Conservatives are applying for intervenor status – and I say: good for them – then perhaps the provincial government should do it too to add a little more clout. I would hope that they might revisit that because I think the minister said – and I agree – that a lot of this is politics. We understand that. But it's politics to show strength there too. Whether it's a court case or not, the minister would admit that it was politics that led to the court case, so the more strength we can show in dealing with the R-CALF group, I think it's important to do. I would just say that the same criticism could be leveled here as the federal Conservatives are leveling at the federal Liberals.

The other point I'd make – and the minister has alluded to it – is that we have to increase slaughter capacity. I know that he said that there are more groups coming on, and that's probably true, but there are still three or four major players here. If I look at a CanFax report, they're still doing very well, getting that cattle cheaply from the farmers. Their profits are booming up to where they were a year or so ago. So we have this problem.

The minister back in one of the releases also talked about, I think it was, $30 million, $32 million to look at marketing in other parts of the world than the United States. I think that's great. I think we have to do that. Many people, many cattle producers are telling me that in some ways maybe this has been a wake-up call about the American border. We had too many of our eggs in one basket. Maybe this will help us diversify our marketing strategy and get into some other markets.

That, I think, means that we're going to have to change some things here. I don't know why the government is so reluctant to move to the testing of animals 30 months and over and perhaps deal with – I don't know if it's a safety factor or not; I don't pretend to be a scientist – the prion testing of animals prior to slaughter. I think we're going to have to begin to do these things. We can say that the science does not advocate that we have to do all this, but if the opinion – and it's starting to happen in Canada – around the world is that they want this, then the reality is that we're going to have to do it.

The minister shakes his head, but that's what the European common market and others are doing. We don't believe that it would be that expensive. I think that's one of the ways, I say with all due respect to the minister, that we're going to have to move if we want to increase markets around the world. I think that's going to happen, whether we like it or not.

I know the point that you want to make is that the science here, we think, is solid. The minister has said that. But perception is everything, Mr. Minister, and if people don't believe that and because of the things that the Americans are doing to us – and it's around the world – I'm saying that we should do everything possible. Two things: increase our slaughter capacity, and whether people believe the science or not, let's do things differently with prions and the testing of animals if we have to do it. That's what I'm saying. I think that's going to come, Mr. Minister, whether we like it or not.

Tying into that, I wonder why – and the minister said that he'd have something to say about this – the government hasn't been more supportive of 600 and some farmers who want to do a co-op in the Peace River, the Tender Beef Co-op. They're prepared to be far more rigorous. They say that a hundred per cent of their animals will be tested prior to slaughter, that the animals would be raised without hormones, and that they'd have a private lab. They think they can do it. They think they can get markets, especially in Europe, Germany, and places like that, if they do these sorts of things. I guess I would say to the minister that I would be encouraging them, if economically they can do this, to begin to do this. Talking to them, there would be a lot of very positive environmental things flowing from this. But there seems to be some sort of hiccup here with the provincial government. I know it wasn't in this minister's time, but I don't know what the problem is, why we would not be encouraging here increased slaughter capacity plus doing things a little differently, that may lead us to those markets.

Mr. Chairman, I always lose track of time here. I think I have a few minutes left. I'd like to just talk a bit about the Wheat Board. I quote from the minister – well, not the minister but the throne speech, but he probably had something to say about it. The throne speech said:

We will work to strengthen this vital sector by continuing to advocate for marketing choice for wheat and barley. The global marketplace is demanding that we move to a more competitive marketing system. Alberta will push for a new business model for the Canadian Wheat Board, one with market choice, so that Alberta farmers can be more competitive in the value-added market.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's foolish in the extreme for farmers to think that just because you have a computer now, you can somehow beat the Cargills of the world in the open market. But saying that as it is, the Wheat Board, it's my understanding – and the minister would be well aware of this – is trying to adapt to this new reality. When they were here meeting with the Wheat Board – I think they had a meeting with the minister. No. I guess it was cancelled. But I did meet with them.

What they are doing, it seems to me, is taking advice from the Speech from the Throne. Last year 3 million tonnes were sold in outside sales, the highest tonnage ever. Selling that makes sense. They now have an option to sell on their own. Like a mortgage there's a variable rate or a three-year fixed price for farmers who want to sell on their own. So they're moving in the directions somewhat that the Speech from the Throne talked about. This new crop year there's going to be another option: daily cash prices. Farmers can sell in the U.S. I suppose this is like the stock market. They can gamble on the daily price on the U.S. market if they want to. So it seems to me that the Wheat Board is attempting to adapt to some of the criticisms that this government has been promoting.

I believe that there's a reason we got into the single-desk selling many years ago. I think it's foolish in the extreme to say that most farmers would benefit if you didn't have a Canadian Wheat Board. Certainly, it would be an advantage if you're closer to the border. It's certainly not going to be an advantage to people in the Peace River or in northern Alberta.

I'd think that the fact that they're attempting to adapt, to let farmers play in the open market – that's what I'm told that they wanted – would make this minister happy and this government happy, but it seems that they're not happy unless they dismantle the whole thing. That's not going to happen in the other provinces because the other two prairie provinces want to keep the Wheat Board.

So we can keep arguing this time and time again, but there is some encouragement here to do this. As I say, I don't know if the minister has met with them recently or not, but I make the case that they've moved some way in this, in what the government wanted, and there should be some encouragement rather than continually haranguing the Wheat Board. Remember that they run in elections, just like we do, and the farmers that believe in the Wheat Board keep getting elected. [interjection] Well, I mean, I could say the same thing. I don't like all the Conservatives that get elected in rural Alberta, but the fact remains that this election is just as democratic as elections where we get elected. The minister shakes his head. Well, you know, you're not talking to the same farmers that I'm talking to then.

Let me just conclude. Yeah, it's nice that we try to do it, and I'd certainly agree that we try to do as much rural development as we can in small towns. But there are towns, and then there are really small towns. There's a very big difference between a place like Wainwright or St. Paul and a place like where I grew up, a place called Delia, and the rest of it. It's changing. I'm saying that we can do all the world development we want, but if we don't get a handle on the agriculture problem, if the farms keep getting bigger and bigger, all that will be left will be collective farms and corporate farms – I'm not saying that we're there yet – and the rural way of life down the way will be dead. Now, we can argue about how we go about doing that, but I tell you, there's a deep concern, when I go around rural Alberta, about their future, and I think the minister is well aware of that.

So I'm probably close to my time. [Mr. Martin's speaking time expired] Hey, how's that? Perfect. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Where to begin? I would love to begin at the end with the Canadian Wheat Board, but I'm going to save that.

The hon. member mentioned the difference in the budget in industry development funding levels, the drop. In the last quarter of last year's budget we did put out $7.1 million in the beef product and development program, $7 million for precommercialization for specific risk material, the SRM material. We want to find new homes for that, new products, and perhaps add some value to something that used to have value that no longer has value. So we committed some dollars for that.

We also put out some dollars for the other ruminants. You know, we talk a lot about BSE, we talk a lot about beef in agriculture these days, but our industry is everything from fish farming to poultry to turkeys to, as I mentioned earlier, goats to California. So we did also announce a program of not only a per-head payment on other ruminants, which I believe the feds have finally contributed their portion to, but we seem to have to put our money out there to shame them to do that every once in a while, as we did on the $30 million. They came to the table on that. The $17 million drop that you see was actually because it was added in in this calendar year but in the last quarter of the last budget, so there was no necessity to put that in. We want to make sure that those programs are off and running and going before we do some difference there. So I hope that answers the hon. member's question in that regard.

With regard to the crop insurance, you know, as long as I've been in the cereals industry, we've had issues with crop insurance in terms of how we do the adjustments. We have some very dedicated folks out in the country that are going out there and doing the adjustments and trying to be fair, trying to do the right thing for the producers, and sometimes one producer may not agree with what the adjuster is saying.

The idea that one bad year in five is going to put you into that one bad year category: I think I'd like to get a little more information from that particular producer that you talked to because I think there are maybe some facts there that we're missing. As you know and are aware, as MLAs we sometimes get one side but not the other side, and maybe there's a little more information there. So I'd really be interested if the hon. member would like to get that gentleman to come talk to me. I'm sure we could probably help him out in that regard.

We did a number of things, though, this year with crop insurance. I mentioned briefly the spring price endorsement with the revenue insurance component. We dropped the producer cost of that to 40 per cent. Now, there are a number of areas in the province where producers don't take the spring price endorsement or the spring price endorsement as set by the actuarials. This leads to a question that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had talked about: how do we set these things?

Well, you know, we do the best we can in terms of forecasting. The third-party insurance that comes with this does the best to figure out what the premiums are going to be, what the actuarial costs will be. Then setting those dollars and those targets for those dollars in the spring price endorsement becomes a bit of a crystal ball type issue. But for the producers who look at the spring price endorsement, do the calculations, they may find that there's a huge benefit there or a huge comfort there for them to take that particular piece of insurance.

In terms of the principal insurance or the basic crop insurance, some of the other things that we did this spring, the hon. member will remember that last year we had a fairly significant number of snowed-under crops up in the north country and in some other areas. We've made some adjustments as to how we were paying out on those snowed-under crops. Again, the intent was to get some dollars into those producers' hands so that they have some hope that this spring they can put a crop in, that they can cover some of the high input costs that we're experiencing right now, that they can actually take off that crop in whatever shape it may be. We're experiencing some difficulties with some wildlife damage up there in the north country right now that we're trying to address. Certainly, the Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace has talked to me about that as well as from Peace River. I think there are some things we may be able to do on that basis.

The other comment that I caught from the hon. member was per-acre funding, the per-acre funding in terms of an ad hoc payment. I wanted to just touch on this idea of ad hoc payments. The billion dollars that was recently put out by the federal government, albeit welcome news – we do welcome the federal government's contribution whenever they would like to send some money our way to our producers' hands. Even with that, as I mentioned earlier, we're still at a 2 to 1 to them in terms of putting dollars in producers' pockets. It was kind of on an ad hoc basis. I was given very, very short notice, as were the other ministers of agriculture across Canada. One can imagine the joy that they felt at waking up in the morning to an announcement that they knew nothing about, and I think it was expressed in a press release that went out shortly thereafter.

I think ad hoc payments are the way of the past. They're not the way of the future. What we need to do is develop a program, a risk management program for our producers to do exactly what the hon. member is talking about. Let's make the family farm, however big that family farm may be, as sustainable in the long term as we possibly can.

I guess that when you talk about the 80 per cent crop insurance coverage, there is a deductible amount there that we want to maintain. There are other things around crop insurance. The hon. member talked about small farm versus large farm per-acre payments. That's why we are so keen on CAIS. CAIS has to be the backstop for every producer in the province. It has to be the thing that is going to cover you whether you're an elk rancher, whether you're a hog producer, whether you're a poultry guy, whether you're in canola or flax or wheat or barley. It doesn't matter. What we want to get to is a point in time when we have a program that is risk management based, that the producer is participating in, that he sees the value in the program, and that all of the producers in this province, all 54,000 farm units, are involved in CAIS. That's their backstop. That's what they need to have the comfort in that they can be around next year.

That kind of leads me into the next comment that the hon. member made: where are we going with CAIS? There are four issues with CAIS that we have heard and that I know hon. members of this House have heard as well. One is the complexity of CAIS: the complexity of the application, the complexity of the program as it was developed. Another issue is the inventory, the valuations, how that's managed, how it's taken through the application process. The third thing is – and the hon. member mentioned it – the five-year rolling average. When you had four bad years, you just rolled your average down to a nonproductive or nonviable situation. So how do we address that? Quite frankly, the fourth issue that we have to address – the member asked if we had met as ministers of agriculture across Canada, and the answer is yes – pertains to that, and that's sustainability of the program, affordability.

In Alberta we're blessed in the sense that we have the ability to cover our 40 per cent of what have been some fairly dramatic years. I mentioned the dollars. You know, we've been able to push those out through CAIS. I mentioned the dollars that we've pushed out most recently. In other provinces they are not so blessed, and they are having a great deal of difficulty given the fact that not only Alberta, but Saskatchewan, Manitoba, British Columbia have all had four disastrous years. CAIS was not exactly set up to be a disaster program. It was set up to be a farm risk management program.

What we have done in Alberta is we are leading the charge, so to speak, in terms of talking to the other provinces and suggesting some solutions to these. We've had consultations with the industry. We are currently setting up a consultation with industry again, with the industry groups. The hon. member may recall that I had an industry group round-table in January. We had some 38 or so industry associations from around the province, as I said, everything from the fish farmers to the canola growers. It was an extremely worthwhile and productive session, that gave us some ideas as to where to go outside of the cloud of BSE.

We're bringing that group back together again, and we're going to present to them our ideas as to how we see that we can make CAIS less complex, that we can make it affordable in the long term, that we can make it responsive to the producers' needs, that we can have a disaster component to it that will allow for these perfect storm years like we've had and thereby keep that reference margin in a reasonable manner that will be a backstop to every producer in the province that he can count on. We believe that we'll be able to do that and present that to the other ministers this July.

We are fortunate that Alberta is hosting the federal/provincial/territorial ministers' meetings in July of this year. The timing is very, very good. We have a great staff, as I've said before, that has been working on this for the last three or four months, and I think we've made excellent headway. We've had some very good input from some producer groups so far. We're going to be, as I said, bringing it forward and making sure that we involve the industry in what we're doing, although I think the industry is already there, hon. member. I think they have already come forward with some ideas, that we're all kind of on the same page right now.

Certainly, in terms of the 9,000 claims, I'll get maybe a little bit to some of the specifics. There were 9,000 claims that were of a smaller dollar value. When I say smaller, we're probably talking about under $50,000, which is no small change. There were a lot of them there that we needed to get out quickly, so we did. There are some that will still require some extra information.

Talking about the complexity of the program: if you've had a farm operation that has grown three times in the last six years and you're trying to develop a program to try to give a risk management backstop for that type of an operation, how do you take into account that the farm has grown three times in six years? How do you manage the tax information, the revenue information, and all those other sorts of things? There has to be a certain amount of complexity in whatever program you're going to develop.

After all, we are talking about 54,000 small businesses in this province. Some of them are large businesses, but for the most part they're small businesses. We have to educate our producer groups that they need to look at it as a small business in a lot of ways because that will fit in with the complexity or with the risk management decisions that they have to make. Most of them, Mr. Chairman, are very, very knowledgeable about their business. They're very, very knowledgeable about the marketing of their product. They're very, very knowledgeable about how to produce probably the best product in the world.

The hon. member talked about intervenor status and the Conservative caucus applying for intervenor status. I did receive a letter from the Alberta Alliance Party. I believe it was from their Justice critic, as I recall. One of the things that the letter said was that the Alberta Beef Producers and I think it was the CCA have all applied for intervenor status, and why aren't we? That's wrong. It's just blatantly wrong.

The ABP has filed an amicus brief, and we are supplying information to that amicus brief. We are working with the Alberta Beef Producers very, very closely. I meet with them probably at least every two weeks, if not at least once a month, dependent upon what's going on. As a matter of fact, we called an emergency meeting before the red meat reception to discuss the set-aside program, as we talked about. We wanted to encourage them to be a little more aggressive. That's part of the industry consultation that we do along with the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. Dennis Laycraft and Darcy Davis and I have each other's cell numbers on our BlackBerrys and call each other fairly often.

It's important to note that the intervenor status in Judge Cebull's courtroom is about as relevant as the ruling that he gave us on March 2. He's not going to give anybody that he doesn't want to intervenor status. He's just not. He's probably written the most prejudicial judicial ruling that I've seen ever, and a number of my colleagues who are in the legal profession look at it and shake their heads.

That tells me that our chances of success are not in his courtroom. Our chances of success are in the appeal court, where we can win an appeal and lift that injunction and show him, by way of an appeal court, that he made an error in his judgment. That's where, hon. member, we're going to put our resources because that's where we can win, and I think others in the industry – ABP, CCA, the National Cattlemen's Beef Association, the American Meat Institute, all of those industry allies that we have – would agree with that.

You mentioned, hon. member, politics. There's good politics and there's bad politics. My concern would be: how would it be viewed, a foreign government becoming involved as an intervenor in that courtroom? Certainly, by Judge Cebull it would be viewed very, very negatively, and I think that was the general consensus that we came to in our discussions with industry. Has the Conservative caucus or the Conservative group that is pushing ahead talked to the CCA and ABP about this? I don't know. I've not had discussions with them on that regard. Is there something that I would say that they shouldn't do? No. I look for all the help anywhere that it comes. But I think that from our perspective, working as a team with our Alberta industry, it's not something that we were asked to do, nor is it something that we think would have positive benefits.

Slaughter capacity, profitability of slaughter plants. You mentioned that this should be a wake-up call on market dependence. I agree a hundred per cent with the hon. member on that remark and have used it numerous times in my discussions with other industries: take a look at your market dependency. I mentioned at the outset, when I was responding to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, the example of having only Safeway as your customer. If you have a market dependency on one client, I hope your relationship with that client is extremely close.

It behooves every business, regardless of what industry they're in, to ensure that they have a backup plan or that they have a diversity of market choice to be able to survive in the event – it could be something as catastrophic as a border closure. It could be something as catastrophic as your largest client going bankrupt. There are numerous things that can happen when you're in industry or when you're in business.

The 100 per cent testing question. The hon. member may or may not have heard my comments with respect to 100 per cent testing. I'm going to try to get this out in the short time that I have, which means that I'm going to have to come back to you on the CWB and a few other things. On 100 per cent testing I have yet to have a government confirm to us that if we do 100 per cent testing, they will open their market to our product, full stop. I have yet to see a letter from a customer that says that regardless of what their government says, they will buy product that is 100 per cent tested, full stop. Not seen it.

The other thing that has to be considered, and many marketing experts probably are looking at this more closely than some of the proponents of a slaughter plant, is that there is a potential here to damage the marketability of product here at home by a perception – as the hon. member mentioned, perception is very important – that our beef is somehow not safe. There are, certainly, discussions in the Alberta beef producers' circles and the Canadian cattlemen's circles that we have to be very, very, very careful about the risk of ruining our own market based on a perception that it's not safe because we say that another country says that it's not safe, and therefore we must 100 per cent test.

I think it's an important point that if you can find a country that'll open, in writing, if we 100 per cent test, if you can find a customer that's willing to buy regardless of what their country of origin or country of destination says, if you can satisfy your domestic market with, "Don't worry; we don't test yours, but we're testing theirs just for market access," and you don't lose demand on this side, then, hon. member, I probably would support that, but none of those conditions have been met.

The other thing I'll say very, very quickly on beef packing plants, and I've said it before a number of times. If a beef packing plant comes to me and says, "We are going to have the greatest product, that nobody else can do, we can do it better, we're going to have a hundred per cent organic, and we're going to have all of these other things" – any idiot can build a slaughter plant. It's not a hard thing to do. It's not a hard thing to write a cheque and have an engineer or somebody come in and build you a plant. It's what you do after that that is going to gauge whether you're successful or whether you're going to go down the tubes in a hurry. If you do not have a client or a market that's already identified that you will have easy access to, you're going to have two years of total problems because you're going to have a whole bunch of beef backing up, or you're going to have a whole bunch of cash-flow problems, with working capital tied up because you won't have the marketplace.

It's very important, it's very critical that that happen. Many of the business plans that I have seen in the last five months – it's hard to believe I've only been doing this for five months – have lacked severely in their marketing effort on the business plan side of it. Of the 30 some odd proposals that were on my desk in January, my guess is that they're probably down to about 10 that have a serious chance to move forward. If they have the market, if they have the location, if they have the material supply and access to that supply, if they have the working capital, they're probably going to be a business that anyone will finance or anyone will buy into. It isn't a matter of me making that decision; it's a matter of the marketplace making that decision. Hon. member, if they don't have customers, they're not going to sell anything, and I'm not going to wear that. I've been very, very up front with many of these processors who have come to the government to talk to us about those sorts of things.

Peace Country Tender Beef Co-op. I've never said no to meeting with them. They think they can get a marketplace . . . [Mr. Horner's speaking time expired] Well, I can add to that later.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Certainly an engaging discussion this afternoon, and as the minister said: where to start? Whether we keep going on BSE, I'm not sure. I'll probably just hit a few subjects, and then we'll go back so that I don't miss any and run out of time at the end.

Just a short, quick start on irrigation. I'm not sure – and I didn't have my research team because I haven't got enough funding yet for one – but we used to have the policy that 25 years had to pass before you could upgrade a canal or something that had received funding from the province. Technology has really jumped ahead a long ways, and there are irrigation districts that want to rehabilitate different facilities that aren't as efficient as they should be, but because they've been inside this 25-year period, they don't qualify. I think that's an area that we really need to readdress because water, as your side has said so many times, is blue gold, is valuable, and technology now allows us to upgrade and put in these pipelines that 25 years ago just weren't feasible. So I'd appreciate it if the minister would look into that and perhaps be a little bit more lax on these irrigation districts that want to upgrade different legs of their irrigation to the newer technology.

I also want to urge them to continue pushing hard to store more water. It's an area that's very critical.

I want to touch on crop insurance for just a few minutes, and maybe I'll start with the spring price endorsement program. From those producers that I've talked to – we're at a very low period right now on the pricing of our commodity – most of them see that as, you know: what are the chances of it going down another 20 per cent and getting a payout? Perhaps the government would look at putting a price reduction or a coverage in another area that would truly help the producers where they need to buy the coverage. Yet there is no ad hoc program to help them on the bare purchase of the insurance, only on the price endorsement. I've had a few that are concerned about that.

It's been mentioned by the minister, for both Dunvegan and Peace River – and I'll also reiterate it – that fecal contamination from the wildlife is a problem. I hope and urge you to continue to try and come up with an answer for that.

Also, the amount of crop that has been snowed under. We still seem to have the policy that until it's processed in the spring, we're not going to do anything. We have enough of a track record that we should be able to at least give a 50 per cent payout or something to assist these farmers that have got a double whammy by not being able to get their products in. [interjection] Super.

Another complaint that I've received, especially from the start-up farmers, is that you have to have a track record to get full payment in crop insurance. Another problem that they have is that it seems like every time a program comes out, it's based differently – on who owns the land, on who's renting the land – and it's always changing. If we had a system and a policy that was in place, whether it was saying that the money always goes to the landowner, then the renters could always put it in their contract that any money received by the landowner would go through to the renter.

Because the programs always change, the renters are changing to try and think: well, last time it was given out on this basis, so we'll put that in our contract. Then the next time it's switched to something else. Rather than the landowner, it might be the renter, and it's always flip-flopping back and forth. Very difficult to know how it's coming out. I'd urge the government to have a set program, whether it's on land ownership or whatever it is, so that the renting farmers and those that are taking over from their elders, who are maybe stepping to the side, know how it's going to be implemented every time and put it into their contracts. They always seem to get missed when the supplement money comes out.

Just to touch on CAIS for a few minutes. You referred to a few things, and complexity is definitely a problem, but two other ones I've come across. In the purebred industry advertising is a huge part of their costs, and especially in tough times like this, how do they get the message out, especially when that cost, which sometimes is one of their biggest expenses as a purebred breeder, isn't allowed in the CAIS program? It's very difficult for them to work on that.

Another one is major capital costs. In farming today the price of a combine is $200,000, $300,000. When something happens or they need to upgrade, it's a huge cost. Yet, again, that's not taken into CAIS. It's over too long a period of time. It can really affect their bottom line, so we need to look at capital costs.

I guess the other thing that I'd urge on that is that with the $300 million that has finally come out, that's great, but we've got to come up with a better program somehow so that it doesn't take 18 months to get out to these producers. No business can stay in business waiting 18 months for their insurance money or their support, if you want to call it that. It's brutal on an industry that's already been devastated because of problems. We need to be able to address it quicker and to facilitate those farmers in getting out there.

I'm sorry that the minister didn't get to address the Wheat Board for a few minutes. I was looking forward to that.

Mr. Horner: I'm coming to that.

Mr. Hinman: Well, I wanted to hear your response so I could adjust. [interjection] Well, I've got to bring up different points, you know, get him steered in the right direction: to the left, to the right, from the right to the left. We've got to steer him down the road.

Choice of marketing has been a problem in western Canada since the Wheat Board was implemented. For those who are wondering about the implementation, it came in in the '30s. I guess it was earlier. Because there were no markets available, it did serve a purpose. It was originally supposed to have a five-year grandfather clause. I think that any time programs come in, we need to put in grandfather clauses so that they don't become permanent. Programs are not the answer to supporting our industries, but when we're hit and we're devastated, like with BSE, perhaps a grandfather clause to get us through is an important thing.

The Wheat Board is very damaging to value-added products. We've got to do something. If in no other area, we have to fight . . . [interjection] He's a very small minority.

Mr. Martin: Not in northern Alberta.

Mr. Hinman: Well, the choice is what's important.

When it comes to value-added products, that's one area where we surely can stand up to Ottawa and get value-added products taken out of the Wheat Board and allow some innovation and some farm corporations, small entities to get up and process their product and be able to move it out. So I'd urge that that's one area we can certainly fight on and put a mandate out to the farmers that choice is very important. I was very pleased to hear that Saskatchewan today ruled in favour of those farmers. It was a sad day when we jailed our own farmers. We might as well be in Russia, jailing farmers for wanting to sell their produce.

Switching over, I guess we'll start talking a little bit about BSE. There's no question that the bottleneck is the packing industry. We can make all of the other comments we want on whether we have foreign markets, what the standards are, or anything else. The bottleneck and the problem is the packing plants. We need to address that. Those packing plants have been brutal on the producers. They've taken every dollar, practically, that the governments have put out straight into their pocket by price reduction. As soon as the money is put out there, we see the dollar drop on what they'll bid every time. The government has got to step in and do something about that, but I don't know how you do it because we've got two years of billions of dollars being sucked out of the industry to the profitability of these major foreign corporations, that have benefited the best or the most from that.

I'm very, very concerned – and so are many of the producers I've talked to – about waiting for the border to open. They have chronic wasting disease down in the States in their wildlife. We all know and the world knows that if that's there, BSE has got to be there. Because they've been covering up for so long and they're so good at it, it doesn't mean that it's going to continue. The people that I've talked to are very concerned that the day the border will open, it will be because the U.S. is ready to announce that they have BSE, and we're going to be locked into a market that we can't export to.

I would really encourage this government, when they talk about developing new product processing and servicing and facilitating capital investment and developing networks and facilitating market access, to take that $30 million – and I'd like to know where that's going to and what we're doing because we don't have packing plants, to my understanding. Those U.S. packing plants know where they want to market the beef, so what other markets are we looking at when we don't even have packing plants that are willing to sell there? I'd like a better understanding of what that might entail, what markets and access we're looking for when we don't have our own packing plants to direct in those areas. Anyway, if we don't have our own packing plants, we're going to be hooped again in part of a system that we can't get out of, and that's a deep concern for the producers that I've talked to and who are looking at that.

I guess to go on a little bit more about packing plants. In Alberta we're very innovative. We reduce the royalties, the taxes, and we understand the benefit of the capital investment that's going into the oil industry. I don't understand why we haven't been innovative in the farming and specifically in the ranching industry when it comes to this.

Some new ideas that I've heard just in the last few weeks – I guess I'll start with the first one. There are many cattle producers that want to be involved with these co-ops, and they have a great deal of faith that they can make it work. Many times we seem to fall back on the fact that we don't have contracts, we don't have areas that we can sell this beef to, so how could we possibly build these packing plants and possibly lose it? The demand for our beef is here, no different than the golf courses. There have been many, many golf courses built in the province. Many have gone under, but I don't know of too many that haven't been snapped back up and are still being used. I believe that the packing industry would be the same. If we were to have thrown some money at it, and heaven forbid it was bad money, and the packing plant went under, the facility would still be there.

Many irrigation farmers have four pumps that they need in order to keep their irrigation up during the high-stress period. They buy a fifth pump hoping to never have to use it. I don't think it would be the worst thing in the world for Alberta to have some extra packing facilities here to process the beef. I really believe, because of the new state-of-the-art technology, we could be drawing beef in from the U.S. if, in fact, we were to have the new packing plants, if we were to look at having the value-added, no different than what we're looking at in health care and education. We can be state of the art. We can be the centre and be bringing in and processing other people's raw products rather than saying that we have nowhere to go on it.

I've talked about it in the past, whether you want to call it angel investment or something else. It's time that Alberta stands up to Ottawa and says: enough is enough; we're not going to have you rule on everything that we want to do. Taxes are a major problem that we seem to be constantly fighting. I want to, I guess, jump back to farming and crop insurance. We need to reduce our taxes on the input costs for the grain farmers, the producers, whether that's on the fuel, the fertilizer, the machinery dealers, the production. We need to fight. We understand here in Alberta the benefit of low taxes. We really need to fight in agriculture to reduce those burdensome taxes on our inputs, especially at this time when things are so tough.

We need to do that, though, with the packing facilities. There's got to be ways that we can step forward and allow the capital investment to go into these facilities. It's critical, and if we don't do it, I just don't see a future for the Alberta beef industry if, in fact, we don't have the packing facilities here. It's all about value added. We know it. We understand it. You have your 2010. The best way to reach that is with packing plants. That's the highest return and our biggest industry. We need to put the money there, and I don't think Albertans will be too upset if, in fact, a few hundred million dollars, let alone the billions of dollars, wasn't hit the best on that packing industry.

I've said it before, and I'll say it again: this is a tsunami. It's gone across the province. It's gone across the country. We need to build the facility. It won't be perfect, it's not the best, but we have to do it. We need to do it now. We can't say that the border is going to open in July, and we'll be connected to them. We need the value-added here in Alberta.

Another area where producers are frustrated. We believe in being free enterprise here in Alberta. I've talked to many, many producers that are upset with the check-off price that they get caught on selling their animals. Some animals get a check-off as high as five times before they get to the market. There are many producers that are more upset with the check-off and having to be part of ABP than they are with the Wheat Board at this current time.

I feel that we have to have a volunteer association. This has outgrown itself, like many organizations have. Once they have complete power and control, it's very difficult to break that. A volunteer association would be great, but if we can't have that, then we need to be able to look at directing those fees somewhere – we're getting some actual communications. Yes? No? May be possible? There are many farmers and ranchers that would love to be part of those co-ops, but because of their situation they can't raise the capital. If, in fact, some plants were put up and people could sign into those co-ops saying, "I want my check-off to go to pay for that" – another head shake, a negative one at that, sorry to say.

They need to have a choice. This iron grip that the ABP has on their check-off is not appreciated industry-wide. They could also put it into a support fund. There needs to be something there other than this $21 million just going to a group of individuals that have the right to decide how and where it's spent. I realize that the government is very close to them, but not all the producers are as close to the ABP as the government is and would like, I guess, to get rid of that.

Ralph Thrall, a very well-known, profitable rancher, two years ago said that the most important and best thing we could have done was to buy the packing plants when the border was closed. We know that we're not going to do that. Rick Pascal, another prominent feeder, has said: why have we allowed the gouging that has gone on? This government could step in and should step in and put in a minimum base that can be charged or put in there by that packing industry, those foreign owners, and keep the price up closer to that in the States. There has been a huge spread there, and it's not necessary. The profits are there, and this government can and should do something about that in the eyes of many, many producers.

I want to touch a little bit on CFIA and on testing for BSE. Once again, we can say that there are no markets, that there's nothing else. If, in fact, there was the freedom – for example, the new generation processing plant in Pincher Creek that sent in their plant plans to CFIA with a lab on site and were told no. For a small fee of $240,000 – and I can't remember the name of the company; I forgot to bring it up here – they can have a testing lab that can test and have the results within eight hours and costs $19 a test. I believe in free enterprise. If someone wants to make that part of their business plan and go to Japan or somewhere else, why does the government stand in and say, "No, we're not going to allow you to do it"?

I understand that we don't want to pass and say that there's not going to be 100 per cent testing. I agree with that. But a group that wants to start a packing plant and are looking for an industry, to say, "No, you can't do it" I believe is very wrong. The technology is there. Japan, Europe, they recognize those areas. We need to allow them to get into that.

We're going to run out of time here, I see. Another area I want to touch quickly on is inventory adjustment for BSE feedlots and farmers and whatnot. During the drought, that was allowed. We need to lobby the federal government. We've got to change this draconian tax system on inventory. We need to protect them. If they can afford to buy for one or two years, they shouldn't be hit with owners' taxes saying, "Oh, no. You've got to pay up on that inventory" when, in fact, they need to be able to get back in in a couple of years. It's very damaging, and it isn't doing our industry any good.

The technology in the packing industry is phenomenal in Australia and over in Europe. We need to change our attitude. We still think like in the 1960s with computers. Only the biggest corporations even looked at computers and said: it's the only way we can compete. Technology in the world is changing greatly, and we need to be able to keep pace with it. Small packing plants can and will be competitive if, in fact, we'll let them in. The walls they have to climb and the red tape and CFIA have been very damaging to them, and the tax incentives also have not been there for those small packing plants. They can and they will be effective if we'll let them come here.

Somehow we've got to pull in our horns and say: "You know, this is a disaster. We don't have the answer, but we need Alberta-owned packing plants for the benefit of those people." Like the small computers that we use today, we can accomplish it. There's the hot deboning process that's coming along. There's the instant freezing. There are many, many things that are coming through. They're processing and having them cryovaced into those cookable containers.

I'm running out of time, so I'm rushing along here. There are many areas that we can and should address. I wish that we'd be more innovative and look at the ideas that the small farmers are putting forward. They can and will be successful, but we need to put them forward.

Well, I guess I'm out of time.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. The first thing that I'd like to talk about is the irrigation and this 25-year rule which the hon. member will probably be very pleased to know no longer applies. Working with the Irrigation Council and the 13 irrigation districts, they're the ones that set the priorities as to whether those things are going to go. They've been working very, very well together. They are setting those programs. I'm really, really pleased that we've been able to add $3 million in this budget to augment and bring it up to $22 million so that we can have some innovative uses and some upgrades of the water use.

I'd like to applaud, actually, the irrigation districts for the environmental stewardship which they've shown, for the ability to recover or not lose the water to evaporation. As I understand it, over the years they've become almost 40 per cent more efficient, if not more. I think it's something that, you know, as you mentioned, we call the blue gold in Alberta and that we hold very, very dearly. As part of the Water for Life strategy, obviously agriculture is going to be playing a key role in that.

I would hope that you're pleased to hear that that 25-year rule no longer applies. I'm not sure when you were talking to those folks, but it has been a while, so you may want to get back and talk to them.

You mentioned, just going through here, an ad hoc program on the premium for crop insurance. You know, I kind of go back to what I was talking about with ad hoc programs. I don't like them. I think we have the ability and the skills across this country to come up with a program that works. It's going to take us some time to get there because, obviously, we're creating something from scratch here, or it's an amalgamation of other programs that we thought would work, so we threw them together. But remember, this is a national program. You've got all ten provinces, all the territories are involved in this, so you need to have the agreement of all those provinces whenever you're going to change something for the signatories because you want the feds to be on side. You want the dollars that they're going to have to commit to this. In fact, I'm going to be asking them to commit in a very substantial way on the disaster component.

You mentioned, too, about why did we go with the spring price endorsement. I asked the federal government to participate in what we were doing, and I asked them pointedly, that a reduction in crop insurance across the board would have more effect on our producers' input costs and their income and their risk management than anything else that they could possibly do. I asked them to participate with us, if they were going to come forward with more dollars in our basis program, in the set-aside program.

You mentioned a little bit later on in your comments about some of the tax systems. I don't quite get the angel investor part, but I'll leave that for another day. You talked about reducing taxes on the inputs, the farm fuel. We do that in Alberta. We rebate farm fuel.

We have the farm fuel rebate. It's $33 million. It's in the budget. It's a line item, $33,500,000. I asked the federal government to participate in that. What did I get? I got a phone call at 7 o'clock on Monday telling me that they were spreading a billion dollars out to the wind Tuesday morning. I think they'd have been far better served to have a little more consultation with the rest of us and say: here's a better idea, something that works. So we're going to continue to push on that side. We're going to continue to talk to them about working co-operatively with us as we do with the industry to come up with better ideas, better ways to manage the dollars that they are, I think, obligated to put in our producers' hands.

Under the snowed-under part, we have increased, actually. The payment has gone from 50 per cent to 75 per cent, I believe, on the snowed-under crops in the Peace district. Certainly, there are issues there, as I mentioned before, about, you know, crop adjusters going up there, as you're going to have with any type of insurance. You're always going to have those individual issues, and we try to address them one-on-one. Certainly, any of the colleagues here in the Legislature are more than welcome to bring the individual concerns to my attention, and I will bring it to the attention of the appropriate personnel in AFSC.

With regard to the rental land issue that you brought up, I believe it was that when we kicked out a payment, sometimes that payment didn't go to the guy that was actually doing the farming. We've kind of rectified that now. Again, that mostly applies to the ad hoc situation, which this minister doesn't want to do, so I'm hopeful that we're not going to be having that situation.

You talked a little bit about CAIS and the qualified expenses and capital costs. I talked a little earlier in my comments about how we are doing a step-by-step process of not only consultation but revamping, trying to put some new ideas out there on CAIS. One of the things that we are doing is bringing together a group of farm accounting personnel to sit down with our staff at AFSC and our policy secretariat folks in the department and talk about the complexity of the application, talk about inventory management, talk about what would make more sense from a small business perspective. Farm accountants, the guys that have been doing this, the guys that have been phoning, the guys that have been saying that there's got to be a better way: those are the fellows that will be sitting around a table within weeks so that we can fine-tune what we're going to present to the industry in our round-tables when we put those together as well.

So we are looking at all of those things. But, again, CAIS is under the ag policy framework, which is under the national program, and it's important that it stays there because that's a 60-40 funding split. Even with that 60-40 funding split, because of the amount of dollars that we're kicking out in CAIS, there are a number of provinces that are having huge, huge issues with trying to make up even their 40 per cent.

You talked about the timing on the 18 months. I agree wholeheartedly. Again, that's part of the whole process of the review of CAIS. We've probably done it faster than a lot of other provinces have done it with some of the more complex CAIS applications.

One of the other questions that came up earlier – and I believe it was Edmonton-Gold Bar that brought it up – was about what it costs us to do a CAIS application. It's roughly around 700 bucks, more or less, which is about half the cost of what the federally administered provinces are running at right now. Obviously, this is the first year, two years, 18 months that we've been doing CAIS, so we're going to get some finer numbers, and we started from scratch here. You have to remember that you're starting from scratch. As we get better and as the farmers get better with the applications and the information and you get the history and things start to move down the road, this will become a very simple process for most producers as they get down the road and we all become more familiar with what is required and what we require from the producers' side. I think that answers those.

The other issue, then, was that the hon. member talked about the bottleneck being the packing plants. I don't know that I would agree that the bottleneck is the packing plants because the majority of the packing plants by agreement are running six days a week. That puts tremendous stress on the staff, on the personnel, on the equipment, on all of the things that they need to do. They're doing that because we need them to continue to kill so that the whole set-aside program works.

You mentioned that your feeling was that they had a case of BSE and that they're simply hiding it. Well, you know, I'm not going to say whether I believe that to be true or not. The important part for us is that we're not waiting for anything like that to happen. What we're doing is we're following through on our six-point recovery plan and restructuring plan. We're following through on the court cases to make sure that the court side of this thing is taken care of because the industry side of it is open to us. They want us to be able to ship product across the border, and they want us to import products up here, which we will probably end up doing once our slaughter capacity gets to where I think it's going to be within the next 12 to 18 months.

We won't be locked into anything. One of the things that the United States government has done – and this is very important for all members to note – is that prior to us getting BSE, our rules said that we would not accept beef from any country that had any case of BSE for a long period of time. Closed door. The United States had the same rule. So had it happened there first, would we have gone to the world community and said: "Hey, look. This is stupid. We should create a new rule that is the minimal risk rule that the world can adopt"? Would we have done that? I don't know. But that's what the U.S. has done. The U.S. has essentially created a new ruling that the world will hopefully follow and is following that creates a new category of minimal risk. They did that for us. Now, obviously they did it in the event that they get a case too, but I think we have to recognize what they have done as opposed to what perhaps some might think they haven't done.

The $30 million in marketing funds is actually $30 million provided to the Canadian Beef Export Federation for I believe it's called the legacy program, which will be a 10-year program. The federal government has also contributed $55 million to that 10-year program, and as much as the hon. member may not like the Alberta Beef Producers, they are, through the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, also contributing to this program.

The gist of the program is to reduce our market dependency on the United States. Their target is to go from 76 per cent to 50 per cent. Hon. member, I think it's dollars well spent if we can achieve that 50 per cent because that means that we've diversified our markets in the world, and I think that's very, very important.

So we're not saying that we don't have anywhere to go, as the hon. member said. We're saying that we've got a ton of places that we need to go, and we're putting the resources and the horses behind it to do it in co-operation and integration with the industry.

The hon. member also mentioned – and I'm just looking at some of the other comments – that more producers are upset with the Alberta Beef Producers than the Wheat Board. I would challenge that assertion, and I would suggest to you that it is totally false. I have yet to have a phone call from a producer telling me that he wants to get out of the Alberta Beef Producers. I have had numerous calls telling me that had the Alberta Beef Producers not been there, had they not been working in collaboration with us, had they not established the programs and the BSE recovery and the six-point plan working in collaboration with us, we probably would not have an industry in this province today after May of 2003.

They have been, I think, a very good advocate. Obviously, there are people in any organization who disagree with what that organization might be doing, but I think I would take from the majority of producers who are in the industry that they are doing what they need to do. I do not hear the type of angst that the hon. member is referring to. I think they've done quite well.

The hon. member mentioned a potential plant that might want to go and spend $250,000 on a BSE testing laboratory and put it in their plant. I think I know the company that he's referring to or the project that he's referring to. I've met with these folks. In fact, we are talking to CFIA to actually prove the point that Japan would open their market if you 100 per cent test it. I have said this to producer groups around the province: I don't think that Japan at this point in time would open their market to anybody, regardless of what they did, until they've figured out the politics between themselves, the Americans, and us. It is not a point of food safety. It is not a point of whether you test or not test. As the hon. member previously said, this is a political discussion, and it's a political issue, and it's a trade issue. It's a trade issue between Japan and the United States. It's a trade issue between the United States and Canada and Canada and Japan. That gets very, very complicated.

I think we have a much better opportunity here, hon. members, not to use 100 per cent testing for market access but to use age verification for access. We have an opportunity in this province because of the CCIA tagging and the RFID tags, that will be mandatory in 2006, and the platform that they have developed. We can be the only jurisdiction in North America to 100 per cent age-verify all of the beef in our province.

We are working to that direction because, hon. members, I see that as opening up more markets to us than 100 per cent testing because the Japanese even want to move away from 100 per cent testing. How is it going to be that they're going to say yes to 100 per cent testing on imports and then try to explain to their own domestic customers, "We want to move away from 100 per cent testing"? It's not going to work. Age verification will work, and that's the direction that I think we need to go, and our department is going to work towards that.

The hon. member talked about a tax system on inventory from the feds. I agree. I wish they would listen to some of our ideas too.

Technology in the world; small plants have too many walls to get in. I would challenge that assertion as well, hon. member. Again I go back to this. If you have a customer, if you have a need that you're going to fill that that customer is willing to spend money on, you will build a plant, you will produce that product, and you will probably be prosperous. If you have an idea for a plant and you have no idea who might want the product from that plant, you're going to have problems.

I would suggest to you that many businesses fail in the industry. The number used to be that 80 per cent of business start-ups failed within the first five years. Many times that's because they had a great idea, but they didn't have the rest of the package. All of these proposals have to have the whole package or, quite frankly, I'm not really keen on risking taxpayer dollars. We do that through AFSC. If AFSC approves it through their credit, due diligence, they're the entity that may or may not do it. I'm just not keen to do it on the basis of "I've got a great idea" or "I've got a new technology that nobody's ever seen before; I have no idea if they'll buy it." I'm just not keen to do it on that basis.

I think I've covered most of the points from the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. I'm going to go back now to some of the other points.

Rural development. In the cross-ministry initiatives that we were doing, there was some talk with regard to, actually, the high school in Sangudo. My wife went to the high school in Sangudo and is from that area, so I have some knowledge of that area.

An Hon. Member: I hear that they have a good MLA.

Mr. Horner: I understand that they have an excellent MLA, yes.

I guess that the point I was going to go with, hon. members, was that the rural development strategy is working on cross-ministry initiatives, and the cross-ministry initiatives tie in all aspects of rural life. They tie in health care. They tie in education. They tie in infrastructure. They tie in all of these things. The Rural Development Strategy Task Force has only recently been organized. I would encourage the hon. member to look at the report that was produced and the recommendations that came from it.

The task force's primary role at this point in time is to advise us as to how we might implement those strategies and those concepts that are in the report. It's made up of Albertans. The AAMD and C and the AMA have representation on the task force. I think they're very, very excited about the direction that they're taking. They're very excited about some of the recommendations that they believe they can have some input on and some impact, most notably the impact, Mr. Chairman.

We were also talking about the Peace Country Tender Beef Co-op and the idea: why are we not helping them? We've never really been asked to help them. To the degree that I've never said no to meeting with them, I would welcome them to come and talk to me about it. To my knowledge they've not made any approach to Ag Financial Services Corporation, which is the vehicle we would use to help them financially if their business plan was one that warranted that kind of support. I don't quite understand what the issue might be there, so I would encourage them to give me a call if they believe that they have a business plan which would be worth AFSC having a look at.

The other thing that was brought up was the Canadian Wheat Board and perhaps some of the issues surrounding our marketing choice campaign. I wanted to first of all start by saying that it is not the intent of this government nor this minister to dismantle the Canadian Wheat Board. Far from it. It is the intent of this government and this minister to let them live up to what they're telling us they are, which is a fine organization that's willing and able to do wonderful things for producers. I believe that in a competitive marketplace they would do just that. I think we should give them the chance to try.

By doing that, we may find that they would be a much better corporate entity than they are a government-funded entity. I think they would probably find that they may be able to be a little more accountable to producers. We believe that accountability is important in this province. I think they might find that the changes that they're making are exactly the types of changes and the path that we want them to head. There are just a few more components that they have to do to make it worth while. Then it will be worth while.

In the way they're doing it right now, hon. member, they're pushing independent grain companies out of business. They're becoming a grain company. They're becoming a grain company outside their mandate to become a grain company. In fact, Mr. Chairman, I have information that they may even actually end up owning assets in a roundabout way, which would be totally outside of their mandate. You know, again, I believe that they should own assets, but I don't believe that they should have a monopoly.

I believe that the Canadian Wheat Board, if they were to look to Australia as an example – the Australian Wheat Board is still a single-desk export seller, but domestically they have deregulated their industry. They have added value to their value-added industry. They have provided choice. They have provided additional premiums to their producers. They've created an efficiency in their logistics. They have created a . . . [Mr. Horner's speaking time expired] That's it?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to rise to the issues around this review and thank the hon. minister for some of the important comments he's made and his elucidation on some of the issues. I want to be brief and focus particularly on some of the environmental issues associated with the agriculture industry and talk just briefly about some of the challenges I see that have been expressed to some extent already on this side.

Clearly, what I'm hearing from the public and from some constituents has to do with issues around water and sustainability and its management, the issues of encroaching oil and gas activities on agricultural producers and on land and productivity, confined feeding operations and how that affects local municipalities, and their interest in having more influence and control and participation in integrated planning for their communities around confined feeding operations particularly.

I'd be interested in his comments on organic farming and where that's heading in terms of sustainable agricultural management, the renewed and perhaps significant increase in the urban population's interest and access to organic farming produce as a tremendous opportunity.

More specifically, I wanted to ask some questions about game ranching and what that's done in the province, how it's fared in the province, where it's marketed, how sustainable it is, some of the key questions that aren't clear in the budget. It's not clear how much that particular sector spends, it's not clear how much that particular sector earns and raises and, particularly, how much subsidization the agriculture ministry has been giving over the last 20 years to an industry that from the outside doesn't look sustainable.

Indeed, with some of the discussions we've heard about BSE and chronic wasting disease, how is that going to impact in the long term this particular industry? Without fences around our province, without testing for live animals, how can we ensure that we know that the animal population is going to be sustainably healthy and not be part of the propagation of disease, which is so concerning to not only confined feeding operations in the cattle and hog industries but increasingly in the wild animal and game ranching?

Another related issue is to what extent public lands will be used for game ranching, and that's a concern to wildlife people, to fish and game, and tourism issues, how that's going to impact the public lands issue.

So I don't need to take any more time with the questions. I would welcome any and all comments the minister can make around those key issues. Thank you.

Mr. Horner: Well, that was quick. So I guess I can go back to some of the other comments that I was going to make. How much time do I have, Mr. Chairman?

The Chair: Five minutes.

Mr. Horner: Okay. I should have enough time to do both because I did want to talk on a couple of other things on the Canadian Wheat Board.

One of the things that is very, very important to me is that we want to be shippers of value-added products, not shippers of commodities. We have competitors around the world like Brazil, like China, like eastern Europe who are going to be in a position very, very soon to be a much lower-cost producer in terms of a base commodity than we can do here. They're going to be able to do it in a much larger volume than we can do it here, and the quality will be there in a certain period of time. It's important for us to move down that value chain to be able to be competitive in the world marketplace and not be dependent upon a price-taker type of attitude in terms of commodities.

The Canadian Wheat Board was established to do one thing. It was established to ship large volumes of commodity out of this country as fast and at the best possible price that they can do. I think it's time that we moved down the road and cut that umbilical cord that's dragging us down, quite frankly, in terms of the expansion of our value-added and the expansion of the marketing opportunities that it would provide. I think it's important for us to look at our cereals industry in the same way that we would look at our beef industry, in the same way we would look at any other industry. The more buyers you have in the marketplace, the more sellers, the more market access you're going to have, the better off your industry as a whole is going to be.

There was a comparison made about elections in the Canadian Wheat Board and this Legislature. Hon. members, everyone in this Legislature was elected. Not every board member of the Canadian Wheat Board was elected. A third of them were appointed, and I don't think that's very democratic either. Nor is the weighted voting even on the radar screen with them.

I think we need to satisfy the issues that we have with the Canadian Wheat Board, and I think there's a win-win for both sides, and that win-win is to move down the road to something akin to the Australian model, and I believe that we'll be working on that in the weeks and months ahead.

With regard to environmental stewardship of the land, obviously, the hon. member is very, very correct: agriculture plays a key role in environmental stewardship of the land. We are intimately involved with it. Our livelihood depends on it. The message that is out there under the ag policy framework, under all of the other agreements that we have, is that it just makes good business sense to be good stewards of the land because it relates to the other issue that was raised by the hon. member: urban population. We want to be seen as good stewards of the land to the urban population that is all around us and is, indeed, the customer that we're trying to sell to. It certainly makes no sense to have environmental issues come up that make agriculture get a black eye.

This department is working very hard through our technical services division to establish environmental farm plans in the province and establish a protocol, if you will, of how those environmental farm plans are put in place. We have made a very good start in that process. They've done hundreds of environmental farm plans for producers already and are working on doing many, many more.

I would like to see a way that we can create some revenue growth in that issue for on-farm as well, perhaps tie it to this wonderful Kyoto accord, where we'll be able to buy credits of air somewhere. It's terribly disappointing to me to have a Canadian or Alberta company spending money in Chile in a hog operation to buy a credit for something they absolutely don't know whether it's even a valid credit or not. I think it's important that we be able to develop those credits here and that the dollars stay here, and that pays the cost, hon. member, for what is already a stretched industry, in terms of input costs, to do the right things in terms of environmental stewardship and food safety. The two things go hand in hand.

Agriculture is, I believe, the largest user of surface water in the province, so it's certainly valuable to us, and it's certainly something that we know we have to conserve. We've taken a very large role in the Water for Life strategy, and we'll continue to do so and to be a part of that, to monitor the progress of how that's going to work with environment, have our technical services division working with environment. We need to ensure, as I said, that we're viewed as good stewards of the land so that we can make sure that the urban population is pleasantly surprised about having a value-added agricultural industry move next door to it. That would be the hope, hon. member.

We need to do things like expanding the use of biodigesters. I believe that there is a real opportunity in agriculture in the future to not only add value to on-farm or create a revenue for on-farm but that the manure, the sewage, or the waste material that is created on-farm can be used in, say, a regional biodigester which would create methane and power to put into the grid. Because of deregulation we can do that, and it can be economical in this province. Not so in many other provinces. [interjection] That was just for you, hon. member.

We can create methane gas, which is obviously something that can be used on-farm to fuel many things. In Europe for many years they've been using methane gas converted not only to heat their homes but perhaps to even use as a fuel source for vehicles or whatever. Is that possible in Alberta? I don't know, but our department is looking at it.

We're looking at using waste material to reduce the input costs on the value-added side. We're looking at things that would create more value-added because we would be lowering their input costs, whether that's in the sugar beet industry or the potato industry, to have the value-added proponent, taking that produce with the waste material being another product that the producers can produce for that value-added sector.

The biodigester in the feedlot at Highland Feeders is a good example of what can be done, given the number of animals in that feedlot, the fact that all of that material is going to be turned into water and fertilizer and power.

Wouldn't it be wonderful if we had a number of those regional-type facilities around the province that perhaps followed the model of the federated gas co-ops or the rural electrical associations, and we created a regional biodigester, environmentally friendly power generators, gas generators. I think there are a lot of things we can do in agriculture to protect the environment, to make us environmentally friendly, and to actually add to the bottom line of the average producer in the province.

Urban population sprawl is an area of concern, and it's certainly a concern when you talk about confined feeding operations. It's an area of concern, quite frankly, when you talk about acreages. The idea that folks that are moving to the country may not be prepared for what they see, hear, or smell, given the fact that they're moving closer to agriculture. But there are some realities to living in the country. There are some realities to what you might see, smell, or hear living in the country, and I think we need to educate our urban population about what goes on on the farm.

That's one of the things that we are going to be doing a lot more in the department: trying to get that education component going between urban Alberta and rural Alberta to talk about what happens. It's something that the rural task force is involved in. It's something that our department is going to be involved in. It's something that 4-H is involved in on a fairly regular basis. I think it's important that urban and rural Alberta live in harmony.

The Chair: I hate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 p.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday afternoons, I must now put the following question after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006.

Title: Tuesday, May 3, 2005

8:00 p.m.

Date: 05/05/03

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: Good evening, everyone. I'll call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2005-06

Justice and Attorney General

The Chair: I'd call on the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Needless to say, I'm very pleased to present the budget estimates for Alberta Justice tonight. [some applause] Wow. I didn't hear anything from over there.

An Hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Stevens: Oh, it will come later.

Before I begin, I would like to introduce some of the very good people from Alberta Justice who are here with us this evening. Basically, it's the executive management committee and senior officials: Terry Matchett, deputy minister – maybe you can just wave, Terry – Peggy Hartman, assistant deputy minister for the legal services division; Ken Tjosvold, ADM for criminal justice; Barb Hookenson, ADM for court services; Dan Mercer, ADM for the strategic services division; Shawkat Sabur, senior financial officer and executive director of financial services; Kevin Quail, acting director of the maintenance enforcement program; Sharon Lepetich, senior adviser to the deputy minister; Mark Cooper, who used to be gainfully employed in the media but who is now my director of communications; and, of course, Jeremy Chorney, my executive assistant.

An Hon. Member: Where's your mom, Ron?

Mr. Stevens: She's watching on television.

The business plan guides the overall direction and sets goals for the ministry on how to meet our vision and mission. Our vision is "a fair and safe society supported by a trusted justice system," and our mission is to protect the rights of all individuals in Alberta and advance the interests of society by fostering: safe communities; access to justice; respect for the law; understanding of and confidence in the justice system, and the legal foundation for social cohesion and economic prosperity.

The budget supports the direction laid out in the business plan by funding initiatives that meet our goals. Our five goals are as follows. Goal 1 is to "promote safe communities in Alberta." Goal 2 is to "promote a fair and accessible civil and criminal justice system." Goal 3 is to "provide access to justice services for Albertans in need." Goal 4 is to "improve knowledge of, and confidence in, the justice system." Goal 5 is to "assist government ministries to achieve their objectives through provision of effective legal and related strategic services." Our objective is to make using the justice system easier, more understandable, and more user friendly for Albertans when they need it. We also must ensure that the system is working effectively.

I will begin this evening by providing you with some highlights of initiatives we are undertaking this year with the new funding we have been allocated in Budget 2005. You will see how these link to the goals in our business plan. I would then be pleased to address any questions you may have.

I'll begin with initiatives that come under our court services division. The overall purpose of court services is to promote fair and equitable access to the justice system for all Albertans, which, of course, aligns with goal 2 in the business plan. This year's budget is more than $135 million, $8.2 million of which is new funding. One of the key initiatives this budget supports is new funding for the family justice services. More than $1.8 million has been allocated in the '05-06 year to expand services to assist families going through breakup.

With the proclamation of the Family Law Act coming this October, we're consolidating all aspects of provincial family law under one act. The Family Law Act is part of a larger strategy to encourage people to resolve family law problems in a more constructive way. The new funding for family justice services will support that strategy by providing more dollars for such things as counselling and information to help people understand court processes, mediation to help with parenting issues, education sessions about parenting after separation, and helping people get information and resolve child and spousal support disputes. These services help families understand and resolve issues and disputes related to co-parenting and child and spousal support. The breakup of families is obviously a very difficult time for everyone involved. By improving access to these services, handling the necessary legal processes will be easier, faster, and less confusing.

The new funding means that we can enhance our out-of-court dispute resolution services, including family mediation. Mediation helps separated parents come to an agreement regarding the parenting of their children in a less confrontational manner than appearing in court. We've had a great deal of success using these approaches and projects throughout Alberta. The new funding will also allow us to strengthen the existing services and expand them to other communities in the province. We can expect to hire more family court counsellors in areas of the province that haven't had them before, such as central and northern Alberta. We will also be able to hire additional staff to prepare court orders so people in provincial court receive their orders on the same day, and that makes the justice system better.

Helping presufficiency in the court system, we will spend $2.7 million this year to facilitate the overall modernization of court operations. A portion of the new funding will go towards expanding the court computer network. This means that the remaining 19 unserved circuit court locations in smaller centres like Boyle, Hanna, Stettler, and others will have access to electronic court information systems, the Internet, and e-mail. Access will be provided via Alberta's information highway, the SuperNet.

The new funding will also provide enhanced service to the judiciary and other court users. Digital audio recordings of the court proceedings taking place in these locations will be immediately available to judges anywhere in the province, and court services employees will be able to enter results of the court session into automated systems right at the circuit points. Judges will also be able to access the electronic judicial research resources from anywhere in the province.

As well, traffic courts will be equipped with computerized cash registers that provide instant updates to the traffic ticketing system and more computers and faster printers. This will improve efficiency, allowing for better and quicker customer service. Information technology is constantly evolving, and we need to keep up with new technologies the best we can. That's not to say that we need the newest systems every year, but it does mean that we need to stay current.

We are working with our counterparts in Infrastructure and Transportation and the Solicitor General's department on the comprehensive court security plan. Alberta Justice's part of that plan is supporting video conferencing for routine court appearances. The system will be used for first appearances, bail hearings, entering of pleas, and some matters pertaining to preliminary inquiries. In addition, the system will be used to facilitate appearances by designated counsel and the prosecutors and to receive evidence of witnesses. It will be particularly helpful to receive evidence from those who are considered to be vulnerable witnesses.

Pilot projects of this state-of-the-art technology were launched in January 2004 in several court locations throughout the province, such as provincial courts in Camrose, Cold Lake, and St. Paul. It uses real-time audio and video transmission and eliminates the need for prisoners to be transferred to court to deal with routine procedures. Building on the success of these pilot projects, new funding of almost $660,000 in 2005-2006 will allow the leasing of more equipment. This will allow video conferencing to be expanded to other areas in the province.

There have been a number of incidents that could have been prevented had video conferencing technology been in place. For example, last fall in a St. Albert court a prisoner jumped over the rail of the prisoner's box in an attempt to escape after being denied bail, and more recently you may have heard about the inmate who threw his shoes at the judge in Calgary provincial court as the judge was making an order for his detention. The expanded use of video conferencing will increase security in the courtrooms because fewer prisoners will have to appear in person for routine court matters, and that means that we can prevent incidents like this. As well, there's no driving of prisoners back and forth, so there's no risk of them threatening people inside or outside the courtroom, and that helps keep Albertans safe.

In 2005-2006 more than $750,000 will be spent to strategically expand civil mediation programs to more communities in the province and to increase the compensation we pay to court interpreters and witnesses. Increased mediation services mean more civil disputes can potentially be resolved without going to court, and that means judicial and legal resources can be used where they are most needed. Mediation works. Whether it's for family law or civil matters, it gives people with disputes a way to work out a solution for themselves. These programs have been successful, and I'm very pleased that we are able to expand their use.

Alberta Justice has a constitutional obligation to provide interpretation services for people with disabilities and all individuals who require these services. By increasing compensation for interpreters, we are ensuring that qualified staff are employed so that language barriers do not impair the ability of court participants and the court to understand what is happening, the relevant testimony given, and the evidence presented. Witnesses also play a crucial role by appearing in court to give their important knowledge about a case. By appearing as witnesses, they assist in promoting safe communities in Alberta. Increasing the travel reimbursement rate or mileage we pay to witnesses will encourage more participation in court proceedings. Justice can't be served if people can't understand what's going on or if witnesses are reluctant to come to court to testify.

Now we move on to the criminal justice area of the ministry. The overall purpose of criminal justice is to promote safe communities in Alberta, which aligns with goal 1 of our business plan. This year's budget is $43 million, $2.5 million of which is new funding.

Sadly, Alberta continues to have an unacceptably high rate of family violence. We need to provide victims and witnesses with services as soon as possible and protect them from further abuse. We also need to impose sentences on perpetrators that will reduce the likelihood of their reoffending. So we are allocating almost $900,000 in new funding to support specialized Crown prosecutors and staff, domestic violence courts and court processes, and to provide training for dealing with family violence situations.

The domestic violence courts with specialized Crown prosecutors are an integral part of the provincial family violence treatment program framework. The framework is a cross-government initiative that's designed to provide co-ordinated and integrated assessment, treatment, rehabilitation, and follow-up services to victims and perpetrators of family violence. Linking government with community services improves our efforts to deal with domestic violence cases more quickly and effectively. Because Albertans who are dealing with family violence situations need help and they need it as soon as possible, we can now do a better job providing it. I'm optimistic that this new funding will contribute to breaking the cycle of family violence and will protect the safety and security of children and families in our communities.

Under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms Crown prosecutors must provide the accused with a copy of all relevant evidence gathered by police during the investigation of the crime. Before providing this evidence, the Crown prosecutor must remove all of the personal identifying information of civilian witnesses. This process is known as disclosure, and it is a major issue and challenge for those in the criminal justice system. In Alberta police transfer almost all case files to Crown prosecutors in the form of a hard-copy court brief. Obviously, this is extremely time consuming, and as the number of cases in the system continues to rise, it's only going to get worse.

New funding of $471,000 this year will allow the development of a secure computer system to support electronic distribution of court briefs rather than transferring them by hard copy. The system will allow the efficient flow of information between police agencies, the prosecution service, the accused, and defence counsel. It will facilitate and support prosecution of criminal cases, thereby promoting community safety, and in doing these things, it will contribute to the public's confidence in the justice system.

Overall, the budget for civil law is almost $24 million for 2005-2006. The purpose of this branch of the ministry is to provide effective legal and related services to government and other ministries, which aligns with goal 5 of the business plan. New funding, commencing in 2005-2006, will allow development of a computer system to manage a database of legal opinions. We are spending $417,000 this year to get things started. In their role of providing legal and related services across ministries, civil law legal teams are located at numerous sites. The new system will link those various sites electronically. It will significantly reduce the time spent on legal research, allow for more consistent information, and will increase the amount of legal information available to all civil law lawyers.

The best part about this initiative is that by increasing efficiency, we will save taxpayer dollars. The savings will be fully realized in the 2006-2007 year and are estimated at $300,000. This will even become greater in the years to come. The savings come from the fact that we won't have to hire as many additional staff in the longer term to cope with the increased demands in the area of civil law. It's a lot more efficient for a computer to search through legal opinions.

The medical examiner's office investigates all sudden, unexplained, natural, and unnatural deaths in Alberta to determine the identity of the deceased and the cause of death. Each year in Alberta there are more than 3,000 cases of sudden, unexplained deaths. The office provides a key service for families of deceased, Crown prosecutors, lawyers, police, funeral directors, insurance companies, and other government agencies. It aligns with goal 3 of the business plan, providing access to justice services for those in need.

In the 2005-2006 budget for the medical examiner there is more than $6 million. This year new funding of $1.1 million has been allocated to this office. The additional funding is to achieve salary equity for medical professionals within the office with their colleagues in regional health authorities in other provinces and for operating costs. We provided money to increase compensation paid to rural medical examiners and to other agencies that support the medical examiner's office.

The medical professionals in this office provide the expertise we need in difficult investigations. The services they provide affect testimony and criminal investigations. They also operate the toxicology laboratory and provide the scientific investigation necessary to assist with the determination of causes of death and prevent these in the future. Obviously, our ability to maintain and improve the level of professional expertise necessary to perform the work at the medical examiner's office is absolutely fundamental to the delivery of these services in an effective fashion.

Mr. Chairman, that concludes my comments. The initiatives that I've laid out show how we are determined to meet our goals in improving access and increasing efficiency in the justice system. I also believe that they will be able to make the system easier for Albertans to understand. I'd be happy at this time to address any questions that the members may have.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I thank the hon. minister for his opening remarks. I wish to convey to the Department of Justice my best wishes, and I think they've done splendid work. I would also like to compliment the minister and his staff for the clarity and concreteness of the business plan of 2005-2008. From the vision statement and mission statement to the outlining of the goals and strategies, it is a well-written, clear, and concise document. There are lots of items that could be discussed tonight.

I was especially impressed by the list of significant opportunities and challenges on page 351. I think that's an important compilation of the tremendous challenges that we face with respect to the issues such as identity theft, aboriginal justice, organized crime, family violence, child sexual exploitation, illicit drugs, and so on. I appreciate the sentence in the business plan which says that "the Ministry is presented with the challenge of being held accountable for outcomes for which the ministry does not have sole responsibility" because on all of these tremendous challenges to our society, there needs to be collaboration and the involvement of all departments and levels of government and especially the involvement of all communities if we're ever going to reach the day when we can be assured that Alberta is a safe place and that we can diminish the amount of crime in Alberta.

This leads me to some basic questions about the overall approach to justice, which I want to raise at the outset before we get into looking at specific budgetary items. At the beginning of the description of the Justice Department's vision and mission we read statements such as "the Ministry will continue to invest in Alberta's communities to make them among the safest in North America by getting tougher on those who commit violent offences." I guess the word "tougher" just grabbed my attention. Of course, the Criminal Code falls within the federal jurisdiction, so there is this other comment that the department will "continue to pressure the federal government to take tough positions against violent crimes and those who commit them."

Well, this is one school of thought in response to crime: get tough with criminals. This approach usually leads inevitably to tougher sentencing, for example more mandatory sentences, building more prisons, hiring more judges and prosecutors, strengthening the war on drugs, and so on. But, of course, there is another school of thought, another approach which could be named a more progressive and – dare I use the word? – liberal approach, which focuses on alternatives to the court system for dealing with certain kinds of offences, which focuses on decriminalizing of certain offences such as marijuana, which attempts to get at the root causes of crime and deal with those causes.

Of course, both approaches assume that changes to the criminal justice system will reduce violent crimes. Both approaches would probably be an overestimation of that, in my view, because I think that assumption has to be qualified. It's not just changes to the criminal justice system; it's widespread change to our whole society. It's social and community development, education at all levels, and efforts to deal with poverty and racism. If we don't put our resources into dealing with the root causes and with social community development, we can't expect that crime will be diminished, and we won't achieve the kind of society of safety that we're looking for. Without antipoverty programs, Head Start programs, and safer community grassroots initiatives, the goal of reducing violent crime will not take place.

These matters, of course, take us beyond the Justice department, and maybe that's my opening sermon on justice, so I should get on to some of the specifics. Let me comment on the goal 4 because I think what I've just said is relevant to goal 4, which is to "improve knowledge of, and confidence in, the justice system." Now, I think the focus of this goal and all of its strategies is to try to inform the public about the processes and the strategies of the Department of Justice, so it's kind of a public relations strategy for the Department of Justice, which I think is fine. What I was trying to get at is that the public understanding of crime goes much deeper than just looking at the justice system.

I mean, how do we learn about crime? How do we achieve public understanding about crime and the way to diminish crime? Now, of course, the biggest challenge is dealing with the media because it's through the media that we learn about crime, and unfortunately the media focuses on violent crimes. Violent crimes are only 5 per cent of the reported crimes in Canada, so we get a skewed view of crimes by just focusing on the media. Over 50 per cent of Canadian newspaper articles are about violent crimes, so this kind of reporting encourages fear and the consequent law-and-order approaches to criminal justice. When the public feels powerless, then a tough approach is in their estimation better than nothing although I must point out that a 1987 survey by the Canadian Sentencing Commission asked people to name the one thing which would have the greatest impact on crime control, and the answer was: 47 per cent said reducing unemployment rates; 27 per cent said harsher sentences. This suggests that Canadians don't think that crime will be controlled by a get-tougher approach. I think that's very important.

I wonder: do the strategies outlined under goal 4 go far enough in dealing with the media, dealing with the whole issue of public education to enable the public to understand crime and the root problems, the root issues of crime and not just the intricacies of the justice system? Public knowledge of the justice system is fine as far as it goes, but it's not enough. What we need is a broad-based discussion and debate in our society on the nature of crime and the ways to prevent crime.

I'll always remember the short time that I was a part of the John Howard Society when I was living in St. Paul. Of course, the John Howard Society always focused on the prisoners who came out of correctional institutions and helping them adjust in the community. They decided many years ago to change their focus to look at prevention and to put a lot of resources into public awareness of crime so that crime could be prevented. I think that's important.

Well, let me go on and just ask some questions about this budget, which is a budget that focuses on all kinds of different issues. In terms of a few questions here in the business plan, on page 355 strategy 1.5 states that the ministry will "work with partners to develop a provincial response/policy," in particular in regard to the integrated response to organized crime. That's IROC. I just wondered about the support for IROC and whether the ministry is continuing to look at trying to bolster the effectiveness of the IROC team.

Especially, I'm concerned about the issue of identity theft. I think the public is becoming much, much more concerned about identity theft than ever before. We hear all kinds of stories of how our identities get stolen through credit card robbery but also the whole issue of mortgages and the fraud in the mortgage, people discovering that there's a for-sale sign on their front lawn. There are just some terrible stories about identity theft across Canada. I was wondering if the minister could identify how we're going to deal with that issue and what resources will go into dealing with that.

Of course, the issue of children and the sexual exploitation of children through the Internet is of tremendous concern to the public. On page 355 1.6 talks about that, and again I don't see any reference to the ICE team, the provincial internet child exploitation team. I was wondering about the support of the ministry for that. Also, in the reference to putting pressure on the federal government to toughen sentences – here I might be contradicting my own statement – is the provincial Justice department influencing the federal Justice department to change the Criminal Code to toughen sentences in respect to child exploitation?

Now, on page 356 there are a couple of references to the Ministry of Justice's co-operation with the Alberta Law Reform Institute, 2.4 and 2.11. I was just curious about that because it's my understanding that in 1999 there was a report from the Alberta Law Reform Institute on powers and procedures for administrative tribunals outlining some points that could be adopted. The government has not seen fit to put that into practice. That relates to Bill 23. I don't want to get back into the discussion of Bill 23, but the whole issue of access to justice concerns me.

When I was dealing with Bill 23, my understanding was that it would speed up the process of justice, but some legal opinions that I've received indicate that it may in some cases actually restrict access to justice, depending on the situation and what tribunals were being dealt with. So the question, I guess, has to do with putting into practice some of the reforms suggested by the Alberta Law Reform Institute and really helping the whole process of access to justice to be the reality in Alberta.

I am really concerned. The business document outlines the challenges, the challenge about aboriginal justice. I didn't hear any reference to putting funds into dealing with aboriginal justice. It still continues to be the case that almost 40 per cent of inmates in our correctional institutions in Alberta are from our First Nation communities, and that is a tragedy. Unless we deal with that, we're not going to make much progress in having justice in Alberta.

I know that that issue is huge, and we have to deal with community initiatives and so on, but I was just wondering if the ministry has any intention of putting resources in the future into dealing with aboriginal justice, certainly the whole area of alternative mediation approaches and the appointing of special courts to deal with aboriginal justice. My neighbour in Edmonton for some time was the widow of Justice Morrow, who established quite a lot of reputation years ago when he travelled by plane into the north. I think he was one of the first to initiate alternative justice approaches with our First Nation people, and I think that's very important.

Well, I have a lot of financial questions. The Justice department's program expense looks like it's about a 7 per cent increase, and the Minister of Justice has outlined where the new money is going. In some of those areas it's quite encouraging to see the modernization of courts and the money going into the support to family services and the progress on the Family Law Act. I guess that my question about that is: does this mean that we have moved closer to the ideal of a unified, one-stop centre for families so that they don't have to go to federal court to deal with divorce issues, they don't have to go to provincial court to deal with other issues, but they can deal with a whole variety of issues at one centre? Is that the way the money is going to be used, to create that? If that's the direction, then that's something that we would applaud.

Of course, all of the references to the modernization in terms of the use of computers are quite laudable.

Some other questions in terms of finances. Under Ministry Support Services there's a reference at 1.0.4 to strategic services, a $1.5 million increase. I believe it is in strategic services, but I wasn't sure what that was really referring to. So I wonder if the minister could explain what the breakdown is there.

Now, in honour of my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre I need to raise an issue about maintenance enforcement because I think she raises it every year. She's not here, and I would like to raise it on her behalf. A lot of the questions she has continually asked every year I think are still relevant. How many staff work on maintenance enforcement? What is the total amount that Alberta is collecting in maintenance enforcement? What is the percentage collected in relation to the total ordered in maintenance enforcement?

I'm also curious about interprovincial jurisdiction. I understand that laws have been changed in the recent past to enable the courts to go after spouses who leave and go to other provinces, but I'm receiving complaints from people within my constituency that they have a great deal of difficulty getting answers from other courts in other provinces. I just wonder about that.

Also, under Court Services, reference 2.1.1, program support services, there's been an increase in funding of $5.9 million from last year. I was wondering what that increase in funding is for. Perhaps you did explain that in terms of court services. I'm not sure.

In terms of the number of employees there are 78 new full-time employees listed in the business plan. Are they Crown prosecutors? Are they judges? What is the issue? Why is it necessary to have so many new employees?

Well, those are some of the questions I have, and I would like to sit down now and hear some response.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Well, thanks very much. Let me begin by thanking the hon. member for his compliments of the people in Alberta Justice who do very good work. Certainly, I agree with his compliments, and I do thank him for recognizing it and stating his appreciation so clearly.

There were a lot of comments and questions that the hon. member had, and I'll see if I can address a number of them at this time. Of course, should I fail to address them, we'll provide a response in writing on a timely basis.

There was a question with respect to the increase in the number of FTEs within the department. The FTEs are budgeted to increase by 78, as indicated by the hon. member. The breakdown for that is as follows: there will be seven in renewal of prosecution and legal services; eight, ticketing processing; two, aboriginal consultation; 18, Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act; 11 for the family justice services area; nine in Calgary Provincial Court, Criminal Division; seven in the Public Trustee alternative funding area; six, specialized family violence; four, criminal services IT sustainability; two in the mediation program; two in information document management; and two in the electronic distribution of court briefs.

Just for the benefit of the member, the 2,307 budgeted FTEs by program are 81.5 in ministry support services, 1,243 in court services, 778 in legal services, 143 in the Public Trustee's office, 45.5 in the medical examiner's, and 16 in motor vehicle accident claims.

There were some general comments at the beginning of your comments, hon. member, that I would like to just spend a moment talking about. There's absolutely no doubt that there are many challenges, as you have noted, within the Justice ministry. You're quite right that it's necessary to collaborate with other ministries and with groups within the public at large who have some aspect within their purpose for being that overlaps with the Justice ministry goals.

For example, it is very usual for us to collaborate with the Solicitor General, because from my perspective the Solicitor General's department really is the other side of the justice or the law and order coin. We are inextricably connected to the people who enforce and do the investigation. We have a lot to do with Children's Services as a result of domestic violence issues. We have quite a bit to do with Health and Wellness as a result of matters such as diversion programs and mental health, in the context of Aboriginal Affairs with respect to aboriginal affair's initiatives, Education with respect to the education programs and curriculum that we work on in ensuring that people in our schools have access to current and relevant information with respect to our justice system. Obviously, we are taking advantage of the good work of the Minister of RAGE in his efforts of ensuring that the SuperNet will be once again back on schedule so that sometime this fall we will be able to plug in and do some of the things that I referred to in my opening comments.

As it relates to the community at large, I can just give you an example of a meeting that I had last week. There's a committee that we have called the Justice advisory committee, which arose out of the justice summit back in the latter part of the '90s. That particular committee was originally struck to ensure that the recommendations that came out of the justice summit at that time were ultimately implemented. That work has largely been done, so now we're dealing with the second aspect of the mandate for that group, and that is to provide advice and direction to the Justice ministry in the work that they are doing.

The meeting that we had last week included members of police forces. For example, there were members from the Edmonton police force and the RCMP K Division. We had, obviously, members from the Justice ministry at that meeting. We had a representative from the John Howard Society, we had different representatives from different locations dealing with domestic violence, we had members from the aboriginal community, both First Nation and Métis, and we had representatives from our courts, the superior courts and also the provincial court. That gives you some flavour of the broad representation.

The purpose of this particular meeting was to once again revisit the mandate of the committee and say: "Is it still relevant? Should we be changing the mandate? How can we do this job better?" I can tell you that we had a very good discussion at that time, hon. member, and that it was agreed by the people in that room that this committee continues to be relevant and that it is important to Alberta Justice to hear from them. What's necessary is that we do a combination of allowing for those who are part of this large diverse group to bring forward ideas and feel free to do that, and that we also use it as an education opportunity for Alberta Justice to talk about some of our initiatives.

That is the type of reaching out that we do in Alberta Justice, not only to other ministries but to the community at large. We recognize that there are people out there on the front lines who are working in the justice system, whether it's mediation or from the John Howard Society or whatever, and they see things that we don't necessarily see that they can provide input on into how to make this justice system of ours more accessible, more user-friendly, more understandable, whatever the case may be. So as a general proposition we are definitely in favour of ensuring that the broader community have an opportunity to participate, and we will be working with that group, going forward, developing agendas which will be meaningful for everybody at that table. I hope to be able, as time goes on, to share with you some of the initiatives that come out of that.

There was some discussion with respect to this government wanting to get tougher with respect to crime. In that particular area part of what we talk about, without a doubt, is getting tougher. We seriously believe and have for some time that it's necessary for offenders of serious crime to do serious time, and this particular issue in large measure centres around conditional sentencing. My predecessor at Alberta Justice, now the hon. Minister of Advanced Education, going back some four years did a paper with respect to the need to change conditional sentencing because it is being used in ways that were in our view never contemplated by the federal government. The Criminal Code wording was such that it was ultimately interpreted by our courts in a way that was never intended.

Essentially, what we have been saying is that in our view there should be a situation where conditional sentencing is appropriate, and that is for less serious crimes. Absolutely, not everybody who commits a crime should be going to jail. There are lots of examples of where conditional sentencing is quite appropriate. But the ones that gain the headline, the ones that ultimately cause the grief for people who are dealing within the system are ones where there is serious violence or sexual assault and similar offences, including sexual assault on vulnerable victims such as children, impaired driving, dangerous driving and criminal negligence involving death or serious bodily harm, and theft committed in the context of breach of trust. Those are situations where we believe the Criminal Code ought to be amended in some fashion so that there is going to be jail time rather than house arrest, if you will.

Another area where this is particularly prevalent these days – and I think there was another example of it in the paper just yesterday or today – is trafficking where there was house arrest. People who have grow ops, people who have these meth labs ought to be going to jail, and part of the problem with respect to that has everything to do with the conditional sentencing provisions.

So my predecessor in conjunction with, I believe, principally the justice ministers of Manitoba and Nova Scotia put together a proposal where there are four options outlined, and I can tell you that at the January meeting of justice ministers and attorneys general, the FPT meeting in Ottawa, that matter was once again brought up by us, and everyone around that table was in agreement that something had to be done. There was no disagreement with respect to the need to change the wording in the Criminal Code to toughen up, if you will, the conditional sentencing provisions. That matter has gone to the deputy ministers for further review. They will be coming back to the ministers, and we will be talking about it again.

The paper that we put forward is one that has four options, and the issue going forward is: which of the four options can we agree on? There's one that we prefer. There are obviously ones that other provinces prefer. From my perspective any of those four options is better than where we are today. So, hon. member, I can tell you that this is an area where all of the justice ministers, all of the attorneys general in Canada at this point in time are in full agreement that something must be done in that area.

Now, having talked about toughening up matters, I also think it's important that you understand that we recognize that you have to go to the root cause of these issues in order to address some of these crimes. So, for example, we have domestic violence court. Domestic violence court is another one of those examples where we work with other ministries. We work particularly with Children's Services and Health and Wellness in developing a system where the perpetrator and the families have the opportunity to receive the support and treatment and assistance that they need. There's an example of this court here in Edmonton, and there's an example of this court in Calgary and also in Lethbridge, so that's where they are at this point in time.

In Calgary the initiative is now over four years old. It's been around for four years. We've had fairly good results. In fact, the results have been the subject of a study, which is unusual in this area, that people can find the funds to study it, but that is the case. The results are awesome. The recidivism rate has dropped from 34 to 12 per cent, and when the full support of the treatment program is provided to the perpetrators, it drops to less than 6 per cent, some very, very powerful statistics. That's why we are completely supportive of it. That is why we are putting more money into it, and that is why we would like to ultimately have that expanded beyond the three centres that we have at present.

Another example of this kind of idea. Although it's not yet a reality, there are a couple of proposals, I believe one from Calgary and one from Edmonton, that are the initiatives of people at the local level, principally the judges and, I think, people perhaps from the bars, to have drug courts where something similar would be provided in terms of support from the social services and from health. These particular applications were done in response to a call from the federal government for applications for drug courts, and there are three or four other locations, I believe all to the east of Alberta, that are also vying for that.

We will wait and see what happens, but if we are successful in having one or two, we will certainly work to ensure that those pilot projects get up and running with a view to trying to provide some assistance early on in the piece because part and parcel of the justice side of this is to deal with these problems quickly rather than to allow them to fester in the court system for weeks and perhaps months. If that happens often, you lose the opportunity that you might otherwise have had.

I certainly share your perspective regarding the media and the role of the media in communicating information regarding the justice system and in large part moulding the public's opinion. I would also agree that typically what you read with respect to justice matters are sensational stories or ones which grab the public's attention. But I can tell you that the media are also very responsible from time to time in this area.

For example, we have had very, very good coverage regarding the HomeFront program. We have a dedicated prosecutor, Val Campbell, who heads up the domestic violence program for Alberta here in Edmonton, and she's been getting very, very good press for the good work that she is doing in educating. I think at this point in time she has now educated over 2,000 police, court workers, social workers, people of that ilk, judges on domestic violence throughout the province. And we've been getting very, very good response to our dedicated prosecutor on child pornography and luring, Steve Bilodeau, who has had some wonderful success in prosecuting child pornography and luring cases, which of course are sensational and troublesome in a society, but the fact is that he has been receiving good press for the work that is being done by him and by Alberta Justice.

Ontario has approached this problem in a way that we are following. The Attorney General there this past January set up a joint committee involving the media, the solicitor general, justice, and the judiciary with a view to working on issues of justice and the media. I think the general theme is that both the media and the justice system have something to learn from the other about the level of understanding. If we can identify some of these problems and develop ways to gain a better understanding by the media of the justice system and vice versa, we might be better able to get our messages out. So we understand that particular point, and I can tell you that we're very conscious of it.

We work very hard at trying to get out good messages with respect to the justice system. For example, I just met with the mayor of Grande Prairie a couple of weeks ago, and during the course of this he said: "You know, we'd love to have some material that could go into our local press that relates to our community. Obviously, the local press would choose to run it or not. But if you can give us statistics on the justice system and what you're doing in our community, what initiatives you have, things of that nature, we'd very much appreciate it because we would like to hear more about that." So when communities like Grande Prairie come to us and say, "We would like an opportunity to hear more about the justice system," we get right on that. In fact, we're on it now, and we're trying to develop stories that would be of interest to the Grande Prairie vicinity that they can run in their media.

The Alberta Law Reform Institute. There was some discussion with respect to that. I just met with a committee of the Alberta Law Reform Institute a couple of weeks ago. The purpose of the meeting was to have a general discussion but was more specifically to talk about some very good work that they are doing on a rewrite of the Alberta Rules of Court, which haven't been revised in a meaningful way since the '60s. There have been band-aid fixes here and there but not a complete overhaul. We have an Alberta Rules of Court Committee, which is over here, and then you need a body that has the resources and the time and the dedication to actually do the fundamental work of the background philosophical material, and I'll talk more about that later.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and make some observations on the estimates before us tonight, the estimates for the Department of Justice and Attorney General. I want to thank the minister for giving his introductory remarks, which were precise, focused, intelligible to us the people who are lay to the justice system and to the legal profession.

I also want to applaud the work that the members of the department, who are perhaps sitting in the members' gallery, have done in assisting the minister to prepare the business plan, the budget, and perhaps the notes for him to bring forward to us, gave him good briefing on that. So thank you to you who are sitting back there watching us look at what this ministry has to offer by way of this budget and its programs.

Mr. Chairman, I'm looking at page 351, which talks about "significant opportunities and challenges," draws a broad picture of how the system works, the incidence of crime, the increase and decrease in percentages of particular kinds of crime. That information is useful to take stock of where we are and where we might want to go and why we are not getting to where we want to go.

I just want to draw to the attention of our colleagues in the House some crime statistics. The latest year for which they are available is 2003. "The national crime rate increased by six per cent. Alberta's crime rate for that same year increased 7.7 per cent, with a 9.5 per cent increase in property crime and a two per cent increase in violent crime." I think it's refreshing to see the department confronting some facts head-on. It is sobering that the national rate is increasing – it increased by 6 per cent – but the Alberta rates increased even faster. Such a sobering statistic under Justice and Public Safety Trends. That's the section that I'm looking at. Then it gives a breakdown in terms of the types of crimes that are there.

Then I go down on the same page to Aboriginal Justice, and the numbers there are always, of course, chilling in their tenacity. You know, year after year after year we find that in spite of the best efforts of all levels of government, the level of crime in our aboriginal communities refuses to decline, or shrink. The figure given here, again, is that that's the part of the Alberta population where the youngest age group is the largest in proportion. One-third of the aboriginal population is 14 years of age or younger. That in itself presents great opportunities but also challenges.

The department does recognize that the crime rate in the aboriginal community both in terms of the numbers of victims and offenders is a serious challenge, a serious matter. The overrepresentation by far of aboriginal persons in custody or in jail is really staggering. They form only about 7 per cent of Alberta's population while their numbers in provincial youth and adult custody are, as quoted here at least, one-third, 33 per cent. So it's four times to five times the proportion that the aboriginal population constitutes of the provincial population. It's a challenge that we cannot let fall by the wayside. We need to find ways of addressing it with the co-operation, of course, of the aboriginal communities and the leadership from those communities.

One other fact that I just want to note here, Mr. Chairman – and again I think the department has done a good job of addressing the issue head-on – is family violence and protection of children. What it says here again concerns me a great deal. "Addressing family violence is one of the priorities for the Government of Alberta." I've been around for eight years, and this is true. This is a commitment that's made every year, yet "one-quarter of all victims of violent crimes reported in Canada in 2002 were family violence related. Of those, nearly two-thirds (62 per cent) were spousal and 85 per cent of the victims were women." It's the last sentence here that really is worthy of note. "Alberta continues to have the highest rates of family violence in this country." There is, clearly, a chronic problem. It continues to have the highest rate.

That raises very serious questions in my mind. This is also the province where the official policy is to strengthen family, to strengthen the traditional family structures. In spite of that, in spite of the fact that officially the government commits itself to supporting family structures, it's also the case that that family structure produces the highest rate of family violence in the country. I think we need to seriously ask the question: why is this the case, and what are the limits of the role that the government can play and this ministry can play in battling down this particular statistic? On the other hand, we need to ask: what are the limits to the ability of the government departments on this, not only this department but other departments in the government, too, that deal with family support and family issues?

I think it's too easy to simply make the observation and then move on and not ask some tough questions about what can or cannot be done. I think it's about time that we paid some more serious attention to it. Again, as I said, these pages are very, very helpful in coming to grips with some of the problems that we face and asking the questions about how we can approach these problems and make a dent in reducing the incidence of some of these acts of violence and of crime.

Traffic safety is another I think key problem in Alberta. It's growing, and I'd like to ask the minister: what particular actions are built into the budget here, if any, to deal with that problem as well as the family violence issue?

If I may make one suggestion to the minister, one that the minister's staff, I'm sure, would be paying attention to. When I look at Justice and Public Safety Trends, the first paragraph there, the percentages given are not very helpful, those numbers. Alberta's population is growing. One could argue, of course, that the percentage increase in the crime rates is lower than the percentage increase in population. I wonder if the rates of crime could be presented in relation to population units, whether it's 10,000, 100,000, whatever, so that we could get a better handle on whether or not these percentage increases, in fact, are just due to a rapid increase in population or whether these are just, you know, last year's numbers.

Those numbers are a function, I guess, to some extent of the increase in population. To get a better handle on whether or not the incidence of crime is really increasing, if we reported these crime numbers related to per unit of population, that might help us keep better track of whether or not the crime is increasing in fact. I was looking at the numbers, and I'm saying: "What do I make of this? Should I really get terribly concerned about the increase in crime, or does it just reflect more numbers and, therefore, percentages going up because of the more numbers in the population?"

One last point on that is the changing legislation as part of the same challenges here. The Fatality Inquiries Act is mentioned as one initiative that the ministry has taken. That particular reference to the Fatality Inquiries Act led me to look at the strategic priorities section, which is on the next two pages, from page 353 onwards. I notice there that the second major priority is partnership and public knowledge. "Justice will continue to place a high priority on maintaining a constructive dialogue with our stakeholders and the public in order to ensure our services continue to meet the needs of Albertans in the most effective way possible," and on it goes.

One of the reservations that I had about the Fatality Inquiries Amendment Act, 2005, is that changes being proposed there, in fact, will make it more difficult for the public to continue to have the capacity to take a direct look at how the system works. The transparency and the ability of the media to be present during the fatality inquiries is a public oversight. Their presence, even if they cannot report and do not report and can't become, in fact, parties with some interest in the process, gives the public some confidence that the system remains open. The public has good reasons to have confidence in the system because it is open and is subject to public oversight. People do rely on the media for getting to know what's going on around them, including what's happening in the public justice system and how it works and fails to work sometimes. So there are some concerns that I have.

While the commitment under the strategic priorities with respect to keeping in touch with the public and making the system accessible both in terms of the public knowing how the system works and getting the results when they go to the system in a quick and expeditious manner is a good thing, there are some contradictions that I see between the actions taken and the commitments made here. The Fatality Inquiries Amendment Act, 2005, is one of those contradictions that I notice there.

Organized crime: again, I find here on the priorities. It says, "Globalization has facilitated the commission of organized crime." I thought organized crime, even prior to the era of globalization, was already global in some ways. That's why we called it organized crime. It wasn't that it organized and operated within national jurisdictions alone. No, it didn't. It moved across boundaries. So that's kind of a quote, unquote, global statement.

I'm not sure if I understand what's meant by this statement that says that globalization has facilitated the commission of organized crime. Technology may. Transactions across borders through, you know, electronic media and electronic technology may do it. Internationalization of financial operations and transactions will do it. But globalization as such, as I understand it, I don't know how it's directly connected to this.

Since it's an official document of the government, I think we need to make it clear enough, lucid enough so that we can understand exactly what's meant when these big terms are used in contextualizing the government's commitments or anchoring them in those kinds of terms and phrases. That said, I have a few questions.

I saw somewhere that as part of the priorities there's also an emphasis on making the legal system, the justice system more accessible to those in need. Legal aid is one of those mechanisms, I suppose, that allows people to be able to go to our courts even if they cannot themselves pay for very expensive legal costs.

When I look at the ministry's budget, that's one item where I think the money allocated for 2005-2006 is, in fact, somewhat less than it was for the year that's just gone by. It's reduced by about $900,000, reduced by 3 per cent. I would ask the minister to explain why that is the case if legal aid does in fact serve as an important means to facilitate access of certain members of the community to the justice system and the court system.

We have had over the past many years concerns from lawyers, members of the legal community who work as part of the legal aid network, the Legal Aid Society. They have had concerns about being paid much less than their services would fetch them in the legal marketplace. I wonder if this further reduction from last year to this year in the legal aid funds would in fact impact on payments to lawyers who provide this very necessary legal service to Alberta citizens who need these services.

Court services. I don't know exactly what it means. I think it probably includes judges and prosecutors and others. Again, the reduction in the court services budget for this year is to the tune of 11 per cent. It's cut back from close to $127 million in 2004-2005 to $113.2 million for the current fiscal year. I would like the minister to explain, perhaps, how this reduction is going to be managed and what negative impact, if any, it might have on the operations of the court services.

Ministry support services have gone up by 27 per cent on the other hand, from $14 million to close to $19 million. Again, there's obviously a redistribution of funds within the line items in addition to it being a fact that overall the budget has increased by some amount. Or has it? No, there's actually somewhat less in the ministry programs. It's somewhat less than last year.

So these are some concrete questions related to the budget. I have made some observations on general policy issues and priorities of the department. Maybe the minister would like to respond to some of these questions if he so chooses. Then I'll have another opportunity later on.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Thank you to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for his compliments to the members of the ministry and also for the many insightful comments and questions that you've asked. I will address some of those now, and you will have the balance addressed in writing at another time.

I thought I'd start, perhaps, with a couple of comments regarding legal aid. I've had an opportunity to meet with representatives of the Legal Aid Society, and their opening line to me, hon. member, was: things are excellent. That is not to mean that there aren't challenges in legal aid, but things are very good in Alberta with respect to legal aid at this particular point in time.

As it relates to the budget, we have a situation where the current five-year program regarding funding for legal aid still is in place. I believe it expires in the spring of next year. The money that legal aid has available for the criminal and civil work that it does is principally from the province of Alberta, so we are the principal funder. There is some money that comes from the federal government for sure, but we are the principal funder.

The money that you see in our budget is not all of the money that they, in fact, expend. What happened at some point in the past is that a special fund was endowed, if you will, with significant dollars. If legal aid's budget for this year according to our information is, say, $30 million, it will be more like $40 million, with them utilizing the dollars that have been set aside in this special fund to pay for the work that is actually being done. That money is in place and will be available to cover off the needs of legal aid for the balance of the term of the current contract. So all is good on that front, hon. member, and we can provide you with some more specifics on that, but that's the gist of how it works.

At the justice ministers' federal/provincial/territorial meeting in January one of the major issues of discussion was a renewal of the agreement between the federal government and the provinces and territories regarding ongoing funding for criminal – another five-year term, I think, is generally what was asked by the ministers – but there was also a demand for an expansion of the funding that the federal government currently provides for the civil side. At this point in time there is very little in the way of civil legal aid funding from the federal government. There's some in the immigration area, and there might be a very niche area that they provide some funding to, but generally speaking very little.

The ministers across the board said that that was an area where federal government could do more. The current Justice minister is sympathetic but indicated that his sympathies might not generate into support in an economic sense from his colleagues at the cabinet table. That is where that one was left, but there's absolutely no doubt that the justice ministers across Canada are interested in the federal government renewing their commitment to this going forward. We're all on the same page on that, and in fact from my perspective in Alberta we are doing very well at this point in time, and the people that I have met with are happy with the situation as it currently stands, recognizing that there are issues going forward. There are issues going forward in everything that we do, but we are going forward from a very good place.

Some comments, perhaps, regarding aboriginal justice. As a starting point, I think it's important to recognize that Justice is a co-champion of the aboriginal policy framework, I believe, and we're also involved in most of the matters that aboriginal affairs is dealing with. We're involved, for example, in the consultation program that is currently being put in place. We're involved in Métis harvesting, in providing advice with respect to that. The short of it is that justice is inextricably linked to aboriginal matters.

The statistics that you were alluding to are absolutely correct. There is a fundamental, systemic problem of perhaps a near crisis or crisis proportions, certainly when you take into account the long-term trend that would appear to be based on what is currently happening. I think that the government has identified that. It's not that we haven't identified it. It's not that we aren't working in a collaborative way. I would imagine that virtually every ministry is part of the aboriginal policy framework with perhaps the exception of one or two that just don't have a direct connect, and even there they probably have some connection. I'm thinking of Gaming, for example, which wouldn't necessarily logically apply, but there in fact is an aboriginal policy in the Gaming ministry.

We're talking about aboriginal justice today, and I think that I'd like to talk about some of the things that we are doing. I can tell you that there is a program to educate the Crown prosecutors to deal with First Nation people, and there are three levels of training courses provided to Crown prosecutors. The first phase is general aboriginal cultural awareness, the second phase is cultural camp, and the third phase is a program that blends the study of significant legal issues arising in criminal cases involving aboriginal people with aboriginal awareness and spirituality.

By March of 2003 close to 100 per cent had taken phase 1 of the training, and this year phase 1 training will be made available to the newly hired prosecutors who have not yet attended the program. We have an active aboriginal cultural awareness program that is alive, well, and is working with the Crown prosecutors because, as you noted, hon. member, there is a very direct relationship between aboriginal people and the criminal justice system and, indeed, an overrepresentation of aboriginal people in the criminal justice system.

We have developed innovative options for diversion. We've got the aboriginal Crown prosecutors liaison program. We have aboriginal courts, and we have court worker programs that are referred to in the budget, which are to assist aboriginal people who are interfacing with the court system. I can tell you that we are just in the process of reviewing that particular program. I think some 3 million plus dollars is expended on the aboriginal court worker program, and the time has come for us to assess exactly how that has been working to determine whether we can establish some benchmarks, whether we are getting all we can out of that particular program given the money that we are spending.

That is a program that is in the process of being reviewed, very early stages. It's just a start-up, but some time over the next year, perhaps a year from now, I'll be able to report to you on what the outcome of that is and how we might be able to make that particular program more meaningful both for Justice in general and for aboriginal people in particular. There are a number of things that we are doing, and in the written response I'll provide more detail, hon. member.

There was some comment with respect to the seriousness of domestic violence, and there's absolutely no doubt about that. It seems that every week we read about new cases that are simply horrific, and that is one of the reasons that there is this program that Alberta Justice has been working on with a number of partners and police services called the Alberta relationship threat assessment and management initiative.

[Mr. Lindsay in the chair]

There was a situation here in Edmonton where a woman was stalked by a man for 17 years. This is a situation where this woman met this man, passed him in the hallways at high school, and for the next 17 years he followed her. As I understand it, she ultimately left the country. Her family remained here. She'd come back from time to time, and he was always there. About three or four years ago he was charged, finally. It's very difficult to deal with stalking because the criminal law really doesn't have the appropriate charge tools. In any event, there was a charge that was laid at that point in time, and it was determined that the individual in question was mentally ill, so he is now spending time in a hospital here in Alberta rather than in jail because that is where he should be.

The gist of it was that this woman, who has become an expert in stalking by virtue of her unfortunate situation, approached my predecessor and said: I think that you ought to take a look at this because I think that there's something that you can do; I think that you can help people like me who are in high-conflict situations. If you have the understanding, if you have the tools, then you will be able to intervene more quickly and more appropriately. The gist of this particular initiative is to provide a co-ordinated resource that could professionally assess threats and their level of lethality, formulate mitigation strategies, develop safety plans, assist the judiciary, and potentially conduct death interviews.

The situation is that under the current thinking you would have a unit like this in Edmonton for northern Alberta, a unit like this in Calgary for southern Alberta. You would have experts. You would have specialized prosecutors. You would have specialized police officers. You would have psychologists, psychiatrists. You would have these people on call to provide assistance as required. You might have bomb experts. The point is that you would have this cadre of expertise that would be brought to bear. This particular initiative was brought forward as a result of domestic violence and this very specific, horrific stalking incident.

The recent events in Mayerthorpe indicate very, very clearly that this particular situation is not only in domestic areas; it's throughout our society. There are high-conflict individuals doing things that have to be identified early so that we can address them appropriately and avoid the horrific consequences, which in the situation in Mayerthorpe and in many situations of domestic violence involve either death or very, very serious injury.

This particular initiative is going to be developed into a business case. It's an example involving the Solicitor General. I am sure that Children's Services, Health and Wellness, and perhaps other ministries will be involved, but more importantly it is going to involve the community: the Edmonton police force, the RCMP, the Calgary police force, and a number of other people in our communities, probably the people who work in the domestic violence field on the support side. So a very, very good initiative and one that I hope to be able to tell you more about when the business plan gets done.

I can tell you, hon. member, that I've discussed it briefly with the Solicitor General, and we're both quite excited about this. I'm hoping that we can move it along through our system so that from a policy point of view it can be adopted by this government. That would be my wish, and if it is, hopefully we can work it into the business plan and the budget for the next year. But that is something that is a work in progress.

You asked about the court services, and you said that you didn't know exactly what it is. The situation with court services is that they, essentially, provide the administration, financial, and judicial support services to all levels of court in Alberta – the provincial court, the Court of Queen's Bench, the Court of Appeal – which, of course, are presided over by our independent judiciary. The program has about $135.6 million dedicated to it, so it's significant. The manpower budget is about $101.8 million, and 1,190 FTEs are involved in that particular area.

Some of the things that are being done there involve the funding of the family justice services, that we've referred to, and funding for the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, which, of course, formerly was known as the Child Welfare Act. Both of these pieces of legislation have put significant resource issues to Justice that we have to address. Fortunately, we have funding for that. The funding for the family justice services is some 1.776 million dollars, and we've got funding for the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act of some 1.78 million dollars. So there are significant resources that we are putting into that. Those are some of the things that are going there.

For example, under family justice services we are implementing the Family Law Act and aligning services by rewriting the current content of services to conform with the new legislation. We're reorganizing the services. We're commencing expansion and standardization of services, including the expansion of family court counselling. We're expanding family mediation, putting more money into the parenting after separation program and child support resolution projects, and we are putting significant dollars into court-generated orders because in the family court area it's important that the orders be prepared when people are in court so that they can walk out of court with those orders knowing full well what their rights and responsibilities are. So we're working very seriously in that area.

Those are some of the things in specific that we are spending this year's new money on. Generally speaking, court services are everything that you would find in the administration of our courts.

So those are some of the comments that I have, and perhaps somebody else would like to make some comments and ask some questions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would also like to thank the minister for his introductory remarks and response to questions. They've been very helpful and encouraging. I commend the minister and his department on the work that's being done to address the strategic priorities for 2005 to 2008.

I'd like to talk about the first priority: children, youth, and families. It's stated – I'll sort of summarize here – that families are the foundation of society and children and youth are our most [important] resources. While it is important to promote self-reliance of Alberta families . . . services must be in place to respond to family violence, spousal [abuse] . . . and related legal issues. The Ministry plays an important role in providing . . . social supports to vulnerable children and youth to assist them in achieving positive outcomes. When youth do become involved with the criminal justice system, they must be held appropriately accountable and options must be in place to [help] them to behave more responsibly.

I really support the efforts to provide social supports, to offer justice to our vulnerable. Unconditional support for all in need among us is the mark of a civilized society. On the other hand, my experience as a high school administrator at times required work with students involved in criminal activity, sometimes taking advantage of the vulnerable.

Unfortunately, I agree that sometimes we do not do enough to help these individuals make better decisions and behave responsibly. Resources are limited, and they will take advantage of that. I've spoken with probation officers who felt helpless and used up because they do not have enough tools or enough consequence to make a decision. The lengthy process of going to court does not help, and they lack the resources to really monitor their clients. Some students who repeatedly broke probation expectations would eventually go to a court again and get more probation.

I also support your statements in priority 1 regarding the need to hold individuals appropriately accountable. I do believe that we must provide more help to front-line workers through staffing as well as some changes in the Criminal Code. I believe that tougher consequences can be a deterrent for youth who might be considering involvement in criminal activity. I also believe that consequences must be quick and not delayed. But I realize that addressing the root causes and providing proactive programs is essential, and I'm really glad to see the money that's going in that direction and supporting pilot programs.

So those are my general comments.

I do have some specific questions, though, regarding page 355 of the business plan, strategy 1.4, where it states that consistent with the Alberta drug abuse strategy Justice will work with partners to enhance strategies that focus on enforcement and reducing the supply of drugs to [reduce] availability . . . and address community concerns about the environmental and health impacts of residences used for drug labs and grow operations.

We've paid a lot of attention to drug addiction, especially crystal meth, in this session, and I'm passionate about doing whatever we can to help eliminate this terrible problem. I'm wondering what specific strategies the ministry might be initiating to address the issue of grow ops. How are they addressing the issue of crystal meth in particular? Are there any plans to provide funding for more community- and school-based drug awareness programs similar to the drug abuse resistance education program, DARE, perhaps at the junior high level or into high school? Are there strategies in place or being developed to deal with persons with addictions, and will the ministry be actively involved in implementing treatment programs and detox centres for youth addicted to crystal meth? I know we're moving in that direction, but I'm wondering what role the ministry might have in this critical fight against crystal meth.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the hon. member for her comments. Generally speaking, I think it's important to recognize that Justice Canada handles the drug prosecutions rather than the provincial prosecutors. Now, there's a possibility of a certain set of circumstances which would see our prosecutors handle the case, but generally speaking, drugs are handled by the federal prosecutors.

There's no doubt, however, that the use of drugs impacts the general criminal justice system in the sense that there's a lot of violence and there's a lot of theft and there's a lot of damage and mayhem that goes along with the use of drugs, the sale of drugs, and all of that, the drive-by shootings and so on and so forth, which we are responsible for. So while I started out by saying that we don't handle drug prosecutions, the fact of the matter is that day after day after day after day the people who do our prosecutions in our courts and who work for Alberta Justice are well aware that drugs do have a direct and significant impact.

I guess that some of the things we've looked at are that there's a Crown prosecutor from special prosecutions who's involved in a cross-ministry committee to make recommendations for both federal and provincial legislation, changes that would address precursor control, public health and environmental concerns with respect to methamphetamine in particular. One of the hon. members, I believe, has a private member's bill that will be before us in the next week or two regarding the issue of trying to deal with precursor control; that is, some of the component chemicals that go into the manufacture of methamphetamine.

The assistant director of regional prosecutions is involved in the AADAC community response model through the illicit drug-use working group, and several other government departments are also working in that group. He is also working closely with the drug-endangered children's strategy under the lead of the RCMP. The departments of Health, Children's Services, and Solicitor General are also part of that strategy. So there is no doubt that we are working on this area.

I know that the IROC committee – and we have special prosecutors in organized crime – are definitely working in the organized drug crime area as far as enforcement is concerned. When I met with the three other justice ministers of western Canada last December and we agreed upon a take-away from the meeting, it was that we would see if we could develop a conference on methamphetamine. The three prairie provinces in particular, more so than B.C., seemed to be concerned about this. That's not to say that B.C. is not concerned. It just seems to be a higher priority here, and my colleagues in Manitoba and Saskatchewan are particularly alarmed.

Now, at that point in time we'd already had a methamphetamine conference here just recently, so it may be that our level of understanding is a bit higher. There was some very, very good work that was done in the States at a conference. I believe it was the western attorneys general in the States that had this conference which in large measure dealt with methamphetamine, and some good material came out of that in I'd say the last three or four months.

I'm hoping that we can work together with the other justice ministers and have a conference, that we'd gladly participate in. It would probably be in Manitoba because Manitoba took the lead and said that they would be happy to move that matter along. So I'm hoping that some time in the next three or four months something might transpire in that regard. We take it seriously.

It's a very, very difficult subject to address. It's just so profitable. I can tell you this, hon. member, that I've seen statistics, and I'll see if I can find them. They're actually sort of encouraging only in a relative sense. You know, we talk about the profitability of drug production being so great in Alberta and elsewhere that the sentencing, particularly when you have a high probability of giving a conditional sentence, just simply does not provide either deterrence nor denunciation. But I can tell you on the basis of what I know that the Alberta courts are providing sterner sentences than, for example, British Columbia's. It's not to say that it's where we should be, but that type of thing in British Columbia, from my memory of the statistics, almost invariably results simply in house arrest rather than actually doing real time. That just simply is not ever going to deter people from engaging in what is such a lucrative area.

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I've just been listening to the hon. Minister of Justice and wanted to ask him in terms of the legal aid, and this is more from my background and experience. I was just wondering in terms of foster parents. When I was working with them, they seemed to have difficulty getting access to legal aid from a point of view of dollars, and then there also seemed to be a shortage, especially in the rural areas of the province. I wonder if you would comment on that.

One other question I'd like to ask, and I wrote it down as you were talking: has there ever been thought of a loan program, for example through a financial institution, that would enable a foster parent to get access to legal aid and be able to get a loan and then pay it back? Has any system like that been thought of, or have you ever heard of such a thing across Canada?

Thank you.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you to the hon. Member for St. Albert. I'm not aware of any such system, and I'll have to ask the department to comment. The legal aid program, of course, is not run by the Department of Justice; it's run by the Legal Aid Society. We can provide particulars with respect to your specific question on foster parents and what the criteria are generally with respect to legal aid, but I can't answer that particular question at this time.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Back to the minister. I want to thank him for his attempt to answer in detail some of the questions that I had asked. With respect to court services his explanation was quite detailed, but my question was about the reduction in the budget by 11 per cent. How do you explain that? You know, there's $13.4 million less budgeted for court services this year than last year. The population is growing. I suppose the number of judges is growing, and you have more prosecutors and others. How is it that you can do it on the cheap this time around? So that's one question. I have a couple of others.

Spousal violence. Thank you for giving some detailed account of what you're attempting to do to respond to this large problem. But my one question has to do more with prevention rather than dealing with matters after the fact. You know, much of the arrangements that you're talking about, the cross-departmental initiatives that you're taking about, seem to be focused on how to deal with the consequences rather than dealing with the question of how to reduce the incidence of spousal violence.

I drew your attention to the statement in the business plan where up front the department I think acknowledges that our rate of spousal violence is the highest in the country and has continued to be so year after year after year in spite of the fact that we value so highly our families and our commitment to family values and so on and so forth. First of all, I can't understand. I can't square the two: a province that pays so much attention to the issue of having healthy families also has the highest rate of family violence in the country. How do we understand this?

If we answer that question, that might help us get to the next question: how do we prevent it? How do we bring down the rate of family violence in this province to bring it perhaps closer to the national average, if not aim for some more ambitious goals? Is there a place in business plans to set such targets, as a matter of fact, that we're going to bring the family violence rate to the national average? If it's a desirable thing to do, why doesn't it see any representation in our strategic plans and business plans? And the same thing about aboriginal communities and the incidence of crime and violence. Why can't we at least try and set some sort of goals and then work towards them?

I see in the business plan references to measures of satisfaction, you know, with some of the practices and policies, but I don't see any bold initiatives and attempts to say: well, we're going to set some goals and move towards them; it may take us three-year business plans to get there, six years or whatever, but here are some of the steps that we are going to take based on some research, based on the knowledge that we've gathered from the past, and we hope that we'll start moving in that direction. That would give us a sense of hope and a sense of some positive sort of commitment of resources to those challenges.

