Minister of Environment: given this ruling by the Alberta Court of Appeal, why has the government failed to do a proper environmental impact assessment before allowing the NRCB to expand the operations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to first and foremost say that this government is without question committed to protecting and managing our water supply and the environment. As you know, I've referred to it in this House in the past as blue gold.

In the case that the hon. member mentioned, Alberta's role is to consider issuing, of course, a water licence under the province's very progressive Water Act. The impact assessment that the hon. member makes reference to is used there in terms of collecting specific information and data to assist the decision-maker, and in this case it's the NRCB, the Natural Resources Conservation Board. In addition, before we issue a water licence, we want to make sure that there is enough water available for the existing water users and, of course, for the use of the actual licence.

Mr. Speaker, let me just say that in this particular case a comprehensive review based on historical data that we work in close association with shows that there is ample water available. I can assure the hon. member and all members of this Assembly that we want to make sure that the conditions of monitoring and reporting, which are part of our licence, will continue to ensure that this valuable resource will continue today and well into the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: given that this company had been stopped in the past for illegal development without approval, why is the company now being rewarded?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, first of all, let me explain. The Natural Resources Conservation Board is an independent, quasi-judicial board, and it would be very inappropriate for me to comment on the decision. However, the decisions that are in place balance the interests of the livestock industry as well as the environment and public safety.

I can talk about the process, Mr. Speaker. In this particular instance the NRCB followed the Court of Appeal's direction. They reviewed the environmental risk of AAA Cattle, particularly on its pre-existing operations. The review looked at AAA's updated application and took that into consideration in their decision as well as considered stakeholders such as the county of Mountain View, I believe, plus Alberta Environment and Alberta Transportation and the committee for the Lone Pine neighbours and the community members.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you. Again to the Sustainable Resource Development minister: given that the original approval was only 2,500 head of cattle and the NRCB is now allowing 18,000 head, how can the public be confident that you are protecting the public and environmental interests?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, as I said – and I would be very cautious here – the Natural Resources Conservation Board is an independent, quasi-judicial board. I do not enter into their final decisions. The board has a good process, and we are responsible under the legislation for the process. We are also responsible to the legislation that is under the Agricultural Operation Practices Act. Therefore, the board takes that process, considering the legislation – they have open hearings as well as court appeals, and every operation is reviewed on its own merits and considered on its own merits and its own application. The NRCB has been working for the last three years and doing a diligent job on this for confined feeding operations in the province, and it's the responsible way to go.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Daily Physical Activity in Schools

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As part of our government's attempt to increase physical activity amongst our youth and in response to the recommendation contained in Alberta's Commission on Learning, the Minister of Education has announced the daily physical activity initiative. This will require all students in grades 1 through 9 to participate in 30 minutes of daily physical activity, and school boards are now preparing for its implementation starting this fall. My questions are to the Minister of Education. Can the minister explain the rationale behind the initiative and mostly how he expects this to happen?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think the rationale is predicated on two premises, one of them being common sense and the other one being a study that was done back in the year 2000. Now, the Learning Commission looked at both of those predications and also determined that obesity amongst our youth is growing at a very alarming rate. As we all know, in later years and even in some earlier years that can lead to problems and complications with things like diabetes and heart attack and stroke and so on. So when our Premier announced the new health and wellness framework in his speech in January or February of this year, it was contemplated that the daily physical activity, which is going to start in September of this year, would be the first part of that particular initiative, and that's how we see it being implemented.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you. For my first supplemental: will the minister please clarify what he meant in his comments that he made to school boards last month where he indicated that physical activity must be safe, structured, and supervised in order to qualify as daily physical activity?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you for that question. That's a very good question because I, too, have been receiving letters from some school boards asking for that clarification, and I hope to put something out that will be a follow-up to the message I sent out about a month ago. I should get that out within the next few weeks.

Mr. Speaker, in a nutshell safe would mean in accordance with the safety guidelines as teachers and principals would know them, structured would mean something planned, and with respect to supervised that, too, would be in accordance with the school regulations, where we mean supervised by an adult or someone like that who's actually in charge. It should also be an enjoyable activity, and students also should have an understanding of the importance of that activity.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you. For my final supplemental: assuming that this initiative is successful for grades 1 through 9, is the minister considering making physical activity mandatory for kindergarten through grade 12?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that in a perfect world and if there were more time in the school day, we would see physical activity being mandatory right throughout the entire system because those are habits that shouldn't stop at the end of the ninth year or the 10th year.

However, let me say this. Within the broader spectrum of a curriculum review and the new health and wellness framework that we are now working on for implementation in September of '06, I will take that comment under advisement because it has been asked by others. I would do it with the caution and cautionary advice that the school day right as it sits today is extremely busy already, and the options right now are not that abundant.

Tobacco Reduction Strategy

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, the government has recognized the immense cost of cancer on the health system by increasing funding for the Alberta Cancer Board by 25 per cent this year, an increase of almost $48 million. Increasing funding to address patient treatment and growing drug costs is not a sustainable solution, especially when the government had the perfect opportunity to reduce important cancer risk factors but instead made the choice to support a weakened smoking bill. My questions are to the minister of health. Can the minister explain this inconsistency between policy and action?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would approach it this way. I presume that the increase that we have given to the Cancer Board is being applauded by the hon. member opposite because at 25 per cent it recognizes the costs of cancer drugs, the technology that should be in place, and funds as well as possible the initiatives of the Cancer Society and the Cancer Board in making sure that we do as much as we can to attack cancer. I believe that relative to the discussion on the private member's bill that was given third reading yesterday, it would not be appropriate to comment.

Ms Blakeman: What a shame.

Again to the same minister of health: given that smoking is the leading cause of preventable illness and disability and accounts for nearly 20 per cent of all deaths, why has the government not taken a more active role in prevention?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government has taken an active role in prevention. In fact, this government is notorious for its tobacco reduction strategies. The work that we have done with youth, the work that we've done in recognizing the importance of looking after youth and addictions is unprecedented. Since shortly after the year 2000 a very aggressive tobacco reduction strategy has been in place. But if today we are being flogged for what happened yesterday, may I remind the hon. member opposite that at least three members of the hon. opposition chose to vote for the bill that will provide for Alberta's children an opportunity to visit public places without smoke. Now, that is a considerable step forward.

Ms Blakeman: To the minister of health again: does this government, in fact, have a concrete plan and a definitive timeline to create nonsmoking in public places?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, contrary to what some might assume would be the appropriate way to proceed with this, we have only recently had that bill pass in the House. There's an opportunity for royal assent. There's an opportunity for dialogue with the regions. We have a tobacco reduction strategy currently in place, but it will be amended given the more aggressive stance that this government has taken as a result of discussions in this House yesterday, a stance that will see us move forward on the tobacco reduction strategy and look beyond that strategy to what opportunities we have in the future in areas which I have been approached about dealing with a tax on discount cigarettes and dealing with the positioning of the way we market cigarettes in various places where people can buy them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Kindergarten Programs

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back in 2003 the Learning

Commission recommended the expansion of junior kindergarten and full-day kindergarten for at-risk children. Despite overwhelming evidence that junior kindergarten and full-day kindergarten make a huge difference to the lives of high-needs children, the government has been dithering on implementing these recommendations for more than 18 months. My question is to the Minister of Education. What is the holdup? Why has the government not proceeded on these two very important recommendations?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question, and I like the way that he's framed the latter part of it. Those are two important initiatives that were recommended for the very proper reasons by the Learning Commission. What government said was that we would take those recommendations and study them a little more carefully, a little more in depth. We would talk to the system. We would talk with other education stakeholders to make sure that we help in particular those children who are deemed to be at risk.

Now, in furtherance of that, Mr. Speaker, I did canvass all 62 school boards during January and February, and I found there still to be a very wide-ranging split opinion on both the issues of: should there be a junior kindergarten program introduced, and secondly, should there be a full-day kindergarten program introduced? What the school boards told me in a nutshell is that 95 per cent of our aged five children already are in a kindergarten program. However, with respect to the junior kindergarten some felt that it was just too early an age for four year olds to be away for too long a period of time. So we're still considering both options at this time.

Mr. Martin: Well, considering and studying and dithering.

The question to the minister is simply this. The evidence is overwhelming that this is especially important for high-risk students. Why could we not at least begin to start at that level and do it right away?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do put over $100 million into kindergarten programming already, and within that $100 million we do help children who are deemed to be at risk. Now, there are many definitions for what we refer to as at-risk children. Some of them can be language deficient, or they could have a numeracy problem. We provide additional monies through ESL. We provide additional monies through PUF, the program unit funding. We provide hundreds of millions of dollars for special-needs children and for other special remedial help programs. So the suggestion is a good one. It is under consideration. No decision has yet been made, but as soon as it is, I'll be communicating it one way or the other to this House and to the public.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, let's be a little more specific. Given that the Edmonton public city centre education project won a Premier's award for excellence last year mainly because of its innovative programs and early childhood education such as junior and full-day kindergarten, why is the minister not pushing ahead with these recommendations now? Eighteen months is long enough.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, in actual fact we are pushing ahead with coming to a decision on it, but the fact is, however, that there are split opinions on this. Now, after we get past the educational concerns of the educational stakeholders – the teachers, the principals, the superintendents, and the trustees – we still have a group out there called parents, who have the ultimate responsibility for their children. In many cases they have written and they have expressed an opinion. I have to listen to their concerns as well, and they're not quite as sure yet about either of these two decisions.

Sale of Liquor to Minors

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the past few weeks my constituents have been asking me what our government is doing to keep alcohol out of the hands of minors in this province. My first question is to the Minister of Gaming. Can the minister please tell me how he knows that licensed establishments are not selling liquor to minors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Graydon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Each year for the past three years the inspectors from the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission have gone out to the liquor stores, lounges, clubs, and bars to see if those liquor licensees are complying with the policy. It's called the under-25 ID policy. It demands that serving staff ask for ID from patrons if they appear to be younger than 25. Last year a team of younger looking AGLC inspectors visited 1,659 licensees across the province and tried to purchase alcohol. Those inspectors were asked for identification 1,385 times. That equates to an 84 per cent compliance rate.

To answer your question, I know that licensees are asking persons who appear to be under the age of 25 for ID. They've been investigated, and that's the 84 per cent compliance.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is again to the Minister of Gaming. Upon hearing his answer, I'm wondering: are you saying that the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission is sending minors into licensed establishments to purchase alcohol?

Mr. Graydon: Well, Mr. Speaker, all AGLC inspectors are over the age of 18 years of age, and they would never – I repeat, never – ever send a minor into a licensed establishment. Last year Grant MacEwan College in Edmonton and Mount Royal College in Calgary were contacted, and student inspectors were hired from those colleges who were enrolled in the law enforcement and the security diploma programs. Having the opportunity to be an AGLC inspector is a valuable and positive learning experience for these aspiring enforcement professionals.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question, again to the same minister: why do you feel that this has been such a successful policy compared to others?

Mr. Graydon: The owners and operators of Alberta's licensed restaurants, bars, and lounges are, indeed, a hardworking and responsible bunch. The AGLC does a lot of work with them to ensure that they know the rules. We have an educational poster that we display in licensed premises, Mr. Speaker. It says, "Hard to Tell – Have to Ask."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Special-needs Education

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Too often this government strikes a task force, sets up a committee, commission, or study only to have it collect dust on the shelf. When it comes to this government's misguided health reforms, this inaction is a blessing, but when it comes to providing educational support for children with special needs, we need strong leadership and a firm commitment. My question to the Minister of Education: now that the wasteful grade 4 achievement testing is gone, when will the minister take serious action on developing a system-wide early identification and screening process for children as recommended in the government's own five-year-old study?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Commission on Learning had something in the order of 95 recommendations. As I recall, the government responded and accepted something in the order of 86 of those recommendations. Three were left up to study, and three may have been rejected outright or something along that line. In addition to accepting the ACOL recommendations, government also spent something in the order of $340 million to implement those recommendations that could be implemented. That's a significant commitment given the importance of that particular report.

Now, specific to the earlier grades, as I indicated in response to a question just earlier this afternoon, we are very well aware of what some of those complications are for those young people, and that's why we've augmented our total education budget this year by more than 7 per cent. There are 287 fresh, new millions of dollars going in, for a total of $4.3 billion this year, and within that envelope there will be ample money to help out the very students that this particular member is asking about.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When will the minister make this a priority by committing the ongoing dedicated funding for educational specialists since school boards still say that they don't have enough necessary resources?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, a good question. I'm a very strong believer in having more specialists, and I think that in the short term, perhaps the medium term, I would like to see an increase in guidance counsellors and other counsellors as well as education specialists. Let me just give the hon. member and others here one example. We're trying our best to increase speech and language therapists as one speciality, and we would if they were available to be hired. The fact is that there's a world shortage in that area, and I just cite that as one example. As soon as we can see more people being trained in audiology and speech therapy programming, we'll be more than happy to take them into the system so they can help our children.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister provide the Assembly with a timeline for when teachers will be given support, including adequate preparation time and professional development opportunities, to deal with the special-needs students in their classrooms?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there's been a rapid increase in the number of special-needs children who require special help. In fact, that's one reason why we increased our funding this year for mild and moderate and for severe special-needs children, and those increases have been very significant. For example, severe special-needs students are now going to be receiving about $14,415 per student in that category alone. So we've done a lot. We're up around the 300 million-plus mark for dollars spent on special-needs programming. I do recognize that more needs to be done, hon. member, but you have to do this within the limits available, and you have to do it in tandem with the school system so as to not overload or overburden.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

School Operation and Maintenance Funding

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've met recently with representatives of the Wild Rose school division and the Black Gold school division in my constituency, and they've expressed concerns about the level of operation and maintenance funding provided to school boards. This concern is in light of the rising costs of utilities and the ability of school boards to meet these costs. My first question is for the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Was there an increase in operation and maintenance funding to school boards in budget 2005?

The Speaker: The hon. minister will be debating that budget tomorrow.

Dr. Oberg: Yeah, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just going to comment on that. In the proposed budget that will be before the House tomorrow there is $351 million for plant operation and maintenance included in that estimated budget. That is a very, very small increase of $2 million this year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first supplemental is to the same minister. Given that maintenance and utility costs are on the rise, can school boards expect relief in the coming months?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's very difficult for me to comment on that, considering that we are just dealing with our budget tomorrow. I think the school boards have put a strong case forward. Certainly, the Wild Rose and the Black Gold school districts have put forward very strong cases as to the increasing costs that are out there on operation and maintenance. So although we are just dealing with our budget, we certainly are cognizant of these issues in the school boards as they are perceived today.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is also to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. How is funding for school board operation and maintenance currently calculated, especially in light of some of these rural boards that have older schools?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Currently there are about four different things that are taken into consideration when it comes to the amount of operation and maintenance money that a particular school board receives. There's utilization, sparsity, distance from a major centre, and quite simply the size of the school. We are currently, though, working on different ways around this particular formula, and I think that there probably are some better ways out there. It's currently under development, but we're looking very closely at some better proxies than what is out there currently. We're working very closely with Alberta Finance to ensure that this formula will be coming out, and I hope to have this formula in place very soon.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Insurance Costs for Nonprofit Sector

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a result of this government's downloading, Alberta's volunteer and nonprofit organizations are expected to provide ever-more vital services to those most in need. Sadly, they are struggling with the high cost of insurance. Often these organizations are forced to settle for reduced coverage and higher deductibles. My question today is for the Minister of Finance. Since it is this ministry's responsibility to regulate the insurance industry, why does the government appear to be doing nothing to protect the voluntary sector from the escalating costs of insurance?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think there's any question in anybody's mind that the opposition have supported public insurance. If that's not correct and if I'm misunderstanding, I'm sure I'll be corrected.

Mr. Speaker, we did discuss this issue somewhat in my estimates. I did say that I have a similar concern. We're finding that many towns who used to carry the arena, the riding academy, a number of things like that, on their insurance have had to tell these volunteer organizations that they can no longer do it because, of course, of this cost of settlements and the liability issue.

I can tell you what we have done with ag societies in particular. There are some 300-and-some of those. We got the ag societies together through their association and looked at a group insurance package, which did work for a great number of those and reduced their costs significantly. I think we can continue to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will the minister at least exempt these organizations from the hidden 3 per cent insurance premium tax?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's nothing hidden about the 3 per cent tax. It's very much there. We have had discussions about that tax. If the tax were removed, would the policies go down 3 per cent? Interesting debate and comment. Again, we discussed that during my estimates.

Mr. Speaker, I think what would be more practical would be for those of us in our various areas who have voluntary groups to try and look at a group insurance package. There are companies that will do that. Most of these volunteer groups have overall associations, umbrella associations, and a good model for this is what has happened with the ag societies in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'll be calling on the first of six in just a few seconds from now, but might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I had the privilege of spending just a few moments with the Elderberry Belles chapter from Sherwood Park. This is a group of ladies with the Red Hat Society. Our Premier noted how lovely the ladies look in their red hats. They I think improve the lives of all of us in Sherwood Park with their attention to being lively and enjoying life, and it contributes to the health and wellness of our community. Please today, members, would you join me in welcoming these lovely ladies. There are 10 in the members' gallery.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly Shawna and Jenna. Jenna is here studying Alberta's legislative process on a grade 6 field trip. They are seated in the members' gallery. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

I have a second introduction through you to Members of the Leg. Assembly, Mr. Speaker, two staff members from my department, Shawna Brilliant, research assistant, and Kristin Hillenbrand, legal specialist. They are seated in the members' gallery. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Armenian Genocide

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over 90 years ago my grandparents escaped the brutal massacre of the Armenian people by the Turkish Ottoman Empire. Ironically, it was a Turkish family that saved the lives of my grandmother and my grandfather. Although both their families were among the 1.5 million Armenians murdered by the butcher battalions, my grandmother always taught us that it was better to love your enemy. Her story and her lessons are not forgotten.

On April 24 of each and every year people around the world, including Canada and the United States, remember the first genocide of the 20th century, the brutal annihilation of over 1 and a half million Armenian men, women, and children, just as every year on April 22 we remember the Jewish Holocaust.

There is a connection between the Armenian massacre and the Jewish Holocaust. They were both predetermined, carefully planned genocides, and because people around the world chose not to acknowledge the brutal butchering of the Armenian people, Hitler was encouraged to brutally butcher the Jewish people. After all, Hitler said, "Who remembers the Armenian genocide?"

As we remember the Armenian genocide we, too, remember the other massacres that remain a source of pain and horrible suffering today. We also remember that hope survives these atrocities. Today many people in Armenia and Turkey now work to support peace and reconciliation through the Turkish-Armenian Reconciliation Commission and are attempting to restore their economic, political, and cultural ties.

I wish to extend my warmest wishes and expressions of solidarity to all Armenian people at this solemn time of remembrance. If anyone in history should ever ask again, "Who remembers the Armenian genocide?" we can say that we remember.

Education Week

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today during Alberta's Education Week to pay tribute to the teachers, principals, and trustees of Alberta's public and separate school systems. Working with parents and the dedicated professionals in the public service, these individuals do so much to support quality public education for Alberta students.

I'm particularly pleased by this year's theme, Public Education: Proud Legacy, Inspired Future. Public education has played a central role in building the Alberta we know and love. Ensuring that every Albertan has the opportunity to succeed, flourish, and contribute to this great province is the best legacy we can leave to younger generations. In fact, it's more than a legacy; it's a profound duty.

Despite these efforts, challenges remain. Many schools still struggle with the legacy of underfunding, others needlessly face the threat of closure as a result of poor planning and policy, and almost all: important educational needs that are not being met.

Amidst the problems lies great potential. The foundation of this potential is our teachers. Beneath all the performance indicators, utilization formulas lies a relationship between teachers and students. This is the key. For education is a social process dependent on the professional educators having the ability and opportunity to engage students in this process to inspire them.

Let's reflect for a moment on what this engagement requires in our second century. It requires that we meet the needs of educating an increasingly diverse public. It requires that we recognize and fully support the diverse learning needs of our students. It requires that we engage parents more effectively, not just in fundraising and cutting cheques for school fees. It requires that we help principals provide educational leadership to their colleagues in the classroom, and it requires that we recognize the true value of schools to their communities as well as the value of the communities that schools at their best become.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Education Week

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pride that I rise today to echo some of the comments of the fine hon. Member for St. Albert and add perhaps slightly different perspectives as well. I'd like to recognize all the great people associated with education in our fair province, from kindergarten to grade 12. Education Week, indeed, is April 24 to 30, and our Albertan people can be very proud of the great educational legacy that has been built in this province over the past 100 years.

During this week back in 1905 two school districts, Leachville and Coalfields, began educating their students. Throughout 1905 another 119 school districts were formed as the new government of Alberta took shape, and that was just the start of something incredibly special. Today many results show that Alberta's students outperform students from across Canada. Not only that, on the international stage they score the highest marks in reading and are among the top three in science and math.

Mr. Speaker, their parents' efforts are inspiring as well. Albertans enjoy one of the most educated populations in the country with 55 per cent of 25 to 54 year olds boasting a postsecondary education.

As is the case with so many other personal, professional, and political realms, Alberta continues its attitudes and actions of firsts. For example, Alberta is the first province to establish a registered apprenticeship program, or RAP, to help students begin to learn a trade while in high school, and Alberta is the first province to establish a technology system that has 99 per cent of Alberta schools connected to the Internet.

Mr. Speaker, many of my aunts and uncles were educators, and my mother taught me a bounty of lessons in my youth. That's for sure. My father taught me five subjects in high school. A couple of careers ago I spent 13 years in three countries at all grade levels as an educator and administrator, mostly here in Alberta. As such, I have just a tiny bit of first-hand knowledge of the great sacrifice and contribution involved with those in education today. I trust that our hon. members will join me as they congratulate the people in their local areas for the incredible things they've done in education.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Agricultural Industry

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently I met with the people involved with Growing Canada and Growing Alberta, the Canadian Association of Agri-Retailers, and CropLife Canada. Our professionals and businesses in agriculture play a vital role in nourishing our lives in Alberta, Canada, and the world. It is important to know that Canada's agriculture and agrifood exports amount to over $25 billion per year. Canada's balance of trade in processed agrifood products has shifted from a $2.1 billion deficit in 1989 to a $1.8 billion surplus in 2003 and growing.

Agriculture in Alberta increasingly contributes major parts in these areas. During the past 40 years, through commercial fertilizer and related high-yield farming practices, our farmers have tripled food production while using less land. Our fertilizer production is valued at $3.8 billion in export and $2.5 billion in our own agricultural use. To fertilize the crops only with manure would require an additional 7 billion cattle. We would have to clear the rest of the world's forests to grow the cattle forage required.

Our agriculture technologies have strong track records. Our dwarf wheat introduced in 1960 helps increase yields by 70 per cent. Our genetic technology introduced in 1973 allows crops to adapt to the prairie environment. Canola, introduced in 1974, now leads the world with its production of 75 per cent of global business. The first biotech crop production in the world was in Canada in 1995. The golden rice produced with Canadian technology in 2000 improves the health of the world's billions of undernourished people. With the improvement of plant nutrition and growth the agriculture in North America generates about 454 million tonnes of oxygen annually, helping to counter the so-called global warming.

So, Mr. Speaker, let's grow Canada, grow Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

2:40 Health Sciences Ambulatory Learning Centre

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning the government of Alberta announced a major investment of what is sure to become a major landmark in our beautiful capital city. I'm referring to the health sciences ambulatory learning centre at the University of Alberta hospital. This facility will change the way patients are diagnosed and treated and how medical students are trained. It will provide co-ordinated diagnostic and specialist services all under one roof while providing unprecedented research and educational opportunities for health sciences students from various faculties in a team-based approach.

Mr. Speaker, this will mean that a patient who meets with a specialist and then requires a series of diagnostic tests or consultations with other health professionals will have more time, care, and convenient services. In addition, University of Alberta health sciences students will have interdisciplinary educational opportunities, and graduates will provide more comprehensive and balanced patient care.

I had the opportunity to be at the event today to introduce my hon. colleagues the ministers of Advanced Education, Health and Wellness, and Infrastructure and Transportation. I was able to see the kinds of results that are achieved when health authorities, postsecondary institutions, and governments work together for the benefit of all Albertans. Mr. Speaker, by investing $577 million in such a health and learning centre, the government of Alberta shows once more that health and postsecondary education are top priorities.

In closing, I would like to commend Capital Health and the University of Alberta for their commitment and vision. The health sciences ambulatory learning centre will be great for Edmonton and great for Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Environmental Sustainability

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are rightfully concerned about their environment. The people of this province have told this government time and time again that environmental sustainability is an issue for them but to no avail. The government's own It's Your Future survey showed that the environment is one of the top priorities for our province. How did the government respond? Not a dime in new spending in this year's budget for the environment.

What's more, the Energy and Utilities Board is proposing to revise their enforcement policy. The proposals will allow industry to jump two or three regulatory steps at the discretion of the boards. The new policy was developed without any public input, and instead of setting out guidelines for industry that they must follow, they have changed it to regulations that the industry may follow. This policy will result in an increased risk of environmental damage as well as an increased risk to public health and safety. This government is undermining what small public confidence there was left in the EUB.

All of this while coal-bed methane production is proceeding full steam ahead. Sour gas wells in close proximity to populated areas are being drilled. Our water resources are being taxed by industrial and population pressures, not to mention the impact of climate change on our air, water, and soil.

Our environment minister likes to call water blue gold, Mr. Speaker. Does this mean that the strategy is to sell off this resource to the highest bidder? Where is the EUB when we need them?

Farmers and landowners have banded together to fight the changes in the EUB. They, like most Albertans, want a stronger, more independent board with real environmental regulations. Let's face it. The EUB has a 98 per cent compliance rate because it's so easy to meet those needs.

Mr. Speaker, it's time for this government to come and listen to the people it purports to represent.

Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, by way of a historical comment today, on this day in 1887 Joseph Ora Card and a small group of Mormons founded the community that was to become Cardston in Alberta. They were dryland farmers. They introduced a variety of new crops, and they began the introduction of irrigation in southern Alberta. Their temple of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was the first Mormon temple built outside of the United States.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Private Bills has had certain bills under consideration and wishes to report as follows. The committee recommends that the following bills proceed: Bill Pr. 1, Bow Valley Community Foundation Act; Bill Pr. 3, Medicine Hat Community Foundation Amendment Act, 2005.

The committee recommends that the following bill proceed with amendment: Bill Pr. 2, the Camrose Lutheran College Corporation Act.

The committee also advises that its consideration of the following private bill will be deferred to the fall 2005 sitting of the Legislature: Bill Pr. 4, Brooklynn Hannah George Rewega Right of Civil Action Act.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Private Bills has had under consideration the fees charged for petitioning for private bills and recommends that Standing Order 87(1) be amended to increase the fee to $500 for petitioning for a private bill.

As part of this report I will be tabling five copies of the proposed amendment to Bill Pr. 2.

Mr. Speaker, I request the concurrence of the Assembly in these recommendations.

The Speaker: This is a debatable motion.

The last recommendation has caught the attention of the chair. Is the hon. member saying that the committee is amending the Standing Orders of this Legislative Assembly?

Dr. Brown: Not at all. Mr. Speaker, we're requesting that the appropriate standing committee would take that under consideration. We're simply recommending that the standing order be amended to increase that fee.

The Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Speaker: Opposed? Carried.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to present a petition from some good Albertans from the fine Alberta communities of La Corey, Red Deer, Millet, Blackfalds, Hinton, Lloydminster, Medicine Hat, Two Hills, Alberta Beach, and other communities, and it reads:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 40 Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2005 (No. 2)

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 40, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2005 (No. 2). This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, by brief explanation I should say that this amends the Personal Income Tax Act to enhance and expand the Alberta family employment tax credit effective July 2005 and to index the phase-out threshold and credit amounts to inflation effective July 2006.

The report finds that discussion papers on retail options for small utility consumers are "without consideration for consumer interests."

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Stevens, Minister of Justice and Attorney General, pursuant to the Legal Profession Act the Law Society of Alberta annual report, 2004. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Cardinal, Minister of Human Resources and Employment, a package of information relating to the memorandum of understanding between Human Resources and Skills Development Canada, Citizenship and Immigration Canada, and Alberta Learning for the entry of temporary foreign workers for projects in the Alberta oil sands.

Speaker's Ruling Items Previously Decided

The Speaker: Hon. members, prior to moving to the point of order, I have to advise the members of an administrative matter that we need to deal with by way of this definition. If hon. members look in the Order Paper, members will find Motion 507 in the name of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. That motion standing in that member's name is due to be considered next Monday evening, May 2, under Motions Other than Government Motions. The motion reads: "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to prohibit smoking in public buildings and indoor workplaces."

This motion raises issues virtually identical to those considered in connection with private member's Bill 201, which received third reading just yesterday, April 25, 2005. The chair finds that Motion 507 duplicates the issues already debated and decided by the Assembly with respect to Bill 201.

This is not the first time that this type of issue has arisen in the Assembly. On March 28, 1995, Speaker Schumacher ruled the motion by the then Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark concerning electoral boundaries out of order on the grounds that it violated the rules of anticipation found in Standing Order 23(e) as there was a government bill, Bill 20, Electoral Boundaries Commission Act, 1995, standing on the Order Paper for second reading. This rule is based on the principle that the same question should not be raised twice during the same session.

Speaker Schumacher quoted Beauchesne 566(7) as follows: "A motion dealing with the same subject matters of a bill, standing on the Order Paper for second reading, cannot be considered." The rationale then as now is that a bill leads to a more effective result than a motion, as stated in Beauchesne's 513(2) and Erskine May, 23rd edition, pages 388-9.

In this case Motion 507 does not merely anticipate a debate, but it clearly deals with a matter already decided during this session. Bill 201 received third reading yesterday. It is fair to say that its ultimate fate and contents were in doubt up to the concluding vote.

The chair could have ruled the hon. leader's motion out of order earlier, but in fairness to the member and in keeping with the latitude the chair gives private members, there was no intervention. At this time, however, it is clear, even clearer than the 1995 example, that the House would be considering the same issue twice. To allow the motion to proceed would depart from the precedents of the Assembly and mark a relaxation of the rules as they have been applied.

Clearly, this is a unique circumstance, so in keeping with the practice of this and in granting private members the greatest leeway possible in bringing matters before the Assembly, the chair is willing to relax the interpretation of Standing Order 39.2 and to invite the hon. member to present a revised motion to the Clerk's office by the end of business tomorrow afternoon, Wednesday, April 27, 2005, for inclusion in Thursday's Order Paper and debate next Monday evening.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order under our Standing Orders 23(i), "imputes false or unavowed motives to another member." Earlier today in question period the leader of the third party used a word that I don't believe is parliamentary, but worse yet, the word "misleading" – the dictionary definition of that is, of course, is: cause to have wrong impression about someone or something.

I believe that he violated 23(i) on two accounts. One was to make it sound like the draft paper that is a matter of discussion was in fact not a draft. Of course, that is absolutely not true. The fact is that in due time you will see a final report from that committee. I guess that worse yet was that it seemed to be indicating that I was trying to leave a wrong impression, Mr. Speaker, and in fact that is anything but correct. I have no reason to believe that the member did not have yesterday a copy of the draft report.

I find it extremely interesting because in Hansard on page 976 from yesterday the member asked a question of me. I won't read the whole question, but the part that is relevant to this discussion reads, "Will the minister please tell the House why, in fact, the government is stamping 'draft' on this report?" My answer to that was, "That's so interesting, Mr. Speaker, because when that draft report came through, the government didn't put 'draft' on it." Now, the member, I noticed today, does have that report, and I notice that there is no "draft" on it. So what was his motive yesterday for saying that there was "draft" on the report?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview on this point of order.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the hon. leader did not have the report. Today we do have the report. It was given to us yesterday. I was there when it happened. I have never seen a draft report in all my years of being in politics or in other businesses that didn't say "draft" on it if it was a draft report. Here is the report. Nowhere does it say "draft" on that report. So it seems to me that if the minister is saying that it's a draft report and said a number of times yesterday that it was a draft report, then that just doesn't follow. If it's a draft report, it would say "draft" on it. The minister has already alluded to that.

So we have to take that this report, the recommendations of the Utilities Consumer Advocate, was submitted as a final report; otherwise, it would say "draft." In that case, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it was misleading if this was not a draft report. One could speculate: if we have a final report here, why wasn't it being released to us? That was part of the question. It seems so logical that if this report came out in February not saying "draft" on it, we have to take into consideration that it's not going to be very favourable or what the government wants. What's going on in that period of time? Why is that not being released publicly so that we have to leak it here, get it to us, do what the government should be doing?

It seems to me that at the very minimum a draft report is a draft report, and this does not say "draft" on it. So I would say to the Assembly that it seems to me quite misleading when you call it a draft and we don't have a draft report. When we see it, it doesn't have "draft" on it. So what are we to take? That this is some sort of final report.

The other fact is that this was done on February 23. Here it is two months later, and we haven't even seen the report, Mr. Speaker, so we have to wonder as an opposition what's going on in those previous two months. I don't think the minister has much ground to stand on. If it had "draft" on it, he might have something to complain about, but it does not have "draft report" on it.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think this is a fairly important question that needs to be addressed, and I'd like to raise a particular issue. First of all, our rules are very clear: ministers, members making statements in this House are to be believed. The minister said that it was a draft report. The hon. member says that because he has a copy of a report – he doesn't know the origin of the report. He doesn't know where it came from, or at least he hasn't identified that. He doesn't know whether it's a draft report or not.

Mr. Martin: It was tabled in the House.

Mr. Hancock: Tabled by whom?

Mr. Martin: By me just a few minutes ago.

Mr. Hancock: The hon. member says that it was tabled in the House, and therefore that answers the question of whether it was a draft report or not. The fact of the matter is the hon. member does not know.

The Speaker: Can you just speak through me, please?

Mr. Hancock: I'd be delighted, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Hancock: The hon. member has no knowledge as to whether it's a draft report or not a draft report. All he knows is that somebody purloined a report and gave him a copy of it. The hon. minister knows whether it is a draft report or not a draft report and has said so in the House. The hon. minister, by the rules of this House, is to be believed.

If the hon. member wants to know why that report that he has in his hands from whatever source he got it, dated February 23, has not been released to the public, that's a fair question. If he wants to know what's happened since that time, that's a fair question. If he wants to question whether anything further has been done with the report, that's a fair question. If he wants to ask whether, since the time of the minister saying that it was a draft report, a full report has been prepared, that's a fair question. But for him to get up and say that the minister is misleading the House because he said that it's a draft report and the hon. member with no personal knowledge otherwise doesn't believe so and then impugns the integrity and character of the minister by saying that he's misleading the House, that is not appropriate.

Therefore, I would suggest that it's a very valid point of order raised by the hon. minister.

The Speaker: Thank you very much for that participation. Hon. members, let me just first of all draw to your attention certain citations in Beauchesne. Beauchesne 494, Acceptance of the Word of a Member.

It has been formally ruled by Speakers that statements by Members respecting themselves and particularly within their own knowledge must be accepted. It is not unparliamentary temperately to criticize statements made by Members as being contrary to the facts; but no imputation of intentional falsehood is permissible. On rare occasions this may result in the House having to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident.

Then I'd draw your attention to House of Commons Procedure and Practice, and I take you to page 526.

In dealing with unparliamentary language, the Speaker takes into account the tone, manner and intention of the Member speaking; the person to whom the words were directed; the degree of provocation; and, most importantly, whether or not the remarks created disorder in the [Assembly]. Thus, language deemed unparliamentary one day may not necessarily be deemed unparliamentary the following day . . .

Should the Speaker determine that offensive or disorderly language has been used, the Member will be requested to withdraw the unparliamentary word or phrase. The Member must rise in his or her place to retract the words unequivocally. The Member's apology is accepted in good faith and the matter is then considered closed. However, if the Member persists in refusing to obey the directive of the Speaker to retract his or her words, the Chair may refuse to recognize the Member until the words have been withdrawn or may "name" the Member for disregarding the authority of the Chair and order him or her to withdraw from the Chamber for whatever time is determined.

So we have a situation today where the word "misled" has been deemed parliamentary on some occasions and unparliamentary on other occasions. We did have an occasion here earlier in the year, on April 17, when a member used the word. It dealt with a point of order, but it was not directed against a particular individual, and it basically said something quite differently than is being said today.

Today the statement is very, very clear. The hon. leader of the ND opposition said the following: "Mr. Speaker, will the minister admit that he's misled the House." That was a direct statement against the minister, and clearly our rules prohibit such statements.

So, in conclusion, this language is unparliamentary given that it's been directed against a minister, and I'm requesting the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood to withdraw the remark. But I'll accept the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, who is his spokesperson today, to withdraw the remark unequivocally, please.

Mr. Martin: Well, I cannot withdraw another person's remarks. I'll take your advice back to the hon. member.

The Speaker: Then this will be the last time that I'll accept this to happen. If the member knows that there's a point of order against him, he has a responsibility to be in the House to deal with the point of order.

Member, you should instruct the hon. member, please, who happens to be the leader of the ND opposition, that I will not recognize him tomorrow until he withdraws the remark.

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2005-06

Environment

The Deputy Chair: As per our Standing Orders the first hour will be allocated between the hon. minister and members of the opposition, following which any other member may participate.

The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I intend to be brief to allow questions from the members across the way and, of course, from all members of this Assembly.

First of all, I'm very pleased to be here to present Alberta Environment's business plan and budget for the fiscal year. Albertans have told us that the environment is a major priority for them. In fact, during last fall's It's Your Future survey over a quarter of a million Albertans said that the environment is a top priority and on the minds of them and their families. I'm pleased by that, and it's really encouraging because Alberta has experienced tremendous economic and population growth, fuelled by our success in attracting investment to our province.

It requires balance: how we have environmental principles, which are so important in protecting what I refer to as the mother ship of our environment in terms of what we've been blessed with, and at the same time in a province such as ours, that has a bounty of natural resources, how we balance the economic pressures that are attracting so many people to our province. Obviously, I believe that our environmental principles are first and foremost if we're ever to be successful in any of those other principles that I've made reference to. This combined with growing demands for information and participation has put a tremendous amount of pressure on our ministry.

In fact, I pose a question to you all, a rhetorical question. For example, in 1995 the Ministry of Environment had 55 requests for information under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. Last year, we had almost 1,250 requests, which accounts for over 45 per cent of the entire government of Alberta. So if you can imagine, 45 per cent of the requests for information were by our bosses, Albertans of course, and this is only one of 24 ministries. That percentage demonstrates a tremendous amount of pressure and interest as well, I might add, by Albertans. Overall we continue to meet the growing expectations of Albertans for action and input.

I want to thank Members of the Assembly, in particular the Environment critic from Calgary-Mountain View, for attending the first environmental conference, that took place last week. Amazingly, we anticipated over 200 delegates; in actual fact, we had close to 700 delegates, which reinforces the statements that I made earlier. I also want to thank the Chairman of the Standing Policy Committee on Energy and Sustainable Development, the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, who also participated in that conference with me last week. I appreciate the participation of both members from this Assembly in that important conference.

My ministry's operating budget this year will in fact increase by about $12 million. This is the first increase over the past five years for our ministry. We have been challenged by that economic growth that I made reference to earlier and the demands of Albertans for a sustainable environment but also a vibrant economy. We need better government-wide policies, though, and part of the business plan this year, I want to say, is about how we continue to break out of our silos for the policies and rules and regulations that affect our environment because the environment, I believe, doesn't have any political stripe. I believe the environment crosses all boundaries of every corner of our province, our country, and, for that matter, every corner of the world, even though I realize there are not corners to the world. The point is that it crosses every boundary because we all know and recognize how important the environment is to us.

I want to say that a cross-ministry partnership, supported by information and knowledge and resources of our stakeholders and environmental conditions, is so important as well.

I also just want to take the opportunity to introduce, actually, two members of the Environment ministry who are with us today; that is, the Deputy Minister of Environment, Peter Watson – if Peter could rise – and also my executive assistant, Laurent Auger. As you can see, our incredible staff that are here with me today are going to address, hopefully, all of the questions that are being asked in this important debate this afternoon.

The budget for the Ministry of Environment last year was approximately $125 million. This year increasing it by $12 million puts it at almost $138 million. Again, as I said, this is an increase for the first time in numerous years. About $10.2 million of that is going to be used for key stakeholders in terms of building on the success and a better way to manage Alberta's resources and protect our environment. We've allocated about $10.2 million of that particularly to launch our budget relative to the important assessment and information relative to protecting our environment.

I also want to say that there is $7.8 million for expanding and monitoring networks and technology upgrades so that the information systems of our staff, our partners, and Albertans throughout the province can better communicate effective environmental management. This requires reliable, accessible information.

About $2.4 million will go towards policy development and innovation, and of course this investment will help us develop new policies because we have to continue with our attitude that we can always do better, be it in health care or education or the environment. There holds the three perhaps most important priorities of this government in terms of what Albertans have told us.

I'd like to say that as we go forward down this important path, the investment will help us in developing and integrating existing policies. I refer to it as IRM, an integrated resource management approach, where we continue to break out of our silos so that we can in actual fact work on a more comprehensive plan. If you really think about watersheds, air quality, no matter what part of the environment I'm talking about, they do not look at political borders or institutional or jurisdictional boundaries. You know, we need to take this approach in terms of what boundaries it crosses over. That's why we work so closely with the British Columbia government as well as with the Saskatchewan and Manitoba governments on important issues of water monitoring.

I also just want to take a moment to move towards climate change. Alberta and its partners are truly, I believe, Canadian leaders and in some ways world leaders in taking action on climate change. As you know, this Assembly, of course, approved and passed the only climate change legislation in Canada. I believe that is an important part of the leadership that Alberta shows. But, again, we can take the attitude that we can do better.

I believe also that investing in technology and research and renewable energies is equally important. I had the honour and privilege of being with my federal counterpart, the Minister of the Environment, in Buenos Aires in Argentina just shortly after becoming Minister of Environment. We talked about the importance of renewable energies and technologies. It's important to recognize that technology is only one part of the equation of continuing to build on our environmental sustainability.

I want to be able to say that we will maintain our climate change program at its current operating level. Once again, we have Climate Change Central based in Calgary but work taking place in all corners of this province. This $2 million over the next three years will continue to support practical actions, which I believe is so important. I want to say that part of our budget is introducing once again, because of its success, retrofitting and doing more energy fits for things such as furnaces. In fact, Albertans can benefit from and have benefited from the retrofit of their furnaces in the past, but now we're actually moving to washing machines and other devices that can help in practical applications to help become more energy efficient.

Let me conclude, Mr. Chairman, by saying that Albertans place a high value on the environment. The renewed investment that I am proposing will demonstrate our government's continued commitment. Obviously, as we go down the road into the future, there are so many important initiatives that I look forward to speaking about further this afternoon such as the Water for Life strategy and a lot of others.

I will yield my time now to perhaps address some of the budget that is in the Ministry of Environment. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It'll be my pleasure to answer any questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the minister for submitting his budget for review.

Alberta is the richest province in Canada. Albertans rightly have the expectation that we should be finding leadership on all fronts, especially on the environment, which, as the minister has clearly stated, is the mother ship of all else that we do. Leadership, Mr. Chairman, for me means commitment. It means having the courage to stand up against a lot of forces that would undermine and take advantage of and exploit our environmental commitment. It means listening to the public. It means transparency to those who have an interest, a vested interest, a long-term interest in our environment. It means treating the resources that we have, this natural capital that we have inherited and that we pass on to our children and grandchild-ren, as an inherently valuable resource in and of itself quite apart from what it provides monetarily.

We have had tremendous development, industrial and resource extraction, in this past decade particularly, and because of the boom there is a real sense in Alberta that there may be some compromise to our environment. There's a strong sense, frankly, that we don't believe that anyone in this government knows if we are managing our resources sustainably. The question for most Albertans is whether in this deregulated environment anyone is ensuring the long-term sustainability of our natural capital.

To do this, to know whether we're managing our resources sustainably, we have to know what is there. We have to have an inventory of our water, our soil, our forests, our natural capital. What is the flow through in these areas? What is the depreciation? What is, indeed, the value of leaving it the way it is, including, Mr. Chairman, a measure of cumulative impact? This has been talked about for many years, and there's an urgent need for us to develop the capacity to measure the impact not only of isolated activities in our province but the total impacts in a particular bioregion which depends on that bioregion for its sustainability.

The talk of sustainable environment otherwise becomes simply rhetoric. How much water do we have? How much arable land? How certain are we about the long-term impacts of our massive oil and gas extraction, including coal-bed methane? How well do we know the long-term implications of this experiment of which we are all a part? What about our food production in the future, with more and more land being taken up by expanding cities and towns and resource extraction? What is going to happen to our tourism, hunting, and fishing when in every quarter, every section of land we have development encroaching?

The very least we expect from the Minister of Environment is to begin to provide the tools for good decisions, for good policies rather than the crisis and catch-up and secondary role that this department has played for decades. Alberta Environment must begin to set limits for our development, and that is going to be the test for this ministry.

In terms of the budget, Mr. Chairman, $138 million constitutes less than 0.5 per cent of our budgetary expenses this year, grossly inadequate to fulfill what Albertans have said is the third most important priority in this province. This is an outrage, it's an embarrassment, and it's a shame to all Albertans that we place so little value on the protection of this vital long-term resource. The questions remain. Given $138 million in the budget, how are we spending it? Are we getting the best value for long-term protection of our natural environment? The answer would require an ability to measure, again, to monitor, and to make public how we are doing on the key indicators of sustainability.

The Auditor General in past reports has indicated that there is a need to make a closer link between goals, indicators, and outcome measures, and I know that the department is working on that. It's clear to me that there needs to be more resources applied to this, and not only applied to the measurements, Mr. Chairman, but to the analysis of the measurements. Data is just data until it's interpreted and transmitted to those who can make decisions in the long-term interests of protecting the environment.

Let me go on, then, more specifically to look at some of the programs and the spending priorities. With respect to the much-discussed Water for Life strategy, the budget is much the same as last year. It's fundamental, especially to those of us who live in southern Alberta, that we invest in and use wisely the water that has been given to us. It appears and there's scientific evidence to show that this resource is indeed depleting not only as a result of climate change but also as a result of the depletion of our mountain glaciers.

I've mentioned the need for establishing an inventory of water, surface water and groundwater, so that we can establish the extent to which we are managing it sustainably. I don't need to reiterate that. That's fundamental, and it's a clear and expressed value for Albertans.

The government has also stated that it has allocated money in the Infrastructure budget for implementing the Water for Life. While infrastructure is an important dimension of water quality, it says nothing about the need to sustain water quantity over the long term. The allocation of $27 million to infrastructure will effectively develop water management infrastructure, but how will this contribute to the long-term sustainability of our water supplies in the lowest rainfall areas in southern Alberta? Why was there a decrease in this infrastructure investment over last year? It dropped, in fact, from $30 million in 2004-05, by $2.4 million this year.

Can the minister explain how infrastructure funding for the existing problems will indeed protect the water that we have into perpetuity? What projects are being initiated to ensure our sustainability with these dollars particularly?

We need to measure increasingly how dollars attached to particular programs translate into results in the long term. How much of the money is being used to develop and implement a watershed source protection framework that addresses, again, the cumulative impacts on a watershed on a larger scale, including the wetlands that are so vital to not only the biodiversity but also to ongoing inflows into the water supply?

The government states that water conservation and sustainability is a priority, but they continue to call for interbasin transfers as opposed to looking at a long-term plan that will ensure adequate supplies into the future based on conservation measures and minimizing the need for interbasin transfers. How is it that Stettler county in Bill 11 has been allocated up to 10 times more than was actually needed on a population basis? It appears that we're planning for growth instead of saying to an area, "This looks like a critical area; it's time to start thinking about limits to development in this area," such as Okotoks has done. It set a limit on its boundaries. It set a limit on its growth. Anything without limits is clearly in this context going to require continued, ongoing, special dispensation from this government to provide interbasin transfers and piping and great expense not only to the pocketbook but to the environment itself.

In terms of climate change I need to acknowledge the important contribution this department has made through Climate Change Central in its communications, its advocacy for climate control, for greenhouse gas reductions at the citizen level, at the corporate level, at the municipality level. I see some excellent material and some excellent vision coming out of Climate Change Central, and I want to acknowledge that. I'm not sure that $5 million, again, is going to be sufficient to do that when this has become the pre-eminent issue in the 21st century for all of us in the western world, indeed all of the planet, to deal with. I have to hope that that will continue to be an important role for Climate Change Central.

I would say that I would also like to see some breakdown of what the evaluation of Climate Change Central is. What impact is it, in fact, having on citizenry? What impact is it having on industry in terms of greenhouse gas emissions? Recycling is part of reducing greenhouse gas emissions. Are we moving towards especially organic material being recycled, composted as opposed to going into landfills and creating more greenhouse gas? How much bang are we getting for the $5 million in Climate Change Central?

The other aspect that needs to be said about climate change is, again, the setting of limits. This government and the federal government, in fact, are both very reluctant to set limits. We must have limits if we are going to make an impact on climate change.

Intensity measurements are one step towards meaningful and absolute reductions in greenhouse gases, which is what we as a country have committed to. We as a country in the north have, clearly, tremendous advantages with respect to our resources, our capacity to adapt to climate change. In fact, living in an area where we are less likely to be flooded, where we are less likely to have extreme weather events, where we have more capacity to respond to emergencies, where we can deal with the transmission of infectious diseases that are moving north through mosquitoes and other arthropods: all of these things say that we have an ethical imperative to be leaders on the greenhouse gas issue. I see a straggling in the federal government, and I see a straggling in the provincial government on this issue. We are not leading the way as we could be. As a pre-eminent country in the world we should be showing real leadership on greenhouse gas reductions.

If we cannot learn to live within the means of the planet, we will pay a huge price. This is not being discussed enough. We read every day in the newspaper about how impossible it is for business to meet these targets, how impossible it is for Alberta to meet these targets. We don't hear how seriously this climate change is going to impact the health and well-being of millions and millions of world citizens, including Canadians and especially our north, where food supplies and ice flows are changing dramatically. The tundra, the permafrost is gone in many places, and we're already seeing dramatic changes there.

So we have to take this seriously, and I would like to see a very vigorous, constructive dialogue with the federal government. I resent as an Albertan the inability of this government to work with the federal government on issues of such importance and mutual benefit.

I noticed that in relation to line 3.0.2 under program 3, sharing environmental management and stewardship, the allocation of $5 million, then, for climate change was a decrease from last year. Why was there a decrease? What does that mean in terms of our commitment to climate change action?

On page 220 of the business plan under line 1.13 the government states that it will "initiate actions that make Alberta a leader in energy efficiency improvements, carbon management strategies and adapting to climate change and variability." What new programs can you manage given the limited budget that you have? What new initiatives are planned? How will these programs make Alberta a leader? Given the current crisis in the number of inspectors in your division, how can we give assurance that these investigators and inspectors are really going to be able to match the task that's needed in relation to greenhouse gas emissions and monitoring those good practices of energy efficiency leadership that we feel we can take?

What performance measures do we have in Alberta Environment to ensure that the programs are having the effect that we have called for? Can the minister explain what progress has been made to ensure that the largest emitters will indeed reduce their emissions?

Again, I look to the minister for leadership in relation to our federal/provincial relations and a more constructive relationship than has been there in the past.

In terms of reclamation and emergency preparedness, page 220 of the business plan, the ministry states that it will "resolve contamination and liability issues through flexible tools and incentives to promote the restoration of contaminated sites to productive use." On page 225 there's an estimate of $4.9 million for reclamation purposes, which is down from $5 million. What does that mean? How is it that we can reduce our investment in reclamation and contamination?

Given the December 2004 licence liability report from the Energy and Utilities Board, stating that there are 31,000 unreclaimed abandoned wells in Alberta, can the minister tell us how he expects to monitor the remediation and reclamation of these sites with such a shortage of resources? My understanding is that we actually visit the sites of only about 10 per cent of these wells that are shut in and reclaimed. Clearly, that reflects an inability to do a full assessment and raises the question of liability for all Albertans in the foreseeable future.

What is the ministry doing to ensure that more environmental assurance staff are monitoring the refineries, the batteries, and the other infrastructure, the pits, mines, and wells that are in operation around the province in increasing numbers? How can we be sure that in this environment these spills and contamination sites are actually being reported and addressed? How do you ensure that the surface isn't being cleaned up while the subsurface is grossly contaminated unless we do more visiting and monitoring on-site?

What programs is the Ministry of Environment involved in in terms of emergency preparedness? How much money will be dedicated to this strategy since, again, the increasing anxiety of Albertans is reflected with the growing encroachment of oil and gas developments closer to populations? Is the minister involved in rapid response to emergencies, especially in relation to the release into water and airborne contaminants? How assured can we be that these will be identified early and communicated to the public?

In relation to compliance and enforcement – and I'm looking here at line 2.0.2, page 140 – there will be $9.4 million allocated. This is an increase over last year. Given the lack of environmental officers to ensure compliance, how will this slight increase give us assurance that we are conducting inspections, or we are doing appropriate monitoring and issuing appropriate environmental protection orders? How can we know that these inappropriate actions are actually being responded to and stopped and fined, in fact?

Can the minister provide a breakdown of what proportion of the staff have been changed over the past decade? My understanding from looking at the budgets over the past decade – it's difficult because you split off from Sustainable Resource Development – is that there does not appear to be any substantial increase in your staff capacity over the past decade.

More specific to the financial questions, line 1.0.5 of the estimates indicates an increase in funding from the previous year in corporate services. It's up to $7.9 million from $5.8 million. What does this extra $2 million constitute? How is that being spent, and how does that add to the strength of the department in carrying out its mission and goals?

Line 2.0.7, again an increase of about $2.9 million in policy development and innovation. Can you give us details on what this consists of? What policy initiatives has this resulted in?

Line 2.0.3, an increase of $17 million from last year's $14 million for monitoring and evaluation.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, the 20 minutes allocated to you has now elapsed.

Dr. Swann: Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, would you like to respond, or would you like more members to participate before you respond?

The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you very much. I also thank the hon. member for some important points that he's made that I believe are important to all Albertans. I want to just take a couple of moments to add to this important debate. I think that's important, as I said, to all Albertans and all Canadians.

I want to first comment relative to the issue of Climate Change Central and the leadership that Alberta has taken but also in reference to, in fact, the federal government. I just want to reflect for a moment back to just recently in December. Indeed, it was my honour and privilege on the invitation of the federal government at a COP 10 conference, where, in fact, the federal Minister of the Environment shared half of his time in addressing 187 nations with the province of Alberta, talking about not only is this province recognized for its natural resources in terms of what we have but also why we cannot be viewed as the environmental capital of Canada when it comes to some of the leadership we've demonstrated.

The hon. member and others are aware that we are the first province in Canada to have the electronic recycling program that we launched just a couple of months ago, but also the federal Ministry of the Environment asked for Alberta's advice relative to the importance of technology and renewable energies. Now, those two points are only two pieces of the puzzle when it comes to reducing greenhouse gases in terms of protecting our environment when it comes to the glacier and in terms of what is taking place. We all have a role to play in terms of working towards that.

I want to say in terms of the relationship federally with both the Deputy Prime Minister and the federal Ministry of the Environment that on my invitation, of course, they visited Calgary. Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, they visited Calgary at Climate Change Central, which we often refer to as C3. This is really very interesting from the perspective that it's a public/private partnership, where it's not just driven by government. It needs to have stakeholders from all sectors. I'm just very pleased to say that the public statements made by the federal Minister of the Environment as to Alberta being a leader in having the first agency of its kind was something that's a tribute not just to the ministry but literally to all of those that are involved.

I want to say that I will share the hon. member's comments with the board of directors, who are made up of NGOs, who are made up of industry, who are made up of government officials at our next board meeting that's going to be taking place in Calgary. Relative to the good work, the president and CEO is Allan Amey, and I do know that they continue to do good work in advocating on behalf of the environment in reducing greenhouse gas emissions, which I think is so important.

Also, I want to say in this House that recently we talked about what we are doing regarding so many wells being drilled in Alberta. Of course, we have an important enhanced oil recovery program. How are we going to better conserve the water that we have? It's such a rich resource in our province, but we have to do a better job in terms of how we manage that natural resource.

If I can give an example, it's my vision that we will continue to be, you know, good managers of water, but I believe that's not good enough. It may be okay as a North American standard, but we have so much to learn from other water users where it is truly considered rare and in such incredibly short supply. I use the example of Israel. The Israelis, of course, are the most incredible managers of water because they're in a desert that has a dense population. It's my hope that each of us in North America and specifically in the province of Alberta will continue with their consumer behaviour. It's about how we modify behaviour in terms of conservation. It seems like we don't want to wait until we have such a short supply. Let's do it today in terms of what it is and how we manage.

Energy conservation in terms of water conservation is so important in terms of what we're doing. As I mentioned in this House yesterday relative to enhanced oil recovery, we want to make it and continue to make it a top conservation initiative that, certainly, I as minister and I know representatives of this government are committed to.

I want to take a moment, though, to also make reference to the issue of engaging other agencies in developing a common strategy for environmental monitoring, that the hon. member has made reference to, not only the monitoring but also the evaluation and collecting data. Once that inventory of data is collected, then the question is: what do we do with it? Certainly, this ministry over the next year is engaging so many agencies, of course, in terms of collecting that data, then analyzing that data as we go forward with our Water for Life strategy, which I believe is so important

The hon. member also mentioned recycling and, of course, organics. You know, it's such a top priority in terms of our municipal waste action plan. Of course, that was released recently this year. So we are continually working with our stakeholders on that waste management program. I'm very proud of the leadership we demonstrated when we released that program. We want to continue with that in terms of organics, in terms of recycling.

You know, composting continues to be a top priority. I ask members of this Assembly: how many in this Assembly today, in fact, compost? I had the privilege about a month ago of meeting with Dr. David Suzuki, who is considered to be a leading environmentalist when it comes to so many initiatives. In actual fact, on the invitation from Alberta he, of course, participated at a very exciting program at the Cochrane school, where wind power as well as solar panels were used in terms of generating enhanced energy for that school. The students I truly compliment in terms of that initiative. It really gives me comfort knowing that our students in the province of Alberta play such an important role in terms of the seeds we plant for the future, ensuring that sustainability for it.

He also makes reference to, I believe, an important point on the tools for continuous improvement. I want to say that some of the tools that we want that he made reference to, you know, are in terms of developing innovative support, planning for activities, guiding our decisions, and ensuring environmental quality but also sharing in the environmental management and stewardship. We're all in this together in terms of the mother ship that I made reference to earlier, that I believe crosses over all political boundaries.

Reviewing and updating Alberta's wetland policy and developing an action plan are very important in terms of the implementation plan that we're going forward with.

Establishing our provincial water advisory councils.

Also educating and scoping and preparatory work for development of a government-wide provincial land strategy are very important for us, which is, of course, one of the objectives we want to continue to build on.

Also educating Albertans to better understand the value of this rich resource that we have in terms of water, in terms of our Water for Life strategy.

It's my hope that the environmental principles and standards that we develop, that we continue to build on based on the important data that we collect and the analysis that we have, are some things that we've got to continue to build on. Some of the ministers on the front bench here that are economic ministers, we have to ensure that balance is right because there is no question the province of Alberta has a reputation for its development of industrial wells, going from 10,000 to 20,000. Well, we have to ensure – and it's certainly my mandate as Minister of Environment – that that balance is right, to ensure that we don't jeopardize.

A good example of that is if we look to the neighbours to the south. If you look at how they have managed their water in terms of the water canals and diversions that they've done in the United States with over 330 million people, if you examine what they have done relative to where we are with only 33 million people and 3 million in Alberta, we have a tremendous opportunity to learn from that history of what our neighbours south of the border have done and haven't done right, based on the tremendous industrial development as well as the people that are of course consuming.

If you look at the city of Los Angeles today, they have more people than our country, over 35 million people. Of course, how they divert and try to consume and how they conserve water is putting tremendous pressure on them. Well, I'm proud to say that the province of Alberta has 3 million people, and the issue and the challenge for us is how we continue with our practices and our behaviours to ensure that the tools that the hon. member makes reference to are in place, to ensure that we will never ever be faced with what larger centres in the United States are. In Colorado and in Los Angeles, you know, they are in literally, I believe, a situation where we can learn from that history in terms of what we do managing this valuable resource that we have.

I want to also say that implementing the CASA, the clean air strategic alliance, electricity sector recommendations is so important as a tool. Also, implementing, of course, our climate change action plan will continue to be a top priority of ours as well.

So I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that we continue to consult, to learn from our history as we go forward. Also, if I could just use an example. In terms of our inventory of surface water and groundwater we want to continue to expand on our monitoring networks that we have developed. That is so important as well as part of our additional $12 million that is part of our budget.

So, Mr. Chairman, I want to say today that as we go forward, I share in many of the outcomes that we're looking for. I think should we base our success not only on the money we spend but also, more importantly, on the outcomes that we achieve. Of course, all of us in this room and in this province are stakeholders and have a role to play to achieve those objectives.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate having the opportunity to rise to speak on the Environment budget here this afternoon. I would like to thank the hon. minister and his staff, I guess, as well for putting together a very readable, comprehensive budget. I have my questions in several categories, which I will address in clumps, and then the hon. minister can answer them as he sees fit.

I must say that in doing a number of these budget estimates over these past few days, I've found this Ministry of Environment one perhaps more troubling than the others. I know that we hear a lot of rhetoric in regard to the importance of the environment and environment protection, but you know people put their money where their mouth is, and when we see the budget for the environment here, in fact the overall budget as I'm reading it has only increased by 4 per cent. Considering, at least by the government's own estimate, a 2 and a half per cent inflation rate, then we could really see almost a negligible increase to the overall environment budget here in Alberta for this coming year.

Quite frankly, I find that disappointing because there are just so many prescient issues coming to our attention and becoming so increasingly obvious in regard to environmental degradation in the province of Alberta that, you know, we can only reinforce our commitment, if, indeed, there is a serious commitment on the government's side to the environment, by putting money forward. Show us the money where we can in fact make substantive differences in the way that we conduct ourselves personally, through business, governments, and agriculture so that we do at least try to approach a sustainable culture here in this province, at which we are entirely unsuccessful at this juncture, I would suggest.

I appreciate as well the minister's enthusiasm. I think that I have been impressed from the beginning with his interest in the environment, but you know at the same time I sort of feel sorry for the lack of tools that he has been given to make substantive changes in our environmental practice here in this province. The ministry, as I have come to know it over these past few months, has been systematically sort of dismantled in terms of its teeth, its clout, its ability to effectively monitor the different aspects of the environment across this province and to administer directives to other ministries as to how they should proceed. It's an unfortunate circumstance, and I can only wish the minister some better tools in the future to be able to work with perhaps the very most important part of our Alberta heritage, which is the physical environment around us.

As I said, I'm only seeing a 4 per cent increase, and I would like to ask: why only such a small amount considering the reinvestment that has been going on in other ministries and the perceived increased focus in the environment, as often expressed by the minister?

It seems as well that the ministry has focused its expenditures this year. My understanding is that you're taking money away from the sharing environmental management and stewardship program quite substantially, a decrease of 18 per cent, and putting more money into the ministry support services program, probably a comparable percentage amount, up by 19 per cent. Within the ministry support services program spending is increased in the human resource section and corporate services. I'd be extremely curious to understand: what's the change in priorities here? What's the change in focus that would suggest such dramatic moves of money from one area to another, increases and decreases respectively?

As of the 1st of February, 2005, there's been an environmental fee imposed on new computers, related equipment, and televisions. I applaud this initiative, and I'm hoping that we can see the monies collected from that fee to target specific environmental concerns, especially in relation to recycling or dealing with electronic equipment specifically. The new fee will cover the cost of collection, which is great, transportation, recycling materials, public information and awareness programs, and such things. What I would like to know is if you could tell us approximately how much so far has been garnered from this program. I realize that it's only a couple of months in, but what's the direction? How successful has this been so far, and what changes need to be made perhaps?

I just want to have a reassurance here, again, that this environmental fee will specifically target the disposal and/or recycling and/or reusing or reduction, all of those r's, of electronic equipment specifically and not just go into general revenues.

My next group of questions is in regard to enforcement and monitoring of our environment. Of course, this is such a massive task. It's such a daunting task that, again, I'm quite disappointed with the amount of money allocated to this most important part of the Department of Environment. Without proper monitoring and enforcement the ministry is rendered ineffective and unproductive. Say, for example, the program for assuring environmental quality has its budget increased by $7.5 million, an increase of 9 per cent. I guess it's something, I suppose, but it seems inadequate to just how wide ranging this assuring environmental quality mandate really is.

Consider, for example, the clean air strategic alliance recommendations for this area. The CASA board of directors recommended that ambient air quality objectives for numerous substances such as nitrogen oxide and benzene be developed. As well, the same report also recommended that additional information on other substances including aluminum and radionuclides be compiled over the next three or four years. So I'm asking: can the minister please inform us if these recommendations are being implemented and, if so, where in the budget have these resources been allocated? I'm curious to see that.

Also, the Auditor General in his 2003-2004 annual report recommended that the Ministry of Environment improve its "process for developing new performance measures and ensure the measures in its business plan assess the results each goal aims to achieve." This is the very core focus of the Auditor General and how he evaluates the relative success or failure of each ministry, and it seems as though the Ministry of Environment is the most wanting in this regard. I know it's perhaps the most difficult place to measure but certainly wanting, nonetheless.

The ministry accepted the recommendations of the Auditor General in principle and said that "these recommendations will be considered in preparing the 2005-08 Business Plan in the context of the government's standard for 2005-2008 ministry business plans." So I'm asking, of course: has the ministry, indeed, updated its performance measures in accordance with the Auditor General's report? According to the ministry's website, the last time that there was a comprehensive review was way back in 2001, so I'm very curious to hear a specific update on this information, and I think many people are as well.

Furthermore, the Water for Life strategy is a new initiative I would like to applaud. I certainly appreciate the different stakeholders that have been brought into the process, and it certainly is a comprehensive and much better funded initiative than others. The Water for Life strategy calls for performance measures in order to be effective, as well, for measuring success, and I'm just curious to know what has been done in regard to those. Say, for example, a drinking water safety initiative providing an indicator for the "performance of facilities delivering safe drinking water, and demonstrates continuous improvement of facilities" and their operations. A very large but essential task. To provide affordable, safe drinking water to every citizen and every resident of this province I think must be a priority. We need performance measurements to ensure that that's being done safely every step of the way.

Water quality and doing an assessment of what exactly we do have. As the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has pointed out on a number of occasions, until we have a comprehensive inventory of our water cycle here in this province, it becomes almost a moot point to be dealing in percentages and bits and pieces of things here and there when we don't know how much we are in fact dealing with. If we do – I'm not going to use the word, that "m" word – it's confusing without a baseline from which we can work. Confusing indeed.

Finally, I would like to – well, almost finally – just speak specifically to one site and one coal mine. I think it's interesting just to look as a case in point at the Cheviot mine sort of southwest of Hinton. I think it brings up a number of interesting points that I've been talking about in terms of monitoring and doing adequate measurements before a company is allowed to come in and do their work.

The minister approved a list of recommendations designed to lessen the impact of the road to the Cheviot mine. One of these recommendations was that wildlife, including grizzly bears and wolves, killed by the trucks driving to and from the mine be reported to the government within 24 hours of an incident. I would like to know specifically if the ministry could release those numbers and, perhaps, put that onto the ministry website if this mine comes online and stays functioning, as it seems to be.

You know, one of the things that I found the most disconcerting about the Cheviot mine project is that the mine was approved and the site was approved with some degree of comprehensiveness in terms of an environmental assessment but the road that goes back and forth from the mine was not. In fact, in terms of overall square kilometres of impact on the land this road is much larger and much more damaging to the environment in this area than the actual mine. So, you know, I find it very difficult to believe that the existing regulations are adequate for us to be truly protecting the environment.

We've had exchanges before where, you know, I've been asking about regulations and adherence to regulations, say with the Lubicon incident, and while the ministry comes back by saying that all of the rules have been followed, I think that we need to take an honest look at whether those rules are adequate in themselves. Sometimes it seems like regulation is a dirty word around here, but that's the reason that we have a Legislature in the first place.

I think that we need to revisit some of these regulations and give them teeth and give them impact so that people follow them. You can throw all the carrots around you want, but a lot of these energy companies and mining companies are not particularly vegetarian in terms of eating or chasing after those carrots. They could use a stick just as easily, and they'll stay around and they'll follow those rules because they know that the returns are so much of a windfall for them, regardless, that they'll follow the rules. Lots of responsible companies are happy to follow strictly enforced, comprehensive rules. We're not doing anyone favours by letting them off easy.

Anyway, back to the Cheviot mine. We're talking about the road specifically as a case in point, if I might say. Can the ministry explain any steps taken to ensure that wildlife are less likely to be killed in the first place on this road? I was speaking to Mark Boyce, a University of Alberta biologist, and he said that the Cheviot mine is in one of the best bear habitats on the eastern slopes anywhere in the Rockies. Undoubtedly, the mine does disturb bears. How is the ministry ensuring that the impact on the bears from human activities is minimized?

Finally, talking about climate change, of course this is just a massive area unto itself. I do echo the Member for Calgary-Mountain View in certainly saying that Climate Change Central does produce good things from what resources it does have, but to suggest that Climate Change Central is the linchpin that's going to effect proper limitations in greenhouse gases in this province is facetious at best. I mean, Climate Change Central is a way for different groups to get together and share ideas and come up with suggestions, but to suggest in any way that it would actually impact the reduction of greenhouse gases to the levels that we are required to do so in this province is absolutely – I won't use the "m" word again – confusing at best, I would suggest.

I think that we could do a lot better and we must do a lot better, or I think that we will be an embarrassment to our children and grandchildren when they see how little we did at the crucial point in history when we should have done something. Five million dollars, I would suggest, for the climate change program is an absolute token amount. I think that it reflects a deep lack of commitment toward climate change in this province, and it's really nothing more than public relations money, you know, to make things look like there's something going on when there's really not much going on at all.

What we do need to arrest climate change is a real reduction in our output of greenhouse gases, including large final emitters, in this province. In fact, some of the deals that have been going on with the feds and Stéphane Dion I find to be objectionable at best because what they're doing is constantly reducing the amount that final emitters need to contribute to our reduction in greenhouse gases. Of course, the bulk of the responsibility is then being shifted onto regular consumers, hard-working Canadians and Albertans in particular who will have to bear the brunt of the cost of dealing with climate change. That is quite frankly embarrassing, and as a representative of some 45,000 Albertans I refuse to let that stand as an alternative.

There has been some talk about using underground storage facilities to deal with CO₂. Until this technology becomes realistic, I think again that it's misleading to always come up with this sort of patent solution that makes everyone think that we can deal with this without having to make any comprehensive change in our lifestyles or economy or what have you. The CO₂ injection process is being bandied about a lot these days amongst industry representatives, and I read about it in the press a lot more.

You know, I just say that we must try to be as honest as possible with these sorts of solutions and realize that they're only a piecemeal solution at best. Again, it's confusing for the public to suggest that, you know, if we inject all of our CO₂, we don't have to worry, and we can keep blasting around with our Dodge V-10 trucks and SUVs and heat your house at any point that you want to.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, the 20 minutes allocated to you have now elapsed.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you very much. I have a question across the floor that I'll ask first of all. Are there any members on the opposite side – I say to the opposite side and I'll also ask to this side – who drive SUVs? I'd be very interested to know. I'm proud to say that I turned in my SUV, which was a government vehicle, and drive a much smaller vehicle. In fact, I'm looking at a variety, but I have a very small vehicle.

Having said that, I must admit that sometimes I want to be sympathetic to those who do drive occasionally. I use the example when I travel the massive highway 63, travelling to my own home constituency. I can say that wildlife, of course, travels that highway, and the ideal situation there would be to have wildlife fences, like we'd have on every highway. Maybe in the years to come we'll have wildlife fences on every highway as you see in our national parks, of course Banff and Jasper where they have esthetically pleasing wildlife fences. In fact, that is something that I can't disagree with the hon. member. But we recognize that members have the choice of a variety of vehicles on all sides of the House, of course, as our members choose to use. I guess ultimately we're all in this together in terms of climate change.

In terms of industry playing a key role and in terms of large final emitters, what they do and how they do it, they have a role to play. If I could use just one small example in terms of the oil sands and emission intensity. In actual fact, because of technology and the investment that they have put into technology, which I am a huge advocate of continuing on, they've reduced, in terms of emission intensity per barrel, the actual CO₂ emission by about 50 per cent over the last 10 years. Is that good enough? No, it's not. Can they do better? Yes, they can, and sure, they will based on the important work that we have done and continue to do through Climate Change Central.

I made a public statement that hon. members may not be aware of at the Alberta Chamber of Resources. I indicated to the CEOs of industry across all parts of Canada and Alberta that it's my responsibility to keep their toes to the fire when it comes to what they do today, what they are doing tomorrow, and what they plan to do 25 years from now, their reinvestment.

My encouragement – and I'd be interested in terms of this important debate – would be that I would far prefer that the money is kept right here in the province of Alberta, at both hon. members' universities: the University of Calgary for the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View but also here at the University of Alberta for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, which I had the honour and privilege of being able to teach at. Why don't we keep that money right at these institutions rather than a plan of having it going across the sea? It's a global issue, and we recognize that. But why do we want to see money, billions of dollars, leaving our province and our country to go to buy a piece of paper called a carbon credit?

Globally it is an important issue, but I'd far prefer that that money is used right here as one piece of the puzzle in technology at the University of Alberta or the University of Calgary or the University of Lethbridge, where they are doing wonderful work on water. I know the minister of infrastructure is working with the University of Lethbridge as well.

The fact that emission intensity has been reduced by 50 per cent per barrel over the last 10 years is good. It's impressive, but we are looking for even greater technologies, where someday we can say proudly in this Assembly that it's actually zero emission in terms of what is coming out of the resources that we are in fact utilizing.

I want to say also to the hon. member with all due respect that my calculation is that we're just almost at 10 per cent in terms of our actual financial increase this year going from where we were last year. I'm just doing some quick math here, but, again, a 10 per cent increase of funding for Environment, which I certainly appreciate the Minister of Finance's close ear on when she, of course, heard our presentations at Treasury Board when we came forward, working together.

I want to say that as we go forward, the $3 billion that has been utilized and allocated, the only province in Canada that $3 billion is going toward not only physical infrastructure but the human infrastructure that the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View mentioned earlier when he talked about human infrastructure and what that means. In fact, I just had a meeting today with a gentleman from a conservation group that is going forward, and we talked about how we can use all of our waste, about creating the natural trails that we have through Trailnet, which is just one good example of how we can do that. But I want to say that some of the $3 billion for infrastructure going to municipalities will go toward, of course, water treatment plants and water infrastructure, which is so important. So the almost 10 per cent increase in our budget is so important.

I also want to say to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder that you have my assurance and reassurance when it comes to all of the dollars going towards a recycling plant. In fact, I invite all members of this Assembly, if they would like, to visit one of our sites down in Rimbey, Alberta. I want to say that all of that money goes directly into recycling for the mercury and for the electronics that are melted down. That is going directly to the whole issue of helping our environment. It does not go back to any other fund but is specifically targeted for that particular authority, and I'm very proud of that.

Also, a couple of other issues on computer information. That's so important in collecting information. We have about a $3 million upgrade that's going to be taking place, part of our increase of $12 million. That's going to be, of course, to help us with infrastructure tools in terms of our environmental monitoring, which is so important. I believe that Albertans continue to have an important expectation of government in terms of that.

I failed to mention, though, just in terms of a statistic – I don't know if members would be aware that from an electronics recycling perspective, our management recycling authority will continue reporting back to me on a quarterly basis. But I'm also very pleased by the fact that with electronic recycling, did you know that we have recycled to date about 900 tonnes of material? If you can imagine 900 tonnes, you know, in terms of the electronics that we have, that's a lot of the laptops that we see in here and others that are being recycled. I think that's important.

I might add also, if I could share with you, that tomorrow I have a conference call with all of the provincial ministers of environment or similar ministries and also the federal minister. It was really quite interesting that they were all asking how it is going in terms that we are the only province in Canada that has a recycling program. It's really quite interesting. Also, I want to compliment the predecessor of this ministry, Dr. Lorne Taylor, for his work in terms of his vision, in terms of going forward on that. I think it's been very, very important, and it's being recognized across the country.

In terms of climate change, we are the first ones with a law. We're the first ones with an agency. But I also want to say that we are now consulting with stakeholders relative to being the first ones to get an equivalency regulation. That is so important relative to getting it right and dealing with this very complex issue.

Sometimes I look at performance measures, and I want to just take a moment because the hon. member rightly mentioned: how do we measure, and what are our performance measures? Specifically, we'll continue to work on improving our performance on a variety of issues. But if I could just give you eleven examples: from a drinking water safety indicator to a river water quality index, to an air quality index, to an effective infrastructure, to a flood-risk map, stakeholder satisfaction as well as municipal solid waste, our initiative there, renewable and alternative energy generation, not to mention of course the beverage container return rate that we have and are very pleased with, and also our used oil recovery rate, and finally our water use efficiency and productivity indicator – just a small example of measurements that we're using in terms of being able to measure how well we are doing.

I want to say to the hon. member that he raises some excellent points relative to where we are. I also want to say that in terms of the issue of compliance and enforcement, which the hon. member mentioned, a significant element of next year's program will be the implementation of the compliance assurance education strategy. Again Alberta has been a leader in working with Albertans and industry to ensure that they understand the role they play in protecting our environment.

Of course, education is so important. In fact, not that long ago I was meeting with some chief executive officers, a combination of environmental and industry people, and I told them that I would prefer to not talk to them but to their children because I believe, in actual fact, that their children, from what they're learning in our education system today, are the ones that are planting the seed in terms of influencing not only other young students but also their parents and grandparents. I think that is encouraging, and I guess I remain optimistic as an elected official that young people will continue.

I saw CEOs shaking their head, but I'm, like: "If you don't get it by now, figure it out. If you're not going to hear it from government regulators and other elected people, then you're going to hear it right at home from your spouse or from your children or your grandchildren." That is a network that we want to continue to enhance because, as I said earlier in my opening remarks, we all have a role to play, not just the CEO of a company, not just the president of the Sierra Club or the Suzuki Foundation. We all have a role to play in that.

As minister I want to say that if I can in any way, shape, or form be a bridge to so many of those areas that appear to have been polarized in the past – and I'd use just one example. It appears that environment people, which I meet with each and every day, are concerned with the environment. But you know what? It's okay for them to be sustainable in terms of recognizing that dollars are so important to achieve their objective, just like from industry's perspective it's so important to recognize that the environment principles are so important to their children and their families, not just what they're doing at their company. So we have that understanding and bridge between environment principles and economic principles.

I'll continue to be that bridge and not have a polarized world. In actual fact, I used it in here, and I'll try it again, about commonality, if I could. It was by Robert Frost where he talked about in the final analysis the most common human link being that we all inhabit this small planet, we all breathe the same air, we all cherish our children's future, and we're all mortal.

If you look at the polarization that takes place between some of the development that goes on in industry and environment, the challenge for all of us is if we take that as the starting point. In fact, last week at our environmental conference, that the hon. members in this Assembly are fully aware of, we talked about connecting and collaborating, not compromising but connecting and collaborating, where environmental principles can be maintained and sustained well into the future once we're long gone.

The question we should be asking is not what we are going to do for the next 25 years or the next 100 years but what will this place look like a thousand years from now? We have over 6 billion people in this world today, and the reality of it is that we have to change our behaviour. We ultimately have to change our behaviour if we are to be able to reach – as I shared with some of the hon. members yesterday, scientists are predicting that we actually should be able to, if conservation practices are enhanced, allow 20 billion people on this small Earth of ours, 20 billion over the next long period of time. But today we need to change. We've got to be thinking like the Israelis think when it comes to water management today because they're faced with that shortage. We've got to think in terms of what people in the Netherlands are doing when it comes to recycling.

I made a comment. I said that it's my hope that there will be no landfills in the future in this province or, for that matter, in this country. What I meant by that – I used the example of the small condo that I rent in the community here. I take my waste, limited as it is, down to a chute that goes into a bin, that ultimately, then, is trucked away to a landfill. It's my hope that we will have an underground landfill right in the municipality. The municipality, then, will convert that waste into useful energy in an environmentally friendly way, where there are no alleyways and dumpsters so that we ultimately can be conserving and using our resources as valuably as we can.

I want to share this with you. A Conservative, a former leader, Preston Manning said – and it was very interesting; he of course worked with the Canada West Foundation – that today the challenge for the next political party is how importantly they pay attention to the environment. But I think our challenge can even go further. It's not for a political party; it's for our society. As a society where is it that we're going to go to in terms of protecting the mother ship?

I believe that the word "conservative," that we all use and where our party comes from, still comes from the same root word that "conservation" comes from, and the word is "conserve." Be it a conservative or be it a conservationist, the bottom line is that "conserve" means: don't waste my natural resources and don't waste my money. I think that those two principles are very important as we embark on the future of what holds in terms of environmental principles. Each of us has a responsibility.

I just want to say to the hon. members that have asked questions that I'm trying to cover off as best I can some of those. But the tools that we have, the data we collect, and what we do over the next period of time will be the ultimate challenge if we are truly going to sustain the importance of protecting our environment.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you. I don't know if I should name them or not, but there is a car company – you will recognize the commercial pitch when I say it – that keeps saying in its commercials that – should I name it? – at Ford we keep thinking about the perfect sedan or how to build a sedan or how to build a great sport utility vehicle or whatever. And, you know, whenever I hear those commercials, the thought that always occurs to me is, well, you know, that's great that you all sit around and do the thinking about building a great sedan or a great car or a great vehicle, but as the guy who might be persuaded to drive one of your vehicles, all I care about is that you get on with building it. Mr. Chairman, I'm feeling a little bit of that same sentiment here today.

The minister certainly, I think, cares in a philosophical, theoretical way, in principle, about the environment. I think he cares deeply about it. He may even have hugged a tree or two in his day. I don't know. And, by the way, if he has, I would say that there's absolutely nothing wrong with that, and I would support him in that endeavour.

Nevertheless, we have I think here a couple of specific problems in these estimates in terms of how the minister is going to play his role. And, by the way, I fully agree with the minister that this is a shared responsibility that has nothing to do with political parties, with partisan politics, with politics for that matter. It has to do with all of us changing our ways. It has to do with all of us grasping the concept of sustainability, first of all, and then taking real concrete steps to change our ways so that we live a sustainable lifestyle. Right now the average footprint of an Albertan – in other words, the average amount of resources that an Albertan consumes in terms of the lifestyle that we lead – represents somewhere between six and seven hectares per person. It has been expressed in another way, that if everyone on planet Earth lived the highfalutin lifestyle that we do here in the great province of Alberta, we would need something like five planets Earth to support life at that level.

[Ms Ady in the chair]

So certainly action needs to be taken. And I don't know, Madam Chair, how we're going to take that action in meaningful ways with a budget – and we can use the minister's numbers if we wish – that has a $12 million increase from last year's budget to this year's budget. Or we can use another way of looking at it which doesn't look quite so good: a net increase of $5.5 million from the 2004-2005 forecast to this year's budget. It's not much of an increase. And I'd like to know specifically what can be accomplished with numbers like that.

For instance, there are 31,772 unreclaimed abandoned wells in the province of Alberta, according to the December 2004 licence liability report. I'd like to know how the minister expects to properly remediate these sites with an estimated budget of $4.9 million for reclamation purposes, down from last year's $5,005,000. I'd like to know what the minister is doing to ensure that more environmental assurance field staff are actually in the field. I'd like to know what the minister plans to do around compliance and enforcement. That area, line 2.0.2 of the estimates, sees a slight increase, $600,000, over last year allocated to compliance and enforcement. I hope that at least some of that increase is going to hiring more environmental officers, but I would argue that $600,000, even if every penny of that is spent on hiring environmental officers, is not going to make a huge difference. We have a real shortage, as the minister knows, of environmental officers to ensure compliance. It's been an issue in this province for years. It is a situation that his ministry can really only act on specific complaints.

By the way, this is nothing that is unique to this minister or this department or even this level of government. I mean, it happens at all levels of government in some areas, where you do not have enough compliance officers of whatever sort to be proactive. You're reduced to, you know, waiting until somebody complains. Like in the city of Calgary, for instance, there are not nearly enough bylaw officers to enforce the bylaws. Now, in many respects given the city of Calgary that's a good thing because there are far more bylaws than any city of a million needs. But, for instance, if you've got a dog running loose, a dog bites, you know, and you complain, eventually a bylaw enforcement officer will get around to you, but the bylaw enforcement officers don't exist in numbers to be on the lookout for dogs running loose, that sort of thing.

Taking that back to what we're talking about here in terms of the environment, if we want to achieve the kind of environmental stability, I would argue, that the minister is talking about, it's not enough to just have a minimal staff of compliance officers who can only act when they get a complaint because that is reactive; that is not proactive. Every time you react to something like an environmental complaint, you are in essence shutting the barn door after the horse has bolted. The environmental damage has been done. Some of that can be remediated. Sometimes all of it can be remediated. Sometimes all of the damage can be repaired, but sometimes it can't.

So I wonder if the minister can tell us specifically how many environmental officers his department intends to hire over the next fiscal year, how far $600,000 will go in that area or how much of that $600,000, in fact, he's going to spend in that area.

Can the minister provide a breakdown of the percentage of total staff change, let's say, in the past decade for the Ministry of Environment? Can the minister provide the number of environmental officers and investigators employed by the ministry for the past five years? I don't expect the minister, of course, to have those numbers necessarily at his fingertips. I would be quite satisfied if the minister would undertake to get back to us with those numbers.

I want to take a look at page 219 of the business plan, strategy 1.4. It states that the Ministry of Environment will "work with other ministries, governments and stakeholders to begin to implement . . . Water for Life," which we have been told time and time again is vitally important to all the people of Alberta, to this province's future, going forward, and to this government. Again, I think it is tremendously important in theory and in principle. I just worry that there aren't the dollars going to this that can actually put that importance into practical terms.

Some of the implementation strategies include:

- Developing and implementing a phased, long-term strategy to protect Alberta's drinking water;
- Developing water management objectives and priorities for watershed plans to sustain aquatic ecosystems, and enable sustainable economic development; and
- Supporting best management practices in sectors to improve the efficiency and productivity of water use.

Some questions around that, Madam Chair. Can the minister provide specifics, please – specifics, please – as to how he will achieve these goals with other ministries? What other jurisdictions is he in consultation with, and could he report to this House, please, on the progress of those consultations? How can the minister follow through on these goals, as laudable as they are, without adequate funding? Or if the minister believes that this funding is adequate, can he convince me?

Are there any other ministries involved in implementing Water for Life besides Infrastructure? I know that this perhaps should be mined in more detail when we do the estimates on the Infrastructure and Transportation budget, but if I'm looking correctly here, there is an allocation of $27.6 million in the Infrastructure budget to effectively develop and maintain water management infrastructure, and that is a decrease of about 2 and a half million dollars from last year.

We have been told by no less than the Premier, the top Tory, as he described himself earlier in this House, that, in fact, much of the implementation of the Water for Life strategy was going to take place within the area of the Infrastructure budget. I guess I would like to know: is the commitment of Infrastructure here only for the upgrading and maintenance of existing water treatment facilities? What about new facilities for water treatment? What are we doing additionally? What are we planning to do additionally, not just to hold our place, not just to – if you'll pardon a dreadful pun here since we're talking about Water for Life – tread water but, in actual fact, to move forward with the Water for Life strategy?

I fully agree with the minister. His predecessor did an awesome job in coming up with that strategy, shepherding it through. It's an excellent policy document. It needs to be considerably more than a policy document. We all know that. It needs to be implemented, and it needs to be implemented in the most timely fashion possible. That is what concerns me. We're not really doing that, I fear. We're just trying to stay put, just trying to hold our place. I believe the minister knows that we need to move forward with it, and we need to make progress quickly.

So I wonder if I can prevail upon the minister – and I'm a little bit leery of asking the minister to respond right now because I know that there are others who would like to get some questions in on the floor. Of course, it's up to the minister to decide how he wants to respond, but I'd be willing to hear briefly, orally now some of these specific answers, or if he wants to provide more detail, since we are running short of time here, and take some other questions, that would be fine with me if he'd provide those in writing, as well, or any combination thereof.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

Mr. Boutilier: Madam Chair, I thank the hon. member for some important points that he has raised, and I will endeavour to answer many of his questions.

Starting with our staff. Within the Ministry of Environment, of course, over the past five years there were many other branches that now are potentially in Sustainable Resource Development and other areas. We have just under 800 full-time members on our staff, with a budget that the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie has noted. It is our intention this year to be hiring just over 20 more environmental enforcement officers and staff to the Environment ministry. Is it enough? No, it's not, but certainly it's better than the alternative. So we are moving forward. That will bring our complement to over 800 members on the environmental team.

I would like to say also that on the Water for Life strategy – and I appreciate what he has acknowledged – presently, today, we have over 500 either private or public water facilities. I think history is such a wonderful teacher that we can learn from the situations that took place in Walkerton. It's just one example of what we or any province or any country never wants to see happen in terms of a loss of life because of poor quality and not proper monitoring and other things that took place.

I want to say, of course, that I'm looking eagerly for the review, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View mentioned earlier in his remarks, relative to not only collecting information, analyzing it, and determining what changes we have to make. It's almost a system study. First of all, we analyze. Then after we do the analysis, we interpret. Then after we interpret, we have to implement, of course, and that is an important part of our Water for Life strategy over the next period of time.

I want to say from a compliance and enforcement perspective, which the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie has brought up, that we respond to about 13,000 calls per year. In fact, we do on average over a thousand inspections.

It's almost like a bylaw to a degree. In fact, in my former life as a mayor and an alderman, of course, sometimes complaints are initiated based on people who call in to complain about something that's going on, and that's okay. In fact, I have examples of where we had enforcement officers that were too eager in the bylaw department because they were going around and putting tickets on cars that actually were turned the other way on a typical street. I had a person come over to me when I was mayor, and they took a picture of my car that was parked the opposite way on the street too. This was about 10 years ago now, and at the time what we began to realize was that on the street someone was washing their car, and they turned it the other way to be able to get to the hose to use the water to wash the car, and we had an overzealous – it really is so important to use discretion in terms of how we apply.

As my grandfather once said, you know, the whole problem with common sense is that it's not so common. I could add another term to that, that when he said "the whole problem," he did insert a particular profession that we seem to be about in this Assembly when it came to common sense. So I am trying to take heed of his remarks relative to being in public office and applying some common sense.

We do require more staff – I recognize what the hon. member is saying – as I'm sure other ministries do. From a reclamation perspective I could just use one example. The underground petroleum tanks, or UPT, as it's referred to, does fall in part under, of course, the Ministry of Municipal Affairs, which in my previous ministry I had the honour of going forward with, where we commissioned $80 million that was used for underground petroleum tanks, where we took the high risk. But presently in my Ministry of Environment under reclamation, of course, we have just under $5 million specifically for reclamation, particularly in the Smoky River coal mine, which is just one example.

I want to say from the onset that the ultimate responsibility to ensure that the proper remediation and reclamation is taking place – for instance, in this example and others, oil and gas, they have the financial responsibility to do the proper remediation and reclamation of abandoned sites or whatever the activity is. My responsibility is to ensure as a regulator that they are doing their job relative to the rules that we have and the regulations we have.

I once again will commit to this Assembly that in terms of the laws we have in place, they are first and foremost in terms of environmental initiative. Second of all, ideally it would be wonderful some day not to have to have laws, but we require laws and regulations because of the fact that we can only judge industry, we can only judge others based on our lowest denominator, not by the ones who excel in environmental sustainability but those who are not doing the job. In fact, what they do is taint all the others that are doing good work. So where we have been of course focusing is on 10 per cent of our high-risk activity areas, based on their history, based on their reputation, and based on practices. We have taken that approach, and it's been very successful for us from an enforcement perspective when it comes to what different activities are going on within our province.

On the 10 per cent increase that the hon. member mentioned earlier, I want to say that in terms of some of the things we're embarking on this year on top of just the Water for Life strategy, we're moving forward aggressively with our climate change plan, our regulation and our consultation, our electronics recycling. Our new standards for coal-fired power plants, of course, are an important initiative, not to mention our air and watershed groups as well, which are so important as we go down this road in what I call important enforcement and compliance.

I want to say at the beginning, though, that the words "enforcement" and "compliance," I had some stakeholders say that they sound like strong words. In other words, they view them as nail them and jail them as opposed to fair and square. Certainly, I can say to the good people that work in the Ministry of Environment, they're experienced, they're young, they're energetic, and they're committed. So I believe and it's my observation that for those over 800 employees that are in the Ministry of Environment, they have the passion that I think is an important ingredient in ensuring that that common sense that my grandfather talks about as important be applied to rules and regulations and, at the same time, to how we can enjoy the wonderful bounty of natural resources that we've been blessed with in this province.

Some of the information going back 10 years, unfortunately, I do not have, but we'll endeavour to get that to you, hon. member.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to reference my remarks, first of all, to goal 3 in the business plan. Goal 3 states: "Albertans work with others to safeguard the environment." Under that it states what it means. This means "the Ministry works collaboratively with other ministries, governments, organizations, associations and communities to effectively manage the environment." Then it goes on to say, "With knowledge and opportunity, Albertans can be actively involved in caring for the environment." It goes on, then, to talk about strategies, and in relation to water strategies 3.11 states: "support Watershed Planning and Advisory Councils to continue watershed management plans," and 3.13 states: "support the work of the Alberta Water Council on watershed management issues in the province." So my comments relate, then, to watershed planning as is stated here in the business plan.

My concern really relates to the progress that is being made in terms of watershed planning as it relates to the Battle River watershed area, and that includes the Pipestone Creek area, which feeds into the Battle River, and Driedmeat Lake, and so on. This watershed or waterway provides water for the Camrose area. It provides water for Wetaskiwin. It provides water for other centres further down, such as Forestburg and so on. Last year we ran into a rather serious problem where there was a shortage of water, and they had to open the weir at Cold Lake and let extra water down, which meant that the level of Cold Lake was lowered considerably. But there is some urgency here in this watershed, particularly as we consider the economic development of the area.

So my question to you is: what is being done in terms of studying the alternative solutions to this particular problem that exists? What is being done in terms of making decisions on the alternative action that would or should be taken?

I notice in your budget that there are dollars for Water for Life. There are dollars for water operations. I noticed in the capital budget that there is $171 million over three years for planning, but I don't know how any of this relates to this particular issue and this particular problem. I would like to know from your department how advanced we are in studying this issue and coming up with a solution. So could you enlighten me on how this budget, then, addresses this issue as it relates to my constituency and other surrounding constituencies as well?

Just to conclude, going back to my original comments relating to goal 3, making reference to other ministries that might be involved in coming up with a solution here, I would ask: what other ministries are involved in this and where might I find dollars for this particular study and to solve this problem in other budgets, perhaps? Can you enlighten me on that?

Thank you.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Chair, I thank the hon. member. From a perspective of watershed planning, ultimately, as we look in terms of how we go forward, our Water for Life strategy, of course, deals with many of those issues. The hon. member pays specific attention to the Battle River relative to the situation there, and he's absolutely correct. In fact, I've appreciated his insight on how we move forward with the knowledge that we have garnered in the past and from the money, of course, a lot of the infrastructure money, that we are going to be utilizing to assist the hon. member's particular area. The Battle River area is in the ministry of infrastructure.

I do know that the minister is very much aware. We work very closely in terms of my ministry and the policies we develop in watershed councils as well as our watershed planning and with the ministry of infrastructure, who has the money for doing some of the weirs, some of the diversions, some of the ways that we can ensure that in the future and well into the future.

The hon. member is fully aware that in his particular area it's a growing population. There are tremendous pressures that are being faced in his area. More people are moving there now that they celebrate the Alberta junior A hockey championships. They continue to go back. I'm not too particularly pleased with that one, though, in light of the fact that they actually defeated the community and junior A team that are in my area.

The money is there to direct it so that the planning that we have already undertaken, that we're moving forward on, will be used in a way that makes the most sense, that common sense I talk about, ensuring that we conserve the water that we use and even find better ways to do it so that it can be enjoyed by all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I want to state right from the very beginning that I have faith in this minister. I believe he's sincere, and there's no doubt in my mind about his integrity. But what I see is that all the other kids got brand new shiny budgets, taking into account population and inflation, and his ministry received hand-me-downs. Unfortunately, funding, especially in this province, is symbolic of importance. This was brought out by two previous speakers. That's a concern for me.

Another concern I have is not only the stewardship and the accountability of the Environment ministry, but, being a member of the Public Accounts Committee, each time we question a particular ministry, it's almost typical that it's a new minister. There seems to be very little continuity from year to year with all the ministry changes. It is my hope that our current Environment minister will have a chance to set and realize a vision although given the funding that he's been provided, managing the vision will be difficult. I find it, as I say, frustrating that when we go to ask questions about a specific year's budget, we don't at the same time have a chance to see where that department is going or what the vision is. We don't get a sense of continuity from year to year. To me this is where accountability and stewardship need to be improved.

I also believe that this minister has been placed in a very difficult if not impossible position due to the fact that he's Environment minister and he is also the MLA for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. Within that particular constituency that he represents there are so many different demands coming at him that I think that sometimes he must feel that he's a referee wearing a striped shirt and carrying a whistle.

We have heard from the delegation from Fort McMurray about how their infrastructure is very much in need of support increase. The public infrastructure is not able to maintain where the private infrastructure is headed, and we have this great demand for more and more oil: let's cash in on the world markets; let's produce, produce, produce. But within the member's own constituency what is happening at the public level and what is happening at the private level do not jive.

He's also put in a kind of difficult position because as the Environment Minister he has to improve environmental expansion within his area so that further houses can be built, and they're extremely necessary. I'm not stating that this is a conflict of interest. I'm just saying that the minister is wearing so many different hats that I'm sure it must cause a great deal of difficulty.

He's being pressured by industry to provide developmental permits. He's being pressured by the citizenry to allow greater land expansion for housing developments. There are pressures on his own environmental responsibilities within his area because the tar sands and the ponds and the extract continue to grow, and what will be done with them in the future, I think, is a large concern. To me, what I equate it with is the Sydney tar ponds in Nova Scotia. It's not the kind of legacy that we want to consider in the environment. So I do have a great deal of sympathy for the minister because he has so many things to juggle, and he doesn't have a budget that reflects the importance of what he has to juggle.

The other concern, again, that has been brought up by previous members is the lack of co-operation between the two levels of government, between the federal government and the provincial government. We have had cases – and I've repeated them before – of outfits like Shell, BP, Petro-Canada, and Suncor who have already met the Kyoto protocol requirements. They've done it with existing technology. Suncor, especially, is one of the bigger players in this area, and if they can control their emissions voluntarily and with current technology, I don't quite understand why this government isn't pushing some of the other big players for similar environmental responsibility and stewardship. These company's bottom lines went up, not down, when they showed this type of stewardship.

The other area that I'm concerned about is the co-ordination between, say, Energy, Sustainable Resources, Community Development. It seems that the protection of the environment is potentially in a conflict, an ongoing conflict, with industry and the pursuit of wealth. It always seems that the environment is the last consideration. We've been told frequently in press releases that we mustn't bite the hand that feeds us, but unfortunately that hand is not only feeding us; it is constraining the quality of our life.

There is some kind of need for a communications ministry, and I certainly don't believe that RAGE has that ability to co-ordinate the various related ministries. There has to be an interrelationship between, as I was saying, Energy, Sustainable Resources, Environment, and Community Development, which is responsible for a portion of what I think should be under Environment, and that's parks and protected areas.

I'm not convinced that there's sufficient talking between departments, that there's an ongoing dialogue. As I say, I've experienced this in the wilderness, where people weren't exactly sure who was responsible for what. When we magnify that by thousands and thousands of employees, we have to eliminate that confusion. Unfortunately, the thousands of employees aren't available within this environmental department. They should be, as far as I'm concerned, the ultimate steward, the ultimate assessor, the ultimate approver. While you have to balance economy with environment, given the choice of the two, I will favour environment. So we need that kind of communication to take place.

Also, we've referred to – and it has been brought out in one of the member's statements today – the role of the AEUB. Frequently we hear the term "arm's length" applied to this organization. It's certainly not arm's length from industry. Industry supplies 60 per cent of the Energy and Utilities Board budget. That's hardly arm's length. Then the other 40 per cent of the budget is basically made up by the government and, as was noted, a 98 per cent approval rating for exploration and development and a constant pressure on this Environment minister and ministry to speed up approvals.

Again, I talk about the minister's own backyard where we're talking about billions and billions of dollars of development and yet insufficient road work, insufficient infrastructure. To me the balance has been lost. In terms of the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board I don't believe they're representing the public concern. I believe they're representing the concerns of private industry based on the approval rating.

Just one last thing. If the Environment minister could consider the possibility of taking over the area of parks and protected areas, to me that would go a long way to having consistency in policy. I would also urge the Environment minister to think about the low percentage of parks and protected areas we have. I know that it's not strictly his ministry, but he has an overriding responsibility for the environment. Right now with the ongoing sale of public lands and the fact that only 4 per cent of Alberta's lands have been set aside for parks and protected areas, and even within those 4 per cent there are industrial intrusions, I think very soon we need to increase that percentage. We need to increase the enforcement of the protection of the area, and we have to have ministers in place long enough for a vision to be realized.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thank you very much to the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, and I want to say that many of the comments that he raises are, I think, very, very on the mark relative to work that has to be done. In fact, it's really quite interesting that the Ministry of Environment in its present structure has been in place now for just over four years. It's true that history can be an excellent teacher in terms of doing a comparative analysis. In fact, we then have to ensure that what we are comparing is accurate so it gives us true data – that's important, as members have mentioned earlier – in terms of the appropriate action.

I would like to just ever so briefly talk about some things that are happening that may not be directly suggested in the budget, but let me try to fill in some of the gaps. It's coming from northeastern Alberta, my home constituency. There have been duly noted important questions raised relative to the massive investment that's going on and also the footprint and cumulative effect that is taking place, not only just for species at risk but, as well, in terms of what's taking place. I want to say that the approach, you know, that we are trying to take is one that is more based in the community as opposed to where jurisdictional boundaries are. We want to look at things in a way that takes a look at the global picture. That may even cross over to other borders. It's something that we have to continue to do.

I do feel, of course, having played hockey, that not only am I a referee with a whistle; I want to provide assurance to you that as Environment minister I'm the only referee with a whistle that also is carrying a stick. I'll call it a hockey stick, but it's a stick that is appropriately used where deemed appropriate. So I appreciate the hon. member's comments.

Because of the things that are taking place in northeastern Alberta, my family and my neighbours and the people where we live actually value the environment equally if not more than others because of what we're seeing taking place. You know, some of my very close friends that I worked with on municipal council are aboriginals: Chief Boucher, Chief Waquan, Chief Cyprien, and Chief Janvier. You know, we enjoy a city of 70,000, yet you can be on a float plane, enjoy the waterways, and still be out in the country within minutes from what will soon be perhaps the third largest city in all of Alberta at the growth that it's going. But we've got to ensure that that balance is right. I totally agree with the hon. member relative to that.

If I could just briefly say, about a month ago I was invited, in fact, by the Alberta Chamber of Resources, which is made up essentially of industry folks, to comment, and in actual fact, to their credit, they invited the Minister of Energy, the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, and the Minister of Environment, and it was the first time ever that they had all three ministers in a room during their annual general meeting. We had a very healthy discussion. It was where I was quoted as saying that I intended to hold their feet to the fire when it comes to their responsibility for proper reclamation and remediation and in terms of also the social responsibility that they must do.

What I'm encouraged about is our initiative right now relative to IRM. IRM is integrated resource management, where we break down the silos that have been mentioned here this afternoon in the budget discussion. No matter what ministry we're involved with, be it Infrastructure or SRD or Energy or Environment, we need to come together relative to policies because each of our ministries, as much as we're silos, crosses boundaries.

I want to say that a former Deputy Minister of Environment, who then actually became the deputy of Executive Council, of course has done some excellent work on this. He is Vance MacNichol, and they referred to the MacNichol report, and of course I'm studying the report. It's not a public report, but I'm quite eager to say that it appears to be the most talked about report that's out there.

The ultimate mandate for us will be as we go forward. The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne is chairing the committee, a sustainable development committee called integrated resource management, where we are going to be going forward with what's referred to as a more integrated – in fact, let me put this challenge out here today. What worked 30 years ago in this work that we are initiating as the chair of the standing policy committee may not be where we go in the future.

If I can give you an example. The AEUB, that the hon. member mentions, as a regulator of SRD and the NRCB, and the regulation that we have within my own ministry – we are doing a comprehensive review to say: is the NRCB, is the AEUB the environment regulators that we have? Perhaps there's a better way than what was working 30 years ago. Perhaps there's a better way today based on what Albertans, our bosses, are telling us relative to how we manage the resources that we have and that we value so dearly.

I want to say that in this budget I believe the integrated resource management of the three ministries and others that are involved is going to play an important role in terms of new policy development, and when we develop what that policy is, then there is limited interpretation of what that means in terms of managing our resources.

So I'm excited by my other colleagues as well. When I heard from the Alberta Chamber of Resources that it was the first time that they had three ministers in a room talking about this integration – because as much as industry looks for certainty, one thing for sure is that if we can find a better way, we will never compromise our environmental standard and the environmental commitment that we have. So if we can become more effective – and I want to say this. The word streamlining does not mean compromising. If there is a way, maybe it will not even look like the AEUB in the future. Maybe it won't look like the NRCB. Maybe it won't look like the environment regulator. Maybe there is a better way, but one thing for certain is that we need to break down those silos.

In fact, some of the questions in the Assembly this afternoon talked about important issues. There are a variety of regulators and quasi-judicial bodies that are involved. Perhaps there is even a better way of doing it, that my ministry and other ministries are committed to doing, and on that you have my solemn pledge.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would ask, just in making my final comments, that the minister make the MacNichol report available to us. If it's leading us in a specific direction with respect to regulation and integration of regulation, I would hope that we would have a chance to have some input into that.

Thank you very much for your feedback.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much. You have my commitment, as I'm studying through the report, that I will make it readily available because I think it will create a very healthy debate as we all have ideas on how best we want to see this Alberta look in the future relative to protecting and conserving our important resources.

The Deputy Chair: Are you now ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Environment for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, you are ready for the vote.

Agreed to:

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$136,003,000
Nonbudgetary Disbursements	$1,000,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report the vote for the Department of Environment and request leave to meet again.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, for the following department.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 26, 2005

8:00 p.m.

Date: 05/04/26

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we will call the committee to order. Before we proceed with the estimates before us, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly four wonderful teachers from the St. Albert Protestant separate school division. They have joined us in the public gallery this evening. It's very fitting for us to honour these guests during Education Week.

First of all, I would like to introduce Sarah Varghese. Mrs. Varghese was nominated by a parent in her school as one of the 15 teachers from across Canada to be chosen to receive the prestigious Prime Minister's award for teaching excellence. This award was in recognition of her innovations in the creation of an inclusive environment for students with diverse needs. Her reward is a $5,000 award for her school, which I'm sure will be well spent. I would also take great pleasure in introducing three St. Albert teachers who have been chosen as finalists for the 2005 excellence in teaching awards. We're honoured to have these four in the gallery with us this evening.

One of these people is Mr. Ron Hansen. Unfortunately, he was not able to be with us this evening. I'd also like to introduce you to Percy Zalasky. Mr. Zalasky is a mathematics teacher at Paul Kane. Mr. Zalasky is being recognized for his ingenious approach to students, diligently and patiently working alongside students and helping them to learn. I'd also like to introduce Mr. Glenn Wilson. Mr. Wilson is a physical education specialist at Leo Nickerson elementary school in St. Albert. Mr. Wilson has a keen sense of the physical education philosophy and puts his philosophy into action. The final person I'd like to introduce is Mrs. Liane Zutz. Mrs. Zutz is a biology specialist teaching at Paul Kane high school in St. Albert. Mrs. Zutz has an excitement for her field that infects all of her students with a desire to learn. Would they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other introductions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group who is just walking in. They're grade 7 students, and they belong to the 395 squadron air cadets. I just had a picture taken with them. I stood in for my colleague for Edmonton-Calder. These young cadets are accompanied by Second Lieutenant Leonard, Flight Sergeant Campbell, Sergeant Egeto. Also, they're accompanied by parents Miss Dominique Smith, Mr. Andrew McLellan, and Mr. Eden Fehr. I would ask these cadets and the adults accompanying them, please, to rise now to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chairman, due to a potential conflict of interest relevant to the item of business under consideration tonight, I will withdraw from the Chamber and ask that it be duly recorded.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: It shall be duly recorded.

head: Main Estimates 2005-06

Children's Services

The Deputy Chair: For the information of members in the gallery we are at the committee stage, which is much more informal than the proceedings of the Assembly, so you will see members moving around and maybe taking off their jackets. Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. This evening I am pleased to present the 2005-06 budget estimates for the Ministry of Children's Services. I would be remiss if I did not acknowledge all the hard work done by some very talented, incredible staff from my office, my deputy's office, and staff from across this province. For this, I give them a big thank you, and I'm honoured to be their minister.

Mr. Chairman, our spending over the next few years reflects our continued commitment to an Alberta where children and youth are valued, nurtured, and loved, an Alberta where children and youth will reach their full potential through enduring relationships, healthy families, and safe communities.

The 2005-06 budget for Children's Services is $798.6 million, up $32 million from last year. The budget invests $82.8 million towards caring for children with disabilities, $28.8 million towards the prevention of family violence, $14.7 million towards resources that support parents in giving their children a healthy start in life, and $6.6 million towards stopping the sexual exploitation of children.

In 2005-06 regional CFSAs will receive $592 million to help children reach their full potential. This includes grant funding of $588.6 million from Children's Services and $3.4 million of other revenue. This is $18 million more than last year to deliver quality services for children, youth, and families across Alberta. This includes increases to continue implementing the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act and the Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act. This CFSA funding is 74 per cent of the total ministry budget.

The cross-ministry strategy for the prevention of family violence and bullying has committed more than $35 million over three years to implement its action plan. We will develop a new provincial response to family violence and bullying with improved protection and preventive services in our communities for children and their families who are impacted by family violence and bullying. We will do this with sustained and secure funding to women's shelters and for prevention activities. Our total commitment to prevent family violence in 2005-06 is $28.8 million.

In October, Mr. Chairman, Alberta will host the 2005 World Conference on Prevention of Family Violence. At this conference we will learn from the latest programming and research on family violence prevention across this world and share the progress being made in Alberta.

Our budget does not include any dollars for new or expanded services related to the federal initiative on child care. We are participating in negotiations with the federal government, other provinces, and the territories on a new child care agreement. Should the federal budget pass, we anticipate receiving our share of new federal funding for this initiative very soon. This year that amount will be $70 million.

A $3 million increase to the youth in transition program will give youths who are or have been in government care a helping hand with education and training. Family and community support services will receive a $2 million increase this year to address population growth and cost-of-living increases. The government remains committed to the children and youth in this province. By 2007-08 funding will reach $851.3 million, a three-year increase of $84.7 million.

Over the next three years funding is allocated to three key areas under the core business of promoting the development and well-being of children, youth, and families. Approximately $190.2 million of the total budget will be used for services that focus on young children. This includes family support for children with disabilities, early intervention, and child care. The ministry will continue to operationalize the new Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act with resources to help families meet the needs and promote the capabilities of children and youth with disabilities, helping them to reach their potential.

Spending to prevent family violence and bullying will increase to $33 million by 2007-08. With planned spending of approximately $32 million to 2007-08, the ministry will continue to develop community-based parent link centres and other programs to assist parents in giving children a healthy start.

Funding for the family and community support services program will increase by $5.4 million to approximately $69 million by '07-08. Through this program we'll support families so that vulnerable children are kept from entering the child intervention system. Under the core business of keeping children, youth, and families safe and protected, 56 per cent of the total ministry budget will be spent on child intervention services, protecting children from sexual exploitation, foster parents, maintenance rate increases, and contracted agencies' salary costs.

The ministry will continue to implement the new Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. We will act on the recommendations to the foster care review by focusing on the training needs of foster parents, kinship care providers, adoptive parents, and those seeking private guardianship. In partnership with First Nation communities we'll explore ways to achieve permanency for aboriginal children and youth.

The ministry will redesign the protecting children from sexual exploitation program to focus on prevention, awareness, and treatment services. We will increase educational activities for children and youth at risk of sexual exploitation through prostitution, Internet luring, and child pornography. In fact, on May 18 at 9 p.m. we will be presenting a TV broadcast on Access TV to educate parents on safe Internet practices for their children.

We will further develop the role of the Child and Youth Advocate to ensure that children in the system are heard and their rights are protected.

Finally, under the core business of promoting healthy communities for children, youth, and families, we will provide $12.7 million for community-based activities and initiatives for children, youth, and families. Total planned spending will reach $38 million in '07-08. We will provide $975,000 per year to attract greater private support of Alberta's Promise, and the Alberta Centre for Child, Family & Community Research will receive $2 million per year to support applied research on issues affecting children and families.

The ministry faces significant opportunities and challenges that we consider when developing initiatives and strategies. For instance, the aboriginal population in Alberta is growing quickly, and the aboriginal population is much younger than the general population. Aboriginals have a high representation in the ministry's child intervention caseload, and aboriginal children at risk are more likely to be placed in out-of-home care than nonaboriginal children. However, there are opportunities for us to partner with First Nation and Métis settlements and organizations to provide effective child intervention services.

Trends in family violence are demanding more space in women's shelters. That's why we've made recent investment towards services and support for victims of family violence. We will be providing stable funding to 489 women's shelter beds. We will expand community-based prevention and outreach programs. We are developing safe visitation and access sites, and we are launching a public awareness and education campaign for bullying prevention and intervention strategies.

We also have significant opportunities to develop strategies to reduce the potential for youth to be at risk. This includes, Mr. Chairman, providing support to children at risk of sexual exploitation and helping young people successfully become independent through things like the advancing futures bursary program.

I'd now like to ask the MLA for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, who is chair of the Youth Secretariat, and then the MLA for Calgary-Hays, who is chair of the Social Care Facilities Review Committee, to please update what we are doing. After they speak, Mr. Chairman, I will be happy to answer any questions you may have.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the minister is ceding part of her time for the chairman of the Youth Secretariat. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and thank you, Minister. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and speak on the roles and the importance of the Youth Secretariat. I want to emphasize – and we have youth in our Assembly today – that youth are our future. I know it's a cliché, but I want very much to re-emphasize that youth are our future, and it is very important to know and to realize how knowledgeable, how intelligent, how resourceful and resilient youth are. They are very much the assistants to the decisions that we make.

The Youth Secretariat works with stakeholders, but I want to emphasize that the main stakeholder for the Youth Secretariat is the youth. Youth in our province, in our country today are very much challenged and, I would say, at times enticed by different attractions, by different opportunities, and not all of them are positive. But I will say that it is the youth in this province that are also part of the solution, part of the help, and part of the willingness to transfer and to transform some of the direction that is taking place. They are the experts, and we need to listen. They are and have the solution. They need some support and resources as long as we give them some opportunity.

The Youth Secretariat's role is to talk with the youth to involve them in the decision-making and to get their input in the decision-making that affects them. Earlier this month we had a meeting, and we heard from a number of youth. Their presentation had to do with the drug issue dialogue. These are youth that were addicts. These are youth that were involved in the high use of drugs. They had been clean for a number of years, and they were there to help with the solutions. In May at the Children's Forum we heard from youth again – the forum dealt with bullying and violence – and their aspect and their presentation. Youth will also have another opportunity to get involved during a feedback weekend this summer.

I want to stress to you again the importance of decision-making and the importance that the youth bring to us and that we need to listen. Today's age is going very quickly, and when we as legislators now maybe look at 20 years ago, it's a different situation, and it's a different direction. It's very important that we have the involvement of youth who are experiencing the challenges of today.

When we talk about speaking to youth, yes, I very much emphasize the importance of speaking to them, of involving them on what affects them, but most of all, we need to listen. We need to listen to what they have to say, and we as legislators are the vehicle to bring forward their ideas into something that is going to be fruitful. I want to make sure that the Youth Secretariat and ourselves as legislators are making the right decisions for youth that will help Alberta grow and help the youth grow with it.

I would also like to say that through the Youth Secretariat we will continue the Youth Advisory Panel. That is a forum where we have youth that come from all over the province and provide insight into what they feel some of the issues are. We can talk about crystal meth. We can talk about all sorts of different issues, but the Youth Advisory Panel is an opportunity again for youth from the province to come collectively and provide us their experiences, their challenges, and for us to take that message and bring it to the legislators and bring it to a direction that is going to be positive not only for them but for this province.

Again, thank you very much, Madam Minister, for giving me the opportunity, and thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the minister is also ceding the balance of the time to the chair of the Social Care Facilities Review Committee.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you, Minister. Just before I get to the Social Care Facilities Review Committee, I'll just give you my background. I was on the Social Care Facilities Review Committee for two years, and I was last involved until April 2004, so approximately two years.

There are approximately 4,000 facilities under the jurisdiction of the Social Care Facilities Review Committee. These include day cares, nursery schools, out-of-school care facilities, foster homes, child and youth social care facilities, and women's emergency shelters. As the eyes and ears of the hon. Minister of Children's Services, we review those social care facilities and investigate any complaints against them. Our committee conducts 225 reviews each year. A review involves meeting with the service recipients, their families and guardians, and staff. We hear about the services they provided and whether or not the clients were satisfied. This year our members will visit facilities in four of the nine CFSA regions, and those are Calgary and area, central Alberta, east-central Alberta, and Edmonton and area.

If I didn't indicate, I'm now the chair of that Social Care Facilities Review Committee. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As I struggled to deal with the wealth of data in these estimates, I found myself wishing there was contour and relief to the landscape to help bring some sense to the statistics. As I pondered this problem and shared it with colleagues, it suddenly dawned that this was the dilemma: how does one discover and deal with the reality of human lives in a statistical context?

I'm reminded of a parallel predicament faced by the federal government years ago in reporting unemployment statistics. Its measuring tool was the number of EI claims. They were called UI then. At any one moment they would give the statistics for UI. It was assumed that once an unemployment insurance file was closed, that person was no longer unemployed. In reality, Mr. Chairman, it simply meant that the person was no longer drawing UI. Perhaps their period of benefits had run out. Perhaps they had run afoul of one or more rules of the program, failing to fill out their cards properly or to report sufficient progress in trying to find a job. Perhaps they had become discouraged and simply stopped trying.

In any case, Mr. Chairman, we would never know because those persons – for that is what they are and not simply statistics – had fallen off the radar screen of the federal government's reporting system. We assumed that they were no longer unemployed, but we had no right to that assumption. Some other means of measurement was needed than participation in a single program if we were to have the truth.

One of the most pressing needs of our time is for a qualitative perspective. We have become very good at statistics, so good that we often ignore issues that do not lend themselves to the mode of measurement. In the case of children's and other social services we have adopted the mode of the business plan. What does that mean? Let us listen to the word as it was once spoken and as it is still spelled, with an "i" or a "y" in the middle: business or busyness, or activity.

A business plan deals only with the level of activity according to some predetermined indicators such as files opening, closing, or transferred, expenditures in a particular program and in a certain column. A business plan does not tell us about children's lives, the quality of those lives, their hopes, dreams, and disappointments. For these we must look deeper than sheer statistics. The problem, Mr. Chairman, is not in the money we spend but in our minds, with which we see and make sense of the issues and try to figure out the figures.

Yet even in limited statistical terms there is an indication that the business plan approach is missing something. That clue is the number and size of supplementary estimates. I do not begrudge these figures, Mr. Chairman. I doubt if any feeling person does. They reflect a reality of children's lives, a reality we need to know more about. The fact that they show up as supplementaries is a sign that our planning is missing something.

As I considered the budget for Children's Services, I learned about the changes as a result of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. Under the Child Welfare Act and the previous model a file could be opened under CWA as assessment for 30 days, and this could be extended for a further 30 days if needed before formal voluntary or involuntary services. This no longer occurs. I'm not sure of the process, but I believe files are now opened under the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act under enhancement or intervention. If under enhancement, there is initial assessment or extended assessment and/or a family enhancement agreement, which I think is similar to the old support agreement.

Under the new act children who need secure services can be opened under a family enhancement agreement if parents consent to secure services. Prior to the new act a TGO, temporary guardianship order, was needed for secure services. Changes in the act and different terms make comparisons from year to year very difficult. It's essential that the statistics used are clear in the scope they cover and that consistent definitions are used.

I have some questions to help me understand what the numbers in the business plan for 2004-2007 mean. Perhaps the minister can try to answer some of these when I finish. There may be far too many here for you to answer tonight, I understand. Are the above statuses – initial assessment, extended assessment, secure services – included in the enhancement services statistics, the 85 per cent? If they did include enhancement, initial assessment, and extended assessment and secure services with parental consent, then the baseline statistics need to include the previous 30-day assessments, support agreements, and any secure services with guardian's consent.

Also, do enhancement statistics include or exclude families who were open more than once under enhancement? Are there any statistics for families that come to the attention of Children's Services after enhancement files are closed or while files are still open? What is in place to determine efficacy of the Alberta response model? Are you doing any preimposed Alberta response model program evaluations?

Enhancement agreement with youth should include youth under care. Custody agreement with child was the term used previously. Are those agreements included in the enhancement statistics?

I would like to present some general questions before I go into specifics about the budget. I realize that some of these questions may require more thought, and perhaps I can get them in writing later, but I present them now at least as food for thought. I am concerned about the uncertainty of revenue for youth shelters. At present they do not qualify under FCSS because they are not preventative. Contracting and grant funding are not enough. Are there plans to change this so there will be predictable, sustainable, and stable funding to youth shelters?

Another grave concern of mine is that foster parents are not paid enough, and we need assessments that are thorough to help place children with families where they will fit best. Assessments need to be up front to make decisions about appropriate placement services and work with schools. Appropriate placements can be preventative and can enhance the opportunity to meet the goals of Children's Services. Are there any plans to help establish more funding for foster parents and plans for a placement model that will serve the best interests of all children?

Children's Services, schools, Justice, and AADAC need to work in partnership to do what is best for families and children. As other areas are cut back and if the cutbacks involve families, Children's Services generally has to pick up the slack because in the end it is this department that is responsible for the safety and security of children. We hear from parents who are caught in the system between the education department, health, Children's Services, and local school boards. Is the cross-ministry initiative working? Is there a one-stop place for a person to go so that this bouncing from ministry to ministry can stop and parents can get the services that we all know these youngsters deserve?

I quote the minister from 2004-2005: "Alberta has a Children's Services ministry that strives to nurture, cherish, provide homes for children in need and provide opportunities for families to feel supported no matter what their circumstances." This is a tremendous mandate and an honourable one. It causes me to wonder about the need for supplementary budgets. Why are we underfunding in the regular budgets? The supplemental budget for foster parents maintenance was $4 million. I wonder if this is even enough. Why was it not included in the original budget? What do we have to do to avoid the need for supplemental budgets?

Another supplemental item was for the $2.5 million needed to implement the family violence and bullying incentive grants. I believe that this is a very worthwhile project and wonder again why this extra need was not forecast with the original budget.

I have to ask the same about the $3.6 million added for the implementation of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. I realize that some of this went to the development of transitional plans for children and the costs for providing intervention services, including the retraining of front-line delivery staff. Could this have not been predicted earlier?

I know that this is often an unpredictable business, such as the extra dollars needed for the networking of the parent link centres, but I believe we should be working towards a goal of eliminating the need for supplemental budgets so that we get a truer picture of needs when the original budget is presented. Predictable funding is essential for the health of any organization.

I have a serious concern about the decrease in the number of subsidy applications for child care. I have heard from parents who lost benefits because of criteria changes, parents who still need help but no longer qualify. I'll quote from one of the letters.

Back in August of last year, they arbitrarily changed the rules so that subsidy would be based on gross income, not net income. This sounds ok at the outset, however, for single parents who are in positions like myself (lower paid secretaries . . .) it was devastating. I have no control over mandatory deductions the government takes from my pay, and in the past, the daycare subsidy office would take this into account when determining my subsidy. They no longer do this. For example, my gross salary is $3,092 a month, however, I only take home a net salary of $2,001 a month. After rent, daycare, food, utilities, clothing, etc, there is literally nothing left. To lose my subsidy has left me in a precarious position . . . There are a lot of parents who did not "choose" to leave the subsidy system, and a lot of us who were hoping and praying that this federal program would come through [quickly].

How can we be certain that we are really providing choice in these cases?

I'm looking now at child care and early childhood development. The increase to child care money is less than $1 million over the previous year's budget. There have been many issues with quality of care in Alberta, specifically in daycares and family day home facilities. I'm referring to page 64 of the government and lottery estimates.

In a press release on April 21 we learned that the province is seeking public input on child care programs.

Alberta's negotiations with the federal government on a national child care program have gone well from our perspective, and we're ready to go forward once we have finalized key details relating to an agreement . . . To be prepared, we want to hear what's important to families in terms of caring for children, whether parents choose to go to work, go to school or stay at home. We're also interested in knowing what's working well now and what improvements are needed in the future.

This is encouraging news, and I commend the decision to listen to Albertans. However, I do have some concerns about this consultation process on child care. If there's no provision for representative balanced responses – that is, a proper sample – this can become an exercise in propaganda. I hope that this is not the case and that we will have integrity as we consider what needs to be changed.

Alberta's regulations for infant care require fewer staff than some provinces, and enforcement of compliance with regulations is problematic. Accreditation is a step in the right direction, but our daycare centres are underfunded. Staff are often poorly trained, and there is no incentive for training as the pay is so low.

How much money is this survey on child care announced on April 21 costing this ministry? What money is going to inspect daycare facilities and family day homes? We had the concerns this year about children being left behind here in Edmonton. How much of the money going into child care will raise wages of daycare workers? I believe we must start an effort to promote work in daycares. This means that we must provide adequate pay and subsidized training to improve care and provide incentives to attract people and to keep them in this very important role. What are the plans for monitoring unlicensed care providers? Government oversight is essential as a check.

Another quote from the survey:

The Alberta government is committed to helping children and families get the best possible start in life by supporting families and communities with comprehensive programs that ensure parents have choice and flexibility in their child care decisions.

Would you please explain what you mean by choice? What do you see included as options for parents? With so few announced dollars will there be any change to the availability of child care subsidies to parents? What are the next steps in working with the federal government to get some of the $5 billion announced in the national daycare plan?

Another area of concern, as I mentioned earlier, is related to youth shelters. Youth shelters have no source of stable funding other than grants they get from year to year, and that is not enough. The province has announced a review into this, but why do we have to wait for a review when all the agencies have been asking for the same thing that horse racing gets, which is steady, sustainable funding from year to year? Why is there a set amount for women's shelters, on page 62, government and lottery fund estimates, section 3.3.1, but not a set amount for youth shelters?

I quote from the minister's comments in Hansard for the 2004-2005 budget.

My understanding is that the funding is very piecemeal and their administrators end up spending a lot of time trying to figure out which different grant program to apply to this year to try and get them up to the level of funding they need to operate.

Does this government have a plan for youth shelters and how they are funded?

We know the welfare of children is strongly linked to their nonoffending parent's safety and emotional well-being. Thus, there must be attention paid to secure shelters for women who are abused. I know of an instance where an investigator had to return a woman who was pregnant and had been beaten by her common-law and then given crack back to the home where this man still lived. The woman believed she was not safe anywhere because this man would find her, as he had on previous occasions when she'd been placed in a shelter. What do we need to do to ensure safety and security for women such as these and their families?

I reviewed the Alberta shelter statistics from 2002, information from the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters released by the office for the prevention of family violence. In 2002 woman sheltered, 5,194; children sheltered, 5,546; women turned away, 8,443; children turned away, 9,017. This is a tragedy. What part of the Children's Services budget addresses this tremendous need?

As I look at child intervention services, there is a $20 million increase over the previous year's budget amount assigned to child intervention services, but this is only a $2 million increase over last year's forecast. Page 64 of the budget. The regions have required supplementary money for funding to perform these tasks. Can we get a breakdown of what programs the $401 million will be funding? By programs I mean how much goes to agencies, to government social workers, to directors of child welfare, and the courts process? How much is spent on hiring teams to investigate the programs in agencies? Goal 3.3 on page 153 of the ministry's business plan clearly states that permanency planning for kids in care is an important goal of this ministry. What programs are going to be introduced to ensure that the workers and agencies that care for these children are going to have the stable funding required to provide that environment?

I believe this is a good-news budget, but there is much more to be done. It is good that money is going to more beds and shelters for youth. We have been at a crisis level for so long, and caseworkers have been overloaded and without adequate supports. The current minister and deputy minister are demonstrating a better understanding of and perhaps closer connections with the department. Now that we are investing more money, there must be judicious planning.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Many, many questions coming from the opposition and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. I was trying to keep up with her, but as she said, she had a lot of questions. We will as in the past be pleased to answer her questions by letter, but I'm going to try and start with some of them.

She started off talking about the statistics and stats. I can tell her that under the new legislation of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act one of the goals is to enhance the quality assurance system to improve the quality, the consistency, and the accountability of child protection across this province. I can also tell her, in my short tenure as minister, about the incredible information that's contained in the case files that we receive on my desk on a daily basis.

While I don't disagree with her on follow-throughs, I can give her some personal history of some things that I found when I was dealing with the protection of children involved in prostitution. I was very eager, wanting to find out what was happening after we apprehended children, and was particularly involved in one very, very sad case where we brought a child back from Vancouver and met her at the airport with her mom and dad. The little girl got off the airplane in her working clothes, street clothes. We got her in there, got her into one of our protective safe houses, and from there she entered drug and alcohol treatment in Calgary by the name of AARC.

I went to her graduation after she graduated from that particular program and with an enquiring mind decided at one time that, gee, I wanted to find out how this young child was doing. I guess maybe because of my personal involvement and because sometimes your heart leads before your brain, I phoned the parents. I wanted to know how their daughter was doing. He politely said to me: "Heather, we're moving on. We've gone through a very, very difficult period in our life. She claims she's sober, and we're moving on as a family and closing that part."

So, you know, when we have some people entering our system – and we have had some horrific cases but have had a lot of very, very successful cases – to follow through when they're moving on with their lives and they want to get off the paths where they've been receiving support services from the department, we appreciate that. But we do know when we've opened cases, when we've re-opened cases: all documented very, very well. Some of the money that we've asked for in our budget is for technology, just trying to incorporate all of the paper copy into the new system of the computerized world so that we can I guess make it easier for the people who work out in the province, trying to do these stats and keep up with these families that sometimes tend to move around.

I can assure her, though, that we do keep incredible stats. I can tell you how many times we've had interventions, how many times we've dealt with a particular child. In my mind very, very good stats, hon. member.

You touched on youth shelters a couple of times, and you also toward the end of your comments talked about the fact that, yes, they're being reviewed. You know, you asked me this particular question in question period about a youth emergency shelter. To this day, to this hour, at a quarter to 9 I have not heard from them. I have not had a phone call from them. I indicated to you when I answered that particular question that I'd be pleased to sit down and talk with you. I'd be pleased to sit down with the shelter. I have not heard from any of the shelters in this province except for one in Grande Prairie on youth shelters.

Some Hon. Members: That's the one.

Mrs. Forsyth: Different one? Same one? Sorry.

Anyhow, if you're talking about the youth shelter in Edmonton, I can tell you that I haven't heard from them, but I have heard from a shelter in Grande Prairie, and we're working with them on that.

The foster parents, yes, we're working with them on increasing their funding and have been working very closely with the Alberta Foster Parent Association and the president, Norm Brownell. They do a remarkable job in this province, and we're very, very appreciative of all the work they do.

You talked and asked about the cross-government ministry. We've had some very, very successful cross-government ministries. I'm very proud of what this government is doing. I think that when you were talking, you indicated about Health talking to AADAC and AADAC talking to Justice or the Solicitor General or even Children's Services. I think what you saw recently with Bill 201 and the private member's bill and the government getting treatment centres shows that we've had some incredibly successful cross-government ministries. I can allude to the family violence initiative and the round-tables and the cross-government ministry and the buy-in from all the different departments on that.

You asked about supplementary estimates and why. You know, I don't have a problem when I'm dealing with supplementary estimates and a particular region comes to me on the child authorities and says: you know, we don't have enough money; we need to get some more money. If we have to go back because they've got a huge, increased caseload in regard to the population that they're serving, which is our children or families in this province, then it's difficult to try and judge.

You spent a lot of time talking about child care and about the daycares and the funding. I have to tell you that I'm very, very proud of what this province has done. It has been watched across Canada in regard to the daycares that we have in place, the accreditation program that we have in place. In fact, I had the federal minister here several months ago to look at our accreditation program, went out and talked to the people who are setting up and establishing the standards and strengthening the best practices within the accreditation program.

We have a huge percentage of success in the '90s for daycares coming to us to talk about the accreditation program. It's a program that is the first in Canada. It's going to address the issues that you asked about. That's staff recruitment and the retention of the child care sector. I'd be pleased to show you that, let you meet some of the people that are working on the accreditation program. It even surprised the people in the accreditation program. We had to hire extra staff because of the overwhelming response from the daycares in this province signing up to be accredited daycares.

You also talked about where we are in the negotiations with the national daycare program. I can tell you that we're cautiously optimistic. I can tell you that I had a verbal agreement on all of the issues that Alberta wanted addressed from the federal/provincial/territorial meeting in January from the federal minister. I have sent him two letters since then asking him for confirmation. I would encourage you to write him. Tell him that you would appreciate him responding to the letters that Alberta has sent.

We have been very pleased with the progress that we're making, and we'll continue trying to sign the agreement. As I explained, we had a verbal commitment from the federal minister a few weeks ago. We have sent two letters since then asking him for written confirmation. My understanding from talking to Minister Dryden is that at that period in time there was some negotiating going on with the Northwest Territories and Prince Edward Island on base funding, plus around his own cabinet table about the French language issue. So we're waiting. No deal has been signed yet, but we've placed a call to him, and hopefully we'll move forward on that: $70 million for sure to Alberta.

When you talked about the online survey – and I stand to be corrected, but I will tell you that I think it was approximately $2,000. For us it was important even though I have received hundreds and hundreds of letters in regard to this issue about what parents see as choice. They have told me over and over again that they want a choice of daycare system whether it's for-profit, whether it's nonprofit, or whether it's kinder-care.

An incredible amount of response in regard to stay-home taxes. I can tell you that when I brought that up to the federal minister, he said at that particular time that that wasn't part of the negotiations. That was not on the table. But parents have continually told us, even when I appeared on Rutherford today, that they want the choice to be able to choose what's in the best interest of their children.

I was somewhat dismayed at the very end of your conversation when you talked about the fact that you know of a particular case where a woman was returned to her home. I can only say to you that when you come across incidents like that, I beg of you, for the woman that you're referring to, to call our office. It's important that we're aware of this. It's important that we know. We will do everything in our power to help if there is a situation.

I am told over and over again that no woman who is in a crisis situation is turned away from a shelter. If there's not room in the shelter, then we make other accommodations, whether we put them into a motel, into a secure environment, but if they're in a crisis situation, hon. member, my understanding from talking to the shelters is that they're never turned away. If they're thinking about leaving, then there are other things that they'll do. They'll talk to them. They'll talk about other ways that they can deal with that particular issue. If they're running and they're accessing a shelter, then they're never turned away. We will put them into a motel or something.

I know I haven't answered all your questions, and I apologize for that. We've got another hour and 10 minutes, and I know other members will probably want to ask questions, so I'd be pleased to try and get all of your questions answered.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you very much. I know that there's a lot of information that we're dealing with here. I know that we've got a very good system, but I don't think that we should ever stop trying to stretch beyond our own shadows. We can do better.

The points about accreditation are good. I'm glad to hear about the desire of many agencies to be accredited. I'm still concerned about the compliance with regulations and so forth.

The last part about the woman who was returned to the home that wasn't safe: the concern there was not that there weren't spaces but that there wasn't safety. How do we protect these people? I'm not expecting you to answer that right now, but the problem is bigger than just having the space available.

As I do not want to continue talking for a long time, and I've got other members who want to talk, I do want to just – I think there was one point you made if I can just look back here for a minute. I guess what I'd like to do is request that we get any written responses before we vote on the budget. Is that possible? Can you do that?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, the discussion should go through the chair.

Mrs. Mather: I'm sorry. Okay. Thank you.

Can we get the written responses before we need to vote on the budget, Mr. Chairman?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, the matter is before the committee, and the committee at the end of the day will vote, and the committee can decide whether they want to vote or not vote or reject or accept. The chair will follow the instruction of the committee.

Mrs. Mather: I'm just asking, Mr. Chairman, if we can get written responses as soon as possible so that when we vote on the entire budget, we've got that information.

The Deputy Chair: The chair cannot assure that. I don't know if the minister wants to make a remark to that effect.

Mrs. Forsyth: My understanding, Mr. Chairman – and I'm at the will of the table, obviously – from my past experience in this Legislature is that we have a call for the vote on the budget at 10 o'clock. If it's the will of the people around here, they'll ask for a call for the vote, and if the vote passes, then it does. If it doesn't, then obviously – I will give my commitment to the member that we will respond, as we have in the past, to the questions that she asks by writing, but I can't possibly within the next hour.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, did you want to speak on this matter?

Mr. Taylor: Yes, Mr. Chairman, on behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods. I don't believe that she is asking for written answers within the next 63 minutes; rather, she is asking if we can have the answers to her question in writing before we go to appropriations for the budget itself. That would be the request that she has put on the table.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, just for the clarification of every member in the Assembly, at this committee stage anybody can participate in asking as many questions as they choose. I am not so sure if there is an obligation on the minister to provide answers to every single question, but by and large I believe most ministers make an effort to respond either directly on the floor or by follow-through with a written response.

Does the Minister for Children's Services want to make any comments about this request?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Chairman, if I may. We will endeavour to provide as much as we can as far as written answers to all of the questions the hon. member has. She knows from past experience that when we've debated other things on this floor, we have gotten back to both her and the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona in writing.

There is an incredible amount of questions coming from the opposition at this particular time, and I've just dealt with one member. I have an incredibly busy ministry, but I will do whatever I can to answer as many questions as I can before the budget. Some of the questions that the particular member is asking are even difficult questions for me to answer; for example, when she talks about the stats and the outcomes, how she started at the beginning. So some of these things may not be physically able to be answered. The questions that she's asked that went point-blank to the budget about the supplementary estimates, when she's asked about the, you know, increases or decreases in the budget, we will do whatever we can to answer.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I will now recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and make a few observations on the budget for the Ministry of Children's Services. This is, in my view, one of the most important ministries. The ministry deals with children, families, and I know that the minister has very strong commitments to strengthening our families, supporting them, and providing services to our children that they need.

I am assuming that the minister knows that child care services in Canada, particularly daycare services for Canadian children, don't rate very high among the OECD countries. With the exception of Quebec the child care services, particularly the daycare services for children, are judged by OECD experts to be seriously deficient. Alberta falls in that category of provinces that provide patchwork services that are not properly funded, services that are not available to families that will want to use them, take advantage of them.

There was a hope over the last six months or so that the provincial governments and the federal government will get together, and with the new commitments that the federal government was making with respect to children's services, daycare services in particular, provinces will receive new funds which they would then use in co-operation with each other to provide high-quality daycare services, quality that would be measured with reference to some sort of national standards, not federal – I must clarify this – and the services would be provided in daycare centres that are primarily there to provide quality services and not there to operate in order, primarily, to maximize their returns on their investment. In other words, these services would be provided in nonprofit centres that will be funded adequately by the two levels of government, federal and provincial.

Secondly, these services would be universally available. They will not be denied to families which don't make the cut, as it were, that the government of Alberta's practice currently is, to provide subsidy to parents, not to daycares anyway, whose incomes fall below a certain level. That's not universality. Children in this province and children in Canada deserve an opportunity to take advantage of child care services that are universally available, and these services should be paid through taxes.

The federal government, it seems, was willing to go ahead and provide some funds, and according to my numbers Alberta would have received as much as a hundred million dollars from this federal budget if that budget were to pass and if the province were to move ahead and co-operate with other levels of government and with other provinces on agreeing to establish some national standards – the provinces together would establish those standards – and to provide these services, properly accredited, appropriately staffed with qualified staff who are adequately paid to provide quality services for our children.

Any expert that you talk to who has done work on child care or on early childhood development tells you that any money spent on quality child care and early childhood development and education is a return manyfold later on. So it's an investment worth making. If we were to look at it purely from the economic returns point of view – and I'm sure that all of us agree that there's more to it than just economic returns when you think about children. Children's welfare is far more important than merely the economic returns. Even in terms of the narrow criteria of economic returns money spent on early child care is money well invested, yet I find that there are rumblings around that the Alberta government may in fact be having some second thoughts on co-operating with other provincial governments and working with the federal government to use the opportunity to work together, to work collaboratively, to get extra resources to improve the child care services in this province.

Mr. Chairman, if you look at the past five provincial budgets for child care, you see that the Alberta funding for child care has not even kept pace with inflation and with population growth. We spent less than one-quarter of 1 per cent of government revenues annually on child care and only about $3.22 per capita of our personal income tax and $1.63 per person of our corporate income tax on children's services in this province.

It certainly raises some questions about the priorities that this government has and how high the early development and education of children figure in that list of priorities of this government. Looking at the record of funding for these services, it seems to me that it enjoys a very, very low priority on the government's list of priorities, yet I think it is here in this group of our population, the young children, our children who are our future of tomorrow – they are the ones in whose future we should be investing and investing far more adequately than has been the case.

I have some concerns with the politics on child care that, according to the statements that I've been reading in the press, statements coming from the federal Conservative Party, suggest that the provincial government of Alberta is playing along with the federal Conservative Party to delay signing on to the national daycare program. I have a quote here, Mr. Chairman: "It looks to us like the Klein government is going to play along with the federal conservative party and delay signing on to the national child care program while they consult Albertans." Mr. Harper, the leader of the federal Conservative Party, in a speech to the Cambridge, Ontario, Chamber of Commerce earlier this week said, "The Conservatives don't support a national child care system that will drive taxes up so high that young couples won't be able to afford to have children."

Now, I want to ask the minister if the minister supports Mr. Harper's observation that spending money and investing in our children somehow will run us bankrupt, run families bankrupt, and in fact will lead to such high taxes that families will be dissuaded from having children. This is a position, certainly, that the federal Conservative leader has taken, and I wonder if the minister wants to comment on this.

In fact, I would hope that she would reject the position taken by the federal Conservative leader and urge him to help the federal government at least pass the budget, which makes a commitment towards our children which is quite substantial. The province of Alberta will benefit to the tune of a hundred million dollars this year if that budget were to pass. The government of Alberta spends about $70 million on children's services, on child care in particular, and imagine with another hundred million dollars added to it how many more resources there would be at our disposal if we were to see that budget pass. So I would urge the minister to take an initiative on that and tell this House that she is going to write to the leaders of all the federal parties and urge them to pass this federal budget, which, in my view, makes some very important and promising commitments to provide the daycare services that children in Canada and Alberta so badly need.

Mr. Chairman, I have another question here, but let me go back and conclude my observations on the federal undertaking or promise in the budget that it's made to provide new funds to provincial and territorial governments were all of them to agree on some sort of national program on child care. The Children's Services budget, that we're discussing, does not include any provision for new or expanded services related to the new federal initiative on child care. What's the minister's position? If tomorrow the federal budget were to pass, where are the provisions made in the budget for the minister to be able to set forth a new set of programs or policies that will help improve the quality of child care services and the availability of quality child care services to parents in this province?

Another question that I have here for the minister to address, Mr. Chairman. The minister probably is aware of the KPMG study that did a sort of forensic accounting study of the child care services in the province, daycare services, facilities in 2002. It was entitled, I think, Supporting Day Care Professionals: Issues and Options. That study found that a subsidy for low-income Albertans paid for about one-quarter of its own costs directly by offsetting welfare costs, yet the maximum daycare subsidy available for low-income Albertans is $475 for youngsters ages zero to 18 months, the beginning of life to 18 months, and $380 for children 19 months and older. Given that daycare can cost up to $880 a month, this subsidy is not nearly enough. If there were greater supports available to low-income Albertans, the benefits could be tremendous. Also, I think the vacant child care places – and there are thousands in the province – would be filled. I know that one of the answers that I've got from the minister's department as to why it's not investing more in increasing the number of spaces available for daycare in this province came in the form saying: well, we already have lots of vacancies; Albertans are not using the spaces that are available.

We've got to get to the bottom of this statement that was made, Mr. Chairman, to see why it is that daycare spaces that are available in the province are not being used, not being filled when in fact we know that 70 to 75 per cent of parents with very young children are participating in the labour force, and they have children that need care when they themselves are at work, and 70 to 75 per cent of the parents who are working want to have their children in daycares which are appropriately funded, appropriately staffed, are safe places, and where children not only can be babysat but can in fact learn and engage in early childhood development programs, daycares that are not only properly funded but are staffed with people who are appropriately educated and trained.

So why is it, then, that these spaces in the thousands, I think, go unused? I think the answer, Mr. Chairman, is very clear to me, and the minister may have some information on it that she would like to advise me of. It is that the government's policy of funding low-income parents only leaves lots of parents and families, hard-working families, in a situation where they don't qualify to receive the subsidy that they need in order for them to be able to afford to put their children in child care centres or daycare centres.

Now, the minister may have information that contradicts the information that I am aware of, and if so, I am sure she would like to share that information with the House and with me. So I'll sit down, let her answer two or three questions that were raised, and then I'll come back to ask some more.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and again try and answer some questions from the member of the opposition. He has spent a fair amount of time talking about the daycares, and I had thought or hoped I'd addressed some of those issues to the member previously, but I will endeavour to try and address some of his questions.

He started off talking about daycares not rating very high except in Quebec. I would like to let the hon. member know that this year in the budget we have worked very, very hard to deal with programs and to focus on the design and the implementation of daycare centre accreditation systems to achieve what we consider three goals. One is to raise the standard of care in the province and improve the best practices in daycare centres and family day homes. The second one is to support families through the provision and identification of higher quality care. The third is supporting child care programs and working towards achieving accreditation standards of high quality.

I want to emphasize to the hon. member again that this is a first in Canada. It's been very, very successful. We had the federal minister here – I believe it was in January – to look at the accreditation. He went and visited with some of our accreditation people and was very, very interested in what we were doing. The Alberta child care accreditation program establishes standards of quality and strengthens best practices in early learning and child care programs across Alberta. The accreditation will support families through the identification and provision of higher quality services.

Daycare centres that attain preaccreditation status will be awarded quality improvement funds, of which a minimum of 80 per cent must be directed to child care staff certification. The remaining funds must be directed towards ongoing quality improvement in order to ensure that child care staff are receiving the benefit of the quality improvement incentives. The recipients will be required to submit audited financial statements.

The other question that was asked was on the compliance to daycare regulations. I'd like the hon. member to know that under section 8 of the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act there is a section called Order after Inspection, which is issued under that particular section, and it's issued for serious noncompliance and specifies what the centre must do and the timelines for compliance. Other enforcement actions include notice of deficiency, notice of suspension or cancellation, and stop orders. If we think back, we can see where we closed a daycare in Edmonton because of some serious issues that that particular daycare was faced with and complaints that we had received, that we investigated and dealt with in what I think was a very, very quick manner.

He talked about the national child care. I would like to first of all tell the hon. member that it's not a hundred million; it's $70 million. Those are the numbers that we are getting from the federal government. So while at one time maybe a hundred million might have been under discussion, we have heard that it's $70 million from the federal government. It's a lot of money, and it's something that Alberta has been negotiating in good faith right from day one with the federal minister, right from the time when I went to Victoria to the federal/provincial/territorial meeting.

It was important as the Alberta minister responsible for Children's Services that we bring forward what was important to Albertans, and that was that Albertans have choice. Any choice for them was whether it's for-profit or nonprofit, but they wanted choice. The accountability and reporting requirements that the federal government was pressing for were far too cumbersome a burden, and we believe that it was important for that – while we don't mind accountability and reporting, we told them in our three-year business plans and our annual business plans that we report to Albertans and received support for that.

We talked with the federal government at length about program inputs and outputs versus child-focused outcomes. The federal government was talking about space. What was important to the province was the outcome and what the child was getting once they came out of that particular daycare.

Lengthy, lengthy discussion at that particular meeting about funding issues at that time. There were no real dollar values. It was important for us to understand, before we could establish what was happening, the funding that it was getting, that it was confirmed within the budget how the funding was being delivered. There was talk about trust funds. There was talk about the CST, the Canada social transfer. It was important for us to know how we were able to draw.

The last thing was federal legislation. The federal government has made a number of statements regarding future federal legislation. I want to reiterate one more time that we wrote to the federal minister on March 31. We wrote to him again on April 15. I can tell this member that the negotiations that we have had with the federal government since January have always been very, very positive and in the best interests of the parents and the children in this province.

So I would encourage you, like I said to the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, to write to the federal minister, ask him to respond to Alberta. We are just asking him to confirm our conversation from prior to March 31 about agreement with what was important. I can tell you that in that conversation – and I'll repeat what I said to the member of the opposition – at that point in time he agreed verbally to all of the concerns that Alberta put forward and was at that time dealing with the Northwest Territories and Prince Edward Island on base funding. He was also dealing with his own federal cabinet in regard to the French language issue. To me, hon. member, this has never been about politics. It's about providing the best quality service so that Albertans in this province can have choice in the best interest of their children.

I'm not even going to comment on Harper's comments. I have not had a conversation with the member of the federal Conservatives. In regard to any of the comments that you have made, I can only say – and I can't speak for the federal Conservatives – that from what I've read, they're very, very supportive of the children in this country and concerned about many, many children's issues. But that's something that I haven't talked to them about previously.

Why the money is not in the budget is because we haven't got the budget. We will put that into the budget process once we have confirmation of the $70 million and once their federal budget is passed.

I think those are most of the questions you had on national childcare. Again, we will try and write to you on the other questions if I've missed any.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of issues that I wanted to raise with the minister around the budget debate for Children's Services, and just before this slips my mind, the question I did want to get on the record is: how exactly does the minister anticipate allocating the $70 million should it come the way of the province? We'd like to get the specific details on how that would be allocated, and if you could provide that in writing before we have to vote on the budget, please.

There are a couple of areas that I would like to talk about tonight. One is funding for sexual assault centres; funding and support for lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgendered youth, especially around bullying initiatives; a little bit on childcare, although I will note that my colleagues from Edmonton-Mill Woods and Edmonton-Strathcona have done a superlative job of covering that issue, so I won't speak very much about it. I'd also like to talk about insurance for the nonprofits and agencies that provide services in this sector and, finally, funding for women's shelters.

Starting with the funding for sexual assault centres. I often tell people that if I talk about something 500 times, it finally happens, and I'm beginning to see that payoff around the funding for the sexual assault centres. I think I'm approaching the 500 mark, and I can see it paying off here because, in fact, the province has released as part of its larger initiative that it is developing a comprehensive provincial strategy for the prevention of sexual violence, and specific to that is $500,000.

[Mr. Oberle in the chair]

The initiative is working "towards improving services available to survivors of sexual violence in Alberta" and facilitates the "sharing of information and resources to enhance and inform sexual violence program development and research." So I'm taking that right out of the news release of April 19, and the background of it came with that. Finally, thank you, and I'm glad to see that. I've been very frustrated with the cross-ministry committee that was in place because for a long time nothing happened, and that seems to finally be working there.

I will note a couple of things that the sector has already done. Specifically, they have done an environmental scan of what the current situation is. A few nights ago I was lobbying the Minister of Finance to take the leadership and start to move this issue forward, and she'd asked me for what was happening at the moment. In fact, I can and will provide her now with a copy of this scan that's been done by the sexual assault centres of Alberta. They have also provided me, and I'm sure could provide the minister if they haven't already, a listing of their funding and where their funding comes from. I'd just like to talk about that a little bit because this is actually the nitty-gritty details that I have spoken about more generally in the past.

When we look at funding for a number of the sexual assault centres in Alberta, this one, I think, is Edmonton but very interesting. What we have here is that 3.8, so less than 4, per cent of their total funding came from the Solicitor General, 4 per cent exactly of their total funding came from Alberta mental health, and 14.8 per cent came from Children's Services, so three different departments and totalling 22.6 per cent of the Edmonton Sexual Assault Centre's total budget, not a very large contribution overall to what they were doing. Significantly more amounts of money came from the United Way, for example, 25 per cent, and through funding from the municipalities.

So very interesting that the funding, as I had said, was very piecemeal, coming from different departments for different reasons and usually for short-term projects that were not renewable. This is what I think we need to address, to get some long-term stable, predictable funding in place that covers the operation of these centres and not just a program here and a program there.

One of the things that I looked at in their environmental scan where they were talking about that same topic of secured sustainable funding is how many of them have only one-year funding, and that runs out every year. Then they have to spend so much time reapplying annually for the funding, and it's never guaranteed, so other funding such as support from foundations is typically used to fund special projects or ongoing programs for counselling rather than providing finances to support the organization's infrastructure.

The donations they're getting from local corporations and service groups are also one time, and a significant portion of the shortfall is made up by fundraising activities, that have mostly had to be done on a volunteer basis by the staff, who come in on their weekends and after hours to organize fundraising events to keep the centres going. It does have operational consequences for the staff of the centres. Setting aside the stress of not knowing what your budget is, it's darn hard to be a good manager when you can't predict how long your centre is actually going to stay open. Should you be managing to close it with honour and pay off all of your debts and close everything out and pay off your staff, or do you try and manage to keep going for a few more months, hoping that something is going to come together?

Now, I'm not saying that all the centres in Alberta are dealing as close to the edge, but it certainly does impinge upon your ability to be a good manager to run your centre in the long term. Rather than being able to focus on the victims and the survivors of sexual abuse, you have the staff focusing on securing additional funding to get them through the next year or the next few months.

The Alberta Association of Sexual Assault Centres has recently identified six core service areas that sexual assault survivors and their families should have access to throughout Alberta, and they consider these services essential in each community in order to provide a co-ordinated approach to service delivery across the province. These include crisis services, counselling, police and court support, education, outreach, and volunteer support. With a few exceptions Alberta's eight sexual assault centres do provide all six core service areas across the province, and they go through this in the environmental scan that they have provided.

There is some discussion in this environmental scan as well about new co-ordinated, multidisciplinary approaches like advocacy centres and some discussion about how well they work. An example of that: they seem to work particularly well for delivery of services to child victims of sexual abuse. You have an example here that, in fact, has been funded through the minister's previous ministry as Solicitor General. I'm sorry; that might have been through Justice. It's the Zebra centre, that's located just down the block from here. There must be funding as well from Children's Services. But the consideration here is more about provision of services to adults, which is the area that tends to get left aside.

So I'm encouraging the minister to continue along the right track that she set out on. We do need the funding. I'm hoping that at the end of the time for this comprehensive provincial strategy we have the minister continuing to work with her colleagues to secure the operational funding that needs to be in place so that we can get out of this cycle that we've been in.

I'd like to talk now about the bullying initiative, which I haven't been very involved with because I was generally approaching it from family violence or violence against women, and the bullying initiative just didn't work for me there. The other issue was the sexual assault centres, and they didn't fit into that bullying strategy either. But I'll tell you: somebody that does fit into the bullying strategy is lesbian and gay youth, and, boy, do they understand what bullying is all about. I mean, if we want to look at some of the studies and descriptions of what these kids go through, they understand bullying.

I am a little curious because there was a project that's been brought to my attention that was to fund through the office for the prevention of family violence, through the bullying initiative. They'd asked for funding for the Out Is In project, which has been funded by the Department of Justice Canada's community mobilization fund. Interestingly, Justice Canada was saying: we'd like to keep funding you, but you've got to have some indication of interest from your provincial government. They've never been able to secure funding for the excellent work that they do through this minister's department and through the office for the prevention of family violence. So I'm wondering if perhaps the minister is funding other groups that are working with this particular group of kids.

I would argue that this is one of the most vulnerable groups of youths, vulnerable to bullying and very particular bullying in the whole province. I mean, if you want to talk about kids that have been physically assaulted because of who they are, you want to talk about, you know: two-thirds of gay and lesbian students have heard homophobic remarks made by kids at school. Thirty-seven per cent of gay and lesbian youth questioned feel like outsiders at school. I mean, this is the epitome of bullying victims here. Forty per cent of gay and lesbian youth surveyed have dramatically low self-esteem.

I can tell you that the one stat that is the saddest statistic of all is that the youth group that is most likely to commit suicide is this group of lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgendered youth by far. In particular, those rates are very high following any sort of public upheaval around the issue of gay lifestyle or same-sex marriage or Delwin Vriend or any of those public discussions of those issues. Their suicide rate goes up because they see a public reaction, and they think: I can't deal with this. So it's very high.

The project that was brought forward – in this case, they were looking for funding for the Out Is In project but in particular for a camp called Camp Fyrefly, which was to help work with provincial gay and lesbian youth as a co-ordinating network and also to work with them on a leadership package. I mean, what's more worthy of funding through this bullying project?

So I'm interested to hear whether the minister has been funding other gay and lesbian youth groups. Or if they haven't been funding any, then why not? Maybe I could get the ministry to go back and have another look at what's been put forward in this group. I mean, this Camp Fyrefly: "leadership weekend attracting more than 40 youth from across Alberta and designed to help develop the capacities" of gay and lesbian, bisexual, and transgendered youth "to address violence and bullying in the home, school, and the community." I mean, it's tailor made. It fits exactly what's supposed to be happening here.

So, you know, lots of volunteers, including teachers, social workers, and other professionals donated their time. I'll just ask the minister to go back and have another look at that particular group and see if there's something else that can be done to fund them this year or to assist them in some way. That certainly qualifies, in my opinion, under the bullying initiatives, and we should be able to help all kids.

Another question under family violence and bullying. There's a $14 million increase in the amount of funding for family violence from the 2004-05 budget to the '07-08 forecast and a $10 million increase in this year alone. This is appearing on page 158 of the business plan. We would like to get a breakdown of where that $10 million is going. Some of it is in the press release, but if I could get the details of where all of it's going, I would appreciate it. I mentioned that $500,000 was going to the sexual assault initiative, and there were a couple of other things in that press release. The women's shelters are part of it, the community incentive fund, an additional $2 million to the women's shelters, but if we could get the complete breakdown, please, I would appreciate that.

As part of that, there was a specific question about how much money will be spent on more conferences. There's also a question on youth in transition, an increase of $3 million to the youth in transition budget, which appears on page 60, vote 2.3.4. How is this money going to be spent? Will it get tendered to agencies? How many new transition spaces are expected to open?

Finally, ministry support services, over $2 million increase in ministry support services over the last year's budget. Why is most of this money going into corporate services? If we could get written responses to that, that would be good.

I continue to be concerned about the actions that the government has taken on child care, particularly, because I think it has jeopardized our funding, and it's certainly jeopardized the funding of the federal plan across the country. That's what happened the last time the feds tried to come up with a federal program. It was Alberta that stymied the whole thing. It's happening again, so I certainly hope the minister is going to be able to work this one out with her federal counterpart. I agree that choice is important.

You know, the government seemed to understand – at least, they were arguing with me – the idea of incrementalism in implementing this smoking ban, and that was the reason for not supporting the bill the other day, that it was to be done incrementally. Well, if you can propose it in that, why can't you propose it in the funding for daycares and at least keep going or enhance what we've got but not blow the whole thing in trying to go for something that's not possible?

I'd like to know what the minister is doing to work with the agencies that are under her portfolio and that contract under her portfolio, supply services that are important to the people that she serves around the absolutely astronomical increase in insurance rates for those agencies. We've seen increases from double to fivefold. A lot of the ones that I've spoken to in the last couple of weeks have looked at changes, increases over the last 18 months from, say, $4,000 to $10,000. That's really, really tough to find in monies for social service agencies, and somebody on that side has got to do something. The government regulates insurance. You've got to do something to help these nonprofit and charitable agencies for what's happening to them and how they're being charged for their public liability insurance by the insurance industry.

Also, I'm wondering – my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods was quoting the shelter statistics from 2002, and I know that the ministry then stopped releasing the shelter statistics. I always suspected at the time it was because there were more women and children being turned away than being served by the ministry, and it just looked so bad that they stopped releasing the statistics. I'm wondering if, in fact, they have gone back to releasing them again or if the most recent stats that are available are from 2002. If that's the case, then could the ministry please work with the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters to give us an updated number on that? Also, I would like to hear the reasoning behind why those aren't being released publicly if that's still the case.

I know that there is a rush for everyone else to get in on this one, so I thank you for the opportunity to be able to raise those comments. I invite the minister to respond to me in writing just given the shortness of time because my colleague who's the official critic for this department would like to get up one more time to ask some questions.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I will be short because, as the member has indicated before, she'll accept some of the questions she's asked in writing, but I think it's important for me to get some things on the record, and I would really like the time to be able to answer that.

I want to go back to the answer on the national child care and Alberta once again being painted the black sheep for holding up nine other provinces and territories. To me that's an incredible statement of all the other ministers across this country who don't have the initiative to stand up for their own provinces and Alberta, one province in Canada, being blamed for stalling a deal from our federal counterparts. What Alberta did is they made it very clear what was important to them and what was important to the people that they serve in this province, both Albertans and children in care. I can . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, the book is in front of the microphone, and therefore it's not picking up all the sound. You may proceed.

Mrs. Forsyth: I can tell the hon. member that when we were at the negotiating table in January with the federal government, at that particular time we were ready to sign an agreement called an asymmetrical agreement, but the federal government would not pursue that. After that, we went out and had a press release, and he said at that particular time that he was going to be negotiating with the provinces. I want to reiterate one more time that with my recent conversation with Mr. Dryden, he verbally agreed to all of Alberta's concerns. He indicated at that particular time that the stall was from the Northwest Territories and Prince Edward Island in regard to the base funding plus discussion around his own cabinet table in regard to the French.

I am pleased that the hon. member acknowledges the fact of the money we have given in regard to the sexual assault shelters and the $500,000. I can tell her that the Alberta Association of Sexual Assault Centres was very, very grateful for the money that the government was providing, and we're going to continue to work very, very closely with them and monitor what's happening with the money and how they're going to use the money and how they're going to deal with the particular issue. I can tell you that it's been a struggle for the sexual assaults because they have referred to sexual assault as a hidden disease, something that people don't want to talk about and again were very, very pleased with the money.

The member talked about the issue of lesbian and gay bullying and the initiatives that were dealing with that. What I want to say on the bullying issue is that it's all encompassing. It does not matter if you're a lesbian. It doesn't matter if you're gay. It doesn't matter if you're black, green, purple, short, tall, whatever. Bullying is bullying no matter who's doing the bullying. I think that what the government is doing on the bullying initiative is recognizing bullying as a problem. We're even seeing at this particular time cyberbullying become a huge problem, and we'll look forward to what we see coming out of the community incentive grants.

She talked about youth in transition. The increase in the youth in transition is related to the advancing futures bursary program that was implemented from the Children's Forum. The success of the advancing futures bursary program and the anticipated uptake that resulted from a very successful program is why we've increased it to $3.2 million. The youth in transition initiative is intended to develop policy and programs for youth in transition, and as the member indicated, the chair has been very, very successful in regard to this particular initiative, and the kids like it.

Due to time, what we'll do is we'll allow the critic to ask some more questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to address a couple of issues, one of the issues brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Centre and also the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, mostly in regard to the youth initiatives that are taking place.

I think it's our responsibility not only as a government but as a society to always look for better directions, to always look for more effective and efficient solutions to some of the challenges, to some of the concerns that we have that we deal with with youth. I know that it is difficult, and I know that it is a situation that may seem as if the solutions arrive very quickly or very easily from the outside, but I would suggest to you that some of those solutions that we could arrive at aren't long-lasting solutions.

I think it is absolutely imperative that we engage our youth in the decision-making that we are doing right now. I could give you a number of examples, and I think the Member for Edmonton-Centre talked about some of the tragic areas involving youth and gay individuals. I want to say from that aspect that I think that when we have youth forums or youth gatherings between staff and between myself as the Youth Secretariat and youth, we very much look at all of the different aspects and all of the different challenges that are brought forward. We look at all of the different avenues where bullying is being effected. We look at all of the different directions where violence takes place.

The question, of course, that arises is: how do we engage youth? How do we involve youth to a more successful outcome? I think that on a regular basis that is the goal, that is the direction we should be following. We need to involve youth, and we need to listen to what youth say because they are experiencing the issues exactly at the time when the issues are prevalent. We can look back to our past and what experiences we've had, and we think that we can apply that knowledge to the youth of today. That always doesn't happen. So when we have youth and we engage youth, I know that the solutions they have are more practical. As I stated earlier, the knowledge that they have is one that is immediate and, if I can say, one that is practical because they understand the situation now.

I want to say that I talked about the involvement of youth in the bullying and violence forum. Now, those youth came from across the province. Those youth came from as far south as Kainai. They came from the northern part of the province. They came from urban and they came from rural areas. They came from intercity areas, all having different issues, all having different perspectives of the challenges that youth have in their communities.

Most recently we had a meeting with a group of youth in regard to the challenges they have with drugs, the experiences they had, and the initiatives that they brought forward to that meeting, that they brought forward to a meeting that involved the chair of AADAC and at this particular meeting the Premier, who also dropped in for part of the meeting to listen to youth, some of the solutions that they had, the desires that youth had to be involved in the solution-forming direction – let me give you some examples if I can. We talked in a round-table with the youth that were in attendance – and they came from all different types of social situations, economic situations, from very wealthy homes as well as homes that were very much struggling to survive – about how they got involved in drugs and how they got involved in schools where they were basically enticed to partake or to get involved with peer groups that did not give them the opportunity to reach their full potential.

Now, these individuals came to us and came to the meeting with solutions. They want to help. They want to help their fellow students. They would like to work in a situation where they could as students go to schools, meet with children, present their experiences to classrooms, present their experiences to audiences, to parents in order for other children not to get involved in those sorts of activities. They relayed to us the different types of experiences that they had, the different types of challenges that they had and what directions could better assist them in bringing their message forward.

“What needs to be done?” you ask. So what needs to be done? As I said before, what needs to happen is that we do need to involve our youth. We need to get them involved. We need to get our children and our youth involved. Now, we do have to assist them. We have to assist them in the manner that we need to support them. We need to support them going out into the communities. We need to support them with . . .

Mr. Snelgrove: The tools.

Mr. Danyluk: I appreciate the advice that’s being given to me by the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

I believe and we know that with that support, the message will be clearer when it comes from children to their own peer group than if we send, let us say, officers or politicians to send the message, and that message will be very clear.

Mr. Chairman, I understand that my time is just about up. I just want to summarize by saying that I very much believe that with interaction with our youth, with the support that we can give our youth, we will find solutions, and we will continue to look for solutions, to strive to make their world just a little bit better.

Thank you very much.

10:00

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, we only have a few minutes, but, yeah, go ahead.

Dr. Pannu: Two minutes. Okay, Mr. Chairman.

I’ve got two quick questions for the minister. One is on the cut of 11 per cent for the early intervention programs in the budget. The budget for 2005-2006, the current budget, allocates about $10.7 million, whereas last year’s budget had $11.9 million for the early intervention program. So why that dramatic 11 per cent cutback?

The second quick question, in the last 50 seconds, has to do with the child, youth, and family services program. There the budget seems to have been even more dramatically cut, from close to $7 million in the 2004-2005 budget to about $2 million in 2005-2006. There’s quite a dramatic cut. I don’t think there is time for her to answer now. I’m sure she will answer these questions in writing.

How much more time is left, Mr. Chairman?

The Deputy Chair: About three more minutes.

Dr. Pannu: Oh, three more minutes. Okay.

I would like to return to one of the issues that I feel very passionate about. The minister talked last time around and continually talks about our child care system being one of the best in Canada, and I respectfully disagree with that. I ask the question because I want the minister to perhaps take another look at it and see what measures she can take to improve it.

The Ministry of Children’s Services’ own studies indicate that when we compare ourselves in terms of child care staff qualifications, we don’t really compare very well with Ontario, where 80 per cent of child care staff have a two-year early childhood education certificate or higher compared to only about 43 per cent in Alberta, about half as much as Ontario’s EC staff.

The median hourly wage in Ontario is about 62 per cent higher than in Alberta. In Ontario it was about $13.50 per hour; in Alberta it was about $8.30. With that kind of low wages for our child care workers, you can’t get them at $8.30 an hour if they have a university degree or two or three years of college education, and you need well-educated, well-trained people to provide good education. To keep these people, if they are well educated, in child care services, you need to pay them well. What programs does the minister have which will address these two issues which determine the quality of child care in Alberta?

Another question, Mr. Chairman, for the minister. It’s information that she would perhaps like to look at, comparing Alberta with Quebec. Quebec’s child care program and system is considered the best. It works the best. It has the highest ratings. Eighty-six per cent of Alberta’s total child care expenditures for regulated child care spaces goes to parent fee subsidies. Nothing goes to operating grants in Alberta. At the other end of the spectrum . . .

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(4), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration for a department’s proposed estimates, I must now put the following question after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Children’s Services for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006.

Agreed to:
Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases $793,954,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’d move that the committee rise and report the vote of the Department of Children’s Services and request leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, for the following department.

Children’s Services: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $793,954,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Bill 1
Access to the Future Act

The Deputy Chair: I am given to understand that we are currently on amendment A3, that's before the Assembly.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chair, I adjourned debate on that, so I'm not proposing to continue speaking to that. I just wonder if we could revert to introductions for a moment.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Our guest this evening for the Bill 1 debate is Paul Zits, outgoing president of the Students' Association of Grant MacEwan College. So at the start of our committee debate on Bill 1 tonight I would just like to recognize him. If he could rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House, please.

Bill 1

The Deputy Chair: Did the Government House Leader want to rise and be recognized?

Mr. Hancock: Just briefly. I understand that the amendment that's on the table is A3, which proposes an amendment to add a subsection (8.1) to Bill 1. I don't have the amendment in front of me, Mr. Chairman, but the amendment essentially would call for putting into Bill 1 a requirement that there be a full and complete reporting on all of the commitments made under the access to the future fund, so to report what commitments have been made and how much had been given to whom.

Of course, that's part and parcel of reporting and disclosure in this government. We have a government which prides itself on being open in publishing all of that information. I would indicate to the House that it would be absolutely remiss if that information were not in the annual report of the Department of Advanced Education each and every year in terms of what commitments had been made and what funds had been expended out of the access to the future fund.

So while I understand the desire of the Member for Calgary-Currie to bring forward the amendment to put sort of belts and suspenders in place to make sure that the public has all the information it needs, the reality is that that's the way we do business, so it's not necessary for it to be in the bill. It's not necessary for every bill to be full and complete with all the rules and details. In fact, often it's helpful to have framework legislation. I know the opposition tends not to like framework legislation and things being done by regulation, but that often makes it much better legislation, in fact.

I have nothing against this amendment, but I am going to ask that the House not approve this amendment because it's redundant. It's surplusage. The fact of the matter is that that information is and will be reported.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I do agree with the hon. member across the Assembly. Belts and suspenders are good; elastics around the waist are even better. Good, solid accountability. My mantra throughout my political life has been exactly what he has said: open, accountable, honest governance processes.

I think it's very important, especially with dollars of this magnitude, that we have a complete breakdown of the grants and where these grants are going. In fact, the education community and the student community deserve to understand exactly how these grants work. There are some very specific recommendations, and I think that it would be interesting to have that breakdown in terms of the dollars that actually go toward education delivery as opposed to the administration of the grants.

Some of the things that were said, just to put them on the record because I know the hon. minister across has actually read them: the minister would report on each grant in the annual report; the fact that this fund is established for particular purposes, and it's therefore important to specify that the accountability mechanisms are in place to support those particular purposes for which they were made; and the minister would be specifically required by 2(3) to report on access and affordability. We also believe that he should be required to report on each grant in that manner. I think that he sincerely feels that there isn't any need for this amendment, but I would like to see it go through as I feel that it really addresses the belts and suspenders part of this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We're returning to debate on this amendment after a break of almost one week. I don't have the amendment before me, but the intent of the amendment seems to be such that it merits the support of the House.

It's a bill that has very little specificity and detail to it, but we are dealing or are going to be dealing, hopefully pretty soon, with $3 billion worth of taxpayers' money; $134 million a year are promised to flow down to the postsecondary system on a yearly basis. But we need some clear ground rules and some reporting mechanisms so that we know how the purposes and the objectives of this particular piece of legislation are achieved. In order for us to make that assessment on whether or not the objectives are indeed reached or achieved or are well-served by the way that $134 million will be allocated in the years to come on a yearly basis is if we legislate that there be full disclosure of the monies allocated, grants made, monies transferred to different institutions. Only if we as a Legislature and as representatives of the people of Alberta have that ability to scrutinize and look at the numbers and see how the money is spent will we be justified voting for this bill. So I support this bill.

Another concern that I have is about the minister of higher education's general claim that this government operates transparently and always discloses information. My experience over the last eight years in this House tells me that that's not always the case, especially on a new venture of the sort that this Bill 1 proposes to undertake on behalf of the postsecondary system and on behalf of close to 200,000 students and teachers who work in the system.

I think that it's important that the information with respect to the grants made to institutions, to programs, to research applications, to researchers, students, and others be made public. This bill is somewhat equivocal on whether or not the funds from this endowment fund will in fact be accessible by private, for-profit institutions, that are growing by leaps and bounds in this province. I have some amendments later on to propose. Hopefully they'll be accepted, and we will not have to worry about any dollars flowing to private, for-profit institutions in this province. Until that happens, I think it is an additional reason that there be full disclosure about the way the monies from this endowment fund are distributed and the destination of these monies, especially with reference to whether they go to all institutions in the public system or whether they also go to private, for-profit institutions, which are being approved year after year to operate in this province by this government.

For those reasons, I speak in support of the amendment proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. A sardonic comment first of all. Here we are talking about a piece of legislation governing post-secondary education, and the critic from the third party and the hon. minister do not have a copy of the amendment with them. They failed their homework assignment tonight, sir. But, seriously, folks, as we say.

Obviously, and I'm on record from last week as feeling that this is an important amendment, as I felt about amendments A1 and A2, which did not succeed in this House. What we see here, for the record, is an example, I think, of the philosophical differences between the governing party and the opposition parties. The two sides of the House, it is my experience in my brief time in this House, do speak different languages using the same words. The government feels, and the minister just said so, that framework legislation – oh, the minister has found his homework; the dog did not eat it. I don't know if he's going to turn it in for marking afterwards or not.

As the minister said a moment ago, the government feels that framework legislation is best, laying out the legislation in broad strokes and then leaving it to the regulations to dot the i's and cross the t's. The government feels philosophically – I accept that this is a philosophical bent of the government – that doing it through regulation gives you better legislation, perhaps more flexible legislation. I don't know.

On the comment about better legislation, we are considering during this session some 40 bills, 39 of which I believe are amending bills to existing legislation. So that begs the question, a rhetorical question for tonight: how good is the legislation if you have to amend 39 existing acts in every session? But it's a rhetorical question, sir.

Philosophically, the government believes in framework legislation and working out the details through regulation. Philosophically, Mr. Chairman, we believe on this side of the House that whether or not it is the most efficient way to write legislation, writing legislation properly with all the details in there and working together collaboratively to amend legislation that can be improved and doing it on the floor of this House, passing amendments, passing bills through their various stages, making law on the floor of this House is the most democratic way of doing it.

There have been other forms of government in history that have been very efficient at getting the trains to run on time, but they've had some pretty unsavory aspects to them. I'm not suggesting for a moment that I'm making a comparison here. I am suggesting, though, that efficiency, a quest for efficiency, a desire for efficiency should not be the highest philosophical, ideological, moral, or ethical calling of a political party or a government. The highest philosophical, moral, and ethical calling is democracy and the respect for our bosses, the people of the province of Alberta, a respect that allows us and requires us and compels us to do our business in public in an open, accountable, and transparent fashion.

At the end of the day the results may be the same, but we value democracy in large part because it is about process, because it is about an openness and a transparency and an accountability when done properly, when done right that allows the people to see that they are being democratically and responsibly represented and that they can hold their representatives to account. That's why we proposed these amendments, plain and simple.

Now, I'm not going to drag out debate on this one any longer. I'm going to suggest that we put it to a vote, but I wanted that on the record because this is why we have done what we have done.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Now, I do have four other amendments to Bill 1, and I would very much like to debate them and talk about them in this House, and I hope to get the opportunity to do that in the future. I'm also aware that the critic from the third party has some amendments of his own. The committee study of Bill 1 so far has been my show, I guess, our show, my honour to have the opportunity to introduce my amendments. I know that the member from the third party would like to get his amendments or at least some of them on the table, on the floor in play as well.

So if I may, Mr. Chair, at this point in hopes of getting back to my remaining four amendments, I would like to table my amendments if you'll allow. I have the requisite copies here.

Thank you, Mr. Chair. With that, I cede the floor to the member from the third party.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I just need some clarification. It's my understanding that there are four amendments that you are circulating.

Mr. Taylor: Tabling.

The Deputy Chair: You're just tabling?

Mr. Taylor: I am tabling them only, sir.

The Deputy Chair: You are not moving for debate?

Mr. Taylor: I'm moving no amendments for debate at this time. It is my hope that we will get back to those amendments in further study in committee before the end of this session, but that's a decision of this House. In the event that we might not, I simply want to get these amendments on the record, so it's a simple tabling.

The Deputy Chair: Okay.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I should also thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie for deferring to my desire to propose some amendments to Bill 1, Access to the Future Act. I have the amendments ready. The first amendment I'd like to propose is to section 4 of the bill, actually section 4(2). I have the amendment ready for circulation. Here we go.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, are you moving an amendment?

Dr. Pannu: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. We shall refer to that amendment as amendment A4.

Dr. Pannu: Okay, Mr. Chairman. I will wait for a minute or two while amendment A4 is being distributed.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you may proceed.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to draw the attention of the House to some of the concerns that I expressed when I spoke to Bill 1 in its second reading. At that time I had expressed some concern about the equivocal language used in the section of the bill, specifically section 4(2), which reads in a way that it leaves room for interpreting this subsection as including private, for-profit postsecondary institutions in the coverage of what this section 4(2) provides. I call this equivocal language. The bill neither says yes nor says no to it. Therefore, it leaves room for private, for-profit institutions to make valid claims on the resources of the fund.

Section 4(2), Mr. Chairman, reads as follows at present.

The purpose of the Fund is generally to support innovation and excellence that enhances and expands opportunities for Albertans to participate in accessible, affordable and high-quality advanced education opportunities and, without restricting the generality of the foregoing.

Then there are several other subs that follow this.

My concern is that there's a lack of specificity in that paragraph that I've read with respect to public institutions as being the only ones in which these education opportunities will be enhanced. The amendment that I am proposing, Mr. Chairman, proposes to amend that section 4(2) by adding "in public post-secondary institutions" after "education opportunities." It removes the ambiguity. It addresses the problem with equivocation of the language of section 4(2) and clarifies that the purpose of the fund is generally to support innovation and excellence in public postsecondary institutions.

I don't think I need to say much more to this amendment, Mr. Chairman. It's self-explanatory, and I think it is an eminently supportable amendment because all it does is improve the language of the bill and clarify the intent of the proposed legislation to enhance these activities related to innovation and excellence and thereby enhance and expand high-quality advanced education opportunities but in public postsecondary institutions.

So with that, I'll sit down and hope that the House would support this amendment. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. While I certainly appreciate the sentiment raised by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I would urge the House not to accept this amendment and for very good reason. While it should be obvious to everyone that a matching grant out of the access fund, if that was the proposal, or an ingenuity project out of the access fund would not normally go to a private institution – in other words, you wouldn't use public money to build private assets; that's clearly not in the cards – you also don't want to limit the efficacy of the access fund by suggesting that, for example, a scholarship fund or a bursary fund set up to allow a student to take an education would preclude a student going to an educational institution, even a private educational institution if that was the appropriate choice for the student.

So this is one of those situations which I was directly dealing with before, where you don't want to be too strictured in the act because you might rule out things that you didn't intend to rule out. While I think it's clear that the intention of the hon. member is to rule out the concept of grants coming out of the access fund going to a private, for-profit institution, the fact of the matter is that there are plenty of educational opportunities in private, not-for-profit institutions which we support students in going to through student loan processes and through bursaries. In fact, there are choices for students in private, for-profit institutions which we support through student loans and through Rutherford scholarships.

So to put this amendment in place, while the intention is honourable, it's exactly one of those things that I was mentioning earlier, where by codifying too strictly you end up having unintended consequences and where it's better to have the framework in place and then deal with the regulation.

I would certainly intend to bring forward the regulations and the policies to this House so that people could see them, so that they're open and transparent, but make it apparent that we ought not to delimit it in such a way that you wouldn't have the opportunity of someone coming forward and saying, "I want to put forward a scholarship fund or a bursary fund to bring students out of northern Alberta," for example, and then say that because you went to a private, not-for-profit institution or you went, for that matter, to a private, for-profit institution in a course that was an acceptable course of studies for a student loan program, it would be not acceptable for this type of a scholarship fund.

So you can set up a scholarship fund, I would think, under the access to the future fund. If somebody wanted to donate money to set up a scholarship fund or a bursary fund, it could be matched, presumably, out of this, and that would be available, then, to students who meet the criteria for the scholarship or bursary. But this amendment would say, well, if they're going to anything other than a public institution, it wouldn't qualify. Honourable intention, but clearly one of those areas where by putting in too much stricture, you may have unintended consequences.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. That was an interesting explanation, which begs a couple of questions that I wonder if I can get the minister to address in terms of perhaps explaining or giving us some insight in the House as to how he sees these sorts of scholarship or bursary programs operating.

While the minister doesn't want to put too much stricture on things here because of unintended consequences, I'm left wondering, if we do not pass this amendment, whether one of the unintended consequences could be that public money in Alberta is following Alberta students, then, to public or private, not-for-profit or private, for-profit postsecondary educational institutions in other provinces, states, or countries around the world. Is that the minister's intention, to take the access to the future fund and use it to in effect endow other institutions around the world?

Mr. Hancock: Clearly, the intention of the fund is not to endow other institutions around the world, but one of the intentions of the fund is to promote access to Albertans to advance their education, and Albertans can advance their education in public institutions, in private, for-profit and private, not-for-profit institutions. Those are choices that Alberta students can make, and those are choices that are currently supported through the student finance process if they're appropriate courses of study. Not all private, for-profit courses of study are supported through student finance, but some are.

We've indicated that there will be a process of defining the parameters because this fund isn't going to do everything for everybody by any stretch of the imagination. The parameters do have to be defined in terms of what will qualify and what will not qualify. But my point is that in defining those parameters, which would be inappropriate to do in the act itself, it would also be inappropriate to preclude certain things from happening.

One of those things which immediately jumps to mind when you see this amendment is the concept of a bursary or a scholarship fund that might be privately supported. I can think of a number of proposals that have come forward already, because I can tell you, Mr. Chairman, that just the fact that we're debating this fund has spurred a huge amount of interest in people bringing forward gifts and bursaries and suggestions as to how they might give, give some money back, give some of what they've earned in Alberta back. The thirst for this has been phenomenal, even more than I anticipated.

In bringing those forward, people agreeing to put forward a scholarship or a bursary, to automatically preclude accessibility to a student who lives in Alberta, who's grown up in Alberta, whose family has paid taxes in Alberta because they might want to access that opportunity at a private, for-profit institution or a private, not-for-profit institution in Alberta or elsewhere is something that we ought not to be precluding right off the top.

When the regulations are designed, because the fund is only so big and only goes so far, that might be something that would be delimited or prioritized, but obviously it ought not to be precluded.

Mr. Taylor: So let me just make sure that I clearly understand what the minister just said, and I do this strictly for the purpose of understanding. In the Access to the Future Act, Bill 1, the minister has the intention of allowing the money to enhance the educational opportunities of the Alberta student – as the minister just said, yes, there will be some restrictions, some provisos – regardless of what jurisdiction the student then chooses to pursue his postsecondary education. Is that correct?

Mr. Hancock: There may be appropriate circumstances where a student who lives in Alberta, whose family has paid taxes in Alberta, and who we hope will return to Alberta with their capabilities, strengths, and knowledge may need to go elsewhere to get that, and there's no good reason why they should not have that kind of support.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the minister's explanation, his response to the amendment, and the reasons why he can't support the amendment. The strictures on the bill, on the flexibility that he wants to have built into the bill are important from his point of view, but I think what he has said deepens my concern about what I see as a flaw in the bill. I am concerned that public dollars, in light of the explanation the minister has given, are now put at the disposal of private, for-profit institutions as much as they'll be there for the use of institutions that are part of the public system.

My intention by way of introducing this amendment is not to deprive having access to the funds for private, not-for-profit institutions in the province. My concern is with profit-making institutions that, as I said, are growing in numbers in this province. We are getting some complaints from students who have had, perhaps, the misfortune of entering some of these institutions and finding that their interests are not at the centre of the operations that these private, for-profit institutions undertake in this province.

There are some institutions here, Mr. Chairman, in this province operating now that have in fact been fined across the border for violating contractual obligations. They've been fined to the tune of millions of dollars for those infractions. I am saying why, when this fund is being introduced with such fanfare and such hoopla, are we taking a chance of this fund becoming accessible to institutions, some of which clearly should not be in this province and, if they are, should not have the right to enjoy access to this bill?

My concern is enhanced, not mitigated by what the minister has said. I would certainly ask members in this House to support this amendment, to clearly lay out the purpose of the bill and define the type of institutions that will have access to it and such other institutions, such as for-profit ones, which will not have access to the dollars from this bill.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Chairman, I would like to introduce a second amendment, and I have it ready for distribution.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you may proceed.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm again speaking to a subsection of section 4 of Bill 1, the Access to the Future Act. Specifically, what I'm proposing will amend subsection (7) of section 4. Subsection (7) at present reads as follows.

The Minister of Finance shall annually, in a manner determined by the Minister of Finance, pay from the General Revenue Fund to the Access to the Future Fund an amount equal to 4.5% of the total amounts allocated under subsection (4), as adjusted under subsection (6).

Now, the amendment amends the language of subsection (7) by adding "and such amount shall be included in the estimates for that fiscal year" after "adjusted under subsection (6)."

So, again, this amendment, I think, is a friendly amendment. It simply clarifies the language of the bill and strengthens the bill. The major intent of this amendment is to ensure that the fund is built up without using unbudgeted surpluses. Unbudgeted surpluses give the government an excuse to hide money away in other ways and not put the money in rather than being up front in their budgeting, and for that reason it also suggests that the provision as presently standing in the bill doesn't really represent a strong and firm commitment to postsecondary education because it doesn't, by way of the budget, make commitments. We have seen already that although the bill is supposed to sooner or later grow to $3 billion, this year we put only $250 million into it.

I think that being up front in budgeting is helpful in both ensuring that the government maintains and continues this renewed commitment to postsecondary education and that it is included in the budget. I think that will improve the piece of legislation that's before us, and that's the only reason that this amendment is being proposed here, not to change either the intent of the bill or the scope of the funds and the manner in which they'll be used.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, before the committee can deal with this amendment, you will have to move it.

Dr. Pannu: Okay. Mr. Chairman, consider it moved.

The Deputy Chair: Okay.

Hon. members, we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A5.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, again, I would have to ask the House not to pass this amendment. The rationale for the amendment that's just been put forward is that it will require the funds to be voted, but the hon. member has confused the money going into the heritage fund to be allocated for this purpose and the money coming out of the heritage fund and into the access to the future fund for spending. So this amendment will not, in fact, enhance the flow of money into the fund but will have a different effect, and that is to change the money coming out of the fund from being a statutory amount of 4 and a half per cent of whatever is in the heritage fund allocated to this purpose and, rather, put it into an estimate amount, which means that it's subject to an annual vote by members of the House as to how much should actually come in.

In effect what the hon. member's amendment does is say that although the act provides for 4 and a half per cent on a statutory basis, the act calls for that to be transferred into the fund for expenditure purposes. In fact, that's statutory. That's a requirement. That's something that has to happen. By making this amendment, what he's suggesting is that it becomes a voted amount, which is then at the will of the budget process every year in terms of being able to use that to balance the other numbers. So this has not the effect that the hon. member had requested.

In fact, it doesn't have anything to do with how fast the $3 billion is built up in the fund. It has nothing to do with that. Section 4(7) doesn't deal with that. It deals with the amount being paid out, which is 4 and a half per cent of whatever's in there and accumulated.

So the theory of the fund is that $3 billion goes into a special delineated account in the heritage fund. It grows by inflation. Four and a half per cent of whatever has been contributed in there comes out through the general revenue fund into the access to the future fund to be allocated to these projects. The effect of this amendment will make that a voted amount rather than a statutory amount, which is not exactly what the hon. member wants to happen.

Dr. Pannu: I must confess that I am at least 50 per cent persuaded by the minister's explanation on this. I think the manner in which he has drawn attention to the fact that this is a statutory commitment to put 4.5 per cent of the total amount into the fund to be made available for use every year makes sense too.

Is it possible, by any chance, to withdraw the amendment, Mr. Chairman, on this? Just a procedural guidance.

The Deputy Chair: Sorry?

Dr. Pannu: Once we introduce an amendment – I've never been through this – is it possible to withdraw an amendment? If I'm persuaded by the minister's rather fairly clear explanation of it, can I simply withdraw the amendment at this stage?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, yes, it can be done. All we have to do is request unanimous consent to withdraw it, and it can be done.

Dr. Pannu: I think I'm willing to do that, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: So you are asking for unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment?

Dr. Pannu: Right. Yeah.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, who has moved amendment A5, is requesting unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chair. We probably set some sort of precedent. I've never seen an amendment being . . .

An Hon. Member: It's not a precedent.

Dr. Pannu: But I'm pleased to do this.

I have one more amendment, Mr. Chairman. This will be amendment A6, I believe. I would like to move it. So I move that Bill 1, Access to the Future Act, be amended in section 9 by striking out "This Act comes into force on Proclamation" and substituting "This Act must be proclaimed no later than one year from the date it receives Royal Assent." So here is . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we need to have the amendment circulated first.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, you may proceed now.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: This amendment I'll refer to as amendment A6.

Dr. Pannu: A6. Yes. Mr. Chairman, amendment A6 is a fairly straightforward one. I have expressed my reservations about this bill before, so I won't go over those again but simply want to say that the amendment attempts to ensure that the promises, albeit insufficient, that are made in this Bill 1 actually do come to fruition within a predictable time period. The amendment gives a deadline for any necessary regulations to be completed and for the act to be proclaimed.

The minister, while speaking to amendment A4 or A5, indicated that already the bill has generated very high expectations, and he's receiving inquiries from interested institutions within the post-secondary system about the fund and the availability of new dollars so they can begin to access these new funds as soon as possible.

I guess my amendment addresses this heightened interest on the part of member institutions of postsecondary systems to have access to this bill within a finite period of time, and that is that the bill be proclaimed within one year of the passage of the bill so that access is guaranteed to institutions to the amount of funds that will be available at the end of the first year after the bill passes through the Legislature. So its proclamation will be made certain within a year of the completion of the debate here.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hancock: Again, Mr. Chairman, while I appreciate the support that the hon. member is giving to the sentiment of the bill, it's an unnecessary amendment. The fact of the matter is that this bill is going to be proclaimed very, very quickly because there's a high degree of enthusiasm for this to happen, and the fact of the matter is that the budget that was presented and the business plans that were presented have indicated that some money is going to be allocated to it. That can't happen unless this bill is passed and proclaimed.

The forecast for next year and the year after forecast that even of the amount which is indicated already in the budget that will be applied to this fund out of the surpluses – there'll be $11 million next year and $11 million the following. They anticipate that number to be much, much higher as a result of surplus funds going into the fund before now. But none of that can happen if this bill isn't proclaimed.

So I don't think the hon. member need have any worry about the speed with which this bill will be proclaimed into law if the Legislature passes it soon, I hope.

Dr. Pannu: To quickly conclude debate on this, Mr. Chairman – it seems as if no other member is going to be speaking on it – I think that the minister agrees with me that the bill should be proclaimed as soon as possible. All the amendment intends to do is to make sure that the bill doesn't sit there awaiting proclamation beyond one year. If it's proclaimed sooner, so much the better. This is one amendment that the minister should find very easy to accept.

I'll urge him and the House to vote in support of this amendment so that we get it out of the way and move on to whatever business the House has before it after this. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

[The clauses of Bill 1 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

11:00

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and may I say thanks to members of the committee for the manner in which we've been able to deal with the issues raised on the bill tonight.

Now, having agreed to report the bill, I would move that the committee rise and report Bill 1.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 1. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly. I would also like to table copies of documents tabled during Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker: So ordered.

Second Reading

Bill 29
Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped
Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate April 20: Mrs. Fritz]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I support and would ask my colleagues to also support this bill and the extra supplementary benefits that will become a part of the AISH program. These supplementary benefits are in addition to the living expenses and the medical expenses that people on AISH will get.

I will just use a very quick analogy. If someone would have a guide dog that they are reliant upon, the guide dog's expenses, the extra food and the veterinarian and whatever else that dog would require, would come under the supplementary benefits as special dollars for people that have special needs. It doesn't have to come out of their living expenses.

I think this is a very good bill, and certainly I am pleased to see that the government is listening to the opposition and that we, in fact, have listened to the grassroots Albertans, and now by listening we have improved the lives of the elderly and the disabled.

I don't think there's a great deal more to say on this one other than I think it's very good. I think it's positive for people on AISH, and I would ask my colleagues to support it.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak to Bill 29. Bill 29 is about the changes that have been overdue for a very long time that needed to be made. Over the last eight years that I've been around this House, we have been talking about the need to increase the monthly payments for Albertans on AISH. The recipients, as a result of the changes that the government announced in the budget, certainly are getting an increase of a hundred dollars immediately, making their total monthly payments $950. By April 2006 they will get an increase to $1,000. So they'll have to wait till April 2006 before they get the increase to the $1,000 level.

Mr. Speaker, we were hoping that the increase would be to $1,050 immediately. This would have made up for what was lost to inflation over the past 12 years. Then we were hoping that AISH would be indexed, of course, to the cost of living using the market-basket measure. That would ensure that the severely handicapped would be able to meet their needs on this program without having this Legislature return to amend this piece of legislation again in two years' time. MLA salaries are indexed to inflation, so there's no reason why Albertans who are on AISH should not expect the same kind of adjustment on an annual basis.

It seems only reasonable that the real value of what AISH recipients receive is maintained from year to year. We do know that that value is eroded on an annual basis by the increases either due to inflation or the cost-of-living increases, which are inevitable and do happen on a predictable, ineluctable basis. So there is, I think, a disappointment here that indexation is not part of the adjustments that have been made.

There are some new medical benefits that recipients should be made aware of. We welcome those benefits. We think they are long overdue. But the problem with the new benefits is that, according to the minister, they will be dispensed on a case-by-case basis. We think programs should be a lot more universal than that. We also know that this kind of approach requires people to advocate for themselves. We have to bear in mind that this is the severely handicapped we are talking about here who may not be able to advocate for themselves, certainly not all the time. Giving people more bureaucracy to navigate is not the answer.

The government has also doubled the amount recipients are allowed to earn to $400 before getting AISH clawed back. That's a good thing, but that amount should be reviewed annually to keep pace with the cost of living again.

So we are certainly not entirely happy with the increases. We don't think that they go far enough. They are, nevertheless, a welcome change. The reason that we are not happy is simply this, Mr. Speaker. Since 1993 AISH recipients have lost 23 per cent of their income to inflation. Current increases mean a 15 per cent increase, and recipients will have to wait until next year for the whole increase. This means that this increase still falls far short of inflation, by about 8 per cent, more if you factor in inflation for the next year, which will likely be higher than usual given the oil prices and the way the energy prices are going up. In any case, those are some of the concerns I wanted to put on record.

That said, I think the change is welcome, and I know that the AISH recipients appreciate the increase that they have been waiting for for very long. I have lots of them in my constituency, and I've been hearing from them on the phone and through my constituency office. They are happy, but they don't think the change has gone as far as it should have.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this evening to speak to Bill 29, the AISH amendment act. I'd like to take this opportunity to thank the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, if I could just indulge you for a minute. The chair did not realize that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was the third speaker, so if there are any comments or questions, we have five minutes available for that purpose.

If not, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill to continue.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take this opportunity to thank the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports for her leadership in bringing forward these much-needed changes to the program and for implementing almost all of the changes which were recommended by the MLA AISH Review Committee. I was pleased to be part of that committee and to have a role in renewing the AISH program. As MLAs the AISH program is one of the programs that we hear about quite regularly from our constituents.

In reviewing the submissions made by numerous stakeholders and in reviewing the questionnaire that was circulated, many of the concerns which were raised were about the ability of AISH clients to make ends meet on the living allowance of $850 a month. Many people also criticized the so-called clawback that affected the living allowance of those AISH clients who were able to do at least some work to supplement their income. The committee also heard from clients and families who said that the administrative processes under the program were too complex to be easily understood. I'm glad that the committee's recommendations for these important changes in all of these areas were accepted and that the minister will be moving forward to implement those changes.

The package of benefits announced last week represents a renewal of the AISH program, and part of that renewal is the new supplementary benefit that will be available to those clients with assets of less than $3,000. This supplementary benefit is the reason for the minor amendment which is being proposed under Bill 29. This is an important change for AISH clients as it will give them access to an additional benefit when they're having difficulty making ends meet because of special needs. More importantly, this benefit will be tailored to a client's special circumstances.

I know the minister has already shared with the hon. members a few examples of the types of expenses that may be covered by supplementary benefits, and I would like to address one more. As severely disabled Albertans most AISH clients have regular medical appointments with specialists for treatment or ongoing monitoring of their conditions. While the living allowance covers their basic needs and their health benefit package covers the cost of their health care and prescription drugs, in the past there was no benefit to cover things such as additional transportation costs. So if a client needed to come to Calgary, for instance, to see a medical specialist and they lived in Drayton Valley, Lloydminster, or Etzikom, for example, there would be a large cost associated with that and a transportation cost they may not be able to absorb.

Under this new category of benefits, the supplementary benefit, a client will be able to speak to their AISH worker about emerging expenses, and on a case-by-case basis the program may offer additional benefits to address the needs of those clients. This is a very significant change, one which I believe will help make the program more flexible and more accommodating to the unique and individual needs of each AISH client.

Given that through Budget 2005 the minister has been allocated funding to implement this change, I support Bill 29 and this amendment which will allow for this new benefit to be offered under the AISH program. I've heard people often refer to AISH as simply a living allowance. They often aren't aware of the comprehensive health benefit package or the earnings exemption. With the changes that the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports announced last week, including the introduction of supplementary benefits as outlined in Bill 29, we are renewing the AISH program on behalf of nearly 32,000 disabled Albertans who rely upon it.

I urge all hon. members to support the bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

Does anybody else wish to participate in the debate?

The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the hour I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 11:15 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. Guide us so that we may use the privilege given us as elected Members of the Legislative Assembly. Give us the strength to labour diligently, the courage to think and to speak with clarity and conviction and without prejudice or pride. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly His Excellency Poul Kristensen, ambassador of the Kingdom of Denmark. His Excellency is accompanied by Mr. Ole Jorgensen, honorary consul for Denmark here in Edmonton, as well as his wife, Mrs. Else Philipp. I was pleased to host our honoured guests at our official luncheon earlier today on the ambassador's first visit to Alberta. We had a great discussion about our two regions, value-adding, tourism, education.

Mr. Speaker, Danes first settled in Alberta before we became a province. The first Danish settlement in western Canada was founded in Dickson, Alberta, in 1903. The town of Dickson is now home to the Danish Canadian National Museum and Gardens. Today Alberta companies are active in Denmark's oil and gas sector. In addition to our trade ties, Alberta's educational institutions are actively engaged with their Danish counterparts. The University of Alberta is itself a leader in Nordic studies. We look forward to working with His Excellency towards expanding on the Alberta/Denmark ties and opportunities.

I would ask that our honoured guests, who are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this House.

head:

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Rajan and Pushpa Bali from my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. They are, of course, the proud parents of Janiesh Bali, one of our very talented, dedicated, and hard-working pages. Rajan is an electrical engineer and owns his own company, and Pushpa works with Rajan as the bookkeeper and accountant of the company. They've been the proud owners of this business over the past eight years.

I wish to share with you and all members of the House that our page Janiesh will be shaving his head today for Cuts for Cancer, a fundraising that they've done at his school, Harry Ainlay. He has to date raised personally $1,100 for this great cause, and I'm chagrined to say, Mr. Speaker, that he did it without my help. Although he's a neighbour of mine, he did it without my support because one of his classmates got to my door first. [interjections] Okay, okay. I'm going to match that donation.

Mr. Speaker, Rajan and Pushpa are seated in your gallery. I'd ask that they please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome and thanks from this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a group of 45 enthusiastic and promising young people from the Lac La Biche-St. Paul constituency. Today we are honoured to have the grade 6 class from Glen Avon school from St. Paul observe the proceedings along with their teachers, Shane Boyko, Dave Doonanco, instructional assistants Christine Reaney, Karen Odegarden and parent volunteer Dale Drummond. These students tell me that they are very excited and looking forward to May 12. That is the day when the sod-turning for a long-awaited new school is going to take place. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two groups of children from the Lacombe upper elementary school. They're a grade 6. There are about 50 children and 12 adults. This is the group that was intending to come some time ago and was stopped by the bad weather. Their teachers are Mrs. Heather Mackay-Hawkins and Mr. Derek Rankin. Their parent helpers are Mr. Bill Crawford, Mr. John Alden, Mrs. Bev ter Steege, Mr. John ter Steege, Mrs. Kayrn Anderson, Mr. Travis Thacker, Mrs. Susan Prins, Mrs. Debbie Sissons, Mr. Darren Howie, Mr. Rob Smillie. They are seated in the public gallery. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a tireless advocate on behalf of firefighters' and, indeed, emergency workers' rights in this province. He's been instrumental in a number of bills that this House has put through this Legislature in the last couple of years, including the firefighters cancer bill as well as the Blood Samples Act, and he's very interested in the new Traffic Safety Act. I'm very proud to call him my close personal friend. I'd ask Gord Colwell, the president of the Alberta Fire Fighters Association, to stand in the members' gallery and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure if my guests are here, but just the same I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Jasmine, Charlene, Jaylene, and Alise Bishop and Sharon, Danae, and Renée Caouette. These are two parents and their children, who are home-schooled. They're from my constituency of Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, and I'd like to welcome them to this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Dr. Roger Gibbins, president and chief executive officer of the Canada West Foundation. Joining Dr. Gibbins today is Mr. Barry Worbets, a senior member with the foundation. The Canada West Foundation is a leading public policy organization that is well regarded by Albertans for its strong western vision. It's currently engaged in a number of projects, including how to balance economic development with landscape considerations. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is continually working to help improve safety on Alberta's roads. Today I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly an individual who has been a key champion in the effort to promote safety, high standards, and continued excellence in the transportation industry. Cliff Soper, who is with us today in the members' gallery, is the executive director of the Transportation Training & Development Association. I met with Cliff and with other members of the association today to discuss a potential certificate in transportation and truck driving skills at Red Deer College. Mr. Soper is an example of how stakeholders and the government are working together to make a difference in industry training, standards, and safety. I'd ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly a couple of guests of the Grande Prairie caucus who are visiting us today. I'm pleased to see, up above, Alderman Bill Given from the city of Grande Prairie and an employee of the city of Grande Prairie, Mr. Greg Scerbak. I would ask them to rise and be welcomed to the Assembly.

head: 1:40 Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Securities Commission

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance has been sent a letter from a large group of Alberta Securities Commission staff alleging that the work environment there is abusive and intimidating, that there has been no effective leadership for months, and that this has a negative impact on the future of Alberta's capital markets. This is the latest in a series of problems brought to this government's attention concerning the Securities Commission, but this government seems incapable of decisive leadership. To the Finance minister: given that this government has suspended duly elected school boards and regional health authorities for serious management problems, has this government considered suspending the current Alberta Securities Commission Board and appointing an interim administrator?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, in the preamble the hon. member alluded to a letter that I had received from a number of staff. Let me make it very clear what I did receive. I received an unsigned letter that has a blank with a number, 35 in fact, filled in. I can't table the letter or refer to it directly because I have not spoken to the sender of the letter because I don't have that identity. I do have an assurance from the letter that they would be prepared to have at least some of those employees sign on the basis that I keep their names with the utmost confidentiality and anonymity.

Dr. Taft: Well, I guess she avoids the question, so I'll ask it again. Has this government considered suspending the current Alberta Securities Commission Board and appointing an interim administrator?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I'm not avoiding the question as I have not avoided any question on this matter in this House over the last several weeks.

I met with the chairman and the part-time commissioners this morning for about two and a half hours, almost three hours in fact. One, we discussed the transition, as the present chair's term ends a week Friday. Secondly, we discussed the management issues, particularly around the human resource issues.

Mr. Speaker, I have said in this House previously and I'll say it again that the Mack report and the report from the part-time commissioners do say very clearly that the regulatory and enforcement matters of that commission are being handled with consistency and even-handedness; however, there are issues on the human resource side. We discussed the human resource issues. I impressed on them the importance of resolving those as quickly as possible, and I am satisfied at this point that the commission is dealing with this.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, then, does this minister have full confidence in the board of the Alberta Securities Commission and its executive director?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, as I said, I met with the board this morning. We discussed the issues.

Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult for me to deal with allegations without a basis in fact. It is very difficult to deal with unsigned documents. I would say, given the seriousness of the role of the Alberta Securities Commission, that if the hon. Leader of the Opposition has any concrete evidence – I mean concrete, not rumour, not innuendo – that besmirched the names of people, then I think he has a duty to bring that forward. I can assure him that if he does that, I will act swiftly.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. She is avoiding answering, so I will repeat the question. Does the Minister of Finance have full confidence in the Alberta Securities Commission Board and its executive director?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I answered the question. I met with the board and the chairman of the Alberta Securities Commission this morning. I spent three hours with those folks. We reviewed the actions that are being taken, and I have confidence that the board is proceeding in a manner that will address those issues.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: is the minister concerned about cases of alleged irregularities in enforcement at the Alberta Securities Commission? Is she concerned?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I think the key word is “alleged.” I have said consistently and over and over again that you cannot attack people, you cannot attack a commission, you cannot attack a board on allegations.