I'll stop there. These are just two or three reaction comments that I had.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much. It wasn't that long ago that we had the conference on bullying and family violence. I think it was under the auspices of Children's Services or under the auspices of our now-Minister of Health and Wellness. I'm not the best person to speak about the outcome of that particular conference although I did attend for a while.

My sense of it is that it's a complex societal issue with many causes. It's sort of like when you start talking about poverty. You know, we can talk about it for a long time, and we can talk about a lot of strategies, and ultimately we end up doing our best and picking certain strategies which we hope will make some difference.

What I can tell you about Justice is that by the very nature of what we do – that is, deal with conflict – we are at the conflict end of the equation. The good news is that given that we're at the conflict end of the equation, we have developed alternatives to what is often a very poor way of addressing conflict, and that is to have the conflict addressed by a judge in a courtroom in an adversarial process. So we have developed family mediation so that we can have a collaborative, hopefully consensual agreement arise out of a recognition of the alternatives.

When we talk about family violence, we talk in terms of the good work that is being done in the HomeFront program in Calgary and in the Edmonton domestic violence court and the Lethbridge domestic violence court. There is an example of the justice system working in collaboration with Health and with Children's Services to provide the healing tools, if you will, to address not only the perpetrator but also the victims in the family. I've provided some of the numbers associated with that. They are documented. They are real, and they are very, very encouraging, and we are going to expand that program in the province. I think it's an example of the justice system working at the other end, if you will, to try and move people back to the other side of the equation where they can live better and more peaceful lives, and our communities will be safer. I believe that that is a positive initiative. That is the type of thing that we can do.

That threat assessment program that we're in the process of I think is another example of what the justice system can do, recognizing that there are some very bad people out there who are going to commit violence. What's necessary is that we identify who they are and that we intervene in an appropriate way. I alluded to this in an answer to Edmonton-Glenora's questions during question period today. The model in Canada that exists at this point in time is an Ontario police model. It's operated by the police department. I understand that they have been very, very successful in intervening by virtue of having the appropriate tools and have avoided any death in the circumstances in which they've intervened. It doesn't mean that people aren't still being murdered in Ontario as a result of family violence. That still occurs, but they've been successful, as I understand it.

So what I'm hoping we're going to be able to do here is recognize in the justice system alternatives to having a judge alone determine the matter and have sensitive, well-trained prosecutors, have the appropriate resources supplied by Children's Services, Health, Solicitor General, whoever it may be, to provide healing tools to the people who are part of this conflict.

At this point in time I don't have a better solution, hon. member. I'm sure that's why we continue to reach out to people who are on the front lines saying: "Here's what we're doing. What do you think? How can we go from there?" Of course, we're very happy this year to have $10 million of new money in our budget, which is a great deal of money for us. But $10 million, as you know, in the scheme of the budget of this government is a relatively small amount. Now, that's not to say that Children's Services, Health, and Solicitor General don't also have additional dollars. They do, and a lot of those additional dollars are going into some of these programs that I've talked about, particularly the domestic court where they supply the healing tools that go along with this.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 1
Access to the Future Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the hon. Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and a privilege to move third reading of Bill 1, the Access to the Future Act.

We've had quite a considerable amount of discussion on the act, including a number of proposed amendments in committee, but I think it's fair to say that all members of the House agree with the intent, the concept of the act, particularly with the access to the future fund, which is going to provide such a substantial boost to postsecondary education in this province, advancing the knowledge and learning of Albertans in this province, and the 4 and a half billion dollars of endowing the future, which is referenced in the act.

As well, of course, we shouldn't overlook the other things which are built into the act with respect to accessibility, affordability, and quality in our advanced education system and, in particular, the proposals to move forward with a common application process, which will simplify the way by which students get access to the postsecondary system and are assured that they can easily access the postsecondary system right across the province; the searchable inventory for scholarships, bursaries, and other financial assistance in order to make it easier for students to access financial assistance in getting an education; the proposals, the ability under the act to plan to increase participation of those who are disadvantaged due to social, economic, geographic, or cultural factors who are not participating at the same level as other Albertans in the system; recognition of prior learning. Again, the Alberta Council on Admissions and Transfer as well as IQAS, the international qualifications assessment, do a wonderful job for Albertans.

But more remains to be done overall both in ensuring that financial need is not a barrier to pursuing an advanced education in this province and, as I like to say when I'm talking with Albertans, in having an opportunity for every Albertan who wishes to, who desires to, to move from where they are now to where they can be so that we can maximize the human potential of this province, not only so that people can have the economic benefits and rewards, which are, of course, important, but also so they can maximize their potential so that they're in the best position possible to give back to their community, to help create a better community, a better place for future Albertans.

So, Mr. Speaker, without further ado, I'd ask members of the House to support Bill 1 in third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Oh, this could have been so much more, so much more than it is. It could even have been what was promised two months and a day ago, when Bill 1 was first read in this House. Even if it had delivered on the promise, it would have been so much more than the bill that we are being asked to approve today, and it could have been so much more than the promise too.

A $3 billion cap on investment in the endowment fund. The minister opposite is right, Mr. Speaker. We have spent considerable time in debate and discussion around some of the fine points of this bill. I don't know whether the minister would consider the cap to be one of the fine points or not. It seems to be one of the pretty major points to me. We did get into an interesting discussion, almost an Orwellian discussion really, of what is meant by the term "cap." You see, on this side of the House we take a cap to mean a ceiling. We take a cap to mean the point to which the fund can rise and then it can't go any farther, at least not without a review, an amendment, a change to the act to allow it to do so. The minister regaled us and entertained us at some length with some discussion about how it's more of a floor than a ceiling, really, an incentive to put money into the act.

Then along came the budget, and the $3 billion cap, the ceiling that has magically become a floor, turned out to be the basement. The budget promised and committed $250 million to the access to the future fund – $250 million – one-twelfth of the promised $3 billion. Is it difficult to understand why, with the exception of three university administrators whose gushing praise for the budget was quoted by the Premier the next day in question period, so many college and university and technical institute faculty and staff, support staff, administrators, and, perhaps most important of all, students and their parents are feeling somewhat let down, somewhat disappointed by this?

We started out talking about the possibility of a real postsecondary education endowment fund that would produce significant income on a yearly basis, not as much as this side of the House would like to have seen, but that's all on the record. I don't want to spend a great deal of time reviewing that. At $3 billion it would have produced $135 million in income annually to be invested in excellence in postsecondary education in the province of Alberta.

The minister is quite right, Mr. Speaker. Everyone in this House does agree with the intent of Bill 1: to improve accessibility, to improve affordability, to improve the quality of postsecondary education, not just to improve it but to make it the best in the nation. So at $3 billion we would have had from the endowment fund $135 million worth of income to invest towards that excellence every year. At $250 million we get $11 million a year, or $61 per postsecondary student in the province of Alberta per year. If you break that down further, divide it by the number of days in a year, 365, you discover that it amounts to 16 cents per student per day.

I've used the comparison before. A college or university student in the province of Alberta could achieve on his or her own behalf as much as this bill promises to deliver, to actually deliver, by taking three empties a day back to the bottle depot. At least he or she knows that the bottle depot is going to be there next year. We don't know if there's going to be any more in the fund next year than is being put in the budget this year. [interjection] Oh, the minister says: trust us. Well, you know, for 12 years now the postsecondary education system in the province of Alberta and the students who go to it have been on a starvation diet, so you might be forgiven, if you're someone who's a stakeholder in that system, for perhaps not feeling all that trustworthy towards this government when they say: "Oh, don't worry. We'll put that money in someday." I don't know when. Maybe they'll put it in next week. Maybe it'll be an off-budget item, that they'll find the money next week. Maybe it'll be a week before the election. They'll magically come up with $2,750,000,000 and say: "See, Alberta? We delivered on our $3 billion promise. Now please vote for us." Maybe they will; maybe they won't. Maybe they'll put more in someday.

The point is, though, that the people of Alberta, the students of Alberta, their parents, their professors are left to play the waiting game and wonder when the other shoe is going to drop, and that's the way it is with this government all the time. There's a boom-and-bust mentality that exists on the other side of the House. Even with the creation of a sustainability fund, which was another Liberal idea that they adopted – and good on you for doing that – they still haven't quite gotten past that idea that everything must go in a boom-and-bust cycle. So when we have money, we'll spend it like there's no tomorrow. Like the bumper sticker said, "Please, God, let there be another oil boom, and I promise I won't bleep it all away this time." Only every time there is a boom, they bleep it away, and then there's nothing in the kitty when the bad times hit. You know, this could have been done in a much more predictable, sustainable way, but that's not their style. I understand that.

I was told at the beginning of this session of the Legislature that what we do in third reading is we debate the effect of a bill. Well, unfortunately, there's not much effect to debate in this bill. Oh, there are some good things about it, no question, but the centrepiece of the bill, the money, the fund, the endowment fund, is sorely lacking, and it won't do much at $11 million. It won't do much for the system, and it won't do much for all the students in the system, and it won't do much for the future of Alberta. It might do a great deal for one or two programs, one or two chairs in research perhaps or a couple of bursary or scholarship funds or maybe some combination thereof. Listen, that's more than we have right now. I'm not knocking the fact that $11 million a year is $11 million a year more than we have right now. It's just that in comparison to what it could have been, it's not enough.

That brings us to another I think failing of this bill, and that is that the advisory council that is supposed to advise the minister on worthwhile projects and programs for the endowment fund's modest income to go into is continuing to be a creature of whatever whim the minister has when he decides to appoint this thing. Now, we tried to move an amendment there that would specify to some extent who should be represented on the access advisory council so that it's making good decisions. The minister said that it was too prescriptive. Well, okay. But, again, the people are looking, I think, for a predictable plan and a way to get there, and I don't believe that this bill delivers on that except that we come back to the minister's entreaty to us all to trust him and to trust his colleagues on the government side of the House.

I'm not for a minute suggesting that this minister would do such a thing, but in the way that this bill has set things up, with really no obligation to even consult with the advisory council and full authority to design that advisory council however the minister sees fit, it gives a minister, in effect, a significant – I was going to say "massive," but $11 million isn't massive, folks – slush fund, the opportunity to do things with that money that are not necessarily in the public interest. There are no checks and balances written into legislation to prevent a future minister from doing precisely that, and that, Mr. Speaker, is wrong.

We moved an amendment as well dealing with a reporting requirement, an accountability requirement on the minister's part. Again we were told: no need to pass that amendment because we're going to do it anyway. Well, okay. Where is it written that you're going to do that? It's not written that you're going to do that.

We tabled some other amendments as well dealing with issues of ministerial consultation with the council, that in making grants from the fund, the minister would have to consult with the council, dealing with issues of clarity and accountability around the purposes of the fund, and so on and so forth. Those amendments we tabled, Mr. Speaker, to get them on the record. We did debate the three amendments that we felt were the most key: removing the cap on the fund, the composition of the advisory council, and the accountability requirement on the minister's part. I and my colleagues on this side of the House and, I think, not just in this party continue to believe that this bill would have served the students and all people and, in fact, the future of the province of Alberta better if those amendments had been passed. It simply would have made it a more democratic bill if nothing else.

Lookit, there are some problems in the postsecondary education system in the province of Alberta. The minister recognizes it, and the government recognizes it. The people recognize it. Fifty per cent of the people of Alberta in an October of 2004 Decima poll agreed with the statement that "every qualified student should be guaranteed a place in a university or college even if that means spending more tax money." Seventy per cent of Albertans agreed with the statement that "university and college tuition fees in Canada are too high." Seventy-seven per cent of Albertans, the highest percentage of any province in the nation, answered the question "Do low-income Canadians have the same, better or worse chance of going on to university or college?" by saying "Worse."

The playing field is not level. It's perhaps impossible to ever make the playing field perfectly level. Maybe it's not even advisable to try for perfection. But it is advisable, and it is the right thing for governments to do, to try and level the playing field, to create a playing field as level as humanly possible so that all Albertans have the opportunity to at least reach for the dream and perhaps realize the dream of rising above the station that they find themselves in if nothing else.

We have in this province the second-lowest university participation rate among 18 to 21 year olds, 16 per cent; the second-lowest university attainment rate among 20 to 24 year olds, 11.3 per cent – the national average is 13 per cent, and Ontario is at nearly 15 per cent – and the lowest percentage of high school leavers who proceed directly to postsecondary education, 43 per cent. Quebec is at 77 per cent. Quebec also has a very favourable homegrown tuition regime for their own students, and I think there may be a lesson there.

We need to do work. I don't want to give the impression that there is nothing good in this bill; of course there is. Some of the points around accessibility and affordability – establishing enrolment targets, minimum entrance requirements, trying to come up with a common application process for entrance to public postsecondary institutions, a searchable inventory and simplified application process for scholarships, bursaries, and the like – are good initiatives; no question about it. But there's also no question that no matter how you hold this bill up to the light, no matter which way you turn it, no matter whether you read it upside down, backwards, front to back, back to front, you know, end to beginning, the centerpiece of this bill is the access to the future fund.

In that area, Mr. Speaker, this bill is sorely lacking. It could have been more than was proposed even. The point, the truly sad point is that it's much less than proposed, and the minister himself admitted it when he said that there is $4.5 billion, because he likes to also refer to the ingenuity fund and the heritage scholarship fund and what's proposed to be put in there, referenced in the bill but not delivered.

Mr. Speaker, with Bill 1, the Access to the Future Act, the number one piece of legislation in this legislative agenda, the showcase piece of legislation of this session of the Legislature, the piece of legislation that this government said would address the very real concerns of Albertans about the quality and the state of their postsecondary education system, this government looked greatness in the eye and timidly backed away, and that is a crying shame.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and continue the debate on Bill 1, the Access to the Future Act, sponsored by the hon. Premier. I would like to focus my remarks this evening on the comments made earlier in the debate by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity. I know that the hon. member is especially concerned with this issue because the University of Calgary is in his riding. As a professor at the U of C for the last 24 years I would like to suggest that I am better able to comment on this issue and the conditions than someone such as himself, who by his own admission in this House has been to the university a number of times.

The hon. member mentioned the annual rankings of Canadian universities by Maclean's magazine and the fact that traditionally the U of C has not fared very well. Mr. Speaker, it is widely known in academic circles that this survey is so statistically flawed as to lack any practical value. It is a ranking based on reputation, and a ranking based on reputation does not reflect the reality of the quality of education that a student receives at a particular institution. Basing his evaluation of the University of Calgary on what is said in the Maclean's survey discredits the very pretext for the hon. member's criticism of Bill 1.

Part of the reason that the University of Calgary ranks lower than expected in the Maclean's survey is that the focus of the University of Calgary has been on increasing access. The University of Calgary has enrolled more students than any other postsecondary institution in Alberta for the better part of the last decade, but Maclean's magazine punishes the U of C for this access policy.

At the same time that the university has been admitting record numbers of new students, it has been steadily increasing the average grade point of the incoming first-year class. To date this year 97 per cent of the high school applicants to the University of Calgary have entering averages of 80 per cent or higher. In other words, the U of C has been achieving the goals of both quality and quantity in its undergraduate student body. First-year entry grades make up a large portion of the Maclean's criteria, which immediately places Alberta universities at a disadvantage. Why? Because Alberta's high schools have higher grading standards than the other provinces. We have not had the grade inflation witnessed in Ontario and other eastern provinces. Alberta is penalized by Maclean's magazine for producing outstanding high school graduates and increasing access to universities. Personally, I'm happy that I live in Alberta and not Maclean's magazine's ideal world.

In his comments the hon. member referred to the administration building at the university and criticized the government for not addressing infrastructure within Bill 1. He was very concerned over the colour of the walls and the shape of the doors in the administration building. These concerns may have been heartfelt but, of course, are completely irrelevant to the real priorities of a university. Mr. Speaker, colourful walls and fancy doors do not an education make. Bill 1 focuses on improving quality and access to our universities, not on interior decorating. Bill 1 and this government are focused on what happens within the building and getting people into the classrooms, not on what the walls of the classroom look like. As a university professor I share and applaud the focus of Bill 1.

I noted the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity's concern that the president's office is located in the administration building, with its ugly walls and big doors. Now, the hon. member may be excused for lobbying for a nicer office for one of his constituents, but I think that our resources would be better directed toward the classroom, and I think President Weingarten would also. In point of fact, over the past decade almost all major lecture halls at the University of Calgary have been upgraded and retrofitted with state-of-the-art audio, video, and Internet services. Contrary to the hon. member's speech, U of C staff and students do not work in "Third World infrastructure" conditions.

Now, I know that the hon. member is concerned with the lack of infrastructure and the presence of portable trailers at our universities, but he appears not to have noticed that the U of C has recently opened the ICT, or information and communications technology, Building. This building is state of the art and allows the U of C to remain a leader in IT engineering, education, and research. Likewise, the health research innovation centre, the largest capital project in the university's history, will double the amount of space available for multidisciplinary and collaborative health research and will help Alberta continue to develop outstanding health science professionals.

Mr. Speaker, libraries are also extremely important to research, and evidently the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity has not visited the sprawling state-of-the-art learning commons on the second floor of MacKimmie Library. Having visited hundreds of universities across North America, I can attest that this is one of the best student-available access points for campus-wide Internet of any I've seen in North America.

On the subject of libraries, I'm especially pleased to see that the access to the future plan will be used to create a digital library in recognition of Her Honour Lois E. Hole. Linking students and professors from across Alberta enhances educational quality and opportunity and will allow Alberta to remain a step ahead of other jurisdictions.

The $3 billion access to future fund as outlined in Bill 1 creates an endowment that will benefit future generations of Albertans. It will ensure access and encourage innovation in all Alberta universities and colleges.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity was notably silent on the many remarkable achievements of the world-class faculty at the University of Calgary. Despite a decade of financial duress in 2003-2004 the University of Calgary achieved a new single-year record of $247 million in outside grants. That is a quarter of a billion dollars. There are 200 professors at the University of Calgary who earn their salary alone just in the outside research grants that they attract every year. This places the U of C in the top 10 universities in Canada for winning outside research funding. This somehow went unnoticed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Speaker, in the academic world when a university attracts a large number of outside grants, it means that it is succeeding in attracting and retaining quality researchers and professors. The endowment fund created by Bill 1 will help to attract still more top professionals to Alberta and the University of Calgary.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if all hon. members, but specifically, again, the Member for Calgary-Varsity, are aware of what's called the BlackBoard software program. With this program the term "blackboard" has taken on a whole new meaning from when I or any of you started university. This innovative software creates an online virtual classroom. Through this virtual classroom students and professors are able to communicate with each other 24/7. Students can hand in assignments online, converse with other students, access class notes, and receive handouts that they may have missed in class, 24/7. It's so simple that even I was able to set up my courses on BlackBoard in the last two years. This type of innovation is already occurring at the University of Calgary. It will be further enhanced by the Bill 1 endowment fund.

There are numerous other innovations being brought to life at the University of Calgary. The new Institute for Sustainable Energy, Environment and Economy, known as ISEEE, is unique in the world for combining the interdisciplinary focus on these three key fields to Alberta's future. ISEEE has already attracted $16 million in private donations and public grants and will play an important role in Alberta's future in helping us to balance environmental protection with sustained economic prosperity.

Likewise, philanthropist Allan Markin's recent $18 million gift to establish the Markin institute for public health will establish the U of C as a national leader in health promotion and prevention. Bill 1 will further enhance this type of world-class innovation and ensure that the U of C and Alberta's universities continue to produce the leaders of tomorrow.

Alberta already has a world-class postsecondary education system. However, the best system in the world is not helpful if people are not able to access it, and this is why Bill 1 addresses the issue of accessibility. By committing to increase the number of places available to Albertans in postsecondary institutions, we are ensuring that Alberta will be able to meet the needs of the knowledge-based economy going into the 21st century.

Bill 1, unlike the failed Liberal election platform, is a complete package. It focuses on access, innovation, and quality. With Bill 1 we are further strengthening an already strong postsecondary education system. Bill 1 allows Alberta's universities to excel and remain among the best institutions in Canada despite the unsubstantiated and unscientific claims made by Maclean's magazine and the Liberals.

As one who has taught at Alberta universities and colleges for the past 24 years, I can say with complete confidence that Bill 1 will successfully launch Alberta's postsecondary education into our second century. I would urge all members to support students in this province by voting for this government's very positive plan to enhance postsecondary education in our great province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for any questions or comments.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 1, Access to the Future Act, in its third reading. In spite of the attempts made by the opposition side to make amendments to the bill, the bill remains unamended and therefore is rife with all kinds of questions. It's a band-aid solution for a problem that's been allowed to burst out of control under this government's watch. Because of a sorry record of investment in the postsecondary sector, cuts, tuition hikes, other user fees, and replacement of stable funding for base operating grants for the minister's pet projects in the form of annual funding, we have a big mess on our hands in the postsecondary sector.

Do we really have a mess on our hands? Let's look at the facts. According to Statistics Canada low-income students are 2.5 times less likely to attend a university than their higher income counterparts. Tuition is now about $5,000 for one year of undergraduate education, but the federal Human Resources and Skills Development department reports that 75 per cent of jobs in Canada require some kind of postsecondary education.

Meanwhile, debt for students with loans is on average about $22,000 a year. This doesn't include all the private credit and credit card debt many students are now forced to rack up because the loan system is inadequate. Because departments are constantly cutting their budgets, sessional lecturers earn poverty-line wages with no benefits, and the private sector is increasing their involvement in both the funding and the kind of postsecondary education we offer here in Alberta.

The mess is just as big as the mess that this government made of the K to 12 sector in the lead-up to the teachers' strike in 2002. One of the ways this government started to dig itself out of the hole it created for itself in the K to 12 sector was to strike a Learning Commission, a good idea recommended by the leadership of the Alberta Teachers' Association. The Learning Commission was independent. Its recommendations were far reaching. Although the government is still stalling on some of the most innovative and worthwhile recommendations, it's a good basis of research and consultation.

One of those recommendations that was made by the Learning Commission was for this government to set up an independent commission to study postsecondary education. We need the same thing for this sector, Mr. Speaker. A crucial criterion for a postsecondary learning commission would be full independence; otherwise, it would be a waste of time and money. Indeed, I would like to ask the minister and this government precisely what they're afraid of in appointing such a commission and allowing it full independence. There are too many vested interests in this sector for it not to be independent.

The government has allowed too much involvement in the postsecondary sector by private, for-profit interests, either by allowing them to set up shop to sell degrees or allowing them to name buildings or sponsor programs of study or by appointing executives and other corporate players to the boards of our public institutions. We must take a clear-eyed look at this sector and not be blinded by the dollar signs that large American corporations see in the provision of what is called higher education services.

Bill 1 is ostensibly about access. A postsecondary learning commission would ask: what kind of programs will we want to make sure Albertans have access to? How do we make sure those programs have adequate resources? A postsecondary learning commission would be able to answer some of these questions and would give us a clear answer.

In Bill 1, however, access means a narrow commitment to putting bums in seats. It doesn't address what kind of education we want Albertans to have access to. Programs in the liberal arts faculties are being cut all the time. The U of C will cut 5 per cent from its departments this year. In the departments of sociology and political science at the U of A essential program enhancements like reading rooms and learning resources have been cut. Most new dollars go to hard sciences and business faculties. Envelope funding and tinkering with the university, college, and technical institute mandates mean that the government has oriented our postsecondary sector increasingly towards the needs of the private sector rather than making sure we contribute to the knowledge commons.

A postsecondary learning commission would also ask: access to what kinds of learning conditions? Classes are larger. Learning conditions are deteriorating, especially for undergraduates. The undergraduate experience is no longer one of developing relationships with profs and peers, debating ideas, and getting instant and constant feedback. Undergraduates are crammed into classes of 200, 300, or 400 or more.

Bill 1 is also supposed to address affordability, but the so-called tuition rebate is only for one year. A postsecondary learning commission would ask: what's an appropriate level of tuition? Is having among the highest tuition in the country acceptable in a province awash in so much cash? Is the current tuition fee policy serving well the students, their families, and the institutions they attend? Evidence would suggest that the current tuition fee policy is not serving students or institutions.

The Auditor General has pointed several times to inconsistencies in the calculation of the so-called tuition cap, where noninstructional costs are included in, for example, the University of Alberta's general operating expenditures, meaning that the students were footing 30 per cent of the bill for university expenditures that had nothing to do with their education. This government is fond of touting the fact that students only pay 30 per cent of the cost of education. This assertion is false, Mr. Speaker, and I'm sure that a fully independent postsecondary learning commission would find this.

University budgets in particular have ballooned due to the huge amount of research they are doing. Much of this is research for the private sector. There are many costs associated with this research, costs that have nothing to do with the cost of undergraduate education that students are subsidizing with their tuition dollars. These are called the indirect costs of research, and they include maintenance and infrastructure.

Students are paying far more than 30 per cent of the cost of their education. A postsecondary learning commission would re-examine the balance between student and government contributions to the cost of education and re-examine how, if tuition is allowed to increase. We need a fresh look at this issue. No more rhetoric about a phony 30 per cent formula dreamed up by Public Affairs.

Bill 1 proposes to address affordability, but only does so through a one-time, very small expenditure on tuition that could well be reversed or even charged back to students next year. Student loan limits have actually been raised, giving institutions more latitude to raise tuition and put students further into debt.

The minister talks about the best loan system in the country, but an independent postsecondary learning commission would put that bit of the government spin to the test. Here are some things that they would surely find. First, they would find serious gaps in our loan system. Parental contribution requirements mean that many middle-income students cannot access loans even if their parents cannot afford to contribute or refuse to do so. So they have to access private credit at sometimes loan shark rates of interest, which puts them further into debt.

A cap on part-time earnings means that students have their loans clawed back if they work in order to top up their student loans living allowance, which is currently at $730 per month. Students are punished if they find that they cannot live off that and want to work in order to have enough money to live on. The part-time earnings cap should simply be abolished. It makes absolutely no sense in a province that builds myths and ideology on the notion that every individual should work as much and as hard as they can to contribute to the cost of their education.

The second issue surrounding our student loan system is the lack of accountability and the fiscal irresponsibility of such a system. Over the life of a loan every dollar this government lends out costs the government 50 cents in administrative costs. This information comes from the Students Finance Board. On every loan of $22,000 this means that this loan will cost the government an additional $11,000 for the period of the loan. This is not responsible use of taxpayers' money, Mr. Speaker. We should be replacing our willingness to give out loans at large expense to taxpayers with a system of grants. A postsecondary learning commission would no doubt examine such an option and where this has worked in other jurisdictions.

The other issue is student loans for private, for-profit institutions. Because student loans cost taxpayers money in terms of administrative costs, the public has every right to know how much of their money is going to padding the bottom line or to shareholders of private, for-profit universities, colleges, or private vocational schools.

We know that for-profit universities such as DeVry and Phoenix have very high tuitions. We also suspect on reasonable grounds that default rates for students who attend private, for-profit institutions are higher than students who attend public institutions. Is this a good use of public money? We need the answer to that question. Bill 1 does nothing to address it. A truly independent postsecondary learning commission, however, would examine the appropriateness of money flowing from the Students Finance Board to the bottom line or to shareholders for American-based multinational corporations like the so-called University of Phoenix.

Speaking of fiscal responsibility, I'd like to make some final points on the endowment fund set up by Bill 1. This endowment fund is a flawed concept from the very beginning. It relies on unbudgeted surplus revenues in order to grow. Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that this kind of ad hoc, unbudgeted, unpredictable approach to funding postsecondary education is the very root of the problem and is the reason why we are in the mess that we are in. Investment in postsecondary education must be budgeted and predictable.

I'd also like to take issue with the kind of fund we are setting up with Bill 1 and indicate to the House that I have serious misgivings about this fund because it's not a far-reaching or visionary proposal for how to fund postsecondary education but a pot of money earmarked for pet projects and initiatives that will further involve the minister in the setting of priorities of academic institutions and further involve the private sector.

Neither of these outcomes is desirable for a public institution or a postsecondary public education system. Neither of these outcomes is suitable for institutions whose very reason for being is founded upon the need for a society to have places where we can seek knowledge for whatever reasons unrestricted by petty politics or the narrow self-interest of the marketplace. With this endowment fund the minister has far too much latitude in deciding which projects will receive funding, projects that require matching funds from well-heeled donors or from the private sector. That's a diserving way to disburse millions of dollars.

Also, this endowment fund is flawed because it funds only new projects. The reality is that existing programs are starving for cash because of a deliberate and sustained attack on the university, college, and technical institute base operating grants for the past decade. Bill 1 doesn't address that reality.

A postsecondary learning commission would recommend ways we could dig ourselves out of the various holes we have dug ourselves into in postsecondary education. There are so many questions to be answered. Tonight I have talked about affordability, equality, and accessibility, and at least touched on some of the ways that Bill 1 fails to adequately respond to pressing needs.

There are many other ways a fully independent postsecondary learning commission could contribute to the public debate on the future of one of the most important social institutions, social programs in this province. There is the problem of governance, which I've touched on in my comments with respect to the endowment fund, but the problem is infinitely more broad than that. It has to do with corporate and private-sector influence, the independence of general faculties' councils, and the role of students, departments, and faculties in setting institutional priorities as opposed to government and university administrations dictating what programs are offered under what conditions. There's also the problem of faculty recruitment, retention, and renewal, particularly in light of the appalling wages earned by sessional lecturers and their total lack of job security and benefits.

So, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I want to say that Bill 1, although in principle it looked good and the fanfare with which it was of course put forth here on the floor of the House suggested that it will work miracles, unfortunately is flawed. Had the opposition amendments been incorporated into the bill, it would have addressed some of the serious problems with this bill. Regardless, we are at a stage where we can't look back and say: "We should have done that. We could have done that." We know that the bill has not been amended, and therefore it's very difficult to support a bill that carries so much baggage, raises so many questions, and fails to address the pressing problems that our postsecondary institutions and the system as a whole face and must address if it is to be able to serve the interests of Albertans – economic, social, and cultural interests – in an effective way over the next two or three decades.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I close my remarks and hope other members will want to speak to the bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone wishing to rise on Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Seeing none, anyone else wish to participate in the debate?

The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the hon. Premier to close debate.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few remarks. It's unfortunate that members of the opposition, both parties, are not able to recognize that Bill 1 is not intended to be a budget. Bill 1 is not intended to cover every aspect of postsecondary education. Bill 1 did cover and does cover and makes a very strong leap forward in terms of setting up an endowment, which will endow the future of advancing education in this province and make a significant contribution.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie talks about the $3 billion as a cap or a ceiling and totally misses the point that there's a target in the bill which the government is committed to. This government is committed to reaching a $3 billion endowment fund. That doesn't mean it can't go up, but it certainly is something that's out there as a significant promise to Albertans. It was always the case that all of the endowments were going to be filled from surplus revenues.

In fact, he claims the concept as their own, which couldn't be any further from the truth because, as I mentioned earlier in this House, the concept was brought forward in many different ways but certainly by Harold Bannister. I want to thank him for his proposal some three years ago in terms of talking about a centennial endowment fund for the future of education. When the Liberals do claim that this was their policy, as I understand their policy, it was to fund it out of surplus revenues, so they wouldn't have included any money in the budget for it. So the fallacy of his argument is apparent.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, it's a great bill. It's a great concept. The access to the future fund has already engendered a huge amount of interest from people both within and without Alberta wanting to invest further in postsecondary education so that Albertans can advance their potential and help to create a great province.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a third time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Police Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate April 12: Ms Blakeman]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 36, the Police Amendment Act, 2005.

This is a 17-year-old act but a very important one, and it's overdue. The purpose of this bill is to bring in greater public accountability and civilian oversight of the investigations into complaints against police officers and serious incidents involving police as well. There are provisions to clarify how municipal police commissions and police committees in areas served by the RCMP are appointed and function and provisions for a clearer process for the handling of complaints against the police.

Mr. Speaker, the amendments follow recommendations from the report of the Alberta MLA Policing Review Committee. The report was released in July of the year 2002. I am pleased and impressed by the committee following an effort to meet its purpose.

The amendments to the Police Act, that is supposed to provide for greater public accountability and civilian oversight of investigations into complaints against police officers and serious incidents involving police, fall far short of what the public and police commissions have been asking for. The new amendment fails to give teeth to civilian agencies in complaints against the police. Mr. Speaker, this amendment seriously fails to provide the level of public oversight that has been called for in the wake of several incidents involving serious police misconduct.

These incidents include the stakeout of a journalist and the former Police Commission chairman at the Overtime bar and the ruling of a judge that excessive force was used with a taser on a youth in an incident involving former police chief Bob Wasylyshyn's son, which the police originally delayed handling. In addition, there have been incidents involving the death of a youth, Giovanni Aleman, due to a police car involved in a high-speed chase without the use of emergency lights and sirens and involving the shooting of a single man armed with a knife by members of the EPS tactical squad. Mr. Speaker, incidents such as these have seriously eroded the public's confidence in the Edmonton Police Service as well as police services across Alberta.

In the wake of these high-profile incidents there have been serious concerns about the effectiveness of the police in conducting investigations into the misconduct of their members. These investigations are conducted without any public oversight and without any disclosure of all relevant information. Essentially, we are supposed to trust that the police are conducting themselves professionally and without bias. However, in order to restore the public's faith and confidence in the police, investigations and prosecutions of allegations of police wrongdoing should be conducted by a body with no connections to either the individual officers who are at the heart of the complaint or the police service of which those individuals are members. This is the only way to restore public confidence.

Our position should be that when there has been a form of police misconduct falling in terms of seriousness which can be dealt with internally, there should be an open and public forum responsible for examining the matter carefully and then ordering the appropriate measures to be taken to address any wrongdoing which is discovered.

There are two crucial elements to be addressed here, Mr. Speaker. The first is the need for actual independence and impartiality in order to ensure that the matter is being dealt with in accordance with established procedures and values. The second is the need to preserve the appearance of impartiality and objectivity so that members of the public maintain confidence in the system and will not be left with the impression that bias, favouritism, or prejudice had an influence in the outcome.

Mr. Speaker, Ontario has a special investigation unit which operates to oversee the police who act in the province. Their mandate is limited to situations in which death or serious injury may have been caused by police misconduct. The question here is: if the Ontario government could respond to the needs of its citizens by creating a truly independent civilian oversight, why can't the government of Alberta respond in kind to the wishes of its citizens?

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that with further amendments to this bill the concerns of both the police force and the public can be addressed. Substantial measures in the form of an independent civilian oversight are crucially needed in this province to serve the security needs of Albertans.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any one wish to rise on Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to make some brief comments on Bill 36, the Police Amendment Act. The police services play a very, very important role in our communities, in our society. They make our communities safe. They take huge risks at times to make sure that we feel safe and that criminal activity is either prevented from taking place or if it takes place, that those who are responsible for it are apprehended and dealt with according to law. I think it goes without saying that the importance of police services is highly appreciated and is critical to the stability of our society, to the well-being of our communities, and to the feeling of safety and security at a personal level by all of us.

We want to make sure that the legislation that deals with the members of the police services, with the commissions that handle matters related to police and its conduct are of the finest quality and of a kind that will inspire faith and trust, as between citizens on the one hand and police services on the other. We place in the hands of the police lethal weapons, the use of which can in an instant lead to loss of life, so there has to be a relationship between the citizens and the police services, a relationship of a type which is based in mutual trust, mutual respect, and accountability to the public.

When the Police Amendment Act was yet to reach this House but was being talked about, there was some anticipation that it would certainly lead to the very badly needed improvements in the current legislation, that it would fill those gaps effectively. Having done that, it would address the issue of the trust and confidence of the public in the police services and the conduct of police personnel when they're on duty on the streets, around our neighbourhoods, or on watch in general.

This anticipation, I guess, was further underscored and sharpened by the incident in Edmonton during the last provincial election, an incident that happened near or related to the Overtime bar. Mr. Speaker, on that evening I was also one of those politicians who were invited to the reception. I literally walked in and out, so I didn't realize what was going on. I spent about 20 minutes in the bar, but I had to go and door-knock in my constituency, so I quickly left after wishing the hosts the best for the evening. Little did I know that they were being watched by the police. That particular incident raised a whole lot of questions about who oversees the conduct of the police and whether or not the police should be accountable for the conduct of its members to the public. This bill was expected by Albertans to address their concerns.

Now, this bill really is in two parts. One part, of course, deals with the financing of policing services in rural areas and small towns and who pays for the RCMP and enhancing the police services. That part is good. That part is something that deserves the support of this House, no doubt. I think it will help make our rural communities safe. It will hopefully help to reduce the incidence of crime that has been on the increase in rural areas as it has been in urban communities.

Just a while ago as we were debating the estimates of the Department of Justice, our attention was drawn to the challenge of ever-increasing rates of crime in the province. The part of the bill that deals with enhancing the ability of police and the ability of small communities across our large province to provide law enforcement services that are better staffed, where costs are picked up by the government, I think that's a very good part of the bill. I want to express my support for that part of the bill.

The part of the bill that raises concerns and where I think this Police Amendment Act has failed, in fact, to address the concerns has to do with the failure of this bill to allow independent investigation of serious alleged police wrongdoing. The bill makes such independent investigations possible only if the Solicitor General in his wisdom thinks that such an investigation is justified. It's not mandated by law. So it opens the door slightly to independent investigation but still leaves all the powers in the hands of the Solicitor General, and Albertans are supposed to hope that the all-knowing Solicitor General will always make the right decision when such a decision is called for.

Given that no independent agency is being established to conduct such investigations, it seems as if the status quo of police investigating the police will continue to prevail in this province. The problem with this is that if the status quo prevails, the concern that I have is that the bill will then fail to restore the broken relationship, a relationship of trust, as I said, which is needed to be there, that broken relationship that presently exists now between the police and those who are subjected to surveillance by police, in many cases ordinary citizens, innocent citizens who should not be subjected to the kind of investigation, the kind of surveillance that police use and the information that is entirely inappropriate for them to use in order to engage in this kind of surveillance. So this bill, I'm afraid, does not help to repair the broken relationship.

What I wonder about, Mr. Speaker, is why it is that the civilian oversight mechanism has been rejected by this piece of legislation out of hand, why a provision has not been made, why space has not been created for such a body to be there in order for independent investigations to happen when there is a serious and compelling reason to engage in some investigations related to the alleged misconduct of the police service either in this town or in some other town across this province.

As we speak, we are now searching for what are called best practices around the world to import them into Alberta to strengthen our health care system, which ostensibly, according to the government, faces a challenge of sustainability. We're willing to go around the world to fish for best practices that we would then want to bring and that this government would want to bring into this province to make our health care, quote, unquote, sustainable. But why are we not willing to do a little bit of looking outside of the box, looking outside of this province, across this country to see if there are some successful practices that have already been adopted in other places, in other provinces which provide civilian oversight and, therefore, have served the purpose of strengthening the bond of trust and mutual respect between citizens and the police?

Ontario has such an agency, such an institution, called the Ontario Civilian Commission on Police Services. I just wonder why the Solicitor General has simply not seen fit to bring along something similar. It doesn't have to be identical. Our situation is different.

Ontario has provincial police; we don't. Certainly, we could adapt that practice to our own reality, to our own conditions, and could have made that arrangement part of this bill. It's not.

Now, it's true that if the police actions caused serious injury or death of a civilian, it would be investigated by a special investigations unit, a specialized civilian agency with the forensic and other expertise to conduct these types of investigations. That's provided for in the bill, but why not go one step further, as demanded by the recent experience of the Overtime bar incident, and establish and provide for an independent civilian agency in this province to conduct the investigations where those are needed?

Another flaw in the bill, Mr. Speaker, is that it imposes a one-year limit on making complaints against the police, and if one does not make a complaint within the one year, then the opportunity is gone forever. That's not a step in the right direction. Many people feel intimidated and wait for a long time before they make up their mind and want to take a chance, in the face of intimidations and all, to go and lodge a complaint. Limiting this period to one year I think is another very serious flaw in this proposed piece of legislation. As U of A law professor James Stribopoulos says, limiting the period in this way is generally problematic because what it does is reward people who have intimidated their victims so much that they don't report that crime for some years. Again, I don't understand why we are rolling back the period that's been previously allowed in the legislation for people to be able to lodge complaints, within perhaps a two-year time period. To roll it back to one year I think makes the bill less acceptable than the current legislation.

So these are some of the concerns that I have about Bill 36, Mr. Speaker. I wish I could support the bill. The first part of it, as I said, I'll support, but the second part of the bill falls far short of the expectations of Albertans with respect to what is needed to be done to improve the existing piece of legislation, and this Bill 36 certainly does not measure up to those expectations.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone wishing to rise on Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Anyone else wish to participate in the debate?

The hon. Solicitor General to close debate.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to close debate, please.

[Motion carried; Bill 36 read a second time]

Bill 40
Alberta Personal Income Tax
Amendment Act, 2005 (No. 2)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move Bill 40, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2005 (No. 2), for second reading.

Mr. Ducharme: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to speak at second reading of Bill 40, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2005 (No. 2). This bill proposes amendments to the Alberta family employment tax credit that will enhance the credit available to low- and middle-income working families.

The Alberta family employment tax credit was introduced in 1997. It aims to support low- and middle-income families and to encourage work effort. Families receive a refundable tax credit phased in at a rate of 8 per cent once the family meets the threshold of working income. One amendment in this bill would reduce the entry threshold to $2,760 from $6,500. This change will make more low-income working families eligible for the program. Because the credit is phased in, lowering the threshold will also increase the amount many low-income working families receive.

As a further improvement to many Alberta families, amendments in this act will extend credits to the third and fourth child in families that qualify. Currently only the first and second child qualify for this credit. This bill proposes to increase the maximum credit for the first child by $50 to $550. With these changes qualified families can receive a maximum of $550 for the first child, $500 for the second, $300 for the third, and $100 for the fourth. Overall, these changes will increase the benefits available to qualified working families.

Finally, to make sure these changes are protected over time, the Alberta family employment tax credit will be indexed to inflation. This indexation will begin with the July 2006 payment. The only element that would not be indexed is the entry level threshold. Not indexing this threshold means that low-income earners would not be moved out of the program if their working incomes do not advance with inflation. The credit will remain targeted at low- and middle-income working families by phasing out the credit at a rate of 4 per cent on a net family income over $25,000.

Overall, Mr. Speaker, the changes proposed to the Alberta family employment tax credit will serve to expand the credit to more families, increasing the amount available to many qualifying families, and indexing credits to inflation. I urge all members to support Bill 40.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'll call the committee to order.

Bill 29
Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped
Amendment Act, 2005

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. minister of seniors.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to make a few remarks in Committee of the Whole this evening on Bill 29, the Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Amendment Act, 2005.

Mr. Chairman, as you know, nearly all respondents, in fact about 95 per cent of them, said that they wanted AISH clients to have access to another type of benefit that would be more responsive to their individual needs. This is exactly what we will offer many AISH clients as a result of Bill 29.

As I said during second reading, I believe that this new benefit will make AISH a more holistic program. The living allowance recognizes that the severely disabled face challenges earning a living, and it provides them with a monthly benefit to cover the cost of their basic needs, such as food, clothing, and shelter. AISH also offers a comprehensive health benefit which is very responsive to the complex health needs of clients. In the past the program was unable to cover any costs that fell outside of these two areas because there wasn't an additional benefit category under the AISH program. That's why this new supplementary benefit will make such a difference in the lives of AISH clients.

With the increased living allowance and earnings exemptions for those who work, many AISH clients will be able to cover the various costs they experience throughout the year. Other clients may not and due to their personal situation may face pressures making ends meet. In those cases, AISH clients with liquid assets less than $3,000, those clients who need our help the most, will be able to apply for extra assistance for their personal expenses through supplementary benefits.

One example of a supplementary benefit would be in cases where clients are dealing with utility arrears. Clients who are having difficulty making ends meet might put off paying their utility bills, and their accounts could fall into arrears because of it. This is the type of expense that could be covered by the new supplementary benefit program on a case-by-case basis.

For those clients who are parents, the supplementary benefits could also be used to cover extra child care expenses or, as I said during second reading, school supplies or school fees. Other clients may benefit from courses to help them use computers or to build their skills that may allow them to work or simply be more active in our communities. These costs could be considered under the new supplementary benefit program.

The cost of food for those with special diabetic diets or diets connected to another medical condition may be quite high, and the supplementary benefit could offer some additional assistance here as well. We expect that the average benefit for eligible clients will be up to $200 at first, Mr. Chairman, and the expenses covered by the new benefits will be as unique as the needs of our clients. That is why this is such an important change to the AISH program. It will give AISH the flexibility that it didn't have before.

We have invested significant new funding in the AISH program, Mr. Chairman, $80 million in new funding this year alone. That brings our total spending on the AISH program to more than $488 million a year, and we are working to update the computer system so we can administer the new supplementary benefits later this year. We've budgeted 10 and a half million dollars for these benefits this year and $25 million for next year.

This is a significant investment in this new benefit, Mr. Chairman, but having said that, I know that there are still going to be new ideas that come forward such as the one that was given to me this evening by the hon. Member for St. Albert, who has a constituent that has identified that there are gaps in some of our disability programs and that there's a newly formed group, Disabilities Without Barriers, who is advocating for the creation of a program, which is called the nurturing assistance program, which I know would have been helpful to this constituent. Apparently, this program is available in four other provinces, is funded by other provincial governments, and is offered through the family centres in some locations.

I know that we will continue to look at programs such as these that are brought forward at appropriate times that may not fit exactly with the personal income support program but can still be reviewed to see if it can be incorporated in another way.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wish to thank the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports for presenting this bill and steering it through second reading and now into Committee of the Whole. In her opening remarks in second reading she outlined the fact that there is a proposal of a living allowance, $1,000, by next April as well as a health package which amounts to almost $300. This bill deals with a supplementary benefit for special-needs clients, and of course it's extremely important. As she has already said tonight as well as in her introductory remarks, it helps cover the costs of medical supplies and special transportation and child care.

I'm very excited about this bill because it demonstrates a shift to focusing on the real needs of clients to respond to what they really need. What does it cost for the medical supplies that they need? What does it cost for the extra things like school supplies that they need?

One of the reasons that I am involved in politics today – I think I was awakened from my political slumber in Alberta in 1994, when there were such severe cuts to social services. At that time I formed an organization called the Quality of Life Commission. We appointed commissioners to go into the city and listen to stories of people living in poverty. Among our commissioners were Senator Doug Roche and the late Lois Hole. They heard the stories, and we documented the stories. We brought them to government ministers and were told that, well, they were anecdotal.

I heard many sad, tragic stories, especially of people like single parents who were trying to survive, but the numbers just didn't add up in terms of being able to pay for rent and pay for food and pay for all the extra costs, especially something like school supplies, something so basic that most families take that for granted. Yet many single parents, those especially who were on AISH, could not afford to buy school supplies. At the particular church where I was minister, we actually organized grandparents to go out and shop for single-parent families so that they would have school supplies like sneakers for kids going to school. They need them. We did that out of the compassion of our hearts. At the same time, we bore quite a bit of resentment because we felt that the government should attend to the real needs of people, especially people on AISH. So I am very encouraged by this step. It's a step forward.

Of course, it's also important that there are well-trained people, preferably social workers. One of my laments is that social workers have been taken away from front-line intake in terms of the old SFI program and AISH. We need people who are well trained on the front line to be able to assess the real needs of people and be able to recommend what people should get in terms of medical equipment, school supplies, whatever.

I guess my lament in the past and, actually, my sadness still continues in respect to one item, and that is that there's no tying in of AISH rates with some kind of indexing, with some kind of annual review. At the economic summit a number of years ago it was Bettie Hewes in the socioeconomic sector group that proposed that there should be some mechanism so that we can get beyond the arbitrariness and the necessity of having to wait so long. People have had to wait 10 years before they could get a proper raise of the AISH allowance. I think that's tragic because the standard of living continues to go up, and people fall behind. So there should be some mechanism for an annual review so that it's not completely arbitrary.

I don't know why the government wants to put itself in the place of being a kind of paternalistic donor of money to people, keeping them dependent. What we need is to have a system that ensures a sense of security in people, that they know that as the standard of living goes up, there's going to be a mechanism in place that will examine and recommend changes in the income allowance and changes in the various items that they need. That would go a long way to instilling the confidence of people in the AISH community in the government.

In the case of the disabled community, Mr. Chairman, I think what ought to drive us in our support for the AISH community is not primarily a concern for finances – I know that was the issue 10 years ago – but it should be compassion and empathy for those that cannot work because of their disability. We ought to pour out our compassion for these people.

So I support this bill because it's a step in the right direction.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm grateful for the work and the care that has been put into this bill. How much difference this will make in the lives of Albertans on the current AISH levels is yet to be seen. I certainly hope that this is just the first step.

In the last 12 years the cost of food, housing, and other necessities of life has increased by 30 per cent. AISH support rose by only 5 per cent, one-sixth of the rise in living costs. Those who relied on this basic amount found themselves falling further into poverty. The government has said that it will review AISH support levels every two years but made no commitment to adjust the allowance after these reviews, and that is a concern. I believe this support needs to be reviewed and adjusted annually.

A constituent of mine sent me a letter this week detailing how a debilitating medical condition has left her in a position where she has lost everything she has worked hard for: job, home, pets, children, transportation, and, most important, her independence. So what will this extra $150 mean to her? I hope it's a sign that for the first time in 12 years voices are being heard and that they will be receiving the extra support they need.

I am pleased with the provision of the supplementary benefits program because I believe it has the potential to help, certainly, some individuals that are in terrible, terrible straits. That shouldn't happen. I think that as a government and as a society we must work hard to keep this momentum going. We need to keep an awareness of the severely handicapped in our society and make sure that this positive step is just that, a first step.

I wonder how we came to this position where those among us who have needs must suffer and feel inadequate. Somehow in this richest province in the 21st century we've got a 19th century Scrooge attitude, where breaks for business are justified while help to individuals is a drain on the public purse. The serious question is whether a maximum $1,000 per month will provide a decent quality of life.

One ignored fact about AISH recipients is that about 85 per cent of them are not capable of working. They have a severe permanent disability. What the vast majority get through AISH is basically their income. They need help. When AISH became an issue in the last election, the focus was upon what level of handicap was necessary to qualify as severely disabled. An unfortunate chance utterance by the leader of the government proved fortunate in forcing us all to look at this question more seriously and to revise our attitudes as well as the income level at stake.

I believe the focus has now shifted from the handicapped to the reflection on ourselves. An unconditional support for all in need among us is the mark of a civilized society. I believe we must ensure that the differently able among us enjoy a greater measure of the prosperity we enjoy living in this province. To the extent that this measure is a step in this direction, I support it, Mr. Chairman, yet it is only a step, and there is much farther that we can go. I would prefer that we move from looking on this as assistance to one of investment in the lives of our fellow citizens, as we are doing with the future of education.

I support this amendment to AISH with the hope that it is the beginning of strong and decisive action to adequately provide for the individuals who require this assistance. Thank you.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 29.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, in light of the hour I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 4, 2005

1:30 p.m.

Date: 05/05/04

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

On the Holocaust remembrance monument located on the grounds of the Alberta Legislature are found the following words: "I swore never to be silent whenever and wherever human beings endure suffering and humiliation. We must always take sides. Neutrality helps the oppressor, never the tormented." Those words were written by Elie Wiesel, a survivor of the Holocaust, a poet, and a Nobel peace prize recipient. As we pray, may God provide all innocent victims of racism and genocide eternal peace. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great privilege and an honour for me to rise on this glorious Alberta day and introduce somebody who probably needs no introduction and that is because she was the MLA for the Drayton Valley constituency from the 19th to the 21st Legislatures for the Progressive Conservative Party. Currently she is a tireless volunteer in the riding and has taught me how to door-knock and how to get elected. So I would like the hon. Shirley Cripps to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a group representing the Multiple Sclerosis Society of Canada, Alberta division. I'd like to welcome Neil Pierce, the president of the MS Society, Alberta division, and Adeline Blumer and Christine Purvis, staff members of the society. They'll be joined shortly by Judy Gordon, a former member of this Legislature and a member of the board of directors of the MS Society. They're in the Speaker's gallery and I'd ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a group of 17 visitors from the constituency of Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, namely from the Living Waters Christian Academy in St. Albert. They're a great-looking group of grade 9 and 10 students who are very keen on what we do here and are interested in the proceedings. They are led by group leaders Mr. Keith Penner and Mr. Nikke Gauthier as well as parent helper Mrs. Alida Milne. I believe they are in the public gallery. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great deal of pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you Mrs. Margaret Rodger from Acme and 38 other seniors from the Acme-Linden area that are here today to visit the Legislature. I learned just this last weekend from another senior in Acme that Acme was the former home of a very prestigious Albertan, the Hon. Helen Hunley, who was the first female Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta and the second female Lieutenant Governor in Canada. So I would ask the Assembly to welcome them all as they rise in the public gallery to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly 15 students from the Blackie school. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Margaret Speelman, and seven parents: Bev Bennett, Angie Scott, Jodie Parker, Jackie Pope, Heidi Siewert, Elsie Baker, and Deb Gore. This is the school that I graduated from, but please don't judge these students by my intellect. They are very bright students indeed. I believe they are scattered in both galleries, and I ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a dedicated Albertan and a colleague from the Alberta Alliance Party. Phil Gamache has recently been named the Edmonton region president of the Alliance Party. He was a candidate in the last provincial election, and he is committed to the citizens of Alberta, just as all of us are, in making our province better. I ask Phil and his wife, Carmen, who are seated in the public gallery today, to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this group.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly the future of rural Alberta and this province in general. We have 40 students from the Blessed Sacrament school with us here today, and they are accompanied by their teachers, parents, and group leaders Mrs. Folk, Mrs. Miller, Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Shopland, Mrs. Smith again, Mr. MacDonald, and Mr. Norris. They're seated in the public gallery. I would ask them to rise and please receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also have some guests today in the public gallery. Earlier today some MLAs from central Alberta met with the ATA presidents from the same region, and we had a very excellent discussion about some important issues. I would ask if Jere Geiger and the other presidents of the ATA would just stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Yom ha-Shoah, Holocaust Memorial Day

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize Yom ha-Shoah, Holocaust Memorial Day, which this year falls on the 5th of May. This week, as Canada and other countries celebrate the 60th anniversary of VE Day, Yom ha-Shoah reminds us of the price that the world paid as a result of the many horrific events of the Second World War. The highest cost of all was to the 6 million Jewish men, women, and children who were systematically persecuted and eradicated by the Nazi regime. Yom ha-Shoah reminds the world of the atrocities of the Holocaust as well as the senseless killing of millions of others through acts of genocide. Memorial services will be held in Edmonton and in Calgary to honour the many victims of this horrific period of human history.

In 2000 the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act was passed unanimously as an act of this Alberta Legislature. This legislation reaffirms Alberta's commitment to value the diversity of Alberta's cultural mosaic and to combat racism, violence, hatred, and persecution. The act reminds us how much the respect for justice, liberty, and human rights defines the way of life in our province, and the events of the Holocaust remind us of what can happen to civilized people when bigotry, hatred, and indifference reign.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great humility that I rise today along with the Minister of Community Development to acknowledge and reflect on Yom ha-Shoah, Holocaust Memorial Day. In 1959 Israel's parliament proclaimed a day to memorialize the 6 million Jewish people murdered during the Second World War. This day is known as Yom ha-Shoah. Shoah means whirlwind or destruction in Hebrew. Yom ha-Shoah is a day of remembrance and a day of hope. It is a remembrance that transcends all race, all religion, all humanity. We remember the unspeakable tragedies of the Holocaust in Europe, but we acknowledge all victims of genocide whether it be in Rwanda, Bosnia, or even present-day Sudan.

At the outbreak of the Second World War the Nazis' goal was to cleanse Germany of its Jewish population. As they conquered Europe, more Jewish populations fell under Nazi control. Jews in Poland, Ukraine, Italy, and France were methodically forced into concentration camps. The Holocaust evolved into the systematic and efficient murder of any person with Jewish roots. Six million people, including 1 and a half million children, were shot, gassed, or otherwise murdered. A full one-third of the world's Jewish population was entirely wiped out. Entire families simply disappeared.

So let us remember what today symbolizes. Yom ha-Shoah is observed around the world with candle-lighting, poems, prayers, and singing. It is a day of mourning and a day of hope. With the memories of concentration camps, of gas chambers, and of mass graves in our minds we must also remember the acts of courage, those who opposed the Nazis and risked everything to help the persecuted. They're called righteous Gentiles, a phrase used for non-Jewish people who risked their lives to save the Jewish during the Holocaust, people like Oskar Schindler; people like Dietrich Bonhoeffer, a German pastor and theologian who was persecuted, imprisoned, and eventually killed because he valiantly opposed Hitler's regime.

In a world that continues to have the Bosnians, the Rwandas, and the Sudans, let us continue to recognize and help those who fight for the oppressed.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we have unanimous consent to allow the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona to participate?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today is Holocaust Memorial Day, a day when we acknowledge and remember the horror of the wave of mass murder that swept across Europe during the Second World War. By the end of the war approximately 6 million people, mostly Jews, including 1.5 million children, perished at the hands of the Nazi murderers. The Holocaust remains one of humanity's darkest hours, and as such it will never be shelved as simply another moment in history. Indeed, for those who survived the concentration camps, for those whose families were violently torn apart, the Holocaust is a living and persistent reality.

As legislators and as citizens of a global community we have an obligation to ensure that each new generation understands the horror of the Holocaust and the ever-present possibility that humanity could plunge to such depths again. Indeed, if we are to be honest, we must acknowledge the atrocities of our own generation, such as the slaughters of Rwanda and the ongoing devastation in the Darfur region of Sudan.

On behalf of my colleagues in the NDP opposition and with all of the hon. members of the Assembly, I stand in remembrance of those who have suffered the horror of genocide and to renew our commitment to building peace throughout the global community.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we have unanimous consent to allow the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner to participate?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. I am truly grateful and humbled also to be here today with this Assembly to recognize Yom ha-Shoah. I, too, would like to add how important our freedom is and the importance of remembering the horrific genocides of the past and the importance that we always have the courage and strength to defend people's rights to life, liberty, and property and that we are diligent at removing all the forms of hatred and persecution in our society and that we run and stand at the sides of those who are being persecuted.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

Calgary Ward 10 Election

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's unwillingness and ineffectiveness to get to the bottom of allegations and scandals is mushrooming. This government ignored requests for a full public inquiry from the Liberal opposition, the people of Calgary, Calgary city council, and even the Court of Queen's Bench in the ward 10 scandal. Instead, they copped out with a weaker public inspection that may now never find the truth. My questions are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Given that the ward 10 scandal goes straight to the corruption of democracy, why did the minister let down the people of Calgary by calling a public inspection instead of a full public inquiry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to make a couple of points very clear to the hon. member. First of all, the process that was instigated by this government and by this minister was designed to accomplish two things. First of all, it was designed to allow a police investigation to determine whether there were any irregularities that were contrary to the Local Authorities Election Act and lay charges against any individuals if that were the case. That has in fact taken place. Charges have been laid. The police were also to investigate to determine whether or not any criminal offences occurred as a result of this election. I understand that that investigation, in fact, is still ongoing, and that process is unimpaired by the inspection process.

At the same time, we appointed Mr. Bob Clark to conduct an inspection to determine whether there were flaws within the electoral system that needed to be corrected, and Mr. Clark was to conduct an inspection and provide the government with recommendations on where those flaws were and what should be done to correct them.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will the minister inform this House about any conversations he has had on this subject with the Member for Calgary-Montrose?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I have had no conversations with the Member for Calgary-Montrose. The Member for Calgary-Montrose is a part of my caucus, I have conversations with him about many other things, but on this particular matter I thought it was inappropriate for me to have those kinds of conversations.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the Member for Calgary-Montrose is prepared to testify with what he says is a lot of information that may be interesting to the public, will the minister now call a full public inquiry?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the reason the process that was implemented was chosen was so that it could allow for two concurrent processes to take place at the same time, the police investigation, which will arrive at any wrongdoing individuals, and an inspection, which will determine whether there were flaws within the system. This was a process that was specifically chosen to allow those two processes to go on concurrently. To do anything else would have required waiting until after the police investigation, which, I mentioned earlier, is still ongoing, before we get into the next step, and frankly I think Albertans deserved a lot better than that.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Enron Activities in Alberta

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Legal transcripts explicitly reveal Enron traders cavalierly joking about manipulating power markets in Alberta, yet the Minister of Energy continues to be evasive and to ignore all the evidence that shows that Enron ripped off electricity consumers here in Alberta. Meanwhile, several U.S. states have initiated lawsuits to return the illegal windfall profits of Enron to where they rightfully belong, in the pocketbooks of power consumers. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that Project Stanley materials have shown up in a number of lawsuits and investigations in Texas and in New York, has the minister or his staff contacted authorities in those jurisdictions where similar market abuses have taken place?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, it was at the investigation insistence of both, clearly, our department and the market surveillance administrator asking for and requesting transcripts of one in particular, of Washington state. We have always been interested to make sure that we have the complete and full information of any evidence that's coming forth. That said, there have been some investigations in the past. This continues to be a subject that we've said is a serious matter for the market surveillance administrator. They will continue to act on any evidence that is brought forward. If they've got some new information, please bring it forward.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: has the minister or his staff contacted the U.S. Department of Justice office in northern California where criminal indictments for similar offences have been issued?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, with that specific instance I am not aware of it. If there are some more, we'll be happy to inform him later.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that the following Enron traders, John Forney, Jeff Richter, and Tim Belden, admitted – admitted – their guilt of power-price manipulation in the United States, how many of these greedy traders appear in the Project Stanley tapes conspiring to drive up prices here in Alberta?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, Project Stanley at that time has been investigated. That does go back to a 1999 circumstance. It does also correlate specifically with a time when legislative hedges were in place. Alberta consumers were not harmed by this if they attempted to accomplish it. They were not because any excess volatility in price would have been returned to the Power Pool, in which Alberta's consumers would have been protected.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Policing Services in Crowsnest Pass

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Crowsnest Pass residents are stunned by the decision to hold back police funding for their community. This government has ignored legislation requiring them to provide more funding for police, has not lived up to its commitments to provide more policing to rural areas, and has behaved like a neighbourhood bully. My questions are to the Solicitor General. Can the minister explain specifically what part of the Police Act allows the government to supersede the Crowsnest Pass regulation, that is in effect until 2012?

The Speaker: Hon. member, we all know – and I've said this several times before – that interpretations of statutes are not purview and part of the question period.

Hon. minister, if you wish to comment, go ahead.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Crowsnest Pass regulation deals only with the calculation of grants. It is not applicable to the Police Act with regard to the fact that the province pays for policing to a certain threshold.

Mr. Speaker, I've met with the mayor on several occasions now, and we've discussed the issues. The special regulation under the MGA, the Municipal Government Act, does provide the community of Crowsnest Pass with the opportunity for provincial grants that they can receive, whether it's three small or four small communities or one large one.

The issue is that under the Police Act it's specific that the population threshold is 5,000. It's for policing grants, not for municipal grants. It's for policing grants, as was discussed with the mayor.

Mr. Speaker, we have to be very careful because this is a difficult situation, other than the fact that there are communities, like Ponoka, Rocky Mountain House, Peace River, all with the same population, which are all receiving roughly an increase of about 150 per cent in their policing grant this year, which will give them approximately a quarter of a million dollars, about $150,000 more than they received last year. So these are some of the issues we're dealing with with the town of Crowsnest Pass.

Dr. B. Miller: When will the minister table the intimidating letter that was sent to the municipality of Crowsnest Pass, which the mayor described as being "like something out of The Godfather – we'll have your signature on this document, or your brains"?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, it wasn't an intimidating letter. It was a letter that was provided to me by the department, which drafted it. It was also in consultation with the Minister of Justice, with regard to the fact that we did get an interpretation of the act from Justice to ensure that our position was just in fact that, that they are treated as a municipality that is over 5,000 as their population is 6,200. Therefore, the letter did go out. They have an opportunity to sign the agreement and receive a cheque from the province for $250,000.

Dr. B. Miller: Did the minister consult with the residents of Crowsnest Pass before deciding that the Crowsnest Pass regulation was superseded by the Police Act? Why was there no public consultation?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are 30 communities between 5,000 and 20,000, all of which received this funding model this year and anywhere from 36 per cent to 198 per cent increases over last year's funding. We didn't consult with those communities. We did consult with the AUMA and the AAMD and C. The AAMD and C president, as well as the AUMA, is extremely pleased with the funding they've received for those smaller communities with regard to the smaller communities they have between that 5,000 and the 20,000 threshold.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Securities Commission

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is allowing the Alberta Securities Commission to act like a bunch of belligerent, sullen bullies, and it's time we grounded them. The arrogance and intransigence are astounding. This notion that they're going to take the Auditor General, who is an officer of this Legislature, to court to stop him from getting to the truth is beyond the pale. How does this look to investors not only in Alberta but across Canada? My question is to the Government House Leader. What is it going to take to get this government to stop the ASC from challenging the authority of this Legislature?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance has over and over in this House indicated that there's a process in place to review the issues arising out of the Alberta Securities Commission. The Minister of Finance has indicated that the Auditor General will be doing a review. The Auditor General and the Securities Commission are in the process of determining the scope and the type of documents that will be available and the access. The Auditor General has an act which he follows, the Securities Commission has an act which they follow, and it appears that in the course of their discussion they may have to consult the court as to how those two acts interrelate.

Mr. Speaker, that's a normal process although perhaps an unfortunate one. One would hope that they would be able to sort those out themselves, but when the interim chair of the commission is appointed imminently, I'm sure the appointment of that chair will help to resolve the issues so that those two organizations, the Auditor General's office and the Securities Commission, can come to an agreement on the scope of the audit, and that audit can then proceed.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General said that this has never happened in 25 years, him being taken to court. He's an officer of this Legislature. I'm asking the minister in regard to that: if there's a problem with the Securities Act, will the government change the Securities Act so that the people of the province can get some real answers here?

The Speaker: The hon. Acting Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure this will be a learning process for all of us with respect to what might need to . . . [interjections] No. We should be open to learn from procedures.

This situation has come up where the Auditor General is looking at an audit of the Securities Commission processes. The Securities Commission has concerns under its act with respect to the information which it has and the circumstances under which it holds that information, and it has obligations under its act. If they can't come to an agreement about access after both having had legal advice, there may be an appropriate circumstance for the court to determine what's appropriate, and we'll learn from that process.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, this is becoming a joke across Canada. When will this government find its spine, dismiss all the ASC commissioners for their contempt and belligerence, and appoint an interim trustee to run the Securities Commission?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I think it's very presumptuous of the hon. member to suggest that all members of the commission ought to be dismissed. Certainly, if there are any issues that come out of the review, that will be determined at that time.

As I indicated, the appointment of an interim chairman is imminent. The current chairman's term is expiring within the next day or two. The new interim chair will be independent and fair and will ensure that there's a thorough review conducted. We expect that the interim chair will work with the Auditor General and the commissioners to help come to grips with the scope of the audit and resolve that process, and we expect this to happen appropriately and in due course.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Electoral Reform

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the past two months the Premier has stated that he's had to put his foot down on traditional marriage and oppose the original smoking ban legislation. Between 1995 and 2001 citizens' initiative legislation was brought to this House six times and was not passed. This government has stopped legislation to improve democracy and accountability in Alberta. British Columbia is having the first set-date provincial election in Canada, eliminating the opportunity for the government to time an election. My question is to the Government House Leader. Will this government follow the leadership of the B.C. government and commit to democratic reform by providing Alberta with a set date for our next election?

The Speaker: The hon. Acting Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has provided leadership to British Columbia on all sorts of matters that the government of British Columbia has followed with respect to democratic renewal. They have looked at our processes with respect to our standing policy committee processes. They have looked at processes in terms of governance and efficiency. We, in fact, have been leaders across the country in many aspects of democratic renewal, and we will obviously also look at other things that happen across the country, including B.C., with respect to democratic renewal. It's in everybody's interest to make sure that the public is interested and informed and active and involved in the democratic process.

Mr. Hinman: The question was on set election dates.

Mr. Speaker, again to the Government House Leader: will this government improve MLA accountability and return the power to the people, where it belongs, by passing legislation giving Albertans the right to recall their elected representatives?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member said that the question was about a set election date, so I'm not sure what the supplemental about recall might be then, and one certainly couldn't have discerned the question from the preamble. However, the answer is: we're not at the present time looking at recall legislation.

Mr. Hinman: To the Government House Leader again: will this government allow Albertans to have direct input into issues like defining and solemnizing marriage here in Alberta by passing citizens' initiative legislation?

The Speaker: The hon. Acting Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Citizens' referendum legislation has been brought before this House, as the hon. member mentioned in his preamble, quite a number of times and certainly could be brought at any time by a member through that process again. It's not currently on the government's legislative agenda.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Emergency Preparedness

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week is National Emergency Preparedness Week, and Albertans are getting lots of information on how to prepare for emergencies. In fact, an event on Monday in Medicine Hat focused on the emergency public warning system and the role it plays in giving Albertans advance warning of emergencies. My first question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. With Emergency Preparedness Week focusing on helping Albertans prepare for disasters and emergencies, what is the provincial government doing to ensure that it is prepared as well?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is quite correct in pointing out that this is, in fact, Emergency Preparedness Week. The message that the government is asking citizens to do is to assess risks in their lives, to prepare a plan should an emergency exist, and to prepare the necessary infrastructure so that they can be self-sustaining for a short period of time during an emergency. That's exactly what the government does within its own bounds through Emergency Management Alberta, which is a division within Municipal Affairs. This EMA is known across North America as a leader in emergency planning. We work with each of the departments to ensure that there is continuity should an emergency arise in Alberta, and we work with municipalities to assist them in their emergency planning as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you. My next question is to the same minister. What is the government doing to help municipalities prepare for these emergencies?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, almost on a daily basis our officers work with every municipality, with First Nations throughout the province to ensure that they have adequate plans in place to deal with emergency situations, and on a regular basis they rehearse and demonstrate through mock disasters that they are capable of following through on those plans, identify concerns that need to be addressed, so that they truly are ready in the case of a real situation.

Mr. Prins: Again to the same minister. The other day there were reports in the media regarding the RCMP's terrorist tip line. What is government doing to protect Albertans from threats of terrorism?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the issue of the antiterrorism tip line is more the responsibility of the Solicitor General, and the member may want to ask the Solicitor General on the specifics of that.

I would like to comment that we have an antiterrorism plan in place that is through EMA, that links the private sector and the public. It's been in place for over three years. The plan that we have in place is, again, being acknowledged as a leader in North America. Our counterterrorism crisis management plan has impressed not only other provinces and the federal government but has been recognized by the U.S. Department of Homeland Security for the comprehensiveness of its approach. The department is inundated almost daily with requests from other jurisdictions in North America for some information on the plans that we have in place here in Alberta.

Natural Resources Conservation Board Appeals

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Speaker, the role of the NRCB is to make fair rulings on large developments like confined feeding operations. Advisers to the NRCB aid them in specific areas that deal with development of regulations. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: are advisers of the NRCB allowed to represent companies in appeals to the NRCB?

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, the role of the NRCB is to have a process put in place for applications for confined feeding operations under the legislation that is put in place under the department of agriculture, under the AOPA best practices legislation, to make sure that the environmental impacts of confined feeding operations are taken into consideration during the entire process. Where the process requires consultation with applications that are in front of the board, definitely the people that are making application have the ability to go in front of the board to make their case.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: does it suggest a conflict of interest on behalf of the NRCB to have a lawyer advise them on public policy and then the same lawyer represent a company in appeal of that NRCB ruling?

The Speaker: Well, I've warned once before about interpretation.

Mr. Coutts: I'm going to answer that question, Mr. Speaker, by the fact that the NRCB has been dealing with confined feeding operations over the last two and a half years. Part of the legislation was to have a review at the end of two and a half years. We're doing a review of the process right now, and those are the types of things that are being reviewed by the independent consultant.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question to the same minister: will the minister commit to investigating if there have been actual conflicts or potential conflicts in a situation in regard to advisers to the NRCB turning around and representing companies applying to the NRCB for expansion approval?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, through the review that's being presently put in place and in front of all stakeholders, those are the types of things that will come forward in recommendations, and we will deal with the recommendations when they come to not only our department but to my desk.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ghost-Waiparous Access Management

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Ghost-Waiparous area, northwest of Cochrane, is highly regarded by Albertans as an ideal place to enjoy a host of outdoor recreational opportunities, everything from OHV trail riding to camping, hunting, fishing, and horseback riding. Significant growth in the province has made this area an even more popular one, and increasing usage has raised some safety and sustainability issues. In response, government has committed to developing a management plan that could effectively preserve the area while still ensuring accessibility for users in the future. My questions are for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Firstly, with the ongoing public consultations to resolve these issues, can the minister tell us what the timelines are for getting an access management plan in place for the area?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Following some very good consultation over the past two years, including something that's never been done before by our department, a public phone survey, we're moving ahead with a plan for the Ghost-Waiparous area, which is in the member's constituency. This summer we'll focus on implementation efforts of that plan based on public safety, education, and awareness. This summer also we will continue to make sure that we enforce applicable legislation that is in place by having more forest guardians on the ground to help us with the enforcement. We'll take a look at, also, public and stakeholder consultation, and we will continue to work on a plan for the Ghost-Waiparous area that is based on public safety, reducing the impact on our resource, and reducing conflicts between the users but, more importantly, for a variety of recreational uses.

Mrs. Tarchuk: To the same minister: how are the minister and his department responding to the growing concerns of OHV users regarding significant reduction of access to them specifically?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, this is a very important question. Albertans want to be able to leisure on their land, and the Ghost-Waiparous remains a good place to do this. It's not about stopping off-highway vehicle use; it's about planned use. We've had a couple of situations in the Ghost. The original trail system was not built for the type of activity or the amount of activity in off-highway vehicle use in the area. In addition, what's happened is that unplanned trails have been developed because of all of this use over time.

Albertans want a managed trail system. We found that out by the phone survey. What we're going to do is that we're going to balance the environmental impact as well as the recreational use, and we'll work with the stakeholders over the summer and into the fall to develop that plan.

Mrs. Tarchuk: Lastly, to the same minister: what preparations are under way to manage the thousands of users expected in the Ghost-Waiparous this summer, starting with the May long weekend?

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is talking about public safety and the need for more enforcement to ensure that public safety, and I want to assure Albertans as well as this hon. member that that is a priority for our department as well. This year's budget has given us new resources to employ more folks for education and enforcement. This particular summer we're going to have between our department, the RCMP, the Department of Community Development, and the Department of Environment 30 enforcement staff out there in the Ghost, and we'll have more people on the ground to make sure that public safety is a priority. Therefore, education outreach and enforcement will definitely be our priority.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Ministry of Seniors Financial Statements

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the 2003-2004 annual report the Auditor General issued a reservation of opinion to the ministry of seniors as the audit found that approximately $21.7 million worth of assets which were retained by management corporations were not stated in the financial statements. My question to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: what measures has this minister taken to address the issue of incomplete financial statements?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We do take the Auditor General's report very seriously. The area of management bodies, as you know, is through the Alberta Housing Act, and in the Housing Act, that was put into place about 1994, management bodies are arm's length from the government.

The operating surpluses, that the hon. member has brought to the Assembly, actually are an important issue. What happens is that management bodies retain operating surpluses for their future operations and some capital, but also part of the operating surpluses are given to the ministry. Management bodies report theirs in their financial plan each year, and the ministry has not been recording that along with the ministry's operating surpluses. So we will be working with the Auditor General and the Finance department in order to make that happen.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you for that answer. It partly fits in with my next question. How was the $21.7 million in the surpluses and assets reported, and has interest been accumulating on that amount?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My understanding is, as I indicated, that the management body reports their operating surpluses within their own financial report. The ministry reports through our financial process, but we are putting both together in that we're moving the management bodies' operating surplus reporting through to the department and the ministry. As I indicated, hon. member, it's an important issue. This has to change, and we are working with the Auditor and the Finance department in order to make that happen.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Further to that explanation, can the minister ensure that the ministry and department would not deviate from generally accepted principles of accounting?

Mrs. Fritz: I can ensure that that will happen. As I indicated, I am learning from the Auditor as well as the Finance department how to put the measures in place that are meeting the objectives of what both the management body has and what the ministry has, hon. member, and I will ensure that that will happen. You'll see that change by the next report.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Municipal Infrastructure Program

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of 17 municipalities in the riding that I represent, I want to commend the government for $3 billion of infrastructure funding over five years. The questions that I actually have come from municipal leaders in my constituency, and they deal with a little bit of uncertainty on accessing this particular funding. My first question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. I would like him to clarify on his behalf for these municipalities if they, in fact, have to provide matching funds out of very limited reserves.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. I'm pleased to report that not only do municipalities not have to use their own funds to match these dollars; in fact, it's been noted in this House before, but I think it's worth noting again, that there are ongoing infrastructure grants that are also flowing through to municipalities this year of some approximately $400 million. That added to the $600 million from the allocation this year is almost a billion dollars.

Municipalities are free to use the grants that were included in the $600 million to match other municipal infrastructure grants that are available to them each and every other year. So not only do they not have to match the infrastructure dollars; they can use the infrastructure dollars to come up with matching dollars for other government programs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Because of the varying sizes and various scopes of different projects, these same municipalities have asked me to ask you, Minister, if you could clarify for them the types of projects that they can actually use to qualify for this funding.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, when I met with municipalities before Christmas in preparation for the budget and in fine-tuning this plan, I heard repeatedly that the program needed to be as flexible as possible. It needed to reflect the priorities of locally elected councils. That's exactly what this program does. The program will be as flexible as it needs to be to accommodate the priorities as established by the locally elected councils.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, and again it's a clarification. Some of the constituent municipalities, Minister, have heard different, varying reports. They would like to know if, in fact, they can use some of these funds to purchase new or replacement heavy equipment.

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, yes, they can is the very quick and dirty answer to that one. We will be sitting down with the municipalities and going over some of their priorities. Again, as the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs alluded, we will be offering a sign-off on the particular projects. We want to ensure that before they buy heavy equipment, for example, their water treatment plants are in proper condition and that their roads are good. So the quick and dirty answer is yes, but the proviso is that it has to be in the top list of their priorities and, more importantly, their needs for infrastructure within their particular municipality.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Wildlife Protection

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Wildlife protection in Alberta is a laudable goal, but from this government it's been all talk and no rock. This government has made it increasingly difficult for wildlife officers to do their job in enforcing poaching laws, and they have not taken decisive action to provide enough enforcement officers in the field. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Can the minister explain how it's possible to efficiently catch poachers and protect endangered species with only 127 officers for the entire province?

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm a little surprised at the question because even though his comment about 127 enforcement officers is accurate, the budget and the estimates were before this House on, I believe it was, just last Wednesday night, a week ago, where the extra dollars that we are getting are going into more enforcement on the ground – not in offices, not in towers, but on the ground – for fish and wildlife so that they can get out there and do the job that Albertans want them to do. We expect, with the increase in our budget, to hire 15 additional enforcement officers for this year.

Mr. Eggen: Well, given that we were having conflicting announcements – it was 10, and then it was 40, and now it's 15 – when is this ministry going to commit sufficient money to have necessary resources so that officers can conduct routine, proactive patrols and nab poachers in the act instead of having to only react to calls once they've been made or complaints?

Mr. Coutts: In addition to the fish and wildlife officers that I just mentioned, Mr. Speaker, we are also hiring an additional 10 guardians that will help do some outreach and some education in our communities to let people know about wildlife issues in their area as well as the regulations that are out there on fish and wildlife. Not only do we have more fish and wildlife officers, but we have guardians that will be out there on the land, talking with people, doing education and outreach, and they will be involved in monitoring of the resource as well. So all in all, this particular budget for fish and wildlife is good news for the first time in about five years.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, the fish and wildlife officers in the field, the Alberta Fish and Game Association, and even some members of the Tory caucus have stated that the number of fish and wildlife game officers, including the numbers that are being proposed to be increased, are inadequate. Why won't the government make a commitment to hire enough fish and wildlife officers to do the job properly here in this province?

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly if you want to have a fish and wildlife officer on every square mile or whatever they are today – I'm sorry; I'm in miles. I'm a little old-fashioned. There will never be enough money to do that. In addition to the 15 staff and the 10 guardians, we're hiring more support staff in the rural offices to help handle phone calls and those types of things.

Again, all in all, we continue to make upgrades. Albertans expect that. Albertans have wanted that for a long time. We're making those moves, and we're making that commitment to Albertans in this budget to improve the enforcement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Postsecondary Education Review

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, yesterday I think we did get some good news in this House as the Minister of Advanced Education announced a complete review of the postsecondary system in Alberta. I'm encouraged that the minister has apparently moved from separate funding and affordability reviews to something more complete, more comprehensive. The next step, a small but important one, is to accept the Learning Commission's recommendation and make it independent. My question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. Will the minister clarify whether his statement yesterday that "we're doing a full . . . review" means that this review will be an internal government exercise and not an independent review, as called for by the Learning Commission?

The Speaker: The hon. Acting Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This should be no surprise to the hon. member. I've mentioned it in the context when we've discussed questions with respect to the change in status of Mount Royal College. I've discussed it in the context of estimates. We are looking at the postsecondary system in this province in a full and complete manner to determine whether we have a system in place which will mean that Albertans can meet all the opportunities available to them and compete out into a global economy. That's what it's about: being best in class. That's the review we're doing. We're doing it involving stakeholders in the system, we're doing it involving external experts, we're doing it in a broad-based manner, and we're doing it comprehensively.

Mr. Taylor: Aah. But, Mr. Speaker, who's the "we"? Who's going to conduct this review?

Mr. Hancock: That would be my job, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Taylor: Hmm. Okay. Well, Mr. Speaker, given that most of the public voted for parties other than the government party in the last election, will the minister at least consider including members from all parties in the forthcoming review process? Can't hurt.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, as I've always said, I'm open to advice and direction from all parts of the House and from all parts of the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the report from the MLA AISH Review Committee was tabled in the Assembly. This is great news for my constituents that depend on AISH and other community supports to function on a daily basis. While AISH recipients are pleased with the increase to their basic monthly supports, they are concerned, however, about the delayed benefit that they are entitled to. My question to the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: given that it is a lot easier to access employment opportunities available to AISH recipients during the spring and summer months, why was the ceiling on extra income for AISH recipients not increased in April with the increase in basic income supports?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are making a number of important changes to renew the AISH program. The hon. member did mention one, which is increasing the earning exemptions for our AISH clients to assist them to be able to keep more money at the end of the month. In order to make this happen, it's necessary to go through the regulation and the legislation. For example, we were in Committee of the Whole last night. That has to be put in place and proclamation, Royal Assent, those kinds of things, with the legislation. I'm hoping that will take place by the middle of June. Along with that, we also need to update the computer system. There's a lot of work to be done there. I know the deadline, as the member mentioned, is for October, but I have directed my staff to implement those changes as quickly as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister answered my second question, but I'll ask my third question. Given that the government accepted the MLA committee recommendation to review how income is treated under AISH, can the minister tell us what the criteria for that review will be?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've had an opportunity to meet with a number of community organizations, and the reason I have done that is, first of all, they called, knowing about the AISH review and whatnot, but also because they have the ideas about how they would like to see this income clarified. That's the income that's fully exempt or partially exempt or not exempt at all. As you know, AISH recipients may have income in another way. For example, it could be insurance settlements, investment in trusts that people have left for their loved ones, or federal benefits. There's a variety of ways. The plan is to continue to meet with the stakeholders. I've assured them of that. It will take time to formulate the overall clarification of the rules.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Achievement Testing

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Provincial achievement tests, particularly in the early grades, are costly, bureaucratic, and provide little information that can actually be used to help students, yet despite calls for change from teachers, testing experts, provincial advisory committees, and the government's own review of special education, we've yet to see any real action. My question to the Minister of Education: when will the minister follow the example of Manitoba and cancel its grade 3 testing program in favour of diagnostic testing that can provide specific guidance on how to help kids learn?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, provincial achievement testing has its role. We do it at the grades 3, 6, 9 levels, as all members here would know. In fact, I've had some active discussions about this issue with parents, with teachers, with school boards. It's one of those issues that on any given day can go one way or the other. Generally speaking, I think there's an understanding if not a desire to know where your child fits or how well your child is doing in comparison with all the other children at that grade level across the province. I don't by any stretch of the imagination want to infer that it's necessarily 100 per cent of the people involved with education who feel that way, but the majority still do.

Now, I should just indicate, too, Mr. Speaker, that if there are children who have difficulties with exams or have other reasons for not wanting to write them, superintendents have the ability to waive them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister's position that the time spent on memorization and teaching to the test is more valuable than targeted remediation for students with learning problems? Is that what he's saying?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think I made it pretty clear when I addressed the issue of grade 4 provincial achievement tests what some of those feelings I had were. They're very strong feelings because we all want to help those children who are in need of extra assistance with numeracy skills or literacy skills. That's one reason why we increased funding in those areas by tens of millions of dollars. It was to help out FNMI students, to help out ESL students, to help out special-needs children, and so on. Now, as more of this comes to my attention as we look at other ways of delivering diagnostic assessments, for example, for those children who didn't do so well in the grade 3 tests, then more programming will be developed to address their specific needs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister's own five-year-old report Shaping the Future for Students with Special Needs calls for a program of early identification and screening of students, when is the minister going to act on this report?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't recall it being my report because I've only been in this portfolio for five months, not five years. However, I wouldn't mind visiting that particular document. It hasn't come across my desk just now. If there were some undertakings there from previous ministers to look at it, I'll certainly be happy to do that, but at the moment it's not on my radar screen, although there might be ideas and suggestions from it that have already been taken forward. Certainly, a vast array of them were likely covered by the Learning Commission, and I'll be commenting on that further during the estimates for Education this afternoon.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Home Schooling

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I and other MLAs on the Standing Policy Committee on Education and Employment have been hearing from a number of constituents asking us about the home education regulation changes. When will the Education minister move ahead with these new recommendations?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the home education regulation review, as I recall, started back in January of 2003, and there has been some significant movement forward in addressing them. In fact, my predecessor had done a fairly yeoman job of moving them forward, but there were some issues and concerns that needed some further debate, hon. member, and that debate has taken place. A little more will still take place.

The important thing to remember is that home education exists in this province for about 6,700 young students, and it exists as a matter of choice, as do public schools and francophone schools and separate schools and charter schools, and so on. So there's a lot to this. Some progress has been made, and I expect it'll be moving forward very soon.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is also for the Minister of Education. You mentioned some changes. What are the improvements that such changes would make for home-educated students?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, let me answer that this way. During the consultation process a number of ideas were put forward by home educating parents. Some very compelling reasons to address some areas, however, also surfaced. For example, there is a need to improve some of the linkages to student learner outcomes, to educational plans as derived by parents in consultation with the school board or a private board, with respect to making some of the wording more user friendly, with respect to some of the achievement tests and/or equivalency tests, and the reporting of results regarding numeracy and literacy levels. There was quite a bit on the table, and all of them were seen to be not only important but also important improvements to what is there now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that home educators do take their jobs very seriously, have home educators had any inputs or consultations on these new regulations?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yes, Mr. Speaker, home educators had considerable input into the new home education regulation proposals, and that goes back to at least January of 2003. I think there were a number of meetings that were held with my predecessor, and in follow up to that, Mr. Speaker, I went to Red Deer a couple of weeks ago and attended the Alberta Home Education Association conference and annual general meeting. I spoke there. I answered questions for quite a long time. So there was an exchange of ideas and information even then and also during the hour, hour and a half of walking around that I did with some of the executive members. So I would answer shortly by saying that home educators have had considerable input into all of the proposed amendments, and then we'll just see how they wind up here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Crime Prevention

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Automobile theft, youth violence, and drug abuse are issues of great concern to many of my constituents in Edmonton-Rutherford. In one recent case a stolen vehicle was recovered by the Edmonton Police Service with three suspects inside. However, because none of the three was behind the wheel at the time and, therefore, not in control of the vehicle, theft charges apparently could not be laid. My question is for the Solicitor General. Given that we average 25 to 30 stolen vehicles in Edmonton alone every single day, does this government have a plan to address the alarming increase in the number of automobile thefts?

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The short answer is yes, we do. In fact, there is an Alberta Vehicle Theft Committee in place right now and has been for two and a half years.

It's under the Ministry of Government Services. It has stakeholders at the table that are from the Calgary Police Service, the Edmonton Police Service, and the RCMP as well as five government ministries that are working along with them as well as members from the industry, the Insurance Bureau of Canada, the registries association, and a number of other areas that are looking at vehicle theft in this province.

The hon. member is very right, in fact, in saying that a vehicle is stolen – I'm not sure about 25 a day in Edmonton, but it is at least one every half an hour throughout the day in the province of Alberta. So those numbers are very high. That's about $60 million a year of vehicle thefts in this province. A lot of that is organized crime, but a lot of that is joyriders as well.

We definitely are looking at all of those issues, whether it's a vehicle off the street or whether it's organized crime and vehicles moving out of the country in containers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question, actually, is in regard to organized crime. What is the government doing to deal with the increase in vehicle chop shops, a major driver behind automobile thefts?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, the organized crime units and the auto theft units of the police services, all of them – all of the five major police services have auto theft units and are working with those. Obviously, the serial numbers of those vehicles are being looked at. They're being matched.

This is one of the areas within organized crime that is on the agenda. Again, the Vehicle Theft Committee, that is being chaired by Staff Sergeant Derek Curtis of the Calgary Police Service, is looking at all of these issues and looking at 19 recommendations that I believe will be coming forward to the Standing Policy Committee on Justice and Government Services here in the next few weeks. So we are moving forward with the recommendations in that direction.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the obvious and documented connection between property crime and illegal drug use, will the minister commit to expanding Harry Ainlay's drug dog program in order to provide similar drug education in all junior and senior high schools across the province?

Mr. Cenaiko: That's a very good question that the hon. member asked. I'm not aware of the program, and I'd ask that he send some information to me with regard to it.

I can tell you, though, Mr. Speaker, that we are very interested in utilizing drug dogs in the schools. We do want to work with the Minister of Education but, as well, with the school boards and the parent associations to ensure that if there is an opportunity to utilize a drug-sniffing dog, we definitely will do that as long as we get co-operation from the school board and the parent associations.

Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call upon the first of several members to participate, the historical vignette of the day. On May 4, 1910, the Royal Canadian Navy was formed. Shortly thereafter Albertans began to play important roles in this honourable institution. One example of our contribution to the Canadian naval tradition can be found right here in the capital city of Edmonton. In 1923 the White Ensign was run up the flagpole for the first time in Edmonton when a naval half-company was formed in this city.

The group quickly established a reputation for excellence, and in June of 1939 they were honoured to be posted along the driveway of the Legislature Building during the royal procession of Their Majesties King George VI and Queen Elizabeth. In 1960 they were the first naval division in Canada to win both the naval division's efficiency trophy and the Barry German trophy for the most improved naval reserve division in the same year.

This naval reserve division remains active in Edmonton and continues to contribute to Alberta's proud military tradition.

Members' Statements

Multiple Sclerosis

Mr. Louheed: Mr. Speaker, May is MS Awareness Month in Alberta. That is why the hon. members of this Legislature have received a gift of a red carnation and an information piece informing them about multiple sclerosis. Multiple sclerosis is an unpredictable, at times disabling disease of the central nervous system, the brain and spinal chord. The disease attacks the protective myelin covering of the central nervous system, causing inflammation and often destroying the myelin in patches. This can result in weakness, fatigue, muscle stiffness, numbness, speech problems, memory problems, and double vision.

Canada has one of the highest incidences of MS in the world. In Alberta there are an estimated 10,000 people living with MS. We do not yet know the cause of MS, nor do we have a cure for it.

During the first week of May the MS Society will be conducting its annual MS carnation campaign. Funds raised will go to support MS research and to provide services to Canadians with multiple sclerosis. Buying a carnation can help the MS Society get one step closer to discovering a cure.

We look forward to the day when researchers, hopefully here in Alberta, discover the cause and cure for multiple sclerosis. Until then, Mr. Speaker, let's all wear a carnation in support of the MS Society.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Town of High River

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are lucky to be alive in a province which has two world-class cities. Calgary and Edmonton have both played host to international events, and with their populations both approaching the million-person mark, the concerns of these two great cities are often front-page news. Given these circumstances smaller communities and rural areas, which are home to roughly a third of our population, can often be overlooked.

That is why it is my pleasure to rise today and to recognize a vibrant community which is not unlike many scattered throughout the province. The town of High River has just reached the 10,000 mark for population. While this makes it a fairly sizable town, this community still retains its small-town feel and agricultural roots. The town acts as a hub for the agricultural community in the area, and some of the residents commute to Calgary. This diverse mix of residents has created a vibrant and diverse local economy, which serves not only the needs of the town but also those of the surrounding communities. High River has a history of pioneers and entrepreneurship, and this remains true to this day as many of the businesses are locally owned and operated.

In addition to celebrating a milestone for population growth, residents of this town have another reason to celebrate. Mr. Speaker, High River's centennial coincides with that of our province, and the town has a variety of celebrations planned for both of these occasions. These include a variety of fairs, concerts, and other programs which display the real culture and the heritage of the area. One great example is the 47th annual Little Britches Rodeo and parade, held on the May long weekend. This event is open to ages two to 16, and because of this it gives many budding cowboys in the area their first taste of rodeo.

Rural Alberta and the communities you find there have a wealth of opportunity for those who wish to seek it. High River is a great example of the rural opportunity that exists in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

National Forest Week

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week is an important time for forestry in Alberta as we join the nation in celebrating National Forest Week. This year National Forest Week highlights Canada's boreal forest as an incredible national asset and as a sustainable forest management success story, providing benefits to Canadians and to the world.

Forestry is a major economic contributor in at least 50 of our communities, Mr. Speaker. It employs about 48,000 people and generates more than $12 billion in revenues each year. That's quite an achievement for an industry that didn't even exist in our province a hundred years ago.

Mr. Speaker, our forests provide much more than just the economic benefits of the wood fibre that we harvest from them. They provide clean air. They provide clean water. They sustain a diversity of wildlife, and they provide recreation and tourism opportunities that make us the envy of the world. Forests are a crucial part of our history and our cultural identity, Mr. Speaker, and it is fitting that we recognize their importance through the observance of National Forest Week.

The best part of this story, Mr. Speaker, is that forest use and forest enjoyment are sustainable and renewable. One hundred years from now forests will continue to be loved, enjoyed, and used by our children and grandchildren. In this our centennial year Alberta renews its commitment to wise stewardship of our forests for our benefit and for the benefit of generations to come.

As a registered professional forester, Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join in the recognition of our forests, and I invite all to pause and reflect upon the role of forests in our communities and our lives.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Alberta Scene Festival

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Until May 10 the Alberta arts community has taken over Ottawa for the Alberta Scene festival. The festival has brought together over 600 Alberta artists from all disciplines including theatre, music, dance, literature, comedy, film and video, culinary and visual arts. The venues for these performances range from the National Arts Centre, the Canadian Museum of Civilization, the National Gallery of Canada, to theatres, music halls, and bistros.

Alberta artists will make connections that will take their art around the world. Promoters from across Canada and a dozen other countries are in Ottawa as well, providing opportunities for festival and concert bookings and recordings and distribution deals. These artists at Alberta Scene are ambassadors who will introduce new audiences and presenters to Alberta talent, encouraging them to see what else we have to offer.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate and thank all of our artists who are in Ottawa as well as all their colleagues here in the province for bringing such a high standard of excellence to Alberta's arts scene. I also acknowledge and thank Alberta Scene's corporate and media donors for making this celebration a reality. Alberta Scene is an exciting way to share our centennial celebrations with the nation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Cattle Rustling

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Safety, security, and the ability to do business are intertwined with the need for simple trust. The police cannot watch out for everything we do. Lawyers and the courts cannot sort out our day-to-day living. We must rely on trust. Trust is especially important in the country. You trust the community when you leave your equipment in the fields. You trust visitors to close your gates so your cattle won't get out. You trust your neighbours to help you out when you need a hand, just as they trust you.

You trust your cattle to be around tomorrow when they're out to pasture. One of the worst violations of trust is the theft of animals. Feedlots are big, but cattle still graze free in unwatched pastures. These cattle might not be seen for days or weeks or even months, but when a beef producer finds that his stock has disappeared, the sense of violation, the sense of loss, the sense of breakdown in the community can be overwhelming.

It is like someone going in and stealing apples from your yard, but they take the tree with them. You can't grow the apples no more. It's like someone taking your paycheque if you work for wages, but they also take the store, and you can't go to work again. The livelihood is lost for the beef producer. How do you explain bad people to your four year old? How do you justify the lost 4-H calf to your 12 year old? It is heartbreaking to start again.

Sometimes the theft of cattle is laughed at because it sounds like something out of an old movie or cattle rustling in the Old West. Cattle theft remains a Criminal Code violation with a penalty of up to 10 years. It is a serious violation that strikes at the heart of one's trust in the community. These criminals are not drug addicts. They need equipment to haul the animals. They need to be undetected. They need to have a plan to avoid brand inspection. These criminals are organized and sophisticated. Cattle rustlers have no respect for their community. These thieves have no respect for basic human trust or the effect of their actions.

It is important for the government to properly support the investigation of animal theft and the apprehension of cattle thieves. It is crucial to provide funding for prosecutors and give them proper resources to deal with this thievery. Rustlers should be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law. Please protect trust.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

2:50 Ottewell Community Patrol

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Ottewell community patrol has operated successfully for 12 years fighting crime in southeast Edmonton. It was formed by the Edmonton Police Service. Volunteer patrol members 18 years and over assist the police in community-based policing by providing extra eyes and ears for crime reporting and prevention. Patrol members donate their own time, their own vehicles, and pay for their own gas to patrol 16 communities and 14 industrial areas in southeast Edmonton. The patrol uses radios to report unusual or suspicious activities to the police officer assigned to work with the patrol.

The Ottewell community patrol, co-ordinated by Constable Joe Spear, really makes a difference. Statistics recorded since 1993 prove the importance of community policing. The patrol in Ottewell can take credit for 1,982 suspicious persons reported, 1,636 suspicious vehicles reported, 36 warrants executed, 97 arrests caused, 40 stolen vehicles found, 89 drunk drivers taken off the road, 190 open garage doors reported, 35 fights and disturbances reported, 22 fire property damages reported, 16 break and enters stopped, 184 other incidents, including two handguns taken off the road.

I would like to at this time on behalf of the grateful citizens of southeast Edmonton thank Constable Joe Spear, the Edmonton Police Service, and the many volunteer patrol members. The patrol has also received financial support from the Alberta Solicitor General, the Edmonton Police Foundation, and other generous supporters including many community leagues. Our neighbourhoods are safe and secure because of the time and attention donated by so many unselfish people and organizations. Their contributions do not go unnoticed and unappreciated.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I'm going to introduce the hon. Deputy Speaker at this time for a special moment.

Leah Halliday

Mr. Marz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Members of the Assembly, I know that we usually wait until the last day of session before we recognize the great work that our legislative pages do, but for Leah Halliday, after three years of dedicated service to the members of this Assembly, today is her last day. However, our loss is Medicine Hat's gain as Leah will be moving to Medicine Hat, where she will be taking up a position with Travel Alberta, where she will be working at the Walsh information centre. Leah, although we're not prepared to provide the usual token of our appreciation at this particular time, it will be forthcoming soon. I would ask the members of the Assembly to please join me in showing our appreciation to Leah for her three years of dedicated service and wish her all the very best in her new endeavours. [applause]

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition signed by 684 Albertans who are eager to see potentially life-saving improvements to highways in northern Alberta, particularly highway 63. With today's tabling the total signatures on this petition so far are 3,481.

Speaker's Ruling

Tabling Notes to Oneself

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call upon the first member to participate, I have a ruling. Yesterday, on May 3, 2005, the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar purported to table a handwritten note that he wrote to himself which seemed to be a comment on a petition presented by the Member for Edmonton-Manning.

When members reviewed the Votes and Proceedings for yesterday, they may have noticed that the purported tabling was not entered. The fact that the member did not provide five copies of the document as required by Standing Order 37(3) is enough reason not to include the tabling in the records to the Assembly.

However, while this Assembly is very permissible in what is allowed to be tabled, the chair does not want to condone the tabling of messages to oneself about something said, done, or said by another member as a legitimate tabling. The Standing Orders were just amended in April to allow six members up to two minutes each and every day in this Assembly to make members' statements. This is one avenue that could be pursued by members who have a point to make. Notes to oneself about what another member did or said are not going to be allowed as legitimate tablings even if the correct number of copies are provided.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on behalf of the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View to table the appropriate numbers of a report prepared by the University of Calgary's office of external affairs. The report summarizes the many learning innovations and research achievements at the U of C over the past several years. It demonstrates that despite a decade of financial hardship, the University of Calgary has successfully pursued innovation and excellence.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings this afternoon. The first is a letter I received yesterday, and it's dated April 26. It is from the hon. Minister of Education, and it is an acknowledgement that one of the latest amendments to the closure of schools regulation was not on one of the department's websites.

My second tabling this afternoon is the appropriate number of copies of a document that I received from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. It's entitled Number of Days with Evidence of Enron Schemes by Quarter, and it includes Project Stanley, Silver Peak, Wheel Out, Non-Firm Export, Load Shift, Death Star, Ricochet, Get Shorty, among other elaborate schemes to dupe electricity consumers. It should be noted that the running tab now for all of Enron's activities for unjust and unreasonable profits is at least $1.6 billion.

The third and last tabling I have, Mr. Speaker, is another transcript of testimony from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, and it asks the questions "Was Jeff Skilling involved in Project Stanley?" and "Who was the primary actor in Project Stanley?" in regard to price manipulation here in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two documents to table today. First, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of an open letter to the Minister of Education from the Greater Black Gold teachers' local 8. The letter implores the minister to "maintain local bargaining as the mode for determining collective agreements between school trustees and their teachers."

Secondly, I would like to table a letter from Mr. Norman Greenfield of Calgary, Alberta. He raises serious concerns about the ability of private nursing homes to provide excellent care in the face of government interference and unpredictable funding.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of excerpts from the final report of the integration of midwifery services evaluation project. The report provides evidence that the costs associated with a midwife-supported birth are between $700 and $1,100 lower than a hospital-based birth.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a news release issued by the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. The release warns of the dangers to livestock, endangered species, and the environment if the number of fish and wildlife officers is not increased dramatically.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call Orders of the Day, I'll just give you advance notice with a request. Tomorrow will be a very special day in the history of this Assembly. For only the fourth time in the nearly 100-year history of this Assembly there will be individuals permitted on the floor of the Assembly who are not elected members of the Assembly. There will be representatives from the air, land, and sea forces of the Canadian Forces to participate with us in a special ceremony on the conclusion of World War II.

I've also invited upwards of 90 veterans from around the province of Alberta. What I did was ask the three forces to provide a list of names that they wanted to have invited, and that was the protocol used. I will do a blanket introduction of them tomorrow, and I have said, all members, that if you have a constituent coming, you've got a copy of the letter from me to them. I would ask you not to individually stand tomorrow under the provision of guests to introduce these individuals. I'll do a blanket introduction for everyone so as to make sure that we're not here beyond 5 o'clock with respect to this particular thing.

I need to know, as well, from the three caucuses the spokespersons who will be participating tomorrow, and as long as I know by noon tomorrow, that's good enough for me. Remember, there's also going to be a Holocaust ceremony on the grounds of the Legislature at noon and then the reception for these veterans in the Assembly starting at 12:30 p.m., to which all members are invited. So I'd really appreciate your co-operation.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2005-06

Education

The Deputy Chair: As per our standing order the first hour will be allocated between the minister and members of the opposition, following which any other member who wishes to participate will be able to do so.

The hon. Minister of Education. [some applause]

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman and to my colleagues for that thunderous applause, most of which has to be shared with some members of my staff who are attending this afternoon. I'd like to just quickly introduce and thank my deputy minister, Keray Henke; the assistant deputy minister for corporate services, Mat Hanrahan; his staff members Jeff Olson, the executive director for budget, school finance and reporting sector, and also Mr. Gene Williams, director of budget and fiscal analysis branch; as well as a number of other staff who are either listening and/or will be reading this later, including our other ADMs – Jim Dueck, Rick Morrow, and Lois Hawkins – as well as my own EA, Pam Boutillier, and, of course, our communications director, Kathy Telfer.

These are outstanding individuals, and I would ask the House to please join me in a round of thanks to them, especially to Mat Hanrahan and his crew, who have worked very hard through the Christmas period and on other occasions through weekends and Saturdays and Sundays and whatever. Thank you very much to all of you, Mat, to you and your staff for doing 14 drafts of this budget that we're going to be I hope approving today.

Mr. Chairman, I also want to just quickly mention that I have in mind to do some of my comments in French, and I've distributed those comments in a translated form to all members of the House. They should have them by now.

With that, I'd like to start. I want to stress how very pleased and honoured I am today to present my ministry's budget estimates and our business plan, and I want to put it in the context of our government's 20-year strategic plan. As members here will know, that plan is supported by four pillars, and education is the central component or a key contributor to each and every one of them. In fact, the first pillar is called Learning, and that pillar carries with it the long-term commitment of our government to education. Alberta's education system, of course, must provide quality programs that meet students' needs and ensure that students have the best chance for success. As a result, the majority of Alberta Education's 2005-2008 business plan and our 2005-2006 budget continue the implementation of the recommendations from Alberta's Commission on Learning.

Now, because we continue to review certain Commission on Learning recommendations, such as number 2 regarding junior kindergarten, such as number 3 regarding possible full-day kindergarten, and number 81, which recommends that we "create a new approach to collective bargaining," those particular items will not be seen in this budget today because decisions have not yet been taken on them.

However, other strategic priorities that we are addressing in this budget include: readiness to learn, which helps children before they start school; curriculum revitalization, such as the new social studies curriculum; facilitating transitions for young people who are completing high school; investing in technology to yield the greatest benefits for our students; and, of course, balancing our fiscal, human resource, and policy priorities with rising costs and ever-increasing public demands for choice, flexibility, and adaptability.

Albertans expect our education system to improve continuously, to respond to diverse learner needs, to be fiscally responsible, and to be accountable for results. This budget before us today, Mr. Chair, does exactly that because it focuses on our students and on our classrooms where our students go.

This budget provides a 7.1 per cent, or $287 million, increase in program support for the basic education system for a grand total of $4.3 billion. This budget also responds to many, albeit not all, of the items that were brought to my personal attention during the meetings that I held earlier this year with every single school board in our province. That, Mr. Chair, was a record, as most members of my staff will attest, but what a tremendous record it was because it gave us some unique opportunities. In fact, as a result of some of those meetings, this budget also addresses their concerns as well as many of the recommendations coming out of Alberta's Commission on Learning, areas such as class size, daily physical activity, technology, special needs, and so on.

Before we get into the nitty-gritty of the budget, I just want to explain that the Ministry of Education budget has two primary funding streams, the first of which is what we call voted government and lottery fund estimates, which total $2.85 billion, or about two-thirds of our budget, and which we will be voting on today; secondly, education property taxes, which total about $1.45 billion and comprise the remaining one-third of our budget.

I wish to further explain that about $1.28 billion of that $1.45 billion resides in the Alberta school foundation fund, which is governed by statute, and the remainder, about $177 million, goes directly from the local municipality to the local separate school board where we have so-called opted-out school boards. In any case, the $2.85 billion in voted estimates coupled with the $1.45 billion in education property taxes that I just alluded to brings the total support for basic education, K to 12, to $4.3 billion.

Now, our voted estimates begin on page 113 of the 2005-06 government and lottery fund estimates book. Program 1, ministry support services, is the corporate function of the department. As you can see, support to this area will increase by $4 million. The majority of this increase, almost $3 million of it, in fact, is in support of new technology for the school system. It includes items such as provincial Microsoft licensing, supplying student transcripts, and providing other resources to advance classroom learning opportunities. The balance is for the restructuring of the former ministry of learning into two separate ministries, Education and Advanced Education, and also for staff salary supports and for meeting government's shared service agreement with the Alberta Corporate Service Centre.

Program 2, support for basic education, is very extensive and will likely consume most of our time here today. Support in this area will increase by $234 million, or 9.5 per cent, and goes almost entirely to increased grant funding for 62 school jurisdictions, 13 charter schools, and 267 accredited private schools and private ECS operators. Together, Mr. Chair, all of these entities help educate more than 590,000 children and youth across our great province.

Support for basic allocations includes grant dollars for our renewed funding framework, which will be going into its second school year of implementation this September and will provide boards with increased funding and more flexibility to spend those funds on local priorities; grant dollars for our class size reduction initiative; grant dollars for professional development for teachers; and millions of dollars for items such as technology initiatives, teachers' pensions, accredited private school support, Alberta initiative for school improvement, or what we call AISI projects, student health services, high-speed networking to connect schools to SuperNet, learning resources centres, and amortization of capital assets, and so on.

The renewed funding framework bears some additional comment because the renewed funding framework gives our school boards greater flexibility in determining how to spend these funds to meet their local needs. Under this particular framework, Mr. Chair, support to public and separate school boards will increase by $180 million, which is about 5.4 per cent, to $3.5 billion in '05-06.

Highlights of the renewed funding framework include an increase of 2.5 per cent to base instruction grants for public and separate school boards, which is in response to Alberta Commission on Learning recommendation 90; an increase of 4 per cent to the rates for severe disabilities, in response to Commission on Learning recommendation 42; and an additional 4 per cent increase that is being set aside to accommodate rising numbers of severely disabled students, in other words, volume, and this is in response to Alberta Commission on Learning recommendation 42; an increase of 3 per cent for transportation rates, which is in response to Alberta Commission on Learning recommendation 90; an increase of 2 per cent for all other grants under the framework, which also responds to Alberta Commission on Learning recommendation 90; and an 11.4 per cent increase for assistance to ECS children and for grades 1 to 12 students with severe special needs, which increases funding in this area to $323 million, and that is in response to Alberta Commission on Learning recommendation 42; furthermore, a grant rate increase of 2 per cent for First Nations, Métis, and Inuit learners in the K to 12 system, which is an increase of $2.5 million from $32 million last year, and that would bring the total support in this area to $33.5 million; an increase of 32.7 per cent for ESL, English as a Second Language, which takes funding in this area up to $40.5 million for domestic-born and for foreign-born students living in Alberta and responds to Alberta Commission on Learning recommendation 42.

Mr. Chairman, there is also a brand new allocation of $1.2 million in support of our daily physical activity initiative, that starts this fall. In fact, this amount will come to about $1,000 per school to help get them started, and it commences our response to Alberta Commission on Learning recommendation 7.

My final point, Mr. Chairman, is one I really want to highlight because it's an increase of approximately $2 million to compensate for increased costs incurred by francophone authorities to provide English equivalent programming to their students, which is referenced in Alberta Commission on Learning recommendation 90.

Et maintenant en français. Le cadre de financement comprend une augmentation d'environ 2 millions de dollars afin d'aider les autorités scolaires francophones à assumer l'augmentation des coûts occasionnés par la mise en place d'une programmation équivalente à la programmation anglaise pour leurs élèves et ce afin de se conformer aux exigences de l'article 23 de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés.

[Translation] And now in French. The funding framework also includes an increase of approximately $2 million to compensate for increased costs incurred by francophone authorities to provide English equivalent programming to their students in accordance with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. [As submitted]

As a result, Mr. Chair, I will ensure that our five regional francophone authorities will receive a funding increase to address these specific costs. [some applause] Merci bien.

Les cinq autorités régionales francophones recevront un financement accru pour assumer les coûts reliés à l'offre de services éducatifs en français déjà dispensés par ces autorités.