This is a very important commission in this province. It is important to the business community and to the investment community, and it is the second-largest securities commission in Canada and has been and continues to be highly regarded for its ability to bring forward improvements to securities legislation in this country.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a fair way to do anything. If you have anything to support those allegations, you should bring them forward or you should cease and desist to cast allegations, innuendo on these issues.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: who does the Minister of Finance believe is effectively investigating cases where enforcement irregularities are alleged?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, Perry Mack, I believe a highly regarded and respected lawyer in this province, reviewed a number of these issues. He reported to the part-time commissioners. The part-time commissioners relayed to me that they were confident from the findings of that report that the regulatory and enforcement matters of that commission were being handled consistently and even-handedly. That is where I take my information from.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Marketing

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is yet another blackout in this government’s communication system. This morning the Minister of Government Services said that no decision on extending the regulated rate option would be made until June. Yesterday the Premier, who is still the top Tory, advised consumers not to sign long-term electricity contracts but to stay on the regulated rate option. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Why is Alberta Energy still trying to force consumers to sign up for long-term electricity contracts when even the Premier wants consumers to stay on the regulated rate?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I think, first off, the Premier spoke as an individual in this case as to what he would do in contracting, and that’s what we’ve tried to do, is allow all Albertans to have a choice of getting the products that would best match their need. As in any market short-term instruments come with volatility. If volatility is something you don’t want to manage, then longer term contracts are the better way to proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, given that the only choice here is higher or even higher electricity bills, my next question is to the Premier. Will the Premier guarantee here and now to electricity consumers that the regulated rate option will be extended immediately and indefinitely past 2006?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, he does not tell the complete truth. Now, his leader was in the scrum. I was asked the question by a member of the media – what would I do personally as a consumer? – as a consumer, not as the top Tory but as a consumer. I said that I pay very little on my condominium power bill here in Edmonton. My wife looks after the bill in Calgary. As a consumer I would probably stay with the regulated rate. That’s where we are right now. I was speaking not as the top Tory but as a consumer, as a private citizen. I would ask that he get his facts straight, straight from the horse’s mouth, and that’s the leader who attends every meeting.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Energy: will the minister post on the Department of Energy’s website the Premier’s advice that consumers should avoid signing long-term electricity contracts and stick to the regulated rate? That’s real consumer protection. Why don’t you do it?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, we’re very fortunate that the Premier made a very clear statement just now, and all Albertans are going to be able to have that record in Hansard. That’s a very public document, and that is the source of it.

With respect to the issue at hand there has been a tremendous amount of progress that Albertans have received because of deregulation. We now have the lowest nonhydro electricity rates in this country because of a great supply of electricity that has come on, a new supply, secure and reliable for the long term.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP opposition has said for years that retail power and gas contracts are a bad deal for consumers and are priced up to 25 per cent higher compared to regulated rates. In past years, when electricity rates hit an all-time high, the Premier and the then Energy minister not only defended the contracts but promoted them as a hedge against high prices. Yesterday the Premier finally admitted that the retail power contracts are such a bad deal that even he hasn’t signed on. My question is to the Premier. Why has the government been promoting the benefits of the so-called consumer choice, leading almost a hundred thousand residential, farm, and small business customers to buy a high-priced product that even the Premier is now calling a bad deal?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I’m not calling it a bad deal, and I want the hon. member to listen. Deregulation has worked very well in many areas, in most areas. It has brought thousands, literally thousands, of new megawatts of power on stream. It has provided industry and large businesses with options as to how to buy power and where to buy from. It’s allowed Alberta to become a leader in green power. You know, the hon. member can ask any producer of small power, green power in particular, if it was through deregulation that it was allowed to happen. Most importantly, it’s ensured that Albertans have a secure, stable, and affordable source of electricity for generations to come. That’s what deregulation is all about.

Now, my advice to Albertans is not to sign any contract, be it a mortgage or a cellphone or a long-term power contract or cable television or anything else, without reading the fine print and being satisfied it is the best option, the best option for the consumer and his or her family.

Mr. Eggen: Well, given that a hundred thousand Albertans or more have bought their retail power and gas contracts on false pretenses at the urging of this government – and I will table information from the website that does say that – will the government now compensate those consumers for the difference between the lower regulated rate and the higher contract rate?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we do not tell consumers whether to sign or not to sign. We're saying caveat emptor, let the buyer beware, and make sure you read all the fine print in a contract. I'm sure that the hon. member being a smart person, albeit a member of the NDs but being a smart person, would read a contract.

Mr. Eggen: If the Premier won't compensate Albertans who fell for this sales pitch – and I know of many, many seniors, especially in my constituency, who did so on good grounds – will the government, then, take immediate legislative action to allow any Albertan who is locked into these three- and five-year high-priced contracts to cancel them now without penalty?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, this is an arrangement between a power company, a retailer, and a consumer. We don't get involved other than to offer advice. We have a department in the Department of Government Services, the consumers' affairs department, that warns people, just as I'm warning people, to read the fine print and don't take as gospel what a salesperson tells you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's easy to figure out how to lose any battle, race, or debate, but to win requires the best. We need the best fighting for Albertans when it comes to BSE, energy, auto insurance, and Ottawa's intrusions. There is no free market without competition. The current rates and regulations this government has set benefit the power industry, not the people of Alberta. To the Premier: will this government continue or reregulate the residential and small-business and farming portion of the power industry until there are rules that will allow competition in the power market for the benefit of Albertans?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I can understand that being a new member there's a lack of understanding as to the whole situation relative to deregulation. [interjection] The hon. member for wherever he is, the former school board and MLA who's now back, is yapping and he knows better.

Mr. Speaker, 93 per cent, as I understand, of consumers are on the regulated rate. Ninety-three per cent. The hon. member is talking about 7 per cent who have preferred to sign contracts. Ninety-three per cent are on the regulated rate option. Deregulation, when it was introduced back in 2001, I believe, applied only to the generation side of electricity. Through deregulation many thousands of megawatts of new power were brought on stream.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: will you put Alberta residents, agriculture, and small business first, who are only 15 per cent of the load and use less than one-third of the coal-fired power generated, and reregulate them back to the competitive coal-fired prices?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know the situation relative to businesses and farm operations, but as I pointed out, certainly 93 per cent of all individual residential consumers are on the regulated rate, so I don't know what he's talking about.

Mr. Hinman: That's obvious.

Again to the Premier: will this government change the rules and turn the table 180 degrees for the consumers and make the power producers who generate the power bid, with the lowest bid getting the contract and not the highest bid setting and raising the selling price for all the producers at the cost of the consumers?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm confused. In the hon. member's preamble he talked about the free market, and he talked about free enterprise, and now he wants us to interfere. You know, you can't suck and blow at the same time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Long-term Care Standards

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are all to the Minister of Health and Wellness. A resident of Bethany long-term care in Camrose is on a hunger strike to protest a lack of staff and, therefore, care in the new Bethany long-term care facility. Can the minister tell us if this facility is meeting the standard of care expected of Alberta's long-term care facilities?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, this is a brand new facility. The Health Facilities Review Committee was there in January and at that time found that both the staffing and the facilities were appropriate, but we take very seriously every complaint that comes to us and follow up on every single one. I have a great deal of concern about a senior anywhere in Alberta that represents such an open demonstration of concern. I have not previously had contact with this senior, but the hon. member opposite certainly made me aware last evening that this is a concern for her and for her family.

As we speak, the regional health authority has officials at the Bethany care centre to review both the staffing and the issues that may be affecting this senior and other residents there. It is both a long-term and an assisted facility. We want to make sure that the staffing mix is appropriate to the gravity that's faced by each senior.

Mr. Johnson: My first supplementary: is there a shortage of qualified care attendants to work in our long-term care facilities in Alberta and particularly in our rural facilities such as those in Camrose?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are shortages in all manner of health care disciplines throughout Alberta. Rural Alberta is not unique, but it does include personal care attendants. I think that in rural Alberta we have some wonderful facilities and wonderful staff doing an amazing job, and I want to table that at least first.

This year, Mr. Speaker, along with a 10.3 per cent increase, $522 million more for all of the health regions in Alberta, we added $15 million over and above that to emphasize the importance of quality of care and quality of care for every senior and every resident. Some of those dollars will assist us not only in training and enhancing staff credentials but in working to make sure that we attract the appropriate mix of staff in every long-term care facility.

Mr. Johnson: My final question to the same minister: can the minister clarify the role of the Health and Wellness department and the regional health authority in providing adequate funding to long-term care providers like Bethany in Camrose?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, clearly, the dollars that are provided for the health authorities are distributed based on their particular needs and priorities. There is an obligation, however, with every facility, whether it's a long-term care facility or some other form of assisted-living facility, for that facility's management to report to the health authority, and the health authority in turn reports to Alberta Health and Wellness. Alberta Health and Wellness examines whether or not those facilities are meeting the expectations, the quality, and the standards. In turn, we have been working on new standards both in nursing homes and long-term care and examining standards for assisted living so that we can ensure that we're closing the loop on standards for seniors and those frail elderly in our province.

Coal-bed Methane

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Speaker, coal-bed methane production in Alberta is increasing rapidly. There remain concerns, considerable concerns. The impact on our lands, our environment, our health have not been fully considered even though production is expanding at an alarming rate. My question to the Minister of Energy: given that coal-bed methane development may occur on public lands, will the minister ensure that public members who demonstrate a genuine concern can have intervenor status in order to protect the public's interest in this process approval?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. He does mention that natural gas and coal have an enormous potential, potentially 500 tcf of gas that's in the ground. We know that the expanse of the coal seams that are there and the gas is really just in infancy of discovery and exploration at this stage. In that light, it is true that the landscape that it covers is far reaching. Two-thirds of the southern half of this province has the potential for natural gas and coal. In that respect, we have already existing very good high standards of regulatory processes for where to site wells, locate wells, and the density of wells so that those impacted by that would be consulted and be able to participate in that before well licences are issued.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister of agriculture: given that the EUB allows up to eight wells of coal-bed methane drilling per section compared to the conventional wells of one well per section, what is the minister doing to aid farmers who will lose farmland and value with this type of development?

Mr. Horner: Well, they are compensated, Mr. Speaker, for this type of development and negotiate with the oil companies as well. There has not been to my office any particular concerns other than the concerns of the industry, and we're working with the industry to negotiate on various aspects along with the Minister of Energy and the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development as well as the Minister of Environment, so we're doing a cross-ministry type of discussion.

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Speaker, my third question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What is this government doing to protect the vital long-term interests of Albertans with respect to water, grazing, food production, fishing, and hunting on public lands?

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are many questions in there. It starts out with coal-bed methane and ends up talking about fish and wildlife, and certainly in between there's water quality, which comes under the purview of the Minister of Environment.

Coal-bed methane. Let's speak to that. It's another form of natural gas, and the same stringent rules that apply to surface regulations, that have been developed over the years, also apply to conventional gas and also apply to coal-bed methane. Our role in Sustainable Resource Development is to make sure that we manage the surface impacts of coal-bed methane and other energy development in exactly the same way as conventional oil and gas.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Electricity Marketing Review

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans enjoy the lowest non-hydroelectric rates in the country, and there is ample generation to meet growing demand. However, there is currently under way a review of the wholesale and retail electric markets. My first question is to the Minister of Government Services. Has the Utilities Consumer Advocate provided feedback to the review?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The answer is yes. As a matter of fact, our advisory committee has been out and around the province gathering information. As has been discussed in the House over the last two or three days, there was a report written on February 23, and in that paper it clearly suggested that the advisory committee was suggesting that there needed to be something other than what was proposed or suggested in the discussion paper. The committee has also in that paper suggested that there were some problems. They've now come forward with another paper, that I will be filing today, that clearly indicates some of the proposed solutions to the problem. So we will be making sure that the Department of Energy has this in the mix as they design what needs to go forward.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Again, given that Albertans enjoy reasonable electricity rates and ample supply, why has the minister initiated this review?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The regulated rate option is anticipated to expire on July 1 of 2006. Before that would happen, we wanted to make sure that we had the review of both the wholesale and retail markets to ensure that the rules that are in place are functioning well, that they will ensure that there's an adequacy of supply of electricity for the long term as well. Those things will help ensure that we have reasonable prices. Therefore, there would need to be sufficient time needed, whether we extend that rate or not – all of those things are the options we're talking about – whether that continues or whether we find other options. Those are the parts of the review that we felt had to be completed by this June.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: No further questions. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Stony Plain Youth Justice Committee

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Restorative justice and alternative measures are effective ways to deal with youth crime outside of the court system. Signed decisions of community justice committees are binding unless a prosecutor refers these decisions to the courts. Last night one-quarter of the members of the community justice committee of Stony Plain and area resigned, including the chairman and half of the executive, because of government meddling in their decisions. My question is to the Solicitor General. How do you plan to restore confidence in the powers of youth justice committees given the events in Stony Plain?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can't discuss any specific case involving young persons within the Assembly. However, I am aware that there is some disagreement about how a recent case was handled that resulted in the resignation of some members of the committee, and I will explain our sanction review policy to address this question.

2:10

The youth justice committees administer the extrajudicial sanctions program, Mr. Speaker, under the supervision of their local probation officer. Extrajudicial sanctions are what was formerly known as the youth alternative measures program. The probation supervisor of the youth justice committee is obliged to approve or vary the sanction imposed by the committee. There are occasions when the sanction is found to be unfair or inappropriate, depending upon the circumstances of the case, but the youth justice committees across the province impose hundreds – hundreds – of sanctions each year, and fewer than 1 per cent have ever been varied by a probation supervisor.

Mr. Backs: Supposed to go to the courts if they don't.

Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: what directives to government representatives will you give so that the decisions of youth justice committees are not interfered with arbitrarily?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, as I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, the youth justice committees meet under the supervision of their local probation office, so clearly the system is working very well now.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to tell you that the youth justice committees are incredibly successful. Alberta is a leader in the country in youth justice programs. We have 116 youth justice committees and 1,500 community-minded Albertans who volunteer their time. The program deals with first- and second-time offenders involved in minor and nonviolent crime, and the consequences that are provided by these committees are varied and are based on the offender's attitude and the nature of the offence. These sanctions include community service, essays, a cash donation to a charity, an apology, or counselling.

Mr. Backs: Mr. Speaker, this was one of the most successful committees of its type in Alberta. To the same minister: will you have your department representatives ask the chairman and other resigned members of this very effective community justice committee, which has made hundreds of successful recommendations, to return to their positions?

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Speaker, our department will be working, obviously, with the probation office in that community, but as well

I'm sure there has been conversation between the youth justice committee and our office.

I want to ensure that the hon. member is well aware that last year the committee dealt with 2,500 cases and, as I mentioned, 116 youth justice committees throughout the province, but 2,500 cases, Mr. Speaker, at a cost of almost $400,000. So the program is working very well.

Mr. Speaker, just a final note. A follow-up study shows that 80 per cent of the offenders in this program were not in the justice system two years later.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

National Child Care Initiative

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently there has been speculation about the status of the Liberals' national child care initiative and how close the provinces are to an agreement with Ottawa. Section 92 of Canada's Constitution states explicitly that matters of a local or private nature are provincial responsibilities, and certainly raising children is both a private and a local matter. This federal initiative is a crude attempt to usurp provincial jurisdiction, and many Albertans are concerned that their government not be bought out on this issue by the feds' abuse of their spending power. My question is for the Minister of Children's Services. Is Alberta close to signing a deal with the federal government on a national child care initiative?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you. I can tell the hon. member that Alberta is cautiously optimistic about signing an agreement. We've had many, many discussions with the federal minister, starting with a federal/provincial/territorial meeting in January, then some telephone conversations with him. I can tell him that he agreed verbally over the phone with Alberta's concerns and what we wanted entailed in the agreement. We have written him twice and have called him once and are awaiting written confirmation to ensure that he understands what Alberta has agreed to, and we would like to have it writing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can you assure this Assembly that Alberta families that choose to raise their own children, that choose not to use daycare, will be treated fairly by the new federal Liberal initiative?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can tell the member that I brought that question up at the federal/provincial/territorial meetings in regard to tax relief for stay-at-home parents, and the hon. Minister Dryden indicated to me at that particular time that it wasn't part of the discussion and that it wasn't on the table. What he wanted to talk about was daycare. I can assure the member that we have been very, very adamant that we want to respect Alberta's rights and let Albertans make the choices for their children, what's in the best interests of the children, whether it's nonprofit, for-profit, kinder care. We look at ourselves in Alberta at providing tax relief for stay-at-home parents.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how are you protecting our province's long-term interest in preventing Ottawa from taking away our constitutional and democratic right to made-in-Alberta child care and family policies?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, as the member indicated earlier in his preamble about constitutional rights, it was very important to us, to Alberta, for the federal minister to understand that this is provincial jurisdiction and provincial responsibilities and that we wanted our parents to be able to have choice, not dictated what Ottawa wants. So we were very adamant. That was part of the negotiations all through the process. We are, again, cautiously optimistic. We're waiting for a written response from the minister. He agreed verbally with what Alberta wanted.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For years this government has created a crisis in long-term care through a combination of understaffing, overcharging, and lax inspections. Last week the Premier said that this was totally false, but it was the Premier that was wrong. In fact, as already mentioned, the seniors' long-term care facility in Camrose has gone on a hunger strike to draw attention to the problems in long-term care. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Is it going to take seniors going on hunger strikes to finally get this government to address the severe understaffing in long-term care centres?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think my earlier response today would indicate that it does not take anything more than one complaint, one note to the authorities or to this minister for follow-up action to occur.

Relative to long-term care staffing over the last two years we've been working on standards to increase the staffing. This year it'll go from about 3.1 to close to 3.3, in some circumstances 3.4. As seniors' facilities expand, not only in terms of staffing numbers but take a very close look at the personal care pattern for each senior, at what is required for each individual in the facility. That is the most important question because today lodges in this province aren't what they were 30 years ago. Lodges frequently have people with much more fragile needs, much more typical caseloads like long-term care facilities. We're working to make it appropriate staffing to the people that are within the facility.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess the question to the minister: does the minister consider it acceptable that long-term care centres are so severely understaffed that elderly residents get, if they're lucky, one bath per week? If not, rather than the rhetoric, what is the government going to do about it right away?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, although there is a regulation relative to having one bath per week, that is a minimum standard, a minimum acceptable standard. It applies to many long-term care facilities that I have been in that many times as many as three attendants will lift a person into a very specialized type of bath facility and make sure that they have a proper and thorough bath.

But, Mr. Speaker, again relative to the individual care plan, if patients are incontinent, if they're incapable of bathing themselves, if there are some other reasons from a health perspective that they need assistance and need more frequent bathing, then that is done on the basis of the care plan for the individual.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the minimum standards seem to be the maximum standards.

Given that petitions, direct appeals from seniors and their advocates, an Auditor General's investigation, and now a hunger strike have failed to move this government, what is it going to take to get action from this government to address the serious long-term care problems that are occurring right now?

Ms Evans: Well, there are a number of initiatives that are under way. I know that the hon. member is probably keenly aware, as I am, that the Auditor General has been reviewing circumstances for managing care in long-term care facilities and very soon will release a report. At that time and through the Committee of Supply I will be pleased to further expand on some of the things we're doing.

Mr. Speaker, if I may, we're currently planning amendments to nursing home operation regulations, reviewing our monitoring mechanisms to support quality of care, reviewing the funding methodology in concert with the regional authorities, enhancing the skills of staff providing specialized care, particularly for persons with Alzheimer's, and implementing a standardized provincial quality-indicator reporting system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Access to Medical Services

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have received many calls and letters from my constituents concerned about eight- or nine-hour wait times for services at the Grey Nuns hospital in Edmonton. Sadly, this is also an issue that I have had first-hand experience with recently. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. How does the minister explain the government's failure to ensure that Edmontonians receive timely access to essential services?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, one comment I'll make in responding to that question is that in Canada there is no better graded or better recognized or premium quality-of-care delivery region than the Capital health region, and we should applaud their efforts.

Mr. Speaker, as to individual circumstances for waiting and access, there are certainly issues that we still have relative to diagnosis, the kinds of assessments that are necessary. As we learned fairly recently, although it may not apply to the hon. member's illustrated case, with hip replacements and joint replacements sometimes 40 per cent of those patients waiting need more care, more health-assisted living kinds of support before they actually are able to have the surgery. So frequently it's not the fault of the system but, in actual fact, relates to the condition that the patient is in when they come forward to receive services in health.

Mr. Agnihotri: Again to the same minister: considering that it's not uncommon to have as many as 80 to 100 people waiting in emergency for admission, how long will it take to translate the government's promises of funding into action and results?

Ms Evans: You know, Mr. Speaker, I'm glad that question was asked because it allows me the opportunity to comment on an initiative of my predecessor, which is local primary care initiatives, which will see us reconstitute the way we access health systems and not after hours necessarily go to emergency departments but go to places where teams of health care professionals including doctors, nurses, occupational therapists, mental health specialists, counsellors, nutritionists, and other specialists will be able to address the concerns which may be of a very important nature but not necessarily urgent. One of the problems in the emergency departments of Alberta and all over the country is that frequently people who access these departments are not going for urgent reasons but for important reasons.

Mr. Agnihotri: Again to the same minister: given that wait times create unsafe conditions for both patients and staff, how can the government continue to claim that the Alberta health care system is number one in Canada?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, it isn't us that are saying it, although I'm happy to reiterate it. I'm very happy to applaud those people. But everything we're doing, including the focus on the international symposium looking at ways that people are doing it differently elsewhere, I can assure you, will be brought to bear to the best practices of the health system. Perhaps the best illustration is from Dr. Alastair Buchan from Oxford, who had defined our stroke strategy. He went back to the United Kingdom, and when he came back, he said: you know, we're better here than they are there. He said that in some circumstances we are nine years ahead of Oxford.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

School Construction

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two days ago the Edmonton Catholic school board revised their capital plan, which they will present to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. In their revisions the school board moved the proposed Castle Downs high school from a top priority to a bottom priority. Instead, the board decided to build an elitist academic school on the south side of Edmonton. This suddenly changes the events, appearing to have little correlation with the dire need of a high school in my riding. Mr. Speaker, my first question is to the minister of infrastructure. Does this government or your ministry have any influence on where and when schools are built?

Speaker's Ruling Anticipation

The Speaker: Hon. member, and hon. minister, it is our tradition that when a particular estimate is up before the Assembly, questions are really not directed that day in the question period for that particular estimate. It so turns out that this afternoon, I do believe, the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation will be in the Assembly to answer those questions. Perhaps we might wait just half an hour or so, hon. member.

Proceed to your second question.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I'll proceed to a question that has no financial implications. My supplemental to the minister of infrastructure: once a capital plan is filed with the ministry, does the ministry have any influence on the possibility of a revision?

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The process is that each and every school board in the province puts forward their capital proposals. We then go through and attempt to find out which capital project is a higher priority when it comes to between the particular school boards. So we do have the ability to fluctuate between the school boards. When it comes to the actual school board on their specific priority list, it is very difficult for my department to change what is on their priority list. We certainly can ask the school boards for justification. In this particular case what we saw was one particular school, which had been on the list for two years, taken off the list and another one put on. So we do have to question why this was done in this particular circumstance.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental to the Minister of Education: does the minister encourage school boards to establish such elitist schools that require students to have an average of over 85 per cent in order to be accepted?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that local school boards with their locally elected trustees have to be responsive to the needs of their students and the families in the areas that they serve. So if a local school board wishes to pursue a particular style of policy implementation, that is entirely up to their discretion. We do not encourage or discourage. All that we try to do is ensure that they follow the laws of the province, the guidelines that we have set forward, and that they themselves look after their own policies and adhere to them to the best of their abilities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Access to the Future Fund

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Increased investments in advanced education are certainly welcome on this side of the House, even if they amount to fixing damage done by years of underfunding or starvation diets, as the minister has described it. The proposed access to the future fund certainly has potential, even if that potential is being stunted somewhat by inadequate funding. My concern today – and I hope that it can be allayed – is that the public relations strategy is considerably ahead of the legislative process. My question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. Why is the minister publicly committing money from the fund even to worthy projects when this Assembly has yet to pass the legislation that establishes the fund?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. When you're in government, you have to do planning, you have to look forward, and you have to deal with the issues as they come up in the context of planning and looking forward. Every year a government, as this member will know having sat through one of them, brings forward a throne speech which outlines what its program of activity is for the year, and in that throne speech there's a plan and a program for the year. The government also brings forward a budget, and in that budget there's a plan and a program for a year. Obviously, in the context of both the throne speech and the budget there are things which are proposed which the government has the intention of bringing forward but which are always subject to the approval and sanction of the Legislature.

In the throne speech this year there was promise of an access to the future fund to be funded at a level of $3 billion, which would provide funding for certain types of projects, and in that budget there were two projects mentioned as demonstrations of the breadth of the fund. One of them was the Lois Hole Campus Alberta digital library, and the other was a centre for Chinese studies at the university.

So commitments were made in the throne speech, commitments which have been followed through in Bill 1. When the bill is actually passed, if the Legislature passes it – if the Legislature doesn't pass it, of course, as minister I will have to go back and make some explanations, but the government expects that the bill will come to the Legislature and be passed – we will follow through with the commitments.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: I'm a bit confused about the difference between an intention and a commitment, I guess. Why is the minister publicly committing money from the fund before the advisory council envisioned by the fund has been set up?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the throne speech there was a commitment made to show the breadth of possibility that the fund could produce. One of those was a centre for Chinese studies. That commitment was in the throne speech. The other was the Lois Hole Campus Alberta digital library. That commitment was in the throne speech.

One of the things that has happened since that time, Mr. Speaker, of course, is that there's an enthusiastic groundswell of activity, with people looking at the promise that's been made in the throne speech and in Bill 1 and saying: when does this start, and how does this happen? The clear answer to that has to be that this fiscal year it starts. How does it happen? Well, we can give some general parameters to it and, indeed, yes, say to people: this fits into the broad parameters of access, affordability, and quality. So we can give some assurances that particular gifts will fit within the parameters of the fund even as we wait for the access council to design the specifics on some of the other aspects.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, why is the minister publicly committing to projects when the promised rules and regulations around eligibility haven't been established?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, when the proposed gift fits so obviously within the parameters of what the fund is going to establish, it's not difficult to in fact encourage those gifts to be made and indicate that they do fit within the parameters. Where the rules and regulations are going to come in, clearly, is with respect to defining the parameters and the margins. So the question about matching gifts in kind: there might have to have specific rules around that, certainly rules with respect to what type of a gift or what type of a project might qualify that's a so-called ingenuity project or a project that doesn't require matching grants. There are lots of areas where there have to be rules and processes and procedures put into place, but in many cases the gift is so obviously going to fit within the parameters that it's very easy to encourage that gift to be made.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I will apologize to the six hon. members that I was unable to get into the question period today. It seems that in the days in which I was recognizing the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, we actually got more than 14 members in.

Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests before we move on?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly 33 special guests from my constituency of Edmonton-Strathcona. These guests are members of Wanna Walka seniors' group. They meet in the Bonnie Doon mall for their walking and are engaged in many charitable and community-building activities. They're accompanied by Germaine Lehodey and Carol Lockhart and are here this afternoon to observe the proceedings of the Assembly. My guests are sitting in the members' gallery. I will now request them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very happy to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 67 students and nine adults from the Roland Michener secondary school. They are seated in the members' gallery as well as in the public gallery from what I gather. They are accompanied by their teacher, Miss Tracey Crain, as well as teacher's assistants Mrs. Sheri Smears, Mrs. Tina Rediron, and Ms Melody Wilson as well as parent helpers Mrs. Brenda Grove-White, Mr. Renato Pablo, Mrs. Julie Sparks, Ms Allyson Goyette, and Mr. Mark Carnegie. I'd ask that they stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I introduced to the House Mr. Cliff Soper. I won't go through the full introduction. I will send that to Mr. Soper as a copy of Hansard, but I would ask him, now that he's arrived, to stand and please receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Anne Frank Memorial

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize a young Jewish girl who was caught up in the human tragedy of the Holocaust of World War II, yet she brought inspiration to millions of people around the world.

While hidden by a Dutch family from the Nazis in a secret annex of a house in Amsterdam, Anne Frank documented her life and thoughts in a diary. Her diary was discovered after the liberation of Holland by Canadian troops. It was published as The Diary of Anne Frank.

While Anne did not live to see the end of the war, her wisdom and courage carry on through her diary, which has been read and loved by people of all ages around the world. I've had the opportunity to visit the Anne Frank House in Amsterdam, and the exhibits there are thought-provoking, chilling, and yet inspirational.

Her father, Otto Frank, felt that in her diary his daughter challenged him to champion the causes of reconciliation and human rights throughout the world, and that task is also for us as we work for unity and peace. It is important for all of us to remember victims of the Holocaust, like Anne, who have suffered from hatred and injustice. By remembering, we can help to ensure that such horrors never happen again.

Albertans are able to reflect on the life of Anne Frank and the Holocaust by visiting a remarkable exhibit: Anne Frank in the World, 1929-1945. The exhibit is currently at Calgary city hall until May 1, and following that, the exhibit will be moved to the Beth Tzedec Synagogue in Calgary until May 8. I encourage all members and all Albertans to take the opportunity to learn about the life of this young girl and this dark period in history.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Northlands Park

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the past several weeks some members of the opposition have questioned the funding of organizations such as Northlands Park and Stampede Park without perhaps understanding what these organizations do. I'd like to share some of the activities in which Northlands Park is engaged so that in the future the members opposite will be able to ask informed questions.

Northlands is first and foremost an organization which is volunteer driven. Each year more than 20,000 hours of service are contributed by 700 volunteer supporters. These volunteers and the organization which they support are dedicated to enhancing economic and social benefits not only for Edmonton but for northern and central Alberta as well. This is accomplished through the production of agricultural, entertainment, and business events and maintaining multipurpose facilities.

Northlands is also Edmonton's second-largest tourism attraction and draws an estimated 3 and a half million visitors to its site each year. The economic impact of the various events produced and supported by Northlands is estimated to be $400 million per year.

While Northlands Park is justifiably well known for horse racing, they also represent world-class events such as the Canadian Finals Rodeo and Klondike Days Exposition. Klondike Days are not only a fun event with many economic benefits for Edmonton businesses, but this event also benefits charities. For over 50 years Northlands Park has partnered with Edmonton's major service clubs to raise funds for charities during Klondike Days. Each year approximately $500,000 is raised for multiple projects, including the Glenrose hospital and the Salvation Army.

Mr. Speaker, money which this organization earns from the Alberta lottery fund is utilized to ensure that events such as those that I have just listed are possible. I believe this is a great social investment for central and northern Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Catholic High School Construction

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two days ago I attended a board meeting of the Edmonton Catholic school board during which the board approved several brand new and innovative curriculum programs for its students. These programs included jazz dancing, film studies, and science technology adventure, programs aimed at educating the whole child. These new programs underline and reinforce the fundamental value of public education, being all inclusive, comprehensive, and accessible and relevant to all children. Furthermore, these programs will entice students to discover their talents and potentials. The school board should be commended for creating such distinctive programs for our children.

However, Mr. Speaker, at the same board meeting the school board approved construction of a high school which will not be accessible to all of our children. This new high school will be constructed only for the academic elite. Placed in an affluent Edmonton neighbourhood, this high school will only admit children with a grade score average above 82 per cent. This will be the Harvard of high schools.

Mr. Speaker, as an educator, a parent, and an MLA I am concerned. I appreciate the need of challenging our gifted children with extracurricular assignments and instruction, but this can be accomplished in a regular high school setting. We must not allow our public education to become segregationist, where bright kids are set aside from average kids, who, in turn, are in a different setting than elite athletes. This violates the fundamental principles of public education and prevents our children from sharing their talents with each other. As such, I hope that our Ministry of Education will examine this issue accordingly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Agriculture Industry

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Between 1901 and 1905 40,000 homesteads were granted in what became the province of Alberta. Homesteaders were given freehold title to their land in exchange for paying $10, agreeing to stay on the land at least three years, breaking a certain amount of land each year, and, finally, building a house.

That was a century ago, Mr. Speaker, and over the past 100 years new technologies, management practices, and economic environments have challenged Alberta's agricultural industry and transformed our province into a mainstay of our provincial economy and the global marketplace.

The strong foundation of Alberta's agricultural industry and the continued successful growth is due to Alberta's agricultural innovation. From its humble beginning through the introduction of Marquis wheat, irrigation, the Noble blade cultivator, and numerous other advancements Alberta's agricultural industry has proven itself a success and resilient.

As Albertans celebrate our great province's centennial and look back at where Alberta began, the agricultural industry both planted the seeds of what Alberta has become but is also positioning itself to nurture our province for future generations. Through expanding research and development in the agricultural industry, Alberta is on pace to increase value-added production to $20 billion and increase primary production to $10 billion by the year 2010.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the essential role Alberta's agricultural industry continues to play in the success of our province yesterday, today, and tomorrow. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Edmonton Public Schools

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we celebrate Education Week, I would like to share with pride some of the work Edmonton public schools is doing to provide over 80,000 students with an outstanding education. As a district Edmonton public schools is committed to achieving superb results from all students. It is concentrating on improving both high school completion rates and student achievement results. Edmonton public schools believes that all of the students should leave grade 3 knowing how to read at a grade 3 level, complete and pass their grade 10 courses, and complete high school.

As part of the district's planning process each school has selected an instructional focus to address the most pressing academic need among its students, such as reading comprehension, writing, or critical thinking. Individual schools in the district as a whole have also set a number of targets for improving student achievement and high school completion which align with the district's priorities and provincial requirements.

Over the past few years Edmonton public schools has been making progress in improving its student achievement results and high school completion rates. For example, on the provincial achievement tests the district has been making steady increases in the percentage of students achieving the acceptable standard and the standard of excellence over the past five years.

To better support the work of teaching and learning, the district has been increasing the opportunities for collaboration among staff and fostering the use of research-based teaching practices in its schools. Edmonton public schools is also involving parents, business, and community partners in supporting the work of teaching and learning. The district is committed to offering a wide variety of programs to assist students in achieving superb results. In partnership with parents the district has developed 30 alternative programs, including language, sports, dance, cadet, and faith-based programs as well as programs based on particular teaching strategies or philosophies.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Chris Muller

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with a heavy heart that I rise in this Assembly today to recognize a truly outstanding Albertan who has left this world far too soon. Chris Muller, only 29 years old and a resident of Cochrane, was killed in a hang-gliding competition this past Friday near Orlando, Florida.

Chris was a champion in the very truest sense of the word, having won both the Canadian hang-gliding and paragliding championships on multiple occasions. He was among the very best foot-launched, free-flight pilots in the world, yet he was perhaps the most humble man I have ever known. From their home-based school on top of the big hill at Cochrane Chris, along with his dad, Willi Muller, and his mom, Vincene, taught hang-gliding and paragliding to thousands of enthusiasts and operated one of the most successful businesses of its kind anywhere in the world. Almost everyone who has ever spent an afternoon in Cochrane enjoying the famous ice cream has looked up at the big hill and marvelled at Willi, Chris, and their friends soaring on the breeze with the hawks and the eagles.

Even at such a tender young age Chris was not only a friend but a teacher and a mentor to all who knew him, including those of us who were many years his senior and even many who had been flying long before Chris began his aviation career. Most recently Chris flew as an extreme aerobatic pilot for the Red Bull Air Force and travelled the world representing his sports, his province, and his country. It was Leonardo da Vinci who said, "For once you have tasted flight you will walk the earth with your eyes turned skywards, for there you have been and there you will long to return."

Mr. Speaker, Alberta and the sports of hang-gliding and paragliding have lost a favourite son, an invaluable ambassador, but most importantly a remarkable young man. And for that we are all less well off today.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 30 I wish to advise you that at the appropriate time I intend to move "to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance"; namely, the loss of investor confidence in the Alberta Securities Commission's ability to adequately regulate the securities market and the resulting threat to Alberta's capital markets.

head:

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the required copies of the response to the Department of Energy's call for comments on its discussion paper on the wholesale and retail market, and I would just like to read a little bit of what it's about.

The Utilities Consumer Advocate Advisory Council has reviewed the options available to the Government concerning retail electricity policy. We believe that the deregulation of the Alberta electricity market has been successful in many ways. For example, competition in the market for electricity generation has added new generation and has removed inefficient generation from service. We characterize . . .

The Speaker: We're into tablings, hon. minister, not Ministerial Statements.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table an e-mail from Brad Wutzke, the vice-president of TWU local 204 in Calgary. The e-mail details initial lockout actions Telus has apparently used against their unionized workers. Employees at Telus have been attempting to negotiate a contract . . .

The Speaker: The same admonition provided to the hon. Minister of Government Services will now be provided. We're into tablings.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: I'm under pressure now.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a document that casts a solemn shadow on Alberta's first hundred years. On the eve of International Day of Mourning, which is tomorrow, the Alberta Federation of Labour has released a tally of the number of Albertans killed on the job in the first hundred years: 9,219 individuals.

I would also like to table an excerpt from the government of Alberta's web page called Consumer Choice. This page offers several arguments for purchasing competitive retail long-term alternatives.

Thanks.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, it would certainly be my hope that we could get the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood back into the question period. Did you want to be recognized, sir?

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Mason: I'd be pleased to do that.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday I used certain language in my questions to the hon. Minister of Government Services in suggesting that he had misled the House. I know the parliamentary rules a little bit now, having been here, and I recognize that such an expression is considered unparliamentary. I also know the rule that you're expected to accept the word of a member when he makes a statement. My, I guess, frustration with the answer caused me to overcome my normal tempered good judgment, so I would withdraw those comments and apologize to the member and to the House.

The Speaker: That should now conclude that matter, and the hon. member will be recognized in the future if he chooses to be recognized.

head: Request for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition on the Standing Order 30 application.

Securities Commission

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to propose the following motion.

Be it resolved that this Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the loss of investor confidence in the Alberta Securities Commission's ability to adequately regulate the securities market and the resulting threat to Alberta's capital markets.

If I could just speak for a very few minutes, Mr. Speaker, as to the urgency of this. Alberta is a major business centre. It's the second largest centre of business head offices in Canada, and it's home to one of the world's largest concentrations of petroleum corporations. This sector depends on a credible capital market, as do thousands of jobs, especially in Calgary. Capital markets are under terribly close scrutiny these days in light of scandals at Enron, WorldCom, Martha Stewart, Hollinger in Canada, and so on. Capital is incredibly mobile. It can move from country to country with the flick of a switch.

The problems at the Alberta Securities Commission have been building for well over a year, and they've now reached the crisis stage. They are clearly interfering in the enforcement activities of the commission, and if action is not taken urgently, they will interfere in all aspects of the commission's activities. Today we see the leading financial newspaper in the country, the Financial Post, plastering this story all over its front page.

Markets depend on one thing more than any other: trust. If investors cannot have trust and confidence that a securities market is operating fairly and efficiently, they will move elsewhere. Thousands of jobs are at stake, billions of dollars, and it's not an exaggeration to say that one of the cornerstones of Alberta's economic future is at stake.

Today there is an active movement to consolidate all securities activity in Canada in Toronto, pulling control out of Calgary and putting the guiding hands for the future of business in Alberta in offices on Bay Street. Delaying action on the Alberta Securities Commission feeds that movement. The Legislature must turn its attention to this issue urgently, today, now, or we'll be sending a signal of neglect and inaction to the world.

Mr. Speaker, debate on the estimates of the Ministry of Finance have concluded. The emerging issues at the Alberta Securities Commission require extended discussion. Questions clearly have been raised repeatedly in question period, but many of the most serious issues remain unanswered and unresolved. This requires a discussion not constrained by the procedural parameters of question period. The minister and the commission itself appear to be at odds regarding who has authority to release which information. This Assembly and the public need immediate clarification on who has authority over this complicated investigation.

Alberta Securities Commission staff have indicated that they are, quote, unable to perform their jobs effectively due to an environment that continues to deteriorate daily, end quote. The minister has defended the current course of action because the problems are, in her mind, limited to the human resource side and says that the Alberta Securities Commission remains a functional regulatory and enforcement body. However, employees in large numbers are indicating that the toxic workplace environment, quote, will negatively impact the future of the organization and the health of Alberta's capital markets, end quote.

Mr. Speaker, the Securities Commission governs the second largest financial market in the country. Shaken or diminished confidence in the Securities Commission will result in significant financial repercussions to Alberta investors and businesspeople and a loss of national and international confidence in our markets. Every day that passes with unresolved questions and continued uncertainty about the future of the Alberta Securities Commission and the ability of staff to do their jobs makes the ultimate resolution of the problem more difficult. It also gives ammunition to those who are pressing right now to centralize securities regulation in Toronto. Alberta needs to resolve this issue if we are to retain regional control of these markets.

Mr. Speaker, an extended debate is needed immediately to clear the air on this issue. Putting aside our ordinary business and having this debate will demonstrate how seriously this Assembly takes this issue and send the proper signals to the investment and business communities that this issue will indeed be resolved in a timely fashion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 30(2) indicates that the member, in this case the Leader of the Official Opposition, "may briefly state the arguments in favour of the request for leave and the Speaker may allow such debate as he considers relevant to the question of urgency of debate." So I'm prepared to recognize additional members. The hon. Minister of Finance on the urgency.

Mrs. McClellan: Yes. If I may speak to the urgency. First, Mr. Speaker, I would point out that this has been a subject of question period for many days, so it has been discussed. Secondly, there was a two-hour opportunity during my estimates to discuss this further just last Thursday. So there has been an opportunity for discussion.

I would say to the House and to the hon. member that there is no evidence that the issues at the Alberta Securities Commission relate to investor confidence or pose a threat to capital markets. The evidence on enforcement activities and the regulatory function administered by the Alberta Securities Commission, as quoted in their report from the review of this, states clearly that those enforcement policies administered by the Alberta Securities Commission have been, are, and continue to be applied consistently, fairly, and with an even hand. Mr. Speaker, I continue to have confidence in the staff at the Securities Commission to carry out that work in our province.

I would remind the House that the Auditor General as part of his audit process is going to look at the systems and processes there, beginning almost immediately. Given the importance of this commission in our capital markets, I've asked the Auditor General to expedite his review and report to this Legislature as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker, the focus is on human resource matters. I would be the first to say that if this continued, there could be – could be – possibly linkages to work performance, which could – there has been no evidence to this date – cause some concern on the ability of staff to carry out their duties.

Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. members of the sequence of events. Early in January, when it was brought to my attention, I wrote to the Securities Commission part-time commissioners, told them that these issues had been raised with me, asked them to investigate and respond as timely and completely as possible. They engaged an outside person, Mr. Perry Mack. He subsequently interviewed the anonymous complainants, presented a report on February 16. The persons who were involved in the allegations and other staff were then interviewed by Perry Mack. A second report was presented to the commission members on about March 22, in that time frame. Then the part-time commissioners forthwith reported back to me.

Mr. Speaker, there was a confidence in that report on the regulatory and enforcement matters. There were human resource matters raised. I spoke of that in the House. Part-time commissioners immediately engaged BearingPoint, a very credible firm, to assist them in dealing with those human resource matters and questions, and that is under way. Subsequently, to ensure the security and the integrity of the systems at the Alberta Securities Commission, KPMG was engaged to do a forensic review of their systems.

To suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is not being dealt with, to suggest that we are at odds as to who owns the information is completely wrong and should not be used to lend credence to an urgency. I don't go by newspaper reports. I have said clearly in this House that the information that is under question, the Mack report, was provided to me on condition of solicitor/client privilege to protect the identity and anonymity of the persons who brought the information forward. If I were not prepared to accept the report on that basis, I would not have taken that report. I think it would be a lack of credibility. Obviously, the report is not mine to give. I don't have that ability. That is not, I don't think, in anything other than the comments by the hon. member, to clear that up.

So, Mr. Speaker, I don't agree with the hon. member. There is no hard or even soft evidence that this is affecting our business community and our capital markets. I've encouraged the hon. member if he's receiving information from them other than from the newspaper reports. I have some letters that have been raised with me. I have responded to those people immediately. Much of what I hear is based on newspaper reports.

Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with this. I have confidence in the commission's desire to have this dealt with thoroughly and completely. As I indicated earlier, I spent three hours with those members this morning. They have every desire to protect the integrity of the Securities Commission.

Mr. Speaker, the last point. The issue of a national regulatory system has been in the works for, I would say, at least two years. Now, it is clear that the passport system is endorsed by all the provinces except Ontario, so to suggest that because there is a desire in Ontario to be the single regulator is cause for this issue certainly does not hold any credence with me and does not speak to urgency. This is a matter that has been going on for some time. In fact, the passport system is designed to be in place in Canada in August of this year.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe there is an urgency. I do agree that this is an important matter, but I do believe it is being dealt with.

The Speaker: I'm going to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking to the urgency of this, of course, I think we'd all agree about the public importance, namely the loss of investor confidence in the Alberta Securities Commission. This is a very serious matter, and I do believe it is urgent. Contrary to the Minister of Finance's approach that this is ongoing, and we're looking at it, and the Auditor General is going to be involved – this is true – the reality is that it crosses two important groups that have to believe in the Securities Commission.

One is what is happening nationally. We can talk and pooh-pooh the idea that these are in national newspapers – the National Post, Globe and Mail, Financial Post, and all the rest of it – but the reality is that investors read those particular newspapers. If you're an investor and you're looking at those headlines that are occurring almost on a regular basis, as the minister said, since January, ask yourself if you're going to invest in the Alberta Securities Commission. The answer is probably not, unless you're a real gambler, and then probably you'd want to go to Vegas in that case. So perception is everything, and that's the important point here: perception. That's what's going across Canada.

I have here in front of me one that might be even be more particular. It's called the Business Edge. It's Ontario business news. This came out March 31. The whole article is about what they see happening on the Alberta Securities Commission in terms of enforcement. It's very damning, if I can put it that way, Mr. Speaker, if you're a businessperson, an investor reading this. It says here, just one quote: "The people who are the subject of a (securities) arrest warrant pretty much have to stumble into the police." Whether this is right or wrong is not the point. This is what's going out nationally. If you're an investor, you're not going to say: well, I've got a few thousand dollars here, and there's something that looks good on the Securities Commission in Alberta. You know, it seems to me to be logical that you're not going to want to do that unless you have money that you want to throw away.

The second group, Mr. Speaker, is the same sorts of things. We're getting, and I'm sure the Minister of Finance and the leader of the opposition are, e-mails from a lot of small investors in this province. Again, these are people with perhaps a few thousand dollars who want to invest in some new, fledgling company that looks good, and they looked at the prospectus and all the rest of it. If they don't believe that there are rules and regulations there that are followed – and, again, they're reading the news reports and seeing all the problems that are occurring. Perception is the important thing here because we don't all have the facts. Perception is everything.

I think it would behoove us to say: okay, this Legislature sees this as a very serious problem and of some urgency because, as the Leader of the Opposition was talking about, it certainly could be hurting investment in this province not only in the short run but if this thing festers on. Sure, the minister is going to have the Auditor General report, but my understanding is that the Auditor General is not going to report back on this until July. You know, in investment time that's a long time. After the House is over – and we don't know when we'll rise; perhaps sometime in May. Who knows? Then there's going to be not even the focus there.

If I'm an investor both nationally and provincially, I'm saying: what's going on with that Securities Commission? What's happening? Not even an Auditor General's report on this coming down, I believe, until July. That's what I've been led to believe. I think there is some urgency to deal with this. At least it would show to the people of Alberta and to the people of Canada – and I might point out that there are American investors that I'm aware of and world investors that invest in the Securities Commission too. At least they're saying that the Legislative Assembly is taking this seriously if we have this urgent discussion. Perhaps some direction could flow from this because if we just let it fester and fester and fester, I can absolutely guarantee that this will impact investment in Alberta. I don't think there's any doubt about that, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've recognized three hon. members to this point in time. I've indicated that I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, and then if there's one additional speaker from the government side, perhaps that would be pretty good leeway under Standing Order 30.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak in favour of the motion, in particular to the matters of urgency. The issue of question period has been raised. We work under the constrictions of what is set out by parliamentary process. Question period is too limited to be discussing the range of issues that is involved in this particular issue. The issues are in fact unresolved. The crisis is growing. We have had three reports done, each one leading to the next one, and no resolution is forthcoming from this, again showing a trend for the issue continuing to grow with no resolution.

Dr. Taft: It festers.

Ms Blakeman: Continuing to fester.

The staff clearly do not have confidence and have expressed that. Their concerns and, indeed, their actions that they have been taking have continued to grow. The Auditor General will not be reporting until July, which does not resolve this issue as far as investors are concerned and as far as our concerns as expressed are. It has been four months since this issue was identified, and as I say, we get more reports, more concern, more activity, and the issue is not being resolved. It is festering.

We need an urgent conclusion to this. I believe that there is urgency to this issue, and I ask the Speaker to rule in favour of the Standing Order 30 and in support of the motion proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The only question really on the table at this point is a question of urgency. There has been all sorts of discussion about importance, but very little discussion about the urgency of dealing with it today. As well, if I might say, there's been no comment on what light, if any, would be brought to the topic by having a discussion today and whether or not, in fact, having a discussion today might create more of a problem than it solves.

The issues that we have before us with respect to the Securities Commission. The Securities Commission is a very important body, and confidence in the Securities Commission is very important. Nobody will deny that. The fact of the matter is that the issues that have been raised have been out for a considerable period of time now. They've been out, as the hon. Minister of Finance mentioned, publicly since January and had been ongoing before that. There have been steps taken to deal with the issues. The reality is that there is no evidence of consumer nonconfidence in the Securities Commission. There's no evidence of the things that the hon. member has raised about the problems.

Notwithstanding the exhibits which the hon. Leader of the Opposition blatantly exhibits, breaking the rules of the House yet again and probably not again apologizing for it, just as he did last week when he raised egregious comments about the Auditor General, notwithstanding that, Mr. Speaker, there is no evidence of urgency. There is a very good chance that by moving to a public debate with the people who are the least knowledgeable about the issues and ignoring the fact that the Auditor General has his study ongoing, that there will be a new chair appointed to the Securities Commission imminently – now is the last time, Mr. Speaker, that we should be moving to an uninformed discussion this afternoon about an issue without any resolution but just merely discussing yet again in public, engaging in the same witch hunt that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has engaged in in the past.

It's not an urgent issue. It is a very important issue. The Securities Commission is very important, and one should not take lightly the discussion of the Securities Commission, its regulatory processes, and the effect on the public markets. Certainly, we shouldn't go to a discussion this afternoon without any evidence, as the hon. Minister of Finance indicated earlier, that there is a lack of consumer confidence in the commission or anything else that could be repaired by a discussion this afternoon.

The Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 30(2) the Speaker must now rule on whether the request for leave to adjourn the business of the House is in order. I would like to point out at the outset that the application was received in the Speaker's office this morning at 11:15, so the requirement of providing at least two hours' notice to the Speaker has been met. The motion reads as follows:

Be it resolved that this Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the loss of investor confidence in the Alberta Securities Commission's ability to adequately regulate the securities market and the resulting threat to Alberta's capital markets.

To be in order, Standing Order 30(7) requires that "the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration." I would refer all members to Marleau and Montpetit's House of Commons Procedure and Practice at pages 586 to 588 and Beauchesne 390 with respect to genuine emergency. Clearly, there's no hesitation in the chair's mind that this is a serious issue as demonstrated by the number of questions that have been raised in the question period over the past month.

In reviewing the proposed Notice of Motion, the chair notes that the hon. leader is saying that the matter of urgent public importance is "the loss of investor confidence in the Alberta Securities Commission's ability to regulate the securities market." I would however like to point out that that requires a very subjective interpretation. The chair is hard pressed to condone a statement that there is a "loss of investor confidence" of such a magnitude to constitute a "genuine emergency" in the province of Alberta and to justify adjourning the ordinary business of the Assembly. I want to emphasize the subjective interpretation of "the loss of investor confidence."

As the chair indicated in granting a request by the then Leader of the Official Opposition on May 24, 2000, which the chair notes was the last time that an emergency debate occurred in this Assembly, things can change in the matter and in a manner of a day to make something a genuine emergency. The chair is prepared to recognize and watch this evolving situation.

The chair would also like to point out Beauchesne 428(e) with respect to newspapers, and hon. members might want to just reflect on that as well.

At this time, based on the arguments submitted today, the chair does not find the request for leave in order.

Speaker's Ruling Estimates Consideration

The Speaker: Now, hon. members, we come to a very, very interesting time in parliamentary democracy in this Assembly. I would like to refer all members to Standing Order 58(5), which says that "on Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday afternoon, during the consideration of the main estimates," this being a Wednesday, and we are considering the main estimates, "the Committee of Supply shall be called not later than 3:10 p.m." – and it's now 3:19 p.m. – "provided that Orders of the Day have already been called" – they have not – "and shall rise and report no later than 5:15 p.m."

So in order to proceed, we need unanimous consent of the House to waive this standing order so that I might say "Orders of the Day."

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: 3:20 Orders of the Day
head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2005-06
Infrastructure and Transportation

The Chair: The Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Thank you to all hon. members who have allowed me to come today and allowed me to speak here, and thank you for the unanimous consent.

An Hon. Member: It was tough.

Dr. Oberg: I know it was a close vote, so I truly do appreciate that. It is certainly an honour for me to serve as Alberta's Infrastructure and Transportation minister and present the ministry's estimates for the 2005-2006 fiscal year. I'll also provide a few details about some of the ministry's extensive programs and activities.

I wish to publicly thank my deputy minister, Mr. Jay Ramotar, and his executive team and all Alberta Infrastructure and Transportation staff for their outstanding work, and I'm sure they're out doing that outstanding work right at this minute. I'm proud to have such a group of hard-working people.

This upcoming year marks the third year that the department's estimates have been completed using the new fiscal framework. That means the committee will have two votes, one for operating expenses and equipment/inventory purchases and one for capital investment. This fiscal framework, which was first introduced in Budget 2003, allows the ministry to address infrastructure needs in a more predictable way and has allowed a significant increase in the level of capital spending.

The department's estimates to be voted include approximately 3 and a half billion dollars for operating expenses and equipment/inventory purchases and roughly $700 million for capital investment. It's an overall budget of approximately $4.2 billion. Of that $4.2 billion $320 million is for noncash items such as amortization and consumption of inventory. This translates into an actual spending target, then, of approximately $3.8 billion. This $3.8 billion will be spent in two broad categories: first of all, operation and maintenance, noncapital plan programs; secondly, investment in government-owned and -supported infrastructure, or capital plan programs.

The first category, operation and maintenance, includes plant operations and maintenance funding of $351 million for school facilities. This supports the lights-on requirement for schools, including utilities, caretaking, insurance, routine repairs, and minor maintenance such as snow removal, groundskeeping, and painting. There's another $279 million for government operations and services. This includes property operation leases, operating the Swan Hills Treatment Centre, capital and accommodation projects, maintenance of government-owned facilities, site environmental services, land services, centennial projects, air transportation services, and vehicle services.

Still within the first category, operation and maintenance, we have $217 million under provincial highway systems and safety for highway maintenance, vehicle inspections stations, rest areas, ferries, and maintenance of transportation infrastructure in provincial parks and on Indian, or native, lands. It also includes $30 million for vehicle and driver safety programs, monitoring the commercial carrier industry, numerous traffic safety initiatives as well as the operation of the Transportation Safety Board.

Finally, $285 million is budgeted for the energy rebates program.

The second category of program spending is investment in government-owned and -supported infrastructure, which represents our capital plan programs. Over the next three years another $762 million has been budgeted to cover increased costs on previously committed education, health, and road costs. I want to reiterate that: $762 has been budgeted for cost overages on existing projects. These costs are the result mainly of increased labour and material costs and in some cases increases in the scope of the projects.

For 2005-2006 $2.6 billion will be invested in roads, schools, health facilities, and municipal infrastructure to build strong communities and support the future growth of the province. Municipalities will receive over $1 billion in infrastructure funding to address local transportation and infrastructure needs. Of that, $600 million is part of the new five-year, $3 billion municipal infrastructure program. The ministry will invest $308 million in provincial transportation grants, allowing Edmonton and Calgary to continue to receive funding based on 5 cents per litre of fuel sold within city limits. Other cities, towns, villages, and eligible municipalities will still receive funding based on $60 per capita.

Rural municipalities will continue to receive formula-based grants and support through the local road/bridge program. Rural municipalities are also eligible for funding through the resource road program. This program provides funding assistance to address increased industrial, resource-based, or heavy truck traffic on local roads. Cities other than Edmonton and Calgary may also apply for funds under the cities' special transportation grant. This program assists these cities in addressing transportation infrastructure affected by rapid growth.

The ministry will also provide approximately $32 million to the municipal water and waste water partnership program to municipalities. This partnership provides funding assistance for municipalities to address water and waste-water infrastructure issues. This program also includes $7.2 million for the Water for Life strategy for regional water systems.

A further $40 million in federal funding will be provided to municipalities. The province will receive the funds from the federal government for the recently announced new deals for cities and communities and will then allocate the funds to the municipalities, depending on whether or not there still is a government in Ottawa.

Finally, $37 million in grants will be provided under programs such as Canada/Alberta municipal rural infrastructure program and the infrastructure Canada/Alberta program. These are cost-shared programs between the federal, provincial, and municipal governments.

To keep Alberta on course as a leader in learning, we have allocated $201 million in '05-06 to continue 109 major ongoing school projects, including Victoria school in Edmonton and nine other ongoing school projects in Edmonton; 19 ongoing school projects in Calgary, of which 16 are new schools; and approximately 81 school projects in other parts of the province. Additionally, $105 million has been allocated for postsecondary facilities to support planned renovations as well as ongoing expansion projects. Such projects include the University of Lethbridge service building replacement, Banff Centre renovations to Sir Donald Cameron Hall, University of Calgary Craigie Hall renewal.

In '05-06 $392 million will go to continue 55 major health projects, including commencement of construction on the south Calgary hospital, the health sciences ambulatory learning centre in Edmonton; continued redevelopment of the Red Deer regional hospital, the Royal Alex in Edmonton; the first phase of the Foothills medical centre in Calgary, and the first phase of the Peter Lougheed in Calgary, as well as completion of the Alberta Children's hospital in Calgary and the Alberta Heart Institute in Edmonton.

Over $640 million will be invested directly in the provincial highway network for new highways, highway resurfacing and widening, interchange and intersection construction, and improvements in bridgework. Major projects include continued twinning of the north-south trade corridor; continued work on Douglasdale Drive interchange on the Deerfoot Trail in Calgary; the Calgary and Edmonton ring roads, including construction of the southeast section of the Edmonton ring road and continued work on the northwest section of the Calgary ring road; 16 interchanges, including those on highway 2 at Innisfail, highway 16 at the campsite road, and, most importantly, the Trans-Canada highway and Cassils Road in Brooks, highways 16 and 21, highway 2 at Airdrie; 12 bridge replacements and 13 new bridges; and work on almost 2,071 kilometres of highway across Alberta.

On a final note regarding highway construction, Alberta Infrastructure and Transportation will be building the southeast leg of Edmonton's ring road using the new made-in-Alberta P3 process. As you'll note in these estimates, the capital investment vote for 2005-06 does not include funding for this P3 project. The $83 million shown for this project on the statutory program page represents the projected funding requirement to deliver this project as a P3. This is not voted because no cash outlay is required by the government up front. It is the private sector's responsibility. The capital investment vote includes $25 million per year for this project contributed by the federal government.

Finally, the ministry will invest nearly $28 million in the construction and rehabilitation of the province's water management infrastructure. This includes components such as dams, canals, and spillways. The major project is the continued rehabilitation of the Carseland-Bow River headworks system in southern Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, it's been my pleasure to present Alberta Infrastructure and Transportation's estimates for the 2005-2006 fiscal year.

I would be pleased to answer any questions the hon. members may have. If I'm unable to provide a specific answer due to time or whatever, I'll certainly provide one as soon as possible in a written format.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. My comments are mostly of that nature. There are a few questions, but I'm sure there will be a response.

It is my belief that infrastructure and transportation are two highly important portfolios which should not have been combined. To paraphrase the Biblical reference, you cannot serve two masters. I would suggest that no matter how qualified an individual minister is, they cannot be expected to successfully manage two separate responsibilities upon which the development for and safety of all Albertans depends.

Both the crucial areas of infrastructure and transportation have been neglected by this government over the past decade of cutbacks. The excuse repeatedly put forward in interminable press releases and government slogans has been the need to pay down the debt. I would like to inform this House and, through the House, all Albertans that it was this government that created the $23 billion debt and not the people of Alberta, who are forced to suffer its consequences.

Although this government over the past 12 years has received over $69 billion in oil and gas royalties alone on top of the numerous property tax, health care premium, long-term care rent increases and deregulated electricity rate increases in addition to allowing private insurance to jack up their rates by 60 per cent, from which this government receives a cut, between a third to a half of the government's debt was borne on the backs of public infrastructure, including public and postsecondary schools, hospitals, the public service, and public roads and the 3.2 million and rising Albertans dependent upon them.

The $9.2 billion over three years infrastructure solution to a decade of downloading onto the municipalities will not restore lost or eroded infrastructure to Alberta's two major cities of Edmonton and Calgary, never mind the needs of Alberta's fastest growing, government neglected, oil sands rich, provincial infrastructure poor city of Fort McMurray or of all the other municipalities throughout this province which have been the recipients of the government's downloaded infrastructure debt.

This afternoon I will begin by addressing the need to eliminate the department of infrastructure as a separate entity. It is my firm belief that infrastructure should be a component of each ministry's budget rather than a far-removed overseer of funding to which all other ministries must come on bended knee and cap in hand for omniscient, omnipotent, and omnipresent needed funding. I contend that it would be far more efficient for the various ministries to control their own infrastructure funding so that they could make the critical decisions and be able to carry out their own long-term planning.

This used to be the case, for example, for the ministry of public education, which was able to decide along with publicly elected local school board representatives where and when school upgrades as well as new construction were needed. Since Infrastructure took over this role and the government in its infinite wisdom took away local autonomy and responsibility to collect and appropriately invest the education portion of property taxes, which formerly accounted for 50 per cent of local school board revenue, both school programming and school infrastructure have suffered badly. When you add to the schools' suffering a prejudicial funding formula based upon a flawed floor utilization space plan which includes hallway space as teachable space, older, now inner-city schools are drastically disadvantaged.

This ministry of infrastructure with its tag-team partner the ministry of learning attempts to wash their hands of their collective guilt or wring them in the air and protest their innocence. However, it is their fingerprints rather than those of local school board members who are all over the school closures crime, whether it was the previously closed Parkdale elementary school in Calgary or Strathearn and the other 19 schools in Edmonton on the chopping block.

Prior to 1994 school closures were rarely considered as schools were considered the heart and soul, the epicentre of the community. Now, due to this government's lack of foresight, established older neighbourhood schools are unnecessarily being forced to close. Closing inner-city schools is the death knell for reinvigoration, for growth, and as an incentive for young families to move in and renew the community cycle. The government not only robs Peter to pay Paul but uses the divide-and-conquer strategy of forcing parents in new suburbs to combat with families in older neighbourhoods to have a school. Given the billions of dollars of royalty surplus, this forced, either/or, divisive battle is totally unnecessary.

The government, while starting to correct the mistake of overcrowded classrooms, the result of punishing pupil-teacher ratios and unsupported inclusion practices, has either not addressed or poorly addressed the school infrastructure problem. Last year, for example, the total infrastructure spending, which included school renovations as well as new construction, was in the area of $109 million. Contrast this amount, for example, with the Calgary board of education's deferred infrastructure repair bill, which now sits at over $300 million. This government has a preference for temporary portables and new, lunch box K-3 schools with no gymnasium/auditorium although it has mandated a half-hour daily exercise, which I gather is supposed to take place in hallways or between crowded rows of desks and tables.

If education is an investment in the future, then educational infrastructure has to be an important part of this investment. Lack of investment in educational infrastructure is not limited to public education alone. An equally grim reality exists in postsecondary education, where a single dollar's investment produces a fourfold return. Alberta has on a per capita basis the lowest number of postsecondary graduates in Canada. This certainly runs contrary to the so-called Alberta advantage notion. Last fall 25 per cent of eligible students who could afford the dramatic increase in tuitions over the last decade as the government shuffled off its funding responsibility could not find spaces.

The government has announced its bold reparation plan to provide 15,000 new spaces by 2008, which is rapidly approaching, with a total of 60,000 additional seats by 2020. This sounds impressive. Unless these are virtual seats connected to the SuperNet, the government has shown no concrete evidence of carrying out its plan. I would invite all Albertans who are fortunate enough to have postsecondary institutions in their constituencies to look out their windows or walk through their neighbourhoods to search for the telltale signs of cranes looming over their horizons, which would support the government's claims. While I am pleased to see these cranes, symbols of active learning accommodation, from my temporary Edmonton apartment balcony, I am sad to say that they are not in evidence at the University of Calgary in my Calgary-Varsity constituency or, to my knowledge, at any other postsecondary sites throughout the province.

This is not an either/or, Calgary versus Edmonton competitive scenario. All postsecondary institutions in Alberta must have their infrastructure needs addressed. Are the 60,000 spaces by 2020 a pipe dream, a distracting rhetorical scheme to win back lost favour, or a reality? Show Albertans the plan and the money.

A second strong argument for allowing ministries to manage their own infrastructural needs is the diminished state of health care in Alberta. The lack of foresight or connection to reality, especially the future, shown by this government in its lack of support for educational infrastructure is echoed or mirrored by this government's approach to health care infrastructure. As has been the case with schools, more hospitals have been closed by this government than opened despite its annual billions of additional royalty wealth.

It wasn't enough for this government to simply close half of Calgary's hospitals on the clearly foreseeable eve of a population boom of Alberta advantage seekers. They had to blow up the General. The footage of this unnecessary implosion should serve as a pictorial monument to mindlessness for all future governments, never mind in this province alone but throughout the country. Wings of this hospital were newer than those of Calgary Foothills.

As a result of this blundered, debt-riddled demolition, a series of shockwaves continue to be felt throughout the province which the rise and fall of the Premier's third way – private, for-profit, at public expense – proposal will not address. While the impact of this infrastructure closure decision is most keenly felt by the million-plus people of Calgary and its surrounding regions forced by the government to be underserved by the Calgary health region, this one combined with other health care facility cutbacks or closures throughout both rural and urban centres has created a forced exodus of thousands of health care professionals, which the province is having considerable difficulty attracting back. Even if we could entice them back, where would they literally operate?

Albertans have seen the preview of the Premier's third way in private operating rooms in what was arguably western Canada's top women's services hospital, the Grace, prior to its fire sale to its current private, for-profit operator. Since insufficient public operating space is now available due to premature closures, Albertans are on the hook for an additional 10 per cent premium to have hip and knee operations performed in this private facility, which has added to the waiting list times rather than reduced them.

If the Premier's third way includes further facility closures, reduced service provisions, delisting of coverage, increases in private health coverage, and private, for-profit contracting out, then Albertans will see first-hand the U.S. model which has resulted in 42 million Americans not being able to afford health care insurance. Calgarians will have waited for over a decade for the southeast replacement hospital to finally come online. How much longer will rural residents have to wait for health care infrastructure relief?

The fact that I have only begun to address the problems of the infrastructure ministry with little time left for transportation signifies the enormity of the problems associated with combining these two significant but should-be stand-alone ministries.

Albertans are very aware of the deteriorations of their roads and highways over the past 13 years. What they are probably not aware of unless they derive pleasure from surfing the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation's website is the projected government forecast that it is acceptable for 44 per cent of Alberta's roads to be in either fair to poor condition by 2008. Where is this ministry's concern for either highway-dependent commerce or public safety?

What Albertans don't need are infrastructure and transportation band-aids. They need a separation of the departments, a return of the infrastructure funding authority to the individual ministries, and a sustainable long-term vision.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I, too, will just make a few comments if I can, as there really weren't a huge number of questions that were just recently raised.

First of all, on the merging of infrastructure and transportation one of the things that has to be very much remembered is that in many ways an engineer is an engineer is an engineer. When it becomes a road, an engineer works a considerable amount on it. When it becomes a building, that same engineer has the ability to utilize his expertise on the building of the particular facility.

Mr. Chair, the whole idea behind merging infrastructure and transportation was to get economies of scale. The suggestion that we should put the buildings back into the individual departments could be accomplished two ways: first of all, increasing the amount of dollars to allow each department to hire their own engineers, their own architects, their own designers could be one way; or, secondly, to contract out the whole system so that each department would have contracted-out services on their particular element.

Mr. Chair, we don't feel that either of these are acceptable. We feel that we can get economy of scale by having our staff that are responsible to us in Infrastructure and Transportation actually doing the work. There are some cases where we will contract out consultants when it comes to a particular area of expertise, but these consultants are on the hook to people in my department and ultimately to myself. We feel that that is extremely important.

By having each department have their own mechanism for doing their own building, for doing their own engineering, what we're looking at is a gross lack of economy of scale, a gross overusage of taxpayers' dollars. The whole idea behind this was to gain the economy. We've brought together information systems. We've brought together concepts that have been taken from the transportation industry that can equally be utilized in the infrastructure industry.

In reality what should happen is what is happening, which is basically that the departments such as education or health care determine the priorities, which is what their operational core business is, determine the operation of their facilities. They then instruct Infrastructure and Transportation on what to build, where to build it but not how to build it. Because how to build it, quite simply, is the responsibility of the engineers, the architects, and the designers that are included in my department, Mr. Chair. I really believe that that makes a considerable amount of sense, especially in some of the smaller departments. For example, in some of the seniors' residences there's $4 million per year that is spent on seniors' residences. In that $4 million there's no way that you can have architects, designers, engineers employed by the department. You can, however, go and contract them out, but I find that a little bit hypocritical on what the hon. opposition has put forward in the past.

There was also a comment made about P3 schools. Mr. Chair, at this particular point in time – and I use this particular point in time – there have not been any P3 schools that have been approved. We have looked at several of them, and quite frankly one in Canmore I thought would have been an excellent P3 project purely because 20 years from now I think it's very doubtful how many students will actually be in this one particular subdivision in the town of Canmore. I think we're going to see costs there go absolutely through the roof, and I think the young families are probably not going to be able to afford to live in Canmore. The utilization of a school 20 years down the road is very much of a concern. Any school that's put there will have to have the ability to be turned into something else, whether it's a community centre, whether it's a senior citizens' residence, whether it's another community facility. So a P3 component would have been very good.

We did the numbers on it, we costed it out, and as we do with each and every P3 project, we determined the viability of it. The viability of this particular project was not to proceed with the P3, and subsequently in this budget there was funding announced for that Canmore school to the tune of around $11 million.

Postsecondary institutions. I will challenge the hon. member when it comes to the actual number of cranes that have been on our campuses. In Calgary, for example, there have been numerous buildings that have been built. You have the health research innovation centre, which is under way right now, which is under way today. So there are, certainly, cranes that are going on there. That is the university building that is affiliated with the Foothills hospital.

There was recently an engineering building that was built and just finished. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chair, in my former capacity as minister of learning I had the opportunity to put my handprints in the topping-up ceremony, and as recently as last week I actually did a press conference at the newly finished school of engineering. We have also turned over the Esso building, which was a research facility. We turned that over to the University of Calgary. There's also money that is in the budget for a veterinary school at the University of Calgary.

Mr. Chair, at Mount Royal College within the last two or three years there was a $93 million project that was completed. At the University of Alberta all you have to do is drive over there and all you see, quite simply, are cranes. There are projects upon projects upon projects at the University of Alberta.

There are numerous other components. There has been a capital plan at Red Deer College. There was capital construction at Medicine Hat College. Bow Valley College is currently in line for capital construction. There's capital construction at Donald Cameron Hall in Banff Centre, which was one of the worst buildings in the province when it came to our audit scores. So I do take exception with the hon. member when he states that postsecondary institutions aren't being looked after.

I will also add one comment, and I do apologize, Mr. Chairman, for going very broad on the element of postsecondary institutions, but I really do believe that we have to look at the utilization of these facilities. We can build and build and build, but if the schoolrooms are not being utilized, then at what point do we decide that enough building has occurred?

At the Southern Alberta Institute of Technology at 9 o'clock in the morning there are approximately 30 per cent of the classrooms that are being utilized. At 2 o'clock in the afternoon there is roughly 80 per cent, and at 4 o'clock in the afternoon there is roughly 40 per cent again. We have to start utilizing these classrooms. We have to start getting central registries so that these classrooms become utilized.

A professor does not have the right to put his name on a classroom and use that classroom exclusively only when he is teaching. A typical professor at the University of Alberta or Calgary teaches somewhere between six and nine hours a week. Those classrooms have to be utilized for other classes during that time frame.

Mr. Chair, I think there arises another very obvious question, and that very obvious question is: what are these universities and postsecondary institutions doing during the summer? Do we put out billions and billions and billions and billions of dollars simply to have these facilities sit idle during the summer? I don't think so. I think we have to move to a trimester system to allow students the ability to obtain a university education, a college education, a college diploma during the summer months as well. There's no point in building new buildings simply to keep them empty for four months of the year.

When we talk about 60,000 spaces, we have to, in all conscience, take that into consideration when we are looking at these new spaces. I think the new spaces are critical. I think it's essential that every student – every student – in Alberta goes on to a postsecondary education, whether it be apprenticeship in trades, whether it be university, whether it be college or technical schools. However, those spaces are there, and we do have to utilize them. We have to start taking into consideration the empty space, the unused space when it comes to this very critical issue.

I'll make two other comments, Mr. Chair, if I can.

An Hon. Member: Make several.

Dr. Oberg: Make several? Two others. First of all, when it comes to the whole idea of Alberta graduating the fewest university and postsecondary graduates, well, what's not taken into consideration is the tremendous apprenticeship and industry training courses that we have. We currently have 40,000 active apprentices, and this was not taken into consideration in the study that showed that there were fewer university and postsecondary graduates in Alberta than anywhere else. In Alberta we have an excellent, excellent, excellent apprenticeship system, and it encompasses some 20 per cent of the Canadian market when it comes to apprentices. These students were not included in the numbers that were shown to be the university and postsecondary students.

The last point I want to make. Much of the time was spent, actually, about schools. I agree with the hon. member that we do need to build schools and that we do need to put schools out there but for a completely different reason. The main reason is not demographics. It's not that our students are increasing. When we plot out the number of students that we have in Alberta, right now it's a zero per cent increase per year and actually declining. Over the 10 years we predict a 5 to 10 per cent decrease in the number of students, and indeed in many rural areas it is not so much: where do we put the new schools because we have a lack of space? It's what do we do with the declining student enrolment? That tends to be the most significant issue that is happening in a lot of rural schools.

In the urban centres the issue is different. Again it is not lack of space. The Edmonton public school system, for example, has 160,000 square metres of extra space. The issue, quite simply, is that the space is in the wrong areas. We used to build the beautiful sandstone schools, the beautiful permanent schools. Well, what has happened is the kids have moved away, and I don't think anyone – anyone – in this Assembly who is concerned at all about taxpayer dollars would want some of these facilities being utilized at 20, 30, 40 per cent. It just doesn't make sense when there's another school three or four blocks away.

So, yes, we do have to build some schools in some of the new areas. We have to be smart though, and we have to take a very serious look at modular schools. Anyone who thinks that they can predict demographically what's going to happen to an area may get it right for one or two years, but in reality over 10 years they're going to get it wrong. We have to make the schools flexible so that when and if a student population completely goes, you can still have a gymnasium, administration space, a library that can be used by the community on that particular site, but the classrooms, the modular components of the classrooms can be moved elsewhere to where the students are. This I believe is an essential component of anything that Infrastructure does in the future.

Mr. Chairman, I've kind of rattled on a little bit here, but some of it was in response to what the hon. member has said. I'll certainly take my seat and await any other questions that come up.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak on this budget debate of the Infrastructure and Transportation department. I had written a few questions. Most of them were answered by the hon. minister, but still some more to go.

I'll start with aging infrastructure, page 311 of the business plan. Does the government consult MLAs on the priority of which capital projects receive funding? Could the minister please provide the names of the companies that bid on the recent renovation for the Calgary Rockyview hospital?

I also request you to please explain why, on page 244 of the 2005-06 Government and Lottery Fund Estimates, voted equipment/inventory purchases is $39 million this year compared to $48 million last year.

Please explain the cut to postsecondary education infrastructure funding from $133,300,000 in 2004-05 to $88,500,000 in 2005-06 on page 247 of the Government and Lottery Fund Estimates. The capital plan indicates cuts to postsecondary facilities from $228 million last year to $111 million this year.

The following postsecondary institutions are expected to receive postsecondary infrastructure funding: the Cold Lake campus of Portage College, Lethbridge Community College, Red Deer College, Medicine Hat College, Northern Lakes College, and Grant MacEwan. This is all in the capital plan, page 72. Why are a number of the other postsecondary institutions – SAIT, U of A, U of C – left off the government's infrastructure list?

The next one I see is on page 312 of the same business plan. What specific measures is the government taking to reduce traffic fatalities on Alberta highways? Could the minister please provide a list of the fatality rates of all highways in Alberta? What factors does the minister take into consideration when determining which roads will receive upgrades?

In regard to roads and royalties what is the department's current position on this option? Could the minister please table any documents related to roads for royalties? Will the minister please release any and all records he has regarding any plans to implement a roads for royalties program in Alberta?

I'm looking at page 246 of the 2005-2006 government and lottery fund estimates. Why did the transportation safety services budget barely increase by $800,000? Would the minister please explain why, on the one hand, it argues that it supports traffic safety initiatives while, on the other hand, it has reduced its provincial highway systems and safety budget from $342 million in the year 2004-05 to $331 million in 2005-06?

The next question is regarding economic growth and changing demographics on page 312 of the same business plan. What specific upgrades are planned for highway 63 to Fort McMurray? Could the minister also please provide a timeline for these projects?

Given that the government acknowledges on page 312 of the business plan that seniors will need accessible transportation, what is the government doing to address this concern? Will it release all records and reports relating to seniors and transportation?

What steps is the government taking to ensure that there is an adequate number of commercial drivers as a number of them start to retire? Will it release all the records and reports relating to this subject?

Next, on page 312 of the business plan it states, "The construction industry that provides vital support in maintaining and rehabilitating the province's infrastructure is also faced with an acute shortage of skilled trades personnel." What information is the government using to base this claim on? Will the government deny that it is trying to make a perception that there is a shortage of skilled labour in Alberta to justify more non-union workers in the trades and, number two, to justify cheaper foreign labourers? This is the question. Would the minister please release any and all records he has regarding a shortage of skilled labour in this province?

Another question is about the intersection at 23rd Avenue in Edmonton. I just want to know because it's very close to my riding, just outside my riding. What's the present position? Is the development going soon? Is the civic government waiting for the money?

That's all I want to ask today. If you can answer today, that would be fine. Otherwise, please give it to me in writing any time.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Obviously, there were a huge number of questions that were asked. I'll attempt to knock off a few of them, and any that I didn't catch or any that we can't answer here today, we'll certainly undertake to get you written answers on that.

First of all, the names of bidders on Rockyview hospital. Under our privacy laws we are not allowed to give out any of the names of bidders except for the successful bid. That is private information, and certainly it's something that we can't do.

There were some questions – and I apologize for missing some of it – on traffic fatalities. In the province of Alberta each and every year there are approximately 400 traffic fatalities on the roads. Although the RCMP has this rate actually co-ordinated with the particular elements of the road, particular aspects of the road, we do not. We do not keep track of that. The RCMP does, and the police detachments do.

Just purely for the sake of interest, Mr. Chair, the 400 fatalities, that's compared to 60 or 70 homicides each year in the province of Alberta. I would just question to the Assembly how many dollars are spent on investigating the 60 to 70 homicides versus how many dollars are spent on the 400 traffic fatalities.

We have undertaken in our road safety 2010 initiative to decrease the number of traffic fatalities in Alberta by 30 per cent by the year 2010. We feel that we can do it through, obviously, increased education, through increased enforcement, through increased knowledge of what is happening on the roads as well as road quality.

We've taken huge steps with the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2005. Actually, the act that you have before the House at this particular point in time has several initiatives that should decrease traffic fatalities. The idea of slowing down going by emergency vehicles is huge. Certainly, those people who are running emergency vehicles should not have to worry about getting mowed over as soon as they open the door of their vehicle. That's critically important whether it be fire, whether it be ambulance, whether it be any emergency vehicle.

Secondly, the whole idea of enforcement where we have doubled the fines in construction zone areas I think is critically important because we have to raise the awareness that when there is an active construction zone, you can't just zoom by because people will walk out when they're under construction, and we just have to have that acceptance that it's there.

The roads for royalty. I just caught a little bit of it. There is no intention on the roads for royalty. One of the issues, of course, is our royalty regime in Fort McMurray, which is a well-documented regime. I think it could raise some significant issues if we went into the regime and actually changed it because that could cause investor unrest due to the fact that that regime was opened up.

Highways 63 and 881. There are going to be a significant number of improvements included in this budget, and included in the three-year time frame is around $120 million that is specifically for the Fort McMurray, highways 63 and 881 areas.

Briefly, what we're looking at doing is putting a significant number of passing lanes in highway 63. We're also putting some staging areas. One of the staging areas is going to be about halfway on highway 63 as well as a very significant one at the junction of 63 and 881. The rationale for there is that the heavy loads, the over-height, overweight loads, are destined to go through Fort McMurray between the hours of 1 o'clock and 3 o'clock in the morning. What we're doing is putting a staging area that will enable them to get through Fort McMurray in that two-hour stretch. So that will be significant.

From the junction of 63 and 881 through to Anzac we're looking at widening the road. One of the issues there is that the roads essentially have no shoulders, and these huge loads are going through towns with basically no shoulders on the road. So it is essential. We do have some land negotiations that have to take place there, and we're currently attempting to do that as quickly as possible.

I think highway 881 affords us a huge amount of potential. It is another route. It is an optional route that we could quite easily turn into a truck route that would take a lot of the pressure off highway 63. Highway 881 will have some significant improvements to it this year again. Approximately 40 or 50 kilometres of paving will occur. Another issue with 881 is the potential for truck traffic to go on there, albeit it would be a little bit longer. I think we have to take a look at alternative routes up to Fort McMurray.

Another interesting question which arises on the whole Fort McMurray traffic issue has to do with highway 63. Realistically, the number of trucks and vehicles on the road on Sunday nights and Thursday nights is huge, but the rest of the week, Mr. Chair, actually, there is not that significant a number of cars and trucks on that road. During two days of the week there certainly is a significant issue, and I think that can be addressed in several ways.

The skilled labour is a very interesting point. Albeit not in my particular department, I'm really glad, actually, that the hon. member asked me that question because I was the minister of the day who brought the skilled temporary foreign worker agreement through to fruition. Included in that document, which has been tabled in the House, is the need that there has to be comprehensive advertisement and evaluation of the labour markets. It has to be shown by the companies to the federal government that there is a labour shortage before any temporary foreign workers can be brought in. Those foreign workers must be paid the going rate. There can be no decreased salaries for these foreign workers.

Interestingly enough, as well, Mr. Chair, included in this is the requirement for the Department of Advanced Education to actually physically go to the country and certify these people in their country before they come over. We don't necessarily want someone saying that they are a welder in a particular country, arriving here, and having no usable trades that can be done. So they are going to be certified in the country before they come over here.

Lastly, the whole idea behind a temporary foreign worker is just that. It's to protect our workforce. It's to take these workers, bring them over here for a temporary period of time when they are needed, when there is the workforce boom that is going on, when we can't supply it, and then at the end of three years they have to go home. They cannot stay. They do not become landed immigrants. They must go home at that time. I think that that's very advantageous to the unions. I think it's very advantageous to all of the workers because we don't then have the glut that can certainly be created by the influx of the actual jobs.

We all see the huge amount of construction jobs that are there at the moment, and we know that this is not going to continue. It may continue for the next five or six years, but after that we don't necessarily want a bunch of unemployed construction workers. So, Mr. Chair, that's why they're going home, and that's why it's a temporary foreign worker program.

The other question was the intersection of 23rd Avenue. Mr. Chair, that is a municipal responsibility. The municipal government in Edmonton has stated that that is their number one priority, and they're going to be looking at doing it.

The interesting point about that interchange, for those of you who are wondering about price, is that it's estimated to be $107 million for that particular interchange, which is an absolutely massive amount of dollars for one interchange, albeit a very important one. It's very close to the hon. member's riding, which was just alluded to, but it is a lot of money. The city is looking at doing this as one of their priorities with the municipal infrastructure funds that were just given out to them.

Mr. Chairman, through to the hon. member, I'm sure that there are a lot of questions that I didn't answer. We will endeavour to get the answers to them and to the hon. member in as expeditious a time as possible.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a few general comments along with the odd question along the way. I notice, and of course it's been trumpeted, that the budget for infrastructure is increasing by 10.6 per cent to nearly $4 billion. That all sounds extremely impressive. It's a lot of money, but it's relative. I think we would all agree that there's been an infrastructure deficit in this province. There's no doubt about that, whether we're talking about schools or hospitals or seniors lodges or whatever. So it's hard to tell at first blush, because we've allowed the infrastructure to fall behind for so long, whether this is enough or not. Probably not. My guess is that in the next budget year there'll probably have to be almost a similar increase.

The only point that I'd make in a general sense, though, is when we look at parts of the deficit. I know that the $3 billion – the bulk of this is what was announced before – that's going across the province in new infrastructure was roughly a billion and a billion and a billion, which didn't quite work out that way. That money is needed. There are just a couple of questions flowing – I think the minister alluded to this in question period at one point, but there is always sort of the Big Brother's control. We always argue about the federal government meddling in terms of provincial affairs. It seems that we give out the money, but the minister still has some control, I believe, of how that money is going to be doled out. I'm not sure why we needed that because I think most municipal governments know what their needs are. Maybe the minister – he did expand on it in question period – could expand on it a little more.

The only other point I'd make about that particular amount of money is that one size doesn't fit all. Rural areas have different sorts of infrastructure problems, probably mainly to do with roads. Cities have different sorts of problems. The point I'd make as an Edmonton MLA: when this eventually came out, I believe that of the billion here it's $678 million to Edmonton, and I think the capital region gets $952 million, as I recollect.

The only point that I'd make to the minister is that the core in Edmonton is different in the way it has grown. The core is in the city of Edmonton, and the city of Edmonton does have different problems in infrastructure than the surrounding areas do. Somehow, the sort of broad brush – and I'm not sure there's an easy answer to this – of a third here, a third there, and a third there doesn't necessarily work, I don't think, especially well in the Edmonton area because the inner city or the established part of the city is older, has more infrastructure problems, has more people coming into the city. The other places don't need to worry about LRT and these things.

I would hope that in the future perhaps – and it probably won't be easy – we find a way to get away from this one size fits all because I do think that hurts the inner core, especially in the city of Edmonton. So I'd leave that with the minister. If he has some comments on that, that would be fine.

He would be surprised if I didn't go into some other areas like chartered flights and school closures and P3s and these sorts of things. The chartered flights. We've had some debate about this, and I guess I would say to the minister that I think there is an abuse here, perhaps not meant to be, but it becomes too convenient, I think. All of us, especially with Adscam and the rest of it, all people in public life are being judged, I think, differently and perhaps rightfully so. I don't think it will ever be business as usual.

So I look at the fact that we have our own government air and vehicle fleets – and all charters have two pilots on board – and there's been some discussion, as the minister's well aware, of whether that's been abused or not. I understand his point that sometimes a minister has to go to a place in northern Alberta or southern Alberta. There is the odd time that you have to do that. I don't think any of us are questioning that. I think what is questioned by the public and others is whether it becomes sort of the means and not always the end.

Then, when I look at the private aircraft charters that the minister released the other day, it's hard. Maybe there's some legitimate reason, but when you go through them, you know, we see planes flying empty between Calgary and Edmonton. These are the charters that I'm talking about, that people have mentioned in question period the other day. Here's one, a mystery one, a charter costing $3,576.50 simply called one trip but destination and passengers unknown. Then we have two unnamed passengers fly from Edmonton to Vegreville. That's an hour away.

The minister said there may be a good reason. I'm sure he doesn't know, and I don't expect him to know, every one of these flights. But I guess the point that we would make, I think, maybe to the minister is that there has to be some better controls over both the government flights and the air charters, especially when we say we don't know. You know, it's a mystery flight. In this day and age I think we have to be more accountable than that.

I remember the minister being – what did they used to call you guys, the Deep Six and that? You were going to control government expenses and get government out. Here's a good way to start. You can be a Deep Sixer again and start to look at how this is being used or abused. I think, perhaps, to come back with some guidelines – and maybe the minister is looking at that about when this could be used and how – then there would not be this criticism of the government. I think that if there's not the criticism, all politicians are served better whether we're in opposition or in government.

So, Mr. Chairman, I go on from there to P3s, one of the minister's favourite topics. Now, I honestly don't see why we are rushing into some of these P3s. The big one is Henday, and I'll talk about that in a minute. But the record with P3s all over in Canada and all over everywhere I've seen is not very good. The minister's well aware that the Nova Scotia government, a Conservative government after a Liberal government brought them in, got rid of it because it said the work was shoddy; they were paying too much. There are just many, many cases of where this is happening.

I know the minister says: Well, we check to make sure that we're getting the best bang for the buck. And, you know, the Calgary courthouse – they eventually did get out of it. But I wonder why we need to do it, I mean, especially in building. There may be a case for a P3 like the SuperNet maybe or something like that. But in the traditional way, especially when we have as much wealth as we do, even if we needed to borrow money, which we don't right now, we can get it at a very low rate, cheaper than companies can do it. And there's still the private sector involved in terms of tendering and the rest of it. So I almost think it's ideology, the triumph of ideology over common sense and why we need to do this.

Now, we've had this discussion in question period about Anthony Henday, the southeast Edmonton ring road. Well, I looked through the figures – I'm sure that if the minister thinks I'm wrong, he would be not too shy in pointing it out. But, Mr. Chairman, when we go back in the history, on September 22, 2003, the estimated cost of the 11 kilometre stretch of road connecting highways 2 and 14 was $300 million. Eighteen months later the cost is now $493 million, almost a 60 per cent increase. The government's justification is that in addition to construction inflation – well, inflation may have been that we waited too long instead of waiting for a P3 – which is running 8 to 10 per cent, they've added things to the project including two additional bridges, six lanes instead of four lanes, maintenance of 14 kilometres of southwest Anthony Henday as well as the southeast ring road.

Now, I don't pretend to be an expert to know whether we needed all those things or not, but I wonder. In September we didn't think we needed it, and it was $300 million. Now we need all these things with the P3, and it's gone up to – well, the minister has said that it would cost between $452 million and $497 million if it's built by conventional financing. But the P3 costs, we're told, would be $493 million.

The minister sort of spun it that it would be a $4 million saving. But then the government release that was put out, as the minister is aware from question period, said it would have cost up to $497 million, that it was a range. So we don't know if it's the low end of the range or the middle point or whatever. In fact, the cost could be up to $41 million higher under the government's own figures because of the range. So you can say that at the top range the best case scenario is $3 million – right? – on that end, but it could be at the other range. It could cost us $41 million more. I think it should be a little more definitive than that.

Mr. Chairman, I don't think we need P3s, but I would ask the question flowing from this. The Auditor General has issued a set of six recommendations on P3s:

1. improve the definition of a P3
2. determine key prerequisites to identify projects most suitable for P3s
3. define when differences in key processes are appropriate
4. improve the timeliness of information and the overall analysis of alternatives to decision makers
5. define what constitutes a significant change in project scope
6. evaluate transparency and accountability of P3s.

My understanding is that the government has accepted them, so I guess the question that I'd ask the minister is: will the minister apply these recommendations from the Auditor General retroactively? That is, will the minister, for example, evaluate the transparency and accountability of the Edmonton ring road under the P3? Even if you believe philosophically in P3s, those are the things the Auditor General has laid out, that we should all have access to know whether we're getting a good deal or not. So that's a question that I have for the minister, if he is going to do that and lay out to the public and the Legislature how he's followed those six recommendations from the Auditor General in that thing.

Now, one of my least favourite topics, because I've had to deal with it, is school closures. The minister has alluded to that. Mr. Chairman, the minister talks about unused space and the rest of it. I was there. I know, you know, the arguments one way or the other. But I think we have to look at schools differently. I know this is not in the minister's area. It's in education, but the minister is the former minister of education.

This school closure process as set down by this government just doesn't do the job. It's almost a recipe to close schools. We've mentioned that in Ontario they've changed that because they look at schools differently. They know what it does to the community if you close a school down, whether it be in rural Alberta or urban Alberta. So they made it a much more rigorous process to do it. It doesn't mean you can't close a school down. It doesn't mean, Mr. Minister, that schools – and I've said that – can't close themselves down. They can. But when we get into what's happening in the Edmonton public with the cluster groups fighting each other, one principal on this side, parents on the other side – it happens in rural Alberta, and the minister's well aware of it – it's a very divisive process. So we should come at it from a different way. I'm sure the minister is aware of it. He's had discussions, I think, with the school boards.

Let me give you an example. Older schools – and most of them in Edmonton are older schools; probably in Calgary too – are just different than the new schools that the minister is talking about. I have no objection to this modular approach with the new schools, but that's not the reality of most of our schools. I think in Edmonton – don't quote me on this, but it's pretty close – in the next couple of years over 50 per cent of our schools in Edmonton public at least will be 50 years of age or over. Now, the problem with the older schools, when you use the utilization rate that the province is using, is that it doesn't take into consideration the difference because the older schools have thicker walls, wider corridors, and smaller classrooms. So we take the building, and everything is included.

Let me give you an example of one of the potential schools that's on the block, Mr. Minister. This is from back when I was a public school trustee, and we had the board look into this. It says that older schools before 1950 generally have much wider corridors, smaller classrooms, and, in some cases, thicker walls. When an area per student factor based on current design standards of 60:40 is applied, it results in the school having a larger rated capacity than is realistic. For example . . .

And I'd like the minister to look at this. The minister was well aware. This school was praised in the Learning Commission.

. . . North Edmonton School has wide corridors and large separate boys and girls mud-rooms. The school's 14 classrooms rated at 25 students would generate a capacity of 350. The current formula, based on area per student, does not allow for the older architectural style of the school and generates a capacity of 448.

If you go into that school right now, all the classrooms are being used. I don't know where you'd put them. There are 200 there. I think even 350 is too much. Certainly, 448 is patently ridiculous. I mean, if we're going to use the utilization rate, at least it should apply to a per-student factor in what we would term instructional areas. I think there's been some discussion. Perhaps the government is looking at their utilization rate, so we could talk about that.

I guess what I'm saying is that we should look at the school closure, and then we should begin to look – and I thought the minister was sort of alluding to that – at a school as a community centre. We're doing that with some of the new schools: the George P. Nicholson school for example, as the minister is well aware. The Y is there. Capital health is there. That makes sense. If it makes sense in the new schools that the minister is talking about, surely it should make sense in rural areas and in the inner-city schools.

The minister is right when he says that people just want to look at demographics. We don't know what those demographics are going to be. In fact, many of the people can't afford new schools. Eventually young people out in the suburban areas are going to have to look back to some of the inner-city places if they want to buy a house. That's starting to happen. In fairness, I don't think the Edmonton public is aware of that, and I've made that case. They always look at the demographics, and they could be outdated right away.

Why don't we say that if it's good for the taxpayers, if there's a seniors' group in there, if there's daycare, if there's this or that, and the school's being used – it's all the same taxpayers – why can't we include that as part of the utilization? I think makes eminent good sense. As I've said, we've sort of accepted that, and the minister, I think, half alluded to that in the new schools. Why don't we do that and avoid this divisive process that we go through?

In 2001-2002 the Edmonton public school district provided almost 70,000 hours of after school community use in gymnasiums and classrooms. Again, I suggest to the minister that it's all the same taxpayer. Maybe it's not from the one department. It could be from Children's Services, seniors, all the rest of it, or whatever. That make sense for the community. Then the community can begin to cut down the spaces. Maybe you have to demolish part of a school or whatever, as the minister is talking about, but keep the school there as a community centre.

It's especially crucial for high needs. Now, I'm as upset with the Edmonton public school as I am with the minister because in high needs areas – and these are kids that I've always represented – this idea that bigger is better and they can offer more programs is ludicrous. The evidence is overwhelming right across here and from the Edmonton city centre project that small schools are the best for those kids, especially high-needs kids. They need the stability, if you like, of caring teachers. They need the stability of a small school because they come from unstable backgrounds.

The Chair: Your time has elapsed, hon. member.

Mr. Martin: Okay. I could go on longer.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank very much. The hon. member has raised a lot of issues here. I'm going to touch on as many as I can.

First of all, I want to combine two of his issues. His first issue was on the relativity of the infrastructure dollars and whether or not there is an infrastructure deficit. I don't think anyone, certainly on the government side, would deny that there is an infrastructure deficit in Alberta. There are a lot of things that need to be built. There are a lot of schools that need to be built. There are a lot of roads that need to be built. There are a lot of things that need to be done. All of that is very much a sign of a booming economy. It's a sign of an economy that's taking off, but it's also more than that, Mr. Chair. It's a sign of a government that paid off its deficit and paid off its debt because that's what the people who elected us told us to do, so it's also a sign of a government that did its job.

Our job now, though, is to go after infrastructure. It's to improve roads. It's to build infrastructure. It's to get it back. I'll be the first one to say that we probably let some projects lag over the last 12 years due to the fact that we were paying off our debt, but there's a new horizon now. There's new ability with the debt paid off so that Albertans can truly realize the issues that they have seen over the last 12 years.

[Mr. Lindsay in the chair]

I want to now put that into the context of a P3, and I'll use the Anthony Henday as an example, Mr. Chair. The Anthony Henday is a project that cost $493 million, and it's very unfortunate that the hon. member wasn't at Public Accounts this morning because we got into a very interesting discussion on risk assessment, risk management, and risk assumption. It became very, very apparent that the P3 element of risk assumption by the private sector was very valuable to us and was a very important component.

Included in this budget are a lot of cost overages. In fact, Mr. Chair, of the $9.2 billion that is included in this budget, included in this three-year plan, there's $762 million in cost overages – $762 million in cost overages. These are dollars that have not gone to improve facilities. They're not dollars that could have been used to build schools. They're dollars that have simply gone because the economy is booming, because the price of wages has gone up, because the price of steel has gone up, because the price of the economy has gone up. So those dollars have been used for that.

The point that I'm trying to get at here is that on the P3 the whole risk assumption is done by the private sector. We have one cost, and that one cost is $493 million, that we will be paying back over the next 30 years. Included in that cost is the ability to operate the system. Probably more importantly, in a conventionally funded project we have a guarantee for one year, possibly two years on some projects. On this particular project, because the private sector continues to assume the risk, there is actually a 30-year warranty, or a 30-year guarantee, on this project. So there are no cost overages, there's a huge warranty, and all the risk assumption is in the private sector. All that's wonderful.

More importantly, I have not taken $493 million out of this budget and simply put it towards one project. I have enabled this government to do other projects around the province to develop the other infrastructure deficit that is out there. There is more to this province than simply Edmonton or Calgary. There are a lot of other areas in this province that need a lot of infrastructure work. If I were to sterilize $493 million so that we could not use those dollars in other elements of the province, quite simply, there would not be any roadwork done in Brooks, Alberta. There would not be any roadwork done in Bonnyville, Alberta, or in Olds, Alberta, Mr. Chair.

That's exactly what we did on the P3s. They are borrowed money that's going to be paid off over a period of time, Mr. Chair. That's the rationale for P3s. It frees up dollars. It gives us a 30-year warranty. The risk assumptions on cost overages are all on the private sector.

The hon. member raised the question of the municipal infrastructure program and the whole idea of control. In a perfect world, Mr.

Chair, we would simply turn over the money to the municipalities, and all the municipalities would use the money in absolutely the best possible fashion. We are still stewards of the taxpayers' dollars in this particular Legislature, and those dollars are going through to the municipalities.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

This program is for needed infrastructure within the municipalities. We have to ensure that a municipality doesn't say, "Oh, by the way, I'm going to put this money to a recreation centre," and then next day come back and say, "By the way, I also need a water treatment plant." I think we have to recognize and realize that there are some priorities in life, and some of the priorities that are extremely important are water treatment, water sanitation: things like that.

This is not going to be an onerous task. It is not going to be a task that's going to require a lot of time or a lot of paperwork. Quite simply, we want to ensure that the municipalities have a capital plan, that they follow this capital plan in their priorities. As a matter of fact, Bob Hawkesworth, a former colleague of the hon. member, has put forward as the president of the AUMA that each municipality should have a capital plan, and these dollars should follow that capital plan. If that were to occur, then the approval process would be extremely, extremely simple, Mr. Chair.

The other point I wanted to make was a billion, a billion, and a billion. Again, we've got to get over the Edmonton-centric type of viewpoint on this one. If Edmonton were to receive a billion dollars when in actual fact it would be due $677 million, then Lethbridge, Red Deer, Bonnyville, Wainwright, and all these other towns in the province of Alberta, and Olds especially, Mr. Chair, would not receive the same amount of per capita funding. Certainly, the point can be made that Edmonton has unique needs, but the point can also be made that Bonnyville has unique needs, that Olds has unique needs, that every other part of the province has unique needs. I think a wonderfully unique need is the amount of roads, particularly in some of these small municipalities where there is a small population but there's a vast amount of roads that need to be worked on, that need to be paved in these particular areas.

We have to recognize that in government simple is better because the more complicated we get it, the more it costs us to actually administer a program and the fewer dollars that actually go down to the municipalities to actually do the things that are needed.

The simple way to do this was to do it on a per capita. I think we had to recognize, and certainly we did, that there are some municipalities that are just too small, but they still have some infrastructure needs. We can't have them paving 15 feet of road one year and 15 feet of road the next year. We have to give them a critical mass, which is the reason why $500,000 was set as the amount that all municipalities would receive regardless. This amounted to 99 per cent of the dollars being given on a per capita basis.

Also, what it did is that the metro Calgary area accounted for $972 million, and the metro Edmonton area accounted for $952 million. Realistically, Sherwood Park, you know, being two miles or so from Edmonton, should have the same population needs, have the same issues as metro Edmonton. Certainly, the hon. member made a point about Edmonton being older and its downtown and some particular areas, and that's true but no more true than it is in High Prairie, Alberta, no more true than it is in Bonnyville or Brooks.

So every municipality has individual needs, every individual municipality has unique needs. This program has been embraced by these municipalities and encompasses all these various needs. So you're right: there is no easy answer to this one. But what we've attempted to do is deliver these funds out in as fair a fashion as possible, and I really think that we have achieved it.

Since I've arrived at this ministry, there have been numerous questions about charter flights, about aircraft flights. It's been in many ways a sexy issue du jour. The Edmonton Journal did an interview with me back in June. They spent a lot of money on it, trying to dig up dirt. In reality, what they got was not necessarily dirt, but because they had spent so many dollars, they had to spin it into a story over a five-day period. I think what it did was successfully alienate a lot of rural readers. It successfully alienated a lot of people we see on an everyday basis because of these planes, because we're able to go out and visit rural Alberta, because we're not in our cars for three and four hours a day. We're actually having meetings; we're actually carrying on the business of government.

Quite honestly, Mr. Chair, if I were an opposition member, I wouldn't want government to have airplanes either because it makes it too convenient. It makes it too easy to go out and see our constituents, to communicate what we're doing, to tell people what we're doing, all elements of a good, good government. Quite simply, I wouldn't want it either if I were them, but it is a good way to do it.

A couple of things have arisen, though. I haven't made these announcements, but for every troublesome bit, for every problematic bit there is some good that comes out of it. I'll give credit where credit is due: to the opposition members.

An Hon. Member: No.

Dr. Oberg: Okay. I won't.

In going through the charter logs – and I'll do two; I'll do one for the opposition New Democrats and one for the opposition Liberals. In following through on the charters, what we found was that our records were not very good. There were some significant issues in how our records were kept from the chartered companies. I think that the hon. member alluded to a couple where there wasn't a destination on them. The unfortunate part is that we did not have that information. I have now alleviated that. There is a strict regime and a strict protocol so that even on charters we have to know what it's for, where it's going, and who is on the plane.

The second issue was actually raised by the opposition Liberals, and that was the issue about the wonderful bookkeeping system that the federal government has when it comes to planes. Well, we looked into this. The first thing we did, of course, was the easy way, which was to go on the Internet and attempt to find the flight logs. Well, Mr. Chair, they're not on the Internet. They're not posted on the Internet.

So we contacted the federal Liberals, and we asked for their flight logs. They said, "Well, the flight logs are public." I said, "Yeah, and we would like a copy." They said, "Well, there's an issue." I said, "Well, what's the issue?" "Well, the issue is that they're in the library." And I said, "Why don't you just copy them and send them to us?" They said: "No. Sorry, we can't. You have to come to the library in Ottawa in order to get them." Despite the fact that they have said that they're made public, the actual accessibility to the public is very, very limited.

Mr. Chair, we are going to be putting our records, our transcripts, our charter records in the library, as well, so that anyone who wants to come to Edmonton to take a look at them, in very much the same fashion as the federal government, will be able to.

I will emphasize, though, that out of something negative comes something good, and I think we have really gotten a better record keeping system. I think a lot of the issues that have been brought up in this House are due to poor information, poor record keeping, and I've certainly tightened that up since I've become minister. As I say, part of it certainly is due to the opposition and their line of questioning.

The other point I wanted to make was on the P3s. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore asked a very good question of the Auditor General at Public Accounts today. He asked the Auditor General: could you please explain your comments on P3s? The Auditor General said that P3s are a "viable" alternative that should be looked at in each individual case. Again, that's why we look at them in each individual case. I'm not saying that in every circumstance a P3 is the direction to go. I'm not saying that in every particular case conventional financing is the way to go. What I am saying, though, is that we owe it to taxpayers to take a very close look at each and every opportunity that is there to (a) get a good product and (b) use as little of the taxpayers' dollars as is absolutely possible.

The other point was about the $450 million to $496 million range, and that was outlined very clearly in Public Accounts this morning, where we can have on any project a plus or minus 10 per cent of what we estimate the cost is going to be. If it is more than 10 per cent, then we consider that unacceptable, and we take a very serious look at what could be causing it to be more than 10 per cent. It could be a shortage of workers. It could be an increase in products. It could be that we made a mistake in our estimates. But we take a very close look at it. In any project there is a plus or minus 10 per cent from an estimate. There is no guarantee that an estimate is the price that something will be built for.

Again, I'll use the example of $762 million in cost overages that are presently included in this budget that are part of that plus or minus 10 per cent that occurs. The unfortunate part is that these days we don't get many that are in the minus 10 per cent range. We get a lot that are in the plus 10 per cent, and that's where these budgetary commitments are.

The hon. member makes a reasonable point about the financing costs. The interesting point about the P3 is that the financing costs included in that P3 are about 6 and a quarter per cent. We probably could have borrowed the money for about 5 and a quarter to 5 and a half per cent, so we might have shaved off about three-quarters of a point. But even with those dollars this proposal came in cheaper than what we could have done it for. So all the benefits that we talked about already, the 30-year plan, the risk assumption, all of that was included in this P3.

I think we have to seriously take a look, as the hon. member has stated, at potentially accelerating some infrastructure building by looking at alternative ways of financing. Whether or not it's us financing, whether or not it's a private company financing, I think we need to keep our brains open to whatever possibilities are there. You know, the hon. member just makes some pretty good statements such as: they're all the same taxpayer. We've got to remember that when it comes to things like school utilization and paying lights and power and things when you're lighting an empty school.

You know, one of the unfortunate parts about being transferred from one department to the other, in my case from being minister of learning to being Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, is that you kind of have to put your money where your mouth is. I was one of the outspoken critics of the utilization formula on this side of the House. So we are taking a look at it, and we feel that we can get a better system than the utilization formula.

The hon. member was absolutely right when he talked about thickness of walls, when he talked about distance in hallways, when he talked about gymnasiums, all of these different variables that are out there. I think the utilization formula was good for what it was initially intended, but we are going to be taking a look and ensuring that a different formula will be in place. Included in that is a different distribution of the dollars. I will not say that it's going to allow any changes to whether or not a school stays open or a school closes because, quite simply, that was not the rationale that Edmonton public, as an example, was using for their school closures.

I'm kind of running out of time here, but there's one other very important element that I just feel I cannot leave, and that's the whole idea about small schools. For those of us who have been to small schools, I think there are a lot of attributes. But at times we have to move beyond the intuitive nature of education, and we have to start looking at some hard-and-fast facts.

One of the very interesting things about small schools – and I'll use the rural schools as an example. If you went exclusively on class size as the only determinant of whether or not a person is successful in schools, what you'll see is that rural students do not do as well statistically – and it is statistically significant – as they do in urban schools. One of the issues that we have to find, that we have to identify is: what is the reason for that? My belief – and I think that there's a valid component to this belief – is that it does tend to be learning opportunities. Quite simply, in many of the rural schools there are not the varied learning environments, there are not the varied learning opportunities.

I think that the whole idea of the SuperNet is going to enhance rural schools. I think it's going to be a huge, huge mechanism to give the rural schools an opportunity to stay open by simply offering more classes. I think we do a disservice to our students by only offering a few classes in some of these exceptionally small schools. Smaller is not always better, Mr. Chairman, in all sorts of things in life. Especially when it comes to schools, there's a point to be made that there is a critical mass that is needed for a school.

Just to close, in any study that has been done in Canada, in the last study that was done it showed that 15-year-old kids actually did have a correlation with class size. The larger the class size the better the students did as 15 year olds.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Budget 2005 has set in motion a $9 billion construction plan. This will ensure that the infrastructure that Alberta needs in place to support the future growth of our province will happen.

The recent announcement of $577 million worth of construction for a world-class health and learning centre in Edmonton will change the way patients are diagnosed and treated and how medical students are trained. If this facility was being built in my constituency, I'll tell you, we'd be shooting off the fireworks, and we'd have one party. But given that there was very little recognition for this announcement, I will thank you on behalf of the constituents of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne that will use this facility. This is a great announcement for Edmonton and for all of Alberta.

I had some mayors contact me with regard to the Alberta municipal infrastructure program, and I'll list off a few questions with hopes of bringing back some answers this weekend. I have a small community like Alberta Beach that needs some new projects to deal with their water and sewer, and this new infrastructure funding will be given from your department to them over the next five years. What they need is all the funding at one time. They may have a project that's about $600,000 or $700,000 – not $600 million or $700 million – and I'd like to know whether the community could ask for lump-sum funding.

Also, I've had the county of Lac Ste. Anne ask me if the cash from this new infrastructure program could be used to gravel roads. Again, I didn't have the answer off the top of my head. Then, again, the same municipality asked me if a group of municipalities – remember, I have over 20 mayors and reeves – could pool a portion of this new funding and dedicate it towards a regional project like a seniors' facility. So, again, I didn't have the answer, and I was hoping for some clarity.

Then the summer villages. I have 12 summer villages with 12 mayors. Some of them don't even live in my constituency. They live in other parts of Alberta, but they do a great job of representing their local summer village, and they're asking more about the clarity of the funding, how they got the funding versus larger communities. So I thought maybe you could expand on that.

Then moving on to another issue – and it was brought up by the previous speaker – about airplanes. Well, those airplanes come into my fire base carrying fire crews. I think little gets said about that, and I'd like to know if you have a little bit of information with regard to the fire crews that we carry around our province and across to Saskatchewan and British Columbia and I think in previous years even to Washington and Montana, that we use our Dash for. We really hear nothing about that use of our airplanes.

My last point is this big structure that's just north of this building. It's been empty for a number of years. It's the old federal building, and it's been a pet peeve of mine that I've brought up every year during this period, wondering if there's anything in this budget to either paint a sign that says, "For Sale," or just demolish the damn thing and get rid of it.

That's it for me, and I look forward to those answers.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, and thank you for those excellent questions. First of all, with the $577 million on a program in Edmonton the hon. member is absolutely right. In Alberta we tend to get spoiled. Five hundred and seventy-seven million dollars on any project anywhere in the world is absolutely huge. To have it in a particular hospital or a particular ambulatory learning centre, as this is, is massive. As a medical doctor and now as the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation I'm extremely proud to be able to take this part in health care reform, and I really see this as the next step in health care reform.

I had the opportunity of working in the Colonel Mewburn Pavilion, which was on the site of the University hospital. It had 32 patients in one ward. I then had the opportunity to be one of the first medical students in the Walter C. Mackenzie health centre, which is the new hospital that is over there, to see the advances and some of the trials and tribulations with that. Now I have the opportunity to see the next evolution of health care reform.

For those of us in rural Alberta I think it's underappreciated what is going to happen here. In rural Alberta this is huge because what it simply means is that you can make one trip into that facility and see all the specialists and have all the tests at one time or over a period of two to three days as opposed to making trips back and forth. This is sort of the Mayo Clinic approach to medicine, and I think it's the way of the future. I think it is going to provide excellent service. I think it's going to provide quick diagnosis and quick treatment to all the patients who utilize this. It is not necessarily a hospital where there is going to be a huge number of beds, but I think that this is significantly better. So I agree with the hon. member that this is just a huge announcement, and quite simply I wish I could have made the announcement in Brooks. It would have been absolutely wonderful. In Edmonton, though, it manages to make it on to page B27 of the paper, which I guess is fitting.

The municipal infrastructure program. I'll attempt to address your questions. They cannot get all the funding at one time, but they do have the ability to save it. They will get a cheque each and every year. They will be getting five cheques. They will have 10 years to spend it, and there's no problem with them actually accumulating it and, indeed, accumulating the interest as well. The interest can be utilized towards their capital funds. They can't for example, though, take the dollars, put them in the bank, and use the interest off those dollars to run their town. It can't be used for operating. It still has to be used for the capital expenses. So that kind of does the lump funding as well.

Gravel roads. Sure. If the highest priority in a municipality is the gravelling of roads, then I see no reason why that can't be done. Again, though, we have to ensure that these are the highest priorities. We're attempting to eliminate some of the infrastructure deficit and debt in the municipalities. Gravelling roads is probably on the borderline of being a capital expense, but on the other hand if that's their highest priority, then certainly they'll be able to do that as long as everything else is done.

A group of municipalities pooling funding. As opposed to saying anything against that, I would strongly encourage it. I think it's absolutely the way to go, especially where we have a bunch of municipalities in a small area that can pool these funds together and actually achieve a greater economy of scale. So I would certainly encourage that, and from my point of view the ability to do that is huge, and I would like to see it.

Summer villages. What we decided is that we could not use the $500,000 range for summer villages because there were some that had, you know, 50 people, and these 50 people were temporary people. We could not give $500,000 to 50 people for their summer village. What we did do, though, is we used a formula that had $50,000 as a base grant plus the $904 per capita. So $50,000 plus $904 over the five years is what was done, and I think that that's a pretty good system to do.

The airplanes. The hon. member is absolutely right. Too much time and energy has been focused on whether or not a particular minister took someone on an airplane to a meeting and what the meeting was for. We have to remember that these planes are there on an urgent basis when there's a fire, when there's a natural disaster.

I was up in Grande Prairie attending an AAMD and C convention, and I'd flown up there in the morning. I came there, and the plane was gone. The reason the plane was gone is that there was an incident in a town in northern Alberta where someone had a gun and was holding his wife hostage. Our planes went down, picked up the RCMP SWAT team, and brought them up to that particular community. So you cannot put a price tag on that type of ability. These are the things that we see. Thankfully, that was not a common occurrence, but it certainly is an occurrence. Fire crews, however, are a very common occurrence.

The other issue that we have with our Dash is that each and every Thursday that Dash flies down to Calgary for the land sales, which bring in huge amounts of dollars for this government, and typically there are 30 or 40 people on the plane. So we achieve a huge cash savings to us by allowing these people to utilize that plane.

The last question – and again this goes a little bit back to the comment that I made. When I started off in this government, I actually lived at the Inn on 7th for a short period of time. I walked past the federal building, back and forth, each and every day and each and every night, and I, too, felt the same as the hon. member saying, "What the hell are we . . ." I mean, Mr. Chairman: "What are we doing? What are we doing?" I'm sure Hansard will correct that.

An Hon. Member: You said: what the heck.

Dr. Oberg: That's right.

"What are we doing with this building that looks like it's had such good potential?" Well, here we are 12 years later, and I, too, have been critical of this, and I, too, have been wondering what was going to be done with the building. Now I am in the position where something has to be done, and I will vow that by July of this year, August at the latest, there will be something done with the federal building.

We have undertaken a study of the federal building, the Annex, and the Terrace Building to see what is the best utilization of these three aged buildings. It's not entirely altruistic as well. One of the issues that we have with the federal building is that within two years we're going to have to put in $250,000 to replace the roof. Do we put $250,000 into a building that is just going to sit there? What makes more sense to me is: why don't we plan for what this building could actually be? Let's utilize this building. Whether it's selling it, whether it's turning it into offices, whether it's turning it into condominiums, well, let's use it. It's too nice a building and it's too important to Edmonton's downtown to be sitting there empty. I will certainly give an undertaking to the hon. member that that will be done this summer.

Included in this study, of course, is going to be the Terrace Building. The Terrace Building is having to undergo some renovations very, very soon. I think we have to ask ourselves the question: is that the right place for an office building for our employees? The Legislature Grounds is a place for the people. It is a place for the people of Alberta, and I think we should endeavour to do what ever we can to ensure (a) that it's beautiful, (b) that it's functional, and (c) that it is accessible to the people of Edmonton and the people of Alberta, and there are lots of different things that can be done with that building. It's such a gorgeous sight looking out over the river valley that I really feel that it's extremely important to do something about it. So we will be endeavouring to look at that. That's why we had the study done.

I think there's probably not a person who is not architecturally challenged by the sight of the Annex. For anyone who says that the Annex provides a beautiful piece of landscape to Edmonton, I think there are other places that we could take you, and some of them have locks on the doors.

Mr. Chairman, the mayor of Edmonton talked about architectural design, talked about architectural standards, and I completely commend the mayor on what he has said and what he is looking at doing. The interesting component is that regardless of what architectural standards are being put forward in Edmonton, I really don't think that the Annex is going to fall into that particular design structure unless we go for a wonderful retro look in Edmonton, which you never know. We may come into the multicoloured retro look. I would caution people that we really don't want to do that.

We are taking a very serious look at what should be done with these three buildings and what the future is for our Legislature Grounds and going back to the key purpose of what this Legislature is for, which, of course, is for the people of Alberta and the people of Edmonton particularly.

With that, I believe I've answered the majority of questions that you have given forward. If there are any others that we haven't, I'd be more than happy to take them. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's with interest that I get to participate in the debate this afternoon on the budget of Alberta Infrastructure and Transportation, as we're calling it these days. In the limited time that is available, I have quite a number of questions.

Now, the first question. Again, I'm not satisfied with the answers that were provided to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview on the provincial utilization rate. Certainly, everyone agrees that the current method of calculating utilization rates in the provincial government's guidelines for new school funding is forcing particularly the Edmonton public school board here to close schools that don't need to be closed. It is a well-known fact that the Edmonton public school board is under pressure from the provincial government to achieve an 85 per cent utilization rate for the city. According to a provincial government document the utilization rate is important because it is used by Alberta Infrastructure to determine a school district's eligibility for new school construction.

It is unfortunate, and I'm getting my information from the Strathearn community school parent advisory association and the community league, their response to the Edmonton public school board's cluster study. Now, they go on to say here that it's unfortunate that schools in the inner city are being sacrificed in order to build new schools in the suburbs, that one school should not be closed before another is opened, or one neighbourhood should not be pitted against another.

The provincial government is currently in the process of rethinking the way utilization rates are calculated. That's a good thing, but prior to the current system Strathearn school, for instance, would have been assigned a capacity of 475 students. It now has an assigned capacity of 195 more, at 670.

As architectural styles and design standards have changed over the years, schools built in different eras, as pointed out by previous speakers, have large variations in the ratio of instructional space. For example, older schools generally have much wider corridors, smaller classrooms, and in some cases even thicker walls. If an area per student factor based on current design standards of 60-40 is applied, it results in a school having a larger rated capacity than is realistic. A solution – and I would be grateful if this would be considered – would have the area per student applied only to areas used for actual student instruction as opposed to the boiler rooms, vestibules, which support learning but do not function as classrooms.

Now, the Edmonton public school board has stated that the proposed closure of Strathearn is due to concerns about limited educational opportunity for the students enrolled there. However, the public school board's three-year education plan states: "The efficient utilization of space is clearly a goal of this district. The utilization rate should be used as a yardstick by which the district can measure its responsible stewardship of public facilities. Within this plan, space reduction initiatives are proposed at Belvedere, Horse Hill, Parkallen, Richard Secord, Ritchie, Hardisty and Strathearn schools." Given this statement, one would have to conclude that the main goal of this cluster study was to close schools. Of all these schools listed, only Strathearn has been slated for closure.

Now, the authors of this report propose that all school closures be put on hold until the new utilization rate is calculated. The new rate may offer relief for older schools in older neighbourhoods. If the province is using the utilization rate as a measure for school closures, all schools should be given the opportunity to be rated with the new formula. So again I'm asking the hon. minister to put a halt to all this talk of closures until after we see this new utilization rate.

While we're talking about the new utilization rate, I would be interested to know what the current utilization rate is of the minister's office and, if he would know, also, what the utilization rate is of the Edmonton public blue building.

Dr. Oberg: It's 120 per cent.

Mr. MacDonald: It's 120 per cent capacity at the blue building. [interjection] Oh, in your office. Okay, 120 per cent.

Also, when we're talking about repairs of schools, I'm still puzzled as to why we're having this talk of closing Terrace Heights after taxpayers have put over $3 million into that school.

Now, I also have some questions about the School Infrastructure Manual: A Guide to Existing Legislation, Regulations, Policy and Guidelines. Could the minister tell the House, please, whether all school boards are obligated to follow this document? Is this just a guideline, or is it mandatory? We were startled to discover at a meeting at Strathearn school that the Edmonton public board just considers this to be guidelines. The chief of planning over there stated at our public meeting: oh, this is just a guideline.

I would like to know if the minister could clarify that for me because there are many interesting procedures and policies in this manual. For instance, how does procurement of portables occur? It states in the School Infrastructure Manual in section 3, Provincial School Capital Plan and Funding Process, "No other space is available in another school in the jurisdiction, or in schools belonging to another jurisdiction in the community, or in the region, to which transportation may be feasible." Now, if that is the criteria – certainly there is lots of space available – why are we placing portables at Kenilworth to take the students that are currently being educated at Strathearn school?

Portables are considered to be part of expansion funding, and in the funding application process one of the general considerations in section 4.3.4 states, "Making more efficient use of existing space available in other schools or other facilities in the community, in other communities in the region, in the sector, or in other school boards." Now, why are we not doing that before the public board is applying for funding for an expansion project which includes portable classrooms? If we're going to make these rules and regulations, I think we certainly should abide by them.

I could go on at length, Mr. Chairman, in regard to that guideline, but I would really like to have those questions answered. If they could be answered in writing if we don't have time today, that would be fine.

Now, I'm also looking at the Alberta Gazette. We're talking about increasing funding to Infrastructure and Transportation, but I see in the Gazette that there are always contracts where we've seen approval for increases in the amount of contract given. Now, we've got one here. It's got a contract number. The contractor is Cox Brothers Contracting and Assoc. Ltd., and this is for excavation and related construction costs for a contract. Per cent of increase: 38 per cent.

We've got another one on the next page, and it is a significant contract. It's at Hamelin Creek north of Blueberry Mountain. In the contract amount there's an increase of 61 per cent, or $2.7 million. The contractor is Alberco Construction Ltd. We have another one here for Ledcor, by the Iosegun River west of Two Creek, a $7 million contract with a 12 per cent increase. There are others in here that are of significance. Here's one with a 190 per cent increase. Another one with a 56 per cent increase.

How are all these contracts worked out? Is there a tendering process where people can go back, or is there not a set of engineer's drawings that gives the estimate?

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(4), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration for a department's proposed estimates, I must now put the following question after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006.

Agreed to:
Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$3,463,437,000
Capital Investment	$699,618,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that the Committee of Supply rise and report the estimates of the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, for the following department.

Infrastructure and Transportation: expense and equipment/inventory purchases,	$3,463,437,000;
capital investment,	$699,618,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn until 8 o'clock p.m., at which time we'll return in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:24 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 27, 2005 8:00 p.m.

Date: 05/04/27

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: Good evening, everyone. I'll call the Committee of Supply to order.

Before we get started, may we revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise this evening and introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly the Jacobs family. The Jacobs family is in the public gallery. We have with us this evening Mike Jacobs and his two sons, Len and Ron, and Len's son, Mike Jacob's grandson, Brett. They are in the gallery this evening after attending the rally outside in support of Canadian families concerned about some of the labour practices of this current government.

Len and Ron are both members in good standing of boilermakers lodge 146, and they are not only very good boilermakers. They're very, very, very good hockey players. It's very difficult to get the puck off those guys in the corner; trust me. They're in the public gallery, and I would now ask the Jacobs family to please rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to rise and introduce through you and to all members of this Assembly Brent Clouthier, a good tradesman, a member of the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, lodge 146, a member of the executive board. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

head: Main Estimates 2005-06

Executive Council

The Chair: I would recognize the hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you. Mr. Chairman and hon. members, I'm pleased to appear before this committee to discuss the 2005 to 2008 Executive Council budget estimates and business plans. Programs under Executive Council include the office of the Premier and Executive Council, the office of the chief internal auditor, and the Public Affairs Bureau. My remarks this evening will include a fiscal overview for 2005-2006 and details on upcoming initiatives listed in the business plan.

Executive Council spending for 2005-2006 is forecast at $26.2 million. That's an increase of approximately $1.8 million over the 2004-2005 budget. That increase includes $600,000 to cover the 3 per cent salary increases taking place in all ministries, $500,000 for operational costs such as software and staffing for the office of the chief internal auditor, some $275,000 for upgrades to Service Alberta call centre equipment, $220,000 in one-time spending to cover costs related to the centennial and the visit of Her Majesty the Queen, $160,000 for two new FTEs, full-time employees, and $90,000 to allow the Lieutenant Governor's office and the Alberta Order of Excellence Council to respond to the increasing costs of doing business.

The budget also shows a $3.6 million decrease in revenue. This is due to discontinuing cost recovery for the office of the chief internal auditor, and I'll address that change later in my remarks because the figure that I just cited comes from other departments.

As I just mentioned, FTEs for Executive Council will increase by two. These new positions are to meet the communications needs of Restructuring and Government Efficiency and the personnel administration office, and both ministries have very small communications branches. The personnel administration office is seeing increased responsibilities due to growing cross-government efforts to attract and retain the best possible staff for the Alberta public service.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like now to offer an overview of the priorities outlined in the business plans, and I'll begin with Executive Council proper. For the benefit of any new members, I'll offer a quick overview of Executive Council offices. They're located in 307, on this floor. They include secretarial support to cabinet and cabinet committees – the cabinet room is also on this floor – my offices here in the Legislature and in McDougall Centre in Calgary, the protocol office, administrative support for the office of the Lieutenant Governor and the Alberta Order of Excellence Council, and the deputy minister's office, which includes support for policy coordination and business and strategic long-term planning for the government as a whole. The Deputy Minister of Executive Council is also located on this floor.

Strategic long-term planning is a central focus not just for the deputy minister's office but for my cabinet colleagues and for me. Last year when I appeared before this committee, I referred to the launch of the government's 20-year strategic plan. Since that time ministries across government have been working with Executive Council and cabinet to ensure that the government's short- and medium-term strategies all contribute to the larger picture, and that larger picture is the strategic plan's ultimate vision of a vibrant and prosperous province, where Albertans enjoy a superior quality of life and are confident about the future for themselves and their children.

The vision is particularly meaningful in the context of Alberta's centennial year because this year is all about the future. Albertans have built a remarkable province in a relatively short period of time, 100 years. The plan will help give future generations an even greater level of prosperity, security, and quality of life than we enjoy today. Executive Council's activities in the coming year and every year will focus on making sure the government does everything possible to contribute to that goal.

The centennial is also an important time for the protocol office and the office of the Lieutenant Governor, believe me. Both offices are hard at work putting final touches on what promises to be one of the highlights of the centennial, and that is the royal visit of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II and the Duke of Edinburgh. I'm beginning to wonder if she thinks that everywhere she goes, she smells fresh paint. As members may know, the official itinerary was released last week. It includes major public events that offer ample opportunities for Albertans, all Albertans, to see the royal couple.

Alberta's new Lieutenant Governor, the Hon. Normie Kwong – Norman Kwong, as he likes to be known – will be a central figure in the visit in his role as the Queen's representative in Alberta. I know that the Lieutenant Governor is very excited about his new duties, and he's dedicated to serving his fellow Albertans with distinction. I think he'll do a wonderful job as our official host to the royal couple and as Alberta's Lieutenant Governor. I had an opportunity again to see and witness his sense of humour last night at a roast for the Progress Club. It was something to behold indeed. He doesn't miss a beat.

Mr. Chairman, I would be remiss in discussing the office of the Lieutenant Governor if I didn't mention the passing of the late Hon. Lois Hole. As members will know, Alberta submitted a formal request to have her term extended, and Mrs. Hole dearly wanted to help celebrate the province's centennial as Lieutenant Governor. Although she put up a courageous fight, she lost her battle with cancer before that wish could be realized. Albertans can take comfort, however, in knowing that her legacy will live on. Her contributions to this province are already reflected in scholarships, a new provincial park, and other honours, and I'm sure Albertans will continue to find ways to remember and honour her many contributions.

I'll now turn to a very brief discussion of the office of the internal auditor. That office was created in response to an Auditor General recommendation to centralize internal audit functions across government. The goal of the office is to help government managers and employees be more productive and effective in their jobs while ensuring that taxpayers get maximum value for dollars spent. Since the office was opened last March, the chief internal auditor has worked to recruit and train staff, and those staff members have completed almost 200 audit projects. The office will continue working in the coming year to ensure that government ministries are as productive and efficient as possible.

Members of this committee will note that performance measures for the office are under development, which is standard for any new initiative. The office will work over the coming year to flesh out those measures so that Albertans can see how the office is performing.

As I mentioned earlier, this budget reflects a change in revenue for the office. This is largely related to a difference in accounting processes. Instead of charging back the cost of internal audits to each ministry, the costs will now be covered centrally through Executive Council. So while it reflects a larger amount in my budget, really the dollars across government are the same. At the end of the day the same tax dollars are being spent. The government pays for the cost of the services whether they are charged back to the ministries or are covered centrally. This change will simply make the process more efficient.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like now to touch on the business plan strategies for the Public Affairs Bureau. The bureau's goal is to increase communications with Albertans in the areas they identify as top priorities and, of course, areas that are identified by the government as top priorities. The business plan organizes upcoming communications activities into four strategic priority areas.

The first is to ensure that Albertans have the information they need to take part in the 2005 centennial celebrations. That's important. A sample of centennial communications includes programs related to centennial medallions for Alberta students, those who have turned 100 years of age this year, special guests of course, the public, the Alberta Premier centennial invitation program, which encourages Albertans to invite former Alberta residents back home to celebrate, and a wide range of other programs from the recent Centennial Hockey Challenge, which Alberta won, to local centennial events to legacy projects across Alberta. Of course, this all leads up to the biggest event of all, and that's Alberta's official 100th birthday party on September 1. Mr. Chairman, I can tell members that plans are under way to make sure the party is one that Albertans won't soon forget.

The second strategic priority communications area for the bureau is to "ensure Albertans are aware of opportunities available to themselves and to their families." This falls under the broader government goal of making sure the next Alberta is even better than the province we enjoy today. Mr. Chairman, the list of specific communication initiatives is far too long for me to go into here, but a sample includes the Alberta centennial education savings plan, new postsecondary funding to create thousands of new spaces and expand scholarships, and new spending to hire more teachers, reduce class sizes, and improve student learning. It also includes increased funding to regional health authorities, the new mental health innovation fund, and new facilities such as the Alberta Heart Institute and the south Calgary hospital.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I could run out the clock just listing the range of opportunities and initiatives that this government has the responsibility to communicate to the public. Suffice it to say: the list covers the gamut, really, the whole gamut from health care and education to capital investments, to environmental initiatives like the Water for Life strategy, to community priorities like policing and municipal infrastructure, to economic development opportunities.

The third strategic communications priority area is helping to "communicate Alberta's position on national and international issues." This is where this province is playing a much larger role. As all members of this committee know, Albertans take a highly unique and original approach to everything they do. It's what stands behind a good part of our success, and that is the ability to think differently and having the courage to try different things.

It's important that the government of Canada and major trading partners such as the United States hear and fully understand Alberta's unique position on key issues. This area of the plan focuses on ongoing communications related to BSE, mad cow disease, marketing choices for Alberta's grain producers, Alberta's new office in Washington, DC, and other issues. It also includes providing communications support to the Council of the Federation, which, by the way, will be meeting here in Alberta in 2005 in Banff. Of course, we'll be chairing the Western Premiers' Conference next week in the fine border city of Lloydminster.

The fourth strategic communications focus of this business plan is providing "disadvantaged and vulnerable Albertans with information on available programs and supports." Again, the list related to this communications program is varied and very extensive.

What they all have in common is a focus on making sure that Albertans receive information on the supports they need and on opportunities to build a better life for themselves and their families. It includes upcoming communications-related programs to help people develop the skills they need to find and keep a job, programs and supports for disabled Albertans, fetal alcohol spectrum disorder prevention, prevention of family violence including Alberta's role as host of the upcoming World Conference on Family Violence, prevention of childhood sexual exploitation, parent link centres, crime prevention campaigns, workplace safety awareness and promotion, and the list goes on and on.

I'd like to turn briefly to the bureau's goal 2, which is to "make government information more accessible." As I mentioned earlier, the budget includes an upgrade to Service Alberta call centre equipment. Service Alberta is the government's main toll-free switchboard. Service Alberta agents process one million calls a year. The agents work from special consoles, and those consoles are rapidly showing signs of wear and tear. As it stands now, if even one console breaks down, an operator would have to sit idle as the stock of backups is depleted. On average each operator answers 70,000 calls a year, and the upgrades will make sure that the system is able to keep up with them.

Another key access point for Albertans is the Alberta government home page. A new initiative is the introduction of the RSS technology, which essentially allows government to automatically deliver news and updates to regular website visitors. Albertans who sign up for the free service receive regular updates directly to their computer so they can stay on top of the latest news quickly and easily. Alberta is one of the first provincial governments to offer the service along with Ontario.

Mr. Chairman, that concludes my introductory comments, and I welcome members of the committee to ask any questions they may have about the 2005 to 2008 business plans and the current year's budget for Executive Council. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciated the Premier's comments, and I'm sure we'll have an interesting debate here. I assume, as we've done previous years, we can go back and forth a little bit. It keeps it more interesting. I hope so. Is that okay with the Premier if we ask questions and get answers? Is that how you'd like to proceed?

Mr. Klein: However you want. If I can answer, I will.

Dr. Taft: I appreciate that. I'm sure that's always the case.

I appreciate the opportunity to discuss the budget and the business plans for the Executive Council. It's a substantial amount of money now, as the Premier said, I think over $26 million. The largest portion is for the Public Affairs Bureau, which, as I've said in the past, I think is this government's secret weapon and an effective communications organization albeit a very large and well-financed one as well. In fact, I didn't hear in the Premier's comments if he indicated how many full-time equivalent positions will be working this year in the Public Affairs Bureau. It may be in the business plan, but that's always useful to know. If the Premier has that information, that would be terrific.

Last year there was some discussion about the corporate identity program for the government and plans that were under way for perhaps updating the logo and going far beyond that to include other issues involved in corporate identity: colours, all kinds of design issues. I'm curious to know if there's been progress on that, if it's on the government's corporate identity work. We discussed it a bit last year, and I'm just wondering where that went, whether that's just limited to the centennial logo, which is on all the letterheads and so on, or if it's beyond that. Of course, it's useful to know how much it's costing to modernize or to update or change the corporate identity of the government of Alberta. Because everything costs money, I'd be interested to know how much that costs.

Last summer there was some interesting media coverage on the role of the Public Affairs Bureau in developing and providing extensive briefing books and even a secret website available only to Tory MLAs. I guess I have some problems with that because I don't think the Public Affairs Bureau is meant to be a partisan branch of government in the same way that, say, cabinet's direct staff are. So I'd be curious to know some more information on that and the role of the Public Affairs Bureau in preparing the briefing binders that are provided only to government MLAs. I think it's an intranet site that's also available exclusively to government MLAs.

I'd like to know what that costs and whether the Premier sees that as a legitimate role for a branch of the public service that is funded, frankly, to support everybody in the province, not simply Tory backbenchers. So if there is some information available on that. It did get some extensive coverage in the media last year, last summer.

There are three questions. Does the Premier want to respond now?

Mr. Klein: I can respond now, Mr. Chairman. I'll try and answer the last question first. This is relative to the secret website. If the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition has the home page, I would surely like to know it because, you know, I'd like to get in on this. I know of no secret website on the Internet, but if you have the web page, please send it over, and I'll put it on my computer.

Relative to the corporate identity, I really can't answer that question. Perhaps my officials can advise me as to work on the logos and what is being done relative to developing the corporate identity. I know that a logo has been designed for the centennial year, and it's being used on all our letterheads and virtually on all our communications. It is designed, of course, to create awareness of the centennial. I'll attempt to get that information.

The Public Affairs Bureau's full-time equivalent staffing for 2005-2006 totals 133. Now, I don't have the names of all the people, but I can get them, I'm sure. As I mentioned in my opening remarks, this bureau is not the secret weapon of the government but really helps the government to communicate with Albertans on priority issues.

In the Public Affairs Bureau on the communications side there are 80 full-time employees. I can mention – and I think this is worthy of note, Mr. Chairman – that of the 133 employees this is 100 fewer employees than when I took over as Premier in 1992, so we have reduced the size of the total Public Affairs Bureau by close to a hundred. The FTEs for communications support in Restructuring and Government Efficiency account for two of the new full-time employees, and I mentioned that in my opening remarks.

Basically, the Public Affairs Bureau supplies professionals to 23 government departments to develop and implement communications programs. It provides communications planning and consulting support to government. It co-ordinates government communications to and from Albertans on priority areas, on government initiatives and during public emergencies, and it provides specialized writing and editing services to government.

There are 34 full-time employees in a branch of the Public Affairs Bureau that is the part that communicates directly with Albertans. This involves managing the Service Alberta call centre to give Albertans toll-free access to government, and I mentioned that in my opening remarks and how we needed to upgrade some of the equipment. It provides Alberta Connects call centre support for comments and information on major government initiatives. It provides the management of a two-way flow of information through the Alberta government website, which is not secret. It provides technical support for major government news coverages and announcements and provides communications technology support to the Executive Council and Internet consultation to departments and manages the province-wide distribution of news releases. That involves 34 full-time employees. Most of these are technical people and administrative people.

There are 11 full-time employees working on publishing and selling Alberta's laws and other government materials, and then there are eight full-time employees offering administrative services, and that is the overall management of the Public Affairs Bureau: managing the human resource and finance needs of the Public Affairs Bureau and developing business plans and budgets and performance measurements and annual reports and general administration. So we have eight, 11, 34, and 80, to bring us up to 133 employees in the Public Affairs Bureau.

Corporate identity project. I received some information from my staff: the logo hasn't been redesigned. I don't know what logo they're talking about. Are they talking about the 2005, or are they talking about the stylized Alberta?

8:30

Mrs. McClellan: Stylized Alberta.

Mr. Klein: The stylized Alberta. The logo hasn't been redesigned, but it has been reformatted so that it can be applied to more formats such as the electronic website uses. It looks the same, but it's more flexible, as I read from the note.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Well, continuing for a moment with the Public Affairs Bureau, a substantial amount of the almost $10 million is spent on advertising and promotion and that kind of thing. I'm wondering what role, if any, Highwood Communications has in government advertising and public relations, and how much of that $9.7 million will be managed by them? I'm sure you've heard of them.

Mr. Klein: I don't have the exact number, Mr. Chairman, but I'm sure my staff heard the question. Highwood, like any other advertising agency, would have to bid. I think that they do some work for the government in one of the areas. Relative to advertising, we do advertise; there's no doubt about it. We spend significant dollars on advertising because government has a duty to tell citizens about its decisions and policies and about upcoming initiatives.

If we didn't advertise, we would have to depend on the media and the daily scrum, and there are not always assurances that we can get our message across. I can tell you that I attend the scrum every day at 3 o'clock, and the Leader of the Opposition is there for reaction, and it's often the reaction that gets the headlines and not the action, or it's the reaction to the reaction or the reaction to the reaction to the reaction.

So advertising campaigns in 2005-2006 will inform Albertans about a range of topics from new government programs and services to risk to public health and safety. I can tell you – and I don't want to belabour this point – but I can't address the Highwood situation specifically because we contract to a number, I believe, of advertising agencies.

The advertising campaign topics include education awareness of bullying prevention, the Alberta centennial education savings plan, marketing choices in agriculture, prevention of fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, prevention of childhood sexual exploitation, our 2005 centennial celebrations, Alberta's water strategy, the Asian bird flu, the Healthy U advertising campaign to keep Albertans healthy, West Nile virus, Alberta child health benefit program, Work Safe Alberta, traffic safety, crime prevention, wildfire prevention, and the list goes on and on. There are just so many issues that need to be properly communicated to the public.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. At this time I'll switch to the chief internal auditor, which I think last year the Premier indicated was unique in Canada. I'm still not convinced that it's a necessary job, but fair enough. The Auditor General seems to support it, and we'll go along with that for now anyway.

There are some questions around how the two public members are selected for this position. I raised this issue a day or two ago in question period: one is the vice-president of finance for the PC Party, and the other is Jack Halpin, who is a long-time supporter of the Premier. Fair enough. I would be curious about two things with the role of the public members on the chief internal auditor's committee. How were they chosen? What was the process through which members were chosen for that committee? And in this budget what's their honorarium? How much, if anything, are they paid?

Thank you.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Chairman, the audit committee would not be included in my budget. The audit committee is separate and apart from the function of the chief internal auditor. You know, I would like to comment, but I think more appropriately it would be a question that should be addressed to the hon. Minister of Finance. I don't know if the hon. minister has had her estimates heard yet, but that is a question that ought to be put to the hon. minister. Perhaps she can make a note of it and supply that information to the hon. member.

The office of the chief internal auditor is recommended by the Auditor General. Basically, every department, every ministry, has an internal auditor, and the internal auditor's job is to make sure that that ministry is running properly, including Executive Council, including International and Intergovernmental Relations, Finance, Advanced Education, Economic Development, Innovation and Science, Solicitor General, Seniors. They all have internal auditors.

The work of the chief internal auditor for the ministries is not generally reported publicly because the office is a government branch. It's not the creation of the Legislative Assembly. Basically, the chief internal auditor and his staff report to an external audit committee, and that's the committee to which the hon. member alludes. In addition, all that work of the chief internal auditor is examined by the Auditor General to ensure quality and to avoid potential duplication. If the Auditor General – I think this is very important – were to deem a chief internal auditor matter of sufficient importance, he could choose to bring it forward publicly. In other words, if there's something that is so overwhelming and so obviously wrong in a department, the Auditor General can bring it forward publicly.

Oh, Highwood: I've got the information. The question was specific to Highwood. I was going to report this, but I wasn't quite sure. Highwood is one of three agencies of record for the government. I think we put out tenders, and people bid on whether they want to become the agency of record. They have a contract for a three-year period through a competitive bid process. Basically, their job, because it's broken into segments, is to negotiate the purchase of advertising space, and they get a commission of 4 to 5 per cent to provide that service. They did not win the component that involves the design of ad campaigns. So each campaign – purchasing, design, and I don't know what the other one is – is tendered to a different agency.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I've been listening with a great deal of interest to the exchange between the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview and the hon. Premier. Certainly, the office of the chief internal auditor is a new office when you look at the annual reports of Executive Council going back a couple of years, and I'm surprised to see that it goes from zero, essentially, to $5.25 million in expenditures so quickly. If it's to save money, I don't know how this is to work. Certainly, if we go back two years in the annual reports, there seems to be very little interest in this office of the chief internal auditor. I became aware of this office for the first time last summer. It has been mentioned on several occasions in Public Accounts since.

I had some questions for the Auditor General in regard to public accounts, and I'm still not satisfied with the answers that I have received from the government. But I was doing some additions to the public accounts, and for the last fiscal year that was available, I discovered that there was a percentage difference from the public accounts to the annual report of Executive Council of 34 per cent. There was a total spent in the department of $3.5 million, but listed in the annual report was only the actual amount of $2.3 million. So perhaps the chief internal auditor could start at home.

But I do have some questions. The first one is: how often do the Auditor General and the chief internal auditor consult? Do they decide which work each office is going to do? Do they have exit interviews with one another after an audit is completed? The last time that the Premier visited Public Accounts, he was gracious enough to introduce Mr. Nick Shandro, who was a former employee of the Auditor General's office. I believe he was the chief internal auditor of this office. The experience I've had with Mr. Shandro is that he's a very fine fellow and very capable, very able. Does the Premier consider that a conflict of interest, now, to have a senior employee go from the Auditor General's office to this chief internal auditor's office?

Mrs. McClellan: What did you have for supper?

Mr. MacDonald: What did I have for supper? Well, that's an interesting question. I bet it's a lot less than the hon. Minister of Finance has had. I was startled to see outside the Assembly this evening two stretch limousines. They were longer, Mr. Chairman, than a King Air. A black one and a white one, stretch limousines.

An Hon. Member: It was the boilermakers.

Mr. MacDonald: It was the boilermakers, was it? No, it was not the boilermakers. Certainly not. There were two stretch limousines out there, and I'm sure the government caucus was getting taxed or ferried or whatever you want to say to a rather elegant meal. [interjections] I didn't have that elegant of a meal, nor would I accept that kind of transportation. I was surprised to see the black and white stretch limousines parked right out there, and this was before all the tradesmen and the tradeswomen arrived to express their opinions.

The Chair: Hon. member, if we could have your comments directed through the chair, I think it would be helpful.

Mr. MacDonald: Sure.

Now, getting back to the public accounts and our budget here. This is a significant increase in budget amounts if we go back, say, two or three years in the Executive Council's annual reports. I see in the past, Mr. Chairman, where the Executive Council has paid over $200,000 – and this is for fiscal year 2002-03 – to Environics Research Group (Western) Limited. Highwood Communications in this fiscal year got $1.5 million. Margaret Kool Marketing Inc. got $350,000. National Public Relations Calgary Inc. got close to $60,000. The Royal Rubber Stamp Co. only got 50 bucks. So there's quite a range in expenditures there.

Now, could the Premier tell us how much is budgeted in this budget year for Highwood Communications Ltd., how much is budgeted for Margaret Kool Marketing Inc., and Environics Research Group (Western) Limited, how much are they going to receive in this budget, if any?

Now, this is a very small department. In the $26 billion budget it may look like a small department, but when you look at it and you look at previous fiscal years for this department, this is definitely a budget that is getting quite extravagant. Quite extravagant indeed.

Before I cede the floor to an hon. colleague, my last question to the Premier will be this. If the chief internal auditor is busy working in other departments – and I assume from his response before that other departments are going to pay for those audits that are going to be conducted by the chief internal auditor – will we perhaps have the RAGE minister look into the significant increase in the budget of Executive Council?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Relative to the hon. member's second-last question, the amounts that were paid out of the Public Affairs Bureau advertising budget to Margaret Kool, Environics, and Highwood Communications, I don't have that breakdown. I honestly don't. Perhaps the administrator of the Public Affairs Bureau has that breakdown and can supply that information. I just don't have it here.

Relative to the internal auditor, Mr. Chairman, the budget did not go from zero to $5,254,000. The budget went up by $625,000, and that accounted for wage increases generally. The reason it appears in my budget as having gone from zero to $5.2 million is that the internal audit functions from all the departments were taken out of those departments and centralized under Executive Council. So the amount of money is the same, and I think I explained that in my opening remarks.

The office of the internal audit was set up by reassigning audit staff, all the staff from the various departments, that were individual departments, to consolidate them in one location. I would be more than happy to have the RAGE minister look at it. We believe and the Auditor General believed that it resulted in more efficiency and more consistently high standards.

Now, the question was also asked: how often does the chief internal auditor report to the Auditor General? I don't know for sure, but I would suspect that they are in fairly constant communication. He would certainly report at least once a year, but I'm quite sure that they are in constant communication because they work hand in glove.

So the chief internal audit office is not an entirely new office; it's simply a consolidated office.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the chance to participate in this debate. I have two or three very brief questions for the hon. Premier. My first one is with regard to the strategic priorities for the years 2005 to 2008 on page 230 of the budget. My preamble, if you like, is basically that the Premier indicated that efficiency is a priority for this government, and for every question we ask of any respected minister, they default back to answering how efficient this government is and how competent the ministers are and so on.

For example, in the strategic priorities priority 1 talks about providing "Albertans with the information they need to participate in 2005 Centennial celebrations." My question here would be:

couldn't this have been done by the Minister and the Ministry of Community Development? The second would be to "ensure Albertans are aware of opportunities available to themselves and their families." Again, isn't this the responsibility of both the Minister of Economic Development and the Minister of Human Resources and Employment? Third, it says to "help to communicate Alberta's position on national and international issues." Again, I see this as the prime reason to have an international and intergovernmental affairs minister. Four, it says to "provide disadvantaged and vulnerable Albertans with information on available programs and supports," and this is where the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports comes in. I think, to put it mildly, this is duplication of services.

Moving on, I would touch on the Public Affairs Bureau. I know that two of my colleagues have previously discussed this or asked questions about it, and the hon. Premier replied. My take on this, again as a layman: the Premier highlighted the fact that the Public Affairs Bureau is comprised of 133 employees, and he actually went ahead and divided them as to who works at the call centre, who works at the Queen's Printer, and so on, and who is an administrator, you know, who actually has direct contact with Albertans, and so on, which is fine. Why do we have 133 employees who actually report directly to the Premier? Because the Premier is the head of the Public Affairs Bureau. I see this as an unnecessary concentration of power, if you like, in the hands of one person.

Again I would ask the Premier: why do we have such a big number compared to a province like Saskatchewan, which has 96, or a province like Newfoundland, which has 39? [interjections] Oh, you're laughing. Hear this. Why do we have 133 employees compared to the White House, which has 55? I don't think this is a laughing matter. [interjection] Yes. Is the White House less important, or are they less capable of conveying their message? This is a serious question, and I don't think it's unfair.

Also, having said that, this does not really preclude the communications personnel and resources in each ministry. I know that the hon. Premier indicated that they're hiring two full-time equivalent staff to look after the needs of the newly formed Ministry of Restructuring and Government Efficiency, so two people are going to be added to that battalion of information officers, if you like. I would still argue that this is unnecessary because if you add all these communications people from all these ministries – we have 24 ministries now – it would probably be a lot more.

My question to the hon. Premier would be: does this represent a reduction from 2002 levels? We have a copy of the 2002 Public Affairs Bureau telephone list. On that list there were listed 260 employees. Can the Premier state that maybe the number has been reduced?

The Public Affairs Bureau is a media outlet, or they're more of a propaganda machine, if you like. They advertise, and they tell Albertans how wonderful the government is and so on. Examples of those campaigns or projects that the Public Affairs Bureau worked on would include a campaign that cost the taxpayers about $3 million to tell us and convince us how wonderful deregulation is and how great it is and how it is not a big mess. They also spent about $1.5 million on turning public opinion against Kyoto. They also spent over $1 million convincing Albertans that Bill 11 was such a good deal. Very recently, in the year 2003-04, they spent about a quarter million telling people that the budget was a good deal.

Mr. MacDonald: What about gas contracts and electricity contracts?

Mr. Elsalhy: The majority of Albertans don't want to buy into long-term contracts through that deregulated market scheme, but once that regulated rate option expires in June of 2006, people will be left to make this tough decision and swallow this hard pill.

The Public Affairs Bureau has a budget of about $15 million. I honestly think that this is unwarranted and unnecessary for the simple fact that the Public Affairs Bureau advocates a one-way flow of information. Every time I or one of the hon. colleagues from the opposition asks a question, the government minister in charge stands up and says, "We're telling people and we are informing people of the merits of the program. We're telling them how wonderful it is." We've had that with Energy. We've had that with Agriculture. We've had that with Sustainable Resource Development, and every other ministry you talk to will tell you how wonderful and how great their programs are and why the average Albertan should buy into it and should be extremely happy that the government is doing this and that. So the flow of information is one way.

The government tells Albertans what's good for them and why they should be happy and how they should react. They're not as eager to receive information the other way, basically to listen or survey or ask questions. Satisfaction surveys are mainly geared at stakeholders, at the industry, not at the public. I see this as a one-way flow of information, and I think it's humongously expensive to spend 15 million bucks to tell people how to think.

Also, I think it's not telling the bigger picture, where we have other government departments which appear to be at arm's length who have their own communications departments. Take the regional health authorities for example. The government would argue that they're quasi-independent, but they have their own marketing departments.

My final question is to the hon. Premier. Again, with efficiency as the theme or the preference we added one ministry in 2004 after the election, the Ministry of Restructuring and Government Efficiency, and it looks for opportunities for efficiency. In his introductory remarks the Premier said that the chief internal auditor is also looking for ways to streamline and make government departments more efficient, so I see this as duplication. He also said that the chief internal auditor reports to or works with the Auditor General. I again disagree because if the Auditor General is provided and empowered with the right tools and the right mandate, we don't need a chief internal auditor. The Auditor General can do it, as they do federally.

Lastly, the hon. Premier indicated that the protocol office does a wonderful job in promoting Alberta and now with the Queen coming and so on. I don't disagree. The protocol office is needed, but I think the entire department has to be sort of trimmed down. Twenty-six million, as the hon. colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar said, compared to $26 billion might not seem a big percentage, but if we're looking for opportunities to streamline and be more efficient, I think that saving one dollar would be advisable.

So with that, I would cede the floor and invite the answers from the hon. Premier. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you. There were quite a few statements there that I have to disagree with, to say the least. One, the comparison to the White House is totally unfair. Mr. Chairman, there are literally hundreds, thousands of communications people in the U.S. federal government and, I might add, hundreds and hundreds and hundreds in the Canadian government. I've seen them all plugged in and wired. When you go to 24 Sussex, you can't find a place to sit down because of communications people, and they don't work for us, I'll tell you that for sure.

On Saskatchewan, I don't know, and I'm going to ask Premier Calvert next week, when I see him in Lloydminster, just how many people work in the public affairs bureau or in communications in Saskatchewan. I know it's more than six. Maybe he's right about 54 or so in Newfoundland; I don't know. But you've got to compare apples to apples. You know, in my own office I have three communications people and one administrative person on advertising out of my office.

To answer another question that was raised relative to why the Department of Community Development doesn't advertise, why the Department of Economic Development doesn't advertise, they do. The way it works is that the individual departments are responsible for designing the advertising and the preparation of the advertising campaign. The Public Affairs Bureau simply co-ordinates the purchase and assists with the design of ads based on the departmental plans. But it's the department that makes the decision as to what should go in the ad and how the ad should be framed and the message that the department wants to get across. The Public Affairs Bureau, using the expertise that's available in that department, simply assists with the design of the ads and co-ordinates the purchase of the advertising.

Mr. Chairman, I have a note here. It goes back to a previous question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. It mentioned Margaret Kool, and it somewhat relates to the question that was asked by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung. Margaret Kool advertising and other companies mentioned were primarily the companies that designed and ran our Kyoto campaign ads.

Now, the Liberals across the way might say that it was anti-Kyoto, and it was. But it wasn't anti greenhouse gas reduction, and it wasn't anti-environment. It was pro doing the things that made sense and the things that could be accomplished without hurting industry to the point where we might have an industrial shutdown. Kyoto is not the end-all and the be-all. Believe it. You know, I could tell the hon. member that one way we would contribute to the reduction of greenhouse gases, at least about 3 per cent, as I understand it, is to have everyone on Earth die, and then we would stop breathing and emitting CO₂. That's only 3 per cent, but that would be more than the whole country of Canada would achieve under the Kyoto protocol and the reduction of greenhouse gases.

We think that our legislation is much more sensible and presents a much more reasonable time frame. We needed to get the message out that we are not anti global warming. We understand that there is a problem, but we understand that there is an issue here of sustainability and that you have to achieve environmental remediation and at the same time allow for economic development and growth, and that is what is generally referred to as sustainable development. Basically, that's the message we're trying to get across.

The other issue that the hon. member alluded to was the advertising campaign relative to deregulation. I can tell the lone member of the media up there and the Official Opposition that this has been a frustrating thing for me because deregulation has something to do with the generation side, but everyone blames everything on deregulation. As a matter of fact, natural gas – I'm getting blamed for deregulation of natural gas. Well, that was done in 1985. Write that in the newspaper. Write: gas was deregulated in 1985. But the Liberals would have people believe that, no, it was this government that deregulated gas.

Mrs. McClellan: Yesterday.

Mr. Klein: Yesterday. So gas has been deregulated for a long, long time. I was the mayor of Calgary. I don't even remember it being deregulated, but I guess it was.

This hon. member – you know, Mr. Chairman, I hate to say it, but he's more guilty than anyone in this Assembly of saying that deregulation is responsible for all the problems related to power bills. It has nothing to do with the retail side. Ninety-three per cent of the consumers are on the regulated rate, the regulated rate that was in place 30 years ago.

Mr. MacDonald: But it was cheaper 30 years ago.

Mr. Klein: So was everything else. So was Coca-Cola, and so was gasoline, and so was everything else.

The only thing that has been deregulated – and this is why we had to advertise: to get the facts out because, God forbid, we weren't getting the facts out any other way and certainly not through the Liberals. The only thing that was deregulated was the generation of power, and that allowed about 3,000 megawatts of new power to come on stream. So we had to advertise.

Bill 11. Again, a massive campaign of misinformation: this is the slippery slope on the way to that so-called evil American two-tiered health care. It was a benign bill that simply allowed better access for people suffering in pain who needed joint replacements and so on, to allow clinics to operate on an overnight basis so that we could free up space in the public system to allow people to get joint replacements. A benign bill – people crawling over the bannister and pounding on the doors and ripping the door handles off. This was the misinformation being spread by the Liberals and the NDs. So we had to advertise to get the truth out about this bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, the truth squads. We forgot about those.

Mr. Klein: Right. You know what? We needed the truth squad at that time because we had the lying squad over there.

To talk about the budget. Well, the budget was a good deal. I don't think the ad said: folks, the budget of the Alberta government is a good deal. But we spelled out what the budget contained. All you have to do is talk to the people who are affected by this budget to determine whether it's a good deal or not, to people like the president of the University of Calgary, the University of Lethbridge, the University of Alberta, Athabasca University, the presidents of Grant MacEwan College, Mount Royal College, Lakeland College. You have to talk to the people who are directly affected, the people in postsecondary education, the presidents of the various student councils in the colleges and the universities and the technical institutions. Talk to the people involved in health care.

Here's one from Red Deer College just handed to me by the hon. Deputy Premier. It's addressed to Minister McClellan, and it says:

Congratulations on a great budget to launch Alberta's second century. The Board of Governors at Red Deer College commend you for your leadership in providing sustainable, predictable, adequate funding for post-secondary education.

I could table countless letters like this.

This significant investment will help us to provide quality learning programs and services that are accessible to students.

Those are the kinds of people you need to ask. But, no, what we get is reaction from the Liberals, and predictably it's going to be negative. It's going to be negative. They can't say anything nice.

Mr. MacDonald: Whenever we do, you take our good ideas.

Mr. Klein: No. Whenever they say something nice, sir, I start to wonder, and I say, "Oh, my God. What did we do wrong?"

Mr. Chairman, we have to advertise to get the facts out.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Let me begin by congratulating the Premier on the program and the vision set out in the throne speech and also in the budget which his Minister of Finance has proposed and which is now under debate in the House. The investments in that budget will certainly ensure that Alberta continues to be on the leading edge in infrastructure and education in the years to come.

As regards the Executive Council business plan I do have some questions regarding the operation of the chief internal auditor. As I understand the mission of the chief internal auditor, the auditor is to provide advice to the government regarding measures to identify and mitigate risks and to identify improvements. Given the fact that the office of the internal auditor has now completed its first full fiscal year, could the Premier give us some idea of what the effects of the office of the internal auditor have been, how effective it has been, and could the Premier also advise what the office's priorities might be for the coming year and whether or not the reports generated from the office of the chief internal auditor would be made public?

Mr. Klein: Well, first of all, the hon. member is correct. The restructured office, the consolidated office of the chief internal auditor has just ended its first full year of operation. It's important to note that the internal audit function has existed in government for decades, and I pointed that out loud and clear in my opening remarks. We have always had internal auditors. They've been assigned to the departments. Prior to last year there was no uniform internal audit process, and virtually all departments had their own internal auditors. Some departments did not, some of the smaller departments.

The Auditor General did an investigation of this whole situation, and following on the heels of a recommendation by the Auditor General in his 2001-2002 annual report, the centralized internal audit function was created and housed in Executive Council. Now, it could have been housed in Finance. It could have been housed in IIR. It could have been housed anywhere, but they preferred to house it in Executive Council. The thing is that having this service centralized brings greater consistency and accountability to the internal audit function. That could be one of the reasons that the Auditor General recommended that the office be established.

Basically, what the office provides is one set of eyes across all of government, ensuring that accountability and financial and measurement systems are consistent and effective and properly administered.

Now, as I understand it, over the last year the office of the internal auditor has been very busy. It has conducted almost 200 projects and worked with every ministry of government. It's important to note that in all of their work, the chief internal auditor and his staff strive to use the most rigorous standards and principles available. All of the people, as I understand it, are skilled, and they're well-trained members, dedicated individuals.

Hon. members should be aware that the office reports to an audit committee made up of senior public servants and external members, to which the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition alluded. In addition, all of its work is examined by the office of the Auditor General, and that is to ensure quality and to help the Auditor General's office avoid unnecessary potential duplication because the work of the internal audit relative to any of the departments of government may be audited as well by the Auditor General, and he just wants to avoid that duplication.

9:20

The work of the chief internal auditor is not generally reported publicly, as I stated in my opening remarks. This is because the office of the chief internal auditor is a government branch and not the creation of the Legislative Assembly, unlike the Auditor General. But as I mentioned previously, if the Auditor General were to deem a chief internal auditor matter of sufficient importance – in other words, if he found something dramatically wrong in any of the departments . . .

Mr. MacDonald: Like what?

Mr. Klein: Well, you name it. You find out, as you're so capable of doing. Report it. If it's a matter of significant importance, right? If he finds that you have your hand in the cookie jar, or someone has their hand in the cookie jar, if he deems it appropriate, he can make it public.

In the new fiscal year I understand that the chief internal auditor's office will be focused on four key areas. These areas are government programs and functions with an eye to improving efficiency and effectiveness of management and control systems, assessments of whether current controls are adequate to manage identified risk . . .

The Chair: Hon. Premier, your time has elapsed.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A couple of things here. I first of all would like to thank the hon. Premier for giving me the opportunity to ask him some questions. I will be honest with the members of this Assembly. I never thought in my wildest dreams that I would have this opportunity, and I'm very pleased to have been elected and have the opportunity to stand here tonight and ask the Premier some questions.

My business partners would certainly, probably, have my head if I didn't raise this issue, so on behalf of my business partners I'm going to ask the hon. Premier about the $50 that was in the 2003 expenditures to Royal Rubber Stamp. I'm wondering if the Premier can enlighten us as to how much money Executive Council has allotted to rubber stamp purchases for this current year because my business partners would certainly want to get in on that action, I can assure you. I have to say that I was going to really make a lot of noise about this until a little further down the page I noticed that CompuSmart that year took in a grand total of $6 worth of business from Executive Council, and then I decided that maybe I shouldn't make so much noise because Royal Rubber Stamp did relatively well compared to CompuSmart.

Mr. Chairman, I, too, saw the big black limousine out front this evening and the big white limousine, and certainly they weren't hauling opposition MLAs around, I can assure you, and they weren't hauling boilermakers around. It did cause me to notice in the 2003 expenditures for Executive Council $14,000 on limousines, and I wouldn't mind knowing how much of this year's budget is allocated to limousine service given that that seems to be a topic of some interest tonight.

I did notice in that year's expenditures $26,000 allocated to CFRN for the paid government infomercial that takes place every January, and I would like to know if the Premier could tell us how much is allocated in this year's budget for the upcoming January infomercial that we're most likely to see once again. I would just remind the Assembly that every year, of course, the Official Opposition asks for equal time. We never get it, but we certainly make a point of asking for it. More recently I noticed that this government's federal Tory cousins asked for equal time last week when the Prime Minister made his address to the nation, so certainly I would expect that there would be some understanding on the other side as to how we feel about that given that their federal cousins obviously experience the same frustration.

In the 2003 expenditures there was $128,000 listed for the Bank of Montreal. Now, there's a number of other bank charges listed in there and they're smaller amounts, $1,000 here and $2,000 there, but $128,000 to the Bank of Montreal. I'm wondering how much would be in this year's budget for similar charges and which banking institution might be benefiting.

So those would be the questions that, if the Premier wouldn't mind answering, I'd be pleased to hear. If not, perhaps I could see answers to those at a later date in writing.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Chairman, I'll try and get the information relative to the $50 expenditure for Royal Rubber Stamp and the $6 paid to CompuSmart. Limousine services: I don't know what the $14,000 was spent on. I won't even venture a guess, but obviously there are officials in the gallery who heard the question. Well, I will venture a guess. First of all, I can tell the hon. member that none of it was spent on me. I don't take limousines. You know, I have a car. Well, there's a driver here who acts as security. When I drive my own car, I have a '77 Volkswagen.

An Hon. Member: Yellow?

Mr. Klein: Red. No, it's blue. Blue. Tory blue. Yeah. It wouldn't be red. Orange and blue. It's got an orange top and blue bottom.

I would suspect that the limousine service involves traffic from the international airport. You know, I don't know what it costs, but people tell me that it's about a $50 cab bill or whatever the limousine is, 50 or 60 bucks. A lot of money. You know, it used to be a $5 or less ride down to the muni. I'll check that out, but I suspect that that's what it is.

The Bank of Montreal is the government bank, and all departments have charges that are levied by that bank for various banking services, but I'll try and get the hon. member a breakdown.

How much in the budget for the Premier's address? It's an opportunity I take once a year to basically give a state of the province account of where we're headed and give some ideas to the public of what is upcoming in the throne speech and the budget. I don't have the breakdown as to how much is in the budget, but I can tell the hon. member that immediately after the show, the next day, I received a phone call from the president of Shaw Communications, J.R. Shaw, offering to broadcast free and, as many times as he possibly could, to rebroadcast that speech. My advice to the Liberals would be to contact Shaw and put a show together. They can use the talent, I'm sure.

An Hon. Member: I thought you said the Liberals.

Mr. Klein: The Liberals. Right. I'm sorry.

They might. I don't know what. I can't speak for Shaw. I know that we received an offer to rebroadcast it for free, which was quite flattering actually, because Mr. Shaw was very impressed with the presentation.

What was the other question? Royal Rubber Stamp, CompuSmart, limousines. That was it. Okay. I'll attempt to get the exact figures and what the limousine service was all about.

9:30

The Chair: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to make reference to the introductory comments of the Executive Council business plan where I read that the office of the Premier/Executive Council provides administrative support to the Alberta Order of Excellence Council. I'm not sure just how long the Order of Excellence Council has operated, but earlier this evening I was discussing this with Dr. Bob Westbury, who told me that he was involved in this right from the beginning, and it seems to me that it goes back to the '80s or thereabouts. Anyway, he was very, very supportive and very positive about this council and considered it an honour to be involved.

Now, it seems to me that there are always many benefits to recognizing Albertans and honouring Albertans for outstanding work. It's the proper thing to do, I believe. I wonder if the Premier might comment on the value of the Alberta Order of Excellence program for Albertans. Is this program being profiled and promoted as well as it should be and could be? Will any of this year's budget increase go to raising the profile of the AOE; that is, the Alberta Order of Excellence?

Mr. Klein: Well, an interesting question about the profile of the Alberta Order of Excellence. It certainly is a wonderful ceremony. I've had the opportunity of attending, and so has the Deputy Premier and, I believe, other ministers and members of Executive Council and members of the Conservative caucus and perhaps members of the ND and Liberal caucuses. It's a wonderful program.

The Order of Excellence is the highest order that the province can bestow upon a citizen. It's the province's equivalent to the Order of Canada. The act, as the hon. member pointed out, was created in 1979 to recognize Albertans who have rendered service of the greatest distinction and of singular excellence for or on behalf of all the residents of Alberta.

There are currently, as I understand it, 58 members of the Alberta Order of Excellence. They come from all walks of life. They represent very different fields of endeavour. Those include agriculture, education, science and research, the arts, health care, business, law, politics, engineering, the military, and, of course, community service.

Each year names are put forward through a public nomination process. There were five previously, but we've expanded that to 10, beginning this year. Ten of those nominations are chosen by the Alberta Order of Excellence Council for induction. The people who are chosen for induction into the order are selected because of their extraordinary contributions to this province. Members are all people who place a high premium on service to others whether through their professional work, through philanthropic contributions, or through volunteer activities. The contributions of members can be seen in many cases at the national and even at the international level.

I'm very, very proud as Premier and as an Albertan of the men and women who have been inducted into the Alberta Order of Excellence. I'm also proud of the members of the council, who have devoted their time to examine and screen those worthy candidates. The chancellor, of course, is none other than His Honour the Lieutenant Governor, Norman Kwong, and the chair is Dr. Robert Westbury, as the hon. member pointed out. Council members include Bunny Ferguson, Jack Gorr, Harley Hotchkiss, Walter Paszkowski, and Harold Storlien.

To their credit the council has instituted a number of changes in the past years, and it's all designed to create public awareness of this order. The call for nominations to the order has resulted in a record 44 nominations, so that obviously has improved. This is a drastic increase from the average of four nominations received in previous years.

As well, planning to develop a new members' gallery in the Jubilee auditoriums in Edmonton and Calgary has begun, so that will bring a focus to those people who have been inducted into the order. In addition, the council is encouraging those who have been inducted into the order to wear the pin, very much like people wear the Order of Canada pin, to show that they have this very special distinction. The council will also be designing this year a website specifically for school-aged children, one that could be used as a learning tool in Alberta's elementary school curriculum. Additional events may be planned to attract both media and public interest.

You know, this province boasts many resources, but the greatest resource we have, I've always said, is the great people of this province. The Alberta Order of Excellence is a wonderful program that properly honours the very best that we have in this province.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. Premier, previously, when I called time on you, apparently there was an error in setting the clock, and you actually had an extra five minutes. So just for the record I'd like to clarify that.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just for record, I appreciate that. I won't take up the five minutes, but I would like to apologize to the hon. members of the Liberal opposition. I used an unparliamentary phrase in that I called them the lie squad, and for that I apologize.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, I've seen many wonders here tonight in the short time that I've been in the Chamber.

I appreciate the opportunity, as well, to ask the hon. Premier some questions about his budget. In some of the comments that he was making earlier, he ranged rather widely and touched on a number of issues including postsecondary education, Kyoto, health care, and so on. I might ask about some of those things as well, but I do have some fairly specific questions for him. This is one of the few times other than question period, Mr. Chairman, that you actually get an opportunity to ask the Premier questions in a broader sense about the operations of government generally and the Premier's office, and so on.

I'd like to start with the question about the Ministry of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. I'd like to start by asking the Premier why he created this ministry in the first place. You know, it's certainly always enjoyable to ask the minister questions in question period, but I really don't see the reason for this ministry at all. In fact, it looks to me like the Premier has just taken the SuperNet out of Innovation and Science and created the ministry with the ironic title of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. I think that this particular ministry should be the first target of any restructuring or attempt to bring about greater government efficiency.

I see a number of things in the business plan for that department, and I know, Mr. Chairman, that we're not talking about that department's estimates tonight, but we could just go through some of the core businesses that it's supposed to be doing.

- 1: Define and prioritize opportunities for business improvement and service delivery with and on behalf of government.
- 2: Lead the transformation and improvement of priority business practices for government in optimizing the delivery of programs and services to Albertans.
- 3: Integrate information and communications technology and knowledge management standards, practices and frameworks with the business needs of government.
- 4: Deliver and continuously improve shared services with ministries and partners.

In answer to questions in the Assembly from the opposition, the minister has said that the only focus he has, at least at this time, is the SuperNet. So my questions to the Premier are: what is exactly going on with this department? Why is it necessary, and why doesn't the Premier just wrap it up? It's got expenses of $258 million. So that's a big cost, Mr. Chairman, and I think that the Premier should make a compelling case why this department shouldn't simply just restructure itself out of existence.

I do have a comment on the Premier's infomercial. In fact, is the Premier going to take Mr. Shaw up on his offer in the future and hold his Premier's address on cable TV for free and spare the taxpayers the costs of doing it on Global? That's a good idea, and I also like the idea that there should be equal time for all three recognized opposition parties in having an opportunity to respond. So I think that's an excellent idea by Mr. Shaw, and I hope that the Premier will accept his offer and save us the costs.

Now, I wanted to ask about some of the expenses. On the Premier's website there are a number of costs related to expenses for international travel, and I wondered if the Premier would agree to also post information respecting his office's domestic travel on the website. Some specifics, Mr. Chairman. On September 12, 2004, the Premier and six guests travelled from Edmonton to Ottawa and back again on a private chartered aircraft. The total cost was $41,514.81. Could we not have accomplished this more efficiently just using a regular domestic air service? And that, of course, doesn't include the whole cost. The Premier travelled at one point to Washington with one guest, and the total cost including airfare, accommodations, and meals was over $10,000. There was a trip from Calgary to Toronto with the Premier and six guests on July 23, 2003, that cost taxpayers $22,628, and the Premier and his guests stayed, and the plane came back empty.

This question is to the Premier, and it's more broadly around transportation for the government. We've recently received information from the minister of infrastructure relative to air charters that show over a million dollars in expenditures over the last three years on charters in addition to the four government aircraft that we also know about. I am wondering what steps the Premier thinks are necessary in order to make sure that the most cost-effective transportation is used by the government at all times. Is there, in fact, a system there to evaluate these decisions and direct ministers and other officials of the government and government caucus members to take the most cost-effective means of getting around? I think a review of that would go a long way to eliminating concern in the public about unjustified expenditures for those things.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to talk a little bit about the Public Affairs Bureau. It's become customary. I see that there is a 6 per cent increase yet again. This is one of the most well-developed propaganda arms of any government in the entire country, and we have often found, for example, that the government can afford to send highly paid full-time staff to monitor our news conferences or our scrums or put out counterspin to work that we do with a very small budget. I really wonder if that's what the public information bureau is really intended for. It seems to have become a rather partisan arm of the government and is used, I think, basically to try and counter-act opposition comment.

I was interested earlier when the Premier was going on and on about how the terrible opposition parties with their tiny resources had been able to brainwash the entire population of the province on postsecondary education, on Bill 11, on Kyoto, and so on. I really don't think that that's the case. I rather think that we're outgunned pretty significantly on those matters, and if there weren't some real concerns on the part of the public of Alberta, those issues would not have been as big as they are.

The question I have relative to the budget and the staff positions that are identified in the Executive Council budget for people from the Public Affairs Bureau would be: how many people in similar communication jobs are there that are to be found in the budgets of all the line ministries of the government? It would be nice if we could have a complete accounting of every communication professional working for the government in all departments.

Mr. Chairman, that concludes my questions and comments, and I look forward to the Premier's response.

The Chair: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. One of the responsibilities, of course, of the Department of Restructuring and Government Efficiency is SuperNet, and that is a project that is imminent. This ministry will oversee that project, but certainly that is not its only function.

In government, Mr. Chairman, there are literally hundreds of functions and activities that take place each and every day. There are regulations that I think, if they were stacked up, would probably consume all the space in this legislative Chamber. Those regulations have been developed over years. There are volumes of legislation, volumes of reports and policy manuals, and the job of the Department of Restructuring and Government Efficiency is to really get rid of a lot of those rules and regulations that no longer make sense.

You know, they use the acronym RAGE. I could call it the dumb rules ministry, and it is the responsibility of the minister to really look for efficiencies and determine what makes sense.

Now, I'm going to give you an example. This is one example involving one segment of government. The hon. leader of the ND opposition doesn't know this, or maybe he does know it, but he's not telling anyone. Well, I'm going to ask him a question. Maybe he would like to answer it. I bet you he doesn't know. Maybe he'll answer it publicly. How many departments deal with disabled people?

Mr. Mason: Too many.

Mr. Klein: How many?

Mr. Mason: Four at least.

Mr. Klein: He's so wrong. He is so wrong. There are far more than that. But, anyway, there are numerous programs to deal with disabled people under 13 different ministries. Thirteen different ministries. What the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency will set out to do is co-ordinate those activities to achieve efficiencies and more consistency in the delivery of services to disabled people. There are literally — well, I don't know how many. I understand about 24, not four but 24, programs that extend to people with disabilities under 13 different ministries. That is phenomenal.

In the areas of environment and energy there are constantly conflicts. So how do you sort those conflicts out?

We find throughout government that there are silos and there's some turf protection. I went through it when I was Minister of Environment, and after I became Premier, of course we started to sort things out, and I'll give you an example. I was not as Minister of Environment going to give up the Environmental Centre at Vegreville. I was not going to give it up to the Alberta Research Council, although it made sense. I said, "No, this is under environment," but when I became the Premier, of course I said, "It makes a lot of sense for this to be under the Alberta Research Council."

There are many instances like this where things need to be co-ordinated and someone needs to drive the public service into giving up turf, and that can only be done through policy decisions and through the power of a minister. So that's why the Department of Restructuring and Government Efficiency was created.

The hon. leader of the ND opposition asked me to take Mr. Shaw up on his offer. The offer only extends to this year's broadcast, and that is to rebroadcast this year's broadcast free. Now, to buy the time is the most inexpensive part, as I understand it, of the whole production. It's the production time, you know, the amount of time that goes into it, and whether it's on cable or whether it's through a commercial station, Global or CFCN or CFRN or CBC, you still have to do the production. I will pursue with Mr. Shaw whether they would make the air time available. I'll pursue that with him, but it's the production time, really, that is the cost consumer.

Mrs. McClellan: That's very gracious of you.

Mr. Klein: It is very gracious of me.

Mr. Shaw did not give an undertaking that he would provide the air time for next year's broadcast. He said that he would provide air time to rebroadcast the tape that had already been made of this year's broadcast.

Back to the department of government restructuring. All of the other questions related to that department should have been asked when the minister appeared before this committee I think about two weeks ago. He was the first minister after the budget to appear before this committee, and those questions should have been asked of him at that particular time. Why they weren't I have no idea. I can only answer as to why the department was created.

Relative to travel again I don't know if the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation has appeared before this committee or not, but those are questions that ought to have been asked of him. I simply go where they wind me up and tell me to go, and I always ask the question: is this the most efficient and effective way to go? In other words, does it make sense?

By the way, they are not guests. They are not guests. You know, this is one of the problems that I have. The leader of the ND opposition stands up and says that the Premier and his guests, you know, flitted off to Toronto or Washington. They are not guests. They are public service employees. They are not guests. As a matter of fact, sometimes I feel like I'm the guest. They are public service employees who would be going to those places anyway and paying a full fare on an airline. So what we do is measure the cost of chartering or taking our own aircraft against the cost of buying full-fare tickets on airlines, and we try and work that out. That's all I can say about that. Relative to the detail it's a question that more appropriately is asked of the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. But I would just like to reiterate that they are not guests, Mr. Chairman, and I can't say this enough. This is the same frustration.

The question is: why do we advertise? Because there has to be a way to get the truth out.

Mr. Chairman, to stand up and imply that the Premier and his guests – that is the kind of thing we have to contend with on a day-to-day basis. Oh, by the way, it is not this government that has all this all-consuming, overpowering power. No. It is the vocal minority. You know, it's the squeaky wheel that gets the grease. It's the NDs and their Friends of Medicare and all the people that they can round up to create noise and to bang drums and to smash windows and to climb over the bannisters – that's what creates the news, and they know that – and then send them over to the local drinking hole over here where all the union people and the media go and then boast about, "Boy, did we ever get those Tories, yeah," with their good NDP buddies sitting there, you know, lapping up the beer.

The Chair: A point of order has been called. On a point of order?

Point of Order

Factual Accuracy

Mr. Mason: Yes, please. As much as I was enjoying that, Mr. Chairman, I want to assure the Premier that we didn't order anyone to rappel over the sides of the public galleries.

The Chair: Will you provide the reference for your point of order and what it is?

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I will. The Premier was using language which imputed motives and was likely to create disorder in the House, and I'll get you the numbers in a minute. But, you know, we of course both know what they are.

The Chair: Hon. member, if you're going to stand on a point of order, the chair would expect you to stand and give a reference immediately.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Chairman, the point of order is under 23(h), (i), and (j). That is when someone "makes allegations against another member." That's (h), as we both know. Citation (i) is "imputes false or unavowed motives to another member," and (j): "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder."

Now, I want to be perfectly clear that the Premier is not correct in saying that we incited anyone to come over the railings during the Bill 11 debate or sent anyone over to disturb the cabinet ministers in their beer. So I think the Premier should apologize and withdraw those remarks.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Chairman, for the sake of the decorum of this House I will apologize. Thank you.

The Chair: That should deal with the matter.

Debate Continued

The Chair: After considering the business plans and proposed estimates for the Department of Executive Council for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:
Expense $26,246,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, I would move that the Committee of Supply rise and report the estimates of Executive Council and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Executive Council: expense, $26,246,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

60th Anniversary of VE Day

20. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta on May 5, 2005, welcome to the floor of the Assembly three representatives of the Canadian armed forces, one from each branch of the services, with one of those members being invited to address the Assembly to mark the occasion of the 60th anniversary of VE, Victory in Europe, Day.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and privilege tonight to move Government Motion 20. As you're aware, the Speaker's office has arranged for a celebration and commemoration of Victory in Europe Day on the date that we sit closest to the actual day of the 60th anniversary of victory in Europe. In inviting members to participate and to help commemorate that particular day, it was perceived to be an opportunity to pay particular remembrance by inviting representatives of the service to the floor and have an historic occasion, one of very few that have happened in this Assembly or in any parliamentary Assembly, to invite someone other than someone elected to the floor or the representative of the Queen to attend on the Assembly and speak. Victory in Europe Day is a very, very important day in our history, in the collective history of democracy, and I would ask the Assembly to afford this opportunity for us to commemorate it in a most appropriate and special way.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Government House Leader mentioned May 8, 2005, as being Victory in Europe Day, VE Day, which was the official day of celebration of the end of World War II. In fact, May 5, which is the very day that the motion refers to, at 8 a.m. local time was when the surrender happened on the British and Canadian front in Europe, on the European front. So May 5 in itself is a very significant day as to when the enemy forces surrendered. In fact, the last three Canadians were killed on that day, May 5, 1945, in the European theatre.

So this was a momentous day in Canadian history. I think the hon. members ought to remember two things with respect to that particular time in Canadian history; first of all, the very significant role that Canada played in World War II right from the outset. On September 10, 1939, only one week after the declaration of war by Great Britain, Canada entered that conflict. We were in it for six years, and during that six years a million men and women served in uniform in this country, a remarkable number for the size of the country at the time. We had at the end of the war the fourth largest air force in the world, the fourth largest navy in the world, and the first Canadian army which fought as a unit in the European theatre. So Canada played a very significant role in that conflict.

The second thing that we ought to remember is the huge sacrifice made by Canadian forces during that conflict: 45,000 Canadians perished in World War II.

I mentioned that during the period of 1939-45 a million people served under uniform. That constituted 41 per cent of all men in this country between the ages of 18 and 45, and there was no other nation on Earth that came anywhere near to the per capita participation in that conflict as to Canadians. Given the fact that it is 60 years since the end of that conflict, I think it is also an opportunity for this House to remember some of the veterans which are still around, and this will be the last great, significant decade anniversary of the end of that conflict.

So I would urge all hon. members to support the motion made by the Government House Leader. I think it is extremely fitting that we would have not only the three members of the services appear on the floor, but I know that the Speaker has planned to invite a number of veterans to join us in the gallery on that special day.

Thank you.

10:10

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak in favour of this motion. I think it's a very appropriate motion, and the Official Opposition, of course, supports it.

The victory in Europe 60 years ago from that date that we will celebrate is one of great importance to many, many Albertans and many Albertan families. If we go through every town, every summer village, every place that has been around since that time, you'll see a memorial. There is a memorial even in the halls of this Legislature that speaks to those who passed in that great conflict.

Many families were hurt by it, you know. I don't in my own family look to the history as being special or unique. It really was something that affected almost everybody. As the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill said, 42 per cent of the population was somehow in the armed forces. To have them here on that particular day to commemorate that event, I think, is just a perfect thing to do, and it is indeed the last probable decade anniversary that we'll see for some of the veterans.

My father's cousin was shot down in a Spitfire in the Battle of Britain. My uncles, a number of them, were in the Netherlands, and they spent the war taken away and were in slave labour. My dad was in the Dutch underground and fought with the Stoot Troepen and was attached to the Canadian forces in the occupation and the liberation, indeed, of the Netherlands.

It was a day of tremendous rejoicing in western Canada. That day almost 60 years ago was a day of incredible rejoicing in Europe and especially in those places that were liberated through the sacrifice of the many Canadian forces that were present there.

I speak strongly in favour of this motion, and I'm pleased to support it here today, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased as well to rise in support of this motion, and I appreciate the effort that the hon. Minister of Justice and Government House Leader has made in bringing this forward and certainly believe that the approach that he's suggesting is extremely appropriate.

The Second World War, Mr. Speaker, was a horrific war, the scale of which we have never before seen and which, hopefully, we will never see again. We in the New Democratic Party take pride in our role and reputation as people who fight for peace, but sometimes war is unavoidable. In this case, war was unavoidable, and the fight was necessary, justified, and required acts of supreme sacrifice from millions of individuals.

The war was a battle against fascism and militarism that enslaved millions in the world. Estimates on the number killed in the Second World War are difficult to estimate exactly, but anywhere between 30 million and 40 million people were believed to have been killed. The horrors inflicted by the Nazis on the Jewish population and other populations of Europe are unparalleled in history.

Canada played a very proud role in that struggle, Mr. Speaker. Most of the effort was directed against the Axis Powers in Europe, Nazi Germany, and fascist Italy. Canada, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill has pointed out, played a very, very large role. We fought in Italy, we fought in the Battle of Britain, we fought in France, played a major role in bomber command in the bomber offensive against Germany, and took on a major responsibility for the defence of shipping in the Atlantic. In fact, the western half of the Atlantic was under Canadian control and the sailors, including the merchant sailors, who made tremendous sacrifices.

We shouldn't forget the battalions that were involved in the defence of Hong Kong against the initial Japanese onslaught either. That was one of the tragedies of the war. A very small Canadian force was overwhelmed by a very much larger Japanese force in the defence of Hong Kong.

So Canadians played a full role throughout the war, and I think the prospect of having three veterans of that war from the different services with us in the Chamber to help mark that occasion is a tremendous opportunity that we should accept. I want to express the support of the NDP opposition for this step.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader to close?

[Government Motion 20 carried]

Korea War Veterans Day

21. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly recognize July 27 to be Korea War Veterans Day.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is also an honour and a privilege and, I think, quite fitting on the same night to move Motion 21. A number of jurisdictions across this country have moved to recognize Korea War Veterans Day on July 27. It's full time that Alberta joined in making that recognition. This request has been brought forward by a number of people, but none other than a former member of this House, Mr. John Gogo, from Lethbridge, requested that we move ahead with this consideration and I think, again, on a timely basis.

Many Albertans served in Korea, and every year when I attend the Remembrance Day ceremony in Edmonton, as I know others do across this province, there are many who are there whose time of service and sacrifice and contribution was in Korea. Again, it's fitting that we remember the service that was provided and that we recognize that day, which is being recognized in many other jurisdictions as well, as Korea War Veterans Day.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm also honoured to rise to speak to this motion, which resolves that the Legislative Assembly recognize July 27 to be Korea War Veterans Day. The Korean War is often called the forgotten war. As I was collecting my thoughts to speak to this motion, I couldn't help thinking of the great memorials we have to World War I and, in particular, the magnificent memorial at Vimy Ridge, which my wife and our two sons have visited and I commend wholeheartedly to every Canadian as a place to visit. It's overwhelming in its power.

I think of the events of World War II that have entered the common culture of Canada, names like Dieppe or Ortona or the liberation of Holland and the north Atlantic battle, for example, and how each of those are marked. In some cases there are veterans still surviving those. My own father served in the western command of the north Atlantic on an aircraft that spent endless hours patrolling for submarines.

The Korean War has too easily disappeared from our memories even though it's the more recent war and even though there are more veterans surviving that war than World War II or, certainly, from World War I, so we need to take this step to give those veterans their due. I know there are constituents of mine who served in the Korean War under United Nations command. It was, I think, the first and, I believe, remains the largest single United Nations intervention or action of its kind. Substantial numbers of Canadians served, substantial numbers suffered, and substantial numbers died.

I have had conversations with veterans of the Korean War, and what struck me most is how, even though it's half a century later, those memories are so close to the surface of the minds of those people. Within minutes of opening a conversation, they're actually sometimes in tears because those memories are so fresh. We owe these people the recognition that this motion would bring forth, and I am privileged, genuinely privileged to support this motion.

I do have one question for the Government House Leader, who made the motion, and that is to confirm that this, in fact, will be an annual and ongoing recognition. It's not just July 27 of this year, but that it is an ongoing and permanent fixture on the calendar.

I'm sure that all members of the Liberal caucus will be proud to support this motion. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader to close.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Only to confirm that there is, in fact, no year in the motion, and therefore as I read the motion, the intention of the motion would be that July 27 in every year would be known as Korea War Veterans Day or, at least, accepted as such and remembered as such by this Legislature.

[Government Motion 21 carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 37
Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2005

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I did make a commitment to respond in writing to my colleagues across the way. I hope that they've had a chance to review that. There were responses that were referred to the hon. members for Edmonton-Riverview, Edmonton-Gold Bar, and Edmonton-Calder. I hope that they had a chance to review those. I do have copies of them here that can be tabled if that's appropriate.

Dr. Taft: That would be useful for us. Thank you.

Mrs. McClellan: If that's appropriate, I would do it now if the page wouldn't mind taking them. We will table those.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the support that we've had from members across the way on this bill, constructive comments on the bill, and questions that have been asked that I hope I was able to answer for them.

The amendments essentially do three main things: lock in the funds in the debt retirement account so they can only be used for repaying the debt; increase the nonrenewable resource revenue that can be used for budget purposes from $4 billion to $4.75 billion. That, of course, allowed us to make our increases to health, education, advanced education, community policing, supports for AISH, and many others that were outlined in the budget, and I think we've had considerable support from all quarters on those. The other amendments are to really make available the amendments to the Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act and other endowment funds to clarify how the monies can be transferred into those funds.

That really is the essence of what we dealt with in this act. I don't think I'll get into the technical amendments. I think we were able to deal with anything that was in that. I think I would rather take the time that's remaining for any further questions or comments. Again, in the interests of time – it's entirely up to the members – if they have further questions, I'll respond in writing or this evening if they wish.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my seat and wait for comments from members.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to Bill 37, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2005. This bill will increase the amount of nonrenewable resource revenue the government can use for the budget from $4 billion to $4.75 billion. It will simplify the contingency allowance to be 1 per cent of revenue, and it will eliminate the schedule of allowable accumulated debt. It has implications for Bill 1.

I just want to briefly indicate that we support the increase in the amount of nonrenewable resource revenue for program spending, but we are seriously concerned, though, Mr. Speaker, that the government doesn't seem to have a plan for a postpetroleum Alberta economy. We think that they should be doing more to build the Alberta of the future, whose economy is driven by innovation and by technology, not by oil, gas, and forestry.

We are concerned that there's no timetable for Bill 1. This year's budget will only put $250 million into a $4.5 billion commitment. This is a concern, not that it's $250 million but that, in fact, there's only $11 million available for students in the present funding of the endowment.

We believe that the funding towards the endowment should be on budgeted money and not from unbudgeted surpluses. We believe that the government should accurately predict its oil and gas revenues, or as accurately as possible, and budget money to put into this fund because the approach that's been taken, I think, both by the Conservatives and the Liberals is to grow this endowment through unbudgeted surpluses. We just don't believe in unbudgeted surpluses. We think if the money should be going into the fund, it should be accurately budgeted and should be put in there in the budget in a fixed amount every year. To say otherwise is only to encourage the government's practice of lowballing oil and gas revenues.

So, Mr. Speaker, with that, I'll conclude my comments and take my seat.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are nearing the end of the debate here, I'm sure. I must thank the Deputy Premier. She and I lock horns on various issues, but I do appreciate her coming forward with this information. She's consistently quick to respond to our questions, and that is appreciated by us all.

Frankly, I think part of the bill is fine, and part of it concerns me. Clearly, we're supporting the idea of setting aside money to pay off the debt, keeping it locked in an account. Terrific. Good. Terrific idea.

My one concern is with the other part of the bill, which raises the threshold for spending from nonrenewable resource revenues. I am concerned about us becoming overly dependent on nonrenewable resource revenues on an ongoing basis to pay for ongoing programs. I am not convinced, and it's not clear to me that there is a solid, long-term plan for managing the various revenue streams that this government has: the nonrenewable resource revenues, the personal income tax, corporate tax, and all the other revenues. I would feel more comfortable supporting this bill if I could see that in the long term we are not getting off balance on what we can sustain in the long term. I won't go into the details of my concerns. I'm sure the Minister of Finance understands where I'm coming from.

So I'm a bit torn on this bill, but after all, it does lock us in to paying off the debt, the last step in that process, and let's get on with it. With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat and allow the Minister of Finance to wrap up, I think.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments that have been made by members. I will inevitably write them a note.

I'm not sure that this is a good sign, but I actually am in agreement with the Leader of the Official Opposition that it's incredibly important that we ensure that the dollars that we commit from resource revenue are sustainable. Certainly, that is why there are some unbudgeted dollars. Because of the uncertainty for future spending, it is not wise to expend those dollars when you don't know they'll be there next year, especially on program spending. It is important that we invest those dollars, and we've laid out some ways. I think that the Official Opposition agree with the endowments. We may not agree entirely on the mechanism but have some agreement on how those investments should be made. Of course, those will be further discussed.

I thank all members for their comments, and I will respond in writing to give fuller answers in some of the comments.

[Motion carried; Bill 37 read a third time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 16
Business Corporations Amendment Act, 2005

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The clerks and the pages are presently circulating a House amendment. This is a minor amendment to Bill 16, the Business Corporations Amendment Act, 2005. The nature of the amendment is to correct a drafting oversight. In the section that is being amended, the terms "unlimited liability corporation" and "limited corporation" are actually being used in an improper context because those terms were previously defined in the old act as being Alberta corporations. Since we're dealing with the transitional provisions dealing with unlimited liability corporations, they were used in an improper context. The proposed amendment reworks the wording of the section to simply take those definitions out of there and to make sense in terms of the unlimited liability corporations.

So I would move the amendment to Bill 16, which is now circulated to the House.

The Chair: We will call this amendment A1 and recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung to speak on the amendment.

Perhaps we'll just wait a bit until the amendment can get circulated. Does everybody have it? Okay. Proceed.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First, I would like to start by thanking the sponsor of the bill and the amendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, who invited me yesterday to receive advance warning of the amendment. I thank him for sharing it with me. Although I admit that unlike himself I don't have a law background, I checked very briefly, and we don't have any problems with this amendment. It doesn't seem to be difficult or malicious or ill intended. It's basically to correct a drafting oversight in the language of Bill 16.

Having said that, I would like to voice our support as the Official Opposition for this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Are there any more speakers on the amendment?

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: Anyone wish to speak on the bill as amended? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Before we close debate on this bill, I was under the impression that the sponsor of the bill, the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, would actually come back to committee with some answers to questions that were asked in second reading. If I am correct in this assumption, I would appreciate it if the hon. member would present these comments.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do have some comments to make with respect to the questions that were posed in second reading. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung had asked questions regarding whether unlimited liability corporations would escape taxes on their investments in this province. I can simply answer that by saying that the advice that we've received from the officials in the Department of Finance is simply that that would not be so, that they would be taxed, in fact, the same as any other Alberta corporation.

Other jurisdictions do treat unlimited liability corporations in a somewhat different manner. For example, the United States of America deals with unlimited liability corporations as though they were a quasi-partnership, so it's a different type of investment vehicle as pertains to them. But being incorporated in Alberta, they would pay taxes exactly the same as any other corporation.

The other question that the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung had asked was regarding the shareholders of the unlimited liability corporation being ultimately and fully responsible for a liability and whether or not there were any safeguards or we were letting the directors off easy. Of course, generally in Canadian companies we would not have shareholders being liable. That is the whole purpose behind limited liability corporations, and that is the reason that that vehicle exists, primarily: to encourage investment and venture capital.

Generally speaking, Canadians would not be likely to enter into such a relationship with an unlimited liability corporation because there would be no tax advantage as far as our citizens would be concerned. In the unlikely event that a Canadian was a shareholder, there would likely be an agreement in place between the shareholders that would state that the American shareholders would take care of those debts and liabilities of the corporation to an equal and joint and several extent as any Canadian shareholders.

In Alberta the unlimited liability corporation is still a regular corporation for all intents and purposes. As far as directors go, directors would have the same responsibilities and liabilities as they would under the existing Business Corporations Act either federally or provincially here in Alberta. Granted, there is nothing that would prevent a director from heading across the border. However, if anything, the debts and liabilities of the unlimited liability corporation are better secured because the shareholders are directly liable. Not only is there director liability, but the shareholders are personally liable for all the debts and obligations. Of course, that is not the case for either directors or for shareholders in a normal corporation.

The hon. member had asked: what guarantees will the public have after the initial phases, after the euphoria and the ecstasy subsides that the unlimited liability corporations will continue to invest here and to employ Albertans and Canadians? I'm not sure whether there would be any euphoria or ecstasy over the introduction of the unlimited liability corporations, but I can advise the hon. member that I have had telephone calls in the last two weeks from two different law firms in the city of Calgary who have advised of very significant business deals coming out of Toronto. They're interested in knowing when this bill is going to pass because there are deals that are ready to be done but which would flow into Nova Scotia rather than into Alberta if this legislation is not passed in a timely fashion. So there is, obviously, a demand out there for this type of an investment vehicle and to do business here in Alberta. I'm not sure about whether or not investing in any of those unlimited liability corporations would be advisable for the hon. member or myself unless they are prepared to risk all of their personal assets.

As to the issue of whether or not they would continue to invest here and employ, the best assurance that we have is to maintain that connection, to have a business-friendly environment here in Alberta with a competitive regulatory taxation agreement and a competitive environment as far as governance of the corporations. That's why the unlimited liability corporation vehicle being brought here is something that I think is a great advantage.

The unlimited liability corporation, like other corporations, would still have to have 25 per cent of their directors resident here in Alberta or in Canada. So they would have to be residents here.

Now, the hon. member also asked whether or not there would be more transparency and truth in the government's audit procedures by only allowing neutral, unaffiliated, and impartial auditors to review the books. I'm not sure what government audit procedures are being referred to. Normally, the Alberta government would have no direct role in auditing any corporation's books. However, what the government can do and does do is to ensure that any corporations that fall under our jurisdiction – that is, if they're incorporated under the Business Corporations Act – do have specific audit requirements.

In the case of a corporation – that would be in the case of a private corporation – any shareholder could demand an audit, demand that the books of the corporation be audited. So even if one shareholder objected at the annual general meeting to the waiver of an audit, it would be required. Of course, public corporations are certainly required to have audits as well.

So the proposed amendment would clarify some of these interpretations.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning had asked further about the issue of the dividend payments to the capital account of the corporation. Just by way of explanation, currently only the declared amount of a dividend has to be put into the capital account. The problem is that the term "declared amount" is being interpreted in two different ways, so there's an ambiguity there in the act right now. Either the directors right now can arbitrarily declare the amount, or the amount could be determined by the value of the stock. What we're trying to accomplish with this amendment is to clarify that the second interpretation is correct; that is, the amount to be determined is the value of the stock. So the amendment is going to reduce potential abuse by directors.

Another question asked by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning was with respect to the provision that allows for beneficiaries of registered shareholders that hold shares in trust to vote on corporate decisions. It was asked: what about the blind trust situations?

Now, this provision does not obligate beneficial owners of shares to vote on corporate decisions, and a so-called blind trust is something that is created by virtue of contract. In such a situation the property or share owner, who is known as a cestui que trust, agrees that only the trustee can control the asset. Therefore, in a blind trust situation the trustee would continue to exercise the powers given under the trust agreement and would vote on behalf of the beneficial owner. So if there was any clarification required as to who gets to vote on those corporate decisions, that should be addressed in the trust agreement.

Another question that was asked by the opposition members was the issue of the area which changes the number of Canadian directors required by the corporation and reduces it to a quarter. The question was asked: why is there the drop in the Canadian requirement, and shouldn't we have Canadians fully represented on the boards? Of course, the answer there is that this is a balancing act. While we want as many directors as possible to be Albertans and Canadians, the business practically dictates a more liberal approach to the residency requirements. [interjections] Okay. Okay. So lowering the residency requirement mirrors the change in the Canada Business Corporations Act.

The original 50 per cent residency requirement was instituted to ensure that the Alberta corporations remained here, but even with the Alberta advantage it's now having the opposite effect, as Alberta corporations, even though they carry on business here, are incorporating in other jurisdictions and moving their offices to other jurisdictions where they have that flexibility and they don't have to have such a high proportion of Canadian and Albertan jurisdictions.

I think I've addressed most of the questions that the hon. member has, but if he has anything further.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I know that the members opposite are eager to either adjourn debate or go home, but I'm only going to take one more minute of their time.

For the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, when he mentioned that he wasn't sure what I meant when I talked about neutral, unaffiliated, and impartial auditors, I'm hoping to clarify that and shed some light on it. I was referring to a part of Bill 16 which was proposing to disqualify a shareholder accountant from being an auditor of a corporation in which he or she owns shares. Back in second reading I was encouraging the government to adopt the same approach and implement some provision to its own auditors, making sure that these auditors, like the Auditor General or like the chief internal auditor and people like that, be neutral, unaffiliated, and impartial auditors when they're looking at government books. So I was hoping that the government would expand this idea and adopt it in all its transactions, not just when it comes to the Business Corporations Amendment Act. This is just a point of clarification.

With that, I would invite further debate. Thank you.

10:50

[The clauses of Bill 16 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 15

Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2005

The Chair: Are there any questions, amendments, or comments with respect to this bill?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Chairman, certainly I was prepared to wait until the next time we consider this bill, but I think the hon. Government House Leader would have soon kept me out of his system.

I'm pleased to talk about Bill 15, which is a bill that we have a lot of difficulty with. The NDP opposition has heard Albertans' concerns about this bill. We've talked to labour groups, their lawyers, and regular rank-and-file workers. It's our belief that Bill 15 is a step backwards and negatively impacts workers' rights.

Instead of empowering workers, the government is trying to take their rights away through this bill.

One of the things that concerns us the most, Mr. Chairman, is tying the co-operation of the worker to the benefits under 22(9). We think that's draconian at least. It allows the Workers' Compensation Board to eliminate benefits, not based on the medical condition and how it was caused and how it affects the worker's ability to do his or her job but on whether or not the staff of the Workers' Compensation Board believe that the worker has been compliant and co-operative with them in going through the steps. It introduces a massive subjective element to the assessment of workers, and we don't think that it should be supported at all.

The government and government members themselves have heard loud and clear about the long-standing claims. In fact, many people on the backbenches of this government have been vocal advocates for some of the workers and the problems that they have had under the previous workers' compensation regimes. Can you imagine the problems that we're going to see, the complaints where workers have been essentially denied benefits because they were deemed to be difficult or unco-operative? This is completely unacceptable as far as I'm concerned, Mr. Chairman. It should be taken out.

We talked to the Alberta Federation of Labour, and they certainly agree that section 22 could be used to force a worker into a proceeding that he or she doesn't wish to be involved in. If a worker doesn't wish to fully co-operate with the board, including submitting to medical examinations, then the WCB would be entitled to withhold payment from the worker and to recover previous payments made to the worker. So workers in that position may be subjected to loss of previous benefits. A Workers' Compensation Board e-mail has confirmed that a case where a worker does not want to be involved in a lawsuit is very rare. The e-mail goes on to state that such a case is rare and that a scenario like this has happened only a handful of times over the past 10 years. So why would we use legislation to force a worker to comply when these situations rarely happen?

We don't think the government has listened to the concerns of Albertans on this, Mr. Chairman. Not at all. In fact, the lack of consultation has been a serious problem. Instead, the government has chosen to listen to the Workers' Compensation Board's senior management, and that management in our view is not always acting in the best interests of the working people in this province, the people that they are pledged to protect. We've voiced Albertans' concerns about this bill in the House, and we introduced a reasoned amendment to Bill 15 on second reading on the basis that the government has not listened to or consulted with Albertans on their concerns on this bill or its effects.

The bill appears to be more of a reaction than anything else to the loss in the Alberta Court of Appeal, Workers' Compensation Board versus Gutierrez, March 16, 2005, than about improving the governance at the WCB. The Alberta Court of Appeal's decision on March 16 of Mrs. Ana Gutierrez versus the WCB went in favour of Mrs. Gutierrez. The court ruled at that time that the Workers' Compensation Board never had the ability to usurp the rights of a worker to take legal action against a third party. That's section 22(3).

Furthermore, the court ruling states: "No legitimate reason has been advanced for the condition the Board has imposed . . . There are no public policy considerations behind the Board's position nor is there any legal basis for it." Yet the government is here asking us to pass it into law. This bill, if it becomes law, will apply retroactively and will nullify the Gutierrez decision.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, here's the situation. The WCB was imposing conditions and making rules that it had no authority to do. The court found in favour of a worker who was wrongfully treated, improperly treated by the WCB. Now the WCB in a knee-jerk reaction has gone to the government and said: we've got to override this court decision; we didn't have the right, according to the court, so give us the right to do this.

The government, without in my view doing any real consultation among workers or labour organizations or even employers, has just accepted the request, rubber stamped the request of the WCB to put this legislation forward without ever asking the WCB to be accountable for what it's done or, in fact, making sure that anyone besides the WCB is interested in this particular power. It hasn't asked whether or not it's necessary for the WCB to have this power. Clearly, it's not, Mr. Chairman.

So I would suggest to my colleagues on both sides that we not in fact pass this legislation. Let's pull it off the table, have the government do some consultation because the WCB sure won't do it, and decide whether or not this is good public policy, good legislation, and a prudent power for the WCB to exercise. Don't forget some of the abuses that the WCB has been involved in in the past. Mr. Chairman, that's what I think we should do. The government should pull the bill, do some consultation, and re-evaluate whether or not they're taking the right course of action or whether or not they're just assuming that the WCB is acting in the best interests of the people of Alberta, the employers of Alberta, and the workers of Alberta.

That concludes my comments at this stage, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In light of the hour I'd move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, April 28, 2005

1:30 p.m.

Date: 05/04/28

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. On this day let each of us pray in our own way for all who have been killed or injured in the workplace. Life is precious. When it is lost, all of us are impacted.