[Translation] The five regional authorities will receive a funding increase to address the costs of offering the educational services provided in French already provided by the boards. [As submitted]

I should also emphasize that the renewed funding framework was developed by, with, and for our education partners, which includes the Alberta School Boards Association. In fact, our renewed funding framework is a living, breathing model subject to improvements. It's not a static grant formula for all time, and during my meetings with school boards it was referenced on many occasions.

In fact, there were a few school boards who felt somewhat shortchanged by the renewed funding framework, and I said that I would address that with my officials, and I'm happy that we were able to do that. The fact remains, however, that not one single school board experienced reduced funding under this framework. As a matter of fact, within the guideline there is a component, Mr. Chair, called stabilization, and its purpose is to ensure that no school jurisdiction gets less funding under the new funding framework than it would have received under the old funding framework. That's one reason why I was happy that we increased this amount by a further 2 per cent for 2005-2006.

Now I would like to speak about some other provincial initiatives that are within the renewed funding framework but have targeted, or labelled, funding dollars attached to them; in other words, initiatives that require certain monies in specified amounts to be spent on them under program 2. I'll start with the additional $6 million in new one-time funding that will be provided to augment the $110 million in this budget for our class size reduction initiative. This additional $6 million will assist with the second year of the class size reduction initiative to address factors such as improving transportation services, purchasing classroom furniture, or adjusting school attendance boundaries. In fact, these funds will be distributed to school jurisdictions on a per-student basis for grades 1 through 12. That, too, is in response to the Alberta Commission on Learning recommendation 14.

Secondly, there is a $319 million budget item for the Alberta teachers' pensions, of which $174 million is for current service, as you will see on page 116, and $144.6 million is for the unfunded liability as identified under statutory programs on page 119. Now, this represents an increase of 16 per cent, or $44 million, so it is obviously very significant, and I know that teachers will appreciate having it supported today. I should add that this is due to the additional costs associated with hiring 1,250 brand new teachers in September of 2004 as well as annual salary increases for teachers and an increase of 1.53 per cent in the contribution rate to the pension plan by both its members in general and the government, which is in response to the Alberta Commission on Learning recommendation 90. In the case of the teachers' pensions, it is the Teachers' Pension Plans Act which mandates funding responsibility by government for teachers' pensions, so it's a statutory-type provision.

Thirdly, we have a 5.4 per cent increase, which amounts to $4.8 million, for accredited private school support to offset rising enrolment costs and increased severe special-needs funding for grades 1 to 12. This funding includes a 2.5 per cent increase in the base instruction grant and a 4 per cent increase in the severe special-needs grant. All other grant increases are going up by 2 per cent as well, and this is in response to the Alberta Commission on Learning recommendations 42 and 90.

Fourthly, we have a funding increase of 9.5 per cent, or $3 million, for accredited private ECS operators for a total of $35.35 million, and this is again to address rising enrolments of special-needs youngsters. It includes a 2.5 per cent grant rate increase, a 4 per cent severe special-needs increase, and a 3 per cent transportation increase. All other grants increase by 2 per cent, as recommended in the Alberta Commission on Learning recommendations 42 and 90.

Fifthly, I have allocated $6 million in new one-time funding for professional development for teachers. A professional development plan is currently being worked on to determine the best course of action, including working with regional professional development consortia. This is in response to the Alberta Commission on Learning recommendation 9.

Sixthly, we have the 2 per cent increase for our Alberta initiative for school improvements, which is going up by $1.3 million to $69.76 million.

Seventh is a 2 per cent increase for student health services, which maybe I'll comment on a little later because that's going up by $698,000 to $37.66 million.

Eighth is a funding increase of 47 per cent for high-speed networking, or SuperNet. Funding here will increase by $1.9 million to $6 million total as more school sites come on stream.

Quickly, ninth is our very popular class size reduction initiative, which will receive $110 million through this budget in order to sustain our promise to reduce class sizes and to honour our commitment to the class size guidelines as recommended in recommendation 14 of the Alberta Commission on Learning. With these additional and/or new monies school boards will be able to hire 435 new teachers this September. They will also be able to retain the 1,250 new teachers that were hired last September.

There are a number of other items that I'd like to get to. Perhaps I will during the question-and-answer period because there are a number of other program initiatives in technology that I want to comment on, in video conferencing, which I hope some members might be interested in, and in our Learning Resources Centre, and so on.

Let me just conclude now by simply saying, Mr. Chairman, that this is an extremely vibrant education system that we have here. I'm so pleased that we have $4.3 billion to work with to help ensure that our students are provided with consistent, good programming, with outstanding if not excellent teachers, with the best, highest quality curriculum available, with parent involvement where it's necessary, with government support wherever we can provide it so that they can consistently perform and/or outperform their counterparts in international testing and in other benchmarks that we see before us.

Thank you for your anticipated support, hon. members. This is a very significant budget for our K to 12 education system. With that, I'll look forward to any questions that might arise or comments that you might wish to make. I would just ask that if members are referencing something specific in the estimates, could they please give me the specific page number at the top of the question so that I can flip to it and be on the same page as they are. That will help speed things along and will allow more questions to be answered.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I believe my time has just about run out, so we'll look forward to questions. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. To the hon. minister, it is an honour to be able to comment on your budget. Hopefully, we can have a little discussion about some of the items. First of all, I'd like to just quote from a source before we get into some of the specifics a little later on more in a philosophical view. My colleagues will go into some of the in-depth matters of the budget, but I'll see how much time I have for that.

First of all, I thought it was important, and I have a great deal of faith in the particular author, who is a retired educator in St. Albert and very, very accomplished at writing and expressing his views. I'm sure the good minister knows about him.

Some of you will well remember the outcry in the early 1990s that Canadian students were not performing well by international standards. The response from government was to set standards even higher and to concentrate almost exclusively on academic subjects. According to the National Post of February 3, 2005, the push to improve standards in schools to satisfy critics "may be having an unintended consequence: increasing drop-out rates in most provinces."

So why do approximately one-third of Alberta high school students fail to graduate? Now, I'm sure that we'd get many different reasons from across the floor, and I know that I've discussed it with my colleagues here. Here are some reasons I'd like to put forth through this article. The focus through Alberta Education is on high academic standards in core subjects. The focus fails to address the learning needs of students not headed towards postsecondary studies.

I can comment on that from being a superintendent of schools in Fort McMurray, where about 35 to 40 per cent of our population was aboriginal. I think that it was significant that when we worked through the classrooms of the two elementary schools, we found over a period of time that bringing in a learning disabled program and special-resource teachers helped to improve that situation.

The focus ignores the particular needs – and this is the testing focus – of students with special needs, English as a Second Language students, and the many First Nations and Métis students. A strong provincial economy also draws young people into the workplace before completing high school, and for nonacademically oriented students the material attractions of money and a car are incentives for pupils to leave school.

I think the important point here, to the minister – and I'm sorry that I can't go in depth about this. In 2000, according to the study produced for the ATA, $12 million was spent on provincial achievement testing, but only $4 million was spent on curriculum development. I think that's very significant in light of my earlier comments. I don't think, in terms of laying the foundation in elementary education, that we are doing enough work in that area. I will ask the question now: how much is being spent on achievement testing in '05-06, and how much is being spent on curriculum development in '05-06?

From my limited travels, because I don't have the luxury of a large budget – I have spent time and I have also worked as a trustee and a school superintendent and an associate school superintendent when the public system was decentralizing their budgets to schools in Edmonton. My feeling from talking to many of my colleagues, people at the University of Alberta, parents, my daughters in Calgary and Okotoks, Alberta, there is a basic need that we should be looking at in elementary education, and that's what I call a solid foundation, one in which all children have a chance for a good educational journey. I believe strongly that unless this is done, unless the foundation at the early elementary school is laid clear, it leads to poor school performance, which affects our self-concept, believe it or not, affects the dropout rate, leads to delinquency, and it leads to bullying. If you'll check with Dr. Carter's doctorate thesis at the U of A, I think you'll find what he suggests are some of the issues with that.

One of the things that I thought was interesting in regard to this and in trying to make my point – again, I have great regard for the minister, and I want him to know that. I just feel, Mr. Minister, that we must look at the elementary part of our program, that you are in charge of, sir.

I look at the quote again. The statistics can be stated that among the provinces the lowest graduation rate occurred in Alberta, where only two-thirds, 66.5 per cent, of youth graduated from high school in 2002-2003. According to the release, the graduation rate had increased; it was 63.2 per cent in '97-98. So there is an improvement going on, which is very gratifying.

So I'm really suggesting to the minister that we must look at the whole business of achievement testing, moving from achievement testing to a power diagnostic assessment process at the elementary school. I'm going to suggest some reasons and give some rationale for my statement. I think it would give us a meaningful accountability to be provided through the mandatory diagnostic testing with results reported to students, parents, and the school system. I think the research will show, if you talk to people like Dr. John Paterson, the former associate dean of education at the University of Alberta, that a start in school is very, very crucial.

One of the things that's very, very important in the elementary grades is that we find out that a lot of kids do not succeed because they don't know what the problems are, and they need parent help. What I think would be very helpful here is a mandatory diagnostic testing where the information could be working from the school to the home, and they could reinforce where the child needs remediation and help.

The other thing I'd like to bring out. Diagnostic testing at the elementary level provides a picture of what students know and don't know and helps teachers to prescribe instruction to meet student learning needs. I think that's very, very important. Diagnostic testing helps to support new programs like early literacy and can cover more of the provincial curriculum than multiple-choice tests. Only Ontario and New Brunswick require eight year olds to complete high-stake provincial testing. Alberta students are the most highly tested in Canada. Last year Manitoba found the light and cancelled the grade 3 testing program in favour of diagnostic testing. Now, we understand that they're in the NDP government – and God forgive them for that – but I think it's important that we recognize that they've seen the light in that. Again, that to me is significant.

Now, the other thing I'd like to mention before I get into the specifics – and I hope my colleagues are getting geared up and fired up. That was my job, they said, to get them fired up, and I'm trying to do that just by talking a little longer here. [interjection] Excuse me. I shouldn't have said that. It doesn't look good, does it?

I think it's important, Mr. Chairman, that we look at what happened to me the other night in an elementary school in St. Albert, and I want to pat the government and thank them for this. I was at a DARE program. It seems to me that with this wonderful amount of money they quoted – $4.3 billion. What a powerful amount of money. You see, I think what's wrong sometimes is that you can't always win by throwing money where there's a problem. [interjections] I think that's very, very important. I really do believe that. It takes good management. [interjections] That's the best cheer I've had since I was elected. Thanks very much. I'll stop now.

What I think was significant about this DARE program, and it was very, very good, was the amount in that school – and I want the minister to know the very high accolades he got that night – for the DARE program. I think what is intriguing about that was the involvement of police, was the involvement of FCSS people, and was the involvement of parents and how they initiated. What I would like to see is that DARE program, if I dare ask, reinforced again and brought back with a new innovation with crystal meth involved in that. I think that's wonderful.

It was also very rewarding for me when the principal of the day stood up and said: "You know, Mr. Flaherty, tell the government we're so pleased with what they're doing with this program, but we don't need more money. We need prevention." He said this: "Junior high school kids will be successful if their parents and significant others are there for them." That's number one.

The second thing the principal said is that we have to work on the area of passion with junior high schools: passion for a program, passion for a dance, passion for hunting. My granddaughter, who is going to dance for the Queen in Calgary, has a passion for dancing. Amara has a passion for dancing. He said that that will enable kids to get through junior high successfully.

Then he said a significant thing. I was told by the aboriginal affairs minister once that when you're meeting with aboriginal people, get them to bring a buddy that they can trust. They're not going to trust you, so let them bring a buddy. Here we have the junior high school principal saying: "Get kids to have buddies that are reliable. Get kids to buddy up and like one another." They need support just like I need support from my colleagues today to do a good job on this presentation, and I think it's important. He said, "Give those junior high kids also a good sense of what you're doing with the DARE program with a sense of prevention."

I thought that principal had a wonderful message for me. You know, it didn't cost me anything to go there. I just was so taken with what happened.

Now, Mr. Minister, I know I might sound like a preacher here when I talk to you. I just want to go into one other thing, and I may be taking a little too long at this. This is the question of framework of funding that the good Minister of Advanced Education talked about. I'm wondering – and I may be bold in asking you to look at this – why we can't do something on speech therapy, to go back to my question on diagnosis work. What I would like to see, if I may be so bold as to suggest: the framework of funding that this government sets out is so important that you do that for the postsecondary students. Why can't we stipulate a specific kind of grant?

I have a background in counselling and guidance. I was lucky to take that program, sponsored by the federal government. Why can't this government do something in speech therapy by suggesting that this special grant program, because I'm asking you to look at and to consider school-based elementary speech therapy, will launch kids on a good start in that foundation in elementary school? Most superintendents and trustees, if they're honest, will tell you that that is what's lacking in our elementary schools.

So I plead with you. There's a way to deal with this problem. I agreed with the minister when he said: hard to get these people, difficult to find them. The hospital model for this – no disrespect – doesn't work in the school. That might be professional jealousies. I don't know. I just think it's a problem, and I just would ask you if we could have that considered.

The other thing that may be sensitive to the government is the question of closures, and I'm just going to quickly talk about that in the sense of school closures. We've had several editorials, and I don't know the state of some of these people, but I thought it was interesting in the ATA. Until 1984 school boards had a means of raising money for purposes that were not directly related to the program of studies and the curriculum but were nevertheless valid and valued by the local community. For example, if the people of Empress wanted to keep the local school open, they could let the trustees know, and trustees could bear the community's desires in mind and raise money to make a continued operation of the community school, having school permission to continue with government learning. But they would fund it through a requisition.

Now, the government took that, eliminated that in '94. One unanticipated outcome was that the school boards lost the means of funding decisions that used the school to represent the community development, recreational development, economic development, or social development. Alberta Learning had no mandate to provide funds for anything other than fulfilling its own mandate. Alberta Learning did not understand the other issues, and it didn't care to get involved.

I'm not going to continue reading this, but I think the message is clear. I think, and even the Edmonton Journal is saying to the good minister across the way: "nobody claims that job." Now she's saying: we need a white charger with the minister on top of the horse leading the charge to look at this whole idea of community schools.

I suggest to you, Mr. Minister, that we should revisit the community school concept. I was even brave enough to look at your good colleague – and I won't mention his name and embarrass you in the House – who today suggested that there may be a supplemental budget to Education in the fall. Maybe that's a disruptive point to make, but I do believe that we should go back and look at the community school concept. I hope you can look at it.

What does it do? You had a bill here. It's called Bill 28, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2005, sir, and it talks about revitalization of the inner core of the cities. I can't think of anything more basic and revitalizing than the school and turning it around and using it as a community centre with all kinds of programs. I think that's essential. I think some of these schools that may be closed could be looked at. I think also there's an issue there of funding again because many school boards do not want to keep this on the books. So those are some of the issues.

Just another comment to you. I'm getting old, and I'm not just using the Learning Commission anymore as a reference. There are several other people out there talking to me. I don't have the expense account to go out and talk to all school boards, which I'm sorry I can't do. I do believe that there are a lot of people that are very supportive of your ministry, sir, but I think that we have to be open to changes. The good Minister of Advanced Education talked about changes, being open, and I hope you take this in the right spirit.

I don't know, Mr. Chairman, how much more time I've got. Have I got time to get into some of the nitty-gritty? No. Two minutes. Well, I know the rest of my gang here – some of them have left. I thought the Legion closed at 3.

Anyway, Mr. Minister, I'll just sit down, and I'll turn it over to them. I've got about 10, 15 more good questions, but I want you to know I sure hope you'll have a look at that diagnostic. I'd work hard with you on that, sir. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Chairman, I'll try to provide some brief answers. Those that I didn't get down or don't get to because I couldn't write that fast: we'll try and respond in writing.

First of all, I want to thank the hon. Member for St. Albert for his passion for education. It almost rivals mine. In fact, on a given day I might not want to live between the difference. It's nice to know that there are people who are former educators or were involved in the education system – and there are many in this House from all over the province who are involved in one capacity or another. I'd say most of us are parents, so we come at this from a very, very straightforward and honest position.

The comments about what occurred in the early 1990s intrigued me. How Alberta students were or were not performing in terms of international tests or in reference to the standards that were set at that time and how that may have impacted dropout rates is also interesting. I think that's one of the reasons why the department of education at that time, which subsequently became learning and is now again Education, had looked at ways of addressing that particular difficulty.

As all members here would now know, on the program for international student achievement, or the PISA test, as we call them, our students have consistently done well. Very briefly, we know that in the latest reported results in December of '04, which reflected the test written, I think, in '03, our students were number one in math or sciences – I can't recall which one it was – and number three and number four in the other, be it math or science, and in problem solving and reading and so on. The results are very, very encouraging in terms of the international picture, and that was a repeat of the results from 2000. So I think there have been some tremendous improvements made there, and we can assert that to a lot of positives in the system that have occurred in the last 10 years in particular, I would say.

Things like a standardized curriculum across the province are very important. Things like encouraging more professional development with and by and for our teachers, who are absolutely excellent teachers in this province, things like online and other methods of learning, our improvements in technology, the AISI projects, the student health initiative projects, the ESL funding. I could go and on, hon. member. All of those things, properly done and properly balanced in the Rubik's cube, can and will impact our high school completion rates.

In fact, we know that we have some work to do on helping increase the three-year high school completion rate. We're not doing too badly, hon. members, in the five-year picture, which is up in the mid-70s. Then when we take a look at a different statistic, which is the age range of 25 to 34 year olds living in Alberta, we have an 89 per cent high school completion rate in that particular age range. So we're doing very, very well. However, we can and we will do better. It is a priority for me, I want the hon. member to know, to address high school completion rates. That's one reason why I immediately struck a task force to look into that, and we are working on that together.

The other point about the percentage of aboriginal population, which the hon. member mentioned, particularly in the north of Alberta, is something I'm very sensitive to. In fact, I didn't have time in my opening comments to get into this in any great detail, but I'd like the members here to know that a new initiative that was created just a few years ago, the First Nations, Métis, and Inuit, or FNMI initiative, is an extremely well-run initiative. It's extremely popular, and it provides an additional – what is it now? – $33.5 million in the current budget to specifically help children of First Nations, Métis, or Inuit background, to help them achieve, to help bring their inspirations and hopes up to a higher and higher level. [some applause] I thank the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake for those kudos, that endorsement, because when I was in Community Development and she was with aboriginal and northern affairs, we worked a lot on these initiatives.

It's nice to see them come to be because in this current budget we will help provide support for aboriginal language courses in Blackfoot and Cree, for example, and we will help with the development and implementation of aboriginal 10, 20, and 30 curricula and with the infusion of aboriginal perspectives into other areas such as physical education, such as health, math, science, language arts, all of which are being looked at, hon. member, to reflect to the best extent possible aboriginal traditions and aboriginal values, which are very central and very important, as you will know.

I also grew up not far from a reserve, and I'm very, very tuned in, as the questioner is as well, with aboriginal issues. In fact, it's something that I referenced time and time again with other ministers of education at the national level when we met with them just – what? – two months ago or so. I can't recall the exact date. But I'm very sensitive to that.

The other point, very quickly, was a question with respect to how much money gets spent on achievement testing versus curriculum development, I think it was. I want the hon. member to know that in the current budget – and I'm going by memory a little bit here – I think we have about $21 million allocated for curriculum development plus a further $6 million, hon. member, for professional development, which, as you know, has to do with in-servicing and all kinds of other related issues for teachers.

I haven't got the exact thing broken out for you, hon. member, but

I know that we spent or will spend about $12 million on achievement testing in grades 3, 6, and 9 and a few more million on top of that, probably, for grade 12 diploma testing. Or is it included in that same amount? Okay. So it's about $12 million total for grades 3, 6, 9, and 12.

The other point was with respect to bullying. You know, bullying is something that we've taken a very serious stance against along with our violence prevention piece, and there are a number of ministries involved in this particular issue as well as with our safe schools initiative. We know that creating safe and caring school environments is critical for our students and for the families who send their kids to our schools. That's why in May of 2004 the bullying prevention strategy and the family violence and bullying conference was held, and a lot of research and initiatives were presented.

Alberta Education is part of that. We provide some funding for it. I think last year we provided about a quarter of a million dollars, if my memory serves, somewhere in that neighbourhood anyway, $200,000 to $300,000, and we've got more work to do, but we are undertaking that with great vigour as we speak.

Your plea, hon. member, about looking at the elementary part. I'm very cognizant of that. Yes, I will do that, and we have been doing it. I don't want to make it sound like we weren't. But specific to your questions about provincial achievement testing, you know, I have to just indicate – and I think the hon. member knows this, in any event, but perhaps for the benefit of some others. Our provincial achievement tests are not done only for the purpose of trying to assess, if you will, how our students are doing in terms of literacy, numeracy, and so on, at the grades 3, 6, 9 levels. They're done for many other reasons as well, and some of them are selfish to the government of Alberta. We want to know how well our curriculum is doing. How well is it being administered, received, taught, interpreted? Where might there be weaknesses, and so on?

So these provincial achievement tests help us with our standards setting. They help parents understand how their children are doing, and they help others monitor that progress. In the end, I'm of the opinion still that they do help motivate, perhaps, and they help to improve student learning, and in a perhaps vicarious way – and maybe the connection is vicarious – it helps prepare our students for the real world that they are going to be stepping into. So that's one thing.

But never would I expect or want a child to be put under stress or feel like this is the end of the world for them if they pass or fail this test, because we don't fail children anymore, as you know. We allow them to move on. But we have to do a better job in preparing those children who are not doing so well and who we know are not doing so well in these tests such as the grade 3 test and design a program, which I've labelled in this House as diagnostic assessment. I want to get away from the word testing, hon. member, and I hope you will, too, when we're talking diagnostic, just to draw a distinction.

We can have provincial achievement testing, and we can agree or disagree on that, but I want to talk about diagnostic assessment because to me an assessment has a much longer period of time or capability attached to it. Anyway, we'll talk more about that perhaps: why we have these provincial achievement tests and how we use them.

A number of teachers have spoken to me about some of the value to them. Others have spoken on the other side, obviously, against them. But overall they seem to be achieving what they set out.

I'll just wrap up with two final quick comments. One of them is with respect to the DARE program that was referenced. You know, during my meetings with all the school boards and meetings with many parent groups, the home and school council groups, and superintendents, CASS, the Council of Alberta School Superintendents, guidance counsellors and work counsellors, and so on, the issue of drugs came up in almost every one of those meetings. If it didn't come up, I raised it because I'm very, very alarmed at crystal meth, in particular.

I read somewhere not long ago about some strip tests for smell that are coming in. I can't remember which hon. member in the House sent me a note on it, but someone from our side sent me a note on this. It looks like there is a relatively inexpensive way that we might look at actually determining by smell if students have been in contact with crystal meth. It's quite phenomenal – it's quite phenomenal – and we're looking at that very seriously now.

An Hon. Member: There is some technology coming.

Mr. Zwodzdesky: There is some technology coming, I know. I think somewhere it has already been pilot-tested, and it seems to work.

I certainly appreciate the comment that the hon. Member for St. Albert made: you can't win every argument, or whatever, by simply throwing money at a problem. That's absolutely true, and all members on all sides of the House – I don't care what party they're with – would all agree with that because we all know what you mean, and I know that you mean it quite sincerely. Money can help in some cases, but sometimes you have to go beyond money and get highly, highly creative and motivated and check all of the research and get passionate, as you said, and as your granddaughter is going to be for the Queen.

Why can't we do something about speech therapy is the other point, Mr. Chairman, very briefly. I've answered this question in the House before. Nothing would give me more pleasure than to go out there and hire more speech therapists, more audio linguists, more individuals who could help. The simple fact is that they're not available to be hired. We have tried. I spoke about this at the CMEC national conference, as well, with Canadian ministers of education. It's a problem. You know, hon. member, it's not a problem just in Alberta or just in Canada. It's a problem around the whole world, we found out. I've got school boards asking me. So I'm going to be working with the Minister of Advanced Education and with the postsecondary because we have to graduate more people.

Just before your time I was Minister of Community Development, and we had a similar problem in the area of caregivers for persons with developmental disabilities. We went straight to the Grant MacEwans of the world, and we started to say: "What can we do? Can we give you more money? Can we do something to design a program with you and get more people interested?" Recruitment is a problem. Retention is a problem. Then we increased the hourly wage rates, which helped.

Closures are something we can get to perhaps at another time, Mr. Chair. I just want to say this. Something was eliminated back in 1984, and I'll have to read in Hansard what that was because it's before my time, obviously. The part that I found most interesting was the community school concept. This is something that I'm working on with the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation in terms of the types of schools that Infrastructure will be building in the future, as soon as they get the money to do that, I should say.

Those new schools will perhaps be designed more on a modular basis, not portables but modulars, so that they don't necessarily look like glom-ons the way sometimes portables can look. I don't mean to demean portables because I've taught in them, and so have you, and we all know that they're necessary. But new ways of designing and new ways of drawing the architecture for schools that will have a use beyond their school use is critical. However, at the same time, there might be some community applications. We should not be afraid to look at that, and I like your ideas in that regard, hon. member.

I don't know about any supplementary education budget coming in the fall. That would be a lovely thing. I don't know where that rumour got started. I'm not aware of it for Education. But there is a process in government called supplementary estimates, which we experienced about six weeks ago, which some members here would know about. Sometimes additional monies are required, and they do come forward in that form, but we don't have any contemplated at this time for Education.

So with that, I'll take my seat, just noting the member's passion about being open to change. That we have to be open to changes is something I certainly agree with. That's one reason why we have to look at things like the recommendations from the Learning Commission when they talk about possibly – I say this as potentially – looking at another way for the collective bargaining model to be done. I'm not saying that it's right or it's wrong. The fact is that I haven't seen the model yet, hon. member, but I'm open to looking at it. Under the guise of democracy, if the school boards have voted that way, I do have an obligation in following up because it was undertaken by government to do that.

Similarly, with principals. Should they be in the ATA, part of the union, or should they not? I don't have the correct answer for that yet. We'll be addressing that as well. But it's important to have the discussion because we can learn something. Whether we actually implement it or not is another question, but you can always learn something about hearing other opinions, and I hope that's what you mean by being open to considering other changes. I see you nodding, so that's a good thing.

Mr. Chair, let me take my seat here because I'm sure there are others who have other questions. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to speak on I believe one of the most important ministries of this government because, in fact, you hold the key to the future, not only for today but for tomorrow, because you have education's best at heart.

When we talk about your budget, it's $4.33 billion, and that in itself is an enormous number. I won't deny that whatsoever. That is huge. If we break it down with regard to the amount of students out there, which is approximately 600,000 students within the province, on a daily basis it comes out to about $23 million.

An Hon. Member: Per school day.

Mr. Bonko: Exactly; per school day. If we further break down that $23 million on 600,000 kids, it comes out to roughly about $46 per day, then, if I'm correct on that math there. Out of that $46 comes the debt servicing, comes the schools' fees as well as the servicing of the teachers' salaries, supplies, and equipment. You can see how the number shrinks as it gets closer to the classroom. That's all I'm going to say on that point. I think that we still have a great bargain on our hands when we talk about $4.33 billion to be able to educate the future of Alberta.

We're just coming out of the last hundred years, and we've got to make sure that in the next hundred years these students are prepared to be able to carry on with the necessary means. We talk about other areas that we have shortages in, and those are some of the areas that I want to speak on.

I think the minister would recall perhaps in his days, way back when, when W.P. Wagner was a school that was able to capture some of the kids in the area that weren't going to be stellar students. I've got to recognize that not everybody is going to go on to postsecondary, and that's just a fact. There are some that are going to go right to the trades. I think there was a disservice when, in fact, the school of W.P. Wagner's type was taken off and eliminated. Unfortunately, we don't have that type of model. Nowadays we have something which is known as RAP, or the registered apprenticeship program. I think that's a good start. I don't think it goes far enough.

The reason I say that is that, in fact, we have trade shortages, skilled worker shortages. The temporary foreign workers initiative speaks directly to that. After we've recognized our mishap in eliminating W.P. Wagner, would it not be more prudent, maybe as a pilot, to create again a model such as that? I hear time and time again adults now saying: "You know what? If it wasn't for that school, I don't know where I'd be. That school, in fact, saved me, and it gave me direction. It gave me a career. It gave me a life." So that's just one thing to think about when we're talking about schools and innovative approaches to education. The W.P. Wagner model certainly was one that resonates in my mind as well as with a lot of other people who do recall that.

I'll talk about the utilization and the school closure policy. We met with trustees, and as a trustee I, in fact, was a little concerned with this. This would be an innovative approach, and it would I think meet all the needs as well as be able to fit the current model, but it needs some provision. It needs some tweaking there. In fact, if the minister would allow – currently, when the school boards are in fact closing a school, they have to close it to get it off their books so it no longer reads as part of the utilized space. They're being penalized for having that unutilized space. If they, in fact, were going to close a school, if they could turn it to the community and take it off their books, it would be taken out of the utilization rate, so it no longer counts against them. It still would remain in the community to be able to have community access.

When time does allow for the community to revitalize, they would have that school there in the future because it wouldn't have been sold off or dismantled in some way and taken completely out of the neighbourhood. It would still remain part of the school's inventory, and it would remain in the community. The thing is that if the community revitalized, the school boards, in fact, would be lobbying: we need this school back. They could close some of the programs or some of the community uses in the school and reopen that school again.

This speaks with regard to the Municipal Government Act that was coming from this government, when they spoke about revitalizing depressed areas. Again, we all have to work not only as municipal but school boards and government to ensure that we don't have that type of piece coming on a day-to-day basis when we talk about closing schools.

I think if you wanted that model, the community would be accepting of that if they thought that, you know: "We only have a utilization rate, perhaps, of 36 per cent. I can see the population growing. In 10 years we'll have enough to support it." If we closed it right now and, in fact, put programs to support within the community and then 10 years later opened it up, I think that would be a palatable model by school boards, by the community, and certainly by this government. I think that would certainly be looked at.

I talked to trustees last night, and they certainly would be appreciative of something like that. Speaking as a community member whose school in the neighbourhood is being closed, I would be appreciative of that, knowing that one day that school could potentially reopen. Under the current model it completely disappears, and the community is punished not only for today but for the long term, for tomorrow, because chances of a school being rebuilt are nil.

If we talk about concerns with the ASBA, the Alberta School Boards Association, and their hand within provincial bargaining, we didn't have, when the vote was taken, 100 per cent acceptance, so that still tells me that there are boards who, in fact, still recognize the benefits of local bargaining and a local solution made right there by the locally elected officials. I think that taking that away from them further erodes that particular piece of governance, which is concerning because, again, we asked this question in the House: at what point do you find that the trustees are no longer valid because they don't have any real powers of legislation? Do you just appoint them in such a way as the health authorities?

I'm very concerned with the continuing erosion of the powers of the trustees with regard to local bargaining. Again, when you have big urban centres such as Edmonton, Calgary, and Fort McMurray or perhaps Red Deer who are able to find solutions right within their own ability, with their own bargaining and their own mediators, why would you go to provincial bargaining? That in itself is concerning.

We talk about funds. I think more funds could be directed, if we are going to find ways. We certainly did with front-line staff when we talked about teacher-librarians. A lot of schools don't have teacher-librarians or librarians, in fact, trade. Counsellors: again, we lack bodies in those areas extremely. When we had to do the cutbacks, it usually was within the front line that they deemed as maybe nonessential, such as custodians. I would argue that every individual regardless of their task at hand is essential to the overall operating and success of a school, right from the custodian to the secretary to the librarian to the counsellors to the teachers as well as the parent involvement. As we say, it takes a whole village to raise a child and make that child successful. Eliminating any key parts of it certainly weakens it.

We talk about being able to read and write, but when you don't have the people there to be able to encourage these people to take out those books, to give them the direction to what they're learning or what they're wanting to see, again, you fail in that one particular piece of that puzzle. So if we had to have tied money with regard to support staff, I would certainly encourage the minister to put it in with regard to those particular areas that I just mentioned.

I touched on the trade schools. I touched on the concern with the ASBA and with regard to the utilization. I know that there are a number of speakers, but those are specifics that I thought I should mention, just to get those off the plate so that others could get up there, that you'd take into consideration with regard to the school closure policy as well as the trades and technology school, working with perhaps NAIT and SAIT and other technology or trade schools as well.

Thank you for that, then, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore. I am aware of his background as a former trustee. I don't know how many years.

Mr. Bonko: Nine years.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Nine years. So, you know, when he speaks, I have to listen because, of course, he's got so much wisdom and experience, as has the Member for St. Albert and elsewhere.

There are many teachers, many people who are passionate about education, and I appreciate that. I agree with your opening comment, hon. member, and that is that education is truly the key to the future. We all know that, and that's one reason why we have said over and over again that education is the top priority for our government now and for many years to come. It is; it has to be; and as long as I'm here, it will be. Other members feel the same.

It's true: $4.3 billion is an enormous amount of money. I don't know how the math works out to the per-day thing, but what I can tell you is that when we take a look at the general average, we know that we spend just under $9,000 per student per year throughout the whole system. That is the highest per capita rate in all of Canada, and it's the highest per-student rate. Now, I am aware that Ontario just did some things, and maybe those numbers will change here soon. I'm going off the information that I had to the end of December 31, at least. Again, it doesn't mean that more improvements can't be made.

Your comment about W.P. Wagner is one I'm particularly sensitive to because I was a teacher at Victoria composite high school in the late '60s and throughout the '70s, when, in fact, students were bused from W.P. Wagner over to Victoria composite, as it was then called. They came there primarily because of our vocational wings, but while they were there, they also learned other courses. I happened to teach languages and fine arts at that time, so they were in a variety of my classes. I do remember the students going to W.P. Wagner being highly motivated in the trades area. I honestly don't know why the W.P. Wagner program was cancelled. I can tell you that today W.P. Wagner is an outstanding academically inclined high school in my constituency, by the way.

I like the idea of having some trade school opportunities for our students. I suspect, however – I'm just guessing here, and I'll say this to you privately, hon. member – that it might have had something to do with the fact that other areas might have been looking for similar opportunities for their students. When you take a look at the kind of equipment you need to run a trade school, the kind of materials you need, the kind of shop supplies you need, I mean, we're talking everything from automotives to electricity to carpentry to plumbing to whatever. It's a huge array of opportunities that we used to provide. Some of my very close friends were trades teachers, and we spent a lot of time in their shops getting things repaired around the school, for example, or work projects that were brought in from the community so that the kids could learn.

I think the RAP and the YAP programs work, the registered apprenticeship program and the youth apprenticeship program. I think they need some tweaking; I honestly do. I've spoken with the Minister of Advanced Ed. I won't get into all the details right now, but I think that there are some improvements that we could make there because that will help us not only help the students with completion rates, but it'll help us fill skilled labour shortages, and it'll help our completion rates overall, our big-picture items. So we're on that.

As I indicated to the previous speaker, I also struck a task force to look into the high school completion rates, and the trades are a central part of that because we know, those of us who have been involved as educators especially, that not every child is destined to wind up in Academia Land. Some are destined for Tradesville and some are destined for Artsville, but the fact is that they have to stay in the education system longer, I think, to benefit themselves and their chances.

Now, your point about closure procedures and the fact that some school boards or some schools feel that they are being penalized, I think you said, for underutilized space and why not have that school remain in the community somehow. That's an excellent point, and this is part of the discussions that we are going to be having. We've had a few preliminary ones, myself and the minister of infrastructure and so on.

I would agree with you, that if we can figure out a way – and I mean this as a community, not necessarily just as government or opposition members or whatever – to give more community use to schools in general and at least provide some hope that there would be a potential for a school to be reopened as whatever. I think that's the point you're trying to make. Once a school closure takes place, and there are specific guidelines as to how that happens, and it results in a closure, it's the worst decision a school board probably ever has to make. I sympathize with those you may have gone through, and I've lived through a few, obviously, as well. Knowing that there's some potential use for it surely would encourage the community to somehow rally behind it or understand: yes, this is a closure for now, but it's not going away forever. Communities do revitalize. They do rejuvenate and so on.

However, we have to move on here quickly. The point you made about the Alberta School Boards Association provincial bargaining and the fact that the model, such as it was, was not 100 per cent accepted. I'm going to be briefed on this by ASBA themselves in a few days, or the representatives, at least. I'm interested to know, for example, how the weighted ballot worked and which questions the weighted ballot applied to. I know the report was that there was a 59 per cent approval rate for the new model, so by sheer numbers of majority it succeeded. That's excellent news for ASBA and for the people who worked so hard on it, but perhaps it's not so excellent news for the 41 per cent that felt otherwise.

Still, there was one major board, as you know, I think it was Calgary public, who did not vote. I think that's very significant because if it's a weighted ballot, that per cent could go from 59 up to 67, I think. If it's a weighted ballot going the other way, it could drop closer to the 50 per cent, which would, I guess, support your point, not necessarily ASBA's, obviously, but it's something to be considered.

I heard during my meetings about the benefits of local bargaining, but I also heard what the Learning Commission said. I'll just read to you very briefly, if I might, Mr. Chairman. On page 130 of this excellent report, item 81, Establish a New Collective Bargaining Model, this is what it says:

Under the current arrangements, the Alberta Teachers' Association has a mandate to act as the bargaining agent for teachers employed by public, separate and francophone school jurisdictions. Traditionally, negotiations have taken place at the local level between ATA local organizations and individual school boards. The provincial organization has acted as the bargaining agent when local negotiations have broken down . . .

And it goes on.

In contrast, school boards do not have an effective mechanism for providing a unified bargaining approach. While efforts are made through the [ASBA] to develop common strategies, provide negotiating advice, and take a consistent approach, there is no ability to bind locally elected school boards to a single, common bargaining strategy. In fact, the Commission heard that some school boards take pride in "going their own way" when it comes to bargaining with their local teachers.

The result is an imbalance in bargaining power between a strong and effective ATA on the one hand and a loose collection of school boards on the other.

Now, I only read that for purposes of putting into context what it is that the Learning Commission researched. Earlier this week in the House somebody asked a question about research on some of this kind of stuff. There's research we can find on both sides of every equation, as we all know. What encourages me is that at least we're having these open, frank discussions with it. After I've met with ASBA and I understand that model more perfectly, I will also meet with the ATA, who have called, and they want to chat. I expect I'll be meeting with a number of others because I want to understand better what that model can or cannot accomplish.

The final comment, quickly, Mr. Chair, is with respect to teacher-librarians. This is something that I feel very passionately about because during my years as a teacher, aside from my own home teaching room, I always told children that the most important room in the school is the library. I mean that. That's not to say that there aren't other important ones, but the library at that time – now we're into computers and all kinds of other things today – was the known place of knowledge and information and peace and quiet, too, for that matter. They've changed, but their importance remains the same.

During the 62 meetings I had with all the school boards, I did an informal survey of my own because I sincerely wanted to get a snapshot of where we stand with respect to qualified teacher-librarians. I was quite surprised at how few we actually have in the system. I don't have a number tabulated for you because they weren't prepared for the question as I was asking them, but I'm going to get a little bit more information on that.

On the other hand, we have a very large number of library technicians. As we know, Mr. Chair, those aren't the same thing. They fulfill an important service, and they're equally important to the system. It's just that in my view I think we need more teacher-librarians, but I was not successful in getting that into this year's budget. I'll try again for next year because I am passionate about it, as I am also about guidance counsellors.

You know, we have guidance counsellors, Mr. Chair, and we have career counsellors, I believe. Now, to have accredited, professionally trained counsellors would be my goal. That might mean that they have to be ATA approved or whatever, and that's okay. I know that when you have a counsellor on site all day long, children feel able to come to you, especially if you as the counsellor have established a presence, at any time when their problem exists.

This is kind of like the parent who wishes that he or she had spent more time with their child and coming home and saying: "I'm here. Where are you, child?" Well, the fact is that it's midnight, and the child has gone to bed, but I the parent am there. You have to be there when the children are there, when they're ready.

It's the same thing with guidance counsellors. You have to be there and be available when that child is having a problem, not necessarily two or four or six hours later or a week later. Now, I'm talking in an ideal, perfect sense, but the point I'm trying to make is that I'm very aware of this, and I'm working on this and toward it because these items were also referenced by the Learning Commission. I don't want to build too tall a mountain that none of us will be able to climb, so we're going at it slowly, trying to chip away at this to increase exactly what has been referenced. I hope that we can get that done.

I'll close by just saying, Mr. Chair, that within the renewed funding framework and the additional dollars that we've put there, school boards do have that flexibility now to hire more school librarians if they want and to hire more guidance counsellors, ATA accredited and so on, if they want. But they would probably come back and tell you that their dollars are being used and used well in other areas and that they don't have enough in these other areas yet.

With that in mind, I'll take my chair, knowing full well that this is an issue that will come back again. I agree with your comments about getting SAIT and NAIT more involved with the trades that you closed with, and that's why I'm working with the Minister of Advanced Ed to get some of those things done.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Let me start. This is a big portfolio, and in 20 minutes you sort of have to pick areas that you want to go into. I'm not saying that a lot of the other areas that are being discussed aren't important, but I'd like to take a general look first, if I may.

The $4.3 billion was alluded to. You know, when it gets into billions, people's heads spin because it sounds like a lot of money. I think the minister has said – and we probably agree – that it's still the best single investment you'll ever make. We can argue whether it should be $5 billion or whatever the case may be, but it's most important. The key that I think the minister would agree with is that this is not an expense, that we have to use the word "investment" because that's what it is. It's an investment. It's an economic investment, well-documented. It's a social investment, you know, for the high-needs kids. If they don't get an education, we know where they're going to end up, and we'll end up paying in a different way. We certainly know that it's an economic investment. So I think the term is more important. I'd maybe suggest to the minister that rather than using "expense," we say that it's a $4.3 billion investment.

I want to just talk in a very general sense about what I see happening, and I admit that this is not very scientific. It's a discussion I've had with three high school principals in Edmonton, and I think that the minister would be interested in this. I agree with the focus of getting the class sizes down at the K to 3 level. That's absolutely crucial. The bang for the buck we know is greater – and I'll come to that – but we can't forget the high schools. We've been talking about RAP and that, but in talking to three high schools, while there has been an increase in funding, three big high schools in Edmonton are probably going to lose staff. Now, in one case the population projections may be down slightly, and AISI money is not coming. You know, there are a lot of those programs, and maybe that's another thing the minister might think about. There are maybe too many tied-in programs.

The big thing is that a lot of the high school teachers are at the maximum on the grid, and the salary increases from the collective agreement have basically taken up the bulk of the money. So I think there is some concern. I mean, they're not complaining particularly. They understand, you know, the money being shifted to K to 3, but these three schools – I'm not saying that this is scientific across, but in all three of these cases, the principals I know do expect that their class sizes might be a little higher than they were last year. So I pass that on to the minister. He might want to see if that's generally the case in the high schools throughout the province or not. I don't know.

Because we do have limited time, I want to just come very quickly to one of my favourite topics, as the minister knows. The minister quoted the Learning Commission, and I'd like to come back to junior kindergarten and full-day kindergarten, not quote it, because I don't have it here, but I want to come at it from the perspective, Mr. Minister, of the high-needs students because I think that's where it's crucial. The minister will correct me if I'm wrong, but my understanding is that they said: start there; you don't need to go to a universal program right away, but you have to start with the high-needs schools.

Having also been a former trustee, as the minister is well aware, one of the groups that I represented in my ward was the city centre project. I know that the minister is aware of that because one of the co-ordinators, Sandra Woitas, is working in his department right now. It's interesting. They've done excellent jobs. The minister is aware that the Edmonton public school board at least – and I'm not saying that we're the only ones – saw full-day kindergarten as so crucial that we took money out of our budget to put into the 18 high-needs schools, the 18 highest rated schools because we thought it was crucial. That's money, of course, I guess you could say that comes out from other places, but it was just a priority that the school board I was a member of decided we should do.

It was interesting that after the arbitration, all of the fights that we had and the rest of it, when we had to cut back, it was said to those people – they were doing extra things in the city centre project, and in a couple of schools there's junior kindergarten, and we could talk about that. There's full-day kindergarten in all those schools and reading recovery. They were asked: "Well, we're going to have to do some cutbacks. Where should we do it?" This was back, you know, after the audit and the rest of it. In all cases the schools in the city centre project said: we'd rather have class sizes slightly higher than give up full-day kindergarten and junior kindergarten. I mean, it wasn't a pleasant choice. It's, you know, like: do you want to get shot or hung? But that's what they said. That's how crucial they think full-day kindergarten is, and they're all high-needs schools.

The junior kindergarten. There are studies. I mean, to the minister: the research is all over. I know people can argue: do we need it? Okay. In the suburban areas and that, I don't know. In Massachusetts – I think I mentioned this when I was on the board – the business community is pushing for full-day kindergarten for everybody there because they think it's an investment again. I know how crucial it is with the high-needs schools, with the high-needs students.

We have a fast-growing aboriginal population. We have in those schools a lot of kids, recent immigrants coming in from some really tough backgrounds and places around the world that are in rough shape, to say the least, so they need that extra help. The sooner we can do that, the better. I mean, there are problems later on in junior high, but I'm concentrating on this.

I would really strongly suggest to the minister that, in particular, those are, I think, two very important recommendations from the Learning Commission that should be looked at. If we can't do it universally, I understand that, but I really would suggest that it's a crucial thing in the high-needs population. If we don't get that, it's like I said, you know, the old advertisement: you can pay me now or pay me later. If they don't get that sort of background then, their chances of success I believe get very diminished down the way. I mean, we know the research about junior kindergarten and kindergarten is pretty universal, that especially with high-needs kids it's important.

The minister is aware, I'm sure, of Dr. da Costa's studies on the city centre project and the junior kindergarten. Here's one copy of it here. He's done some excellent work there, and I'm sure the minister is aware of that. If he isn't, he can let me know. We'd certainly get it to him. We have our own local research to show how important these programs are. I have a feeling that the minister agrees with me, but he may have some convincing to do in caucus. I would hope that we would move on that very quickly because I think it is extremely important.

Mr. Speaker, going along, before I run out of time, I know it's been discussed, but it's a bugbear of mine, as the minister is well aware: the school closure process. One of the reasons, the major reason, I ran for the school board was that I tried to put an end to school closures. I think that along with my colleague here we had some success. I'm not sure the Minister of Education liked it at the time. We were told in the audit that they didn't. It is absolutely divisive, and we see it now that this has ended up in the courts. No matter how that works out, it tears the communities apart. In the cluster groups at the school board, of course, it pits one principal against another. It's just a very bad process, and I think the minister understands that. But there are things that we have to do. The minister has already alluded that there's discussion going on – and I'm glad – with the minister of infrastructure.

I want to review a question period that we had about Ontario. They were going through the same processes, and they found that the process was not working. The communities were up in the air, the rural and all the rest of it. So they said: we have to find a better way, part of the closure process, beyond, you know, what we do with the schools. They came to a different perspective. I said to the minister – and I believe it's true – that the process we have now is a how-to guide to close schools down because of the utilization. It hits, and it's quick, and it just doesn't work.

In Ontario – and this is a source I mentioned from Ontario Education: Excellence for All. I believe it was back in 2003 they developed guidelines. These guidelines require boards to develop their own school evaluation tools that weigh each of four sets of considerations about the school. I'm talking about the school closure part of it here. One, its value to the student – they're talking about the school – its value to the community; its value to the school system; and its value to the local economy. This is where I feel we're at right now provincially in terms of our closure process. They say that in the past there have been “rewards” in capital funding for closing schools which has distorted facility considerations. Some boards felt compelled to close schools in one area to be eligible for new schools in another, even if the sites were far apart. Some boards closed schools prematurely to become eligible for new replacement schools. The ministry will no longer recognize closed schools as creating eligibility for new school grants.

That's precisely, if I may say, what's been happening in Alberta.

It plays off, again, the inner city against the suburbs, and it creates a mess. The demographics, the minister himself said: how many people are going to keep being able to afford homes out in the suburbs? There is movement back to the inner city, and I think it will continue, but if you close the school down, it's not a big reason for people with small children to move there. So the closure process we have to look at. Then the minister said that the two ministers will be looking at the whole utilization. The minister knows I've talked before about the old schools. I know it's in the other ministry, but if you're working together, I just want to stress it.

One of the schools being closed or potentially being closed, North Edmonton school, is in my constituency. The provincial utilization has a rate that says a capacity of 448, but that includes the corridors. It includes everything else. It doesn't include instruction areas. If they included just the instruction areas, the board's figures say 350. But I've been in that school when there's 200. I don't know where they'd put them all because all the classrooms are being used. So the utilization rate punishes old schools dramatically. I'm glad that they're looking at that.

I agree with the previous minister of infrastructure across the way: we did the right thing with George Nicholson school. In other words, we are bringing the community in. Capital health and the Y are there, and that makes absolute good sense to me. The school is part of it. I guess I would say: if that works well in new schools, then surely there is some consideration that it should be used in old schools.

Other people have alluded to it, but I really want to stress that we should move back. It was very prominent at one time that the school was the community centre. Because all of us are the same taxpayers. If it's seniors using it or daycare or whatever the case may be, that should be part of the school utilization rate, it seems to me, if we think again of the school as a community centre, especially elementary schools.

We've talked about it before, Mr. Minister. If you're looking at it, my understanding is that in British Columbia they actually count community uses of the school in their utilization formula. They acknowledge that schools are the heart of a community, and they try to maximize that community use. In fact, they even have school co-ordinators trying to bring community groups in. I think that's very healthy for the community. I think it's healthy for the kids. I think it's healthy for everybody. It would require some co-operation from various ministries here, but surely that's doable.

So, Mr. Chairman, I hope that this is an important issue because it is divisive. I've gone through it as a school board trustee, and I've gone through it now as an MLA. I think we really do need some drastic changes there.

Centralized bargaining. I won't say much about this. Within ASBA there are the urban boards and the rural boards. It's a catchphrase for all of them. I believe in local bargaining, but I think local bargaining was made harder when the school boards lost their right to taxation back in '94 and '95. I still think it provides the best way. It certainly has – and I don't want to say that for all of rural Alberta it worked well. I was on the negotiating committee at the local level in Edmonton, and I know that the Edmonton public does not agree with this.

It seems to me that there's a problem here, though. If we're going to move to provincial bargaining – if we are, and I'm not saying that we should – it seems to me that the government has to be at the table. It cannot be a group like ASBA in between. The people that are negotiating have to be the people that have access to the purse strings, it seems to me. Wherever I'm aware of, there are mechanisms. Wherever they have provincial bargaining, the government is at the table. Now, there are mechanisms for local bargaining in some areas. I won't get into that. It doesn't make sense to me to have sort of a provincial group trying to negotiate for Edmonton and Calgary and rural Alberta and not have access to the purse strings. I think you would find in almost all cases where they've gone to provincial bargaining, the government is at the table.

I leave that sort of rushing quickly here, Mr. Chairman. I'd just say quickly that there's one thing in the Learning Commission that I would not touch. The minister alluded to it. I think principals have to be part of the bargaining unit. I think in our model in Alberta it's worked very well. There's a collegiality model between principals and their staff. Almost anybody that I've talked to, principals, at least in Edmonton, believe that it works well the way it is. I think the point that I'd make: in British Columbia, a former deputy minister, Mr. Dosedell, whom you would know, I think told the Learning Commission – and they didn't take his advice – don't go there because we have the principals outside the bargaining unit in B.C., and it's a mess. It's an absolute mess. So that's one I might bury. That's my advice, for whatever it's worth.

The only other thing I have to mention very quickly is that we had a good motion, Motion 505.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to consider the benefits of requiring five credits in fine arts as a condition for high school graduation in the province.

It was by the Member for Calgary-Egmont. It was agreed to.

I think it's a good motion. I think you as a former teacher at Vic comp would probably think that's good. But the problem – and I think the minister is well aware of this – is that there's such a limited time in high schools right now. Where do you put all these things? It's problematic. There are some very good ideas out there, but maybe that means that we have to take a look at – and it comes back to testing and that – what education is all about. Certainly, testing is part of it, but I'm wondering if the provincial testing is testing a relatively narrow aspect of what education should be. How does it test things like citizenship and our fluency in the arts and second languages and these sorts of things? I think we have to take a look at that.

I know that I'm almost out of time, so I will close there, Mr. Chairman. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I have a long list of members who wish to speak or ask questions. At this stage I recognize the minister for his response.

Mr. Zwozdesky: I'll be very brief. I just want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, who has also spent several years, I believe, at the school trustee level with Edmonton public, wasn't it? Yeah, three years. He has some insightful comments that he's put on record, and I'm sure he has many more.

I agree with him: the best decisions that we can make are for our children, and I certainly consider that to be an investment. I was reminded of a phrase, which I can't quote verbatim, but it was something like: if you think education is expensive, you should cost out the alternative. I think we all know what it means. So we're with you on that one.

I will look into what you said about the three high schools and the class size monies. Let me just say in a general sense that the class size monies are for the most part enveloped, but they're enveloped with great flexibility. School boards and individual schools, as they look at their class size numbers – you know, a class of 21 in, let's just say, grade 6 might sound like a large number to some people. If those 21 students are all more or less at the same level of learning capability, it's a lot different than having a class of 21 with children that have enormously varied and diverse and multilevel needs. So that point has been left to the local schools to deal with. We have said: spend these monies at whichever levels you think you need them.

The Learning Commission encouraged us to look first and foremost at the preliminary grades: kindergarten to grade 3. So that's where the first envelopes of dollars were targeted, and I would say that they almost all were used at that level. There might have been a few cases where they were used at 4, 5, and 6, and they will be distributed along the way.

The AISI comment you made is a very good one, and it's been increased a little bit. In fact, innovative programming, which we all know is a school jurisdiction's responsibility, we talked about a great deal. The fact is that our experience tells us that there is more innovation in our school system now than ever before. So we now have about $70 million going into that one project alone, and we fought very hard at our treasury tables, shall I say, to ensure that it stayed there because we needed to encourage other innovative projects.

The junior kindergarten program. You know that that recommendation is still under review, but recommendation 2 is the one you were looking for, hon. member, and it did say to make this “available for all children from the age of four, but given limitations on resources and space, the first priority should be on providing junior kindergarten for at-risk children.” Now, if that particular recommendation succeeds, then fine; that's what will happen. If, on the other hand, it doesn't succeed and government doesn't embrace it, then we will look at other ways of trying to still get to the root of the recommendation, and that is to help those children.

The fact is that by the time we get to kindergarten – and the member would know this, Mr. Chair – 95 per cent of all age five children in this province are in a kindergarten program. Those who are in the prekindergarten year – and we do have several prekindergarten programs. Junior kindergarten is here, and we fund it, but it's up to the local school boards to provide it and make that decision. The fact is that we would get a significant backlash if we were to make it mandatory, so I have to weigh that out in this equation as we consider this one. It's a tough situation to tell a parent that they must give up their children to the school system at age four, but the fact is that if there is a child with a special need or an at-risk child that we know could benefit from it, we provide that kind of funding through PUF, program unit funding, as you're well aware, and that's been increased.

At any rate, the issue, quickly, about other points of support for junior K or whatever. I value what the member said when he indicated something like, “If we can't do it universally, I understand,” or words to that effect. We have to still solve the difficulty, though, of identifying those children whom we know we can help.

The school closure process. You know, this is one that is obviously garnering a lot of attention and a lot of press. I do have that example you gave from the Ontario model, and we are looking at that, but this is going to take some time to address if we're going to do it and get it right. I don't like a lot of the current utilization formula, frankly. The way it sits right now, I don't like it either. That's one reason why we're revisiting it.

At the time that formula was brought in, it was what was thought to be just and correct, and it has served its purpose, so to speak. But I have been reminded through these meetings with school board trustees and their officials, superintendents and so on, that areas like stage areas in schools or storage rooms or other areas that sometimes might be used for instruction but not always: is it fair to consider them? Similarly if some schools have wider hallways than do others. There are simple things like that. I think you mentioned corridors being the same sort of point and the value that these schools have to community.

So we'll definitely be looking at all of that because I would agree that having to close schools shouldn't become an incentive to have new ones built. There's got to be a way that we can work in and with that but still leave those decisions at the local level. I still like to believe that the trustees, who are elected just like all of us in this House are, are just like we are in that they have a job to do, and we have entrusted them – hence the word “trustee” – to make those decisions. So we have to work that one through. I will look at the B.C. example that you gave. In fact, I'll ask my staff, who are here listening, how it is that they use community use as part of the utilization calculation.

I won't comment on local bargaining because I already did, but there is a section called 119, as you know, in the School Act that allows school boards to band together should they wish to do so. I don't know if that's been exercised lately, but I think it was at one point.

The issue of principals we've talked about.

Finally, on Motion 505, which was brought forward by Calgary-Egmont. It passed unanimously. I did speak in favour of it, but I'm well aware of how crowded the curriculum day is already, I'm well aware of the need for additional teachers were it to come forward and be acted upon too quickly, and I am well aware of what it is that our provincial testing does or doesn't do in terms of testing for citizenship, I think he mentioned, or arts, fluency, or whatever it was. So we're looking at all those issues as we speak.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, it's been a very open and good discussion so far this afternoon. One nice thing about being fourth or fifth: you can cross a lot of things off. So I, like the minister, will not bring up some of the good points that have been very well related today already.

I do want to comment on the $4.3 billion and to recognize what a tremendous investment we are making into the future. It's 17 per cent of our budget approximately, and we are putting our money where our mouth is. I am proud to be an Albertan and to be able to say that we are looking to the future of our youth.

I just want to touch briefly on the school closure utilization formula as well because it's very critical in my area in rural Alberta, with shrinking numbers, that they go after that. I would urge you also to continue looking at community use and other ways in which we can keep those areas open and not be penalized because they're not using it. The letter of the law cutteth, and the spirit of the law can add light, and I hope that we can add some light on this school utilization and benefit the rural areas especially. It sounds like it's a major problem even in the cities here. On turning the space over: I know that there are communities that have asked in my area to use that space, so that would be a great movement forward.

I want to talk a little bit about extracurricular activities if I could. It hasn't really been touched on today. Right now – and I'll use the minister's words – we have Artsville and we have Sportsville. I think that it would be nice to open up and have Tradesville and perhaps some other areas for extracurricular activities. It kind of goes, I guess, to the area that I wanted to focus on the most, and we've talked quite a bit about it today, about RAP and YAP. I think it's really important that there is a high percentage of students that don't go on to further education and feel that they're done at grade 12, and I think most of us would agree that it's very much to their detriment.

What I wanted to talk about is the fact – and the minister has mentioned this – of the expense of vocational classes and to be able to get the teachers there. One of the ideas that I've seen in rural Alberta is work experience and the fact that in the evening time or whatever perhaps some ticketed journeyman could be employed to help keep kids off the street and have activities that they enjoy, whether it's mechanics, electrical, carpentry. All of the trades are there in our local communities, and in the apprenticeship program 80 per cent of the time is spent with those journeymen apprenticing.

We seem to be focusing all the time on the classroom at NAIT and SAIT, and that has to be there, but if we could somehow start to include kids at a younger age and more of them and not at a high expense to the school boards by using journeymen in their local areas, I think that would be a huge asset that we haven't tapped into that would be of great benefit to the youth. I'm a very big believer in what I guess you'd call a liberal education or a broad education.

An Hon. Member: Small "1."

Mr. Hinman: Yes. I hope that's on the record. Small "1."

Too often in society we're getting to where people are becoming so highly specialized that perhaps the only thing they can do is brain surgery, that they can't even come and fix something on their own car. We need to be able to have those opportunities, and it's very engaging for the youth if there are those opportunities there and, like I say, even if it has to be extracurricular ones, where we can involve the community and have those kids doing more things. So I hope that we'll really continue trying to be innovative and thinking of ways to engage our youth in more areas than just Artsville, Sportsville, or Academiaville. We need Tradesville.

It's something that people can do in their own home, to do their own repairs, and it's an advantage to everybody to have those. I also think it's exciting that a lot of those kids when they're 18 and they're just so happy to get out of high school and go to work, if they've had three years of different opportunities, it's one more area when we talk about trying to let kids have an idea of what they want to do in life. If, in fact, they can come out, perhaps be an electrician, a welder, or something else, they can go and work for four or five years and realize: you know, now I do know what I want to take at school. But they were earning a decent income instead of one where they have no benefit to be able to go on.

I wanted to talk a little bit about the DARE program and the problem of drugs in the schools. I'll open this up; I'm very intrigued. Are dogs not able to pick up crystal meth? Another area I'd like to have the answer on. I've gone and I've witnessed the DARE program. I'm just curious about the answer. I would think they could be trained. They're very good at it.

The program I wanted to go to or refer to is on the positive side, like DARE is. How would it be in our schools if we were to indeed have a mascot dog that was a drug sniffer in every school and that perhaps some of the special-needs kids and things are looking after? If everybody in the school knew that there were one or two or three of these mascots in there, what effect would that possibly have on the drugs in our schools and not at a great expense? I think there are some new areas that we could look at and really benefit our schools if, in fact, we could reduce the amount of drugs that are in there.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the level of chatter and noise is on the rise. We have a Confederation Room behind the Assembly. If any member wishes to converse loudly, we invite you to leave the Assembly.

Hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, sorry for the interruption. You may proceed.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Anyway, I just think that drugs in our schools is a major problem. In my small rural communities we have volunteer policing, and they do a great deal of work. I think that we could work something in on a volunteer basis with animals that would really be a benefit to our schools.

I want to sidetrack here just for a minute about bullying. Perhaps many of you are aware that Taber is in my constituency. There was a problem, and they've worked very hard there. They've got some good programs on it.

I want to go back, and I've forgotten now which member it was the other day that referred to bullying and a comment that, I guess, I want to refer to. I'm almost embarrassed at times during question period with some of the comments that are made back and forth across the floor. I had students here, and I know that if that behaviour went on in their classroom, they'd have made a trip down to the principal's office and had to be held accountable for it. I think that we need to up our standards here, especially with the number of youth that come into this building and with question period being televised. Perhaps we should have that education in here so that when we make comments that aren't appropriate, we're held accountable for it. Bullying is a problem. I'm grateful that we're working on that area, and I hope we'll continue to focus on it and remove it from our schools.

I guess I want to comment a little bit about value-added in Alberta. There is a Harvard graduate – and I think maybe I've referred to this before – who in the late '50s went back to Singapore. Singapore was destitute. They couldn't afford their police force or anything. They asked the places around: "Who would adopt us? We need to get absorbed in somewhere." Nobody wanted them. A Harvard graduate went there and said, "Look at our assets." Everybody said: "What? What do you mean?" He educated them. Look at what Singapore is today.

In Alberta we have the assets here in the youth. We have the money, and I'm excited about that. I think that we can put not necessarily more money but continue to focus, to really give our youth the opportunity for the next generation. I'm grateful for the Internet that's has gone out and all of those things that we are doing to give them the benefit of the future.

Referring to that, I guess, and going back again to rural schools, for many of my communities the two core things that have kept them there are the schools and the hospitals. We've cut back on the hospitals. They've closed them down, and they're looking at closing the schools down. With the Internet and those things that are available now, there are many businessmen, I guess, if you want to call them that, and entrepreneurs that are looking at going out to some of these rural towns. When they see what's happening to the schools and the opportunities that are there, they say: "Well, no. I don't want to go there."

One of my motions that I have, that won't make it in there though, is that as MLAs we've addressed it, and we realize that the rural areas have some difficulties to deal with. We've put the MLAs on a matrix, and there's a wide variance in the amount of money going to the different areas, depending on how they fit in that matrix. I would very much like to see a matrix for curriculum for rural Alberta. Many of the small schools really struggle in offering the curriculum that the larger schools do. Somehow I feel that we've got to give that opportunity to rural Alberta by some matrix program and not saying, "$9,000 per student, and here it is" but really looking at and benefiting those rural areas. If we do that, we will have people moving into those communities because of the special things that are offered there.

The little town of Warner is one that's just awesome. That school was going to be closed down. They put their heads together, a very small community: what can we do? Years ago the Alberta government allowed them to build that arena, and they've done a great job. They've raised hundreds of thousands of dollars. We need to be innovative with these small towns. What other ideas can we have going so that people will want to move there or actually people will send their kids? We have kids from all over the world that come into the little town of Warner. I think there are 89 homes there, but because of that work, they still have a high school.

I've brought it up several times – I'll bring it up again – that it would be a tremendous investment for a centennial project to look down the road to having a world-class hockey school for girls in Warner, that right now is struggling to stay alive. I really would ask that the ministers put their heads together again and look at that. It is an opportunity, a centennial opportunity, and the people there have put their effort into it. Over 10,000 volunteer hours have gone into that community to try and make that hockey school float, and they're really putting their effort into it.

There are so many innovative and good ideas out there, though, in our education system that we can and we should continue to explore, and it's exciting that we have the money that we can invest into it. So let's make sure those dollars are going into the very best areas possible.

I want to refer just for a few minutes to the bargaining also. In our area the teachers and the school boards have gotten along very well, but it was disheartening a couple of years ago when the ATA told them that, no, they weren't allowed to settle. I think there has to be an opting out, that when a group is happy, whether it's a school board, the teachers, or whatever, they can make a settlement. I think they should be allowed to. Why stir the pot and divide and conquer when, in fact, a group is working well? The principals there want to be part of their union, and things are working well in my area. I would just encourage that somehow choice is there. Once they've settled, let's not say: "No. You know, you're part of this. We've got to be collective," that the rest can go on. There's a huge difference in the needs of rural communities and their teachers and those in the cities, and one size doesn't always fit everybody. So I'm concerned about that.

I guess I'll quote a new quote that I got last week from the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul. He says: let's not think outside the box; let's throw the box out. When it comes to collective bargaining, when it comes to ideas, let's throw the box out and put all the ideas on the table, like we are today, and pick the best ones and go forward because Albertans will benefit from that.

I'll see if there's something else here on the list. I guess that in closing, what I want to do is to give my thanks and appreciation to the government on their budget and the money they're putting in there.

I really want to comment on and thank the teachers. They're hard working, they're innovative, and they're deserving more recognition for the dedication towards our youth. To me it would be very fitting. We have rewarded excellence for our students, and I would like to see more rewards of excellence for our teachers. We have outstanding teachers, and whether that's all of the different areas – academics, extracurricular activities, and those areas – I would like to see them somehow rewarded and have that desire to become the best of the best. There's nothing more exciting, as I think back in my education, than those teachers that were passionate and got you engaged in things.

I had a biology teacher that was phenomenal. Everybody in my small, little town came to biology, and they were engaged in there, and we need to have more teachers like that. We need to have them come to their full potential and be exciting. We can and we should do it. So I'd urge this government to somehow give more rewards of excellence to our teachers, who are looking after the future of our youth.

With that, I'll sit down. I know there are lots of other good ideas out there. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Briefly to the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, thank you for your comments.

I agree that $4.3 billion is a huge amount of money, and it's a significant investment. A significant amount of that does go to rural Alberta, and we're very sensitive to the points that you made about rural Alberta. In fact, I don't have it just handy here, but we have a program called small schools by necessity, which is another way that we channel monies out to those areas where, in the case of rural areas, a school may not exist for a span of 25 kilometres. In the case of more populated areas I think it's down to 6 kilometres. Whatever the exact numbers are, we do provide extra monies for that. I'm quite certain that in the current budget there are increased monies for that. Is it 2 per cent or thereabouts? Yeah, it's about 2 per cent. We could all use more, but when you have a lot of children to feed, you've got to give them all a little bit. But it's there.

So, too, is there a transportation rates increase of about 3 per cent. So, too, is there more flexibility, in other words more money, in many other different envelopes through the renewed funding framework, which I alluded to. There's quite a bit more there overall.

You know, the member who spoke before you made an interesting point, and that was that there are so many teachers who are now in that upper echelon of the grid. Whenever we get new monies, sometimes so much of it goes – I'm not saying that they're not worth it. I'm just saying that it's a fact that we have teachers who are in their 50s, perhaps, or 60s who are at the maximum of the grid both in terms of education and years of experience, so there's a large consumption of dollars for salaries still, even when these increases come.

Your points about work experience and using tradesmen and journeymen in the community are very valid ones. We are talking about that right now and the ratios – 3 to 1, 1 to 3, 1 on 1, whatever it's going to be – to help make more opportunities available to engage our youth, I think you said.

The point about drugs in the schools. The DARE program and its success have been covered many times. We will be coming back with some more information on that. I hope to do it reasonably soon. I just don't have it all together yet. You'll have to wish me some luck in succeeding with it.

Volunteer policing, bullying, and antibullying initiatives are also on our drawing boards.

Your points about comments in the House during question period are very valid. I've sat in this House for 12 years, and there are comments that come from both sides of the House that sometimes many people regret having said. I won't go any further with those.

The value-added, however, is an interesting point. You know, we have four pillars for our government's business plan: leading in learning, unleashing innovation, competing in a global marketplace, and making Alberta the best place to live, work, and visit and so on. So when I talk about or you talk about giving youth more opportunities, I think we're very much on the same page. Obviously, it starts with having the best education available for them.

In that vein, your point about school closures seems to be a popular subject today. I grew up in a small rural community of about 200 or 300 people. I know exactly what you're talking about. Schools and hospitals are very important attractions, but they're not only important in rural Alberta. They're also important in our cities and our towns and other locations. Keeping rural communities open or viable, I think is the word you said: I'm well aware of the role those schools can play in doing that.

I think schools more than hospitals are probably a larger attraction for getting the next generation to move there or for the current generation to stay there. Why would you move into a small town if that school is closing? You might as well move to the place where the school is staying open. That's part of the dilemma in Sangudo and Mayerthorpe and I think Valhalla, Beaverlodge, Hythe, Sunset House, Bruderheim. There are a number of these, which are very difficult, difficult decisions. So we're studying this. I don't know what the answers are going to be yet.

On the rural thing I'll just close out here quickly, Mr. Chair, by saying that we also provided a brand new initiative here called video conferencing. Now that we have dozens and dozens of sites already set to go and hooked up – and we'll have them all, I hope, done by the end of September – you will see many, many more opportunities for a lot more course selection, a broader range of courses to be selected, and a step up, I think, for certain of those courses to have improved quality of education provided for kids through video conferencing. I can't remember how much it is. Is it $6 million for video conferencing that we just put in? That's over and above some monies that I announced a couple of months ago, wasn't it? Yeah, about the same amount, coincidentally, or thereabouts. A huge amount of money to help these schools.

Not only that, hon. member, but we're also going to be providing up to $500 per month per site to help schools cover the costs of the monthly hookups, so that will help a great deal to use that. I think rural Alberta will light up – literally light up – because not only will the schools use these, but a lot of the community groups will perhaps rent them for a couple bucks an hour or whatever it's going to be. [interjections] It's very good. Yeah. It's very good stuff. So we're increasing the monies there, and that's ongoing money, by the way, to help out.

I'm sorry. You did mention the Warner example. I can't remember, but I think I actually sent a letter of support for that one because it sounded like a good project, and I heard a lot about it from your local school board down there. You talk about it being a good idea. We have so many good ideas here that we are really leading not only the nation, but we're leading the world in many ways.

I was quite surprised to hear this, but let me share it with you. When I took over the portfolio, one of the things I wanted to do was exactly what is happening today by way of a symposium on health. I wanted to do a symposium on education, so I said to our team leaders: why don't we do that and bring in some experts from around the world and really learn what's going on in education that maybe is, you know, the next best mousetrap and the next best bread-slicing equipment and so on? The room went dead silent, and they looked at me and said: "Well, that would be a good idea, Mr. Minister, except you need to know that we are the best in almost all of these areas, and those people come here. Those people come to Alberta." I didn't know that, hon. member, and I suspect a lot of people here don't know that.

I don't say it to brag or to complain. I say it only because there is tremendous respect for what we're doing and for some of the calculated and researched risks that we sometimes take. Charter schools: we're the only jurisdiction in the whole of the country that I'm aware of, that offers charter schools. Unarguably, in my opinion, they're a great thing. That's where you were coming from with the Warner thing.

Your point about the ATA not allowing local settlements, I guess, makes the point that the Learning Commission was trying to make; that is, you know, there has to be some degree of parity that the Learning Commission had in mind when they crafted that recommendation. If a local ATA makes a deal with a local school board, you would think that the ATA at the provincial level would be honour bound to see it through. They have their reasons why they don't always agree with that because they as an ATA have the broader picture in mind, and it's a different game, as we all know. Similarly, ASBA wants to have that kind of impact as well. So it'll be an interesting discussion we're going to have.

My last comment, Mr. Chair, and I'll take my seat, is that I certainly agree with his comment about the outstanding teachers that we have. We are recognizing some of them here within the next week or two. There are more things that we could do. In fact, if you check Hansard over the years, you'll find a few places where I've talked about some things they do in Germany to show the kind of value that you talked about, to show the kind of reward, if you will. I'll give you one quick example, and I'll take my chair because there are teachers here.

When I was a teacher, I did a lot of marking in my home. In fact, I had a study. Well, it was not quite that fancy, but it was a little part of the house that I called my study. That's where I did my marking, I kept the students' stuff, I did instrument repair when I was teaching music, I had my collection of books, and so on and so on. In Germany – and I don't know if they still do this because this was a few years ago – they actually allowed that part of the house to be written off on your income tax. Now, it's a small thing, but I'll tell you: that's a few hundred bucks that a teacher can save. There's another part, too, where teachers are spending money occasionally out of their own pocket on materials, which we've all done. We buy little stars or little stickies or whatever it was.

Let me take my seat and allow other members to ask some questions, but I'll go to the wall to make some of these discussions happen to show some of that value.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, we only have about three minutes.

Mrs. Mather: I know. I respect the hon. minister for many of his skills. I wish I could have some of the skill that he has in speaking so quickly.

I have some points to make. I wanted to talk about the importance of education, but I'm obviously speaking to disciples, and that's great. I have a passion for education, and I'm proud to say that I've had the opportunity, the honour of learning and working as a teacher, counsellor, and administrator.

There are many facets to consider. I want to say that I support what's been said ahead of me, in most cases very strongly. This is an important budget. What we do affects everyone in this province, and I'm proud of the commitment to the investment in education. I want to thank the minister and his department for the hard work that's gone into this. I've got about seven points. I'll go as fast as I can.

Number one, they need to provide adequate funding for education infrastructure. I know this is another department, but I want to take this opportunity to say that schools, especially the aging ones, are not getting enough funds to meet the school maintenance needs. The maintenance allocations are based on the size of the building and enrolment and not on the school age or individual needs. Using this formula, new schools are left with surpluses and maintenance allocations, and older schools can hardly keep up with maintenance like plumbing, electrical, and so on.

The other very important issue I'd like to talk about is from the senior high school perspective, and that's the methods used to allocate funds. High schools have to set up completion targets every year. The funds then are allocated based on projected credits as of September 30. If at the end of the school year the targets are not met due to dropouts, the school is hit with huge funds being taken out in August. As such, it's almost impossible for high schools to plan budget spending, and many high schools end up in deficits. This practice is leaving our most needy high schools with the least funds. High schools in poor neighbourhoods or with significant immigrant populations are the ones affected most because of the lack of school attendance and so forth. In irony, they are the ones that need the funds the most to provide these students with extra help. In other words, poor schools are getting poorer and rich are getting richer.

On that same point I wanted to say too: is there a way we could push for a funding formula where there's a base figure for each student that is realized on September 30 and then give us money based on completion? You know how many resources are put into place, I'm sure, and the student doesn't finish the courses. But the work has been there: the counsellor time, the administrator time, and certainly the teacher time. It's hard to expect schools to plan and provide good programming when there's no stability in the enrolment.

The other thing I wanted to touch on – and I said there are seven, but I'll go to this one right now because nobody has.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 p.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday, I must now put the question after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Education for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 4, 2005 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 05/05/04
 head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order. May we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly this evening a fine group of youth and young men from the 170th Sherwood Park LDS Scout group. Their leaders are Garth Fitzner and Sheldon Fisk, and the five boys are Nathan, Matthew, James, Adam, and Theo. I'd ask that they would arise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is indeed my pleasure to introduce to you and through you tonight to all of the members of the Assembly a fine group of young women. They comprise the 185th Brownie group from the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. They're led tonight by group leaders Sharon Jones, Amy Thomas, and Kristiana Beaudry and parent helpers Tami MacGregor, Chantel Savard, and Mike Houston. I indicated to them that all of my colleagues in the Assembly tonight are going to be most disappointed when they learn that, unfortunately, this particular group is sold out of cookies tonight. I told them that we all came with our wallets full and expecting to be able to load up our offices with cookies, and unfortunately that's not going to happen. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warmest welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. With me I have two groups of individuals. One consists of three constituents: Ms Denise Brunner and Cathy and Keith Michael, who are with us in the members' gallery.

Also, I'm pleased to have members of the Lithuanian-Canadian community, who actually have some really interesting connections to this particular building. Ms Emilia Karosas, the grandmother of our page Mr. Taddes Korris, over here. We also have Kostas Zolpis, president of the Canadian Lithuanian Society, and Maryanne Kelemen. We have Titas and Eugenia Uogintas – Mr. Uogintas actually is the individual who built this dais over here for our Mr. Speaker's chair, behind you, that entire structure that surrounds the Speaker's chair – and Mr. Jean Luke, David Luke, and Mary Ann Garbencius. Mary Ann's father, John Garbencius, recently was awarded a medal for being 103 years old on our centennial. We also have Al and Andrea Schmidtas and Joseph Popikaitis and Nejolla Korris, the president of the Edmonton-Castle Downs Conservative Association. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Gaming

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the committee has before it the estimates for the Department of Gaming, and as per our Standing Orders the first hour will be allocated between the minister and members of the opposition, following which any other member may participate.

I notice a very colourful tie on the Minister of Gaming, so I recognize the Minister of Gaming.

Mr. Graydon: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. If the Provincial Treasurer can get a new pair of shoes for her budget, I can get a new tie for mine. That is my feeling.

I'm happy to be here this evening to discuss the Ministry of Gaming's 2005-2006 budget. I would move that we adjourn to the Casino Yellowhead, but I know that would be ruled out of order, so we'll stay and deal with it right here in the Assembly. Over the last couple of months it's been busy and exciting. I look forward to providing estimates for our activities over the next year.

First, I'd like to introduce some members of the staff who are here this evening, up top there, looking down and hopefully going to give me some advice over the evening. I would like to welcome Norm Peterson, the Deputy Minister of Gaming and chief executive officer of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission; Ann Hammond, the Assistant Deputy Minister of Gaming; Ron Crosby, executive director of finance and administration with the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission; Marilyn Carlyle-Helms, communications director of Gaming. My executive assistant, Chris Brookes, is up there as well. Thanks.

In order to put our estimates into perspective, I'd like to take a moment to give the committee some context regarding the Ministry of Gaming and its responsibilities. The Ministry of Gaming is responsible for several entities including the Department of Gaming. The department's areas of responsibility include the strategic direction for the province's gaming and liquor policies and communications. The department's responsibilities also include the administration of certain lottery-funded programs including the community facility enhancement program and the community initiatives program.

The Ministry of Gaming also includes the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, or AGLC, as I will refer to it throughout this evening. The AGLC regulates all gaming and liquor activities and establishes operational policy for these activities within a provincially approved framework.

Other entities within the Ministry of Gaming include the Alberta Gaming Research Council and the Alberta lottery fund. The Alberta Gaming Research Council is a broad-based advisory group that helps direct the research activities of the Alberta Gaming Research Institute, and the Alberta lottery fund is used to support thousands of volunteer, public, and community-based initiatives annually.

Gaming is also responsible for the Horse Racing Alberta Act, the Gaming and Liquor Act, and the Racing Appeal Tribunal.

Tonight I'll be focusing on the Department of Gaming and its key areas of responsibility. The Department of Gaming's estimates total $169 million for the fiscal year 2005-2006. Two per cent of this budget will go towards costs necessary to administer the department and its lottery-funded programs. Two per cent for administration, Mr. Chairman. The lion's share, 98 per cent, or just over $165 million, will go directly into lottery-funded grant programs. Our goal is to ensure that Albertans continue to see the maximum benefit from the province's well-managed gaming and liquor industries. I'll show you how we intend to ensure that this happens as I highlight some key areas for Gaming in the upcoming year, 2005-2006.

The first and perhaps most important item is the Alberta lottery fund. This year we continued to listen carefully to Albertans and direct lottery revenues towards priority areas. Revenues from the Alberta lottery fund have made and continue to make a real difference in the lives of all Albertans: first, through allocations to a number of ministries in support of public initiatives – for example, Infrastructure and Transportation, Environment, Innovation and Science, and the list goes on and on – secondly, through a variety of other ministries to foundations and grant-based programs such as the community facility enhancement program, CFEP, and for volunteer and community-based initiatives.

This means that lottery funds allocated to individual ministries are the responsibility of my cabinet colleagues to disburse according to the plans that they present to the House in their estimates, that come before us as we move through the estimates this session. My job as Gaming minister is to discuss my ministry's lottery fund allocations, which total $165 million, and highlight significant areas within Gaming.

Two of these significant areas that we deal with are the community initiatives program, CIP, and the community facility enhancement program, CFEP. I'd like to point out that in this budget we've requested continued funding for these very important grant programs. In the past these two programs have put millions of dollars of lottery revenue to good work in hundreds of communities throughout our great province.

I'd like to share a few examples from last year on these programs. A public library received $125,000 to renovate a special area to promote the importance of learning amongst teens between the ages of 13 and 19. A kindergarten society received just over $47,000 to develop an early childhood literacy program. A gymnastics club got $40,000 to improve their training facility and to buy new equipment. We need to be able to continue funding projects of this nature and many others, Mr. Chairman. We plan to put $38.5 million into the community facility enhancement program and $30 million into the community initiatives program to do just that again this year. The importance of these programs speaks for itself through the benefits they provide to Albertans every day in every community.

Another area we deal with is major fairs and exhibitions. Another significant highlight this year is the funding for major fairs and exhibitions throughout Alberta. This year Edmonton Northlands and the Calgary Exhibition and Stampede will each receive a $3 million increase for facility improvements. This initiative will help support the various programs offered by both the Edmonton and Calgary facilities, including exhibitions, fairs, trade shows, and numerous other community events that they hold at their facilities. Most importantly, this money provides the opportunity for Albertans across the province to showcase their agricultural and other related trade products.

As well, Northlands will receive $250,000 to support the Canadian Finals Rodeo, and the Calgary Stampede will receive a similar amount to promote the Calgary Stampede. I believe it's called the greatest outdoor show on Earth. Overall, funding for each of these important volunteer organizations will increase to $10.35 million in 2005-2006.

As you will recall, Mr. Chairman, this House recently approved $40 million from the Alberta lottery fund in 2004-2005 for the province's other seven major fairs and exhibitions. These funds will be used to upgrade buildings, grounds, and other capital projects which support the many community activities in and around these seven municipalities. In 2005-2006 the funding to the regional fairs and exhibitions will be $2.66 million.

Continuing with the agricultural theme, I'll move on to the racing industry renewal initiative. This initiative is aimed at revitalizing the horse-racing and breeding industries by returning a portion of the net proceeds from slot machines at racetracks to the industry. We call this a flow-through arrangement. As in all our flow-through arrangements the amount of the grant is determined by actual revenues. The other portion of net proceeds is directed back into the Alberta lottery fund.

Approximately $15 million went to support thousands of community initiatives around the province from the lottery fund and from the racing initiative. It's an arrangement that benefits the agricultural community and strengthens our urban communities. The budget for this initiative is $45 million in 2005-2006. The majority of this funding will be used toward the operation and capital costs associated with racetrack facilities and racing purses. This is very important if we want to continue to both preserve and revitalize an important part of Alberta's history and culture.

Now on to bingo. It's another flow-through arrangement. The budget estimate indicates that $8 million will go to charities from bingo association halls that conduct electronic bingo, or digi bingo. As you see in this year's estimates, the budget for this initiative is set to increase by $1 million from last year's budget. Proceeds are generated through the commitment by the charities to fund raise, and the proceeds flow through the Alberta lottery fund and go directly back to those groups. All benefiting charities have been properly registered, and their use of proceeds is thoroughly scrutinized to ensure that these funds are going to eligible causes. Last year 2,300 charities earned $44 million from bingo events held across this province.

Mr. Zwozdesky: How many was that?

Mr. Graydon: Forty-four million dollars.

This initiative is also a part of a broader strategy aimed at helping the bingo industry compete in today's entertainment marketplace and continues to assist charities to fund raise for their many worthwhile initiatives throughout the province.

The third and final flow-through initiative in Gaming's estimates is the First Nations development fund grant program. First Nations casinos are expected to provide economic and social benefits for First Nations people. Under the First Nations gaming policy an amount equivalent to 40 per cent of the slot machine proceeds from First Nation casinos will be allocated toward social, economic, and community development projects identified by those First Nations. This may apply to education, health, infrastructure, and addiction programs within First Nation communities. These funds cannot be used for capital, operations, or financing costs of gaming activities or gaming facilities.

The $4 million included in Gaming's 2005-06 estimate is directly linked to the operation of one or more First Nation casinos if they're up and running in this time period. To date two First Nation casinos have received approval to begin construction. Just like the other flow-through arrangements the revenue has to be generated before the flow-through grants can be provided.

Before I conclude, I'd like to briefly mention a couple of other items including our estimate for gaming research. In prior years the budget for gaming research has been allocated between the Alberta Gaming Research Institute and the Alberta Gaming Research Council. However, this year we are reviewing our relationship with these organizations and the allocation of funding. However, we can assure the House that $1.6 million will be used for gaming research this year.

Finally, net gaming and lottery revenues are projected to be $10 million lower in 2005-06 than in the '04-05 forecast. This may seem odd when you think about the new casinos being built in the province, but when you consider that some municipalities have enhanced their smoking bylaws, some of which have already come into effect and some which will come into effect this summer, the decline may not seem so unusual. In fact, we are projecting a $50 million decline in gaming revenue in 2005-06 because of these enhanced smoking bylaws. As you're aware, Mr. Chairman, the smoking legislation that has been under debate in the House this session has no bearing on these enhanced municipal bylaws, which take precedence.

As you've heard, the Department of Gaming's funding request of $169 million is reasonable. We're continuing to operate in a straightforward, transparent, and fiscally prudent fashion. Albertans expect and deserve well-managed gaming and liquor industries that give back to them and their communities every single day. It's a responsible budget, Mr. Chairman. I would encourage support for it. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to lead off the debate on the estimates for the Gaming department. I'd like to go a little bit more wide ranging than the minister has mentioned here. I think we have to look a little bit further than just the estimates on how much your department is spending and look at the big picture of gaming as it exists in Alberta today.

I think that in this province right now we have to look at gaming not just as a pastime; it's actually an industry. It's an industry that was created by the government, it's regulated by the government, and the government is its major beneficiary. But now that the government has created this Frankenstein monster of income, it doesn't really seem to know what to do with it.

Now, the very name of the department indicates that the government has two minds of how to approach gaming right now. You call it gaming and not gambling, which I think is kind of interesting. I mean, gaming has the connotation that it's fun. You know, kids play baseball. It's all a game. It's all in fun. Gambling has a little bit different name to it, and I think the department should more rightly be called the department of gambling because that's really what it is.

The government likes to talk about how it's based on a charity model of gambling, which indicates that charities are perhaps the big winners, but if you actually look at the numbers, the real big winner in gambling is the province of Alberta. The government is far and away the biggest winner in the gambling bonanza. In 2002-2003 the government took in 66 per cent of gambling revenue. Private operators got 21 per cent and charities got 12 per cent. In fact, it's not just a charity model, but it's actually a government revenue model if you look at it in its entirety. So I contend that right now the government doesn't really know what to do with the gaming industry.

Now, you didn't mention that your business plan is made up predominately of platitudes and buzzwords and that kind of thing. What we don't see is any real idea, any grand plans on where gaming or gambling is going in Alberta. My concern – and this is something I'd like the minister to address when I'm done here – is to address how he sees gambling in the next five, the next 10 years in Alberta. At the Alberta Gaming Research Institute luncheon, you gave a speech, and then you had an open forum and asked questions. I was in the audience, and I asked you this very same question. Where is gambling going in Alberta in five years, in 10 years?

Maybe that wasn't a fair question to ask you at a nice friendly luncheon, but I felt I obliged to ask it anyway. I don't recall that you really gave me that specific an answer, but I'll tell you that after I asked you that question, I had a lot of people come up to me in the gambling industry, experts on it, and they thanked me for asking that question because they want to know what the government plans on doing with gambling in the next five years, the next 10 years.

Now, the five-year plan outlined in the budget doesn't address the single most important question about gaming: how big does the government want gambling to become? You've created this industry that went from zero dollars roughly 20 years ago to one of over a billion dollars in about 20 years. I don't know if the government was even prepared for the tremendous amount of money that would be pouring into the coffers in such a short time. So let's put gambling revenue in perspective for a moment here.

Under the listing of Profit from Commercial Operations on page 198 of the budget we see net gaming and lottery revenue of $1.2 billion. To put this into some sort of perspective, it's roughly the same as the revenue this province brings in from crude oil royalties. Gambling revenue – and that's predominantly VLTs and slots – brings in as much money to the Alberta coffers as crude oil royalties. That's an astonishing figure.

My major question is simply this. It's a big question that I would like the minister to address, and I'd be happy to sit down when I'm done with this, and you can rattle on for five, 10 minutes about it if you like. Where is gambling going in Alberta? Now, I know that a few years ago you had a gaming summit, but I believe that addressed mostly the nuts and bolts, a few technicalities, and basically how it's going to operate. It didn't really answer the question of why it's operating.

The big questions about gaming have not been asked or answered. If you can develop an industry around something like nanotechnology, everybody's happy. If you promote agriculture, everybody's happy. But there are moral and ethical questions in the gaming industry that a lot of people are not happy with. I suggest that if you did a little poll of the members in this room right now, there would be a lot of humming and hawing about whether this is a good thing for Alberta or not. The revenue is a wonderful thing. Everybody's happy to have the billion dollars coming in, but is this the right way to raise a billion dollars? Is $1.2 billion just the start? In five years from now are you looking at raising it to $2 billion? Do you want to make it $3 billion, $4 billion, or $5 billion? Is there an upper limit? Is the sky the limit for the amount of money you want to bring in from gambling?

It's interesting that when the first native casino opens in Alberta, we will have every form of legal gambling that is available in any North American jurisdiction. Even the state of Nevada won't have every type of gambling available, but the province of Alberta will. When Alberta adds five new casinos in the next year or so, we will have the highest number of casinos in North America after the state of Nevada. Is this the route we want to take as a province, and is this something the government has long-range plans for? More casinos? More income? What are we looking at here?

Now, I contend that gambling has moral and legal implications that sooner or later will be a major issue that the government will have to face. If you look at other provinces, this process has started already. Ontario Premier Dalton McGuinty late last year said, and I quote: there's no doubt about it; we have come to rely on gambling revenues; perhaps in a better world we wouldn't, but the fact of the matter is it's here, and it's here to stay. I would love to hear the Premier or the Gaming minister say something along those lines just to clarify their actual position on gambling revenue.

Take the province of British Columbia. British Columbia has vowed to increase its net income from gambling by 21 per cent over the next three years. Now, I don't know if this is right or wrong. That's a matter for the people of British Columbia to decide. But at least it's out there. It's a statement saying: we do want to raise more money through gambling; we want to increase our net income from gambling. Does the government want to do that? Is it something that they don't really know? It's time we started to clear up these matters.

Nova Scotia has taken the most interesting steps. It has produced – and I have it here – A Better Balance: Nova Scotia's First Gaming Strategy. Among other things it calls for reduced accessibility to VLTs by removing a thousand of the machines, reducing VLT hours by eliminating the midnight to close time frame, which would wipe out about three hours in Alberta, I think, and they want to reduce the speed of play by about 30 per cent.

I'd like to read just one short passage from the gaming strategy, which is something I think the government should give some serious consideration to. The report is called A Better Balance. It's a five-year strategy designed to set a new course for gaming in the province. It is intended to be a comprehensive, cohesive, integrated strategy which will be the first step in building a better, more balanced gaming environment in Nova Scotia . . .

Nova Scotia has been actively involved in gaming for almost 30 years, without having a provincial strategy or policy. This is not to say that individual departments and agencies do not have strategic plans and policies that relate to gaming – in fact, they do. And in many instances these groups consult and co-operate on specific initiatives. However, there is a need to have a provincial strategy to guide these various functions.

I propose that this is exactly what Alberta needs. We need a strategy that is going to look at the long-term impact of gambling, whether it's something that you want to increase. Do you want to grow it? Do you want to shrink it? What are we looking at here?

Now, the ministry says that it doesn't really promote gambling by going out and advertising it, which is almost like saying: well, it's here, and we're making whacks of dough on it, but we're not really that proud of it. So what is it? Is it an industry worth promoting and developing, or is it something that we're just going to reap the benefits of without giving any real thoughts to the implications of it?

In an interview with the Calgary Herald I believe the minister himself said that Alberta wouldn't grow the industry just to raise revenues. But, on the other hand, you know, why would you grow the industry, which is exactly what you're doing right now? By adding more casinos, you're growing the industry. When you take a VLT out of a bar where it's not performing well and put it in one where it's going to get more money, you're growing the industry on a very small measure, but you are growing the industry.

Basically, what I'm asking the minister is this, and I'll gladly sit down and give him 20 minutes if he wants or however long it takes. I have specific questions. What is the government's long-term vision for gambling in Alberta? Why does the government support a gambling industry in this province? Does the government have any targets for revenue collection for gambling dollars for either two years from now, five years from now, whatever? Is there any upper limit on the number of casinos in Alberta? In short, where does the government see the gambling industry in five years? Now, I know that's a lot to chew on, and it's maybe a little bit more than you might have expected today, but I welcome the minister's comments. The floor is yours.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you. I'm not sure that all the comments relate to the estimates that we're dealing with tonight, but I'm happy to reply to some of the comments that have been made and perhaps help the member understand what's happening.

He mentioned: if we polled the members in the Assembly, how many of them would be in favour of us being involved in the gaming industry? That might be a mixed vote, but I suggest that if I polled the members and asked for a poll on how many people think that prohibition works, I would have a unanimous decision, Mr. Chairman, that prohibition doesn't work. It didn't work for alcohol. It would not work for gaming.

If we weren't in the business, I guarantee you that someone else would be, someone far less desirable than the government, and the proceeds from that illegal gambling, gaming, whatever you want to call it, would not be going to charities. It would not be going to your neighbourhood community club or to Northlands, if you want to use them as examples, or to the playground. It would be going into the underworld and to organized crime. That's where it would be going. So I make no apologies for the government being involved in gaming with the charity model that is unique and that we're quite proud of.

When we talk about growth, we're very responsible about growth in this province. We monitor what's happening very closely. The member knows that we have a very complex and detailed process if you wish to be involved in the industry.

It's interesting to note that when we opened up the Edmonton market for expressions of interest for a new casino, there were 6 applications, and only one was approved. If we didn't care about growing the industry, if our only intent was to saturate the market as much as we can, I would suggest that the AGLC would have approved more than the one application.

If we only wanted to grow the industry, we would have removed the 6,000 cap on VLTs that's been in place for 10 years. For 10 years that cap has been in place as the province's population has grown – gosh, how much over 10 years? – a big percentage. But have we changed that cap? No, we haven't. In fact, what we have done is reduced the number of locations where you can go and be entertained on a VLT. There are 13 per cent less locations in Alberta right now where VLTs are accessible than there were a couple of years ago.

A few comments about some other provinces. It's interesting and quite a bit of media lately about what's happening in Nova Scotia, and I'll tell you that I for one am delighted that they're finally trying to catch up to Alberta. You know, they took out a thousand machines. Well, that's good. I'm glad they did that. Their ratio of machines per thousand population is still almost double what it is in Alberta. So, you know, I'm glad they're making the moves that they are.

They talk about responsible gaming, additions, if you will, features on their machines. That's something that we initiated at least a year ago if not two years ago. When you're playing a machine, a display scrolls across the screen that basically says: you've been on this machine for 15 minutes; don't you think you should take a little break here? It reminds people how long they've been playing and just alerts them to how long they've been there.

We've changed the displays so that they no longer display credits. They now display actual dollars, so it registers better in your mind: my gosh, if I cash out right now, I'm going to take a hundred dollar slip up to the cashier, as opposed to however many credits. I suppose that if they're 25 cents, that would be 400 credits. A hundred dollars means a lot more than credits to me.

We also have messages scrolling across the screen giving them the 1-800 number that they may wish to call if they think they have a problem with gaming. We keep very close track of that, Mr. Chairman. In all the surveys that we've done – and the percentages aren't changing very much – over 80 per cent of Albertans use gaming in a responsible way and feel that it's good entertainment. Whether that's buying a 6/49 ticket, going and betting on the horses, going to a casino, whatever the case may be, a high percentage of Albertans – as I said, over 80 per cent – partake in that in one form or the other and really have absolutely no issue with it.

We do have a low percentage of people with serious problems. We admit that. We know that about 1.5 per cent of the people involved have a serious problem, and we work on that. Obviously, we fund a lot of dollars – it's in the estimates – to AADAC for their programs. As mentioned earlier, we give $1.5 million to the researchers to research problem gambling; in particular, what we can do to help those people that have a problem, help them to not become addicted, if that is the problem, or help them, once they are addicted, to break the habit and return to a more normal life.

Do we have a goal in mind of how much money we want to take in from gaming? Specifically: no. We very carefully look at the market, and the AGLC determines through the eight-step process that they use when you apply for a new casino – it takes into account the demographics of the area, the population. It takes into account municipal input from the municipal councils, whether they feel that they want that facility in their city or not. It's not just a matter of walking in and filling out a form and walking out with a casino licence. Absolutely not. So, yes, there are several casinos that have gone through the process and are in the queue right now to be constructed or have the permission to go ahead. They don't get their real licence until they have constructed what they said they were going to build. But there are several – I believe six is the right number – that have gone through the eight steps and can start construction if they want.

But at the moment there's no intention of opening up – I haven't heard AGLC mention that they're going to open it up for any more in the province. We want to wait and see how those new ones do, how it affects the market. We have absolutely no intention of saturating the market. There's not much point in having a charity work twice as many casinos and make half as much money. There's no point in that. So we're very conscious of how much a charity can earn by working a casino, and that has a bearing on whether we allow expansion or not.

Those are lots of general comments, but it was kind of a general question, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you. I still haven't heard about the long-range plans for gambling in Alberta. I suspect it's because you don't really have a long-range plan, but we'll go on to other things then.

You mentioned slot machines, or VLTs, actually. And I know that the government likes to brag that it has put a cap on VLTs, which is true. I believe the number was 6,000, I think you said. But slot machine revenue, though, has doubled from '01 to '05, and it's now the equivalent of VLT revenue. These machines are virtually the same, a slot machine and a VLT. The difference is in how they pay out. It's the same machine. You put a cap on one machine; there's no cap on the other machine. So can the minister tell me how many slot machines there are in Alberta right now? How many slot machines, not VLTs? And is there any upper limit on the number of those? Are you going to just keep adding with the new casinos? You're going to have another four or five casinos. Are they going to have a limitless number of slot machines? Or is there an actual limit on these things?

I also understand that I believe the government commissioned a study some while ago to investigate the impact of the so-called responsible gaming features on VLTs. I wondered if this study has been completed. If so, when will it be released?

Mr. Graydon: Well, there is one notable difference between a slot machine and a VLT, and that is the location where you might find these machines. You will not find a slot machine in your neighbourhood tavern or licensee. As someone said, neither one of them pays very good. The slot machines are restricted to casinos. The capped VLTs are in other licensed establishments, what you might think of as your neighbourhood bar or lounge.

The method of payout is different as well. With a VLT in a lounge, if you decide you've had enough and you want to cash out what you've got in the machine, you print off a ticket, take that up to the person working at the bar, and they will scan it in the machine, and they will exchange that ticket for cash. With a slot machine up to a certain amount you put a loonie in, and it spits a loonie out if you win a loonie. So one pays out cash; one pays out a piece of paper. But in my mind the biggest difference is in the location where you can access these machines.

One thing that we found. You know, you're right: people object more to VLTs than they do slot machines. No doubt about that. What they object to is the location of the VLTs. The public, when we survey them, say that they don't mind slot machines because they're in casinos. When you go to a casino, you know why you're going there. You're going there to play roulette, to play cards, to play slot machines, the other games that you have at a casino. There's no doubt why you go. You're going to be entertained, and you're going there to gamble.

There is a difference. You may be going to your neighbourhood bar or lounge just to have a friendly visit with your neighbour and to tip a brew or two, and there's a VLT there, and on your way out you put a $20 bill in or whatever the case may be. So there is a difference in how accessible they are, if you will, or why they're there.

The responsible gaming features have been in, but I don't think they've been in long enough that any study would be able to tell us whether they're effective or not. Other jurisdictions have tried them and have them in place, and they're finding them to be of limited value but of some value. I would suggest that we will study that and see if those responsible features are making a difference, but at this point in time they just haven't been displayed on the machines long enough to get any accurate reading on their effect.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you again. My main question, though, was not answered there: the number of slot machines in Alberta casinos and is there going to be an upper limit on it? How many do you plan on allowing into the province?

Mr. Graydon: Okay. The number I don't have in my estimates, and I guess we can probably get you that in writing. As far as a limit: no, we haven't set a limit on that like we have VLTs. The VLT limit is a hard, fast number. Slot machines – when you build a new casino, obviously you stock it with slot machines, and as the market grows in that location, they may get more machines. No, there is no hard limit on the number of slot machines in the province. There's not much point in building a casino and not having it adequately stocked with the product that people want to use.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, were you drawing my attention to speak?

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this interesting department. I've learned a lot just recently on how this is operating and what its purpose is. I guess like many Albertans I struggle with the notion of this government's involvement in private industry, and I would appreciate understanding more about how you feel it necessary to support horse racing. I understand what you're saying about flow-through funds and the fact that they have to earn a certain amount of funds. Why would you pick and choose certain industries to subsidize?

A couple of other questions. Whenever we're talking about such a big amount of money – and you raised the question yourself – if this were not regulated, clearly we would have serious questions about corruption and underworld activity. Well, whether it's underworld or not, people have questions about where the money goes and who makes the decisions about where the money goes and how political ties have to do with the direction that money goes. How do you ensure transparency of decision-making all the way down the chain in terms of how you select your boards and what kinds of party links they have and what kind of transparency you have in terms of the boards and councils that further deal with the decision-making around the allocation of the funds? How can citizens be sure that these funds are actually finding their way not in favoured ways but into objectively reviewed and transparent processes, I guess, down at the community level?

Have you had any complaints from the community regarding the enforcement of any of the files, for example, from the liquor commission? Those are the kinds of questions, dealing with this large amount of money, that people begin to ask. I don't know enough about the workings and how you select your boards and your councils to be able to answer those questions and whether there are specific strings attached. I'm particularly interested in how the government has chosen the horse-racing industry.

I obviously wonder, too, about the engagement in First Nations issues with all the problems that already exist in First Nations and how you rationalize the notion of supporting and, indeed, subsidizing this industry again there and what that is going to lead to in terms of health implications and social problems, which are already well documented and legion in terms of the addiction problems there. Those are the key questions that I would appreciate just knowing a bit more about in terms of this large industry.

Mr. Graydon: Well, sure. As far as the allocation of the revenue, it's audited to the extreme, if I will, maybe to the frustration of some people who think we have far too many rules and regulations when it comes to the allocation of the money. Basically, the two programs that you would probably be the most familiar with would be CFEP, community facility, and CIP, community initiatives, two different programs. But they're fair and equitable programs. There are criteria that you need to fulfill before you can apply. First of all, you need to be a not-for-profit or a society, with all those registrations in place. Occasionally we get people applying, and one of the first things the staff does is check and make sure that this is a registered society, and if they find out they're not, it doesn't take long for that application to make a U-turn and go back to the applicant.

If they are a registered society, there's a long check-off list that the staff would go through, but at the end of the day it is the minister who signs off that grant and says yes. Many various playground societies are worthy of getting this grant to build a new playground. In giving that approval we look for community support. We look for MLA support from all sides of the House, if it's an application coming from your constituency. People can apply and get all the forms right online. That part of the process is relatively easy. You print the form off, make sure that all the blanks are filled in, and if they're filled in properly and they pass all the due diligence tests that are done – and in lots of cases there is a supporting letter from the MLA, and if that's the case, then the vast majority of them do get approved.

There are limits, of course. Some of them are matching grants; some aren't. CIP, in particular, is designed for smaller groups. You can get up to $10,000 not matching, and it's put to very good use by a lot of small groups. Individuals, basically, can't apply for these grants. You know, we have situations where people maybe have won a provincial competition of some sort and want to go and compete nationally. In that event, as an individual, I'm sorry but individuals don't get grant money. If they can go to their association or their sports council or whatever and get an application in that fits the criteria, they might get help that way, but individuals certainly don't get helped.

The First Nations: I guess we're probably following an initiative that's certainly North America-wide. I think that if you looked stateside, you'd find that the first people in the casino business in the U.S. in most cases were First Nations, certainly in a lot of states. There are some states where, I believe, they are the only group, if you will, who are allowed to operate a casino.

There again, the proceeds from a First Nations' casino in Alberta will be very strictly audited and controlled by the provincial government. The money has to go into – we have the Alberta lottery fund, they will have the First Nations development fund. Very strict fences around what that money can be used for. It can't be used to go back into gaming. It can be used for economic development on the First Nation. The other benefit, I suppose: there's a criteria on the staffing of those places. It needs to be staffed and will be staffed predominantly by people from that First Nation, giving them good paying jobs that are transportable. If they decide they want to go and work at a different casino, they'll have those skills, but it is training that they'll be able to get. As I said, there are very rigid fences around what the money can be used for.

The horse-racing initiative is one that obviously comes up every year at budget time, and the same question is asked, if you will: why do they get a special deal? I would suggest that it's because it is a traditional agricultural business. We may think of it: oh, no, it's just the racetrack and a guy going and making his $2 win bet. But if you trace it back, there are 6,000 to 7,000 employees involved in that industry. A lot of them are employees who, to be very honest, would have a hard time getting a job somewhere else, but they're very gainfully employed at the backstretch at the racetracks, so we do create a lot of jobs for those kinds of people.

It's an industry that was in a tremendous amount of trouble a few years ago because of competition from other types of entertainment. There used to be a day when horse racing was the only game in town, the only legal game in town anyway. If you wanted to make a legal bet, that's where you had to go. Then, as this industry has grown, not only in Alberta but world-wide, we have all this competition from VLTs, slots, scratch-and-wins – you name it – 6/49s, all these other forms of legal gambling. The industry was in dire straits to be quite blunt about it.

We saw a lot of people contemplating selling their farms, getting out of the horse breeding business. They were no longer going and buying the top brood mares or studs that they like to go and buy in order to improve the quality of the stock. We saw that some of the facilities, Northlands and Stampede, were having more and more troubles with their bottom line because people just weren't showing up at the racetrack. It kind of fed on itself. The poorer quality of horse you have, the less people are interested in betting on it, so it just was a never-ending spiral going down.

I'm happy to report that through the horse-racing initiative that spiral has been reduced. People are going back to the racetrack now. The handle, as we call it, the amount of money bet, is going up. I believe – and I stand to be corrected – this is one of the only jurisdictions in North America where the handle went up last year as opposed to going down. That is because through bigger purses, which come from this money that they earn, more and more people are into the raising, breeding, training of racehorses.

The facilities are getting better. You know, you can go to Northlands and have a real good night's entertainment. The food is reasonable. The service is good. You know, you only have to bet $2, and there's a race every 20 minutes. Your two bucks will last you a long time if you go to the horse races.

The government a few years ago made the conscientious decision that they would establish racing entertainment centres. To qualify for that designation, you have to offer live racing. So you can't have an off-track location in Whitecourt or Red Deer, for example, and have racing on the TV screen and qualify to be a racing entertainment centre. You have to offer live racing, which, again, is to promote the agricultural part of the industry.

We talk a lot about the $45 million that's in this budget. That is a number that's a real guesstimate, if anything else, because it's based on what's played at the facility. You know, it can be less, it can be more, but that's what we feel is a reasonable number. I believe that's the same number as last year. I don't think that was achieved last year, so the same number is back in there again this year.

I think that if we looked a couple of years down the road in the estimates, we might see that that number is projected to go up a little bit. That would be based on the construction of a new facility outside of Calgary. There will no longer be racing at Stampede Park, but there will be racing at this new facility. We feel that that will encourage people to go to that new facility, bet more on the horses, support the industry in that traditional way. There also will be a racing entertainment centre, and they will have slot machines at that new racetrack, so that will flow through into this fund. That's why it's projected – if I was on the right page I could look that up, but it's projected to grow over the next couple of years.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of other clarifying questions for me. In relation to the Gaming and Liquor Commission and the Gaming Research Council, how are the board members selected? What are their qualifications? What are their connections to the party? How can Albertans know that this is not simply another way of building the Conservative constituency? These are all issues that we're very sensitive to in the political sphere, and that needs to be transparent. I don't know if that's stated in their annual reports, but it's clearly something that we need to be able to account for to our public.

In relation to the files that the liquor commission deals with, how does one know? Do you deal with complaints? How do you deal with appeals?

Those are the kinds of questions that I just wanted clarification on.

Mr. Graydon: Okay. I can speak with a little more security about the AGLC board because we've just had a vacancy on that board in my tenure here, so I've been working on that process. I can tell you that it was conducted very openly. It was advertised in the newspapers: Calgary, Edmonton, and the major dailies around the province. We had approximately 200 applications for that position, and nowhere on the form did it say: which political card do you happen to carry in your wallet? We're close to making a decision on that, and political stripe hasn't been a factor in the decision that's going to be made for that commission.

They're from a broad background and from across the province. There's a rancher from the far south of the province, I know, that's on there; a couple of ladies from the Edmonton-St. Albert area; a couple people from Calgary, an accountant and a businessperson. I haven't been there long enough to really know them that well. They are appointed for a term, and sometimes the terms are renewed, and sometimes they aren't. There is a vacancy at the moment that we're advertising and are filling. That vacancy was created by someone who'd been on the commission for a long time and felt that he had contributed enough and asked to step down. So we advertise to fill it.

The Gaming Research Council is a smaller group. To this point there've been no vacancies, so I haven't been involved in any recruiting in that regard. The research institute that actually does the research is obviously based at the University of Calgary, the University of Alberta, and the University of Lethbridge. We would have no say in who does the research at those universities.

The AGLC operates very much at arm's length. They are a quasi-judicial board, no question about it. They conduct lots of hearings on licensees where an inspector has gone in and found someone underage, maybe found overserving, serving someone that's had enough. So the employee that works for the AGLC would lay a charge. It's a delegated authority, and they can lay a fine or suspension up to a certain level. The licensee then has the ability to appeal that to the board. I don't know who's appealing. I don't know what charges are out there. I've had absolutely no involvement, nor does anyone in my office have any involvement with any of the appeals or any of the licensing issues with AGLC.

It's the same with applications for a new casino. As I said, we opened up the Edmonton market. Actually, a couple of years ago they opened up the market in the Grande Prairie area, and there were I think three or four applications, none of which were approved.

I know that in the case of the Edmonton one, certainly, no one got a letter of support from me, nor would I have given one. There were some appeals filed; I know that. The appeals are in the process at the moment. I know that one has been heard, one is still going on, but I don't even know the principals in those appeals. If anybody starts to talk to me about that, I run the other way as fast as I possibly can.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we have now just passed the one-hour mark. If there are any other members who wish to participate in this debate, I'd be happy to recognize them. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll start off with a sermon, and if time allows, I'll go to the questions. It'll be hard for me tonight not to appear to be delivering a holier-than-thou sermon. However, it concerns me greatly that next to the bounty we draw from our natural resources of gas and oil comes revenue from gambling and liquor.