In a moment of silent contemplation may we now allow our thoughts to remember those taken before their time, those who have suffered through tragedies and reach out to the families, friends, neighbours, and communities most immediately impacted. May God provide them eternal peace. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am proud today to introduce to you students from the St. Francis of Assisi school, which is located in Red Deer. There are four classes of grade 6 students. This school has the privilege of using Alberta technology, Smart board technology, in all of their classrooms. I'd like to introduce to you the students as well as their teachers, Miss O'Brien, Mrs. Kelly, Mr. Munro, Mr. Diduch, Mrs. Snow, Miss Musgrove, and teacher assistants Mrs. Johnson and Mrs. McEachern along with the parents. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to be able to introduce to you and through you to the Legislative Assembly two people today. The first is Garnett Genuis, who is an 18-year-old student at Old Scona academic school in Edmonton, where he is the president of the debating society. He's graduating this year and is off to Ottawa, where he just received a scholarship to study public policy at Carleton. He's received numerous awards, including top youth parliamentarian in Alberta, where he has played the role of Premier in the model Legislature. He has represented Canada for the last two years in the international speech and debate competitions, and I believe the last one was in Cyprus. He hopes to study law and to serve the Canadian public in some capacity in the future. His favourite activity is to engage in question period.

The second introduction is actually that of his father, Dr. Stephen Genuis, who is an obstetrician/gynecologist in the city. I've had the privilege of knowing Stephen on two occasions, first of all as a resident, when he was a resident and I was a medical student during medical school, and secondly, as a member of the Premier's council on the family.

I would ask both of them to rise and receive the very warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a great pleasure to rise today and introduce some very special guests who are here. I'd like to introduce them to you and through you to all members in fact. First of all, a very, very dear friend of mine, Shahnawaz Ahmad, and his lovely wife, Hildegard. Today they are accompanied by two special guests from Austria, Mrs. Leopoldine Stefan and her son Michael. We had a wonderful tour of the Legislature earlier. I think they're seated behind me, and I would ask all four of them to please rise and receive the thunderous applause of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Innisfail artist Andy Davies. This time last year Andy was pushing an oil drum from Red Deer to the steps of the Legislature to draw attention to Alberta's low oil and gas royalty regime. I would ask that Andy now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so pleased to have the opportunity this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Legislature a young man from my constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. His name is David Taylor. David is a grade 12 student at J.H. Picard high school. He is currently the president of the students' union there and recently won the best delegate award at the University of Alberta's high school model United Nations. He has most recently been selected as a page for the Senate and will be going off to Ottawa this August and also plans on studying ethics at the University of Ottawa. I would ask David to please rise and receive the very warmest welcome.

Mr. Speaker, if I could just say, I did have the honour as well of presenting David with one of the silver centennial medals this afternoon in my office, and I was very pleased to be able to do so.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two executives from TD Meloche Monnex, the third largest provider of automobile insurance in Alberta, employing over 500 Albertans. I'll ask our guests to stand as I introduce them. We have Mr. Chris Daniel, who is the Alberta chairman of the affinity market group, and Mr. Richard Evans, senior vice-president of claims. I would ask our hon. members to give these gentlemen a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to rise to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Maria José da Silva, who is a founder of the formation of rural women workers' program in the state of Alagoas, Brazil. She's leading the struggle of rural women in Brazil's northeast for dignity, human rights, gender equity, and sustainable family income and is in Canada as a special guest of the 30th anniversary celebration of the Rainbow of Hope for Children Society. Her presence here is to thank the Alberta government for helping to achieve what women in Canada struggled for and achieved only a few generations ago: gender equity. She's accompanied by Sister Claire Novacosky, a Canadian who has worked in Brazil for over 30 years, and Dr. George Bunz, president of the Rainbow of Hope for Children Society and a member of the beautiful constituency of Battle River-Wainwright. I'd ask the three people to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce Ms Vicki Lindsay, a tireless volunteer in the constituency of Edmonton-Castle Downs, who is a retired nurse and also shares her talents with the Victory Church and their hot soup kitchen, helping out the less fortunate in Edmonton. I would ask her to rise – she is in the public gallery – and accept the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

head: Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

1:40 National Day of Mourning

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. April 28 is the National Day of Mourning for workers who have been killed on the job. Last year in Alberta 124 people died from job-related injuries or illness, and 124 families, of course, and countless friends were left devastated.

We must do more to ensure that all Alberta workers return to their families safe and healthy at the end of each workday. Occupational health and safety is a social responsibility. The government remains committed, with our partners in industry and labour, to reducing workplace fatalities and injuries throughout the Work Safe Alberta initiative. We will continue to assist employers and workers to make safety part of everything they do at work. As an employer the government of Alberta strives to provide a safe place for the employees. The public service recently developed a workplace health framework that includes an occupational health and safety component.

Workplace safety is an important issue. A death in the workplace touches all of us. We honour our fallen workers by remembering them at ceremonies being held in communities across the province and by renewing our commitment to safer workplaces.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister for his thoughtful statement, and I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the very appropriate moment of silence to commemorate our workers who died in 2004. These men and women were co-workers, they were friends, and they were family. They were somehow working to build their lives to help their families and ultimately to build Alberta and make it work.

A death in the workplace is sudden and often shocking. When it happens on a large construction site, for example, the news, the feelings, the hurt spread like electricity. Most often that job site is shut down for the rest of the day. This shutdown is always in honour of the fallen but also reflects the altered state of mind that happens to everyone close by. It simply is not safe to work. People must reflect and mourn. Days like this help as well.

I have seen the aftermath of job site death. It is often not very pretty. Most times it seems senseless. Sometimes it is shameful. A little bit of hurry up or a little bit of oversight or even cutting corners leads to tragedy. We must be ever vigilant to ensure that job site safety is of the highest standard and has full acceptance from all levels of the workplace.

Often when a worker dies in the workplace, a collection of donations for the family takes place. These donations give some solace, some closing for those that give, as they hope to help sustain those that are left behind. I have delivered donation cheques to widows, and it is a very difficult thing to do. The future ended yesterday for them. Life as they knew it ends abruptly. The shock, the hurt, the sheer tragedy is hard for them to overcome. I've had a widow break down, sob and cry for 10 minutes as I held her. I said nothing. Then she said that the thought and the money helped, but the hurt would not stop.

Everyone must try to end workplace deaths so that we can stem those tears so that they will never flow again. A hundred and twenty-four deaths of Alberta workers in 2004 was 124 deaths too many.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party to request unanimous consent to participate?

Mr. Mason: Yes, for my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Martin: Thank you to the Assembly, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. This year's Day of Mourning reminds us of the stories that will go untold in our centennial celebrations. The Alberta Federation of Labour added up Alberta's workplace fatalities and found that 9,219 people have been killed in the workplace over the past 100 years. For much of our history the workplace fatality rate slowly dropped, but during the last 15 years further progress has eluded us. Today's National Day of Mourning comes on the heels of another report released yesterday by the Institutes of Health Research that shows that Alberta has the highest number of workplace injuries in Canada. Workplace deaths and injuries, attacks on collective bargaining, the weakest labour legislation in Canada: the list of wrongs that must be righted is long. However, today we remember all those people who have been killed on the job, and we're proud of all the women and men of the labour movement who have fought for an end to workplace deaths.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Securities Commission

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night at about 10 o'clock the Alberta Securities Commission issued a news release placing severe restrictions on the Auditor General's investigation into the commission. For example, the Auditor General will not be allowed to look into enforcement concerns, complainants must provide sworn testimony and submit to being cross-examined, and the ASC will have a representative working with the Auditor General in all dealings with the ASC staff. This pretty much guarantees that the Auditor General's investigation will have little credibility with investors or the public. My question is to the Minister of Finance. Has the minister received any concerns from business, from investors, or from others about the impact of this controversy on confidence in the ASC?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have received limited correspondence on this from business and a small amount from the public. Most of the concern that's raised is raised over the controversy, not the actions of the commission.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition referred to the news release from the Alberta Securities Commission, and I would be pleased to provide that to the Assembly at the appropriate time. I think he was very selective in his use of that news release. It does state that the Alberta Securities Commission is required by section 45 of the Securities Act to hold confidential all information involving enforcement matters.

I have every confidence that the Auditor General and the Securities Commission and their legal people will interpret the appropriate sections and ensure that within the bounds of the legislation the Auditor General will receive all the information that's pertinent to his investigations.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Alberta Securities Commission or perhaps the Auditor General provide legal counsel to employees being cross-examined?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I think that question could well be put to the Auditor General and certainly to the Alberta Securities Commission. I have not had a request from anybody involved to provide them with legal assistance, but if that does arise, it will be responded to appropriately.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister again: if the Auditor General cannot examine any enforcement matters, cannot review information subject to client/solicitor privilege, and can only accept sworn testimony from employees prepared to be identified and cross-examined, what exactly is left for the Auditor General to investigate?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously the Auditor General has fairly broad powers to do audits. The Auditor General had proposed an audit of the processes and systems of the Alberta Securities Commission. He's proceeding with that audit.

Again, the Auditor General is bound by an act of this Legislature. The Securities Commission is bound by an act that was passed in this Legislature. I have every confidence in the people that will work with them to do a legal interpretation of what authorities are accorded to either party under that act. I would not expect the Alberta Securities Commission to breach their legislation.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Concerns with enforcement issues have been raised by a substantial number of the Alberta Securities Commission staff, by former staff of the commission, by national investor advocates, in court, and who knows where else. Not surprisingly, the Alberta securities commissioners themselves, whose job it is to oversee enforcement cases, dismiss any claims of enforcement irregularities. Again to the Minister of Finance: why is this minister wholeheartedly accepting the commissioners' claims that there are no enforcement issues at the ASC, when this group would be essentially turning itself in?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, we plow this ground day after day, week after week. The Alberta Securities Commission did engage an external person, a Mr. Perry Mack, I understand a very highly regarded lawyer from the city of Calgary. Mr. Mack prepared two reports. He provided those to the part-time commissioners, and they provided me with their assurance that from those reports the issues around enforcement and regulatory matters were being handled consistently and even-handedly and fairly.

Mr. Speaker, I don't know what will satisfy this hon. member because I receive far more innuendo or supposition. I have asked repeatedly, if he has anything that can be substantiated, that has any fact behind it, to please give it to me, and I will respond to it. To this date I have had none of the above.

Dr. Taft: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that Mr. Mack's first report did convey concerns about irregularities in investigations, isn't the very reason for investigating allegations to see whether or not they are true?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, again, that was the second part of the report by Mr. Mack.

Mr. Speaker, I live in a province where I believe that if persons have concerns, they have the ability to raise them, but I also believe that the persons who they may be raised against have the ability to be heard. That is what I consider fairness in a democratic society, and that's what I expect to happen in this case.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: when so many people – staff, national investor advocates, courts, and so on – are witnessing these allegations, how will investors ever know if they are true or not unless they are investigated?

Mrs. McClellan: Allegations. Allegations. You investigate the allegations to see if there is any substance or fact or basis to them. Frankly, the investors are not calling me saying, "We have a great deal of concern with the credibility of the Alberta Securities Commission." The person who is most obsessed with this is the Leader of the Official Opposition, and he's doing the least to move this along.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Marketing

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier's advice to electricity consumers to hang on if they're on the regulated rate option didn't sit well with Mr. Robert Hemstock, Direct Energy Marketing Limited vice-president of government and regulatory affairs, who suggested that the Premier was out of line to provide sweeping advice to Albertans. He stated, quote, it does have important implications to our business. End of quote. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Given this government was so desperate to get some retail competition in Alberta's electricity market, did this government guarantee Direct Energy that the regulated rate option would end in 2006?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I don't know of any promises in the past. There was a policy that was put in place that the regulated rate option would be put in place till July of 2006. I don't know that there were promises that it would continue or not continue. That's part of why we're actually even doing a review at this stage.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister: why is this government allowing electricity retailers 45 per cent markups from wholesale power prices, which add an additional $200 million to as high as $300 million extra on already skyrocketing power bills?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, those assumptions as to the rates that people are paying are entirely false. We have the lowest nonhydro electricity prices in this country. The wholesale market has benefited the residential consumer substantially. They are paying and getting tremendous benefits, tremendous savings today.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: why did this government deliberately create an electricity market that uses a fear factor to drive small electricity consumers into the hands of the greedy retailers of electricity?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, it's easy to throw out lots of innuendo and slander. Let me continue to emphasize the many benefits that have happened from this. We have the most supply that's come on in a growing economy; over 3,000 megawatts have come on. We have the lowest consumer prices of nonhydro. We don't have the capacity of the hydro, but we have the innovation of wind, of biomass, of green alternatives, quite an inventiveness that's come across from this electricity deregulation, plus residential consumers are benefiting and are being protected very well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do have a question today. Yesterday the government tried to pass off an April 14, 2005, report by the Utilities Consumer Advocate Advisory Council as some sort of vindication of retail electricity deregulation. Nonsense. In fact, the report concludes that residential farm and small business customers will face electricity rates 40 to 45 per cent higher than they are now under the Tory deregulation scheme than they would under the model proposed by the advisory council. My question is to the Minister of Energy. [interjection] It's your council.

Given that next year's deadline forcing utilities consumers onto these high-priced contracts is coming up fast, will the minister stand up and commit to reversing this high-cost, anticonsumer policy?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, it's convenient to select a few paragraphs. Let me start with the executive summary in that same report that was tabled. "We believe that the deregulation of the Alberta electricity market has been successful in many ways . . . We characterize the success as the 'New Alberta Advantage'."

Mr. Mason: Will the minister commit to not forcing small electricity consumers onto a long-term contract? Yes or no?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, this has all been about consumers having choice, that they are not being compelled to do anything. There are many great products that are being offered to fit the individual needs of those customers.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the choice the minister talks about is either 40 per cent more or 45 per cent more. Will he cancel this policy?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how anybody foresees the crystal ball of the future as to predicting those prices. Today consumers, as a result of tremendous success in deregulation, are seeing the best prices in this country.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

West Nile Virus

Ms Haley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite the cold wind blowing today, I am confident that spring and summer are coming. Last summer the province introduced a mosquito control program to help Alberta communities reduce the risk of infection from the West Nile virus. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Do Albertans have reason to be concerned this year about the West Nile virus, and will the larviciding program continue?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the program will continue. Too little is known about the prevalence and the patterns of West Nile. We had last year, for example, only one case of the West Nile virus, and it, purportedly, was a case where the person was infected in Arizona, but the year before we had 275 cases. With the Minister of Municipal Affairs we have sent letters to municipalities. This year 104 municipalities will be funded. We're spending about $1.25 million, and we are providing this funding for those municipalities selected based on what we perceive to be, with the best advice from Alberta Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, the best places in the southeast portion of the province predominantly.

Ms Haley: Well, my second supplementary to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: could the minister elaborate on her explanation about giving assistance on the larviciding program to some municipalities versus others such as the MD of Rocky View, where right beside it the municipalities are being funded for this program?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question from the hon. member. In the consultation we did about monitoring and seeing where the most appropriate course of action was to fight this potential situation, we consulted with Environment; Agriculture, Food and Rural Development; Municipal Affairs; and Sustainable Resource Development. We noted that there's no direct scientific evidence to be conclusive that the larviciding program actually works, but I think we feel a greater degree of confidence that when we use it, we will prevent it. It was deemed that the MD of Rocky View is in a lower risk area albeit, as the member has noted, adjacent to that area.

If municipalities choose to fund larviciding and if there can be some indication that we should consider that at some future point, we certainly will. But, Mr. Speaker, presently this is the decision that we have made with the resources we have available. That's not to say that that MD could not consider doing it on their own.

Ms Haley: My last supplemental is to the Minister of Environment. Could the minister please indicate what his department is doing to ensure that mosquito control is effective and safe for all Albertans, not just those areas where there's a larviciding program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to say that within the Ministry of Environment we have insect experts, and we've been able in the four quadrants across our province to determine the high, medium, and low risk areas. To the hon. member in the Airdrie-Chestermere area it certainly must be welcome news to realize that it's been determined that this is in the lowest risk area. We continue to work with our municipal partners, and, as the hon. minister of health indicated, certainly it's still an option for the municipality to consider. We continue to work with and train our municipal partners in terms of dealing with this important issue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Long-term Care Standards

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Camrose on Monday an 86-year-old diabetic woman goes on a hunger strike to bring the government's attention to underfunding and staff shortages in long-term care. In Edmonton on Wednesday a glistening stretch limo glides Tory caucus members to steak and lobster dinners sponsored by an unnamed lobby group looking to bring the attention of government to their interests. Who gets the Alberta advantage? My questions today are to the minister of health. Given that the long-term care sector has asked for $86 million for long-term care facilities, why did the government fund only $10 million, a mere 11 per cent of what was asked?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to clarify that I've been in no stretch limos lately. It's been years and years since anybody asked me on a date.

Mr. Speaker, I would clarify that we gave a 10.3 per cent increase to the regional health authorities. We gave $522 million to the regional health authorities, and we added $15 million over and above that – not $10 million but $15 million: $5 million at the conclusion of the 2004-05 budget and $10 million in this new budget – to make sure that we work towards quality of care and continue to accelerate the work we're doing on standards for long-term care. We moved, also, from a staffing ratio of 3 to 3.4 this year. Our expectation is that regional health authorities will continue to work to improve care wherever that is needed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister: why were four brand new living units constructed for 56 seniors in Camrose, but staffing levels were not changed to cope with the heavier demands?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, always surprises, and now an offer for a date.

Mr. Speaker, I can't tell you exactly why that proportion of residents was put into that particular facility. Regional health authorities have the responsibility of setting priorities, establishing standards, and providing the opportunity for care where care is needed. We also have partners in the private sector, not-for-profit societies that get involved. So that's a question that I can gladly take from the hon. member and direct to the regional health authority.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: why has the minister allowed LPNs to be delegated medication duties, effectively adding to their workload and making it difficult to get all of their assigned work done?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in the early '60s I went into the honourable profession of nursing at the Holy Cross hospital, and at that time as a student nurse I learned that there are many hands that are involved in the care of and the proper professional attention to the patient.

Mr. Speaker, I have noted the concern of the hon. member opposite, but I've noted something else. The most important thing to do for a patient is to treat the patient holistically with caring, professional, supportive staff in whatever kind of discipline most clearly affects the work that's required to make them as healthy as possible. Sometimes an occupational health and safety worker is the person who can break the barrier; for example, for people who have dementia or Alzheimer's. So you can't simply define a program for a facility without looking at the patient themselves, considering their needs, the capacity of the family, or the adjacent caregiver.

Mr. Speaker, if people would only listen to my response, perhaps it would be clear what I'm trying to say.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Cattle Rustling

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been hearing concerns from my constituents in Cypress-Medicine Hat about cattle going missing under suspicious circumstances. Farmers and ranchers depend on their livestock, and some of their herd being stolen or disappearing mysteriously seriously and needlessly affects their income and livelihood. For example, for one rancher 35 calves and seven heifers over a one-year period is indeed serious. Calls to the RCMP have not resulted in anything achieved substantially at this time. My first question is to the Solicitor General. What's the RCMP doing to deal with the cases of cattle rustling?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, cattle rustling is something that may sound from the days of the Old West, but it is, exactly as the hon. member mentioned, a very serious issue in Alberta when you look at the geographics of the size of this province.

Cattle rustling is pure theft, and the RCMP are combatting this issue by having two experts that are learned in the area of the livestock industry. They have one officer that works in northern Alberta and one officer that works in southern Alberta. They provide the training and the expertise to other RCMP officers and municipal services that have any issues with regard to this type of theft in their communities. They're there to assist, provide support to those RCMP officers as well as doing enforcement on the highways, livestock inspections, and being members of the livestock association and the rural crime watch association. So they have the skilled-expertise officers providing this service throughout the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental, then, is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. What role does brand inspection play in cattle rustling cases?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Brand inspection plays a very important part in the recovery of stolen cattle. When the cattle are stolen and the RCMP report is made, it is sent to our Livestock Identification Services unit. LIS is the brief for that. It provides brand inspection services to the livestock producers in all of Alberta. They work with the RCMP to ensure that the investigator that is in charge of the case has all of the information they need, including the brand records. If the missing cattle were branded, all brand inspectors at slaughterhouses, at the stockyards, at sales rings would also be put on the alert to look for those brands, so it is quite an important part of the investigation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Workplace Safety

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we commemorate today those 124 Alberta workers who died last year, it is absolutely imperative that job site safety see renewed emphasis. Syncrude and other oil sands plants have created remarkable records of safety in difficult work environments and should be congratulated and copied, but a just-released study places Alberta, with 10 per cent of its trauma cases a result of workplace injury, the worst and highest level in the nation. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Will the minister push for and hire new occupational health and safety inspectors to stem this shocking statistic?

Speaker's Ruling Anticipation

The Speaker: Hon. member, the question is fine. It's just that this afternoon the estimates we're dealing with are exactly that of the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. If the question has to deal with his budget, then I'm afraid we're going to have to move on to another one. If it's policy, that would be accepted.

The hon. minister? Okay.

Please proceed with your second one.

Workplace Safety (continued)

Mr. Backs: Mr. Speaker, I'll just do a supplemental. Has your ministry investigated if hurry to get the resources out of the ground and too much overtime is putting Albertans at risk and, in the end, creating greater costs for the Alberta economy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, you know, we do have a very diversified, strong economy here in Alberta. We have over 1.8 million people working. Alberta also has the highest workforce participation rate in Canada, at 73 per cent. So we have more people working and more activity going on, which creates more challenges.

Of course, you know, the report the member is referring to I haven't seen yet. I will as soon as I can get hold of it.

We'll continue working – we do have over 80 officers already working, and you know they do a good job. The Work Safe Alberta initiative, which was implemented just a few years ago, resulted in just over 10,000 fewer lost-time claim injuries each year in this province, saving the employers over $150 million. So we will continue doing our best to ensure that there is a reduction.

One of the things that's very, very important and that the Assembly should hear, Mr. Speaker, is that a lot of the accidents that happen do not happen on the work site but happen on the way to work and on the way home. No one has really identified that yet, and we're working on that.

Mr. Backs: Mr. Speaker, a supplemental to the same minister. Will the minister undertake an immediate investigation into why Alberta's trauma statistic for workplace injuries is twice the level of industrialized Ontario?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, I believe, you know, again, a lot of this is based on the economic activity. And, again, I want to make sure that when we're talking about work site injuries, et cetera, we haven't – I don't know if there's any jurisdiction in Canada that has identified and provided a breakdown of where the accidents are happening. I think that in order to deal with this effectively, we have to define exactly where the accidents are happening. Are they happening on the project sites, or are they happening on the way to work and back home? I tend to think a lot more accidents happen on the highways that are work related, but they do happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Foreign-trained Physicians

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is a shortage of family physicians in Alberta, which has resulted in many general practitioners now interviewing prospective patients before agreeing to accept them. Concurrently, in Alberta we have many skilled immigrant doctors who are not able to practise their chosen profession and are underemployed in our society. My first question today is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Does the ministry know how many immigrant doctors are in Alberta who are currently unable to practise?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we recognize the need for more physicians. We have acknowledged that there is a shortage. In terms of foreign-trained physicians who are in the province that are presently unable to practise, the number that I have just received is 224.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is also to the same minister. Why cannot we utilize these foreign-trained doctors to address the needs of Albertans?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are taking action to harness the capacity of these foreign-trained physicians. We have discussed this issue with the college, and we are working to try and resolve some of the issues surrounding it albeit there have been federal issues relative to immigration.

The issues in Alberta that we're working on and following up on are these. First of all, they have to have met the training standards in Canada. Doctors who are working in nonmedical fields are usually doing so because they are not meeting our licensing standards, and that's a fact. That's a licensing standard that they must meet before they are able to practise. We are, however, considering some of the opportunities we have to suggest to the college that they could work as attendants or residents in hospital settings in order to gain some practical experience if that's what's wanting. They can apply to be licensed by the college under its special register. Finally, Mr. Speaker, it allows the physician to practise on a basis for a 30-month maximum, usually only in communities that have an emergency medical need.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that it is not a new issue and we have heard these ideas before, does the minister have any plans to improve the process so that these foreign-trained doctors either receive accreditation or are retrained in order that we can utilize them ASAP?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think that this is a work in progress. There are certainly partnerships that are involved here with the colleges I've noted. Since 2001 the Alberta international medical graduate program has worked to place foreign-trained physicians living in Alberta, and they continue to do so. When they get their residency and complete their residency, they are fully licensed. The program has established 43 two-year family residency and 24 specialty residency positions. Nineteen physicians have completed their residencies. I think the challenge is now identifying sufficient sponsoring physicians so that they can gain that work experience.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Police Recruitment and Training Centre

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2002 the MLA Policing Review Committee report was issued. In the 2004 response to that review recommendation 11 was accepted, and it called for the creation of a centre of policing excellence which would deliver standard, high-quality recruiting and ongoing training. Rather than being shelved, I would prefer to think that this response is on the to-do list on the member's desk. My first question is to the Solicitor General. Given the importance of establishing standardized training, why has this government not acted sooner to begin this process?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a good question. In fact, this ministry is working on that very project at this time. We are developing the proposal. The review of the special constable's role is actually in the works right now, which will provide us with the level of education and training that those officers are going to require and may be legislated in the future to have.

For the training college itself, Mr. Speaker, we'll be working with the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Advanced Education regarding the curriculum that's going to be determined, that will be required, that the Alberta chiefs of police are going to want their officers and/or peace officers to have in the future.

So we are working on that, Mr. Speaker. The location has not been announced. The RFP has not been announced, but we'll be working towards that goal in the next month or so.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. To the same minister: given that Lethbridge Community College has all the tools needed to establish a provincial centre of police excellence, will the minister commit to meeting with officials to discuss the possibility of establishing such a centre in southern Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I have already met with officials from the college and with the police chiefs from southern Alberta as well with regard to that training college. Their college is one of a number of colleges that we have, including the Calgary Police Service's Chief Crowfoot Learning Centre as well as the Edmonton Police Service's training centre. So, yes, there are three police colleges in the province. We're looking at one college to provide training to all police officers as well as the 3,000 peace officers that we have in this province.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. To the Minister of Advanced Education: given that there's an increasing demand for police officers in Alberta, will the minister honour the commitments made in the throne speech and provide some of the 15,000 promised seats to Lethbridge Community College?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can't specifically indicate that additional seats will be promised to Lethbridge Community College. I can specifically indicate that the promise in the throne speech to expand our postsecondary system by 15,000 places for Alberta students will be kept.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Health Symposium

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Health and Wellness announced taking the government's third-way three-ring circus on the road in June, no doubt causing their Conservative cousins in Ottawa to wet their pants. In January the Premier went on his own speaking tour of his business-friendly audiences at the Canadian Club, the Empire Club, and the Montreal board of trade. In those speeches the Premier vowed that this time there's no turning back on finding a mythical third way. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: in the June consultations will the government be preaching its third-way message to the converted in front of Tory-friendly audiences, or are there plans to actually rub shoulders with average Albertans, who can't afford the two-tiered system the Premier's corporate buddies are pushing for?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. It's an excellent question indeed. What we have been attempting to do, without pre-empting the international symposium, is to have conversation about how we will proceed to use the information.

First of all, the symposium itself will give a number of good ideas, best practices world-wide. The attendees at this particular symposium are principally physicians, members of regional health authorities, and people that represent the health care disciplines. We will be most anxious, Mr. Speaker, to listen to their thoughts after, and when the Premier spoke in Calgary at the Canadian Club luncheon, he invited regional health authorities to be innovative and to look to their resources to create new opportunities. I will be listening to what they have to say after that symposium.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why won't the minister admit that next week's health symposium is a pretext for softening up Albertans to accept the government's third-way blueprint of user fees and further privatization?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I won't admit it because I speak the truth, and that's not the truth.

Dr. Pannu: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: if the minister is sincere in saying that there's no agenda for user-pay health care, why is the Graydon report, which is a recipe book for new user fees, including health care deductibles, still an option being promoted by the minister in the June consultations?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is referencing an oblique reference to the Graydon report as reported in an article today, that is not the source of conversation relative to how we are going to follow up. Our Premier distinctly said that the Mazankowski report gave us an excellent framework for reform and for looking to the third way for the thousand good ideas that would improve the health system.

What I hope for at the international symposium is that ideas and the best practices elsewhere are explored, that we have a full and open discussion. We have no preconceived notions about what will come forward, but we should be looking at the fact that in terms of the money we spend, Canada is in the top three OECD countries, yet we're very much in the middle of the pack for performance.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Long-term Care Standards

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Red Deer has a number of very good long-term care facilities, many of which I have visited. Some are public, some are private, for-profit, some are private, not-for-profit, and one is a P3 partnership between the David Thompson health region, Red Deer College, and Bethany Care. In every one of these facilities I have been told two things. The staff who provide care are excellent. They are caring, compassionate, and gentle, but they would like more staff. Two, the food could taste a little better. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What are the current staffing requirements in Alberta's long-term care facilities?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to answer the hon. member's question and clarify the situation on a number of points. We recognize that we're an aging population, that there are increasing demands, and that we have to have a plan to deal with the fragile elderly. Appropriate staffing to meet the needs is important, so last year we requested that the regional health authorities move from 3.0 hours of direct care per day to 3.4. I think that the hours per day is part of the confusion. What you find when people go into these facilities is a care plan developed on their own particular needs. Some people need less, and some people clearly need more and more support. So it's important to note that these are average hours of care. The actual hours of individual care are set based on a person's needs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister explain, then, why the staffing requirements are measured in hours of care rather than a set number of residents per worker?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member poses an excellent question. This is, in fact, a formula that has been used because it creates a standard and it gives some known quantities for people to examine, but over this period of time and since I have assumed responsibility for this ministry, I have asked that we review and prepare new standards of care and examine these formulas. That work will be discussed with regional health authorities, with members of the Long Term Care Association, with patients themselves, and with care providers in all sectors: public, private, and not-for-profit.

Mrs. Jablonski: My last question to the same minister: is there, then, an intent to change the basic care standards for all long-term care facilities in Alberta?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's clear that we need some improvements on the basic care standards if only to address the needs of an increasing population, if only to address the fact that many people are bringing their extended families here as they move to Alberta and gain jobs. We have noted, for example, announcements made last year in Calgary for a need for 600 more beds. We have to find ways, when families don't support their family members, the elderly at home, to look after these people in a better fashion. So I think we have to get creative and innovative. Yes, these new standards, I think, will reflect many of the good things that are going on, as the hon. member has noted, but, in fact, create improvements as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Métis Hunting Rights

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The interim now more than seven months old, and the provincial government has done little to explain this agreement. This, in turn, has created an uproar among the fish and game groups across the province because of the lack of communication they received before this agreement was signed. To the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development: given that the Métis nation is performing public consultation that will shape the new Métis harvesting agreement, can you explain the ministry's role in this consultation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Calahasen: Well, yes, Mr. Speaker. First of all, there are a number of other ministries that are involved with us. Number one, Alberta Justice will make sure that we deal with the issue from a context of what the Supreme Court of Canada has decided. Secondly, we have the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development, and Sustainable Resource Development will provide the information on what potential impacts could result as a result of the interim agreements. Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development's job is to make sure that we continue to bring all the information together so that all three ministries can work together to see how we can address the concerns that have been brought forward not only by all Albertans but also by the Métis.

Mr. Tougas: To the same minister: will the minister commit to presenting the final Métis harvesting agreement to the government caucus for their input before it is signed?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that something that, certainly, our government intends to do is to be able to work with our caucus. As a matter of fact, we've had a few meetings that we'll be able to address the various concerns that their constituents have brought to our attention. We will certainly address those concerns as we move forward and will continue to work with our caucus. It is, after all, this government's position that we work with our caucus and make sure that they know what issues are out there, and then that way, we can ensure that we bring that to the table as we move forward. Whether it is a final agreement or a series of agreements we don't know yet at this stage.

Mr. Tougas: Well, I didn't hear an answer to my question, Mr. Speaker, so I'll ask it again. Will the minister commit to presenting the final Métis harvesting agreement to the government caucus for their input before it is signed? Yes or no?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, it is our rule to be able to ensure that our caucus is going to be involved in whatever decisions we come up with. Basically, once that information is presented, our caucus will have input. That input will then go to the regular process that we utilize within government, and we'll ensure that our caucus has input in terms of what is going to be, if there is going to be, a final agreement or a series of agreements. So we will make sure that our caucus will have that input. Definitely.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Affordable Housing in the North

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Northern Alberta is experiencing increased pressure on social housing and assisted living facilities in both the numbers and expectations. As a result, seniors in northern communities are leaving the places where they have lived and worked their entire lives due to the lack of adequate and affordable housing and support services. My question is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Can you advise what steps are being taken to support seniors in having the choice to remain in their northern and rural communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are two programs that come to mind for me in addressing the hon. member's question. The first, of course, is the lodge assistance program, and the second is the rural affordable supportive living program.

The lodge assistance program, Mr. Speaker, is for independent seniors who may require some assistance from the community through meal preparation or housekeeping or laundry. Over the past four months we have increased the lodge assistance grant itself by 40 per cent, and that's through a $22 million budget. That program is ongoing, of course.

The rural affordable supportive living program is new. It's a $50 million budget over two years, and that's to assist seniors with higher health care and personal care needs than in the lodges and to assist them to remain in their rural remote communities that the hon. member has asked about.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, my first supplemental question is again to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. The lack of affordable and adequate housing is also hurting recruitment and retention of labour necessary to maintain the northern industries. What steps are being taken to support northern remote and rural communities to address the affordable housing issue?

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, we assist the northern remote communities through the Canada/Alberta affordable housing program and, as well, through the sustainable remote housing initiative program. The Canada affordable housing program has provided 2,400 homes to low-income people, hon. member, over the past three years, and that program is ongoing through a $25 million allocation into the budget this year, which will assist the community. Also, the sustainable remote housing program: we have approved 50 housing units, and we are currently working with the community to assist with providing more housing units.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is to the same minister. Could the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports tell us whether she sees any merit in striking a committee to look at the housing challenges specifically related to the economic growth given the importance of housing to Alberta's social and economic well-being?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the hon. member, I do share his concerns regarding housing in the northern remote areas of the province, you know, in the rural areas, for our seniors, for low-income individuals, for people with special needs. Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I'm not prepared to establish a committee at this time although I know the hon. member wishes that to happen. That's because I believe that our department is addressing the needs in the best way possible. Having said that, I would offer to the hon. member that we have staff who are very knowledgeable in this area, and they would assist the member as chair of the Northern Alberta Development Council.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Education Funding

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Education Week is an important time to take stock of our public education system to celebrate the successes as well as to take a hard look at where we can do better. This Conservative government, sitting with record resource revenues and bending to public and opposition pressure, has finally decided to reinvest in our kids. My question is to the Minister of Education. Can the minister assure this Assembly and Alberta's educational community that all school boards will in fact get the 5.4 per cent increase in base operating funding he has promised?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't have the exact percentage in my head, but I can tell you that overall the education budget has been increased by about 7 per cent. Within that 7 per cent there are $287 million of new wealth, and those monies arise out of needs that they've identified in meetings that I had with them in January and February and in needs that have been presented to me by members of our caucus.

I should point out to the hon. member, who I know is new, that education spending has gone up consistently in this province since 1995, not just this year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. To the same minister: can you explain why some school boards might be anticipating that the financial impact of the budget will actually be less than 3 per cent, clearly not enough to keep pace with increased operating costs?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, I would invite school boards who feel that they might not be receiving adequate funding under the renewed funding framework or through other increases such as the 30 per cent increase in ESL, such as the 11 per cent increase for special needs, particularly severe special needs, such as the increase we're giving for francization, such as the increase that we're giving for a number of areas: First Nations, Métis, Inuit initiatives. If they are having a problem there, they can certainly contact me or one of my officials. Mr. Speaker, I'd be more than happy to take a look at their extenuating circumstances if, in fact, there are some.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. To the same minister: will you immediately release the projected impact of the new budget for all school boards, including charter schools, so they can plan effectively?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the process works like this. A school board submits its best available information on projections and statistics for the year coming up. Our officials work with them to renew that. We do sort of a quasi-soft audit, if you will, to make sure that the figures and projections are more or less in line with where they were projecting those from the year previous, and we work with them on what's called a jurisdiction profile. The member asking the question has some familiarity as a former teacher, in fact an administrator within the system, and if she'd like to request that information from the school board she taught with, for example, I'm sure they'd be willing to speak with her.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, very shortly I'll call upon the first of a number of members to participate, but I have a question, and I know it's one on everybody's mind. The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness announced that she had a date proposal. Our question is: are you going to accept it?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I'm accepting every one.

Ms Pastoor: Mr. Speaker, I might ask my hon. colleague across the table: if it's any good, might he have a brother? [laughter]

Rev. Abbott: It's springtime.

The Speaker: Yup. Thursday. Full moon.

Rural Development

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three years ago I was elected, and three years ago the government of Alberta committed to extending the Alberta advantage to all Albertans through a rural development strategy. I was fortunate enough to begin this work on that rural development strategy with my hon. colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake only days after I was elected, and I continue to do that today.

Meetings in fully 25 per cent of the communities of this province with hundreds of organizations and thousands of individuals from all walks of life gave us a vision and a plan. That strategy recognizes the critical nature of thriving rural communities and makes recommendations around ensuring that the four pillars of a community are strong, those pillars being health care, learning and skill development, economic growth, and community infrastructure. It also makes recommendations around components of a community such as youth, seniors, arts and culture, and environment.

Most importantly, it recognizes two critical elements, Mr. Speaker: first, that rural development is not a one-year fix or a two-year initiative but must be a 20-year plan for the future, not just for the benefit of rural Albertans but for the benefit of all Albertans. Secondly, it recognizes that rural development is not the sole responsibility of the provincial government, the federal government, or any local, municipal government. It's everyone's responsibility including the communities themselves. If a community is to survive, grow, and prosper, they must start the initiative, and then the governments must work with them if at all possible to make that vision happen.

The tip of the iceberg came with Budget '05, with over 30 initiatives, Mr. Speaker, that just begin the process of rural development. This is not the end of rural development; this is not even the beginning of the end of rural development, to quote an ancient colleague. It is only the end of the beginning. We know the road. We know our task. Now we undertake the long journey of success for rural Alberta and for all Albertans. To quote a gentleman named William Jennings Bryan: tear down your cities and watch them spring up again as if by magic; tear down your farms in our rural communities and watch the grass grow in every city street in this country.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Forum for Young Albertans

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to be able to rise and recognize a group of involved and engaged youth who are participating in the Forum for Young Albertans. The Forum for Young Albertans is a program allowing students the opportunity to gain insight into the parliamentary process and legislative system. Through speaker presentations and forums, which I also participated in, group discussions, tours, and formal activities students are able to listen, learn, and question various legislative staff, media, university professors, and MLAs on how government works.

It is important that we engage our youth more in government and politics in general. I'm not one to use clichés, but this one rings very true: Alberta's future is dependent on our youth, and we are in great hands.

I would like to thank the Forum for Young Albertans for helping to get more young Albertans educated and interested and involved in the parliamentary and the legislative process. Thank you to all of those involved, and thank you to the students who participated.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Glendale Elementary School

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week schools and communities throughout our province are celebrating Education Week, and today the Minister of Education and I have an incredible success story to share. Students in grades 4, 5, and 6 at Glendale elementary school in Calgary recently produced a film called Frankenstein, which has gained international attention. Frankenstein is being screened at the prestigious New York International Independent Film and Video Festival on May 2, 2005.

This film explores Mary Shelley's popular story and its themes of love, acceptance, and belonging, with a particular focus on the consequences of separating spirit, intellect, and heart.

The students at Glendale school were responsible for every part of this film including editing the script, filming, acting, and set development. Judges were very impressed with the quality of their work. In fact, Frankenstein is the only Canadian film produced by children that is being screened at the festival.

This project is just one example of the great work being done in Alberta's classrooms.

I would like to congratulate the students and staff at Glendale school in Calgary, who are listening to this special recognition in their classroom, on their extraordinary achievement. Well done, Glendale. We are all very proud of you.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Police Recruitment and Training Centre

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Five years ago this government commissioned the MLA policing review to examine policing in Alberta. Recommendation 11 of the 2004 accepted response to that review stated that a centre of policing excellence should be established that would deliver standardized, high-quality recruiting and ongoing training. A consortium of police services – Taber, Blood Tribe police, Medicine Hat, CP Rail, and the Lethbridge regional service. To be noted: it is the first regional police service in this province and an accredited member of CALEA.

This service has worked with the Lethbridge Community College, already a nationally recognized centre of excellence for their criminal justice program, and has created an approved curriculum as well as a memo of understanding and a business plan projecting the viability of this police centre of excellence. In addition, the community college has the infrastructure for gun training and other specific training techniques; for example, diving and taser training. This program will provide 30 credits and would allow a seamless transfer for further academic education at the university level.

The police chiefs of the future will require a masters level education. We have a very sophisticated criminal element in our society. Our police forces that protect our lives every day with their lives deserve no less.

There have been inquiries from other provinces and northern Alberta expressing support and wanting to send their members to Lethbridge for training. Southern Alberta is ready to go and serve. This provincial government's political will is now up to the plate. This initiative is the perfect fit for this government's own rural development strategy, and I paraphrase from that document: it looks to a future where rural Alberta is a place to grow new opportunities, new ideas, and new potential for the future.

I urge this government to look south of the 50th parallel to establish a true centre for policing excellence. The city of Lethbridge stands ready to deliver.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Electricity Deregulation

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to try and clear the smokescreen this government repeatedly deploys over electricity deregulation. The government likes to say that electricity deregulation created 3,000 megawatts of new generation in Alberta, but what they fail to mention is that most of this new generation is fuelled by expensive natural gas. Thirty-eight per cent of Alberta's power generation is gas fired, and gas almost always sets the price paid to all generators at the Power Pool. The electricity market is now so dependent on natural gas that a run-up in the price of natural gas directly translates to a run-up in the price of electricity in Alberta. This leads to huge volatility in electricity prices.

This volatility will continue to grow in the future as new generation coming on stream is all gas fired and older, coal-fired power plants are decommissioned. This is yet another example of poor long-term planning from this government.

The government has also failed to properly plan for the long-term electricity needs of Alberta. Information from the Department of Energy shows that electricity supply and demand may come into critical balance in 2008. The Alberta Electric System Operator is less optimistic, stating that electricity demand in this province will outstrip supply by 2006. A shortage of electricity supply will cause prices to skyrocket just as they did in 2000 and 2001, when power prices tripled.

This government needs to realize that electricity is not a commodity: it's an essential service. It's something we use every day. It's something we can't live without.

We need to return to low-cost power in Alberta, and the Alberta Liberals have a plan to do it. Our plan will save electricity consumers money without being forced to shop around for the best deal. Consumers will get one low, stable rate without having to sign an expensive, long-term electricity contract. We would make power bills easier to understand, and our plan will be able to count on a steady supply of low-cost electricity power for years to come.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Public Health Care

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Next week the Alberta government will stage another expensive health care three-ring circus, this time to try to sell Albertans on a scheme to privatize their health care system by stealth with the so-called third way. The third way is a label stolen from the United Kingdom in order to import a health system from the United States. It's a cynical public relations ploy aimed at selling Albertans on an idea they totally reject: privatization. Albertans want the Canadian way, the best way, which is public health care.

The basis for the upcoming symposium and the consultations are the Mazankowski and Graydon reports, which recommend more user fees, delisting more services, and more private delivery. These proposals mean Albertans will pay more and get less from their health care system. No wonder Albertans have said to this government time and again that they don't want private health care.

Albertans' fears about privatization are well founded in all available research. Private health care in the United States costs taxpayers more. The U.S. spends more on health care while much of that money goes to bloated and bureaucratic health care corporations. Furthermore, Alberta's own misadventures with privately delivered health care show that wait times are longer and procedures are more expensive when done by for-profit providers. The people of Alberta want their government to defend public health care, not find elaborate public relations strategies to undermine it.

The NDP opposition, Mr. Speaker, is calling on this government to abandon its commitment to its friends in the for-profit health care industry and renew its commitment to universal public health care once and for all.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, by way of a historical vignette for today: at 4:10 a.m., April 29, 1903, a huge 74-million-ton slab of limestone slid off the east slope of Turtle Mountain and swept 1.6 kilometres through the Crowsnest Pass Valley and the coal-mining village of Frank, burying the mine entrance and killing at least 70 people in 100 seconds. Only 23 people survived, and 17 trapped miners dug themselves to safety 13 hours later. The slab was 400 metres high, 1,200 metres wide, and 150 metres thick.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a petition signed by Albertans who are very concerned about the dangerous driving conditions faced by people in northern Alberta who use highway 63 on a regular basis. Yesterday the minister committed to investing in improvements to highway 63, and I know that the 651 people who signed this petition will be watching to ensure that that promise is kept. With today's tabling the total signatures on this petition so far is 2,797.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to present a petition from a number of good Albertans in the communities of Calmar, Red Deer, Carvel, Edmonton, Fort McMurray, and other fine other Alberta communities. It reads:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

There are 102 good Albertans signing this petition.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition from 101 residents of Alberta asking the government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 24 to 31.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday I will move that motions for returns 27 to 43 be dealt with on that day. There being no further motions for returns at this time, there are none to stand and retain their places.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Services.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Provincial Board I am pleased to table five copies of the 2003-2004 annual report.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise and table five copies of a response to the Premier's request last night during Committee of Supply debate for a home page address of the secret website available only to Tory MLAs developed by the publicly funded Public Affairs Bureau. The Premier asked us to send the web page over if we had it, and so we will.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of the second part of a series of op-eds done by respected health policy analyst Paul Krugman, the op-ed piece in which Dr. Krugman, a professor of economics at Princeton University, flags private health care insurance for being far more expensive and concludes by asking: when will decision-makers understand that relative to health care, market competition is the problem, not the solution?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: Official Opposition House Leader, do you have a question? You're to ask a question of the government to see if they're going to release their agenda for next week.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do not know the standing order number, and I'm not sure if I have to quote it, but I would like to ask the Deputy Government House Leader if he could share with us the projected government business for next week.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: I think that was all clear enough. I've got a script. I know what I'm supposed to do.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The projected government business for the week of May 2, 2005, begins on the evening of Monday, May 2, at about 9 p.m. with Committee of Supply on International and Intergovernmental Relations, followed by Committee of the Whole on bills 31 and 34, third reading on Bill 16 and second reading on Bill 35, and as per the Order Paper.

Moving to Tuesday, May 3, in the afternoon there's Committee of Supply for Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, followed that evening, commencing at 8 p.m., with Committee of Supply for Justice and Attorney General, and then at or about 10 p.m. third reading on Bill 1, second reading on Bill 36, Committee of the Whole on Bill 29, and as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, May 4, in the afternoon Committee of Supply will proceed for the Department of Economic Development, and then that evening at 8 p.m. Committee of Supply for Gaming, and at or about 10 p.m. third reading on bills 31 and 12, Committee of the Whole and third reading with respect to bills 36, 29, and 22, second readings on bills 40 and 39, and as per the Order Paper.

On the afternoon of Thursday, May 5, there will be the 60th anniversary Victory in Europe Day ceremony as per Government Motion 20, which passed on April 27, and then Committee of Supply for Municipal Affairs and as per the Order Paper.

The Speaker: Hon. members, today is a commemoration day for the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill. A number of years ago he arrived in this world.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2005-06

Human Resources and Employment

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

3:00

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm here today, of course, to present the 2005-2006 estimates for Alberta Human Resources and Employment. In the gallery today I would like to recognize and thank some of the staff that have been involved in preparing these estimates: Ulysses Currie is our deputy minister; Alex Stewart, assistant deputy minister of corporate services; Duncan Campbell, senior financial officer; and there are also, I believe, some other staff that are here to lend their support. I'd like to thank them for all the good work they've done.

Human Resources and Employment is looking to build a better future for Albertans, a future in which Albertans are even less dependent on government support, where employers can find the skilled labour they need, and where the risk of workplace injury or death is minimal. To build that better future for Albertans, Mr. Chairman, I'm asking for $778,691,000 to support the work of the ministry. The ministry includes the Department of Human Resources and Employment, the personnel administration office, the Alberta Labour Relations Board, the Appeals Commission for workers' compensation. Of course, the Workers' Compensation Board itself, which is an independent employer, a funded organization, is not included in the ministry's business plan.

We all know that Alberta is a great place to live and work. Our economy is booming, and continued growth is forecast for the coming year. We help ensure that everyone can benefit from our economy by helping people get and keep jobs while meeting the basic needs of those who cannot work. The ministry works with employers, training providers, and the people of Alberta to address labour shortages and skills deficits. For example, we encourage participation in the apprenticeship program by helping apprentices with their tuition and living expenses. We work to increase the participation of aboriginal people, people with disabilities, immigrants, youth, and older workers in the labour force. We match people with jobs. Human Resources and Employment delivers Alberta Works services, including income support, health benefits, training, and help to find and keep jobs. In addition, we reduce workplace injuries and disease through Work Safe Alberta.

The ministry strives to create a positive labour relations environment in the public and private sectors. We make sure that the workplace is fair, enforcing employment standards. HR and E makes it possible for Albertans to appeal decisions that impact them in certain areas such as workers' compensation, employment standards, and income support. As well, the ministry supports the ongoing development of Alberta's public service. By any measure our ministry is a significant contributor to the government's success and has been for many years.

In 1992 under this government the ministry implemented some major welfare reforms to help train and get Albertans to work. At that time, Mr. Chairman, 80 per cent of the welfare caseload was considered employable; in fact, couples without children and single people. If the welfare caseloads had remained at the same level as they were before the reforms in 1992, the government would have spent an additional average of $600 million per year, or a total of $8 billion. That is a lot of money saved as a result of the ministry's efforts.

We have 59 service centres located across the province, where we provide a wide range of services to give Albertans a hand up to become productive. Mr. Chairman, we don't have welfare offices anymore in Alberta. We have employment and training centres, and employers turn to us to help fill job vacancies. Eighty-five per cent of the over 1 million visitors to our offices are looking for employment and training assistance and not income support or welfare. Our services include resumé writing, career and education planning, job placement and maintenance services, and referrals to training. We have also developed innovative ways to work in partnership with business.

Income supports is a statutory program. Our budget requirement is lower in 2005-06 due to the success we've had with those clients who are able to work. Our focus is on getting these Albertans the skills they need to find work and keep the jobs. Alberta's approach to providing a hand up is working. Even with an increase in population the number of employable people receiving support has dropped drastically.

Alberta's unemployment rate remains the lowest in Canada at about 3.5 per cent in March, the lowest since October 1981. Last year we reduced our caseload of people who were able to work by almost 2,200 cases to less than 18,000. This success has been partially offset by an increase of about 1,900 cases of people who cannot work.

The Alberta government is committed to helping people in need, and the income supports program is targeted to help those who need it most. On August 1 more than 18,000 families receiving income support will also see their monthly income increase by $17 per child. The province will flow the increase through the national child benefit supplement. For a family with three children this means an additional $51 per month, or $612 per year. People also receive health benefits and more money for needs such as daycare, work clothes, children's school expenses, and utility hookups.

The number of people receiving benefits through the Alberta child benefit and Alberta adult benefit programs has increased to almost 72,000. The increased number of Albertans receiving health benefits shows our success at moving people off income support and into employment. We want to continue to support and encourage people's desire to work by ensuring that funding is available for health care benefits.

Now, skills programs are not statutory; however, the skills programs are key to helping people get into the workforce and take away the pressure on the income supports program. We know that job skills training leads directly to employment for learners. In 2005-2006 HR and E expects to spend $288 million to help people get the training and information they need so they can get meaningful employment. We will be able to help over 2,000 more learners than in 2004, bringing this year's total of learners helped to over 25,000.

Eleven hundred more people will also have access to academic upgrading and English as a Second Language, for a total of 15,300. There will be 630 more opportunities in job skills training, immigrant bridging, and integrated training programs, for a total of 5,400. Three hundred more apprenticeship opportunities will be available, for a total of 4,300.

Investing in the next Alberta means working with the underrepresented in our workforce by allocating $6 million for First Nations training and employment programs for such things as skills to get a job, paid work experience, placement, and follow-up support services, spending $1 million for enhanced language training for immigrants, and increasing spending by $2.8 million to provide access to training and employment support for people with disabilities.

We've also increased the maximum tuition we will pay for a learner in year one from $10,000 to $15,000. This is to broaden the occupational training opportunities for individuals. Finally, we have set aside $2.2 million to cover tuition fee increases for upgrading, English as a Second Language, and integrated training.

Phase 2 of the Work Safe Alberta strategy is under development and will identify new opportunities to reduce injuries on Alberta work sites in the next five years. The focus of this very successful program will be on youth and industry sectors with poor safety records. A stakeholder consultation is planned for the fall of 2005.

Since we have implemented the Work Safe Alberta initiative, the lost-time claim rate has been reduced from 3.4 in 2000 to an estimated 2.6 for 2004. A lost-time claim is the claim for an occupational injury or disease that disables the worker beyond the day of the injury. The lost-time claim rate represents the risk of disabling injury or disease to a worker during a period of one year of work and is calculated by dividing the number of lost-time claims by person-year estimates and multiplying the results by 100. Over the past few years in partnership with industry and labour we have planned and implemented our Work Safe Alberta initiative. This is a 24 per cent drop, a record low, and it means that there were 10,000 fewer workers injured last year compared to where we would have been if we didn't have this program in place. It also means an estimated injury claim cost savings of over $151 million in workers' compensation payments in 2004. The number of workers being injured is decreasing in spite of yearly increases in our workforce, which is over 40,000 jobs. The Workers' Compensation Board funds the workplace health and safety program by contributing in excess of $12 million to support Work Safe Alberta.

Now I'd like to take a few moments to explain the personnel administration office. It is important to continue having a strong public service, one able to help develop strong public policy and deliver the kinds of high-quality programs and services that Albertans expect and deserve. The Alberta government will face the same kind of demographic challenges as other employers in the next five to 10 years. Today 30 per cent of the public service executive managers are over the age of 55; 45 per cent of all public service managers will be eligible for retirement in 2008. We need to invest now in developing our future public service leaders if we want to minimize the impact of these changes that are coming.

The personnel administration office's 2005-06 budget has increased by over $4 million to almost $13 million, the first budget increase for the PAO since the mid-1990s. The initiatives that the PAO will be undertaking with this increase will benefit all ministries. They include the creation of a program where executive managers can enhance their skills by moving between ministries through development assignments and investment in other leadership development initiatives also, success in management strategies to make sure that there are public service employees ready to step into leadership positions when leaders are ready to retire.

Workplace strategies to improve overall health will begin for the public service, including the new workplace health framework for the public service, human resource information technology systems so that public service managers have access to accurate and timely information when making human resource decisions, and other initiatives such as attracting and retaining talent in the public service, continuous learning, service excellence, and employee performance and recognition.

The other important area we have, Mr. Chairman, is the Appeals Commission for the Workers' Compensation Board. It is a separate government entity, independent from the Workers' Compensation Board. The commission hears appeals from workers or employers to a decision of the review bodies of the Workers' Compensation Board. The operating costs of the Appeals Commission are paid from the general revenue, which is reimbursed from the workers' compensation accident fund. The budget for the Appeals Commission has increased by $1.5 million.

In the past two years the Appeals Commission has received 250 more appeals than in the past 5 years, which is a pretty good average. This has a significant impact on the timelines for processing appeals. The increase in funding will provide for additional hearing resources so the Appeals Commission can hear more appeals and, of course, gradually reduce the timeline for processing appeals to an acceptable level.

This year Alberta Human Resources and Employment will invest over $770 million in Alberta's people skills and workplace investments. These dollars make a difference to people every day in communities across the province.

I look forward to hearing comments and questions from the hon. members about these estimates. Any questions, of course, I can't answer today, I'll get my staff to review Hansard and provide the answers in writing.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and reply to the hon. minister today. I do have a number of questions and a number of comments, and I'll go through them in sequence here.

First off, you know, many people have told me that they're quite pleased to see the minimum wage rise to $7 in one move in 2005, but many students have in fact called me and said that they're not going to be able to have that increase to help them with saving for their tuition and learning expenses in the coming year because it will be after the summer.

One question in looking at some of these things. We've seen in some of the government statistics that there actually are presently in the public sector a certain percentage on the minimum wage. I wondered if there were any actually working in the public sector for the provincial government on the minimum wage, and will this $7 dollar increase affect them, and how much will that, in fact, cost?

The low-income individuals in our society and poverty will certainly be helped by the working poor having a higher minimum wage. Certainly, 60 per cent of the people who are presently earning minimum wage are older than 20, I believe. The incidence of people on the minimum wage that are in the older age groups is increasing, and it shows an increasing tendency for our elderly who don't have pensions, who have not had the ability to save over the years, to have to augment their income. The minimum wage in places like fast-food outlets and in other types of employment are increasingly becoming important as an income augmenter to people with low pensions or no pensions. Certainly, the Canada pension and other supports for most individuals are not enough.

Some other questions. Why has the government reduced its commitment to youth seeking employment? There's been a reduction of $1,113,000 for the Youth Connections career info program. Why does this budget seem to abandon people who are in need of assistance but remain capable and willing to work? There are $2,261,000 less in health benefits for people expected to work. What is the reasoning behind the significant reduction in living allowances for learners, which again affects youth and students more than any group? That's $1,815,000.

We've seen quite a hold-the-line approach on STEP funding, and that program does provide a great deal of help for a lot of students in summer employment. Many members, in fact, employ STEP students in their constituency offices in the summer, and the numbers in the budget for that are not increased, yet we have still, even with the freeze on tuitions, a huge need for students to have at least some summer jobs to increase their ability to have a higher education.

The skills investments area is quite crucial, and in the supplementary estimates some time ago in this Legislature we were told that $13 million at the end of the last budget year was transferred out of skills investments into other areas in human resources and not used to develop the skills of Albertans. Will the government ensure that skills investments does take a priority? The development of our workforce is important to ensure that we have the important skills to develop our economy and to ensure that we have the proper resources for our own people to learn and get the necessary skills for employment.

Some of the areas stayed the same. Youth Connections: $4,767,000. Training for work, job skills training from the gross comparable '04-05 budget actually went down from $63 million to $62.7 million. The self-employment training, you know, is a very important area in our economy to encourage people to self employ. Many people are getting home offices, doing all of these things, and we've seen no increase in that area. As I mentioned, the STEP student allocation stayed the same at $8.195 million to $8.195 million again.

The actual lottery expenditure for immigrant supports went down even though there are a million dollars in there as a special expense, and I heard the minister speak about that shortly in his speech. I wonder if he could be more specific about what that million dollars is for. Is that for temporary foreign workers, to help in their transition back and forth? Or what, in fact, is that?

As well, there's a huge increase in R and D. Well, $2,200,000 is pretty major for an HR department. I just wonder what that research and development is all about.

The WCB. You know, you mentioned that the Appeals Commission is reimbursed from the WCB accident fund, but in effect being reimbursed from the accident fund ensures that it's still charged to employers, and there is a connection. I've heard often enough of a lot of connections between case managers who are calling appeals case managers if they are in fact going to let their decision go, and I think that that's far too close a relationship. That sort of contact should be ended, and certainly the funding through the WCB accident fund should end so that it is not a cost to employers or to workers.

There's a great importance, I think, in ensuring that we have a productive workforce, and I think part of a productive workforce – it's certainly in the area of other ministries somewhat, but there are so many cross-ministry functions in government that I think HR and E should look very seriously at it. It does deal with ensuring of jobs for aboriginals, and I think that something like the roads from La Loche in Saskatchewan, where there's a strong and well-trained workforce of tradesmen, would be a very, very productive investment for Albertans and Alberta and our oil sands and our economy.

As well, there's a strong potential in transportation and upgrading some of the winter roads we have in other areas, certainly from Wabasca-Desmarais on the west side of the Athabasca River, without a bridge, without the huge cost of a bridge on that large river. Wabasca-Desmarais is a large population area in northern Alberta and quite often has continually high unemployment levels and good potential for work in the tar sands. You know, often construction and mining can be seasonal or cyclical. For those who'd like from time to time to get back to their homes in Wabasca-Desmarais or Red Earth or Sucker Creek or Driftpile or all those other areas, such a winter road would really I think provide a great deal of ease of access to the workplace and better employment levels and less cost in other areas.

I think that we must ensure that the aboriginal training programs – I was looking at the April 7 document – are fully implemented and that all efforts are made to ensure that our First Nations have a very strong ability, from all aspects, to enter the workforce and to be part of the prosperity of Alberta. Of course, much of that is under federal jurisdiction, but I think that increasingly, you know, we're seeing a burgeoning urban population that can be used to work in the huge economic area of the oil sands. We must help that in every way possible. I think there is a responsibility for the provincial government to do whatever they can.

In terms of the PAO I think there are some concerns that we have to look at in terms of the retention level. There are certainly demographic concerns. There are some internal reports, I think, that are saying that the demographics of the public sector and the public service here in Alberta are a time bomb. It is one of those areas where we will see some huge retirements in the near future. The necessity to train leadership: I was very pleased to hear that. I'm sure that there's a strong public service leadership that is multi-sectoral, multidepartmental. I was very pleased to hear that. I think that's a good innovation.

I'm not too pleased to hear the continued high percentage of dissatisfaction with employment in the public service: 1 out of 5. I think that's still far too high, and something must be done to somehow address that. You know, the target is only to move to an 83 per cent satisfaction level, which is still pretty close to 1 in 5 dissatisfied. When you have a dissatisfied workforce or at least a large percentage of it, it starts to affect the productivity and the ability of that workforce to function in a way that benefits in the best possible way the interests of all Albertans.

I think that there's a huge and crying need for proper information on labour supply. It's something that is, I think, of crucial importance as we enter the end of the baby boom.

3:30

I'll just make a note on the baby boom though. Some people try to put it forward as being something a little bit more immediate than it is. We were just talking about VE Day and having the people from the armed forces, the three branches, all here, and it's a wonderful thing, but if you look at VE Day, 1945, it is now 2005, 60 years later. The servicemen that came back in 1946, 1947 and got married – and it takes usually nine months to start a baby boom. Realistically, that baby boom started in about 1947 and continued to the mid-60s. So what that puts us at is an actual retirement date for those very first baby boomers seven years from now if we look at it as 65. You know, my colleague from St. Albert would probably argue with me that 65 might be a little young for retirement. The importance of using older workers I think will increase as we see a healthier older workforce, and these are issues that we must look at.

When we look farther down the road, realistically the middle area of the baby boom does not come into place for their retirement at an age 65 level for another 17 years, and some of the baby boomers at the end of the baby boomers are still having children. So there are some aspects to that baby boom that I think are a little bit overblown, and it will be with us in the working sector of the population for quite some time.

As I said, the supply and demand area of what constitutes skills in our workforce is often thrown at us in many different ways. People will give us statistics if they have a particular axe to bear. We've seen a lot of demand studies that look to the interests of certain employer organizations, and certainly many of them have been well done and are comprehensive on the demand side. But if you look at the demand side, it is like looking at the interests of grade 2 students, for example, who are surveyed on their demand for candy three months down the road. Well, there will never be enough. Certainly, when you survey employers about their needs for employees six months or two years down the road, there will never be enough because that is an input that is absolutely crucial to them and they want to ensure that there is enough there.

It's important to the economy that we ensure that there's enough there and that people are well trained and that we keep the supply going, but often there is a danger to oversupply, and this is a concern for many Albertans. There have been a few petitions presented in this session that have spoken to that and the concern that many Albertans have to having temporary foreign workers brought in when they consider that it is not necessary to come into their certain occupational and skill areas.

Even the December study by the Alberta Economic Development Authority and the action plan on megaproject excellence did not forecast a huge need, and in fact many of the trades look at a lower level of demand in four years than we're actually seeing today. Actually, this year is a high-demand year for many trades. It fluctuates. It's the nature of the industry. It's the nature of the oil sands that we've been building for many years.

I first worked at Syncrude in the 1970s, and there was a huge blip and a huge necessity for people to come in and work. There were many people that came in from other provinces: from Quebec, from Ontario, from Newfoundland, and many from the Maritime provinces. These people helped build Alberta, became Albertans. Many of them went back, though, because that is the nature of our flow of labour in this country. It's actually the history and the interprovincial history of how it works.

To utilize temporary foreign workers to provide employees for companies just because many of the existing Albertans and Canadians do not want to work under the particular work regime creates huge problems and the potential for labour strife. The situation and the statistics that we look at from the labour board and all the other areas show that we have not seen very much labour strife. In fact, I don't think there's been a true strike in the oil sands from the unionized sector for quite some time. We're beginning to see the phenomena of the non-union strike, which is odd. We saw that last November. The Fort McMurray Today reported that when a whole parade of tradesmen decided to leave a job site at Suncor . . .

The Chair: I hate to interrupt, hon. member, but your time is elapsed.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much. Those are very, very good comments, very good suggestions, and very good questions. I'll try and answer starting off with your first question, which was on the minimum wage and possible, you know, support for youth in a special way.

As I mentioned in my opening statement, the minimum wage increases to $7 an hour starting September 1, 2005. All minimum wage earners, including students, youth, and hospitality workers, are equally deserving of the increase, of course, and the minimum wage will be equal for everybody at this time. I know that there was some talk, but there are no plans at this time to subsidize employers for the wages they provide to students.

There are some jurisdictions that have that now, and I'm looking at it closely. We'll monitor the first part of the changes in the minimum wage and closely look at other programs that are available. In the future if a process changes, then of course it will have to go through the normal approval process.

The Employment Standards Code sets the minimum wage that employers must pay workers within the province of Alberta. Higher minimum wages are negotiated between employers and employees or their unions. The minimum wage is intended to be an entry-level rate of pay. By increasing Alberta's minimum wage, the government of Alberta is ensuring that the workers have a better start in the workforce. Of course, due to Alberta's vibrant and booming economy, there are not too many people working for minimum wage.

The second area that was mentioned was Youth Connections, the cutback in the budget. Youth Connections has been reduced by a million dollars. Well, we can do it within the existing organization and the existing funding, and we'll monitor it closely. If in the future there is the need to increase the funding for Youth Connections, then of course we'll restore their dollars, but in the meantime we can do it within the existing organization.

In relation to the student temporary employment program, which is a very important program, the budget this year is projected to be $8.2 million, which is the same as '04 and '05. Approximately 3,600 students will gain valuable work experience through the STEP program this summer, just about the same as last year. Eligible employers include registered nonprofit community organizations, First Nations, Métis settlements, municipalities, regional health authorities, regional school divisions, and postsecondary institutions. So, again, we will review the budget each year as we move forward to see what, if any, changes are required in that very valuable program.

The other area that I was mentioning was in relation to the enhanced immigration services that we provide. My department will spend about a million dollars in '05-06 on enhanced language training, and of course we'll continue providing that valuable service to the people that are coming here and require support.

The other part is that the immigration support services are not dollars for temporary foreign workers. That's a different program completely. We share responsibility for immigration with the federal government and other provinces under the Constitution and work collaboratively with Citizenship and Immigration Canada to support settlement programs through integrated services programs. Federal funding for settlement services in Alberta is mainly targeted at the government-assisted refugees in their first year of arrival. Alberta's funding, $1.9 million in 2005-06, is for all newcomers who have been in Canada less than three years. So that is a very valuable program.

The other area that was mentioned was a productive workforce, which is very important. With a strong economy like we have in Alberta, we do need a strong, productive, local workforce of Albertans, Canadians, First Nations, and persons that require additional help.

The issue of jobs for aboriginal people was mentioned, and that is a must because definitely there's still high unemployment and underemployment of our aboriginal people. A lot of people still live in poverty while the economy is booming out there, and we need to do a lot of work in that area to improve that.

On the provincial side the people that live off the reserve and the Métis people and, of course, the people that needed the support, through the welfare reforms that were done by this government – I mentioned earlier that 80 per cent of the cases were single people and couples without children using up most of the dollars that were needed for the high-needs area. Those people, through the reforms, are now gone. They're back into the workforce and have become independent and self-sufficient.

One of the things that we need to work with – and I hope you will support me on this and support our government at different levels – is to push for some changes at the federal level, to get the feds to try and change some of their socioeconomic policies on the reserves. The way they're structured right now the First Nations people are not happy. The chiefs are not happy. I don't think the taxpayer out there is happy to see people still caught living in poverty while they want to work. The feds I think should be encouraged to change their policies, to start using those same dollars they provide free for social supports to encourage people to train and get back into the workforce. So I could sure use your support there.

The other area, of course, is the integrated road network. It is necessary. The way our economy is growing, in order to continue the movement of the commerce that's required out there, we need to make sure that the roads are built. The member mentioned, you know, specifically 63, 813, La Loche road. All those roads need to be fixed up, in fact built and paved and fixed up. When you look at a road network from La Loche to Fort McMurray, Fort McMurray to Fort Chip and on to Fort Smith and then another road from Fort McMurray to Wabasca and on to Peace River and then another one from Rainbow Lake to Fort Nelson – that type of road network needs to be put in place. I know that it'll cost millions of dollars, but we're spending that now on social support programs. These people can commute to these job sites. Wabasca, for example, which the hon. member mentioned, has a population of 5,000 yet has 80 per cent unemployment and underemployment with our First Nations people.

So we definitely need to improve the infrastructure to ensure that people not only are provided with training but also have access to jobs and training that are out there.

The PAO, of course, was mentioned. Yes, definitely, we need to get more managers within our system to apply for jobs within a department or other departments that become available. I understand right now, in fact, that it's fairly difficult for a young person that just graduates, say, from a university or a technical school or that just wants to apply for jobs to access our government department. So we need to make sure that we look at how we may encourage a lot more young people also, not only the managers that are in our existing system, to better access government jobs.

There used to be wage position money available to hire people if there was work to be done, jobs to be done, and what happened was that a lot of those people then applied for regular jobs in the department, and it worked quite well. It brought a lot of people into the government system. I think we need to definitely look at that.

The other one that was mentioned, of course, is proper information as far as labour supply. I think that, you know, generally the governments at different levels – federal, provincial, municipal – and private industry and the unions, no doubt, are doing a fairly good job, but one of the things that's lacking is the ability for anyone to identify – for example, at Al-Pac, which is in my constituency, a thousand jobs, we really don't know what Al-Pac's needs are for the next 10 years. There's a postsecondary institution down the road that really doesn't know what the needs are for that specific project.

We need to make sure that we do an inventory of what's needed for 10 years and then design our programs to match that, not only in forestry but also in the oil and gas industry and agriculture and tourism. So definitely that's a very good point you brought up. It is a key to ensuring that we do provide the opportunities for people to be able to plan better than what we are right now.

The issue of temporary foreign workers. Again, I've mentioned here, you know, that the last resort for any company is to bring in foreign workers. Our policy, of course, as a government is to make sure that Albertans get hired first, Canadians, local people, First Nations people, persons with developmental disabilities, and persons that are caught in our social support system with very high needs, that need a lot of support to move off the Alberta Works program to become independent and self-sufficient.

You know, to bring in temporary foreign workers – like I've mentioned before, that it is a federal program. The federal government does the approval. We have a memorandum of understanding between the feds and the province to make sure that they follow a rigid criteria before they can bring in temporary foreign workers. They are more expensive to bring in, and it's definitely not cheap labour. We will continue to monitor that area very closely to ensure that Albertans are looked after first. That will be our top priority.

I believe those were some of the questions. I want to commend the member for being so thorough and for asking questions directly. Like I said earlier, you know, some things I might have missed. If I do, the staff will pick it up in Hansard, and we'll answer it in writing.

Again, there are areas where we will also need your support. A very important one is in relation to the First Nations and the federal policies. You know, all of us need to work together, I think, to see that change. I'd like to see that change in my lifetime because one of the reasons I got into politics was to work towards reforming the social support system in rural Alberta, diversifying the economy, and ensuring that people that wanted to be off welfare and working had that opportunity. At the provincial level I think we've been reasonably successful. We need to do a lot of work yet, but at the federal level changes need to happen, and it's not going to be easy. One government, one ministry cannot do it. We'll need your support to achieve that.

The other, of course, that continues to be challenging and quite complicated is the issue of bringing in foreign workers. You know, as a government we'd like to see Albertans work first, of course. Canadians, aboriginal people, personal development – that's another area where I think we need to continue working together as a government and this Legislature, to make sure that our people here are looked after first. If that can't be accommodated, then maybe there are times where, for a short period of time, people have to be brought in, but hopefully not at the cost of local jobs. People that have trades that want to work definitely should be given the first opportunity. I think that in this day and age we're advanced and sophisticated enough and have enough knowledge and expertise out there amongst us that we should be able to sit down and resolve these issues.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to speak with regard to this ministry. I've got some specifics with individual criteria. The one that's on page 240, your internal government transfers. It says, "Contribution from Lottery Fund."

I'm not sure what that specifically would be used for. Some of these first questions, again, would be line-by-line items, and after that I'll go into some more general concerns with regard to that.

Also, the salary contingency that was listed under the Workers' Compensation appeals. It was just a one-time line item, but it no longer is there, so I'm just wondering why that particular piece disappeared. If I look at Workers' Compensation appeals there was, I believe, a $200,000 increase for the appeals and $1.3 million for the Appeals Commission as well, so I'm not sure why the increase there. Although I have an idea, I'd certainly like the minister to be able to comment specifically on that.

If I go to page 231 – and that is program 3, skills investments, Youth Connections – and if you look over the previous couple of notes in there, it went from $4,767,000 to $5,880,000, and then it's back down again. So it was up, and it was down. The question would be: why is there not a consistency with its increase? We are talking about youth. We are talking about connecting with youth with regard to employment.

The other one would have been – well, I'll just go on to another one here. This was raised in question period. We thought it might have been a little more relevant if we'd have raised it here. Will the minister hire new occupational safety inspectors, OHS, to ensure that the statistics of injured workers and those that are in fact killed on the job site don't increase? As we realize, we are trying to extract those resources at a very alarming rate. In fact, we have the industries continuing to do expansion pieces, so that just tells us that we are creating jobs. We're doing it very quickly, but we also have to do it at a rate that isn't going to jeopardize anybody. The question came out: are we in fact risking people's lives for the sake of extracting this stuff? Again, that's where the question on that particular piece comes from.

The money for – and you did answer this – new immigrants coming in. There was a million dollars to be going into training to deal with language barriers. I'm not sure if that was specifically intended for immigrants that are currently here, residing now, or if that would be to aid the temporary foreign workers with regard to language barriers. I find that a little disturbing. In fact, if we're bringing in people that are going to be expected to be able to work and take the jobs of Albertans and Canadians, why would we have to train them to deal with the language barrier? I thought there would certainly be something, a little bit more of a transition, so that we wouldn't have to worry about that.

I would like to see increased rates of apprenticeships with regard to the overall amount that we are in fact training. Right now I don't think we have a good way to monitor the group that is graduating. What I would like to see is it reported on a year-by-year basis until they reach journeyman status. Ideally, with your first year, for example, you've got maybe a thousand people that are applying for pipefitting and/or welding. After the second year what have you got there? The same with the third year and right up to the fourth year. If you have a difference in that, can you explain why they're not in fact seeking and continuing to retain these people, which has got great opportunities for employment, as we always say?

The other one is that I was just out front last night with a number of other MLAs, and there were at least a thousand people, and this is in direct response to the temporary foreign workers. There were about a thousand people who were coming out on a cold day. They've probably got better things to do, but they're very concerned – and again you did mention that – with the temporary foreign workers being brought in.

This is a little off topic, but it is relevant to this one. We've got an interim Métis harvesting agreement that, in fact, is ensuring that the Métis have hunting rights guaranteed. These people are only asking the same thing that the Métis have been just granted. They're wanting to ensure that the jobs are going to be there not only today but tomorrow for them, their children, and their grandchildren. They want to ensure that that is going to be a consistent line and a commitment from this government.

When I hear about the people being brought in as temporary foreign workers, I get quite concerned as well. Like I said, we talk about the Alberta advantage, but when you're willing to bring in people, that in fact is very concerning. We talk about the amount of aboriginals that are unemployed. Certainly, we can add more to that stock and train them as well. I'll let you go on about that one.

I'll talk a little bit about the WCB. I was on WCB once myself, and I didn't have terrible treatment. In fact, I was quite pleased. [interjection] I can see that you did, then, as well. My concern is the push to get the people out of the system. I don't think that the WCB people that are dealing with the clients really show some empathy.

I've got a number of cases. The majority of the people that are coming through my office come and talk about the WCB, the process and the treatment. In fact, a number of them didn't feel that they were heard. They were being forced back to work because they were being constantly pushed to do more than their limit. These people know their limit, but the doctors or the people who are there are pushing them back at an alarming rate, they're saying, and they're further injuring themselves.

That's just outright crap when that happens. These people shouldn't be subjected to that. They were doing a job on behalf of an employer, and they're injured. We've got to have a little bit of compassion for these people. The biggest thing is that these people are being pushed back. Who do these doctors work for? I realize that they're being paid by the WCB, but whose best interest are they out for?

I've got a neighbour who said that he was further injured when he was trying to do the exercises that the doctor was explaining that he should be able to do. "It could be in your mind. No, I don't see any injuries here. You should be able to go back and be able to be completely and fully trained within a little bit here." In fact, some people are cut off because they are not doing some of the exercises. They're quite concerned about that, and that does concern me as well. I think we have to recognize and do a little bit more research on that.

We pay these people bonuses. I'm not sure why the bonuses are paid. Would the bonuses not be better served if they went right back to the employers that are paying these specific increases as a way of rewarding people for no injuries? I mean, we talked about today being International Day of Mourning for workers injured in the workplace. That would certainly be something if we, in fact, put money back to those companies, recognizing the number of injury-free workdays, as a matter of fact. I realize that they are given reductions after a certain amount of time. I can appreciate that.

My last thing that I'd probably comment on is about the $7 which we're going to see as the minimum wage. Right now the minimum wage is $5.90. I do know, in fact, that there are people who are working at the minimum wage. They may work at the minimum wage as a base salary, and then the rest of it will be, in fact, as perhaps a commission, but if the commission part doesn't fulfill itself, they're relying on that base of a minimum wage. I would have rather seen it in summer, when it's the busiest time, when the students have an opportunity to take full advantage, putting in 40 hours, versus in September when they're back in school and not able to take advantage of that increase.

Those would just be a couple of issues and concerns and ideas that I would raise for the minister. Thank you.

4:00

The Chair: Before I recognize the next speaker, I'd just like to caution the member on his choice of words in the last exchange. According to Beauchesne's 489 there was a term that was unparliamentary that you used.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much. Those were very good comments. Most of the issues in relation to the Workers' Compensation Board. Because it's an arm's-length operation and they're not here today, I'll get them to answer that in writing, except in the area of the Appeals Commission and the increase in their dollars.

The reason there is an increase in their dollars is that they're hiring more people so they can process the backlog of appeals. That's happening. The other thing, you know, is if there are any MLAs that have some difficulties with an officer, a worker at the Workers' Compensation Board, I have no problem arranging a meeting with the government liaison and also the chairman of the board and the MLA to sit down and put this stuff on the table and see if we can resolve it. I'm willing to do that. I have no problem with that, so if you want to do that, we can.

The Youth Connections. Again, I mentioned earlier that, you know, if additional money is needed to run that program, there is no problem. We will find the dollars. But what's happening there with the youth is that now a lot of the youth are going directly into jobs – they're not going into training – and there are lots of jobs out there, especially in the north half of Alberta and Edmonton and other areas. The youth are walking into jobs themselves without our support or our help. They're taking jobs, so you know I guess that's good in a lot of ways, but as far as statistics, then, in our budget, they don't show up. But we'll keep monitoring that. We'll monitor it closer. If there is more money needed, you can be assured we will find it and put it in because youth are our future as far as employment and training.

OHS, of course, continues to operate, you know, quite well. We're far from perfect, but they're doing a good job. We have 83 officers now that are out there working, doing inspections and reports and monitoring projects very closely. Again, if there is, you know, we'll monitor closely. Work safety is definitely still a top priority, and we will continue monitoring it closely. If there are additional needs for additional staff, then we'll have to look at it in next year's budget, no doubt.

Apprenticeship training is only mentioned, touched on briefly. Again, it's not under my department. Well, part of it is. The part of the apprenticeship support we do is to about 4,500 students. We support some of the living allowances because the EI portion was pulled out. I think you used to be able to access EI the first two years while you were taking your apprenticeship. That was pulled out. We are providing about 4,500 students a year to supplement some of their living expenses.

But the apprenticeship program, itself, I think we need to look at very closely because the average age of a journeyman in Canada is about 51 years old. The average age of a journeyman completing their four-year program in Alberta is about 26 years old, and when you look at schools like in Athabasca, Lac La Biche, that whole north half of the province, 65 per cent of the students want to take technical trades. They know by the time they're in grade 8 or 9. Why is it taking until 26 years old to complete the four-year program?

So, you know, although we train, I think, 20 per cent of all the apprentices in Canada – and no doubt we have the best program – still, because of our booming economy, our high demands in the future, we can't sit back and say it's good enough. I think we need to keep moving forward to make sure that the proper apprenticeship programs are provided.

There are some. Careers: the Next Generation is in there, the RAP program is in there, the youth apprenticeship program, which I was involved partially in some of the design. It's designed to start apprenticeship training right in the regular K to 12 school at about the grade 8 level, and it's tied in with the technical schools. By the time you finish grade 12, you could have up to the equivalent of two years of training, say, in carpentry for an example. By the time you're 16, you've got two years of training already, and you walk into a job. The employer has a trained person. By the time you're 18 or 19, you've got your ticket. Those are some of the things we need to look at in the apprenticeship field, I believe.

Again, Youth Connections, of course, I mentioned, and the apprenticeship training. You mentioned lottery dollars, and I'll get the department to address that particular issue. The temporary foreign workers. Again, you know, we're going to need your help on that. It's challenging. It's a complicated issue. We want to keep pushing. The federal government does the approval. The employers have to first of all do an exhaustive process of advertising and recruiting and training of local people: Albertans, Canadians, aboriginal people, persons with developmental disabilities, and other people that are probably in a high-needs area of my department that could use support.

That has to be a top priority. Now, you know, it's going to be a challenge, no doubt. There will be times that we will maybe need some temporary foreign workers. I don't know that, but maybe in order to build some of the projects. We'll see. We'll have to monitor the system very closely.

The last item you mentioned I believe was the minimum wage, and again we'll monitor it as we move forward. We'll see what impact it has on the employers and the employees, see how many of our caseload of the 11,000 that are not expected to work because of the minimum wage and some of the financial support we provide in health care, see how many of those files may be closed and people will move on on their own, maybe with some transitional supports in health care and other areas. So we will monitor that closely.

In fact, when the minimum wage was designed here in Alberta, we did pull the figures out from Ontario on what youth programs they have there. They do have a program there where, you know, it's operated very similar to what we have except it involves a private industry, where the government topped off I think it was $2 an hour to an employer that hired a student that is going back to university.

So we're looking at it. I mean, we're open to look at anything, and if you have any good suggestions in the future, we're sure open to look at that.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a few comments to make. Just to the hon. minister, it's nice to see him across the way because when I used to know him, he was standing beside me, usually heckling me over on that side. [interjections] Yeah. Something like that.

Mr. Chairman, just mainly comments. I want to just look into a couple of areas to begin with. It seems to me – correct me if I'm wrong – that the big losers in the ministry's budget are the people investment department, whose budget is being cut by about $6 million, and workplace investment, whose budget was slashed by 46 per cent from last year. Within the people investment department the government is cutting the income supports program by about $9 million. Especially hard hit within that program, the people expected to work program was cut by some $12 million. Now my understanding of the people expected to work program is that it's an income-support program designed to help folks out only for a short period of time. I guess what I'm saying is that the minister could perhaps tell us why that's happening.

But I want to come back to a debate that we held the other day when we were asking, perhaps, the demonstration about the unfortunate murders of people in the inner city, prostitutes. I made the case with the minister and got that there are some cases where people are actually in prostitution – you could talk to the prostitution awareness people. It's not me making it up – they actually know of people, young women with kids, that actually do make those sorts of decisions. I'm not saying all of them are, you know, but that is going on. I think that we've been pared back in terms of social assistance. The minister will take great pride in that, perhaps, as there are some good things that have happened, no doubt.

But I think now we're down to sort of the core people, and a lot of those are children and single parents. I think that we really have to, Mr. Chairman, review the social assistance rates. Definitely, we have to do that, and they have to be raised significantly because if we're just down to single parents, people struggling with children and the rest of it, then those are the people we really have to be somewhat concerned about. I was disappointed that it's not in this budget, and I'd ask the minister to comment when we might look for some increases in that area.

The minimum wage has already been discussed, Mr. Chairman, but I do have a few comments to make. I would say that it's long overdue. I think this is an embarrassment to me as an Albertan that we have the lowest right now, $5.90 an hour. I know that it's been raised to $7, but the point that I'd like to make: I don't know why we didn't do it right away rather than wait until September because the minister is well aware that there's going to be a flood of young people, students from universities, high schools, NAIT, SAIT, Mount Royal colleges, wherever in the province.

They're going to be coming out, looking for work, trying to make enough money to go back to university so they don't have big debts. They could have used that money because for many of them it would have been, well, almost a 20 per cent hike. That would have been very helpful. So I really suggest to the minister – and I know it's not going to happen – that it would have been helpful to have done that immediately, especially for those students.

Even though we've raised it to $7 an hour, the minister talks about a boom economy, and he's right. We happen to have oil and gas here, and the economy is booming. I would say that even with the raise we're still fourth in the country in terms of the minimum wage. Yeah, we're in the middle, but fourth, if we can put it that way. That doesn't mean that some others might not raise it along the way too. In B.C. they have a booming economy right now because of their resources, and it's at $8 an hour. I know that the minister knows this. Ontario and Quebec are at $7.45 an hour.

Even with the raise coming in September, we're still in the middle. If you have expenses, in a boom economy your expenses are higher so you need to make more money just to be even, and we're not going to be there even with the $7 an hour.

I've wondered if the government has always ruled out this idea. I could take it if it were raised to $7 if they said, "Okay. We're going to look at the CPI or inflation," like MLAs' salaries or whatever, "and have an indexation to that minimum wage." Therefore, people wouldn't be falling behind at least. We can always review it from time to time, but that indexation, I think, would be important, and I'm wondering why the government would not consider that. If it's good enough for MLAs, it should be good enough for the people that are lowest on the totem pole in terms of wage earning.

Moving along, Mr. Chairman, because I don't want to run out of time again, we had some discussion briefly about on-the-job injuries, and of course today, as the minister brought out in his ministerial statement, is the Day of Mourning. The figures, I think, in Alberta are not good. I alluded to this, and I think some others did too. Albertans who suffer serious injuries are more likely to get them on the job, according to a national trauma study. Nearly 10 per cent of major injuries requiring trauma treatment occurred in the workplace. When you look at the national average, it's 7 per cent. Ontario's average is 5.5 per cent.

Now, I think that's fairly serious, and again that may well be part of a boom economy, but it's there. These figures, I think the minister would agree, are unacceptable. I know he said in his statements that we have 80 officers, and I'm sure they're doing the best they can, but 80 officers across the province: with a boom economy, if we want to come back to the minister's statement that it's a boom economy, that's probably not enough. We've got to do something there.

I would caution the minister. When we get in, I'll have something to say, as I'm sure he'd be aware, about division 8 and temporary workers in apprenticeship. But I worry about us going the opposite way. There could be more serious injuries. In part, I see all this happening, the division 8 and temporary foreign workers and apprenticeship, all wrapped up in, sort of, one issue.

I notice that the Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board is now – and I know that this doesn't fall in the minister's department necessarily, but he certainly has some influence, I would say. The Merit contractors, the non-union people, want to change the ratio of apprentices to journeymen from the current 3-1 to a 1-1 ratio. I recognize that not all the trades have the 3 to 1, but some of the most dangerous jobs do. Boilermakers, ironworkers, pipefitters have a 3 to 1 ratio. Of course, they are vehemently against this sort of change.

I would say to the minister that if we go ahead with this, this is a potential, again, for more injuries, more deaths on the job. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that for that reason I think we would have more skilled people because of the 1 to 1 ratio, but I think that there's a big safety thing here too. I really would say to the minister that if he has any influence at all and he cares, as I know the minister does from the statement about the Day of Mourning, that this is a very dangerous thing, I believe, if we move in that direction.

I know why the Merit contractors and CLAC and those people want it: because it's cheaper. It's good for them, but I don't think it's good for the people of Alberta, and I certainly don't think it's good for the tradespeople. I think that could even add to this high rate of trauma treatment that we have.

I know this is not going to change. I think that all the years I've been in the Legislature we've been talking about the weak labour laws in this province. I think that all those things, the cutbacks that happened, some of them necessary no doubt, the various things that have occurred, the weaker labour laws, add to this potential for injury. I think the lack of whistle-blowing legislation and these sorts of things can all lead to it. So I'm saying to the minister that, if possible, one minister could influence everybody else if we're really concerned about on-the-job injuries. I think all these things play into Alberta's high rate. I honestly believe that.

Let's just talk very briefly if I can, because we've had a fair amount of discussion, about so-called temporary foreign workers. I'll tell you what it is, Mr. Minister. It's tying all the things in together. I think the villain here is this division 8 of the labour code.

I can't believe that anywhere else in Canada we'd ever have this as part of the labour code. I know it's been used very sparingly, I believe maybe once or twice in the '70s. It is my understanding that the unions went along with it at that time. I think that was probably a mistake.

The cabinet, I believe, has made the decision that Horizon can if necessary use this as the code and do what they want. Now, this is very dictatorial, I think, and undemocratic because it virtually allows – and it's starting to happen with the negotiations. If you talk to the building trades people, they're trying to get cutbacks in terms of time, double time to time and a half, when people work, whether it's Saturday or Sunday. Those things are already occurring. What it does is give them an absolute hammer. This is why I think the people are so upset. They're tying all these things together, Mr. Minister. They see that, and then they believe and I believe that Horizon would do this. They could say: well, if you don't roll back and you don't do what we want, we'll have the right to look at another union that will be more amenable. That's where CLAC comes in, and that's where the Merit contractors come in.

That's why there's so much anger building, and the Member for Edmonton-Decore talked about the demonstration yesterday. They tie that in to the weakening of apprenticeship. They tie that in to this idea, then, that if the workers don't do what they're told by Horizon or any other groups up there, well, we'll bring in temporary foreign workers that will do that.

Now, the minister says that temporary foreign workers can be more expensive. In the short run that could be true, but if you can roll back all the collective bargaining rights and people are working for a lot cheaper, that might not necessarily be the case. What they're tying in and why the anger is there, I believe justifiably so, is that division 8 and where that could lead.

I say to the government that this would be a big mistake. The building trades unions have made this province. They've developed the tar sands. They've worked at times with no-strike contracts and all the rest of it. They're a very highly skilled group. If we want to move on with the tar sands, the last thing we need is labour unrest up there, and there will be labour unrest with that group if we continue in this pattern. So I see this as all together.

Now, we can argue whether there are shortages or not. The minister says 3.5 per cent unemployment. As he knows, the figures that we had were 6.1 per cent in the construction trades. The reality is that the Suncor memo said that there's no shortage of workers in Alberta, Canada, but only a shortage of workers who are willing to work on CLAC sites. Well, that's a difference from a shortage overall. A lot of the people that are in unions will not go to work for them. That's where the shortage is. So maybe CLAC should change, you know, and become part of the trade union movement rather than a company union.

There's another interesting thing, Minister. I don't know if the minister has had a chance to look at this; I just sort of got it myself. There is the Alberta Construction Association foreign workers survey results. The Construction Workforce Development Forecasting Committee, comprised of industry, labour, and government, concluded in May 2004, and I quote: if all the major industrial projects proceed as they are scheduled, we will again see considerable strain on our supply of skilled trades for 2005 running into the first quarter of 2007.

I wondered where they got that information. If it came from this survey that they did, they have 1,751 member companies. Only 60 responded. Now, if there's a shortage that they're talking about and they have 1,751 member companies, you would think that more than 60 would respond if there was a big problem there. Of the 3.4 per cent of the member companies that responded, only 68.3 per cent of those say they experienced a shortage of trades. So I don't know where they're coming from unless they want to move towards what I'm talking about, you know: slowing down and not employing the building trades so that they can move into CLAC and Merit.

So I'm saying to the minister that that's why the anger is there. It's not anti-immigration. It's not that. Everybody knows. The discussion has been held. The minister has said very clearly that we have to do more for aboriginal people in these areas. We have to do more for our landed immigrant people that are already here. We have to look after Canadians first. Well, I think it's greater than that. I think that this is big oil moving ahead trying to get into the market, get it out fast, and get it out to the American market as cheaply and as quickly as they can.

I'm probably going to be running out of time fairly soon. I thought I'd put it there, but I didn't.

Mr. Chairman, I'd just like to bring up one other thing that I meant to yesterday, but it seems to have been brought back. It's highway 63. I know the minister knows a lot about this because he's talked about this. There are a lot of accidents occurring going back and forth from the job. Frankly, highway 63 is one of those roads that is in desperate need. As the minister is aware, I've been presenting petitions. Today, the latest one we have, I think, is 2,797 petitions. It's not nicknamed Death Highway for no reason at all, especially by those people who work in Fort McMurray.

As the minister said, and I agree, if he can talk to his colleague to the left of him – and I doubt that he's on his left politically – that should be a very high priority with what's going on in Fort McMurray. As the minister talked about, protecting workers means more than just on-the-job protection. If he has any influence at all, that highway should be the highest priority that I can think of in the province because it's a death highway, and it's getting worse. The traffic is worse. I hope I made it in time.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Those were very good comments. There were some questions, but a lot were comments, and I really appreciate that. We'll definitely seriously consider some of your good suggestions.

The first item you mentioned was in relation to the skills investment and the needs of people, the high needs in particular. Right now, in fact, I am definitely looking at that along with the minimum wage. That's one thing we heard last election, that not all Albertans are gaining equally from the Alberta advantage, that we need to look at the AISH, the seniors, the persons that are not expected to work. The rates in those areas: although we increased some of the supports we provided, the dollars really haven't increased; I'll be very honest. The dollars haven't increased for the core benefits and the shelter for those people not expected to work. They haven't increased since '92-93.

Part of the reforms that we made was to tighten up on the system because the budget was $1.7 billion back in '92-93. You know, 97,000 caseloads, 180,000 individuals, and 80 per cent of those people on the system were single people and couples without children that were very healthy and able to work. They were using up the dollars that the high-needs area were to use. What we did when we designed the program was to take those people off through training programs, and we spent hundreds of millions to train people to move them off. It worked successfully.

While we did that, part of the plan was to design a process that would look after all the children in Alberta, which includes some of the individuals you mentioned possibly – you know, the real high-needs area, young people – to move those and create their own ministry with its own budget to deal with children. That has happened now at Children's Services as its own ministry to look after that particular portion.

The other portion that we said was real high needs was persons with developmental disabilities. What we did with that also was to design it so that it could move on with its own ministry. That has happened now. We have a minister in charge of that particular department with a fairly good budget. So parts of the welfare reforms moved those areas. What it allows us to do now, no doubt, with our debt paid off, our budget balanced – we will be able to in the very near future find the dollars that would increase the benefits for those people that are the most needy. I'll be very honest; I've already taken it through the standing policy committee. I've taken it to cabinet and caucus to look at an increase for those rates. As dollars become available, we will no doubt look at the implementation of increased benefits for those people most needy. They are needy. A lot of people still live in poverty. We have a healthy province, balanced budgets, and a lot of program dollars. We should be able to look after those people that are most needy. You know, those were good point you brought up because you hit it right on. That was one priority that I still have: to make sure that we look after.

You mentioned students a bit. Indexation is something we looked at also. Like I said earlier, we'll monitor that very closely through the summer, and if changes need to be made in relation to students, no doubt we'll be seeking your help to get some ideas on how we may improve the benefits for individuals attending postsecondary education and other schools.

Again, injuries on the job. One of the things I've asked the department to look at to work along with other ministries is in relation to how many of the injuries are actually happening at the job site. It may be that many are happening on the road to work and coming back. You know, let's face it: we're all in a hurry. The road network definitely needs to be improved – and I'll get to that very shortly – but we're all in a hurry out there. You know, we drive fast to get to work, come home fast, maybe to go to a second job or something else. We need to start looking at that. I want to make sure that in the near future we define how many of the accidents are actually happening at the work sites and how many are happening away from the work site. Once we define that and identify it, then we'll be able to design a program to target areas where we have the problem. It may mean the improvement of roads in some areas or speed limits in some areas.

The apprenticeship program and the ratios. That's not under my department, but definitely I'll be working very closely with the Minister of Advanced Education and the Minister of Economic Development in relation to some of the thoughts that are out there. You mentioned the ratio of electricians; for an example, how many journeymen do you need for one apprentice? That's out there, and it's being discussed a bit.

The other area, of course, is in relation to weak labour laws and stuff you mentioned. We always have to continue looking at that. I am going to definitely look at the labour code to see where we can improve it to strengthen it for the benefit of Albertans and for the benefit also, of course, of the employers and the staff we have.

The other area mentioned that's very, very important – I don't want to miss that – is in relation to the road network. Our economy is booming in Alberta, and it looks like it may continue like that.

It's a diversified economy. There are thousands of jobs now; there are going to be thousands of jobs in the future for Albertans. But I think we're a bit behind in the road network infrastructure.

You mentioned highway 63. It is critical that that road be improved. The other one, of course, along with that is 881 from Lac La Biche going north. Of course, we're working on that already, but it's not finished. The road to La Loche in Saskatchewan; of course, 813 north of Athabasca through Wabasca and on to Fort McMurray. Already Al-Pac has a road to Chip Lake. Add another hundred kilometres, and you're at the Fort McMurray oil sands, right in the middle of it, so we definitely need to connect those. Of course, another road to Peace River across Red Earth, another one from Fort McMurray to Fort Chip and on to Fort Smith, another one from Peace Point to Fort Vermilion and High Level, and a connector to Fort Nelson.

You definitely need to lay out a plan, I think. As you said, it's not under my jurisdiction, but I'll be working very closely with the minister. I think our government, of course, should look at definitely laying out a five-year plan, a timeline when it should be completed, even prioritize the construction timelines, and commit some dollars. While you're doing that, you're also creating a bottleneck north of Edmonton. There's highway 28, you know, and highway 2, that bypass around Edmonton on the west side, and other connector roads in the Fort Saskatchewan area. We definitely need to do that.

The other one that's important that I think we need to support in the whole transportation sector is the development of airports. I know CNRL is looking at developing an airport so that they can move people back and forth from, say, Edmonton or Calgary or other areas of Canada – so make sure that we hire local people in those jobs.

Again I'd just like to thank you. You know, if there's anything I didn't cover here, we'll do it in writing and pass it on to you. Thank you very much, and thanks for your comments. They're very valuable. You haven't changed in 16 years.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased on this day, when so many people wished to be able to engage in the debate on the Human Resources and Employment budget, that I, in fact, was able to get some speaking time. So thank you, and thank you, as well, to the Official Opposition critic, the Member for Edmonton-Manning.

A couple of things that I would like to raise today, just a discussion about organized labour and what could be done in the labour code, a short discussion on philanthropic foundations and what they're doing on gap funding given that the welfare rates are too low. I'd like to talk a bit about the aboriginal people's access to the workplace. There are some specific issues around female-headed single-parent families, living allowances for learners, which I know other hon. members have already raised, some questions on the pharmacy co-pays for people on welfare. And I think that's it. So that's the list. If I can get through it in 20 minutes, that will be great.

I just wanted to start out by again recognizing the role that organized labour has played in Alberta and, I think, the due that we owe the organized labour movement. It was through them that we got things like public education, and even some credit is due there for public health care. A number of systems and processes that we have come to see as needed and normal came as a result. You know, things like workplace safety codes and occupational health and safety have come about because of the work coming from that movement.

Two of the things that I continue to seek and I encourage the hon. minister to pursue are replacement worker legislation and first-contract certification. Those are the two reasons that we end up with very long-drawn-out and nasty labour disputes in this province. What's there as an incentive for a company to negotiate with its workers when they can bring in replacement workers? There's no incentive for them to sit at the table with their unions. So I think we need replacement worker legislation.

We also most definitely need first-contract certification legislation in that we get unions that are duly formed, that pass all of the hoops and hurdles that they are required to do by law and by legislation, and then they cannot get their employer to sit down and negotiate a first contract with them. That has led to very ugly labour disputes like the Shaw Conference Centre, the Calgary Herald, and Dynamic Furniture, to name a few. I know that that's not likely on the agenda for the government. It probably doesn't match a particular philosophy. Nonetheless, I will continue to urge the government to pursue those two pieces of legislation.

I've been reading a really interesting document, that I know was sent to various government members and ministries, from the Winspear Foundation special fund. It's an analysis of the Winspear Foundation special fund, 1997 to 2003, which was released in the fall of 2004. They raise a number of issues of where their special fund is addressing a funding gap, and they actually provided a fairly detailed sampling of one month's worth of disbursements from the special fund. If the minister does not have a copy, I'm happy to make a copy of mine and send it to him, but I'm sure that the Winspear Foundation would have provided him with a copy.

One of the issues that they're raising specifically is that a single person receiving social assistance, or welfare, or Alberta Works, they're saying in here, was at that time receiving $402 a month, or less than $5,000 a year. It's just not enough. It has not kept pace with cost increases in utility rates, insurance rates, food, transportation, medication, certainly not recreation. That's not even a dim possibility for people on social assistance.

I know that others have talked about the importance of indexing this. I agree, but I just think these rates are shockingly low. What we end up with now are philanthropic foundations, who have, essentially, different guidelines of disbursement of their funds, having to step in and pick up the gap that's been created between government support programs and the workforce. I don't know that it's appropriate for these groups to be doing that. They are doing it, and I think they're trying to flag to us that the government needs to pick up the pace here and pick up the slack.

They also note the difficulties around rent and damage deposits given that the rent structures always require a very high amount of let's call it front-end load. You're going to have to pay your first month's rent and the damage deposit, which is usually equivalent to the rent, and often first and last months' and a damage deposit. That's a lot of money even for people that have a savings account. It's an impossibility for most. They end up, basically, borrowing from Peter to pay Paul, and that eventually gets them into trouble. So they're suggesting that people need access to a payment structure that could be spread out over time, something like a rent bank, for example, where they could borrow money at a minimum rate and be able to pay it back over an extended period of time.

Of course, affordable housing and access to affordable housing is a key component, especially for people on social assistance. In Edmonton-Centre I have a very large stock of older housing and apartment buildings, which tend to be cheaper rent, but there are also issues around utilities because they're not well insulated, older wiring and plumbing and things. Everything doesn't operate as efficiently as it should, and that's reflected in higher utility costs.

Then there is the fact that we are paying 45 per cent more in utility costs than we were a short time ago.

These are all social determinants of health. If we're trying to create a healthier population and keep them out of the health system with acute health problems, this is where it starts. It starts with how much money they earn or they have to spend. It starts with the housing. It starts with education and personal safety.

Speaking specifically about personal safety, there continue to be gaps created for women, especially women with children, who are leaving abusive family situations. I know that the government has tried to address this, but it seems to not be successful. We have women that are trying to flee an abusive situation. That is one example. Two, they're trying to move out of second-stage transitional housing and make that bridge, that leap, to permanent housing somewhere. They end up going home. They go back to an abusive situation because it's just too hard, and they just can't get the money. That seems shocking and incredible to many of us, but that's what happens because they just can't get the money.