I have no trouble with lotteries and appreciate that revenue generated from them funds a variety of worthwhile programs. It was unfortunate that this government did away with the community lottery boards, which shared the responsibility for project funding, with the decisions made at the local level, which helped to depoliticize the process.

Where I have great difficulty is with what I see as government-sponsored addiction. It isn't simply the stereotypical glazed, crazed

Hollywood portrayal of an addict. This government, by not adequately funding a variety of programs from education to health care to recreational programs and community associations, has driven groups including school councils to depend on casinos and slots to cover basic programming in schools rather than receiving the appropriate grants. If this industry is the government's idea of Alberta diversity, then it's a pretty sad commentary on ingenuity. Al Capone would have looked enviously at the profits made by this government.

It is unbelievable to me that over the last few years the government spent over $104 million to spruce up VLTs. The government has spent more on rewarding racetracks than it has spent on renovating public schools. AADAC receives an incredibly small percentage of the profits, which it can then apply to attempting to restore addicts' and their families' lives.

I know that gambling has been a problem before and after Jesus drove the moneylenders out of the temple. I would like to see another referendum which would allow communities to decide whether or not it was time to pull the plug on VLTs. I cannot share this ministry's enthusiasm for being a more responsible pocket picker or one-armed bandit than organized criminals.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, would you like to respond?

Mr. Graydon: Just one comment about the VLT referendums. That option is open to any community that wants to do it every three years on municipal election day. In a couple of communities this last October there were a couple of referendums, and I believe those actually were referendums from communities that had previously banned VLTs. There were referendums on: did they want to bring them in? They reaffirmed their decision to leave them out.

A few years ago there were several communities that asked them to be removed. There was a long, drawn-out court battle going on. I believe the licensees who had them didn't want them taken out, and of course the community had voted to take them out, but at the end of the day the courts ruled that, no, the referendum prevailed. Those machines were taken out in I think Rocky Mountain House, Lacombe, Fort McMurray, Spruce Grove or Stony Plain, one of those two. There were several communities in the province who voted to have them taken out, and that option is open to any community that wants to put the question to the ballot.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just going back to my previous question. Now, I hate to harp on this, but I still haven't heard the number of slot machines in Alberta. Perhaps you don't have that number at your disposal right now, and if you don't, I'd be very happy to accept a guarantee of a written answer, if that's good.

On to other, more specific items: page 189, line 3.0.10, other initiatives, forecast at $14,673,000. Now, can the minister explain exactly what "other initiatives" means? Every other line item is quite straightforward, but "other initiatives" is somewhat vague. According to the Alberta Gaming annual report, every year the government votes on the disbursement of funds from the lottery board. I wonder how we're supposed on vote on disbursement of funds when we don't know where the money is going.

So if the minister could address those two issues, please.

Mr. Graydon: Okay. The first one, the number of machines. I don't have that in my binder, but I did say earlier that I would get it to you, and I will.

The "other initiatives" category. From time to time there are big projects that come up during the year which are, if you will, unidentified. You know, this past year we had the tsunami incident. I believe that was $5 million. While that specific one didn't come out of other initiatives, it's the kind of thing that could have come out of that fund. It's generally reserved for bigger projects that wouldn't normally fall under CFEP and CIP. We don't get involved in the multimillion-dollar projects under CFEP and CIP in the constituency allocations, if you will, the amount that MLAs would get involved with.

For example, here in Edmonton the YMCA is getting a tremendous amount of money, and it would be coming from the "other initiatives" portfolio, if you will. In Calgary we're awarding some money to I believe it's called the Jack Singer Concert Hall for repairs to the roof, something that comes up during the year that is just too large an amount to handle in a normal – it would drain our CFEP account that we have for the small projects throughout the province if we had to fund those big projects from that account. So it's really another I suppose CFEP pot of money. It's just more directed at maybe emergent issues but, basically, the larger projects that are too large to be handled on a smaller scale.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was listening to the minister and his answers to the questions that have been put to him, the interesting areas in which to engage the minister in debate.

The Ministry of Gaming, really, is a ministry that generates huge revenues, close to $2 billion a year. When you put it against the oil sands royalties, you come to realize that gaming revenues, revenues from gambling, that is – gaming sort of neutralizes the actual activity of gambling. Gambling certainly has very serious negative consequences for individuals, their families, and socially as well it has negative consequences. Nevertheless, it seems that it's an entrenched practice in this province. It certainly has the blessings of this department and of this government, so it's expanding activity.

It is activity that has a downside to it. I remember that last night we were debating the estimates for the Department of Justice and Attorney General. There was reference in the business plans there to an increasing incidence of crime in the province, an increasing incidence of people driving when drunk, increasing problems with family violence, increasing incarceration of a very large number of First Nations people. The First Nations population as part of the overall Alberta population is about 7 per cent, yet more than 33 per cent of people who are incarcerated come from those communities, the First Nations communities.

So a huge number of problems draw attention to the challenges that we face in this province, and some of those problems can directly be linked to either alcohol use and abuse or to stress and strain that's created at the family level by members of the family who become addicted, are problem gamblers. Gambling does lead to loss of income, loss of family resources, and that in turn, then, leads to violence in the family. The divorce rate in Alberta is the highest in the country.

I think the benefits of the dollars coming in and how the dollars are used then to support certain programs is one side of the story, but the ripple effect, on the negative side, is also something that needs to be addressed and addressed quite openly in this Assembly and by this ministry in particular because it is this ministry that has taken on the responsibility of regulating and licensing and in some ways promoting and expanding this activity. The minister seems to be quite pleased that his department was able to generate a very large volume of revenues which then, he says, we use here and we use there. I know that that happens, but can we put a dollar value on the negative side, the consequences that result either directly or indirectly from the activities that are regulated or monitored or controlled or run by the Minister of Gaming and the Ministry of Gaming? I don't see that. I think we need some sort of a social accounting, not just dollar accounting, not just fiscal accounting but social accounting.

I see reference in the business plan again and again to social responsibility, yet there is no accounting on the social side that's given by this except in terms of so much money goes into health, so much money goes into helping AADAC, and on and on. I think the negative side is simply not addressed. I think it's time that we paid attention to the negative side and focused on social accounting as much as we've been focusing on the bottom line or being a bean counter; you know, counting dollars that come into the public treasury. Sure, public dollars come into the treasury, and jobs are created by all kinds of activities.

I'm reminded, just as I'm thinking about it, that in California there are more people incarcerated in jail than spend time in postsecondary institutions. So that creates jobs. Jails have to be run, but then we worry about crime and crime increasing. Last night we were talking about that, the increase in crime. Well, the increase in crime does create jobs, but do we want those kinds of jobs? Do we want lower levels of crime or higher levels of crime if they create more jobs at the same time? We need more policemen, we need more people who look after jails, we need more people who make clothing for our prisoners, and whatever have you. Just because activities create more jobs is not, I think, a justification for expanding certain activities. We need to focus on what I call social accounting, the negative consequences of some of the activities that the government undertakes and sponsors and invests its authority and power and resources to expand.

I want the minister to perhaps share some of his reflections on this. I know he was in his other life the mayor of a small town, and the small towns in this province face problems like big towns and some more serious ones, too, in terms of community cohesion, in terms of crime, in terms of poverty, in terms of family dysfunction. I can go on naming these things. How do communities get impacted by some of the activities that we call gambling or gaming? So that's, sort of, on the larger questions.

In terms of some of the specifics, I was looking at the money that AADAC, the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission – and I would not dispute that we need it, you know, given the problems that individuals and families face – and the work that the commission does. It certainly receives the majority of its funding, close to $62 million, from the lottery fund. The question that comes to my mind is: given that AADAC has a mandate for treating and preventing problem gambling, should its funds, in fact, be coming from the very activities that create those problems? There are some moral dilemmas here. There are some paradoxes here. What side are we on? We want to generate funds in order to prevent things from happening, and then we encourage the very activities that create those problems. We've got to sometimes stop in a nonpartisan way and ask some of these questions. Is it good for our society regardless of what side of the political line we're on?

Then I notice that the Camrose Regional Exhibition and Agricultural Society has received $5.6 million in grants from the lottery fund this month, I guess, earlier this month, last month. It is announced that the Camrose Regional Exhibition will have a 25 per cent stake in a new casino. Since when, you know, has the government developed a policy of encouraging these fair associations and exhibition associations to become partners in casinos and in running gambling businesses? Is this, I ask, sort of some high-stakes pyramid scheme, Mr. Minister? Gaming revenues go to the Camrose fair and exhibition association. That, in turn, invests in another casino. That, in turn, creates more gaming revenues. Gaming dollars used to buy stakes in casinos to generate yet more gaming dollars. So it's a catch-22 that I find in operation here.

Another thing that I noticed, Mr. Chairman, was in the Gaming Licensing Policy Review, volume 1, page 6-11. There's an interesting statement there. It says that Alberta lottery fund disbursements must be "used to support specific charitable, not-for-profit, public and community-based initiatives and projects." Now, if that is the case, then how does the minister justify spending $45 million on the horse-racing industry initiative? It would seem to me that that runs straight into the face of what I've just read as the policy, the guiding principle which is used to allocate monies; that is, for nonprofits, public, and community-based initiatives and projects. I fail to understand how the horse-racing industry initiative is nonprofit, is community-based, and is public. So I'd like the minister to square this circle, if he would, for me.

The other questions here. On the slot machines in casinos, clearly, it seems that as the number of casinos expands, or the capacity of existing casinos expands, I assume that the number of slot machines is likely to go up, so you can't give us an exact count. You have undertaken to give us some estimated numbers, I guess, later on, but could you, Mr. Minister, please give us sort of a trend line over the last four years? We may not know the exact number of slot machines this year, but we would have numbers, I guess, from the previous three or four years. If we could get those, we could then develop some sort of a trend line. We could find at what speed, at what rate the number of slot machines is growing. If not the absolute number, then the rate at which their presence might be growing. It would be very nice to have those kinds of numbers and that kind of information right here in the business plan so that I don't have to bother you, standing up here asking those questions.

Albertans would like to know this: how the number of these things is growing and growing over a period of time. One year's numbers could be just a fluke, you know. There could be not a trend. But if you know that something's happening over a period of years, then you know how to respond to it. You can say: this is good; this is what I want. Or you could start sort of blowing the whistle and saying: well, we need to stop and ask if we want to keep going in that direction, or we need to change direction. So we need some sort of longitudinal map of this, and that's something I would appreciate getting some information from you on.

The cap on VLTs – and I want to come to VLTs in a moment – is 6,000, I understand. Is that the maximum that will be allowed this year, or is that the number that we've already reached? I was listening to your answers to the questions here. I wasn't sure whether you were saying that today there exist 6,000 VLTs in operation or that 6,000 is the number that will be allowed if the numbers have not reached there yet. Where are we at in terms of the actual number of machines in place in relation to the cap of 6,000? That, I suppose, is the max that will be allowed. So I'd appreciate getting some information on that.

Talking about VLTs, I was looking at some of the studies with respect to VLTs and how they are likely to create more problem gamblers and also encourage or result in more addictive gambling behaviour. Figures seem to show that 39 per cent of all gambling revenues in Alberta in the year just past, 2003-2004, came from moderate or severe problem gamblers. So about $2 out of every $5 comes from problem gamblers. VLTs are the most problematic gambling format in terms of being associated with addictive gambling behaviour.

The addiction is something that AADAC deals with, I suppose, because when people are really addicted and become problem gamblers, then there's a problem at both the level of the individual person and the impact that it has on the family, on children, and the wife and others in the family. So it's an important issue that needs to be kept in mind.

There's a growing body of evidence that shows that VLTs are not an innocuous form of entertainment.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, the time allocated for you to speak has run out.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll stop.

Mr. Graydon: You were just getting started, right?

A couple of the easy questions first. The VLT cap of 6,000 machines has been in place for 10 years, and I would say that we've been within a stone's throw of that number all those 10 years. Obviously, it's never gone over 6,000, but today there are probably 5,998 of them out there in the market. We're at the cap.

If there wasn't a cap, there's a long list of people waiting to get machines, a long list of licensees who would like to have machines in their premises because the percentage that they get goes a long way to covering their overhead. Someone opens a new bar or a new lounge or a new restaurant, and about the second thing they do after they get the licence from the municipality is send a letter to AGLC and ask for some VLTs. They go on the list, and it takes a long time for them to move up the list because of the cap. Certainly, there are no plans from me or from this government to change that cap. There's no interest in pursuing that at this point in time.

The exact number of slot machines in casinos, you know, we could tell you today for sure. Someone would know exactly how many there are in Alberta tonight less the ones that are broken down for the night. But, no, we would know that number, and we do know it for the past number of years. That progression is easy to develop and to circulate to the two caucuses, so that's not an issue.

You talked about Camrose and the fact that they just recently received close to $6 million as one of the seven major fairs, but rest assured that not one nickel of that money can be invested in gambling at the Camrose exhibition. The lottery fund agreement with the exhibition specifies that lottery funding cannot – cannot – be used for any gaming development. It's our understanding that the exhibition in this case is providing land for the casino, so that's how they're getting their share in it. They're providing land and not money. But at any rate, the agreement with them very specifically says – they filed a capital plan, if you will, and said: if we get the money, here's what we're going to build with it. It certainly didn't include any gambling facilities.

Once the casino is up and operating, AGLC will very strictly audit what happens at that casino and look at all the financial reviews and make sure that all the money is properly used and really pay attention to the fact that lottery funds are not being used for gaming activities or for the development of more gaming activities. I think you can rest assured that the money that they were allocated will be used on the exhibition grounds. I know one of their projects. They run that big country music festival. They're going to improve their campground, and I think they're going to improve the area where they have the performers, the staging area and that sort of stuff. That's one of the capital projects that they will be using that money for.

You talked a little bit about social responsibility, and you're right: we talk about it a lot in our business plan. I think we backed up our words with actions within the last couple of years by developing and starting a specific division in the department which is called the social responsibility division. That division has an employee and some support staff, and their sole job is to work on some of the things that you're talking about. A lot of what the gentleman in that division will be doing is trying to co-ordinate research activities between AADAC, who does some research into addictions, and the Gaming Research Institute, that we give the $1.5 million to.

Interesting that you hit on a topic that we keep pursuing, and I do think we're going to make some progress. We continue to ask the research institute to do a research study on the social costs and benefits of the gaming industry. You're right. There are costs, and, yes, there are benefits. But how do you get a handle on that? It is a project that we have given the institute to do. I asked them to spend some of the $1.5 million that we give them doing research on that. I believe some of it is being done across the country, particularly, I think, in Ontario at the moment. So we can use some of their research. It is a research paper that we're encouraging them to take on, and we'll be very interested in the results of that.

Yes, AADAC gets $62 million this year from lottery funds. That's up $8 million from last year. I was happy to get that question because that's one of the first questions that's come out of the estimates tonight. It's not dealing with policy; it's actually dealing with the estimates. It is a sizable chunk of money, and yes you wonder: you're taking money that's derived from people gambling and giving it to AADAC to research people who have a problem with gambling, I suppose. Alcohol is the same thing. I mean, we take liquor revenues, and I'm sure AADAC accesses some of that as well.

I guess, you know, we try and be open and accountable. If we wanted to hide it somewhere, we could say: well, no, that $62 million came from general revenue or something. But no. The truth of the matter is that Treasury Board said to Health and Wellness: you can have $62 million from the lottery fund for support of AADAC. Treasury Board made that allocation, and I'm pleased they did, actually.

We talk quite a bit about the amount of gambling in Alberta and the fact that it's high. The per capita number is high in comparison to other provinces, possibly, in Canada. I think you have to take into account that Alberta does have the highest disposable income in Canada. I would hazard a guess that if you look at the number of people who go to movie theatres in Alberta, it is probably the highest per capita in Canada because we have the highest disposable income. Some people decide to use their entertainment dollar going to movies, some people go to the casino, some people go to the opera, whatever the case may be. We probably lead the country in most of those categories because of the high disposable income that we enjoy in Alberta.

We haven't talked much about the liquor side of the portfolio and that part of the revenues that we generate from alcohol sales and from the licensees' permits and that sort of stuff. I think the reason we don't hear much about that is Albertans by and large – there again, it's well over 80 per cent – think that we're doing a very good job of managing the consumption of alcohol in this province, that we're not overrestrictive, that we're very responsible in the rules and regulations that we have with the licensees, that we continue to initiate programs to deal with problem areas.

One problem area that we've had in the past and always has been an issue is underage people, people under the age of 18 trying to get in to have a drink or to buy alcohol in a liquor store. Through the industry and through the AGLC we initiated the under-25 program, it's called, where licensees, if they think someone is under 25, are required to ask for identification, for photo ID. It's been in place two or three years.

When we first started out, we'd go out and do spot audits, send out inspectors that looked really young and say: okay, go into that liquor store. They'd be over 18, mind you, but, you know, you get some pretty young-looking 18 year olds. So we'd send them in and see if they were ID'd or not. The compliance rate three years ago wasn't that great. Last year it was better. The last one we did, I believe it was between 70 and 80 per cent of the licensees did ask for ID. Someone said: "You know, you look like you're under 25. Maybe you're 24. I'm sorry; we have to ask. We know the age is 18, but we have to ask." So the compliance is really going up, and I congratulate the industry for that.

Another program just initiated recently is the Alberta server intervention program. It's mandatory training for people who are engaged in the sale of alcohol, whether it be a clerk at a liquor store, a bartender, or someone even at a community hall who's serving alcohol at a wedding or something like that.

It's phased in. This first year one person on the premises needs to have taken the training, and over a period of I think it's at least five years, if not more, everyone on staff will have to have taken this training. It's not an onerous thing. You can take it online. You can go to a session. One person on the staff can take the course and then train the trainer, sort of thing, and train the rest of the staff and write a small test online or whatever the case may be.

The subjects covered are things like identifying underage patrons, identifying people who have had enough so that you don't overserve. We're developing a module in that program that will be mandatory as well for the security people so that the bouncers, if you want to call them that, will have training in how to talk people out of getting into trouble, if you will. It has been disturbing, the level of violence that we're seeing. Usually it's outside the licensee as opposed to inside. Usually they get thrown out for being unruly, and then they go at it in the parking lot. It used to be, when I say they go at it, that it would end up with a black eye and a bloody nose, but now it seems to be that it's a knife wound or a gunshot. So it is a concern, and we think that this server intervention program will help people on the premise identify gang members, identify those people who are in there itching for trouble.

Some licensees have gone so far as to issue an ID card. They scan that card, and if you've been in trouble at another bar down the road last week and got thrown out, it comes up on the screen, and they say: "No, no. You're a troublemaker. You're not coming in tonight." So it's a good program. It's not mandatory, but some of them are doing that voluntarily because they don't want trouble in their establishments any more than we do. If they have trouble, they're going to end up in front of the board, and they're going to either be fined or be shut down for a few days, and they don't want that. So they're quite conscientious about these programs, and actually we find very strong support amongst the licensees for those kinds of regulations because, as I said, they don't want trouble any more than we do.

You talked about crime. Does crime go up when there's a casino in the neighbourhood? The studies to date haven't really shown that. I can speak for my own community. We have a very active casino. It's about number six on the list of 16 as far as being busy. It's packed to the rafters, and it's well run. I can't remember a case of violence or crime that they've tied back to the casino. There was one issue where a lady left a child in a car outside, but the casino staff found that child, got the appropriate authorities. The lady was barred from the casino for a year or whatever the case may be.

As far as car thefts outside the casino, that certainly hasn't been reported if there has been any. It hasn't been a big enough issue that it's made the papers. Family violence, suicides, those kinds of things: they haven't tied those to the casino in the community. So a lot of it depends on how well it's run and, you know, the kind of patrons you're attracting. There hasn't been a huge jump in crime around casinos that I'm aware of.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just have a short question. I have a lot of difficulty with this issue given the fact that I was a United Church minister, and the United Church of Canada is on record as being against lotteries and gambling and VLTs and so on. So out of that context I want to raise the issue of applying for funding from the community facility enhancement program because years ago churches – Baptist churches, Presbyterian, Anglican, whatever – could apply for money to have the roof of their church fixed and so on knowing that the monies were coming from general revenue and not from lotteries. Of course, that's no longer true now because it's all mixed up together.

So there's a real moral issue facing a lot of people in terms of really struggling around whether they should apply for this particular fund or not, and a lot of anguish goes on in church boards throughout this province. I just want to alert the minister to this fact because I think there's a huge gap in terms of values between what the government is doing and churches all across the province. It would be great if one day there would be a sorting out of the funds so that churches could apply in good conscience to have their own facilities supported and improved.

Mr. Graydon: I would say that I appreciate your position. I really do. One thing that does come up: actually, we do have churches apply, but they cannot apply and are not eligible for funding from CFEP or CIP for the church sanctuary itself. You can't get a CFEP grant to buy new pews or a new pulpit for the pastor to speak from. If the basement of your church is used for Boy Scout meetings, Girl Guide meetings or the local sewing club or something and you need new flooring in the basement, you can apply for a lottery grant, CFEP or CIP, for that purpose, or if you have a church hall next door to the church, you can qualify for money from the lottery fund. But there is a distinction there, that churches are not allowed money for the actual sanctuary itself. I do appreciate the dilemma that some churches are in. You know, part of my portfolio also deals with bingo, and we wouldn't want to go too far back in history to see who the big bingo players were in the country.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you. I have a few questions regarding transparency of the department. I'm curious why the disciplinary board hearings of the AGLC are not held in public. I understand that they're all held in camera. The results of some of them are posted on the website, but the information on them is quite skimpy. It would probably be in the best interests of the public if this information was a lot more readily available or if the hearings were not held in camera.

This also brings up the question of casino licences. Now, I understand that this is a process that's all done behind closed doors as well. I think that in a major gambling centre like Las Vegas it's a public hearing that everyone gets to listen to. It's very transparent. You can see who is behind it. Here it's all done by the AGLC. Then we have a case like I believe it's called the Celebrations casino on Fort Road. They've been given a licence, but I think there are two groups who are disputing the licence. Why don't we get to know why this is being disputed and who's behind it? I think this is the kind of information that the public should probably know along with the information regarding liquor violations. I think we need a little bit more information in that regard.

I'd like to ask a couple of questions that I suspect will probably need written answers. Northlands and the Stampede, as you mentioned, are both on tap to get an additional $3 million, which will give them $10.3 million in lottery money this year. Interestingly enough, these two organizations alone get more money than the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation. I don't know if the priorities are quite right there. I know you've had a lot of statements about the good that Northlands and the Stampede do, and I don't think anybody disputes that they do a lot of good work. They do seem to be getting a disproportionate share of lottery money. On top of that there's, of course, the money from the horse-racing renewal. So I would like, if possible, to get a written total of how much Northlands and the Stampede will be getting last year and this year from all government lottery sources, please.

I would like to also ask you about the Alberta Gaming Research Institute. Now, I know that the funding is in place again for this year, but it seemed to be rather difficult to get the funding from the government for last year's work. As I understand, if I remember it correctly, they were under a contract for a certain amount of time, and you're negotiating whether to renew that contract, but there are some provisions being put on. I know that you want to ask specific questions, and that's fine, but that does eat into this rather small amount of money that the Alberta Gaming Research Institute is given. I'm wondering why the government doesn't increase the money to the Gaming Research Institute so that they can do the work that they see as right and that you can have the questions answered that you'd like answered as well.

I think it's also time that perhaps we had permanent funding for this organization. They're doing some excellent work. I know that the Ontario Problem Gambling Research Centre gets continuous funding, and it's also tied to inflation or an increase in the gaming research money. I think it's time that this organization, which is doing world-class work, doesn't have to worry about going cap in hand to the government every year and should have sustained funding and regular increases.

So if you'd care to answer a few of those questions, particularly the first few. I'd like to see some written answers later on on the other ones. Thank you.

Mr. Graydon: Okay. The question of hearings and liquor violations, et cetera. I know that posted on the website is what information we can publish. I would suspect that there are a lot of FOIP considerations dealing with third parties and that as to what information can be publicly released. I'm not sure. Certainly, when it comes to applications, a lot of financial information is disclosed. As far as I know – and, as I said, I don't really get involved in AGLC's business of licensing casinos, et cetera – they do a lot of due diligence on the partners and who's putting up the money and where the money is coming from and that sort of stuff, trying to be extremely cautious as to where and to whom these licences are being awarded. So I suspect that anything that can be released to the public is put on the Internet and is accessible there.

No problem getting the numbers for Northlands and the Stampede, and we'll do that.

The Gaming Research Institute. Yes, they have a contract, and last year's contract has been paid, so that's not an issue. Whether they need more money or not is an interesting question. They didn't spend last year's money. They have money in the bank, so I don't know if we should be increasing that amount. They were getting money for capacity building. That is what they were calling it, you know, getting staff on board and getting their systems in place to do research. That's what they have been using the money for, or a lot of it, up to this point. Certainly, our feeling is that the capacity is built, and now that leaves available money from the contract, the 1 and a half million dollars, to do actual research and to maybe tackle some of the bigger ones, like the hon. member asked me about awhile ago, the big issues about the cost-benefit analysis of gaming.

I would hope that they have enough money in this year's contract. Yes, it is being renegotiated. As you know, the points that are being negotiated are things that we talked about. We want to be able to ask them: would you please do some research on the cost-benefit analysis of gaming? We would like to, I guess, not order them to do that, but we would like to give them a list and say: "Here are some things we want research on. Here are some things that would help us develop good social policy around gaming." To this point in time that just hasn't happened. They've done research, but it's been at their initiative and what was of interest to them and hasn't really been of a benefit to us in developing policy. That's what we want good research for, to develop good, socially responsible policy.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The minister, I suspect, forgot to answer one of the questions. I want to repeat that, and then I have one new question. The question that I asked which didn't get answered was with respect to this quote that I used from the Gaming Licensing Policy Review, that Alberta lottery fund disbursements must be used to support specific charitable, not-for-profit public and community-based initiatives and projects. If that is the policy, then the $45 million or whatever amount is being used for the horse-racing industry would seem to contravene that policy. I didn't get that question addressed, so I hope the minister will do that.

The associated question with that is: why is the slot machine revenue split more generous for the horse-racing industry than it is for charity casinos? That's the associated question.

The last one. The minister I think in his introductory remarks did talk about the fact that for the Gaming Research Institute and the gaming council, I guess, the revenues that go to each are under consideration. They'll be divided up differently. Is there any specific information that you can share with us? What's under consideration with respect to where that money is going to go, and what changes do you contemplate bringing in?

Mr. Graydon: Okay. The rules around the lottery fund. I would suggest that the money that goes to the racing entertainment centres is flow-through money. It's generated at the track, flows through to the track, so it's not like we're taking someone else's money and giving it to Horse Racing Alberta. It's money generated at a racing entertainment centre, generated out of, as you talked about, the split. The split at a racing entertainment centre is 33 per cent to the Alberta lottery fund, 15 per cent to the operator, which would be Northlands Park or Evergreen Park or whatever involved, and the balance, which is 52 per cent I believe, goes to Horse Racing Alberta.

Yes, they do get, as you say, a good split, but the charity that's working the casino at the Yellowhead tonight has no investment in that building or in the machines or anything else. They're just showing up, providing some labour for a certain number of hours, and for that, they get a percentage of the machine play, which is pooled over a few months. I think there's a huge difference in the investment involved. There again the people in Horse Racing Alberta have an investment in farms, they have an investment in livestock, they have an investment in employees, so there's quite an investment there. Again, Northlands Park or Evergreen Park have an investment in the grounds, in the facilities, in the grandstands, in the track, in the machinery that keeps the track in order. So there's a big difference in the investment involved between a charity working a casino and the people involved in a racing entertainment centre.

That's about all I can say about those things, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm wondering if it's possible to get a breakdown for the amount of grants that are going to be provided by the Department of Gaming or gambling this year. How much will be going to the Alberta Racing Corporation? How much will be going to the Olds Agricultural Society? How much will be going to the Rocky Mountain Turf Club Inc. and, also, to Edmonton Northlands?

An Hon. Member: Turn on your computer.

Mr. MacDonald: Someone has stated that I should turn on my computer, but since this budget is still being debated and still being discussed . . .

Mr. Ouellette: That was last year's budget.

Mr. MacDonald: That's exactly true. It's last year's budget, but I want to know what's going to be allocated in this year's budget in grants. Certainly, I'm surprised that the hon. Minister of RAGE would be trying to provide duplication in the debate this evening. If I could have those numbers, I would be very grateful.

Now, in the past we have provided grants from Gaming to not only the Edmonton Oilers, the Canadian hockey association, but the Calgary Flames as well. With respect to the Flames and the Oilers there was over a million dollars in grants. Is there anything going to be given this year in light of no hockey, or is it going to be turned over to minor hockey? Certainly, I see where the Alberta Junior A Hockey League gets one-tenth of what the pros get in grants for the last fiscal year. That is available through the blue book, the public accounts.

Certainly, I would also like to know how much in grants the University of Alberta is going to get and how much the University of Calgary is going to get in light of the fact that the University of Calgary got almost a million dollars less in the last public accounts documents that I have access to than what the U of A got. Now, I wonder if that practice is going to continue, or is it going to be stopped? If the hon. minister could provide that information, I would be very grateful.

Thank you.

Mr. Graydon: I can get at it right away. First, I want to assure you, hon. member, that Enron is not on the list for any grants this year.

CFEP, community facility enhancement, is $38.5 million; community initiatives, $30 million; Edmonton Northlands, $10.35 million; the Calgary exhibition, $10.35 million. Major fairs and exhibitions, which includes the seven that got the $40 million last year, Medicine Hat, Lethbridge, Camrose, Grande Prairie, Lloydminster, Olds – have I hit seven? At any rate, the budgeted amount for that group is $2.66 million. It's split up. They get a base amount, and then they get so much per day for usage. So the more days usage that they have at those facilities, the more money they would get.

As well, there is an amount in Agriculture's budget, which can be talked about in their estimates. They fund the 288 other small-fair boards through a grant through Agriculture. Again, all the small-fair boards get a base grant plus so much per day for usage. Until we know how many days that facility is being used, we couldn't give an exact breakdown of the amount they're getting other than the gross amount that's here in the budget.

The Edmonton Oilers and the Calgary Flames will be getting absolutely nothing this year, obviously. It was a contract tied to hockey, and there's no hockey, so no tickets. No, there's no money in the budget for either of those groups. Basically, that contract is finished. If they wanted to start up another ticket program with some proceeds going to those clubs, it would have to be a whole new application and a whole new decision by government to do so. They haven't made that application, and there's no money anticipated in this budget for either of those groups.

The amount of money that would be going to the universities I suspect is money that's in Advanced Education's budget. They must have submitted a request to Treasury for money for the universities in their budget. Treasury Board would have set that amount of money. I would have nothing to do with those allocations.

Every department sends a request into Gaming and says: this year out of the lottery funds we would like X million dollars to fund this program or that program or whatever the case may be. We get those requests from basically every department. Most ask for some lottery funds for a special program. All those requests, while they come to Gaming, ultimately go to Treasury Board. They determine the allocation, and the amount they allocate shows up in the estimates of that specific department. Then that is debated here in the House when it's their turn. I believe Agriculture was up this afternoon. They would have had lottery money in their budget, which I'm sure you debated.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. I really appreciate those answers. Now, specific to the grants as they are listed in the public accounts that went to the professional hockey teams, Edmonton Oilers and Calgary Flames, that money was granted through the ticket initiative, was it?

Mr. Graydon: That money was from Gaming. It was in Gaming's budget. It was a ticket that you could buy at the ticket booth and scratch and win an Oilers jersey or a Flames jersey. I guess you could win money, too, but the supplementary prizes were, kind of, merchandise. It was a ticket you purchased at a ticket booth specifically. You could ask for a Flames ticket or an Oilers ticket as far as I know. At any rate, those tickets are no longer available and no intention of starting them up again at this point in time. But it was in the budget of Gaming.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In light of that, certainly there are many families that rely on SFI for their income, and they have not seen an increase in their benefits. This is money that seems to have been found. I don't want to use the word "found," but it is not going to be used for the purposes it was intended for in the last fiscal year. I guess that I may be dreaming to think that we could use some of that money to relieve child poverty in this province. If it couldn't be used for that, could it be at least used to possibly support minor hockey in a way that would allow more children from low-income families to participate in minor hockey programs?

Mr. Graydon: It becomes a question of allocation, I guess. Yes. I see that in '04-05 under Edmonton Oilers it lists $350,000 that they would have gotten from that ticket program and the Calgary Flames the same amount, so you add that up. On the other side of the equation, I guess, I just mentioned that AADAC got $8 million more this year, so there's no shortage of places to find to reallocate the money.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Gaming, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(4), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration for a department's proposed estimates, I must now put the following question after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Gaming for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006.

Agreed to:
Expense	$169,187,000
Lottery Fund Payments	$1,207,533,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported. Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that the Committee of Supply rise and report the estimates of the Department of Gaming and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions and reports as follows and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, for the following department.

Gaming: expense, $169,187,000; lottery fund payments, $1,207,533,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Third Reading

Bill 31
Real Estate Amendment Act, 2005

The Acting Speaker: Are you ready for the question?
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: I believe it has to be moved first. Has it been moved?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services did move the bill the last time it was before us.*
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I believe we've looked this bill over, up one end and down the other. It's in general a pretty good piece of legislation. We have a few minor quibbles with it but, otherwise, nothing outstanding. We're prepared to let it rest for now and go to the vote.

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a third time]

Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2005

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Bill 12, the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, 2005, simply updates the language that's used in the procedures for victims of crime.

I would stand and move third reading.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm privileged to speak on third reading just to reiterate our support for this bill. There are lots of other kinds of documents like this throughout North America. The United Nations has a declaration of principles of justice for victims of crime, and the House of Commons has a statement of basic principles of justice for victims of crime. Actually, when you look at these various documents and compare them together, the one we have before us is of a similar nature.

Again, as I have mentioned before, it's one thing to have these kinds of principles of justice; it's another thing to put them into practice. It's my hope that the effect of this bill will be to alert various agencies and departments of the government to be sensitive to the needs of victims. There has been in the past more emphasis on the offender and the offender's rights, and now let's have a balance, and let's make sure that the victim's rights are attended to.

So, Mr. Speaker, the opposition agrees to pass this bill in third reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a third time]

Speaker's Ruling
Third Reading of Bill 31

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the chair in looking at some references here when we dealt with Bill 31 misread the hon. Minister of Government Services, having understood that he had already moved. I believe he had not moved that bill, so given that I had misread this, I hope that we can have unanimous consent to accept the move made by the hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the Minister of Government Services for Bill 31, Real Estate Amendment Act, 2005. The records will reflect accordingly.*

[Unanimous consent granted]

Second Reading
Bill 39
Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate April 19: Mr. Magnus]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to continue the debate on Bill 39, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2005. These amendments to the act will make Alberta roads safer for all users. It increases penalties for people who drive without insurance and clarifies rules for governing commercial carriers, among quite a few other amendments. I'd like to just talk about a few of them tonight in second reading.

Most importantly, Bill 39 will protect the safety of those people who work on our roadways when we most need them. Our province's police officers, firefighters, emergency medical people as well as tow truck operators have major concerns about their safety on our roadways from speeding drivers. They point out that a number of their colleagues have been needlessly injured or experienced close calls while attending to incidents on the side of the highway. A number of these valiant people have died while a number of them have sustained such severe injuries that their health and well-being are forever compromised.

I've talked to many members about numerous examples of that, and I'll just bring up one tonight. I have his permission. His name is Brian Baker, and he's a volunteer firefighter from Crossfield who a number of years ago in a snowstorm, pushing a lady out of the way of a speeding vehicle, took the full brunt of the vehicle himself. His injuries were so sustained and so numerous it takes him six or seven minutes to read through a list of the surgeries that he's had over the years. To suggest that it has altered his life in many, many ways both physically and mentally would be something that, frankly, I have his permission to say, has happened to such a degree that it's just mind-blowing.

It is fair to say that due to the nature of their work it is simply impossible to guarantee the safety of our emergency workers at all times. There are inherent dangers associated with these professions, and despite our best efforts we can't hope to eliminate these dangers completely. However, while we cannot eradicate all possible hazards, we can certainly try to mitigate some of the more preventable risks and dangers that these people encounter daily in the line of duty. One of these preventable risks is caused by motorists who choose – who choose, Mr. Speaker – not to slow down when they encounter an emergency situation, a police vehicle, a fire engine, or a tow truck stopped on the highway with their flashing lights in operation.

Bill 39 will make it mandatory for drivers to slow down to 60 kilometres per hour or the speed limit, whichever is less, when they see an emergency vehicle pulled over on the side of the road or highway with flashing lights in operation. The exception would be if a driver can move into an adjacent lane, ensuring that there's at least one traffic lane between the driver's vehicle and the emergency vehicles or tow truck.

The intent of Bill 39 is to raise awareness and provide our emergency and roadside assistance personnel with a workplace environment that is as safe as we can possibly make it. It is important that we also consider other ways that we can influence Albertans and change their behaviour such as appropriate advisory and awareness campaigns to educate drivers on the dangers that these folks face every day to protect and save the lives of our fellow Albertans.

With regard to the construction zones and with record amounts of infrastructure projects in the next few years over the entire province – and I believe the number somewhere in the capital budget is $9 billion – this timely legislation will also make the workplace safer for these workers so that they can focus more on their jobs and worry less about traffic speeding by them. In a nutshell the legislation will work in a similar fashion to B.C.'s laws regarding construction sites: slow down to the posted speed limit or face, say, doubling of the fines. Mr. Speaker, as someone who has travelled many summers in B.C. in these construction zones, I've never seen anything more effective than doubling the fines. It is effective, and it will reduce collisions and near misses for these construction crews.

In consultation with our minister of infrastructure we will be more diligent in the future about the road signs at a construction site being current, and we've actually put words to the effect that the construction zone must be active – the key word being “active” – for these rules to apply. The offences created in this bill don't apply to inactive zones, where the area is barricaded off but no workers are on site. The onus, however, does lie with the drivers of vehicles to make that determination. In other words, if the driver incorrectly believes that the site is inactive and decides to speed by, the driver still can be fined if he's wrong.

These changes that I've talked about regarding emergency workers, construction, and tow truck operators are, in my opinion, the most important aspects within this bill, but there are other amendments to consider. The seizure of vehicles in prostitution-related offences deals with times where the release of a seized vehicle might be warranted. This is related to Bill 206, which passed in this Legislature, I believe in 2003, with unanimous approval by all members and all parties in the House.

This amendment would allow a peace officer the right to confiscate a vehicle but would allow a police officer to release the vehicle as well. It has amendments within it that would allow a vehicle to be released if the registered owner did not reasonably know that the vehicle was to be used for this type of offence. The registrar is removed from this process, which simply makes sense, Mr. Speaker, because leaving it in the hands of a police officer – they already have that right, they're closest to the problem, and it's not like you have to go to Edmonton and figure out, if you live in Cardston or Wainwright or somewhere else in the province, how to get your vehicle back.

Another amendment is increasing the penalty for driving without insurance. There are too many drivers who believe that driving without insurance is worth it. Some estimates say as many as 5 per cent of all drivers on our highways these days have no insurance. High fines are the only way to change these attitudes, and it's my hope that by changing this law, we will encourage uninsured drivers to buy their insurance, reducing the number of uninsured drivers and thereby protecting all Albertans.

Bill 39 allows the minister to make regulations to promote the safe operation of commercial vehicles and enhance road safety by monitoring carriers for compliance in improved carrier safety management practices. It will also help the government get unsafe commercial vehicles from other provinces and countries off our roads.

Mr. Speaker, in light of the hour and the fabulous co-operation that we got, frankly, from all the other parties and particularly the critic on the Liberal side of things, I have one more amendment that I promised a friend that I would talk about and mention tonight. In Alberta today the law says that if you're on a snowmobile and have to cross a roadway, you take the shortest distance to cross the roadway even if it's unsafe because of, say, a curve on the road. With this amendment we have changed that to suggest that you can now go down a ditch or any kind of right-of-way to pass over that road in the safest possible spot and make this legal. Snowmobile operators are very thankful for that.

Mr. Speaker, there are many more amendments to this act. As I say, we've had fabulous co-operation from the critics on the other side from all parties. I believe that all parties in the House find this a timely bill in the sense that they want to protect the working people on our highways.

With that, I'll sit down and take my place. It's already been moved, I believe, and we'll wait and see what questions we have from other members. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the Liberal critic for Infrastructure and Transportation I and my party support both the mover and the intention of Bill 39, which is to save lives. As previously noted by the Minister of Finance, good ideas reside within all parties represented in this House. It is not surprising, given the Member for Calgary-North Hill's prepolitical history as an air traffic controller, that safety would continue to be his primary concern.

Bill 39 will increase the possibility of protection to police officers, firefighters, ambulance attendants, tow truck drivers as well as construction workers and, hopefully by extension, community volunteers such as members of 4-H clubs, who as part of local pride clean up their community's ditches along the highways. Besides doubling fines, I believe that the large radar-controlled speed indicator signs are very effective, although the most effective method is on-the-spot law enforcement, which the increased budget will help.

The Liberal opposition has only one reservation that hopefully can be addressed, which has to do with the seizure of a john's vehicle. Seizing a john's vehicle is a two-edged sword, which needs to be considered. The family of the john is punished twice: once by the john's activity and, secondly, by the seizure of the vehicle. A second concern is the possibility of driving prostitution further underground, where the potential of violence and abuse towards prostitutes could be increased.

It is my sincere hope that members of the government caucus will not water down the intention of this bill by only being willing to save certain lives under limited, prescribed conditions as was the case with Bill 201, which proposed a complete smoking ban in workplaces. With only three dissident government voices, Bill 201, having been addressed eloquently by several members opposite, passed easily through second reading. However, when the crunch came, government members folded, fell into line, and marched to their parade marshal's unhealthy tune.

Mr. Hancock: Point of order.

Mr. Chase: Constituents' wishes, Conservative convention delegates' demands, and sound health care principles were tossed out the window.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, there is a point of order being raised by the hon. Government House Leader.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Items Previously Decided

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under Standing Order 23(h),(i), and (j) and the other rules which preclude discussion of previous debates in the House, but most importantly imputing motives. The objection I have to what the hon. member has said: while we're debating the bill on traffic safety, he's going back to a private member's bill that was discussed in the House during private members' time, and suggesting that members in the House had their ability to make decisions as members of the House independently on the floor of the House on a private member's bill somehow constrained. That's inappropriate. As every member knows, when they come onto the floor of this House, regardless of whether they're part of a government caucus or an opposition caucus, they have a duty to make up their mind. To use abusive or insulting language or suggesting that they had motives other than to do the best for their constituents is inappropriate and certainly out of place in discussion of this bill.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: I thank you for clarification that hon. members weren't required by the caucus to vote in a certain manner. As a result, if you'll permit me, I'll withdraw that suggestion.

May I continue, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker: Thank you very much, hon. member for withdrawing the statement. However, I just want to draw the attention to the citation that the hon. Government House Leader used. It was 23(h),(i), and (j). Standing Order 23(h) refers to "makes allegations against another member," and (i) is "imputes false or unavowed motives to another member," not a group of people but to another member, and (j) is "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." I'm not so sure if that occurred here today. However, the hon. member has withdrawn the statement; therefore, there is no need to rule on this point of order.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, you may proceed.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I guess I'll try and draw together my reasons for bringing these other health-related bills into discussion tonight.

Mr. Chase: To continue, constituents' wishes, conservative convention delegates' demands, and sound health care principles were tossed out the window as members, with a very few notable exceptions including the current and former ministers of health and wellness, voted against a total smoking ban.

Similarly, despite the government's professed urgency in passing another of their private member's bills designed to deal with the ravages of crystal meth, the Conservative caucus amended the outcome of the hon. mover's intent of a proposed 90-day compulsory treatment plan although it should be noted that no new funding for either facilities, treatment, staffing, or policy was referenced in this bill. By the time the hon. member's bill had been passed through her caucus' process of amendment, 90 days of treatment had been reduced to five days of detox.

Similarly, collective Conservative concerns were addressed when our Liberal health critic, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, proposed wellness Motion 501, which would have seen $200 million from the $650 million of tobacco tax revenue set aside annually to support a clearly defined number of preventative, proactive health care initiatives. It is of great concern to me that the members opposite saw fit to simply throw out the motion without even considering the possibility of amendments.

Although the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation's musings on the potential of a government-sponsored cellphone ban following the August conclusion of a University of Calgary researcher's findings were frequently reported in last week's news, there was almost no recognition of the introduction of Liberal Motion 506, proposing that the government consider banning handheld cellphones by drivers, which I introduced into the House a week ago Monday night.

What I had great difficulty with that night, and what I would not want to be accused of doing myself, is the hyperbole that I saw a disconnect with. A member opposite suggested that the only way to avoid car accidents was to stay at home. This suggestion was later followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North, who had so passionately previously proposed the crystal meth bill. The member suggested that if cellphones were banned . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, are you rising on a point of order?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Yes, I am, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Point of Order Items Previously Decided

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, subject to Standing Order 23(f) the member definitely "debates any previous vote of the Assembly." Unless the member is intending to rescind a previous vote, I can't find any relevance between debating a previous vote and the matter that is currently before the House.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: I'm not debating; I'm summarizing what has taken place in this House. It is a statement of historical Hansard fact, not a discussion or debate.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, do you want to participate in the point of order?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time for the benefit of the House and certainly for the benefit of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs I would like to refer him to Beauchesne section 659. It simply reads that the second reading is the most important stage through which the bill is required to pass; for its whole principle is then at issue and is affirmed or denied by a vote of the House. It is not regular on this occasion, however, to discuss in detail the clauses of the bill.

So I think we have to give the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity a little bit of expanse, a little bit of rope, and let him proceed with his comments and allow him some time to make his point.

I would say that I don't believe there is a point of order here, and I think the hon. member should be allowed to continue with his discussion of the bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else wish to participate in the point of order?

Hon. members, I think this should be a learning experience for everybody. I know that it's late in the evening, but I'd refer you to Beauchesne's 479 and 480. Hopefully, that clarifies the matter before us.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, you were straying somewhat into this arena of a matter that we have already dealt with here in the past. However, I am convinced that you were probably leading toward some conclusion on the argument that you had before us. So I hope that this is a learning experience and that everyone learns from this point of order.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, you may proceed.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Thirty-four years in the learning experience, and I continue to learn even more, in particular tonight.

Mr. Chase: To summarize – and I will do so very quickly – should the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation reintroduce a similar cellphone ban concept during this fall's sitting of the Legislature, as he has suggested in the media, I would certainly support such legislation, regardless of which side of the House it originated.

I have not completely become disillusioned by the democratic process of this House as it relates to legislating well-being and safety. Although the New Democratic Party's motion of greater government accountability for the health and safety of persons in long-term care was battered and bombarded by amendments, it remained afloat at least through second reading. Hopefully, it will not be later sunk as seniors' contributions and quality of life must be given more than simply talk.

In conclusion, I and my caucus members support the intent of the majority of the clauses of Bill 39 and wish to see the bill passed quickly through the spring session so that lives can be protected while the badly needed road repairs continue this summer. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 39, Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2005. I want to commend the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill for making an extraordinary effort to bring the bill forward to see if it can be put through the session and brought into effect, receive royal assent and be proclaimed. The bill, in general, certainly deserves the support of the House. The NDP opposition is happy to support it.

The bill will create some new offences for speeding past construction workers in construction zones and sets speed limits for motorists passing emergency vehicles. Under the proposed amendments motorists passing stopped emergency vehicles or tow trucks must drive at 60 kilometres per hour or at the posted speed limit, whichever is slower. These provisions will certainly enhance safety and reduce the possibility of loss of life or serious injury. So that part is quite straightforward and is worthy of support.

It also amends the existing piece of legislation, the private member's Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003, by striking the provision that allows first-time offenders to be dealt with by alternative measures. We had some concerns there, but on that matter we have had some discussions with the member who is the sponsor of the bill. I would like to just note, Mr. Speaker, with respect to that issue – let me for a moment go back to Bill 206 and the part of the bill that's being struck here.

I think it's the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003. It's section (3)(c) that's being struck. Yeah. Bill 39 repeals section 2 and adds everything back in again except subsection (3)(c), which deals with the provision for first-time offenders. Now, I know that it's being done, perhaps, to address the concerns that are related to whether or not the existing piece of legislation, Bill 206, has some constitutional weaknesses or could be exposed to a constitutional challenge and that that constitutional challenge is due to the division of powers between the criminal law and the Traffic Safety Act.

However, as we all know, both Saskatchewan and Manitoba do have laws that allow for alternative measures, and neither province has had a court challenge in respect to this. In fact, Manitoba laws are very, very close to the private member's bill that was introduced in this Legislature in 2003 and then passed but never proclaimed. So I don't think that that's a serious concern because the Manitoba and Saskatchewan legislations have not been challenged on that ground. Even here in this House I think in the past we have not been all that overly concerned about the division of powers. So why the section is being struck out remains a question. I'm sure the hon. member will try to address that.

The only other issue here that we have is some concern about the personal information and privacy act. The bill allows, I think, for the manufacturer- or owner-installed recording devices to be used at any prosecution under this act or bylaw. That raises questions about whether or not the legislation will sort of run at cross purposes with the personal information and privacy act if they're not aware that these things are in their vehicle in the first place. So there's some concern about the violation of the personal information and privacy act provisions if the legislation before us allows for manufacturer- or owner-installed recording devices and the information gathered there to be used in any prosecution.

With those two comments, which express a bit of our concern, we are happy to support the bill because I think it will save lives. It will make highway travel safer and certainly will provide enhanced safety for emergency vehicles or tow trucks when they are providing their services around the vehicles and also on construction sites along highways or whatever have you.

So with those brief remarks, Mr. Speaker, I close my comments. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and discuss Bill 39, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2005, this evening. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill for bringing this legislation forward.

Certainly, I appreciate from the hon. member the updates that he has provided in regard to this legislation, but it's a lot more comprehensive than I had first thought. When we think of all the infrastructure construction that is going on and is going to be going on in this province, this legislation is ideal for construction crews and emergency workers, and I would like to thank the hon. member for bringing it forward. If we could improve the safety at construction sites that are adjacent to our busy highways, I would urge all hon. members to support this bill. If we could also improve the safety of emergency workers, who unfortunately are called far too often to the site of an accident, this is worthy of support on those grounds alone.

But whenever we look at other measures here that allow for the seizure of vehicles used for prostitution-related activities, I don't know if this is going to help or not, but certainly if it would even in a small way help, I would again urge all hon. members to consider supporting this bill. When we think of, first, Vancouver – and it took the police a long time to solve those murders. There were, of course, prostitutes from central areas of the city of Vancouver being transported to what essentially at that time was a farm and murdered. We find the same pattern of behaviour happening, unfortunately, in this city.

When we decide as a Legislative Assembly or as a province or as a society who exactly is the criminal in prostitution and prostitution-related activities – is it the prostitute, or is it the buyer of the sexual services? In my view, it is the buyer of the sexual services. That's just my personal view. This bill would allow for the vehicle of the buyer of those services – there's a chance that their vehicle will be seized. Not only would I like to see the vehicle seized, but I think there should be a public notice somewhere, maybe on the Solicitor General's website. Maybe it will be on Infrastructure and Transportation's website. But the persons involved in the purchase of sexual services: if the public wish, they can have access to that information. I don't know how we control this sort of behaviour, but this bill may be a good start, and hopefully it would stop the horrific crimes that are going on, the murders that are going on, Mr. Speaker, in this city at this time.

Now, also, we're talking about increasing penalties for driving without insurance. I was having a look at this, and at first glance I thought there was going to be a significant increase in the amount of the fines, but there is not. There is the potential imprisonment for a term of 45 days instead of 30 days, a two-week sentence in the Crowbar Hotel, essentially, for driving without insurance. Insurance rates have not gone down, as was promised, for a lot of drivers with the insurance reforms. A lot of people find it cheaper to drive without insurance because the fine is so low than it is, actually, to go out and buy the insurance. I've been told that if we were at a stop sign, for instance, and 10 cars stop and then proceed through the stop sign, one of those 10 cars, or 10 per cent of all vehicles on the road, is without insurance. So it is a major problem.

We look at the amendment here in section 54, and hopefully we can have a little discussion on this or get more information from the hon. member during committee. Section 54 is amended (a) by adding the following after subsection (1).

(1.1) If a person drives or has a motor vehicle on a highway without the expressed or implied consent of the registered owner of the vehicle, that person is deemed for the purposes of subsection (1)(a) or (b) to drive or have on a highway a motor vehicle that is not an insured motor vehicle.

Now, this whole notion of implied consent: I think it won't be long before that's in the court. I would like to know exactly how that is going to work, and hopefully we'll get an answer to this in committee. If not, I think we should have a look at perhaps changing this. Maybe with clarification from the hon. member my cautions on this will be satisfied.

Now, we were talking about the increase in the amount of time one would spend in jail here on the first offence or the first contravention, and then we have here subsequent contraventions. I don't know how many chronic repeat offenders the law enforcement officials are getting these days or catching or apprehending, but are there any plans with the money that we are going to get from the increase in the fine? That pool of money has specific purposes, and if the hon. member could tell us how that money is to be pooled and used in the future, I would be grateful. That's the money that's collected from those who are fined for driving without insurance. I would appreciate that at committee.

That is it for my comments at second reading, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity at this hour of the night to have a chance to get some concerns on the record in regard to this bill. Hopefully, during committee or later on in debate my concerns could be addressed. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 39 read a second time]

head: 10:50 Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Bill 22
Animal Protection Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure for me to rise this evening in committee regarding Bill 22, the Animal Protection Amendment Act, 2005, on behalf of the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Before I begin, however, I'd like to introduce two guests that are in the gallery this evening who have had a great deal invested in this piece of legislation. The first one is Cheryl Ryder, and Cheryl works with the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. The second is Morris Seiferling, and he is the director of the technical services division of Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Both of these individuals have worked tirelessly on Bill 22, and I'm certain that they've put a lot of time and effort over the last many months here to ensure the passing of this particular bill.

As stated previously in this House, Alberta is a leader in animal protection, and these amendments will help ensure that both the welfare of animals and those who take proper care of their animals are protected in our province. These amendments will update and strengthen the legislation to apply to anyone causing distress to an animal. They will help prevent animals from becoming distressed and will provide protection for those who legitimately report an animal in distress. They will require persons who are responsible for an animal to take care of them and will also protect people that follow reasonable and generally accepted practices of animal care.

Mr. Chairman, Albertans' expectations for animal care have changed over the past decade, and those industries, institutions, and persons who are responsible for the care of animals will applaud the strong support this House has given to Bill 22.

I would like to now address the comments and questions that a number of hon. members raised during second reading of this bill. To begin, I would like to thank the hon. members for Edmonton-Gold Bar, Edmonton-Calder, and Calgary-Varsity for their support of Bill 22. The vast majority of persons that are responsible for animals in this province, including livestock producers, take very good care of their animals. Even with significant issues like BSE and past droughts affecting their bottom lines, there are very few producers that won't or can't take care of their animals.

The Alberta Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, the ASPCA, and the livestock industry have worked co-operatively to help producers that can no longer care for their animals. Through the Alberta Farm Animal Care Association peer and vet support is provided to producers to proactively prevent potential animal welfare situations. Both of these agencies have toll-free numbers that anyone can use to report potential animal welfare cases. Producers have been helped to voluntarily deal with their particular situation, and as a result charges have been laid in very few instances over the past few years.

The hon. members are correct in that the proposed amendments will allow a peace officer to act before an animal becomes distressed and that anyone causing distress to an animal can now be held responsible for their actions. Protection for people that follow the law and use reasonable and generally accepted practices, whether they are livestock producers, hunters, fishermen, trappers, or those controlling pests, is a fundamental component of this particular bill. These people need not fear that an animal rights group will use this legislation against law-abiding Albertans.

I would also like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore for his support for the bill. In response to his questions regarding the removal of antler velvet in elk, currently the Animal Protection Act allows the removal of antler velvet as long as it is done consistently, with reasonable and generally accepted practices. Bill 22 would add an important component to further clarify what these reasonable and generally accepted practices are and are not.

The bill will give the minister of agriculture the authority to reference guides or codes of practice and regulations to further clarify what these practices are or are not. This would allow the elk industry, for example, to work with other stakeholders, like the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association, to develop standards for things like the removal of antler velvet. The minister could then reference the standards and the regulations, and they would then be enforceable under the act.

This provision will also address the hon. member's concerns regarding roadside zoos. I understand that the Department of Sustainable Resource Development is in the process of developing zoo standards for Alberta. Once completed, these standards could also be referenced in the Animal Protection Act and be enforceable. I believe this provision will be welcomed as it will help clarify for both zoo operators and all Albertans the expectations for the welfare of animals in these facilities.

I would also like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie for his support of Bill 22. This bill equally applies to all animals in Alberta, whether they are livestock, pets, wildlife, animals being used in research or for educational purposes. On the hon. member's concern and those of the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity related to the need for more SPCA officers, I would like to remind the members that all Royal Canadian Mounted Police and members of a municipal police service have and will continue to have full authority to enforce the Animal Protection Act. This is in addition to the two special constables also appointed under the act. Therefore, there are many more than two enforcement officers, in the city of Calgary for instance, that can deal with animal welfare cases.

Mr. Chairman, as far as the hon. member's concerns on the need for additional facilities to care for animals in Calgary, that debate lies outside the provisions of this particular bill.

I certainly agree with the hon. member's comments about the difficulty, in some cases, of proving animal abuse. To help address this concern, two important concepts have been included in the bill. First, it states that no one can abuse an animal. Currently only the owner or person ordinarily in charge of the animal are prevented from causing distress to the animal. Second, a person who is responsible for an animal must provide adequate food, shelter, care, protection from injurious heat or cold, and adequate space and ventilation. A peace officer will no longer be restricted to only dealing with animals that they have cause to believe are being abused but will be able to act before the abuse actually takes place.

As the hon. member mentioned, Bill 22 will place the onus on the owner of the animal to pay any costs associated with their animals if they were seized and under the care of a caretaker. This is an important principle in that it should be the owner's responsibility to pay these costs, not all Albertans. Under the act if an owner refuses to pay these costs, the caretaker can then give the animal to another person and try to recover some of their costs in doing so. If the animal can be sold, which is usually the case with livestock, the proceeds from the sale can be used to pay the caretaker's expenses.

Regarding the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner's question about further defining animals in distress, the input that stakeholders provided through the consultation process indicated that more certainty around the definition of distress was needed. The hon. member is correct in that adding clarity to this definition also limits what can be considered when determining if an animal is in distress. This was done intentionally, Mr. Chairman, based on the feedback we received through the consultation process. Both animal owners and the people who enforce the act asked for this further clarification to help them determine whether an animal is considered in distress or not.

In response to the question from the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, the Alberta Fish and Game Association, the Trappers Association, and aboriginal or Métis communities were not included in the consultation related to Bill 22. As the hon. member mentioned, reasonable and generally accepted practices of hunting, fishing, trapping, and pest control are exempt from this particular act. If Albertans follow these practices, regardless of whether they hunt, fish, or trap in northern or southern Alberta, they are protected.

In response to the hon. member's question regarding whether certain arrow tips will be required for hunters under the act, the short answer is no. However, again, if an organization like the Alberta Fish and Game Association wanted to limit the use of certain arrowheads, they could develop standards that the minister could reference in the regulation and make those standards enforceable.

As I mentioned earlier, the bill does apply to all animals in the province, including wildlife. Wildlife in zoos and rehabilitation centres will be protected under this act. Again, animals in the wild that are lawfully hunted, trapped, fished, or controlled as pests through reasonable and generally accepted practices are exempt from the act.

I would like to thank all the hon. members for their support and excellent questions related to this bill. As the hon. members committed to it during second reading of the bill, I believe I have responded to all the questions raised. I would again urge all members to give Bill 22 their full support.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. In regard to Bill 22, the Animal Protection Amendment Act, 2005, I would like to thank the hon. member for his thorough response to our questions on this side of the Assembly. As a result of those responses and the thoroughness and the diligence of the hon. member I'm pleased to say that we will continue to support this legislation.

Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 22 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 36 Police Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'll be brief in responding to questions that were raised during second reading. I'm pleased to stand before the committee and respond to some of the questions that were mentioned earlier in the Assembly. There are many proposed amendments to the Police Act concerning First Nations, police officers, police funding, and other issues that have garnered little or no debate, so I'll focus my presentation on the sections that have been raised.

It's important to keep in mind that these proposed amendments build on an existing police oversight mechanism, and many areas have been clarified or strengthened. The amendments ensure that every community has either a civilian police commission or a police committee to whom the chief of police is accountable for the handling of complaints.

In the amendments, however, the role of the commission is strengthened considerably. These additional responsibilities are over and above their responsibility for establishing policies and budgets for the police. The chair of the commission under the amendments can, at his or her discretion, request another police agency anywhere in the country to investigate any complaint against a police officer. The MLA Policing Review Committee recommendations state that "it is most appropriate that the chief of police be responsible for the investigation of routine complaints." While this recommendation may be adequate, Bill 36 goes much further and allows for the chair of the commission to request an outside police agency to investigate what might be considered a routine complaint if it would be in the public interest to do so.

As well, Mr. Chairman, in the amendments the responsibilities of the director of law enforcement have been significantly increased.

The director of law enforcement will ensure that commissions and committees have the training that will provide them with the knowledge and skills to perform their duties more effectively. The director of law enforcement will also monitor complaints, establish standards, and audit practices to ensure that the standards are met.

Finally, at the provincial level we have enhanced the role of the Solicitor General to allow the minister to request an external investigation even if the commission chair has decided against such a course of action. The minister can also appoint a civilian monitor or a review team or a person to oversee an investigation in cases where provincial intervention is needed.

Mr. Chairman, it's critically important to point out that several people have held up the Ontario Special Investigations Unit, or SIU, as the prime model for civilian oversight of complaints against police. Advocates for the Ontario model give the impression that Ontario SIU is a completely independent civilian body that investigates all complaints against the police. This could not be further from the truth. In fact, their role is far more limited than the public has been led to believe.

First, the Ontario SIU does not investigate any complaints that do not involve sexual assault, serious injury, or death. The Ontario SIU is responsible for investigating only a mere fraction of the complaints made against the police. The thousands of other complaints that are not related to serious injury, sexual assault, or death are investigated in precisely the same way they are here in Alberta: by the respective police agency. Every other province has fundamentally the same system as Alberta and Ontario in that internal affairs officers within the police service from which the complaint arises investigate the majority of complaints against police.

Any person who suggests that Alberta should develop a fully civilian investigative agency must turn their minds to the logistics of such a suggestion. I offer the following for the sake of comparison. While the SIU may serve the province of Ontario well, where there are 23,000 police officers and thousands of complaints, the system, as stated in the MLA Policing Review Committee report, would be unnecessarily bureaucratic and expensive, especially in light of the small number of serious cases in Alberta, approximately 10 a year, compared to 190 in Ontario just last year.

It's also critical to point out that an agency such as the SIU would not investigate incidents like the Overtime case here in Edmonton. In addition, most of the investigators in the Ontario SIU models are retired police officers, which may not remove the perception of police investigating the police.

Regarding a proposed time limit for people to submit complaints about the conduct of a police officer, Alberta is one of the last provinces to include a time limit. Ontario has a time limit of six months, and other provinces have a time limit of three months.

Finally, in Alberta when any complaint has been dealt with and the complainant is not satisfied, a person can appeal to the Alberta Law Enforcement Review Board, which is a civilian body with considerable powers. We do not need to enhance the powers of the Law Enforcement Review Board, but we can enhance their role through policy and increased resources. In addition to its most common role as an appeal body the board also has the power on its own to conduct inquiries respecting complaints. Further, at the request of the minister the LERB can inquire into any matter concerning the police, and that is as it should be.

Mr. Chairman, we have done our due diligence to consult, research, and develop amendments to the Police Act that will serve Albertans well in the years to come. Police accountability is without question a fundamental requirement in order to gain and maintain public confidence. I feel that we have achieved a balance with Bill 36 that will serve the public well.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is a very important bill, and I thank the Solicitor General for his remarks in introducing the Committee of the Whole discussion of this bill. I think it's going to take us quite some time to work through the bill. My understanding of Committee of the Whole is that it's proper to go through the bill section by section, and I think that's what we should do to discuss the merits of various parts.

I would like to bring some amendments in the course of our discussion in Committee of the Whole. I have three amendments, just to give a warning of what's coming. The first one is very simple and wouldn't take much debate. The second one is a little more controversial. The third one is very controversial because it tries to amend the real heart of the bill; namely, the oversight process, civilian review process of dealing with complaints, in which I believe that there should be more emphasis on civilian oversight.

Starting at the beginning of the bill, the bill asks for some housekeeping issues, and I'm not going to dwell on that. Section 4 suggests a change in wording from "an adequate and effective level" to "adequate and effective." That probably is important because we don't want to give the impression that there are different levels of policing throughout Alberta. The important thing is to say that the government of Alberta is responsible for adequate and effective policing throughout Alberta. So that is a good statement.

Section 5 is interesting. I hope the Solicitor General is prepared to take up this heavy responsibility outlined in section 5 that the minister may, subject to the regulations, "establish standards for policing, and . . . ensure that standards are met."

Then the next section is one that municipalities are looking at because it's changing the population level under which municipalities get policing from the province. The change is from 2,500 to 5,000. With this, every municipality under 5,000 will receive policing fully funded by the province, and that is undoubtedly a good move and appreciated by municipalities throughout Alberta.

Turning over to page 4, section 8, I especially appreciate the inclusion of the phrase "and restorative justice" in the revision of the bill because I'm a great supporter of the impetus, the move towards more emphasis on restorative justice. I think that's very important.

Now, section 8 – and this is where I'm going to bring my first amendment – is on the issue of the name of the director of law enforcement. I want to come back to that in a few minutes. The director of law enforcement is given a great deal of broad powers mentioned in (b)(iii)(c): "developing and promoting programs to enhance professional practices, standards and training for police services, commissions and policing committees." So this person, who in this bill is called the director of law enforcement, will oversee and encourage and carry out the training of all the police commission members and the police committees and so on throughout the province. This is a very important role, and I will come back to that in a few minutes.

The bill goes on to discuss and establish the rules for policing committees and also for police commissions. I just wanted to bring our attention to a couple of matters here. I notice that under Policing Committees – and this is directed towards municipalities which have policing, not large cities – the municipal councils "may establish a policing committee," whereas when it refers to commissions in regard to large cities, where there's a municipal police service, it's required to have a police commission. I found that a bit curious. That leaves a lot of responsibility to the local mayor or municipal manager to be responsible for the oversight of policing. So it's optional whether there's a police committee or not. I wondered about that, whether that is really in the interests of the oversight of policing in Alberta.

Now, on police commissions I mentioned the requirement of the establishment of a police commission. I don't find any reference to funding in either the description of the police committee or the police commission, and that seems to be contrary to the MLA review of policing, of which the Solicitor General was a member. They suggested that police commissions in Alberta have their own budget and that the expenses for budgeting come from the city council and not out of the police service's budget.

Many commissions cannot afford more than the most basic staffing. So in order to achieve its mandate, the commission must be able to exercise its governance authority in a manner that's not hampered by a lack of appropriate resources. I think that's a very important point. It's nice to set up these police committees and police commissions, but if they don't have adequate funding through the municipality, then I think their effectiveness is undermined. There's a reference in each case to the police committee and also the police commission "for the payment of reasonable remuneration," but no mention of how the police committee or the police commission is actually funded.

Just in terms of the makeup I notice that under the police commission there's a reference to who is able to be a member of a police commission. In respect to whether a member of the city council or an employee of the municipality should be on the commission, the bill says that one of them may be a member of the council. There's no requirement that they should be a member of the council. In terms of the recent experience with the Overtime investigation and the Police Commission in Edmonton, I think it's really necessary that a member of the city council or even two members of the city council be members of the police commission as it is the case with the Edmonton Police Commission. Leaving it open I think is not good enough. It should be a requirement.

In fact, that was the recommendation of the MLA committee that reviewed policing. Number 26 of their recommendations is that "the Police Act require that at least one council member be appointed to the police commission, with an option of a second council member where the commission has five or more members." So I think that the bill is weak on this point.

Now, I would like to take a lot of time to go into the whole issue of public complaints and the process of handling public complaints of policing and so on, but I want to go back to the beginning and try out my first amendment if I could, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we need to have the amendment circulated.

Dr. B. Miller: Yes. I have it here.

The Deputy Chair: Do you have it with you?

Dr. B. Miller: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Just wait for a few moments while they circulate the amendment.

Hon. members, the amendment being circulated will be referred to as amendment A1.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, you may proceed.

Dr. B. Miller: Yes. I would like to make a motion to amend the Police Amendment Act, 2005, Bill 36, that section 8(a) be struck out and the following substituted. This is basically a change of the name of the director of law enforcement. So instead of "Director of Law Enforcement," it would read "Director of Policing Services."

Now, the term "law enforcement" is an American term, and in the U.S. the term includes, really, all levels of the criminal justice system, not just the police. So for our province to use this term to describe the title of a person who will oversee policing services and the commissions and committees – I think it's misleading and inaccurate to call this person the director of law enforcement.

The use of this term is diametrically opposed to the original and continuing mandate of consent that defines policing and is embodied in the second of Peel's principles. Now, in second reading I referred to the Peel's principles because the roots of policing are traced back to England and to the importance of public support for policing. The police actually represent the public. The second of Peel's principles is that police, at all times, should maintain a relationship with the public that gives reality to the historic tradition that the police are the public and the public are the police; the police being only members of the public who are paid to give full-time attention to the duties which are incumbent on every citizen in the interests of community welfare and existence.

I think that it's important that policing needs to distance itself from terms such as "enforcement" and "force" and become a true service to the public, for the public, and with the public. That's the phrase: service to the public, for the public, and with the public. So I think it's important to change this name from "Law Enforcement" to "Policing Services."

It's not just a symbolic change. It may seem like it's a symbolic change, but actually the name is very important. Often when a title is used over and over again, it communicates something that's really important. This individual is going to train people on police committees and police commissions to carry out and to enable the province to experience the very best kind of policing. That's what it's about.

So, Mr. Chair, I would recommend that we support this amendment, and I'd like to hear what others think.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Briefly, in response to some of the issues raised with regard to policing committees and police commissions, the issue there is the fact that there is a difference between two different acts. One is, of course, the federal government act with regard to the RCMP, and one is the Police Act, which is obviously responsible for municipal policing in Alberta. The difference, therefore, has to be a difference with regard to civilian oversight, but the issues behind it are the same in the fact that those committees are responsible for really overseeing the policing that's provided in their communities and ensuring, whether it's an RCMP detachment or it's a chief of police, that the community has the ability through a police commission to discuss the issues with the detachment commander or the chief to ensure that their voice is represented in the community.

The issue with regard to budgets for commissions. Those were issues that were discussed both through consultation and additional consultation this fall. Some of those issues were brought up, and it was determined that instead of having their own budget or requesting their own budget, the budget that they do have remain within the overall policing budget. So, for example, in Edmonton the budget that the Edmonton Police Commission has is actually in the overall police budget, and a portion of that budget, or a percentage of the Edmonton Police Service's budget, is provided to the Edmonton Police Commission for expenses that they may incur.

When we talk about members of council being on the police commission, it has been with some history now that two members of council may be members on the Police Commission. One of those members could be the mayor if they so wish. So those opportunities are still there for them. If the mayor wishes to be on the Police Commission, he's more than happy to if he so chooses.

The position that there be provincial government appointees to police commissions was also brought up during consultation, but obviously we hesitated with that, in fact, because we felt that this being a municipal responsibility, obviously the majority of the police service's budget is paid by municipalities, and therefore it wouldn't be the province's position to have a provincially appointed member on a local or municipal police commission.

With regard to the amendment, Mr. Chairman, a few issues were raised with regard to the name "Law Enforcement" and substituting "Policing Services." The name "Law Enforcement" encompasses not just policing in the province, so I have to disagree with the hon. member's notice of amendment in the fact that the community of law enforcement not only includes police officers, but it also includes special constables. We have 3,000 special constables in this province, and there is some relationship between the director of law enforcement and some of those officers.

It also includes his responsibility to Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta, which is an intelligence component, not strictly law enforcement but intelligence-based, as well as IROC, the integrated response to organized crime. It also has a responsibility for police commission training. So, again, it's not just a policing role; it's a role to ensure that there are standards and that there's training available. Standards with regard to policing, but also standards with regard to training police commission members regarding the governance role that they have as members of a civilian oversight body.

The other issue is, as I mentioned, that the director of law enforcement does have some say with regard to special constables' duties in the province. As we have the special constables review going on right now, that may change as the review and report will be brought to government later in the year.

The issue that also arises is: would this mean that there would be a required name change to the Law Enforcement Review Board, which, of course, is the appeal mechanism and appeal body for citizens in their complaints against police officers? As well, they have a component with the Law Enforcement Review Board to listen to appeals from special constables. So there I have to disagree with the hon. member's amendment and stress that the director of law enforcement, although there is history to it, does provide all-encompassing factors with regard to its name. It's not just police services. It's beyond policing as well.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I believe the intention of substituting "policing services" for "law enforcement" is partly to provide the police with not just the sort of force attitude but to see police individuals as serving the public. That's why "service" is there. I think it's an American concept, but the idea of to serve and protect is out there. In terms of the RCMP motto, Maintiens le droit, it just means to maintain the right.

To me, the whole point of this is to provide the police with sort of a friendlier, serving role as opposed to strictly enforcement. The whole idea to me is just to make it more publicly acceptable and put the police in a similar service role as teachers and the words public servants and civil service. The police have a very special role, but the role is to serve the public, and that's their primary purpose. Changing the names of the various committees to police services act or whatever: I think the point is to make a friendly suggestion that the police offer a variety of services and support for the public, not strictly law enforcement. They provide a whole variety of other services that the public benefits from.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Dr. B. Miller: Can I speak again?

The Deputy Chair: Yes, you can.

Dr. B. Miller: I just wanted to conclude the discussion and debate just by pointing out the fact that if you look at the job description of this director of law enforcement, there really isn't any reference to enforcing anything. His job is to develop and promote crime prevention – and you've added the words "restorative justice" – and then develop and promote "programs to enhance professional practices, standards and training for police services." So it makes sense to be consistent with the job description and call him director of policing services. That's my final argument.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In light of the hour I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that we rise and report Bill 22 and report progress on Bill 36.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 22. The committee also reports progress on the following bill: Bill 36. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 11:32 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. On this day we give thanks for those who on land, at sea, or in the air served sovereign, country, province, and the cause of freedom 60 and more years ago. We ask for blessings on all here present. Especially we remember our war dead: those for whom there is no known grave, those who lie in fields world-wide, and those whose bodies were committed to oceans deep. We give praise and glory to all who served and for all that they did both in our name and for generations yet unborn. For service and sacrifice, we are eternally grateful. We will never forget. For those who served and did not return, would you please remember them in a minute of silence. Amen.

Please be seated.

60th Anniversary of Victory in Europe Day Address to the Assembly on Behalf of Armed Forces

The Speaker: Hon. members, 60 years ago yesterday at 11 p.m. a signal from Canadian Army main headquarters in Europe was dispatched. It read: "All operations cancelled forthwith. Cease fire 0800, 5 May 1945. All units stand fast until further orders."

After five long and bloody years the war in Europe was effectively over. The peace was signed three days later, and victory in Europe was officially declared. Unfortunately, the conflict in the Far East was to continue until August 1945.

In the members' and the public galleries today is a representative group of Alberta veterans of the Second World War. The flags above the Speaker's dias – the Red Ensign, the Royal Canadian naval ensign, and the ensign of the Royal Canadian Air Force – are those under which they served.

In the Speaker's gallery are Honorary Colonel Stanley A. Milner of the South Alberta Light Horse Regiment; Honorary Colonel Sandy Mactaggart, the Loyal Edmonton Regiment; Mr. Robert Whitley, president, 700 (Edmonton) Wing of the Air Force Association of Canada; Mrs. Lenore Schwabe, vice-president, Alberta-Northwest Territories Command of the Royal Canadian Legion; Mr. Darryl MacLeod, president, Naval Officers Association; Honorary Colonel Bart West, 408 Helicopter Squadron; Reverend Canon Tom McKnight, past president of the Army, Navy, Air Force Veterans Association. May I ask all of these great Canadians to rise. [standing ovation] Thank you. You may be seated.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, at the Bar in the Chamber are three very distinguished Albertans and Canadians. Each represents their former service. I'll ask them to rise. At my left is Commodore Doug Learoyd of the Royal Canadian Navy Volunteer Reserve, who saw service in His Majesty's Canadian ship Poundmaker on convoy duties in the North Atlantic in 1944 and 1945. In the centre is Captain Stu Lindop, South Alberta Regiment, Canadian Army, who was wounded by a sniper on October 12, 1944, at Bergen op Zoom in the Netherlands. On my right is Squadron

Leader the Honourable Mr. Justice Sam Lieberman, who at age 18, in 1940, joined the Royal Canadian Air Force. He gained his wings in 1941. Subsequently he completed two operational tours, one in England and Gibraltar and the other in Aden in the Middle East with Number 8 Squadron, Royal Air Force.

In inviting these three distinguished gentlemen onto the floor of this Assembly, this House confers its heartfelt gratitude, admiration, and its deepest respect to all who served.

It is the pleasure of this Assembly to now invite Squadron Leader Lieberman, on behalf of all this province's veterans of the Second World War, to give his remarks. Justice Lieberman.

Mr. Justice Lieberman: Mr. Speaker, Members of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta, Commodore Learoyd, Captain Lindop, fellow veterans. Thank you for granting me the privilege of addressing you on the occasion of your commemoration of the 60th anniversary of VE Day. It is indeed fitting that the year 2005, a year that has been designated and declared as the Year of the Veteran, be recognized in this manner.

I come before you as a proud veteran of the Royal Canadian Air Force who today is beset with the mixed emotions of pride, humility, and sorrow combined with a sense of satisfaction in our hard-won victory: pride in having been given the privilege of addressing you on the eve of the 60th anniversary of VE Day on behalf of all those courageous Canadians who voluntarily and unselfishly volunteered to serve in the Allied Forces in World War II, humility in the knowledge of my minuscule contribution to that great victory, and sorrow that so many paid the ultimate sacrifice in achieving that victory.

Great Britain's declaration of war on September 3, 1939, brought into sharp focus the threat to our way of life posed by the oppressive and tyrannical policies of the fascist European powers. Our freedom-loving nation recognized that threat and, although not obligated by Commonwealth membership to do so, independently declared war on Nazi Germany on September 10, 1939.

We were then a nation of only 11 million, perhaps 12 million people, but in the ensuing five years over 1 million of our citizens, including 45,000 women and 3,000 members of our aboriginal people, volunteered to serve in our armed forces. Tragically, 45,000 of those volunteers were killed and 55,000 were maimed or seriously injured.

Although the majority of the volunteers served in the Royal Canadian Navy, the Royal Canadian Army, or the Royal Canadian Air Force, the navies, armies, and air forces of our allies were replete with members of the Canadian armed services. Our citizen volunteers served in all theatres of the European and Pacific war and following VE Day continued to serve in the Pacific theatre, where victory was achieved on August 14, 1945, VJ Day. I must also mention the Merchant Marine, that often ignored but highly important arm of the Allied Forces in which many Canadians gallantly served.

Those of our citizens who were not in the armed services kept the engines of industry producing those materials necessary to support our war effort. In the broad sense of the term they, too, are veterans and deserving of our thanks.

Mr. Speaker, in my opening remarks I referred to the emotion of sorrow. I shall always have a deep sense of sorrow and regret that so many lives were lost or maimed in achieving victory. I leave you with this sobering thought. It is the Allied victory in World War II, to which our veterans contributed so much, that has made it possible for us to live in freedom under the rule of law in a country governed by the principles of democracy. Your assembly here today in this magnificent Chamber is proof that our veterans' sacrifices were not in vain. It is this fact that gives me satisfaction in so costly a victory.

Please join with me in paying tribute to all veterans who through the years have served our nation in two world wars, in Korea, and in peacekeeping missions throughout the world. How sad it is that so many of them did not live to see this day. [applause]

The Speaker: Squadron Leader Lieberman, thank you very much. Please know that on behalf of all of the men and women of this Assembly and all of the men and women of this province, we are indeed truly eternally grateful for you and your comrades for what you did for us.

Mr. Hancock: Victory in Europe. What joy those cries must have raised for the men and women at arms, for the people of Holland and the rest of Europe, and for the families at home: the mothers and fathers, sons and daughters, those waiting and hoping for the safe return of loved ones.

Victory in Europe. I don't believe any of us on the floor as members were there, but we represent over 3 million Albertans who owe their freedom and liberty to those who were. Each and every one of us has our own family chronicle, our own connection, and each and every one of us was affected, touched in some way by the long march to that day. Victory in Europe.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of the hon. the Premier, the government, and all members to commemorate one of the most glorious and most solemn events in Canadian history. On Sunday people around the world will join together to remember and celebrate victory in Europe. Victory in Europe came on May 8, 1945, when Allied forces, many of them from Alberta, liberated the Netherlands and helped bring the horrors of the Second World War to an end. It is particularly fitting that we stand today on this day of Yom ha-Shoah to celebrate the defeat of tyranny and genocide. On that day 60 years ago the people of Europe shed tears of joy, hope, and relief as these soldiers did their grim work. They thank these soldiers for their bravery and their sacrifices on their behalf.

Today, six decades later, all of humanity thanks those soldiers, those armed forces, once again. We thank them for their dedication to a cause that stirs us today as much as it stirred them 60 years ago, we thank the spirits of the soldiers who died on that day and on all the other horrible days that the war raged throughout Europe, and we remember the many veterans who returned home from the war but have since passed on.

My father, Richard Hancock, just newly married, left our home in Fort Vermilion in northern Alberta and volunteered for service. He went on to become a navigator in the Canadian armed forces as well as being an instructor before being posted to England. As an instructor he never was required to fly into battle over Europe, but like so many Albertans he stepped forward to answer the call of duty and was one of the truly fortunate who were able to return home, unlike so many young men, and then begin to build a family and a life.

Victory in Europe Day marks the end of a conflict the size and violence of which has no match in history. In World War II approximately 78,000 Albertans served the Allied cause. Of those, over 3,300 did not return from the battlefield. All of these brave soldiers, along with many, many others from Canada, risked everything for the most noble of causes: the right of people to live in peace, dignity, and freedom. I was reminded by Captain Stu Lindop just before coming in that the South Alberta Regiment won the only Victoria Cross won by any of the Canadian armed regiments during the Second World War. Thankfully, there are over 22,500 World War II veterans from Alberta who are still with us. We are truly honoured by those of you who could join us as guests today.

In Canada 2005 is being marked as the Year of the Veteran. It is a year during which Canadians remember the contributions of the country's veterans and extend a hand of friendship and gratitude to veterans in their communities. One opportunity to learn more about the contributions of Albertans is the upcoming Alberta Centennial Tattoo. That tattoo is being held at Rexall Place from July 21 to 24. Members of the Legislature and veterans invited by members will be attending on the afternoon of the 24th. It's a unique production that tells the stories of Alberta's soldiers and veterans as well as police officers. That tattoo, Mr. Speaker, will be a stunning tribute to those who have protected Albertans over the last 100 years and is a most appropriate event in the Year of the Veteran and the 60th anniversary of VE Day.

In Alberta we all owe an immeasurable debt of gratitude to our province's veterans. Though 60 years have passed since the end of the Second World War, the drama, the horror, the sacrifice of that global conflict continues to inspire generations of Albertans. In that war and on Victory in Europe Day in 1945 Albertan forces did us proud. They proved with their hearts that freedom is worth fighting for, and many of them proved with their lives that the fight can often only be won at great cost.

Today the fruits of those sacrifices continue to bless us. The freedom that we enjoy to assemble in this House and the freedom our families enjoy to pursue their dreams stem directly from what those soldiers did 60 years ago on the battlefields of Europe. We as members of this Assembly have the privilege to serve, a privilege we are reminded of each day as we enter the rotunda with its memorials, because our fathers and mothers answered that call. To those soldiers, to those armed forces, and to their families we say thank you. Their courage reminds us all that we must never take our freedoms for granted. Those veterans certainly did not.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

1:50

The Speaker: Thank you, sir.

May I now call on the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition I am honoured to be part of this very special ceremony in the Assembly today to commemorate the 60th anniversary of Victory in Europe Day. We are proud to remember those Canadians both past and present who were part of the long fight and struggle that finally resulted in the surrender and defeat of the Nazi military forces in Europe.

It was May 8, 1945, when Winston Churchill declared Victory in Europe Day, soon shortened to VE Day. Instrumental in accomplishing this victory was the liberation of the Netherlands, which was completed on May 5, 1945, exactly 60 years ago today, when German forces surrendered to the First Canadian Corps in Holland. More than 7,600 Canadians gave their lives for the liberation of the Netherlands, most of whom are buried in Canadian war cemeteries in Holland.

In 1939, when Canada joined the Allied Forces, our population was about 11 million people. By the end of the war 1.1 million Canadians, a full 10 per cent of our population at the time, enlisted to serve in World War II. Over 42,000 Canadians were killed in World War II, 55,000 were wounded, 9,000 suffered as prisoners of war in conditions that deteriorated as the war dragged on, and countless thousands, tens of thousands of others, were emotionally and psychologically scarred for life.

Like many of us here, my parents threw themselves into the war effort. My father served in the RCAF, and my mother did civilian service, so I grew up hearing the stories about the war first-hand. For people of my generation, so many of us who grew up with a shadow of the war from our parents' generation, it is our responsibility to pass on these stories and memories. It's very important that subsequent generations know about and remember the sacrifices that were made by so many Canadian men and women during World War II.

So please join me in thanking Justice Sam Lieberman, representing the air force, Captain Stu Lindop, representing the army, and Commodore Douglas Learoyd, representing the navy, for being here today. Also, please join me in honouring all of the veterans here today to represent and commemorate the energy, effort, and sacrifices made by Canadians to achieve the end of the war.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, sir.

May I now call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great humility that I rise today on behalf of the New Democrat caucus to pay tribute to the men and women who contributed to the liberation of Europe from Nazi occupation 60 years ago. Canada was there to stand and fight in Europe right from the beginning. By the time peace was finally won, over 1 million Canadians had served in the armed forces or the merchant navy; 47,000 of these brave men and women gave their lives.

As Canadians we can be truly proud of those who put their lives on the line to defend their own country and to liberate others. The wartime efforts of such people, including the honoured guests that are here today, should act as a benchmark for the greatness we seek to achieve in our own lives. I'm constantly amazed at the accomplishments that can be achieved by people placed in extraordinary circumstances. These Canadian men and women who helped to liberate Europe volunteered to give up their regular lives to fight for freedom, for justice, for security, and ultimately for peace. Their efforts are etched as one of the most proud moments in Canadian history.

When the First World War ended, that war to end all wars, the world looked at the devastation that had been wrought and etched the solemn vow of "never again" on cenotaphs across the world. But a firestorm of hatred and greed rose again in Europe and in the Far East, and humanity was compelled to stand and fight again. It is the duty of all of us who live today to ensure that the world will not descend into the chaos and destruction of global conflict. If we could fight half as hard as those who liberated Holland but for peace, equality, and compassion for others, then we might do these veterans proud.

We honour the men and women who stepped forward to liberate Europe from those dark years of World War II. We celebrate their victories, mourn their losses, and express above all our thanks.

The Speaker: Thank you, sir.

May I now call on the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, honoured guests, and visitors. It is a humbling honour to be present and to pay tribute to such a heroic group of individuals. With my heart full of gratitude to each of those who sacrificed so much and to those who have sacrificed their lives, we truly owe our remembrance of them. May we make sure that we always do remember them and those who did give their lives for our freedom and that we may guard it with all our heart, might, mind, and body that we might pass it on to future generations. They gave their lives for us, and may we guard it and always remember them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: To all of our honourable guests today, our veterans, it's customary in this Assembly when we want to give recognition for the members to remain at their desks and to pound those desks. I will now invite my colleagues to do it one more time. [standing ovation]

I'd invite my colleagues in the Assembly to remain standing, and all of you, ladies and gentlemen, if we would all rise, now I'm going to invite a young lady who is one of our tour guides, Colleen Vogel, to lead us all together in the singing of our national anthem. Please join in in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

To our honoured guests, we thank you very, very much for participating with us today.

We are now going to begin our daily Routine, which will go until 5:30 this afternoon. That may be more punishment than any of you would want to endure, but please feel free to stay as long as you wish to see the fruits of your efforts some 60 years ago now translated into democracy in this Assembly.

Thank you very much.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you two very special guests in the members' gallery. Sam Farberman is a grade 3 student from Onoway. He is 8 years old, and he's a tremendous worker and a great student. His father, Frank Farberman, is a long-time, very close friend of mine who owns and operates Direct Work Wear, a business in my constituency. They are proud members of a great team. I would ask now if they would please rise in the members' gallery and receive the warm applause from all the members here. They're just behind the line up there. Welcome.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in addition to the honoured guests that we have here today we do have groups of students from Jean Vanier elementary school, Glenwood school, the Alberta College and Technical Institute Students' Executive Council, Bow Valley College, and representatives from the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. I'd ask them all to rise so that the hon. members can recognize them all.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm extremely honoured to rise today and introduce to you and through you three guests seated in the public gallery: Claudia Villeneuve, her son, Nicholas Villeneuve, and their friend Denise Iskiw.

The two ladies represent two great pregnancy and childbirth support organizations based in our capital city. The first one is the Edmonton VBAC, or Vaginal Birth after Caesarean Support Association, a chapter of the International Cesarean Awareness Network. This organization supports mothers who wish to avoid a Caesarean, mothers who are recovering from a Caesarean, and mothers who wish to now give vaginal birth after their initial Caesarean delivery or deliveries. The second organization is ASAC, the Association for Safe Alternatives in Childbirth. They support informed consent during birth: home birth, water birth, midwifery care, doula care, and breastfeeding. They're both volunteer-run organizations. They work very hard to increase awareness and to offer real choice for expectant mothers.

I want to thank them for helping organize the rally outside by the Legislature steps today, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to stand today and to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a very special lady in my life: my mother, Marlys Hinman. She has been a pillar of strength and determination for me throughout my life. She has taught me to always believe you can achieve your dreams, and the only way you fail is to give up. Her Canada centennial project, she always claimed, was MS, when she was diagnosed with it. There is nothing that would make her happier today than to be able to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly, but I'll ask her just to wave from her wheelchair in the gallery.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly three distinguished women who are part of the integration of midwifery services evaluation project. They are Susan Beischel, an assistant professor at Mount Royal College in Calgary; Beverley O'Brien, who is currently a professor of nursing at the University of Alberta; and Susan Sommerfeldt, who is a member of the sessional faculty at the University of Alberta. Their report provides extensive evidence for why midwifery services should be funded in this province. I believe my guests are seated in the public gallery. I would now ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly four members of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees political action committee: Ron Whan, AUPE vice-president; Bonnie Nahornick, committee member from Calgary; Don Westman, city councillor from Fort Saskatchewan; and Brad Smith, who's a member from Edmonton. Could they please all rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to acknowledge four members of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees.

The Speaker: I've already introduced them, hon. member. Sorry. I did a global introduction and included them all.

Proceed.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. With us today, hon. Speaker, are Carol Carbol of Edmonton, Jason Heistad, who is from Olds College and also an Innisfail town councillor; Cherelyn Stefaniszyn, who comes from Blackfalds and is also a town councillor; and David Climenhaga, who is the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees communications director, and he hails from St. Albert.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Securities Commission

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today, right now, this government is sitting idly by as the Auditor General and the authority of this Legislature are being bullied by the Alberta Securities Commission. My first question is to the Acting Premier. Can this minister explain what actions the government will be taking to support the Auditor General's legislative authority to investigate fully the enforcement complaints threatening the confidence of Alberta's capital markets?

The Speaker: The hon. Acting Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General is an officer of the Legislature and operates under the legislative authority granted to him by the Legislature. The Securities Commission is granted authority under its act under the Legislature. The two have differences of viewpoint about the interrelationship between their two acts and their authorities and have applied to the courts to have that difference of viewpoint resolved. That's where people go when they have differences of viewpoint. That's where people go when they need interpretations of law.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Again to the Acting Premier: given that the longer the delay in getting to the roots of the ASC allegations the more the confidence in the Alberta market suffers, what steps are being taken by this government to ensure that the process is not delayed by long court procedures and petty bickering with ASC commissioners?

The Speaker: The hon. Acting Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We anticipate that an interim chairman of the commission will be appointed as early as this afternoon or perhaps tomorrow morning. That interim chair will be fair, will be independent, will be someone who is new to the commission but strong, and will work out with the commissioners and the Auditor General the terms of audit if it's at all possible to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Again to the Acting Premier: given that the Finance minister seems to have no interest in getting to the bottom of this investigation, will this minister please inform us as to which minister we should be asking to take the lead on this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. Acting Premier.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance has been firm and strong on this issue from the very day that it's been brought up in this House. She's been keen to get to the bottom of the issue. She's asked the Auditor General to expedite the audit, and we're going to do everything possible to support the process, including the appointment of an interim chair of the commission to deal with the issues quickly and thoroughly.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has a lot to say about bullying in schools. Unfortunately, it has absolutely nothing to say about the bullying being done by the Alberta Securities Commission. First, they're accused of bullying their employees, and now they are bullying the Auditor General all the way to court. My questions are again to the Acting Premier. Given that the part-time commissioners and the chairman of the Alberta Securities Commission are government appointed, why is the government allowing these individuals to bully them by taking an officer of the Legislature to court?

Mr. Hancock: A strange question coming from the very member who questioned the credibility of the officer of the Legislature only two weeks ago and failed to apologize for that, as he should have.

Mr. Speaker, there are two independent groups involved here. The Auditor General, who operates under the authority granted by the Legislature as an officer of the Legislature, and the Securities Commission, which operates under an act under authority granted by the Legislature.

There are issues with respect to the control of information and documentation. Those issues have to be resolved. It's appropriate to have those issues resolved. It would have been better if they were resolved by negotiation between the parties and understanding between the parties, but it's also appropriate, where there are disputes, where there are questions that need to be resolved, to go to the courts, another independent party, to determine what the right procedure is. That's not bullying. That's a process, and it's a process which can happen expeditiously and appropriately.

Dr. Taft: Again to the Acting Premier: given the bullying by the Alberta Securities Commission of the Auditor General, will this Conservative government now admit that the Mack report, which has outlined concerns of enforcement problems, may well in fact be true?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General is engaged to do an audit and do an audit under the appropriate circumstances. Those circumstances, the scope of the audit, will be refined, and if there are concerns about how that's refined, the courts will assist with refining the scope of the audit under the law, determining the appropriate processes, and the new interim chair of the commission will ensure that an independent thorough review is done of what has happened there. It's well in hand, it's proceeding, and it will happen in the interests of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. To the same minister: given that the executive director of the ASC oversees enforcement cases at the commission and has the authority to see which enforcement cases are pursued, why does this same person have the power to decide if the Auditor General can investigate enforcement cases?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the issues that are before the court are exactly that: what the authority of the Auditor General is with respect to the files and information, confidentiality, and other issues. It's appropriately before the court where there are issues of the determination of law, determination of scope of authority, and determination of scope of the audit.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Municipal Grants to Crowsnest Pass

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The municipality of Crowsnest Pass is being shortchanged by this government. This government made a commitment specifically to this region: if they amalgamated, any funding, whether that is for policing or infrastructure, would be delivered in the most cost-advantageous way to the municipality. Now this government is threatening to withhold funding unless a new agreement is signed. My first question is to the Solicitor General. Given that the minister stated in his letter to the mayor of Crowsnest Pass that no policing grant funding will be provided until a grant agreement has been signed, can the minister explain why he is taking this intimidating tactic instead of working with officials from Crowsnest Pass to honour a previous agreement?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned yesterday to the hon. member, the Crowsnest Pass regulation deals only with the calculation of grants and is not applicable to the Police Act, which requires the province to pay for policing costs for certain municipalities. The letter that Crowsnest Pass got is exactly the same letter that the town of Ponoka, the town of Rocky Mountain House, the town of Peace River got. The exact same letter. The amounts are different in the fact that the municipal policing grants are based on a $200,000 grant and $8 per capita above 5,000 up to their population. This is an opportunity for the town of Crowsnest Pass to look at the responsibility they have regarding providing policing to their community because of the fact that their population is over 5,000.

Dr. B. Miller: To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: with respect to infrastructure grants, will the minister inform us if he will honour the agreement in place to provide infrastructure grants based upon the most cost-advantageous way to the region, or will he follow the Solicitor General's tactic and threaten to withhold funding unless a new agreement is signed?

Dr. Oberg: Yes.

Dr. B. Miller: Okay. I'll try somebody else. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: given what has happened with the Solicitor General, will the minister inform the people of Crowsnest Pass and this House if the tactic of forcing a municipality to sign new grant agreements that are absolutely not in the best interest of the people is the preferred method of negotiation with municipalities by this government?

The Speaker: Well, in about an hour from now we may get to the estimates of the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Very briefly now.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I'll try and be brief. Without reiterating what the Solicitor General has already said, I want to explain to the member that the Municipal Government Act and the regulations refer to grants that are provided to municipalities and do not refer to the situation with respect to policing, which is a partnership between the Solicitor General and municipalities. So there are two separate identities.

Where the confusion is coming in is that policing used to be part of unconditional grants that were provided to municipalities that may or may not have been used for policing. A couple of years ago some of the funds were transferred from Municipal Affairs to the Solicitor General, which were then topped up by the Solicitor General to provide conditional grants in the form of offsetting costs for policing, and that's the difference, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker.

Electricity Exports

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, this government is quietly moving ahead with power exports to the American market even though it appears to have no plan to protect residential, farm, and small business consumers back here at home. Electricity exports threaten to deplete our supply of natural gas, contribute to more coal-generated plants, and could have serious implications under the North American free trade agreement for our own energy reserves. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that there are so many outstanding questions on electricity exports, why is the project going forward without public consultation, which the Alberta Advisory Council on Electricity recommended to do a year and a half ago?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to first state that the project at this stage is nowhere near the stage of going forward. There are lots of discussions about that. It's a proposal by a company. They've got a lot of work to do before it ever gets to the stage of coming forward for regulatory approvals. Those are just the what-ifs. The people continue to plan and assess as to projects that truly could benefit consumers here in Alberta also. I do want to state, though, that the export policy does say and clearly has been that Albertans won't pay for export lines in that capacity, so they won't be harmed in any way. It truly would just add another opportunity, potentially, to import power as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. To the same minister: given that Canada is bound by NAFTA to guarantee the Americans an ongoing supply of energy regardless of the state of our own surplus or reserves, how will the minister guarantee that Alberta will have enough surplus to keep prices at home down first and to make sure that we meet our own needs first?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, those assertions about NAFTA are completely wrong. We're under no obligation. We're under no obligation to export when you don't have the capacity to export. Those are things that, if you are offering and want to trade goods, would be offered on the same basis that we would to Albertans. But, clearly, all jurisdictions, all countries see to the needs of their own citizens, and in this case Albertans would also be protected.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. To the same minister: will the minister, then, commit to Albertans here and now that we will have a stable and affordable supply of power for our own needs and that he will not sell it all away to the Americans, like they did with the gas?

Mr. Melchin: Thanks for outlining our energy policy, our electricity policy. That's exactly what we are doing. In that sense we are very fortunate, and I'm glad that he raised how well consumers are actually benefiting from the deregulation. We actually have prices today for our consumers that are below what you would have on a regulated model in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

2:20 Postsecondary Education Federal Funding

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a political move against a potential defeat, the minority federal Liberal government in Ottawa made a deal with the NDP to increase the spending of our tax dollars in different areas. For postsecondary education their political promise is to increase federal spending of our tax dollars by $1.5 billion, but there are conflicting reports about where the money will go and whether there are strings attached to it. My question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. Can the hon. minister tell the House how much of this federal taxpayers' money for postsecondary education is expected to trickle back to Alberta?

Speaker's Ruling Questions outside Ministerial Responsibility

The Speaker: Well, hon. member, to my knowledge and my understanding these are proposals before the Canadian House of Commons that have not been approved or passed yet. I have no idea how an hon. minister in Alberta could possibly speculate about something that hasn't happened yet. But if the minister wants to take a shot.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reports that we have indicate that the proposal encompasses about $1.5 billion. As you quite accurately indicate, we have no idea whether it'll be passed or whether the federal government will be defeated before it even gets to that, so we can't plan in any way, shape, or form to spend any of that money. We don't know what strings might be attached, but if we were to get the portion that we would normally be allocated of that sort of thing, we'd get about $150 million.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this money could be back in Alberta, could the minister tell us if Alberta needs to commit to using it to reduce the tuition for our students?

The Speaker: Well, once again, with due respect, the question period is not to deal with questions about speculation.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, what I can advise the House is that there have been some discussions between officials to try and anticipate how this might trickle forward because it's necessary to be prepared. While we wouldn't want to speculate on whether or not the budget is passed, we do have to be prepared in the event that the resources come forward. There are reports that it will be tied to tuition. However, there are also conflicting ideas as to how the federal government might implement it, through the tax system or otherwise.

Mr. Cao: My question to the same minister: regarding the promise to pay for the tuition increase in Alberta this coming September, could the minister commit to using this money to help in that?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it should be very clear in this House that we have budgeted – in fact, Committee of Supply has voted on it – $43 million to pay for the promise that we made to pay the increased cost in tuition at public institutions for students in the province of Alberta. Any federal monies would be used for other purposes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Electricity Consultant

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's talk about this government's own deals on electricity deregulation. We all know that electricity deregulation has been a rip-off and has cost Alberta consumers billions of dollars. What many Alberta consumers don't know is that the man now responsible for seeing through this policy nightmare is being paid over a million taxpayer dollars for only three years' work. This man, Mr. Kellan Fluckiger, is a former energy adviser to the defeated Governor of California, Gray Davis. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that the Ministry of Energy has over 1,400 public service employees, why is this government giving away at least $1.1 million to a private consultant, Mr. Kellan Fluckiger, whose only job is to further entrench the $8 billion electricity deregulation disaster?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, it is very true that we do employ the individual that he said under a contract basis, and the terms are approximately correct as to what he said. We do make sure that we want to have the best expertise that we can in an industry that requires such expertise. He has been brought under a three-year contract. We are very fortunate. There are very few people with the expertise in the kinds of things that we're dealing with, in the very integrated deregulation of the market, and he has offered tremendous value for this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Minister of Energy again. It's certain that there are no PC members with expertise in electricity deregulation, or consumers wouldn't be faced with these enormous bills. How many other employees of Alberta Energy are private consultants, which cost taxpayers more than three times as much as a well-paid public service employee?

The Speaker: I figure there are a couple of questions there. Take your choice.

Mr. Melchin: Take my choice? Well, maybe I'll emphasize the great things that have happened from deregulation that have saved Albertans millions if not potentially what could add up into billions of dollars all the time. We now get power, as a result, from a tremendous amount of new supply that's been brought on, many of them green related, very clean coal technology. Some of the best technologies have come forward, that have opened up the field to bring on generation. It's also opened up that Albertans are getting today prices below the replacement cost, really, of that power that's being brought on. As a result of the good things of competition, Albertans benefit.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Energy: why does the government of Alberta have a contractor represent the province's interests at national and international meetings on electricity deregulation? Why not have a member of the province's fine civil service do that? Why hire out when you have good help at home?

Mr. Melchin: The individual referenced, again, is under contract to actually work with the government on government policy. He does represent the government in implementing those policies that are determined by this body right here in the Chamber.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Graduated Drivers' Licences

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently I received an inquiry from a constituent regarding the implementation and success of the graduated licensing system. The graduated licensing system was created to help new drivers develop their driving skills over a period of time while they are under regulations that endeavour to protect them. This constituent felt that there is very little enforcement of the licence rules for new drivers and that some new drivers, hearing and seeing little about enforcement of the rules, are not motivated to follow them. My question is to the Solicitor General. Are there random checks to ensure that graduated licensing is being observed by new drivers, especially in rural areas?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The graduated driver's licence came into this Assembly in the year 2001. In fact, I brought that legislation through, the graduated driver's licence program. The idea behind the legislation was, in fact, to help cut down on traffic collisions and deaths among Albertans but mainly among younger Albertans because of the issues related to the driver training.

Mr. Speaker, the enforcement programs that go on within the law enforcement community throughout Alberta are there. They don't go specifically out after individuals regarding their drivers' licences, but in any normal procedure in stopping a vehicle regarding an infraction, they do check those drivers' licences. Again, the provisions are within the act to in fact penalize them if they don't respond to the proper legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister: will the minister consider implementing random roadside checks such as checkstop?

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Speaker, roadside checkstops are part of the law enforcement community's STEP program, the selective traffic enforcement program, which they change on a monthly basis throughout the province. That could be one of the areas that our law enforcement agencies look at in the future.

As well, with any checkstop program, whether it's for drunken driving, whether it's for equipment violations, whether it's for overloads on trucks, or any other issues . . .

An Hon. Member: Purple gas.

Mr. Cernaiko: . . . purple gas, as my colleague mentioned, obviously a driver's licence is going to be one of the pieces of identification that's going to be required at that check. The police officer will check at the time to determine whether the individual does have a proper driver's licence.

Mrs. Jablonski: My final question is to the Minister of Transportation and Infrastructure. What are the penalties for a new driver that is found to be driving outside the designated time frames, and how are these penalties enforced?

The Speaker: Well, hon. member, now is about the seventh time I've said that the question period is not the time for interpretation of statutes. Respond to the latter part of the question.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, it's extremely important to note that the fine is actually $100 with two demerits. The key to this, though, that people have to remember is that there's a diminished threshold for demerits with graduated drivers' licences. If you receive eight demerits, your licence is actually gone, so that has severe repercussions when it comes to insurance as well as future licences down the road. We attempt to monitor this as closely as we can, and I believe that the Solicitor General has answered very explicitly the things that are being done. It's an excellent program, Mr. Speaker, and working very well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

2:30 Health Care Privatization

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the first ministers' meeting this past fall Premiers agreed upon an action plan for public health care that included as one of the guiding principles access to medically necessary health services based on need, not ability to pay. Along with $41 billion in provincial health funding the federal health minister extended an invitation to this government to discuss contentious issues around the Canada Health Act but has been rebuffed. Albertans are more than tired of this self-serving and dysfunctional relationship between provincial and federal governments. To the Acting Premier: given that the violation of the Canada Health Act may have serious repercussions for Albertans, why did the government refuse a meeting with the federal Health minister to discuss the consequences of privatization?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I would take under advisement the question for the minister of health as to what circumstances took place with respect to such a meeting, but I guess it's fair to also ask why the federal minister wouldn't have attended to listen to the international experts at the symposium which was recently held to find out what the best practices around the world might be.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Acting Premier:

how do private MRI clinics meet the equal access criterion of the Canada Health Act?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what kind of interpretation I'm being asked for there, but it's very evident that in this province we have expanded the number of MRIs available through the public system to the point where it's the highest number of scans that happen across this country on a per capita basis and that public access to MRIs is better in this province than anywhere probably in North America, but certainly in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the federal transfer payments account for about 16 per cent of Alberta's health revenue, is this government willing to risk $5 billion in federal transfers in order to promote the third way?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, one thing that should be very clear is that we need to have a thorough, unemotional discussion based on facts about the best practices around the world. That's what the minister of health has been conducting in an international symposium this past week, bringing in experts, bringing in people to talk knowledgeably about health care delivery so that Albertans can have access to the best practices in the world delivered in the best way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Truck Driver Certification

Mr. McFarland: Thank you. On behalf of all the constituents in the Little Bow riding I extend a simple and sincere thank you and appreciation to all our Canadian veterans and their families on this special day and to you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing this special ceremony to take place in this Assembly.

My question today is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. The government has proposed a new college-based truck drivers' certification program for Alberta truck drivers. My question to you, Minister, is this: does this program apply to current class 1 licence holders, or is it specifically for new drivers?

Dr. Oberg: Actually, Mr. Speaker, it's for neither. First of all, if you have a class 1 licence, you certainly are under no obligation at all to take this particular course. Secondly, you still can go out and take a class 1 course if you like.

What we're proposing in this potential course that could be offered in a pilot project at Red Deer College is a way to get enhanced training. It could be things like bills of lading. It could be how to secure your loads. It will be all of the above. What we hope to do is to be able to put out a truck driver that is a true professional that will very easily and very quickly become employed by the trucking industry.

There is one other detail that we're looking at. There's certainly an element of possibility, I guess is the best way I could describe it, and that is that we would like to see a decrease in insurance rates for those kids from 19 to 25. As you know, Mr. Speaker, for a 19 to 25 year old it is almost impossible for them to become a commercial driver due to the high insurance rates. We're presently looking at working with IBC, the Insurance Bureau of Canada, to ensure that these rates come down for these kids.

The short answer to the question is: if you have a class 1, you can continue on and be a commercial driver; you do not need this course to become a commercial driver.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the large carriers probably support this move. I am wondering, through the minister, if this has an adverse effect on the cost for independent and smaller trucking operations in Alberta?

Dr. Oberg: No, it doesn't, Mr. Speaker. Again, what we're hoping to put out is a qualified driver, and that qualified driver hopefully will get a preferential treatment from the employers and, indeed, will actually make the employers money because he will be a more skilled driver when it comes to time of employment. So, again, the answer is no. This is purely a voluntary program and hopefully will lead to a better level of education and expertise in Alberta's commercial drivers.

Mr. McFarland: Last question, Mr. Speaker. If this came about because of the problems associated with Delta Driving School, why wouldn't you have just pulled their licensing authority rather than perhaps imposing a program on all drivers?

Dr. Oberg: Again, Mr. Speaker, we're not imposing this on all drivers. The key thing to note in this is that certainly the Delta Driving School incident was a very unfortunate incident, and we have taken considerable action on that.

This proposal has actually been under way since 2001, so it's been in the works for four years. It's been championed by the driving industry, by the employers, and it's something that we're moving forward on a pilot basis. I hope, and I think there's good evidence to show that it will put out a better class of drivers. It'll put out a class of drivers that the employers are looking for when it comes to driving these huge trucks, that are now going down the road at in excess of a hundred kilometres per hour. Very important program, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Calgary Hospitals

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we have discussed here in question period before, the city of Calgary faces a shortage of acute-care hospital beds that even under the best-case scenario will not be eliminated until 2010. Building the new southeast hospital alone will not solve the bed shortage. Calgary also needs significant expansions or modernizations at its existing hospitals and a new, larger, urgent-care centre in the city core. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: beyond the government's commitment to fully fund construction of the new southeast hospital, what is the minister doing to address the Calgary health region's other capital needs this year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Included in this last budget, as the hon. member was alluding to, there's very close to $500 million for a new hospital in southeast Calgary. This is a huge amount of money. That adds on top of approximately $350 million for the new children's hospital, which is about to open. Those two particular institutions are going to vastly increase the number of beds in hospitals.

The hon. member is right. There still is a potential bed shortage. I think that the health authority has to come up with different ways to look at it. We're working extremely closely with the health authority at this point in time. Does that mean that they're automatically going to get another $500 million tomorrow because they've asked for it? The answer is no.

Mr. Taylor: To the same minister: could the minister offer a little further clarity, please, on whether there is additional funding to allow the expansion of the Rockyview and Lougheed hospitals and redevelopment of part of the Foothills to go forward to completion, or is this last year's dollars to do the preliminary work?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, this is last year's dollars that they're looking at doing the preliminary work with. They're scouting out exactly what is needed. There has been no official commitment on the $500 million project that has been proposed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One more question for the minister. Is there any money in the budget this year for the Sheldon M. Chumir health centre in Calgary's central core?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the budget was tabled roughly two and a half or three weeks ago, and all of the projects that were in the budget are going to be funded. Off the top of my head, through to the hon. member, I do believe that there was, but I certainly will take a look closely at my budget and get back to you with exactly whether or not the Sheldon Chumir was funded with this particular budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

National Child Care Initiative

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Canadians are about to get a meaningful commitment to high-quality early child care and development services after 13 years of broken federal Liberal promises. It obviously takes NDP MPs to keep the Liberals honest. Provincial and federal governments have already agreed that these services will be based on four principles of quality, universality, accessibility, and child development, known as QUAD. Albertan families, however, are waiting with concern to see whether this government is willing to sign an agreement with the federal government so that Alberta's children can enjoy these high-quality services. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Given that Saskatchewan and Manitoba have already signed child care deals that put the QUAD principles of quality, universality, accessibility, and child development at the centre of their child care policies, why hasn't Alberta made a similar commitment to families here in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have, actually. We do have a verbal agreement with Minister Dryden that we reached several weeks ago. I'd like to reiterate that it's a verbal agreement. I have written Minister Dryden on two separate occasions, asking him for a written confirmation on our verbal agreement. He still has not replied. In fact, the last letter I got from one of his bureaucrats really, actually, didn't give us an answer at all. I had a good conversation again with Mr. Dryden last Thursday, I believe, asking him one more time if he would please respond in writing to our verbal agreement, and we would be prepared to sign the bilateral agreement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister share with this House what conditions she has put on signing on to this agreement that are keeping the federal minister from replying to her letter? Albertans are wanting to know this.

Mrs. Forsyth: That's a good question because there have been no restrictions on the letter to Minister Dryden whatsoever. We had a verbal agreement. Mr. Dryden agreed with what Alberta wanted, and Albertans have clearly said that they want choice in how they raise their children.

I will tell the hon. member that when I brought up to Minister Dryden in the federal/provincial/territorial meeting in February that Albertans would like to see a child tax credit for stay-at-home parents, he said: absolutely not; it's not part of the discussion. All of the issues that we wanted addressed by the minister he agreed to a few weeks ago by verbal confirmation. We're just waiting for a written confirmation, and we'd be pleased, then, to take it to my cabinet to sign on to the bilateral agreement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplementary to the same minister: given that it's well within this province's fiscal capacity to both invest in nonprofit child care services with money coming from the national child care plan and provide more support for families who choose to have one caregiver stay at home, like tax incentives, eliminating health care premiums, and the like, will the minister stop dithering and make sure that we get the agreement as soon as possible?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's be very clear: this minister isn't dithering. The minister that is dithering is the federal minister. If it's so important for him to have a national child care program across this country, then maybe I can encourage the member of the opposition and members of the Liberal Party to pick up the phone, call the federal minister, and say: please, will you respond to the Minister of Children's Services in this province and commit to their written confirmation?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

United States Energy Legislation

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Energy recently returned from Washington, DC, after attending sessions where he spoke to two key organizations and met with key members of Congress and senior officials of the U.S. government. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. Given that the minister's trip took place during a time when there is renewed debate on the U.S. energy bill, can the minister please tell this Assembly: in what way can Alberta influence these discussions?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, our good friends and neighbours to the south, the United States, have been in discussions for some years, actually, on an energy bill that would really look at their energy security. Alberta figures prominently in that role, given that we are the largest source of both oil and gas to the United States. Some of the things that have been very important is that they have listened to Alberta and, I would say, other delegations as well. When the gas from the north was coming and those pipelines were proposed from Alaska, there was at one stage a proposal to put a floor price in. It would have been very punitive to Alberta to have had a different marketplace in Alaska, gas coming, which would tie into the Alberta hub, versus the rest of the gas that flows down to those same marketplaces. So those are things that have been very helpful to see from our own involvement, and that's part of why we'll need to continue to be there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Knight: Thank you. Again to the Minister of Energy: could the minister please tell the House how Alberta will benefit from these discussions?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, it's very important with our largest exports going to the United States, with our industries very much intertwined, many of the companies that are investing billions of dollars in the expansion of our projects here coming from the United States, that we do look towards how we ensure that the policies on both sides of the border help facilitate those things that would be also in the best interest of Alberta. Rather than just being hewers of wood – shipping raw bitumen south, for example – we want to see if we have the opportunity in the formation of that policy to do the upgrading here. We would also look at the refining capabilities of sending finished products to the United States versus just the synthetic crudes.

Another level that's showing great interest is in the oil shales in the United States, a very substantial size of resource in the western states. They're looking toward some of the technology and working with us on sharing technology that we use in the oil sands in Alberta and how that could also benefit them in their research in the south and how that could benefit us both in developing the oils.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

School Construction Estimates

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again for allowing me to introduce the guests today.

This government's funding program for new schools is as flawed as its space utilization formula, which forces the school boards to prematurely close inner-city schools before receiving funding for new suburban school construction. My first question to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation comes from urban school board trustees. Why is this ministry continuing to use 2001 construction costs when providing grants for 2005 school building projects?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The estimates on the 2001 costs are a constant that we use. When the tenders come in, we then pick up the extra costs on the tenders.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. To the same minister: when will this government address its multimillion renovation downloaded deficits forced on school boards throughout this province?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the interesting thing about that question is that our budget was just debated last week. Included in my budget this year are 109 school projects around the province, including 45 new schools. The interesting point about that is that the number of students in the schools in Alberta is actually on a decline. So we have built 45 new schools for fewer students than we had the year before.

Mr. Speaker, I think this government is doing a good job. Can we do better? Yeah, we can. There are some areas where we have seen growth in the school numbers, we have seen an expansion, and the schools are not there because they may be two or three miles away. We are looking at addressing the situation when it comes to the location of the schools, but we must remember that the number of students in Alberta is going down, and we're building 45 new schools, 109 new schools projects.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: given that the minister has publicly admitted that his new space utilization formula will do nothing to prevent further urban school closures, what hope can he provide for parents that they'll be able to keep their children's community schools open?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the thing about closing schools or keeping schools open is that it is a school board decision, and I believe that probably the biggest controversy has been around Edmonton at this particular time. The Edmonton public school board has made some decisions based on learning opportunities. They've looked at putting schools together. To keep schools open when there's a 10 or 15 or 20 per cent occupancy, pay the lights, pay the power, quite simply is a waste of taxpayers' dollars. I think the Edmonton public school board has been a good citizen when it comes to saving taxpayers' dollars.

Private Security Legislation Review

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Private Investigators and Security Guards Act currently involves the regulation of private investigators and security guards and has not been amended since 1965, when the legislation was initially developed. Most security guards were simply watchmen, and today they provide a wide variety of services under a broad range of levels in training and licensing. Today the Solicitor General announced a review of this legislation. My questions are to the Solicitor General. What do you hope to accomplish by initiating a review of the private investigators and security guards legislation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The objective of this review was to ensure that the legislation, which is more than 50 years old, is modernized and outlines clear standards for the public security industry. We need to ensure that the roles and responsibilities are clearly defined and that they're properly trained and held accountable for the work that they provide in the community. The existing legislation no longer meets the needs of the government or the public. With rapid growth in the private security industry, there's a greater need for co-ordination between our police services and, as well, the private security firms.

Private investigators and security guards outnumber the police in Alberta, and security guards and private investigators are paid by private interests to protect private interests. The review will include international as well as interprovincial research during the public consultation.

Mr. Johnston: Is the Solicitor General planning to address the inconsistencies in licensing in the private security industry?

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Speaker, the inconsistency in licensing is an important issue, and I thank my hon. colleague for bringing it up. The review will be comprehensive and include a number of areas such as parameters for licensing, minimum qualification and training standards, and legal authority duties and responsibilities for those individuals.

Mr. Johnston: My final question is again to the Solicitor General. You mentioned training. How will you address the inconsistency and lack of training standards in the industry?

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Speaker, under the current legislation there are no minimum provincial educational or training requirements for private investigators and security guards in Alberta. I want to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, who is going to be chairing the review and, obviously, will be looking at some of these major issues, training being one, which is key to providing the necessary skills and knowledge required by security practitioners, especially when they're interacting with the public. Training will also help security personnel maintain their own safety, and the proper training of personnel is an essential ingredient to improve the quality and professionalism of the security industry in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Sustainable Resource Management

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is blessed with remarkable natural diversity. Our public lands, a vast array of natural resources such as timber, water, and rangeland, are the home to many species and animals. These are places that deserve protection to ensure their sustainability for future generations. However, the actions of this government do place the natural heritage in jeopardy. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: given that in British Columbia there is widespread support from public, scientists, and from the government to declare a moratorium on the sport hunting of the grizzly bears, which have a population of around 7,000, why is this government still allowing sport hunting and ignoring the scientists and not calling for a moratorium?

Mr. Coumts: Well, Mr. Speaker, the whole basis of our policy is that of conservation, and when it comes to grizzly bear, part of the conservation is making sure that you know exactly how many grizzly bear there are out there. You put the science behind the monitoring. The science behind the monitoring is being done through our foothills model forest grizzly bear initiative. We put millions of dollars into making sure that the grizzly bear population is sustainable in this province, and we do that through DNA testing. We have the science behind us.

We took a number of initiatives to have a recovery team look at shortening the hunting season as well. We also restricted areas in the province where grizzly bear can be hunted, mainly from highway

3 down to the Montana border, over to the British Columbia border. We put a number of initiatives in place to make sure that the grizzly bear are protected in this province.

Mr. Bonko: To the same minister: given that pine beetles have infested some of our most pristine and protected areas, will this government finally commit more resources to controlling this pest or rely on the cut and burns and the possibility of divine intervention by the weather gods?

Mr. Coutts: I've answered this question many times in this House, Mr. Speaker, so I will be brief. Prior to the third quarter of last year we put a million dollars into pine beetle prevention in this province. We have also partnered with the British Columbia government to match dollar for dollar what they're putting into helping stop the pine beetle at the British Columbia-Alberta border. We have a strategy in place in this new budget for 2005-2006 to make sure that the kinds of resources that are needed to stop the pine beetle – and it's strange. I'm going to say it one more time for this hon. member. In getting rid of the pine beetle, you do have to identify the trees that the pine beetle is in, and that's done by aerial surveys. It's done by on-the-ground surveys. It's most important that when you have identified the pine beetle in the tree on the ground, you get rid of that tree and you burn it so that you protect the other trees, the healthy trees that are next to it. It is absolutely necessary to clear-cut and burn those trees.

The Speaker: That was the shortest one minute and 30 seconds I've ever heard.

Mr. Coutts: Well, it's important.

Mr. Bonko: To the same minister: given that the department has stated that it is working on strategies to deal with the demands on our forests from both forestry and the oil and gas sector, will the integrated land management strategy be based on conservation or economic maximization?

Mr. Coutts: Oh, no, Mr. Speaker. Quite the opposite. It is a balance between economic, social, and environmental concerns. Our department of Sustainable Resource Development has a long history of making sure that that balance is put in place on everything that we handle, right from forestry through to our fish and wildlife and through to land management, and we will continue to do that in the years to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Canadian Contribution to Victory in Europe

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At 8 o'clock on the morning of May 5, 1945, exactly 60 years ago today, enemy forces surrendered to the Canadian front in Europe. This Sunday, May 8, will mark the 60th anniversary of Victory in Europe, or VE, Day, the celebration of the end of the terrible conflict in Europe. It was a conflict which affected nearly every nation on earth and which brought about an unprecedented number of casualties.

War is truly an awful thing, but the conduct of war is sometimes both necessary and morally imperative, and World War II was certainly one of those times. It was a war that was fought by the Allies against an enemy which Churchill called "a monstrous tyranny, never surpassed in the dark, lamentable catalogue of human crime." Our nation answered the call of that just war from the outset, and we were there in the dark months and years when Britain and its Commonwealth stood virtually alone against an evil enemy. It was a time which Churchill would call our finest hour.

Between 1939 and 1945 more than a million Canadian men and women, or one adult in 12, would don a uniform, and 41 per cent of men aged 18 to 45 served in the Canadian armed forces. Included in the Canadian casualties were 55,000 wounded and maimed and over 45,000 who paid the ultimate price in the service of their country.

Today, 60 years on, the ranks of our Canadian heroes who waged this great war against tyranny and evil are thinning. But today and this Sunday may we pause on the anniversary of what was for many a time of happiness and gratitude but also of sober reflection to remember the deeds of our veterans and those who have gone on, to salute them and to give thanks for what they have done for Canada, for freedom, and for the cause of humanity.

We shall never forget.

Liberation of the Netherlands

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise in the House today to commemorate not only the end of fighting in Europe but also the end of foreign occupation and oppression for a nation. Today marks the 60th anniversary of the liberation of the Netherlands by Allied Forces. More than 7,600 Canadians died during the nine-month campaign waged to liberate the country. Canadian and other allied troops fought a difficult battle across the Netherlands, and the winter conditions made their task even more difficult.

However, it was not only the soldiers who experienced hardship during this winter. The winter of '44-45 was known as the Hunger Winter in western Holland. Food supplies in the cities had been exhausted, fuel supplies were virtually extinct, and transportation was practically nonexistent. Under these conditions thousands of men and women and children perished. My mom told me many stories of when she would sneak under the dark skies into the tulip gardens to gather bulbs to make tulip soup. She spent her complete teenage years under Nazi control.

On April 28, 1944, a truce was arranged, stopping fighting in western Holland. This allowed food supplies to be brought in for the starving population. Mr. Speaker, I have a sample today with me of those rations passed to my family from the Red Cross and the Canadian soldiers. The relief of the hardship experienced by those in west Netherlands came at a vital time, and the Canadian soldiers who were a part of the liberation were greeted with cheers of joy. Again, my mom told me of this day in Rotterdam and how the memory remains clear in her mind today. Not only did it mark the end of German occupation; it marked the day that members of my family were released from Nazi work camps in Germany.

The victory on May 5, 1945, served to cement the ties between Canada and the Netherlands which had been first formed in 1942, when Crown Princess Juliana sought refuge in Canada after being forced to flee both her homeland and Great Britain. These ties were further strengthened on January 19, 1943. On this day in an Ottawa hospital room decreed to be Dutch territory, Princess Juliana's third daughter, Princess Margriet, was born. This tiny infant was a bright light during a dark time, and Canadians claimed her as their own.

The strength and continuity of the ties between our two countries continues to this day and is best evidenced by the tulips which bloom in Ottawa each spring. These flowers are a bright and vibrant gift from the Dutch, which reminds us of the lives which were freely given and the friendship which was formed during this chapter in history.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, if I understand the exhibit correctly, this is a real tin box that was dropped via the air by Canadian air service people over Holland in 1945. The contents I do not believe are original, but the box is. If the hon. member wants to circulate it as a World War II memento, that would be wonderful.

Mr. VanderBurg: Yes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Strathcona Cadet Tattoo

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past Saturday evening it was my privilege to attend the third annual Strathcona Cadet Tattoo held in Sherwood Park. This year's theme was Bridging the Gap, with the focus on 2005 being the year of the veteran.

In keeping with the tradition of a military tattoo, the event included pipes and drums, military band, precision teams, a variety of dancing, and the finale, which combined the sights and sounds of it all. The unique blend of music, ceremony, and theatre showcased the talents of cadets from all across Alberta.

I would like to recognize the corps who attended and performed for the crowd. They included 238 RCSCC Campbelltown Sea Cadet Corps, 12 Squadron Royal Canadian Air Cadets, NLCC E.W. Cormack Navy League Corps, 2733 Army Cadets, 4 Wing Cold Lake Pipes and Drums, and the pipes, drums, reeds, and dancers of Vimy Ridge Academy.

In addition to recognizing these gifted young people, I would also wish to commend and bring special recognition to those individuals involved in organizing and contributing to this spectacular performance. They're Lieutenant Jason Finkbeiner, Mr. George Arndt, Mr. Michael Chute, Mr. Reid Morris, Mr. Dave Wright, Pipe Major Chris Yeo, Mr. Alistair Briggs, and Mr. Mike Luce.

Congratulations to all of the participants, who successfully bridged the gap. It was an excellent event and celebration of tradition. May the tradition long continue.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Midwifery Services

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise in recognition of the 15th annual International Day of the Midwife, held every May 5. In celebration of this special day this year the Association for Safe Alternatives in Childbirth, ASAC, collected invoices for midwifery care that Albertans have paid for from their own pockets since 1991. ASAC asked me and my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona if we could submit these to the attention of the minister of health. I quote: we are giving a large stack of invoices to the Alberta health care insurance plan for midwifery care that has been paid for out of pocket by Albertans since the Alberta government pledged its support of midwifery and funding in 1991. End of quote.

Similar invoicing in Manitoba helped get midwifery services funded in that province. This profession is relied upon by many families to bring their children into this world. If midwifery services are not publicly funded soon, then Alberta women may have one less option available to them when they deliver their babies.

A decade ago the Alberta Association of Midwives had 150 members, who were hoping that midwifery would become publicly funded. The profession lost some members when official registration of midwives began in 1998 and additional government fees were added to their costs. More midwives have been driven away by the continuing lack of coverage under Alberta health care while some other provinces publicly fund midwifery under their health care plans. Alberta must consider going that way, especially in light of a severe shortage of obstetrical doctors in this province.

The idea of having a day to honour midwives was born in 1987 at the International Confederation of Midwives conference in the Netherlands. The first International Midwives Day was celebrated on May 5, 1991, and now it's observed in more than 50 countries throughout the world. On this International Day of the Midwife many Alberta families hope that this government will support midwifery as the safe childbirth alternative it is.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Fly for a Cure Charity Fundraiser

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the hon. Member for Strathcona shared with this House his thoughts on May being Multiple Sclerosis Awareness Month. I would like to echo his statements as it gives me the opportunity to speak about a sport for which I have a passion and a unique and exciting fundraising initiative about to take place near Rosalind in the constituency of Battle River-Wainwright.

Beginning May 14 and going right through to May 22, hang gliding and paragliding enthusiasts from across western Canada will gather to participate in the second annual Fly for a Cure fundraiser, which will run in conjunction with the Western Canadian Hang Gliding Championships. Pilots collect sponsorship dollars for each mile they fly during the cross-country competitions, with proceeds going to the United Way campaign. Twenty-five per cent of the proceeds are then designated to an MS charity while a further 25 per cent are designated to breast cancer research. In its inaugural year last May this thoughtful combination of sport aviation and community caring raised over $14,500.

Mr. Speaker, my family has known a number of fine individuals brought down by the ravages of MS, and both my wife and mother-in-law are breast cancer survivors, while the United Way has long been my first choice when choosing a charity to donate to.

I would like to thank the organizers, Rob Clarkson and Ralph Herten, for their efforts, major sponsor PCL Construction Management for their involvement, and Vincene Muller for generously forwarding all donations in honour of the world-renowned hang gliding pilot, Chris Muller, to the Fly for a Cure fundraiser.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Midwifery Services

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is the International Day of the Midwife, and young mothers with their babies and baby carriages, their families, accompanied by their supporters and midwives, gathered on the steps of the Legislature to demand the full integration of midwifery services into Alberta's public health care system.

We know that doing so will save our health care system needed dollars. It's a cheaper and more popular choice for many women. It's a common-sense solution that addresses cost sustainability for public health care.

A report just released by Dr. Beverley O'Brien and her colleagues at the University of Alberta faculty of nursing shows that women who use the services of a midwife save the health care system as much as $1,100 or more per childbirth. According to the Association for Safe Alternatives in Childbirth, the total savings to the province if integration were done would be as much as $50 million.

But midwifery, Mr. Speaker, is so much more than dollars and cents. Midwife-attended births have been proven to yield better health outcomes for both mothers and babies. Better birth weights are one outcome. Also there are lower risks for postpartum depression, better education on nutrition and breast-feeding. All of these things are crucial for women's health, and it's time we had a health care system that recognized all of these benefits.

Given all of these positive health outcomes, the fees that women who exercise their choice to use midwifery services in Alberta are forced to pay are an outrage. They amount to a user fee for an important health service. Fees in excess of $2,000 create uneven access to midwifery services because only women who can afford these services receive them. Fees create uncertainty for service providers. Fees also marginalize the service, when it's clearly a way of doing things that should be brought to the centre of the public health care system.

Mr. Speaker, it's time that we integrated midwifery into the mainstream health care services. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have the pleasure of introducing to you and through you to all members of the House a group of 25 visitors. They are members of the Alberta College and Technical Institute Students' Executive Council. They are led by Elaine Ho, the newly elected executive director. All of these young guests are gathered in our city to hold an annual meeting. They are sitting in the public gallery, and I would now ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm thrilled to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Annemarie van Oploo and her two children. Annemarie is the political action co-ordinator for the Association for Safe Alternatives in Childbirth. ASAC is a midwifery consumer association that acts as a resource to parents and parents-to-be on birthing issues as well as lobbying for safe childbirth alternatives. Annemarie organized today's rally for the International Day of the Midwife. At this time I'd ask that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a petition signed by 285 Albertans who are eager to see potentially life-saving improvements to highways in northern Alberta, particularly highway 63. With today's tabling the total number of signatures on this petition so far is 3,766.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a petition from the good Alberta citizens from the fine communities of Spruce Grove, Pickardville, Onoway, the beautiful Stampede city of Calgary, and the city of Lethbridge, the home of the world-famous Japanese gardens.

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are 103 there.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to make the following motion under Standing Order 30:

Be it resolved that this Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the dangerous precedent set by the Alberta Securities Commission, an agent of the Crown, challenging the legitimate authority of the Auditor General, an officer of this Assembly charged to conduct an investigation vital to the public interest.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of Written Question 32.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday I'll move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In honour of the International Day of the Midwife, which is today, I would like to table a package of information prepared by the Association for Safe Alternatives in Childbirth. The document provides evidence that midwifery is a safe and cost-effective choice for women to make and makes an excellent argument for covering midwifery services in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this chance to also table five copies of a statement released today outlining the NDP opposition's support for midwifery services and the important choices that such services make available to women.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of a booklet produced by the Maternity Center Association entitled What Every Pregnant Woman Needs to Know About Cesarean Section, 2004. The Maternity Center Association is the oldest national U.S. organization advocating on behalf of mothers and babies. This booklet is available online at no cost at the web address www.maternitywise.org and is a good source of information on the pros and cons of both Cesarean sections and natural vaginal births.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the letter that I referred to during question period from the Solicitor General to the mayor of Crownsnest Pass stating that “no police grant funding will be provided . . . until a grant agreement has been signed.”

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings here today and the requisite five copies of each. One is a study from the Alberta Federation of Labour which comes from Alberta Workers’ Compensation Board statistics about the workplace fatalities in the last century, a total of 9,219 in Alberta.

The other is another quick fact sheet which outlines some of the facts regarding worker injury and the fact that deaths from workplace injuries really haven’t fallen in the last 15 years.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 7(5) I would ask the Government House Leader if he would please share with the House the projected government business for the upcoming week of May 9 to May 12.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

On Tuesday, May 10, in the afternoon under Committee of Supply the estimates for the Department of the Solicitor General, day 21 of 24. On Tuesday, May 10, at 8 p.m. under Committee of Supply Government Services; at 10 p.m. or as soon as we’re finished, under Committee of the Whole bills 36, 38, 15, 26, 35, 40, and 39; and as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, May 11, in the afternoon in Committee of Supply the estimates of the Department of Health and Wellness; at 8 p.m. in Committee of Supply the estimates of the Department of Community Development. At that time we would anticipate asking for unanimous consent of the House to revert to Introduction of Bills to introduce the appropriation supply act, main estimates, and thereafter deal in Committee of the Whole with such of the following bills as remain in committee: bills 36, 38, 15, 35, 26, 40, 39; and as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday, May 12, in the afternoon introduction of miscellaneous statutes for first reading; second reading of bills Pr. 1, Pr. 2, Pr. 3; Committee of the Whole on Pr. 1, Pr. 2, Pr. 3; and third reading of bills 8, 10, 17, 26, 29, 31, 34; and as per the Order Paper.

head: 3:20 Request for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a Standing Order 30 application. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Securities Commission

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to make the following motion:

Be it resolved that this Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the dangerous precedent set by the Alberta Securities Commission, an agent of the Crown, challenging the legitimate authority of the Auditor General, an officer of this Assembly charged to conduct an investigation vital to the public interest.

I have several points I’d like to make. I understand they need to address issues of urgency at this point, and I will do my best to do that.

The case for setting aside today’s ordinary business of the day contains some of the same elements as the Standing Order 30 we’ve called before, but as you indicated, Mr. Speaker, at that time, this is a fluid situation that bears watching and may warrant reconsideration. There have been a number of dramatic events since that last Standing Order 30, events that make a debate of this Assembly more imperative and urgent than ever.

The Alberta Securities Commission has not only continued its active resistance to an unfettered investigation of it by the Auditor General but has ended the supposed negotiations over something that should not in fact be negotiable and has forced the Auditor General, an officer of this Assembly, to go to court to have the office and authority of the Auditor General respected. We need immediate information from this government on how they are dealing with not only this issue but also with the potential threat to other ongoing or future investigations by the Auditor General.

This issue continues to garner the attention of the nation, as evidenced by recent and increasing media coverage. I take full note of the comment by the Speaker last week, but I’m not requiring any minister to comment on the truth or falsity of the reports. I’m referencing the coverage of the media to suggest that many of the leading newspapers of this country, read avidly by the business and investment communities, continue to cover the controversy at the Alberta Securities Commission. The continuing coverage about both lingering and fresh issues raises serious questions about whether this issue really is being dealt with adequately.

It is urgent – it is urgent – that we restore the confidence of the public in the Alberta Securities Commission. There is no other opportunity to debate this. The debate on the estimates for the Ministry of Finance has concluded. The debate on the estimates for Executive Council has also concluded. There are no bills on the Order Paper that would provide an opportunity to raise these issues. Written questions and motions for returns are not adequate nor are they timely for this. Given the legislative schedules at this time, there is simply no other mechanism or procedure to enable discussion. There are no other reasonable opportunities to have the necessary debate, and I believe that this, therefore, satisfies the requirements of Beauchesne 387 as well as Beauchesne 392.

Further, question period itself is not an appropriate forum to debate complex issues such as this. The hon. Finance minister previously claimed that the issue had been discussed in question period and therefore, in her view, needed no further discussion. But question period does not provide for the kind of substantive discussion we need on this complex issue; 45-second exchanges simply don't do it.

The Minister of Finance and the hon. Government House Leader claim that there is no problem on the regulatory side and that there is no evidence of a loss of investor confidence. Here we have something particularly, dramatically new. Yet many of the very staff responsible for investor confidence have publicly stated that they cannot do their jobs effectively, that this, quote: will negatively impact the future of the organization and the health of the Alberta capital markets. End quote.

Furthermore, just today – just today – the outgoing chair of the commission said the following, quote: the continual onslaught of anonymous complaints is really beginning to take its toll. End quote. He went on to describe the tarnishing of the reputation of the Vancouver Stock Exchange some years ago by an article in the U.S. business journal Forbes. Then he noted, and I quote: the same sort of thing could happen here; I'm becoming very concerned – this is the chairman of the Securities Commission today – that the attacks on the integrity of the Alberta Securities Commission will weaken investor confidence in the Alberta capital market and Alberta-based issuers. This in turn, he said, could have very serious consequences for the Alberta economy. End quote. The Alberta Securities Commission's chairman is substantiating the fact that a genuine crisis in investor confidence exists.

It remains true that every day that passes with questions, uncertainty, and controversy shakes the public's confidence further and makes a speedy, satisfactory resolution more difficult. I have already made points, and I think they all satisfy the requirement of Beauchesne 389; namely, that the public interest will suffer if the issue is not given immediate attention.

I would remind the House, all members of this Assembly, that the Auditor General, whose authority is being challenged by the commissioners, is an officer of this Assembly and reports to us. I would also remind the Assembly that where crises continue or fester because of alleged conflicts in legislation passed by this House, we have a special obligation to pay particular and immediate attention.

Mr. Speaker, the motion requesting this debate also satisfies the requirements of Montpetit 587, 588 with respect to the matter falling within the administrative competence of the government and within the scope of ministerial action. The Lieutenant Governor in Council appoints the commission, the chairman, and the part-time commissioners, and the statutes in dispute next Wednesday are under the auspices of the Minister of Finance. I believe it also meets all of the other conditions of these sections, both proscriptive and prescriptive.

The Minister of Finance indicated on April 27 that this Assembly should be assured by the fact that the office of the Auditor General will begin its audit "almost immediately." The hon. Government House Leader claimed that the Auditor General's report was ongoing. Those assurances can no longer be made. This Assembly needs additional clarification, additional information immediately.

The so-called negotiations have broken down, and the Alberta Securities Commission has stepped up its stonewalling by going to court. This should undermine any faith the government or this Assembly has in the ability or willingness of the commission, an agent of the Crown, or its employee, the executive director of the commission, to get to the bottom of this. The minister has in the past assured this House of that, but we can no longer have such faith.

The Auditor General, an officer of this Assembly and an official of high official station, is being stonewalled by an agent of the Crown and its employee. This is an affront to the authority of this Assembly. This kind of affront to an officer of this Assembly requires immediate discussion, immediate attention. We cannot afford to have it appear – and I think this is very important – that other organizations which are currently or which might in the future be subject to audits or investigations by the Auditor General think that they also can stonewall the Auditor General. We cannot allow the crisis of confidence to spread from an agent of the Crown, the Alberta Securities Commission, to an officer of this Assembly.

The commission has requested a court ruling on May 10. We have today and only one additional sitting day before then. The Auditor General is an officer of this Assembly. It is entirely appropriate and indeed, I argue, pressing that this Assembly discuss this matter prior to the Auditor General's office making his representations to the judge. Clearly, if this Assembly is to have any substantial opportunity to discuss this issue before this hearing, we must do so now. It is my submission that this clearly meets the standards for urgency under Beauchesne 390.

The Government House Leader also indicated during debate on April 27 that "there will be a new chair appointed to the Securities Commission imminently." This provides additional reasons to have an immediate debate in this Assembly. The commissioner's term, in fact, ends the day after tomorrow, May 7. The hon. Minister of Finance is already receiving recommendations from the Securities Commission board to appoint an existing member, one who is defending the current obstruction, as acting chair. Today is the last day before the vacancy occurs for this Assembly to discuss this matter.

Given the toxic work environment as well as the allegations of enforcement irregularities and the concerns raised today by the outgoing chair about investor confidence, it's absolutely vital that the next step is taken very carefully and with the full knowledge and input of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, in summary, I believe this motion satisfies all of the requirements of the Standing Orders of this Assembly. I also submit that it meets all of the criteria set out in the other authorities of this House. I would note in closing that the ability of this Assembly to promote and defend the public interest by means of a free, open, substantive debate on pressing matters should be our guiding principle.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Astounding. Two weeks ago the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition was challenging the credibility of the Auditor General, and now he's bringing a Standing Order 30 motion to so-called assist him. He has yet to apologize for the affront to the integrity of the Auditor General, and I would hope that before the end of the day today he would have the good grace to get up and do that. This notice of motion ought not even to go forward pursuant to Standing Order 23(g), which indicates that we should not refer to "any matter pending in a court or before a judge for judicial determination," and it goes on to outline the circumstances.

The fact of the matter is that there are two independent organizations: the Auditor General, an officer of this Legislative Assembly, and the Securities Commission, which operates under the authority of this Legislative Assembly through an act that's been passed. There is a question between the two of them as to the respective authorities under each of their acts. Both of those authorities originate with us, as do virtually all other authorities under acts, and when there are determinations to be made with respect to differences of viewpoint as to how the acts interrelate, then the court, another independent authority, is the appropriate place to resolve that kind of a determination.

This matter is before the court to be heard, as I understand it and as the hon. Leader of the Opposition indicated, next Wednesday. It would be inappropriate for us, and, in fact, it would violate rule 23(g) under sub judice to actually have a debate on whose authority is stronger or any of those issues that are quite properly before the court.

Now, the hon. Leader of the Opposition goes further, though, than actually is outlined in the notice of motion because the notice of motion is about challenging the authority of the Auditor General. As I say, Mr. Speaker, it's not about challenging the legitimate authority of the Auditor General but defining the rules and the guidance provided by both the Auditor General Act and the Securities Act with respect to defining the scope of the audit. In fact, as I understand it, the application to the court is a reference to assist in defining the scope of the audit. So it's quite appropriately before an independent party.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would go on, though, to say, as I've indicated in the House this afternoon in question period, that an interim chair for the Securities Commission will be appointed as early as tomorrow. I can make this commitment to the House: that independent chair is expected to be independent and fair and will not be a current member of the commission. The person who is very soon to be appointed will provide leadership and direction to the Securities Commission during the transitional period and will be able to work with the Securities Commission and the Auditor General to determine whether the issues with respect to the scope of the audit can be resolved without the necessity of the court application.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, the very question in this notice of motion, although badly worded, is the precedent set by the Securities Commission, an agent of the Crown, challenging the legitimate authority of the Auditor General. Obviously, that refers to a matter which is before the court because that's the challenge that they're referring to. In fact, the hon. Leader of the Opposition specifically mentioned the reference being heard next Wednesday.

The only other thing I would add to this issue, Mr. Speaker – these are important issues and subjudice but not urgent, not urgent. In fact, the only effect that will be had by adjourning the ordinary course of business of this House this afternoon, declaring this emergent and necessitating a debate this afternoon, will be to cause the exact result that the hon. leader opposite is trying to avoid: to create fear in the public. If something is so urgent and important that this Legislature determines it to be so and gets the debate on, it's basically saying that there is an issue that needs to be dealt with that the public and the investment community should fear.

In fact, we're not hearing that from the investment community. I think the investment community and others in the community, although it's an issue certainly in the public – it's an issue that certainly needs to be dealt with and resolved, that the Minister of Finance has indicated she is dealing with and resolving. The Auditor General is in place. The scope of the audit is to be determined. That's before the courts. The issue between what authorities and what confidentialities and how that does will be determined by an independent court, as appropriately so.

We ought not to fear monger, Mr. Speaker. We ought not to raise the specter of fear in the community. We ought to let this process work. The interim chair will be an independent chair appointed from outside the commission to carry out the process, to work with the Auditor General, to get to the bottom of things, not to raise fear and scare investor confidence in this province.

It's not urgent because it's being dealt with, because the appropriate processes are in place, and because the very issue that's being raised in the notice of motion is sub judice.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government's attitude and the House Leader's seems to be: see no evil, hear no evil, therefore, there's no evil. To say that to have an emergency debate, we'd lose confidence in the Securities Commission is absolutely ridiculous. That confidence has been long gone, if I may say so, for many years if he's been paying any attention at all.

Speaking to the urgency. I mean, I saw the House leader the other day, and he alluded to going after the Leader of the Opposition. He was very exercised when he thought that an officer of this Legislature was being attacked. I remember the debate. Now we're saying that it's okay for this same officer. This is why I think it's urgent. I believe that the Securities Commission is thumbing their nose at an officer of the Legislature, and I think that should be very serious by all matters here. Certainly, the Minister of Finance should take it seriously. I would suggest that all Members of the Legislative Assembly should take that very seriously.

If we allow this to go on and we say that one of our officers cannot be given the documents that he needs – every Auditor General, right across Canada, has access to everything the government does. For them now to say, "Well, no, you can't have that," and, then, when he says, "No, that's not acceptable," then they say "Well, the heck with you; we're going to court," to me that is just absolutely wrong.

If our Securities Act allows them to do that, the first thing we probably should be doing is changing our Securities Act right away. For the minister to say that there are not problems, that all investors are happy, I don't know who he's listening to because that's certainly not the impression I'm getting. To say that having an emergency debate here would hurt the Securities Commission, come on. The Bre-Xs and the Boyle brothers and the whole works of them down through the years have done that already.

We have some serious problems here. We've got to clean it up. I said yesterday that I think we should get rid of the whole group of them and bring in an interim trustee. That would probably give more confidence to investors right across Canada and Alberta than what we're doing here.

The other reason this is an emergency. He talks about sub judice; it's not in the courts yet. The problem is with the reputation of the Securities Commission. If it gets wrapped up in courts, this could go on forever. One of the things the Minister of Finance said at the time was that she wanted the Auditor General to move on this quickly, and I think he said that at the latest he'd have a report in July. Well, we may still be in court in July while this thing goes on.

So I think we have to send a very serious message here. The urgency to me is how many other boards are there in government that are going to do the same thing to the Auditor General and say to you: well, we don't need to bother with this because we have our own little act here, we have our own little act there, and we're not going to give you the information. I think that the House Leader should be as mad about this as he was at the Leader of the Opposition the other day. They're thumbing their nose at him, and they're thumbing their noses at all of us, Mr. Speaker.

If one of the top officers of this Legislature cannot do his job, we're all in serious difficulty. I think we need that discussion, Mr. Speaker. As it now stands, I mean, to try to hide and say that there hasn't been publicity about this and how, you know, this is going to bring it down and that there will be all sorts of terrible things if this Legislature has a debate about it, well, it's been in all the national papers. It's been in the American papers. We've had calls from American investors. It's all over now. The biggest way we could deal with it – as I say, I think we should have done it a long time ago – is to have an interim trustee and get rid of it and start again. At the very minimum, we can send a message that this Legislature takes it very seriously when one of our officers cannot do their job. I think the Government House Leader should be the first one up saying that and not opposing this.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 30(2) states the following:

The member may briefly state the arguments in favour of the request for leave and the Speaker may allow such debate as he considers relevant to the question of urgency of debate and shall then rule on whether or not the request for leave is in order.

So now we've heard three speakers. Are there additional members who would like to participate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar would. Any others? I suspect that would be conditional upon what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar might say, so I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and then be prepared to recognize one additional speaker from the government caucus, and then we'll have to bring this to an end.

The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate an opportunity to participate in this urgent debate this afternoon. I've been listening with interest to the three speakers. I would like to briefly remind the entire House, and in particular the Government House Leader, of Beauchesne 505 through to 510.

First, 505 indicates that this is a voluntary restriction, sub judice, imposed by the House itself to protect the interest of parties to a case "in the interest of justice and fair play." Sure, we have the potential of an issue before the courts, but justice and fair play appear to be compromised, and a debate in the House may be of some use in re-establishing these and other public interests here. Also with 506 and 507 it indicates in Beauchesne that the convention is consistently invoked only in criminal matters, presumably for reasons that are cited above in Beauchesne 505.

Now, it's most important with Beauchesne 510, and 510 indicates that "the House has never allowed the sub judice convention to stand in the way of its consideration of a matter vital to the public interest or to the effective operation of the House." It would be my view that both apply here as a result of the arguments that have been made earlier by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was hanging on every word from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar because I want to just point out to the House first and foremost that this is not an urgent debate at this time. This is a debate on Standing Order 30 as to whether or not there should be an urgent debate. I would say, Mr. Speaker, in reviewing Standing Order 30 and in particular Standing Order 30(7), where it says: "A motion under this Standing Order is subject to the following conditions: (a) the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency," and it goes on.

I would argue that there isn't a genuine emergency at this time. We see no impact on the markets so far. The markets are working and responding well. Investments are happening. All systems are functioning. There's no evidence of any lack of consumer confidence going on out there. Yes, there's a lot of interest in what's happening, but there certainly isn't any erosion of consumer confidence or consumer participation, so I don't see any sense of urgency in that respect.

The Government House Leader has quite accurately indicated already that the issue stands before the court – we all know what sub judice is – in order to help define the scope of the audit. That particular point has been covered. An interim chair will be appointed I believe he indicated as early as tomorrow or not later than tomorrow or whatever the words were. It would be a very independent choice and so on. So there is no real emergency other than what might exist in the minds of certain members here.

I would just also remind the hon. members of Standing Order 30(6), where it says, "An emergency debate does not entail any decision of the Assembly." That's so correct because this decision will be rendered for the most part right there in the court, where it belongs.

With that, I would argue strongly that this is not a matter of genuine emergency, which is the first requirement, in fact, of Standing Order 30. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the chair is prepared to rule on whether the request for leave for this motion to proceed is in order under Standing Order 30(2). The chair did let the debate continue on the question of urgency because of what the chair considers to be a serious matter.

First, the chair confirms that the Leader of the Official Opposition has given proper notice of his intention to seek permission to present this motion under Standing Order 30. Notice was received by the Speaker's office today at 11:25, and the requirements under Standing Order 30(1) have been met.

Secondly, before the question as to whether this motion should proceed can be put to the Assembly, the chair must rule whether the motion meets the requirements of Standing Order 30(7), which requires that "the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration."

The Leader of the Official Opposition's motion reads as follows, and I think it's important, again.

Be it resolved that this Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the dangerous precedent set by the Alberta Securities Commission, an agent of the Crown, challenging the legitimate authority of the Auditor General, an officer of this Assembly charged to conduct an investigation vital to the public interest.

The relevant parliamentary authorities: Beauchesne's paragraphs 387 and 390 and the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, pages 587 to 589.

Now, there has been great attention provided from the chair to this, and the chair has been studying this matter since 10:25 or 10:35 this morning along with a number of the table officers. There's one thing that also is an unavoidable fact related to this whole matter. The chair has also received from the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta, the judicial district of Calgary, the originating notice between the Alberta Securities Commission and Fred Dunn, the Auditor General of Alberta. The document does raise a series of questions, and it asks the Court of Queen's Bench to make certain determinations. That is a fact, and that does exist.

The chair's major concern is that by finding the request to be in order, the chair might be taken to imply that proceeding to court for an interpretation of someone's or some entity's jurisdiction constitutes a genuine emergency. The chair wants it to be very, very clear that the chair is not in any way commenting on the merits of the arguments that have been raised in this matter. The chair is simply noting that it is difficult to find that an application to court for a determination about jurisdiction can constitute a genuine emergency so as to justify an urgent debate.

It is this Speaker's understanding that reviewing the jurisdiction of a person or a tribunal to whom the Legislature has delegated certain responsibility is the primary basis for administrative law. In other words, what we have here is the Alberta Securities Commission, created by an act of this Legislature, and the Auditor General of Alberta, created by an act of this Legislature, going to another tribunal in the province of Alberta, albeit Court of Queen's Bench, asking for an interpretation between the two of them.

At first I thought, by 10:40 this morning, that this was very unique, and this didn't happen very often in the province of Alberta. I've subsequently been advised that this happens quite frequently in the province of Alberta, where the Ethics Commissioner and the FOIP, freedom of information, commissioner have been challenged in the courts for interpretation of what their mandate has been as well.

There's also something else that is extremely important that all members have to be apprised of. The Canadian House of Commons does not have a specific standing order on sub judice, so when citations are used from Marleau and Montpetit or Beauchesne in the Canadian House of Commons dealing with civil law and the interpretation of the Canadian House of Commons, one has to remember that they do not have a standing order with respect to a sub judice rule. We do in this Assembly, and Standing Order 23(g)(ii) deals specifically with matters of a civil nature and reads as follows:

A member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that member . . .

(g) refers to any matter pending in a court or before a judge for judicial determination . . .

(ii) of a civil nature that has been set down for a trial or notice of motion filed, as in an injunction proceeding, until judgment or from the date of filing a notice of appeal until judgment by an appellate court . . .

It's also very true within our Standing Orders.

. . . where there is probability of prejudice to any party but where there is any doubt as to prejudice, the rule should be in favour of the debate.

There's nothing in this that I can see would be prejudicial to anyone else, but there is something in here that basically says that this matter has been basically set down, and in fact in the document that I have, the originating notice, there's even a time frame on it, Tuesday the 10th day of May at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, to hear certain arguments.

So I'm bothered most of all by this, hon. members: if I were to rule in favour of this particular application, it would cause great difficulty, I believe, into the future for subsequent Speakers to somehow rule anything out under the cause of sub judice, and I would not want to set that precedent with respect to this matter. That's a very serious one, considering that this Assembly has a sub judice Standing Order rule, and this matter has already been delegated to appear before a court. That's one of the purposes of administrative law: to find a ruling if two pieces of legislation may be in conflict with one another.

At the same time, the sub judice rule should not stifle the Assembly's consideration of a bill should there be one before us, but that isn't the case. This is not what the Assembly is considering at this time. It's considering another matter.

This is one of the most interesting questions that we've had before our Assembly, certainly since I've had the privilege of sitting in this chair, and it certainly has brought in a lot of thought and debate since 10:25 this morning by the esteemed members that sit at the table along with the Speaker. But the conclusion will be that the chair finds that the request is not in order, and the question will not be put by the chair for the reasons given. [interjections] There's no need. There's no winner or loser in this.

Now, before I call Orders of the Day, we have a Standing Order that we have to deal with, and that's 58(5). Standing Order 58(5) is very, very clear that on Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday afternoon, during the consideration of the main estimates, the Committee of Supply shall be called not later than 3:10 p.m. provided that Orders of the Day have already been called and shall rise and report no later than 5:15 p.m.

We need unanimous consent to proceed with the estimates at this point in time.

I'm going to ask two questions. The first one will be the positive one. Will the Assembly agree to unanimous consent to provide, and obviously it's a redundant question, but I'll ask it anyway. The second one: is anybody opposed to proceeding to estimates? If the answer is no, then I'll call Orders of the Day, and we'll see what happens. Some confusion? It's very clear. We had this application last week.

head:

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: Hon. members, again, I don't want any challenges. The chair will leave the chair now, but the House leaders must have a discussion over the interpretation of the two-hour rule now for estimates. It's five minutes to 4, so with co-operation the Assembly can choose to go to 5:25 and find that there are no more speakers and can make its decision on the estimates, and that would fulfill everything we wanted to do today.

If it arrives at 5:30 and if there's a challenge under the rule – remember that the Deputy Chair of Committees will be in the chair, so this would have to come back to the Assembly – then the advice from the chair would be the following to fulfill the two-hour requirement. There's one hour and 35 minutes available. It means there would be a shortfall of 25 minutes. Then at 9:05 Monday night next there would still be 25 minutes available to conclude these estimates, but that would be still part of the same day.

Please co-operate. Thank you very much.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Main Estimates 2005-06

Municipal Affairs

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Before I begin my brief comments regarding the estimates for the Department of Municipal Affairs, let me just acknowledge my appreciation to the members of the opposition for their co-operation in granting unanimous consent prior to dissolving ourselves into committee. I really do appreciate it. I'll do my best to answer all of the questions that we have. Should we run up into a bit of a time constraint, we certainly can have the relationship that we've developed continue even informally. So thank you to the opposition, and thank you, Mr. Chair, for facilitating.

I'm pleased to present the estimates for Alberta Municipal Affairs. Before I begin, I'd like to introduce the staff from my department who are seated in the gallery. We've been sending notes back and forth, and I'm particularly pleased that they're still there. We're on, so with my thanks for hanging in there, let me introduce to you, Mr. Chairman, and to members of the House the outstanding executive staff that I have working in Municipal Affairs. I've been the minister now since November, and I have to say that I continue to be impressed with the professionalism and quality of not only the executive but all of the public service within this outstanding department.

I'd like to introduce to all members Mr. Dan Bader, deputy minister; Mr. Brian Quickfall, assistant deputy minister, local government services; Mr. Denis St. Arnaud, assistant deputy minister, public safety division; Tara Trelford, acting senior financial officer; Jay O'Neill, communications director; and Richard Westlund, my executive assistant. I'd ask all members to recognize them. They're doing great work on behalf of municipalities in Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, our ministry works with a variety of stakeholders to ensure that Albertans live in safe, sustainable communities and are served by open, effective, and accountable governments. In the coming year we will pursue six goals: an effective, responsive, cooperative, and well-managed local government sector; financially sustainable and accountable municipalities; a well-managed and efficient assessment and property tax system in which stakeholders have confidence; a comprehensive safety system that provides an appropriate level of public safety; an emergency management program that enables effective preparation for, response to, and recovery from major emergencies and disasters at provincial and local levels; and an independent system that administers appeals and issues timely and impartial decisions of high quality.

As of January 1 of this year the department supports 356 municipalities and 1,931 elected officials in Alberta. Mr. Chairman, just for the information of members, this represents 15 cities, 110 towns, 102 villages, 64 rural municipalities, 51 summer villages, seven improvement districts, four specialized municipalities, and three special areas. I might add, Mr. Chairman, just on a personal note that while I've only been minister for five months, it seems that I've had an opportunity to meet just about every one of those 1,931 municipal officials, and I'm here to tell you that all of those locally elected officials are dedicated to serving their communities and to working as partners with this government. It's the role of Municipal Affairs to ensure that that partnership blossoms and succeeds.

For 2005-06 the expenses and equipment/inventory purchases to be voted for Municipal Affairs total $128.4 million. This is an increase of $4.1 million, about 3 per cent, from the 2004-05 budget of $124.3 million. Revenues for '05-06 are expected to be approximately $26.2 million.

I'm going to go through each of the various divisions of the ministry and quickly provide a little bit of background information, the first being the local government services. This division is responsible for $99.2 million of the ministry's expenses: $78.1 million is for grants to municipalities and other local government entities, and $21.1 million is for nongrant initiatives such as programs that promote municipal excellence, linear property assessments, and regular assessment audits. The expense total for this division is increasing from $95.2 million to $99.2 million, an increase of $4 million, primarily due to the inclusion of the Banff/Jasper special infrastructure program in the amount of $2.5 million.

Funding for local government services supports such activities as the municipal excellence program and other initiatives to improve the knowledge of municipal administrators and elected officials, providing improved linear property assessment, utilizing the Alberta linear property assessment system, conducting detailed assessment audits of municipalities to help ensure that properties are being assessed fairly and consistently, supporting municipalities through facilitation and encouragement of intermunicipal co-operation and self-directed dispute resolution, administering the municipal internship program to work with Alberta's municipalities and train additional future municipal administrators, and also the Minister's Provincial/Municipal Council on Roles, Responsibilities and Resources in the 21st Century. Local government services also administers the department's major grants to municipalities, accounting for $78.1 million.

The major grant programs are the unconditional municipal grant program, the grants in place of tax program, the financial support to local authorities program, the municipal sponsorship program, and the municipal debenture interest rebate program. Unconditional grants are provided to municipalities for their general use and to help offset some of the cost of restructuring. This program also provides funding for the regional partnerships initiative. Estimates for '05-06 are $19.7 million.

The grants in lieu of taxes program provides grants to municipalities on certain property owned by the government of Alberta, and the estimates for this are $31.6 million.

Financial support to local authorities funds a number of initiatives in support of municipal associations: mediation, internships, and, most importantly, the ME First energy savings program. The estimates in this area, Mr. Chairman, this year are $9.7 million.

The very popular municipal sponsorship program supports municipal innovation and co-operation as well as projects that improve municipal government practices. Estimates for '05-06 are $13.5 million.

Finally, the municipal debenture interest rebate program subsidizes the interest paid by municipalities on certain high-interest debentures that were borrowed during the times of high interest. This is a program that will remain in place until the retirement of those debentures in about 2010. The estimates for this year are $3.6 million.

Now on to the specifics of the public safety division, which accounts for approximately $14 million of the ministry's estimates. Key initiatives in this division include the implementation of an action plan approved in January of this year at the federal/provincial/territorial meeting of ministers responsible for emergency management. This includes plans to establish a national emergency response system to deliver alternate disaster financial assistance options, including improvement of the disaster financial assistance arrangements, and establish a national critical infrastructure protection strategy.

We partner with fire departments to enhance the fire services training initiative. This initiative gives firefighters from across Alberta access to high-quality, certified training at regional centres located throughout the province. Mr. Chairman, just on Tuesday of this week I had the pleasure of attending the fire chiefs annual convention in Jasper, and I spoke to them after their wrap-up banquet. I can tell you that this particular initiative is extremely well supported and appreciated by the fire chiefs and, more importantly, by the many hundreds of individuals who are either professional, full-time firefighters or, in the case of many of our municipalities, volunteer firefighters, who are expected to step up to the plate and can only be expected to do so with adequate training, which this program provides.

We provide emergency management training to municipal officials and ground search and rescue training to emergency response personnel to enhance their ability to prepare for and respond to emergency situations.

Support for the MLA Review Committee on Secondary Suites, with the publication of the final report on proposed standards expected later on this year.

We appoint an administrator to act as liaison between the Safety Codes Council and Municipal Affairs on barrier-free design and accessibility issues and initiatives. That comes out of a bill, actually, that was passed by this Assembly last year to create an enhanced awareness of issues related to barrier-free design and accessibility. We also continue to monitor the Safety Codes Council's administration of underground petroleum storage tank remediation program. This $60 million one-time program was created to help municipalities and small retail operators clean up their contaminated sites.

Before I conclude, there are just two other areas I'd like to touch on briefly. First of all, the Municipal Government Board. This board decides property linear and equalized assessment appeals, limited subdivision appeals, annexations, intermunicipal disputes, and other matters referred to me as minister or by cabinet. It continues to provide an independent appeal system that issues timely and high-quality decisions and is committed to hearing and issuing decisions within the legislated time frames despite increasing volumes and greater complexity in appeals. The MGB estimates for '05-06 are about $2.8 million.

Finally, ministry support services. Ministry support services provides the local government services and public safety divisions with legal, financial, and information technology, communications, human resources, and business and administrative support. This area's estimates for '05-06 are about $11.2 million.

To conclude, Mr. Chairman, I believe Municipal Affairs has a strong business plan and a solid budget to achieve our goals and objectives. I look forward to addressing any questions members may have for me at this time, and at this point I will resume my seat and invite members to participate with questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the comments from the minister, and I appreciate the opportunity to discuss a range of issues back and forth. I think he's off to a very constructive start as the minister in this department.

My first questions are three or four points that are, I think, related generally, and they tend to be big issues rather than going line by line and why so many dollars here and not there and that kind of thing. We all recognize the growing importance of municipalities and the municipal level of government to our province and to our society and, I think, to the future of the province. There are, in fact, people who put forward the argument that we will eventually evolve into city states, in which you get regions dominated by cities and municipalities, and some people suspect that the powers of the provinces may shift gradually to the municipalities.

I've no idea, of course, what the future has, but my first general question to the minister would be this. Are there initiatives under way or staff in his department or projects afoot – in fact, I believe there are – that are looking way down the road at the future role of municipalities? Decisions we make this year and next year have implications in some cases for decades or centuries. I think of this city and the decision made a hundred years ago to keep development out of the river valley. What an amazing impact that has had on this city, as one example, or the city of Medicine Hat, how the river valley development there, the way it's proceeding, is quite lovely in some areas and has tremendous long-term consequence. So I am wondering what resources, what thinking is going on in the minister's department and perhaps through other agencies, looking at the long-term future role of municipalities: what their mandates ought to be and what powers, perhaps, should be being enhanced by municipalities so that they can proceed.

My second question to the minister – I think he's taking notes, so that's great – relates to the first. Is there any consideration at all being given to an amendment to the Alberta act to recognize and solidify legislative authority of municipalities? The Municipal Government Act is probably one of the most important pieces of legislation that we have in this province, but it's constantly being changed, and there are times – and I know this first-hand from municipal councillors – when local municipalities feel like the ground they're standing on legislatively is not as firm as they would like.

An example from the last session of the Legislature had to do with removing the authority of municipalities to determine the location of intensive livestock operations. That unnerved a lot of municipalities. They wanted to have a direct say and, frankly, direct control over locations of intensive livestock operations. They wanted to be able to address issues of water supply and noise and smell and wear and tear on the roads and property values, and their power to make those decisions was removed by this Legislature. There is a feeling in some circles that if there was a more solid legislative and jurisdictional basis for municipalities in the Alberta act, municipalities would feel more secure in their authority.

So those are linked issues around: is there any consideration, has there been any study given to amending the Alberta act and to solidifying the jurisdictional authority of municipalities?

Finally, a question around regional planning issues, again reflecting on experience in the capital city and the capital region and the loss of the regional planning commissions 10 years ago or so, which in the view of many has aggravated the difficulties of many municipalities in one economic zone working together. I'm sure that the minister is very well aware of the issues. So I am really asking: are there any plans afoot in the business plans to relaunch some equivalent to the regional planning commissions or else to address those issues of regional co-ordination among competing or co-operating municipalities through some other means?

I'll look forward to the minister's comments on those issues, and then I've got some more specific ones. Is that okay? Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I think that that is pretty much a good summarization of the biggest issues that we spend our time thinking about, and I'm pleased to provide some insight. As the member indicated even at the outset, these were not necessarily specific to line items in the budget but a little bit more philosophical. I think that they probably deserve some consideration, and this is as good a time as any to deal with them.

First of all, with respect to the governance issues and the reference to city states, I think that we do have to give it some consideration. In fact, we have begun probably a prolonged process of deciding on how this evolution should proceed. Prior to '95, when the last substantive amendments were made, in fact when the rewrite of the MGA, the Municipal Government Act, was done, the relationship between the province and the municipalities was much more restrictive.

When the changes were made to the Municipal Government Act in '95, I, like many others in the House, was here at the time. I remember the discussion that went on, and the issue was that municipalities have to have the ability to determine many more of their own priorities at the local level. One of the biggest changes that was made in that rewrite was that municipalities were given person powers, so municipalities were then recognized as an entity. Believe it or not, prior to that, they were not. They were simply extensions of the provincial government.

So we made a significant change to the way municipalities are recognized in law in those amendments in '95. We've lived with those now for approximately 10 years, and I think it's probably sufficient time for us now to sit back and analyze exactly how well that rewrite has worked. Is it appropriate? Is that the appropriate level of independence? Do we need to take it one step further? I think it comes as no surprise to anyone that in particular the big-city mayors, Calgary and Edmonton, but to some extent other leaders within the municipal community are now beginning to have that look forward and are saying: maybe it's time that we start to think about what is the next step forward.

I'm not in a position to make commitments today, and I've said the same thing when I've met with the mayors, but I am prepared to commit to engaging in some serious discussion. I think the first step is for all of us to get our collective heads around what the vision for that next evolution would look like. In that regard, I have committed to sitting down with the municipal leadership over the next short period of time to do just a little bit of that blue-sky visioning on an informal basis. Where do we see this next evolution of the Municipal Government Act? How would it operate, and what would it look like? Until we can get those big-picture ideas around it and have everyone understand what everyone else is thinking, it's probably premature to start to get into a lot of detail. Needless to say, we do have resources within Municipal Affairs that can and will be allocated to that detail when we get to that point.

The other issue, I think, on that whole area that constantly has to be impacted is that governance issues can't be determined independent of funding and resources. That's why my predecessor established the three Rs committee: roles, responsibilities, and resources. Much of the work of that committee up to this point has concentrated on the resources side. What we have been contemplating in having discussions within Municipal Affairs is: where should we be taking that? What's the next logical progression? We've even contemplated whether or not it should almost evolve into the four Rs, add a fourth R, and that would be relationships – roles, responsibilities, resources, and relationships – because that is becoming critical to the long-term sustainability of municipalities as well. It's how they interact and how they work among themselves and how the relationship with each other and with the provincial government should evolve. So I see that as being the next progression.

I think that we have to clearly identify whether or not there is a long-term future in municipalities being primarily dependent on property taxes as the sole source of revenue. There are ongoing discussions there. Now, there's some opportunity for the province to hand over a whole lot of tax room if this Assembly and the government can determine what to do with the education property tax. There have been motions passed by this House, there have been motions passed by the municipal organizations requesting that the government move away from its dependence on municipal property tax for the funding of education. I think that there are really two sides to that.

On one side of the equation, there's no doubt that that would enhance the ability of municipalities to conduct their business and to provide services to their municipalities, but at the same time we have to recognize that that's about $1.4 billion that the provincial government is going to have to reallocate and find the money somewhere else. I've suggested to municipalities that it would be in everyone's best interest, both the province and the municipalities, if we could have some discussion over the next period of time about whether the roles and responsibilities side of this three-R equation can be adjusted. There may be some things now that municipalities are sharing responsibility for with the province, or there may even be some areas where the province has responsibility at this point in time that would more properly be delivered at the municipal level.

So when the day comes to have some serious discussion on this changeover or the progressive rollover, however it happens to be, if we could have some agreement on how that shifting, if necessary or if reasonable or if responsible, would take place, it maybe doesn't have to be a $1.4 billion discussion. Maybe it could be a discussion of a smaller magnitude, which would be much easier for me to convince my colleagues is a step forward. So we've had those kinds of discussions.

Regarding the changes to the MGA, I think I've sort of covered that somewhat. There isn't at this point a plan in place to make changes to the MGA, but as I've discussed, I am prepared to sit down with municipalities. I think that we've had now 10 years under the existing legislation. There have been from time to time changes that were made, usually at the request of municipalities, quite frankly, where there is fine-tuning that comes up and needs to be done.

But the member points out that municipalities are looking for, in addition to the long-term sustainable funding, a greater role in the legislative side of things and how they're governed. Again, without making commitments, I have indicated to them that I am prepared to have that discussion as well. I think that 10 years is enough for us, both sides, to have a good feel for where we're going, and it may be time for us to think about that next generation.

The whole issue of regional planning and land planning is something that I've become much attuned to in the short time that I've been minister. When regional planning commissions were in place, things were not all rosy. There were disputes; there were conflicts. The difference was that there was a conflict resolution process that made a decision. Notwithstanding the fact that many people didn't like the decision, at least a decision was made. The substitute, what has replaced regional planning commissions, is an emphasis on mediation, on working together, on consensus building and having municipalities come to agreements on annexations, for example, on land planning, to do it on a voluntary basis, on regional plans that are done, that are negotiated rather than imposed, and for the most part they've worked quite well.

We are now running into some areas where the mediated, negotiated approach is running into some brick walls, so I think that we are going to have to in a relatively short period of time in the future revisit the idea, again not necessarily by reverting to regional planning commissions and all of the inherent problems that were there, but maybe there is something in between where we can continue to have the emphasis on co-operation, consensus building but at the same time have an ultimate dispute resolution process that all parties can agree to that won't be seen to be creating such winners and losers that were inherent in the regional planning commission.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Very good comments from the minister. Good luck in those considerations. I hope many people have the opportunity to be involved, including the opposition.

My next set of questions are somewhat more specific, and they cover three different areas. The first is around public transit. I represent a constituency which has an intense network of public transit systems in it. In Edmonton-Riverview, which has the University of Alberta in it and a huge transit hub, there's LRT expansion under way. That's an area that I've lived in almost my whole life, and when my family first moved there, when I was a little boy, it was actually the edge of the city. The end of my neighbourhood was countryside, and now it's considered an inner-city neighbourhood.

In the '70s there was great excitement because the LRT was being built in Edmonton, and then, you know, by the early '90s I think it was going to extend for miles and miles to the south. It is only now, I think later this year – I think it might be this December or something like that – that the LRT is going to finally reach the surface at the university, and maybe in some number of years in the future we'll actually begin to realize the dream that was at one time intended to be achieved 20 years ago.

The reason that the citizens have had to wait so long for the LRT extension is, of course, that it's very expensive, especially the way it has been managed in Edmonton, and funding has not been predictable or reliable. Clearly, the federal government has a role in financing this kind of effort, but also the provincial government has a role. So my question, really, to the minister is around plans for predictable, reliable, multiyear financing to the municipalities, especially the really large ones, on public transit, including rail transit.

My second question is a different kind of question. I can't remember the program name – I think the minister actually alluded to it in his comments – the petroleum tank remediation program. I think that's the right name. I spent a fair bit of time last summer driving around the province, and I was struck by the number of times I'd pull into a small-town gas station and go in and introduce myself and get a real conversation going in a moment with the gas station owner who owned a station where the tank was decades and decades old, and there was concern about leakage, and there were no resources available to clean up the site.

The value of the gas station in terms of reselling it was nil because nobody was going to buy it. I can think of two different cases off the top of my head where the family, who had built this business up and wanted to retire on the sale of the business, couldn't sell it because of the contamination.

I also think of the large site on Whyte Avenue, 105th Street, an old Imperial Oil station, a prime, prime piece of property on one of the province's more famous streets, Whyte Avenue, sitting there. It has sat empty for years, unused because of petroleum contamination. I must say that it makes me very unhappy to look at the record profits being made by Imperial Oil, and then I go by an old Imperial Oil gas station site which is contaminated beyond usage in a prime area of Edmonton, and they are not held accountable to clean that up. I think we're missing out on holding the right people accountable.

My question to the minister really is: what resources are in the budget and what plans are in the business plan to aggressively pursue rehabilitation of these sites?

My third question has to do with the ambulance transfer, which was a very contentious issue, as the minister well knows, earlier this year. It had a real impact on municipalities and on the provincial taxpayer. If he can give us some indication of what's going to proceed, from his perspective, through this next budget year to sort out the ambulance transfer issue and the role of the municipalities in delivering that service to their citizens.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to try and shorten my answers. I've been advised by the House leaders that there are discussions ongoing. I will try and shorten my answers, but if I'm not able to answer all of the questions this afternoon, I will make a commitment that we'll have answers in writing that will be provided. But these questions, I think, are relatively straightforward.

The issue of long-term funding, I think, is something that is unquestionably a concern for municipalities. We have in place a couple of things in this area, neither of which, unfortunately or fortunately – I'm not sure which – are within Municipal Affairs' budget. The kind of funding that the member is referring to is infrastructure funding and so actually comes through infrastructure's budget. Nevertheless, there's usually a great deal of input from Municipal Affairs and the minister of infrastructure and the Minister of Municipal Affairs. For example, on this latest round the $3 billion had a great deal of discussion, and Municipal Affairs was very much part of the decision-making process.

There is a commitment by the province to five years at this point in time. There's also a commitment in place with respect to the larger cities and the gasoline tax, an agreement that we have in place with municipalities. The member also made reference to the federal government, and I have to say that it really is good that the federal government has finally stepped up to the plate, has recognized that there is a role for the federal government.

At lunch today I was just visiting with AUMA, who were holding an excellent mayors' conference in Edmonton for professional development for elected officials at the municipal level. I talked to them about the new deal and the commitment that the province has made that every penny that flows through on the new deal from the federal government will flow through entirely to the municipalities. The province has made a commitment that should the federal government come through with their promise for funding for municipalities, there will be a complete and utter flow through directly to municipalities from the province. There are a couple of things that we can do to assist municipalities, but, as I mentioned, in the long term I think we have to have a look at funding sources and taxation areas, and those are bigger questions than we're going to resolve here this afternoon.

The underground storage tank situation. I mentioned that that was funded out of a one-time expenditure of $60 million. Unfortunately, there is nothing in this budget to extend that program. There are still some dollars that were left in that fund to finish off some of the projects that were started. That $60 million was actually in the hands of the Safety Codes Council, so that has been expended over a number of years, and there are some existing files that are being finished off out of the dollars.

It is my hope that we can extend that program at some point in the future with another, perhaps, one-time investment, keeping in mind that the government has committed to review one-time and capital expenditures once the surplus situation becomes much clearer throughout the year. I may just end up back at Treasury Board at some point along the line, but at this point there are no additional dollars for the program.

The program was designed to deal with individual property owners and municipalities that were dealing with contaminated sites. The program never was intended to deal with issues such as the member pointed out with respect to major oil companies, and that is a concern of mine because it's not just Whyte Avenue in Edmonton. There are towns throughout Alberta that have two or three or sometimes four corners of their major downtown intersections that are dealing with the same situation. I think that's something that, hopefully, we can work with in conjunction with Environment, on dealing with enforcement of standards. The issue is like many other things in that as long as you don't change the use of the land, there isn't a requirement to decontaminate.

So that is a concern, and a number of municipalities have brought it to my attention, and that's something that I would hope that we can work with Environment on to step up the enforcement and perhaps even consider whether there should be some time frames put in place. There are two sides every time you consider something like that because if you're going to affect the large oil companies, you're also going to affect the little guy, that may not have financial resources. It is a good concern, and it's something that we haven't been unaware of.

Finally, on the issue of ambulance transfer. Again, this is something that's not in my budget. We assist the health minister with population figures and those kinds of things. I think it would probably be inappropriate for me to comment on what the future of ambulance service is. I will comment, though, that municipalities certainly made it clear to me that there were inconveniences, to say the least, imposed upon them, and I will be making it as clear to the health minister that before we proceed with another ambulance plan, municipalities have got to be sure that the plan is done right and it is sustainable on a long-term basis. So you have my commitment to work with the minister on that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Certainly, as a former municipal councillor I'm delighted to hear some of the remarks from the minister, particularly in the area of the blue-sky visioning, because really I do believe that we've hit the point where we have to start seriously looking at what you called the fourth R, the relationships. I think it's very important that municipalities do retain an autonomy because they are, after all, the politicians that are closest to the people and are responsible in certainly a far closer fashion than we that sit in this House.

I will be brief with my comments and my questions if I might. In the annual report of the Auditor General under the heading of Scope it stated that there was a follow-up on the prior-year recommendation that the ministry "not advance funds to other organizations to acquire its own assets." I wonder if you could clarify for me which part of the budget those funds would come from and what, in fact, organizations were being referenced? Are we still doing that practice?

Also, what form of accounting does this ministry use? Is it the Canadian generally accepted accounting principles form?

I've noted that the ministry has contracted out to a private-sector service provider for the operation and maintenance of their IT system. Who is this private firm? If it's not wholly Canadian, would the information shared by municipalities with the ministry be subject to the Home Protection Act of the United States, which in fact would allow FBI and CIA access to this particular information? What other changes have been made since the Auditor General made the recommendations from last year?

Further, one last thing. We spoke about an expanded tax base to give municipalities greater potential to serve the unique needs of their residents. I'm glad that you said that there would be consultation because I feel that it could be a slippery slope. I'm not sure that it's exactly fair that municipalities would be – and I'm not going to use the word "forced" because it would be collaborative if what you're saying would occur – to raise the taxes for infrastructure or services that are rightly the province's responsibility and that have been downloaded in part over the past number of years.

For instance, the mandate for the municipalities to collect off-site levies for infrastructure from developers, who of course only pass those costs on to the new homeowners, is really just another name for an infrastructure tax. I would suspect that municipalities would entertain the idea of the ability to be able to expand that tax base and certainly increase their revenues if there was an assurance that by collecting those taxes, there would also be a decrease of what the province would take from those taxes when we collected them and that they wouldn't all end up in the provincial coffers.

You've already spoken of consultations with the municipalities. I guess that another question would be: if the tax structure did change and the municipalities were allowed to collect in different fashions, who actually would pay for the extra administration costs to implement that idea? How would this idea really contribute to stable, equitable, and predictable funding for municipalities, who at this point are all struggling to try to stay ahead of their budgets that have gone south on them?

Mr. Renner: Well, the first three questions were technical in nature, and I think that they're probably appropriately addressed in writing, so I will commit to get those answers.

The final question was: who would pay for administration? I think that's getting down the technical road a long ways from the theoretical discussion that I was suggesting we have with municipalities. Obviously, the whole issue of costs related to taxation are the responsibility of the authority that collects the taxes. I don't think we want to go down that road until we've had a lot more discussion. I didn't suggest for a moment that I was supporting additional avenues of taxation for municipalities. What I said and what I've consistently said was that I'm prepared to have the discussion, but until I hear what is being proposed, I don't want to make any kinds of commitments, nor do I want to infer that there is any kind of commitment on our part.

The issue of off-site levies and property tax. The discussions that I've had with municipalities and with developers on off-site levies indicate that there is some need for some further clarification on exactly what was intended and what can and cannot be or, more importantly, what should and should not be included under off-site levies. That discussion is ongoing, and hopefully we will come to some kind of a consensus on that soon because there is some confusion on both sides of the issue, quite frankly.

Finally, the area of property tax. When I suggested that municipalities could have a higher share of property tax, that was based on the premise that the province would give tax room, would walk away from the education property tax and then provide some tax room to municipalities. So, again, purely speculative. Food for thought. But there certainly would not be any intent – in fact, I think the taxpayers would make it pretty clear: this was not an idea that the cities would simply pay for infrastructure by raising taxes. The idea was that if the province could find alternate sources for education, there may be some tax room there for municipalities.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have just a general comment, and then I have a number of very specific questions that I don't expect the minister to necessarily have time to deal with today, but in writing, because they're perhaps too specific.

The only general comment I'd like to make at the start: I'm not sure how you do it, but it seems to me that as long as I've been involved in the political world, there has always been a discussion, for lack of a better term, of revenue sharing; in other words, how best to get money from the provincial government to the municipal governments. I remember a statement by one former, long before this minister's time, where he called the municipal governments the children of the province. That didn't go over very well at the time. You can appreciate that.

I think that it's still a concern. The municipal governments would like to have some way, in terms of revenue sharing, that they know what's coming: less tied-in grants, less yearly fluctuations in terms of how much money is coming in provincially, and the rest of it. I guess the point I'm making is that it's all the same taxpayers, and they as a government are in some ways closer to the public than we are. I think it would be helpful if we could do that.

Now, I know that when you talk about revenue sharing, there are probably a hundred different models of being able to do that. As a general comment, I think if we can move in that direction, everybody's better served. I think those at that level have never believed that because we're elected to the provincial level, somehow we're smarter than the people who are elected at that level. The people at the local level, whether they be in rural Alberta or the city of Edmonton, city of Calgary, Lethbridge, wherever the case may be, are the ones, I think, that can best make those decisions.

I would encourage the minister, and I'm not sure if they're looking at various funding models in terms of the discussions he's having with the municipalities, but as a general concept – and I don't, as I say, have a magic wand here to figure out how to do it – I really do believe that revenue sharing of some sort would be a way to go.

Very quickly, the questions I have, and again the minister can go to whatever he wants, but perhaps in writing.

Page 294 of the government estimates for Municipal Affairs indicates an increase, I believe, of 15 full-time equivalent employment positions. I'm sort of interested in what new positions are being created and which unit they will be employed in and, of that, how many are management and nonmanagement positions. I don't know if this is correct or not, but it's been brought to our attention that this department is experiencing difficulties in filling vacant positions that they currently have. I wonder if that's the case, and if so, how is the minister addressing this issue?

The AUMA and AAMD and C participated in a preliminary consultation on the restructuring of the Municipal Government Act over the past few years. I think the key point is that other key stakeholders at this time or before were not consulted. I guess questions flowing from that. Are the continuation of restructuring of the Municipal Government Act project costs included in the estimates provided, and if so, is the minister considering a full consultation with all the affected stakeholders, municipalities, and professional associations referenced in the Municipal Government Act? Is it the agenda of this minister to continue to move references currently contained in the act to regulations? We've seen some direction there. What assurances can the minister provide to municipalities and associations that regulatory changes will not be made without their input? Will the minister continue to use the excuse of the restructuring project to hold up other requests for changes in the Municipal Government Act?

Moving along, do the estimates include funding to work on other legislative and regulatory amendments this year? If so, what acts and regulations are affected, and what commitment will the minister make that all affected stakeholders will be consulted?

Another area. The budget for the Municipal Government Board and the assessment services unit are included in these estimates. Now, Telus has appealed its linear assessment, as the minister is well aware, to the Municipal Government Board for several years, and it's cost taxpayers in this province I believe at a minimum several hundred thousands of dollars to defend the linear assessments prepared by this province. Taxpayers in the province pay for the operation of the Municipal Government Board, who are ruling against the assessments prepared by the same ministry that their operating costs are funding. The question is: is the Municipal Government Board making poor decisions, or is the province preparing inaccurate assessments? What amount has this minister included in these estimates to defend the linear appeals of Telus and other companies appealing their linear assessments? Any information we can get in that whole area of linear assessments.

Next question: how much funding is included in these estimates to research and to update regulated assessment rates? Can farmers who are already affected by BSE and extremely low rates for grain expect increases in their property assessed with regulated rates provided by the province?

I want to just quickly cover the database that was created over the past few years to collect and analyze asset information collected by all the municipalities in this province. How much funding for the continuation of this project is included in these estimates, and how is the confidential information on assets of businesses and individuals who own land and property in this province protected from entering the hands of criminals? Of course, we're coming from what happened in Health, and we're just asking if there are any concerns there, what the protections are. The grant funds to municipalities and private companies were distributed over the past three years in reference to the asset project. How much funding is included in this year's estimates for additional grants?

Finally, funds included on page 288 under Expense, Unconditional Municipal Grants, include funding for more grant funds to be distributed without conditions. How can this government be held accountable when they continually give out grants with no conditions?

Are funds included in these estimates to provide education to the public on how to understand their assessment and education taxes? That, as the minister knows, has become a major issue. We wonder if that information is being communicated to the public, and if so, how?

Are funds included in these estimates for municipalities to cover off the cost of calculating, collecting, and including the education property tax and assessment notices? If not, is it the intention of this minister to force municipalities to perform these duties through legislative requirements when they're already short of resources to adequately maintain their municipalities?

Those are very specific questions to the minister. I don't expect answers now because I know that they're fairly detailed, but I would like to get these sorts of questions, if I could, written when the minister has time because I think there are some very important issues in there.

In conclusion, because I know that there are other members who want to get in, I do want to thank the minister for his commitment from the bill that went through the Legislature on the community revitalization levy. He knows that we have some concerns about that. As I said in the past, I think that can be a good thing or a bad thing depending how it goes forward. The minister has given his commitment, and I thank him for that. At that time we'll bring our concerns, at the regulations, so I won't bore him here with that.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Chairman, there were about three questions there that I would like to answer. I'm also cognizant of the fact that others want to speak. What I would suggest that we do is I'll take notes, we'll let others speak, and then if there's time for me to answer questions, I'll do it at the end. Then anybody who wants to get their questions on the record will have an opportunity to do so.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to participate in this budget debate on the Ministry of Municipal Affairs. Frankly, when I went through the budget and through the business plan, I felt that this is a ministry whose budget has the potential to receive very little debate in this Chamber if certain easy and simple criteria are met. If this ministry runs as the people want it to and if its decisions are reached only after full consultation with the stakeholders – the cities, towns, villages, and communities of this province – then we as the opposition members will only have to give it the nod of approval. I would be the first member in line to congratulate this minister on a job well done. There are two simple rules – consultation and listening to the people – and if met would make this budget pretty undebatable.

I would remind the minister that when we were discussing Bill 28, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2005, we as the Official Opposition indicated our support for it. We threw our weight behind it, and rightly so. The ministry consulted with the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, and they, too, agreed with what was proposed. However, I heard from people on boards or the city councils in Edmonton and Calgary, at least, that they were not fully integrated in this consultation process. The Alberta Urban Municipalities Association was involved quite heavily. These individual boards or councils have to be more informed and more involved in the decision-making process. They agreed with the law, by the way. They agreed with the amendment, but they just wanted to be involved at an earlier stage.

I would urge the minister that maybe in the future at least the largest six cities, maybe not every single town and every single village but the largest cities in the province, like Edmonton, Calgary, Medicine Hat, Lethbridge, Red Deer, and Fort McMurray, could be involved parallel to and in conjunction with the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association.

My questions today are really simple and straightforward. Number one: why is spending for public safety estimated at only $14 million for this fiscal year, 2005-06, compared to the actual spending of $21 million in 2003-04 or the $37 million or $38 million in the 2004-05 government forecast? Public safety is definitely a top priority and should be on this government's front burner. I'm talking about things like safety services, fire protection, emergency response training, emergency management, et cetera. It would make sense to allocate the funds initially and then hope that we never have to use it. It's like buying insurance. You buy insurance, you pay the premiums, and you hope that you never have to use the insurance or never have to collect on it.

Again, we want to invest fully and adequately in things like emergency services and training and hope that we never face an emergency or a disaster instead of this government's preferred practice where it underestimates the expenditures to make the budget look cosmetically good and prudent. Then almost all the ministries and the departments would turn around and come back to this Assembly 10 or 11 months later, and they're asking for supplementary supply, which adds up to thousands of millions of dollars every year.

My take on this is: there is one taxpayer, there is one client, and all three levels of government are in place to serve that client. So we have the federal, the provincial, and the municipal bodies. They all have one purpose in existence and that is to serve the voter and the taxpayer.

So my question is: what is the point, then, of having a budget, approving a budget, if we inject money into it after the fact year in and year out? So I would rather see them budget more, and if we don't have to use it, fine. We can say that the budget was more than what we needed, which is a good thing, rather than lowballing it and using a smaller or a lesser estimate and then having to inject more money into it in supplementary supply.

Furthermore, we as the Official Opposition encourage the government to implement a plan, again in consultation with the municipalities, which would set out what expenditures are needed and when – so it's more of a planning approach – the future cost of maintenance and maintaining capital assets, things that we have to build and things that we have to fix, how the assets will be financed, and how much the municipality needs to spend to meet its ongoing financial obligations.

Delegation of authority is good. Allowing autonomy and flexibility is really good in decision-making, and that's one thing. But the other thing is downloading debt onto municipalities. I would make the comparison to what happened with the school boards, for example, when the government said, "You guys are responsible," but then we don't empower them. We don't furnish them with the tools that they need to carry on their duties, and they look bad. They're the bad guy, when, in fact, the government is undermining them by making them stand there and look responsible, but they're not being empowered enough.

So downloading debt onto the municipalities is definitely unacceptable. This is a province that claims to be debt free, and this is a province and this is a government which made it illegal to be in the red, made it illegal to accumulate any type of debt. However, having said that, why are we asking the municipalities to be responsible for picking up the tab for the $8 billion infrastructure debt? Maybe the hon. minister would say, "Well, this is a question for the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation," which is fine, but I think this government is one body. It's one caucus. So I don't think it's fair to the municipalities to say, "Here you go. You are responsible. You are autonomous. You are fully elected and duly elected. Carry on your duties," but then, "You know what? We'll only fund you this much."

Recently we heard about the $3 billion announcement over a few years, but, for example, Edmonton is going to only get $670-some million dollars, when, in fact, they need double that. And this is only one city. So I can extrapolate and talk about the other cities as well and then also the smaller communities, which are in dire need of help.

If we're enjoying the benefits of surpluses and enjoying the benefits of huge oil revenues, I think the Alberta Liberal idea to invest 25 per cent of the surplus in a capital account makes sense, and it's really something that I would urge the hon. minister to consider to empower the municipalities to eliminate their $8 billion infrastructure debt, you know, within eight or 10 or 12 years, which is a reasonable expectation, rather than spending the surplus money on, you know, the heritage fund, which the government doesn't like too much. So I think a capital account investment would be a superior and a more acceptable approach.

Again, we want to invest fully and adequately in things like emergency services and training and hope that we never face an emergency or a disaster instead of this government's preferred practice where it underestimates the expenditures to make the budget look cosmetically good and prudent. Then almost all the ministries and the departments would turn around and come back to this Assembly 10 or 11 months later, and they're asking for supplementary supply, which adds up to thousands of millions of dollars every year.

With that, I would cede the floor and encourage further debate or listen to the hon. minister. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and speak to the Municipal Affairs budget. As the elected member for Edmonton-Ellerslie a large part of my riding encompasses Mill Woods. It's no secret that my constituents are concerned about safety, not only my constituents but all Albertans, of course. They want their government to ensure their safety.

Mr. Chairman, today marks VE Day. I'm grateful for the sacrifices made by the veterans. They gave so that we all could enjoy a life of freedom and security. It is security that many people do not enjoy because of the criminal elements that exist. People want guarantees that when they lock their doors at night, families will be safe. Families also want to know that when they go for a walk, they will be safe, and so there needs to be more investment in the form of front-line men and women police officers. Our community at large desires nothing less. With the spending reduction of $23.7 million for public safety, what will this ministry do to ensure the safety of our community at large and all Albertans?

Women or ladies who may be extra aware of or embarrassed about their shape have low self-esteem and no motivation. Certainly, there are spas or exercise clubs, et cetera, but what can the government do to encourage them to pursue a more active and more integrated lifestyle? There is also the angle with respect to immigrant women who come here, and they are not even made aware of what's available to them, which programs are there for them to lose weight or keep fit or simply to interact with other female members of the community at large, to make them more comfortable, make them feel welcome, and allow them to get fit and be happier and more satisfied.

Mr. Chairman, I have some general questions I want to ask the hon. minister. When you make long-term plans, how do you identify, investigate, or facilitate all options to improve the quality of the projects, any project?

Number two, in my riding there's the Ellerslie Rugby Club. That site is already sold. They are searching for a new suitable site that would have long-term sustainability. Can the minister tell us the latest situation of this rugby club?

Mr. Chairman, municipalities currently have a municipal infrastructure debt estimated at between $7 billion and $9 billion. This is a result of decreased provincial transfers to municipalities as well as a downloading of provincial responsibilities onto municipalities. Municipalities need a stable plan that will assess their needs in advance and ensure that there are no funding shortfalls that will lead to massive infrastructure debt. Will this government provide Alberta's municipalities with the tools to raise revenue to deal with their changing and increasing needs?

I want to ask some financial questions. What is the reasoning behind the spending reduction of $23.7 million for public safety? With continued devastating structural fires throughout Alberta that destroy the homes and businesses of Albertans, why is the budget being reduced by $116,000 for the fire commissioner? Prevention, advance awareness, and rapid responses to disasters are necessary to protect Albertans throughout the province when disaster occurs. However, there has been a $395,000 reduction in the budget for branch management under the emergency management.

Mr. Chairman, this budget provides a spending increase of $364,000 for unconditional municipal grants. How will these grants benefit municipalities, and how will accountability of these grants be monitored? How will the spending increase of $229,000 in financial support to local authorities assist municipalities? The budget increased by 50 per cent, an amount of half a million dollars, for municipal sponsorship expenses. What is the reason for such a drastic budgetary increase, and how will this money be allocated?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wasn't sure if the minister was going to answer now or later. I have a number of comments and some questions as well for the minister. First of all, I'd like to speak briefly about the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford and the fact that it encompasses the interchange at 23rd Avenue and Calgary Trail, which has obviously been in the news a lot over the last year. Certainly, I recognize that with the $1 billion infrastructure grant that has finally come forward, Edmonton is benefiting to the tune of about $670 million, I think, and having spoken to Edmonton's councillors, they're actually quite appreciative of that.

However, I will remind this House that during last year's campaigning, it was certainly an issue at that time that the $1 billion that had been expected by the city of Edmonton had suddenly morphed into $750 million, and now that we have the actual formula defined, it's been reduced again to $670 million. It was certainly a concern for residents of Edmonton-Rutherford and, quite frankly, anybody who drives through the south end of the city that proceeding with that particular project might be delayed if, in fact, the original $1 billion ended up being somewhat less than that. Thanks to the foresight of city council, they've decided to proceed with that particular project even though the money is somewhat less than most of us had been expecting at some point.

Likewise I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview spoke of the LRT and the fact that it's now finally emerging from underground at the University hospital, and again city council is using the money that has come forward from Municipal Affairs to begin the next phase of bringing the LRT down to the old Heritage Mall site, where the current Century Park development is going to take place. Again, there had been some concern when that development was being contemplated at city council that anything less than the $1 billion might cause that to be set back, and city council has in their wisdom decided to proceed with that.

Unfortunately, what it means is that a number of other smaller projects, smaller than the interchange at 23rd Avenue and Calgary Trail and smaller than the planned expansion of the LRT, are going to have to now take a back seat. Certainly, when we met with city council recently as an opposition caucus, as I said, they were very appreciative of the money they are getting, but it does mean that other areas are going to have to be held back, and I think that is unfortunate.

Of course, the minister well knows that the city of Edmonton is undertaking a census, I think, as we speak to come up with more current numbers, and I imagine that the minister will be hearing from the city once they have those numbers showing that Edmonton has grown substantially compared to some other centres in recent years and perhaps we should even have received more funding.

I'd like to ask a couple of questions specific to the core business goals on page 367. Goal 1.4 talks about acting as "an advocate for municipalities within the provincial government to improve provincial responsiveness to municipal issues and concerns." I know that when my colleague from Edmonton-McClung spoke a few minutes ago, he complimented you, the ministry that is, on the job that you had done in terms of consultation with the AUMA on Bill 28, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2005. I know, having spoken to a number of members of AUMA myself, in fact, that there was good consultation.

But I was surprised – and I know we’ve relayed this information to you previously, I think – to learn upon speaking to a number of councillors themselves and a number of mayors themselves that they weren’t aware of the fact that that bill was before the House. I’m sure that it could be argued that that’s a breakdown in communications within the AUMA, but I would hope that the ministry would take that to note that, perhaps, we as a government could have done a better job of making sure that all of the various councils knew that there were amendments coming to the MGA, not just simply communicating that to the AUMA and trusting that they would then disseminate that information to everybody who might be affected. If we could have actually communicated directly with the various municipalities, I would think that that might have served us well.

Goal 1.5 under the core business goals talks about “an enhanced review of the Local Authorities Election Act [to] ensure that it is achieving desired results.” Of course, this is a timely goal, and I’m sure that’s why it’s in here, given some of the things that took place in Calgary during the most recent municipal election. But let’s be mindful that there were some serious concerns about irregularities in the Edmonton municipal election as well. I’d ask the minister if he could clarify for us just exactly what that review will entail, what it will look like, and what the timelines are on it so that we would have that information. I know of several people that have been involved in working on municipal elections, and they’re quite anxious to see the results of this particular review. So if you could share with us exactly what that would look like, I would appreciate it.

Now to a few more specific questions. At page 292 of the ministry estimates under Revenue – and you may have answered this already. I’ve been popping in and out a few times this afternoon, and I might have missed it. Transfers from the federal government are down $12 million. I’m not sure what that is, if it was a specific one-time transfer last year or what. Obviously, that’s a big chunk of money, and if you wouldn’t mind, if you haven’t already, sharing with us the reason for that transfer being down $12 million.

I notice that the revenue from premiums, fees, and licences is down $96,000. I would have thought, given that costs seem to go up on everything these days and given that most of the municipalities are booming in this province right now – we talk about that daily in the House and the need for infrastructure in Fort McMurray as an example. So I was surprised, quite frankly, to see that the total revenue from premiums, fees, and licences is going down. Maybe you could provide an explanation for why that is the case.

Then there is a line item, other revenue, and it shows $1.781 million. That’s an awful lot of money just to classify it as “other.” I’m wondering if you could share with us what makes up $1.781 million because it’s, as I say, a lot of money. I think I’ve said in the House before that given that we’re supposedly out of the business of being in business, here we’re making almost $2 million from something, and it just says “other.” I’d like to know what that is coming from.

I guess my last question, if I can just jump back to the business plans for a second. Performance measure 1(a) in the business plan – let’s just see if I can find it here. I’d actually like to read it if I can refer to it again. It talks about the performance measure “level of satisfaction with the Local Government Services Division’s activities.” I won’t read it all. Under that one the last actual number was 88 per cent, and I note that for this year the target is 80 per cent. It just jumped out at me. Eighty-eight per cent is a wonderful figure. I would think that most ministries would be happy to see numbers like that coming back in terms of satisfaction with work that they’re doing. I’m a little curious why in this particular case it seems like we’re setting our standard or our expectations a little lower, and if the minister might be able to provide for me some explanation as to why it appears as if we’ve dropped our expectation in that particular regard.

So I would hope that the minister might be able to answer some of those questions today, and I will take my seat and wait. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’ve got a couple of comments with regard to this Ministry of Municipal Affairs. We talk about transportation. Edmonton-Decore is, in fact, a constituency which has spread out. It borders the Yellowhead Trail right to the perimeter of the city, so you can anticipate some of the problems that people would have being able to make their way back with regard to transportation. I think that if we talked about investing in a little bit more public transportation, we would certainly be within our scope with being able to achieve some of the realistic goals that are set out by the Kyoto as well.

We talk about transportation, not only public. I’m not sure if your ministry covers DATS, which in Edmonton is the disabled adult transportation service or system. There is an increasing number of people who are not as mobile as they once were, and that finite number just doesn’t seem to be able to take into account the time that these people have to wait. You have to make an appointment, in fact, for the disabled adult transportation system or service, DATS, to ensure that you do have them be able to come.

I think that’s extremely concerning for people. They may not be able to just pick up and call when they have an emergency or an appointment. They have to make a call well in advance. Well, as you know, our lives just don’t dictate around sometimes predetermined appointments. We need to be able to have that service available to us. I’m wondering if the ministry would be able to address that concern. As I said, there are a number of adults within my constituency who are not as mobile as they once were, given the age that they are now.

Again, it’s a spread-out constituency with new communities developing on an ongoing basis, and I’m not sure how the transportation system is going to be able to address all the needs. Certainly, I realize that it’s one that’s not only debatable within Edmonton but in all the outlying areas such as Fort McMurray, Calgary, Red Deer, and other municipalities.

We talked about a reduction, at least my good Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie did, a spending reduction of $23.779 million in public safety. Now, you talked about fire, ambulance, and police, that I’m assuming come under that public safety. I’ll talk about fire just for a minute here. We’ve had a number of high-profile fires within Edmonton that have taken out not only apartment buildings but businesses.

It’s no fault of the department itself. I think it’s just a matter of some of the things and the circumstances that they’ve had to deal with. Some have been in the dead of winter, when the temperatures get quite cold and the lines freeze. Unfortunately, lives are at risk. The buildings are lost. Because we are in a winter climate as far as I know, I’m sure that we could come up with some new technologies to be able to equip the men and women who do in fact fight the fires with the ability to be able to fight them year-round.

The ones I’m concerned with: we had ones out in Clareview, we had the chicken plant down on the south side, we had the Chinese market on 97th Street, all within the dead of winter and all faced the same circumstances. It was almost certain and total loss. That's because of the fact that the lines were freezing during the time that they were needed. So I'm not sure if this ministry is looking into alternative ways to be able to find some sort of, maybe, glycol in the line that wouldn't freeze when the weather gets below the minus 20, minus 30.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, but pursuant to unanimous consent granted by the Assembly earlier this afternoon to waive Standing Order 58(5), I would invite the Government House Leader to move that the committee rise and report progress on the estimates of the Department of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chair, would it be appropriate just to go to a vote at the moment and then rise?

The Deputy Chair: If there are no further speakers. Okay.

Are you ready for the vote, then, after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Municipal Affairs for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:
Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases $128,417,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report the estimates of the Department of Municipal Affairs and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, for the following department.

Municipal Affairs: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $128,417,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Monday.

[Motion carried; at 5:27 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 20 very special guests from the Fort Saskatchewan pioneer club. They are accompanied today and led by their president, Mr. Al McNeil. These 20 guests are very active in the community of Fort Saskatchewan and do just a huge amount of volunteer work on behalf of many other citizens. I would ask them to rise in the gallery and receive the traditional warm support of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a constituent and volunteer in the Calgary-Buffalo constituency, Mr. Wayne Ellis. Wayne is in his fourth year of commerce at the U of C, and he's here to observe the inner workings of the Assembly. I'd like to ask Wayne to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, my guests are not in the Assembly yet. If I could wait and introduce them later. Thank you.

The Speaker: Indeed.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of grade 6 students from the Rimbey elementary school. They are accompanied today by their teacher, Mr. Jim Moore; parent helpers Mr. Jim Reiser, Judith Woolsey, Emily Breton, Mrs. Brenda Kramer, and Mrs. Gwen Olsen; and another accompanying person, Mr. Jim Therrien. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would like to ask them now to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to introduce today two fine gentlemen who are responsible for assisting our citizens of Alberta not only when there is a fire and training Albertans on how to prevent fires from showing up but in environmental disasters, train derailments, and when bioterrorism could perhaps occur. Mr. Gord Colwell, the president of the Alberta Fire Fighters Association, and Mr. Brent Shelton, the treasurer of the very same association, are with us. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today that I introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly Mrs. Cheryl Bissell. She's a councillor for Yellowhead county. She's got her chaperone today, her granddaughter, Ryley Huber. I'd ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I could stand here and say that my guests have just arrived, but I have to say that my eyes are failing me as I get up in age. I'm privileged to say that this is the second group of students I've had to introduce in this session, which is rather rare for a southern Alberta MLA. This is a special group of students. They are from the Webber Academy in Calgary-West. The Webber Academy was started eight years ago by a former member of this Assembly, Dr. Neil Webber, and is also a special place for my colleague from Calgary-Foothills. We have 45 grade 5 students in both galleries today. They are accompanied not only by Dr. Webber but by teachers Janet Adamson, Janice Chan, and Daniel Mondaca. I would ask them to rise and receive the welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to present to you today four of Alberta's outstanding innovation leaders. They're here representing the Alberta Science and Technology Leadership Foundation, best known for its ASTech awards. With us today is Guy Mallabone, who is the chair of the ASTech Foundation and the vice-president of external relations for SAIT. Along with Guy is Dr. Michael Brett, who was the winner of the 2003 outstanding leadership in Alberta technology award for his work in nanomaterials technology. He's also the director of engineering physics at the U of A and a Canada research chair. Dr. Jed Harrison, a professor of chemistry at the U of A, was the winner of the 2002 outstanding leadership in Alberta technology award for his lab-on-a-chip. Dr. Talib Rajwani was a corecipient of the 2002 Leaders of Tomorrow award for his work in looking for the cause of scoliosis, a spinal disorder in adolescents. I would note that Dr. Rajwani's parents and sister are also in the gallery. They would want you to put October 14 on your calendar because that is the date of the ASTech awards this year in Calgary. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions to make today. The first is to introduce the parents of the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, Art and Barbara Miller. They have lived in Pleasantview since 1965, 40 years if my math is right. Speaking of math, they have five grown children and, very impressively, there were 17 foster children who went through the Miller household. Rick is the eldest. His parents have recently returned from a holiday in Arizona. This is their first chance to see their son in action. I don't think they're surprised to see him here because they say that when he was 12 years old, every sentence that he uttered began with, "When I'm Prime Minister . . ." I would ask Art and Barbara Miller to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the STEP student for Edmonton-Riverview, who will be there for several months. His name is Ben Taylor, and he will be spending the summer trying to keep my life organized and help out in the constituency. Ben has just completed his second year at the U of A, majoring in political science with a minor in English. He's been a recipient of the Canadian millennium excellence scholarship award, an advanced placement national scholar, and also a Jason Lang and Alexander Rutherford scholar. He's very active in the soccer scene and is also in the Edmonton Youth Choir. I'd ask Ben to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a group of 38 individuals I would like to introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly. This group is comprised of 34 students and four adults. They are from Terrace Heights school. The group is led by teachers Mr. Jaques and Mrs. Stead, and they are accompanied this afternoon by parent volunteers Mrs. Miller and Mr. St. Dennis. The group from Terrace Heights is in the public gallery, and I would now ask them to rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Jung-Suk Ryu. He is the STEP student for the constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods. Jung is 20 years old. He has completed his second year of studies, majoring in political science at the University of Alberta. He currently holds an associate of music degree, runs a music school, and is a member of the Alberta music teachers' association. He has a passion for local politics, wrote opinion columns on various topics in the Edmonton Journal for two years, and founded Speak Out!, a network for high school and university students to communicate with local and national leaders, involving over 15 Members of the Legislative Assembly. He also ran as the youngest candidate in the 2004 municipal election and came through with close to 4,000 votes. We're happy to have him assisting us to meet the constituency needs. I'll ask Jung to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure about my guests, so maybe later on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Sheila McKeage and Wilena Waechter. Sheila is an environmental biologist and is currently employed by a business known as Fiera. Wilena is a nurse in the community of Banff and volunteers her time with new immigrants. Both are here to watch the proceedings. I would ask that they rise and receive the warm greeting of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly the executive of the Hanna Youth Council. The Hanna Youth Council has been extraordinarily successful in increasing youth involvement and participation in their community, with involvement from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the town of Hanna. They're currently working on a pool fundraiser to build a new swimming pool in their town and planning a 1st of July barbecue. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to rise as I call their names: Shawna Wallace, who is the economic development community services co-ordinator for the town of Hanna, and youth council members Riley Georgsen, Kali Taylor, Dawson Kennedy, and Kaila Lewis. I would ask that the members of this Assembly give these fine young people a very, very warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you one of my favourite constituents today and the best present the Member for Calgary-Shaw received for Mother's Day this year; that is, the return of her second son, Jeff Ady, from serving a two-year mission in the New York South Mission. He's here today examining postsecondary options. I'd like to welcome him back to Alberta and ask if my son, Jeff, would rise and receive the warm welcome of the House today.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Securities Commission

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The RCMP's integrated market enforcement team facilitates co-operation between the RCMP and provincial securities commissions. Its goal is to have the RCMP work closely with securities regulators, federal and provincial authorities, and police of local jurisdiction. IMET, as it is called, is just one of many examples where the ASC co-operates with the RCMP and other provincial securities commissions regarding specific enforcement cases. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. Could she inform this House: why will the ASC waive its confidentiality exemption for the RCMP and other provincial securities commissions but not for this province's Auditor General?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Securities Commission is now in the process of reviewing what they may release under their legislation. I don't believe the concern is at all in reviewing the information; it's in the reporting of it and ensuring that the confidentiality remains then.

Dr. Taft: The Auditor General Act covers that.

My second question to the same minister: what steps has the Finance minister taken to ensure that enforcement files at the ASC are not being destroyed or tampered with?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I think that's a preposterous suggestion.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Again to the same minister: why hasn't the Finance minister brought in a truly independent, out-of-province interim chair instead of yet another Tory friend?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I do appreciate the opportunity to respond on behalf of the Deputy Premier. The hon. member alludes to Mr. Valentine, of course. The opposition has a long history of smearing good Albertans, and Mr. Valentine is, indeed, a good Albertan who is eminently qualified. He was the Auditor General of Alberta from 1995 to 2002, he previously served as chair of the Financial Advisory Committee of ASC, he's an adjunct professor in the Faculty of Medicine at the University of Calgary, and he recently completed a six-month term as interim vice-president, finance and services, for the University of Calgary.

He is also currently a member of the board of trustees and the audit committee of Fording Canadian Coal Trust, Superior Plus Incorporated, PrimeWest Energy, and Resmore Trust Company. He graduated with a bachelor of commerce degree with distinction from UBC and is a fellow of the Institute of Chartered Accountants. Mr. Speaker, most importantly, Mr. Valentine's integrity – this is from the opposition.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Governments and organizations across Canada are implementing whistle-blower protection for their employees, but this government refuses to follow the lead. When serious allegations of wrongdoing at the Alberta Securities Commission were raised by employees, those employees were publicly insulted as cowardly and depraved. They were intimidated, bullied, and one was even fired. My question is to the Minister of Finance. Given that by July 1 of this year all companies regulated by the Alberta Securities Commission are to have whistle-blower protection in place in those companies, why does this government continue to deny its own employees equivalent protection?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have said consistently that employees can feel very confident in bringing forward any of their concerns to me, and they have brought forward some concerns. They've done it under the basis of anonymity and confidentiality. I've said in this House before and I'll repeat it one more time: if an employee is fired from that organization or any organization that's under, certainly, my purview, they have every opportunity and every avenue to proceed, to ensure that this release was done in the proper way.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. To the same minister: given the serious repercussions ASC employees face for voicing concerns about irregularities at the ASC, does this minister see the hypocrisy in companies at the ASC being required to protect whistle-blowers while the ASC itself does not provide that protection?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Valentine assumed his chairmanship of the ASC today. This morning he met with senior management. He had an opportunity to go around and be introduced to the staff. I think the staff were very pleased with that opportunity to meet Mr. Valentine. I have every confidence in Mr. Valentine's interim chairmanship and that these issues will be resolved.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier would like to supplement my answer.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I would love to supplement. I would like to table a press release from the Alberta Liberal opposition. It's dated October 11, 2001. The leader at that time was Kevin Taft according to this printout. It says:

Mr. Valentine's integrity and desire to improve the way government conducts business has increased the credibility of the Office of the Auditor General. My colleagues in the Official Opposition and I extend our best wishes to Mr. Valentine.

The Speaker: Okay. We now have two points of order: the Leader of the Official Opposition, the official House leader. We'll deal with those at the conclusion.

Hon. leader, you have one more question in this set.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will this minister immediately do the right thing and implement whistle-blower protection rules at the Alberta Securities Commission to protect the commission's own staff?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, as I said, the new chair, the interim chair has had an opportunity to meet staff. I've said consistently that staff can feel very confident in bringing any of their concerns forward to me. I think that we'd all be best served if we let the interim chair do his job.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Calgary Ward 10 Election

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to the Calgary ward 10 voting scandal this Tory government launched an inspection whose terms of reference limited the investigator's ability to get to the bottom of the fiasco. Yet even the police were surprised when the inspection was terminated last week. Legal experts note that a full independent public inquiry as requested by the Liberal opposition, Calgary city council, Calgary Court of Queen's Bench would have been able to legally proceed alongside the police investigation. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: given that the federal government had the courage to call the Gomery inquiry, which is getting to the bottom of Adscam, why won't the Alberta government be equally transparent and accountable and courageous and call a full public inquiry into ward 10?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, apart from the heightened level of rhetoric in the preamble the question is essentially the same as the question that was asked by the Leader of the Opposition last week, and the answer is exactly the same. The legal advice that I had as Minister of Municipal Affairs was that the inspection process could go on concurrently with the police investigation. The recommendation was that we proceed with an inspection as opposed to a full-blown inquiry because of the fact that anything done at the inquiry level could possibly affect the outcome of a police investigation and criminal charges and the ensuing court case that could come out of that. So that's the very simple explanation.

Mr. Taylor: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: if that's the case, then why was the inspection terminated? Was it fear of another Conservative public embarrassment?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the inspection has not been terminated. The inspection is very much still on course. Mr. Clark is in the process of completing his report. In fact, Mr. Clark will be hearing arguments from the significant players in the case and then will be forwarding the report.

At the appropriate time I am more than prepared to table documentation. Two documents here: one is dated December 14, and the other one is dated December 30, and these are the news releases that were issued by my office at the time that the inspection was put in place. I just want to read the first line of the inspection release. It says, "A provincial inspection will be held into Calgary's October 18, 2004 Ward 10 election to determine whether any irregularities occurred during the voting process." A short time later another press release was issued with the terms of reference, and the terms of reference very clearly say, "the municipal inspection is to deal with matters not dealt with by police authorities."

Mr. Speaker, the process is very clear. The process is proceeding exactly as it was intended to proceed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will this minister, then, instruct the inspector, the investigator, to resume his inspection and talk to all the witnesses before he writes his report?

Mr. Renner: In fact, Mr. Speaker, the inspector has done exactly that. I expect the inspector to provide me with a full report, to report to me what were any irregularities in the election process and what his recommendations are to ensure that these same kinds of irregularities do not come into future elections. The purpose of this process is to restore confidence to the electoral system in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

Health Facilities Review Committee

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The crisis in long-term care is due in part to inadequate inspections of our nursing homes and other long-term care facilities. Instead of professional, well-trained investigators doing surprise inspections, we have a Tory-friendly committee headed up by a government MLA that likes to visit these centres and talk informally with residents, staff, and management. Long-term care facilities receive such visits at best every two to three years. My question is to the Premier. When will the government take action to replace a Tory-friendly citizens' committee headed up by a government MLA with trained professional inspectors who have the authority to issue orders to correct deficiencies in Alberta's long-term care facilities?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I take exception to the term "Tory-friendly committee." The Auditor General, of course, has looked into this matter. While I haven't read the Auditor General's report, I am told he has made some good recommendations, which are being acted upon immediately so that care in long-term care centres can be improved. Our first priority is to ensure that people living in long-term care facilities are safe and that they are treated with dignity and respect. Now, I'm told that the minister of health and the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports are already addressing many of the Auditor General's recommendations and will continue to do so.

The Speaker: I do not believe this report has been shared with the hon. members yet, and it won't be tabled till later this afternoon, so many members in this Assembly have no idea what's transpiring here.

Mr. Mason: Nor do I, Mr. Speaker, but we still need to get to the bottom of it. I haven't seen the report because it hasn't been released to me.

Instead of dodging the question, will the Premier commit to immediate implementation of adequate standards, including frequent, professional, and unannounced inspections?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, my apologies. The report will be released, I understand it, in exactly one-half an hour from now. Obviously, the two ministers have the report, have reported generally the results of the report to cabinet, and have indicated that many of the recommendations have already been implemented, are in the process of being implemented, or will be implemented.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, why has the government refused to follow the lead of provinces like Ontario, who make the results of long-term care facility inspections public and even post them on the Internet?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if that's one of the recommendations, but if it is, we'll accept the recommendation. We tend to accept 98, 99 per cent of all recommendations that are put forward by the Auditor General.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Kyoto Climate Change Agreement

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As cited in the rural development strategy and known to virtually every member in this Assembly, Alberta's agricultural producers are excellent stewards of the land; however, they often bear the cost of maintaining the land that all Albertans get to enjoy. This land also serves another purpose. It acts as a carbon sink, reducing the overall effect of greenhouse gas emission. My question is for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Given that agricultural land is an excellent carbon sink and given that the federal government has recently approved the Kyoto agreement, is there a way that Alberta producers can benefit from the continued stewardship of that land?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The federal government really has been dragging their feet on this. You know, what they came out with early on was they were telling producers how much the Kyoto agreement might benefit them in terms of their environmental stewardship; however, to the detriment of a lot of forward-thinking producers they haven't really shown us anything besides the broad statements and the comments that they've made. They have no concrete plans about how we might be able to do this.

You know, there is a cost to environmental stewardship that is being borne by the producers right now in rural Alberta. We think there should be a reward that goes along with that. We haven't really seen anything yet from the federal government on that, which is very, very unfortunate, but we hope that perhaps in the future that something might come of it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental is to the same minister. Since the federal government has approved the Kyoto agreement without any implementation plan or one even apparently forthcoming, can the minister tell this Assembly if the Alberta government is working on a plan?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, thank you. We are looking at some various solutions that might meet the needs of our producers in addition to working on some of the protocols of definitions in conjunction with the federal government. We're trying to push the federal government to speed up as quickly as they can in terms of coming up with a carbon credit plan. We've been asking the federal government to show some leadership on it as it is really a federal issue in terms of the definition of those credits.

In reality, they should have figured this out before they signed the agreement. It would have been much more helpful and more beneficial to the producers because then instead of our industries here buying credits in foreign lands, they could have been transferring that wealth to the producers in Alberta and in Canada. We hope that we can help them move toward something closer to that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Applewood Park Community Association

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Community Development sent me a letter last month stating that Wild Rose Foundation grants are given to organizations for specific programs of that organization, and funds may not be transferred to another organization. But financial statements from Calgary Applewood Community Association show that they broke the rules and transferred the grants to another organization. My questions are to the Minister of Community Development. Why did the minister allow Applewood to break the rules and transfer grant funds to another organization?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I have difficulty speaking specifically to Applewood Park Community Association. You can appreciate that there are many, many grants that are given by the Wild Rose Foundation. But in general terms what I understood is that Applewood was a community association that was looking to do some work overseas and that in 2004 there were grants which they were eligible to apply for for the purposes of building some clean drinking water projects in Vietnam. Now, the way the Wild Rose Foundation works is that partners from Alberta may wish to oversee a project that is taking place in another jurisdiction, in this case Vietnam, and that the Applewood Park Community Association has accounted for the money as it was spent on the project in Vietnam.

I can take a look at this in some greater detail at some juncture, but I can say in general terms that there is a process by which Applewood would provide the financial statements to the Wild Rose Foundation, and if the Wild Rose Foundation is not satisfied or there's some discrepancy with respect to the accounting for the money being spent on the project that was being applied for, then the Wild Rose Foundation can initiate a process by which that money is returned.

Mr. Agnihotri: Does the minister know the name of the organization that ultimately received the funding?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what the answer to that is, and I expect that it is part of Applewood's submission to the Wild Rose Foundation for the accounting, which I think came toward the end of last month. It will probably disclose the entity that the money was spent with for the purposes of building these clean drinking water facilities in Vietnam.

Mr. Agnihotri: How does the minister know that the funding was spent according to the Wild Rose standards?