So when we're looking at things like – you know, again, the Winspear is suggesting a transition fund for reoccurring costs for people that are trying to start over where they're looking at moving expenses, storage costs, maybe replacement of some basic furniture, rent, utility hookups, and damage deposit. That's important stuff. Right now the Alberta Works program, which used to be welfare, used to be supports for independence – those programs are so narrow in what they cover that this is very difficult to get. I can tell you for sure that you can't get it on a Friday afternoon.

The second area that they have identified, and I've identified it as well, is around funding for learners. What's it called? Living allowance for learners. I notice that there's actually a reduction of almost $2 million in this budget for those living allowances for learners. Now, I often am asked to go and speak to the classes at NorQuest College, and this they consistently raise as an issue: why is such a small amount of money made available to them in subsistence? It isn't even subsistence.

Since we're trying to capitalize on an asset there – that is, people who have likely come here as a refugee or an immigrant, want to contribute to society, and need that bridging and extra education – we make it very, very difficult for them to succeed. All they need is one thing to go wrong, and they're out of the system. All they need is to get sick and miss a couple of days of work, and then they don't have enough money to pay their rent. Then they're out and they're homeless, and there's no way they can continue their studies. It just strikes me as very, very short-sighted not to make that investment up front. That living allowance is too low for those folks, and it needs to be looked at. I just don't understand, and I never will, why this government insists on such a low subsistence rate for people. It is without dignity certainly.

The other issues that were raised by this are not specifically covered by the minister's department, so I'll raise those issues with other departments as they come up, but those were the ones specific to them.

I think it's very interesting that we're getting a special report, and it's not the first time. I've had a couple of conversations with philanthropic foundations recently that are really starting to comment on the lack of support from the government.

I think others have raised and I will underline the importance of those aboriginal peoples who have trade certification being able to get connected to the job, to physically get to the job. Very interesting. We've had a lot of discussions back and forth today about transportation and access to transportation: roads, airports, and planes. You know, this is what I expected the government to do last fall when we had an election. I expected that kind of big-picture thinking about where we were going to go. We've got all this money. How do we make ourselves extraordinary? How do we make Alberta fantastic as compared to just good? This was the kind of big-picture thinking I was expecting, and I'm really disappointed that I didn't see it. We really have done nothing to move ourselves forward in those big pictures.

I have a constituent – and I've tabled letters from him in the Assembly – named Mike Beal. He keeps writing to me about people dying on the roads to Fort McMurray, and he's right. We should not have people dying as they try to get to a good job because the roads are so crappy. I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman. I used that word again. We'll just move right on.

You know, it's not as though this is a new problem. I mean, the oil sands were started – what? – 30 years ago now. It's the same dang road. It's no wider and no better. You know, this is a wealthy province. We should be able to do far, far better on that than we're doing.

The connected issue there is being able to get aboriginal peoples, who, by the way, get trade certification in Canada 20 per cent higher than the general public – very interesting. There's a group of people who really understand the importance of trade certification. They're getting it, and then they can't get to where the jobs are. There's been a lot of discussion about the roads and stuff that are needed, but I think that's the kind of big-picture thinking that we need. There's an issue with remote areas like Sucker Creek or La Loche, places like that, where they can't get out to get connected to the actual jobs.

I'm noticing that from the studies I've been looking at, there has been no improvement and in a number of cases there has been a backward trend for female-headed single-parent families slipping back in poverty. Again, we should be better at this by now. This is not a new game. We should be far ahead of this. If we're going to look at social determinants of health, if we're going to look at a healthier population, if we're going to look at getting people working, you can't look at this stuff in isolation. It is about hooking together all of those things I've mentioned: transportation, housing, utilities, education, the wage that they make, or the assistance level that they get.

Somehow people have got it in their heads that women are okay now. Well, they're 52 per cent of the population. We have an increasing number graduating from high school or from postsecondary education institutions. Everything should be great. Well, it's not. They're still not breaking the glass ceilings. In Alberta the wage gap is further apart than in other provinces, which is even worse, and those in poverty are overwhelmingly women. So, folks on the other side, what does that tell you? You've got a big problem. You're the ones in charge. Let's see the movement on this one because, frankly, I think the rest of those women are going to be voting for us.

There's already been a lot of discussion this afternoon about the fact that the welfare rates are too low, so I will just underline that as a concern for my constituents as well, and I won't repeat the arguments.

I've talked about the living allowances for learners.

One of the things that I would like to raise, and perhaps this has been phased out, but I don't think it has. A few years ago the government gave welfare recipients $5 more a month, and they called it a medication copay allowance. Then they required the pharmacist to charge three prescription copays at $2 each per month. So the patient had to pay out of pocket two bucks on each of these, so $6 a month, and they were given five bucks to cover it. I remember that coming in a few years back, and I thought: I wonder if this ever got dealt with? I don't think it did, but the minister can get back to me on that one.

What tends to happen is that very few of the patients are able to pay or do pay that three prescriptions times $2 each copayment and in many cases use excuses for avoiding the payment. It's an unreasonable burden on the pharmacist, and it subjects the pharmacist to being a bill collector on $2. I mean, this is ridiculous. So I'd like to know if that is still in place, and if it is, I'd like to know when the minister is going to remove it because that is a ridiculous amount. You know, it's another one of those: sounded like a good idea at the time but really doesn't work. Somehow it was supposed to make people value prescriptions more. Well, it didn't, so get rid of it.

I just want to loop back again to the last statements on division 8 and the bringing in of labour. You know, I come from a family of hard-working tradespeople. I believe very strongly that it should be Alberta first and then Canada, and I see no reason to be subjecting another country's disadvantaged people to be brought in here to somehow do slave labour and be sent back home. I don't think it's to their advantage, and it's not to our advantage. It should be Alberta first, followed by Canada first. We have enough skilled labourers here, union members, to do the work. I hear the minister saying that this is complicated. Yeah, life is complicated, but there's also a commitment to Alberta workers that I am not seeing come from this government.

I didn't give the minister many questions to answer. I mostly gave him comments. Sorry about that. Oh, I'm sorry. There are a few questions.

The budget has been reduced for people who are in need of assistance but remain capable and willing to work. I'm wondering if the welfare rate in the budget was a volume decrease to have fewer people asking for the programs, or are you paying out less money to each of those people? I'd like to know on the record why there was a reduction in the living allowance for learners. Again, are there fewer people asking for it, so it's a volume decrease, or is it a benefit decrease? Which of those? There has also been a reduction in the spending for freedom of information and privacy – why? – and a reduction for the Youth Connections career information program. So all of those had reductions, and I'd like to know why each of them had the reduction, please.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to get those questions on the record. I'll take my seat.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd just like to thank the member for all those comments and all those valuable recommendations she's made. I'll definitely, seriously have a look at those recommendations. Also, I wouldn't mind to get a copy of that report. I don't know if I have it. I haven't seen it yet. I'd like to get a copy of it so I can have a look at it.

A couple of pieces of legislation were talked about: replacement worker legislation and first-contract certification legislation. I'll let the department also have a look at that and respond.

Generally, the comments, again, were based on, I think, what we heard out there last election, that not all Albertans are gaining equally from the Alberta advantage and that we needed to look at the high-needs area. That, of course, includes persons with developmental disabilities, people on AISH, the seniors, the people that are not expected to work. That is why we started working on, for example, changing the minimum wage and reviewing the welfare which we do provide for those people that can't work or are not expected to work, although that particular caseload now is so far down compared to what it was in '92-93. We're down to under 28,000 total. Only half of those are expected to work. The other half are not for various reasons. But the half that is not expected to work no doubt will have to look at more supports in the existing supports we have.

At the same time, as we move forward in redesigning, you know, some of the benefits we provide, especially for those people that are expected to work, we need to make sure that the benefits provided in B.C. and Saskatchewan are comparable to what we have here in Alberta because people do move from jurisdiction to jurisdiction to access supports. If you design your program to accommodate that – and as a government the last thing we want to do is to design a system that will encourage people to come to Alberta, especially if they're not interested in working. I feel personally, and I think our government is in the same position, that the way to deal with poverty is, number one, to have a government that creates the environment for industry, private industry in particular, to create the jobs and the wealth – and I think that's happened here in Alberta – but at the same time give people, you know, the transition supports people need.

You know, the hon. member mentioned a number of areas, a lot of areas in fact, that need support. It goes into other departments also, but that's fine. They're very, very important issues. We want to make sure that people are offered the training they need, that people are provided with the jobs and the supports that are necessary, and continue their health care benefits while they transition to independence, self-sufficiency.

In the years that I worked in this field and in government and in private industry before, I don't know of anyone that wanted to be on social support systems or welfare. I don't know of anyone. I don't. No one wants to be on it. There are so many people that continue to remain on social support systems because of various reasons. And we need as a government, now that our budget is balanced and we have money to work with and the time I believe to deal with these high-needs areas – definitely I think we should continue working. I take your recommendations very seriously because they are important issues that, no doubt, you've identified through your work and your contacts. So I'd like to thank you for that.

The other area you mentioned towards the end, of course, was Youth Connections, that there was a reduction in the dollars. What happened there is that we can't provide the services that are needed out there right now. What's happening with the youth is that there are so many jobs out there, and they're accessing jobs directly, without coming through the processes we have in place. Or not as many.

The technical schools out there, the colleges are experiencing the same problems. There is a decline, and you'll see why there's some decline in allowances. There is a decline in the number of people entering the technical schools because people are going directly to work. That's, I guess, positive in a way. In the long run it may be negative. So we need to monitor that very closely and try and make sure that the changes that take place accommodate that process.

First Nations. Definitely a very important area. It definitely should be a priority for all of us in this province and in Canada to make sure that people do not continue to live in poverty because it creates a whole lot of other problems. I think we need to work with the federal government also and municipalities and jurisdictions across Canada to look at changing some of the socioeconomic policies that the federal government has. It can be done. We've proven in Alberta that we can work towards getting more people into the workforce, moving the dollars we save to high-needs areas, and we need to continue doing that. There's no reason why we can't do that across Canada because none of the First Nations that I know want to be on welfare. None of the chiefs want their people to be on welfare. So it is a priority. Again, we'll need your help in that particular area.

With that, I'll get my staff to have a look at Hansard and seriously, seriously look at the recommendations the opposition has made here today, and we'll see how much of it we can implement because we do realize, too, that there are people with high needs.

Again, I'd just like to say thank you very much, and thank you for giving me the time to present the budget.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to participate in this budget debate of Human Resources and Employment. I would love to add some more questions.

I'll start with the long-standing contentious claims, which are a huge burden on many, many Alberta families. When is the government going to direct the WCB to begin a process to at least start a review of long-standing contentious claims? Even a couple of panels with two private-sector qualified individuals and two WCB or Appeals Commission personnel could begin to make a difference. They could randomly select cases and begin to work through these contentious claims: a yes or a no to many, many claimants with reasons why they would either properly compensate them or give them closure in knowing why their claim might have no merit. This process would at least present some hope for those with long-standing, contentious claims.

Mr. Chairman, I want to talk about some other issues. On page 295, under Significant Opportunities and Challenges, Alberta is expected to enjoy continued economic growth, low unemployment, high labour force participation rates, and high workforce productivity. Strong economic growth leads to labour shortages and skills deficits, wage demands and more pressure on the workplace. Other factors such as the value of the Canadian dollar . . . (BSE), U.S. protectionism and offshoring of jobs could result in the need for labour market adjustments and supports for transitions in some industries. The social fabric of Alberta is changing [no doubt about this]. The fast-growing population is aging and becoming more ethnically diverse with increased immigration. Despite the prosperity enjoyed by most Albertans, there are still people with incomes below the Market Basket Measure low-income threshold. There continues to be a need for greater labour force participation by groups under-represented in the workforce such as Aboriginal people and persons with disabilities. Also, the Government of Alberta continues to emphasize making government more efficient and effective and is striving to ensure the long-term sustainability of its programs and services . . . “The Alberta public service is respected for its attitudes, knowledge and skills, its effective management of public policy and its dedication to achieving quality, affordable services for [all] Albertans.” Achieving this vision within a competitive labour market with changing demographic and economic trends presents challenges for human resource management.

Mr. Chairman, the next issue I want to discuss is the Alberta Labour Relations Board.

The Alberta labour relations field is a dynamic one that responds to changes in the economy, demographics, technology and other factors. The Board must respond to these changes while maintaining the underlying principles of Alberta's labour relations legislation.

Specifically, the Board is currently meeting the challenges created by the Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, providing mediation and adjudication services for the affected parties as they deal with the transition from seventeen Regional Health Authorities to nine.

I have some general questions to ask the hon. minister. Why has the government reduced its commitment to youth seeking employment? [interjection] You already asked? Okay.

How will the new funds for immigrant support services benefit new immigrants to Alberta? Would you please share that with us if you have the time today, or maybe next time you can give it to us in writing. Other than wage increases what programs, services, or purchases will be made with the increase to corporate human resource services? I think it's $1.57 million. What new or existing research and development projects require the R and D spending to increase by $2.2 million?

In the budget, Mr. Chairman, this government has clearly abandoned people who are capable and willing to work but still require government assistance. This government has its priorities misplaced by not investing in people who are learning and students in general who are seeking new or better employment opportunities.

So these are the few questions I wanted to ask you. If you have the answers today, please, or otherwise give them to us in writing whenever you have the time.

The Chair: After considering the business plan and the proposed estimates for the Department of Human Resources and Employment for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:
Expense and Equipment / Inventory Purchases $778,691,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

I will call on the Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that the committee rise and report the vote for Human Resources and Employment and seek leave to meet again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, for the following department.

Human Resources and Employment: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $778,691,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? Carried.

Before I call on the hon. Deputy Government House Leader, there are two things I'd like to remind the Assembly of: first of all, a memo to clear off your desktops for the weekend and, secondly, the Speaker's ruling in a memo of February 28, 2005, that speaks to the prohibition of cellphones, cameras, and pagers. They are prohibited in this Assembly. You can expect that the chair will be enforcing that in the future.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn until Monday at 1:30 in the afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 5:16 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What a delight it is today to welcome two classes from Strathcona Christian Academy. They are accompanied by their teachers, Alan Foster and Gord Robideau, parent helpers Mr. Wade Marke, Mrs. Deeann Knott, Mrs. Bauman, Tonya Shurvell, Heather Eifler, and Gange Morgan, with apologies on that pronunciation. Would they please rise and receive the warm welcome of all of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly a group of 26 grade 6 students from Rimbe elementary school. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Garland, Mrs. McNaught as a teacher aide, and some parent helpers, Mrs. Service, Mrs. Braat, Mrs. Nawrot, Mrs. Vandenhoven, and Mrs. Adam. These are great kids from Rimbe. I was talking to some of them a while ago, and some of these kids actually went to Europe last winter and played hockey there and came home with a silver medal, so congratulations to them. I'd like to ask them to rise in the members' gallery and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some very special people. In particular, our staff are very special to us, but the mothers of staff are even more special to us. Today I'd like to introduce – and I'll ask her to rise – Ms Valerie Kincade, who is the mother to David Kincade, one of the researchers with the Liberal caucus. She is a risk management consultant at the Atlantic Health Science Corporation in Saint John, New Brunswick. She's here today with her daughter, David's sister I think, Mrs. Kendra Johnson. I'd ask her to please rise. Mrs. Johnson is employed as an air traffic controller with Nav Canada at the Edmonton International Airport as well as being the mom of four kids. They've both risen, and I would ask the Assembly to please give them a warm welcome.

My second introduction today, Mr. Speaker: more special people. These are staff in my office. Today we have joining my staff Cheryl Williams. She is going to be the summer student in my office from now until the end of August. She's just completing her second year of a bachelor of arts degree in anthropology, so she can study how humans behave in a constituency office all summer long. Thank you very much and welcome. With her is Jane Wisener. Jane is from the Maritimes, but we got her to come out here. She ran a very successful campaign during the last provincial election and gave us my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, and I thank you for that, Jane. She is now the constituency manager for Edmonton-Centre. I would ask you all to welcome them, please.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce a guest in the public gallery. This man has recently moved to Drayton Valley from the great city of Montreal. Currently in Drayton Valley he is one of our reporters for the weekly paper there, the Western Review, so he's going to give me lots of good stories after today. I'd ask John Michael to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Tony Clark. Tony is currently the sessional research assistant with the NDP caucus. Tony is a dedicated and hard-working member of our group. As a rough-and-tumble rugby player no one messes with him. I'd like to ask him to rise and receive the very warm welcome of the Assembly today.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly a young student who's just back from completing her second year at Western. The daughter of my communications director, Michael Shields, Sarah Shields is with us today, and I'd ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very talented and dynamic young lady from Lloydminster. Miss Kierstin Smyth has already packed a lifetime of accomplishment into her few short years: she's a swimming coach; she's a music instructor; she's majoring in the faculty of arts, political science and history; she's a Rutherford scholarship winner; amongst many, many others. She's here today with Bart West and Aleksandra Nowacka. She's doing a summer internship with ATCO with regard to government relations. I would ask that all three rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Securities Commission

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every day the efforts of the Alberta Securities Commission to prevent a proper investigation into its operation grow more desperate. We now have a situation in which the ASC is placing unacceptable conditions on a proposed systems audit by the Auditor General. It is making many people wonder what there is to hide there and is increasing the calls for a public inquiry. To the Minister of Finance: in other situations does the office of the Auditor General normally have completely unfettered access to files and people when they do their audits such as, for example, of government departments?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker. I know that the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition is referring to a series of audit letters that have gone back and forth between the Alberta Securities Commission and the office of the Auditor General. The Auditor General will audit the processes and systems at the Alberta Securities Commission, and we will await his results.

Dr. Taft: I'll try the question again, Mr. Speaker. In other situations does the office of the Auditor General normally have completely unfettered access to files and people when they do their audits, for example of government departments?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I think that question is more properly placed to the office of the Auditor General. However, I can tell the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition that in all departments that I have been minister responsible for over the period of the last 17 years, the Auditor General has had full access and complete co-operation.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, if the minister is so determined to have the Auditor General investigate the ASC, has she asked the part-time commissioners to ask Mr. Linder to exercise his authority within the Securities Act and allow the Auditor General access to enforcement files?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, as I understand from the references that I've received from the passing back and forth of audit letters, the Auditor General will deliver an audit letter to the Alberta Securities Commission tomorrow, and they will begin their audit.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thirty-five employees of the Alberta Securities Commission have sent a letter to the Minister of Finance stating that they are afraid that, quote, the continued deterioration of the work environment will negatively impact the future of the organization and the health of the Alberta capital markets, end quote. These employees say that in light of the dismissal of the director of administrative services they feel too intimidated to speak to consultants investigating problems at the commission, but all 35 will make their names available to the minister if she agrees to keep their names confidential. Again to the Minister of Finance: what information concerning interference with enforcement cases in the Alberta Securities Commission does the minister now have in her possession?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure if the hon. Leader of the Opposition is referring to the letter that, as I indicated in the House, I received last week. It does state: Dear Minister McClellan, We, the blank – then written in handwriting is 35 employees. They did say in the final paragraph of the letter that they had spoken to a few of the above – I assume that that's the 35 – and that they were willing to bring their names forward. They felt certain that many others would, if approached, as long as they were guaranteed confidentiality.

Mr. Speaker, I have said repeatedly – in fact, I think I'm the one that stands in this House day after day and supports their request for confidentiality and anonymity. However, Mr. Speaker, other than speaking here today, I can't convey that to the employees because not even one signature was there for me to reply to. So I have said that if they wish to provide their names to me, I will hold them in confidence and then approach their concerns, those that are specific, with the commission.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What information concerning interference with enforcement cases at the Alberta Securities Commission does the minister now have in her possession?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have references in that letter. Most of the information in that letter – and I think it was published on the front page of the National Post, so I don't think it's a secret – is around human resource or employment or workplace issues, but there were references to the regulatory side. In my recollection, I have a letter from one of the previous employees who worked in the enforcement division. I have a letter, which I think has also been made public, from another previous employee in the same area.

What is difficult is that they refer to things that they didn't agree with on the regulatory side, but they are not very specific. It's very difficult to deal with something when they do not give you a specific example or case. So that's two. I've had probably three or four letters that I've seen to date from the public inquiring about this as well as a letter from I think you'd call this lady an advocate from eastern Canada and two offers of help from consultants that work in this industry in eastern Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We need to get to the bottom of this, so when will the Minister of Finance do the right thing and call a full public inquiry into the controversy at the Alberta Securities Commission?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have complete confidence in the Auditor General of the province of Alberta. Absolute confidence. The Auditor General will do his audit of the Alberta Securities Commission. He has agreed to bring on some extra people to give this a priority and to bring the results to us just as quickly as he possibly can.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Enron Activities in Alberta

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A detailed examination of the Project Stanley scheme here in Alberta written by Mr.

Seabron Adamson, Enron's hired consultant, estimates that the cost to power consumers due to Project Stanley was $45 million in one single day. To the Premier: has the government on behalf of power consumers asked for a refund of the more than $45 million that Enron's Project Stanley cost the Alberta Power Pool in one single day?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, not to my knowledge, but I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The $45 million does not take into account the legislated hedges. I've said over and over again that Albertans were protected, that that money would have gone back into the Power Pool, and that anything that was above a certain capped rate that any of the generators could have had prior to the power purchase arrangements being sold – they were protected. There was no way in which $45 million could have benefited at all Enron.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Energy: has anyone from the Department of Energy or the market surveillance administrator's office on behalf of power consumers interviewed Mr. Seabron Adamson, the author of this report? Have you talked to the author?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, there was an extrapolation in that report of $45 million. It's correct in that, but it failed to take into account the legislated hedges that would have seen that all of those monies that were above the capped amounts at that stage would have gone back to consumers. It was put in place to protect consumers. It was put in place while there was an introduction and transition to deregulation, getting accustomed to the new rules. If there was any volatility of that kind in the marketplace, consumers would be protected.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that the Frontier Economics report was available on the U.S. Federal Energy Regulatory Commission's website since April of 2003, when did the Alberta Department of Energy or the market regulators first review this document?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, we're talking some time ago. I don't have the specific date. I am fully aware that this has been known and has been reviewed, and in that case, to ensure that Albertans were protected, the market surveillance administrator did look at this. They did examine it and ensure that Albertans have been protected.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Health Care Privatization

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. During February my NDP opposition colleagues and I travelled around the province to hear first-hand Albertans' concerns and solutions for our health care system. Albertans told us that they want a more comprehensive system where public funding covers not only hospitals and doctors but, eventually, needed drugs, home care, and long-term care.

Albertans told us that they wanted a stronger public system rather than endless experimentation with delisting, user-pay, and privatization schemes that cost more and deliver less. My question is to the Premier. Why won't the Premier admit that the reason that he keeps pushing the failed privatization agenda is to enable private health care corporations to pick the pockets of taxpayers and not because it will do anything to fix health care or give Albertans the health system they want and deserve?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. The health care symposium is not about private, for-profit health care. It's about looking at what exists in other jurisdictions and finding out what works and what doesn't work and discarding those things that don't work and considering those things that do work. There is nothing wrong with that. As a matter of fact, I think it's an extremely good initiative, something that has never been done before in this province. The ultimate goal, of course, is to achieve sustainability in the health care system so that it's there for you and me when we need it.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, if the objective is to eliminate those things that don't work, will the Premier then cancel the provision of joint replacement and cataract surgery in private clinics in Calgary, which cost more and have longer waiting lists?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know that to be true. I do know that it has taken tremendous pressure off the public system. It simply makes sense. It simply makes sense that if you can go someplace else, you don't go to the public system. It involves simple mathematics. You know, the more people who don't go to the public system, the less pressure there will be on the public system. It makes sense. It's mathematically correct.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, math has never been the Premier's strong suit.

If in fact it costs more and provides longer waiting lists and if there is no public option in Calgary, why is it preferred to do it through private delivery, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it's poppycock what he talks about. You know, if he can't understand me and very, very simple arithmetic, maybe he can understand the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the time that the Calgary health authority signed a contract with HRC for hip and joint replacement, it added an extra capacity to treat 500 people who had considerable pain and suffering while they waited on long lists. It's true that we still have a lot of people on this, 4,800 at last count last week, but we are making a difference. The new process with the arthroplasty and the work that we're doing in the three clinics across Alberta: we'll continue that. We are enhancing the service; we're not detracting from the service.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Natural Gas Rebates

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the past few years this government has recognized the extra expense to Albertans coming from the increased cost of natural gas. Though we understand that we live in a world where energy prices are dictated by commodity markets, it's nevertheless made Albertans rather fearful to open their gas bills every month, especially in the wintertime. Albertans are also grateful for the natural gas rebate, which has been in effect for these past few years, but it's due to end early in 2006. Greenhouse operators are especially concerned in order to plan for their future. My question today is to the Minister of Energy. Does the minister intend to renew this rebate?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The natural gas rebate program was put in over a three-year period, and he's correct in mentioning that it's scheduled to end in the spring of 2006. As part of that, there was a commitment that we would undertake a review of that. Our department has already begun some initial review of that program, and that will likely be completed later this year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: would the minister agree to extending the rebate indefinitely and making it for a full 12 months rather than for just five months?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, while I would like to emphasize that Albertans have benefited tremendously by this – over half a billion dollars have been given to Albertans in a time of high prices of natural gas, when we received the royalties, to see that Albertans benefited from their Alberta energy advantage – I would say that it's a little premature at this stage to say whether that program would be indefinitely continued. That's part of the review process that we're undertaking.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: if the outcome of the review were to suggest not extending or renewing this rebate, will he then consider a rebate for those rural users such as greenhouses, exotic oil processors, and irrigators, some of whose bills are in excess of $30,000 per month and some of whom may not qualify for any rebate?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to highlight in light of those commercial greenhouse operators, forage dehydrators, grain dryers, agriculture irrigators that the program was actually modified to see that they could accommodate their months of highest usage. They could choose any five months in the year where they had the highest usage and apply for the rebate on those months. They can yet have through to June of this year to apply for that if they have missed it for the 2004-05 year, and we would encourage them to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Midwifery Services

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thursday, May 5, marks the International Day of the Midwife, but midwives in Alberta are finding it increasingly difficult to operate because of a lack of recognition and funding. In 1997 money was put toward developing the integration of midwifery services evaluation project, and since then the entire midwifery community has been anxiously awaiting a decision. My questions today are all to the Minister of Health and Wellness. When will the integration of midwifery services evaluation project report, now eight years old, be released publicly?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, although I cannot tell the hon. member opposite when the report will be released publicly, I can assure you that there is still work being done relative to the Health Professions Act relative to the integration of service delivery by other health professionals and disciplines. We have been paying attention to what the midwives have been saying, that they can work with us, and with the inception of primary care I look forward to the day when even more service involvement can happen because of the involvement of midwives.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister: will the minister restore the position of consumer representative back to the Midwifery Health Disciplines Committee?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I have been looking at a number of the committees that have been providing advice and support in the health care delivery system. I have not yet made a decision relative to that, but I would welcome the hon. member to provide me a briefing on how she believes that that would be an important addition to the committee.

Ms Blakeman: Happy to, Madam Minister.

The third question to the same minister: given that midwife-attended home births cost the system $2,800 compared to a $4,100 price tag for a hospital delivery, when will the government instigate reforms for a sustainable health care system and include midwifery services under health care coverage?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly it's an important distinction the hon. member has made, but quality health care isn't all about examining the bottom line. Quality health care is about engaging in those practices that deliver the health care, as it should be, to people who are in need of it. The hon. member has pointed out the cost-effectiveness of midwives. We've had some conversation between the other partners – the physicians, family practitioners, and others – and I know that midwives anxiously await the results of that. When we're ready, we will provide further information to the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Health Symposium

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Health care is a great concern for my constituents as well as for Albertans and Canadians at large. My constituents worry about access to and quality of health care. They also worry about the increase in public spending on health care and the cost to themselves. Given that tomorrow there is a symposium in Calgary with international experts, my first question is to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister explain why the government is hosting this symposium?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the most important reason is that in Canada we rank third out of the OECD countries on the amount of money we're spending. Alberta has consistently been one of the biggest spenders in health care.

However, in terms of performance, Mr. Speaker, while we have an amazing health care system, a wonderful, publicly funded health care system, we only rank about middle of the pack in performance. We believe that the opportunity to listen to 27 speakers from nine countries will enhance not only the regional health authorities' understanding of some of the best practices elsewhere, but we'll all learn from that exchange of ideas and information.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

2:00

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the subject of health care is heavily politicized and my constituents have been confused by political campaigns, my straight-to-the-point question is to the same minister. Will the symposium lead to increased privatization in Alberta?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I know that our critics would like to say that we're challenging the Canada Health Act. We believe that it's about improving quality. It's about improving access. It's about improving patient care. It's not about challenging the Canada Health Act. It's about doing the right thing for Albertans so that they continue to support a system that they know is better than in most places anywhere in the world.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Centralized Teacher Bargaining

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government tends to centralize power, which has consistently hurt the ability of local authorities to carry out their mandates. Local school boards are charged with bargaining but have been stripped of their ability to raise money, and the province hasn't always funded the local settlements. Some school boards are now supporting a move to centralized bargaining despite considerable evidence that such schemes don't work. My question is to the Minister of Education. Is the minister prepared to implement this centralized bargaining model despite the fact that it is opposed by teachers and close to half of the school boards across this province?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I suspect that the hon. member is referencing recommendation 81(a) as it appears in the Alberta Commission on Learning report, which called for a province-wide or provincial bargaining association to be established. Now, that particular motion went forward. It was supported by the Alberta School Boards Association membership, and I expect to receive a copy of it any day so that I can review it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What specific evidence does the minister have that centralized bargaining will produce more productive labour relations or superior educational outcomes for communities than local bargaining? What evidence does he have?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think that the Alberta Commission on Learning did an incredible job with an enormous amount of in-depth study and review of best practices and various types of bargaining models before they made that recommendation. I'm sure that if the member wishes, we might be able to find some of that information for him. The fact is that they brought forward the recommendation because they perceived there to be an imbalance between the way the ATA, the Alberta Teachers' Association, was able to negotiate versus the way individual boards were able to negotiate.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister considering moving educational decision-making even further away from the local level by eliminating elected school boards and appointing regional boards across this province?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think the key word is, obviously, "local," and this was a decision made by those locals on the weekend. As soon as I have a chance to review it with the Alberta School Boards Association and perhaps other education stakeholders, that will be a time, then, to give an appropriate answer to those kinds of questions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Maybe we can learn more about this issue. Alberta's Commission on Learning made 95 recommendations to the provincial government. A lot of progress has been made on the 86 accepted recommendations, but some are still under review. Recommendation 81, for example, called for a legislated employer bargaining model, but some people are concerned that a provincial employer bargaining association might weaken local relationships between school boards and local ATA members. My question to the Minister of Education: can the minister explain the true purpose of recommendation 81 and why it has been delayed?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, recommendation 81(a) sought to correct what the Alberta Commission on Learning saw as an imbalance between a very powerful and highly structured Alberta Teachers' Association in comparison with a loosely knit group of local school boards. Those were words that the Alberta Commission on Learning used or words to that effect. It's proven to be a very sensitive issue. At the time that it was brought forward to the government, the government said that this would require further review and study, so it went to the Alberta School Boards Association. They did a review. They did a study. They did a preliminary vote in November of 2004. That vote said: go ahead and find a model and bring it back. That model took time to develop, and that really is part of what the delay has been about.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How will the outcome of this weekend's vote by the Alberta School Boards Association affect local bargaining?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, if government were to accept what the local school boards accepted this past weekend, it would really mean that local bargaining would become centralized bargaining, and you would have a parity of models. What the ATA currently has, the Alberta School Boards Association would then have, so essentially that's what would happen.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question: can the minister tell us what the next steps are to address the results of the ASBA vote?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I believe I have a meeting already set with the chairperson of the Alberta School Boards Association. The purpose of that meeting is for me to first of all receive a copy of this new model, which responds to recommendation 81(a), and at the same time have an opportunity to chat about it and review it in more detail, discuss it, and at the same time, too, to meet with other stakeholders. I understand that the Alberta Teachers' Association have also contacted my office, and they want a meeting, so I'll meet with them as well.

I think, Mr. Speaker, it's important to also note that there was a second vote that was taken, and that one has to be looked at in tandem with 81(a). It's generally referred to as 81(c), and in a nutshell that particular vote was with respect to what can and cannot be bargained for should a centralized unit in fact come into place. So things like pupil-teacher ratios, classroom size, minutes of instruction would all be put on the table.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Gang Violence

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Early Sunday morning the community of Mill Woods once again was jolted by the sounds of gunfire. This incident caused yet another fatality, the third in the past two weeks. Even when such events are targeted and not random, residents of my constituency are extremely concerned that the next bullet may hit them or their children. My question is to the Solicitor General. What is the Solicitor General doing to facilitate antigang activity by the various municipal police services?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It was indeed a tragic incident that occurred this weekend, where the life of a 19 year old was taken. Again, the Edmonton Police Service homicide unit and the gang unit are investigating. There are highly skilled and trained officers that are investigating this incident.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the larger question is the drugs that are involved in 98 per cent of these cases. It's just shown that it took the life of a 19-year-old boy. Our condolences are, obviously, with the family of this young man.

Mr. Speaker, gangs are a breeding ground for organized crime. This government has supported the Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta as well as the integrated response to organized crime by providing funding for them each year. As well, these officers that belong to these units work with the Edmonton Police Service, the RCMP, and the Calgary Police Service. They do have the skills to investigate this, and they, obviously, are at this present time.

Mrs. Mather: To the same minister: given that more constables on the street are the most effective way to fight crime, will the minister commit to providing additional funding to major urban police services to hire more new officers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Solicitor General did provide the Edmonton Police Service with $10 million in municipal policing grant funding this year, that they can use towards whatever they feel is necessary for their police service budget. We've increased the amount of funding by $6 million, from $37 million to $43 million, for municipal police grants this year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. Again to the same minister: can the Solicitor General tell us what types of preventative strategies are being developed to help keep our kids from being drawn into the gang lifestyle?

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of programs throughout the province. They do vary by school board in conjunction with the school resource officer; that is, a police officer that works in the community. A number of those programs are done by the local police service, whether it's a municipal service or the RCMP. In fact, some special constables that are hired by the municipalities are as well providing instructional and prevention programs to school classes from grade 7 to grade 12. Some of those programs include DARE. Some include some other projects.

2:10

As well, Mr. Speaker, the school resource officers that are in our high schools and in our junior highs are a tremendous resource for school boards and for those schools to utilize to speak to the kids, to let them know that drugs and their involvement in drugs are, obviously, a criminal activity. They do see the bigger picture in the fact that a number of young lives have been taken throughout Alberta in the last few months.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Finance minister is not exactly showing stellar leadership when it comes to the Alberta Securities Commission. One day the minister vows to protect whistle-blowers, only to be sandbagged by the ASC commissioners, who fire the director of administrative services while he's on medical leave. Then the ASC hires a forensic auditor to try to catch other whistle-blowers. Finally, the ASC refuses to co-operate with the Auditor General's investigation called by this minister. My question to the Minister of Finance is simply this. When will the minister have had enough of the senior brass at the Securities Commission thumbing its collective nose at her and the province's Auditor General, and when will she take decisive action to put a stop to it?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated in an earlier answer, the Auditor General and the Alberta Securities Commission have been exchanging letters of audit and responses to letters of audit. This is not uncommon. What is uncommon is that we trade them and exchange them in the press. Because of the interest in this, a lot of that is happening right now. Any government department that has been audited by the Auditor General's office would probably exchange a letter of audit, or we'd get a letter of audit and respond to it.

Mr. Speaker, I made it very clear in my earlier answer that the Auditor General, subsequent to their discussion last week, is submitting a letter to the Alberta Securities Commission tomorrow, Tuesday, on the audit. The Auditor General will conduct his audit of the Alberta Securities Commission. Under the act that is in this Legislature, the Auditor General has the power and the authority to conduct that audit, and he will do it.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, on the question of letters of audit and audit letters going, it seems to us, the public, that the Auditor General should have every right to go in and do the audit, as the minister wants. What is the holdup?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it's not a holdup. I mean, this is I think moving along quite quickly. They had discussions last week, exchanged letters, and on Tuesday – that's the Auditor General's time frame, not mine. I think that in view of all of the activities that the Auditor General has, he's moving this along quite expeditiously.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Securities Commission operates under statute, and if any of the members wish to read those statutes, they would understand their obligations. I think the Alberta Securities Commission understands their obligations. I don't think that the minister has to direct them or call them or let them know how to interpret their legislation. Certainly, I have every confidence that the Auditor General understands his power and authority, and he will carry that out.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, to the minister: does it not seem passing strange to this minister that the Auditor General, who, we said, is a top officer of this Legislature, has to go hat in hand to the Securities Commission before they'll offer him the right to do what he's supposed to do?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, that speaks to maybe the naïveté of the member, or maybe he just doesn't understand that in any audit process it is an accepted procedure that you have an audit letter, or a letter of audit. It outlines the parameters of your audit and prepares whoever you're auditing for to have the material available to you. That is done in every audit that I've been involved with, in any department that I've had responsibilities for. That is a common practice. What is not common is that we share them with the press.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

SuperNet

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. [interjections] Yes, this man right here. In February the minister announced a completion plan for the Alberta SuperNet. We were told that rural communities would be able to connect to Internet service providers by April 30. That date has come and gone. Have we hit the mark, or is the SuperNet schedule still falling behind?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We reached a very significant milestone on Friday afternoon. Our completion plan definitely hit the mark. I'm pleased to report that 421 of 429 communities are now ready to connect Internet service providers via the Alberta SuperNet. We have eight more rural communities to go, and we're working closely with each community to jointly address SuperNet construction needs as quickly as we possibly can.

I'm proud of the work that we've done with Bell and Axia and with the efforts over the last two months that they did to make this happen. The rewards are clear. We're able to bring high-speed to all rural communities. What a huge milestone to meet and in our centennial year. It's great to live in Alberta, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Webber: Again to the same minister: I'm wondering why there are eight remaining communities still not hooked up. When can we expect to be able to take advantage of the SuperNet?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, at this point we only have eight more points of presence to go, and we did not schedule these sites for April completion because we knew that there were challenges in a few different areas of the province. Throughout the SuperNet's project it's been a joint effort with each individual community, and there are local construction needs to consider. The remaining sites will be completed between now and September 30. That's the date we announced that the whole network would be complete.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Webber: Thank you. Again to the same minister: can he tell us what the next step is toward full SuperNet completion?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sometimes breaking large projects into smaller phases means that we can make a better tracking process, and we can track it better. We did that in February when we announced that we would be completing in three different phases. We hit our first target, and now nearly 400 – 400 – rural SuperNet communities are ready to connect to service providers. The next milestone is June 30, when the majority of our facilities will be connected. In February when we made this announcement, we had less than 500 connected, and today we have over a thousand connected. That's significant progress.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. AISH clients have recently received news that the long-overdue increase to AISH payments will be implemented by this government. The 5 per cent of AISH clients who live in assisted care facilities have not been so fortunate. Albertans with disabilities so severe that they require daily living assistance in a care facility are provided with room and board, which is paid to the institution, and a measly personal living allowance of $175 a month. My question is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Why are the AISH benefits increases not being implemented for all AISH recipients, including those in the assisted care facilities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member indicated, we do have a specialized program within AISH, which is known as the modified AISH program. It is for about 2 per cent of Albertans, which is approximately 800 Albertans of low income that have a severe disability. Those people reside usually in a long-term care setting that can provide the type of assistance that they do need, but some are moving to designated assisted living, which is a bit of a lower level of medical care. The amount of funding that is available for people with modified AISH is based on a per diem set through Health and Wellness of $42 per day, which is a little over $1,200, and that includes, then, accommodation, meals, laundry, health care needs, prescription drug costs, et cetera. Quite a wide range. Also, they do receive, as the member indicated, $175 per month for their personal care needs.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. To the same minister: does this government consider the needs of assisted living care clients to be less than those who are able to live independently?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, not at all. In fact, I'm surprised the hon. member asked that question. As I said, this is a very specialized program for people with a severe disability that reside in long-term care centres, and in fact the amount of funding that they receive is above the basic AISH program. With the basic AISH program, as you know, we've recently increased the benefit to $950 immediately and a thousand dollars by the end of the year, but the AISH client that the member is speaking of is a client who receives a benefit of almost $1,400 a month for all of that listing that I had described regarding health care needs and whatnot and who also receives a benefit of $175 per month.

Ms Pastoor: Again to the same minister: will this government review the level of funding it provides to disabled Albertans living in care facilities?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, yes, I'm pleased to answer that as well, Mr. Speaker. That's in keeping with recommendation 11 in the AISH review report. The chair of the AISH review, the Member for Strathcona, who is also the chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities, has been meeting with staff in the department. Part of that will be the modified AISH benefit. I think you're asking the question about the $175 benefit, and that is being reviewed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Regulatory Reform

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business has recently praised British Columbia's efforts at cutting red tape and reducing regulations. My question is to the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. While Alberta is known as one of the most effective and efficient governments in Canada, might there be a need to follow in the footsteps of British Columbia?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I certainly don't mind giving credit where credit is due. The B.C. government is well on their way to regulatory reform, and I believe that they could have a good model for success. I don't think we have to reinvent the wheel here. I think we can look at other places where there's success. In fact, I plan on and I've been trying to get some meetings with them, and I think I'll be meeting with some of the people from B.C. that brought this in as soon as their election is over and when our House comes out of sitting.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: with Alberta's new regulatory review initiative will this focus on the number of regulations we have in place or the cost of enforcing those regulations?

Mr. Ouellette: We're in the midst of defining our regulatory secretariat's mandate and where the focus should be, Mr. Speaker, but I would expect that it will encompass both the number of regulations and the cost of those remaining regulations.

Interestingly enough, I was in Washington, DC, last week where I discovered, among many other things, that the Gettysburg address has 266 words. There are 1,322 words in the Declaration of Independence. Even the Lord's Prayer has 66 words. Yet I'm told that one state's regulation on the sale of cabbage totalled 26,000 words.

Of course, the need for regulatory reform is not confined to south of the border, Mr. Speaker. We will forge ahead with regulatory review and cutting red tape and streamlining services to benefit all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will this new initiative on regulatory review be a one-time-only initiative, or do you envision it to be an ongoing effort?

Mr. Ouellette: Without question, Mr. Speaker, regulatory review is here to stay, at least as long as this government is in place, which will no doubt be during my lifetime and my children's lifetime. Regulatory review would become a permanent feature of this government's ongoing efforts to strengthen the Alberta advantage.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Support for Active Living

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sports play an important part in building a healthy community and enhancing our quality of life. It fosters the kind of spirit that contributes to a vibrant community. This government has pledged to take steps to make Albertans the healthiest people in the world. My questions are to the Minister of Community Development. Given that the recent budget did not provide any additional funding for sports and recreation, does this mean that active living is not a priority for this government?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, quite to the contrary. If one looks at the budget for the Department of Community Development, significant amounts of money have been spent through centennial legacy projects for restoring aging infrastructure for recreational facilities. We look also at what we've done with parks as an example, a quadrupling of the budget for parks, clearly an important part of our recreational infrastructure, $17 million reinvested in the Canmore Nordic Centre, a remarkable piece of infrastructure required for sport and recreation.

I think that the hon. member needs to expand his understanding and definition of what recreation is, of what sport is. It's not simply what's funded through the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation, but there is an enormous infrastructure worth hundreds of millions of dollars in this province that allows kids to play hockey, allows children to play on sports fields, to be out in the winter at recreation venues throughout the province. So, Mr. Speaker, we have a very strong commitment to this.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister: given that the Alberta sport plan was submitted to the government in 2003 but has still not been implemented, will the minister tell us if he's planning to consider implementing any of the 180 strategies put forward?

Mr. Mar: The simple answer is yes, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta sport plan is a document of some extensive recommendations. At this point we've looked at a number of different options in terms of getting the sport plan out there and how it might be funded. We've taken some steps that have gone beyond the sport plan. As an example, we recently met with the province of British Columbia and cosigned an agreement with that government with respect to joint use of Olympic infrastructure facilities so that Canadian athletes will have access to some of the best facilities both in British Columbia and Alberta in their efforts to become medal winners at the 2010 Winter Olympics in British Columbia. So there are steps that we're taking with respect to the sport plan. It is not a complete set of responses at this point, and there are some elements where we've gone beyond that which has been set out in that plan, sir.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister: will this government commit to implementing long-term policies to support our grassroots and high-performance athletes?

Mr. Mar: We already have, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I'll call upon the first of a number of members today, but first of all the historic comment of the day.

2:30 Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: On May 2, 1923, Florence Lassandro, née Filumena Costanzo, was hung for the murder of Constable Steven Lawson at the Fort Saskatchewan jail. She was the first and only woman to be hanged in Alberta.

In 2003 the Calgary Opera and the Banff Centre commissioned and produced an operatic version of her involvement in a sordid tale of booze smuggling and crime in the Crownsnest Pass. The opera Filumena opened Canada's National Arts Centre's two-week festival of Alberta culture, Alberta Scene, in Ottawa last Thursday.

Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and privilege to introduce to you and through to you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly 22 visitors from Holy Cross collegiate in Strathmore. There are 16 grades 7 and 8 students as well as Mrs. Holly Rawlek, Michele Barrett, Shirley Boiteau, Mr. Glydon, Mrs. Bauhuis, and Mrs. Murray. I would ask them all to rise and receive the very warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so happy today to introduce to you and through you the second half of 150 students, teachers, and parent helpers from the Percy Baxter school in Whitecourt. They are currently studying local government and are visiting the Legislature today to learn more about what goes on in this building. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them all to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Alberta's Research Environment

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The government's 20-year strategic plan talks about how it will achieve the goals of unleashing innovation and becoming a leader in learning. Two recent announcements move us closer to this commitment to building a world-class research environment in Alberta and highlight the province's ability to attract and retain the high-quality professionals needed to move the innovation agenda forward.

Last week the province announced that Dr. Stuart Kauffman, a medical scientist known around the world for his groundbreaking protocols, has chosen Alberta as the place to work on his research, which involves new ways to treat cancer. Dr. Kauffman is the latest in a line of world-renowned researchers brought to the province by the Alberta Informatics Circle of Research Excellence, otherwise known as iCORE, which was established in Alberta in 1999. iCORE was created to strengthen the province's university-based research system and attract top talent to the province. Alberta is now home to some of the world's best researchers working in emerging areas like wireless communications, artificial intelligence, and nanocomputing.

Mr. Speaker, another important incentive for keeping and retaining graduate students is scholarships. Last week the Minister of Advanced Education announced that more than half a million dollars in scholarships are being awarded to 35 graduate students studying in a variety of fields, including clinical psychology, electrical engineering, neuroscience, and molecular and cellular biology.

Mr. Speaker, all Albertans should be proud of the investments the government is making in the future and the world-class research environment being created in this province. Alberta continues to be one of the best places to live, work, and raise a family, and by supporting this talent and fostering an environment for education and innovation, this province definitely has a bright future ahead.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Emergency Preparedness

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to talk about the importance of emergency preparedness. Earlier today I accompanied the Minister of Municipal Affairs as we demonstrated the emergency public warning system to municipalities and broadcasters in the constituencies of Medicine Hat and Cypress-Medicine Hat. This event showcased the province-wide system and how it uses radio, television, and cable broadcasts to warn Albertans of life-threatening disasters and emergencies. With this implementation in southeast Alberta it is my understanding that the entire province is now covered.

As this week is Emergency Preparedness Week, it is important to all Albertans to know the role they play in keeping themselves and their families safe. Floods, fires, tornadoes, and severe weather are some of the scenarios that can occur to any Albertan at any time. Being prepared means understanding the risks to your area, devising a family emergency plan, and making sure you have necessary resources on hand. Work with your family to prepare an emergency plan. Make sure your family understands the plan, and practise it at least once a year. Further, be sure your child's school has your current contact information. You should also be familiar, Mr. Speaker, with the emergency plan for your workplace and keep a list of emergency numbers close by.

Having emergency kits on hand is another essential element of being prepared. Kits for your home should include basic equipment like waterproof matches, a small flashlight and batteries, and a can opener. You'll also need to have food and water available and should also include candles, a crank or battery-operated radio, prescription medications, and copies of your important documents.

These are just some of the steps Albertans can take in preparing for an emergency. Alberta is seen as a leader in emergency management by helping Albertans, its municipalities, and other stakeholders prepare for, respond to, and recover from emergencies in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Wetaskiwin and Camrose Leaders of Tomorrow Awards

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to recognize the efforts of young volunteers in my constituency and the achievements of eight of my constituents.

Each year both Wetaskiwin and Camrose hold separate Leaders of Tomorrow award ceremonies. These awards recognize young people who have made exceptional contributions to their communities by volunteering. Between the two ceremonies there were 68 young people nominated for their commitment to volunteering. While only eight received an award, the appreciation of the hard work of all those nominated was shown at both of these ceremonies.

On April 18 four outstanding Albertans from Wetaskiwin and the surrounding area were recognized for their efforts. They are Destiny Schmidt, Katherine Fraser, Sonja Fedorak, and Christopher Kirwan. On April 21 the achievements of four exceptional young people from Camrose and the surrounding area were acknowledged by their community. They are Kalynn Dobos, Kari Arnston, Jordan Lee, and Erika Mundel.

Those honoured during these ceremonies ranged from six to 25 years of age. The causes to which they donated their time include church organizations, mentoring other young people, helping out at school and with sporting activities. While the organizations which benefit from these volunteering efforts are as different as the young people who donate their time, one characteristic binds these people together. This is a desire to make their community a better place to live.

These individuals have been recognized by their communities as leaders of tomorrow, and their actions leave no doubt that they are also leaders of today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Nursing Week

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise today in recognition of Nursing Week, which will be celebrated across Canada and around the world from May 9 to May 15. The theme for the week will be Patients First: Safety Always, which is very reflective of how committed our nurses are to ensuring that Albertans receive the best-quality treatment available.

Nurses are often the front lines of health care systems and play an incredibly large role in providing top-quality health care for all Albertans. A nurse's job and dedication doesn't end with their shift either. Countless charity and volunteer organizations depend heavily on the time and expertise donated by the incredible people who take up nursing as a profession.

Nurses don't just work in large hospitals in our major cities. In rural Alberta especially our nurses help administer care to nursing homes, home-care programs, clinics, and a variety of other services, including a very useful Health Link call centre. They are critical in ensuring and maintaining a high quality of life for rural Albertans, and we need to continue to encourage nurses to relocate in rural Alberta.

We need to remember not to take for granted all the hard work nurses do to improve Albertans' lives and our quality of life. I ask all Albertans to go out of their way during Nursing Week to thank one of our wonderful nurses for the job that they do every day.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

2:40 Events Attended by Member for Calgary-Varsity

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the evening of Saturday, April 16, members of the Canoffer group, which began with 10 families who had originally immigrated to Fort McMurray from the southern state of Kerala in India in 1980, held their 25th annual fundraising banquet. Over the quarter century the group's membership has grown by hundreds, and their aid donations to a variety of countries and causes have grown by the thousands. Local CBC radio host and Calgary volunteer extraordinaire Jeff Collins was the emcee for this great event that I had the honour of attending in my Calgary-Varsity constituency.

During the afternoon of Sunday, April 17, my wife and I had the pleasure of attending the Chrysalis 10th annual achievement awards, which recognized the tremendous volunteering accomplishments of developmentally challenged individuals, their families, and a whole host of volunteers and corporate sponsors who recognize the value of these individuals' contributions and provide numerous workplace opportunities for them to demonstrate their talents. The Chrysalis sponsors and business partners include Casablanca Video, Chrysalis Awards Committee, Chrysalis Charitable Foundation, Chrysalis staff and volunteers, Community Natural Foods, Country 105 FM, Leland Industries Inc., Marjorie and Francis Lefaire, the Red Cross Society, and the Delta Bow Valley Hotel.

I've never seen so much pride and so many hugs at a single event. My hope and that of the Chrysalis Society is that the Alberta government will step up to the plate by recognizing and providing funding for this highly supportive program.

This past weekend at the University of Calgary the public, including all members of this Legislature, were invited to attend a health care conference co-sponsored by the nonpartisan Friends of Medicare and the Parkland Institute entitled Weighing the Evidence. The hon. members for Edmonton-Centre, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, Edmonton-Calder, Calgary-Mountain View, and myself along with over 300 concerned Albertans heard international, national, and provincial experts praise the Canadian system of inclusive, publicly delivered, administered, accountable, and affordable medicare.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Definition of Marriage

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I had the privilege of attending a pro traditional marriage rally in Mill Woods, right here in Edmonton. At the rally Bishop Fred Henry of Calgary expressed his concerns over the complaint filed against him with the Alberta Human Rights Commission. He questioned how a pastoral letter written by him and published in a Calgary newspaper could cause a complaint to be filed against him. This really is an attack on his rights to freedom of religion, speech, and association.

The Supreme Court's reference decision regarding the definition of marriage did not give an answer to the fourth question posed by the federal Liberal government, which asked if opposite-sex requirements for marriage are consistent with the Charter. The Supreme Court has stated that to answer this question has the potential to undermine the government's stated goal of equal civil marriage. There is no compelling basis for jeopardizing acquired rights, which they say would be the potential outcome of answering question 4.

The court also pointed out that it was only the Attorney General of Canada who has publicly adopted the position that the opposite-sex requirement for marriage was unconstitutional, not Parliament or the Supreme Court. This is contrary to their decision in Egan versus Canada, where it was stated that same-sex marriage, "neither in its purpose nor in its effect . . . constitute an infringement of the fundamental values sought to be protected by the Charter." The court did not say that the government should change the definition of marriage to include same-sex couples, only that it was within its jurisdiction to do so.

It is evident that the Supreme Court has given provinces the opportunity to defend traditional marriage. Alberta is in the position to do it. This government can respond to the majority of Albertans and its own caucus and entrench and protect traditional marriage in Alberta for the benefit of all Canadians. All we have to do is nothing to lose this battle. We can protect traditional marriage, but we must act now.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to table on behalf of the hon. leader of the NDP opposition copies of the final report from the series of public hearings we held across Alberta. The hearings provided an opportunity for Albertans to share their vision for a strengthened health care system.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling this afternoon, and this is the most recently posted information, on April 25, 2005, of the current membership of Grid West. It lists here as active members the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, two representatives, Mr. Chan and Mr. Tiberi.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. One is a notice of amendment to Bill 15, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2005.

I have a second, which is also a notice of amendment to Bill 15, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2005. I have the copies here.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that written questions standing on the Order Paper today stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, and 31.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Oil Sands Royalties

Q24. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

How much additional revenue from synthetic crude oil and bitumen royalties does the Ministry and Department of Energy estimate will be collected per year once the royalty rate for oil sands projects increases to 25 per cent for the years 2005 to 2015?

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This written question, if it was to be answered – and I certainly hope it will be – would provide all Albertans some information in regard to the long-term revenue forecast or projection for synthetic crude oil and bitumen royalty. Certainly, whenever we look at natural gas and by-products royalties and conventional crude oil royalties, they will be in significant decline by 2015 because, particularly with conventional crude oil production, there will be significantly less even if the price remains at today's levels or even goes higher. The western Canadian sedimentary basin is a mature basin, and in light of our dependence as a government and as a province on natural resource royalties, it is an important question.

When we look at synthetic crude oil production and the royalty holidays that some projects are having or are implemented under or are developed under in the oil sands, we see a 1 per cent royalty until all costs, including labour costs, are paid for. It's a significant royalty holiday. We've used this royalty holiday to attract billions and billions of dollars worth of investment, but at the same time we're asking workers in those construction sites to work for less. The royalty rates are generous. When the capital costs and labour costs are paid off and we start collecting 25 per cent, exactly how much will we be getting?

Now, if we go back to the budget, for instance, Mr. Speaker, for 2003 and we go to the business plan 2003-2006 on page 137, we will see that the target for the synthetic crude oil and bitumen royalty was $141 million. If we compare it to this year's budget, the estimate on the business plan for Energy at page 213, we see where there is close to $400 million estimated to be collected, $393 million to be precise. So that's a significant increase. It has certainly more than doubled from the budget estimate of two years ago. If we look at the budget for this year, we again see synthetic crude oil and bitumen royalty estimates listed at $393 million. The forecast for the year before was $674 million. So there's a significant range of estimates and targets here. It's interesting to note that for the fiscal year 2007-08 in the business plan for this year's budget, it goes up as high as slightly over $700 million.

If I could have the information as outlined in Written Question 24, I would be grateful. I would read it with a great deal of interest, and I'm sure other Albertans would, too, because there is an impression – whether it's right or wrong, it's not my job at this time to say – that this is a royalty giveaway. If this information could refute that impression, I think we would be doing the entire province a service.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I appreciate that it would be nice to be able to give that kind of information – he's got from 2005 to 2015 – I'm going to have to reject Written Question 24 in the sense that we do publish the three years, but when you're extrapolating out on the record, "Here's what we expect royalties to be in an actual number," it's impossible to project one year out, let alone 10 more years out, what the price of oil is going to be, not just the price of oil but the differentials. With bitumen, which is based on bitumen versus the synthetic crude levels, we've got to build some upgraders to make sure that we've got it to that level, to make sure that we reduce the amount of the differential.

There are so many involved issues in getting to a calculation not just of the west Texas intermediate worldwide price of oil but then to get to a bitumen price and then even to project precisely all of the projects, the billions of dollars that are being invested over this next time, as to when they might precisely finish those megaprojects, when they'll come on stream, at what volumes of production. There's so much activity that all we could do is start providing scenarios: here's the range of possibilities. That doesn't necessarily supply the information that's requested so that we could give that projection.

What we do is – you see that on page 213 in our business plan of Energy – provide the next three estimates of $393 million up to $560 million up to $710 million in each of those years. The good thing that is happening, I guess, with respect to this is that with the higher price of oil we are seeing a faster payout of those projects with less volume so that we are going to start realizing sooner the higher rates of royalty. We've seen it already on some of Suncor's. There are about 20 other smaller projects that have reached payouts. We're going to see it on Syncrude. Probably within the next year is projected for Syncrude. So we are starting to see that realized.

We will do our best in our estimates to project that forward, but going out for 10 years is just too far to make it worth the paper that it's written on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In looking at the importance of this issue – that is, royalties for Albertans – one of the key questions that many are asking me in my constituency is: given that the oil sands royalties are at about 1 per cent for well into the future, how can we be sure we're getting our returns from a public resource?

Indeed, the Auditor General in 2003 and '04 recommended some changes in the way we're assessing the royalty program for heavy oil in particular with a view to being more transparent, being more clear with Albertans about what could and should be expected of the returns on this public resource. The findings that were reported at that time included a review of 10 approvals out of 48 active oil sands projects, identifying certain deficiencies, some of which the department is making progress on but others not.

I quote here from page 128 of the Auditor's report. With specific auditing of five projects out of 48 active projects they found that the risk assessment in five files was deficient because it did not deal with certain common risks to the Department. For example, the risk that a project operator may have a history of making aggressive deductions, the risk of royalties being reduced by non-arm's length sales or costs, the risk of duplicate costs being claimed in the project or in two projects owned by the same organization, or the risk that recovered costs are not being reported in full to the Department.

Secondly:

For all five files, there was no indication of the nature of the work performed to ensure costs were eligible under OSR97 [which] requires that costs be directly attributable to the project, reasonable in the circumstances, incurred by or on behalf of the project owners, incurred on or after the effective date of the project, and incurred for one of ten purposes outlined.

Finally, "all five files did not document that the costs were paid in the time period required by the OSR97".

So the question of royalties I think needs to be addressed. I think the people of Alberta deserve to know just how long these are going to be deferred by new capital projects in order to maintain the 1 per cent royalty and that there is an accountable, transparent process to make sure that the huge resources and the huge potential revenues are addressed appropriately in this government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must say that I'm very, very disappointed to hear from the hon. minister that we are not to receive that information. Certainly, the taxpayers and people who rely on government programs would be also very, very disappointed to learn that this government for whatever reason – we can look at the price or we can look at the paydown of those development costs by those respective oil sands developers – may change, but someone over there must have an idea of where we're going to be in the future. The minister certainly quotes page 213 of the business plan for the Department of Energy, but I would encourage the hon. minister and his staff, for that matter, to also look at page 209 of the same report.

We're talking in here, Mr. Speaker, of oil production in thousands of barrels per day. We have oil sands production listed at 853,000, and going over to the year 2010 it doubles. Surely someone over there must know what kind of royalty take we're going to get, where that production is coming from. Is it coming from facilities that have paid down their development costs, or is it from facilities that have yet to pay down their development costs? These statistics are sourced from "Alberta's Reserves 2003, Supply and Demand Outlook 2004-2013, Alberta Energy and Utilities Board." So I would urge the hon. minister to take another look at this and perhaps visit the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board and see if they now have information that is through to 2015 and give us, please, the information that we are requesting with Written Question 24.

Mr. Speaker, the National Energy Board is also a source for this information in the Department of Energy's business plan. "National Energy Board: Canada's Energy Future Supply; Scenarios for Supply and Demand to 2025; Supply Push Scenario."

So there are all kinds of places where I think the minister in all sincerity could get this information. We're not asking for a figure that is going to be locked in stone, but certainly someone over there must know how we're going to be able to finance this government's expenditures in 2015 and what percentage of that will come from synthetic crude oil and bitumen royalty rates.

I think it's again a very important question. I'm again disappointed and I'm dismayed as well with the hon. Minister of Energy for being so reluctant to provide this information. I think there are organizations that would help the Department of Energy out. I realize that they're very busy these days trying to get a handle on electricity deregulation, but there have got to be some people over there that could perhaps phone the Energy and Utilities Board, the National Energy Board, or other departments to get this information. Perhaps the hon. Minister of RAGE, Restructuring and Government Efficiency, could help out if the minister's staff are all tied up trying to get a handle on and finding some solutions to electricity deregulation. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed.

Thank you.

[Written Question 24 lost]

Student Loan Defaults

Q25. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Mr. Taylor that the following question be accepted.

What is the rate of default on Alberta student loans for students attending or graduating from all eligible institutions in Alberta broken down by institution over each of the fiscal years 1994-95 to 2003-04 inclusive?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would indicate to the House and to the member who raised the question on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Currie that we would be prepared to accept the question provided that there were certain amendments which would make it more readily . . .

An Hon. Member: Answerable?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you. That was the word I was looking for: answerable.

I would therefore move an amendment to Written Question 25, that Written Question 25 be amended by striking out "attending or graduating from all eligible institutions in Alberta" and substituting "who have completed their studies," striking out "institution" and substituting "last postsecondary sector attended," striking out "fiscal" and substituting "academic," and striking out "2003-04" and substituting "2002-03."

The amended written question would then read as follows:

What is the rate of default on Alberta student loans for students who have completed their studies broken down by last postsecondary sector attended over each of the academic years 1994-95 to 2002-03 inclusive?

Mr. Speaker, in moving that amendment I would just inform the hon. members that the institutional level of rate of default information is currently not shared publicly. Rather, the information is available at the sector levels, such as the university sector, college sector, et cetera.

There are potential issues with respect to FOIP, section 16 and section 25, that may be harmful to the business interests of a private institution or economic or other interests of a public body. Therefore, sharing the institution-by-institution information, as I've indicated in response to a number of other questions that have been raised in the House earlier, would not be appropriate without having done the review and previously requested of the institutions affected the permission to share the information.

Now, as I indicated, we are reviewing that area and looking at the question of whether that type of information might be appropriate for students and parents and the public to have at hand in order to make appropriate determinations. So as we go forward, we're looking at the question as to indicating to institutions that that information will be shared, but with respect to historical information the advice we've received is that we would have to go back and make those requests, and that would be a significant pile of work to do. For that purpose, we're proposing that the question be amended to provide it on the sector level as opposed to the institutional level for the purposes of this question, not necessarily for the purposes of for always.

Default information is tracked on the basis of people who have completed their studies in the specific year in question. Information for 2003-2004 is not available because students who would have graduated in May 2004 would have a six-month grace period and then another six months before we consider the amount in default. That's why we've amended it to move the year back one year, because there are, in fact, no defaults for the 2003-2004 year as yet. Management reports associated with defaults are based on school leavers from the May 1 to April 30 period, the academic year. That's the reason for that amendment.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would move these amendments so that we can answer the questions in as appropriate a way as possible without moving into potential violations of FOIP and so that we can put the information into the categories in the manner in which it's actually collected.

The Speaker: On the amendment.

Ms Blakeman: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm responding to the amendment that's been proposed by the Minister of Advanced Education. We believe that it's important to be able to look at this issue of rate of default of Alberta student loans based on an institution-by-institution comparison, so that's why we keep asking for the questions worded the way that we do. We're not trying to be difficult. We just believe this is the way the information should be available not only to the opposition but, as the hon. minister noted, to the public and to the parents and students themselves. So I will protest again, but I understand why the minister has offered the amendment in the way that he has.

He did not comment or I didn't hear clearly as to why there was an amendment around students "attending or graduating" to "have completed." It doesn't tell us what's happening to student loans while they're in their undergraduate years but, rather, just once they have completed their studies. We only get the final year rather than any of the intervening years and, again, not the total sum of information that we were looking for. So I question and protest that one as well.

I understand what he's saying about the sector. I still insist on the institution, and of course it often happens that the ministry can only provide us information based on certain dates or in this case academic years rather than fiscal years and the notation that the minister has already done on the default rate, finishing the last year available.

The rest of those changes are fine with us. I still argue that we should be able to get and the ministry should be able to provide the institutional information, but I have instructions from the member whom I'm speaking on behalf of, that is the Member for Calgary-Currie, to accept the amendment with the protest that I've put on the record. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is concerning to me, and I'd like to just enlarge on what the Member for Edmonton-Centre said.

We've had a proliferation of private institutions in this province. I'm sure that the minister has got complaints from time to time. We have to know what's going on with these private institutions because students are paying out big money to go to them. They're told that these institutions follow certain criteria, certain guidelines, and they get there, and it's not what they expect. I've had complaints in the constituency about this.

I guess the minister is saying that FOIP is involved here, and I'm not sure that I understand why. Surely this doesn't ask for, you know, an individual student's records or the rest of it; it's asking for an institution's. Certainly, through student loans it's public money going into these private institutions. Surely there should be some accountability here, Mr. Speaker. If we can get the information from the U of A or NAIT or SAIT or the U of C or Mount Royal or Grant MacEwan or whatever the case may be, the same accountability should be there for these private institutions.

I don't know how FOIP works to the minister. FOIP, I thought, was for personal information that might get out. If all of a sudden you're asking how many graduated in a global sense from a particular institution, I can't see how FOIP is involved in that. You're not asking for the individual names. You're asking for an overall record of how many people graduated and how many didn't. That seems to me pretty valuable information for parents if they're looking at students that are looking around for various things because the last thing people want to do – I've heard of one case where a student ended up with a $13,000 debt and a useless course, so they're not going to proceed.

There's got to be a way around this FOIP. If we're going to give public money to private institutions, there has to be that accountability. I'd like the minister at some point to indicate why FOIP is a necessity to protect the institution, the private institution. FOIP to me is for personal information, that you wouldn't put out particular students or names, but you certainly should have a record of how many are in the school, how many are passing, and what's happening there.

So I'd ask, you know, on the amendment as to why that is the case. I know we'll get FOIP all the way along on some of these, and I think it's important for us to know.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: On the question as amended. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, do you wish to close the debate?

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Please close debate.

[Written Question 25 as amended carried]

Student Loan Maximums

Q26. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Mr. Taylor that the following question be accepted.
What is the total number and percentage of Alberta student loan program applicants receiving the maximum allowable loan over each of the academic or administrative years 2000 to 2003-04 inclusive broken down by year, learning institution, and program of applicant?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again I would indicate to the House and to the member raising the question that we would be prepared to accept Written Question 26 provided that it was amended to allow for us to provide the information in a compliant way. Therefore, I would move that Written Question 26 be amended by striking out “learning institution, and program of applicant” and substituting “undergraduate or lower program category, and graduate/professional program category.”

3:20

Mr. Speaker, the reason for proposing the amendment is that information on maximum allowable loans issued is tracked at the undergraduate or lower program level and at the graduate/professional program level only and not by learning institution or specific program of applicant. So getting the information, other than going through an extensive manual process to provide that information, could not be readily done. With the amendment we can at least provide information which could be made available based on the program level of study rather than by institution.

We are spending a considerable amount of resources in upgrading the technology that's available. I'm sure that with that upgrade there will be many variable fields available, and perhaps we'll be able to extract information in a number and varied ways. But at the present time, as I am given to understand it, providing the information in the way in which it was asked, if not impossible, would require a huge amount of manual work.

The Speaker: On the amendment.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, I want to be efficient with use of resources here, but it is highly questionable to me that this information is not tracked by institution. I, of course, will take the member's word that it is not, but I still find that very curious. It does not allow us to compare between. In addition, it's not allowing us to compare between what we would call the public system and private offerers as well, as was raised by my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, which I think is an excellent point, especially as we move into an age where there are more private providers of education. We should be able to compare between institutions, especially when we're talking about student loans and those who have maxed out their possible loan program.

The second question that occurs to me is that in this question the minister is telling me that numbers are available from undergraduate and lower program categories and graduate/professional program categories, yet in the previous question he told me that that wasn't available. It was only available for graduating as a final: “who have completed their studies.” I'll let the member explain to me on the record, then, what the difference is between those two. What strikes me is that the undergraduates appear to be available in this question. These are relatively similar questions. I'd like to know why it's not available in the previous question.

Again, I have instructions from the sponsoring member to accept the amendments from the minister, but if I may, I strongly suggest that we do look at tracking by institution. I'm very curious that we don't. I think that if that is truly an oversight, it's one that we need to address immediately.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, do you choose to close the debate, or should I call the question?

[Written Question 26 as amended carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Student Loan Appeals

Q27. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Mr. Taylor that the following question be accepted.

What is the total number of Alberta student loan program applicants who have appealed their award over each of the academic/administrative years 2000-01 to 2003-04 inclusive broken down by year, learning institution, reason for appeal, and whether the appeal was successful?

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Now, there is an extensive amendment, which the minister, I'm sure, will get up and go through. Once again, I note that we are unable to be provided with information broken down by institution, which again I think is an oversight. I look forward to the reasons that the minister will give for amending this written question, which I have now moved.

Thank you.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the last two written questions there was a significant difference between the two in that with respect to 25 we're talking about school leavers or graduands and default rates as opposed to the other one, which was maximum loans. The information is categorized and available in different ways depending on whether they're in the default category or the other category. I don't profess to be an expert on all of this stuff, but that's what I'm advised. So there was a significant difference between those two questions.

With respect to Question 27 I would indicate that we're prepared to accept this question. Again, it would have to be with an amendment. I would move to amend Written Question 27 by striking out “learning institution.” The question, then, as amended would be:

What is the total number of Alberta student loan program applicants who have appealed their award over each of the academic/administrative years 2000-01 to 2003-04 inclusive broken down by year, reason for appeal, and whether the appeal was successful?

Mr. Speaker, in moving that amendment, I'd indicate that all we're doing is taking out the request to break it down as well by learning institution. While I'm sure that the same arguments apply with respect to this question as had been raised in the other ones – and I have to say that I don't necessarily disagree with those arguments; I think that information might be useful – the fact appears to be that we don't have it in that manner. Appeals are tracked by reason code, not by learning institution or any other format, so apparently we're unable to fulfill the request by learning institution.

Management reports identify successful appeals based on commencement of study period and unsuccessful appeals based on the date they entered the system. This is extra information just so that when the answer is provided, it can be provided in a context that you might understand it. Also, a number of appeals remain pending for periods of time awaiting additional information from the applicant. Therefore, in any given fiscal year the total number of appeals approved and rejected does not equal the number of appeals actually received in a given year.

Just so that you know, when we do get the information, the reason why it doesn't add up is because of the different methodologies with respect to successful appeals, rejected appeals, and the timing of appeals. We have 56 different appeal reason codes, and of course applicants may have more than one reason for their appeal, so that would be another reason why the information might not appear to add up.

We'd be happy to provide the information with respect to appeals provided that the requirement to do it by learning institution is taken out because, again, the management systems that we have right now apparently don't break it down in that fashion.

[Motion on amendment carried]

[Written Question 27 as amended carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Theft of Public Property

Q28. Mr. R. Miller moved on behalf of Mr. Bonko that the following question be accepted.
What is the total dollar amount of public property lost due to theft in the Department of Sustainable Resource Development for the 2003-2004 fiscal year?

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think the reason for asking the question is quite self evident, and I will happily await the response from the hon. minister.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development I would be pleased to accept Written Question 28.

The Acting Speaker: Any other questions?

[Written Question 28 carried]

3:30 Full-day Kindergarten

Q29. Mr. Flaherty moved that the following question be accepted.
What consultations, studies, research, or other information-gathering exercises pertaining to full-day kindergarten are currently planned or under way under the auspices of the Ministry of Education?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to indicate on behalf of my ministry and the government that we will accept Written Question 29 as it stands.

[Written Question 29 carried]

Calgary Ward 10 Election Process Investigation

Q30. Mr. Flaherty moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that the following question be accepted.

What is the total dollar amount spent by the Department of Municipal Affairs on the investigation into Calgary's ward 10 election process following the October 2004 municipal election?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Municipal Affairs I'm going to indicate to the House that we are prepared to accept Written Question 30 with some amendments. This information was shared with the opposition prior to 11 o'clock this morning, as per procedures, and I'd ask that the amendment be circulated if it hasn't already.

Briefly, Mr. Speaker, the rationale behind amending the first part of this question is because the process is ongoing. Therefore, to answer a question as to what the total costs are before the process is finished is not possible. The other minor change replaces the word "investigation" with "provincial inspection." This adjustment adds clarity and accuracy to the question.

The amended written question will read as follows then:

As of March 31, 2005, what is the total dollar amount spent by the Department of Municipal Affairs on the provincial inspection into Calgary's ward 10 election process following the October 2004 municipal election?

[Motion on amendment carried]

[Written Question 30 as amended carried]

The Clerk Assistant: Written Question 31. Dr. Pannu.

The Acting Speaker: There being no mover for the motion, the motion will be dropped from the Order Paper.

head: Motions for Returns

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's unfortunate there was no mover for that last one because we might have been able to actually accept it. However, let's move on.

Proper notice having been given on Thursday, April 28, I'm pleased to move that motions for returns 27 through 43 inclusive be dealt with today.

Mr. Speaker, I might just add, there being no additional motions for returns, there are none to stand and retain their places following this motion.

[Motion carried]

Software Licences for Schools

M27. Mr. Flaherty moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all documents including but not limited to letters, faxes, memos, meeting notes, reports, contracts, and competing bids related to the October 2004 agreement between the government and Microsoft Inc. for the provision of Microsoft Office software to Alberta's educational institutions.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, this particular motion is directed to Alberta Education and also partly to Advanced Education, and I want to indicate to the hon. member that I'm prepared to accept this on behalf of government albeit with some amendments. I believe that the amendment on 27 has been circulated, and all members should have a copy of it now. In addition, I should just point out quickly that this information has been shared as of 11 this morning with the opposition colleague, which is, of course, the requirement as per our procedure.

Assuming that all members have now had a chance to look at it, I just want to indicate that this matter requires just a little bit of background information. If I might just speak to the amendment at this time, I would indicate the following. First of all, the contract in question deals with Microsoft Inc., and since the vast majority of school jurisdictions and postsecondary institutions in our province were already using Microsoft Office software, it was deemed best to enter into a broad, province-wide agreement that would reflect that particular fact.

So the provincial Microsoft licensing agreement in effect was arrived at, and it actually is going to save the educational system in this province in both sectors, K to 12 and postsecondary, about $10 million over three years. That will be done by achieving some economies of scale. So that results in a cost savings of approximately 25 to 40 per cent. I thought that that information might be sort of important to have on the table.

Now, the scope of the information the way it was originally requested, however, in this particular motion for a return would have been rather extensive and would have required us to go back to October 2002, which would have meant spending considerable amounts of time and other resources to provide something akin to an answer for what was asked for.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, due to the business considerations by the various entities that are involved, including some competitive advantage considerations, it would have become necessary to consult with Microsoft Canada as well as with a very large number of account resellers that participated in the bidding process, and that would likely have proven to be an extremely lengthy and overly involved process, which, even after it had been attempted, might not have yielded precisely what the member was requesting in the first place.

As I've indicated, this is an important motion. I recognize that.

I should just indicate very quickly that prior to this particular agreement having been arrived at, Mr. Speaker, the school jurisdictions as well as the postsecondary institutions actually had separate agreements, which came out of their own technology budgets. Now, however, because our government decided to step in and take care of those costs directly ourselves as a government on behalf of the jurisdictions and the schools boards and the institutions and so on, we have been able to see a number of dollars freed up, which are dollars that now can be directed to other education priorities. So that sort of explains a little bit of the rationale behind it as well.

In the final analysis, Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to accept this motion with the amendments that have been circulated, and I would just now like to read that proposed amended motion into the record, which I hope will suffice and accommodate the hon. member opposite and his query. That a copy of the October 2004 agreement between the government and Microsoft Inc. for the provision of Microsoft Office software to Alberta's educational institutions and related documents including requests for quotations, list of vendor applicants, and other materials be provided as required.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat and look for the support of the House on the motion as amended and moved.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, and thank you for the explanation from the minister. I'm assuming, then, that he can provide us with supporting documentation for the claims of savings that he has just made, which is by way of reasoning for why the amendment is being modified in the way that it has been.

To me, Mr. Speaker, what the Official Opposition was looking for was transparency in a process. We're often told, "Oh, you know, you can view the contracts" and "You'll have a look at everything" and "Everyone can look at it themselves and figure out if everyone thinks that it's a good deal." But when we actually come right down to it: "Oh, well, sorry. No, you can't now look at this contract because it's covered under solicitor/client privilege" or "It's covered under FOIP" or "Sorry, you can't see it." So all the great promises of transparency and accountability are gone because they're now all cloaked in some sort of after-the-fact reasoning.

So if the minister is telling me that this is all going to be available, good. Then I'm glad we're on the record here with Hansard. I'm sure he'll be providing that information directly to the sponsor of the motion for a return. I do want to see any supporting documents that he has in support of his claims of savings.

Secondly, I'm not specifically familiar with this, but I take it that the October 2004 agreement between the government and Microsoft has not already been released in some other form and that, therefore, this is something new that is now being released by the government, when the amended order shows that a copy of this agreement will be provided. We were looking for quite a bit of detail that led up to the agreement. What all was involved in the negotiation? That's what we wanted to see. We also wanted to see, you know, notes and other things that help people make decisions about this. What did the contracts look like, for example, and the competing bids?

Now, I don't know if in the minister's opinion a list of vendor applicants – that's not the same as competing bids, and request for quotations is not the same as competing bids. So we're not getting what we asked for here. We're getting quite a different thing entirely. We asked for a whale and we're getting a fish. They both swim in water, but beyond that, there isn't a lot of connection between the two of them. Nonetheless, being in the opposition in this particular Assembly, we're always grateful for any information that we can manage to squeeze out of the government.

I'm sure the member is likely to support the amended motion. Nonetheless, I felt it important to get the rest of those points on the record. Thank you for the opportunity, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for St. Albert, would you like to close debate?

Mr. Flaherty: It's closed, sir.

[Motion for a Return 27 as amended carried]

Postsecondary Tuition Fee Documentation

M28. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Mr. Taylor that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all documents including reports, studies, statistical data, stakeholder submissions, meeting agendas, and correspondence prepared or received by the Ministry of Advanced Education, formerly Learning, between January 1, 2002, and February 28, 2005, relating to legislation or regulations governing Alberta's postsecondary tuition fees.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to ask the House to reject this motion, and I do that with some regret because, actually, I had wanted to accept the motion, but the material that I've received again indicates that a considerable amount of time – the estimate is about 30 days – would have to be spent in reviewing the requested stakeholder submissions to determine which portions would be exempted from disclosure according to FOIP.

Now, I'm not too certain as to what in stakeholders' submissions would fall into a FOIP designation, but I'm uncomfortable enough with the advice that I wouldn't want an order from the Legislature to return the information if indeed it was to violate the FOIP Act.

In addition, we've been advised that a further consultation with applicable institutions would be wise prior to the releasing of the information. So while this is a question which I would be happy to provide as much information as I possibly can on, because of the nature of the advice I've received relative to FOIP, I should have brought forward an amendment to say: subject to the requirements of FOIP. Then I would have found it acceptable. But I didn't do that on a timely basis, so unfortunately I'm going to have to ask the House to reject the question.

Ms Blakeman: Well, yes, it is most unfortunate. I will hold the minister to his comments in Hansard, to promising to provide as much of this information as he can without coming up against the constraints of FOIP.

Mr. Speaker, this is a perfect example of why the Official Opposition and members of the public get so frustrated with this government. That Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act was meant to share information of what was going on behind closed doors with government, and it has turned into exactly the opposite. It is about protecting and keeping information from the very people who should be able to see and scrutinize it.

I'm not specifically criticizing the Minister of Advanced Education in this particular case because I believe him to be an honourable man, but this is an increasing problem with this government. It is very indicative of its reluctance to release information and allow their decision-making to be a transparent process so that members of the Official Opposition, the third-party opposition, the single member of the fourth-party opposition, and members of the public can in fact follow along and make sure that they're in agreement with everything that's happened. It's important to know how government arrives at decision-making.

Here we've had several things happen around tuition fees in Alberta, and we can't tell how the government arrived at that decision. This is what people find frustrating. This is what leads people to find the government, you know, full of secrets and working behind closed doors and deal-making and all those other stereotypes which are heaped upon them. This is what makes people believe they're true.

I know that we've had reviews of the freedom of information and protection of privacy legislation, but I also note: those are all-party reviews, and the membership on those reviews are reflective of the number of seats held in the House. So we end up with a Tory majority who once again votes that secrecy through. There's something really, really wrong with this system when members of the public cannot see how the government came to make its decisions. This is a perfect example of something that should be straightforward and easily accessible to everyone that is now cloaked in secrecy that doesn't need to be. It does raise people's suspicions and impairs the government's credibility when it tries to make claims of being open and accessible. It is obviously not.

[Motion for a Return 28 lost]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Alberta SuperNet Project

M29. Mr. Elsalhy moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all documents pertaining to the government's decision to transfer responsibility for the Alberta SuperNet project from the Ministry of Innovation and Science to the Ministry of Restructuring and Government Efficiency.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is something that has been on my mind as the critic for Innovation and Science and also on people's minds because the transfer happened immediately, with no warning signs, after the November election. The newly formed ministry was established, and it appears that they just wanted to create some sort of an agenda or a mandate for this new ministry. I would be real eager to receive information on the rationale behind this decision and why it was deemed to be appropriate and timely.

Thank you.

3:50

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is prepared to accept this motion.

[Motion for a Return 29 carried]

Accreditation Approval for University of Phoenix

M30. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Mr. Taylor that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all documents pertaining to the government's approval for the University of Phoenix to offer accredited baccalaureate or master's level degrees in Alberta including but not limited to all submissions by the University of Phoenix to the Private Colleges Accreditation Board, PCAB, written decisions, or recommendations by the PCAB to the Ministry of Advanced Education, formerly Learning, correspondence between ministry officials and representatives of the University of Phoenix, and the ministerial order or order in council granting the approval.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We'd earlier circulated a proposed amendment with respect to this motion for a return, but on further review, I'm going to ask the House to actually reject this motion for a return. The reason for that is that we've dealt substantively with the issues provided for in this motion for a return in responding to Motion for a Return 2 and Motion for a Return 3, as proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, accepted as amended on April 11, 2005. The amendments that I was going to propose to this motion would have essentially put us in the same position, that we'd be providing the same information that we already agreed to provide, which is the letters of authorization and the other information regarding information relied upon.

This is substantially the same motion that has already been approved. Therefore, rather than go through the process of amendment, I just ask that the Assembly reject this one, and we'll respond as we've already promised with respect to motions for returns 2 and 3.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close debate.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Well, given that the minister feels that it's essentially the same answer to the same question, then I'm asking that any information that is provided to the third party in response to their questions 2 and 3 also be forwarded to the Member for Calgary-Currie if the minister feels that it answers the questions he's raised, the documents that he has requested actually under Motion for a Return 30.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 30 lost]

Student Loan Repayment Systems

M31. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Mr. Taylor that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all documents currently in the possession of the Ministry of Advanced Education including but not limited to reports, studies, statistical data, and correspondence pertaining to income-contingent student loan repayment systems.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of government I'd be prepared to accept this motion for a return. In accepting the motion for a return, I would just provide some information to the House. We're not currently actively reviewing income-contingent student loan repayment systems. The current position – this is, of course, subject to the full review of affordability that will be taking place this year, so it could be subject to change – is that strategies are needed to ensure that debt levels are manageable upon completion of studies.

Programs to support debt management take many different forms, including interest relief, combined grants and loans, or through the Alberta student loan relief program, and it's not felt that it makes sense to provide loans to individuals whose income potential would make it virtually impossible for them to ever repay, even under an income-contingent repayment plan. For those reasons we haven't been actively engaged in looking at income-contingent repayment plans although, certainly, that's an option which could be or would be or should be on the table as we look at the affordability review.

It should be noted, as well, that as part of the pan-Canadian ongoing review of students' assistance the federal government, along with the provinces, is looking at debt management as a topic for review. Possible future options like income-contingency repayment, graduated interest relief, and other options will be on the table.

I think those are issues that will be explored more fully both in terms of our affordability review and then, of course, because we're part of an overall Canadian student loan program as well and often try and align our programs. Those issues would be studied on a national level as well, with other provinces and with the federal government. We're not currently doing it now, so there won't be an awful lot of information there but certainly accept the question and provide whatever information there is.

[Motion for a Return 31 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Anthony Henday Drive Project

M32. Mr. MacDonald moved on behalf of Mr. Chase that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a financial statement detailing the private-sector loan interest rate compared to that of the government for the proposed Anthony Henday Drive P3 project.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. Now, certainly we hear throughout the debate in this Legislative Assembly from one certain side the merits of three Ps, but there is also the argument to be made that the government can get a much better interest rate on borrowing than the private sector because, of course, we have a very, very good credit rating in this province as a result of the debt retirement. [interjection] Now, someone over across the way has said that it's good management.

It's the same Conservative government that spent this province, at one point, into the red significantly – there was an amount over $20 billion – the same Progressive Conservative government. Then they took an Alberta Liberal policy of fiscal prudent management and implemented it. As a result of that policy and rather robust energy prices the debt paydown went a lot quicker than anyone had anticipated. Perhaps that is the reason why we have such an excellent credit rating. I know it is, and I don't understand why we would go this route with a P3 when we could do it ourselves.

Now, the P3s have been called by some other members of the House – the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning has referred to it, Mr. Speaker, as rent to own. It's no different than rent-to-own furniture. We are renting to own a vital piece of our infrastructure, and I think the hon. member is correct. The former member for Edmonton-Glengarry used to refer to the P3s as "private political pork," I think is what he used to say. We still don't have any answers as to the benefit or the merit of these projects, and if we look at what's gone on in the courthouse in Calgary, well, that has not exactly worked out.

Mr. Hancock: It worked out very well. You haven't got a clue what you're talking about.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education has stated that it's worked out very well and that I don't have a clue what I'm talking about, but the hon. member is wrong in that regard. We had this project. The Calgary courthouse is a P3, but it had to be abandoned because of increasing costs. I don't know how the hon. minister could look at this failure and view it as a success. It escalated beyond belief in costs. The government has had to take it over.

In fact, there were questions, hon. member, asked last week in Public Accounts. I'm disappointed that the hon. member hasn't had a chance to review the Hansard from Public Accounts because he would see that there were questions raised there about the total amount as allocated in the annual report for the department of infrastructure, and no one could answer the questions. Hopefully, we will receive a written question very soon as to how all these costs were shifted around with the courthouse in Calgary.

In regard to Motion for a Return 32, Mr. Speaker, it would be good information to receive, and perhaps the government, when they provide this information to us, could provide once and for all the merits of these P3s. If it's so much cheaper to borrow money that way, show us.

Earlier this session, as a matter of fact last week, we found out that one of the government's programs that they talked about and suggested other Albertans buy into, the long-term electricity contracts, whether they were three-year or five-year contracts – the public was astonished to find out that neither the Premier nor the Minister of Energy nor the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne had thought it was prudent financially to buy into these contracts. So perhaps now they will provide us this information that the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity is seeking. The public would be a lot more comfortable with this whole notion of P3s.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the time the hon. member took to ask the question, we could have laid a few miles of pavement, but we will accept Motion for a Return 32 on behalf of the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. I wish to move that acceptance.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking to the motion, I can't let the remarks of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar with respect to the Calgary courthouse go by, putting that kind of absolute twaddle on the record. The Calgary courthouse project was a very good project, went ahead very well, went ahead under a P3 process for the full duration of the time, and is being built at a contract price which is exactly what was being proposed. It didn't rise in cost.

There was considerable confusion raised, primarily by people who didn't understand P3 processes with respect to how you account for costs and the different way of accounting for costs, whether you're dealing with the present value of long-term contracts or whether you're putting it on the books as a capital lease type of project or how you account for it. But the fact of the matter is that that project is going ahead on a contract which is the same price as it was originally intended. The process worked very well. The process got a very important piece of infrastructure for the Calgary and southern Alberta region into the ground on time.

The fact that the financing was changed to government financing from private-sector financing at the last did not make one whit of difference to the concept that went forward in terms of the P3 and making sure that the construction costs of that contract were very well known and well understood. For that hon. member to put on the record this afternoon that the costs are unknown and that the costs rose and the process drove the costs is absolute, pure twaddle.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to speak in favour of this motion. I think it's important information, and I'm pleased to hear the government is going to release those interest rates.

The P3s, however, you know, remain I think a way to hide information in many ways. There should be full disclosure of all contracts, all interest rates, all of the information that is pertaining to them just like in any other public endeavour. They become something, I believe, in the way that they've been established in this province, and under the Anthony Henday example, for example, that does not necessarily save money for the taxpayers of Alberta. That takes away the ability for other companies looking at the work being done there, for taxpayers in general, for all the many interested parties in Alberta to fully see a transparent process. It takes away from that.

The ability to build these projects faster is only because, I think, of the fact that the government is not willing to incur what I guess you might call debt, even though I wonder if we would have to even do that. It just does not, you know, answer the question: does it save money? Is it efficient? Is it something that is actually good for the Alberta taxpayer?

Many of your smaller contractors that work in areas like road building – in fact, I'd say the vast majority of them – are very displeased with this process and would like to see this type of process end. I'd like to see the government just do a full survey of all of the contractors working in the business to see what their responses might be. It is, indeed, a good comparison to call this a rent-to-own process. If anybody is looking at that, that's a business, of course, that fills a particular niche, but I certainly don't think it should be in a niche that we're looking for to construct public facilities.

That concludes my statements, Mr. Speaker, and I support the motion.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to conclude debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity I would like to express my gratitude to the government, and I look forward to receiving this information and reading it with interest. In conclusion, I would have to say, particularly in regard to the Calgary courthouse, that if it was such a fine idea to proceed with this, why was not the project continued as a P3?

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 32 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Private/Public Partnership Proposals

M33. Mr. MacDonald moved on behalf of Mr. Chase that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a list of all projects that are potential P3 projects being considered by the government.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, I don't know how much further the government is going to go with these P3s, but we understand on this side of the House that there seems to be a genuine interest in the further contracting of P3s. Certainly, the three big ones to date have been, as we mentioned earlier, the Calgary courthouse, the Edmonton ring road, and – I'm just looking at the Infrastructure and Transportation business plan for 2005 through '08, and for the ring road in Edmonton there is a target to have in two years 40 per cent of the ring road open to travel. Certainly, the ring road in this city has been neglected for some time. Many citizens are relieved to see the progress to date on this ring road, and they feel that regardless of how it's being financed or constructed, they are anxious to see the entire ring road completed.

There's also the hospital, Mr. Speaker, in the southeast sector of Calgary. The Auditor General has released a review of P3s in his last report. Certainly, the Auditor General in Public Accounts has gone on the record as stating that in some cases a P3 may be the way to proceed, but we all know what the AG had to say in regard to P3s. I'm sorry if it's a sensitive subject in this House, but I certainly have an alternative view than the hon. Minister of Advanced Education in regard to the success or failure of the P3 project that is the Calgary courthouse.

Now, when we talk about Calgary, we certainly recognize on this side of the House that there's an urgent need for a southeast Calgary hospital, and we have to question the planning, or the lack of planning, of this government. We all know that there was a hospital imploded or blown up in Calgary, and we have to question whether that was an efficient use of taxpayer dollars now that the city is in dire need of additional hospital space, hospital beds. That facility that was blown up was almost identical to the Royal Alex here in the city of Edmonton, and the Royal Alex is still providing very useful service not only to the citizens of this city but to residents in northern Alberta and throughout the province for some specific procedures.

Certainly, as we look at going ahead with a P3 in Calgary for a hospital, we forget sometimes that there was a perfectly good hospital there, almost the same model year as the Royal Alex, but for some odd reason this government decided to destroy it. I'll never understand the logic behind that one.

P3s, Mr. Speaker, have been reported as an inefficient way of doing business by other governments that have used them in the past, and I don't understand why we are so anxious in this province to continue with them. Certainly, a list of all projects that the government is contemplating under the P3 model would be information that would be of a great deal of interest not only to this side of the House but to the taxpayers. The Edmonton ring road has added $40 million to the total cost that is estimated for that road over a long period of time. I think it's a 30-year period of time that this figure has been discussed as what the additional cost would be instead of just borrowing the money and building the road.

With that, Mr. Speaker, hopefully, we can receive positive news on Motion for a Return 33, the same as we did with Motion for a Return 32. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister for International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation we will accept Motion for a Return 33.

I just want to add a few more comments, though. There was some question raised in terms of transparency with respect to small contractors. I'd like to add to the record that with respect to transparency there was a full third-party review of the transparency of the P3 project, the Anthony Henday, and it got full marks for how all parties were included in drafting the proposal.

In terms of small contractors they were all involved under the Alberta roadbuilders. They, as well, were very satisfied with the process and also know that over the next number of years in this province there will be a considerable amount of work given not only the amount of capital that will be going into the provincial infrastructure by the government of Alberta but also by the $3 billion that'll be going to municipal governments.

There is an issue, or perhaps an area, the opposition does not pay attention to, and that is opportunity lost. The sooner this road is built, the sooner we will add to the total competitiveness of the north-south trade corridor. A study that was done in Edmonton indicated that truck movements were 25 per cent less efficient. They can spend all of the money on the rest of the north-south trade corridor, but there is a bottleneck here. The sooner we get the Anthony Henday completed, the sooner we'll improve the competitiveness and, especially, the truck flow from Grande Prairie down to Montana.

It also provides tremendous savings in the staging of the construction. We're going to be hard-pressed on the human resources side and also the number of contractors. Then the contractor will stage the various components of this construction, whether it's the bridge, the dirt work, or the paving, at the most appropriate times and as a result will also add to the savings on this very, very important but large project.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Backs: Mr. Speaker, you know, I'm pleased to rise in support of this motion, and I think it, again, is an important motion to see which projects are being considered in this. I take interest in some of the comments regarding the construction of roads and roadbuilding.

There's been a long and well-established bidding process in roadbuilding, and I know the government works very closely with the Alberta Roadbuilders and Heavy Construction Association as mentioned by the previous speaker. It has had an open bidding process for decades that has worked to involve many players in the industry and to involve many of the small contractors. The incidence of P3s begins a process where many of them are not involved through that same process. Sure, there were a number that were brought into the Anthony Henday project, and the ring road project in general is something that must and should go ahead quickly. But does it have to be done under a P3? That is not necessarily I think determined.

There can be found to be other financing means that would be just as effective and more effective and more accountable to the taxpayer and in effect be a better deal for the taxpayer in the long run. Many jurisdictions have found difficulties with P3s. They are indeed rent to own in terms of roads.

Certainly, with the Anthony Henday and other parts of the ring road process, it's important that it's staged with, you know, the roadwork being done and the paving being done in different parts. Usually the paving is done after the roadwork, and the bridge is usually done before the paving as well, because there's no paving to be done if there's no bridge to be paved on.

But the notion of P3s – I think we have to take a considerable look at it in terms of: how is it really of value to the taxpayer? Does it save money, or is it just an expedient factor to try and ensure that the government is not going into debt in order to fulfill a political promise of no debt when, in fact, in many of these types of projects debt is something that happens over time?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to conclude debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity I look forward to receiving a list of all projects that are potential P3 projects being considered at this time by the government, and I appreciate the information.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 33 carried]

Appeals to Pensions Administration Corporation

M34. Mr. Miller moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all appeals received by the Alberta Pensions Administration Corporation for the fiscal years 1994-95 through 2003-04 inclusive.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since I was appointed as the critic for the Finance department, I have had many, many correspondences cross my desk outlining concerns with the appeal process and outlining concerns with the apparent lack of transparency of the appeal process. This caused me to ponder just exactly how many appeals are coming forward and what issues are being brought forward in those appeals; therefore, the motion for a return that the Assembly sees before it today.

I look forward to the response from the government. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Motion for a Return 34 as presented by the member opposite, I'm going to have to indicate on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance that this particular motion, unfortunately, has to be rejected, hon. member. I'm going to just briefly explain why.

The subject in question is copies of all appeals received by the Alberta Pensions Administration Corporation. In actual fact, Mr. Speaker, administrative reviews that are conducted by the public-sector pension plan boards on behalf of the Minister of Finance involve very personal information relative to the individual plan members. As members here would know, those documents related to those kinds of administrative reviews are subject to the protection of privacy provisions under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

We have to keep in mind, Mr. Speaker, that the FOIP Act cuts both ways. Yes, it's there to allow information to be accessed, but it's also there essentially to protect individual privacy. Therefore, this particular motion as worded will have to be rejected.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to conclude debate.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Needless to say I am somewhat disappointed that we're not going to be able to see this information from the government.

Quite clearly, as the hon. minister has pointed out, the FOIP Act does work both ways. Unfortunately, it seems to work far, far more in favour of privacy than it ever does in favour of freedom of information. I'm certainly not the only person that has raised that concern. In fact, I've often heard members from the opposite side make the same allusion.

So I'm certainly questioning the value, I suppose, of that particular act in the first place. Having said that, I would suggest that that particular office, the freedom of information and protection of privacy office, seems to be very, very good at blacking out personal information when we receive information from them. If that's the only concern, perhaps the minister and the government might consider releasing that information with the names blacked out because certainly we're not looking for the names of the individuals. What we're really looking for, as I had indicated, was the total number of appeal applications received and, in particular, the reasons for those appeals coming forward in the first place. That was the information we had hoped to receive. I certainly have no particular interest in the private information of those filing the appeals.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 34 lost]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

International Health Symposium

M35. Mr. Martin on behalf of Dr. Pannu moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing an itemized list detailing the honoraria, speaking fees, travel, and other expenses being paid to each of the speakers and presenters to the international health symposium being held in Calgary from May 3 to 5, 2005.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is great fanfare that we've announced this symposium. We were not supposed to talk about health care during the election because it was far too complicated for ordinary Albertans to understand. We were said to wait for the symposium, and we'll bring in all these experts and the so-called third way, which is a code word. We believe and we know that it is for more and more privatization. So I think it's incumbent that when the government says that health care is not sustainable and if we're going to spend a lot of money on so-called high-powered speakers, then surely we, the people of Alberta, have a right to know what the cost is in this.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the government would see the need to be transparent about this major initiative by the government.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to indicate that the government is prepared to actually accept this one, but I can't let the opportunity go by, given the comments I've just heard from the member opposite, because there are some inherent inaccuracies in the hon. member's perception of the health care system as it exists in Alberta.

Earlier today, for example, we heard about the wonderful announcement at the University of Alberta for the new Heart Institute, which commits $156 million of provincial taxpayer dollars toward a first, a one-of-a-kind in this province. The week before we heard an announcement of $577 million by the government of Alberta toward the health sciences and research centre at the university, and I could go on. But the key here is exactly the word the member mentioned and that is sustainability.

When it comes to this motion, which talks about a health symposium – and the purpose, in part, of that symposium is to look at ways that the health system, such as we know it, can be made sustainable so that it doesn't keep growing by 8 to 10 to 12 per cent across different jurisdictions for fear of collapsing under its own weight. Access, affordability, all of those things are part of that question.

This specific motion about the symposium talks about a process that we've put in place, which will be quite an open process, obviously, to look to find best practices and to take a look at what other jurisdictions are doing. We in this province are not closed-minded enough to think that we in Canada alone have all the solutions to those sustainability issues.

So, that having been said, I'm pleased on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness to accept this particular motion for a return as worded.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to complete debate.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly appreciate that we'll get the information, but I too would like to comment on the previous speaker's comments.

Almost all of us know that the name "the third way" came from Tony Blair in Britain, but it's become a code word. I think Albertans know this as well as anybody. The third way is more privatization. What else can it possibly mean? For the government to hide behind code words, the third way, this and that, and not be honest about their intention – and we believe the intention of this symposium is to highlight as much as possible the idea of more and more privatization. If you look at other parts of the world, some of the so-called privatization experiments by certain parties, certainly in Australia, which the Premier's talked about, they're backing out of them. They've been an absolute disaster. So we think that they're buying into a flawed system. No matter how you word it, more and more privatization leads us more and more to an Americanized system.

The idea that it's not sustainable. Of course, there are things we can do better in terms of the health care system. There's no doubt about that. The Member for Edmonton-Centre asked about midwifery. That would save money. There are ways that we can have a better system: community clinics, all sorts of ideas that can be done through the public system. We can have the alternate clinics. We can have cataract systems, that are costing us 10 per cent more in Calgary, done by the public system, as the Manitoba government has done, where they took over private companies and are actually making it work.

Mr. Speaker, the point that I make: the inflated dollars are a bit of a bogus issue too. The minister talked about that it can't be sustainable. If you look at the costs back in the '70s and with inflated dollars, it's really not that much more expensive today than it was then. That becomes just I believe a red herring so that we can move more and more, as this government has tried to do time and time again, towards private health care.

But in saying that, Mr. Speaker, at least we'll get the cost of this particular symposium, and we do appreciate that. Thank you very much.

[Motion for a Return 35 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Canmore Nordic Centre

M36. Mr. Martin moved on behalf of Dr. Pannu that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing details and costs of the construction upgrades at the Canmore Nordic Centre for the calendar year 2004 and to March 21, 2005.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reason that we brought this forward is that we're trying to get some handle on the figures. We notice that $2,801,000 was mentioned in the supplementary budget estimates, and that follows, of course, June 2004, when the now Minister of Education announced $16.5 million to upgrade the Canmore Nordic Centre in support of the bid to host a cross-country World Cup race in 2005. According to the Community Development website, the Canmore Nordic Centre is scheduled to be upgraded for the cross-country skiing World Cup in 2005. We're trying to figure out if the $2.8 million is in addition to the $16.5 million announced in 2004, and I guess following from that: have the costs of the upgrade increased?

We're trying to get this information, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This particular motion certainly touches a chord in my heart because, as the previous speaker just indicated, I was the one privileged enough to make the announcement along with our colleague from Banff-Cochrane. That was last year, and it was a great announcement for a very great project. The Canmore Nordic Centre is, of course, one of the wonderful legacy items from the Winter Olympics of 1988 in Calgary, which the Speaker and so many other members here are intimately familiar with, I know.

In this particular case, Mr. Speaker, what we found was that the world standards for cross-country skiing had changed. They have been updated significantly since 1988, and those particular premises had experienced a wearing down over the years, so it was deemed very advisable to improve them and at the same time to make sure that those construction upgrades catered to the new world standards and put that region of Alberta into the driver's seat for competing for the World Cup cross-country skiing, which the previous speaker just alluded to.