Mr. Mar: I don't know that, Mr. Speaker. That's the whole purpose of the Wild Rose Foundation having an ability to audit so that they can be assured that the money, every dollar, was spent in accordance with the rules that were established at the time that Applewood, or any other agency, may have been applying for that money. So there is a procedure by which Wild Rose will look at that dollar for dollar. I can assure the hon. member that the Wild Rose Foundation has a very, very long track record of supporting excellent projects in developing nations throughout the world.

Custom Environmental Services Ltd. Fire

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Residents of east Edmonton and Strathcona county are concerned following the fire at Custom Environmental Services on Thursday, the 5th of May. My question is to the Minister of Environment. What is being done by his department to determine what toxic chemicals were being stored at the site and what was in the smoke cloud?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to assure this Assembly and members in the direct area where the fire took place that number one is to ensure the public health safety of our citizens and, of course, restoring the environment to its original form. I want to say to the members of the Assembly that our air monitoring lab from environmental protection was on-site within literally minutes of when we were contacted by the emergency management area. As well, our immediate investigation has determined that based on the records of the company at this time, there were no PCBs being stored on-site. However, there were fluorescent light ballasts being stored, which may have contained, in actual fact, small quantities of PCB.

Our investigation is ongoing, Mr. Speaker, but I want to assure the citizens in that area that everything, of course, has been done to protect the interest of their clean air and with the co-operation of the many emergency agencies that were involved on-site.

Mr. Lougheed: To the same minister: what role does his ministry play in assisting the fire departments on-site?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I want to first of all congratulate specifically the city of Edmonton fire emergency services and also Strathcona county emergency service units and other emergency agencies that were there, as I'm sure all members of this Assembly join me in congratulating them. Ultimately, what we want to do first and foremost is work on the command centre with the fire officials in providing them with the necessary data so they can make the proper decisions when it comes to if, in fact, an evacuation should take place or not, which, of course, did happen in this particular instance.

Also, I want to say about our air monitoring vehicle: we're working right now with the city of Edmonton, where, in fact, we're going to be having some more emergency unit vehicles on-site because, as you realize, as we collect the data, it's an extremely dangerous situation, so we work in close partnership with the emergency officials, in this case with the city of Edmonton and Strathcona county emergency officials.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, I'm wondering if the department has some new initiatives with respect to ongoing monitoring to assist those departments.

Mr. Boutilier: Absolutely so, Mr. Speaker. I can assure all members of this House and all Albertans that we will do the utmost, working in collaboration with emergency officials. Remember, the first objective when the fire took place was working in collaboration to put the fire out. Then at the same time our investigation is ongoing. We have lab samples that are coming forward, and we'll be reporting also back to the citizens in the area, and I can assure this House that we'll report back to this House on the findings of our very comprehensive investigations that are being carried out.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

2:10 Highway Construction

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. According to the government Transportation website, almost half, 44 per cent to be exact, of Alberta highways will be in fair to poor condition by 2008. The cost of the Anthony Henday Drive P3 has more than doubled from its original $241 million estimate to its current $493 million taxpayer bill. The twinning of highway 63 to Fort McMurray will be spread out over 10 years while it's been 40 years and still waiting in Calgary for a southern ring road bridge to cross the Elbow River to eliminate Glenmore gridlock. My questions are all to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Does the minister consider a score of 56 per cent good enough for Alberta's highways?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much. The simple answer to that is no. Mr. Speaker, we do have a considerable amount of work that needs to be done on Alberta highways. We need to keep Alberta on the move. We need to keep the transportation of goods and services rolling in Alberta. So the simple answer is no.

Part of my job as Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation is to ensure that the roads are in good shape, to improve the amount of roads out there that are able to be travelled upon. That's something I take very seriously, and it's something we're attempting to do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How can the minister justify the multimillion dollar cost overruns of road projects such as the Anthony Henday, highway 11, and highway 725, to name just a few?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much. First of all, Mr. Speaker, on highway 11 we added an extra truck-haul route to the twinning part, which added approximately $82,000 to the road construction.

On highway 725, unfortunately, we were $3 million over a $7 million project simply because there were some landslides that actually delayed construction and caused us to do a considerable amount of work so that there would not be any landslides again.

Mr. Speaker, on the Anthony Henday we actually expanded the scope of the project. We added many more interchanges to allow the Anthony Henday to be completely free flowing. It's roughly 120-lane kilometres of road, and there are now 24 interchanges and bridges on that particular route. That's what accounted for the $493 million, and that's what accounted for the increase from the initial cost as well as cost overages that have occurred in the last three years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why should the residents, workers, and oil sands developers of Fort McMurray be forced by this government to play highway 63 road-risk roulette for another decade?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, last week in conjunction with the Minister of Environment we made a very important announcement for Fort McMurray. The announcement was $530 million dollars to be spent over the next 10 years to upgrade highway 881; to upgrade highway 63, adding in passing lanes, adding in staging areas as well as four-laning the route from Suncor to Syncrude. Included in that are four interchanges in the city of Fort McMurray as well as numerous other issues.

I made it very plain when I went up there that I would like to see that time frame accelerated. I would like to see that time frame accelerated down to four or five years, and certainly that's what we're working toward. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, it does depend on the amount of money that we have in the upcoming budgets. I am hopeful that there will be more money in there and that we can accelerate that to the four- or five-year time frame, which is very important for the people of Fort McMurray.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Health Symposium Webcast

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Like many of my colleagues I was unable to attend the health care symposium due to scheduling conflicts. Luckily, our government created a webcast, which was available live to all the world. On that webcast I was able to listen to the speeches, actually watch the speakers, and I was also able to clearly see the overheads. It truly was just like having a front-row seat. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can you provide the members with access to those same speeches so that we can refer them to our constituents?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, over the next 30 days those will be available over the web through Health and Wellness, and if there's any difficulty in accessing any of those PowerPoint presentations, we'll be pleased to follow through for any member of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. My only supplemental is for the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. Such a webcast requires the use of high-speed Internet, one of the capabilities of the SuperNet. Would the minister please give us an update on the availability of the SuperNet across Alberta?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to make one point very clear right off the bat. The Alberta SuperNet is much more than an application or a service. It's a giant highway over which you can run any number of applications. The Internet is just one service. The health symposium was delivered via webcast, which is simply broadcasting over the Internet. Depending on the event you're holding, webcasting is a good option. The quality of a webcast depends on the quality and speed of your Internet connection.

SuperNet can have many participant sites interacting with each other. For example, you could have experts in different SuperNet sites interacting with one another in a virtual panel session. We have meetings in our department using SuperNet video conferencing with people in Calgary on a regular basis. You could hook up a Smart board and have multimedia presentations live. You could invite rural Albertans to their local school or library, where they can participate, ask questions, and add their own perspective. This is all video conferencing, and you could easily add webcasting over the Internet so Albertans in rural SuperNet communities could view the session from home or work over a high-speed Internet connections. SuperNet thinks big, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Enron Activities in Alberta

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government knew that the Competition Bureau was in the middle of investigating Enron for market manipulation when they let Enron participate in the power purchase arrangement auction in the summer of 2000. Court evidence shows an Enron trader stating in regard to that auction:

. . . the only unit that's been bid on is Sundance B, and I'm just wondering when these three or four other people move around a bit and everybody's got a unit, is just – that the best thing would be to slow down, but . . . some of . . . these other clowns are on these units, so they're mispriced.

My first question is to the Minister of Energy. In what way were the power purchase arrangement auctions mispriced?

Mr. Melchin: I'm not certain of the preamble, what all that meant. If you would forward that preamble to us, we'll take a look at that.

In respect to the power purchase arrangements, they were put out on an open bid and tender and were appropriately priced by the market.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I'll be glad to table that at the appropriate time.

The Speaker: Well, it's in Hansard anyway. It doesn't have to be tabled.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, my next question: why did this government allow Enron to buy power generation in Alberta when they knew that Enron was being investigated at the same time for market manipulation and price fixing?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, fortunately in this country we do go under the presumption of innocence. That issue still has been investigated, as he said. The federal Competition Bureau did come back, back then, and found nothing that they could pursue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that Enron had control over power generation in Alberta while they were being investigated, did the government put extra surveillance on Enron to ensure that they didn't withhold the generation that they had purchased to drive up electricity prices in this province?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, there's no one party, Enron or any other, that had control over the marketplace. The great thing that did happen is that numerous entrants came through and provided generation. Today as a result of that – I've got to re-emphasize, as a great result of that – the consumers in Alberta continue to have the lowest nonhydro rates in this country.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday a witches' brew of toxic chemicals, including PCBs, exploded, leading to a fire in southeast Edmonton that burned out of control for eight hours. I think many Edmontonians, including myself, were surprised that these sorts of toxic, dangerous chemicals are allowed to be stored and treated in quonset huts with fabric roofs in the middle of town. The owner of the facility says that he plans to reopen his business as early as tomorrow. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Why do we spend tens of millions of dollars every year subsidizing the money-losing Swan Hills toxic waste plant and then turn around and allow operators like Custom Environmental Services to store and treat toxic chemicals, including PCBs, in the middle of a major metropolitan area?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I want to first of all thank the hon. member for commenting on the province of Alberta's leadership pertaining to Swan Hills because that type of facility is ultimately an incredible leader across this country, if not North America. So I thank the hon. member for that.

Pertaining specifically to the fire that the hon. member mentions, it's a concern of ours. We're doing investigation. No opening will take place pertaining to the facility until, in fact, all environmental regulations are followed to the letter and spirit of the law, I can assure all members of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. To the same minister: you know, given that it took hours for air quality monitoring equipment to be operational at the site of the fire, how can nearby residents take any comfort from the ministry saying that human health was not compromised during this fire?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, perhaps allow me to provide a quote – and I will table this at the appropriate time – from the medical officer of Capital health, who stated, and I quote: there shouldn't be any long-term impact based on what took place because of the excellent work by the fire officials in that area.

We're all in this together: the fire department, the air monitoring people from Alberta Environment, disaster services people. We all work together to protect the interests of Albertans and the environment, and that's exactly what we've done today, tomorrow, and well into the future, I can assure all Albertans.

Mr. Eggen: But how could the hon. minister know that human health was not negatively affected by the explosion of this toxic brew of chemicals unless follow-up testing is done on emergency personnel, workers, and nearby residents? I think they owe that to them.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, once again, our investigation is ongoing. Once again, our air monitoring from Alberta protection were on the command site within minutes of the event taking place. Once again, our investigation is ongoing. We're investigating all of the air monitoring that we've done as well as the preliminary air monitoring we did on the day of the accident.

Mr. Speaker, our first objective is working with emergency officials to put out the darn fire and, at the same time, continue to work in terms of protecting the environment well into the future. Our investigation is ongoing, and I can assure this hon. member that we'll continue to do the utmost to protect our citizens.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Workers' Compensation

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the last few years there were two important government-commissioned reviews of WCB administrative actions to ensure fairness and accountability towards injured workers. Reflecting questions from my constituents, my question is to the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment. What has the government done with the recommendations from these reviews?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. The two committees made a total of 59 recommendations, of which 49 were accepted or accepted in principle. Of course, extensive public feedback was held, including a symposium on the workers' compensation system and also round-table discussions on accountability.

As no doubt you're aware, the government passed Bill 26 in 2002, Mr. Speaker, which saw a number of changes in the whole compensation system. Some include annual reports by Workers' Compensation, performance reports to the Auditor General and also the minister; annual WCB general meetings, open to the public of course, a streamlined WCB decision review body, and a new medical panel process for resolving differences that required medical opinion. There's also the Appeals Commission, separated from the Workers' Compensation Board, and of course the Workers' Compensation Board now implements the appeals program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there is a resolution that was passed at the recent PC Association of Alberta convention to ask the government to monitor and report on the implementation of those recommendations, my question is to the same minister. Hon. minister, what action, process, and time frame are you going to take for this important monitoring?

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can do that very quickly. The committee has met 12 times since they were put in place, and they'll be reporting to me on the implementation of the recommendations very soon.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental question is to the same minister. Given that injured workers still have serious issues with the WCB, will the minister provide opportunities for interested parties such as injured workers to send submissions to the monitoring authority?

Mr. Cardinal: Yes, Mr. Speaker, they can do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Sex Trade Workers

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This weekend marked the continuation of tragic events as yet another sex trade worker was found dead outside of Edmonton. Not only are Edmonton-area prostitutes living in fear, but they feel vulnerable and unprotected and are ready to take advantage of any program that may offer them the opportunity to get off the streets. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: given that transitional housing would allow sex trade workers a chance to escape from the drugs and the pimps who are controlling their lives, will this government establish programs to enable sex trade workers to make the transition from short-term emergency shelters into permanent housing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very serious issue that the member has brought forward, and I do appreciate the opportunity to respond because I am just as concerned as the member is. I understand that this is the 12th victim, depending on the autopsy results, hon. member, that we could've had here in the Edmonton area over the past 16 years. I would encourage women who are seeking refuge from life on the street to access the facilities and services that are available at the Women's Emergency Accommodation Centre here in Edmonton. We do provide $1.3 million to that centre in funding for 99 beds. I think that at the flatiron building there are 75 beds and at Elizabeth House 24 beds.

What is provided there for women when they do access the centre, of course, is room and board. More importantly, there are counselling services, and there are services available for them to make that transition back to the community. There are programs available there, hon. member, and that does assist the women. So, hopefully, they'll access it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Will the minister commit to providing more funding to ensure that the transitional housing and services are available to help women with their involvement in prostitution?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, that too is an important question, and we are meeting with the minister responsible for Children's Services and also with the Solicitor General about how we can provide a comprehensive, co-ordinated approach to this issue with program options, and that would include the transitional housing, hon. member, that you are looking for. That would include that even further than what we do have today. I don't know what the outcome of that will be because we're currently meeting.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. To the Solicitor General: have additional funds been added to Project Kare to aid in the swift arrests of the individuals who are committing these heinous crimes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and to the hon. member. Yes, additional funds were provided to Project Kare and to the RCMP. Regarding that project alone, over $800,000 was provided in addition to last year's $2.9 million budget. So in total they received $3.7 million, which includes 43 investigators, which includes analysts, intelligence officers, and the ability to investigate. It also includes four Edmonton Police Service detectives that are working on the case, so they're working on the case together. They're utilizing experts from across Canada and, as well, utilizing the skills of their investigators throughout northern Alberta, central Alberta, in Calgary, and through the EPS.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Health Services in the North

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has committed over $9 billion on health spending in 2005-2006. Northern Alberta experiences a lower funding ratio for capital infrastructure dollars compared to the rest of the province. The northern residents are required to travel greater distances for health care services as well. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What steps is the ministry taking to make better use of the rural and regional health care facilities in the north to reduce the travel costs of patients by providing medical care in northern communities, that would also reduce the cost to larger southern centres?

Ms Evans: Three quick things. Mr. Speaker, when the electronic record is in place, it will help us co-ordinate patient services. Part of that is integral to the proper delivery in northern and regional areas. The telehealth program has made sure that specialists can be accessed through the northern areas. Beyond that, for some of the more particular needs of regions, we work with them and their global funding model and through the province-wide services to see if there are ways that we can co-ordinate service delivery to accommodate the residents.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental, again to the same minister: what funding will be allocated to purchase specialized equipment such as dialysis machines?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of different things I should report. For the last three years, concluding this year, there will be about $148.9 million total that has been spent out of federal funding through the trust fund that was established to improve this opportunity for diagnostic imaging. The machines for dialysis can be funded through the province-wide service delivery should they choose to take advantage of that account beyond their global funding.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is also to the same minister. How does the minister plan to address the ongoing need in recruiting and retaining health care professionals in rural Alberta?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I know that a number of members have been really concerned about this. Through the rural physician action plan we hope to make significant differences. I should report that through the rural family medicine network we have provided 60 rural residency positions: 30 of them are entry and 30 of them are second year. Also, since April 2002 we've had 190 foreign-trained physicians that have had direct placements and opportunities in rural Alberta. Finally, starting this fall, in conjunction with the Ministry of Advanced Ed, we are providing a medical school bursary program for at least 10 students that we expect to work in rural Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Automobile Insurance Reforms

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Only this Conservative government could fumble auto insurance reforms so badly. To this date they've managed to enrage the insurance companies, alienate the auto insurance brokers, and Alberta drivers are still only seeing minimal premium reductions after they were frozen at their highest rates ever. My question is to the Minister of Finance. Other than for a Tory caucus committee reporting in September, does this government have any kind of a long-term plan to reform the auto insurance mess, which they have created?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member opposite is the person that has indicated to me that they think it's a mess. Auto insurance reform, in fact, is working. We have about six months of auto insurance reform under our belt, if you wish. It came in on October 1. There is a mandatory 6 per cent reduction unless a company can show reason that they shouldn't be charged with that reduction.

As has been indicated in this House, there is a process under way now to review the rates, and there is a process in that time for public input. Mr. Speaker, that will occur in the next weeks, and we will have a complete assessment by fall. It was intended to have that by the 1st of October, but because of the lateness of getting off on this, it'll probably be the 1st of November.

Mr. R. Miller: Only privately owned vehicles, Mr. Speaker.

Will the minister instruct the Automobile Insurance Rate Board to conduct a full review of questionable insurance industry practices, such as block transfers, like the review that has just been released in Quebec?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, the automobile insurance review will occur. The Auto Insurance Rate Board has put out the terms of reference for the review. I haven't found – I must comment on this – that the auto insurance companies are enraged. In fact, I would say that we have a cordial relationship. They may not like the fact that we have imposed reductions on them, but I would not say that they have indicated to me that they're enraged with this government. Again, the auto insurance reforms that were put in place in this province were put in on the compulsory portion of your insurance on private vehicles, and that, essentially, will be what the Auto Insurance Rate Board reviews this summer. I am sure, though, that they will receive some thoughtful opinions on other parts of insurance during that review.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell us: why is this government the only one in the entire country that needs to pass a law to immune itself from lawsuits as a result of their bungled auto insurance reforms?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're maybe the only government in Canada that's really done true auto insurance reform.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I'll call upon the first of six hon. members to participate today.

Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, it may be of interest to you to know that historically on May 9, 1906, the very first session of Alberta's First Legislature was prorogued after 38 sitting days. Prior to prorogation Lieutenant Governor George Bulyea gave royal assent to 76 bills, including a bill that would incorporate the city of Wetaskiwin and the city of Lethbridge and an act to establish and incorporate a university for the province of Alberta. At the very same time, a very major constitutional issue was brewing in the province of Alberta, and the then Premier of the day, Premier Rutherford, was not to survive the ensuing two weeks of antagonism that was occurring at this very same time.

Battle River Community Foundation

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to recognize the Battle River Community Foundation. Founded in 1994, this organization serves communities throughout the Battle River basin area including Camrose, Tofield, Viking, Galahad, Alliance, and Hughenden. It is one of 11 community foundations in Alberta.

Community foundations provide individuals and businesses the opportunity to create an endowment fund which will be used to fund projects for the betterment of the community. Some examples of the projects funded by the Battle River Community Foundation include scholarships and assistance for villages in purchasing equipment for their fire departments. Recently the foundation gave $15,000 to the counties of Camrose, Paintearth, and Flagstaff to study environmental issues. Over $350,000 has been distributed since the beginning of the fund.

In addition, the Battle River Community Foundation honours community leaders at an annual banquet. Last year the Joe Voytechek family was honoured, and an endowment worth $25,000 was established in their name as a lasting legacy to their many contributions in the Camrose community.

To improve the returns from the endowment, the Battle River Community Foundation struck an agreement with the Edmonton Community Foundation which allows them to pool their resources for investment purposes. In this way, donations can be pooled to provide sustainable funding for programs and projects for years to come. While this arrangement is beneficial for the investment of Battle River's capital, it is the strong and continued support of the community which allows this organization to thrive. This includes the community-minded direction from the foundation's board of directors, led by chair Blain Fowler and executive director Dave Stolee.

This support has ensured the development of an endowment fund valued at $1.5 million. As such, the Battle River Community Foundation will be able to meet the emerging needs of the community on a sustainable basis in perpetuity. This is an amazing achievement, and I applaud the efforts of the members of this organization for the achievements they have made, the programs they support, and their commitment to making the Battle River area an even better place to be.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Ritske and Immigje Veenstra

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through the darkness of the Holocaust shone the luminous examples of the Righteous among the Nations, a title derived from the Talmud to describe those who risked their own lives to save the lives of others. In 1963 Yad Vashem embarked upon a world-wide project to honour non-Jews who saved Jews during the Holocaust. A commission headed by an Israeli Supreme Court justice, following specific criteria, has been charged with the duty of awarding the title Righteous among the Nations, the only project of its kind in the world.

There are over 8,000 authenticated rescue stories in which the lives of Jews were saved. Yad Vashem's policy is to pursue the program for as long as petitions for this title are received. If the Righteous are deceased, the honour will be bestowed on their next of kin. The honouree is awarded a specially minted medal bearing their name, a certificate of honour, and the privilege of their name being added to the Wall of Honour in the Garden of the Righteous at Yad Vashem in Jerusalem. In addition, the recipients are honoured with a tree planted along the Avenue of the Righteous. The tree, symbolic of the renewal of life, is a living testimony to remarkable heroism. With courage and compassion, risking torture and death, the Righteous among the Nations saved many individual lives and, as the Talmud says, "the entire universe."

The late Ritske and Immigje Veenstra are among those honoured at Yad Vashem. This brave Dutch couple saved many Jews' lives. Last Thursday night in Calgary Vicky Penner from Carstairs and her brother Ted Veenstra from Brazil received the Righteous among the Nations award on behalf of their deceased parents, Ritske and Immigje Veenstra.

Of all the people that the Veenstras harboured during the war, all survived the war. Vicky now corresponds regularly with two survivors, Ruth Lavie-Jourgrau and Julia Izaks-van der Velde, who were both present at the ceremony and who now reside in Israel and enjoy the company of children and grandchildren, all made possible by the selfless act and the courage of Ritske and Immigje Veenstra.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

A Tribute to Mothers

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the very distinct pleasure of rising to pay tribute to an amazing group of people who more than any other group of individuals can truly be credited with changing the world. This group of people didn't just affect the world once but change it in significant ways every single day. That group of people is mothers.

I know the impact my own mom, Maureen Griffiths, had on my life, and I like to think she raised a pretty good son, but along with that she also raised my younger sister and my younger brother, who are both very successful. She was an amazing homemaker, which we know is the equivalent of having two full-time jobs in and of itself, had a part-time job off the farm, acted as cook, cleaner, truck driver, grain dryer, cattle feeder, and nurse to a bunch of sick, hungry, tired, and occasionally grumpy men on the farm. Still, amazingly, she is the most caring, strong, and beautiful woman I've ever met.

Mr. Speaker, these women, mothers, are also leaders, volunteers, businesswomen, teachers, doctors, nurses, and other professionals. Whether they are like the Famous Five fighting for human rights or volunteers fighting social injustice or world-famous athletes or curing diseases or creating jobs, they do this all while raising not just children but raising the future of our communities, our province, our country, and the world.

No words can ever say thank you enough. No gift of flowers can ever say thank you enough for the band-aids when we bled, the hugs when we hurt, the support when we were scared, and the swift kicks in the backside when we needed it. You helped make each of us what we are today, and still you help us get better every single day. We know that no love is stronger than a mother's love.

To all of the angels out there like my mom, on behalf of the members of this House, we say thank you, moms. We love you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Hank Williams First Nation

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to highlight a northern success story, the story of filmmaking in northern Alberta. One of the first films to be shot in northern Alberta was in 1919. It was called Back to God's Country. What else would you call it, really? There were many aboriginal actors in that film, but unfortunately none of them were credited for their work.

Today aboriginal and northern people are involved in almost every aspect of film production, and they are receiving credit for it. Last Friday there was a red carpet ceremony in Edmonton for the Alberta premiere of the movie Hank Williams First Nation. The film is about a 75-year-old Cree man and his 17-year-old nephew who set out on an ambitious adventure from northern Alberta to visit the gravesite of Hank Williams in Nashville.

This film was produced in northern Alberta with northern investors and has opened to critical acclaim. From the north are producers and investors who believed in the movie and committed dollars to see this realized. Credits go to a number of people, Mr. Speaker, too many to mention here, but I must mention Aaron Sorensen, a 38-year-old former teacher who brought this First Nation story to life and is to be commended for his artistic abilities.

To Aaron Sorensen and to the investors, congratulations on your involvement in what I call the best little movie made in northern Alberta. The arts are alive and well in northern Alberta, Mr. Speaker, and that's just great because we have many more stories to tell.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Conflict in Sudan

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently on these grounds we gathered to commemorate the unparalleled tragedy of the Jewish Holocaust and pledged ourselves as Albertans and Canadians to stand unshakably against such violations of humanity.

Eleven years ago the world watched in horror but failed to act as 8,000 Tutsis were massacred by Hutus despite desperate pleas from all around the world, including from our own General Roméo Dallaire.

Again the African continent is facing genocide in western Sudan, the Darfur region, described by some as Rwanda in slow motion. According to UN information 300,000 people have been killed and more than 2 million displaced since 2002. A friend, Val Laforce from Medicine Hat, has just returned from three months in the refugee camps of Darfur, and she along with other committed individuals of Care International is calling on all citizens to raise their voices yet again for the protection of children and adults in this ongoing disaster.

A number of high-level meetings with the government of Sudan resulted in some humanitarian aid, but the recent UN resolution to refer the issue to the international court is woefully inadequate to address the ongoing starvation, abandonment of agriculture, and violence by government forces and arab militia against citizens. Many observers, including Canadian Stephen Lewis and former Major-General Lewis MacKenzie, are calling on the international community to intervene along with the African Union.

As citizens of a wealthy country and province it's easy to diminish our role in this conflict except for two fundamental truths. Number one, violations of international law and humanity anywhere are assaults on us all. We are either complicit in silence and inaction or we stand with human rights and peace everywhere. Number two, our country and Alberta are host to an increasing number of Sudanese and others from unstable and resource-poor regions. Greater commitment to foreign aid and development is essential to reduce such lawlessness. As members of the Legislature we cannot limit our focus to this province. We are world citizens. We need to speak out with others, including NGOs, in favour of the rule of law and human rights.

On behalf of the many here in the Assembly and citizens across this great and caring province I express my outrage that our federal government and governments of the free world continue to fail us and the world in taking decisive and meaningful action to protect the lives of innocent men, women, and children by confronting abusive and lawless powers. I call on the national government and all parties to focus attention and necessary resources with others in the international community to immediately confront yet another emerging genocide, including humanitarian, political, and military aid through appropriate bodies. Mr. Speaker, to betray these people is to betray ourselves, our children, and our future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, because of the serious note the chair did not intervene, but you were one minute and five seconds over.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

2:50 Events Attended by Member for Calgary-Varsity

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This past Friday and Saturday were busy volunteer recognition days in both Calgary and Edmonton. On Friday afternoon I met Pat Nixon, the founder and director of the Mustard Seed Street Ministry, who gave me a guided tour of the amazing Calgary facility, which could just as easily be referred to as Miracle on 1st Street SE. Pat has fought demons in his own Daniel's den of provincial penitentiaries. He has also wrestled and worked with angels in the form of hundreds of volunteers who have positively impacted the lives of thousands of downtrodden souls.

The Mustard Seed program is more than just feeding an empty belly and providing an overnight bed. A variety of health, education, guidance, employment, and related second and third life chances are provided. As a Baptist minister Pat Nixon can't officially be considered for Catholic sainthood, but he sure qualifies amongst the people for whom and with whom he serves as Saint Pat.

On Friday evening in Calgary the members for Calgary-Currie, Calgary-McCall, and myself had the pleasure of attending the 40th annual celebration of Meals on Wheels, entitled Feast for Your Ears. Among the many individuals who contributed both to the success of the event as well as to the program as a whole were Sandra Walker, who has recently become the president of the board of directors; Lou Winthers, a recent director, who has an incredible history of service with both the Calgary health region and Calgary hospices; and Dana McLaren, who has volunteered in a variety of roles over the years. Two of the award recipients were Hattie Boothman, who has volunteered for the entire 40 years of the Meals on Wheels program, and Kay Conacher, another great Calgary-Varsity constituent, who delivered the first meal back in 1965 and has continued to literally serve for over 37 years.

Saturday morning I along with the Member for Calgary-Currie, local MPs, and provincial and municipal dignitaries including the Hon. Peter Lougheed witnessed and in many cases judged amazing school projects at the Calgary Heritage Fair, held in the city hall atrium. Amongst the outstanding projects was that of Carlos Garcia, a grade 4 student at St. Gregory elementary/junior high school. Carlos's project on the Halifax explosion demonstrated the high quality of projects exhibited at the fair.

In conclusion, I would be remiss if I didn't acknowledge the tremendous work and results of the Minister and Ministry of Infrastructure and Transportation, who put on a fabulous Centennial Legacy Ball at Edmonton Shaw centre on Saturday night. It was a great recognition and fundraising event, which was attended by a variety of individuals and organizations throughout Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Okay. That came with a surplus of 25 seconds.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I stand to present a petition signed by 910 Albertans urging the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to "introduce legislation that will (a) allow parents the authority to place their children into mandatory drug treatment and (b) fund urgently required drug use treatment centres" for youth.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition prepared by the McKenzie Towne public school committee, 422 names, to address the need for a public school in McKenzie Towne and to address the need throughout Calgary, in all communities.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the Premier.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Premier I wish to table a copy of the Alberta Official Opposition news release from October 11, 2001, entitled Official Opposition Extends Best Wishes to Auditor General Peter Valentine, to which I believe the Premier referred during question period earlier.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of the two documents that I referred to in question period today, one being the terms of reference set for the provincial inspection into Calgary's ward 10 election process and the second being the announcement of the provincial inspection to proceed into Calgary's ward 10 election.

The Speaker: The hon. chair of the Legislative Offices Committee.

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of the report of the Auditor General on seniors care and programs, dated May 2005. Copies of this report are being distributed to all members today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. I would like to table a letter by Joan Ingoldsby and Cheryl Weiler. The letter details concerns about the quality of care in the long-term facility where their mother is staying. These concerns appear to stem from a chronic problem of staff shortages.

I'd also like to table a letter from the Elder Advocates of Alberta Society. The letter argues that the Health Facilities Review Committee has been used to field, diffuse, and dismiss complaints, thereby misleading the public into believing that nursing homes and other eldercare facilities are being monitored.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two documents to table today. The first is a letter addressed to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development from Melissa Tkachyk of the World Society for the Protection of Animals. The letter expresses WSPA's disappointment that they were not consulted as stakeholders for the review of Alberta's zoo licensing.

The second is a press release issued by the Sierra Club of Canada last Thursday. The Sierra Club has built a database to evaluate the progress of provincial commitments to the national forest strategy, and they found that Alberta has no management framework for maintaining old-growth forests.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is a transcript of a tape between Enron traders Tim and John. It is listed as exhibit SNO-221, and it's in regard to the power purchase arrangement auction that Enron participated in in the summer of 2000.

My second tabling is a pamphlet from the Ottewell community patrol program, Helping to Keep our Neighbourhoods Safe, and it's produced by the Ottewell community patrol program from the Ottewell police station.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of each of four letters calling on the government to not have temporary foreign workers and to look at the deskilling of the workplace that's going on in the industry.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, with thanks again to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, the other day when I introduced one of the gentlemen who was with us from the Canadian armed forces, I indicated that he had been wounded in Belgium. The town that I gave was Bergen op Zoom. It is actually in the Netherlands, and it was corrected, and Hansard recalls that.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of a letter from a constituent by the name of Rudolph Klingbeil. Mr. Klingbeil is a retired public service employee who wrote expressing his concern about his public service pension, which has recently been reduced from $1,620 a month to $950 a month and now down to $841 a month.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, we had two points of order that came basically at the same time. The leader of third party interjected with a point of order, and I understand that he's delegated his spokespersonship to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder. The Official Opposition House Leader rose almost at the same time, and I gather she's delegated her speaking responsibility to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. So let us proceed.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Point of Order

Referring to a Member by Name

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our point of order refers to Beauchesne 484: "It is the custom in the House that no Member should refer to another by name." I believe that during question period this afternoon the Premier, the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, did refer to the Leader of the Opposition by name.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Same point of order, hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford? A different point of order.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Just with respect to this particular point of order I think it was the Premier's intention to simply point out the fact that the person who was raising the issue now on behalf of the Liberal opposition happens to have been, we thought, the leader at the time, which we'll get to in the second point of order.

However, I think the member from the third party has pointed out very correctly that we ought not refer to any sitting member of the Assembly by personal, or private, name. So we would ask that that reference be withdrawn, and we apologize for that having occurred.

The Speaker: Well, thank you very much. That definitely concludes that point of order. It is absolutely correct: the Premier did refer to an existing member in this House, and that was a violation. So we've dealt with that one.

Now, hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, a different point of order?

Point of Order

Factual Accuracy

Mr. R. Miller: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. I rise to raise a point of order under Standing Order 23(h), (i), (j). This afternoon, as was mentioned, in question period the hon. Premier in response to a question from the Leader of the Official Opposition not only referred to him by name, which has already been dealt with by yourself, but also he made comments which I believe were specifically designed to create disorder in this House.

When he quoted the Leader of our Official Opposition as having made certain comments about the former Auditor General, he attributed those words specifically to the current Leader of the Official Opposition. Mr. Speaker, that is blatantly false. It's totally inaccurate given that the hon. Premier was reading from a press release that was dated 11 October 2001, and it very clearly says in that press release, "Alberta Official Opposition Leader Ken Nicol." Given that he was reading directly from the piece of paper, I have no other conclusion to draw than that he was deliberately trying to create disorder in the House.

Also, Beauchesne 486 says that "much depends upon the tone and manner, and intention, of the person speaking." Again, I think that if one were to consider the tone in which it was said and, in my opinion at least, the obvious glee with which the hon. Premier was saying it, I again can come to no other conclusion than that, in fact, he was intending to create a certain amount of disorder in this House.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would await your ruling on that point of order. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to this particular point of order I don't believe that the comment made by our Premier was at all intended or designed to create disorder. Specific to the tone and the manner that's been referred to, I think that the point here – and likely this is exactly the case – was that the Premier was simply trying to demonstrate and point up some of the hypocrisy that seems to have engulfed the Liberal Official Opposition in regard to the appointment of Mr. Peter Valentine, who, as we would all know, or most of us in this House at least would know, is and was an enviable, outstanding Albertan with a great track record of service to this province and, in particular, to this Legislative Assembly for a number of years.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, just to refresh people's memories here, Mr. Peter Valentine served as the Auditor General of Alberta from 1995 to 2002. Prior to that, he served as a senior partner in the accounting firm of KPMG, a very respectable accounting firm in our parts, from 1958 to 1995. I might also point out that during that time Mr. Peter Valentine served as partner in charge of professional practice of the Calgary office, also as chairman of the KPMG International Energy Practice Group, and also as senior audit partner responsible for a variety of medium- to large-sized organizations, with expertise in the petroleum industry and Canadian securities practice. Finally, Peter Valentine also previously served as chair of the Financial Advisory Committee of the Alberta Securities Commission, and I believe the Premier indicated some additional points in that respect.

I believe the point here is that in October of 2004 the Liberal opposition, in its news release entitled Official Opposition Extends Best Wishes to Auditor General Peter Valentine, went on to say at the bottom of the press release:

Mr. Valentine's integrity and desire to improve the way government conducts business has increased the credibility of the Office of the Auditor General. My colleagues in the Official Opposition and I extend our best wishes to Mr. Valentine.

And it also states briefly:

Albertans have been well served by Mr. Valentine's dedication and commitment. He has helped to hold the government responsible for its plans and actions through critical and thoughtful recommendations in his annual reports.

That having been said, Mr. Speaker, if you look immediately to the left-hand side of this press release, there you will see on the masthead or on the letterhead the personal name of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview shown as the leader of that particular team.

However, now that I've had a chance to review this news release in greater detail myself – and I believe the Premier and others have gone through it more carefully – we have to note that, in fact, the quote that was used and the two quotes I've just read were attributed to Ken Nicol, the former Leader of the Alberta Liberal Party. So those quotes were attributed to him in the news release. However, one would assume that since the current Liberal leader was simply allowing his name to stand on the letterhead and on the masthead immediately attached to that, perhaps there was some form of endorsement – who knows? – of that same press release as made. Otherwise, one would have thought that perhaps it could've been handled in some other way.

I will say this to the House and to you with due respect, Mr. Speaker, that I believe that this was an honest oversight or slip, if you will, on the part of our Premier, and I know that he would want it recorded in Hansard that a correction of this inadvertent reference is hereby made. So whichever form of explanation the House would accept: if you wish it withdrawn, we can withdraw it; otherwise, we'll just have it stand as corrected. That would be the conclusion of my remarks.

The Speaker: In Hansard today the document in question that was referred to by the Premier is dated October 11, 2004. Now, I understand that the hon. Deputy Government House Leader referred to a document dated October 4, 2001. So are we talking about one and the same document, do you think?

Mr. Zwozdesky: My apologies. I thought I said October '04, meaning October 2004, and I left out October 11. But it's clear that it's October 11 that I was referring to, of 2004.

The Speaker: Okay. That's the first clarification.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you.

The Speaker: Now I'll deal with the second part.

Mr. R. Miller: On the order of clarification, Mr. Speaker, the document that I have, and I'm assuming that we're talking about the same document . . .

The Speaker: Oh, don't ever do that.

Mr. R. Miller: . . . very clearly says 11 October 2001.

The Speaker: The Premier referred to a document dated October 11, 2001.

Mr. Zwozdesky: I'm sorry. That's my mistake. I just noticed it myself. The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford is quite correct. I just misspoke a minute or two ago. I meant to say October 11, 2001, to be clear. My sincere apologies to him.

The Speaker: Now that we have that matter cleared up, we'll deal with the second one. If my memory is correct, the Leader of the Official Opposition on October 11, 2001, was not the current Leader of the Official Opposition. The Leader of the Official Opposition then was Dr. Ken Nicol. So it's true that what the Premier said today was not that particular individual's name but another name.

I believe that there was an explanation given. I think there's even a withdrawal, on the verge of an apology. Everything else, as far as I can see, in all of this – have we now dealt with this matter, hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford?

Mr. R. Miller: Yes.

The Speaker: Okay. I love harmony. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, May 5, it is my pleasure to move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of Written Question 32.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

Q32. Mr. Eggen moved on behalf of Mr. Martin that the following question be accepted.

For each of the fiscal years 2000-2001, 2001-2002, 2002-2003, and 2003-2004 how many Albertans received benefits from the AISH, assured income for the severely handicapped, program, and for each of those years how many received the maximum benefit rate?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to put forward Question 32 in reference to getting the information on Albertans receiving benefits from AISH. Our specific focus here is to get the percentage of individuals who are receiving the maximum benefit rate. Of course, this has a lot to do with how people perceive how many people, first of all, are receiving AISH and then also taking that maximum rate, which is otherwise not very much money per month.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports I would like to indicate acceptance of the written question if it is amended. This amendment was shared earlier this afternoon with all members of the House and is in accordance with the protocol for written questions. I'd like to move that Written Question 32 be amended by deleting "and for each of those years how many received the maximum benefit rate." The amended question would then read: "For each of the fiscal years 2000-2001, 2001-2002, 2002-2003, and 2003-2004 how many Albertans received benefits from the AISH, assured income for the severely handicapped, program?"

I'd like to share the following rationale for this change. AISH clients may receive full benefits one month and partial benefits the next, depending on their financial situation. Sometimes an AISH client or their spouse may earn more or have more employment earnings for one particular month; therefore, the AISH client wouldn't receive the maximum benefit for that month. The needs of our clients change from month to month, and within a given year the number of clients and the amount they receive fluctuates.

Also, the original question would require AISH staff to review approximately 32,000 files to determine the types of benefits each client would receive each month over the years in question. This would take away from their ability to support AISH clients. By clarifying the question, we can in a timely manner respond with the number of Albertans who received AISH benefits for the years in question.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I appreciate the explanation as to why it might be difficult or problematic to put together all of the information on who is receiving the maximum AISH benefits during any given fiscal year, I think that it would not be impossible. Certainly, it would still be, I think, very useful for all Albertans to see who does manage to receive the maximum allowable benefit rate for the whole year in each given fiscal year, if you understand my distinction. Perhaps if the amendment was going forward in that way, that we could have the individuals who are receiving the maximum allowable AISH benefit rates for the entire fiscal year, moving through each of those years that we had asked for it, then I would find it acceptable. Otherwise, it loses the essence of the question almost entirely.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder to conclude the debate.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, at least I've learned that if you do in fact have an amendment, then you are getting some information. So it might forward our illumination on this issue that I think a lot of Albertans, not just those who are affected by the AISH rates but all Albertans, have a vested interest to make sure that people are receiving a just and fair living wage or monies so that they can in fact live a decent and reasonable lifestyle. I guess that as amended, something is better than nothing.

Thank you.

Bill 203
Report on Alberta's Legacy Act

[Debate adjourned April 4: Mr. Eggen speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been some time. I think this bill has been moved forward to different places for a number of weeks, but I am very happy to resume the debate on Bill 203.

I think, just to remind ourselves about it, that we're looking at how we can build a postsecondary education system that is sustainable but also meets the changing needs of our province. While we have a very wealthy province, I would suggest that we have been excluding a larger and larger percentage of our population who would otherwise want to and deserve to and, really, need to go to postsecondary education by, in fact, making it unaffordable for those individuals to go to a postsecondary institution.

We've heard a lot these past couple of months on ways by which we can in fact improve that situation. I have said it before, and I'll say it again, that even the very most conservative analysis of how we might run our postsecondary education system would suggest that you must make the most efficient use of your population. The people who are most able to in fact be successful at a postsecondary institution do need to go there and graduate from there so that we can build a system of not only education but a workforce based on meritocracy and ability rather than, perhaps, just how much money one's family has in the bank.

Now, specifically with Bill 203, I must say that I do oppose this bill. I know that it was the Liberal opposition flagship bill for the last election, but I would suggest that it gives permission to the Conservatives to continue a decade-long policy of systematically and deliberately lowballing government revenues and, thereby, also budget surpluses.

I'd like to remind all Albertans of how the Liberals sort of moved this way and then that on the question of unbudgeted surpluses. After years of criticizing the lowballing of revenues here in this House and thereby underestimating surpluses under the former leader of the Liberal Party – I'm not sure if we mention those names or not – in the first months of the current leadership I think suddenly using unbudgeted surpluses to fund endowments now becomes the foundation of Liberal fiscal policy. I find this confusing at best, and it certainly goes against our own caucus and my own personal view of how public education must be funded.

Over the last 12 years or so the Conservative government has underestimated budget surpluses by a cumulative total of $27.3 billion, or an average underestimation of $2.25 billion per annum. This systematic underestimation of budget surpluses has been mainly accomplished by lowballing revenues, mostly oil and gas revenues but also other revenue sources like gambling and corporate taxation. Over the past 12 years the Conservatives have also underestimated revenues by a total cumulation of $33 billion, or an average lowball of $2.75 billion per year.

During this 12-year period these unbudgeted surpluses were applied to the provincial debt, allowing the rapid paydown of a $23 billion accumulated debt, rung up during the years of another Conservative government. In addition, this lowballing of revenue policy has allowed an average of $500 million per year to be applied to extra in-year spending for different political hot potatoes as they might pop up.

At one time the Liberal opposition, particularly under the previous leader, opposed such budgeting, which I would consider to be deceptive at best, Mr. Speaker. Now the NDP opposition stands alone in doing so, it seems. Today the Liberal opposition is making unbudgeted surpluses to build the heritage fund, to fund extra in-year capital spending, and to fund endowments for advanced education and for the arts, a centrepiece of this budget policy. Instead of urging the government to accurately forecast budgetary revenues and to accurately provide for needed expenditures in the budget, the Liberal opposition is giving the government permission to continue to lowball revenues in order to generate large unbudgeted surpluses.

Sound budgeting requires expenditure provisions up front to inflation-proof the heritage fund, Mr. Speaker, to fund infrastructure, and to provide stable, predictable funding for postsecondary education and the arts, humanities, and social sciences. This ensures that expenditures are properly scrutinized before the money is actually expended.

Budget forecasting is not an exact science. A sustainability fund is a good idea so long as it is properly used. In years where there is an unbudgeted yearly surplus, money should be paid into the sustainability fund. In years where there is an unbudgeted yearly deficit, monies should be paid from the sustainability fund to keep the budget in balance. Disingenuous it is to hear the Liberals criticize the Conservatives for only budgeting $250 million in 2005-06 for the postsecondary endowments when under the Liberal plan zero dollars would have been budgeted, and the endowments would have been entirely dependent on unbudgeted surpluses.

With this analysis I would suggest that there are better ways to fund postsecondary education. The most fundamental thing is to make sure that you are making that commitment to long-term funding for nuts and bolts that make the universities and colleges work regardless of what sort of unbudgeted surplus situation we might find ourselves in. So with both Bill 203 and Bill 1 we have serious concerns, Mr. Speaker, that I think need to be addressed and the public should know about.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising on the privilege of 29 to ask a question with regard to what I've just heard. The Member for Edmonton-Calder criticized the Liberals for believing what they said and actually putting it in print, but he offers no solutions with regard to the surpluses. Perhaps he would enlighten us as to the NDP's position with regard to surpluses, budgeted or otherwise.

Mr. Eggen: Well, certainly. I think that it's very clear that our policy in regard to surpluses is, number one, to be paying into a sustainability fund to maintain a reasonable base budgeting . . .

The Speaker: Actually, we have no provision for such a standing order under this matter and subject in the Routine.

Now, when I recognized the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, did he also want to participate?

Mr. Bonko: No. It was just with respect to a question.

The Speaker: Okay, which we don't have.

Then the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East to participate.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that Bill 203 is a very good bill. I think it's very clear, and it's easily understood by all Albertans. Thirty-five per cent of the budget goes to the heritage fund; 35 per cent goes into postsecondary education for an endowment fund, also to be noted that there is no cap on that; 25 per cent of the annual budget goes toward paying the infrastructure debt – which is noted to be $8 billion; however, as we stand here and speak, it is growing every day – and then 5 per cent into the humanities, social sciences, and arts. I also believe that this would help prevent all of the different ministries from dipping into the surplus through supplemental estimates and insist on better budgeting practices right from the outset.

The 5 per cent would go, as I mentioned, to the humanities, social sciences, and arts to supplement existing funding and encourage development in these fields. Even that, at this point, is a pittance to try and catch up to the deep cuts that have been forced onto the arts, especially within the educational system – the U of C, Grant MacEwan, U of A, U of L, and, more importantly, in the high school programs – when often this is where latent talents and creativity are noticed and encouraged.

Our theatre companies are stretched to the limit to write, produce, and perform live theatre. Why must all of our talented citizens, be they artists in any of the mediums – the writers and the musicians, the actors, set designers, and on and on – go to other jurisdictions for the experience necessary to strive for excellence in their craft? How much more shallow our society is by being deprived of exposure to other dimensions of which our minds are capable. All work and no play makes Jack a very dull boy indeed. We want, we can afford, and we must increase the dollars to our arts community.

This part of Bill 203 would indeed invest in Alberta's future and in the arts community. They would have sustainable and predictable funds coming to them. They would know that the surplus is announced every year, and it's quite easy to establish what 5 per cent of that amount would be. Our movie industry, although it has some fantastic successes, is really operating on a shoestring and, therefore, should even be more highly commended. They're in an exceedingly competitive environment. With our geographic location and highly trained staff – technicians, actors, et cetera – we should be shooting movies in at least two locations every month in this province, but in order to do that, this arts community that we speak of simply has to have sustainable funding and, certainly, more of it.

I believe that this bill is a very comprehensive bill. I think it covers all of the many areas that have been hit very hard by the cuts over the last 10 years. I also believe that it would encourage – as I've said before, which I think is very important – better budgeting practices by this government. You can't just lowball it and then later on think, "Oh, well, we've got extra money" and be dipping into it.

I think it's a very comprehensive bill. Certainly, it covers our future, and I would ask support for this bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is the first opportunity I've had to rise and debate Bill 203, and I'm grateful for the opportunity. I believe that there is much in this bill. Some dissenting opinions across the way and down the aisle from us notwithstanding, I think there is a great deal to recommend in this bill. It was created in an odd sort of way because, of course, private members' bills cannot be money bills, so the bill was crafted in such a way that we are asking essentially for an annual report from government as to what the government's financial picture would look like if the Liberal plan for investing surplus monies was followed year in, year out. It's the closest we can come to actually putting a private member's bill on the floor that would in fact ask this House to vote on dividing up the surplus in the way that we campaigned during the 2004 election, which is very much still part of our platform.

Before I go on, I want to address briefly, if I can, some of the comments of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder. You know, he would be right in his criticism of our surplus investment policy if, in doing this, we were also to cancel all budgeted spending on postsecondary education and public education – I don't know how far he might want to take it – health, social services, community development, whatever. There's no intention to do that. This deals with the surplus, with the disbursement of surplus monies, or at least deals with, agreeably, a somewhat hypothetical scenario asking the government to produce an annual report on what would have happened in the past 12 months, in the past fiscal year, if this plan had been followed. The surplus, by its very definition, involves monies that are left over after the revenue has been counted up for the fiscal year and the expenses have been counted up for the fiscal year, and we take expenses away from revenue, and we see what's left over.

We go even further, of course, Mr. Speaker, because there's a very clear definition of surplus set out in Bill 203. Under Bill 203 a surplus is defined as the net assets of the sustainability fund in excess of $2.5 billion at the end of the fiscal year.

We're not shortchanging the sustainability fund. Far from it. We are guaranteeing that there will be funds available in the sustainability fund on an ongoing basis for future emergencies. So the surplus that we're talking about investing – 35 per cent in the heritage savings trust fund, 35 per cent in the postsecondary education endowment fund, 25 per cent in our capital account, and the additional 5 per cent, up to a $500 million cap, into our arts, humanities, and social sciences endowment fund – is from the money left over after all of that.

Now, aha, that's the unbudgeted surplus. The big, unbudgeted-surplus bugaboo. Well, I don't think it's as much of a bugaboo as my colleague from the third party would see it because, trust me, Mr. Speaker, we are not part of a dark side conspiracy here to pull the wool over the eyes of Albertans. We are dealing with the reality of an economy based in large part on a nonrenewable resource, which some years is in fantastic demand and some years is not in that much demand at all, some years is in great supply and some years is in short supply. The laws of supply and demand coupled with some good, healthy, free-market speculation in the futures markets, I guess, determine in large part what a barrel of oil is going to sell for on any given day any given year.

So there is volatility built into that. That's why we have a sustainability fund, a sustainability fund which was, by the way – and I'd be delighted to accept the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder's praise for the sustainability fund – originally an idea of a past Liberal caucus. It was adopted, ultimately, by this House, and that's good. The sustainability fund is there to get us over the bumpy parts when we're in a bust year as opposed to a boom year. I know I'm using the B words here, and nobody in this province likes to do that, but for lack of a better description, I'll use boom and bust as a shorthand there.

The member himself admits that budgeting is not an exact science. It is an exercise in prognostication, after all, in predicting the future. While it's not an exact science, you can be pretty certain that you can predict that in some years, perhaps in many years, no matter how much you try to be exact in your budgeting, you're going to end up with, as the member calls it, an unbudgeted surplus.

I've spent a good deal of time talking about the unbudgeted surplus, and I want to get off of that because I don't want us to get too bogged down in that concept, just to say that this bill would seek an annual report from government on what the government's finances would look like if we were to take the surplus, the pie of extra money left over after the expenses have been taken away from the revenues and the sustainability fund's needs have been met in any given fiscal year, and then looking on that amount of money as a pie, cutting it up in very predictable ways: 35 per cent to postsecondary education, 35 per cent to grow the heritage savings trust fund, which I will remind this House was the original concept behind that fund when it was created over 30 years ago by the Lougheed government.

It's been a long time since that heritage fund has had regular investment in itself. There's one investment in the last I'm not sure how many years, something like 18 years. One investment – I think I exaggerate there – in the last several years in any event to inflation-proof the fund. That's been it, and the fund in real terms is, in fact, worth less today than it was in 1987. That was not the intention of the people who created, who set up the heritage savings trust fund back in the '70s. So 35 per cent into that to make it grow the way it was supposed to, another 35 per cent into an endowment for postsecondary education, 25 per cent into the capital account, and 5 per cent into the endowment fund to support the humanities, social sciences, and the arts.

My colleague from Lethbridge-East, I thought, spoke quite eloquently on the need to invest in the arts, social sciences, and humanities in this province, so I'll leave her remarks to stand without elaborating on them.

The 25 per cent into the capital account. You know, on the campaign trail after spelling out the 35 per cent in the heritage fund, the 35 per cent in postsecondary education, and 5 per cent into the arts and culture fund, as I sometimes refer to it in shorthand, I would say: "And the other 25 per cent? Well, after all, we are Liberals. We would spend it." That's essentially what we would do ultimately with that capital account. Yes, it would go in there first to grow somewhat, to produce some income. But, after all, the idea of the capital account is to raise money in a predictable, sustainable way, to continue to address and pay down, if you will, the infrastructure deficit that this province has that is in the billions of dollars.

The 35 per cent into an endowment for postsecondary education. This I will speak on briefly, Mr. Speaker, because I am, after all, the Advanced Education critic for the Official Opposition, and we've spent quite some time in this House debating Bill 1. The 35 per cent into an endowment for postsecondary education is above and beyond in our concept: above and beyond predictable, sustainable, reasonable funding for advanced education in the province of Alberta. The trouble with Bill 1 – and I think my colleague from Edmonton-Calder will agree with me on this – one of the problems with Bill 1 because there's more than one, is that it does not deal with the issue of base operating grants. It does not deal with the need first and foremost to address the systemic flaws, the fundamental flaws in the advanced education system in the province of Alberta, by boosting the basic funding for the system. There's just not enough money in the pot to do the job required.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 1 was not intended to address that by the government's own admission. Our postsecondary education endowment fund was not intended to address that. We're very clear, as I think the third party is although our numbers may vary slightly – I'm not sure – on the notion that in order to make the postsecondary education system work the way it needs to work for the young people of Alberta and for all people of Alberta who need to engage in lifelong learning, it needs a boost of 8 per cent, or a hundred million dollars, per year in each of the next three years at least. This government in its budget committed to far less than that. This government in its budget also . . . [Mr. Taylor's speaking time expired] I'm done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to address the Assembly today regarding Bill 203, the Report on Alberta's Legacy Act. When I received my copy of this bill upon first reading, I found it very interesting that the hon. member is bringing forward a bill that proposes a yearly report which would look at what would have happened had the government taken the Liberals' advice. I have to say that I think this is a great idea. In fact, I don't think that this bill goes far enough, limiting the report to only how the Liberals think we should deal with surpluses. I would actually be very interested in reading a report that looked back over the past decade at what Alberta might look like now had the government taken all of the Liberal opposition's advice or, even better, if there had been a Liberal government here in Alberta, God forbid.

Now, just a quick look at some of their election promises over the past couple of elections and some of the debates in this Assembly tell us quite a bit. I think I might even be able to figure out right here, right now what a report of that depth would look like. Mr. Speaker, if I had to guess, I would say that the first section of a report on what would have happened under a Liberal government in Alberta would be called The Liberals IU Program. That is insurance unemployment.

In this last election the Liberals suggested that we should have a socialistic government monopoly style of auto insurance, one that would undoubtedly drive insurance businesses out of Alberta, increase unemployment, provide Albertans with roughly the same insurance rates we already have, and cost the taxpayers millions of dollars to set up. So, basically, had we adopted that program, many Albertans would be out looking for work while still paying the same rate for insurance as they did so.

The second section of the report would likely be titled Albertans Get Lit Up. Under a Liberal government in Alberta, we probably would not have deregulated electricity, which would in turn have cost taxpayers billions of dollars to purchase and build the power plants and transmission lines that we were in desperate need of prior to deregulation. We're still seeing some of those same needs today, Mr. Speaker, but thankfully these will be built by industry rather than by taxpayers.

Furthermore, London Economics International reports that Alberta's power rates are competitive with other provinces while we have no debt on our power infrastructure. Although I'm sure that the report on what would have happened to Alberta under a Liberal government would say that power prices would also have been competitive, we continue stating that blackouts would have been commonplace due to lack of generation capacity under the Liberal regime.

Further to that, whereas provinces like Ontario and Quebec have tens of billions of dollars of debt carried by their state-run electricity provider, which taxpayers in those provinces will be paying back for years, Alberta has no debt fiscally or through government-owned power companies. My guess is that the report would say that the taxpayer-supported debt to build power plants would be continuing to mount.

I believe a fitting title for the third section of the report would be Nothing Left to Lowball. The Liberal opposition often complains that the government lowballs resource revenue estimates, so needless to say, under a Liberal government they would be taking the highest possible estimates they could find for volatile commodities like oil and gas. Probably also needless to say, the Liberal government would have spent much more than they received. Rather than seeing surpluses, we would be looking at deficits. Instead of having no debt, Albertans would be crushed under mounting debt. We've already seen in Ontario how under a Conservative government they had balanced budgets, and now under a Liberal government they are running billion-dollar deficits each and every year.

Mr. Speaker, the fourth section of this report would prove to be quite interesting. I think it would be titled Dethroning the Royalties. No, I don't think that Queen Elizabeth would be getting scrubbed off our centennial quarter. What I refer to is that the Liberal opposition has often been heard musing for years that they think that royalty rates need to be drastically raised. Peter Lougheed raised royalty rates in the 1970s to ensure that Albertans were getting their fair share while making sure that the oil and gas sector would still want to explore and extract the oil and gas from our land. This balance provides Albertans with billions of dollars in revenue annually as well as jobs for hundreds of thousands of Albertans. I imagine that under a Liberal government there would have been drastically higher royalty rates, drastically less oil and gas development, little or no royalty revenue, high unemployment, a greatly reduced oil sands venture, and most likely a much smaller population. I didn't even factor in their love for the Kyoto protocol in the picture.

Mr. Speaker, this final section, at least in this volume, would probably be titled Tax to the Max. A quick look back through Hansard shows that no matter what amount of money we are spending, no matter what we are spending it on, the standard response from the Liberal opposition is that we should be spending more. We just heard it. I would suggest that members watch the Liberal opposition during the upcoming budget debates where they will most likely be saying that we should be spending more on health care, more on education, more on municipalities, more on policing, more on the arts, more on universities, more on libraries, more on teachers, more on doctors, more on seniors, more on children, more on the environment, and more on agriculture.

If you can think of something that the government spends money on, the Liberals will tell you that we're not spending enough. In fact, I wouldn't be surprised if they have their budget response speeches written even before they've seen a copy of the budget. I'm certain that this report would list all of the extra spending that would have occurred under a Liberal government, and I'm also certain that the NDs over there would have said that even that was still not enough.

So I, too, am sure that the report would have enlightened us as to how the Liberal government would have been able to afford all this extra spending, certainly through higher taxes and more debt. We would see increases to our personal income taxes, corporate taxes, royalty rates, health care premiums, and I would even venture to say that Albertans might have a provincial sales tax under a Liberal government. We also would probably have a much larger debt than we've ever had before.

For anyone who is tuning in late, Mr. Speaker, here's what I figure the executive summary would look like in a report on what Alberta would have looked like had the Liberals been in charge: high unemployment, high taxes, high debt, high spending, and we would all be sitting here in the dark.

I would also like to say that I find it very ironic that the hon. member has brought forward suggestions on how to spend our surpluses when, had we listened to their suggestions in the first place, there wouldn't have been any surpluses.

Mr. Speaker, I've always likened it to the story of the little red hen. Nobody wanted to help the little red hen make the bread. They didn't want to help pick the wheat, and they didn't want to help bake the bread. They didn't want to do any of the hard work. But once the bread was baked, they all wanted a share. That's how the Liberals want to spend our surpluses. They all seem to have great ideas. Now that we've done the hard work of balancing the books and paying off the debt, they all have grand schemes as to how to spend our surpluses.

That being said, I don't think that the suggestions for putting funding into a postsecondary education endowment fund, the heritage fund, the capital account, and into the arts are poor ideas. In fact, before this very House today already is Bill 1, the Access to the Future Act, which will create the access to the future fund to expand and enhance opportunities for Albertans to attend high-quality postsecondary education.

Furthermore, this government has long had a standing policy that once our debt was paid off, we would begin to inject dollars into the heritage fund to inflation-proof it. Thanks to the perseverance and vision of this Conservative government that is now the case, and I look forward to that happening in the near future.

Furthermore, with the announcement of $3 billion for municipalities to deal with their infrastructure debt, this government is once again already doing much of what the hon. member would like to see done.

So, in closing, Mr. Speaker, I obviously will not be able to support this bill. You may have guessed that. I don't want to set a precedent that the Alberta government will spend taxpayers' dollars to create a report to look at any and every policy an opposition member might pull out of their head. It's a waste of money. It's a waste of paper. Quite frankly, if the Liberal opposition wants feedback on their policies, there are 67 other MLAs that I am sure would be more than happy to give it to them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm supporting this bill because it creates a surplus investment policy. I have to ask myself how we in the 21st century in the richest place on Earth can talk about an 18th century Scrooge philosophy based on economics and profits, where support for businesses is desired while help to individuals in need is considered a drain. I believe we can do better, and this bill is a step towards that. As I see the allocation of surplus funds, it would be as follows: 35 per cent of any surplus would go into the heritage fund, 35 per cent into an endowment fund for postsecondary education, 25 per cent into a capital account for infrastructure, 5 per cent into an endowment fund to support the humanities, social sciences, and the arts.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

Most importantly, I believe that at the end of each fiscal year, starting with this fiscal year, March 31, 2005, the bill would require that the Minister of Finance prepare a report on how the financial affairs of the government would have been affected if the surplus investment policy was implemented. It requires that this report from the minister would be made public. We were suggesting also an automatic review of the act at the end of five years from it coming into force. So this would give us an opportunity for a review process, and I think that this would be a wise, judicious suggestion that would result in transparency and accountability.

It demonstrates a vision, a vision that moves beyond today and moves beyond some of the attitudes that we've just heard. We have enormous revenues available to us right now and for the short distant future coming from our natural resources, and what we most want to know is: how are we going to do something to ensure that this will have a lasting effect to the benefit of our children, our grandchildren, or even our great-grandchildren?

My constituents really support the idea of allocating these various surplus funds. Everyone liked the idea of the postsecondary endowment fund. People want to see this happen. They want to see that fund grow. They're willing to give this government, of course, credit for paying down the deficit that was owed by the province, but they're also very much aware that in doing so, other deficits were created. So the idea of the infrastructure, supporting that wisely and having a plan for it, was supported by everyone.

I realize that the budget surpluses that Alberta has enjoyed in the recent past are directly related to energy prices. Past experiences have proven that these can be very volatile and maybe not sustainable for long periods of time. While recently we've had the good fortune of wonderful surpluses, they cannot be predicted with any degree of certainty, but this bill is talking about per cents of whatever surplus we do realize. This is an effort to have a plan, direction, and vision to ensure wise use of surpluses in the future. It is a savings, a trust, just like the heritage trust fund was meant to be.

When I look back at what Premier Lougheed created with the heritage trust fund, it was a vision, a vision that I think had some ingenuity with it. It was, I guess, a great benefit to this province. We've seen lots of benefits over the years. I can talk about the benefits to students in high schools receiving the scholarships year after year. We would also like to take a look, though, at what we can do to have this fund grow. It has not grown in the last number of years, and we do need a guaranteed revenue source beyond just the general revenue.

I'd like to look at the ingenuity and the vision and, I think, the possibilities of this bill that we're talking about today, a vision that takes us into the future by first dealing with the past. Repair the mistakes. Repair the neglect. Build the various areas back to the state that they were prior to us dumping all of our money into paying off the deficit and debt.

I think that as representatives of the people of this province we need to bring forward and pass laws that will make a real difference to Albertans and where we can see the benefits in the years to come. Albertans expect the government to be responsible and sensible with the funds they endow us with. It is, in turn, the responsibility of the government to give back to Albertans as much as possible through promoting the economy, job creation, effective public services, and lower taxes and supporting the things that in the end are truly an investment. Those are our people, our education, and our health.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. First, I want to maybe set the record straight. As much fanfare as this government wants to create over paying off the debt, we have to set the record straight. It is their debt that they, in fact, did pay off. They created it, and the whole province paid a heavy price to pay that off. To congratulate them is like praising your child for cleaning up their room. It's something that they're expected to do. They don't need to be congratulated on that.

The debt's not really officially paid off. As the government has set-aside to pay off the debt and to put those funds down early, they're going to face a financial penalty according to the press release of July 12. They can't pay it off just yet, until it becomes due.

However, the point remains about what to do with the large surplus that, in fact, remains year after year with regard to the amounts unbudgeted, re the royalties. There is no plan for future surpluses. The government refused to talk about it during the campaign, and they're still refusing to talk about it. But one party has put out a plan for sustainability and long-term thinking, and that is the Liberal Party. I've said this in the past and I'll say it again now: it's unfortunate that just because it comes from one side of the House and has good merit, it shouldn't be in fact evaluated and considered then.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, why I think it's more fun in here in private members' bills is because what really happens is that you get really ill-thought-out ideas sometimes that come forward, but they deserve the consideration of this Legislature for a certain amount of time.

The planning that went into the bill I have to think is somewhat suspect. I would suggest that if we have surpluses like that, there is one place it should go. It should go back to the people of Alberta in tax relief. It should probably be set aside for emergencies or emergent needs that may not all be to do with health and education.

That said, there is some merit in the coulda, woulda, shoulda attitude of the opposition. I would love to have a Finance minister go back into the Liberal government gun control bill, and let's see how many lives could have been saved with that $2 billion. I mean, it would be great if we could look back and then think what would have happened. It would be great to look back into the Liberal ad sponsorship scams and find out what we could have done with that $200 million or $300 million and the $200 million or $300 million we're going to spend finding out how they all covered their rear ends to make sure they're not the one that gets left holding the bag. Those would be great things for a Finance minister to do, but they'd be kind of counterproductive.

General Motors kind of taught us a lesson when they built a car. They put a big windshield on it, and they put a little rearview mirror. Mr. Speaker, that means that you govern looking forward. You keep an eye on the mirror, on what happened. You learn from the past, but you don't live in it. You only have one place for one driver in a car, and when you get a whole bunch of back-seat drivers trying to tell the driver where to go, if they listened, they'd probably crash. Thank goodness we've got a leader and a government that are able to pick their plan on a highway, and they're heading down it full speed ahead.

We've got rid of a lot of the baggage that many other governments aren't able to in debt and deficit, and now the road that we go on for Albertans is our choice. I just hope the people in this Assembly don't listen to the back-seat drivers looking out the back window wondering where we could have gone, what we might have done but look forward to all the possibilities we've got in Alberta. It's our destiny. So I just hope we get rid of this bill in second reading and maybe get on to something reasonably intelligent.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Boy, it's quite an afternoon, isn't it? You know, but for the grace of God and really, really good fortune this government would have broken their own law last year. I'd like to remind the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar that we approved $1.9 billion in unbudgeted spending for the year 2004-2005, $1.9 billion that this government spent that wasn't in the budget. It's only through good fortune and high natural resource prices that they managed to turn a surplus this year. So for him to talk about the tax-and-spend Liberals and read his fancy little report there – quite frankly, he's very, very lucky that the tables aren't turned on him. I really find that quite interesting, that the government that blew their budget within six weeks of it being passed last year should now stand up and talk about what a great job of budgeting they do.

In fact, we've already seen a number of budgetary announcements in the last few weeks that have caused me to question whether or not that's perhaps unbudgeted spending again being announced in the month of May. We haven't even passed the budget yet, and there are announcements coming out that I'm not even sure are included in the budget. So it's really just quite interesting to hear the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar talk about what a great job of budgeting this government does when it would be my submission that they're doing a rather dismal job of budgeting, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, if ever there was a time for a surplus investment policy, it is now. We're experiencing unbelievable resource revenues. We're seeing money come in that, obviously, even this government didn't expect would come in. We're seeing oil prices at the highest price they've ever been at, and the sky is apparently the limit. I am one of those that the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar referred to that says that this government always lowballs energy prices. Quite frankly, all you have to do is look at the record. You go back the 12 years that this government has been in place, and that's pretty consistent year after year after year. This is not just the Liberal opposition standing up and saying: oh, you guys always lowball prices. It's right there in black and white for anybody to go look at.

I'm really, quite frankly, looking forward to a year from now when we're at this stage again. We can go back and look at what the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford predicted the mean oil price would be over the year. I'll say it right now in case hon. members across haven't heard it: $48. Having said that, I'm impressed that the Finance minister based her budget on $42. I expected that they might use a number even somewhat lower than that. My personal prediction is $48, and I'm on record for having said that several times.

The other thing that the government does, and they've done it again this year: they tend to overestimate the value of the American dollar. Again, this adds greatly to the bottom line at the end of the year. This year they're basing their numbers on an 85-cent dollar. Well, Mr. Speaker, we know that recently the dollar did reach 83 cents, and now it's back down around 80 cents. If it stays down around 80 cents, what it means, of course, is more money in the bank at the end of the year. I've always said that I'd rather see money in the bank at the end of the year than to go the other way, but to lowball the estimates, as this government has done year after year for some 12 years now, and then pat themselves on the back for their great budgeting at the end of the year, well, quite frankly, it's a shell game. If you were to look at several of the comments that come from the other side, often they accuse the federal government of doing the same thing. So it's a bad thing if the federal government does it, yet somehow it's perfectly acceptable if it's done here.

An Hon. Member: You're not suggesting that they're hypocrites?

Mr. R. Miller: Now, I would never suggest that they were hypocrites. I'm just simply suggesting that, on the one hand, it's not a good thing, and on the other hand, it seems to be okay.

Now, Mr. Speaker, very clearly during the election I heard from many, many constituents that, as I said, if there was ever going to be a surplus investment policy, now is the time. The idea of asking for a report as to what things might have looked like if, in fact, the Liberals' plan for surplus investment was adopted I don't think is a bad thing at all. I think that, certainly, in the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford there are many, many people who would like to know that, and I heard this time and time again.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'm just going to outline quickly what would happen, I guess, knowing that, quite frankly, we're up against a majority government, and there have already been several rather vitriolic comments indicating that this bill is not going to pass today. Certainly, that is up to the government. With their majority they have the power to do that. I'd like to read in my own little report very quickly as to what would happen if this government were to continue the next three years with a surplus averaging $2.4 billion, what that might have meant to Albertans.

It would mean an extra $2.5 billion in the heritage fund, an extra $2.5 billion in the postsecondary endowment fund. If I can just take a second and point out, the government made a commitment this year to put what I consider to be a paltry $250 million into that postsecondary endowment fund. Then, you'll recall, they instituted a $3 billion cap. At the current rate of investment it would actually take 12 years for this government to reach that $3 billion cap. Under the Alberta Liberal plan after only three years we would be at $2.5 billion, and we'd be wondering why we had set that cap so low, as I indicated when we discussed Bill 1 in the House previously.

There would after three years be $1.8 billion set aside in the capital account to look at the infrastructure debt.

Mr. Speaker, a full $360 million after three years would have flowed into the endowment for the humanities, social sciences, and arts. You'll recall that earlier this session we actually passed a motion – I believe it was Motion 505 – that would mandate humanities and arts to be included in the high school curriculum. I know that that was a motion brought forward by a government member, and it was passed with an overwhelming majority and I think perhaps even a unanimous vote in this House. So, certainly, there was some recognition on the part of the government that arts and humanities are important, yet we're not seeing any action on their part to ensure that there's money going into some sort of an endowment fund that would fund that.

Now, our bill that we're debating this afternoon, Bill 203, would cap that amount at $500 million, and I think I mentioned already that after three years that would have been at $360 million. So it's not hard to see how we could, you know, fund initiatives like this quite easily with modest surpluses, Mr. Speaker, that are likely to continue for the next couple of years at least. I think it's spelled out fairly clearly in the bill, but for the information of those members who perhaps haven't read it yet, if and when we were to reach that $500 million mark in the arts and humanities endowment fund, then that 5 per cent that had been dedicated to there would go into the heritage savings trust fund.

Mr. Speaker, I was fortunate enough to have my parents here this afternoon, and over lunch we were discussing the heritage savings trust fund. My father reminded me of a conversation we had around the family dinner table when I was but a young, young man where he indicated at that time that he would never see a penny of that heritage savings trust fund. I'm sorry to say that it looks, at least to this point, that he's probably right.

In 1986 that fund was worth $12.7 billion. Today, nearly 20 years later, it's dropped down to $12.1 billion. Now, I don't have to tell you what chunk inflation itself would have taken out of that, let alone the fact that it really should have grown.

Alaska's permanent fund, which began in the same year as our heritage fund, is almost triple our fund at $36 billion, and of course everybody will know that they actually provide a cheque to Alaskan residents every year. Even given that they give money back to the taxpayers, they're still able to build their fund to $36 billion.

The one that always blows me away, Mr. Speaker. Norway's petroleum fund started 16 years after our fund was started, and you're looking at a jurisdiction that is about the same size: $120 billion in Norway's fund. It really has to make every Albertan stop for a second and ponder what our fund could have looked like if we hadn't been stripping away billions of dollars over the last 20 years and dumping that money into general revenue. It's just so unfortunate.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and join the debate on Bill 203, brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, which calls for the Minister of Finance to "prepare a report on how the financial affairs of the Government would have been affected" if entire budget surpluses were allocated towards four funds or accounts. These four funds that were suggested were the postsecondary education endowment fund, the heritage savings trust fund, the capital account, and the endowment fund for the humanities, social sciences, and arts.

We don't need to visit a fortune teller to know that the report would be clear on one thing and one thing only: there would be no surplus due to the hypothetical on top of hypothetical that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is proposing here today. It would appear that the members from across the way have temporarily jumped from the gloom-and-doom bandwagon onto the what-if bandwagon for a short time only, I am sure.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very concerned with this bill because it deals with hypothetical situations, calls on numerous resources to be used in the preparation of an extensive report which is to be based on a number of hypothetical statements. As I see it, Bill 203 is asking for a report to be funded with taxpayer dollars which would hypothetically predict what would have happened to Alberta's financial situation if all budget surpluses were allocated towards education, postsecondary education, infrastructure, and the heritage savings trust fund.

While I'm unable to comment on the numerous hypothetical spending situations requested by the Member for Edmonton Gold-Bar, I can comment on what is being done with Alberta's surplus today in the real world. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar should be happy to know that through Bill 1, the Access to the Future Act, the government is setting up the access to the future fund. This is a real fund that will contain real dollars for real students. This is not fantasy, Mr. Speaker; this is real.

The access to the future fund will be set up to receive the income from an endowment within the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. A portion . . .

Mr. R. Miller: Sixteen cents per student per day.

Mr. Prins: Yeah, I heard that, and it's not true.

A portion of the future unbudgeted surpluses will go into this new endowment for Alberta students until it grows to a healthy $3 billion. It is at this time that the Alberta heritage savings trust fund will pay the access to the future fund 4 and a half per cent of what is in the endowment. This real money will be allocated through grants from the access to the future fund. The fund is intended to provide base money to drive innovation in Alberta's postsecondary system. This real money will also be used to match grants designed to stimulate private industry, corporate, and other public contributions into Alberta's universities, colleges, and technical institutes.

The access to the future fund will establish and support improved learner outcomes; faculty, staff, and graduate student development, attraction, and retention; knowledge and technology transfer; as well as affordability. An example of what the access to the future fund will provide is the matching contributions it will make to help create the new centre for Chinese studies at the University of Alberta. This innovative project will promote greater understanding of the cultural language and history of one of the world's largest economies in a country with which Alberta has enjoyed a special, long relationship.

This is just one example, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of other real financial supports that government provides for Alberta's education system and the individuals that participate in it now and in the future. These, too, are real. These are not hypothetical programs, and there is no hypothetical spending.

I would like to take the opportunity to discuss a few of these programs. The Lois Hole Campus Alberta digital library is another of Alberta's groundbreaking and innovative projects. This initiative is centred on the work already under way at the University of Calgary. The digital library, which is a province-wide initiative, when fully implemented will allow all postsecondary students and faculty, wherever they are located in Alberta, to access the resources and knowledge currently held in the individual libraries of Alberta's technical institutes, colleges, or universities.

Mr. Speaker, this initiative can be looked at as a digital neighbourhood for students, faculty, and the community to access a wealth of knowledge. Building on the opportunities created by the SuperNet and the postsecondary collaborations already in place, the digital library will be part of a province-wide system that will give Albertans unprecedented access to e-learning, e-health, and e-commerce opportunities across this province.

By embracing this real access to the vast array of information made available through the digital library, we will make Alberta one of the most information-rich provinces in North America. Through the technologically advanced learning facilities of Alberta's universities, the digital library will support satellite points to connect people with life-long learning. For generations to come, Albertans will be linked to knowledge and information that could only be imagined 20 years ago.

Mr. Speaker, this is real. There are no what ifs involved. There are no gloom-and-doom scenarios other than those brought forward by members across the way. This is real innovation at work in Alberta.

Another example of Alberta's real commitment to students across the province is the Alberta heritage scholarship fund. This fund will contain a billion dollars to provide estimated additional revenues of at least $35 million annually. Originally endowed at a hundred million dollars, the Alberta heritage scholarship fund was designed to encourage excellence by recognizing outstanding achievement. The scholarship fund currently administers over 40 different scholarships and will award $23 million in scholarships in '04-05. Since 1981 the Alberta heritage scholarship fund has awarded in excess of $280 million to over 180,000 Albertans. That's a lot of money for students. That is real money supporting real students in a real way.

Mr. Speaker, there's also a $500 million expansion to the Alberta ingenuity fund, which will build on the fund's activities in accelerating innovation in Alberta. The Alberta ingenuity fund was established in 2000 with an endowment of $500 million. The fund was created to promote the discovery of new knowledge and encourage its application to benefit Albertans. This support of world-class research also advances science and engineering internationally. The fund provides various grants and awards in areas of both basic and applied research. Programs are developed in consultation with the international Science and Engineering Advisory Council, made up of scholars and experts recognized worldwide for their achievements in the Alberta research community.

My final example, Mr. Speaker, is the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. For 28 years this fund has been providing real benefits for Albertans. The investment income from the fund has been allocated to Albertans' priorities, including health care, education, and debt elimination. As of December 31 of last year the fund's value was $12.2 billion. Since its creation in 1976 the heritage fund has provided $27 billion in direct benefits to this province. The current mission of the fund is to provide practical investment for the savings from Alberta's nonrenewable resources by providing the greatest financial returns on those savings for current and future generations of Albertans.

We could continue for hours discussing the numerous real programs which would provide real dollars for Albertans, but unfortunately we only have a limited amount of time. I'm confident, however, that my colleagues will carry this torch and enlighten the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar about what Alberta does and what is real. I encourage the member from across the way to put down his prophecy book, put away the doom-and-gloom scenario that they use for their platform. It's time to encourage what works and what is real.

Unfortunately, for these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I'm unable to support Bill 203, and I call on all my colleagues to refrain from supporting this legislation as well. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and participate in the debate this afternoon on Bill 203, the Report on Alberta's Legacy Act. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the previous speakers and have read in Hansard the debate from past Mondays.

However, before I get started on why I think the hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly should support the bill, I would like to note, particularly to many of the previous speakers, that in a private member's bill we are not allowed to introduce money bills. An example of that would be bills that expend government funds. Only a minister of the Crown may introduce a money bill; therefore, we are compelled to introduce a bill requiring a report. That is why it is necessary for us to have a report with Bill 203.

But, really, when you look at this bill, it is about a party that has a vision. Contrary to what previous speakers may think, this party, the Alberta Liberal Party, and our current leader, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview – he's no different than past leaders of this party.

There was an hon. member who talked about suggestions earlier and how this government listens to suggestions. Well, certainly, they listen to good ideas and good suggestions from this side of the Assembly, and I would ask you to listen to this one as well, Bill 203.

We were talking about the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore. Our former leader, Mr. Laurence Decore, was the first political leader in this province to point out how the Conservatives were spending money like it was water. If we go back, perhaps, to 1988-89, this government's spending was out of control, and I'm not so sure it's not out of control now, Mr. Speaker, because we're spending lots and lots and lots of money, and we still have all kinds of problems. In fact, we have the same problems.

So it is unfair to say that this is the party that created the debt. We certainly did not. But we came up with sound ideas on how to eliminate the debt over a long period of time without sacrificing our infrastructure, without sacrificing our delivery of public health care, public education, without failing to look after those who, unfortunately, cannot look after themselves.

It was quite clear in the election campaign last fall, Mr. Speaker, which party had a heart. We were standing up for the people, and it was evident throughout the campaign. This government in reality has forgotten about many of the people in this province who cannot look after themselves, whether it's the AISH report or the latest Auditor General's report, this one on seniors' care and programs. I think all of us on both sides of the House should be ashamed about this report.

Getting back to the report – that is, Bill 203 – we have to be looking at what other leaders of this party have done and what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview had suggested during the election. Not only have we taken good Liberal ideas and turned them into government policies with Mr. Decore but also with Ken Nicol and the sustainability fund. That was a good idea, and it was adopted. So there's no reason why you can't adopt this idea.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster should know, if any hon. member of this House should know, Mr. Speaker, being that close to Saskatchewan, what happened to the Progressive Conservative Party after they were defeated. One of the big growth industries there was in jail cells because there was more than one or two of them that had to go to jail. In fact, their public image was blemished to the point where they had to fade into history. [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has moved second reading of Bill 203, Report on Alberta's Legacy Act. Does the Assembly agree with the motion for second reading?

Mr. MacDonald: Clarification, please.

Speaker's Ruling

Closing Debate

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, your colleague spoke on your behalf to introduce this bill; therefore, when you speak or she speaks on your behalf, that closes debate. It's deemed that you have spoken before. So the second time you speak or whoever spoke on your behalf speaks, that closes debate. For closing the debate you only have five minutes. Did you want to comment on that?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, could I have clarification, please. On the Order Paper today I believe there were 83 minutes left in debate, and I would just like to have it clarified that all 83 minutes have expired.

The Deputy Speaker: Not every speaker used all of their full 10 minutes, but once they sit down, that time has elapsed. According to Beauchesne 466(2), "should a Member propose a motion on behalf of another Member, a later speech by either will close the debate." So when I recognized you, I asked you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, to close debate, which gave you your five minutes to close the debate, so now we're proceeding with the vote. Is that clear?

Mr. MacDonald: Sure.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:24 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

Bill 204

Pharmacy and Drug (Methamphetamine Limiting) Amendment Act, 2005

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to move second reading of Bill 204, the Pharmacy and Drug (Methamphetamine Limiting) Amendment Act, 2005.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The bill is not a complex bill. It is simply to reclassify ephedrine and pseudoephedrine as schedule 2 drugs. What does this reclassification as schedule 2 drugs mean? Schedule 1 drugs are sold only in pharmacies, stored behind the pharmacy's counter, and are available only by prescription. Schedule 2 drugs are available only in pharmacies and are stored behind the counter. Schedule 3 drugs are just available in pharmacies. So by reclassifying ephedrine and pseudoephedrine as schedule 2 drugs, products containing these drugs would only be available from behind the counters at pharmacies. The products affected by this move would be many cold medications and nasal decongestants.

The purpose of Bill 204 is to restrict the access to ephedrine and pseudoephedrine by individuals who are seeking these drugs for illegal purposes. Ephedrine and pseudoephedrine are two main ingredients used in the production of crystal meth and other methamphetamines. The use of crystal meth is a growing concern across all of North America, as I'm sure all members here can attest. Crystal meth is a growing concern in all of our communities and is affecting individuals, families, and innocent bystanders throughout Alberta. Crystal meth is highly addictive, is made from common household products, and is relatively cheap to obtain.

I applaud the Member for Red Deer-North for bringing forward Bill 202, which will help address the drug addiction issue for Alberta's children. With Bill 202 to help provide a very useful tool in helping to treat the drug addicted, Bill 204 will help to make it more difficult for those manufacturing illicit drugs to easily obtain the ingredients they need to manufacture a relatively low-cost product.

This bill isn't going to stop the manufacture of crystal meth in Alberta. I think we need to acknowledge this fact during this debate. Without Canada-wide action by the federal government differing legislation amongst the provinces will continue to allow for precursor drugs like ephedrine and pseudoephedrine to flow from jurisdictions with weaker controls and legislation in regard to these drugs. With hundreds of instructions available on the Internet on how to create small portions of meth with a few household products and little effort, many youths are beginning to experiment with these products of crystal meth.

This is an opportunity for Alberta to lead the way in Canada in regard to beginning to put stronger controls on the products that lead to drugs which are causing great devastation to a great number of Albertans and their families. Crystal meth is a problem that isn't going to go away. We need to decrease the number of people beginning to use crystal meth and slow the supply to those who are currently using.

While Canada and Alberta do not participate greatly, they do great jobs in routinely collecting data on substance abuse. The Edmonton Police Service report increases in drug seizure and charges in relationship to crystal meth from the period of 1999 to 2003. AADAC has reported that amongst youth clients, 25 per cent reported that they have abused some of the amphetamines; 19 per cent of the adult clients have claimed that they have also used some form of this too. Usually when we discuss or debate a certain drug or addiction, the discourse revolves around the individual user, their family, and innocent people who have been directly affected by the drug abuser through physical assault, robbery, or some other crime.

An incident involved an Edmonton man who was high on crystal meth and stole a truck and rammed the vehicle into a police cruiser after a long chase. Both officers in the police cruiser were badly injured. This is the type of recklessness and lethal behaviour that we need to rid our streets of, but this type of behaviour can be associated with a great number of street drugs.

One of the dangers that separates crystal meth from some of the other drugs is the manufacturing process. Setting up a marijuana operation in a home at the worst of times leads to moisture damage and mould spores. While mould can be dangerous to one's health, this pales in comparison to the danger that exists around a crystal meth cook lab. The manufacturing of crystal meth involves common products that can be obtained legally by any individual, but the ingredients can be extremely toxic and explosive. Individuals operating these labs have no training in chemistry or in the safe storage of toxic chemicals. They criminally look to make as much money as quickly as possible. The safety of the children living in these cook labs is at risk. The safety of the neighbourhood is at risk, and the safety of the law enforcement officials and emergency crews who arrive at these locations is also at risk.

According to a study conducted by the University of Washington, 52 per cent of Washington law enforcement officers who attended training seminars related to crystal meth laboratory investigations reported experiencing symptoms of ammonia, hydroxide, chloride, or acid exposure. These manufacturing processes are very dangerous and produce a number of hazardous by-products.

Albertans and the people who serve our community shouldn't have to worry about these types of risks. As a government we need to take steps to reduce the amount of crystal meth available, reduce the number of people who are trying to manufacture this drug. Bill 204 is a step in the right direction.

In July 2003 the College of Pharmacists announced that pharmacies across Alberta were going to voluntarily restrict access of ephedrine and pseudoephedrine by moving these products containing ephedrine and pseudoephedrine as small therapeutic ingredients behind the prescription counters. This move has been applauded by other provincial pharmacy colleges, and those other colleges have been discussing whether a similar move should be made in their jurisdictions. This voluntary move by colleges has essentially already put pharmacies across Alberta into compliance with Bill 204 with regard to single-ingredient products, but multi-ingredient products will also need to be put behind the counter.

Consulting with the College of Pharmacists will be leading to an amendment being put forward by myself to move multi-ingredient products containing ephedrine and pseudoephedrine into pharmacies but not behind the counter. What this does is provide an opportunity for Alberta's pharmacists to play a larger role in assisting Albertans in choosing the most appropriate drug therapy. Some may come into the pharmacy looking for a specific cold remedy, but with the help of the pharmacist this person might be directed towards an alternate treatment that will more effectively for what's ailing them. I would see an excellent opportunity to improve the care of Albertans.

Those who would be immediately affected by Bill 204 would be the nonpharmaceutical retail outlets. It is a possibility that Bill 204 would adversely affect the revenue stream that these stores now have. However, a great number of American states have had legislation similar to Bill 204 in effect for some time, and they haven't seen any significant backlash. I am confident that we'll see the same results here in Alberta.

The use of crystal meth is a growing concern in Alberta. It is a growing concern in all our communities and is affecting individuals, families, and innocent bystanders. Bill 204 is a step forward in reducing access to the main ingredients of this product of crystal meth.

I'd ask you all to support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to contribute to the debate in second reading on Bill 204, the Pharmacy and Drug (Methamphetamine Limiting) Amendment Act, 2005. I have to start out by saying that there is no clear consensus with regard to this bill amongst the stakeholders, the pharmacists, and even in my own Official Opposition caucus. So we have two opposing points of view, one that might support this bill and one that opposes it.

Some people may be supportive of this bill as it tries to restrict access to ephedrine- and pseudoephedrine-containing drugs. These two chemicals are the precursors used to produce crystal meth. Myself, personally, I am leaning towards this point of view, supporting this bill, but with reservations, with qualifiers.

Why would I consider taking this direction and supporting this bill? First, as a community pharmacist who has practised for 11 years, I have seen people who expressed serious concern with the ease with which these medications are available and, further to that, the ease with which crystal meth is produced and the way it's manufactured.

Also, I am leaning towards supporting this bill because of my care for our young and our youth. Crystal meth is truly devastating. It is extremely dangerous. I'm not sure if some of the hon. members know this, but initially a person who is addicted to crystal meth looks brighter and probably even achieves better in school. So this adds to the latency of the risk with crystal meth because a parent or a teacher might not notice that a person is addicted to a substance because they look brighter and they look more energetic. Then the downward spiral starts: they lose their appetite, they lose sleep, they lose their motivation, and then they get into the criminal activities, and so on.

Further, I might consider supporting this bill because other jurisdictions, places like Oklahoma, Texas, Iowa, and Arkansas, have either passed or are studying similar legislation, legislation that is very similar to what we're proposing here in Bill 204. There is evidence that passing such a law or such a statute helps address this problem even at least partially.

Also, as a representative of the public and as an elected official I can see the merits of this proposal. Personally, many of my constituents have approached me expressing support for such an idea. I think their approach was one that fits with the crystal meth bill that we passed in this Legislature a couple of weeks ago, Bill 202, because they see this as a threat and they see it as something that needs to be addressed radically and forcefully.

I would argue, again as a pharmacist and from my own experience, that a legitimate cold or flu sufferer will not really mind much going to the back of the drugstore to talk to a pharmacist and request his sinus or flu medication. In fact, as the hon. sponsor of the bill indicated, this might be a better scenario because this person, he or she, will have to talk to the pharmacist and in the process receive some counselling and education.

So if I support this bill in principle, I have some concerns that I would like clarification on or an explanation from the hon. member, particularly that again we seem to be off-loading this tremendous responsibility on the pharmacist's shoulder. Why is it always the pharmacist who has to police the industry?

Actually, this may even open an area of questioning that is really big and contentious. The pharmacists previously have asked for typed or computer-generated prescriptions, for example, to avoid prescription mistakes. We all know that to some extent physicians' writing is not the most readable. Some physicians complied; some didn't.

Pharmacists have asked for reimbursement for cognitive services, but we were met with resistance and delays from this government. I would quote an example. For example, if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford comes to my store and he presents me with a prescription that was written for two grams of poison – take as directed – I don't get reimbursed if I refuse to fill that prescription. I would say: my friend, this is dangerous, and this can kill you. Then he would leave the store, and I have not earned a red penny; however, if I ignore my professional judgment and if I ignore my ethics and my moral obligations and I say, "Yes. Go ahead. Take it. Two grams of poison. Take it as directed. See you in a week, if you're still alive," then I made the money. I made the professional fee, the dispensing fee.

So this is an example of where a pharmacist is asked to exercise his professional judgment and not getting reimbursed for it. So the natural question will be: will the pharmacist be compensated for this extra duty with respect to pseudoephedrine and ephedrine-containing products? Will we have the recognition and the compensation for it?

As I mentioned previously, there is also division on this matter, and some people feel that they cannot support it. I know for sure that my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Centre, who also happens to be the Official Opposition health critic, is totally against it and cannot support it.

Further to this, I want to put on the record that we as the Official Opposition have received letters of objection from both the Canadian Association of Chain Drug Stores and also from the Canadian Council of Grocery Distributors. Obviously and understandably, these are organizations which are concerned that passing this bill will negatively impact their sales. I can understand and maybe even sympathize with them to some extent.

Further, our Official Opposition health critic is concerned that this bill attempts to go the easy way rather than tackle the real issues with respect to education, law enforcement, the inadequate treatment funding, and the lack of treatment and rehabilitation spaces and facilities.

So, really, at this stage of debate, it will be interesting and useful to listen to more discussion from our side and from the government side as well and possibly also from the third party and see what people have to say on this subject.

On the one hand, we have the idea that limiting access to the precursor would reduce the manufacturing of crystal meth. We have examples in some U.S. jurisdictions. There is also the angle that: no; supporting it at the wholesale level might be better and might be a more realistic approach than supporting it at the retail level. So these are considerations we have to all think about.

I think I can even expand on this and challenge the conventional thinking and say that there is also the angle with respect to sales of the precursor drugs, the ephedrine and the pseudoephedrine, in herbal or holistic medicine stores. These are stores or shops which are not rigorously controlled or regulated. It might be easier for them to stock it, and then a genuine drugstore or a grocery store might not be able to. Or you can actually even expand further and talk about oriental grocery and specialty stores, where in some cases these products are not even labelled in English, or they only list the botanical origin of what's inside, but they don't identify the chemical ingredients. So you have a product that says some type of bark or some type of leaf, but you don't know that it really contains ephedrine or pseudoephedrine.

These are questions which require answers, Mr. Speaker, and I would encourage other members to participate and possibly also the hon. sponsor of this so that when I support this bill, I would be comfortable supporting it, and I would take it back to my college and my professional association and say as one member, as one person, as one pharmacist that I supported it because of these reasons. Or if I go the other way and oppose it, I want to make a comfortable decision one way or the other.

I will retake my seat, and I will listen with interest to what other members have to say. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to speak to Bill 204, Pharmacy and Drug (Methamphetamine Limiting) Amendment Act, 2005. It has become clear, especially after the Western Premiers' Conference in Lloydminster last week, that there is a massive increase in concern in the abuse of methamphetamine in all of western Canada. The discussion of crystal meth was one of the highest priorities of the western Premiers, and Premier Calvert of Saskatchewan is now chairing a committee to research the use of crystal meth in western Canada. Bill 204 will give Alberta another weapon in the battle against this vicious addiction.

To start, I believe a word of recognition is in order for the hon. Member for West Yellowhead for bringing forward Bill 204 and for recognizing the need for such legislation. I'd also like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung for his words and his wisdom as a pharmacist on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, the fight against drugs is a two-front battle. On one front we attempt to educate parents, children, and teachers on the dangers associated with drug abuse and drug addiction. On the other front we react to the circumstances presented to us by drug addicts and drug dealers. Bill 204 is a reaction to the methamphetamine problem. One of the worst aspects of the meth problem is the ease of obtaining the ingredients needed to produce it. Methamphetamine is mass-produced using household products, including ephedrine and pseudoephedrine, as we've heard this afternoon.

The Alberta College of Pharmacists have volunteered themselves as the foot soldiers in the battle against methamphetamine. The College of Pharmacists have engaged themselves by voluntarily moving single-entity ephedrine and pseudoephedrine products, which are products where ephedrine and pseudoephedrine are the only ingredient, behind the pharmacists' counters. But this measure is only voluntary and does not apply to nonpharmacy retail outlets.

Bill 204 will extend this voluntary measure by making it mandatory. It also calls for placing products containing any amount of ephedrine and pseudoephedrine behind the counter as well. Mr. Speaker, Bill 204 is not a panacea that will solve the methamphetamine problem in this province. It will, however, be another deterrent that will make the production of the drug more difficult.

According to the College of Pharmacists the standards of practice for schedule 2 drugs include activities that must be undertaken by the pharmacists interacting with a patient desiring to self-medicate with one of these products. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that pharmacists are in a very good position to determine whether a person is interested in obtaining drugs for the purpose of self-medication or if they are interested in purchasing drugs to assist in the production of methamphetamine. By putting ephedrine and pseudoephedrine in the schedule 2 category, the pharmacists will have the power to reject the sale of the drugs in circumstances that are suspicious.

I would like to spend a few minutes talking about another drug that has been used inappropriately in the past because this drug was changed from schedule 3 to a schedule 2 drug as a measure to stop its misuse. The trade name for the drug is dimenhydrinate, and the common name is Gravol. Gravol is supposed to be used to treat nausea and vomiting, but when taken in large doses, it can produce a high and hallucinations. Until 1998 Gravol was a schedule 3 drug and was easily obtained by anyone looking for a cheap high. When Gravol was changed from a schedule 3 drug to a schedule 2 drug, this was done by the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

In the case of ephedrine and pseudoephedrine some would argue that the change from a schedule 3 drug to a schedule 2 drug should also be executed in the same manner. I warn, however, that the case for Gravol is not the same as the case for ephedrine and pseudoephedrine. One of the main differences between Gravol and ephedrine is that at the time when Gravol was being abused, not many people were aware of this problem, nor was this problem as serious as the one we're facing with meth. Another difference is that Alberta was the only jurisdiction in the country that had Gravol as a schedule 3 drug. The federal standard as well as all other provinces had Gravol as a schedule 2 drug. The case for Gravol was, therefore, quite different than the case for ephedrine and pseudoephedrine. Making the change from a schedule 3 to a schedule 2 drug by the Lieutenant Governor in Council was practical for Gravol. It's less desirable for ephedrine and pseudoephedrine.

Mr. Speaker, methamphetamine is a drug that has hit this province and other provinces like a plague. I doubt that there is an MLA in this room who has not heard a horror story from a constituent about the devastating effect of this drug. The meth problem is simply this serious. A problem as serious as the one I am describing warrants extensive debate and discussion. Where Gravol was changed behind closed doors, changing ephedrine and pseudoephedrine requires more attention.

By passing Bill 204, Alberta will be the only jurisdiction in the country to have ephedrine and pseudoephedrine as schedule 2 drugs. This change in Alberta and the debate surrounding the change will cause the National Association of Pharmacy Regulatory Authorities to also consider putting these drugs into schedule 2. If this change in Alberta prompts a change nationally, the battle against the spread of methamphetamine will gain considerable momentum, with Alberta at the forefront. Mr. Speaker, like Bill 202, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act, Bill 204 is clearly a step in the right direction.

I spoke earlier about the two-front battle against drugs: the education and prevention battle and the reaction battle. The Alberta College of Pharmacists has proposed opening another front in this battle, and Bill 204 may provide them with an opportunity to do so. When drugs are categorized, suggestions are made by the National Association of Pharmacy Regulatory Authorities, but the ultimate decisions are left up to the authorities in each jurisdiction. These scheduling recommendations embody a cascading principle approach in which a drug is first assessed using the factors for schedule 1. Should sufficient factors pertain, the drug remains in that schedule. If not, the drug is assessed against the factors for schedule 2, and if warranted, it is subsequently assessed against the factors for schedule 3. Finally, should a drug not meet the factors of any schedule, it becomes unscheduled or nonrestricted and available for sale from any retail outlet.

Bill 204 supports the college in bringing issues regarding this process to the forefront because politicians are reacting to the insufficient process by bringing forward legislation. Mr. Speaker, this process promotes the listing of drugs in schedules corresponding to the conditions of sale, providing for proper drug use and patient safety. The problem according to the College of Pharmacists is that this process does not speak to medications used as precursors to other drugs, nor does it consider the misuse of drugs.

Another issue with the cascading principle model for drug assessment is that it does not provide for any judgment calls. The Alberta College of Pharmacists would like the process to address these issues. If the Alberta College of Pharmacists can change the process of drug categorization to include the use of judgment on a drug-by-drug basis in terms of potential misuse and in terms of using the medication as precursors to other drugs, this will open a third front in the battle against drug abuse: the proactive front.

Mr. Speaker, pharmacists have been expanding their role in health care and have been trying to extend their services to better serve in the primary health system. In fact, in looking for ways to be more efficient, various health professionals have looked at changes to their roles to make better use of their time and their expertise. In these changes pharmacists have been singled out as professionals who may have a larger role in prescribing and dealing with what they know about schedule 2 medications.

Bill 204 gives pharmacists an opportunity to become more involved in primary health. By putting medications that are primarily made of ephedrine and pseudoephedrine behind the counter, they are able to offer advice for treating symptoms associated with the common cold, the flu, and other associated illnesses. By speaking to their clients, they are in a better position to recommend the appropriate medication for treating these illnesses. Although some may argue that putting these medications behind the counter will simply inconvenience people, I suggest that with an aging demographic Bill 204 will actually better serve many of Alberta's citizens. By placing medications for more common illnesses behind the counter, these people must consult a pharmacist, who, by asking appropriate questions, may be able to assess more serious conditions.

Alternatively, people who are on other medications may be better served because pharmacists will be able to suggest medications for treating common illnesses that do not cause complications when they are mixed with their normal medications. As the population ages, Mr. Speaker, these situations will become more common. Although the purpose of Bill 204 is not to protect people from these scenarios, it does provide the medical field an opportunity to do so, perhaps relieving some of the strain on other areas of the health care system.

As legislators it is our duty to protect the rights of the child. Article 33 of the United Nations convention on the rights of the child states that children have the right to be protected from dangerous drugs. By being proactive and making it less than convenient to purchase the ingredients that make up dangerous drugs, we are taking proactive steps to protect our children.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude by reiterating that Bill 204 will not eliminate the crystal meth problem in this province, but I do believe it's another step in the right direction. I would encourage everybody to support this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise to discuss Bill 204 and, in general, with a strong sense of support. We are in a culture and a society where we're facing increasingly the mixed blessing of our pharmacological plethora of opportunities and the double-edged sword that they represent in terms of helping and harming people. With this new scourge almost an epidemic in some areas it's clear that drugs that we have found very helpful in benign conditions of the respiratory system are now being abused. While Bill 204 cannot possibly address the broad range of underlying causes, which is so often the problem in our system, that we're dealing with symptoms, it at least is addressing at a secondary level an intervention that to me holds some promise, just as the approach to cigarettes and tobacco in our society has been somewhat aided and abetted in its control by restricting access to tobacco and alcohol similarly.

There needs to be a short-term and a long-term approach to these problems. In the short term it does seem eminently sensible to me to restrict access and to reduce the ability, especially of young people, to these drugs. In the longer term it's clearly only a very partial solution, and we need the other dimensions of a full approach that include education, addressing social and economic and even spiritual roots of the addictive society that we have today. We need to have early identification and management of these problems in schools, in communities, and the resources to do this. We need public policies such as this to help us to address and support the broader aspects of challenging the roots of the addictive tendencies that we confront every day in the medical field, the health field, the social, criminal, and legal aspects of it.

I won't belabour the issue, but I did want to stand in support of this and recommend it as a secondary intervention that will help to stem the tide. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise and contribute to the debate on Bill 204, the Pharmacy and Drug (Methamphetamine Limiting) Amendment Act, 2005. Methamphetamines are part of a family of drugs known as amphetamines that were originally developed over 50 years ago. However, the widespread use and abuse of this drug is a relatively new phenomenon in our province.

Methamphetamine, also known as meth or crystal meth, among a variety of street names, is an exceptionally harmful and addictive drug. It is a stimulant that acts on the central nervous system. These effects can include feelings of euphoria, a decreased need for sleep, suppression of appetite and thirst, an increased sense of alertness, increased energy, and an increase in ambition. Additionally, at higher doses there is an increased chance of aggressive behaviour. The drug is very versatile in the sense that users are able to ingest it nasally, orally, intravenously, or through smoking. As with any drug, users develop a tolerance to methamphetamine, which necessitates the use of stronger doses in order to experience the same sensations from the drug.

The negative side effects of the drug include alteration of sleep patterns, psychosis, and mood swings. Prolonged abuse of the drug can lead to permanent nerve damage due to the way the amphetamines interact with the body's neurological pathways. Due to the fact that the drug may be injected, intravenous users of meth expose themselves to the risk of contracting HIV, hepatitis, and other blood-borne diseases if they are sharing needles. While all of these risks and the potential uncontrollable side effects are abhorrent, they do not set this drug apart from other illicit substances such as cocaine or heroine.

What makes methamphetamine different and, in my opinion, more dangerous is that they are easily produced using common household items. According to various law enforcement offices such as the drug enforcement agency, or the DEA, of the United States, a simple search of the Internet will reveal detailed plans of the necessary ingredients and tools used in the production of meth. All of these items are attainable by stopping at the grocery store and at the hardware store.

Also, several of these recipes provide alternatives to several ingredients that can be used if certain items are not readily available. In fact, only one of the ingredients used in making this drug cannot be substituted, and this is ephedra, ephedrine, or pseudoephedrine. One of these three drugs is crucial to the manufacture of methamphetamine. These drugs are commonly found in over-the-counter medications such as cold remedies. The availability of these ingredients makes it very easy for individuals to set up and operate small laboratories to produce methamphetamine. This is exactly what happened in the United States when methamphetamine appeared there.

While methamphetamine use in Alberta is a problem – it is a growing problem – we have the opportunity to learn from the experience of other jurisdictions to make a fairly accurate prediction of what may come. I would like to briefly discuss the experience in the U.S. to show how quickly the use and production of this drug can grow.

Meth started out in California, and that state remains the major producer of the drug in the country as well as a major trafficking hub for bringing the narcotic in from foreign countries. The DEA estimates that the rise of methamphetamine began in the early 1990s in California and grew very rapidly. From California use and production of the drug radiated outward through the rest of the country at an amazing speed. Data has shown that once the drug gained a toehold in certain states, its use and domestic production literally exploded. In 1999, for example, the DEA reported seizing 57 meth labs in Mississippi, a state with a population that's comparable to Alberta, having 2.86 million people. In 2002 the DEA reported seizing 285 meth labs. This is an increase of 500 per cent. Likewise, Wyoming experienced an increase from 10 labs seized in 2000 to 54 seized in 2002.

Mr. Speaker, the majority of the risks that are associated with using methamphetamine have been outlined. However, the manufacture of this drug creates an entirely new set of risks, dangers, and hazards not only to those that are manufacturing the drugs but also to the community and to the environment. This is because of the ingredients that are used, the processes that are undergone, and the by-products that are created when methamphetamine is manufactured. Many of the ingredients used in manufacturing meth are highly volatile, including paint thinner and propane. The combination of these and other chemicals means that there exists a high chance of an explosion occurring, especially considering that the drug must be cooked in order to be produced. The second risk that comes from the manufacture of meth is that a variety of toxic fumes are produced during the reaction. These fumes can have a very harmful and long-lasting effect on anyone that comes in contact with it. The final side effect of the production of this drug is that the residue is toxic and ends up in the sewage systems of cities and towns.

The case in which the drug is produced, coupled with its highly addictive properties, means that addicts can begin producing their own narcotics. In the United States this has led to several tragedies involving people getting injured because of a meth lab explosion. This poses a risk not only to the individuals operating the lab but also to the police and to the fire personnel and in at least one case in the United States to the children of an individual that was operating a meth lab. In 1998 three children in California died when a meth lab their mother was operating exploded.

Thankfully, the U.S. is now witnessing a decrease in the number of clandestine meth labs. This can be attributed to the new legislation that has been brought in, designed to limit the precursor substances that are used in meth production. Mr. Speaker, Bill 204 seeks to do the same by narrowing the window of opportunity individuals have to purchase the necessary ingredients for manufacturing methamphetamine. By controlling the access to ephedra, ephedrine, and pseudoephedrine drug products, we are able to put controls on the volume of these drugs purchased, thereby curbing their potential use. The over-the-counter cold remedies that ephedra, ephedrine, and pseudoephedrine are found in will still be readily available for consumers to purchase as an over-the-counter item.

Mr. Speaker, we have a chance to learn from the experience of the United States and work to head off the explosion of methamphetamine use that our neighbours to the south are experiencing. By limiting the sales of the precursor drugs, we'll be able to limit the amount of meth made in home labs, thereby reducing the amount of this drug circulating in our province.

I support Bill 204 and would ask all my colleagues to do the same. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with some interest to speak on Bill 204. I think that the intention of this bill is admirable. Certainly, no one can dispute the fact that the problem that we have with methamphetamines in our province, across the country, across North America is reaching epidemic proportions. It's a drug that can destroy lives very quickly and change personalities very quickly.

Thus, it's expedient and responsible for this Legislative Assembly to do something about it.

I guess that the only reservations that I do have are in regard to putting the responsibility too squarely or with too much emphasis upon the pharmacists to deal with this problem. If we did manage to have this bill pass, I would certainly like to see it in concert with other measures to ensure that we are in fact dealing with the enforcement and educative and social issues that surround the abuse of this drug and, indeed, other drugs as well. We've already been speaking about crystal meth in regard to treatment programs for youth, and I would like to humbly suggest that we should certainly extend this expanded treatment capacity to all individuals who meet the misfortune of drug abuse or addiction in their lives.

I think that we might be able to see some amendments to Bill 204. Our research would suggest that there are more than 200 products that, in fact, contain the active ingredient ephedrine or pseudoephedrine. You know, I think that if we could limit perhaps the products that are kept behind the counter to products that contain a hundred per cent of either of these products, that would perhaps simplify the execution of this bill if it became law and simplify the responsibility of the pharmacists to be controlling otherwise, as I say, more than 200 different products.

I think we're seeing, as I said before, the issue of this drug epidemic sweeping across the country. I know that the Premiers in Lloydminster were speaking about this, and so it would suggest that whatever we do decide to do in this Legislature, we should act quickly and in consort with other jurisdictions so that we don't have that discrepancy in law or in enforcement between different provincial jurisdictions. So we must watch carefully what happens elsewhere as well.

We have seen a federal private member's bill addressing this issue. In fact, I think that some aspects of the bill that the Yellowhead MP brought forward, Bill C-349, are interesting and are worth considering. That's looking at not just ephedrine but instead looking at some of the ingredients that are used to change the chemical nature of ephedrine to make crystal meth, which include acetone and hydriodic acid and red phosphorus, in fact to place some controlling restrictions on those substances which are specifically used to convert ephedrine into crystal meth. So I would like to just introduce that possibility of looking at controlling or tracking the sale of those substances as being an alternative to retail cold remedy – somehow controlling those substances which are more retail-oriented.

As people have spoken to some great extent, different states in the United States have had laws on the books already concerning the control of cold remedies such as Sudafed and Claritin-D. In fact, Oklahoma has placed those pills behind counters and given the pharmacists the responsibility of looking for photo identification and for signing a registry as well, which, you know, back to my original point about placing too much responsibility on the backs of pharmacists, might indeed be an example of how that could become too onerous and extreme to execute.

Again, looking through various pieces of research, the discrepancy between states in the United States creates people moving from state to state to look for cold medication, not to treat their colds but, in fact, to manufacture crystal meth. So, as I said before, if we can work quickly in consort with some of our other provincial counterparts, I think we would be more effective.

I should say that I would support this bill but only if we are in fact working with other measures to limit the destructive potential of this drug on our population and not just limiting it to the restriction of this one ingredient.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to address the Assembly today regarding Bill 204, the methamphetamine limiting act. I would like to congratulate the hon. Member for West Yellowhead for bringing this important legislation forward. It is great timing.

I would like to start by admitting that I was under the impression that it was already a law in Alberta. I had heard that ephedrine was only being sold behind the counter in my constituency and assumed that our regulations had been changed. However, it was only after some research that I learned that the Alberta College of Pharmacists had voluntarily moved ephedrine and pseudoephedrine products behind the pharmacists' counter. I applaud the move and feel that we as a Legislature shouldn't be dragging our feet on making this mandatory in Alberta. Ephedrine and pseudoephedrine are being used every day in bathtubs, basements, and kitchen sinks throughout Alberta to manufacture crystal meth.

Meth is one of the cheapest, most accessible, and harmful drugs circulating in Alberta right now. Part of this is because the ingredients are so easily obtained. If you came across a list of the precursors of this crystal meth lying on the street, the average Albertan would probably think that someone had accidentally dropped their grocery list on the way to the supermarket. I don't know the details of meth or how it's created, but I was told that if someone with illegal intentions had purchased some Sudafed, a bottle of iodine, a pack of matches, some Drano, and a bottle of Coleman fuel, they would be well on their way to having all the precursors to create a batch of crystal meth.

So the question we need to be asking ourselves as legislators is: how do we stop this? We can't outlaw all the precursors. We can't make it illegal to purchase Drano. We can't make it illegal to purchase a pack of matches. We can't make it illegal to purchase Sudafed. We can't even make it illegal to possess a combination of those precursors. If we did, we would be making criminals out of most Albertans. I would be willing to bet that many of us here in this Assembly today has a box of Sudafed in our medicine cabinet at home, a pack of matches in a desk drawer somewhere, or a Drano container under our kitchen sink.

What we can do is make it harder to obtain the precursors. One thing I believe we need to keep in mind is that many of these products can be substituted in the crystal meth recipe. If we, for example, decide that Drano can only be sold in small quantities or only by licensed plumbers, then the meth producer will start to use a different drain cleaner or another cleaning product. It would also create a huge inconvenience for the average Albertan. I don't want to have to track down a plumber just to buy some drain cleaner. It would also unfairly hurt the manufacturers of Drano, only because some people have found a way to use their product in a way other than what it is supposed to be.

The same goes for many other precursors in this crystal meth. All of them are legal products. It's just that they are being used in a way other than that for which they are intended. And most can be substituted with other products; that is, with the exception of ephedrine and pseudoephedrine. Ephedrine and pseudoephedrine are the only precursors in crystal meth that cannot be substituted. Furthermore, it's the easiest and cheapest method for meth makers to obtain ephedrine or pseudoephedrine from common cold and asthma medications.

Many of these products containing ephedrine or pseudoephedrine can be currently obtained off the shelves at a drugstore, grocery store, or even convenience store; that is, with the exception of those drugstores or supermarkets containing pharmacies who have voluntarily put them behind the counter. But is that fair? Is it even working?

If convenience stores can sell them to anyone, any time, in any quantity while those pharmacies who have voluntarily put them behind the counter question anyone who wants to buy ephedrine, it's fairly simple to figure out where the meth makers are going to buy their precursors.

The Deputy Speaker: Good evening. Please be seated.

Recruitment of Health Care Professionals

508. Mr. Danyluk moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to institute an aggressive program aimed at hiring and retaining health care professionals throughout the province while targeting areas of need, such as rural Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise this evening to move debate on Motion 508. As we are all aware, health care is one of the most important issues to Albertans and, indeed, to all Canadians. An accessible, high quality, and sustainable health care system are the goals of many health care providers, and I feel that here in Alberta our health care system provides a high level of care for those who need it. Motion 508 deals with the issue of accessibility to health care in Alberta. Having an adequate number of health professionals in an area is key to ensuring that accessibility is retained.

While Alberta has some of the best health care professionals and medical centres world-wide, there are some areas of the province which have difficulty attracting and retaining health care staff. Smaller communities in our province often face this difficulty. While there exists a strong demand, professionals choose to locate to larger centres. There are a variety of reasons for this decision. Living in a smaller community can make it more difficult for an individual to continue their professional development. Also, while there may be employment for an X-ray technician, a physiotherapist, or a nurse, there may not be job opportunities for the spouse. All of these factors can add up to a health care professional choosing to find employment in another region. This leaves some rural communities wanting for access to primary health care.

Mr. Speaker, in the north there are many small communities where the physician comes in to see patients once a week. This is because the community is unable to attract or retain their own physician. During one period this physician cancelled his trip – and I have two different examples – once, three times in a row and, once, six weeks in a row. I am not imputing the actions of this physician, but I use this case to highlight the situation that some of these communities find themselves in.

The challenge of attracting and retaining health care providers to areas that are in need is one that we need to examine and address now due to the nature of the problem. Training health care workers or designing and implementing a recruitment and retention strategy takes time. The longer we wait, the longer it will be before we witness results.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to give the impression that the government has not addressed this issue, because that would be widely inaccurate. The government has programs in place, some for many years, to address this issue, such as Rural Physician Action Plan. The Rural Physician Action Plan's focus is on bringing more physicians to rural Alberta. They work towards this goal through a variety of means, including scholarships, bursaries, education programs, and working with government to increase the number of rural residency programs available for medical students.

Since 1999 the government has increased the number of funded seats across all years of health programs by 4,300. This allows for many more Albertans to receive the training necessary to pursue a career in health sciences. Actions such as this work to ensure that shortages in the health care workforce are not due to a lack of trained personnel.

Mr. Speaker, I have brought this motion forward because I believe we need to do more to address this issue. We need to take the programs that are already in place, broaden their scope, and be more creative with them. Many of the current programs specifically target physicians, and this is good because we need doctors in this province. However, I would advocate that we widen the net so that the successes experienced with these programs can be expanded to include other health care professionals. There is no doubt that having enough doctors is the key, giving a high standard of care in our hospitals; however, without enough nurses, speech and physiotherapists, radiologists, and lab technicians our health care system will not function effectively or efficiently.

We need to create stronger incentives for medical professionals to locate to areas of need in our province. This can come in the shape of a variety of programs and a number of solutions to the challenges that are faced. Some of the solutions should include exposing more students in the health-related programs to learning experiences outside of our big cities or offering financial initiatives for students and practitioners in the health sciences to locate in areas of need.

Mr. Speaker, multiple jurisdictions world-wide are currently dealing with the same challenge. Many provinces have instituted programs designated to attract nurses and doctors to their jurisdiction. All of these programs have merit; however, for the sake of time I would like to highlight one which has caught my interest. It is interesting to me because of the flexibility of the program and the emphasis which it places on ensuring that areas in need of medical personnel are assisted in their recruiting efforts.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I realize that most of the time saying the United States with reference to health care is regarded as a dirty word in Canada. However, under the United States Department of Health and Human Services exists an organization which is dedicated to recruiting health care workers to areas which are unserved in terms of health care professionals. The National Health Service Corps offers loan repayment for individuals who work in areas of need that have been identified by the Health Service Corps. These areas are given a score which reflects the level of need. The higher the score, the greater the need. Health professionals who apply to work in these areas of need are eligible to apply for the loan repayment. Loan repayment goes to individuals who have chosen employment in areas with the greatest needs.

The NHSC includes a wide range of professionals which it will offer loan payments to. They include but are not limited to physicians, dentists, nurses, physiotherapists, psychiatrists, and dental hygienists. Mr. Speaker, as I previously stated, this program is but one of the many which other jurisdictions have in place. I'm not suggesting that this program is one which the provincial government should pursue. I am only illustrating the fact that there exist many ways to overcome the challenges of recruiting and retaining health professionals.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has a great health care system, and the Department of Health and Wellness has proven to be successful at addressing new challenges as they present themselves. By passing this motion, the House will urge the government to address greater attention to the issue of hiring and retaining medical staff in areas of need in this province.

I would ask all the members to support Motion 508. Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, before I recognize the next speaker, might we revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour tonight to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly Dale and Liz Leuken from the Dunvegan-Central Peace area. Dale is the regional president of the Alberta Alliance, and he wanted to come and see what happens here in the House. He got so close to being in here last time, he thought he'd better check before he tries it again. I'd like the Assembly to give them a warm welcome as we traditionally do.

Recruitment of Health Care Professionals

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to stand and on behalf of the Official Opposition speak in response to Motion 508, "to institute an aggressive program aimed at hiring and retaining health care professionals," especially in rural Alberta. I have to say that the member has indeed identified one of the major issues around good service delivery of health care in Alberta today, and that's the issue of health workforce planning. We are behind on this fairly significantly for a couple of reasons.

The government did not do a good job of anticipating workforce flow in the '90s and laid off a significant number of our nurses and health professionals and all but gave them bus tickets to go somewhere else, and many of them did and went to the States and never came back. Others went to the States and were wooed back here with bonus payments to come back when we realized that we now had a workforce shortage. So that was not what I would give a blue ribbon for by way of either workforce planning or good use of funds, seeing as we gave them severances and then we had to give them resigning bonuses. But, you know, if they felt well-appreciated at that point and stayed in the workforce, perhaps that's okay then.

Part of the issue that we have right now, Mr. Speaker, is that we have both the population aging – now, that doesn't mean that they'll be a huge burden on the health care system. That's just simply not true. With the population that we have now, they are much fitter, they are better educated about health, they have access to clean water and good food and lots of it. We're trying to get people to understand that they need to be fit. So, yes, we have the baby boomer generation aging. True. But that doesn't necessarily mean that they are going to be an increased burden on the health care system. Nonetheless, there are a lot of them, so it will have an impact one way or the other, even if it's just in delivering prevention and wellness programs and annual check-ups and tests and things like that.

The second part of it is that the very workforce that provides those health services is also aging and is looking at retiring. There are all kinds of statistics about how much of our workforce – the last one that I think I looked at was 20 per cent of our rural nursing workforce were looking to or planning to retire in 2007. Well, that's a significant outcome for us.

So I think that there are a couple of things that we need to consider. One is around the concept of the team of health professionals. Part of that, I think, is getting at the idea of doctors as gatekeepers, that everything's got to go through a doctor. You've got to go to a doctor first to get the test. You go off and get the test; you go back to the doctor. The doctor sends you to the specialist; you go from the specialist back to your GP. Always the doctor is the gatekeeper, and it's a lot of coming and going. The idea was that somehow the doctor would be able to manage and send you to the best care.

At this point my question is: shouldn't we be approaching this and saying, "Let the doctor do what only the doctor can do"? We would understand that as politicians, recently having come out of an election, Mr. Speaker, because there are certain things that only the candidate can do. There's a lot of other stuff to do in a campaign that other people can do, but there are certain things that only the candidate can do. If we think about the doctors in the same sort of way, maybe that'll allow us to, that terrible cliché, think outside of the box, take a different approach to this and not be so married to the idea of, oh, it always has to flow through the doctor.

I think we also have to look at how we pay the doctor. Paying by a fee for service, I think, has its place but not nearly the amount of place that we give it currently. We should be definitely looking at a salary model or a per-patient model.

I think that if we move away from doctor-as-gatekeeper and encourage doctors to work as part of a health professional team – this is partly what the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul was suggesting, that we widen that scope and bring in nurse-practitioners and dentists and pharmacists and LPNs and dietitians and occupational therapists and recreational therapists and speech therapists. There are a lot of other health professionals that could be working as a team here and not always just the doctor and the doctor does everything. So that's a second suggestion that I have.

On the plus side, Mr. Speaker, one of the encouraging things is that currently 65 per cent of the students registered as medical students are women. I think that that's going to help us change this workforce probably more than anything else because I believe that women are approaching the medical profession with a different point of view. They may well be more willing to go to rural areas, especially if they have families, for quality of life. They are much more willing to work in a team effort with other health care professionals rather than always being sort of the one gatekeeper standing there letting people go by or not go by. I have some faith that that will also have an effect on what we're trying to do here.

So we've got a recruitment issue; we've got a retention issue. I think what's important is that we start with evidence and evidence-based decision-making. Right now we don't even have that evidence. We haven't tracked our health care workforce. We don't know where doctors and nurses and other health care professionals are being used in the system right now. Therefore, how can we possibly plan for the future when we don't know where we are today? I think the first thing we've got to do is identify what we do know and what we don't, and where we don't, fill in the gaps because you're not going to make good decisions if you don't actually know what you're trying to do here.

I think I can rightly accuse the government of having done that in the past. For example, with a number of the suggestions that the member raised, I have to say to him: "Okay, is this provable? Is what you're saying absolutely provable? What are the probable outcomes of what you're proposing here? What do you expect to get, and are you going to get it? Can you prove to me that this has happened in some other case or that it's likely to work?" [interjections] Well, there are lots of people heckling tonight, and I'm looking forward to their contribution. Particularly, the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmr always has a lot to say, and I'm looking forward to his participation in the debate.

Rev. Abbott: Just have a seat, and I'll stand up.

Ms Blakeman: Good. We'll be looking forward to that then.

So we want to see what are the specific outcomes that are being planned.

The member was particularly interested in something coming out of the U.S. with the health corps loan repayment program. Again, if he's able to bring forward some provable outcomes of a change from before this system was instituted and what they're doing now: have there been improvements over five years? What are the specific outcomes that he can show us for that?

In many ways having as much money as Alberta has is actually a disadvantage in our health care system because we can throw money at whatever, and it doesn't require us to be very careful about the allocation of funds. I don't think that for a very strong health care system we actually need that much more money in our system. Maybe we don't need any more money in the system we've got. What we have to do is try and make acute-care delivery more sustainable. A big part of that is working on wellness and on prevention, and that we can show outcomes on where it's been done in other places, Mr. Speaker.

I guess part of what I'm interested in is that we've had a rural physicians plan for a while. What have been the outcomes of that specifically? The member was saying that it was a good idea, and I'm just wondering if he or perhaps through one of his colleagues can tell us how that's a good idea, or what exactly they've been able to shift, or how many more rural doctors they've been able to get in place since the system was brought online.

A big part of this, again, is identifying the information, closing the gaps where you don't have it so that you can make evidence-based decisions, looking at what you want your outcomes to be, being careful about your recruitment and retention, and going to a system where we don't have the doctor as the gatekeeper but working more as a team.

The last thing we must integrate is e-health. That I think is the most likely possibility for improved health care service delivery in the rural areas: making use of the technology that's available. Supposedly, we're going to have SuperNet in place at some point in time, I hope, and that should be another way of tapping into possibilities with electronic health, or telehealth, delivery for rural areas.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak to the motion. I'm interested in what the member has proposed, but I'm certainly looking for a bit more fact than what we had from him. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise this evening and offer my thoughts and comments regarding Motion 508. As a representative of a rural riding I echo some of the comments previously made regarding the challenges that our rural communities face in attracting and retaining qualified health care professionals.

While it is true that the shortage of medical staff is an issue facing the entire province, it is fair to say that the rural communities have had more problems attracting and retaining doctors and nurses than our urban counterparts. Many have pointed out that the lack of social and physical infrastructure, including schools, parks, and hospitals, has discouraged skilled professionals and their families from moving to rural Alberta. While this is true for various rural communities, I would like to point out that in the town of Lacombe and most central Alberta towns and villages we have much of this infrastructure already in place, including schools and a hospital centre. However, despite this we still experience a shortage of qualified medical personnel. We have an O.R. available, but it's currently underused due to a shortage of staff that are qualified.

What I'm trying to say, Mr. Speaker, is that the availability of social services and physical infrastructure is not the only explanation as to why rural Alberta is having more problems attracting medical personnel than urban communities. Some individuals simply prefer the city life as many of them are born and raised here. However, I would argue that the same cannot be said for those who grew up in rural communities as many of them look to remain or move back to their towns and villages as long as opportunities are available. It is this particular group of individuals that we should be focusing on.

In the case of Motion 508 I'm referring to young students who are thinking of pursuing a career in the medical field. I believe we need to not only educate them about the merits of becoming a medical practitioner, but we also need to make it attractive for them to pursue careers in rural medicine. This can be accomplished in a variety of ways. We just heard questions about RPAP, or rural physician action plan, and I'd like to talk about that for a minute.

One way that we can encourage enrolment is by going to rural schools and talking to students about the merits of becoming a physician or a nurse or LPN or other specialist. Mr. Speaker, my son Mark, who is a medical student at the University of Calgary, is a member of an organization called rural physician action plan, also known as RPAP, which works with communities to attract and retain doctors. Over the last while he's been involved in a pilot project which involves visiting high schools throughout rural Alberta in order to provide students with information regarding what they need to do in order to become medical practitioners. Mark and his colleagues felt that the project was necessary as in the past many rural students chose not to pursue studies in the field of medicine due to the lack of information and advice available. So far their efforts have produced very positive results as Mark and his colleagues have been pleasantly surprised with the number of rural students who have shown an interest in studying medicine.

Seeing the potential of this type of approach, I think the province should consider launching a wide-scale program designed to raise awareness among all students, not only those living in rural areas, of the advantages of pursuing a career in medicine. I feel this strategy holds much merit and could go a long way in helping us attract and retain the much-needed health care professionals to rural Alberta.

Apart from recruiting students, we also need to make it more attractive for doctors to remain in rural communities by making sure that they can continue their professional development in a rural setting. I realize that working outside of major medical centres like Edmonton or Calgary can make it hard for some doctors to further develop their skills and knowledge. However, with the technology available – and I'm thinking about the SuperNet, Mr. Speaker – some of these concerns can be remedied. We can ensure that they remain aware of the latest medical developments and breakthroughs by providing them with reliable and affordable access to Internet service and academic and medical journals. We can also make sure that they have the opportunity to attend medical conventions and symposiums, which is an extremely effective means of exchanging ideas and developments in the field of medical science.

From the recruitment point of view, Mr. Speaker, we can also encourage more rural physicians to take on students who can study and work under their direction and supervision. Such training not only provides these students with invaluable insight into how medicine is practised in rural areas, but it also helps encourage them to consider moving back to their rural communities upon completion of their studies.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, many rural doctors aren't too keen about taking on and supervising medical students because this means that they have less time to spend with their patients and tend to their other responsibilities. Literature shows that you would experience about a 10 per cent decrease in patient loads for doctors having students present in their practices. Although this is a financial concern for doctors as they have to forfeit part of their income, the care has proven to be as good or better with students present.

One way our government can help alleviate this problem is by reimbursing rural physicians for the lost time and income and encouraging them to take on more medical students in these areas. This will not only allow our students to learn more about the specific nature of rural health care delivery but will also help them consider the possibilities of working in a rural setting.

Before I conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I would like to briefly touch upon an issue that for some reason continues to be overlooked within government circles. As I mentioned earlier, there are many medical facilities in rural Alberta, like the O.R. in Lacombe, that are being underused due to staff shortages. I think that if we can address some of our staffing concerns and allow these facilities to operate at their full potential, we will have a real opportunity to alleviate some of our health care woes, especially those relating to waiting lists. Also, rural students are more likely to return to rural areas, and that is why it is important to recruit rural students in the first place.

I believe that if a rural O.R. can specialize in one specific procedure, like hip replacement surgery or possibly doing hernia surgeries, this facility could take on patients from all other parts of the province and in turn help alleviate the pressure on other medical facilities. Allowing rural facilities to focus on different procedures would undoubtedly shorten our waiting lists and help ensure that our rural communities enjoy the necessary medical services they need.

With this in mind, I would like to conclude by saying that our ability to address our health care problems, especially those in rural Alberta, depends upon our ability to be imaginative and to think outside the box. In my remarks tonight I have outlined a few ways we can attract and retain health care professionals to rural areas. It is my hope that our government will keep an open mind to all suggestions that arise out of the current health care debate so that when we do agree upon a solution, we'll have a system that will remain sustainable for generations to come.

With this in mind, I plan to vote in favour of Motion 508, and I encourage my colleagues to join me in doing so. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Health care is an extremely important topic for me as well. I find it a bit difficult, though – and I support your motion, hon. member. I should state that right off the top. What I find very difficult, though, is member after member standing up and saying: it's not the government's fault that these problems exist; we've got to fix them. Let's face it. This government has been in power for the last 34 years, and it has created the problem that the hon. member opposite is attempting to address with this motion, which again I will say that I support.

Basically, you go back to 1992 and adopting the Sir Roger Douglas model of cut, cut, cut in order to pay down the debt. This is a wonderful example of what happens when the chickens come home to roost. It isn't just the urban centres that have suffered. The rural centres have received the same cutbacks, and given their population base, probably their cuts have been as significant, if not more significant, than what we faced in urban municipalities.

Hospital wings have been shut down. Acute-care delivery has been eliminated in a number of the smaller towns. During the bright years of the Lougheed regime a terrific number of hospitals were built, and then in the years that followed, particularly the last 13, many of these facilities have been mothballed. This mothballing has resulted in an exodus not only of city doctors, lab technicians, physiotherapists, and so on, but it's resulted in rural communities not having the staffing that they need. Closing down the local hospital or a wing of that hospital has had the same effect as closing down the grain terminal. It causes rural shrinkage.

When the infrastructure support, as other hon. government members indicated, is no longer there, neither is there an attraction for a doctor, a nurse, whether it be a registered nurse or an LPN, dental hygienist, dentist, whatever. There is no motivation or incentive left in those rural communities to bring a person out knowing full well that there's no backup. Quite often, I would suggest, the first physicians to burn out are those with rural practices because they don't have, frequently, anyone to back them up.

Obviously, this member's bill approaches part of that solution. We need not only to incent doctors to come out to rural areas, but we have to come up with some kind of a level playing field whereby rural communities don't try and outdo each other or poach doctors. We need to have a government-supported program that will encourage doctors to come to rural areas throughout the province.

Also, one of the problems besides closing facilities, which forced the evacuation of health care professionals, was the lack of seats at universities for health care professional training. This was a conscious decision made in 1992 and thereafter to decrease funding and put that funding towards paying down the debt, which this government created. It wasn't just Don Getty, who was frequently used by this government as the scapegoat; it was government policy. Some of the members who are currently sitting here were a part of that decision-making that caused the current experiences that we're having in rural shortages for health care. One of the solutions is to make those postsecondary seats available. In order to do that, obviously, we have to have the infrastructure. The government has promised 15,000 new seats for 2008. Hopefully, a number of those seats will be designated for health care professional training.

The other problem that exists is the length of time it takes to approve the accreditation of foreign doctors. We have a number of doctors, not just in Third World countries but from the British Isles, from throughout Europe, who would welcome the opportunity to come to Canada to practice. Unfortunately, it takes so long for them to receive accreditation that by the time that accreditation comes, chances are they'll have been picked off by an urban situation because of all the other infrastructure: the schools, entertainment, arts and culture, et cetera. What we need to be doing is almost the equivalent of what we did in the late 1800s, and that is launching an aggressive recruiting campaign, not for temporary foreign workers but for permanent health care professionals.

We need to be providing those health care professionals with rural incentives. We've spent, I think, $42 million on tourism this year. Possibly some of that money could be directed to recruiting these professionals who have already had the training. We don't, therefore, have to go through the expense of training these individuals. We need to not only be training our own young people to take on the health care professions; we also need to be incenting the people who've already done their training in vocations throughout the world to come to Alberta.

I've stood up time and time again to say what a wonderful province we have. We have the wealth. We have the resources. We have the opportunities. What we need to have is the vision. The opposite member's Motion 508 is the beginning of that vision, and I thoroughly support his intent and wish him well in his pursuits.

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise tonight to join debate on Motion 508, as proposed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul. I look at this issue not only as a rural MLA but as chair of the rural development strategy implementation task force.

We recognized through the report on rural Alberta, A Place to Grow, that certain objectives must be accomplished to improve health care delivery in rural Alberta. Namely, there were four objectives, Mr. Speaker. One, "ensure that people living in rural Alberta have access to quality health services as close as possible" to the communities in which they live. Two, "establish and implement access standards for critically important health services particularly emergency care." Three, "expand the availability of health care providers in rural communities through a variety of actions including expanding training opportunities for health care providers in rural communities." Four, "make the best use of . . . capacity in health facilities in rural communities."

Mr. Speaker, of course, only objective 3 seems to really coincide with this particular motion, but I'd suggest that appearances are deceiving. In reality attracting and retaining health care professionals in rural Alberta is the first step necessary to address rural health issues. In order to ensure that rural Albertans have access to quality health services, objective 1 of the rural development strategy, there must be health professionals in rural Alberta. The shortage must be addressed.

In order to fulfill objective 2, Mr. Speaker, establishing and implementing access standards, you must have health professionals to provide the resources necessary to meet those standards. To use the capacity in rural health facilities, whether it's to ensure that services are provided or it is to relieve strain on urban centres by repatriating smaller services back to rural Alberta to ensure that rural Albertans have proper care, either way, ultimately, it will require adequate health professional staff in rural Alberta.

There are ways to address the shortage of health care staff while improving the delivery of health care services to all Albertans. Considerable work is under way across the province, including in health regions that serve rural communities, to change and improve the way health care services are delivered. New primary health care approaches are being implemented to provide access to teams of health care providers. Technology is being used to improve access to health services. For example, Health Link provides province-wide telephone access to health information and advice. Telehealth is being used to link people and physicians in rural communities with diagnosis and treatment from specialists in urban centres.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, rural communities face many challenges in improving access to health providers and health services. Many communities struggle to attract and keep physicians, nurses, pharmacists, technicians, and other essential health care providers. This has a double impact. Not only does it make access to services more difficult, but it also means rural communities are not able to benefit from the economic potential that a strong health sector can provide.

As plans for health renewal proceed, special attention needs to be paid to the unique circumstances and opportunities in rural communities. That should include making the maximum use of new and innovative approaches to delivering care, making better use of existing hospital facilities in rural communities, developing centres of expertise in rural communities, and stepping up efforts to attract and retain a variety of health care providers. Regional health authorities, the provincial government, postsecondary institutions, the College of Physicians and Surgeons, health professional organizations, health care providers working in rural communities, and community members should all be actively involved in developing comprehensive plans for rural health care.

Three priority actions recommended in the rural development strategy deal specifically with health professionals. The first was to "adjust current education and training programs for health care providers to ensure that they have experience in rural communities and more is done to encourage them to stay in rural communities." The second suggests that we "continue to work with the Rural Physician Action Plan and expand on that model to attract and retain other health care providers [not just physicians] in rural communities, including nurses, rehabilitation therapists, technicians" and so on. Of course, the third, Mr. Speaker, is to "speed up the process for reviewing credentials of foreign trained health care [professionals] so they are able to work in rural communities" to fulfill their capacity.

We also must consider the economic development potential of health care. It's a critical feature in rural communities. I suggest that all members in this Assembly imagine for one moment when we have challenges in health care: if those challenges in rural communities were expanded to urban centres, and in an urban centre like Edmonton we shut down every single health care facility, every hospital, every clinic, all of it, and laid off every single person associated with the health care system, it would have huge devastating economic consequences to this city. The same happens in a small community. Unless we can find some way to retain and attract services back to rural Alberta in order to expand services to rural communities, in order to relieve strain on urban centres, we're facing greater challenges.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank my hon. colleague from Lac La Biche-St. Paul for his wisdom, his insight, and his understanding. He's brought forward a motion that doesn't just need approval in this Assembly, it needs action, and it needs it now. I encourage all members to support this motion because it is the first step to solving the health care challenges that all Albertans face.

Thank you.

8:40

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise in support of Motion 508 and its visionary qualities, I must add, I suppose. If a visionary is to be able to see into the future, then we must remember that as an Assembly here we are still in the business of not just managing the economy of this fine province, but also we are engaged in the development of this province. Sometimes development requires some planning and special circumstances, and nothing is more crucial to balanced and adequate human development than a proper health care system which is accessible to everyone in this province, particularly to people in the rural areas.

I think that as we look to the future of this province, we would like to see a diversification of the population not just in the major metropolitan areas but also having people choose the charms and advantages of living in smaller communities. It's good for the long-term economic development of the province. Certainly, the question of having doctors in smaller centres is crucial to attracting people to choose to move to smaller areas. I think that the challenges we face in regard to attracting health care professionals to rural areas is not unlike the challenges we face to attract other sectors of the population to smaller centres; although with doctors and nurses and health care professionals there are, I guess, special challenges. The main thing that I would suggest is that we look at not just one way by which to do this but a diversity of approaches. This is always the most intelligent way to go.

I think that we had some degree of success in attracting physicians to rural areas with a special immigration policy some years ago. I know that we managed to have South African doctors in a number of smaller centres across Alberta and Saskatchewan. You know, this was simply a question of making a contract with these individuals so that they could immigrate and then stay for quite a number of years in the place that they were chosen to go to. I mean, certainly this does work. Maybe people aren't staying there forever, but I know at least two or three different South African families that did choose to stay in their small centres when their term of contract was completed. So, certainly, this is one way of attracting the people.

Making special student loan arrangements for professionals in exchange for their service in rural areas I think is something that has been successfully executed in places around the world, and certainly we could follow that same example. You know, once a professional does move to a small centre and he or she settles in for a number of years, then the attractions and charms of that place, perhaps getting married to one of the local people, helps to keep people in one spot. I don't know if we can legislate something like that, but having young people move to a place in exchange for preferential student loan payments or with bursaries or scholarships certainly is an intelligent idea. I think it's very important, whatever choices we're making in regard to health care or any planning – and this involves and requires some money to be spent and some attention to be paid to it – for us to keep careful evidence as to tracking the successes or failures of various attempts to attract doctors to rural areas. You know, if we're not making intelligent decisions based on evidence, the best we can gather it, then really we're just sort of hitting and missing or shooting in the dark. Sometimes I think that with this health care ball that we hit back and forth here in this House and across the country, we have certain ideologies or certain preferences when at the end of the day we should make our decisions based on solid evidence as to the best factual information that we can possibly gather.

I'm certainly willing to bow down to that sort of reasonable approach, and I certainly hope that when we make a full-scale effort to attract health care professionals to the rural areas, I would suggest that we head down that same path and base our decisions and our choices on the very best evidence possible. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much. What a pleasure to get up and confirm with colleagues both on the government side of the House and also from the opposition and the third party support for this motion. One of the things I'm struck with, particularly after the international symposium, is the kind of universal drive there is to try and provide more health care professionals for the populations.

It was noted at the symposium that where other countries may have difficulty in retaining physicians to provide service for health care delivery, if in fact Canada tries to attract these physicians, we will leave them in more of a dearth and difficulty than they had been previously. I remember at the time of the tsunami the president of the Alberta Medical Association going on a mission to Mexico to try and help out there and worrying whether or not she should in fact choose to go to Indonesia or Sri Lanka because of the greater difficulty surrounding their medical needs.

Ever since I've been in this ministry, I've been struck by a couple of things; number one, the difficulty in retaining and placing attractive circumstances in places where one would hope that physicians would locate. Rural Members of the Legislative Assembly tell me about the difficulty in getting rural physicians. In Calgary, when I was first made health minister, I was told that there were 300 family practitioners that were needed for that city. So I want to just make a couple of observations here about what I think is really important.

I believe this motion is important, but I believe that Albertans, in fact Canadians, in fact people worldwide have to take responsibility first and foremost for their own health, and that means that they have to determine that they are going to look after themselves, practise wellness, and instruct their families to do the same thing. My vision is that at six years of age every child will come to school, and they will know what it means to eat a balanced meal, know what it means to sleep the right amount of time, whether they do it or not, and know that they shouldn't take drugs or bad things offered by someone else. They will know the rules of crossing the street, and they will, in short, have that little cocoon of protection around themselves so that they will know how to behave. In school we're already offering programs – Do Bugs Need Drugs? – and encouraging children to do the right thing so they can maintain their health.

Part of what the problem is that I see, where everyone is looking for a family physician, is that today family physicians earn considerably less than fee-for-service specialists, who can, after slightly more education, whether it's two years, four years, or whatever period of time, in fact earn considerably more dollars. On a fee-for-service basis, when that's how we pay physicians, the opportunity to work in rural Alberta, unless there are some other ways of compensating the physician, means that that person will have to be satisfied with a reduced income for the longer period of time. So we have to be imaginative.

The other thing is that we have to accept that telehealth or calling a health line may be as good as a visit to a health practitioner. My shock in getting this ministry was that 88 per cent of Albertans accessed the ministry last year. If some of you weren't one of those people that went for a preventive thing but actually went for some kind of health diagnosis, I have to ask this question: did you really have to go to a physician? Could you have spent some time staying home, having the proper rest, drinking the right amount of fluids, and looking after yourself? Was it the easier route?

In some countries, one in particular that spoke at the international symposium, they charged people who had a home visitation by a doctor if they really didn't need that home visitation, and as such they reduced their costs by 25 per cent for home visits. It's an important element to think about. Could we go to a primary care facility, visit a nurse practitioner, have a dressing done, have something else done, and thereby save the time or the effort of a family physician, which could be expended perhaps to the greater advantage of the population's health in some other domain?

There are a few things that we have to remember. Number one, when I spoke to Dominique Polton, who is a French economist, about how we can do better in Alberta's health, she said after considerable thought: you shouldn't waste it. In Alberta we have so much. We were perceived by some of the international speakers to have so much that why didn't we spend? Why do we have a problem? It's like my former job as reeve of Strathcona with all the refineries. We have so much, but does that mean that we have to spend and waste it? Don't we want to save something for the next generation? Saving something for the next generation, in my view, will be a prudent and wise use of the health care resources that we have. It will involve providing health care resources and services in rural communities that presently don't have them, and it will involve trying to network effective strategies so that there is an incentive for people to locate to rural Alberta.

One of the intriguing things that I've noticed is that in Quebec the ministry of health is also in charge of the social determinants of health. As we know, the dollars for Water for Life or some of the strategies that ensure that Albertans are healthier and better taken care of are spent in other ministries. As we consume the dollars for health, for acute care, frequently we siphon off those dollars, where if they were spent in Community Development, Learning, Advanced Education, Justice, Solicitor General, Children's Services, any myriad of the ministries, we might actually make people healthier and, in making them healthy, put less of a strain on the system.

My view is that we have to be imaginative. We have to look at those social determinants. We have to compare with other systems; for example, systems who've organized themselves to integrate service networks, systems who organize themselves to have people that are in places like our primary care facilities who will I hope ultimately provide for Albertans an integrated approach so that if it's not possible to have a family physician, there will be support for that type of family care that you hope your family can have, and when you do need a specialist or a family physician that can help with more clinical and technical issues surrounding health, it will be there as well.

So I am – and I thank my colleagues – very much challenged to continue to accelerate the progress towards making the rural physician action plan more of a reality tonight, signing my correspondence to the universities, encouraging yet more support for rural physicians, supporting how we provide after-degree nursing programs to rural Alberta, looking at targeting some of the other health science professionals to do better.

Mr. Speaker, in the very work that's being done at the university today, by relocating their department so that nurses and doctors and occupational therapists and nutritionists are all educated in the same physical space, by the very connection of their faculties I think we will start urging and educating people in health care delivery teams. Ultimately my grandchildren might not say: I need a family doctor to go and visit with my children. They will say: I'm looking for that health centre, that community health facility, that primary care centre so that we get the right amount of care when we need it.

Hopefully, Mr. Speaker, we will re-educate ourselves to waste not, want not; help generously distribute our supports for family physicians throughout this province so that there's no place without support; find creative, innovative ways to challenge people to work in rural Alberta, which I consider one of the best places to work and absolute heaven if you can live there and sustain your lifestyle there – I really believe that – and find ways of looking at those social determinants of health as critically important to the whole of the budget so that people in the future don't say, "Yes, Alberta spends 37 per cent, 40 per cent, up to 45 per cent on health; it spends in a way that ensures positive outcomes for all Albertans."

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to stand and debate Motion 508, which I'm very much in favour of. How many minutes do we have left?

An Hon. Member: Three.

Mr. Hinman: Yeah, well, I'll start striking a few things off. Thank you.

I appreciate the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul bringing this forward, and I want to speak in favour of it. I want to bring out a point that he made the other night. I think it's important that we not think outside the box, that we throw the box out and re-evaluate everything.

A few areas that I'm very much in favour of. Possibly looking at giving scholarships, not just loan reductions but scholarships, in different areas where we need students to come in, whichever the health area is, especially linking those scholarships to rural areas and bringing people in there. The shortage of pay for GPs in rural areas and the idea of opening up specialized areas has been brought up and spoken about. If we were to have the funding follow the service, there are other areas in the rural area that could open up, and we could get the doctors in there.

Another area that I'm concerned with and that has been talked a little bit about is the brain drain. Perhaps not only giving scholarships but much like the army, where you sign up for five years' service or 10 years' service and you get your education. We could really attract people in that area.

Perhaps we need to look at the amount of money we're spending on educating a lot of the health care professions and kind of have a debt load there. If they were to leave the country, they would owe a lot more than just walking away and only paying for 20 per cent of their education. That would keep more here, and that would push more people out to the rural areas.

By allowing the services to follow and open up specialized services in the rural area – the cities seem to think there's nothing wrong with rural people coming and being treated here and staying in hotels. What would that do to the rural economy, to have people travelling to a place like Lacombe, Cardston, or Milk River and staying in their hotels and eating in their restaurants and being a real boon to their economy? It works the other way around too, but they don't seem to realize that. So I'd urge them to consider something like that.

It's disappointing, though, that it seems like the best bills and the best motions seem to come up on the private side and come from caucus instead of from cabinet. I hope that those things will move forward and the government will get behind some of these innovative ideas so that we can act now rather than waiting two or three or four years.

For the comments on solid evidence, I mean, let's have common sense. How much more solid evidence do we need? When we close the schools and we close the health care services in these small areas, they die. We need the schools, we need the health care services out there, and it's very possible to have those.

The accountability. Like I say about the education, I think that we need to really seriously look at the amount of people that we are educating and allowing to leave and put some sort of penalty on their increased fee if, in fact, they were to leave the country.

In closing, I just would like to thank the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul for this motion. I hope that it'll go forward and that it will have the desire to revitalize rural Alberta. I know that there are many people on that committee trying to do it, but we need to throw the box out and look at what we can do to build those areas because what we're doing to suck it in; we can turn it around and the economy can go back out. We need to revitalize those areas, and we need those essential services.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the time for debate on this motion has elapsed, and under Standing Order 8(4), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of the motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul to close debate on Motion 508.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the support from the members across. I want to address a couple of the comments that were made by some of the members opposite. I want to say that in our research of the different directions that different municipalities and different jurisdictions were trying to find, this is not an isolated problem to Alberta. It is a world-wide problem. I mean, we found it in Australia. We found it in all of the Americas. We found all over that what happens is that health care professionals are attracted to larger centres and for a number of reasons. I mean, in Alberta we're fortunate enough to be able to be in a situation where we're able to spend more, and that does provide some of the best health care service in the world.

I know that we talked with some individuals from Mexico, and we found some interesting findings in Mexico. Mexico handles their problems in a way that – and it's legislated. They legislate that an individual who goes to university gets their university paid, and depending on what faculty you go into, you may get two years or three years or four years of service that you have to provide to the rural part of the country. What happens is they give them a little bit of subsistence, but that is part of the repayment of the education. I had made, you know, a couple of other examples.

I think that it's very important, and I think that we as a province have provided some initiatives. I believe it's not enough. The job is not coming to fruition as we all would wish could happen. I found it very interesting when the Member for Edmonton-Calder mentioned that we need to legislate a solution of maybe keeping somebody in the rural area. Well, you know, what happens is that some of our bursary programs are two-year programs, so we have people come out for one or two years, and those individuals, you know – in one or two years there's enough travelling time in there. They're able to travel back and forth. I think that maybe we should extend it to four years, and then there's more chance of them finding a mate because they'll get tired of travelling after two years.

The Member for Battle River-Wainwright made an excellent, excellent observation, and I want to say an excellent observation because, you know, we do look at rural Alberta, and we do close down facilities. Schools are closed down, and hospitals are closed down, and they basically follow each other. We just don't realize the economic impact. We look at the economic impact, but we don't look at the services that we truly lose. If that were to happen in a larger centre, it is just as devastating. So I thank the Member for Battle River-Wainwright for those comments.

I would just like to close if I can, Mr. Speaker, in a couple of words, and that is that we are not alone in this challenge. I believe that in Alberta we have the opportunity to provide the initiative to do something different to try to address the concerns of rural Alberta and the health professionals going to rural Alberta.

Again, I would like to thank everyone that spoke in favour of the motion, and I appreciate the time and the tolerance. Thank you.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 508 carried]

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'll now call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2005-06

Innovation and Science

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The first thing I'd like to do to members of the Assembly is introduce some members of our staff. I assure you that I told them earlier today that they could stay home and not come, but the fact that a number of them actually decided to come shows you the great support that they give to the minister, the ministry, and, more importantly, to the people of Alberta. They are Ron Dyck, Ray Bassett, Brian Fischer, Anne Douglas, Ian Thomas, and Silvana Cartagena. I hope I got that close to being right. I'd ask them to rise. Since you are intimately acquainted with the business plan, at any time that you wish to leave and actually go home and see your families, you're welcome to do that.

Mr. Chairman, the department's core business is innovation, and our business and financial plans are designed to help us to achieve the government's vision of long-term prosperity for Albertans by unleashing innovation. Innovation and Science provides leadership and makes strategic investments in research, science, and technology initiatives in three priority areas: energy, information and communications technology, and the life sciences, which, of course, include agriculture, biotechnology, forestry, sustainable resource management, and water research. These investments build on Alberta's strengths, and they are helping the province to develop a more globally competitive, knowledge-based economy.

We gather information on jurisdictions where innovation flourishes, and we find that the common elements are highly qualified people, solid infrastructure for facilities and services, access to funding, and, of course, vision. With the strategic advice of the Alberta Science and Research Authority we are working to build this kind of culture to ensure that Alberta remains prosperous for generations to come.

Mr. Chairman, I forgot to do one thing earlier on, just to remind colleagues in the Assembly that are listening to this scintillating description of Innovation and Science that they can actually log on to www.innovation.gov.ab.ca, which is a comprehensive website which describes all of the programs that I'm going to talk about tonight in much more detail than even I can do. So while you're sitting there, please look this up, spend some time, search it. There are some interesting things for you to learn on that website.

An Hon. Member: Which website?

Mr. Doerksen: That would be www.innovation.gov.ab.ca.

Government endowment funds, support for students, universities, and research institutes are helping to ensure that the province develops the right skills in Albertans and also attracts and retains others with the necessary skills to keep us moving forward. This year the government added $500 million to the endowment fund for the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, and there are plans to expand the ingenuity fund to $1 billion as future surpluses allow.

Alberta's investments in biomedical and health research through AHFMR have yielded life-changing breakthroughs such as the islet transplants for type 1 diabetes, known around the world as the Edmonton protocol. In the area of engineering and science research the Alberta ingenuity fund has created four important centres of research, in machine learning, water, carbohydrate science, and in situ energy. Now a new ingenuity centre is being established to facilitate research on prions and misfolded proteins that cause BSE.

I'm very pleased to report that since we made this announcement in February, the ingenuity fund has already been contacted by several researchers, including scientists in France, who are eager to collaborate to find scientific solutions to BSE.

Our commitment to expanding Alberta's research capacity in strategic research and priority areas is significant. Almost $72 million to be voted is needed to meet our business goals for research capacity and science awareness. This investment will help to ensure that Alberta will always have access to long-term supplies of sustainable energy and clean water, factors that contribute to our superb quality of life. This funding acts as a magnet to attract matching and supplementary funding from the private sector, research organizations, and agencies in other governments.

A good example of this is the EnergyINet, the energy innovation network, which was officially launched from Ottawa and Calgary this past March. The Alberta Energy Research Institute is a catalyst behind this national network of industry partners, researchers, provincial governments, and the federal government. EnergyINet takes an integrated approach to research and innovation in six key areas: oil sands upgrading, clean coal technology, CO₂ management, enhanced oil recovery, water management, and alternative energy development. Alberta's position is that climate change issues are best addressed by investments in technology and innovation in this province and in Canada. Nearly $17 million is allocated to expanding our research capacity in energy and in climate change.

The board of the Alberta Science and Research Authority has identified development of Alberta's ICT sector as a top priority for our province. Bill 4, which is awaiting royal assent, will allow the establishment of an ICT institute to guide research in this sector. Significant accomplishments are already being realized through the efforts of the Informatics Circle of Research Excellence, commonly known as iCORE. Over the past five years iCORE has invested $40 million in the creation of 20 research teams, which have attracted over $144 million in additional research funding from government and industry. These strategic research investments have attracted globally acclaimed scientists to work in Alberta. Equally important, we have been able to keep many of our talented young Albertans here, working in knowledge-intensive fields as diverse as artificial intelligence, nanotechnology, and wireless communications.

For example, pioneering work at the University of Calgary by iCORE chair of wireless location Dr. Gerard Lachapelle has helped make Alberta a world-class centre of excellence in global positioning systems and related geomatics technologies. Many of his innovative technologies have become must-haves for research institutions and commercial GPS developers around the world. His research contributes to commercial applications in a wide range of areas, from natural resource management, agriculture, transportation, and recreation to defence and national security. His innovative advanced signal tracking software will be used in the European Union's Galileo satellite-based navigation system now under development.

iCORE has committed $500,000 per year for five years to develop this research group. This is about one third of his total $1.5 million per year budget. Leading researchers like Dr. Lachapelle attract and build world-class teams, and we expect significant breakthroughs from the research. The ability to attract scientists of the highest calibre is a tribute to the Alberta advantage and to the solid reputation that our province has built in the international arena, and we are building our reputation and expertise through collaborations on national and international levels.

Bill 4 also paves the way for the establishment of the life sciences institute to fulfill the life sciences strategy which was approved by the government in March 2003. More than $11.6 million is to be voted to continue to build our capacity and expertise in critical areas such as agriculture, forestry, health, biotechnology, and water. The life sciences institute will focus on areas such as bioproducts, health innovations, including BSE and prion science, sustainable production, agrifood and health, and environmental technologies and platform technologies, which include genomics, nanotechnology, and bioinformatics. We have already seen results from the existing institutes, and the new life sciences institute will mirror the operating structure of those organizations and facilitate more collaboration on shared research initiatives like bioenergy and blended fibre R and D that cuts across sectors and engages multiple disciplinary teams in innovative solutions.

The Alberta Research Council has been contributing to research and development in Alberta for 84 years. Like many exemplary Albertans, ARC continues lifelong learning and is making valuable contributions to the province's economy. ARC has been involved in the development of EnergyINet through its work on advanced materials, flow sensors and controls, risk assessment, process integration, systems engineering and modelling, and technology commercialization, and it has refocused some of its technology activities around EnergyINet's six core programs.

ARC is focused on another of our priorities, which is technology commercialization. A current example in the life sciences sector is the expansion of ARC's forest products development plan to fully integrated bioproducts capability. ARC is acting as a catalyst to generate a strong regional bioproducts cluster in the greater Edmonton region by providing a gateway for bioproducts development in Alberta.

The agricultural fibre pilot processing facility will support the growth and development of an agricultural bioproducts industry in Alberta. This new facility has been funded by Alberta and the federal government and by an industry partner. It will be operational by early 2006 with laboratories and pilot scale processing capabilities to support collaborative bioproduct-based research and product development on agrifibre-based products such as paper, fibreboard, and plastic composite materials. The facility is a critical building block in the infrastructure to add value to Alberta's agricultural crops and establish new industrial products in innovative enterprises related to the use and application of industrial fibres. We will support existing and emerging industries as well as the training of new graduate students from the universities and other educational institutions.

Mr. Chairman, a common thread you will note with the Innovation and Science business plan and our fiscal plan is a collaboration with industry, other governments, and research institutions. We provide funding prudently, and because these investments are strategic and worthwhile, other stakeholders are prepared to work with us and join in funding these initiatives.

The agreement we signed with Microsoft during the 2005 California mission is another good example of this. It will establish new centres of excellence at NAIT and SAIT to accelerate efficiency and global competitiveness for small and mid-sized Alberta manufacturers. The educational institutions win, Microsoft wins, Alberta businesses win, and that means that our province wins. All of this works to help us realize the goals of the government's 20-year plan and Alberta's value-added strategy: securing tomorrow's prosperity.

Mr. Chairman, Alberta prospers through innovation. This is the vision of the Department of Innovation and Science, and the estimates before you tonight provide some of the resources that will be necessary to bring this vision to reality. I'll be pleased to respond to questions at this time.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to participate in the budget debate tonight on the Ministry of Innovation and Science, and I thank the hon. minister for his presentation at the beginning. I just wrote down, actually, something that wasn't in my speaking notes.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yeah. I'm getting a little creative here now.

The Alberta Research Council. I just wanted to comment on the fact that I actually visited the ARC, and I have to say that I was impressed by what I saw. This is clearly a world-class research facility, and I'm proud to be living in a province that has such a facility.

Having said that, I also have to comment on what I perceived to be a little hesitation on their part to accept my inviting myself to visit it. I explained to them that I was the Official Opposition critic for Innovation and Science, and they still hesitated, but then after I persevered and I pressured them, they accepted my invitation to invite myself. The first thing they set out to say was how happy they were with the ministry and that they're not interested in picking any fights with the minister, and I said: I'm not here to pick fights; I'm here to learn. I think they warmed up after a bit, and they started to feel more comfortable with my being there.

They also offered me a digital tour, which apparently is available on CD, and after the presentation was over, I requested one of those copies. They were happy that I requested it, and they said that they were going to forward it to me, but it never came. I'm not sure why. Maybe they thought that I would use it for question period. Anyway, I requested it again I think six weeks after, and again it never came. So maybe the minister can send me one.

Now on to my general questions with respect to the estimates we're discussing. I've made this comment before, and I think I'm going to repeat it tonight. It really appears that this government intentionally underestimates, or lowballs, its budget estimates and then injects money into each department through supplementary supply. We discussed this during supplementary supply, and I commented on the record that Innovation and Science was not as bad as some of the other departments when we okayed $38 million for prion research, which I indicated was needed and warranted. But what else are we not anticipating today?

Back then, when we okayed the $38 million, it was for emergency research, and I argued that BSE existed for a few years before we had to react and conduct emergency research. So today I would ask: what about pine beetle research? What about chronic wasting disease research? What about the West Nile virus, avian flu, et cetera?

This time around the ministry is asking only for $134 million for its 2005-06 estimates. Can the minister guarantee that he will not request a supplement next February or March? I would rather see a slightly more realistic budget and then, hopefully, return the unused funds rather than one that is made to look prudent and fiscally responsible yet we all know is useless as it will inevitably be increased and fattened next spring through supplementary supply.

Off-budget spending in general makes a mockery of the budget process. It makes a mockery of this Assembly if we okay a budget and then six weeks later or two months later we start spending off budget. I think this is a practice that has to be stopped. Occasionally and for emergencies spending off budget is one thing, but matter-of-factly and every year is another matter.

My second question is with regard to the move of the SuperNet file from this ministry to the newly founded Ministry of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. During question period the hon. minister indicated that the corporate information officer was relocated to Restructuring and Government Efficiency, and he also indicated that with him went his staff members, and they now became the responsibility of the new ministry. One would naturally assume, then, that the full-time equivalent staff levels would have gone down in this ministry. Instead, I was really surprised that the staffing level stayed at 696 full-time equivalent employment. So there was no change there.

This is opposite to the feeling I received or the perception I was given when the minister said that this entire file and this entire department with its employees went to the new ministry. So a clarification here is needed because this definitely does not look efficient. In fact, if I may be so bold as to say that I think this is suspicious in nature because we're increasing the budget for ministry support services by $122,000 when, in fact, one would think that it would shrink.

I guess that my third point would be that there's a document that this ministry is relying on and basing some of its planning on. It's called Accelerating Innovation in Alberta, and it appears in your Link to Medium-Term Strategies. This is one thing in that some of the information mentioned in your business plan or otherwise is sometimes hard to find. Your ministry website is sure colourful, as you indicated. You gave us the URL web address, I think, twice. It's lively and a good place to browse, but some of the information is a little hard to locate.

Further, during the debate on Bill 4 I asked the hon. minister why the energy research, the forestry research, and the agricultural research institutes have failed to consistently provide publicly accessible annual reports, and the hon. minister indicated that at least one of them was available online. I went and checked that same day, and it's not there. Maybe I'm looking in the wrong place. I would appreciate and I think most of my colleagues in the House would also appreciate receiving the URL links to those records, if possible, for all three of those institutes.

Next, on page 332 of the business plan under Performance Measures there is no specific target set for 2005-06, but there is a hopeful target of 5 per cent by the year 2015, and it also comes back and says: only if affordable. So, first of all, this is a percentage of the budget, not actual dollars, which makes it really hard to interpret. We don't know what the budget will be a year from now, so we definitely don't know what it will look like in 2015, 10 years from now. The jump from 1.31 per cent to 5 per cent represents what I think to be the largest percentage increase in expenditure in any government department.

So while this might be commendable because, yes, innovation is the way of the future, and we all have to support such endeavours, how will the government measure what's going to innovation and what's not? Do you have a way of determining what percentage of this money goes directly or indirectly to private firms?

Also, while as the Official Opposition we may encourage innovation growth and innovative growth, wouldn't the minister agree that it looks like this government is slowly getting back into the business of being in business? How would the minister assure Albertans, average Marthas and Henrys, that these initiatives will actually benefit them in their everyday lives and in their pocket-books?

I think it was also during budget debate previously that we commented on the comparison of the trickle-down plan with the direct-benefit plan. Sometimes the government advocates a model which says: what's good for business is surely good for people. But I think I would disagree sometimes, and most people in the public would disagree because sometimes what's good for business is not necessarily good for them. When this ministry or this government conducts or finances research in a certain area or discipline, it is in essence the people in my constituency, Edmonton-McClung, and the people in the other 82 constituencies of this province who are ultimately paying for this support. So what can we show them, and what are they getting back in return?

Furthermore, in this plan under the strategies listed, most of these strategies are really not objectionable. We agree with them. I think maybe the rider or the qualifier that they put on it sometimes could potentially have unintended consequences. For example, when it comes to supporting the ability of our public postsecondary institutions to build research capacity, this has to be done in a co-ordinated way. To date it has not. We hear that the Ministry of Innovation and Science has its own ideas, and then we hear that the Ministry of Advanced Education has its own ideas, and then the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment has his own ideas, and the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation has his own.

For example, last fall it became very apparent that the University of Calgary, which is an institution in the riding of my colleague from Calgary-Varsity, was in a rather desperate financial situation. Yet there were certain areas of the university, certain priority areas, that were doing okay. Certain other areas were not as lucky. Labs were out of date and crumbling, and, you know, you get the picture.

You can't have a shiny new ICT building, for example, or a health science centre, but then next to it or maybe half a block away there is a crumbling biology lab and a crumbling chemistry lab. Support staff were being cut so that professors had to come in on weekends to clean the labs, and I think this is not only unheard of, but it's just shameful. It makes absolutely no sense. It's happening not only at the University of Calgary, but it's happening at almost all of our postsecondary institutions. There are certainly examples of recruiting people to our institutions, but then the fact is that the morale of many of our faculties is terribly low. We need to take a more integrated approach to building this research capacity in our institutions by boosting morale and boosting funding.

Also, in talking to one of my other colleagues, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, who also happens to be the Advanced Education critic, he indicated that part of the problem is the way the province provides only part of the money in those priority areas and chooses to ignore or set aside or put aside the other, less important areas in their opinion. Institutions, of course, want the dollar, the funds, and they want to be innovative, but the funding rules or the budgetary realities are restrictive.

I also heard of the new nanotechnology centre that was being built right here in Edmonton at the University of Alberta, and I have personally heard of situations where those professors were fighting amongst themselves as to who gets a bigger room because the building was built in haste, and they were . . .

An Hon. Member: A new building?

Mr. Elsalhy: Yeah, it's a new building.

They were competing for who gets a better room and who brings down a partition wall so his room appears bigger, so they're sort of annexing the next room and fighting over it. Again, this shouldn't be happening in a province that is, in my opinion, maybe one of the richest pieces of land on earth.

Our public institutions also need support in many other areas. It's important to prioritize, but we also have to accept the fact that these institutions are probably almost like an insurance policy for the future. Myself, as a person I am really interested in seeing our youth and our young people succeed in college and university and in trades because that's probably the only guarantee I have in thinking that maybe I have a chance of securing some CPP for my retirement. Otherwise, if we're cutting them now and if we're underfunding them now, I think we might as well say: "Okay. Forget that. You're on your own." And we're on our own when we reach retirement age.

There's also the desire to get the most bang for the taxpayer buck. That's why the minister would want to use the money to leverage additional money from other partners – and I understand this, you know – like matching grants or situations where you say, "Okay, here is the carrot, but you have to go and fund raise on your own," and you have to match that. In the case of private or industry partners it is vital that the institutions retain independence and integrity, and especially, I think, when we're reporting the results of research.

I was listening to a report on CBC Radio, I think, and they mentioned that some professors and researchers, because of the pressures they were facing, were faced with some pressure to produce, to deliver. They were faking their own research results to secure those grants for the year after. I think it shouldn't be like this. Performance measurement should be based on actual achievement, and maybe we should have some safeguards in place so that these guys are not pressured as much to forge their own results to continue to receive those grants. It shouldn't be done like this.

Next I would like to talk about the fact that although spending for R and D seems to be increasing – and this is, again, a commendable move – Alberta as a province lags behind most other provinces when it comes to research and development expenditures as a percentage of the GDP. I don't think we can take the R and D expenditure in the abstract. You have to actually compare it to something tangible like the GDP. A StatsCan report, which I have briefly reviewed, released last year indicates that Alberta is ahead of only New Brunswick and roughly sits at about half of the national average in terms of R and D spending.

Given the focus on innovation at the federal level, does the minister believe his department and this government is doing enough or devoting enough resources in order to ensure that this province catches up? I think second from the bottom is not acceptable, especially, again, given our wealth and given our resources, and I think we have to do some more in increasing our R and D expenditure. I understand that energy research is the number one priority because this is an oil- and gas-rich province and we want to maintain our production levels, but could this be the reason, maybe, that not enough attention is being paid to the other areas of research?

Next, maybe by this same angle Alberta is far behind when it comes to scientific activities in the social sciences and humanities area, and we have actually spoken about this briefly before. Given the importance of innovation in the design and delivery of social services and in solving social problems, both acute and chronic, does the minister believe the time has come for his department to invest more in research and development in these areas, the social sciences and humanities? Again, you know, whether this is a priority or not, we have discussed this. This was also part of our Liberal plan that we would hope the minister would maybe consider.

Lastly, under the strategies listed on page 337, in goal 5 with regard to the water research strategy in support of Water for Life – that's section 5.2. We debated Bill 11 earlier in this session, and I know that my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View expressed a real hope that the government would begin to plan so that bulk transfers of water between water basins was not part of an ongoing water management strategy. Does the minister support this issue being part of the water research strategy? It might be a question for the Minister of Environment, but you know everything is linked, and this is one government, and this is one caucus, and there is one taxpayer and one voter who deserves to get that answer. So I'm really interested in finding out where the minister stands on this.

Also, what other areas of water research does the minister anticipate would be top priorities? Maybe a full inventory of water resources. This could also lead to a bigger discussion on water exports and water sales to other jurisdictions, particularly to the United States. I think it's obvious that water is becoming an important issue on everybody's mind. We've heard of water wars, where countries and nations go to war over water, and I think we have to start planning for conservation and careful assessment of our water resources and water levels so as to avoid troubles in the future.

With that, I know I've asked a few things, and I hope the minister would be kind enough to share his thoughts with us. I know that some other members are eager to participate. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Doerksen: Yeah. Thank you. I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-McClung for his comments. Obviously, I'm not going to be able to respond to everything that you mentioned. Some of them are comments; some are questions. I will pick up a couple and respond to the rest in writing.

Thank you for your comments on ARC.

You made some comments about the supplementary estimates of $38 million for prion research. That came out of, of course, an emergency situation with respect to our beef industry, something that we thought was very important not only from a marketing and solving the border problem but also to begin to look at the science of BSE, find out where our niche was in terms of all the research happening in the world, and contribute because it is an important industry. So that essentially was the decision we made, to go with the supplementary estimates.

The member has asked for a guarantee that I will not request additional funds, and I will not provide that guarantee because, in fact, if there's an opportunity for us particularly to add money into the Alberta ingenuity fund, I will be asking for it. I think it's a very important initiative, one that we have indicated support for if the money was there. So, yes, hon. member, I will be asking for more money as it becomes available. As an endowment fund, Mr. Chairman, it provides ongoing support forever into our future. That is one of the strengths of endowment funds. It's not just there for one year; it's there forever.

Just to clarify on the move of the CIO's office into the department of restructuring and why the numbers didn't go down. If you actually go to last year's budget and look at our numbers, you will notice that the FTEs we had last year were 808. What happens when we present the figures is that we restate everything as it is right now, so you will actually see in, I believe, the department of restructuring for their budget for last year that the numbers have been transferred. In fact, 112 FTEs did get transferred over to the department of restructuring, so hopefully that explains that. In fact, it's all been transferred. These numbers have been restated. We went from 808 FTEs to 696, and of course you'll notice that we have not asked for any additional FTEs to manage the department.

Performance measures: you raised a question about us moving toward the 5 per cent target. Essentially, what we're trying to do is set a vision for this province. It was based on some international reviews that we have done. For instance, in South Korea they have a legislated requirement that they have to spend 5 per cent of their budget on R and D. It cannot be touched by other programs. Regardless of what happens in other programs and pressures, they are committed to that 5 per cent because they see that as their way to prosperity and the way of the future. The European Union, for instance, has a 3 per cent target, and other countries have similar-type targets.

We really said that on the innovation file we need to look at incentives we provide, work that we do in the innovations. It's not just research and development. It can also count on incentives we provide toward that target. We clearly need to look into the future for providing more investment in this area.

Frankly, these goals survive political cycles, and they should. This is about my grandkids – and I have two and a half of them – and yours that haven't arrived yet, but someday you'll have them. This is about the future. That's how we established the 5 per cent target.

You talked about the accountability of research, and I agree with your comments on that. It's very important to provide an accountability mechanism. Of course, in this area it's not as easy to measure performance in a short time period because often in the research field, of course, your time horizons are much longer. Just an example: go back to the work we did in AOSTRA in terms of the oil sands research, the 10 years and the $700 million, $800 million it took before we actually unlocked the potential of the oil sands. I remember quite clearly – it was before I was even in government – some of the criticisms that were levied at AOSTRA. Nobody is going to criticize it now because of the economic returns that it generates for our province. When you're measuring performance, you have to look at a longer term window, and that does make it hard in terms of showing that performance in an annual report. But I agree with your comment: the accountability is critical.

You made some comments about the R and D spending in Alberta. We've indicated very clearly in our business plan that we do lag behind other jurisdictions. In one sense it's a hard argument. Because we do so well economically, one might argue that, in fact, we get a much bigger bang for our research buck than everybody else, so in effect we're producing much greater. But I tend to agree with your observation, and that also goes back to the 5 per cent target and says that, clearly, we think there's a desire to move ahead.

More importantly, I think, if you look at the measurements on government support, we're actually pretty good. Where we seem to lag is in the business investment in R and D. That could just be a matter of how they report R and D because we don't have R and D tax credits like other provinces do, so the incentive to actually report those is different too. So there might be some of that issue behind the reporting. Again, clearly, I think that it's important.

You made some comments about energy research being number one. Obviously, right now energy does provide our biggest economic gain, and energy research is very important. Whether it's number one or not, I don't know whether I could even make that case. Clearly, we recognize that there are opportunities in ICT. There are opportunities in life sciences that we have to invest some money in. Our business in Alberta understands the energy industry the best because that's what they're invested in, but we have some tremendous success stories in our province in some of these other areas.

Cold-fx, for instance, is one. The Edmonton-based company that sells that product does very well. I think of Smart board technologies out of Calgary in terms of the ICT area and the global market that they project. Most people in Alberta don't even know that this is an Alberta-based company. So we have some tremendous success.

The other thing I would underscore is that there is a lot of platform technology that actually cuts across all of these areas, that actually supports ICT, energy, and life sciences. It's technology that you just can't put into a stovepipe and say that it only applies to this area. In fact, it doesn't. I mean, you look at the impact of global positioning systems, wireless technology, and its application in the energy industry. Here is ICT expertise that actually helps us solve problems in other areas, so that just illustrates what I mean by platform technologies. The National Institute for Nanotechnology is one of those platform technologies which will actually apply to every area.

I noted your comments about social sciences and humanities, and it's something to consider. Clearly, at this point we haven't made it a priority, but it's been discussed, so I appreciate your comments on it. What we've tried to do out of ASRA, because I'm guided by ASRA, is to realize that we're only 3 million plus people in a population in a global environment which is well over 6 billion people. We can't do everything, but we want to have a disproportionate impact on what we choose to do. So we choose to really try to support those areas that we think we're good at.

Lastly, on your comments for Water for Life research, that would be a good question for question period. You can bring that one up tomorrow, and I'll give you more details about it. Clearly, we, in connection with the Water Council, are kind of charged with the responsibility of the research side of Water for Life. Some of the areas, of course, don't fall under our jurisdiction, but questions around the watersheds and the research and inventory are questions that we should be looking at and answering. The Alberta ingenuity fund, of course, has a water research centre of excellence that is starting to look at those areas. Clearly, that's an important priority, so I appreciate your comments on that.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'll invite other questions, and we'll get back other answers.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you, as well, to the hon. Minister of Innovation and Science for presenting a very straightforward and easy-to-understand budget. I think that we cannot overemphasize the importance of investing with some aggressive sort of moves to ensure that we maintain our place as a province and as a culture here in western Canada, showing leadership in many areas of science and innovation technology that have served us so well thus far in this first century of our province's existence.

You know, right from 1905 we see the government was showing great foresight in setting up experimental agricultural institutions across this province. Many of those experimental and innovation centres have either remained or have evolved into larger places of learning or have served the various generations of pioneers coming to a new land to learn to make this place the most productive place that it could be.

Now, in 2005 I believe we're doing similar things, and the various areas of research and investment that this government has chosen to pursue, I think, have certainly been relevant and appropriate, from the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute, the Alberta Energy Research Institute, the Alberta science and research investment program, ingenuity fund, iCORE, the Alberta Research Council. The list goes on and on. I certainly salute each of these initiatives in their own way. I think that our key here is to make them better, and it's a moving target. So my job, of course, is to make some critique of this budget to ensure that we are in fact spending our money in the most appropriate way possible and looking at the targets as they change over time.

In regard to the money, I realize that with the switch of the SuperNet over to a different area or ministry it's difficult to compare the numbers over the past year even, not the past five years. So I certainly have not a great difficulty in the current expenditure, down 8 per cent from the previous year. I, in fact, would encourage some flexibility in this budget so that we are able to, as the minister suggested, pursue certain areas of innovation or of research as the opportunity warrants itself or as developments might come to our knowledge.

My focus in terms of criticism centres around choices that we make in regard to where we would fund research. I realize that we have a strong tradition of energy-based innovation and scientific development in this province. Indeed, in many areas we are world leaders, and certainly you go with your strong hand if you're playing cards. I would suggest that at this juncture we might be able to pursue other areas of research, and I know that the minister is spearheading a number of life science initiatives, and I would like to suggest some too.

It's interesting, you know, because last night I was watching television on a rare opportunity to do so, and the Deputy Minister of Innovation and Science was on. He was describing what the ministry's concept of innovation was according to Innovation and Science, and Dr. Fessenden said that innovation is taking an existing product and adding something to it to make it more valuable or more desirable. I won't dispute that in a certain way, but I do find it a little bit narrow in terms of, I suppose, academic integrity and the spirit of pure research.

The vast majority, of course, of marketable or lucrative scientific advances throughout history have come from environments that encouraged knowledge for knowledge's sake. So sometimes, you know, when we pursue a certain product and we want to bring a product on stream to make money, certainly that is a useful thing, and lots of good inventions come from that but also from a larger, let's say, environment of innovation and the pursuit of knowledge for knowledge's sake, as I said. Dr. Fessenden's comments bring to mind to me somehow a little bit these ideas of public/private partnership style of financing for certain projects, that the government puts out public dollars given to private companies to do what, sometimes, I think we can perhaps do ourselves at the same price or even cheaper.

This issue seems to be more relevant to some research institutes over others, certainly. The Alberta Energy Research Institute, for example, is entirely a public/private partnership arrangement, as far as I understand, which, you know, has some merit, but I think we need to always be vigilant. Our Auditor General does give some tentative support to P3s, but he said that we must be ever vigilant, I suppose, to ensure that we're getting the best bang for our buck. On the other hand, the university research and strategic investment program directs public dollars to research in public institutions. So I guess that I'm just pointing out in a general way that we have these two things working together, and sometimes we have to choose where we get the best return.

Who benefits from these grants? Well, of course, many students and researchers do indeed benefit over private companies, but there are issues of academic integrity that I believe should be addressed. From the 2003-2004 Innovation and Science annual report sponsored research reached the number of $434 million in 2003, which is considerably higher than the '98-99 baseline, some 88 per cent higher, in fact. So although in some respects any funding for research is good funding, I just would like to point out, you know, a sense of measuredness, I suppose, between public funding for research and private.

There is anecdotal evidence that sponsored research affects the outcome of the research in question. For example, Dr. Nancy Oliveri, formerly from the University of Toronto, has noted that over 90 per cent of published drug research shows that drugs, in fact, do well. A 90 per cent success rate in research is just simply not possible or logical, for that matter. So, you know, you do see that when you're looking for a certain solution, you end up getting it. Sometimes, let's say with Cold-fX it's a very highly successful product, which I like to take – not sure if it works or not, but I think it does. But, you know, I think that when we're looking for broader research information, perhaps pursuing without a solution in mind in the first place is a little more reasonable and perhaps a little bit more honest as well.

So just something to keep in mind. You know, these are larger questions rather than specific budget questions, but it does affect how the dollar is directed, so to speak. Our public researchers are very good, and we must not pass them by.

Bill 4 establishes this life sciences institute. According to the ministry's website, fine thing that it is, it says: "involves the science, technology, products and processes related to human health, agriculture, forestry and the environment. Simply put, it is the science of living things." I guess that I'm looking for some specific focus where this life sciences institute is going. When will the funding for the institute be available? To what degree are we going to focus on an environmental research endowment fund specifically?

I think that at this juncture, as the hon. minister pointed out, you know, we look for technology that branches across ministries, information technology, for example, that supports agriculture and, say, life sciences and energy and medical sciences as well. I would suggest that, you know, environmental endowment research would be in this category. It branches across different areas of interest for us, and I think that amongst all things we need it more now than ever.

Dr. David Schindler, who is the esteemed biological science professor, Killam professor, a fellow of the University of Alberta, has been pushing very, very adamantly for specific environmental research endowments targeting this area. If I may, I can just give you a few words that Dr. David Schindler has said recently on this topic. I think it's worthwhile.

In my view, such institutes can be good, but they should be totally arm's length from the government. They should disseminate reports directly to the taxpayers who sponsor them, not through a political filter. This does not mean that Ministers have to follow the institutes' recommendations but that when they do not, they must have reasons. I think that this sort of transparency is necessary for a democracy to work.

He goes on to say that one such independent institute that is desperately needed is one on environment and wildlife. This province is starting to look like Dresden after the bombing of the Second World War.

Strong words from a very well-respected scientist and some interesting ideas to reflect on when we are building this life sciences institute and how we might construct it.

The other bill that I'm interested just to make comment on is Bill 37. This talks about placing money into a number of different areas that would overlap into Innovation and Science, including a $3 billion access to the future fund. Two hundred and fifty million dollars has been placed into this fund already. It's about 8 per cent of the total that's been pledged. I'd just like to ask the minister: when can Alberta students and scientists expect the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research endowment fund and the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research endowment fund to be topped up so that we can see long-term sustainable funding for these areas?

My last comment has to do with Kyoto and carbon dioxide controls. We're having difficulty meeting our commitments to CO₂ in the atmosphere in Alberta, and it's simply a question, I think, of addressing these questions in a fundamental way. Science and technology is one tool by which we can address this issue, this challenge, and I'm hoping that the Innovation and Science budget will reflect specific research and development in regard to reducing our CO₂ output here in this province. For example, a lot of interest has been expressed in pumping CO₂ into existing wells or into coal-bed methane seams under the ground. I would be curious to know if the Ministry of Innovation and Science is pursuing this particular path to reducing our carbon dioxide emissions or to be somehow containing them. I have some grave reservations in regard to pumping CO₂ underground, and I'd like to know, specifically, if we are chasing this path.

Finally, is this ministry funding any specific research that would enable Albertans to reduce greenhouse gas emissions to meet the targets of the Kyoto accord, and how is the Ministry of Innovation and Science working with that?

With those comments, Mr. Chairman and hon. minister, I invite your reply either as we are this evening or in writing. That would be great. Thank you.

The Chair: Before I recognize the hon. minister, could I ask your co-operation in keeping the background noise down. Those who feel the need to carry on loud conversations, please do so in the committee room out back.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Chairman, I'm sure the buzz in the room has to do with the great things that we're doing in Alberta Innovation and Science. People are just absolutely astounded, and it's hard to keep the enthusiasm at a low level, but I'm sure they will try, based on your comments.

I just want to maybe start with your last point and move the other way. Again, I'm not going to hit everything, but I'll try and hit some of your points. On the CO₂, just to reinforce the six strategic thrusts that we have in the innovation INet, one of those is CO₂ management, which speaks, I think, to the issue you raised, as well as the alternative energy development, which I think is important from the perspective that you brought.

Quite clearly, the emphasis that we have placed in terms of the Canadian approach to the management of CO₂ is that we ought to let our companies use investment and technology as a credit towards their contribution towards Kyoto. Frankly, we have an industry, we have people and ability that a lot of the world doesn't have, and we can provide solutions to the rest of the world. I would rather we spent the money investing in technology in our province and our country that we could then take to the rest of the world. To me that makes a whole lot more sense than just having to buy credit from some other country.

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

CO₂ – we had a lot of discussions about it – is currently being used in research projects engaged in the use of CO₂ to displace or to provide a better recovery of oil and gas. In one of your comments you had some reservations about that, and I appreciate that, but we are investing in that. That is an initiative, and there are a number of other initiatives using CO₂ as a resource that are currently under way and being contemplated. So I appreciate that.

You would also be interested – and I'm not sure if you picked this up or not – in an announcement from one of our innovation programs that we actually had supported a residential solar district heating demonstration project at the town of Okotoks. It was well covered in the media, and I hope that you managed to see that. That's one of the initiatives that has come out of our innovation program that actually also helps speak to this area of looking for alternative sources, and even the research on that is how you store energy. So those are all important things. I knew you were interested in the solar thing because that's something you raised in my office, and I thought you'd be interested in that and probably knew that more than I did.

For some reason I wrote this down, and I can't remember what point it related to. Earlier today I announced some winners from our ASTech awards, which is our leadership in science and technology. There was a very interesting award winner. I think it was last year or the year before; I can't remember. It was a company out of Calgary called Light Up the World Foundation, which actually provides a lighting solution to people around the world, particularly in Third World countries, that don't have access to power, can't read when the sun goes down because they haven't got lights. They provided a very simple, effective solution in a compassionate, caring way that addresses problems in the Third World. I'm very proud of that group, and we recognized them with an award. That's just, again, an example of some of the things that are occurring in our own province that help our world.

The definition of innovation. I didn't listen to the show, so I don't know what was said, but quite clearly innovation is more than just research and development. Research, pure research, basic research is an important element of that, but it's also more than just that. It's also looking for ways to do things better. It also has to speak to the economics. We can do a lot of things, but it costs too much to do them, so part of research and innovation is finding processes that can speak to the economics of what they're working on.

Your comments with respect to industry participation in research. We alluded to this earlier with the previous question from the Member for Edmonton-McClung on the BIRS and trying to actually increase our business investment side. That's one area where we think we have an opportunity. Many of the research activities that we fund, for instance, come from federal granting councils like the Canadian Foundation for Innovation, which actually requires at least a 20 per cent investment by industry in every research project. So when researchers apply to that, they have to have industry support. It's generally considered 40 per cent from the federal granting council, 40 per cent from the province or the institution itself, and 20 per cent from industry.

On the EnergyINet initiative that we've begun working on, quite clearly, the direction that we gave to industry was that we're not going to do this alone as government. The energy issue is an issue across Canada whether it's in hydro, whether it's in fossil fuel, whether it's in nuclear, whatever. There's a Canadian issue around it. We need industry at the table to provide solutions. Government needs to be at the table both federally and provincially. That's really the thrust behind EnergyINet.

You made some comments about the growth in sponsored research, and I commend you for that. I actually pulled out a chart which goes back to 1995, where the sponsored research out of our universities in Alberta was under $200 million. This year it's well over $600 million, which shows the growth in research activities we've had in the province of Alberta, and we're very proud of that particular growth.

Basic comments about environmental endowment. I've made note of those comments and appreciate that. A lot of the work we do in the institutes does speak to the environmental issues although not necessarily characterized as an environmental endowment. I know that your wish and probably the wish of the gentleman you quoted would be to make it more specific to that, and I've made note of that. Some of the life sciences – just to show you how some of this cuts across, I think of the approach to fibre and how that impacts on forestry and agriculture because they both really deal with fibre. The research we're doing on that is: how do we take this fibre and use it in an effective way?

Bill 1, Access to the Future Act. You raised that. Quite clearly, the budget this year and the next two years is committed to bringing the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research up by $500 million. That's accounted for in the budget. Bill 1 talks about topping up the Alberta ingenuity fund by another $500 million, but it is clearly as funds are available. I can't give you a specific timeline, although also in reference to the question from Edmonton-McClung I indicated that I will certainly be seeking support for that as the year unfolds and if our revenue base continues to be strong.

For the rest of the questions we'll get you answers in writing, and I appreciate your comments.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Innovation spending is clearly an investment in the future. At this point I'd like to thank the minister and his department for honouring my nephew in their ministerial calendar. He was the grade 8 winner of the national science award in his area for his science project on phosphorus indicators on BSE prions, you know, which shows how our next generation that's coming forward is really interested in some of the things that could bring solutions to certain great problems in agriculture and how they have an interest in these areas. I thank the minister and his department for including him and honouring him in their calendar.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The importance of innovation is clear. It is the next generation that we're looking to. After we have our oil sands gone or our oil industry not so important or if something does happen that all of a sudden that industry doesn't count any more – it happened in other industries. It happened in this province with coal in the 1940s. You know, if we're not looking to innovation, if we're not looking to creating new ways of doing things, new methods and new ideas to enhance and ensure our prosperity for the future, we're looking to lose our track in the world.

I had hoped the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar would speak to this particular debate. It's not just a Liberal idea that we would be looking to spend monies on innovation as an investment in the future. I think it's an important initiative from this government, and I think the member should speak to that and ensure that the spending in this area is indeed a viable and a proper thing.

If, for example, we didn't have the development in wheat in the middle parts of the 19th century that allowed for the development of farming in Manitoba, in western Canada, we wouldn't actually have had settlement because the wheats that were developed at that time were quite innovative and a new way to farm in what became our home. You know, we look at corn. It was just a generation ago that you couldn't get corn much higher than Taber in terms of how far north it could be, and now we're seeing corn farmed in Athabasca. It's innovation. It's development. It's continuously bringing these things forward, and the investments in these things pay off in spades.

I look at some of the applied technology that we're seeing in the oil sands. Not too long ago I was with some people from a geomatics company, which includes what used to be the trade of surveying, but it's become far more technical. They were showing me a program which, with the use of GPS technology, allowed them to survey an entire oil sands pit and determine volumes, determine the various areas, the description of the pit in a 3-D image. They were able to rotate that image, look at it from the bottom, look at it from the side, look at how they could be using it for the access of heavy equipment, heavy haulers, using it for volume determinations and these types of things. It shows very clearly that some of these things can be very, very well used in terms of how we apply it to our economy, how we apply it to efficiencies, how we apply it to the way that we can improve our Alberta.

There are many other areas. Crime detection. You know, some of the early DNA developments actually came out of Alberta, and some of our people in Alberta actually spoke in Asia and Europe on the development of DNA. It was really quite something. Some of the new developments in the tar sands, using different types of heat instead of just steam, which is a great draw on our water resource. Some of these ways are huge in terms of an investment for our future.

The strategies that the government is looking at to support recruitment of scientific personnel at public research institutions. I'd like to see the minister comment on what we could do to encourage new chairs, to encourage new endowments, to encourage new involvement from the private sector in that area to support the infrastructure at research institutions – my colleague from Edmonton-McClung spoke quite a bit on that – to look at how we explore the niches that we want to concentrate on. Certainly we're only 3 million in billions of people, but the niches that we look at must have the right infrastructure in order to expand. Some of that infrastructure is their equipment, and it's constantly changing, constantly needing updating, and sometimes quite expensive.

The way that we interact with some of the projects in our area; for example, the cyclotron in Saskatoon. I think there are some synergies that can be developed in terms of how we look at some more pure research perhaps but some things that can be applied and have great value in terms of developing our own scientific abilities.

The three priority areas of energy, ICT, and life sciences. Energy, obviously, is a crucial area to look at how we are going. It's so many-faceted. You know, some aspects were talked about by the Member for Edmonton-Calder. Sequestration of CO₂. The use of SO₂ as a potential resource as opposed to a pollutant should be looked at. The use of our sulphur piles and finding ways to get rid of these massive, massive piles of sulphur that we have accumulating in the province I think is important.

The nanotechnology centre surely has been, you know, proving its value and increasingly has shown that research in this sector and using this as an important niche can be of great value to Alberta. If we look at how that developed, it developed basically out of some research, which some people would call pure, for the purpose of exploration in space. Much of the miniaturization that developed into computers and ICT originally started from the space program, what some people would call pure research, which would become very much applied to many areas of our economy.

That gets to pure research. What is innovation? Do we really always have to tie it to something that we haven't seen yet? Innovation in itself and by its definition does not necessarily mean something can be seen to develop from something because you are in fact innovating. You're discovering. You're finding. You're seeking new ways, and sometimes little bits of brilliance can bring a huge return even though that was not seen in the initial beginnings of the project.

The promotion of science and technology awareness I think is still very important, you know, especially with youth. I appreciate the ministry's work with the teachers, with the science fairs. I think it's crucial to promote that. It does encourage kids. It brings it forward. These are the innovators. These are the people that will discover in the future, and to let them interact nationally, as in some of these fairs and such, and to help them with that I think is crucial and important.

Some specific questions. You know, the performance measures kind of struck me. To have "total sponsored research revenue attracted by Alberta universities" as a performance measure I think is odd. While the total dollars perhaps are a useful measure, it doesn't really speak to Alberta's competitive situation in Canada or around the world, and it doesn't speak to what they are in fact doing. Raw numbers in these areas can be misleading, and I think that some other more effective performance measure should be somehow found. I would ask the minister to comment on that.

To "accelerate innovation in the energy sector," which is goal 3, I think is a very worthwhile endeavour, particularly those that add value to energy-related projects. You know, we have to encourage that any ends and any extra byproducts in gas, anything that we can use to promote, perhaps, cheaper diluents, to find ways to provide work in our many areas of the province, to look at how, say, better ways of using diluent could begin the construction of an upgrader in Medicine Hat or other parts of the province because the use of the pipeline as part of the refining process can actually bring economic value to many parts of the province. Some parts sometimes may think that they are actually getting too much of this, and it affects their environment. Perhaps that can be spread around, and people would be happier. There are ways where innovation can do that, I believe, and the performance measures and the ratio of private and public investments seem to be decreasing. I find that odd.

I've mentioned in some of the debates on the other bills that have been before this House that R and D in Canada has been historically quite low in relation to the economy. The R and D in Alberta and especially in the private sector has often been the lowest in Canada. There are reasons for that. It's the type of industries. It's the types of actions in the economy and perhaps a great deal of foreign control from centres like Houston and New York and Amsterdam and other areas where some of these types of R and D are in fact done. I think that where we could encourage these pools of capital, these multinationals to encourage more research and development in our area, somehow it would only be a great benefit for them and also a great benefit for the people of Alberta. I support any increase in the funding for this department. I think it is something that will only pay off.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for allowing me to speak.

Mr. Doerksen: I'm just going to make a few quick comments in response, and again we'll respond. You mentioned young people, and I have to tell you a couple stories about young people. It is important for our young people.

At our ASTech awards we've generally had students have their science fair projects there, and these are some of the best science fair projects in Alberta. The people that come to the awards are just blown away by what these young people can do. We had one guy there, Warren Fenton, in grade 10 who did some work using an – I can't even say it – interferometer to determine how the speed of light is changed in the various gases, and he built his own equipment. At that ASTech awards I gave a challenge to the audience to let this young fellow have some access to some university labs so he could continue his research, and they accommodated him. It was a great response.

We had another fellow by the name of Scott Pedrick, who in a grade 8 project had an artificial wetlands cleansing waste water. Again it was at the ASTech awards. Again I threw out the challenge to the group there to help this young man out, and as a matter of fact I understand that in June of this year they're going to take him to the Bamfield Marine Sciences Centre as a special guest, along with some of our people from the U of A and NOVA.

Those are just two examples of young people that are doing outstanding work in our province, and we want to continue to encourage them. You said as much, and I appreciate that.

The Member for Edmonton-Calder talked about the past hundred years. Well, if you look on the website, there's a little section that talks about Alberta inventors over the past hundred years. I would invite you to go there and look and see all the great people that we have in Alberta.

I've taken your comments about performance measures, and I would invite your input into this because every year we struggle with this. The performance measures we have are largely input based, and we struggle to find out what the output measures are. If you just look at a strict output measure being our economic success in Alberta, clearly we're at the head of the class, but I think we're trying to find performance measures that relate more to the areas that we're investing in. I admit that it's been a difficult struggle to find out what the output measures are. Quite clearly, the performance measures we have are primarily based on input.

You talked about encouraging new chairs, new endowments. Just so you know, the Alberta Science and Research Authority doesn't just give us advice in terms of strategic research; they also provided a great deal of support to the Minister of Advanced Education and our government with respect to saying that we needed to invest in postsecondary institutions, in the postgraduate level, and in scholarships. You've seen the outcome of some of that in Bill 1, in our throne speech in terms of the support we've given to that segment of advanced education and clearly supporting people. You raised that point, and we agree with it. Building research capacity is building good teams of people who are best in class, best in the world, and that is clearly a focus that we have in our department.

Thank you for your comments, and I'll sit down.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I have prepared a short Albertan wish list for the Department of Innovation and Science.

One, recognize the importance of postsecondary education and ongoing research endowments; invest our resource royalties in addition to general revenue to fund and incent innovative solutions.

Two, recognize that our most precious resources are healthy, supported, and stimulated Alberta minds.

Three, recognize, encourage, fund, and when the investment produces obvious economic returns, subsidize made-in-Alberta diversification projects to replace the government's current addictive dependency on gambling, alcohol, and tobacco taxes.

Four, fund research on renewable energy alternatives, in particular a method of storing solar, wind, and thermal energy in an economic fashion to reduce our current dependency on nonrenewable, polluting fossil fuels.

Five, through research grant funding improve our current system of scrubbers to eliminate coal-fired emissions so that we can replace our dependency on gas, whether sweet, sour, or in combination from coal-bed methane extraction. We have hundreds of years of cheap coal supply if we can solve this pollution problem.

Six, develop and enforce an alternative to the use and irretrievable loss of potable water in oil well extraction.

Seven, in concert with the Department of Environment research and develop an inexpensive method of desalinating water to the point that it can at least be economically used for irrigational and other agricultural projects.

Eight, stop depleting our gas reserves by using expensive gas to fuel the extraction of expensive oil from the tar sands.

Nine, continue to fund scientific research to eliminate infectious diseases and cancer, diabetes, heart and stroke.

Ten, encourage natural solutions to natural problems; for example, natural fertilizers, supportive insects to fight pests, sound agricultural and wetland conservation practices.

In conclusion, invest our rapidly depleting nonrenewable resource royalties to solve today's problems and tomorrow's challenges. The innovative co-operation demonstrated in this House tonight bodes well for Alberta's future.

Mr. Doerksen: Very briefly, just to thank the member for those comments and those points. We will respond and let you know what we're doing in each one of those areas.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just have one question in an area that concerns me very much, and that is the area of the ethics of technology, ethics of science. It's well known that because of the tremendous innovation and the drive towards innovation and technology, ethics lag behind quite often. For example, the new reproductive technologies led to the establishment of a royal commission to look at that or, for example, with the AIDS epidemic a federal centre for AIDS was created or, for example, the whole problem of euthanasia and so on that led to the federal Senate developing a committee to look at that.

That seems to be the way we approach issues around decisions with respect to research and science and technology. If it gets enough press and if there's enough concern, we establish some sort of a commission. It's a kind of ad hoc approach. I know that lots of other countries are moving in the direction of establishing national ethics committees to look at the ethics of science and technology.

I'm particularly impressed here in Alberta with the John Dossetor Health Ethics Centre, which I think is a tremendous, successful venture at the University of Alberta hospital. I have tremendous respect for John Dossetor. What I'm looking for is not that government should do the ethics for scientists and for technologists. Not at all. Scientists can do their own ethics, and that's what the John Dossetor centre illustrates. John Dossetor himself was a surgeon, a highly respected physician who began to raise ethical questions for the work that he was doing. He has been teaching so many people in that field how to do ethics. I think that's extremely important, that somehow there is a disconnect between our values and our going full speed ahead in terms of science and technology.

When I look at your budget and the department, I'm wondering what limits there are in terms of the kind of decisions that are made. I know there are references, for example, to the expression "quality of life." I appreciate that because we're all interested that science and technology would contribute to a great quality of life for us in Alberta. That's one kind of limiting reference. I would like to see some more funding for ethics committees and more of a universal approach to dealing with ethics in science and technology, not just an ad hoc kind of approach.

So I wonder if you have any comments about that.

Mr. Doerksen: Well, I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Glenora because he raises some very important questions around those issues, and some of them are very dear to my heart. I have thought about them a lot. I'm glad you raised the John Dossetor because I was going to bring that up. When you first got going and you were talking about the ethics of technology and science, I thought, "Well, here's the centre," and you raised it. Obviously, you know about it, which is good.

The regulatory framework is largely set by the federal government in terms of the kind of research that is done, but we'll examine your questions in more detail and provide you some more answers in terms of what we do in Alberta.

Thank you for raising those comments.

10:40

That being said, I would move that the Committee of Supply now rise and report the Ministry and Department of Innovation and Science and beg leave to sit again at another time.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, for the following department.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 24

Fatality Inquiries Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move Bill 24, the Fatality Inquiries Amendment Act, 2005, for third reading.

We've had a good debate on this bill, and I appreciate the hon. members' input and thank them for their support. The bill addresses a number of areas that were identified during public consultation.

Among other things, it enhances the fatality inquiry process by providing for pre-inquiry conferences to identify in advance the issues to be addressed in the course of the inquiry. This minimizes the possibility of lengthy adjournments after the inquiry has begun. It also clarifies who may participate in public fatality inquiries while continuing the traditional openness of the process in the past. In fact, it gives the Minister of Justice the formal authorization to release the judge's report to the public. It clarifies the role of inquiry counsel as it addresses the collection and disclosure of information by inquiry counsel to balance privacy with access. It will allow the Fatality Review Board to use their considered judgment to determine if the public would be served by a fatality inquiry in cases where there is no meaningful connection between the death and the fact that the deceased was in the custody, care, or guardianship of the government or police.

In summary, the bill will clarify and improve the fatality inquiry process to inspire confidence that public authorities are taking appropriate measures to protect human life.

I would ask the members of the Assembly to support Bill 24, and thank you for your support to date.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The main issue that received the most attention concerning this bill was the role of the media at a fatality inquiry. This is relevant to the issue of the effect of the bill. Will this legislation rationalize the whole process, enabling judges to define the scope and expeditiously deal with the relevant issues, or will this legislation restrict access on the part of concerned parties such as the media?

I appreciate the hon. minister's explanations and the distinctions he has made; namely, that it was never the intention of the bill to exclude the media. They have the right to attend fatality inquiries, but rarely would they be a party with a direct and substantial interest in the subject matter of the inquiry. His words that having the right to attend an inquiry is very different from having the right to participate at an inquiry are, I think, well taken. The bill does not restrict the media's ability to report on the inquiry. The media still has an important role to play, and they can play it.

However, the hon. minister's explanations are one thing, and I appreciate those explanations. The bill and its effects may be quite different. I hope that the minister is right in his explanations. I hope that the bill will ensure that fatality inquiries are efficient – I never objected to that word in my remarks – open, public, transparent, and, of course, helpful to the wider community to ensure greater safety and health and well-being. There are just too many unnecessary deaths to innocent people in Alberta, so let us hope that this bill enables the judicial process, the fatality inquiries to be carried out in such a way that they will instill public confidence, that the public will be confident that we're making progress in dealing with the issues of safety and the issues of health in our community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a third time]

Bill 25
Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move for third reading Bill 25, Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2005.

We've had a good discussion with respect to this matter, and I appreciate the support from the opposition parties that has been provided to this bill to date and hope that it will continue. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a third time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 36
Police Amendment Act, 2005

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I offered an amendment before, a first amendment. I have a second amendment that I would like to distribute on Bill 36.

Now, this amendment has to do with the time allotted for complaints. In section 18, referring to section 43(11), the period of time that's allowed for complaints reads: "shall dismiss any complaint that is made more than one year after the events on which it is based occurred." I just don't understand. I think the Solicitor General could explain to us why it's one year and why there's a kind of sudden ending after one year without any kind of discretion on the part of the chief of police. It doesn't say "may dismiss" but "shall dismiss any complaint that is made more than one year." My amendment would allow for two years but also give the chief of police more discretion by striking out "shall" and substituting "may."

It seems to me that there could be lots of factors that take the situation beyond one year. There could be a court case, and at the end of a court case that may last longer than a year, somebody might think: well, I have the grounds for a complaint. I don't understand why we would have just one year.

For example, in terms of the constitutionality of such legislation, it seems to me that there's no limitation for bringing a prosecution against a citizen of Canada in relation to an indictable offence. If a complaint against a police officer constitutes an offence, why does the police officer have this one-year limitation when that's not offered to anybody else? I'm not sure that that's really in line with section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which argues that every citizen is equal before the law. I don't know why we would favour a police officer more than any other citizen. So I have difficulties with this. I think that by saying that the chief of police "may" hear complaints in terms of the two years, that gives them a lot more flexibility.

The Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the next speaker, the amendment as circulated by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora will be referred to as amendment A2. I recognize the hon. Solicitor General on the amendment A2.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's an interesting amendment that the hon. member brings forward, but I do have a response with regard to the legislation we're bringing forward. Concerns expressed about complainants being intimidated by having to complain to the police, the very people they are complaining about, have been fully dealt with under the proposed amendments. Under Bill 36 the complainants may file their complaint with the civilian police commission's public complaint director.

Alberta is the last province to include a time limit on complaints about the conduct of a police officer. To be clear, this proposed time frame does not apply to complaints of alleged criminal conduct. In either case, though, people are encouraged to lodge their complaint as quickly as possible to avoid the possibility of potential evidence being lost with the passage of time.

Time limits on complaints of police officer conduct in other provinces are this: Quebec, New Brunswick, Saskatchewan, and B.C. all have a one-year time frame, which is what we're proposing, Ontario has a six-month time frame, Newfoundland and Labrador have a three-month time frame, and Manitoba and Nova Scotia have 30-day time frames. Prince Edward Island doesn't have any legislation governing complaints against the police at all. So, clearly, Alberta's proposed limit is in line with the majority of the other provinces.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on amendment A2.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. While I understand, if I were a police officer and I was waiting for the potential of a complaint to be brought against me, I would probably be rather anxious to have that complaint drawn out sooner than later. However, with court cases going on and on and class action complications, the notion that things can be resolved within a year may be somewhat premature.

The other concern that the hon. member brought up was maintaining the security of the evidence. I think that's partly a court and police responsibility to make sure that the evidence is protected and relevant. We don't want to go through what happened in the States with the glove and the knife and the pursuit in the white Bronco. We want to have a more secure system.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have one more amendment to try, and this is much more substantial than the first two. It deals with, on page 16, the heart of this Bill 36, and that is the proposal on how to handle serious incidents and complaints, under 23 but referring to 46.1, serious complaints. The model suggested by this bill does not in my estimation fulfill the requirement of providing a public oversight mechanism.

The Chair: Could we just interrupt you, hon. member, until we get the . . .

Dr. B. Miller: I haven't introduced the amendment yet, but I have it here.

The Chair: Okay.

Dr. B. Miller: I'm using up probably one minute of my five minutes left, but anyway.

This amendment is going to be directed to changing 46.2.

An Hon. Member: You killed another tree.

Dr. B. Miller: Another tree, right. It's one of the birch trees that already died.

The Chair: We'll refer to this amendment as amendment A3.

Dr. B. Miller: If I may proceed.

The Chair: Please do.

Dr. B. Miller: This amendment says that it strikes out the words "may do any one or more of the following" in the middle of page 16 under (2). Instead of "may do," we're suggesting "shall do." In other words, it shouldn't be left up to the discretion of the minister whether or not there is an investigation. But there ought to be an investigation if there is a serious offence.

Then instead of the outline in the bill, the "request . . . that another police service provide a police officer to assist," this amendment is suggesting that the investigation be carried out by a committee. So (a) to (c) is struck out and substituted with the following:

- (a) request or direct another police service to conduct an investigation into the incident or complaint, and
- (b) to ensure the integrity of the process of the investigation, appoint an oversight committee comprised of
 - (i) a retired judge,
 - (ii) a retired or former Crown prosecutor,
 - (iii) a retired or former police officer, and
 - (iv) not less than 2 members of the public.

Now, the rest of the amendment is housekeeping matters to comply with the idea of this committee. Actually, this suggestion should be familiar because this comes right out of the MLA committee on policing, which the Solicitor General was a member of, so he should recognize this proposal as quite a valid proposal.

It fulfills, in my estimation, the need to have public/civilian oversight. Instead of just having one person oversee the process as suggested by the bill, here you would have "not less than 2 members of the public." It's very important to ensure that there's actual independence and impartiality on the part of such a committee and also that there be the appearance of impartiality. Public perception is really important. When investigation of a serious offence is carried out, the public has to be assured that there is the appearance and the actual fact of impartiality and independence. This kind of committee would provide that.

It also provides the possibility of a committee that is able to perform its own investigation. The Solicitor General in question period, in response to a question of mine, suggested that the public doesn't have the ability or the skills to engage in investigations. I thought that was a statement that kind of has disrespect for the ability of the public. Of course, if you have someone who is a retired judge or a retired Crown prosecutor or a retired or former police officer, then the ability to carry out an investigation is there on the committee.

I think this kind of proposal would go much, much further in satisfying the public in the need for civilian/public oversight of our police services. I think this would instill confidence in our police services, if we had this kind of investigative committee. So this is the amendment that we would like to propose.

The Chair: The hon. Solicitor General on A3.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. With regard to the amendment that's brought forward, I want to thank the hon. member for bringing up the fact that a part of his amendment comes from the MLA Policing Review that was chaired by Her Worship Judy Gordon of the town of Lacombe.

What we looked at then was the fact that could these individuals – a retired judge, possibly a retired prosecutor, and a retired investigator – in fact be members of a committee that could oversee and investigate? The overwhelming stakeholder input with regard to that was that they are too close to the police, that they all work with police officers: as a retired investigator, obviously contacts within the police service; as a retired prosecutor, possibly contacts with those same police officers; and as a retired judge, as well those contacts would be there.

What we did then, what we're bringing forward, Mr. Chairman, is the fact that our legislation is stating that we would be appointing members of the public which could include a retired judge, a retired prosecutor or police officer. We're not stating that that's all. We're going to open the realm of individuals from the public in a true public oversight forum so that any member of the public could in fact be selected. So it's not listed as one of the individuals listed in (i), (ii), (iii), and (iv).

The other thing I wanted to mention, Mr. Chairman, was when we talk about the police investigating the police. I think we want to make it clear, though, that there are numerous, numerous professions out there that investigate themselves. Doctors investigate themselves. You know, church pastors and church ministers investigate themselves. Teachers investigate themselves. Lawyers investigate themselves. Judges investigate themselves. The list goes on and on and on.

Again, obviously, in a policing profession they have to investigate themselves because of the fact that they also have those investigative skills with regard to criminal allegations. Now, if it's a breach of conduct, those are simpler to deal with because, in fact, the regulations are very specific with regard to what offence did they in fact breach under the regulations.

I would advise the hon. member that, as well, we're going to be looking at the regulations and a review of the regulations once this act goes through. We can possibly look at a part of his suggestion here in the regulations, but of course that time will come down the road.

No, I can't accept any of the amendment as put forward, Mr. Chairman, as I believe our legislation deals with this issue regarding public oversight. Civilian oversight, the ability to monitor the process of investigation, to ensure that the integrity of the investigation is there, to ensure a clear and transparent process I think is what we want to ensure is in the process. Leaving it open to any member of the public to have the ability and/or the opportunity to oversee an investigation I think would be more critical than listing individual professions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I would appreciate clarification from the hon. member that there would be at least two members of the public appointed – and again I hate the word “appointed,” but I can’t think of a better word; I love the word “elected,” but I’m not sure how well it works here – independent members of the public appointed, selected, elected to this oversight committee. Hopefully, you can provide me with clarification.

I was a teacher, as everyone has heard several times, for 34 years. While the Alberta Teachers’ Association did have internal professional policing – and you mentioned doctors and lawyers – there’s still a public kind of incredulity about members being able to police themselves. It always comes into question as to what extent. When it’s police, it’s the highest level of sort of professional activity or public safety that comes into account. Unless there is an impartial third party to oversee the investigation, then there’s always the possibility of personal interest or partisanship and a tainted process.

We’ve seen inquiries of late and we’ve brought them up: the ongoing battle with the Alberta Securities Commission and the ward 10 business, where people have been appointed and they appear to have the potential of partisanship. Unless we free ourselves from that perceived if not real notion of partisanship through having independent members of the public, this stigma that we’re basically guarding our own treasure comes into play.

I believe that a retired judge, a retired or former Crown prosecutor, any of these individuals are that far removed from the police officer or the police department themselves doing their own investigation that with every further removal from sort of the police being the judge and potential executioner – I don’t think all those roles can be sufficiently summed up by one person. It’s kind of like we have a system where people can elect to be tried by judge or jury. In most circumstances I would rather trust the wisdom of a number of individuals than any one individual.

Lastly, if the hon. member could clarify that there will be at least two nonpartisan members of the public as a part of that committee, I’d be more understanding of the intent.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’m pleased to speak to this amendment, and I speak in favour of this amendment very clearly. The wording in the act needs this amendment because an overseer, as seen by the wording in the legislation, without investigative power does not actually, I think, you know, speak to the real need that this act really is looking for.

The respect for the rule of law, the respect for the police, and respect for our system of justice and law enforcement is key to the operation of our society. Policing has a very special role in our society and a special place. It’s important that it be beyond reproach. Investigating any allegations against particular police officers and all the foofaraw that goes around this sort of thing makes it necessary that there be a real independence by those who are dealing with this. Independence does not mean that they can’t be former police officers, that they can’t be investigators of another sort. They might be somebody from the corrections branch, somebody from any of a number of areas in law enforcement, or somebody from another province or whatever, but the key is independence.

This sort of system works very well in Ontario. It works very well in other jurisdictions. It need not have a high staffing component. The training and staffing component for this type of thing need not be – in fact, it probably in the long run could be a saving, as it takes away the need for spending in these areas by all of the very different police organizations and departments in our province.

I believe that this amendment is a very beneficial addition and should be passed by this Legislature and would lead to a better support in the long run for our police. I’ve talked to a number of individual people in the law enforcement community. Although they would not support this publicly, they say that, you know, in reality this type of independence would give greater strength to any decision that comes from any inquiry of these matters because it creates suspicion in the public if the police are judging themselves.

I would urge this Assembly to vote for this amendment.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on amendment A3? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Strictly a clarification, and possibly my question was lost: is it the hon. member’s and mover’s intention that there will be two members of the public on the oversight committee in addition to the police officer doing the judgment?

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Chairman, as per the legislation it’s “appoint one or more members of the public.”

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on amendment A3?

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, have some interest in Bill 36. While I think the intention of the bill shows some promise, I think that we’re hearing from quite a number of people across the city and across the province that have some concerns as to the strength of this bill, whether or not it’s going far enough to restore the public’s confidence in the ability for us to have independent oversight over the police force under certain circumstances.

So I have an amendment to section 20 of this bill. It’s on page 13, and I would like to distribute it now, please.

The Chair: We’ll refer to this amendment as amendment A4.

Hon. member, would you like to proceed?

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you. So as my amendment is being distributed, this amendment has proposed to set a timeline for police to investigate complaints. After six months if the matter has not been, quote, unquote, disposed of, then it is referred to the police commission for a committee to review. Now, this is designed specifically to deal with complaints in a timely manner. Again, with that question of confidence, if something is serious enough to warrant a complaint – and we don’t usually see these things taken lightly – then, in fact, the public will know that the complaint will be dealt with within a reasonable timeline, and if not, it’s going to the police commission for review.

I think that on a number of occasions people have at least the perception – and perception has a lot to do, Mr. Chairman, with the integrity of any public body that we have. Sometimes there is the perception that people are having their complaint sort of swept away and lost in the mists of time. So we’re hoping that this amendment might address that concern and give Bill 36 some more of the teeth that it requires.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I believe this is going to be A4.

Mr. Chairman, the police commission through the public complaint director will have the authority to review any complaint under investigation at any time. In the event that the length of an investigation becomes a concern, the mechanism I just mentioned is already in place to review the reasons for the delay. The police commission has that ability now to investigate any matter that may come before them, so we're not in agreement with the amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. We seem to be at odds here. In one sense we want speedy justice for police officers who have potentially been accused of some nonprofessional act, yet on the other side we don't seem to want to provide that same speed and efficiency for a person who has lodged the accusation. I don't see one individual's worth or desire for speedy justice being higher than the other's. I respect the role of police officers, but I don't believe that they are above the law or above a timely process any more so than any member of the public. If we want to have any kind of public faith in the system, we need to know that within a certain time limit these complaints will be dealt with and not at the discretion, again, of the police force but within a regulated and expected six-month period. You can't have it both ways and say that the police deserve speedy justice but the public doesn't.

I speak in favour of the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

11:20

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. Sorry; I was just being diverted there for a moment.

I have another amendment to Bill 36, and I will distribute it now. It's in reference to section 18, page 11 of the bill. If I might distribute those for you.

The Chair: We'll refer to this amendment as amendment A5.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. As you might see, this amendment is referring to section 18 of Bill 36. It's focusing on: will the extension of the length of time that a complaint . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, if I may interject, the wording of your amendment is already part of a previous amendment. Therefore, it would be ruled out of order.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. Well, I think that amendments are a bit like fishing. If you just keep your hook in long enough, eventually you'll catch something.

I do in fact have another one. This third amendment has to do with section 23 on pages 15 and 16 of the proposed bill in front of us. I will distribute that to you.

The Chair: We'll call this one A6.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. The last amendment that I have for you is to strengthen the clause in the act in general to force the minister to take action on complaints rather than just empowering the minister to do so. Again, this is in the spirit of strengthening this overall act to provide the public with the confidence to know that there is a degree of independence in oversight with the various police departments around the province and that the minister, in fact, carries a fair amount of clout to allow intervention when necessary.

I think that, you know, in looking back, all of the calls for a reform of the Police Act were looking to fundamentally redirect the way by which we investigate our police departments when necessary.

The Chair: Hon. member, I hate to interject again, but your amendment A6 is the same wording as the previous amendment A2, so I have to rule it out of order as well.

Mr. Eggen: I'm sorry. Are you referring to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora's amendment? Okay. So it's out of order as well?

The Chair: That's correct. It's out of order.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. Thank you. Those are all of the amendments I have for this Bill 36.

Mr. Cenaiko: I think, Mr. Chairman, there's some issue with the handing out of the amendments because A6 actually came on this side of the House as A5. I think there was maybe a mix-up in handing them out. A6 is actually this last amendment: Dr. Pannu to move that Bill 36, Police Amendment Act, 2005, be amended in section 23 in the proposed section 46.1(2) by striking out "may do" and substituting "shall do." That should be A6.

The Chair: By striking out "one year" and substituting "two years" is amendment A6.

Mr. Cenaiko: That was A5. That was the same as A2.

The Chair: They're both out of order. The table received both amendments at the same time, so there could be a mix-up in the ones you received. Nevertheless, both of them are ruled out of order because the wording is the same as other subsequent amendments.

Are there any other amendments?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Just a parting remark for the sake of Hansard if I may. The intention of the amendments from this side of the House was just to have equal treatment for both the police and the public, and the cliché that best expresses that is: what's good for the goose is good for the gander.

Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 36 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would move that the committee now rise and report Bill 36.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Webber: The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 36. Mr. Speaker, I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that the Assembly stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 11:29 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 10, 2005

1:30 p.m.

Date: 05/05/10

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. Grant that we the members of our province's Legislature fulfill our office with honesty and integrity. May our first concern be for the good of all of our people. Let us be guided by our deliberations this day. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Bryan and Susan Huygen from my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. They are, of course, the proud parents of Jennifer Huygen, one of our very talented, dedicated, and hard-working pages. Bryan is the director of business services in the Department of Children's Services, and Susan is a research assistant at the Faculty of Medicine at the University of Alberta. More specifically, she works with the northern Alberta renal program at the U of A hospital. Bryan and Susan are seated in your gallery, and I'd ask that they please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House 105 visitors from the city of Spruce Grove and the school of Brookwood elementary, which has a well-deserved high reputation as an inclusive school, turning out great results through great kids. They are accompanied by teachers/group leaders Mr. Jeff MacKay, Mrs. Nancy St. Amand, Mrs. Evelyn Nixey, along with parent helpers Mrs. Judy Rackel, Mrs. Diane McKay, Mrs. Denise Mandin, Mrs. Donna Johnson, Mrs. Corinna Nelson, Mrs. Dorothy McGinn, Mrs. Tracy Megaw, Mrs. Alison McConnell, Mrs. Sharon Whalen, Mrs. Lorraine Harrison, Mrs. Karina Beaudoin, Mrs. Christine Blomquist, Mrs. Daphne MacDonald, Mrs. Sharon Nickerson, Mr. Rick Dechaux, and Mrs. Kim Dewan. I believe they're in both galleries, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly some five visitors from Japan, here in our province with the Rotary group study exchange program. This program is a unique cultural and vocational exchange opportunity for young professional men and women between the ages of 25 and 40 who are in the initial stages of their professional life. For four to six weeks these team members are studying our country's institutions and our ways of life, observing their own vocations as practised abroad, developing personal and professional leadership and relationships, and exchanging ideas. We trust that their perspectives and the fresh ideas gathered from this experience with our nation's culture, commerce, and government will prove invaluable as they are applied in fostering growth in their companies and their country.

Now, I'd ask each of our guests to rise as I call out their name and remain standing until we can welcome them. Kimiko Inoue, an opera singer, is learning much about music and culture. Akiko Matsubara, a sales promoter with Panasonic, is learning about sales promotion and the industrial products. Akika Kawamura works at Nanzan University and is learning about college education management and the postsecondary system. Akira Hirai works in the Grand Hotel in Japan and is learning about banquet facility promotion and hotel business. Of course, the team leader, Nobuo Hazama, is retired from the Toyota Motor Company and is busier than ever with his volunteer activities. The Rotary hosts for our Japanese visitors are Katherine Olson, legislative manager with my department, and her fellow Rotarian Mike Colson. I would ask now that the Assembly give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two very special guests seated in the public gallery. Aaron Sorensen, if he would please rise, is a musician turned screenwriter and director originally from the Peace River region. You may have heard of his film Hank Williams First Nation.

After writing the script, Aaron turned to his community in Peace River to finance this film, and in fact it was the local IGA store and then the Woodland Cree Nation who supported the film and invested in it. The movie is playing in theatres across the country and has received wonderful reviews. It's an example of the amazing talent waiting to be tapped in Alberta. In fact, out of over 3,200 submissions this movie was chosen as one of only 12 films to compete in the Los Angeles International Film Festival.

With Aaron today is another example of Alberta talent, Edmonton actor Jimmy Herman. Jimmy plays the role of Uncle Martin in Hank Williams First Nation. He's also appeared in Dances With Wolves and North of 60.