So that was done. Several kilometres of track have been improved. There may be some more tweaking to be done later this year and into the fall session. Different types of snow-making equipment might be required there, different tracking equipment, and so on. So there's quite a bit that had to be done.

The final thing I just wanted to mention for the member's comment here is that this summer in Edmonton we're hosting the World Masters Games. This will be the single largest participatory sport event in the history of Canada. We've got well over 14,000 athletes already signed up. Now, I only reference the World Masters Games for this summer because there is now also contemplated a World Masters Games for the winter, and Calgary and Banff-Canmore are going to be very much in the running, hon. members, as a result of the upgrades that are talked about in this motion.

So with that having been said, I'm very pleased on behalf of the hon. Minister of Community Development to indicate that the government is prepared to accept this particular motion as worded.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to conclude debate.

Mr. Martin: Thank you. I'm almost tempted to quit now while I'm ahead, but there are a number more to go.

I'm not arguing that these things don't happen, but it's interesting that when we talk about sustainability, some things are sustainable no matter what the cost; others aren't. I take it that the minister is saying that there still could be some further upgrades from what we know from the budget estimates.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 36 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Alberta Office in Washington

M37. Mr. Martin moved on behalf of Mr. Mason that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all memos and reports submitted to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations or his office by Murray Smith or any official at the Alberta office in Washington acting on Mr. Smith's behalf since Mr. Smith's appointment.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Smith went to Washington under great fanfare, and he's to do all sorts of wonderful things for the province, having the office in Washington. We're wondering what has happened so far. Certainly, the Premier's trip was a bit of a disaster in terms of the planning. We wondered what was happening with the BSE Montana court case where R-CALF surprised us all and won an injunction there.

It seems to me that Mr. Smith in Washington is certainly well paid, and there's certainly an office there that's sustainable no matter what the cost, if I could put it that way. So we would like some idea of what he's doing. From our perception here we don't see a lot happening.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you. Perhaps some of those questions that are raised by the hon. member can be answered this evening when we're in Committee of Supply.

Mr. Speaker, I will not be accepting this particular motion for a return. It requests documents that would be considered advice to the minister. They are documents that would be exempted under section 24 of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. There's also the added concern that release of any documents of this nature could potentially be harmful to our intergovernmental relations, as outlined in section 21 of the same act.

So, Mr. Speaker, for these reasons, unfortunately, I must reject this motion for a return.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to conclude debate.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, I probably should have quit while we were ahead with the first two.

I'm not surprised. I mean, FOIP seems to be sort of: whenever we want to use it, it becomes the reason. I'd say to the minister, though, that there has to be some accountability here. Here's a man making lots of money, taxpayers' money, a big office down there, and as I said, there was a great fanfare about what he was doing. It's not the government's money. It's not the minister's employee. This is an employee of the people of Alberta. Where is the accountability?

When one looks at the record – as I said, the Premier's trip, which wasn't well organized, and we see the BSE and R-CALF – we've got to wonder what's going on. What's the accountability for Mr. Smith in Washington? Now it's FOIP, I suppose, again. I think he's calling it cabinet solidarity or whatever they're calling it. I guess there's going to be no accountability for this person at all. How do we find out what is going on? That's the point, Mr. Speaker, that often with this government this is what happens: a Conservative friend, down in Washington, lots of money, and he's supposed to be doing great things. How do we ever know? Certainly, the record of what I'm seeing right now is not very much. [interjection] Yeah. I guess we'll find out when the next screw-up occurs.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 37 lost]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Meetings of Private Colleges Accreditation Board and Campus Alberta Quality Council

M38. Mr. Martin moved on behalf of Dr. Pannu that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the minutes from the Private Colleges Accreditation Board meetings for the calendar years 2000-2004 and January 1 to March 21, 2005, and the Campus Alberta Quality Council from January 1 to March 21, 2005.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my understanding that during this time the board did approve DeVry to offer academic programs. We also have concerns, as the minister is well aware, about the University of Phoenix and the university of Columbia. These minutes should be basic accountability measures. These meetings impact the public; the schools receive money; the minutes should be made public. Also, it's my understanding that these schools received money from HRE through their skills development programs. Again, we're getting caught in the proliferation of private institutions getting government money. We're trying to get some idea why the government did approve DeVry, for one thing, and what's happening with the other ones.

So I'm interested to see if the minister will accept this motion. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to request that the Assembly reject this motion. I had received advice that we could accept this motion, but then in doing so, we would have to temper our reply with a number of things. As I go through them, it's very clear that this is something which is more appropriately done by way of a FOIP request than here because of the nature of the review that needs to be done to the documentation. Again, as with an earlier motion for a written question I guess it was in that case, I could have just amended it to say: subject to the requirements of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. But I could not accept this question in the manner in which it's written.

The hon. member may well be aware of a FOIP request relating to a matter back in 2000. Maybe he or his colleague even were the people who put that request forward. I don't know. It was with relation to this type of an area, and as a result of that, I'm aware that there was a lengthy consultation and a review of the material, and certain portions of the records had to be excepted from disclosure under freedom of information.

The estimate on this one is that it will take about 30 days to review, and in doing so, portions would run afoul of the FOIP Act and, therefore, wouldn't be able to be released. So rather than having a motion for a return from the Legislature which requires the return of documents which might put us in a position of having to then violate the FOIP Act by releasing information because the Legislature would have ordered it released, it would be preferable to make this request in the FOIP process, and then the appropriate FOIP review could be done.

Now, I can say to the hon. member that the Campus Alberta Quality Council, which in addition to its own functions will be performing the functions that the Private Colleges Accreditation Board previously did, has the intention of posting its minutes on the website. So it'll be clear on a go-forward basis that the activities of the council will be public, that the minutes will be public, except, I suppose, in those situations where they might need to go in camera.

It's for that reason that I would suggest that this question should be rejected. There is an appropriate way for the information to be obtained, and we'd request that the hon. member proceed in that way.

Mr. Martin: I'm saying, I think, to the minister, Mr. Speaker, that then we're creating some policy problems here in how we get the information. It comes back to what I was talking about earlier. We're having a proliferation of private institutions. Some may be good; some may be bad. But we're having more and more of them. There doesn't seem to be a reasonable way that we can make them accountable, and this was just an attempt to see, you know: what's their charter, these sorts of things, and where do we go?

Maybe we can do it through FOIP, but if we're going to have to do everything through FOIP, it's time consuming. It costs a lot of money. Well, it does, but the reality is, Mr. Minister, that if we're going to put public money into these private institutions, there's got to be a better way for the taxpayers and for us in the Legislature to check on what's happening with them because there's government money flowing into them. It shouldn't be through FOIP or all the rest of it.

We get reports from the universities and the others, as the minister is well aware, and there's an accountability mechanism. I guess what I'm saying is: where is the accountability mechanism as we have more and more of these private institutions going in? They don't have the same accountability measures as public institutions. I would think, Mr. Speaker, that that should be a serious concern to the minister. How are we going to deal, if you like, with these hybrids? They're not private; there's public money there. How do we get to the accountability mechanisms? I would hope, then – we could try with FOIP, but as I say, he knows that that process is a very difficult one – that the minister is putting some thought into how we begin to deal with the accountability. If they want to be private, let them be private without public money, but even then we're accountable for certain standards in the province.

I think it's a serious matter, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 38 lost]

Southeast Edmonton Ring Road

M39. Mr. Martin moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all contracts and agreements signed between or on behalf of the government and the P3 consortium selected to construct the southeast Edmonton ring road.

Mr. Martin: Gee, one in my own name here. It's back to the P3 debate, Mr. Speaker. Now, I know we've had just even previously today a debate about P3s. We have the one P3 that we've been told by the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation we had to do, that we're not sure of the costs. It could be $41 million more or $3 million less, depending on whose figures you use. But the major reason I get is that they can do it quickly.

I've never understood that. If you want something to move quickly, under the traditional ways of doing contracts and tendering and bidding you can get it done quickly. What has gone from two years ago $350 million now is $449 million because we had to add some bridges and a few other things. Over the 30 years – I mean, they say that it's not a debt, but it's going to be $32.5 million a year – that's going to be over a billion dollars. We're told that this is the only way they could get it done. So we're asking, because this is a very expensive project, for a return showing what we're into. I think the government should even see that this should be public knowledge.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:50

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the comments from across the way and some of the questions raised and the information exchange and still further questions coming on this particular project, we're going to work extra hard to work with the opposition and get the information across. We probably won't be able to convince them, but we'll provide all that information to them.

So I'm very happy to indicate that the government is prepared to accept Motion for a Return 39.

Mr. Martin: We're back on the winning track here, Mr. Speaker.

Well, we probably will have another debate about P3s, no doubt about that. But I'm pleased that we will get that information in due course. Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 39 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Columbia College

M40. Mr. Martin moved on behalf of Dr. Pannu that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all correspondence, memos, letters, reports, minutes, e-mails, and studies concerning Columbia College for the calendar years 2001-2004 and from January 1 to March 21, 2005.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I think the purpose is self-evident. We're trying to get some accountability for some of the private institutions. So I'll wait and see what the minister has to say about this one.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to ask that the House reject this motion. There's no specific target or intent in this motion, so basically the result of it is to say: publish all the files that you have on, in this case, Columbia College. Well, the next question will be: publish all the files on the next college.

It would involve the release of all files in the department that relate to Columbia College for the period that's referenced, including those held by the private institutions branch with respect to the licensing of the college vocational training programs, those held by the public institutions branch with respect to access funding provided to Columbia College, those held by the former private colleges accreditation branch, those held by student finance with respect to students participating. It would take probably four months at least to go through and complete the documentation. The question isn't specific enough for us to be of any real assistance. Then, of course, that four months is just for compiling. That doesn't deal with the FOIP questions or the third-party information or protecting the interests under sections 16 or 25 of the FOIP Act.

In general, we have private institutions. At last count there were probably 148 institutions licensed under the Private Vocational Schools Act providing over 600 programs, often programs that are specific to a vocation; for example, hairstyling, acupuncture, commercial truck driving, health care, and information technology, all essential to the economy and to personal and professional needs.

Mr. Speaker, access to higher education is a broad area, and there's a wide spectrum of opportunities and access choices. I don't have any problem at all in making sure that the public has the widest information available to it, becoming informed and engaged citizens and charting the future approach there.

I would say that I have spoken with the hon. member who put forward this motion on the Order Paper and indicated a willingness to co-operate to make sure that he had access to information, that we would arrange an opportunity for him to meet with our director of private institutions to get information with respect to the processes and how it works and even, perhaps, to help narrow down the question so that we could actually find a question that we could legitimately answer in this process. The question is way too broad. In fact, as well, I understand the president of Columbia College has indicated, because it's specifically referenced in this motion, that he would be pleased to meet with the hon. member and provide him with information relating to the institution.

So there's no question that it would be very useful for the hon. member to educate himself about this particular institution and private institutions in general but not through the process of a scattergun, shotgun approach, saying: give us all the information you might have in government files on private institutions. That is just an inappropriate way to pursue information through Written Questions and Motions for Returns. We might as well just bring the files over from government and table them on the floor of the House and have them recatalogued, you know, documented, and put downstairs in the library. Well, that's not a good use of anybody's time or anybody's space, and that, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, is not what written questions and motions for returns are really for.

I want to put on the record that I am willing to co-operate with the hon. member who brought forward the motion. I had this discussion with him. I indicated to him that we would arrange for a meeting with the people in the appropriate branch so that he could raise his questions and they would be answered. As well, we went so far as to contact the institution named in this motion, and they indicated that they would be prepared to invite the member down.

Just while I'm speaking to this motion, I want to address the comments that were made by the hon. member with respect to the other motion because they're applicable to this one too, and that's the question of accountability. The fact of the matter is that the government does not fund private institutions per se. There is some funding that goes to not-for-profit, private institutions that offer accredited courses, that have gone through the course accreditation process.

That accountability framework has in fact been changed and, I think, strengthened so that through the Campus Alberta Quality Council there are two processes that an institution, whether public or private, has to go through if they want to give degrees or have programs that are publicly funded. They are, first of all, the process of having the Campus Alberta Quality Council review and ensure that they are capable of delivering the program, that the institution itself is sound and capable of providing the program that they're proposing to provide, and then, secondly, if that's found to be the case, to go back through and look at the program itself to make sure that the program is of a quality and nature as to warrant being offered and to provide the accreditation being offered for it. There is an accountability process there.

Of course, there's accountability for all public money that goes into that through our normal processes of government, and we certainly don't have any problem at all being accountable. We do have some problem as government being asked to be accountable for private, for-profit institutions. You know, they have to get permission to come in and offer their services, but when the government is not paying for their services – people in Alberta can look at them. It's a situation of saying: is what they offer what I want? There has to be some role for the individual involved in making an assessment as to whether or not it's an appropriate course for them. Obviously, as the Department of Advanced Education, while we can't protect everybody from everything, we want to make sure that the quality of educational opportunities in the province is of the highest order.

We're not held accountable for the financing of the private institutions except to the extent – and there's only one, I think. I think it's DeVry, actually, which offers an accredited course that qualifies for some modest public funding. There are eight private, not-for-profit university colleges, as we discussed in estimates, where we do provide some funding, albeit a modest amount, I think an additional $4 million in this year's budget to add the four institutions which weren't previously being funded.

There's no desire on my part or on the government's part to hold back useful information, but in the context of this question really it's such a broad-based question that it essentially says: go through and haul over all your files. If we complied with this question, then the next question would be with respect to one of the other, as I say, some 148 private institutions in this province. That's just a witch hunt, Mr. Speaker. That's not the appropriate way to go about it.

We're prepared to be co-operative. I have offered to be co-operative and provide access to the people who are involved in reviewing these situations and holding them accountable. Then if there are any specific requests that come out of that with respect to specific information, I'd be more than happy to try and do the best we can to make sure that that information is available.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to conclude debate.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would remind the minister that we were asking about one institution, not 148. That begs the other point. He says that there are 148 different institutions, and it's growing in this province. The minister sort of, I thought, was saying that there's not really any responsibility here, or at least limited responsibility, by the government in terms of this proliferation of private institutions. I would suggest that he alluded there is because they get student loans. That comes through the taxpayers' money. Some schools, at least, receive money from HRE through skills development programs. That's taxpayers' money.

It seems to me that if they're operating in the province, and they're advertising and saying, "This is the type of program that you're going to get," and you don't get that sort of program, surely there's responsibility on the government side to be monitoring whether there's adequacy of these programs. Even businesses have to do that for the Better Business Bureau and the rest of it. As I say, there's government money flowing to begin with in student loans and the rest of it. If people are setting up shop in Alberta, if they're purporting to offer a certain level of program, surely there has to be some obligation that we're checking that out. I can't believe that it's not.

I guess what I'm saying, then, to the minister is that I know that there has been a meeting with some of the people that he talked about already, and we're looking into that with our research department. We appreciate that, Mr. Minister. I'll take this back to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

I again stress that there is a growing problem – and I think it's going to begin to bite the government somewhat – with the proliferation, at least from what I'm hearing, of private institutions. There is some obligation on this government's part to make them accountable. I honestly believe that has to be the case. Otherwise, you're going to have a lot of fly-by-night outfits – I'm not saying that they're there now – taking government money through loans, leaving kids in disarray and not getting the program that they wanted. It's happening in some cases, and I'm sure it will come forward to the minister in a very short time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 40 lost]

Southeast Edmonton Ring Road

M41. Mr. Martin moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents that compare the cost of constructing the southeast Edmonton ring road using a private/public partnership versus the use of conventional public financing for its construction.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Maybe before I go on about that, the minister seemed to indicate that some of these might be accepted, so I'll wait and hear what he has to say before I conclude debate.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation we accept Motion for a Return 41. We'll be happy to provide the information.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to conclude debate.

Mr. Martin: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We'll save the debate for another time about how good P3s are or not, but I appreciate getting that information.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 41 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Correspondence in WCB Case

M42. Mr. Martin moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all correspondence, including letters and e-mails, between the Workers' Compensation Board and the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment pertaining to the case of Ana Gutierrez.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the reason for this, of course, is that the government has brought an amendment to the Workers' Compensation Act that directly is the result of this particular case. If we're asked to pass an amendment to the Workers' Compensation Act, we should have the information before this amendment is passed. So we think this should make eminent good sense to the government if they want this amendment passed.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister for Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to respond to Motion for a Return 42. I advise the Assembly that the government will be rejecting this motion for a return due to privacy rules in FOIP and because the matter is before the courts also. I believe the documents mentioned are best requested under FOIP, and government would be happy to respond in that manner.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This particular MR42, I think, is actually quite timely. It's an important issue, this case between the Workers' Compensation Board and the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment and any information they might have pertaining to the case of Ana Gutierrez. This case has seen the board rule in conflict of interest, and the actual justices in this particular case ruled that client solicitor costs to the full level of a hundred per cent, which is quite unheard of, would be awarded in this particular case.

The issue of conflict of interest, the issue of the ability of the board to intervene in these cases I think is something that is of great interest to many people in the community. Indeed, there's a bill before the House, Bill 15. Actually, much of that bill in its section 22 speaks to this issue. Many people in the community and certainly the Alberta Federation of Labour, some other groups, some contractors privately would not like to have their names named because they seem to say that they really do not want to be singled out in any way by the board, and that's disturbing.

The Ana Gutierrez case would be, in effect, if that bill was to go forward, deemed retroactive legislation to, in effect, kill that case, and that's also something that's very disturbing. The actions of the board in this matter seem quite arbitrary, quite willing to move without speaking to the interests of the workers and even the employers in this particular issue. The issue is how insurance claims are dealt with when the board has an interest, how the board can subrogate those claims, and how the worker, the employer, and the insurance company as well act or interact in the dealings with these issues that arise from this particular thing.

I think the motion is a good motion. I'm disappointed that the minister said that this would have to be FOIPed. I would hope that the member who is proposing this is able to get that information through FOIP without being forced to pay exorbitant costs, and I hope that he will share that information.

I do speak in favour of the motion, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to conclude debate.

Mr. Martin: Yes. Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess the minister said that one of the reasons he can't do it is that it's before the courts. Well, if that's the case, why are we dealing with Bill 15 in the Legislature now? What's the hurry with this? It is very dictatorial, very heavy handed, and it's got, as the Member for Edmonton-Manning says, a retroactive part to it. So the minister says that he can't give us this particular amendment because it's before the court, yet we have Bill 15 being foisted upon this Legislature at the same time. If it was that important that we can't talk about it because it's in the courts, why are we dealing with the amendment now that flows directly from this particular court case. The minister said it himself.

I would hope, then, at the very minimum that if the government is not going to give us this information if it's before the courts, this had better not go any further in terms of our debate here in the Legislature. It can't be both ways. It's either before the courts or it's not. If the minister says, "It's before the courts, and I can't give you this information," well, how can we deal with the debate on Bill 15 that flows directly from this particular case? It's one or the other, it seems to me.

So to the minister: I would hope, then, that we put a stop to any more debate on Bill 15 in the Assembly if it's before the courts, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 42 lost]

Labour Relations Practices Review Report

M43. Mr. Martin moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the government MLA, Member of the Legislative Assembly, committee report reviewing labour relations practices in the construction industry, including MERFing and salting, submitted to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment in late 2003 or early 2004.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a major issue with the building trades unions. Certainly, the Merit contractors are the ones that are saying – I believe wrongly, and the building trades deny it – that there should be evidence that there is salting going on. I don't think there's any evidence of it. If there is, I'd sure like to know. It seems just to be a pipe dream by the Merit contractors.

It seems to me MERFing is a legitimate way for the building trades to operate within their own union to build on contracts. It's a free society. It seems to me that this makes absolute sense in terms of bidding, but unfortunately CLAC and Merit contractors don't like an equal playing field. Regardless of that, this was a report done for the government, and I would hope that the minister would see that it should be submitted to the Legislative Assembly.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to respond to Motion for a Return 43. I am rejecting the motion for a return requesting "a copy of the government MLA, Member of the Legislative Assembly, committee report reviewing labour relations practices in the construction industry, including MERFing and salting." The Member of the Legislative Assembly report was submitted to the previous Human Resources and Employment minister I believe in the spring of 2004. I am reviewing the report and its recommendations. Many stakeholders have provided their input on labour relations practices, and their opinion must also be considered.

I appreciate the hon. member's interest in this matter, and I do intend to make the report and the government response public once I am done with my review.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've read the initial report. I haven't seen the review, of course, that might be contemplated by this question. I'm not exactly sure, but I know that the one report is on the ministry website from last year, and it speaks to MERFing and salting. Many people that I've talked to in the industry don't really consider these to be actually a problem and that they, in fact, can be a benefit to the industry in that they provide some continuity, the MERFing certainly, and the salting doesn't really exist.

Where there are cases of salting, I think they should be brought before somebody to see where they're in fact happening. To pass legislation would be very restrictive in a free and democratic society in many ways because I think you would be starting to infringe on the ability of individuals to go to work where they're working, the ability of individuals to get into certain workplaces through the restriction from some perceived salting behaviour.

What we see often in the construction industry is the movement by some contractors to act in an ideological manner to avoid the traditional building trades. Some of them are doing it for the purposes of trying to pay less or pay cheaper or pay no pension. To deal with these types of problems, there was the creation of the Merit shop contractors in the early '80s. It was an organization that was formed with the sole purpose of avoiding the traditional building trades. At the same time, there was a move to create an avenue or a vehicle through an existing rather small unit at the time called the Christian Labour Association, which was used for non-Christian purposes, realistically to avoid certification of some of these building trades organizations in order to not be working under their collective agreement terms and conditions. This has grown and been fostered.

We now have the Progressive Contractors Association, the PC Association so to speak, with the former Progressive Conservative Member for Edmonton-Calder in the last Legislature, actually, acting as their spokesman. They are, in fact, almost entirely contractors who are utilizing this tool to avoid the building trades organization called CLAC, or the Christian Labour Association of Canada. This particular practice is causing great consternation among many people in the construction industry that have been members of the traditional trades for many, many years and who value their trade, value their ticket, value the history of the organizations that they were involved with to get that and how, in fact, they have gained the benefits of their pension and their overtime and all the other many things that they consider to be part of their working life and, indeed, part of the history of this province.

What we see in these so-called problems of MERFing and salting: I think they're really nonstarters. They'd be very difficult to legislate against. I think you would see challenges against them, and I don't think that they're realistically a problem. Many of the contractors who do participate and are actively involved with the MERFing process are, obviously, in favour of these processes and do work within our economy. It would be, in effect, distorting the way that they deal with the market by trying to pass more laws, more legislation restricting the traditional building trades than we already have on the books today or the way that the laws and the legislation are interpreted through the way they have been ruled on in certain cases of the labour board.

I believe that this motion is in order, and I speak to it. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the time.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, in regard to Motion for a Return 43 I'm disappointed that we cannot receive this information. The government seems to be reluctant to release it. I can't understand why. These labour relations practices of MERFing and salting are in no way harmful. There are very few construction unions using the MERFing technique, but those that do use it successfully. Their members are anxious to see these practices continue. What the government MLA committee report wrote about in regard to these labour relations practices is of enormous interest to construction workers and to construction companies, both union and non-union, in this province.

Certainly, there have been a number of times in the last decade where the heavy hand of government was going to come down against these practices, and to date certainly it hasn't, and I would hope that it never does. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview talked about earlier, these are rights, these are freedoms, and these practices should continue.

Now, specifically with MERFing, there has been the notion put forward that this is unfair, but I believe it to be proven that to suspend the use of a MERF would be a violation of an individual's constitutional rights, as would be the whole idea of salting. Perhaps I could be proven wrong if this report was to be made public at the wish and the request of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. These practices have been well known but, unfortunately, misunderstood by the members opposite.

Ms Blakeman: Deliberately misunderstood?

Mr. MacDonald: I don't think we could go that far and say that it was a deliberate misunderstanding but certainly a misunderstanding. Perhaps it is deliberate, and one way of disproving that would be the release of this report, but that probably won't happen. Maybe I'll go to the library someday and I'll be looking around, and, voila, it will be there.

But there is no need of this, and I think the hon. minister could do a lot to foster and enhance positive labour relations by releasing this report and ensuring that we have stable, positive labour relations with the construction industry as we continue to build this province. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to conclude debate.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister said that he has it and that he's looking at it and that in due course, if I understood him correctly, he will release it along with his recommendations about it. Therein lies the problem because often by the time the government makes some of these practices and recommendations from the practices, it's too late. With this government, if I may say so, that's why the labour movement is concerned. They know the past history of laws that come from this particular government, that usually is not favourable to labour. So that's what the worry is.

We've talked about it before. The weakest labour laws in the country are right here in terms of fairness on the one side, and we're going through the whole division 8, with the labour code and how that relates. We've had that discussion on the foreign workers. We see the possibility of apprenticeship being cut back to 1 to 1 from 3 to 1 in certain trades. We hear more and more about MERFing. All we want to know is: what's in the report? What are the people saying? I mean, Merit contractors are talking about salting like there are hundreds of these labour people that go running into a construction site and do this and then leave again and then run into another site. Most people know it's patently ridiculous, but I hope the minister is not listening to that.

The MERFing, to me, is where an individual worker says, "My union says that to bid on this contract, can we get some movement on benefits that we're going to do?" and they get an agreement with the union. What could be fairer than that? What could be absolutely fairer than that? It's an individual choice by a worker working within a union contract so that they can compete on equal footing. Why are we even into this? Obviously, somebody got to the government before about the report. I hope it's not this minister. Now the minister is saying, "Well, I'll review it," and in due course we'll get the recommendations, but often in due course it's too late. They've already made up their mind, and that's a problem.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 43 lost]

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, May 2, 2005

8:00 p.m.

Date: 05/05/02

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

Hon. members, before we proceed with the business before us, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly the members of the Elder Advocates of Alberta Society. This organization is comprised of advocates on behalf of the frail, dependent, and elderly in our society. The Elder Advocates Society is here today to show their support for our motion regarding long-term care and seniors' rights. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions this evening. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Ireen Slater. Ireen is currently the vice-president of Seniors United Now central chapter. Ireen is the recipient of many awards for her tireless work in the community, including the United Nations International Women's Day award for exemplary service. She is here today in support of our motion on long-term care, and that's great.

My other set of introductions is much more of a personal one. I have my family: Genevieve, Ava, and Somboon Eggen. This is the nuclear family of the Eggens, the reason that I do all of the things that I do. They give me all of the support in the world, but they did wonder where I was going all the time in the evenings, so now they've followed me, and now they know. Ava, by the way, is collecting money for Jump Rope for Heart. Her school is the very top school for donations for jump rope, the Heart and Stroke Foundation. Every year they raise the most money in the entire province of Alberta. You might see something like this coming by you this evening; you never know. I would appreciate your support. Could everyone rise and please receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Long-term Care Standards

507. Mr. Mason moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to take immediate steps to improve the quality of care provided to Albertans living in long-term care facilities by improving staffing ratios, introducing enhanced standards for long-term care facilities, and implementing more frequent and rigorous facility inspections.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to briefly speak to the motion. I was telling my son after supper – he asked what I was doing in the Assembly tonight – a little bit about this issue. When I told him some of the conditions that seniors are forced to endure in a long-term care facility, he was concerned, and I think he was also, frankly, skeptical that it could be as bad as it was.

Now, some of the stories that we have heard from people who have looked into this that have travelled and visited nursing homes – and Lynda Jonson has visited over 100 facilities in this province – are shocking and, in fact, hard to believe at first. The fact that people would get at most one bath a week, that they would not have their sanitary needs taken adequate care of, that there would be bedpans that were not emptied, that the facilities were unclean: these were all shocking to him, and he was a bit skeptical. When I said that in some cases people weren't even being adequately fed in the facilities, he frankly didn't believe it.

Mr. Speaker, when I heard some of this stuff for the first time, I was also skeptical. I felt that it was perhaps being exaggerated, but the more we look into it and the more we hear from people, we realize that, in fact, these conditions do take place right here in Alberta, and they're not rare. They're relatively common.

Of course, I want to indicate that it really has to do mostly with staffing levels. Most of the staff, almost all of the staff that work in our long-term care facilities are in fact dedicated, caring people who try to do the best with what they have for the people, but there are just not enough of them.

Mr. Speaker, the fact is that there are no legislated standards in this province for people in long-term care. There are no staffing standards at all for designated assisted-living facilities. More and more beds are being built as assisted-living beds, not nursing home beds where there is some minimal standard.

The case that we've seen in Camrose at the Bethany care centre is a good example. It was redesignated from a nursing home to an assisted-living facility. As a result of that, eight registered nurses were let go by the facility on January 31, 2005, and the result is that there is no longer enough staff to provide minimal care. That has directly led to the issue that we've seen where Marie Geddes, an 86-year-old diabetic, began a hunger strike to protest what she considers to be a severe staffing shortage in care homes around the province. She has since ended that strike, but the support for her cause continues to grow. Most recently the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees added its voice to the growing criticism of the nursing home situation in this province.

Mr. Speaker, I would hope that we would all agree that we need to have higher standards in care. Right now the province has required 1.9 hours of care per patient. The standard that we need to aim for is four. I hope that we can move to increase the standards so that people receive the care they need.

Another aspect, Mr. Speaker, is the question of inspections. I was shocked to learn that, in fact, there are no guarantee that nursing homes in this province will be inspected at least annually. Sometimes in many cases they receive an inspection in only two or three years, and that is unacceptable.

What we need, clearly, are stronger standards for staffing levels, inspections to ensure sanitariness and cleanliness in the facilities and to ensure that people are not abused. We need to have, in my view, as well, councils of people who have relatives in care that can act as advocates for people within those facilities, and we need to have adequate training for people who are involved in the provision of this care.

You know, we like to talk about seniors and the contributions they've made and how they built the province. All of that is true, but we also need to remember in their declining years that they have made a contribution to this province. We should not be turning our backs on them. In fact, we should honour them and treat them with the dignity that we also would expect for ourselves and for our loved ones. That, I think, is the direction that we need to go.

I would ask, then, for support from members of the House. We've tried to present this in a way that's positive, that isn't pointing fingers, and in a way that will make a difference, we hope, if the political will is there, for the seniors of our province. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Good evening, Mr. Speaker, and thank you. I would like to make an amendment to the hon. member's motion to more accurately reflect some of what is already occurring and maybe to remove or correct some misleading language in the motion. I believe the hon. member's intent is admirable, and I think all members of this House truly do care and want to see that our seniors are looked after in a way that respects their dignity and their ability to live the quality of life that they deserve.

I'll just wait till the amendment has been passed out, and then I'll proceed.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, you may proceed.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we strike out the word "immediate" and substitute it with the word "further"; that we strike out the words "improving staffing ratios, introducing enhanced" and substitute that with the words "reviewing staffing levels and"; lastly, that we strike out the words "implementing more frequent and rigorous facility inspections" and substitute that with the words "ensuring that frequent and rigorous facility inspections continually occur."

Without question the Alberta government cares deeply about those people who are living in long-term care. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood would have some believe that they are the only ones who care about the residents in Alberta's long-term care facilities, and that is simply not true. Politicizing individual residents in long-term care is not something that you will hear any member on this side of the House do tonight or ever.

I would like to remind members that it was this provincial government that brought forward the Healthy Aging: New Directions for Care report in 1999, also known as the Broda report. It was the Alberta government that brought forward the Protection for Persons in Care Act in 1998. It was a previous PC government that brought in the Health Facilities Review Committee Act in 1978. It was the former Member for Calgary-West, a member of the government side, that brought forward Motion 506 in 2001 to identify palliative care as a core service. It was also the Alberta government that in its most recent budget set aside $10 million in additional funding specifically to increase paid hours of staffing in long-term care facilities.

All of this being said, I listened very intently to the hon. member's opening remarks, and I have read his motion very carefully. It reads:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to take immediate steps to improve the quality of care provided to Albertans living in long-term care facilities by improving staffing ratios, introducing enhanced standards for long-term care facilities, and implementing more frequent and rigorous facility inspections.

The problem I have with this motion is not its overall general intent. We are already doing most of this. But I do have a problem with some of the words that this member has proposed.

The first line currently is to "urge the government to take immediate steps." Well, Mr. Speaker, as much as we all would absolutely love for the government to be able to snap their fingers and see any and all issues immediately resolved, that just isn't reality. I guess we shouldn't be surprised. Reality is not something on which the hon. member always has a firm grip.

Even if the government decides that they wanted to increase the number of staff members in long-term care facilities tomorrow, it would take considerable time to find, train, and hire the requested staff. We already have a health care worker shortage in Canada. You can't just pull workers out of your hat, as some members might believe.

I also take issue with some of the wording regarding staffing ratios. Ratios talk about the number of workers per resident. I'm not sure why we would use this as a measure of how well we are doing. You could pack a long-term care facility full of employees and still not see the levels improve.

The government has decided to focus on actual patient care rather than a ratio of warm bodies. This government has also made a commitment of moving from the current level of an average of three hours per day per patient care to 3.4 hours of care per patient per day by 2006-07. This is a significant increase. With over 14,000 residents in long-term care that is an additional 5,600 hours of care per day, and that could require some 700 additional employees.

I also have a problem with the wording that the government should implement "more frequent and rigorous facility inspections." The Alberta Health Facilities Review Committee has already done some stringent standards and conducts many inspections every year. I do believe this is something that needs to be commended and continued, but to suggest that this needs to be implemented would say that we don't already have rigorous and frequent inspections, which we do.

Mr. Speaker, I was a very proud member of the Health Facilities Review Committee for close to three years with the former hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, and I know that the people that sit on that committee were as caring, as diligent, and as compassionate as any people that have sat on a board anywhere in this province. The scope of their investigations included but weren't limited to

- Care and treatment of patients or residents that respects both their privacy and dignity.
- Opportunities that permit well-informed and independent choices.
- Accommodation that is comfortable, clean and safe.
- Professional and support staff who are caring and accessible.
- Diagnostic and therapeutic services as well as rehabilitative and recreational programs that are accessible to patients and residents.

Also, to work with

- Volunteer and community groups who are involved and provide support.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on to the number of inspections they reported every month there, but with a team of about 11 inspectors working close to 14 or 15 days a month – many of the facilities took several days, three or four days in some of the larger ones and some just one day – the reports came back and they were portrayed as people who knew what to look for, who knew who to talk to, who knew how to find out how the people were being cared for, and I believe the members on this committee deserve more respect than the inference that they aren't doing a diligent and very good job for the seniors in this province.

Mr. Speaker, while I do have a few problems with the motion, it's not all bad. Most of what is being urged in the motion is already being done or already under way by the government, certainly a work in progress. We are already working to improve the quality of care for the residents of long-term care facilities. We are already increasing the number of hours of care provided. The Minister of Health and Wellness is looking at updating our standards, and the rigorous inspections are continuing throughout the province.

I believe this amendment will more accurately reflect the practices that are in place already while still reminding us that we must continue to take strides to make the best system in Canada even better. On behalf of all the seniors in Alberta I would urge all members to support this amendment. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with some interest to speak to the amendment from the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. I'm pleased in some sense that he is supporting, presumably his caucus as well, some spirit of the motion that my fellow caucus member put forward. I think that it's important for us to make some differentiation here between certainly the wording of the amendment and how it changes the spirit of Motion 507, that we, you know, spent quite a bit of time and effort and consultation to put forward.

I think that, first of all, each of the government members in this House would agree of the importance of looking after seniors in our province and, indeed, anywhere in the world. It's an important thing to look after people who are least able to look after themselves, and while we sometimes forget that in the middle of our lives with some degree of power and independence over our actions and our futures, we begin our lives requiring care, and we certainly end our lives requiring care. I myself fully intend to and look forward to becoming a senior in this fine province, as I'm sure most hon. members here do as well. I want to make sure – this is on a very, very selfish note – that we have absolutely the best care possible for everyone in these places. Because you know what? We're all going to end up in one of these places, right?

It's very important when you walk into an extended care facility – and I've been to many, many of them – that there is a caring, dare I say, a loving and a healthy sort of situation for our seniors to be in. We require, we expect that for our parents, and I think that we would expect that for ourselves. So please remember what we create here several years hence down the road will be the place that you might end up in. So perhaps there might be some degree of enlightened self-interest, in the fine words of Alexis De Tocqueville or someone like that, that would motivate us to build the very best extended care facilities that we can afford here in this province.

Since we're looking for support with the amendment, I'm certainly not entirely opposed to, I guess, the spirit of wanting to have adequate staffing levels or to review improving staffing levels. I guess you're moving it to "reviewing staffing levels." I think that it's important to understand what the reality of this province is in terms of staffing levels and supervision at this time. By no means are we bringing this motion forward to be critical of the fine work that people do in extended care facilities often understaffed, often overworked, and I daresay often without the guidance of clear principles from this Legislature to ensure minimum standards and to encourage exceeding those minimum standards.

My own wife, who is here this evening – and I'm not grandstanding for her by any means – is, in fact, an extended care worker. She is a health care assistant who has worked in these facilities for many years. In the various places that she's worked, I've seen varying standards of care; that's for sure. She fills my own anecdotal evidence with plenty of stories, you know, both positive and, unfortunately, sometimes negative as well. I think that we can do better, and I think that the first thing to do is to set clearly defined goals of what those minimum standards should be that equate to adequate service for every single person in this province in extended care.

I think we need to legislate requirements for the number of nursing staff and staff-to-resident ratios. Currently Alberta has no minimum requirements for nursing and general staffing ratios. I think that I heard some noise about bringing it up to 3.2 hours a day. I think that we require at least four hours of nursing care per day.

An Hon. Member: What makes you an expert?

Mr. Eggen: I've got plenty of experience and plenty of people that I've spoken to, thank you very much.

I think that the 1.9 per health care resident per day, our minimum requirement, is well below 4, and certainly we have the capacity to fill the ranks of people who are willing to do this sort of thing. It's a question of training, and it's a question of paying and having the will to do so. It's not an expensive thing relative to the care and the output that you get. Often nursing care attendants and LPNs are people who will give out extra anyway because they're of a caring nature. So by giving them some latitude and allowing more care, you in fact get more than the minimum, which is what we see right now. People are in desperate circumstances, and they can't have enough hours in their shift to get through more than 1.9 hours of nursing care per person per day.

Standards, qualifications, and training for staff I think are needed as well. Alberta has no legislated standard qualifications for health care aides who do otherwise provide most of the day-to-day personal and nursing care to residents. Okay? We have some excellent training programs throughout the province, and certainly it attracts more and more very first-rate and caring and interested individuals, but without a bottom line of standards it's very difficult to measure and it's very difficult to evaluate.

Let's not forget that when we're talking about extended care, we're talking about an arm of our overall health care system, and until we are honest about the way in which we evaluate any changes or even what the current state of our health care system is, then anything else is just experimentation. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that experimentation on our own citizens, especially our own senior citizens, is nothing short of irresponsible. So to put those minimum standards in place and legislate them here is our job. That's what we're meant to do here, and this is what this motion is encouraging.

Finally, we must take inspection and enforcement more seriously. Again, the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster made a very impassioned sort of plea for the people who are doing the inspections, but there are simply not enough of them. We need more inspectors, and we need to have a schedule by which each health care facility is inspected on a regular basis. That doesn't happen now, and it's something, again, that we can do here in this Legislature.

Unfortunately, a senior citizen had gone on a hunger strike in Camrose. This is an extreme manifestation of the frustration that many people across this province feel, the workers and the seniors in extended care facilities and the families that have their senior members in these facilities. I think that there is a tremendous amount of love and compassion and support that comes from extended care facilities. It's a place that, I confess, I enjoy visiting more than any other part of my constituency, but it's also a place where you can see the limitations of what we have put forward here as a Legislature, as legislators, the limitations that have a direct effect on the quality of people's lives.

For us to compromise the quality of people's lives, especially towards the end of their lives in their golden years, I think is something we need to look back on. I think that we need to swallow some of our personal differences that we might have from this motion coming from this side of the floor and rise together to create something better for everyone. So while I have some reservations on this amendment, just with the language, I encourage all of us to support the spirit of Motion 507. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. In speaking to the amendment and speaking to the attitude in general, I would ask the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster to shave some of the criticism off and comments like references to "reality," which I see as a form of ridicule. Every time we as a collective group stand and try and put forward an alternative, it should be given the dignity of a full debate. It concerns me that every time a suggestion comes from this side of the House, it is somehow viewed as a less valid alternative or having no basis, as the case was commented tonight, in reality.

We're all elected. Every one of us represents somewhere between 35,000 and 40,000 constituents. They expect us to work together for the betterment of this province. Every time we come up with a suggestion or a potential solution, I wish that the ideas were at least greeted with respect if not the members who suggest them.

You all are aware of my teaching background. If I went into my classroom with the type of attitude and type of demeaning circumstance which seems to resonate in this House, I would have no respect from my students. In question period there's a rivalry here. There's desk pounding. There's a degree of taunting and so on. I don't agree with it, and neither does the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, but that's a tradition. The tossing of insults back and forth when a motion or a bill is introduced I think should have a higher level.

With reference directly to the amendment, the amendment wants to strike out "immediate" and substitute "further." How much further do we have to wait for action to be taken? A number of groups have commented about: when is the process going to result in improvements?

The Auditor General, Mr. Dunn, agreed last spring to look into long-term care conditions, facilities, staffing ratios, and so on. Because of what I consider to be a premature election call in the fall, his report was not brought to this parliament. We're still waiting for that report. Hopefully, when the recommendations are provided by the Auditor General, this House will work immediately – I'll use the initial word – to institute the reforms that he is suggesting.

"Further" just means add on. It doesn't deal with the immediacy of what seniors are currently experiencing, and it's not experiencing at the hands of staff who, for the most part, are caring. It's the number of them and the fact that they don't have the time to give the patient care that is required.

Let's look at (b). It says, "reviewing staffing levels." The Auditor General, again, will have done that review. It is gravely apparent that we are understaffed. I don't see how there could be any argument about that staffing ratio. What I would invite each and every member to do if they haven't been in a seniors' facility lately, whether it be a high-end or a lower end facility, is go in there. Don't just do a quick tour of the room. Visit a senior, particularly one in a ward where dementia is frequent, and spend some time with the wife or the daughter or the son who is there with their senior, suffering great difficulties. Possibly, a larger degree of empathy could be achieved.

With regard to the (c) amendment, what was asked for was "implementing more frequent and rigorous facility inspections." Implementing, ensuring. "Ensuring" to me doesn't – unless you build in how you're going to ensure that these rigorous facility inspections continually occur, I support the initial wording of "implementing." I would like to add some stronger language myself, such as guaranteeing and putting a timeline and a regular inspection expectation, but I'm very hopeful that the Auditor General will have a comprehensive report and, when that report is finally in this House, that it will be greeted with support and enacted.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't going to speak to this amendment. I wasn't sure of the exact protocol, if I could make comments about it in the comments that I wanted to make on the motion itself, so I will just make a very brief comment about the amendment. I really feel that this amendment is strictly verbiage to help the other side feel less guilty and responsible for 86 year olds going on hunger strikes.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else on the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was one of the fortunate people who worked with the Health Facilities Review Committee for a number of years. I chaired the committee and worked with citizens from all over the province who took their duties very seriously, who were all severely normal Albertans, who saw problems as they were, real or imaginary, and reported back, and subsequent actions were taken.

Possibly one of the things that has changed – this was in my first term, and of course I'm now on my fourth term, so it's been a while – over the years is the case mix, and the severity of illness or acuity of illness may have changed. But I do recall that back in the days when I was chairing that committee, if there was any concern whatsoever with respect to staffing levels, one could request the health department to go and do an audit of acuity to see if, in fact, the case mix in that facility was such that it would require additional staffing. So it's not at all like some people would like others to believe, that nobody looks at these things and there aren't standards.

The fact of the matter is that if the people across the way feel that, you know, you need a minimum of four hours in terms of staffing levels, well, in which facilities? They're all different. They all have a different case mix. They all have different acuity. Many of them are in fact reverting back to something that is closer to a lodge and not necessarily a long-term care facility, and from what I'm hearing from across the way, that doesn't seem to matter.

I guess the big thing is that governments typically operate putting things in pigeonholes, and if the pigeonhole doesn't fit, then you've got problems. I'm more for flexibility. If a facility requires more help because of the type and mixture of cases that are there, then, fine, provide it. If a facility requires less service because of the type and mix of, you know, people who are there and how ambulatory they are and whether or not they eat by themselves – they don't have to be fed – all of these kinds of things, then I think that a facility like that should have the flexibility. I'm going to support the amendment because I don't think that hard-and-fast rules are what work in this kind of situation.

Now, with respect to the inspections, I felt, when I was there, that one of the best aspects of that whole thing was unannounced inspections; in other words, the facility didn't know when you were coming. It almost sounds to me, from listening to what I'm hearing from the other side, like they want regularly scheduled inspections so that, you know, you've got time to get yourself shipshape for the inspectors. Well, I'd much prefer unannounced kinds of inspections because then you get to deal with the people who are there on that particular day – the visitors, the relatives, the friends – and you get to see a little more reality.

I think that the amendments that were brought forward by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster are quite appropriate. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else on the amendment? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First off, I'd like to say that I presently have the honour of being the chair of the Health Facilities Review Committee, and I'd like to say a few words about the work that this committee does. The mission of the Health Facilities Review Committee is to ensure that quality of care, treatment, and standards of accommodation are maintained in these health facilities throughout Alberta. This committee is responsible for conducting regular and, as the previous speaker mentioned, unannounced routine visits at hospitals and nursing homes for the purpose of reviewing and inspecting them and for investigating complaints about care, treatment, and standards of accommodation made for and on behalf of individual patients and residents in these facilities.

This committee is currently responsible for 216 facilities in the province, and, as was mentioned, they conduct routine reviews approximately every 18 months to three years, depending on the current financial, committee, and staffing resources. The reviews are always conducted unannounced, and a specific time frame is not announced to enable the committee to vary its visiting schedule so members are not expected when they visit. The number of reviews per year can vary depending on the number and complexity of complaint investigations being carried out in any one fiscal year.

This committee is hard working and is committed to obtaining feedback from the users of the system. There really are several mechanisms in place to evaluate the effectiveness and performance of Alberta's health care facilities, but the committee's unique perspective, I feel, through the collection of feedback directly from users of the system, is an invaluable and critical part of the overall program delivery and accountability.

I think I'd like to take this opportunity, too, to thank the various stakeholders and advocacy groups who continue to lobby the government and who provide valuable feedback about the health care delivery system, its deficits and its areas for improvement, through the expression of their concerns. We take these concerns very seriously and are striving to work with the system to address these.

I think we're working hard to improve our own processes and the quality and the content of our reports in order to become even more effective in our work. We take any feedback and concerns expressed very seriously and are committed to doing the best job possible on behalf of Alberta's citizens.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: I just want to be clear, Mr. Speaker. Your guidance: I am entitled to speak to the amendment as well as the main motion?

The Acting Speaker: We have an amendment on the floor, and the hon. member can speak to the amendment. When we revert back to the motion as amended, you have already spoken at that stage, so you will not be able to speak.

Mr. Mason: So I would just close then.

The Acting Speaker: No. You're not closing debate right now. You are speaking on the amendment. We haven't voted on the amendment as yet.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Okay, thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, you will also receive the five minutes to close debate.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you. That's what I wanted to be clear. I just wanted to deal with this amendment, Mr. Speaker. I don't support the amendment, and I think there are some good reasons for this.

It seems that the government wants to expunge from the motion any implied criticism that they may not have done an exemplary job in this area, and that seems to be the purpose of the amendment. The purpose of the amendment seems to be to find a way to not vote against the motion but to pretend that everything is absolutely just exactly the way it should be. Some of the language, for example, is to take "further" steps to improve the quality, and "reviewing" staff levels instead of increasing them is a bit of a problem.

I want to respond to some of the comments made by the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont. He says that we need flexibility because each institution is different and there's a different level of acuity and the care mix is different in each one, so flexibility is required. In saying that, he's implying that these are the factors that are taken by the operators of long-term care facilities when they reduce their staff. I think that that's absolutely incorrect, Mr. Speaker. They have economic reasons for reducing staff and funding reasons for reducing staff. It is simply not a question of matching the staff to the patients, or we wouldn't have some of the problems that we've been hearing about. So the flexibility he's talking about is really the flexibility of the people operating these facilities, in many cases private owners who reduce staff below what really is necessary.

He also tries to imply that we're promoting regularly scheduled and previously announced inspections, and there's nothing that we've said or nothing in the motion that would lead any reasonable person to believe that. Of course, there should be surprise inspections, but there need to be inspections on a frequent basis. In fact, if you go to 2000-2001, that year only 56, or 32 per cent, of the province's 176 long-term care facilities actually received an inspection. That's the problem, Mr. Speaker.

So here's the difficulty with the amendment. I think that it's really a straightforward motion, Mr. Speaker, and it's positive. It focuses on improving things in the future. I think the government is simply watering it down far more than is really necessary.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise and speak to this motion. I support the amendment to the motion, and I also support the spirit of this motion. I guess I'd like to make a few comments. I agree with the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont in the fact that I feel it's sad and disheartening to think that we live in a time when society thinks we can be protected by more rules and regulations and having to get everything down to a certain hour, a certain cost.

It goes back to, I guess, one of my basic beliefs in that we need to hire good people to manage these facilities and let them have the ability to make those decisions if they need extra staff because they have four seniors who have come in that need extra time as opposed to four that are working fairly well. I think what's important – and it will be reiterated again many times tonight, I'm sure – is the spirit that we do need to improve the level of care that we are giving, that there are times when the staffing is short and they struggle to provide the care that is maybe necessary, and they can fall back on their regulations and say: "Oh, but we did this once a week. We met our standards." We need to put, like I say, more of an onus on the actual operator of those facilities and to have them actually manage them to the best of their capability.

We seem to get stuck on the fact that we need to see the letters behind a person's name to see whether or not they're qualified, and we have to see whether or not they're part of a union and whether or not they can work there. We continue to put ourselves in these pigeonholes that basically stop us from giving the care and the attendance that we need to give to these seniors.

So I hope that we'll continue to have an open and honest discussion. The fact is that the inspections need to be improved, it sounds like, but keep them spontaneous so that they can show up and do that. Perhaps the area that seems to be hit the most is that we don't have the inspections there. So I hope that this motion will go forward and that we'll be able to improve the care and the attendance for our seniors in our facilities here in the province.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder – sorry, Edmonton-Decore, did you want to speak on the amendment?

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: You need a name tag.

Mr. Bonko: Yeah. I think I have a name tag. Thank you.

I think this is very timely. We do have that one particular case that is, in fact, out there in the rural area. Speaking on behalf of the residents within Edmonton-Decore, I have two long-term care facilities. One would be the Dickinsfield extended care centre, and I also have an Alzheimer's centre, not to mention that we could certainly use more facilities of those types. But just in speaking of those two in particular, I've toured those, and I've been inside. In fact, I've had grandparents, both grandparents, that were in fact within facilities, and I can only speak on what I've seen. Certainly, the staff do have compassion and they do care, but I think we have to recognize that the levels certainly could be increased with regard to the amount of people.

If we look at how much we give our pets as well as care, it in no way equates to the amount that we give to the seniors. We treat our pets with more dignity than we do our seniors, unfortunately, and I agree with that statement wholeheartedly. When we talk about the fact that we give revenues and that they're earned by the gaming commission at Northlands Park and we don't give that sort of money to the seniors, is that because they're no longer valid and no longer contributing members of our society because they aren't in fact earning a paycheque? That's unfortunate when we look at it like that.

I mention the other member who, in fact, had said that these people have contributed to Alberta in a meaningful and a significant way. Eventually we're all going to be there; it's just a matter of fact. I would hope that when we do put some of these provisions forward, we don't continue to amend them, that we do have some long-term vision with regard to what we are going to need over the next 20 years. The system is certainly going to be stretched to its maximum capacity to be able to accommodate the amount of boomers that are coming through there.

I would like to see standards that won't have to be continually amended but are going to be amended because we do have some sight with regard to what we're going to need not only three or four years from now but 10 years from now and start making the necessary arrangements to have standards for those people as well as monitoring in place to ensure that we don't have concerns being raised on a daily basis. There might be the odd particular piece with regard to an individual basis, but overall we need to ensure that there are, in fact, standards that can be palatable to all the groups as well.

I think I would support the motion as it reads currently. I don't have any problems with regard to seeing some of the amendments in there. I think Motion 507 sits fine as it is then, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Acting Speaker: On the motion as amended, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In case you smell burning in here, it's probably the smoke coming out of my ears. I'm just a tad excited.

In answer to something that may come over from that side, yeah, I am an expert. I've fed people, I've wiped bottoms, I've hugged and kissed, I've put people to bed, and I've held the hands of people that died. This is a very timely issue that must be addressed. I'm delighted that the member has brought this motion forward because I have Bill 213 waiting in the lineup, and in all likelihood it wouldn't make this session, so I'm pleased that this is coming forward and that I can at least talk about it.

I really believe this has to be more than a debate. There has to be action on the part of this government, and my bill would be more comprehensive in that the staffing problem is not confined to what we seem to be talking about and understanding as long-term facilities. It has to be discussed in terms of anyone receiving long-term care regardless of where they live, be it long-term facilities, lodges, assisted living facilities, designated living facilities, or group home facilities for the mentally or physically disabled. We can put all the fancy names that we want on bricks and mortar, but bricks and mortar have nothing to do with care. It's actually this government that had mandated, when these new lodges and new facilities were being built, that everything had to be private rooms. Therefore, the space was much bigger, and the staff didn't meet that bigger space requirement. Bricks and mortar have nothing to do with care, responsibility, and dignity for the persons living in these facilities.

There appears to be a huge disconnect between this government's obsession with the bottom line and the dignity of humanity. When an elderly couple has been married for, say, some 40 years plus – and in an example that I have personal knowledge of, this couple had been married for 72 years. They were living in a lodge, and the husband was taken to hospital. It was clear that he could not return to the lodge as his acuity of care needs were more than was provided for there. So to wait for a bed in a long-term facility, he was transferred to an outlying town in hopes that later there would be space in the town he came from to be near his wife. This action, of course, was based on the first available bed policy. In the meantime, the wife was crying practically nonstop because she was legally blind, very frail, and she kept repeating: I just know he's going to die before I see him again and say good-bye. Believe me, I listened with no answers.

There are certain levels of care for each person, and I know how difficult it is to manage, but keeping our seniors together that really need these different levels of care isn't even being discussed.

Presently there's a government initiative to have care workers in long-term care facilities given a 12-hour course and then obtain a certificate. This is not what I would consider updated standards. It's all well and good and probably expensive, but it does not address the real problem of staffing levels.

One of the important questions is: who gives out the medication, and who is qualified to do so? Having the staff of any care facility or staff working with those still living in their homes ensure that the red and blue pill is given at noon and has been taken from a blister pack prepared by a pharmacist is just not good enough. People trained to recognize adverse reactions, either instantly or over a period of time, is crucial. How much time and money is wasted at any care facility when in the case of an emergency, real or not, 911 is called because the staff cannot handle the situation?

All of that aside, I'd repeat from my maiden speech the importance of the dignity of the vulnerable in our society. It takes time, and time is money.

Alberta's long-term care legislation is badly outdated. We need to replace the Nursing Homes Act and certainly strengthen the Protection for Persons in Care Act. In fact, it is my opinion that there are no teeth at all. The Broda report has been in the making six years, and the government has yet to pursue new legislation.

Motion 507 identifies staffing ratios as an area of major concern. Alberta's minimum staffing standards are among the lowest in the country. My bill would ask that there be established recommended codes of practice for long-term care. Again, I want to reiterate that long-term care means anybody that is in care that is requiring chronic care, not just in what we traditionally know as long-term care facilities.

Also, in Bill 213 I would propose that there be a selected special standards of care committee established consisting of seven members of the Assembly, and I would of course like to see that all parties were included in that.

Motion 507 requires a commitment to interdepartmental co-operation and collaboration. At the same time, it's essential to identify which department is accountable. In my mind, I think that's one of the problems. Part of the care and responsibility is in Seniors and Community Supports, and the other part is under Health. I know these two departments do attempt to work together, but I think that something seriously has to be looked at instead of dividing off these responsibilities.

Improving the quality of life for seniors in long-term care involves setting standards for staffing qualifications and introducing a system for province-wide licensing and monitoring requirements for long-term care. The province-wide licensing I think is very important as we move further and further into the privatization of the delivery of care for the vulnerable people in our society.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else on the motion as amended?

If none, I'd recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Although I am disappointed that the motion has been considerably watered down by the amendment, I think that there's a saying – and I'm sure it's not Alexis de Tocqueville – that half a loaf is better than no loaf at all. I've not had the experience yet in this Assembly of having the government actually pass one of my motions.

I think, you know, there are some positive things to be found in this. I'm assuming that once they amend a motion, they're going to vote for the motion as amended. But you know what? I've been disappointed so many times before.

I want to be a little bit specific. I want to be a little bit specific about what the NDP opposition is calling for, and that includes four points: minimum requirements for the number of nursing staff and the staff-to-resident ratios. Currently there are no legislated minimum requirements for nursing and general staffing ratios to require at least four hours of nursing care per day. Alberta's requirement currently is 1.9 hours of nursing care per resident per day, and that is simply not good enough.

There should be standard qualifications and training for staff. Alberta has no legislated standard qualifications for health care aides, who do provide most of the day-to-day personal and nursing care to residents.

Finally, to take inspection and enforcement seriously. I have to express concern, Mr. Speaker, about the concept that we've heard tonight of a committee of MLAs going around and conducting inspections of these facilities. There should be dedicated professional staff that do regular random tours and inspections of these facilities with the power, in fact, to enforce changes immediately if they find that things are in a substandard manner. I appreciate the commitment of those members who have undertaken this task, and I don't mean to question at all their dedication to the people in those facilities, but I do believe that this needs to be done by professional inspectors with real powers to make changes.

I think, Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate that a senior citizen in Camrose had to go on a hunger strike to draw attention to the situation with respect to long-term care in this province. I think that in our centennial year it's time for the government to treat the people who built this province with the respect which they deserve.

This motion has one positive aspect, which is why I'm going to support it as amended, Mr. Speaker. This is the operative clause: that the government take steps "to improve the quality of care provided to Albertans living in long-term care facilities." That means that the motion is not completely obliterated, that there is a very positive message that's retained within that. So I appreciate that and think that we should support it.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this is not lip service just to pass the motion and move on, because I know that there are many people who fought long and hard for seniors. The families of seniors who are in these facilities – there are hundreds of thousands of those people – and the New Democrat opposition are going to be watching. If the government doesn't take real and meaningful action, then, that is certainly going to be an ongoing issue in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 507 as amended carried]

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2005-06

International and Intergovernmental Relations

The Deputy Chair: As per our Standing Orders the first hour will be allocated between the minister and members of the opposition, following which any other member may participate.

The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and good evening, everyone. I'm here tonight seeking approval of the 2005-2006 budget and the business plans for the Ministry of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

We are privileged, Mr. Chairman, in this province to have some of the finest professional, most experienced people, who work very hard on our behalf implementing the ideas and policies as directed by this Assembly. These people have also worked very hard in positioning our negotiations in health, child care, fiscal imbalance, and institutional reform. We have some of them here today in the gallery, and I would like to introduce them. They are Mr. Gerry Bourdeau, who is the deputy minister; Wayne Clifford, assistant deputy minister, international relations; Helmut Mach, Alberta trade representative; Garry Pocock, assistant deputy minister, Canadian intergovernmental relations; Lorne Harvey, who is our director of corporate services; Aniko Parnell, director, international governance office; Kathryn Wiegiers, our communications director; and, of course, my executive assistant, Mr. Ron Glen. Let's give them a warm welcome.

Mr. Chairman, this year the Ministry of International and Intergovernmental Relations is asking for a $10 million budget, up from $8.3 million, which was budgeted last year. The additional funding is for three purposes: intergovernmental meetings, trade negotiations, and the Alberta office in Washington, DC. Most of the increase is a one-time cost to host the Western Premiers' Conference later this week in Lloydminster and the Premiers' Council of the Federation meeting in Banff in August.

Before I get into the budget details, I'd like to briefly outline the ministry's goals and mandate. IIR's 2005-2006 business plan has three goals. The first focuses on Alberta's relations within Canada by "promoting the interests of, and securing benefits for, Alberta as an equal partner in a strengthened, united Canada." The second goal looks outside Canada to "promoting the interests of, and securing benefits for, Alberta from strengthened international relations." The third goal is "promoting the interests of, and securing benefits for, Alberta from greater trade and investment liberalization, internationally" and here at home.

Our business plan supports the larger government goals of improving the economy, increasing our international competitiveness, having a strong partnership with other orders of government, and a financially stable, open, and accountable government. In supporting these goals, IIR works closely with other ministries to negotiate important intergovernmental agreements, plan conferences and missions for the Premier and other ministers, and provide information and advice to other departments.

The upcoming Western Premiers' Conference and the Council of the Federation will deal with important national issues like federal/provincial relations, energy, agriculture, and health care. They also give us the opportunity to highlight Alberta's centennial on a national stage. Every province takes a turn hosting these meetings, and we've had ours moved up a year to coincide with our centennial. In the past Premiers met about once a year. However, since January 2003 they've met six times, leading in part to an historic national agreement on health care funding. That agreement secured $4 billion in funding for Alberta over the next 10 years.

Alberta will attend at least two more Premiers' meetings planned for this year through the Council of the Federation and its secretariats. The premiers have developed ambitious plans to work together on health care, literacy, the environment, and disaster relief. As chair of the Council of the Federation this year Alberta will lead important discussions on a variety of national issues, including internal trade, health care, child care, climate change, and aboriginal, municipal, and fiscal issues.

We're also working more closely with our neighbour to the west to improve services and save taxpayers' dollars. For example, Alberta and B.C. will save millions of dollars in infrastructure costs, not to mention the time and money businesses will save because we'll share a truck weigh scale on the Trans-Canada highway instead of having one on each side of the border. This closer co-operation with B.C. is also leading to other efficiencies in education and children's services.

Over the next few weeks and months there will be national meetings of trade ministers, health ministers, finance ministers, and others. My ministry will be busy preparing agreements and providing support to the Premier and cabinet members who take part.

Mr. Chairman, there are fiscal realities that come with being a leader in federal/provincial relations just as there are with establishing a presence in Washington, DC. With the important Alberta office in Washington, DC, now fully staffed and operational, additional funding is required annually to operate the office.

The United States is by far Alberta's most important economic partner. Washington is where important decisions are made that affect our interests. One thing we learned through the BSE issue is that the U.S. regulatory process is extremely complex and time consuming. We're fortunate to have someone representing Alberta on the ground in Washington who can help monitor and influence U.S. policies that stop the free flow of goods from our province and who can also promote the safe and stable supply of our energy sector. Alberta's annual trade with the United States is close to $60 billion, or almost $18,000 for every man, woman, and child in Alberta. The cost of operating the Alberta office in Washington is about 50 cents per Albertan per year.

Alberta's U.S. presence does not take away from our commitment to other international partners as we are truly global players. For instance, Alberta is working on improving transportation links to the west coast. We're doing this so that we can increase our trading opportunities in the Asia Pacific region.

Our international twinnings with 14 states and provinces on five continents advance Alberta's relationships with key trade and investment partners, involving schools, businesses, and municipalities. To mark the 25th anniversary of our province's twinning with Hokkaido, we'll undertake a mission to Japan that includes the 18 mayors from Alberta towns and cities twinned with communities in Japan. This fall a pagoda, a gift from Ganwon, Korea, will be erected on our Legislature Grounds in honour of the 30th anniversary of Alberta's twinning with that Korean province.

Alberta continues to share its governance expertise with countries throughout the world. In China and South Africa we're working on public-sector reform. In Ukraine we're working on agricultural reform.

The ministry also requires additional funding to prepare for the upcoming Doha round of World Trade Organization negotiations. The World Trade Organization negotiations are vitally important to the economic health of Alberta, especially our agricultural community. There will be a critical WTO ministerial meeting in Hong Kong in December, and I plan to attend as part of the Canadian delegation.

The softwood lumber dispute also continues to require our full attention. As you may know, discussions have resumed with the United States to try and resolve this dispute. We're working hand in hand with Alberta's forest industry to find a long-term, durable solution that will provide free access to the United States market for Alberta's softwood lumber producers. The softwood lumber industry is the second-largest manufacturing export sector of Alberta's economy. It supports 69,000 well-paying technical jobs. They are the mainstay of Alberta's rural communities as well as important parts of the economic makeup of the Calgary and Edmonton regions.

Our trade experts also continue to work through the Council of the Federation to reach an agreement so that provinces and territories have a role in international negotiations, agreements, and forums. We've certainly seen what's happened with the Kyoto accord, where the federal government signed an international agreement affecting areas of provincial responsibility without bothering to include provinces in the negotiations.

Our trade area will build upon and enhance the benefits of the agreement on internal trade to promote the free flow of goods, services, capital, and labour within Canada. Freer trade within Canada brings many benefits to Alberta. Alberta companies will be able to bid on government contracts anywhere in Canada. Licensed professionals will be able to move freely between provinces, and we could eliminate provincial or regional favouritism by the federal government in procurement decisions, for example.

While these are some of the highlights of IIR's major initiatives and our funding requirements, there are, of course, many other issues being dealt with and projects under way to meet Alberta's national, international, and trade priorities.

In conclusion, IIR faces a busy year ahead as our province hosts intergovernmental meetings and becomes chair of the Council of the Federation. We're working to strengthen Alberta's international relations, especially with our most important trading partner, the United States. We'll continue to protect Alberta's interests through trade negotiations and in the softwood lumber dispute along with continuing support to Alberta Agriculture on the BSE file.

I respectfully ask that you approve the Ministry of International and Intergovernmental Relations 2005-06 budget and business plan. I'm certainly happy to answer any questions or take any comments from members of this Assembly. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will try to be brief and just ask the questions without a whole bunch of preamble around them because I know that there are others that want to ask questions, and often the time has run out at these what I think are particularly important discussions.

One of the first things I'd like to ask is about the Canadian intergovernmental relations. On page 344 of the business plan you're promoting "solutions to redesign federal/provincial financial arrangements including the Canada Health Transfer, the Canada Social Transfer, Equalization and cost-sharing arrangements." How specifically does the department propose to redesign the Canada health transfer, and how would this department redesign the federal equalization program?

I was going to ask questions on the Alberta office in Washington, DC, but I have already asked for some of that information in writing, and I assume that it will be here before the appropriation time.

The international trips. What internal reviews are conducted on international trips to determine the efficacy, and what was achieved on the trips that have been taken? If there are no such reviews, how does the minister know that these trips are successful and whether the taxpayers' money is being spent appropriately?

Exporting water. Who is the department consulting on this issue? What work has the department done in examining the issue of water export, and have any policy options been developed? What research is being conducted on either future exporting or, in fact, present exporting?

The BSE. Can the minister provide us an update on the BSE situation, and how has this ministry helped in opening the U.S. border to Canadian beef, and when does the minister expect the border to open? I know that those are sort of almost redundant questions, but I think that they merit being put on the record. What contingency plans are in place if the U.S. border does not open? I would suspect that that would be partly financed in terms of helping the co-operative producers actually create value-added products.

Page 266 of the financial estimates. The overall spending on international and intergovernmental relations has increased, as you've mentioned, not perhaps in these exact forms, but they've increased by 20 per cent this year, approximately $1.7 million, from roughly $8 million last year to $10 million this year. Can the minister explain how the 20 per cent budget increase would increase Alberta's international or intergovernmental presence, preferably I think discussing it from the international perspective? Why was there such a jump in spending, which I assume would follow on to the discussion of the international dollars spent?

Page 267 of the estimates. The spending on Canadian intergovernmental relations has increased from $2.546 million in 2004-05 to $3.356 million in '05-06. It's an increase of 32 per cent, or $810,000. Last year the department spending was only by 60 per cent. Can the minister explain why the item Canadian intergovernmental relations has received large increases two years in a row, and could you provide a breakdown on that particular budget item?

Another thing that I would like discussed, particularly from this ministry, would be the electricity exports to the U.S. What work has the department done on examining the issue of electricity exports? What discussions on exporting electricity to the United States has the minister been involved in, and what were the outcomes of these discussions? Who is the department consulting on this issue, either Canadian or American? What policy options have been developed by the ministry or in conjunction with this ministry, and what research is being conducted as we speak?

NorthernLights Transmission, an arm of TransCanda Corp, is proposing to build multibillion dollar transmission lines from Fort McMurray to southern California, as was reported in the Edmonton Journal today. What does the minister know about this project, and what discussions on NorthernLights Transmission's proposed export power lines has the minister been involved in?

I thank you, Mr. Chair. I have no idea if he had a chance to keep track of all of those, but if he would prefer to give some of the answers to me in writing, I would take that because I know other people want to speak. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Chair. We'll follow up with detailed responses to your questions. I'm going to try and catch up with as many as I can. I'll probably miss some, but we'll check Hansard and then get back to you in detail.

Just generally speaking, I haven't had any meetings about electricity. I haven't been involved in any personally as a minister, and if there have been with the Minister of Energy, we'll be able to report on that. Our role, basically, is that if there are any agreements made between provinces or between, let's say, the province of Alberta and Canada and the United States, then we would be reviewing those agreements as a department, but we don't really enter into any agreements ourselves other than some of the ones that we would be reviewing for health or child care or fiscal imbalance. Our department doesn't meet directly with, let's say, energy providers in the States and negotiate those agreements.

I think you asked a question on water and what agreements we have in place. Water is outside NAFTA, so other than selling bottled water to the States, there's no provision to sell water, you know, channel a river or whatever into the States and charge them for the water, although I know that this issue comes up once in a while, kind of like a scare tactic: "Oh, the Americans want our water and Alberta is going to sell water," et cetera. Quite frankly, in your area of the province we don't have any water to license with the activity that's happening there in terms of food processing, agriculture, and other industry. I believe that most of the water available in the South Saskatchewan has been allocated. So, really, with respect to water there are no agreements being negotiated because it's just not something that we're selling or going to be selling to anyone.

With respect to the budget increase it is a 17 per cent increase, and it covers the two main meetings: the Council of the Federation and also the Western Premiers' Conference that will be held this week in Lloydminster. There are also additional dollars for the Doha round of negotiations with the WTO. It's the Doha round of the World Trade Organization meetings that will be held in Korea. I believe for that we've allocated about $150,000.

We will be sending representatives there because we want to be part of the action to make sure that the provinces are involved in the decisions that will be made. The reason being, to give you a little bit of an idea of the difference across Canada especially when it comes to agriculture, I believe that in Quebec and Ontario more than 50 per cent of their farm cash gate receipts are from the protected industries, feather and milk, and in Alberta – I'd have to consult with the minister – I think they're probably around 5 to 6 per cent. I would think that there might be different interests expressed by those provinces in advancing some position at the World Trade talks, so we want to make sure that we're there in the room with the federal government and the other provinces to make sure that the feds don't sign something off that leaves us vulnerable just in that one area of agriculture. That is why it's so important that we do have representation there.

On BSE. This is perhaps an issue that's the most sensitive because, without a doubt, at the moment the opening of the border is really tied up in the courts. Of course, with the one court case in Montana a judge refused to listen to evidence from parties other than R-CALF and reached a tentative decision. That is being appealed in the court in California, the ninth circuit court. We will of course be working very closely with our trade representative on that particular file.

There are two tracks here. There's the legislative track, which is the President and the U.S. Department of Agriculture. The President has indicated that he would veto any move by the two Houses if they were to move to keep the border closed because he sees the long-term need of a fully integrated North American beef market. That's the legislative component.

This is a legal track, and it more than likely will take a while longer to get through all the appeals, and this is what can happen in the United States. Here in Canada it's a little different, but in the United States they could appeal it to the court, and as a result this would probably tie it up for another eight to 12 months, and sometimes it could be more. You know, it's hard to predict. We're certainly not going to be very optimistic and say: well, you know, it'll be settled in a few months. Appeal decisions do take time and depend on when the courts will hear all of the evidence and how much time they take to make a decision once the evidence is heard.

International trips. This year the Premier will be doing some, and of course he will be very busy at home as a result of the two meetings. We do have the hosting of Japanese visitors celebrating the 25th anniversary of the twinning with Hokkaido, and we are planning a small mission to Japan to reciprocate those that are going to be travelling to Alberta in celebration of the anniversary.

We measure performance in a number of ways. Before, we would poll different people and say: well, are we doing a good job or not doing a good job? By doing that, we pretty well followed the total performance and their support in the province by the public. We have worked with the Auditor General and have come up with a different system of evaluating performance of the department. This would be pretty well a summary document of all of our activities, and of course we would share this with Albertans.

The other is that there are some changes in that two months following any trip we would be posting on the web the full expenses of that particular mission. If you were to go to the web now, you would see the costs of, let's say, my visit to Washington prior to the office being opened in March.

I hope I've covered some of them, but I'll check my notes and catch up with the rest.

Ms Pastoor: If I might, just a couple of clarifications. I'd like to know more about the court cases in the U.S. and California. I don't think that we should send a whole herd of people, but I'm wondering if, in fact, there would be at least one lawyer and, I don't know, maybe you yourself as the minister, someone who's trained in U.S. law as well as Canadian law who would actually sit through those hearings, if you have that in mind.

As far as the performance measurement goes, I would suspect that the outcome would be a far better benchmark to look for than something about what the party has sort of – from a total business point of view, to pick out an outcome, a Carver method or one of those easily defined ways of looking at if you've been successful or not and to evaluate it, and chuck it if it hasn't.

Mr. Stelmach: I want to clarify: that's what we used to do before. We don't do that anymore. We have client survey questionnaires as opposed to just doing a poll and trying to feel what Albertans or business, et cetera, felt about the effectiveness and efficiency of the work we do in the department. We now do client surveys every two years, and those are a much better measurement of the performance of the department generally as opposed to what we did in the past. I'm sorry because I maybe wasn't clear on what we did in the past and what we do now.

It is the Doha round. It's not in Korea, but it is the Doha round of the world trade talks. So maybe I said – it is the Doha round, but it'll be held in Korea.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to this budget with some interest. I certainly don't question the need for the existence of International and Intergovernmental Relations. I think that it sometimes is a thorny issue in general between what is a federal jurisdiction in this area and what the province can be delving into. In general, considering the importance of export trade and import trade to our overall economy and the future of our economy, I certainly see the existence of this department to be very useful although there are some specific concerns that we have.

I think the most difficult area for this department is the question of accountability. I'm also sitting on the Public Accounts Committee, and the most important measuring stick for the success of any given department or any given venture is to have clearly defined goals and then measuring those goals against the money that is expended and then coming to some conclusion about that.

You know, in the intergovernmental affairs bureau I do have some difficulties that I would like to point out here this evening. I'll ask a group of questions, if I may, and the hon. minister can you know answer as he sees fit or in writing as well.

The first one I have is, perhaps, more a structural question. I'm wondering to what degree these two ministries are merged now and if it's not possible to completely combine the two together. I'm looking for efficiencies – I guess we have a ministry for that as well – perhaps to more completely merge these two ministries together. I would be curious to know to what degree this has gone on and if there is a plan in the future to in fact bring the two together entirely.

The intergovernmental relations budget, according to what I can see here, is up by 32 per cent. Again, in terms of indicators and rationale, what's the idea behind that? What indicators could we watch for that would suggest that this increase is successful?

Again, this is a structural kind of issue. I am curious for the hon. minister to differentiate in specific terms between international and governmental affairs and economic development. I really do see the mission statements of both of these ministries to be very close, so I'm looking, again, for efficiencies or, I guess, clarification in regard to differentiation. I'm not suggesting that perhaps we could have another merger, but I just need and I think the public as well could use greater clarification in that regard.

This ministry seems to have been responsible for the Senator-in-waiting part of our vote in November. According to the website, this exercise cost $3 million, approximately, from the whole budget. Now, I want to know if that is $3 million tagged onto the existing structure of the vote. Or were you including using the established vote, which is already in place, and then factoring in the cost of that to the overall cost of conducting this poll?

Of course, our question is whether this was a good value or not. Did Albertans tell the government that this is something that they in fact wanted? Our suspicion, I think, is that there are certain interests that are seeking Senate reform through an elected Senate. While this is an interesting possibility, I'm wondering if all avenues were explored. Or is this just, you know, a horn that likes to be blown? Does it represent the interests of the majority of Albertans? There are different approaches to Senate reform, and this is just one of them.

Unfortunately, the voter turnout for the last provincial election was perhaps the lowest or amongst the lowest in Alberta's history. My understanding is that there were 20 per cent of spoiled ballots or declined ballots on the Senate part of this election, so I guess that I would like to see clarification on that. Does that mean that only 35 per cent of Albertans did in fact cast their vote for the Senate election ballot? If so, you know, I think that we do spend a lot of money here in this Legislature, but I'm really questioning the value of this overall process.

I think that there were some Senate appointments recently, and I don't know if any of the people who were elected actually were chosen. I don't know what sort of progress we've made in regard to Senate reform. Certainly, I'm interested in Senate reform too, but I don't see if we've made any sort of advancement to the cause here with this $3 million election, which had very poor participation rates.

Now, again, going back to performance measurements in the ministry, I just would really like to see a more clearly defined set of performance measurements built into this ministry. I have, say, for example the Alberta Washington office performance measurements available to me here. You know, they just didn't seem to be very specific, and they just didn't seem to have a lot of information. That's one that I'd like to just make a quick comment on.

I guess, just to close off, there is the question of the Washington, DC, office, which is under this department's management. You know, the numbers have been very, very public, and there's been a lot of controversy surrounding this office, which I believe is located in the Canadian high commission embassy in Washington. I'm just wondering if, say, the salary for the main person there, Murray Smith – I understand that it's $223,000 a year as a base salary – is a prudent amount to be spending on this. Where was the salary brought forward from? Is it in keeping with the performance that we should expect from this office? I think a lot of Albertans find it to be too much – right? – exorbitant somehow. So I'm wondering how this figure was arrived at. What specific performance measures do we have in place to see that we are getting value for our money with this office?

Just briefly, in closing, as I said before, I certainly see the value of reaching out with this ministry, and I think that we need to – well, I won't say expand, you know, necessarily in a dollar value, but I think that as this ministry evolves, I'd like to see more focus on performance measurements and an ability to see where we can focus our efforts so that Alberta might have a good export/import profile across this country and across North America and around the world.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Chair. With respect to merging the two departments, our work is considerably different from Economic Development's. I guess the best way to describe the department would be one of a diplomatic role, not only amongst the governments, provincial and federal, in Canada but with the American government and also American states and other governments around the world. There is no question that we are unique in Canada as a province. We're unique in that we were the first province, dating back to 1971, that had an international relations component to this government. I think the division at that time was in order to position ourselves economically in Canada and on the world stage. We had to do a lot of our own body contact with people around the world.

Economic Development, I would think, is more looking at how to create the environment, whether through regulations or some other manner in terms of growing more wealth in the province. Ours is to ensure that we negotiate some of these trade barriers that we're facing, and in fact we're probably moving on trade barriers more with our neighbours to the south than we are with our neighbours to the east. We have accomplished a lot with our neighbours to the west; there's no doubt about it. I think we've moved more in the last three years with that government than with, well, I'd hate to say how many governments previous to that. So that is good news. The good news is that we're going to improve our competitiveness, and we're going to get our product to market. So we are certainly focused on wealth creation, not on wealth distribution. That is the major component.

We also provide the support for the Premier in his missions and also in evaluating positions taken by other provinces and other governments.

So that's in capsule our role.

Now, I will go through the one-time increases for the department. Again, they're tied to the Western Premiers' Conference in Lloydminster – and that's $215,000, one-time – and staging the Council of the Federation. That's $695,000. So those two are one-time expenses. The Council of the Federation will be meeting in Banff in August.

Now, to fully operate the international office in Washington is $380,000. Again, the participation in the WTO is $150,000. To meet the salary expenses expected from the bargaining unit is probably about $110,000. With respect to that budget, that kind of gives you a bit of an idea of where the major expenses are.

[Mr. Webber in the chair]

Before I talk about institutional reform, Senate reform, I'd just like to talk about the office in Washington. I don't know if the hon. member has visited Washington, DC, but actually it's worth while taking the trip just from a perspective of seeing this sea of lobbyists, hundreds of thousands of people that are there for one reason only, and that's to get their message out. To give you an example of how far behind we are in getting the message out, there are some still in Washington and, actually, in a state that does a fair amount of business with us, Colorado, who when they were invited to Fort McMurray and they accepted the invitation – they were there a month ago – thought that in Fort McMurray they'd still see dirt streets and wooden sidewalks. So that is a bit of the scope of the task ahead of us in terms of getting the information there.

Controversy. I don't think there was any controversy. The salary is based on senior official level. It is $233,000. There's an additional allowance of $30,000, and that goes to any official that lives outside of Alberta, outside of Canada, and that's to make up the difference in the dollar exchange and some of the differences in the cost of living as a result of them being in a different country.

Now, this is the only office, Washington, that's in our department, and simply because it is one of more of a diplomatic role, we are in the embassy. We're the only province to be there. It took a fair amount of work to negotiate that, but I think that it's going to do yeoman's service not only in getting the message out in terms of secure supply of oil and gas but to keep a thumb on what's happening on BSE, softwood lumber. Those are very, very complex issues.

I know the question came up of whether we'll be attending the court. There's no sense sending politicians to court. We have to send lawyers, and that's what we'll be doing with agriculture. We do have a very good trade lawyer in Washington on retention, and she's been with us for many, many years.

How do you measure performance of an office like that? I suppose that if tomorrow we could settle the BSE and find an overnight agreement on softwood lumber, well, we would then not have to do much more in that office for the rest of its existence because just in softwood lumber I think we've got – what? – $4.3 billion tied up in tariffs on that side of the border that are being held by the government there, and of course the BSE has been devastating to us.

Just one more point on BSE and why this Washington office is important. The province of Alberta worked very hard on getting boxed beef, muscle cuts into the States. Quite frankly, we got it there quite quickly, even though the federal government signed this agreement, a protocol dealing with BSE, back in the late '90s. The only reason we got there that quickly, Mr. Chair, is the relationship that dates back to the late '80s with the chief negotiator and the Agriculture secretary in the States, who worked at negotiating some of the agricultural NAFTA agreement with the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada at that time, Don Mazankowski. What had happened is that his assistant was a lady by the name of Ann Veneman, that worked for Clayton Yeutter, who then went to California as the Secretary of Agriculture and then came back under George Bush. Those are the relationships that, quite frankly, we built almost 20 years ago that proved to be advantageous to us.

Mr. Horner: Were you here then?

Mr. Stelmach: No, I wasn't there. But that's just an example of how important building working relationships is.

I want to just talk briefly about Senators-in-waiting. I don't want to sound disrespectful to the other side, not you guys but over there, but when we talk about good value in democracy, in the November election the total votes cast for the NDP were 87,580. The total votes cast for the Senate nominee elections were about 2.2 million. If we break that down further, the hon. member who just asked the questions got a total of 4,067 votes. The total for four elected was 22,843. The one Senator who got the most votes, just the one, received 312,000 votes. So 90,000 across the province; the one Senator received 312,000. I think we got good value.

I know that this is one file that takes a lot of patience in terms of institutional reform, but I submit to the hon. member and to all in this House that this issue is going to be even more pressing as we enter into a period of uncertainty in this country with what's happening in Ottawa, and we're going to have to keep eyes fixed on this one area very closely. We're not only talking about Senate reform, hon. member. We're also looking at institutional reform, working with other provinces to see how we could maybe make changes to the selection of judges to the Supreme Court. Senate reform is just one area, but I think that at the end of the day Alberta wants to have their voice heard. Given the growth in the province of Alberta, the amount that we contribute to this country, that is going to be an issue. There will be some finger-pointing, I suspect, at Alberta as we, of course, grow our wealth and, quite frankly, share a lot of it with other provinces in Canada.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, my MLA.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I'd like to thank my constituent for recognizing me.

To begin with, I'd like to thank the minister for following in the footsteps of his predecessors in answering questions. It's very much appreciated. This, for those who care, to me is the most democratic part of our whole organization. I have seen from previous ministers as well a very honest attempt at providing the answers that not only the opposition but, obviously, Albertans are asking, and I do appreciate it.

I'd also like to put in a word of thanks to the hon. Environment minister, who was down in Calgary along with the Premier and the former Minister of Environment at the icebreaker on the Bow. It was thanks to the current Minister of Environment that myself and the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View were recognized at that event. Again, it's just one more of those small protocol things that sees us playing on the same team.

I'd also like to thank Alberta ambassador Murray Smith for leaving the Calgary-Varsity constituency door keys under the welcome mat before leaving for Washington. It was nice to find them there and to find the office in order, although I will add that I replaced his oil rigger 1970 furniture, complete with the outstanding orange, brown, and yellow filing cabinets. They've now gone to the Boot Hill of retired furniture, so we're starting afresh with a new office and a new professional look, and I thank the Legislative Assembly office for making those arrangements.

What has been discussed quite a bit tonight – and I appreciate the minister's answers. I'm not sure that he'll be able to add a whole lot to this concern. The Washington office represents almost a fifth of this department's budget, and we do need a justification of that expense. My concern is that it's potentially a duplication of federal services. I have been to Washington on two occasions. My father-in-law worked in the Canadian embassy in Washington, so I had two occasions to visit Washington first-hand and see the flurry of activity there. My concern, as the minister pointed out, with so many lobbyists is: how effective is our voice? Are we being heard in Washington?

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Of course, there are four concerns that I think need to be raised in Washington, not only in Washington but in closer states, and that's, of course, the softwood lumber, that has been previously mentioned. With regard to BSE, to me that is partly an issue of our creating in that we had the misfortune of having an animal test positive. It also has more to do with science than economics, but I think that what we need to do to assure not only our U.S. trading partner but the world is to have 100 per cent BSE testing.

The reason for this comes after the reverse, to get beyond the Premier's unfortunate comments of shoot, shovel, and shut up. We need to build up the confidence of countries based on that unfortunate statement. We need to assure countries that our testing is equivalent to that of Japan and, therefore, considerably more efficient than that of the States, which tests a very small percentage of its beef. We have a chance to be the number one beef exporting province within the world, never mind within Canada. We should be trying to steal a larger portion of the market, as far as I'm concerned, from our southern neighbours.

The second point I'd like to make – and it sounds a bit like a joke. But speaking of foreign relations, do we have an Alberta office in Ottawa? By that, I don't mean a place for a Senators-in-waiting Canadian reunion tour to hang out, but I'm just wondering what kind of representation Alberta has in Ottawa. It seems that the Premier sometimes flies in and flies out, and I think he has more of an attraction for Hull, Quebec, on the other side of the river, than he does for spending time in Ottawa.

A recommendation – and I would very much welcome the minister's comments – is on foreign locations. Instead of FOIP travel junkets disguised as trade commissions, what I would like to see is the same kind of established office in China and Japan, for that matter. Well, China obviously is the growing nation in terms of economy. It's a powerhouse. For that matter, based on population, it would probably be a good idea to have a trade mission in India as well. But with offices in China and Japan it wouldn't be that far in terms of travelling to the other countries, until we at least had similar trade offices set up. I would welcome the minister's comments on: does he think that it's viable to have a trade office in other countries like China, Japan, and, potentially, India?

Although there was a degree of joking about the office in Ottawa, I would appreciate a response. It would be nice to have someone on the ground there on a regular basis who was doing the rounds. Washington is a main lobbying centre, but so is Ottawa in its own smaller fashion. So are our Alberta interests being constantly represented in Ottawa?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you. Let me start from the bottom, working up. In terms of offices there are offices in other countries, and they're under Economic Development because they're more trade offices as opposed to diplomatic offices. However, in Japan we do have space in the Canadian embassy. We've had a person there for many, many years.

In China we're in the World Petroleum Congress offices. We established that a few years ago, I remember, and we are, I believe, in another six locations, but I can't recall them offhand. We do have a small office in England, and I know that we're in other parts of Southeast Asia. But we'll get that for you.

Ottawa. You know, I ought to be careful when I think about an office in Ottawa, what I'd like to say and what I should say diplomatically. We do travel to Ottawa on a regular basis. The deputies meet, of course, supporting the Council of the Federation. We are looking at expanding the Council of the Federation and having an office that would be reporting to the Council of the Federation. We're just working out those details in terms of administrative support, who the individual may be, and where that office will be located. So there is work being done on that.

The cost of the Council of the Federation is over a million dollars across the country. Our share is about $115,000, I believe. So those costs might increase if we have an office there. I would think that we'd probably share it with the Council of the Federation; it wouldn't be an Alberta office only. But that is in the works.

With respect to Washington and duplication of services, having been there and having been at a number of American states over the years, especially as I had the pleasure of serving this province as minister of agriculture, there's no question that in some areas, when it comes to marketing, Alberta and Ottawa just couldn't be farther apart. In fact, when we were in Washington in February, at the two meetings that we had we had the note taker for the federal government interrupt our discussions to remind the Senator at that time: well, you know, Canadians are supporting the Canadian Wheat Board. When we did take a vote in this province, there were 67 per cent in favour of a dual marketing system, or choice. That is the kind of difference when you say duplication. It's what Ottawa thinks Alberta wants. It's got nothing to do with what Alberta really wants. That was just the one meeting where we attended with the minister of agriculture.

We had the same issue when we met with energy officials. Clearly, in December of 1929 we wrestled from the federal government ownership of natural resources. So if somebody wants to talk about building a pipeline for Fort McMurray, they have to talk to Albertans, to this government. They don't talk to the federal government because they're our resources. We will make that decision. So they can enter into all kinds of MOUs and make all kinds of advances to other governments, but at the end of the day Albertans will decide, not the federal government.

That's why it's important that we have our person there. It's really to complement the work. It's not to work against the ambassador or against the embassy there, but it's to complement the work. Quite frankly, there have been some instances where the kind of intelligence we gathered was better as a result of sharing information, what our envoy and our ambassador managed to receive through meetings. I think the new ambassador is doing quite well. There's a good working relationship, and I hope that that continues. At the end of the day I know that both of them will work for the better interests of Canada and Alberta.

You know, even to be the only provincial jurisdiction to be invited by the Smithsonian Institution to develop a show – trade, culture, arts, culinary – an exhibit in the Washington Mall, it means that we are getting our word out. They know where we are. They have a working relationship now with the University of Alberta. Those are all, you know, tiny steps certainly, and it will take a few years to position ourselves and to communicate to the Washington decision-makers about Alberta's potential. It's not only in the energy and the secure supply of oil and gas, but it's agriculture, our technology that we have to offer, many of the research projects that we're doing here related to energy as well.

With respect to beef one of the reasons we're there and sending boxed beef is because we were the first province in Canada to introduce trace back. Prior to the late '90s we didn't have any way of tracing an animal back to its origin. We began that in 1997-98. We made it mandatory, and that in itself has built more confidence in the products that we have to offer, our beef products here in Alberta. It's one of the reasons why very quickly we were able to trace the background on all of the animals that happened to be tested coming from the same herd that this one cow came from. If it wasn't for the trace back, we probably wouldn't have been able to accomplish that in such a short period of time.

Testing and trying to win the market in Japan – there are some pretty startling figures in terms of trade in bovine products and beef with the United States and also Japan. I'm not quite sure if that country could ever replace the States with the volume of beef that we send there in the future. The other thing is that we have to remember that once the animal is processed here, the product is put in a truck, and it's shipped by truck, and it's in the States. To go to another country, it'll be truck, rail, marine. We need the port capacity, and all those additional costs will eventually end up being paid by the producer unfortunately. I mean, we're not going to discount any market. They're all important.

From a scientific point of view, in terms of testing all animals, 30 months of age doesn't make any sense. However, I'll leave that to the ag minister. He'll be doing his budget tomorrow, and you can ask him about the science of that.

I think I've covered pretty well everything. Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: At this stage I'll just remind members that if there is any government member who wishes to participate, I will recognize that member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

10:10

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Just two more questions. I guess it was almost a month and a half ago that representatives from PNWER were here and we met up on the fifth floor, and one of the comments that I made to a representative from Washington was: did he believe that we were being an equal partner or a sufficiently concerned partner in the market manipulation that EPCOR undertook? The sense that I got was that there was a greater role for us in working with PNWER in terms of going after the manipulation.

It appeared that Alberta was being used as sort of a testing ground to see what, potentially, Enron could get away with. I'm just wondering: does our connection with Washington give us greater access to the information that might lead us to discover to what extent Enron either did or didn't or potentially manipulated our market?

Secondly, given the Washington office, have we worked towards border monitoring in terms of a smoother trade transport crossing at the border? Ever since 9/11 there is a great fear in the States about infiltration from Canada. I'm just wondering if we've been able to establish our Alberta security border crossing validity. I know, again, that this sort of overlaps with the federal government, but it would be nice if our direct relationship with Washington could produce almost a passport where we could have a smoother trade, where the trucks and trains, and so on, crossing would receive less – well, I don't know – regulation, or sometimes it's bureaucracy.

Then the other area that I alluded to just very briefly was the idea of not only having representation in Washington, but something that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder brought up was the need – when court decisions are taking place in the States such as the Montana judge and the closing of the border, I really believe we should have, if not intervenor status, at least observer status so that we know what's happening and we don't rely on transcripts or media for our direct information.

So, again, power market manipulation, PNWER: are we holding up our end? Secondly, the border monitoring; thirdly, representation at other state levels besides Washington.

Mr. Stelmach: With respect to PNWER I just want to make this one particular comment, and that's that we're kind of sorry to hear that none of the members from across the way will be participating in the PNWER meeting this coming year. We've always had representation from the opposition. I think it's a worthwhile opportunity for all members of this House, those that have been assigned that responsibility in PNWER, to rub shoulders with our colleagues south of the border. I hope that perhaps the opposition may change their mind and send some representation.

PNWER has been a success. It has opened heart-to-heart, face-to-face discussions on many issues. One of them certainly has been trucking. We have accomplished some movement in regulations, although we have to move a lot of that through the federal government. We've expanded capacity for trucking inspection, new technology. I believe that on the American side it's reciprocal. They understand the need for efficiency and the free flow of goods.

The one issue we still have, though, is that some of these trucking regulations are actually trade barriers. So if you reduce the size of the load – if you license 60,000 pounds and you only allow 40,000, that's a 20,000-pound payload less. That increases the cost of the 40,000 pounds of product going there. It's an interesting point if you look at even states like California. It's a bit of trade protectionism on their part in terms of when it comes to transportation, but we're slowly, slowly nibbling away at the regulations, and I think that we're getting there. I think a lot of the American states are now aware of how big their market is here in Alberta, especially California. If we could work together, we will bring down the consumer prices for those products because right now, at the end of the day, it's the consumer that's paying the cost.

With respect to manipulation of energy markets, I have no idea at all. We'll leave that to Energy to respond to.

The court in Montana. The judge only allowed evidence from one group, and that was R-CALF, and did not allow any evidence from the American Meat Institute nor from the United States Department of Agriculture. So even if we had had someone in the room trying to present, it would have been unsuccessful. In fact, I believe they cut the hearing time from four hours down to two. Unfortunately, the way the decision was written, it almost smacked that it was predetermined before all the evidence was heard. That's, like I said before, a real complex issue, but we do have our expert people in the field of trade law, and we'll be following it up very closely. We will be doing it as well in partnership with the United States Department of Agriculture.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Whatever I didn't ask, the Member for Calgary-Varsity may want to try and ask as well.

The minister spoke about client performance, and I've got some questions about that, about the department's success. Who are the clients that he referred to, and how far are they removed from the money with regard to his department?

The other one would be specific programs on initiatives by the Washington office. How do they evaluate these outcomes as to the outlined business plans within the ministry's portfolio as well?

We look at the overall budget. It's $10.1 million in operating expenses, equipment, and inventories. This is up 18 per cent, but the overall increase is 32 per cent due to budget for Canadian and intergovernmental relations. But one might just ask: in the name of efficiencies could this whole department not be combined with one of the other ministries and that way effectively having one less ministry to worry about, in fact under RAGE or whatever? I'm sure that, again, $10.1 million isn't a large budget with regard to some of the other ones that are into the hundreds of millions. Would it not be better utilized under one department, using some of the people that are already there instead of creating a new department and, in fact, hiring staff and that? That would be some of the big specifics. Again, would the department not be better served, or could the people still receive the same outcomes and measurements under a combining of this department then?

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Stelmach: I thought I answered the question in terms of combining the two earlier, but I'll attempt again for the hon. member. This department is more related to diplomacy than economic development. Economic Development has certainly its own policies in terms of looking at creating the environment and working with the private sector to bring about the kind of economic environment that will grow our wealth.

Our role here is completely different. It's more of a diplomatic role. We work with other provinces, trying to negotiate things like trade barriers. We work with the federal government in our agreements, whether it be fiscal imbalance equalization with the United States. Remember, working with the American government is quite unique for Alberta. Generally, the federal government would negotiate on our behalf, but in this particular area, where of the 25 most important markets 21 of them are American states and where 90 per cent of our exports go to the States, we have to have a presence there. There's no doubt about it.

We can't rely on Ottawa – and I say that with all due respect to them – to get the message out in terms of what is the most important card right now, and that's now energy. Yes, there is BSE and softwood lumber. Those are very important, and we're working on those files. But it's more negotiating and diplomacy as opposed to economic development, where you would be pretty well selling the province more from an economic development point of view.

When we say that we have the same people in other departments, no, we don't. The staff in IIR are very professional. They're very knowledgeable in very key specific areas, for instance trade, which is very complex. I can assure you that we won't have anyone in other departments as knowledgeable and dedicated to one area, for instance trade or even intergovernmental relations, whether it comes to Senate reform, fiscal imbalance, or equalization. There are maybe half a dozen people in Canada that understand the equalization formula, and I'm sure that we have at least one person in our department. So these are areas which are quite complex.

The other is that we provide support for the Premier. It's not only international missions, but to provide support in terms of the kind of briefings that come forward with many issues on a regular basis. We provided a tremendous amount of support in the last round of negotiations, where all the provincial ministers met and negotiated the health deal. We had people assisting the Premier and the minister of health at that particular time in terms of their expertise and background.

So the departments are considerably different. To marry it with economic development: I'm not quite sure if we would get the same effect, I would think, because this is intergovernmental and international. It's free-standing more from a diplomatic point of view.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'm quite sure this will be my last question. With regard to the R-CALF and the Montana protectionism, President Bush said that he'd veto any attempts to prolong the border closure. How has our Washington office – could you potentially give us a little background on initiatives – worked with the American federal government and bordering states to speed up this border opening process? If you or the agriculture minister could comment on the behind-the-scenes initiatives that are trying to get that border open speedier.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: It's actually a good question. With respect to working on this very complex issue, our Washington office works very closely and monitors all the information flow in Washington when it comes to the BSE file. As I said before, there are two tracks. There's the legislative track, and that's the United States Department of Agriculture, who wants the border open. They put in effect the rules, and those rules are supported by the President, who has indicated that he would veto the two Houses if they voted against the opening.

The other track is the legal one. It's the American way that they can challenge the rules in court. Unfortunately – and I don't think I'm saying anything out of turn here – there wasn't a total presentation of the evidence at that court. It was only from R-CALF, and it really wasn't a decision made. I think the first round of the appeal will be as to whether the judge has jurisdiction. If the judge has jurisdiction, then I assume that this court will start again and might hear more evidence, I would hope, you know, to balance in making a good decision. But on a regular basis, through the contacts that our envoy has, our trade lawyer and the support staff there work very closely together monitoring the information flow not only amongst the departments but also on how the various groups are preparing their evidence and their position in court.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. One really quick question for the minister. I note that his staff is going up by a modest amount of three. I'm not sure. I've been out of the Assembly a couple of times tonight. You may have mentioned that, but it is about five per cent, and I'm just wondering if you can tell us where those three FTEs are going?

Then, on a little broader note, page 343 of the business plan indicates that you plan to follow up on the report of the MLA Committee on Strengthening Alberta's Role in Confederation. That, of course, is a report that's relatively close to my heart because it was written by the former Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, and it was something that I did pay a certain amount of attention to last fall leading up to the November 22 election.

I'm wondering if the minister can tell us what specific ways the department plans to follow up on the committee's report and whether or not they've taken any steps to address the issue of support in Alberta for separation and what work the ministry has done or is doing in examining issues surrounding the firewall concept, particularly, I suppose, whether or not we're looking at or continuing to look at the ideas of an Alberta pension plan or a provincial police force as examples and whether or not we've made any conclusions in that regard as of yet and if you have any documents or reports that you would be willing to share with us on those two points in particular, i.e., the pension plan and the provincial police force.

Also on page 344 of the business plan – and I know that a little bit was discussed about the Canada health transfer, but you also refer in there to the department promoting “solutions to redesign federal/provincial financial arrangements.” Outside of the Canada health transfer there's also the Canada social transfer and equalization and cost-sharing arrangements. I'm wondering if you can tell us if the department has any particular plans to redesign in particular the Canada social transfer and the equalization transfers.

So those would be the questions tonight, Mr. Minister, and I'd be happy to hear your response. Thank you.

Mr. Stelmach: I was just hunting in my notes here for the FTE breakdown, but I'll go by memory. We provide support and corporate services to aboriginal affairs, and we have added I believe two additional people. I'll get that to you in writing. My memory has slipped this evening. I've got it in a book, and we'll get that to you.

With respect to our role in Confederation the Solicitor General will be undertaking a review, of course, of some of the roles in terms of the RCMP, et cetera, but some of the others, like with the issue of collecting taxes or even the pension, if we were to take over pensions in Alberta, I recall it would be about an $80 billion liability, so I don't know why we'd be moving in that direction. Collecting taxes. There are various opinions on it, and some of them are quite strong in terms of collecting our taxes here and then just giving to Ottawa what we feel may be fair.

Those are all issues that are on the minds of Albertans. But I think a bigger issue that will be facing this province will be the fallout of what's happening in Ottawa today.

If you recall, some time ago there was an issue in the province of Saskatchewan with some public money, small amounts of public money compared to what's coming out of Ottawa at this particular time, where people actually did some time in jail.

At the conclusion of the inquiry and where millions of taxpayer dollars are missing and if nobody – nobody – pays the price for that kind of, I think, just obscene behaviour, that's when we'll all have to put our heads down and be careful as to how we guide ourselves during that period of time. I can assure you that there will be tons of frustration in this province if people aren't held accountable for the kind of behaviour that's really left quite a black mark on this country coming out of that inquiry over the last few months. I think the future will tell as to where Albertans will direct their government and how frustrated they're going to be with the process.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a small question relating to the Alaska national wildlife refuge. In some recent weeks our representative in Washington was quoted to the effect of saying that Alberta was supportive of the efforts of the U.S. to drill in the Alaska national wildlife refuge.

As the hon. minister is aware, that is the home of a 120,000 numbered porcupine caribou herd, which is governed by an international treaty between the United States and Canada. Those animals migrate from their wintering grounds in Canada to the calving grounds in Alaska on an annual basis. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has predicted that there could be quite precipitous consequences for the herd if drilling were allowed in the Alaska national wildlife refuge. I wonder whether or not the Alberta government's activities in Washington include any representations or whether the government is taking any position with respect to drilling in that wildlife refuge.

Mr. Stelmach: In terms of taking a position, it's not our decision to make. We would of course pay attention to whatever decision is made with respect to drilling in that area, but it's not up to the Alberta government. It would be up to the federal government and, of course, the American government there. Unless the hon. member has other information, I am not aware of us taking a position on either drilling or not drilling in that very environmentally sensitive area, although caribou have been found to kind of warm up to the pipelines that are on the surface and find it a little warmer, and they have something to scratch through sometimes, but not in this particular case.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you. [interjection] You snooze, you lose.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In terms of Alberta going alone, I'm wondering whether or not opting out of medicare, as the Premier has mused about doing in the past, might be something that you're looking at. You know, we talked about the pensions and the police force. Is that something that's being discussed around the cabinet table as well?

While I have the floor, I will just mention – I'm quite sure the hon. minister knows – that there are two criminal cases before the courts right now regarding the sponsorship scandal. The Prime Minister has said that anybody who is found criminally responsible will go to jail. That's been his commitment all along. I can assure all members of this House that if and when it is proven that there were criminal acts that took place, every member on this side, as well, would want to see anybody responsible going to jail. I think all Canadians feel that way, and we're certainly no different in that regard.

But if you could address the issue of opting out of medicare, I would appreciate that. Thank you.

Mr. Stelmach: The success of health delivery in this country is based on wealth creation. We have to ensure that we have policies in place and good vision well into the future to create the kind of wealth that's going to pay for not only taking care of an aging environment but the new technology and the new drugs that will be coming forward.

In terms of opting out, I'm not aware of any discussions. There's nothing on the table. Our task here is to provide the best health program in Canada. I really do believe we're leading in that regard, and one of the reasons we're leading, Mr. Chair, is because we are creating the kind of wealth that we need to pay. Today we had the honour of participating in Canada's finest, if not the world's best, health institute, a research centre right here in the city of Edmonton. You've got the most modern burn unit in the world – I think there are only two other burn units like that in all of the world – here at the University of Alberta. You've got the most modern neonatal unit over at the Misericordia hospital. You've got tons of additional services and new technology that's being offered in Calgary. We've got the best regional health authority in the world here in Edmonton.

So let's focus on the positives and at the end of the day also look at how we're going to create wealth in the future so our grandchildren can appreciate, you know, the same standard of living and the same health programs, so that we sustain them well into the future.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. There were two questions that I hadn't had answered there. The minister concentrated on specifics of amalgamating departments. I'll clarify these ones again.

When he spoke about client performance there with the department's success: who are the clients and how are they reviewed, or at least how far are they removed from this department and the money? Then the other one was specific to programs on the initiatives of the Washington office, to evaluate against the outcomes as outlined in the ministry business plan. Those would be just the two.

Mr. Stelmach: In Washington I believe we'll be looking at the number of meetings, the amount of work that our representative will be doing there with all kinds of agencies, governments, whether they be state governments or the American government.

In terms of the client survey, it's with people not only inside government but outside, private sector, other governments other than the Alberta government to gauge in terms of whether we are earning our keep and bringing value to the taxpayer. I would say that given the kind of work that this department did on two key files but especially the one on health, you got your value because those negotiations weren't going anywhere until such time as we provided a lot of the direction that other Premiers accepted and got a health agreement.

So that is, in short, some of the strategies that we're going to implement in terms of measuring performance. But we'll give you a more detailed answer in a written format.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, and I apologize. I thought I was through asking questions. This has to do with health care and intergovernmental relationships. One of the things that was brought out at the Weighing the Evidence health conference that I attended on the weekend was the fact that the cost of drugs is probably the highest cost and continues to rise.

I know that the provinces pushed the federal government for some kind of a co-ordinated drug plan. Basically the provinces called upon the federal government to undertake the funding of this comprehensive drug plan, but it was found to be, at least from the federal point of view, too expensive for them to foot the total bill. My question is: do you think there is a place for the provinces to participate, using the idea of economies of scale, in a total participatory drug plan whereby we do the ordering in bulk and, therefore, saving the cost of drugs at provincial levels? Is this a place where Alberta would like to go, demonstrate leadership, push the federal government in terms of sharing the responsibility of a co-ordinated drug purchasing plan?

Mr. Stelmach: I believe those questions would be more appropriately asked to the minister of health, but just for the record I want to say that we do have the longest list of insured drugs in this province compared to any other province in Canada and, once again, only because we can afford it. And if it's still the norm or it's still the statistic, not only do we have the longest list, but I think we also have the largest amount of drugs that, unfortunately, aren't used and have to be environmentally treated at the end of the year. It's in tons as well. But without a doubt, we do have the longest list of insured drugs.

The Deputy Chair: After considering the business plan and the proposed estimates for the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, are you ready for the vote?

Bill 31
Real Estate Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Just with respect to Bill 31, the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2005, and on behalf of the hon. Minister of Government Services, I'd like to respond to some of the questions that were raised during second reading.

For Edmonton-McClung, the Real Estate Act currently allows the minister to make regulations regarding the time limit for submitting a claim to the assurance fund. The amendment act that is being proposed removes this authority and instead places what was in the regulation into the actual act. After the judgment on a claim becomes final, people have one year to claim from the assurance fund. This change ensures that claimants will be able to access the fund even if the court process is delayed.

For questions that were asked by the Member for Edmonton-Calder. The three-year time period to submit a claim from when industry members were last registered has been removed from the legislation. A claimant will now be able to take all the time that is necessary to obtain a judgment. After the final judgment is received, a claim must be submitted to the assurance fund within one year, and as I just indicated in response to the question asked by Edmonton-McClung a bit earlier, this will ensure that claimants will be able to access the fund even if the court process is delayed for whatever reason.

Edmonton-Rutherford had some questions, and the answers are that the regulation changes being made in this act will allow the Lieutenant Governor in Council to decide which corporations or entities cannot apply for compensation from the assurance fund, and the minister responsible will be able to prescribe additional information and documents that may be needed in the future. Also, all regulations will be consulted on with the relevant stakeholders prior to being passed.

Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview had some questions, and the answers are: regarding the implications of these amendments with respect to banks, it should be noted that the assurance fund was established in 1984 to pay consumers and unsophisticated claimants who have unpaid judgments resulting from acts of fraud or breach of trust by industry members, and of course that will remain in place. The fund was not established to compensate financial institutions and sophisticated investors who have access to independent legal advice or to in-house appraisers and so on. In fact, there have been no direct discussions with financial institutions on that one specific issue. However, the options and requirements to clarify the intent of the fund were researched to preserve it for consumers and small businesses.

To achieve the long-term viability of the fund, the Real Estate Act is being clarified to restrict claimants, to establish time limits on filing claims, and to set limits for compensation for losses. The Ministry of Government Services does not believe that institutions will penalize clients who become victims of fraud or breach of trust by industry members.

So I hope, Mr. Chair, that that clarification of some of the questions and some answers on behalf of the Minister of Government Services is helpful to speed along the discussion this evening on Bill 31. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I speak in favour of the act. This act supports the government's contention that it's not in the business of being in business, which is a direction that we in the opposition applaud. It is clear that the fund's intention is to protect consumers, not banks and lending institutions, who can afford insurance when dealing in real estate to cover their losses. So it's protecting the people, and that's extremely important to us. This bill will protect the fund from large claims from lending institutions that would potentially make the fund go broke. Albertans are being protected. Business is being put on notice, and I appreciate that.

Thank you very much.

[The clauses of Bill 31 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 34

Insurance Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I had indicated in second reading that I did have a number of comments and questions to make regarding this bill, most specifically with section 5.

I'll start with section 2, which is the clause that outlines the legal definition for a Crown insurer. Specifically, I'm wondering: the government has said that any Crown insurance company moving into Alberta to do auto insurance business in Alberta will have to meet the same rules and regulations and play by the same rules as any other company that is operating here. I don't think there's anybody in my caucus who would disagree with that, but I'm wondering if either the minister or somebody speaking on her behalf might be able to outline for us just exactly what they had in mind when they indicated that because in my mind it would have seemed to be rather obvious that a Crown insurer coming in would have to play by the same rules. Nevertheless, it's written into the legislation, and I would like to know just exactly what thought went into that particular clause.

I don't really have any problem with sections 3 and 4. They appear to be just housekeeping.

Section 5, the infamous section 5. I think I said in second reading that I was shocked, dismayed, disgusted – and I probably used several other adjectives – at the fact that the government of Alberta is not just limiting but, in fact, taking away the right of Albertans' access to the courts.

I asked in second reading – I didn't get an answer from the hon. Minister of Education tonight; I guess I'm the first speaker, so I didn't get an answer at all; perhaps I will get one – to be informed of what I understand would be the second, other case where the Alberta government has legislated against the lawsuit. I understand from Alberta Finance that there have been two instances in the past where the Alberta government has taken such a spectacular move in legislation. The one that I know of was the case of the sterilization victims from Michener Centre in Red Deer. I have been unable to find the other instance where it was done.

As near as I can tell at this point, this is only the second time that the Alberta government has taken such a broad brush against every single Albertan when they say in clause (2) that "no liability attaches to the Crown for any loss or damages that have arisen or may arise in respect of the reform amendments."

In clause (3), then, it goes on to specifically extinguish without costs – and I love that word “extinguish” – a particular action that is already before the courts. Now, I have to admit that I don’t know how often this step may have been taken in legislation, but again I’m shocked and appalled. The thought that somebody could come before the courts with a legitimate claim against the government and through legislation have it extinguished while it is before the courts scares me as a small businessperson in this province. It scares me as a citizen of this province. It smacks of Big Brother in 1984.

It really does beg the question for all Albertans: if the government can take this action against, in this case, Kingsway insurance, who’s next? I really, truly believe that everybody in this province should have alarm bells going off in their heads right now when we debate this bill in this Legislature because I just don’t know where it can stop. Once you open up this Pandora’s box, literally who is next?

I understand from the Alberta Civil Trial Lawyers Association that they actually are planning a constitutional challenge to this particular clause in the bill. At this point the information that I’ve received from Kingsway is that the amount of their claim is down to $3.4 million. Now, if you were to believe Kingsway – and I’m certainly not a lawyer, and I don’t know whether they’re right – their argument is that their claim would be the only one based on the circumstances of the case, that the reason nobody else has filed suit against the government is because nobody else has a claim against the government, at least as it relates to the initial freeze on auto insurance premiums. If their argument were to be true and their claim is down to $3.4 million, I wonder what the cost of defending a constitutional challenge to this government is going to be. I suspect, knowing the time period involved in going to the Supreme Court of Canada, defending ourselves in that circumstance . . .

Mr. Bonko: Two years.

Mr. R. Miller: My colleague from Edmonton-Decore suggests that it could be two years. The number of resources that would have to be poured into a defence like that could well add up to far more than $3.4 million.

Given that this lawsuit appears to have been brought forward in good faith under all of the proper rules, to wilfully waste money defending what I believe is bad legislation to begin with at the Supreme Court of Canada is certainly not, in my mind, a good use of taxpayers’ dollars. So I would really, really like to hear from somebody on the government side as to how they can defend clause 2 and clause 3 in section 5. Those just cause me untold concern, and I know that they have caused a lot of concern for not only Kingsway General Insurance but for the Civil Trial Lawyers Association and certainly all of the colleagues in my caucus.

So I’m hoping that somebody could provide some insight into that tonight at committee stage, Mr. Chairman, and I will take my seat and await a response. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to respond to the comments of my hon. colleague. First of all, as it relates to section 2, Crown insurers, he indicates that it goes without saying that the public insurers would have to adhere to the rules of the province of Alberta. Why did we legislate it? That’s to clarify that Crown insurers from neighbouring provinces or from wherever would have to abide by the rules in the province of Alberta, which are different than the province they may originate from, such as having certain capital requirements, paying the same taxes, maintaining Alberta offices, whatever the regulations may be. That had to be clarified because they are currently licensed to operate in other provinces.

Now, with respect to section 5, first of all my hon. colleague requested to be informed about other similar cases, and my recollection of the debate under second reading was that the Finance minister undertook to answer that question. Certainly, the member has discovered one such case. I’m not personally aware of any others, but I understand the Finance minister was going to get back to you on that.

With respect to the case named in section 5 and the supposed constitutional challenge thereof, I would caution the member that the lawyers for that particular insurance company are free to say what they want; that doesn’t make it so. Certainly, any bill proposed by the government is reviewed by the department of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, and certainly we proceed on their advice. So I will defer to the hon. minister if he wishes to make further comment – and that would be a no. I believe that we’re certainly in compliance with everything we’ve been advised by our lawyers.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I would very much like assurance from a representative of this government that inclusion of public insurance isn’t just tokenism and an attempt to quell the concerns about not having a public insurance program in Alberta. Again I’ll refer to the economy of scale. For a public insurance system to offer lower rates, they have to have a larger population base in order to offer those rates, and given the small portion of the market that out-of-province insurers might like to capture, I’m not sure how many would be interested as opposed to a full-blown public insurance program within the province, that would save Albertans considerably.

My esteemed colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford also talked about subsections (2) and (3) of section 5. To me it’s an escape clause on this government’s part. I’ll use not only the Orwellian model, but I’ll use the fact that it’s draconian to think that this government legislates something that’s above and beyond the law. With regard to the Orwellian ideology that was referenced, the line or the ideology out of 1984 is that he “who controls the past controls the future,” that somehow we can rewrite the future and our responsibilities. I don’t believe that either subsections (2) and (3) or the notion of putting a limit on soft tissue injury compensation will stand up to a constitutional challenge, and I look forward to those challenges taking place.

In one sense Kingsway has brought up a particular concern. I’m not concerned about Kingsway. I’m concerned about the legitimacy of trying to negate future claims more so than Kingsway’s monetary concerns, and of course I’m concerned about the legislating or attempting to legislate compensation for soft tissue injury. I don’t think it’s within this government’s power or should be within this government’s concern to try and limit that type of compensation.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I guess it’s difficult to comment on my hon. colleague’s assertion that the section relating to public insurers is window dressing. It reads pretty clear to me that Crown insurers are allowed to operate within the province of Alberta. Whether they choose to do so or not is entirely up to them, but with passage of this bill they would be allowed to do so.

This government is not now nor ever going to create a monopoly for Crown insurers to operate in this province, but it's certainly offering the opportunity for them to do so. Should they decide that they can compete, they're free to enter the market. In fact, my understanding of the situation is that at least one insurer is ready to enter the market.

With respect to section 5, again, this bill says nothing about soft tissue injury. That's a bill passed by this Legislature in the previous session.

With respect to the Orwellian question, I thank the member for his literary lesson. I have another one myself: as much as a member may huff and puff, he won't blow this House down. We believe that this is a sound piece of legislation, and it will survive challenge.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd just like to mention that I appreciate the effort that the Member for Peace River is making in answering our questions tonight as we move this bill through the committee stage.

Section 8 refers to strengthening the Crown's authority by allowing it to impose terms or conditions on licences at any time that it considers appropriate. My understanding is that prior to this amendment the Crown could only make such decisions at the time of issuing or renewing a licence. I'm wondering if you might be able to share with us what this change will mean to consumers most specifically but also what impact it might have on insurance companies and if you could give an example of where or why you would change a licence, you know, halfway through its term or a third of the way through its term.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. An excellent question, and I can point out that this clause is entirely inserted as a consumer protection measure. The government of Alberta grants operating licences to a wide variety of companies: pulp mills, anybody running a boiler – I'm sure some of your colleagues would be familiar with that – all sorts of operating licences. In most of the cases that I'm aware of from my past experience in industry the government can impose operating conditions at any time for violations of safety regulations or environmental regulations, reforestation regulations, as in my previous business.

This section is inserted so that the same would apply to insurance companies with a licence to operate in Alberta. Should they violate any of the regulations under the Insurance Act, the government could mid-term impose operating restrictions. This would impose some hardship on the company, with good reason, for violating regulations, and would impose some protections to consumers. Examples of violations might be not meeting the capital requirements, violating the all-comers rule, something like that.

So if the government received complaint or under its own investigations discovered that a company was violating the regulations or the terms of its operating licence, they could restrict the practice of the insurance company within the province.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I don't know the details of the Kingsway suit in particular. I don't know what they're all about, but I just find it very disturbing that we would pass a piece of legislation that would go out of its way to quash a lawsuit. It seems to me that these people have the right to go through the courts. They've launched a suit. They have the right to see it go through to its conclusion.

This is very disturbing to me in that way because everyone has a right to due process, and it seems to be that by doing this – you know, is this the beginning of a trend? Can we do it the next time there's a lawsuit up against the government that it doesn't like, that we can just pass the legislation to stop it? Maybe if you could address that. The rest of the bill is – I don't know – mostly house-keeping stuff, but there's a little, tiny, very disturbing element to this. Perhaps you could let us know: will this happen again? Next time around, when the government has their back against the wall in a lawsuit, are we going to pass a law to stop it? Can you address that, please?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Clearly, I can't address the hypothetical "will we do it again?" portion of that question. I don't speak to what this government will do in the future or what some future government may do.

I will point out to the hon. member that his own colleague just pointed out that this is not unprecedented, and clearly this government doesn't believe that it's Orwellian or anything else. The fact of the matter is that this government is following through on its legislation passed in the last session to reform private automobile insurance. It was clear in the intent of that previous legislation that the insurance companies were not going to be compensated for changes in the insurance regulations, and all that this bill does is follow through on that commitment. Again, it's not unprecedented.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd just like to remind the Member for Peace River that the last time that this government brought forward a piece of legislation that extinguished the rights of a group of Albertans, the Premier backed up on that within 48 hours, and that piece of legislation was dropped.

It might be wise of this government to consider doing the same with this particular piece of legislation because it really does open a door to a path that I'm not sure any one of us really cares to go down. It causes me, as I said before, untold concern. I'm just not satisfied with the explanation we're getting from the Member for Peace River, and I'm, quite frankly, disappointed that there aren't many other members in this House standing up tonight to speak against this particular section in the legislation.

Having said that, I would like to jump on to section 14, which I see adds a clarification as to making sure that the consumer rep on the Automobile Insurance Rate Board cannot be a member of one of the public insurance companies or their affiliate if they should choose to come into the province, and that's a good thing. I would like to remind the House it was actually my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar who brought forward the notion of having a consumer rep on the AIRB in the first place. We certainly want to protect the integrity of that position. If anything, there should be more than one consumer rep, but I am pleased to see that we've made that clarification.

Section 18, again, outlines some of the General Insurance OmbudService, that was talked about in second reading, and I applaud that. It looks as if we've outlined relatively clearly for consumers what the appeals process would be, and I do believe that that is a good thing.

I did have another question here, and I'm not sure if I'm going to be able to remember it before some hon. members might suggest that I'm sleeping. In fact, I'm not sleeping, but I'm looking for my third question or my third comment.

I will take my chair, Mr. Chairman, and look for that other question and allow somebody else to take part in the debate. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I appreciate the point the hon. member made about the soft tissue concerns being a separate issue.

I would like to know: does this amendment address or is the government proposing a future act that would address the automatic passing of rate increases by the insurance commission, which led to incredible insurance profits and a rise, a 60 per cent increase, that was allowed by the insurance commission prior to the government discussing rollbacks? Then, of course, with those rollbacks we went the voluntary route, and when that didn't work, we rolled back the insurance an additional 6 per cent. I think we've probably now gone back about 13 per cent of that 60 per cent increase. Will this amendment or other proposed acts of the government deal with insurance profits, or will it simply be a further rubber stamping once they've had this initial setback?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's amazing. I think Bill Cosby once said that if you go back and sit down, you will remember what it was you were thinking of, and as soon as I sat down, I remembered what I was thinking of.

One of my pet peeves throughout my time here at the Legislature, particularly as it concerns the auto insurance reforms, has been the fact that in so many cases the reforms apply only to privately owned and operated vehicles. We seem to be leaving business, particularly small business – I'm a member of that community – out of the equation and not doing enough to support small business in their efforts to be competitive.

In section 12 the change that's being made specifies that it applies only to private vehicles. The inference I'm left with is that previously it applied to all vehicles, and now we're changing it to apply only to private passenger vehicles. Again, if the Member for Peace River wouldn't mind commenting on that, I would be curious to know why we've chosen to go that route in this case and, at least in my mind, appear to once again have neglected the needs and concerns of small business.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just to address the comments again on the Kingsway case. The government is just acting to protect Alberta taxpayers from having to compensate insurers. It was in the process of developing the reforms. The government stated clearly that the costs associated with the new system would be covered by the insurance industry, and I would remind the hon. member, my hon. colleague, that there were corresponding liability offsets, and the losses were not that significant in that regard.

With respect to his comments about the rate review board I would remind him that I take a little bit of exception to the rubber-stamp concept. First of all, the rate review is not complete. All we've done so far is that the minister has signalled her desire for a voluntary rollback, that not forthcoming, a rollback imposed. But the rate review process is still under way, and we're awaiting an answer to that in the fall of this year. What this bill does is allow a mandatory rollback not just on basic insurance but also on extra insurance, on collision, in the event that there's profit-taking in that sector. So this adds, again, more consumer protection powers to the minister.

With respect to small business I hear clearly and I'm sympathetic and I believe the government is sympathetic to the commercial insurance sector. The reason that this bill applied strictly to private passenger vehicles was that it's a completion of last year's private insurance reform. I believe the clause that the member highlighted indicates that the all-comer rule applies to private passenger vehicles only. The reason for that is that the commercial vehicles already have an insurer of last resort.

As I said, I'm sympathetic, but at this stage a review or a redo of the commercial insurance sector, if required, would also require a full-blown public involvement, a public input process, and the government is anxious to complete reforms to the private insurance process started in the last session.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'll close comment and call the question.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In reference to the comments just made by the Member for Peace River, when the government undertook their reforms, one of the things that I know they were hearing loud and clear was the concern of new drivers and, particularly, young drivers. Certainly, that is a major concern for small business when they're looking at hiring, whether or not this person that they're hiring fits into those so-called high-risk categories and whether or not that's going to add to their cost of doing business. Although there may well be an insurer of last resort, there's also a huge cost related to that. The young driver has benefited greatly by the reforms on privately owned, privately operated vehicles. Unfortunately, small business has not benefited to the same extent at all when they're looking at hiring young people. So that was the reason for my raising the concern today.

Now, the Member for Peace River said during second reading – and he said it again tonight, in fact – that the government clearly stated that any costs associated with the new system would be covered by the insurance industry. I happen to be privy to the government documents that have been produced in relation to the Kingsway lawsuit, and I've gone through that, pored through it with a fine-toothed comb. In fact, Mr. Chairman, I can't find anywhere in that documentation produced by the government in its defence that they're preparing for the lawsuit where they say that.

I'm wondering if the Member for Peace River could either show us a copy of the speech or the press release or the public statement or the media report or whatever where during the reforms the government said that the costs associated with this system would be covered by the insurance industry, because I can't find that in the brief that they've prepared in defence of the Kingsway lawsuit.

Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 34 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the Committee of the Whole now rise and report bills 31 and 34.

[Motion carried]

11:20

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 31 and Bill 34.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Third Reading

Bill 16
Business Corporations Amendment Act, 2005

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise tonight to move third reading of Bill 16, the Business Corporations Amendment Act, 2005.

In so doing, I want to address a couple of concerns that the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung had raised regarding the accountant's independence. The legislation does provide that an accountant is disqualified from being an auditor of a corporation if the accountant and/or his business partners are shareholders of the corporation. Furthermore, a corporation is required to state the reasons for replacing an auditor of a corporation, which it was not required to do before, and the auditor is allowed to comment on the corporation's statement.

The Business Corporations Act came into force in 1982 and has not been substantially amended since 1987. These new amendments to the Business Corporations Act will modernize Alberta's legislation to keep pace with changes that have been made to the federal corporations laws and will help to harmonize many of the provisions of the Alberta Business Corporations Act with those of its federal counterpart. The amendments will also allow the greater use of electronic technology, they will facilitate shareholder and director involvement in the governance of the corporations, and they will enhance shareholder protection in keeping with the trends in other jurisdictions.

There are significant new safeguards for shareholders in this legislation, and that will enable shareholders to have greater confidence when they invest in Alberta corporations. These include expanded disclosure requirements for directors and officers, who may include any interest in material transactions as well as any material contracts in their disclosures.

Mr. Speaker, those conclude my remarks in moving third reading of Bill 16, the Business Corporations Amendment Act, 2005.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I would just like to applaud and recognize the wisdom of the sponsor of this bill, who is also, I believe, a Calgary-Varsity constituent. It has been noted that 72 per cent of individuals populating the constituency of Calgary-Varsity have postsecondary degrees, so it's no wonder that we've seen such intelligence recognized and shared within this House tonight. I applaud the member. It has to do with living in the constituency, I'm sure.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Speaker, I get a little concerned when we hear "Question." If people don't want to give to the debate, perhaps they should go home if that's the case for some of the people.

For myself, our concerns with this particular piece were basically addressed to some extent. We do support the bill and would like to see it, as the whole thing does unfold, with respect to the unlimited liability corporations. We also agree to the standardization with regard to the provincial laws and with regard to the federal status as well.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill to close debate.

Dr. Brown: No further comments, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a third time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 35
Employment Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate April 25: Mr. R. Miller]

The Acting Speaker: Are you ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 35 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a very exciting and productive day and evening here in the House, perhaps in celebration of VE Day. Regardless, it's a wonderful tribute to all members of the House, and on that basis I would move that the House now stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motioned carried; at 11:26 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 3, 2005

1:30 p.m.

Date: 05/05/03

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. We give thanks for our abundant blessings to our province and ourselves. We ask for guidance and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my distinct privilege today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two honoured guests from Kenya who are seated in your gallery. The guests are the Hon. Richard Kalembe Ndile, a member of the National Assembly of Kenya, and Mr. Davinder Lamba, who is the executive director of Mazingira Institute of Kenya. These visitors are on a Canadian tour. They're going to be visiting Quebec, our province, and the province of Ontario. They're already up on their feet, and I would now ask the House to give them a warm welcome.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food, and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Speaker, you graciously hosted a tea this morning in the Legislature Library, and we were honoured that librarians and chairs of library boards from various parts of Alberta attended. On your behalf I would like to introduce two of your guests from the Legislature Library tea today who have remained with us to view question period. They are Joanne Morgan, librarian, Morinville public library; Maureen Wilcox, chair, Yellowhead regional library. They are seated in your gallery this afternoon. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and pleasure to introduce to you and through you undoubtedly the brightest students in Alberta: 64 grade 6 students from Graminia school from the constituency of Stony Plain. These students are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Gloria Wolff, Mrs. Rhonda Stewart, Miss Michelle Pernisch, and nine parents. They're seated in both the members' and the public galleries. I'd ask that these guests rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of 18 incredibly active, vibrant, and politically aware young people from the Petrolia 60 Plus seniors. If I can take the time, I'd just like to quickly introduce them. They're led by group leader Jim Muldrew, and joining Jim today are Preterita Zegarra, Doris Lees, George and Marce Eykelbosh, Jacob and Anne Gukert, Tannis Betts, Cecil and Golverdina Marshall, Doug and Bernice Hanon, Jack and Betty Evans, Bill and Marj Jardine, and Eugene and Leone Prozny. I had the pleasure of joining them in the cafeteria this afternoon for lunch, and we all agreed that the ham and split pea soup was wonderful. They're very much enjoying their visit here today. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Laura Paquette. Laura is a University of Alberta student in elementary education and serves on the social justice committee at St. Charles Catholic parish. Laura was recently hired as our STEP position in Edmonton-Calder, so I will have her with me for the duration of the summer. We in the NDP caucus are very thrilled to have her with us and would invite her to rise and everyone to give her the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, do you have another introduction?

Dr. Pannu: I'm done, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Okay. Others?

Then, hon. members, just allow me to introduce one of your own to you. If hon. members would like to know what true happiness and bliss is, let me introduce the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, who today is celebrating his 30th wedding anniversary with his delightful lady.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Enron Activities in Alberta

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's becoming increasingly clear that Enron didn't rip off Alberta electricity consumers alone. It had help from other power companies. The testimony of an energy expert filed with the U.S. Federal Energy Regulatory Commission last January states, and I quote: Enron was able to achieve this higher price by colluding with other market participants to play along. End quote. It's referring to the prices in Alberta. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. Does the minister know who colluded with Enron to manipulate electricity prices in Alberta?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I'm not specifically aware of the instance that he's quoting. I'd be happy to look at the information, and if there is information to verify and substantiate collusion, those are precisely the pieces of evidence that we'd asked for so that the proper investigation can occur.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We'll table the information.

To the same minister: given that TransAlta admitted to U.S. regulators that it used some of the same electricity trading schemes that Enron became infamous for in California, how can the minister be sure that TransAlta didn't collude with Enron to drive up power prices here in Alberta?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, it sounds like he's talking of events that happened in the United States. Whether similar events or anything like that happened in Canada, we'd ask him to bring forward the evidence. We've had and we do continue to have a very good monitoring system to investigate and to follow up to ensure that Albertans are protected.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Given that TransAlta has donated almost a quarter million dollars to the Tory party since 1992, is this Tory government refusing to investigate TransAlta, stonewalling because it doesn't want to stop the big cheques from rolling in?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I find it unfortunate that you can get up in the Assembly and through assertions and aspersions and other doubt try to belittle and slander the names of companies that certainly have operated well on behalf of Albertans. If there is evidence – and we'd ask if there is evidence – we would be the first to act on appropriate evidence to see that Albertans are protected. We don't support a slanderous approach, innuendo, or anything like that.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The close connection between the Alberta electricity market and the Pacific Northwest markets allowed Enron to manipulate Alberta's prices with Project Stanley and make unjust and unreasonable profits. Between January 2000 and June of 2001 Enron ripped off consumers in these markets for over $940 million. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. How much of this unjust and unreasonable $940 million rip-off by Enron was taken from the pocketbooks of Alberta's electricity consumers?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, it's I guess convenient to pick some numbers like 900 and some odd million. Why not pick a billion or two billion or whatever number you wish to take?

We still ask for and always have asked that there be evidence. When there were cases brought forward in the past, Project Stanley or anything else that may have been like that, those investigations have occurred by the market surveillance administrator. They've also involved the federal Competition Bureau because some of that transaction was alluded to have happened with parties outside the province. In that case, we still would ask and look for the evidence. That's the best and the only way that you can ensure that investors are protected.

It's convenient, I guess, just to start picking numbers out of the air.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These numbers weren't picked out of the air; they were picked from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission investigation.

What efforts is the government making to get some of this money back for Alberta consumers?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, there still is no evidence that consumers have been taken for that money. It's still just an assertion. If he has the evidence, I'd ask him to please forward it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, these documents will be tabled after question period.

Given that this government was so anxious to go after a couple of AISH clients who were supposedly ripping off the system, how come this government is so reluctant now to pursue Enron and its greedy partners, who ripped off the electricity system and consumers here in Alberta? Why go after the needy and protect the greedy?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, totally unfair comparisons, not related incidents. The facts aren't even related. They just don't even relate to the story at hand.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Domestic Violence

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2003 a Red Deer man shot and killed himself and his estranged wife after a court-ordered visitation with their child. This was a brutal murder/suicide that shocked Albertans because this man had previously been threatening to kill his wife. This raises serious questions in regard to police procedures in handling domestic violence as well as the effectiveness of domestic courts. So my first question is to the Solicitor General. Will the Solicitor General address the 91 areas of improvement that an internal RCMP probe of this situation recommended in the wake of this tragedy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the member from the opposition correctly states that there were 91 recommendations. Chief Superintendent Rod Knecht of the RCMP studied the report and made the recommendations. Thirty of the recommendations have already been put in place since this tragic incident in 2003.

The issue is, Mr. Speaker, that, yes, we have to. The RCMP as well as every major police service in the province has to work with the families, has to work with organizations, and with those support services that are in the community with regard to domestic violence cases. These are serious issues that have to be dealt with. As well, we have to continue to work with those shelters that are providing shelter for women and children with regard to those issues.

There's a lot of work that still has to be done with reporting an incident and, as well, enforcing a zero tolerance mechanism with regard to domestic violence itself.

Dr. B. Miller: My second question is to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Given that this horrific incident came about as the result of a court-ordered visitation, will the minister review the procedures and strategies that domestic courts take in dealing with violent spouses in relation to court-ordered visitations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the things that we are doing that I can tell the hon. member about is that we are in the process of evaluating a risk assessment group. This is a group that would be able to identify high-risk situations and take appropriate action through a number of different specialists. So, for example, you would have specialized police, specialized prosecutors, psychologists, psychiatrists, and the like. We are in the process of establishing a business plan for that. There is a model for this in Ontario, which has had incredible success, and as I understand it, at present that particular group has been able to avoid death in all of the circumstances in which they have been involved.

Of course, there is a high correlation between high-risk family violence situations and the tragedy like this particular situation that the hon. member has referred to.

Dr. B. Miller: Again to the Minister of Justice: given the call by reports and stakeholders for an integrated and co-ordinated response to family violence, what initiatives are being taken to ensure that rural communities as well as urban communities benefit from the approach of a unified domestic court?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, one of the initiatives that we have in place in Edmonton, in Calgary, and in Lethbridge at this point in time is a domestic violence court, which deals, of course, with the crime of domestic violence. As a result of the policies that we have and the good news that will be coming forward later today, I can advise you that our plans are to expand that beyond those three centres.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Securities Commission

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If it's broke, it's probably time to stop dithering and start fixing it. The Alberta Securities Commission has become a national embarrassment. In denying the Auditor General access to enforcement files, the ASC has shown contempt and belligerence toward the Minister of Finance and this Assembly. This should have been the final straw. My question I guess to the Government House Leader: how much longer will the government put up with this dysfunctional securities commission before some decisive action is taken?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance has day after day in this House answered similar questions. The fact of the matter is that the Minister of Finance requested the Auditor General to expedite his audit of the commission, to do a particularly special audit of the commission, and has indicated that she wants to await the results of those. As part of doing an audit, of course, there has to be the terms of the audit worked out, and that's the issue between the Auditor General and the Securities Commission as we speak. Hopefully, those two parties will be able to come to terms with respect to the terms of the audit, and that audit can proceed, and we can get to the bottom of this.

Mr. Martin: Dithering, Mr. Speaker.

Given that investors clearly have no faith in this Securities Commission, isn't it time to push for a national – and I stress: not a federal but a national – securities regulator?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The two issues are not related. This government has been part of discussions with respect to national securities regulation over the course of a number of years. There are many good reasons to have a passport process in place, as we do now, and to have a national commission in place, and that discussion is ongoing. That's a different question. That doesn't mean that you would abandon the need for security regulation in the province. We have a very vibrant economy, a very strong need for a good, vibrant, strong securities commission to regulate the process of public companies to make sure that appropriate information is available. Two separate issues.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, unlike the minister, investors do not have faith, and given that a single national regulator developed by the provinces makes it easier for small companies to raise capital and would save the province millions, why won't the government exercise national leadership and work with other provinces for a solution to this problem so we don't end up in the mess we're in now?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, in respect to that question I'd like to just respond that there was a very strong initiative taken among the provinces to work to create greater harmonization in the securities regulation, and all of the provinces at one stage were in unanimous consent. At this stage Ontario is still watching and would prefer the other, but our markets have been well served by our securities commissions. I do want to state that the majority of those companies that are raising capital are energy companies. They rely upon both the Toronto Stock Exchange and the Venture Exchange. Both on the TSX and Venture exchanges primarily from Alberta are energy companies. They are very successful in raising capital. Their investors are receiving very good rates of return. The marketplace is very efficient, and its operating very well, and there's a great degree of confidence both among those companies raising capital and among their investors that are putting the monies in.

School Construction in Edmonton

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a November 27, 2002, Edmonton Journal article, which I will table, Mr. Charlie Koester, chairman of the Edmonton Catholic school board, stated that "the board's first priority is to construct a $12.6-million high school in the fast-growing neighbourhood in north Edmonton." The school board's 2002-2005 capital plan, which I will also table, lists this project as a number one priority. To the Minister of Infrastructure: considering that Ms Engel, the present chairperson of the school board, denies that such a project was ever a construction priority, can the minister advise this House whether capital plans filed in his office support the past chairperson or the present chairperson?

1:50

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I'll only respond to that question with the facts of what was actually tabled by the Edmonton Catholic school board. On June 30, 2002, we had a slightly different category system for tabling them. The number one category for new school construction was, and I quote, a construction of a high school in northwest Edmonton. On June 30 of 2003 there were also priorities put in for the 2005 school year, and at that time number one was to move 10 portables, and number two was the Castle Downs high school. On June 30 of 2004 the priorities for 2005 from Edmonton Catholic were put in. The first one was to relocate 12 portables, the second one was to construct links to support portables, the third one was an elementary school in southwest Edmonton, and the fourth one was a grade 9 to 12 school in northwest Edmonton in Castle Downs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you. Since the minister has the capital plans, can the minister advise this House whether a high school project in Terwillegar has ever been of any priority on this school board's capital plan.

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, in reviewing the capital plans of the last three years, the answer is no.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Considering the confusion in the school board on what their priorities were and what they are, will the minister audit the school board's capital plan drafting procedures?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I really feel that first of all I do have to sit down with the chair of the Edmonton Catholic school board as well as with the superintendent, and I will be doing that on Thursday. I'm sure there is a good honest explanation for this, but I really feel that it's imperative that I speak with them first. I'll be doing that with them on Thursday of this week.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Support for Low-income Albertans

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Poverty and homelessness remain a scourge in resource-rich Alberta. Housing costs are high, and tens of thousands of daily requests are made to food banks. The disadvantaged get hurt in boom times, and if you don't have the right job, you're not rich in Alberta. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. When will this government announce a timetable to raise support levels for those who cannot work and for the working poor?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Of course that's a very good question because it's definitely a priority for this minister. As you are aware, the other day we did announce the increase in the minimum wage starting September 1. Of course, that will have some positive impact on those people that are struggling through some challenging times.

As you are aware – I would hope I can have a bit of time to explain this, what's happened here in Alberta in relation to people the member is addressing. That's the high-needs area. It's definitely a priority. You know, when you go back a number of years ago, we did reform the welfare system, Mr. Speaker, because at the time 80 per cent of dollars were being utilized by single, healthy, young Albertans. The caseload was 97,000, a $1.7 billion budget.

Mr. Backs: A supplementary to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: what is this government's plan to cut the waiting times for the thousands of low income families hoping for decent, affordable housing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is a very important question because we are working hard to provide affordable housing for our low-income individuals, families, people with special needs. The Federation of Canadian Municipalities just this year alone through their statistics did indicate that the cities of Edmonton and Calgary have one of the shortest waiting lists across the country for subsidized housing. I think that that is in keeping with the federal program that we have in place, that we've mentioned before hon. member, and that's the Canada/Alberta affordable housing program, where we have provided over the past three years $106 million and constructed 2,400 homes for people. That program is ongoing. There's $25 million in that program. Through the rent supplement and the subsidized housing, we provide for 43,000 families, individuals, people with special needs in Alberta. We provide housing for those individuals through a budget of $49 million, which has been an increase of $17 million this year. Hon. member, I can tell you that it is a serious issue, and we will continue to work in that regard.

Mr. Backs: There are thousands still waiting.

A supplementary to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Given the challenge many disadvantaged families face in our booming economy, when will this government begin a full review of basic needs and supports for the disadvantaged?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have been reviewing it already and have taken some plans through our regular process. We are talking, you know, about 11,000 individuals that are in a category of not expected to work. Those benefits, yes, have not been increased since '92-93, except there have been additional supports provided: health care coverage, daycare, clothing, children's school expenses, utility hookups, and, of course, child payment supports, et cetera. We are doing that already, but definitely the rates are being reviewed right now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

School Construction in Calgary

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary board of education has expressed concerns that inflation and construction cost escalations will cause funding delays for new schools in Calgary. The original cost estimates were based on 2001 construction prices, and these costs have since increased. Many of my constituents are concerned about possible delays and are looking for some assurances that funding will cover these increases. My questions today are for the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Will provincial funding be put on hold for previously approved Calgary schools due to construction cost increases?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In this particular budget I made the cost overages a priority to this department. Included in my budgetary estimates this year were $762 million on cost overages for various projects right around the province. So I have given a commitment that any school, any hospital, any road that was already committed to, that was already announced, will be built despite the cost escalations. The cost escalations are built into the dollar amounts that are given to Calgary public, and it will not delay the construction of their schools one iota.

Mrs. Ady: I just have one supplemental for the minister. My final question is: how is the province responding to the increasing need for new schools in Calgary, over and above those already approved, to address the growth in the Calgary area?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, included in this budget, as well, are approximately 16 new schools that will either be finished or started within the next three years. All the schools that have been announced, including the five that were in the paper today, will proceed. Chaparral and Citadel, for example, which were in the newspaper today, actually already have been approved to tender. The other three are very close to being approved to tender.

Mr. Speaker, those dollars will follow. We want to ensure that the taxpayer gets the best benefit for the dollars, but we also want to ensure that those schools will be built. I'll give complete assurance to the hon. member that those schools will be built regardless of the cost overruns that are presently in Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Municipal Infrastructure Spending

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Provincial infrastructure grants to municipalities are considerably smaller than the variety of taxes, including income, property, fuel, and health care premium taxes, that are extracted by the province from these communities. As a result of a decade of deficit downloading, Alberta's two major cities would alone require the entire $9.2 billion announced for the province over three years to meet their infrastructure needs this year. My first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Given that the Liberal caucus has been informed that the city of Edmonton requires over $4.5 billion, how will the minister address the funding gap beyond this year's $700 million budget provision?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the things that everyone in this Assembly has to realize and recognize is that there is an infrastructure shortage right throughout the province, whether it be in Brooks, Fort McMurray, Edmonton, or Calgary. So to address part of that infrastructure shortage, we allocated $3 billion this year, and $3 billion is a lot of money. Is that going to take all the infrastructure woes that are in the province and cure them instantly overnight? No, it isn't, but it is certainly going to go a long way. The key to this program as well is the flexibility that is involved in it so that the individual jurisdictions have the ability to put those dollars to where they are needed the most.

Mr. Speaker, it is a good start. We are in no way saying that $3 billion is going to clear up all of the infrastructure deficit, the infrastructure woes in the province, but it's going to go an awful long way to doing that.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. My second question is also to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Given the discrepancy between this year's budget allocation announcement for Fort McMurray of $60 million over three years and the $1.6 billion requirement, how will the minister address this funding shortfall?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, at around 9 o'clock this morning I made an announcement of $530 million in Fort McMurray to deal with Fort McMurray infrastructure. This project is committed over 10 years. I've also given the undertaking to Fort McMurray to ensure to decrease that time frame by at least four or five years, and we hope to see it in the next four or five years. As the hon. member fully well knows, this was money that was included in my budget this year.

Mr. Chase: Well, I'm glad to hear that we're a third of the way to solving Fort McMurray's problem.

To the same minister: to avoid future fiascos like the ambulance transfer and given municipalities' dependence on the province for grants, will the minister commit to providing a five-year infrastructure base amount to assist long-term municipal planning?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, again, in Edmonton and Calgary they receive between $80 million and $90 million in a guaranteed amount from the fuel infrastructure that is in place. The fuel tax that is in place goes right back to the municipalities. There have been scores of municipal grants that go out on a yearly basis. This year alone we're at roughly $1.1 billion including the $600 million, so there is about $500 million that is going out to Alberta municipalities this year alone.

One of the issues that the municipalities have raised is the sustainability of these grants, and the five-year granting program for $3 billion has gone a huge, huge way to showing them the sustainability that is there. Those monies are there; those monies are guaranteed to be there, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Highway Improvements in Northeastern Alberta

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member opposite alluded to the importance of the oil sands in northeastern Alberta, my question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. First of all, northeastern Alberta is experiencing a very rapid growth due to heavy investment in the oil sands projects. While the investment and growth are welcome, it does put pressure on the highways in the area. What is his department doing to reduce the pressure on these highways?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I previously stated, this morning we made an announcement of $530 million over the next 10 years. We've included numerous works on highway 63, including another 25 kilometres of passing lanes, some three or four staging areas, which are critically important. We're widening parts of highway 881 from the junction of 63 and 881 to Anzac, which has been an incredibly important issue. We're also paving roughly 40 kilometres of road on highway 881, which would only leave approximately 75 kilometres that are not paved.

Mr. Speaker, the nice thing about these announcements is that they go on and on and on. We're also four-laning from Suncor to Syncrude. So we're doing a lot this year, but more importantly what we did this morning was we laid out the plan over the next 10 years, which I hope to accelerate to the next four or five years because I feel that Fort McMurray needs it, as does all of the north.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. My second question is also to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. More directly, when will highway 881 be fully paved between Lac La Biche and Anzac?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've stated, there are roughly 70 kilometres of road that as of this year will not be paved. I recognize that this is critically important to the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul as it goes right through his community.

I'm pleased to announce today that by the year 2007 and potentially sooner those 70 kilometres will be paved as well, which will then have the whole 220 kilometres from highway 63 right up to Fort McMurray paved. This will provide an alternate route to highway 63 to Fort McMurray that is paved and in good condition, Mr. Speaker, so it's extremely valuable for Fort McMurray.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. Will the department be fast-tracking other projects that were announced this morning as well?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I could go on and on about this announcement – I'm sure you wouldn't really want me to do that – but we are looking at fast-tracking this overall plan in northeastern Alberta. We're looking at fast-tracking it to the next four or five years depending on dollar availability, depending on potential budgets in the upcoming year. We've made the announcements for 10 years, but I really would like to see it accelerated. Directly to the hon. member, probably the first area that will be accelerated is finishing the paving of 881 sooner as opposed to later because it is so critical.

Camrose Women's Shelter

Mrs. Mather: Recently the government of Alberta in a move to develop the property around Camrose's new casino gave the city $5.2 million. Within weeks of that decision they also denied new money to the local women's shelter, a remarkable showing of this government's priorities. To the Minister of Children's Services: why was the Camrose Women's Shelter overlooked when the government was increasing funding to shelters?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have I think done a fairly good job in regard to trying to deal with the issue of family violence and bullying plus the women's shelters. We announced a few weeks ago a substantial amount of money to deal with what we considered to be the priorities in the province. It was done in consultation with my staff and to address the needs of where we thought the priorities were in the rural areas that we gave the last funding to.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. To the same minister: given that the development of the casino will likely bring more problems with gambling to Camrose, wouldn't it be prudent to be proactive and have more shelter beds available to Camrose and the large surrounding area it serves?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a difficult question to answer because she's talking about the casino and the problems the casino will bring. I can't look into the future and second-guess what's going to happen. I can tell her, though, that we will be vigilant and watching what's happening with family violence in this area, and we will monitor what's happening in Camrose.

We have a good relationship with all of the shelters in this province. I'll be touring the province after we get out of session, and we'll be meeting with the people in Camrose and be able to talk to them. If in the future there are problems with the casino and an increase in family violence, which I'm hoping won't, then we'll deal with that particular issue at that time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. To the same minister: given that Camrose is a hub for surrounding communities and family violence is a concern of Children's Services in its commitment to the rural development strategy, will the minister reconsider and increase the funding for the shelter?

Mrs. Forsyth: Again, Mr. Speaker, we just announced a fairly substantial amount of money to the women's shelters in some of the rural areas on a priority need. We will continue to consult with the shelters, talk to them, assess their needs at the time, and if there is more money required in Camrose, certainly we'll look at it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Long-term Care Standards

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night members of this Assembly finally acknowledged what thousands of Albertans already know: conditions in long-term care facilities are unacceptable, and something needs to be done about it. We passed an NDP opposition motion last night calling on the government to "take [further] steps to improve the quality of care provided to Albertans living in long-term care facilities by reviewing staffing levels and standards for long-term care facilities." It's now time for less talk and more action. My questions are to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Given that this motion calls on the government to act on staffing levels, when will this government commit to the recommended four hours of care per resident per day?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member does raise a very important issue. I did support, as all the Assembly supported, the motion that was before it last evening regarding long-term care as it was amended. I'm just going to let the Assembly know once again – I have discussed this before, hon. member – that the area for long-term care that is with my ministry is for accommodation, which would include room and board and in that line that would mean, for example, meals, the utilities. It's not the care portion. The care portion is with the Department of Health and Wellness. We are working together in looking at the development of standards for long-term care and in clarifying them and making them more useful.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta does not require an annual inspection of every long-term care facility and that barely a third of Alberta's long-term care facilities are inspected in any given year, when will this government commit in law to more rigorous inspection and enforcement?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, long-term care facilities are being inspected, as the member did mention. Some of the inspections are random. There are some inspections occurring, and that of course is through Health and Wellness through the Health Facilities Review Committee. The licensing, of course, is with Children's Services through the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act.

But, Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member in raising this question is raising a very important issue of when it will be further clarified in regulation and be placed into legislation. I am hoping that following the Auditor General's report, which we're all expecting here fairly soon, with the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness – Children's Services would be included in this as well with the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act – and myself working together, we'll have that before the Legislature within the next session, which may be the fall or for legislation in the spring.

Dr. Pannu: My final supplementary to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that this is the centennial year of the province and that the centennial year is the perfect time to say a special thanks to our seniors, who have built this province over the last 100 years, will this minister and this government at least take the first step and reverse the 50 per cent increase in long-term care fees it imposed on them recently?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a very interesting question. I'll take that under advisement for now and look at the fee process and get back to the hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Community Policing

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While attending the AUMA regional seminar in Edmonton last week, municipal officials were expressing their concerns about policing in their communities. In Budget 2005 the Solicitor General's department announced an increase of nearly 200 police officers across the province and an increase in provincial and policing grants to help ease these financial burdens on smaller towns and cities. There is some confusion, and my question is to the Solicitor General. How are these 200 police officers going to be divided up in the province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a very valid question. Of the nearly 200 new police officers that are going to be funded in Budget 2005, 100 new RCMP officers will be assigned to rural communities throughout the province of Alberta under the provincial policing agreement. RCMP Assistant Commissioner Bill Sweeney has assured me that he is responsible, and he will utilize a process to determine where the officers will be posted. Of course, that's going to be based on identifying priority areas throughout the province.

On top of the 100 new RCMP officers, Mr. Speaker, an additional 30 RCMP officers are going to be redeployed from port security positions as well as prisoner transport services and will be redeployed to front-line policing in rural Alberta. On top of that, an additional 20 RCMP officers will be utilized with regard to our integrated response to organized crime throughout the province of Alberta as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Given that many communities are concerned that last year's policing grants, which were set at $16 per capita across the board, have actually been reduced this year with the new formula, how does this new formula benefit these communities?

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Speaker, policing grants have increased by $6 million this past budget year, from $37 million to $43 million, and those towns and cities between a population of 5,000 and 20,000 will be receiving significant increases, anywhere from a 36 per cent increase to almost a 200 per cent increase with regard to the municipal police grants over last year's amounts. For example, Bonnyville, Alberta, with a population of just over 5,500, will be receiving a grant of $245,000, which is almost a 170 per cent increase from what they received last year. Cities and communities that are between 20,000 and 100,000 will be receiving a $100,000 base amount payment as well as $14 per capita. Again, none of those eight communities between 20,000 and 100,000 people will be receiving anything less than what they received last year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister: could the Solicitor General clarify why some communities are stating that the highly successful drug awareness and resistance education program, known as DARE, is being cancelled in some communities and only requires a few police officers to help teach it?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, the DARE program is a very good program that is provided by RCMP officers as well as municipal services and by special constables that are hired by municipalities throughout the province, but the DARE program, like any other program, has to be evaluated over a certain period of time. That's, in fact, what the Solicitor General's department is doing right now, looking at the DARE program, looking at other programs that are out there, and we will be bringing a new model that's coming out. DARE is actually being revamped. It is being tested in seven communities throughout the province right now. But we also want to continue to look at how the program works, the results we get from it, and what, in fact, kids in junior highs and high schools are actually telling us they want.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Coal-bed Methane

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I attended along with my colleague from Calgary-Varsity a public meeting in Ponoka where people expressed concern with the rapid expansion plans for coal-bed methane in the Horseshoe formation of south-central Alberta. The Energy and Utilities Board and the Pembina Institute highlighted the economic opportunities and the environmental threats of potentially 50,000 coal-bed methane wells in the next few years. The general public and private landowners all over Alberta are increasingly concerned with the pace of development and potential impacts on water, land value, agricultural sustainability, tourism, fish, and wildlife. To the Minister of Energy: given the mission of the Energy and Utilities Board to act in the public interest, how do you assess the long-term impact of 50,000 wells on the public interest?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Energy and Utilities Board and our own department we've had a multi-advisory committee going for some time looking at the opportunity and all of the impacts of natural gas in coal, or coal-bed methane. It is true that our resources of natural gas in coal are vast. They are larger than our conventional sources, potentially 500 tcf of gas, a very significant quantity. It covers vast tracts of land. All of that's very true. There is huge opportunity to bring – you mentioned the Horseshoe Canyon. That's actually where you can bring natural gas out of a seam that's purer than much of the natural gas that goes into your home. It comes out under less pressure. It's a very easy, manageable source of natural gas. There's no water in that zone. It's actually easier than most of our shallower conventional sources of natural gas.

That said, it is very important to work with the landowners on access, ensuring that the mitigation of those and working with those people impacted are appropriately addressed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Environment: will the minister guarantee that these 50,000 new wells will not adversely affect water quality and quantity into the future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to say an unequivocal yes. I will guarantee that based on the actual rules that this province has had in place for so many years. If I could give you just one small example from our neighbours to the south of the border in Colorado and Wyoming, where in fact some of the saline from the water that used to come up spilled over the agricultural land and destroyed thousands of acres of land. I want to say to all members and to everyone that is listening that, in fact, we have rules in place today to protect the environment, to ensure that any type of negative impact to our environment is clearly prevented.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the presence of 3,000 coal-bed methane wells already in central Alberta, will the minister authorize an impact assessment including cumulative impacts on water, agricultural productivity, land value, tourism, and wildlife before approving the development of another 45,000 wells?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, we will certainly ensure that this resource is developed in a way that, in fact, has no negative impact environmentally but also from the perspective that the hon. member mentions relative to wildlife and other areas that are so important to Albertans. I want to assure members of this House that on the protection of the environment – I'd say the mother ship of this province of what Albertans say is so important – we want to continue to study, continue to enforce and to ensure that people are complying with the rules so that there is absolutely no harm to our environment now, tomorrow, or well into the future, and I can assure all members that that is the case.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Softwood Lumber Trade Dispute

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most every weekend when I travel through Whitecourt-Ste. Anne to my home in Whitecourt, I meet with constituents that are employed in the forest industry. The issue of the softwood lumber dispute becomes part of our weekly discussions. My questions are directed to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Currently an export tax is one option to move forward to resolve this issue. What progress has been made on this option to date?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is a free trader. The export tax is just part of an outline of a potential agreement that is being presented to the United States. The Canadian industry sees this as a starting point for discussions. The idea is that the federal government will lift this export tax once policy changes are made across this province and we move away from this allegation that has been made by the U.S. that we are somehow subsidizing the industry.

Mr. VanderBurg: Again to the same minister: given that this file has been going on I think since I've been elected, in 2001, is this option of an export tax the best way to make progress on this file?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, our ultimate objective is free access to the United States. This idea of an export tax has been presented as a way to break into some meaningful discussions with the United States as an interim measure until a full agreement can be reached in the near future. Without this discussion of an import/export tax we feel that more than likely we won't be able to break the log-jam nor get some of the money that is sitting with the Americans, about $4.3 billion that the industry wants to get back, bring it back to Alberta, and invest it in Alberta industry as opposed to leaving it in the United States.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Postsecondary Education Review

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is planning to undertake two more reviews of parts of the postsecondary education system this year while persisting in its failure to establish an independent learning commission to look at the big picture. Now, past funding and affordability reviews failed to take institutions or students off their starvation diets, so I'd like to know whether we're simply wasting our time and taxpayers' money on this next go-round. My question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. Since the government is covering this fall's tuition increase rather than freezing fees at their current rate, will the minister assure students that they will not face a double tuition increase once the affordability review is complete?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, I have to deal with the introduction to the question because the premise on which the question was based wouldn't be the full story, to no one's surprise. The fact of the matter is that we're doing a full and complete review of the postsecondary system in this province this year. As part of that review we'll be developing a learning strategy for Albertans, so Alberta as a learning society, and there will be more to be said about the form and structure of that review in the weeks to come.

As part and parcel of that review, of course, we'll be doing both the affordability review and the funding review. There's a comprehensive review in process, being designed as we speak, which will be launched very shortly, and that will cover the full aspect of the whole system, right from literacy to post PhD.

Now, to get to the question. The budget that has been put in place this year, the funding that has been put in place this year, which has been received so well by postsecondary institutions in this province, should be sufficient to ensure that there's not a double bump in tuition. We, of course, leave to the institutions the design of their tuition and the needs for their tuition, but the money that's in the system now should assure students that there's no need for a double bump.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can the minister explain specifically why the tuition policy the government created last year after considerable time, effort, and expense is broken and needs fixing again?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, it would be presumptuous of me to say that it's broken and needs fixing again. What we do know is that there's considerable concern among Alberta students and their parents and families about the cost of going to school. A good part of that concern is focused on tuition, but the real concern is focused on the overall cost of going to school, so we have committed to this affordability review. In the process we've indicated that we will hold tuitions constant this year so that the focus can be on the review of the cost of going to school and the review on tuition rather than on the immediate concern about rising tuition.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that we are reviewing tuition policy again, my final question is to the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. Could the minister please explain to the House what measures, systems, processes, rules, regulations, budgetary provisions, or even, you know, gentle suggestions he's considering so that this sort of inefficiency doesn't happen again?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question, but I think it should be directed to the minister in charge of that portfolio.

Mr. Hancock: I'd be delighted to answer that, Mr. Speaker. The fact that there's an ongoing and evergreen discussion of public policy in this province does not mean that there's inefficiency in the process. One should always be prepared to look at the way that you're doing things to determine whether it could be done better, to look at the cost of going to school to see whether affordability can be done better, to make sure that finances are not a barrier to a student getting an education. Any time you stop looking at that, that's when you should quit your job.

The Clerk: Members' Statements.

The Speaker: Hon. members, prior to arriving at that point in the Routine, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House some constituents of mine who I see have entered our gallery and have been watching question period. These two individuals are active members of the Alexander band, which is in the Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert constituency. As I call their names, I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House. They are Richard Arcand and Gordon Burnstick. They are in the members' gallery.

Acquittal of Wheat Board Protesters

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize an important victory for freedom, for justice, and for western grain farmers. Yesterday the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal overturned the conviction of 22 farmers. What was the terrible crime of which they had been convicted? Had they assaulted a neighbour, or had they stolen someone's property? No. They were going to be punished for the simple and innocent act of selling their own grain on the free market rather than to the compulsory monopoly of the Canadian Wheat Board.

The Canadian Wheat Board is another example of how the federal government treats western Canadians as second-class citizens. Mr. Speaker, farmers in Ontario and Quebec may legally sell their grain at whatever price they want to whomever they want, but western grain farmers are compelled by law to sell their grain to the Wheat Board at the price set by the Wheat Board. For grain growers in Quebec and Ontario there is choice. For grain growers in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta there is no choice.

The fight being fought in Saskatchewan echoes a similar battle that 13 courageous Albertans fought in October of 2002, when they were sent to jail for the same so-called crime of selling their own wheat and barley on the open market.

Mr. Speaker, it is fitting today that this House recognizes the courage of these 13 Alberta farmers whose peaceful civil disobedience led them to jail. For the record, the 13 brave Albertans who went to jail to promote the cause of free markets and fair treatment for western grain farmers are Rod Hanger of Three Hills, Noel Hyslip of Vulcan, Jim Ness of New Brigiden, Jim Chatenay of Red Deer, Bill Moore of Red Deer, John Turcato of Taber, Ike Lanier of Coaldale, Martin Hall of Vulcan, Mark Peterson of Vulcan, Ron Duffy of Lacombe, Gary Brandt of Viking, Rick Strankman of Altario, and Darren Winczura of Viking.

Mr. Speaker, along with the Premier, I had the honour of participating in the rally to support the efforts of the Lethbridge 13 in October of 2002. The recent court ruling in Saskatchewan should remind all Canadians that the federal government continues to impose a discriminatory and unfair treatment on western farmers.

Mr. Speaker, the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal . . .

Speaker's Ruling
Time Limit for Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm really sorry, but a little while ago we changed the rules in this House to go to two minutes. At that point in time there was some debate that one minute was not enough. Now, invariably, this is going on on a daily basis. They're now going on for two minutes, which only goes to point out that whatever the rule is, it's going to be challenged.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Calgary Exhibition and Stampede

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We heard last week about the success of a wonderful institution called Northlands, and today I'd like to speak about another agricultural fair, that was first held in 1886, the Calgary Exhibition and Stampede, that has held a place of pride in the city of Calgary as the organization that preserves and promotes western heritage and values. The culture of the Stampede is so well known world-wide that it is synonymous with the city named Calgary.

Historically its volunteers and staff have been a reflection of the community itself. Over 2,200 volunteers serve on 50 committees, contributing tens of thousands of hours each year to plan and deliver a wide variety of programs.

The 10-day festival drew 1.2 million visitors in 2004. It features a rodeo that was Canada's first million-dollar regular season professional rodeo. Although the Stampede's signature event is the annual 10-day festival in July, events take place in the park virtually every day of the year. Year-round operations include active facilities that host more than 1,500 events a year, including trade and consumer shows.

Aside from the more than 2 million people who typically attend Pengrowth Saddledome events annually, 2.6 million people visit Stampede Park facilities on an annual basis, which means that roughly 4.6 million people visit Stampede Park over the course of a year. Overall, park visitors spend an estimated $345 million in the province of Alberta.

The Calgary Exhibition and Stampede has embarked on a 15-year visionary redevelopment of the existing park and adjacent lands in Victoria Park.

The Calgary Exhibition and Stampede is an unparalleled example of stable, long-term partnerships that create measurable economic and social benefits.

I'd like to at this time thank Don Wilson, the outgoing president and CEO of the Calgary Stampede board. He's been a volunteer for the Stampede for over 35 years, serving as president for the last two years. He truly is an example of a lifetime of volunteering. He will be missed but I'm sure ably replaced by the new president, Steve Allan.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Kristen Hedley

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take a moment to recognize the achievements of a very special young lady from Consort, Ms Kristen Hedley. Last weekend in Olds the 4-H's annual selections program took place. During this year's program Kristen was chosen from among 126 strong candidates to receive this year's Premier's award.

This is no ordinary award. The Premier's award is the highest award for Alberta 4-H programs and is given out to the young 4-H member who shows exceptional leadership, communication, and personal development skills. Kristen exemplifies everything that is extraordinary about 4-H youth in this province. She's a remarkable young woman and has devoted her life to community service and improving rural life.

Kristen comes from a strong 4-H family. She has been a member of the Consort Creative Hands 4-H Club for 10 years and during that time held several executive positions and has participated in 4-H activities across the province. She also qualified for the 2004 provincial public speaking competition and was selected as a junior staff member for the 2004 provincial 4-H Club Week. But her devotion to her community doesn't stop with 4-H. Kristen was also the vice-president of her school's students' union and was president of Students against Drunk Drivers as well as editor of her school's yearbook. Currently Kristen is a student at the University of Alberta, where she is working towards her education degree.

As our Premier's award winner Kristen will represent Alberta at numerous 4-H events here and across North America, including a wonderful exchange opportunity in California.

Mr. Speaker, along with Kristen, the selections program in Olds also appoints 14 other young members in 4-H to act as ambassadors for the program at a number of events across Alberta over the next two years. I'm sure all members will agree with me on how fortunate we are to have our province represented by these fine young people not just for the future of rural Alberta but for the future of all Alberta. As well, how fortunate we are to have such a wonderful 4-H program here in Alberta, the best in the country, I would add.

Please join me in congratulating Kristen and all the ambassadors on their accomplishments.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

4-H Ambassadors

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to recognize the achievements of 14 outstanding young members of Alberta's 4-H program. The 4-H is an organization with a long and proud history in Alberta and throughout its almost 90-year existence has stayed faithful to its mission to help our province's youth become self-reliant and contributing members of our society. These 14 young people exemplify the spirit of this wonderful organization, and during last weekend's annual selections program at Olds they were chosen to be ambassadors of Alberta's 4-H program.

Please join me in congratulating Ricki Fleming, Jessica Wilkinson, Taryn Parkinson, Lyle Weigum, Shari Hagstrom, Justin Janke, Jessi Sunderman, Lacey Fowler, Kim Headon, Mathilda Gabert, Shanna Holmes, Jeff Binks, Monika Ross, and Kristen Hedley, who is also the recipient of this year's Premier's award.

Mr. Speaker, these 14 young people were chosen because of their leadership, communication, and personal development skills. For the next two years they will serve as ambassadors travelling across our wonderful province to promote 4-H to members and nonmembers in our province.

Please join me in congratulating these very deserving young ambassadors.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Royal Alexandra Hospital Volunteers

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the unsung hero. The hero I speak about is the volunteer. We all know someone who has and does volunteer. The volunteers I want to highlight are those of the Royal Alexandra hospital. These people come from all over the city, province, and in some cases the United States to give freely of their time and talents. These people are an integral part of the Royal Alexandra family.

Last year's volunteers logged 66,000 hours. These volunteers play a critical role in enhancing care and support for both patients and families. These supports range from greeting patients and visitors, delivering newspapers and flowers to patients, visiting and spending time with patients, particularly those in the palliative care program, cuddling babies and knitting for them, assisting with administrative tasks, and teaching crafts. The list goes on.

While we all have respect for the highly skilled professionals who keep the Royal Alexandra hospital running, I wanted to profile the dedicated volunteers and the tremendous contribution they make each and every day. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Health Care System

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, in the last few weeks I have been tabling op-ed columns by a well-respected American economist, Dr. Paul Krugman. Published in the New York Times, his analysis highlights several of the threats posed by this government's continued efforts to privatize health care in Alberta. Specifically, he identifies two obstacles in the way of effective innovation within the U.S. health care system: ideological obsession with privatization and powerful vested interests.

As we speak, Mr. Speaker, the Premier is hosting a by-invitation-only symposium on health care. At the symposium the Premier will be advocating for what he calls the third way in health care, which is nothing more than a slogan imported from the U.K. to disguise a health care system imported from the U.S. What is it that we would be importing? A system where 15 per cent of health care dollars are eaten up by administration compared to an average of 4 per cent in countries with public health care. Even worse, we'd be importing a system where 45 million people, roughly 20 per cent of the U.S. population, are left without any insurance coverage whatsoever.

Clearly, the main threat to health care sustainability and affordability in Alberta is further privatization. Despite clear evidence that experiments with private delivery in Calgary have led to longer wait times and increased costs, this government continues to bulldoze ahead with privatization.

It's no secret that those with vested interests in private health care, those who stand to make profits from illness and injury are very close to the Premier, and as long as there are revolving doors between people holding powerful positions in government and private-sector lobbyists and consulting groups, Albertans can only guess how much influence those vested interests will continue to have on health care policy.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to draw the Assembly's attention to the NDP opposition's report on health care, which was produced after grassroots consultation with health care users, providers, and advocates. The report was tabled in the Assembly yesterday and is also available at www.newdemocrats.ab.ca.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

2:40 Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, our historical vignette of today refers to an event that occurred on May 3, 2000. On that day a ceremony was held on the steps of the Legislature Building to commemorate the repatriation and burial of an unknown Canadian soldier.

The grave of the unknown soldier serves as a tribute to Canada's war dead and a memorial to all of those who died striving for peace in the defence of this country. Located in Ottawa, the grave includes soil from the north, south, east, and west portions of the Alberta Legislature Grounds, a contribution symbolizing that Alberta's contribution to Canada's war efforts has come from every corner of the province.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to present a petition from some good Albertans from the fine Alberta communities of Rimbey, Ponoka, Holden, Mundare, Ryley, Carseland, and the great Stampede city of Calgary. It reads:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two items to table today. The first is the Alberta Law Enforcement Review Board 2003 annual report, being tabled in accordance with section 14 of the Alberta Police Act. The board is the appeal body for complaints concerning police members, and during the period covered by the report the board made decisions on 44 appeals.

Mr. Speaker, the second document that I have is the victims' programs status report for 2003-2004. This annual report shows that more than $2 million in grants were provided to 81 victim assistance programs. These programs reported handling more than 32,000 new cases, over half of those involving assistance to victims of violent crimes.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first one will be the 2002-2005 Edmonton Catholic school board capital plan.

The second one would be a November 27, 2002, Edmonton Journal article.

Last would be my correspondence addressed to the Edmonton Catholic school board, in particular to Ms Debbie Engel, chairperson, dated May 2, 2005.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the report and recommendations of the MLA AISH Review Committee.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in my member's statement I recognized the efforts of two nonprofit groups, the Canoffer Society, which celebrated its 25th anniversary, and the Chrysalis group's 10th annual celebration. Today I would like to table their programs and award recipients.

With the Speaker's permission I would also like to share four lines of a song cowritten by Garth Brooks and Victoria Shaw entitled The River that was printed on the Chrysalis program.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Chase: Thank you.

Too many times we stand aside
And let the water slip away
'Til what we put off 'til tomorrow
Has now become today
So don't you sit upon the shoreline
And say you're satisfied
Choose to chance the rapids
And dare to dance the tide.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and table a letter to me from Sterling Eddy, the president, CEO, and registrar of the Certified Management Accountants of Alberta, in support of Mount Royal College's request to become an undergraduate degree-granting university.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is the official program from The King's University College graduation ceremony which occurred on Saturday, April 30, 2005, at Ellerslie Road Baptist Church. The King's University College is quite a famous institution in the community of Edmonton-Gold Bar.

My second tabling this afternoon is a document from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. It's actually a transcript of the scandalous dealings of Project Stanley and how it affected power prices not only in Alberta but in the Pacific Northwest. There is direct reference – and I certainly hope that hon. members of this House read it – that calculates the totally unjust profits to the tune of $940 million for the periods that we discussed earlier in question period.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of the third part in a series of op-eds by respected health policy analyst Professor Paul Krugman. In this piece Dr. Krugman warns of the dangers of an ideological obsession with health care privatization.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I promise not to sing.

I have one document to table today. It is an excerpt from Alberta Politics Uncovered by Mark Lisac in which he describes the Alberta government's refusal to participate in a national securities regulatory body.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a memo that reads that the so-called displaced farmers are actually going to work every day. They work very hard, and although they are currently not making any money, they do have a job and therefore are not able to work in the oil sands, as the opposition naively think.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise and table a release from the Edmonton Social Planning Council released today on the social determinants of health as an innovative approach report. It shows how the social and economic indicators are twice as important as the actual health care system and the cost for health.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk on behalf of the hon. Ms Evans, the Minister of Health and Wellness: pursuant to the Public Health Act the Public Health Appeal Board annual report 2004, and pursuant to the Health Professions Act the College of Hearing Aid Practitioners of Alberta annual report 2004.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2005-06

Agriculture, Food and Rural Development

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is indeed a pleasure to introduce the budget for the Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Prior to getting into it, I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House some guests that are in our members' gallery this afternoon. These are folks that work diligently every day, sometimes 24/7, for the ag producers in this province and the value-added side of our province and the industry as a whole. In the gallery with us today are John Knapp, assistant deputy minister, sustainable agriculture; Brian Rhiness, assistant deputy minister, industry development; Lou Normand, executive director, rural development initiative; Brad Klak, president of the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation; Jeannie Munroe, the deputy minister's executive assistant; and Bard Haddrell, executive director of ag info services.

I would also to acknowledge, if I may, Mr. Chairman, some folks who are not in the gallery but who have had a great deal to do with the budget presentation today: Faye Rault, executive director of the ag corporate services; Krish Krishnaswamy, vice-president of finance, Ag Financial Services Corporation; Terry Willock, director of communications; and my executive assistant, Jason Krips.

I'd ask the members in the gallery to rise and receive the welcome of the House, if I may.

It's very easy, Mr. Chairman, to look good when you have a great executive team, which I have in this department.

Once again, Mr. Chairman, it is my pleasure this afternoon to present the estimates for the Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. We find ourselves travelling in a little bit of uncharted waters again, but thanks to the unparalleled guidance and support from our industry and our MLAs, we've been able to help steer our industry in all aspects. While we might not have reached the promised land yet, we are on course to do so.

The last five years or so have not been the most happy time in our industry. From floods to droughts to pests Alberta's farmers and ranchers have faced one of the worst combinations of circumstances in our province's history. They've had to deal not only with natural obstacles but man-made ones as well. High input costs, border closures, trade disputes, and unfair tariffs have all tried to grind our industry down, yet our producers survive and meet the challenges and prosper.

Even with our obstacles Alberta continues to have one of the most diverse and innovative ag industries in the country and perhaps even in the world. We're fortunate enough to have an industry that is willing to continue to innovate and continue to move forward into the future.

And that's what this budget does: it will usher our ag industry into the future while ensuring that the present challenges are met. We made sure that this year's budget reflected not only the realities agriculture faces today but the reality we want for tomorrow. We have some mighty big goals for our ag industry, 20-10 by 2010; that is, $20 billion in value-added production and $10 billion in primary production by the year 2010. That goal is still in sight. It's achievable because of initiatives like the ag value processing business incubator in Leduc, and it's achievable with the work we're doing on the eight industry-identified key growth initiatives, key areas of growth for our industry.

While some of this growth is directly dependent on government determining what we can do better to promote growth in other areas, nontraditional areas especially, like functional foods and natural health products, these nontraditional areas will provide important diversification for our industry.

We're also looking to the future of our primary industries. For example, we're making a long-term investment into our ag research associations with a $1.5 million increase. This will help to bridge the gap between pure research and farmer-ready advancements. And by helping them, we are helping our primary producers, our rural and urban communities, and our entire province. It's a smart investment in the future of our industry.

Speaking of a smart investment, Mr. Chairman, I was pleased to see such a strong investment going into rural Alberta through this year's provincial budget. This is in large part because now we have articulated a vision for rural Alberta in the rural development strategy. We recently released the strategy A Place to Grow and formed a task force to guide its implementation. The strategy, built on more than two years of consultation, will be led now by an MLA task force chaired by the Member for Battle River-Wainwright. Joining him will be the members for Cypress-Medicine Hat and Dunvegan-Central Peace.

We are committed to ensuring that rural Alberta has the initiatives, the programs, and the tools they need to remain sustainable. That's why Budget 2005 dedicated some significant investment toward helping rural communities. While many of these initiatives don't fall under my ministry, I probably point to them to show that we're moving forward on the rural development strategy.

However, there are some very important things that my ministry is doing to support the rural development strategy and our ag industry. We've more than doubled the funding for Alberta's ag service boards with a $5.6 million increase. This will help our agriculture service boards continue their 60 years of dedicated service to our industry and to our rural communities. We're also providing $22 million in funding to irrigation rehabilitation, improving the efficiency of our irrigation networks.

Of course, it would be foolish to talk about building value-added in our rural communities without first dealing with what's happening in our cattle and ruminant industry. Perhaps the most disappointing thing about this whole situation is that everyone – from the U.S. president, our federal government, our industry, the U.S. industry, their processors, our processors – wants the border to be open. But for a single judge and a small group of protectionist ranchers it would be open. However, we're focusing our attention on what we can change and not on what we can't change. Moving the U.S. court process any faster is one of the things that falls into the can't category, but moving forward on our six-point plan falls into the can category, and we are moving forward in that direction.

Capacity is up more than 22 per cent from 2004. With planned capacity coming online later this year and early next year, we should be able to process virtually everything that we produce. Our inventory management programs continue to stabilize the market while being as market neutral as possible, and we're committed to keeping them going as long as the industry needs them. In that light, Budget 2005 invests more than $133 million to continue the Canada/Alberta set-aside program in response to the continued border closure.

Testing for BSE is at an all-time high. In fact, we've already met our targets for 2005, and it's not even June. We're going to keep those number up, which is why we're investing $15 million for ongoing funding for BSE surveillance. This investment will ensure that Alberta leads the country in animal disease surveillance.

We continue to make adjustments to our other income stabilization programs like CAIS to make sure that they are responsive to our producers' needs, and we're investing $114 million to support those changes and the ongoing delivery of the program.

We need to diversify our markets and become less reliant on the United States. It would be naive to think that we could replace them as our number one customer, but we do need to reduce our reliance upon them. That's why we've dedicated $30 million in last year's budget for the beef market development and retention fund, that will help industry seek more markets and build on existing ones.

But we also need to know more about this disease, how it works and how it spreads, which is why we're committed to ensuring that Alberta becomes a center of excellence for prion research.

Mr. Chairman, thank you for allowing me to speak about an industry that I and many others in this House love very, very much. However, now I must speak about the budget and what we're doing this year. Let me sum up what planned increases we have for this year.

The department's voted spending has increased from the 2004-05 budget by approximately $160 million. This increase includes more than $133 million to continue the Canada/Alberta set-aside program in response to the continued border closure and $15 million for ongoing funding for BSE surveillance, ensuring that Alberta leads the country in animal disease surveillance. And as I mentioned earlier, we've more than doubled our funding for Alberta's ag service boards with a $5.6 million increase. We've increased spending for irrigation rehabilitation by $3 million, which increases grant support provided through this program to $22 million.

This budget is based on several assumptions: that commodity prices will not decline further is one assumption, that interest rates will remain stable, and that we will not experience a disastrous year of claims under the income stabilization and crop insurance programs. These assumptions mean that achieving the plan is subject to some major risks: widespread crop production losses due to poor weather conditions, including drought; a major livestock disease outbreak such as foot-and-mouth; further declines in global commodity prices, particularly crops; and changes in the economy such as an increased interest rate or a stronger Canadian dollar. These four items could affect farm income dramatically and in turn impact indemnities paid out under crop insurance and the Canadian ag income stabilization program. We've not built that into the plan to deal with another disastrous year of claims, but it is something that should be noted.

I want to assure all hon. members that the prosperity and sustainability of our agricultural industry remains a priority of this government. Also, I want to thank the hon. members for their support throughout this past year. The industry is growing and changing rapidly, and we know that to respond to this growing industry and to help its development, we have to change and grow with it.

I thank you for your time this afternoon. I look forward to the comments and questions, Mr. Chairman, and will conclude my remarks with that.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and participate in the budget estimates this afternoon for Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. This is one of the bigger departments, certainly, with well over a billion dollars in spending.

Certainly, the minister is absolutely correct when he states that it has been rather difficult for some sectors of our rural economy. In the last few years there have been ongoing issues: trade, weather, you name it. We certainly have to ensure that we have good public policy in the future to enable food to be produced in rural areas and sold in urban areas that is affordable. We sometimes overlook the fact that we produce so much food at affordable prices. It would be the basis of our economic prosperity. Sometimes that's overlooked, and it is unfortunate.

I for one think it is very good public policy to ensure that food production remains in the hands of many, not concentrated in the hands of a few. Whenever we see market concentration at its worst, we have to look at the beef processing industry in this province. I don't think it is good public policy to ensure that maybe two or three different enterprises control such a large part of the processing industry for beef and beef products, and a lot of the producers feel very strongly about that too.

Specifically to this department, Mr. Chairman, we look at the Department of Agriculture, Food, and Rural Development and the four program areas, and there are many very good programs, but there are some that certainly raise questions for this hon. member. Steps have been taken by this government. We look at the BSE issue. The government has spent billions of dollars on farm programs, but the prices of particularly beef are probably going to remain stagnant for the farmers.

Now, we all know that the border has remained closed with America, and quite possibly it will be closed, unfortunately, for a longer period. I hope that in July it does open, at least partially. At first I think we can expect a partial reopening of the border, and then maybe within six months or so there will be full trade. I think it's very important that this happen very soon before we start dealing with the next round of U.S. presidential elections. In some of those states in the Midwest, unfortunately, the Americans may play the protectionist hand, and that doesn't serve our interests whatsoever.

I don't understand why there is no money that I see in this budget to facilitate the developing of packing plants through co-ops in this province. I would also, Mr. Chairman, like to know how the relationship between Cargill and Rancher's Beef meets our interest. I don't know how all this works out, how this is going to help the producers. It has been reported that although Rancher's Beef or Ranchers Own was not supposed to receive money from this government for its development – that's what my research indicates – why did that company report that it was receiving money from the provincial government through the county? Is my research accurate, or is it inaccurate? How come this company received funding when no other company that I'm aware of has received any of these allocations?

We understand and I think this side of the House fully supports some money going into BSE research. There certainly was a huge amount of money set aside for research into BSE. I would like an update on the progress of the research being done into BSE. Hopefully, the efforts that are being made in this province are not being duplicated in another jurisdiction. I hope to hear that we are working co-operatively not only with the federal government but also other provinces that have been affected by this unfortunate outbreak of BSE.

Now, the cow-calf set-aside program has come to an end, but if there's new money, where is the new money to keep these cattle on the farm? Where is that coming from? What are the farmers to do now that the border has remained closed and prices have remained so low for so long?

This gets us, certainly, to the Washington trade office. I would be grateful for an update on how much work our envoy, our ambassador, Murray Smith, has done on behalf of Alberta agriculture and Alberta producers to facilitate the border opening. What sort of lobbying is going on there?

Now, the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation is quite an operation. In fact, it states on the 2003-04 annual report, "Unique Financial Services." That's quite a description. I hear every day, in fact we heard in question period a little earlier, about free enterprise in this province, and I'm astonished to look in the local weekend papers and see advertisements from Agriculture Financial Services Corporation for loans. I know we already own our own bank in this province, the Alberta Treasury Branches, but how does this fit the philosophy of the government? We are advertising that we have this money to loan not only to farmers but to small businesses. How do the charter banks feel about this set-up, and exactly why are we involved in this?

I can see in specific cases here where we're going to subsidize crop insurance. We're going to have income support programs. We're going to have hay and pasture insurance, hail insurance, waterfowl and wildlife insurance. I can understand that, and I can certainly live with that because what's unique here is the farm community. But why are we all of a sudden branching out with Agriculture Financial Services Corporation for advertising all these loans? If this isn't a subsidy, I don't know what is. I don't know if the charter banks have complained to the ministry about this process or not, but I would be interested in an update for this.

I look at the board of directors of this government company, if we can call it that, and there's a lot of money here. There's all kinds of money in this annual report: how it's spent, where it's spent, if we have a deficit or not. In fact, we had a deficit the previous year of over $290 million, I believe, but there's a significant budget. Now, how do we set up the boards of directors? I'm sure they're accountable to the minister, but exactly who are these people, and how do they govern themselves whenever we have a board committee membership, an Executive Committee, an Audit Committee, a risk management committee, a Credit Committee, and a Hearing Committee? It just seems to be a circle. I would like to know if there are any governance issues with the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation at this time.

Certainly, the government has had complaints about the lateness of CAIS payments, and that has been discussed in question period in this House. It's unfortunate that farmers are having to wait so long for their money, but why was there such a delay in the CAIS payments? I understand the minister had to step in and blow the whistle and read some people the riot act. I commend him for doing that, but I don't think it should have happened in the first place. Also, how much does it cost to process one CAIS claim from the start to the time the cheque to the farmer is in the mailbox at the end of the lane? I would like to know how the administrative costs for the CAIS program compare with other government ministries and other government programs.

Now, the rural development strategy. The government has announced its next step in rural development is focusing on what can be done to aid our small towns. I understand that this is going to be the number one priority, and I believe we're talking about page 135 here. What is the minister's plan to help keep buildings such as schools open in rural communities so that municipalities can maintain their services? Is the ministry working with the ministry of infrastructure to implement the whole idea of community schools?

Certainly, to keep their high school open, the citizens of Sangudo – one parent, to his credit, had to go to court and force the school board up there to halt their closure process. In another town, Bruderheim, the citizens had to work very hard and work collectively to reverse a decision to have a public school remain in their town.

An Hon. Member: What's wrong with Bruderheim?

Mr. MacDonald: There is absolutely nothing the matter with Bruderheim, and the citizens of that community should not have been forced to go to those extraordinary measures to save their schools.

There are certainly in low-enrolment areas, whether they're in the city or in the rural communities, other uses for those facilities. Hopefully, that is going to become part of this government's rural development strategy. Maybe we could deliver health care from some of those structures. There are lots of good ideas. Maybe even for some of the agricultural offices that were closed in 2002, if there's no space, we wouldn't have to lease any space. Maybe we could take one end of a school and convert it into an office so that a farmer doesn't have to travel for two hours and pack a lunch to visit an agricultural office or an adviser. There are a number of things that could be done.

Another issue for a lot of rural communities is the issue of the ambulances, and who's going to pay for the ambulances. What is the ministry doing to help municipalities with the rural development strategy? I know there were big promises made, and it was only going to cost this much to transfer this to the province. In a lot of the rural communities volunteers – and we should be very grateful for their time – provide the ambulance service. People even take time off from work to help with the ambulances when necessary. If we're going to have a rural development strategy, that should be part of it. Exactly how are we going to develop a province-wide ambulance system?

Now, environmentally sustainable agriculture. Certainly, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has some interesting ideas on that.

Getting at this time, Mr. Chairman, to the specific financial questions in regard to the budget, I see on page 142 of the business plan that while farm income support last year certainly was close to a billion dollars, this year it's forecast to be $800 million, and into the future we're looking at less than $400 million. Two years into the future we're looking at $400 million in farm income support. That may be optimistic. I certainly hope that is an assumption, that our border will open with America for live cattle, but what is the basis for that assumption? That's a significant drop in an expense program for farm income support. How does the minister calculate that?

Now, certainly, debt servicing costs – and that's why it's so important that we have good governance with the Alberta financial services corporation. There is on an annual basis close to $50 million in debt servicing costs there. Again, we need to have confidence that that corporation is being run well.

Also, while we're there, I would like to talk about the Feeder Associations. It's not long since we in this Assembly had an amendment to deal with the Feeder Associations. How much, if anything, would the Alberta government be on the hook for loan guarantees to the Feeder Associations if the border is not to reopen in July to live cattle? Again, on this feeder cattle program, how is the feeder cattle program working? I assume that these loan guarantees are through the chartered banks. Are the chartered banks or the Feeder Associations satisfied with the current arrangement, or are they starting to get nervous? How is all this working?

Before I cede the floor to another member, in cases of feedlots that go bankrupt and they've been in business for quite some time, who pays for the clean-up costs? Who's on the hook for that? You always hear, particularly down around Lethbridge, you know, the huge volumes of waste that are created as a result of the concentration of livestock. Now, is the groundwater affected? What happens to the neighbourhood around the feedlot? [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired] I hope to continue with this later.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

3:20

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. A whole raft of questions in there. I will try, hon. member, to answer as many of them as I can possibly can. Should I either not get to them or can't answer them, I will certainly get back to you, to any hon. member, with a written response that would include the detail and the answers. We will also review Hansard, as many other ministries do, and ensure that we've got the answers to your questions so that you're not left wanting for any of those sorts of things.

At the outset, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member was talking about good public policy in regard to market concentration. At the outset I thought he was talking about something in the way of market access and concentration of market access with one customer because in my past days in the food industry it was always considered an extremely high risk if you only had one customer for your product, be that Safeway or be it the IGAs or whoever it was, because if that customer all of a sudden delisted you, you were out of business.

So I was thinking about a response in terms of that's why we have stepped up to the plate, prior to the federal government stepping up to the plate, to invest $30 million with the beef industry through the Canada Beef Export Federation on a 10-year program to diversify those markets and to get ourselves in a position where we are much more diversified in our marketing strategy, which gives us a much stronger footing should something happen in any one of those markets or countries or customers.

But the hon. member went on to talk about market concentration of production. I guess that my comment there is something that I've said to a number of producers and groups and associations around the province. It isn't of terrible concern to me in terms of ownership as long as there are a number of different owners because a number of different owners create a number of different buyers.

Of the groups that are forming today and over the last four or five years, we've essentially had three major buyers of cattle in the province. We probably will have five major buyers of cattle by the end of this year, and I think that's an extremely positive step for the industry as a whole. It's an extremely positive step from where we were before. I think there's the very good likelihood that by the end of next year we may add two, maybe three more buyers into the marketplace, which means two or three different owners of processing facilities in the province. So I agree that you don't want to concentrate the number of buyers in the province. You want to have a number of different buyers in the province, and we're working towards that goal.

There was another comment, Mr. Chairman, that we had spent billions of dollars on farm programs, but prices remain stagnant. He was talking a little bit about the set-aside program and perhaps a partial reopening of the border. I know at the back side there was also a question about how the set-aside is working, so I'm going to tackle that kind of combined.

Essentially, what I think has happened is that we are learning – and the industry is learning with us – as to how we develop and work the set-aside program. Remember, it's based on a national committee. In Alberta we have the added benefit to our producers of the set-aside with a basis included in that. In other provinces they do not. We're working with our industry and our association to manage the marketplace as best we can by pulling those cattle back from the processors and creating a demand for cattle that may not have been there had we not done anything.

I would say, Mr. Chairman, that overall in the last four to five months the set-aside program has worked rather well because we have stabilized feeder cattle up in that 80-cent range. I know that we had a little drop in that a couple weeks ago, where we dropped down a little bit. That was a combination of factors. In the marketplace you have what we call fundamentals. If you were to look at this type of a regulated marketplace, the fundamentals were pointing to a lowering of the price, so the market actually reacted to what they perceived was going to be the number of cattle coming out of the marketplace before the committee even made their decision.

I think we've rectified that. I think the industry's working toward being more aggressive on setting more cattle aside. I think that as an industry/government partnership it's been working quite well to stabilize those prices. By doing that, Mr. Chairman, when you stabilize the prices of the marketplace, you actually draw animals through the system. You create a market for those cow-calf operators that are out there raising calves this spring, a place for those calves to go. I think that's very, very important when you look at how we're managing the entire situation.

The hon. member talked about the billions of dollars that we have put into the programs. I would point out that at this juncture in May of 2005 the provincial government of Alberta has contributed close to $3.3 billion to on-farm income through drought and BSE assistance from 2002 to today. Of that $3.3 billion we've received from the federal government a little over a billion dollars. I think that speaks, Mr. Chairman, to the commitment that this government has set forward to helping our producers in the province. We're basically on a 2 to 1 ratio with the federal government. It would be wonderful for them to step up to the plate a little bit more and help us out with that.

The hon. member also mentioned the protectionist forces in the United States and his concern that we may be going to another presidential election or that the politics of the Americans, if you will, may cause us more delays, as it did a couple of years ago. I think it's certainly a concern. It's a far-out, in terms of time, concern that I think we might look at. But in terms of the idea that the protectionist forces are working against us, I think we have to keep it in context. We have probably 85 per cent of the farm community in the United States on our side. We have the President of the United States on our side. We have the United States Department of Agriculture on our side. We have the National Cattlemen's Beef Association on our side. We have the American Meat Institute on our side.

We have a large number of people who are realizing that the longer the border stays closed, the more harm comes to the U.S. industry, and the Canadian industry grows stronger. So I think we've got a lot of friends on that side of the border. I think we've got a momentum building now because they're starting to see the damage this is causing them. They're starting to see that the longer they keep their border closed, it may be that the longer the Japanese keep their border closed to them. That, indeed, is something that is of concern to a number of the American producers.

I can talk a lot about when I think the border might open. Really, if you talk to five Washington lawyers, you're going to get five different answers as to when the border's going to open. So it's very, very difficult for anyone and probably even somewhat irresponsible to pick a day and say that that's when the border's going to open. So I'm not about to do that. I can tell you that we're working very, very hard with the Alberta Beef Producers, with the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, with the federal government, and with anybody else who has a legitimate chance of achieving some sort of success at moving the ball forward on gaining market access and opening the border and getting that USDA rule as it was put in applied and open.

The hon. member also mentioned something about a relationship between Cargill and Rancher's Beef. You know, I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman, but I'm at kind of a loss as to what that relationship might be because, as I understand it, there is no relationship between Cargill and Rancher's Beef. I'm not exactly sure where he's going there. It may be simply some innuendo to try to raise some concern. I don't know. But as far as I know, there is none.

In terms of the Sunterra operation, north of Calgary is the proposed site, in the MD of Rocky View. The hon. member was asking the question as to whether or not there have been grants directly made to that operation. I can say: no, there has not. The MD of Rocky View, like all MDs, has the ability to apply for structural and infrastructure grants through our department. It's open to any other county. It's for one-third of the infrastructure that might go into water, sewer, all those sorts of things. So the MD is actually making that application, and we're supporting the MD in that application.

In terms of funding for other beef packing plants, I think it was about this time in his discussion that he was talking about: what are we doing in that regard? It's interesting that he brings up the Ag Financial Services Corporation a little later on in his discussion, asking why we're doing that. Well, the two of them are combined because we are using the Ag Financial Services, which is a previous amalgamation of the – and the member may actually remember this. I don't know if he was involved at the time that this particular group was around, but it was called the Alberta Opportunity Company. The Alberta Opportunity Company was more or less a lender of last resort in the province for rural Alberta. AOC, as it was known then, has been around for many, many years. It was amalgamated with AFSC, Ag Financial Services Corp., in 2002. The whole methodology around AOC was to provide loans to businesses with higher risks than what the chartered banks would be willing to lend.

What the amalgamation was and the reason that you'll see those types of lendings in the annual report, which the hon. member has,

is because it allowed for administrative savings and to relocate some program delivery. AFSC is a lender of last resort for small rural businesses in the development of specific sectors in agriculture. Specifically, in the last 18 months they've been doing yeomen's work on adding value to our beef processing industry and, in fact, have involvement in a number of projects which I believe are going to go ahead.

Those projects are developed based on a business plan and a business case. They have presented themselves as doing their homework and showing that they know where their markets are, which is probably the most important and key element in a value-added industry, and AFSC has stepped up to the plate, perhaps where a chartered bank wouldn't. Certainly, when we talk about farmer co-operatives or new generation co-ops, that's an area of lending that the chartered banks are probably a little skittish on right now because it's something new.

We're stepping up to the plate, Mr. Chairman, to help new generation co-ops achieve their dreams of diversifying the value-added beef industry in this province and any other industry, whether it be poultry or the hog industry or, indeed, if we ever had a free market in grains, perhaps we'd have some value-added in the cereals end of things, and we might be able to actually add in something along those lines. I hope AFSC is there to lend to those new generation co-ops just as they are there today to lend to the beef industry.

The hon. member talked about our efforts on BSE and the TSE research. I'm pleased to tell the hon. member that we did indeed this year, out of last year's budget dollars, set aside $38 million that is to go toward prion research. What we did before that, Mr. Chairman – and this is very important – is that we had the Department of Innovation and Science, the department of agriculture, and the universities that are now currently involved in some of this go through and do an inventory of world research on prions and what's happening in the U.K., what's happening in the United States, what's happening in Europe, and what's happening in Japan, the studies and the research going on there.

The last thing that we wanted to do, just as the hon. member mentioned, is to redo something that somebody else is already doing. Certainly, we want to fit the gap that might be there. Using our experience here that we've gained in BSE research, we wanted to fit that gap and make sure that our dollars went to that and perhaps even attract some of those leading researchers from around the world to come here and complete their research and make us the centre of excellence for research in TSEs. That would include BSE. That would include CWD. I know the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View is very interested and concerned about CWD. We want to make sure that we know as much as possible about what is going on around the world.

The hon. member also talked about what the Washington trade office is doing for us. I can tell the hon. member that I've only been to Washington one time as an elected official. I had been to Washington previous to that in my past life in the real world of private enterprise, but going there as an elected official and visiting some of these locales where the Congressmen or the Senators have their offices is a totally different experience because it is a lobbying mecca. It is filled with a river of lobbyists, and we can get lost in that river very, very easily. Having someone on the ground that is representing our interests and knocking on those doors prior to our visit made all the difference in the world.

I was able, Mr. Chairman, to meet with the Senator from Montana, one who we thought was going to be rather opposed to our view of the world. My comment to him was that all politics is local [interjection] – no, I didn't say that, though I was tempted – and that we understand that he has to play to that particular group that is centred around his state. But it was interesting to note that he also understands the integrated nature of our beef industry. Had it not been for our representative, or our envoy if you want to call him that, on the ground to open those doors, it would be highly unlikely that the minister of agriculture from Alberta, a province which most of those Senators are still trying to find on a map – oh, I'll probably get in trouble for that one – would have got the meeting.

I think the other thing that is extremely important for us is information and intelligence coming out of Washington in terms of what the Congressmen and what the Senators are thinking, where some of these things are going, because Canada as a whole has a whole raft of issues that they're dealing with with the United States. Sometimes our Alberta issues might get lost in the shuffle around that. Obviously, BSE has been at the top of the radar screen from a national level, but having an Alberta representative there to talk specifically about Alberta issues, whether that's BSE, whether that's the forestry industry, which was brought up today in question period, whether that's the oil and gas industry, whether it's pipelines, whether it's, indeed, even goat shipments to California, Mr. Chairman – there are regulatory things that are only dealt with in Washington, and we need to have somebody there.

Quite frankly, it has been extremely valuable for us to have someone that I can pick up the phone as the minister and say: "What's going on with this? What's going on with this Senator? What's going on with this Congressmen?" So I think it's been a very, very prudent move for us to do that. I think we should probably do it with Ottawa as well. That's a personal opinion.

The hon. member was also talking about advertising of AFSC. AFSC does a fair bit of advertising, Mr. Chairman, because many of our programs have deadlines, and one of the problems that we run into is that many people call us and say: well, I didn't know it was a deadline. It's important for us to get the advertising out, and certainly with AFSC being the deliverer of a number of these programs, it's very important that they do spend the time and spend the dollars advertising.

A good example of this is the spring price endorsement premium reduction that we did this spring to help farmers with their input costs and to give them a risk management tool that could potentially save them some grief in the fall. It may not work for all producers, but we should encourage them to do the calculations and see if it would work for them. It was important that AFSC get that out there very, very quickly because we had a three-week window.

Even I saw in my local community papers a number of advertisements from AFSC talking to producers to make sure that they got their election in on their crop insurance, to make sure that they contacted the office to find out if it was right for them. Certainly, if we have some business enterprises that may be looking at a lender of last resort, like AFSC is, we want them to know that we're there. If we have a new gen co-op that wants to present a business plan, we want them to know where to go to present that business plan and to see what may be an outlet for them to see their dream become reality.

The hon. member also talked about slow CAIS payments. I see my time is drawing short, Mr. Chairman, so perhaps we'll be able to get a little bit more into this after the next set of questions.

The hon. member is very, very correct. We did have some issues with slow CAIS payments. I don't think that the minister used any kind of coercion or any kind of – I forget what the hon. member's comment was about stepping into it to make it happen. I think I have an excellent team of advisors and executives that run AFSC and a huge commitment on behalf of the staff of AFSC to make CAIS work and also a huge commitment on their behalf to support the ag industry because they are intimately aware of what's going on out in the country. They knew they had to get things going faster. They knew that they needed to do some things to get those dollars out there in a very, very quick fashion.

I'm very, very pleased to say that, yeah, while I may be a part of the team, it is a team effort, and they did a wonderful job in getting close to $300 million out in probably a two-week period to producers who needed it for spring seeding this year to help offset input costs. I think that is a miraculous achievement given the complexity of the program, given the volume of the applications and the complexity of the applications, that have to be audited and verified. That's part of accountability, which I'm sure the hon. member would want us to have in the department and in the program. Certainly, the Auditor General looks at those things. So we have to be very aware of the time that it takes for each of those applications.

Perhaps I'll get some more time later, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

3:40

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just one quick question about the budget, and then I'll make some comments in some of the same areas that have been covered but with a slightly different perspective.

I noticed that in the industry development program I believe there was a $17 million drop in agrifood investment. Specifically, processing investment is being dropped. I'm sort of interested in why there was that $17 million drop. The minister, I think, was talking about the need for diversification in rural Alberta. It seems to me that that would be a major initiative, but there seems to be a drop. There may be a legitimate reason for it, but I'd be interested in the minister's comments.

The second area, though, I want to go into in a general discussion with the minister because it's been raised with us. It's about crop insurance. Some farmers are telling us that they're concerned about crop insurance. I'd like to lay out their concern and see if the minister has some comments about it.

As the minister is well aware, production insurance pays when a farmer's harvested yield falls below their protection guarantee, or their coverage. Payments for yield shortfalls are based on spring insurance policies, which are established in January so they are available when producers are making their insurance decisions. These prices are a forecast of the average market for the upcoming year. I believe for this year there were some adjustments, as I recollect, on that. The minister could maybe fill me in as a press release maybe came across my desk.

The concern that they have about this form of insurance is this: they say that there are a couple of problems. Number one, distributing funds on average yields can cause problems. We spoke with a farmer from Mannville. A couple of years ago his crops were nil. In fact, he didn't even bother combining due to the drought. Because insurance is based on yields over a five-year average, one very bad year pulled his average yield so that he must have a very rotten year in order to get adequate funding. In other words, he seems to feel that there's a better way to do it than over that five-year average. If you have that sort of year, according to him, that creates that sort of a problem.

Then the farmers went on to say that per-acre funding is not always equitable. Larger farmers have economies of scale at work, and the cost for a large farmer to, say, increase their production by one acre is less than for the smaller farmer, yet the smaller farmer and the larger farmer are both compensated the same per acre through this crop insurance system. Increasingly, small farmers are finding it difficult to compete. So I guess they're asking if there is not a better way than the per-acre funding.

Another question. I think I probably know the answer to this because they treat it as an insurance policy. The question was asked: why can't farmers get 100 per cent coverage on their crop insurance? Currently farmers can only get 80 per cent maximum coverage. They point out that if a farmer's crops fail completely, they can only get 80 per cent of their five-year average back. It's like a 20 per cent deductible. The question this particular farmer was asking was: why can't farmers pay the extra money to get the extra coverage? I take it that the answer is that it's probably like an insurance policy. It's a 20 per cent deductible. But his point would be: why can't it be offered that they could participate even if they paid more in their payments? So I'd like the minister's thoughts about that if I could, Mr. Chairman.

I'd like to try to get a handle on the CAIS program because there have been some questions asked in the Legislature here, and there have been some press releases that the minister has put out. I think he's acknowledged it. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar talked about payments, and I didn't quite hear whether they were up to date now or not. I know that they were behind.

The other thing about the CAIS program. The minister has indicated that he believes that at least the concept is a good idea. As I recollect from a March 9 press release, "Provincial and federal governments have agreed for the need to revisit the . . . CAIS program," and they'll be working "with industry to develop alternatives for the deposit requirement." I don't recollect seeing these details. Perhaps I've missed them, but the details on this were to come through by March 31.

The other thing that I alluded to: the 9,000 outstanding claims were to be done, I believe, by the end of last month. Have all those claims been handled?

The third thing about CAIS that I want to come back to: has the minister met with the other ministers of agriculture to look at this program, as they said they would do? What has come out of that to make it a program that is better? I think one of the complaints I've heard about the CAIS program is similar to the crop insurance, that if you have the five years – and we've had so many years in agriculture, whether it be BSE or drought in the grain sector or whatever – the amount of money that they can get keeps going down. I wondered if that's one of the things that they're looking at. If the minister can update us on that.

Mr. Chairman, just to move from CAIS back to BSE, I'm sure not our favourite topic because of the devastation, I notice that this year's budget has trimmed $622 million from last year's budget that was earmarked for BSE relief. The funding at that time, I understand, was one-time disaster funding, but we're still having the same problems. I wondered if the minister sees that the budget is enough, or are we going to have to revisit this? I know it depends on, partly, when the American border opens. But if the minister can give us his best analysis of that.

Mr. Chairman, I'd be remiss if I didn't, from question period, talk about the Conservative Party of Canada. As the minister is well aware, they went after the federal Liberals and said that they wanted to get intervenor status whenever R-CALF came back to court, and they accused the Liberals – apparently, the Liberal government had attempted to get intervenor status and was turned down. That's my understanding. I think they quote in there that they're too timid and all sorts of things. Well, as I said, if their kissing cousins thought the federal Liberals were too timid, perhaps they thought the same about us.

I know the minister said that we prefer to work with them, but sometimes you need the stick too. It seems to me that if the federal