Mr. Speaker, I had the pleasure of enjoying this film on its opening showing on Friday night, and I will recommend it to everybody. It is truly wonderful. Please, will all MLAs join me in giving the traditional warm welcome to these fine men?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two individuals who are instrumental in helping to bring to the province of Alberta the greatest show on earth. My first introduction is Steve Allan, who is the vice-president of RSM Richter Inc., which is one of the largest independent accounting, business advisory, and consulting firms in Canada. In his spare time he has spent 30 years volunteering and is currently serving as the chairman of the board and president of the Calgary Exhibition and Stampede. As well, we have with us today Vern Kimball, who is the chief operating officer for the Stampede. Vern has spent over 18 years with the Calgary Stampede and has been instrumental in helping the board carry out its vision for redevelopment. They're here today to thank the province for its support of the Stampede. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was pleasantly surprised today as I walked up the steps of the Legislature and met a number of seniors from the Golden Age Centre in the village of Breton. They were very complimentary on your visitor services, saying how well they were treated and looked after, even though their visit was set up on fairly short notice. They're in the public gallery today. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the hon. members of this Assembly Mr. Harold Wilson, the executive director of the Economic Development Alliance of Southeast Alberta. Harold brings a wealth of knowledge on regional economic development, having been a director for many years for all of northwest Ontario. Southern Alberta is fortunate to have an individual like Harold, who is an exciting, vibrant, energetic man. I'd ask him to rise – he's in the members' gallery – and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a small class that is joining us from one of the high schools in my constituency of Edmonton-Centre, and that's St. Joseph high school. There are nine members of the class that are here today, and they're accompanied by their instructors, Ms Dawson and Ms Costigan. I would ask them all to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two wonderful people. They are Dr. Raj Shorey, PhD, literature, and Mrs. Chander Shorey, MA, international law, my family friends. They are here this afternoon to tour the Legislature. They are seated in the public gallery. I request them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a great pleasure for me to rise to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 15 visitors from Northern Lakes College, High Prairie campus. They're actually brought here by Chris Neidig, who is the instructor. I'd ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and to the members of this Assembly a man who needs no introduction, the president of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. President of AUPE, Dan MacLennan, please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Facilities Review Committee

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again this government drops the ball on accountability. For years people have been raising serious concerns about long-term care facilities, but this government turned its back, ignoring the plight of some of our most vulnerable citizens. Yesterday the Auditor General added yet another voice to the chorus of people calling for change with a series of shocking revelations. My questions are to the Premier. Given the bland utterances from this government's Health Facilities Review Committee, how did that committee miss the boat so badly on the quality of care problems in long-term care facilities?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the Health Facilities Review Committee does a marvellous job. They drop in unannounced to many long-term care centres and report to the appropriate minister.

Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General's review of 25 long-term care centres found that one-third of those care centres are inadequate or there are some problems associated with them. Having said that, we are taking action. Both the Minister of Health and Wellness and the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports are working on this particular situation and are paying a great deal of attention to the recommendations of the Auditor General. In that regard, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that the government spends over $500,000 a year on the Health Facilities Review Committee, yet it only completed two investigations into complaints last year, will the Premier move to disband this committee and create a long-term care ombudsman's office, staffed with qualified professionals? [some applause]

Mr. Klein: Well, I hear a lot of thumping over there. I don't know what for.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness – and the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition was there yesterday to hear the answer to a question relative to inspections and complaints received – indicated that there were something like 400 complaints investigated. She mentioned also that there are some 5 million hours of long-term care services offered to about 18,000 residents. We have said quite openly that if there are problems – and obviously there are – identified by the Auditor General, we will address those problems. We will look at the recommendations of the Auditor General and give them very serious consideration.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Again to the Premier: will the Premier call an end to the practice of government MLAs serving on and chairing the Health Facilities Review Committee so that true accountability can be re-established instead of Tories just talking to Tories?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, Tories are not talking to Tories. I don't know who the patients and the residents of long-term care centres are. They could be Liberals. They could be members of the NDs. They could be Conservatives. They could be members of the Alliance Party. I don't know who they are. So these are not Tories talking to Tories. These are Tories talking – well, some Tories. I don't know all the members of the Health Facilities Review Committee. I know that there are some Conservatives. But they're talking to people of all political stripes. They're talking to people with concerns about long-term care.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

User Fees in Long-Term Care Facilities

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It took the release of a report by the Auditor General to make this government finally acknowledge what the Official Opposition, advocacy groups, staff, families, and residents have been saying for years. The report says that over 50 per cent of basic administrative standards were not met. For example, residents were charged fees for bed alarms, for delivering specimens to the lab, and for the very restraint systems that restrict their movements. My questions are to the Premier. Why is the government allowing these facilities to charge user fees for what most people believe is already covered?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, we are reviewing the recommendations of the Auditor General. Relative to action that has already been taken and relative to action that might be taken, I defer to the hon. minister.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Premier mentioned, we are reviewing the recommendations of the Auditor General. This hon. member that asked this question regarding user fees is very aware that people, as they go into a facility and access a facility – it depends on the facility, but they know that there are issues and there are areas of care that they do pay a fee for. That can include, you know, having your hair done. That can include laundry facilities. It depends on the facility.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: why does the government believe it is appropriate to charge patients for restraints?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know the details relative to the operations of long-term care centres generally in this province. But I can repeat what the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness said yesterday, with the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition in attendance. She said, and I quote, that in the future she will revoke government funding to facilities that are not performing as required.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: will the government put an immediate stop to user fees being charged for medical services and safety equipment in long-term care facilities? Stop it now.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I have in front of me the report of the Auditor General. I don't know what it says relative to user fees.

An Hon. Member: You haven't read it?

Mr. Klein: No, I haven't read it. In response to some of the yipping and yapping from across the way, I have not read the report, but I will. I will read the report, and it's a very thick report, well, comparatively thick. I'm sure that they haven't read it either, verbatim, word for word. Tell me, what's on page 57? They give us a bunch of malarkey about having read the report. They haven't read the report any more than I've read the report. At least I'm honest enough to admit it.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

1:50 Seniors' Benefits Program

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Because I have a sincere desire for answers to my questions, I'd like to direct them to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. The Auditor General exposed the Alberta seniors' benefits program. The annual cost of the program is $178 million. The objective is to provide support to seniors in need, but there are no criteria in place to determine whether the objective is being met. The department has not defined need and has no process to measure whether the program is sufficient to meet the needs of the seniors. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: how was such a substantial amount of money put into a program when there were no evaluation criteria that existed at the time?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is an evaluation criterion, and it can be improved upon. What I learned as I was doing the business plan is that the criterion is based on threshold levels. It's based on the income of the senior. I can tell you this: approximately half of our seniors do receive income support through this program, and it is working very well. Can it be improved upon? Yes, it can be. Can we do as the Auditor said? Can we define needs in a much more concrete way? Yes, we can, and we will be.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you for that answer without the theatrics. I appreciate that.

It appears that the Department of Seniors and Community Supports only adjusted the Alberta seniors' benefits program based on changes to provincial and federal dollars. Why were the needs of seniors not considered as a deciding factor, as opposed to just dollars?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The needs of seniors were considered, and yes, we do receive funding. We have put in place the threshold levels. We have put in place the amount of money that seniors would receive based on their own income level, and that, of course, is through the federal benefit program. Whether it's the old age security income, whether it's the GIS, whether it's rebates on the GST, that comes into context, and also when we talk about needs, what's in place for people with shelter. With special-needs assistance, for example, we also give seniors a $5,000 program in that area. So we do consider the seniors' needs, we do consider the income threshold, and we do consider the amount of money that the seniors themselves have through the federal benefit program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Will the minister consider consulting with advocacy groups, families, staff, and professional associations in an effort to develop evaluation criteria?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will enhance what we already do in that area. We already meet with advocacy groups such as the Alberta Senior Citizens Housing Association, the Long Term Care Association, other seniors that we've had introduced here in the Assembly with Seniors United Now, with the Kerby Centre, seniors in Edmonton. We consult on an ongoing basis, and we will continue to do that type of consultation, as I indicated, as we define needs in another way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Long-term Care Facility Standards

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Auditor General confirmed what families, advocates, and the NDP opposition have been saying for years: long-term care under this government is in crisis and a disgrace in the richest province in Canada. It's long past time that this government accepted responsibility for its neglect of seniors. My question is to the Premier. Will the Premier stand in his place today and apologize to residents and their families for the government's neglect of seniors in government care?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the question as it was framed is a ridiculous question, to say the least. We're talking about one-third of 25 long-term care centres that were examined by the Auditor General. Now, I don't know how many long-term care centres there are in the province.

Mrs. McClellan: A hundred and ninety-seven.

Mr. Klein: There are 197 in the province.

Mr. Speaker, I have indicated in the past that if problems have been identified, they will be addressed. The minister has committed to addressing those problems. The Minister of Health and Wellness has committed to addressing those problems in a very positive way because we are concerned about our seniors, and we want to make sure that they live their lives with respect and dignity.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Why is the Premier trying to duck personal responsibility for the crisis in long-term care, a crisis that has grown unchecked under his watch, and why is he now dragging his feet on implementing the necessary reforms?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know where he gets the notion that we're dragging our feet. Both the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports and the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness indicated in a news scrum yesterday that they were going to take immediate action to address the recommendations of the Auditor General. Immediate action.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that yesterday the minister said that the implementation plan wouldn't be available till the fall, why is the government delaying implementation when this will leave thousands of vulnerable seniors with woefully inadequate care months longer than is necessary? People are suffering, Mr. Premier.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General himself said that it's going to take some time to implement some of the recommendations. You simply don't snap your fingers and things happen overnight.

Relative to steps that are already being taken, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've said this in the Assembly as well before, that the Minister of Health and Wellness and my ministry are working together in the development of standards for long-term care, and that's to enhance and to clarify standards that are already in place.

You know, hon. member, when I became minister and we were doing the business plan, that was the number one issue for the business plan, and that was about the standards that are in place. Do you know why? Mr. Speaker, do you know why? It's because we know that long-term care has changed. It's long-term care into the community with designated assisted living, assisted living, wellness, and we know that the issue of standards is extremely important. We gave to the Long Term Care Association and the Alberta Senior Citizens Housing Association over $200,000 last year to assist with this very issue of the development of standards, and the regional health authorities as well are working on it. As our Premier indicated, this takes time. It needs to be thoughtful, and we are working hard, and it will be in place soon.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

National Child Care Initiative

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the Minister of Children's Services has reached a verbal agreement with the federal minister, Ken Dryden, on Alberta's participation in a national child care program. My first question is to the Minister of Children's Services. Can you confirm this and indicate progress to date?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will indicate that back in March I reached a verbal agreement with Mr. Dryden, and at that time he agreed to Alberta's position. In fact, we have written Mr. Dryden three times asking him for confirmation in writing of our verbal agreement. I've got staff going to Ottawa this week – I believe it's on Thursday and Friday – and we're encouraging the feds to put their pen on the agreement. Alberta is ready to sign on an agreement that we had.

Mrs. Ady: My second question is to the same minister. Does the minister see any stumbling blocks to this deal being made?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, it's important for us. We had a verbal agreement with Mr. Dryden in March, and we have written him on three separate occasions to get a written agreement. Our position in Alberta has been very consistent and clear right from the beginning. We want an agreement that gives our parents in this province the flexibility to choose from a number of child care options. In Alberta, still, we need to be able to spend the money on a wide range of programs and services. It's a parental choice in our province. We want a share of the federal money on the per capita. We want flexibility for the parents in our province. It's important for our parents to be able to have a choice in this province for their own children.

Mrs. Ady: My final supplemental is to the same minister. Given the shaky state of the federal government and the lack of national agreement on child care, what does the minister hope to achieve with consultation on child care being done by her ministry at this time?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think what's important is listening to what Alberta parents want. Given the state of what's happening with the federal government, we still believe that it's important to listen to what parents want in this province. We feel that consultation is a worthwhile investment, to hear what parents in this province want for their children in Alberta. We will continue doing what's right for the people in this province whether the federal Liberals are in government or not.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Edmonton Remand Centre Assault Incident

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In April 2003 a young man housed in the Edmonton Remand Centre was forced to double-bunk with a violent gang member. Soon after, this young man was verbally and physically abused, threatened, and finally one night was pulled out of his bunk, had a sharpened pencil held to his throat, and was brutally and viciously raped not once but three times. All this happened while this man was supposed to be under the protection of this government. My question is to the Solicitor General. Can the Solicitor General tell us if the safety of this man was the government's responsibility?

The Speaker: The hon. minister, recognizing estimates for this afternoon.

Mr. Cenaiko: That's correct. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The hon. member is correct that the first incident did happen in 2003. The safety of inmates is a top priority for this government and for the corrections officials that work in our corrections facilities throughout the province. It's our policy to segregate known sexual predators. The second incident happened as a result of human error, and disciplinary action was taken at that time.

Now, this type of situation is rare. In the last 10 years there have been three other such incidents across the province, and in that same period more than a quarter of a million people, 250,000 inmates, have gone through our corrections system.

Dr. B. Miller: Given the severe emotional and physical trauma inflicted on this man, and in fact he has not been able to have full-time work, can the minister explain to him how a one-time payment of $11,000 – that's it: $11,000 – can pay for all of the long-term counselling he needs and all of the medication? The money was used up long ago.

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, the individual did apply to the victims of crime fund and did receive a cheque for $11,000, as the member does state. That money was to be used for his assistance regarding psychological counselling if that's what he, indeed, needed. He accepted the conditions of accepting the cheque from the victims of crime fund and, as well, accepted the responsibility of cashing it.

Dr. B. Miller: Given that this government has never offered an apology, will this minister commit here and now to meeting with this young man and explaining to him why he was not protected and why this government has failed him?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't have a problem meeting with the young man. We can discuss, in fact, why he was sent to prison as well and look at those issues regarding his sentence and why he went there, what he was charged with. We can talk about it. I don't have a problem meeting with him. This is one of the issues that we deal with. Double-bunking is a normal course throughout North America and throughout Europe as well. Facilities provide double-bunking, and it's a safe measure for inmates and/or those in remand to provide them with a safe environment to live in while they're waiting for court.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Agricultural Research Initiatives

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past Friday I attended the official opening of an integrated manure utilization system out in Vegreville. This pilot plant will transform manure into energy, biobased fertilizers, and reusable water. It is a prime example of Alberta innovation to develop sustainable solutions for our industry. My first question is for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. What does this project mean for Alberta's agriculture industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member for the question. This is a new and exciting technology that we see, taking a vision and turning it into reality. Highland Feeders, one of the partners, along with the Alberta Research Council are to be commended for seeing this project through, starting with an idea some four or five years ago and, certainly, turning the focus of perhaps BSE and our value-added industry into something that is a vision for the future.

We have not only economic benefits that we can see out of this but also environmental benefits as well. If you envision a feedlot, there are a number of animals on a feedlot. They create a certain amount of waste, which is becoming somewhat of a concern in some areas. This solves that issue, Mr. Speaker, and we look forward to some future with it.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: what is your department doing to support other agricultural research initiatives?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, research and development is something that's key to not only our six-point recovery and restructuring strategy with BSE. We've talked a lot about becoming the centre of excellence for research in agriculture and certainly in BSE research. We've also talked about the SRM, the $7 million that we're putting towards the risk materials that we're going to need to find a home for. Agriculture is certainly working with other entities in the province to try to figure out what we can do with those products. Certainly, our key focus at this point in time is on new products and environmentally friendly products.

Mr. Johnson: My final question is to the Minister of Innovation and Science. Given your department's mandate, what are you doing to support agricultural research?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, last evening we gave a lengthy explanation of the activities of the Department of Innovation and Science. If I could capture it in one sentence, it would be that we provide strategic advice and impetus to encourage innovation in priority areas. In particular, the example that the member raised today, the integrated manure utilization system, shows the work that we are doing in alternative energy research: how we can sell that power onto the grid in our deregulated marketplace, how we can effectively manage water, and provide value to the agriculture industry. All of these initiatives come out of innovation, which is something that we support.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Nina Louise Courtepatte

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The horrific story of Nina Louise Courtepatte is an example of the dangers when Alberta Children's Services fails at its job. Despite numerous calls by child intervention services regarding claims of abuse and even a full investigation into the family, Nina stayed in an unsupportive home and barely attended school, and the calls kept coming. To the Minister of Children's Services: why did the system let this girl fall through the cracks when there were so many reports of problems to Children's Services?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear, first of all, that this matter is before the courts, and it's in respect to a criminal investigation. I will say, though, that the death of Nina was very, very tragic, and my heart goes out to her family.

I can say, Mr. Speaker, that the social workers in this province do an unbelievable job in very, very difficult situations. The families that we're dealing with on a daily basis come to us with horrific problems, and the number one priority for the social workers in this province is always the best interest of the child.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the history of this case until it was closed involved many investigations and calls to Children's Services alleging horrific levels of abuse and neglect, what were the criteria for closing this case last year?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, we're talking about an individual case that's before the courts, and I certainly don't want to jeopardize that particular investigation.

I can tell the hon. member that when our social workers are dealing with families, they always try to make a decision in the best interest of the child. Believe it or not, most children want to be with their parents no matter how difficult the situation is at the home. What we do is continually investigate what we're hearing about. We will try and make a decision. We'll provide supports for the family, whether it's alcohol or drug counselling, whether it's any sort of family support we can. When that isn't working, we will apprehend the child, put them in foster care, and if need be, go right into a permanent guardianship.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. To the same minister: will the minister give Albertans peace of mind and perhaps some confidence in the child welfare system by having a fatality inquiry review into Nina's death to find out where and why things went wrong?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, it's a criminal investigation.

I can tell the hon. member, though, the commitment from this minister: any time a child dies in our care or is injured in our care, we do an internal review. We will be doing an internal review on this case and others. One of the things that bothers me as Minister of Children's Services is the amount of screenings that we have to do, the amount of apprehensions. I think it's important to find out what is in the best interest of a child. The fatality inquiry is something that is decided by the Justice minister, and he may want to supplement the answer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Airport Rental Costs

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the end of the 1980s Canada's airports were rundown relics that were costing the federal government millions of dollars to operate and had a book value of one and a half billion dollars. These airports have since been turned over to community-run authorities such as Edmonton and Calgary on a lease basis. Rents paid to date have exceeded over $2 billion. These airports have been transformed into world-class facilities at no cost to the federal government, yet the rents have escalated drastically over the past 10 years and were forecast to go even higher. A recent announcement by the Minister of Transport suggests that he'll be reducing the rents to the authorities like Edmonton and Calgary. My question is for the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. What effect will these rent reductions have on the viability of airports in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd say at the outset that this is one of the most horrific spins I've ever seen put on a story from Ottawa. They're putting it across as a rent reduction when, in actual fact, they're just not increasing the rent. The rent was destined to go up at the Edmonton airport from $4.3 million to $22 million. In Calgary it was from $25 million to $50 million. Then they had the audacity to come out and say that they were actually reducing rent when they were just leaving it at the same level. First of all, it's great they're leaving it at the same level, but on the other hand the spin that was put on this story was absolutely horrific.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Mr. Minister, what are you doing to get airport rents reduced or even eliminated, as they should be?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member makes an excellent point. In his preamble to his first question he stated that the $1.5 billion book value was what the airports were actually worth when they were transferred. They have paid to this date $2 billion in rent. So I think there's a very good case to be made that these airports should be turned over to the airport authorities free of charge. The federal government has gone from it costing them $225 million per year to making close to $200 million per year, a swing of $400 million. They're using our airports as a cash cow.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the minister: what is his department doing to support the aviation sector in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Although I may have been strong in my statements that I made in my first two answers, those were actually the words that I used in the Standing Committee on Aviation, which I presented to approximately a month ago. I feel very strongly about this. Those $25 million and $4.3 million are fees that are going to be transferred to you and I as the people who use the airports. I think that they should do the right thing. They should turn them fully over to the airport authorities in exactly the same way as this government did to the other 72 airport authorities without collecting a cent of rent. I think the time is here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Environmental Protection

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Energy and Utilities Board will soon rule on Compton Petroleum's application to drill six critical sour gas wells near southeast Calgary based on a reduced emergency planning zone of four kilometres. Many Calgarians are understandably upset about this development. Compton has assured everyone, however, that it can ignite the well within 15 minutes of any blowout to burn off deadly hydrogen sulphide, but even the most sophisticated system can fail, as it did this year in Pincher Creek. To the Minister of Energy: with the reduced emergency planning zone can the minister be certain that 250,000 Calgarians would be protected from a sour gas release in the event of a blowout?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to point out that the Energy and Utilities Board's first priority is the public safety of Albertans. No applications go forward before them without having been vetted. That's why there are hearings. That's why the issue of whether they can safely manage a substance like sour gas is paramount to the decision. That's before the Energy and Utilities Board at this stage. We have full confidence in them. They have set some of the most stringent regulations, really, in the world for managing sour gas.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Energy minister: when will the government begin to do cumulative impact assessments before approvals to enable more appropriate decisions in the public interest?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, the body of information before the Energy and Utilities Board is quite cumulative in the sense that we've had over 50 years of safely managing sour gas in this province. There is a tremendous amount of literature, both science and research, that has been compiled on managing sour gas, and it's upon those standards that the regulations have been based so that we can ensure that we can manage it safely going forward.

One of their recommendations also out of a study that they did earlier in the year 2000 came up with 87 recommendations, and at the forefront of that was an area on health effects and sour gas research. It still continues to be one of the main focuses of the Energy and Utilities Board.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the agriculture minister: in relation to coal-bed methane will the minister agree to meet with landowners, farmers, and concerned citizens about the agricultural impacts of coal-bed methane, the water impacts, the land evaluation issues associated with the planned 50,000 new coal-bed methane wells in south-central Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development may choose to, but the tradition basically is one question, two supplementals on the same subject. This is totally unrelated.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of questions in there that I suppose I could answer, but I guess the general one is whether I would be prepared to meet with industry groups, farm groups, producer groups to discuss integrated land management or issues around the environment. I do that every week and would be more than pleased to do that with any of those interested groups at any time that we can mutually arrange a schedule.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar. [some applause]

Long-term Care Facility Standards (continued)

Mr. Martin: Don't make me stand too long. That's the only time I've ever had that reaction, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General's findings show that basic standards for long-term care are badly out of date. Less than 1 out of 3 facilities even meets the outdated standards, and the so-called inspections to monitor compliance are frankly a joke. There are 14,000 beds across the province, and it's estimated that 4,000 people are not even having their basic needs met, all this in a province that has posted multibillion dollar surpluses year after year. My question is to the Premier. Given that the Department of Health and Wellness has known about the Auditor General's devastating findings for months, what is the government's lame excuse for not having already taken decisive action to fix the crisis in long-term care?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there is no such thing as a lame excuse. The only lame excuse is sitting over there. Well, standing now.

Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, both the Minister of Health and Wellness and the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports are taking action and have been taking action. It's always been the intention of this government to ensure that those who reside in long-term care centres receive the respect and dignity that they deserve, and we plan to make sure that that continues to happen.

Mr. Martin: Well, we've had lame excuses, and now we've had lame answers, Mr. Speaker.

Given that seniors' advocates and seniors' families have for years told this government that long-term care was in turmoil, why did the government fail to provide the necessary resources in last month's provincial budget to enhance staffing standards and keep the frail and the elderly and the chronically ill safe and well cared for?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know exactly what the budget was before, but I know that 15 million additional dollars were added to that budget in targeted areas to increase long-term care staff numbers. That's $15 million for that project alone.

Mr. Speaker, relative to the overall program I will have the hon. minister respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that the hon. member has mentioned years and years of what has happened in long-term care, but I can tell you this: we're moving forward from today. You know, we've been moving forward with the business plan, with the allocation, as the Premier mentioned, of $15 million in the budget through Treasury and also $2 million into the seniors' budget for the implementation of standards. As I mentioned before, we've met with the organizations that are involved in long-term care, and I mean involved at the industry level. There are industry standards in place, the regional health authorities have standards, and the Minister of Health and Wellness and myself are working together on those standards.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's frankly outrageous that they're saying that they're moving forward from today when almost everybody in Alberta knew the problems.

My question again to the minister then. They're saying that they're going to talk and deal with it in September. Why is the government taking its own sweet time coming up with an action plan to fix long-term care? I mentioned that there are probably 4,000 people . . .

The Speaker: Okay. The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned earlier as well, it does take time. [interjections]

The Speaker: I wish everybody would talk through the chair. It'd be much more civil.

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, it does take time to put standards in place. The reason why this is so important is because in the community we have a continuum of care that has developed over the past five years for designated assisted living, and that's in the whole supportive living component of long-term care. That's why standards are critical, that they will also arch to cover those as well.

When I say "from today," I mean with the Auditor General's report. I also indicated to you, hon. member, that it's been in the business plan since January.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Federal Financial Support

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are for the Minister of international and intergovernmental affairs. It seems that Christmas has come early for some provinces. Over the weekend the federal and Ontario governments concluded a hastily crafted deal to transfer $5.7 billion to Ontario over the next five years in an attempt to address what Ontario calls the growing gap between what they contribute to Canada and what they receive in services. Given that Albertans contribute more to Canada on a per capita basis than residents of Ontario, could the minister say whether Alberta is being treated fairly by this Kris Kringle federal Liberal government, or should we just expect another lump of coal in our stockings?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year Albertans contributed more than $9.3 billion more to Ottawa than what they got back, which is about $2,900 per Albertan, far more than any other province in Canada.

With respect to closing the gap and Ontario pursuing that with the Prime Minister, who happens to be in a very giving mood at this particular time, we can't give judgment on the agreement until we have a good look at it and assess it, but we will pursue with Ontario those areas where they seem to be gaining on some of the long-standing issues.

We have some success, Mr. Speaker. We recently did sign a labour development agreement with Ottawa, and we're going to get back about $110 million of our money.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: given that Albertans would rather just keep their own money, can Alberta use this opportunity to negotiate a federal tax reduction instead of more provincial handouts?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, that's not within provincial jurisdiction. However, our position is that taxation in this country should be fair, it should be consistent, and it should be equitable and represent all Canadians no matter what part of Canada they live in.

Rev. Abbott: My final supplemental, Mr. Speaker: how can Albertans know if we are being treated fairly when every week the federal government announces a new bilateral agreement to spend on programs in a vote-rich region when those that pay the freight are not even at the table?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we are at the table at every opportunity, and when we're at the table, we make sure that the values and the interests of Albertans are represented.

With respect to the agreements that we were talking about this afternoon – one, for instance, the child care agreement – our Minister of Children's Services will not sign an agreement that will put provincial jurisdiction at risk or question the value and the interests of Alberta parents making choice into how to raise their children. We're not going to give that up for a few pennies that Ottawa may offer us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Bison Grazing on Agricultural Public Land

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every year this government pays out millions of dollars in compensation to the holders of leases on Crown lands, even though the government is entrusted to manage all the public lands on behalf of all Albertans. Recently they announced that they will allow bison ranchers to lease Crown land for grazing, meaning more of the public's money will be dished out to the holders of these leases. My question to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: are the surface rights to oil and gas exploration and other developments that apply to farmers who lease public lands also going to apply to bison ranchers who lease Crown lands?

An Hon. Member: I bet you saw that one coming.

Mr. Coutts: I think it was in the paper yesterday.

Well, Mr. Speaker, legislation to allow bison ranching on agricultural public land – and it's agricultural public land we're talking about, and that's different than what the question was – was passed in this House in December of 2003. Since then, we've had two years of consultation, and in addition to that we've had scientific input and a multistakeholder group put together to show that bison grazing on the land is no different than cows grazing on the land as well. The same kinds of fees that apply to grass under an agricultural disposition apply to a bison disposition.

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: why was the public consultation limited to industry with all other interested parties excluded to determine the extended grazing leases to the bison ranches on Crown land? Is it in the public's best interest? Remember that this is public land and not the government's land.

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, what we've done in the consultation is made sure that bison on agricultural land will be treated the same way as agricultural products such as cows, et cetera. When we have an opportunity where there might be an ongoing risk, say, from cattle and bison on any pasture mixed in with people, mixed in with elk or something like that, we have agricultural and public land inspectors that go out there to make sure that everything works well. In addition to that, we also have put into place permeable fencing to make sure that the wildlife can get back and forth. So there's nothing wrong with bison being on public land.

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Speaker, given that millions of dollars are given out to the holders of leases on Crown land every year, can this minister explain why this money is not held in public trust and reinvested in Alberta?

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, we would have to make sure that the hon. member understands that exactly the same dispositions that handle agricultural dispositions are also handled on leases that would hold bison. It was a two-year consultation. I'm really not quite sure where he's coming from, but exactly the same rules apply to both species on the same landscape. We make sure that wildlife have the protection of going back and forth. For us it makes a good fit to have the bison back on the land that they occupied 50,000 years ago.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Forest Fires

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the last several years Alberta has been severely impacted by forest fires. In the forested regions of the province people are concerned, first, for the safety of their communities and, secondly, for the economic loss of harvestable timber. My first question is for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Can the minister inform us what the outlook is for the coming forest fire season?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Despite wet conditions that were there last year, the Department of Sustainable Resource Development fought 1,600 fires that destroyed over 230,000 hectares of forest. This year we've had good precipitation over the winter and through this early spring, and we're thankful that this year it's been a slow start to the season. But conditions can change very quickly in this province, and sometimes in five days we can go from a low risk to a high hazard in the forest. We're constantly monitoring the fire hazard conditions in our 122 lookout towers throughout the province, and we do that on a daily basis when we're at high-risk season.

Through fire science and continual improvement to detection monitoring, so far this year, Mr. Speaker, we have 304 fires that have only consumed 1,300 hectares. The only thing we can do is pray for rain and wet conditions this year to help us.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. To the same minister. Can he inform this House as to how prepared Alberta is for the coming wildfire season, especially if this season turns out to be as severe as those we've seen in recent years?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, it's a good question. Not knowing whether or not we're going to have a severe or warm summer, our resources are strategically positioned so that they can be moved to wherever the hazard is the highest. Our Hinton Training Centre provides state-of-the-art programs for training our firefighters. In addition, we have a fire protection centre with minute-to-minute weather reporting. What it does is track weather systems with the potential of lightning strikes as they come across the Rockies so we have an idea of where it's going to strike. In addition, Albertans can call our fire line at 310-FIRE 24 hours a day to report forest fires. As well, communities also work with our forestry industry and our department to do forest protection in their communities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Final question to the same minister: what are we doing to ensure that the economic loss from forest fires is kept to a minimum?

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have a very good system in place to make sure that all wood from forest fires that is salvageable can be salvaged and can be used efficiently. We also work with companies to make sure that we're looking at new technology and new ways within their harvesting plans to make sure that the wood is harvested and kept. In addition, we also contribute to ongoing research to find new ways to use fire-killed timber in value-added products that may come from that and find new markets for that.

All in all, in many forests in Alberta because of the fire, even though they can naturally regenerate themselves, we find that we're looking at other approaches through the burnt areas to maybe look at calling them disaster areas so that we can reforest them in the future and make them sustainable for future generations.

The Clerk: Members' Statements.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I'll call upon the first of six hon. members to participate. Might we, however, revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Ireen Slater. Ireen is currently the vice-president of the Seniors United Now central chapter. Ireen is the recipient of many awards for her tireless work in the community, including the United Nations International Women's Day award for exemplary service. I would ask that she rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has one as well, but he's not as fast on his feet as me.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly members of the Elder Advocates of Alberta Society. This organization is comprised of advocates on behalf of the frail, dependent, and elderly in our society. The Elder Advocates of Alberta Society is here today to show their concern for seniors in long-term care facilities. I would ask that each member rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly as I call out their names: Irene Stein, Anne Pavelich, Eva Makowichuk, Elaine Fleming, Louis Adria, and Ruth Maria Adria. Please give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I introduced my people earlier, they weren't in the building; however, they are now. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 12 members who are sitting in the members' gallery. They are students from Northern Lakes College, the High Prairie campus, and they're seated over there, as you can see. They're here with their bus driver, Jim Meldrum, as well as Chris Neidig, their teacher. I'd ask that they all rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

A Tribute to Fathers

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps one of the oldest and most enduring symbols of ancient Chinese philosophy is the yin and the yang, which represents the Chinese understanding of how things work. According to the Yellow Emperor, the yin-yang underlies everything in creation, and it brings about the development of parenthood. According to this philosophy, children are most complete when raised by the love of both mother and father. Many centuries later Sigmund Freud said: "I cannot think of any need in childhood as strong as the need for a father's protection."

Now, this past weekend we had the opportunity to pay tribute to mothers, and since we most likely will not be sitting during Father's Day, I have risen today to say happy Father's Day to the fathers in the province.

In Alberta we place the utmost importance on the family as a pillar of our society, and I believe we can attribute much of our collective success on this. I, myself, have been twice blessed, first with an actively involved father and then blessed again with a husband actively involved in the raising of our children. Both mother and father play a critical role in the proper development of a child as each can offer different strengths and a different approach to the world. By putting together the teachings of mom and the teachings of dad, we raise children who are well rounded and who are whole.

Today study after study shows that the best thing for the proper development of children is access to both parents. The love and attention of a father is just as important as that of a mother. Science tells us now what Freud told us at the beginning of the century and what ancient Chinese philosophy told us centuries ago: children grow up whole with the love of a mother, yin, and a father, yang. Happy Father's Day.

Thank you.

U of A and Northern Lakes College Partnership

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the fall of this year as Alberta's postsecondary students head back to the classroom, there will be a new program available which is significant to Alberta's aboriginal students attending Northern Lakes College, based out of Slave Lake. It's really appropriate to see guests in the members' gallery as I say this.

I am proud to acknowledge that on May 3 in Slave Lake as part of the Campus Alberta initiative, Northern Lakes College and the University of Alberta signed a memorandum of understanding. This was witnessed by our hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

The spirit of this partnership is to increase quality postsecondary education access for Alberta's aboriginal students through a two-year transition program from Northern Lakes College campuses to the University of Alberta. This transition program celebrates aboriginal values and culture while empowering students with the skills, knowledge, and attitudes necessary to succeed in a University of Alberta undergrad program. Northern Lakes College students participating in the transition program will also gain the necessary academic requirements and transfer courses for admission to the University of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, this is another example of Alberta's passion to offer innovative education solutions to all Albertans, ensuring that each and every student is given the tools necessary to accomplish their life's goals and achieve the success they deserve.

I think it is important for all hon. members to recognize the commitment government has to postsecondary education, this province, and the people who wish to benefit from the advantage that being an Albertan offers. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

U of A and Keyano College Partnership

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in support of an agreement signed today by the University of Alberta and Keyano College. I had the honour of attending the ceremony in Fort McMurray this morning along with the hon. ministers of Advanced Education, Environment, and Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development and a large group of University of Alberta and Keyano College officials. It was a great opportunity to see firsthand the enthusiasm and excitement from all those involved in the partnership.

The agreement signed today will form the basis of a long-term working relationship between the University of Alberta and Keyano College, a partnership that will be of great benefit to the people of Fort McMurray and all of northern Alberta. The agreement will help open doors for students in Fort McMurray and the surrounding area by helping aboriginals gain the skills and academic knowledge they need to qualify for university admission, and the agreement will also allow Keyano College students to continue studying towards University of Alberta degrees longer without having to leave Fort McMurray.

Skilled workers are also needed more and more in the north to take advantage of the massive investments pouring into the oil sands and other areas. It will also help students get postsecondary education right where they live, which is so important to the continued health and strength of northern communities.

The University of Alberta has shown impressive leadership in recent months in supporting education for Albertans in rural and remote areas by signing agreements with postsecondary institutions such as the Northern Lakes College in Slave Lake, NorQuest College in Edmonton, and Olds College. Keyano College has equally demonstrated a real spirit of innovation and readiness to help address the challenges facing northern Alberta, and the college deserves to be commended.

Mr. Speaker, the efforts of both Keyano College and the University of Alberta will go a long way towards ensuring that Alberta's postsecondary system remains second to none. Thank you very much.

Long-term Care in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A lot of discussion lately in the House has been focused on seniors' care and the conditions in our seniors' facilities. Last week in Mayerthorpe I talked to the director of the Mayerthorpe extended care facility. This facility was just part of an unannounced inspection by the Health Facilities Review Committee, chaired by the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. The director explained to me that the facility rated very high and that little concern was raised by the inspectors. I know many staff members that work in the various facilities in my constituency. They love their work, they're dedicated, they're caring, and the atmosphere in which they work shows all of that.

A few weeks previous to this I was in another health care facility in Mayerthorpe to present to Mrs. Dubois a centennial medal to recognize her 101st birthday. This party was attended by staff and residents as well as many family members. Again, Mr. Speaker, I noticed a very well-maintained facility staffed, once again, by caring, loving, and hard-working individuals.

I know we can always improve the care and the quality of seniors' facilities in our great province, and I, for one, do not accept the status quo in anything. I feel that it is very important to let the citizens of Alberta know that we do have some of the finest seniors' facilities that I have ever seen.

Mr. Speaker, I have complete confidence in our facilities in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. The residents are safe and well cared for. I'll continue to strive for dollars that may be required to make improvements and expansions to the facilities in my constituency.

I want to thank the staff and the residents for always welcoming me and treating me so well during my visits. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Nursing Week

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nurses across the province are celebrating National Nursing Week from May 9 to 15. This year's theme is Nursing: Patients First, Safety Always. I would like to take this opportunity to honour the contribution nurses make to the Alberta health system.

More than 27,000 registered nurses are currently employed in Alberta, providing quality care to patients across our province. Every minute of every day these nurses help those who cannot help themselves as well as promoting the health and wellness of those who can.

However, workloads for nurses are steadily increasing due to the new challenges they face as the population ages. Workplace injury is comparatively high in nursing professions, yet research shows that with more nurses per patient there are lower rates of mortality, decreased instances of hospital readmission, and fewer complications reported. Despite the new challenges faced by these health professionals today, every nurse in this province upholds his or her commitment to patients and ensures that each and every patient receives the quality care he or she needs.

This commitment to putting patients ahead of all else requires a health system that focuses not just on costs of the care provided but on the quality of care provided. Nurses across this province are intent on fostering a sustainable health system which invests more energy to helping people stay well. This can be achieved if the government will begin working together with the health professionals to ensure that their needs are met.

The purpose of National Nursing Week is to increase awareness of the importance nursing holds to the well-being of all Canadians. Mr. Speaker, I know that I'm not alone in stating that nursing is one of our province's most valuable professions. We should all be proud of the 27,000 registered nurses along with the many licensed practical nurses at their side who provide the best possible care to their patients. I ask all members of this Legislature to celebrate National Nursing Week with me.

Thank you.

Boreal Forest

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Canada's boreal forest covers nearly 11 per cent of our planet's total surface and is the largest terrestrial ecosystem on Earth. Every day it filters tens of millions of litres of water, rebuilds soils, stores carbon, and provides food and shelter. Our boreal forest is one of the largest tracts of wilderness in the world.

However, there are major disruptions in this ecosystem here in the province of Alberta. Eighty nine per cent of Alberta's boreal forest is unprotected from exploitation. A 2003 study of the Alberta-Pacific forestry management area showed that old-growth forest of spruce and pine will disappear within 20 years in this province. Old-growth aspen will disappear within 65 years. Habitat for woodland caribou, a threatened species, will shrink from 43 per cent of its area to a mere 6 per cent over these coming decades.

This year the Sierra Club found that Alberta was rated as poor on 10 indicators of good forestry management practices including habitat protection and old-growth forest preservation. Renowned water scientist David Schindler describes Alberta's northern wilderness as starting to, quote, look like Dresden after the bombing of the Second World War, unquote. When one looks at the time-lapse aerial photographs of the Swan Hills region or looks at satellite imagery of areas around Grande Cache or Hinton, one can see that Schindler is not exaggerating. The disruptions are enormous. This rate of destruction cannot continue. It is simply unsustainable.

I implore this government to look at the potential of ecotourism in an effort to preserve the boreal forest. No tourist wants their wilderness experience interrupted by clear-cuts and seismic lines. No one wants to navigate a patchwork of fragmented forests. Science, economics, and common sense are on the side of immediate action. Future generations deserve nothing less.

Thank you.

Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, if I could take you back to May 10, 1988, on this day Bill 1, the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities Act, passed through Committee of the Whole. The bill would eventually create a council that would work on behalf of Alberta's disabled, and today the council remains active in the province. It is currently served by 15 volunteer board members who represent various regions of the province and pursue the goal of full citizenship for all Albertans regardless of their age or type of disability.

Emergency Debate

Long-term Care Facility Standards

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on a Standing Order 30 application.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I would move that the ordinary business of the Assembly be adjourned in order to hold an emergency debate on a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the ongoing suffering of residents of long-term care facilities in Alberta as identified by the May 2005 report of the Auditor General.

If I may speak to the urgency on that, Mr. Speaker, the Assembly only received the Auditor General's report yesterday, but we have heard from the government that it may be some months, in fact in the fall, before they are finally able to present an action plan to address the Auditor General's concerns. The most compelling reason for immediately debating long-term care is the indisputable fact that Albertans are suffering and are even in life-endangering situations. The report found that only seven of 25 facilities visited fully met even the basic standards; that is, about 30 per cent of facilities. With 14,000 beds across the province more than 4,000 residents are likely to be in facilities where their basic needs are not currently being met. For residents who are not having their basic needs met, the urgency of this debate is obvious.

Of utmost and immediate concern is the staffing shortages and the problems that flow from these shortages. Most urgent is the Auditor General's finding of improper provision of medication, something that was brought up frequently in our health care hearings. The implication, of course, is that right now, as we speak, seniors may in fact be receiving overdoses of medication or the wrong medication. The very fact that they are in long-term care facilities implies that their health is not at its best, and they are therefore more vulnerable to the ill effects of improper medical interventions.

The NDP opposition is calling on the ministers responsible to develop an action plan to address these concerns, and we are proposing that such a plan be tabled before the end of this sitting. The Assembly cannot however be content to simply delegate this task. Conditions in long-term care facilities have been Alberta's secret for too long. It's time for the Assembly to own up to its responsibilities and seriously consider options for resolving the crisis.

Mr. Speaker, there are thousands of family members wondering whether their loved ones are in fact receiving proper care. However, basic standards are not readily available to the public, authorities are not required to undertake annual inspection, and we are talking about an extremely vulnerable portion of our population, who quite often depend on others for financial and physical support. Family members deserve to know what standards are in place and should be empowered to hold facilities accountable for the care received by their loved ones.

So I think, Mr. Speaker, that it's of utmost urgency that the Assembly debate this matter and provide direction to the government to develop an action plan which will deal immediately with this crisis, before the end of this sitting. We now have proof of what has long been suggested with respect to health care. We don't believe there could be anything more urgent than the well-being of Alberta's frail, elderly, and chronically ill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nothing could be more important than the care of seniors in long-term care, than making sure that the elderly in this province, particularly those that are vulnerable, have appropriate care. Nothing could be more important than that, and no one would dispute that, I don't believe. In fact, the report of the Auditor General tabled yesterday is an important report.

The question for Standing Order 30 is whether or not it's urgent to adjourn the normal course of business for this afternoon and discuss the motion being put forward, and that is "to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the ongoing suffering of residents in long-term care facilities in Alberta as identified by the May 2005 report."

Mr. Speaker, even on the face of the notice of motion I would say that the issue of urgency is improperly framed. First of all, I will indicate that I haven't had the opportunity to read through the report in detail, but I have skimmed the report. I have looked at reviews of the report. I don't believe that the report indicates that there's ongoing suffering of residents in long-term care facilities in Alberta, nor do I think that the report says that the long-term care system is in crisis.

What the report basically says is that there are basic standards that in some cases haven't been met, that there is work to be done in developing policy, that there are processes that need to be undertaken. That's, in fact, what Auditor General's reports do. They examine processes. They determine whether policies have been complied with. It looks to see whether or not the things that were supposed to have been done have been done and whether there are processes in place to ensure that that happens.

The Auditor General has found some areas that need some improvement. In fact, as we look through the Auditor General's report, it clearly indicates that the Department of Health and Wellness, the Minister of Health and Wellness, and the Department of Seniors and Community Supports through the minister of that department have agreed with virtually all of the recommendations and agreed in principle with a couple of the other recommendations. In fact, we heard in the House today and I'm sure yesterday indications that there is work ongoing on all of the areas that have been recommended.

In fact, when the Auditor General indicates that some of the institutions in the province aren't meeting the basic guidelines, that does not equate to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood's statement that basic needs of seniors are not currently being met. That is not the same statement, Mr. Speaker. To raise the level of what we're talking about here to crisis proportions or to make statements that the basic needs of seniors are not being met is entirely inappropriate.

The Auditor General's report is an important report. The care of seniors is a very important topic. The fact is that we must make sure that both the Department of Health and Wellness and the Department of Seniors and Community Supports take a look at the recommendations in those reports, work through the MLA committee that's been established on healthy aging in continuing care in Alberta, the Implementation Advisory Committee, make sure that the long-term care committee – and the chair of the Social Care Facilities Review Committee is a member of this Legislature and, in fact, is having meetings this very afternoon on the topic.

There are ongoing matters taking place, Mr. Speaker, but the question we have to deal with today as a result of this notice of motion is: is it urgent to suspend the normal business of the House, in this case the examination of the estimates in the Department of the Solicitor General, to debate what has been characterized as "the ongoing suffering of residents in long-term care facilities . . . as identified by the May 2005 report of the Auditor General"?

Mr. Speaker, as I've said, the Auditor General's report doesn't identify the suffering as the hon. member has said. It doesn't indicate that there's a crisis in long-term care. It does indicate that there are a number of very important issues that have to be dealt with. Those issues do have to be dealt with, and the ministers responsible have indicated that they will. For example, the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports this afternoon indicated that $200,000 – I believe I heard that from her this afternoon – was provided to the Alberta Senior Citizens Housing Association and Long Term Care Association to help update the accommodation standards and accountability mechanisms, to help update the very standards that the Auditor General was talking about.

The work is in progress. It's not a new thing. It's something that's ongoing. It's work that's being done. It's work that's being done in public. It's work that every member of the public, every stakeholder, every family member who has a concern can be involved with, ought to be involved with because there's no more important work.

Is it urgent today that we adjourn the normal business of the House, not review the estimates of the Department of the Solicitor General but, instead, debate "the ongoing suffering of residents in long-term care . . . as identified by the May 2005 report"? No, Mr. Speaker. That's not an appropriate thing for us to be doing this afternoon.

We need to look at the report in detail. We need to have the ministers deal with the issues and the recommendations, as they've agreed to accept those recommendations, to implement the reviews that they've indicated they are proceeding with. The framework is already under development in which government is responsible for establishing and monitoring compliance with basic standards. Industry organizations are responsible for promoting quality improvements in excellence. The role of Seniors and Community Supports is to ensure compliance with basic standards and promote resident safety. So work is being done. The work is ongoing.

The issues that have been identified by the Auditor General are important. They're not new, but they are important. That work has to be undertaken, but it's not urgent, in the words that have been put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood in terms of there being a crisis. The Auditor General didn't say that there was a crisis. In terms of basic needs not being met, the Auditor General didn't say that basic needs are not being met. He did say that there were important systems that needed to be put in place, important processes that hadn't been reviewed on a timely basis that needed to be reviewed. That work is undertaken and ongoing.

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the opportunity to speak in support of the Standing Order 30 that's moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I would echo the comments of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood in underlining how important the health and safety of our seniors is and noting that, indeed, many of the veterans that we honoured just the other day are among those who are experiencing some risk to their health and safety. What the Auditor General talks about is, in fact, risk, and he very clearly outlines that.

Now, that may not be happening in every case, but the entire argument about risk is that it could be happening, and it may well be happening. It may not happen in every instance, but it certainly can be happening, indeed, and that's what he is pointing out to us. So there is an argument about the health and safety of the seniors on a daily basis.

Mr. Speaker, I would argue that day by day is a very long measurement of time for someone that is subjected to physical restraint that has not been prescribed for them by a physician or a chemical restraint that's being used. I would argue that a day or two days, but in this case a day, is a very long time if a special diet is not being adhered to. Time is of the essence if we are to be giving an opportunity for an airing of the issues and for some advocacy for some faster resolutions of these problems than what has been offered by the government, who are giving us, according to what we heard today, some vague reassurances of "well, in the fall" and "maybe another committee." That is not of any assistance to those who are experiencing some of the difficulties that I have outlined: health, safety, restraints, medication, diet, et cetera.

Mr. Speaker, the staff of at least one care centre in Alberta has been without a contract for years, and the staff are considering strike action over budgets, staffing, and working conditions, exactly what we're talking about. They are delaying such action on the hopes that government may provide leadership and the resources required. This care centre is not alone in being in a strike position. An emergency debate today would send a strong signal to those very staff across the province that help might be on the way. Being unable to fulfill that will send them a different signal.

Mr. Speaker, I would argue that Oral Question Period, with a 45-second exchange, is not the proper forum to discuss an issue of such breadth and severity. In particular, hearing the Premier's as well as the minister of seniors' answers to the questions that were asked today, I would argue that their answers were not sufficient to allay the concerns and to address the risks that have been outlined in the Auditor General's report.

This Legislative Assembly is expected to rise within a few days, likely next week. That doesn't give us very much time to be able to give a full airing to the concerns here and to hear the government's plans for addressing those risks. I would argue that that brings some urgency to the matter as well.

The hon. House leader had raised some issues about: well, nothing was specifically detailed that was a health or a safety risk. If I may point out, in fact, in the same report he was referring to, on page 74, it's noted that some facilities had problems meeting therapeutic and special diets: "the required consistency of some diets, and physician orders for special diets were not sufficiently documented" in some cases. For people that are requiring a special diet – diabetics come to mind very quickly, or those with swallowing problems, for example – I would argue that a day's delay is pretty urgent for them, Mr. Speaker.

In addition, on page 75 I note the section under Medication to Residents, and he does specifically outline significant safety risks. That appears on page 75 of the Auditor General's report, Mr. Speaker. He's outlining "inconsistent documentation of the effectiveness and . . . affects of medication therapies, particularly relative to pain control and chemical restraint." I would argue that chemical restraint should be rarely used, from everything that I've read, and continued use of chemical restraint, given that we're not able to resolve these, is of some urgency indeed and does in fact constitute significant safety risks to the patients that are involved. I would also argue that poor pain control or inconsistent pain control would also bring some urgency to this debate.

In addition, there is "inconsistent control over phone orders signed off by physicians" and "insufficient or untimely notification of physicians or pharmacists following medication errors." Again, I would argue that there is an urgency to this. Those are a few examples of the safety risks that have been raised specifically by the Auditor General which I argue require immediate attention by the members of this Assembly.

I note with interest that the fatality inquiry for the family of Jennie Nelson is occurring sometime this week. I believe that a discussion and some specific plans coming out of this Assembly would be of great interest to that family and perhaps resolve some of the difficulties that they have faced around their mother's demise.

So we have a number of situations that are constituting this mix today, Mr. Speaker. I would argue that lives are at stake. At the very least they are at risk of inadequate or improper medication, use of chemical or physical restraints that are not appropriate, and additionally some concerns around proper diet being administered. We have workers that are in a strike position. That gives us some urgency. We have patients going on hunger strikes in the province. Again, that gives us some impetus. One woman, in particular, who was 86 felt strongly enough that she went on a hunger strike. I would add that the rest of the families of Albertans are looking to the Assembly for immediate answers. I don't think they see a six-month wait time when these risks are proposed as being adequate.

With those arguments I will support the Standing Order 30 as proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and urge all members of the Assembly to support the Standing Order 30 should the case for urgency be ruled favourably by the Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 30 the rules permit the Speaker to allow such debate as he considers relevant to the question of urgency, so just give me some idea as to how many additional members would like to participate. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview would. Are there other members who would like to? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity. So if I heard three additional arguments, would you all consider that to be fair?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I won't take long, but I want to refer basically to a couple of matters and specifically to comments from the Government House Leader. What was amazing to me when we raised these questions before – we raised it with the Premier and others. They said that there was no problem. It's like they didn't even realize that the Auditor General was going to come out with this, and this problem has been going on for years and years and years.

Mr. Speaker, the worry that people have, the elder advocates, is that they've seen this come to the front and get some publicity. They think things are going to happen, and the problems are going to be solved. Then we're back in the same position again.

But, Mr. Speaker, the minister said, I believe, that it's not a crisis. Now, maybe the Auditor General didn't say the word "crisis." The minister said that he didn't read it, and I believe that to be the case because if you look on pages 70 to 72, there are 10 highlights of the findings. If those don't constitute what I would consider a crisis, I don't know what would.

I won't read them all but just a couple of quotes. Number 1, they saw "instances where the number of RNs employed or present at a facility failed to meet the . . . Basic Standard."

Number 2, "approximately half of the facilities we visited did not ensure that residents received complete annual medical assessments from physicians." These are people whose average age is 85. That seems to me to be a bit of a crisis, Mr. Speaker.

Then number 3 – it's already been alluded to – is about the chemical and physical restraints. That seems to me to be a crisis if that's going on with people at the tail end of their lives, Mr. Speaker.

Then number 6, just to highlight, is the one where "staff were instructed by facility management to wash and dress residents who were awake as early as 3:00 AM even though breakfast was not served till 8:00 AM," and "75% of the residents were in bed by 7:00 PM." That seems to be pretty urgent for these people. As I say, it goes right to number 10. That seems to me to be urgent.

What will happen here is that the government says – and they've known about this for months because they've replied to it – yes, we're looking into it at some point six months down the way. For many of these people that are an average age of 85, six months is a lifetime, Mr. Speaker. Surely in the last part of one's life one should at least have the right to live in basic dignity, and the Auditor General's report says that that's not going on in a significant number of our facilities. That to me is pretty urgent and pretty serious.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to also make a few comments about the Standing Order 30 motion. It says in the motion that they want to talk about "a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the ongoing suffering of residents in long-term care facilities." Now, I'm not going to deny that there could be some suffering happening there, but I don't think it's a huge, huge problem. Although, if even one person suffers, that is a problem. We want to deal with it. I don't think it's a serious enough issue at this point in time to hold up the normal activities of the House.

I want to speak to this because I've been part of the process. I'm the chairman of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta, and I've been travelling around the province looking at different care facilities. I think I have somewhat of an idea of what's going on in some of these facilities. Many of them are not new. Many of them are some years old. But it's not about the paint on the walls or how fancy the carpet is; it's about the care that the seniors are getting in these places.

The care that the seniors are getting is very good. I would say that in 100 per cent of the homes that I have visited, the people are being well looked after. I would say that not in all cases is there adequate staff because adequate staffing is always a problem. It is a problem in hospitals, it's a problem in seniors' facilities, and it's a problem in long-term care facilities. So this is something that we want to look at.

As the Seniors Advisory Council we travel around the province to listen and work with Albertans to improve the quality of life of seniors in our communities. We take this very seriously. The council highlights issues that are important to seniors in our communities and brings them forward to the government. So we're working along with the ministries of both health and seniors. I would say that ensuring our seniors receive high quality care and accommodations in our long-term care facilities is a concern to both seniors and their families.

I know about this from a very personal point of view too, Mr. Speaker. My own mother lives in a Red Deer nursing home. She's been there now for some seven months since she broke her hip, and she's not able to walk and to be at home with my father. So I go there quite often. Probably every time I get home for a weekend, I go down and see her, and she's very happy in this place. This place is about 40 years old. It's the oldest nursing home in Red Deer that's still operational. It's crowded. She's in a room with three other people, but basically she's very happy. She has good care. When she goes home to her actual home with my father for a day and visits, she's always looking forward to going back to the nursing home because she knows that she's going to be well looked after. The nurses are there to help her with all her physical tasks, and she's happy to go back and live in that facility.

I'm pleased that the minister of seniors has taken immediate action. That's why I'm thinking we don't have to have this discussion today because the ministers of both health and seniors have taken immediate action in appointing a continuing care review committee. The Member for Calgary-Foothills and myself will be co-chairing or leading this committee. We'll be travelling around and having these discussions with various groups. These groups will be the public, facility operators, seniors organizations, staff in these facilities, families and the operators of these care facilities. So we will be having these discussions, travelling around the province hearing what the issues are, and we will be making some kind of a recommendation as soon as possible.

If there are things that we find that need immediate attention, of course we will report that to the minister as soon as we find out, and the ministers can take action if they see fit. This will build upon the recommendations outlined in the Auditor General's report. We have been aware for some time that this report was coming. We've been gearing up our operations. We've put together an operational plan already for the Seniors Advisory Council. It's in a draft stage now, but we have taken immediate steps to respond to some of these issues.

We feel that the continuum of care that we provide in these homes throughout the province is very important. It's not only our duty but our mandate and what we want to do because we love these people, to ensure that the standards are monitored and enforced and that they get the absolute very best care that they can get in our province. Our seniors have contributed so much to our province over the years, and they are still a vital part of our population, and we want to look after them.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would speak against this motion under Standing Order 30 and would ask my colleagues to support me in that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I want to make it very clear that this is about more than who wins or loses a Standing Order 30; it's about the quality of life of seniors. If I can use the imagery of a scale of justice and you imagine the balance, on one side of the balance you've got the Solicitor General's budget; on the other side of the balance you have the lives, the well-being, the dignity of seniors. We know the outcome of the Solicitor General's budget. This is a majority government, and the Solicitor General's budget will go through. It's a foregone conclusion. Nothing we could do, no matter how much we had concerns about budget items and so on, would prevent that budget from being passed. It's going to happen. When you contrast that with the well-being of seniors, I would suggest that there is an urgency.

Had the election not been called in the fall, it was my understanding that the Auditor General's report was going to be released at that time. What has happened now is that we've had another five, six months go by, and we've now recognized that, yes, there is a problem. Keep in mind that that recognition was just in a very small sample. One-third of the small sample indicated a number of problems. One of the problems that hasn't been previously brought up and to me is extremely scary is the open medication trays, where any senior suffering from dementia could walk by the trays, scoop it up, put in a handful, and then we've got the ambulance pulling up to the door of the seniors' residence to deal with an emergency situation.

Two weeks ago on Friday I hadn't been in a seniors' residence or long-term care residence for a number of years, since my grandmother died. When I went in there, while I was visiting a gentleman who was on a feeding tube lying in bed, he had previously been medicated because when he was able to be mobile, it appeared that there was the possibility of a threat. In this particular facility he had been egged on by nursing attendants, witnessed by the fellow's wife and other staff, to the point where he would get upset, and he would want to lash out because of the provocation that he was experiencing. So he was given the pills and basically put into bed.

We celebrated VE victories last week. Now a number of these wonderful seniors who gave their all for us to have the quality of life that we're currently experiencing are lying in beds, and there aren't sufficient staff to take them and put them on the toilet. As a result, they have to wear Depends or diapers whether or not their systems are functional. It's a matter of basically managing the situation rather than dealing with their quality of life.

The long-term care rent went up by 50 per cent, but there were no accompanying benefits to seniors.

I would suggest that the faster we can start moving on correcting a problem that has been identified by the Auditor General – and basically I would suggest that in that short sample that he did, he has, as far as I'm concerned, just begun to scratch the surface of greater underlying difficulties.

Again, I'll conclude by saying: Solicitor General's budget, automatic rubber-stamp pass; quality of seniors' life, let's get started right now and address their issues, please. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 30 the chair can provide as many as he deems appropriate to participate, and we've had six participants with respect to this matter.

I would like to make a comment with respect to the participation of the last three speakers. The subject matter is urgency. There was absolutely nothing in there that convinced the chair to do with urgency in the last three speakers. There was a good overview of certain issues in the province of Alberta, but it did not contribute to the decision that the Speaker will now have to make with this particular matter.

First of all, proper notice was given yesterday. This Standing Order 30 arrived in my office at 3:55 p.m. yesterday, so it afforded ample opportunity for the chair to review the report itself. All members should know that the chair has read the report two times word by word, underlining, so there was very attentive attention given to the Auditor General's report. Should there be a test as to what was said on page 52 or 54, perhaps we'd give the right answer.

Secondly, before the question as to whether this motion should proceed to be put to the Assembly, the chair must rule whether the motion meets the requirements of Standing Order 30(7), which requires that the matter proposed for discussion relate to a "genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration."

As the chair had indicated last week in relation to another Standing Order 30 request, at page 1318 of Alberta Hansard from May 5, 2005, the relevant parliamentary authorities on this topic are "Beauchesne's paragraphs 387 and 390 and the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, pages 587 to 589." The chair has reviewed these references closely in considering this request for leave, and there are two key points that the chair would like to emphasize to all members.

First, to meet the requirements of urgency, there must not be another opportunity for the members of this Assembly to discuss the matter. One could look at Beauchesne's paragraph 390 and the House of Commons Procedure and Practice at page 589. There must not be another opportunity for members of this Assembly to discuss this matter. When the chair reviews the Order Paper and looks at the motions on the Order Paper and the bills on the Order Paper, clearly there is not another opportunity afforded to the members.

Secondly, the matter must relate to a genuine emergency. What we have before us is the wording of a member's proposed motion, and it's as follows:

Be it resolved that this Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the ongoing suffering of residents in long-term care facilities in Alberta as identified by the May 2005 report of the Auditor General.

I did listen attentively to all six participants and the arguments from all sides of the House. I repeat again that I've closely reviewed today's Order Paper to determine whether or not there's another opportunity afforded to members to discuss this very serious matter. It is a fact – it is a fact – that the estimates for the Department of Health and Wellness are scheduled for consideration tomorrow afternoon. The chair is cognizant of the fact that the Committee of Supply process may be somewhat limiting in terms of the number of members that may be entitled to speak. Additionally, I repeat that when looking at the bills or motions on the Order Paper, such are silent on anything dealing with this question.

I would like to point out, however, that I have very serious concerns with respect to the wording of the hon. member's motion; in fact, quite uncomfortable by the actual wording of the request. Instead of a straightforward request to adjourn the business of the Assembly to discuss the Auditor General's report on the conditions in long-term care facilities, the request refers to the "ongoing suffering of residents." I repeat: I have read this report twice word for word in search of such a phrase. It is not to be found anywhere in the report.

I am also concerned that by putting the question "Shall the debate on the urgent matter proceed?" the chair could be viewed as agreeing with the provocative wording of the hon. member's request. Under Standing Order 30 there is no opportunity to amend the request as an emergency debate does not entail a decision of the House. Furthermore, the chair does not want to set a precedent whereby politically motivated sentiments or rhetorical flourishes are viewed as legitimate ways of wording requests under Standing Order 30. In short, the wording of the request itself cannot be overshadowed by and overshadow the actual issue, which is so serious for so many Albertans.

Although the chair has concerns with the wording of the hon. member's motion, the chair is hard-pressed to find that this matter is not a genuine emergency. The very fact that almost one-third of the long-term care facilities under review did not meet basic standards of those Albertans who have undoubtedly played an important role in the first century of this province is of a very grave nature. I particularly draw all hon. members' attention to those items that are highlighted on pages 70, 71, and 72, and I just quote several.

Although we saw ample evidence of frequent and regular physician contact with residents, approximately half of the facilities we visited did not ensure that residents received complete annual medical assessments from physicians.

The next item:

In over half of the facilities, we saw inconsistencies in decision making, evaluation of outcomes, policy, procedure, practice and charting methodology in the use of chemical and physical restraints. Some facilities use a "no restraint" policy, while others use chemical or physical restraints, often without adequate documentation, and in a few isolated cases, without apparent medical authorization required by the Basic Standards.

Accordingly, the chair finds that the request for leave is in order, and now puts the following question. Shall the debate on the urgent matter proceed? Those in favour, say yes.

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

The Speaker: Those opposed, say no.

Some Hon. Members: No.

[Several members rose]

The Speaker: Under our Standing Orders, hon. members, if 15 or more members do advise the Speaker of their intent to support it – and I do count 15; that's the number – the debate shall now proceed. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the ruling, and I also appreciate the admonition about the wording of the motion. I think it probably a better phrase would have been: to debate the Auditor General's report. In fact, however, I do sincerely believe that there is ongoing suffering which is currently taking place in long-term care facilities in Alberta.

I think that the strong feeling which I have, which has grown as I've dealt increasingly with people who are advocates for people in long-term care, either people who had members of their family in a nursing home, for example, and they passed away or who are currently trying to provide supplementary care for members of the family – I just have a tremendous sense, from talking to the people, of their frustration and their anguish, in fact, for the conditions that they find the members of their family in.

Now, other members opposite have talked about, you know, the fine care that people receive, and I have no doubt that there are many facilities in our province that do provide a good standard of care. I also believe that the vast majority of people who work in these facilities are doing their very best, and I don't cast any aspersions on the work of people who provide this care. Very often they are extremely short-staffed and unable to do the work.

So, for example, we could talk about one of the issues, Mr. Speaker, on the same pages that you referenced, where residents are awakened and got out of bed at 3 in the morning when they don't get their breakfast until 8 o'clock. Why does that actually happen? It says, for example:

Staff were instructed by facility management to wash and dress residents who were awake as early as 3:00 AM even though breakfast was not served until 8:00 AM. In another facility, 75% of the residents were in bed by 7:00 PM.

Now, why do the staff do that? Is it because they don't get it or they're being mean? Of course not, but in order to get every resident up and dressed in time for breakfast with the short staff that they have, they have to start at 3 a.m., and in order to get everybody to bed by a reasonable time with the short staff, they have to start at 7 o'clock at night. That is what is producing the difficulty.

Now, this issue has come up before on the Members' Services Committee, and I and other members of that committee from the opposition have raised this matter in the past with the Auditor General. In fact, the Auditor General prior to his news conference yesterday did indicate that it was the work of people on the committee and the advocates for seniors and the opposition that had brought this issue forward and had led to his investigation. I congratulated the Auditor General on an outstanding report because this report, I believe, is actually going to make a difference.

The problem, Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, is that we're continuing to get mixed messages from the government. On the one hand, the ministers say: we've been working on this for a long time; we take it seriously; we are going to work very hard to try and correct it. Then we have the Premier, who's still in the old message box, who's saying: if there's a problem, bring it forward, and we'll look into it. Well, the Auditor General has looked into it and has delivered what I consider to be a devastating report, and it's a devastating condemnation of government inaction and neglect over many years. How could it have gotten this bad in the richest province of this entire Confederation?

I want to bring up, as well, the question of the funding levels. The Auditor General does address this in his report. It was about two or two and a half years ago that the government allowed private facility operators to raise the rates in long-term care facilities by 50 per cent, and the government at the time said that this was to enable these facilities to provide better quality of care. Well, Mr. Speaker, it was not six months later, then, that the NDP opposition research went through the Extencicare annual report, which talked about increases in the profitability of that corporation due to the government's decision to increase long-term care rates.

So the money, of course, Mr. Speaker, didn't necessarily find its way into better patient care or higher standards. It, in fact, found its way into the bottom line of the investors of these private health care companies, and that in itself is a good, strong argument against increasing private participation in our health care system generally. It's an example of what's wrong with that approach.

I want to deal a little bit with the committee that's been set up that does the inspections. Of course, we know that these facilities are not inspected by this committee except every two to three years; in some cases, three years between inspections. We know that last year the committee only did two inspections. The Auditor General deals with this in his report. He talks about people not being properly trained to do the work, not checking on all the standards. Basically, he's saying that, at risk of putting words into the Auditor General's mouth – well, I won't do that, Mr. Speaker. What I'll say on my own is that the conclusion I reached upon reading that section is that this is a committee of well-meaning amateurs who don't really have the qualifications to do the job.

The government has failed to ensure that these facilities are properly inspected. The result is that basic standards are not enforced. The basic standards have not been updated since 1995. Basic standards are "out of date or unclear." The basic standard for nursing hours is "out of date." There are "no Basic Standards" for personal care attendants. Care "may differ among the regions." There is "no process to review the Basic Standards." The basic standards are "not readily available to the public," and residents "may not receive appropriate care." There are "no adequate systems in place to monitor compliance with Basic Standards." Thirty-one per cent of basic standards relating to care "were not met by facilities" visited by the Auditor General. "Most Authorities do not inspect facilities for compliance with all the Basic Standards." The accreditation is "not sufficient."

The Health Facilities Review Committee, which I've already mentioned, doesn't have medical training. It has no authority to enforce compliance.

- The provisions of the . . . Act specifically prohibit the review by committee members of medical records without the resident's consent, and financial records. Their reviews are primarily qualitative based assessments concerned with the dignity and satisfaction of residents and families.
- The Committee does not check for compliance with all Basic Standards. Its processes do not contemplate areas covered by Basic Standards, such as provision of minimum care hours, frequency of physician assessments, therapeutic diets, maintenance of health records and care plans, user fees and trust accounts.

So, Mr. Speaker, the wonderful assurances we've received from the Premier and others about the great work this committee is doing are contradicted by the Auditor General's report.

Now, some of the findings that the Auditor General made are that most facilities do maintain staff levels in accordance with basic standards, but the Auditor General found "instances where the number of RNs employed or present at a facility failed to meet the required Basic Standards, or where LPNs were inappropriately substituted for RNs." They found cases where housekeeping and payroll duties were reported as nursing hours.

In the end, Mr. Speaker, the government owes the people of this province . . .

The Speaker: I think that's where we conclude, hon. member. The chair is prepared to recognize an additional member. The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I hesitate to get involved in this debate, but I believe it's a very important debate, and I believe there are some very important issues that need to be brought up. The first issue that I will bring up is the whole idea of an accountant going out and auditing a nursing home, a long-term care facility and making comments about what medically is being done. I do have some significant issues with that. I do have significant issues when comments are made after this.

I'll attempt to go through the 23 recommendations. Mr. Speaker, first of all, in the provision of nursing and personal services in essence what the comments are saying is not that there were problems with the patients; it is saying that the standards were not met. It is not saying that there were problems with the patients. It also says that in some localities and on some occasions they had difficulty getting RNs and attempted to fill these positions with LPNs. It does not say if this was a permanent practice or if this was a temporary situation. Unfortunately, by the reading – again, purely reading what is in this document – it states that they could not do it all the time. Certainly, I think that's a standard that does have to be met. I think that the standards do have to be updated. But, Mr. Speaker, as a case for being a critical emergency, I do not believe so.

Provision of physician services. I think that this is one that has been identified by several people in this Assembly. As a physician, Mr. Speaker, I implore to say that a person does not have to have a physical exam if they are being seen once a week or once every two weeks by a physician. I think that's a gross issue that is out there. It does not have to be, and to say that because there has not been a physical exam structured and put in by the particular facility when indeed the rest of the evidence is not there, when indeed it may be that this particular patient is being seen by the physician every week, every month, every three months, I think does a great disservice to the whole facility questions.

The maintenance of health records. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, I will be the first one to admit that as a physician I was not the best person when it came to health records, but health records do not patient care make. I think that there's a significant issue that if we're talking about patient care, which is what this motion defines and it's what this motion is concerned about, is it concerned because there are not records written down on a piece of paper? I don't believe so.

Therapeutic and special diets. Again I will quote from the Auditor General's report. "Most facilities met this Basic Standard. Some facilities had problems meeting the required consistency of some diets, and physician orders for special diets were not sufficiently documented in a small number of cases." So some facilities had problems. They recognized it when it came to consistency, and I would hope that they are doing something about it. "Physician orders for special diets were not sufficiently documented." Again, Mr. Speaker, I have a problem when we talk about patient care and, instead, we're actually talking about documentation. This is about the patient, not documentation.

The next one is medications to residents. Again, I'll go through exactly what the Auditor General has stated: "inconsistent documentation of the effectiveness and adverse effects of medication therapies, particularly relative to pain control and chemical restraint." Absolutely these things have to be documented, Mr.

Speaker, but because it is not written down, does that guarantee that the patient is getting poor care? I don't think so.

"Inadequate security and storage." These are very serious questions. I think the anecdote about a patient going in and grabbing handfuls of drugs is extremely, extremely insulting to those people who work in these facilities, Mr. Speaker. Could they be better? Absolutely they could be better. Absolutely they can do things. It's human nature to get complacent and not do entirely everything all of the time.

"Inconsistent control over phone orders signed off by physicians." Think about that, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General put that in the report because a phone order was on the document and the physician did not sign it. Is that a reason why there's poor patient care? I find this quite insulting.

The admission processes: again, documentation.

Developing, implementing, and monitoring resident care plans: again, just because there are not necessarily time frames or outcomes or goals does not mean that they are not getting care.

I will reiterate something that has been brought up and has been kind of a focal point in this discussion, which is about waking. I believe the direct quote was: waking up patients at 3 a.m. for breakfast at 8 a.m. That's not what it says.

An Hon. Member: Yes, it is.

Dr. Oberg: That's not what it says.

I will read what it says. "One facility with a policy to dress awake residents starting at 3:00 AM for 8:00 AM breakfast." Mr. Speaker, if the patient is awake, what do they want them to do? Do they want them to stay in bed in their pajamas for five hours when they're awake? Is that what they're talking about here? The point that I'm making on this is that there are a lot of questionable calls in this particular document. As someone who has worked in a nursing home, in a long-term care facility, and as someone who respects those people who work there, I think there are significant issues here.

I think that, obviously, we have to look very, very seriously at the care that is given to our seniors at any particular time. I think care given to our seniors is incredibly important, but for an accountant to go and adequately look at that care and then have an emergency debate in the Legislature, I think it's very, very difficult.

Mr. Speaker, when it comes to meals, co-ordination of temporary residences, handling of resident deaths, the handling of resident deaths is an interesting one. This is an emergency because one of the facilities, instead of getting a death certificate within 24 hours, gets it within 48 hours. This is, therefore, an emergency.

Mr. Speaker, I've got a huge amount of problems with this. There are a lot of people in this industry that do a wonderful, wonderful job. Does that mean that our standard should not be updated? No, it doesn't. But it does mean that the minister is updating them and is setting a very good tone as the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mr. Speaker, this is the danger. A report like this is the danger. When people go in, take a snapshot of what is occurring, take a look at the regulations and the documentation, and assume that patient care isn't there, that's the problem. That's why I have a huge problem with this report.

The Speaker: Okay. I've got some interest shown here, so I will deal with the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace as he has not participated yet.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General initiated a value-for-money audit of programs for seniors delivered by Alberta Health and Wellness and Alberta Seniors and Community Supports. In conducting this audit, the Auditor General's office met with different branches of Alberta Health and Wellness, all regional health authorities, and 25 long-term care facilities. Multidisciplinary teams including health professionals conducted facility audits. The Auditor General did not indicate how these facilities were selected, and I'm just left to wonder if he was not directed to certain facilities over others.

It is important to note that the Auditor General's report is not about care but about the systems that are in place. The government has already taken steps to improve those systems. Currently there are 14,300 long-term care beds in the province. Employees include 3,500 nurses and 10,000 health care aides. It is worth noting that every day in this province these hard-working health care providers deliver quality care to residents of long-term care. It's also worth noting that the Auditor General himself said that he would feel very comfortable placing a member of his family in any of the facilities he reviewed.

The Auditor General's review shows that standards for the provision of health care services and continuing care need to be updated. He found that long-term care facilities met 69 per cent of care standards, partially met another 27 per cent, and did not meet 4 per cent. Mr. Speaker, I also get calls from my constituents expressing some concerns in certain long-term care facilities, and often those calls are responded to very adequately. It is clear from the results that systems to monitor compliance with standards need to be improved. Both Alberta Health and Wellness and Alberta Seniors and Community Supports require further information to assess the effectiveness of services and programs.

The Auditor General's report makes seven key recommendations to improve services in long-term care facilities. A key recommendation is to upgrade Alberta's long-term care standards. Alberta Health and Wellness recognized some time ago the growing pressure on long-term care from an aging population and had already been developing these new standards. These upgraded standards for publicly funded long-term care health services have been drafted and will be the subject of public consultations during this particular summer. The new standards require the development of a care plan for each client and focusing, measuring, and reporting on the effectiveness of care provided to each individual. These new standards clearly spell out the responsibilities of clients and their families, health care providers, operators, regional health authorities, and the department, and they also provide for regular reviews and upgrading of standards to meet professional best practices.

New tools are being implemented to better assess the needs of long-term care residents. These new tools will also measure the effectiveness of care provided, and we expect the implementation of these new tools to be completed shortly. Alberta Health and Wellness is also working with regional health authorities on better measures of cost effectiveness. Health authorities have been asked to include longer term planning for continuing care services in their three-year business plan.

A measure of the quality of care delivered in Alberta's long-term care system is the number of complaints received each year. On that point it is worth noting that the long-term care system provides over 5 million long-term care service days per year, and only around 400 complaints are received each year. The Member for Calgary-Foothills, the chair of the Healthy Aging and Continuing Care in Alberta Implementation Advisory Committee, and the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka as chair of the Seniors Advisory Council will conduct a stakeholder review of the care and accommodation service standards, which will be completed by the end of August.

In closing, let me say again that the government of Alberta expects long-term care to be safe, high quality, and respectful of the needs and dignity of residents, their families, and staff. Most residents of long-term care facilities receive excellent health care thanks to the hard work and compassion of staff.

The Auditor General's report showed that 90 per cent of the basic care standards were fully or partially met. He did identify areas where we need to improve, and we will take his recommendations very seriously. As a government we are committed to acting on the Auditor General's report. It highlights the importance of providing quality care to Albertans.

We are already working with regional health authorities to focus our publicly funded continuing care system on quality of care and quality of life for each person. We are updating health service and accommodation standards and are working with regional health authorities to improve staff training, increase nursing care hours, and measure and monitor the effectiveness of care. Ultimately, we want to ensure that long-term care residents have choice and are treated with dignity and respect. Our goal remains the same: to work with residents and their families to ensure that Alberta's long-term care services put their needs first.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I know that I didn't call Orders of the Day today, which precluded anybody from having coffee, but we will waive that so that you may participate with that.

Then just to make sure that there's some orderliness with respect to the debate this afternoon, as there are 83 members in the House, 82 without myself, there will be three government participants for each one of the opposition participants.

We'll now call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There are a couple of contextual statements I'd like to make at the beginning of my remarks on this special debate under Standing Order 30, proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

One, I want to make it clear that I do not believe and I think that most members of the Assembly do not believe that fault lies with the staff of long-term care centres. I have to say that from what I have seen with my own eyes and in most cases heard from people that contacted me on issues for long-term care, what they're saying overwhelmingly is that (a) there are not enough staff to do the work that has to be done; (b) the staff that are there are sometimes pulled in so many directions that they can't even get done everything that's on their shift.

In the past in the House I've raised questions talking about LPNs being given the duty of distributing medication, which was not on their list of duties to be completed before the end of their shift, and then taking over the medication duties. That then meant that they weren't able to fulfill the rest of the duties that were prescribed for them. Certainly, it's been my experience that staff want to do a good job. They're trying to do a good job, but there aren't enough of them, and they simply don't have enough time to get done everything that needs to be done. I think that concept is reflected in many of the areas that the Auditor General has identified as risks.

Mr. Speaker, I know that many businesspeople would tell you that a risk is an opportunity, so we do have an opportunity here to make things better. I would argue that the reason for the debate this afternoon is to make them better in a hurry.

I'll just give you one brief description of some of the things that I've experienced in long-term care centres that bring urgency to the debate for me. I've spoken to seniors who end up in long-term care who say: "Laurie, I don't want to be wearing a diaper; I'm not incontinent. I can do this. I just need some help." And there are reasons for that: they've had a stroke; they're paralyzed; they may not be completely functioning with their arms and legs. For whatever reason they can't take themselves to the bathroom, and they need assistance with it.

Then I see them a couple of months later, and they're going: "Well, yeah, I've had some accidents. I rang and rang and rang the bell." I've even been there, Mr. Speaker, when the person said to me: "I really need to go to the bathroom, and I've been ringing the bell, and nobody's coming. Can you go down to the nursing station and let them know?" I went down and said: "This person needs assistance, and they've requested it, and the bell has been ringing for, whatever, 20 minutes now." I go back. I talk to them for another 20 minutes. This is 40 minutes now. Finally, I leave, and still no one has had the time to be able to assist this person to toilet themselves. Then we end up with what are euphemistically called "accidents."

The next time I see them three months further down the road, guess what, Mr. Speaker? They're wearing a diaper. Why? Well, there have been too many accidents. Now, to a large extent that was self-fulfilling, wasn't it? If there isn't enough staff and they don't have enough time in their shifts to be able to help people toilet, there are going to be a lot of accidents, and then we end up with people essentially warehoused in diapers. This is not dignified. I don't care how you cut it; that is not dignified. When someone is functionally able to go to the toilet and all they need is physical assistance to get themselves on it, they should be able to have that little vestige of dignity accorded to them.

That is what I see happening in our long-term care centres. It's not that staff don't want to help people to do this. They do want to help them to do it. They don't have enough staff to get there. I have yet to be in a long-term care facilities – and this is no word of a lie, Mr. Speaker – where the bells have not been going off with somebody asking for assistance, and they go off the entire time I'm in that facility. That's what's wrong here.

If we're going to seriously consider risk, which I think we should be considering, I would argue that we also seriously consider dignity. We said that we were going to offer a dignified end-of-life care for people, and they are not receiving that at this point in time. We are the people that are able to make that right for them, through our guidance and our decision-making and our funding. So this is a very timely debate, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow is the budget debate for Health and Wellness, and I will be very interested to see whether there are strong arguments for adequate funding for the medical portion of long-term care in tomorrow's Health and Wellness budget debate.

What I've seen, Mr. Speaker, is that the Auditor General's report was a validation for all of those people that have worked on it. For the Official Opposition, the third party opposition, the advocacy groups, like FAIRE and Elder Advocates and the Alberta Council on Aging and Retired and Semi-Retired and SALT and all those groups that have spoken to me over the years, it's a validation of their experiences and, particularly, the experiences of the family members and the residents themselves that have contacted me and, I'm sure, many others in this Assembly because they found a real schism, a real gap in logic between what they were experiencing and what the government was saying.

We've got all kinds of quotes from Hansard in response to previous questions asked by the opposition where the government said: There's no problem, and we're caring for people very well. Well, that wasn't what was happening in people's lives, and this report is a validation of that.

My question, Mr. Speaker, is: why did it take so long to get to this point? If we hadn't had that Auditor General's report released yesterday, we would have had the same response from the government members today that everything was fine. That's what's truly troubling to me. The system that is in place to actually monitor what's going on, the government-supported system, the Health Facilities Review Committee and the Tory backbenchers that are appointed to this committee – what happened? They are paid to go out and look at these facilities and report back and make recommendations on what's supposed to happen.

Why did they not catch any of this? Why? They were doing it. They've been doing it for years. I mean, prior to whomever is appointed on that committee now, last time it was the Member for Calgary-Shaw. Or she was social facilities. There are two committees that are out there looking at these facilities. Why aren't they catching this stuff? Why did it take that kind of work from the Auditor General for it to come out? If it hadn't been released yesterday, we'd be getting the same responses today, Mr. Speaker, and that's a problem. That needs to be addressed, and I hope I can hear from government that it's addressed today.

I think there's a huge problem with accountability. I've already mentioned the lack of accountability and, in fact, what appears to be a lack of work from the Health Facilities Review Committee. Also, Mr. Speaker, where is the accountability on the increases that were approved by the government, an increase in fees on the accommodation and meal side to residents of long-term care facilities? Where's the accountability on that increase? We have not been able to find where service, where hours of care, where quality of food improved after those rates were increased.

They were – I'll remind you – an increase of 42 to 48 per cent for people in long-term care facilities. So they paid almost 50 per cent more, and what did they get? No discernable difference in their care. The minister of health at that time promised fresh fruit and vegetables and whatever for everybody, but when we went back and looked and said, "Did we actually get this outcome?" it was not there, and the minister had to agree that it wasn't there. So we made those individuals and their families pay that additional money for no discernable change in outcome. That's an accountability problem, Mr. Speaker.

We've had little accountability from changes monitored by health authorities around the patient care as well.

Now, another issue that's come up repeatedly: the Liberals had advocated a year ago, actually – I asked a question of the then minister of health why they weren't considering unannounced spot checks with a professional team, who could understand what they were seeing, to go in and spend as much time as they needed to, and if there was noncompliance, the licence would be suspended. What I got was a smart remark back from the minister. He didn't take the question seriously, and he did not respond to it. I welcome anyone to look that up in Hansard. It happened in early April of 2004. But no actual response to my question of considering this reasonable proposal.

Well, I guess they finally heard it because now that's exactly what the minister is proposing: unannounced spot checks by a team of professionals. So I guess I should be happy that I was finally listened to, but, Mr. Speaker, that was a year. That was a year that it took.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Is there another government member who would like to participate as well? I indicated the rotation a few minutes ago.

Some Hon. Members: The minister.

The Speaker: There's more than just the minister.

We'll go with the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, then the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills and then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore and then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview and then the hon. minister.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the present chair of the Health Facilities Review Committee, I'd like to say a few words about the committee and its work. The makeup of the committee is myself as chair and 10 other individuals, who include retired nurses, retired accountants, and retired people with medical backgrounds.

The mission of the Health Facilities Review Committee is to ensure that quality of care, treatment, and standards of accommodation are maintained in health facilities throughout Alberta. The committee is responsible for conducting regular unannounced routine visits at hospitals and nursing homes for the purpose of reviewing and inspecting them and for investigating complaints about care, treatment, and standards of accommodation made by or on behalf of individual patients and residents in these facilities.

The committee is currently responsible for approximately 216 facilities in this province. The committee conducts its routine reviews approximately every 18 months to three years given current financial committee and staffing resources. The reviews are always conducted unannounced. A specific time frame is not announced to enable the committee to vary its visiting schedule, so members are not expected when they visit. The number of reviews per year can vary depending on the number and complexity of complaint investigations being carried out in any fiscal year. For instance, from the stats I have from 1999 to 2005, anywhere from 83 to 107 routine reviews are handled per year.

Significant efforts have been made in the last four years to improve the quality of the committee's routine review and complaint investigation process and to improve the content and quality of the committee's reports. Readers of the committee's reports can now get a better overall picture of the facility than what was available in the past. Facility owners, administrators, and regional health authorities have noted an improvement and have expressed a satisfaction to the committee, particularly in the last two years.

With regard to complaint investigations the Health Facilities Review Committee receives complaints in a variety of ways: through telephone calls to the office, through letters to the office and e-mail, or by referral by other agencies such as the protection for persons in care or the minister's office.

When a caller phones or a written complaint is received by the Health Facilities Review Committee, the concerns are reviewed to determine whether they fall within the committee's legislated mandate. If they do, a complaint investigation is initiated once the proper authorization forms have been completed and signed by the patient or residence or their legal representative so that the committee may have access to the patient or resident's health information records. If the complainant's concerns relate to abuse, they are immediately referred to the protection for persons in care office. Sometimes the concerns relate to both abuse in care and treatment issues. Therefore, both organizations may conduct their own investigations to address both sides of the issues involved.

When complainants complete the Health Facilities Review Committee complaint forms, they are asked whether they have reported their concerns to another agency. Often the complainants have indicated that they have already communicated with the protection for persons in care. In those situations the Health Facilities Review Committee does not take any further action to refer the situation to protection for persons in care and will look at the complainant's concerns to determine whether an investigation should be initiated by the Health Facilities Review Committee.

Protection for persons in care and Community Development also receive complaints in the same fashion but mostly through their own reporting line. If the concerns presented to protection for persons in care relate to care, treatment, or standards of accommodation and not to abuse, the complainant is referred to the Health Facilities Review Committee. Both organizations receive the complaints and proceed with their own investigation processes accordingly and independently of each other.

I do have some complaint statistics also. Between the years of 1999 and 2005 on the average between 34 and 37 complaints were received, and that's per year. Of those, between 12 and 24 were not filled out. Of all of those, between one and three per year were withdrawn. Of the 34 to 37, between two and three were not within the committee's mandate.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that in addition, efforts have been made to make better use of technology through the development of our own HFRC database, which will eventually enable the committee and its staff to track trends and recommendations and responses on a facility-by-facility basis as well as on a regional basis.

We all know that improvements can be made, and I would hope that this information is of some assistance to this House. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very humbled to be assigned this important task of leading the government consultation efforts on continuing care health service standards. I'm looking forward to combining my efforts with the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka and to consulting on accommodation standards to create a body of work that will benefit Alberta seniors.

The consultation on the new continuing care standards will involve several stakeholders, including advocacy groups, accredited professional bodies, and industry associations. I'll be dedicating my summer to seeking opportunities to speak with long-term care residents, their families, and home-care clients to hear the perspective of the people who matter most in our discussions, the Albertans who receive care. I will be embarking on meaningful consultations with stakeholders that have expert, first-hand knowledge of continuing care to help ensure that these standards meet the needs of Albertans receiving continuing care.

Mr. Speaker, in my past life I've spent many hours, many days, many months working in health care facilities as both a consultant and a volunteer. I've seen first-hand quality care in these homes in the Calgary area. The people who work in these facilities are absolutely dedicated to what they do. The Auditor's report was a bit of a surprise to me, and I am committed this summer to going out and seeking these areas, these places, these facilities where the Auditor General notes these problems. I will hopefully be able to recommend necessary changes to these facilities.

Mr. Speaker, again short and sweet. I just want you to know that I'm committed to this, and I'm looking forward to a summer of visiting these facilities. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am pleased to speak to this Standing Order 30. I think it's an important motion that was made today, and it gives us an opportunity to address even further the issues in long-term care, especially as it relates to the Auditor General's report. Like you, Mr. Speaker, I've read the report a number of times, and I go through my notes each time and compare them to each recommendation that's made, go through it line by line. It does challenge us in a number of ways.

As was mentioned earlier, it is an opportunity for us to make change, but also, importantly – and that's just what this standing order does – it creates awareness. It lets people know about our long-term care facilities that are in the province, about our seniors' needs in the facilities and how those needs have changed over the years. This is about the long-term needs of seniors, not just the future needs of seniors that are currently in place in facilities.

Many of us here in this Assembly know individuals, families who have had a variety of experiences in the area of being in an institution providing long-term care. You know, Mr. Speaker, we've heard this as well before. Our seniors have changed as far as age in the long-term care facilities, and I'm including lodges as a part of that when I say long-term care. Even 15, 20 years ago the average age of a senior in a lodge was about 65, 68 years old, whereas today we know that in a lodge a senior's average age is about 84. Yet seniors in a lodge facility can be independent. They can require some assistance in care from the community, for example home care. Having said that, we also know, though, that seniors with intermediate needs are now having their needs met in the community through designated assisted living, or assisted living, and what we seem to be terming as supportive living in the community.

The Auditor's report just lightly addresses that issue of supportive living and designated assisted living. I've had a conversation with the Auditor about that, you know, a couple of times over the past few months because I think that this is one of the most important areas. We know that we don't have standards that are currently in place for this new concept of supportive living.

I had an opportunity, as I mentioned before, Mr. Speaker, to go with the Minister of Health and Wellness throughout the province, in the Lethbridge area, Camrose, Wetaskiwin, Calgary, Edmonton, and view a number of facilities. The Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose is looking at me here. We did have a good day viewing those facilities. We truly know how those facilities are offering great care. This report is about the third that the Auditor looked at where we know there are some genuine issues.

Mr. Speaker, the unbundling of health and wellness and the care provided in long-term care and the accommodations have taken some time. People seem to think that things like this can happen overnight. Well, there are a variety of acts that govern the care. There are a number of regulations, and even with the separation of the two there is some overlap. In developing standards together, we need to also take into consideration this overlap.

A mention was made earlier about meals. That does fall under the area of Seniors, and in looking at the standards, for example, for meals – this is actually one of the most important activities that people in long-term care can participate in, and that's the sharing of a meal. It's a social gathering. It's a social setting within the care centre. That is under my portfolio and the standards that would be set in that area. I still, though, would need to take into consideration that there are complex health care needs.

That means that somebody could be diabetic and require a special diet, or they could be on renal dialysis and require a therapeutic diet in that way. It also means that some people may require assistance with feeding from a personal care attendant. It means that we should have dietitians who are responsible for assisting with that meal plan. We should have more than one choice for meals for people. We should have snacks available. We should have meals that are nutritious, that are easily digestible. I guess why I'm telling you about this, Mr. Speaker, is that it's important when we look at the standards that they relate to one another.

We have been working with the regional health authorities, the Alberta Long Term Care Association, the Alberta Senior Citizens Housing Association, and we've been working with them since January to modify and update the existing standards.

For people to believe that there hasn't been any work done in this at all or that we can deal with the whole complexity of this issue within a couple of days is really not the case, Mr. Speaker. This does take time. It does take careful thought, and it is important that we have the inclusion of not just the ministries or government but of people in the community. That's very much about why, too, we have appointed – this is immediate as well – two MLAs. We have the chair of our Seniors Advisory Council, who spoke earlier. As well, we have the chair of the healthy aging and continuing care – I think that's the name of the committee – who just spoke earlier as well. They are going to go out and meet with families, meet with individuals, caregivers, administration, tour facilities. You heard very much earlier what they would be doing and that they will look at what we're anticipating with standards and enforcement of those standards and how that should be done.

I know that the minister of health mentioned yesterday that health is moving forward with personalized assessments. My understanding is that those assessments are to ensure that the needs of individuals are being met, but it's also clear that we've provided in the province through vocational colleges and just through colleges programs for our personal care assistants in order for them to give the care that's needed within a facility. I also understand, too, that they're not mandatory. So the Health and Wellness ministry has developed a training program for the health care aides, and it is being implemented, Mr. Speaker, and these are immediate initiatives.

The average number of care hours was spoken about earlier. The basic standard may call for 1.9 care hours per resident, but that had been increased to 3.1, and my understanding is that there's been funding in the budget to increase those hours to 3.4.

Although these are important changes, Mr. Speaker, and they will have a direct impact on people in facilities, it's still not enough, and we recognize that. This is something that we, with that recognition, knowing that it's not enough, are going to continue to move forward on. We do care about the people that are in the facilities for our elderly.

Already I'm thinking of the Auditor's report in another step, meaning our group homes, our persons with developmental disabilities, looking at monitoring and compliance, looking at accreditation, that we're not just accrediting, in this example, the regional health authority but that we're accrediting the actual facility and that we're reviewing the whole issue of the Alberta seniors benefits program and the fees that we provide for our long-term care centres as well as for our other centres, Mr. Speaker – by that, I mean lodges and self-contained apartments, rent supplements, et cetera – and that we create even in that, as we heard earlier from the Member for Lethbridge-East during question period, standards that really do meet the needs of seniors.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's important, too, that we recognize that we had $15 million added to the health budget, but to the seniors budget we had $2 million dollars that were added to put in these important standards.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Minister of Innovation and Science, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If I can just go back to a previous conversation that was given by the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. He cited from the book here. I'll just briefly cite from it as well so I can give some history on this as it relates to my concerns here. When we talk about the basic standards of care, they were talking about 31 per cent that were not met; basic standards of housing, 11 per cent were not met; basic standards of administration, almost 50 per cent of the standards were not met; and the contractual requirements, approximately 28 per cent were not met.

My understanding of the Auditor General is to have an independent, nonpartisan body review specifics with regard to anything that was raised, and I think that the Auditor General has done that. For the minister over there to talk about cherry-picking when he went through the report is quite, in fact, offensive.

I looked on page 76 here, and the fact is documented despite what the minister said. It says: "One facility with a policy to dress awake residents starting at 3:00 AM." That's not a misprint. It says, "3:00 AM for an 8:00 AM breakfast. We confirmed with facility management" that this policy was currently being followed regularly.

Another facility has "the majority of residents in bed by 7:00 PM." Well, I mean, if you're in bed at 7, I'm sure you're going to be up awfully early as well.

One facility also sedated "restless residents between midnight and 2:00 AM" and then placed them in wheelchairs "by the nurses' station until they were asleep." It didn't mention anything about restraining them, but I'm sure that they had to restrain them there as well.

He also mentioned the handling of resident deaths. In this particular case 24 of the outlined recommendations were met. There was only one that wasn't partially met. That doesn't concern me so much.

Another one about the co-ordination of temporary resident absences. It was all met on there.

If I go to page 78, we talk about the collection of user fees. I think that I can speak for my family. I mean, I've had elderly parents in long-term residential care for a long time. I volunteered with them for many, many years. It's no fault of the staff, but any time you go by the nurses' station, you have to find and search for a nurse because they are being run off their feet.

For one facility here it says that the "residents were charged between $5 and $10 to deliver physician ordered specimens to the laboratory for testing. In another facility, a resident was [charged] $200 when he/she requested [a] . . . room change." Again, I find it offensive that these people at this stage of their lives would be nickle-and-dimed. I think they've paid their debt to society, yet we still find ways to take that last bit of dime out of these people.

On page 79 it's recommendation 18, the provision of ambulance and transportation services. Only two cases here that were not met. It said:

Most facilities met the Basic Standard of providing ambulance service and transportation for medically necessary procedures . . . In two facilities, residents paid for all their transportation from the facility, regardless of medical necessity, and in one case [the resident was] charged for staff time to arrange transportation for them.

I would question that. Why are the staff there? If they are there in that particular instance, is it that big a deal to in fact make a phone call or arrange for transportation for a person to go from one facility to another? I don't think that's outrageous, but to be charged for that staff member's time, again I find that sad.

Recommendation 21, on page 81, says, "Inventory of resident personal property." This is of particular concern. Seventeen of them were "not met." It says here, "Although all facilities permitted residents to provide and maintain personal furnishings, most facilities did not meet this Basic Standard by not taking or maintaining inventories of resident property." We've heard a number of times, again, that there is high theft. Perhaps the people, as mentioned, that have dementia and go into the wrong room, thinking this article is theirs.

It says: "Most facilities took the view that resident property was not their responsibility. Several facilities advised residents and families to maintain adequate insurance and minimize valuable items on site." Some might say that's being prudent; some might say, in fact, that's being negligent. They're here. They came in with certain things. You've grown up with, say, a wedding ring or a pendant or a brooch, for 40 to 75 years for some of these people. It's hard to give that up. They want that. This is their comfort, and to tell them that they can't have it because "We can't guarantee its safety; it's not my problem; it's not my responsibility" I think is sad. I think it almost should be a basic requirement that when some of these people, in fact, do take up the call to work in the long-term facilities, they would at least come with a bit of compassion and understanding.

I know, in fact, and I've said this before: we all are going to be here one day. If this is the state of care right now, what is it going to be like 20 years from now or even 40 years when I'm going to be there? I shudder to think. In fact, I don't look forward to getting old because of the concerns that are being raised in an ongoing . . . [interjection] Yes, I'm concerned about you, too, there, hon. member. But it still raises a concern.

I'm glad that, in fact, the facilities weren't named. It would have alarmed more people. They're already alarmed. When we have a number of facilities that were visited and they weren't named, that just continues to raise the call of concern for all Albertans because you don't know whether that was the facility down the block from you, if that was the facility that your grandparents or your parents are in.

Again, I think we had this urgency raised, and in fact it is very timely that we do speak about this today. Mr. Speaker, I realize that there are a number of people that do want to speak, but I, in fact, raised some of the concerns with regard to the outlined brief here.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, this is, in fact, a rare occasion that we have taken this afternoon to suspend the ordinary business of the House. In my time here I don't recall another time, although there may have been one other time when this actually happened. In that regard, I think the discussion we have is a serious debate and one that we should treat so. So I will do that. If we don't in fact use this time to debate what the Auditor General has said, then we are wasting our air time, and that would be a disgrace to the public, that would be a disgrace to those people that we represent.

I don't believe that there's a person in this Assembly that doesn't believe in the importance of providing proper care and attention to our seniors, in particular those in the long-term care facilities or assisted-living facilities or lodges. It's important to all of us, and we need to collectively find an approach or approaches that will in fact help that.

I do want to draw attention to something, actually, Mr. Speaker, that you pointed out in the notice of motion, which I think bears repeating. The motion says, "urgent public importance; namely, the ongoing suffering of residents in long-term care facilities . . . as identified by the May 2005 report of the Auditor General."

In my own quick reading of the report, it does not make that statement. I think that needs to be very clear when we debate this, that that has not been the focus, that is not the attention of the Auditor General's report. That being said, the Auditor General has made a review of nursing homes. He has in fact visited 25 facilities in all regions across the province and come up with a number of inconsistencies in those facilities, and we ought to pay attention to them.

The one difference that I would make is that in financial auditing, the process you normally use is to pick a sample size in order to check the processes of whether a financial transaction was properly recorded and been accounted for. They will never ever do a hundred per cent audit. My observation would be that this is a small sample size, but again because it was carried out in all the regions, I think that it bears attention.

He makes reference to the Health Facilities Review Committee. Again, he does not criticize the Health Facilities Review Committee for the actions that it has undertaken. I would encourage the minister to look at the operations of the Health Facilities Review Committee and see whether we should beef up that particular committee and use it in a more aggressive approach, especially in the short term, to check out the other facilities that were not visited by the Auditor General as a step to start the process.

I apologize if my comments will be somewhat disjointed. I tried to put my notes together in fairly quick order here.

The one thing that we experience as politicians dealing with this is that often our personal experiences come into play. For myself, I have family members who have been resident in facilities, facilities that have not been in this province, as a matter of fact. I have family members who work in these facilities. That's why it is very critical for us to try to not let the anecdotal experiences that we are used to colour the objectivity that we should otherwise have.

Hence, Mr. Speaker, I have tried very carefully to look at the actual recommendations of the Auditor General in terms of what he is saying. I would draw your attention, first of all, to his introduction in the report, whereby he says:

This is a report about how the government can improve its systems to deliver care and programs to Alberta's seniors . . . We also visited a sufficient number of long-term care facilities to assess, against provincial standards, the quality of care and services . . . across the province.

Then, of course, in the report he makes a number of recommendations and highlights a few of the ones that need to be addressed more urgently than other ones.

The response of the two ministers to his report has been that they will certainly take those under consideration and move on them, and I have every confidence in our ministers that they will in fact take these recommendations seriously and begin to implement them.

There are, of course, some recommendations in here that could be problematic for politicians. In recommendation 4 it talks about "accommodation rate and funding decisions." Of course, the experience that we had a couple of years ago when we in fact raised the accommodation rate to be more reflective of other rates across the country, it created some issues with those residents and with their families, Mr. Speaker. But here's a recommendation, again, to look at that one more time, and in fact we should.

The other thing that I will point out in terms of my reading of the Auditor General and the reason why we should be careful about the report is that this is not a report about public versus nonprofit versus private. There's nothing that I can see in the report that makes any inference one way or another with respect to who operates the facility. So we shouldn't let that get in our way, but we should be careful as we look through all of the facilities.

Mr. Speaker, I would point out a couple of things that I think are important, at least from my assessment. On page 20 it talks about the waiting lists for long-term care facilities. I'm actually pleased to see that the trend there has been a positive trend, whereby the waiting lists are not as long as they used to be. Clearly, there are still some issues there, but with an aging population we need to look at that to see: are the trends right? Are there places being made available for the people that want them and that desire them? So that's an important issue.

At pages 22 and 23 is the case-mix index, whereby the case-mix index is in fact increasing as residents in the facilities are of higher critical need. Again, Mr. Speaker, that would imply that with the higher case-mix index in a facility the level of care should reflect that particular case-mix index.

The report also talks at length on page 25 about the workforce. Mr. Speaker, as has been noted many times in this Assembly, there are many people who work in these facilities that do their utmost to provide the care. But I think we need to look again at the systems and ask ourselves questions, even questions about contracts. Do contracts prohibit the flow of people to actually work in these facilities? I think, if we're going to do an examination of the system, let's examine everything in the system and find out if, in fact, there are barriers to the workforce. Again, with the aging population it's incumbent upon all of us to look at the issues around health care because that's where the growth is, and for people working in that, we need to find ways to encourage younger people to enter the field and to stay in the field and look at that.

Mr. Speaker, that was a quick synopsis of some of the things that I read through in the Auditor's report. The Auditor is appointed by this Assembly as an independent person and deserves the respect and the consideration of the recommendations that he makes to make sure that we are looking at some of these issues. Again, I am confident that the ministers responsible are going to respond appropriately and that all members of this Assembly will in fact assist them in the work that they need to do to work in this very important area.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, and there's a vacancy for government members should one choose to participate.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this report. I'd like to make a couple of points in particular. I think what happened is there were a number of members opposite that really made reference to the report as if the sky was falling. I think what is very important to acknowledge is that we are in a situation of always trying to make the lodges, the seniors' housing, a better situation, better for seniors, more accommodating for their needs.

The main issue that I would like to talk about is the management aspect. I have to admit that I'm not as familiar with how the management is run in urban centres or in the larger centres, but I was previously a member of the foundation before becoming elected to this Assembly and have had an extended, I would suggest, duration of time spent on the board. I need to say that in rural Alberta – and I would suggest rural because I would reaffirm that that is what I'm familiar with – we had a foundation, a board that managed all of these different seniors' facilities and met in those facilities once a month. I would like to suggest that we were not alone as far as the management body was concerned. I mean, we had the auxiliary of these health facilities that were involved. We had community members. We had volunteers. There was family. There were the health units. Everybody had the same goal in mind: making the facility not an institution but a home. Everyone had the same goals.

When we talk about the operation of the facility, the operation of the foundation, let me assure you that on our visitations if the food just wasn't right or if things weren't working right, the seniors were very quick to inform us and enlighten us on what direction we should be going.

I want to say that I appreciate the Auditor General's report. I appreciate it from the aspect that I think it is an independent study, and it does look at different facilities. It should make us aware that maybe there are aspects, maybe there are directions that we need to spend more attention on.

We in rural Alberta are faced with some major, major challenges when we talk about seniors' housing and availability. I use the example of the lodge, and I'll use the example in St. Paul. We had a lodge that had 38 units. We had a waiting list of about 20 people, so we modernized the lodge. We added on about 12 units, thinking that this would be a great idea; we'd minimize the list or at least bring the list down. After modernization what ended up taking place is that we added 12 units, and the list went up to 30. So then we again modernized, and we put an addition on of 40 extra units. At that time what happened is that those units were filled up, and the waiting list went up to 70.

When I go to the seniors' housing facilities and the lodges and speak to the seniors, they are very happy with the facilities. This is discussions with the seniors. In fact, the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake's mother lives in my constituency, and every time I go into the lodge, she tells me and reiterates over and over again how she very much appreciates the service that she's getting.

These are some of the realities of it. I know that there are problems, and I know that there are issues that developed that we need to address. We need to look at the future needs, and when we talk about management – and I know that the report mentions medication. One of the challenges, as I did mention in my motion last night, Motion 508, is that we are in a crunch for receiving any physiotherapy or having any physiotherapists in rural areas. Seniors need some physiotherapists. There is no doubt about that. We cannot get them in our hospitals. We can't get them in our seniors' homes. I don't know what the solution is. We try to boost the emphasis on trying to get more physiotherapists into our regions.

An Hon. Member: It's been cut.

Mr. Danyluk: Physiotherapists have not been cut. Sorry, Mr. Speaker. They have not been cut. What happens is that the physiotherapists aren't there to be cut. They are moving to urban areas, and that is the problem we have in rural Alberta.

4:50

Mr. Speaker, I want to re-emphasize that I think we need to work together as a government, as an opposition, as municipalities, as communities. We say that the future is in our youth. Well, you know, there is a lot of future in seniors. They have so much to contribute, and they are very much a part of our society. We have worked very closely with them, I know, in my constituency, Mr. Speaker, and we will continue to do so.

Thank you so much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill. We do have vacancies for government members.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's also a pleasure for me to rise this afternoon and join this debate under Standing Order 30. I've been an MLA now for just over four years, but prior to that time I spent a lot of time in auxiliary hospitals, seniors' lodges, seniors' apartment complexes, long-term care facilities, and various other housing and supportive areas for seniors. Of course, I'm talking about my pastoral visitation and also the church services that we ran on a regular basis in many of these seniors' care facilities all around the area.

Mr. Speaker, I guess I have to tell you as a pastor that when you go into these facilities, the residents, of course, are very, very happy to see you. The other thing that you find out is that as a pastor the seniors tell you everything. Yes, I mean everything. They do not hold anything back. There are no secrets when you're in there on a pastoral visitation. They will tell you about some of their personal issues. They will tell you about the way they're cared for. They'll tell you about the food. They'll tell you about the staff. They'll tell you literally everything that is on their mind.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that for 12 years I visited a number, I would say probably close to 10 different facilities on a regular basis, and very, very seldom did I hear negative complaints, did I hear negative response. Very, very seldom did I hear of any chronic problems, certainly of no abuse or neglect or anything like that. Every now and then, yes, there would be the odd thing that was quite serious, so we would have to address that. I'm happy to say that the staff and people in charge were very, very good at addressing those situations and correcting any problems that might come up.

For 12 years I heard the good and the bad, but again I'm happy to say that the majority of what I heard was good. The vast, vast, vast majority was good. It was positive. Seniors are well cared for. There are very, very caring staff in these facilities. At least, in the Drayton Valley-Calmar area there are. In fact, I could name some of the staff. They're absolutely outstanding. The care that they provide to the seniors, the love. Literally, they provide love to these seniors like you've never seen. It's as if they're their own relatives.

As I was travelling around and visiting these facilities, I often shared meals with the residents. Again, I have to say that the food was very good. I looked forward to it. I looked forward especially to the Christmas meals and whatnot. Of course, they go a little bit extra during that time, but any time when I would stay, the staff would say: "Pastor, please stay. Join us for supper. Join us for lunch." They had nothing to hide. They wanted the community to be in there, to be visiting, to see what was going on because they were very, very proud of their facilities.

In fact, I was kind of amazed at the cleanliness, Mr. Speaker, the upkeep. You know, as a pastor I kind of wondered where all the dollars were coming from for what seemed like their constant renovations. It seemed like every time I went into a seniors' lodge or a senior's apartment or into some kind of a long-term care facility, there was something new being built or something new going on or some kind of renovation happening. I can remember thinking to myself: "Wow. They really do keep these buildings up." In fact, the grounds surrounding the buildings are like gardens. People would go to them to get their wedding pictures. They would go there just for the serenity of the beautiful landscaping and the gardens.

In fact, speaking of gardens, some of the facilities in my area, Mr. Speaker, even have community gardens that the residents can go out and plant in. Of course, in the rural areas a lot of the farm ladies were used to going out and planting a garden every year. They made opportunities for them to be able to do this at the seniors' lodges and the long-term care facilities in my area so that the residents could go out and plant some carrots, or they could plant some lettuce. Then they could have the enjoyment of going back later and harvesting their work.

Mr. Speaker, as an MLA now I still visit regularly. Just recently, in fact in the last two weeks, I've had the great opportunity to present two centennial medallions. One was in an auxiliary hospital; the other was in a seniors' lodge. These were residents that were, obviously, over 100 years old, and I'll tell you: they were both happy as could be. In fact, the lady who was 104 that I presented a medallion to last week said that she just loved where she was. The family was all there when I presented the medallion. They praised the care that she was getting and, in fact, credited her longevity to that good care that she was receiving.

I was actually amazed to hear that we had 680 Albertans or more that were 100 years old or older. I thought: boy, there are some people who are being well cared for, whether it's by family or whether it's by the lodges that they're in. In many cases a lot of those people are in some form of government lodge or government-run facility.

So, again, very, very happy people, very, very well cared for. Of course, I visited them all during the election recently, Mr. Speaker. Again, during the election is a time when if the residents are going to complain, trust me: they have free license to do that. Honestly, I heard nothing but good, nothing but positive.

Now, I know what you're thinking. The Auditor General's report certainly points out some of the bad. Well, the fact of the matter is that for the most part all the facilities get virtually the same funding. They have roughly the same dollars to work with. Sure, some have more. Some have less. But if the ones in my area can be well cared for, if they can be well looked after, if the residents can be happy, well, that should be a benchmark. That should be sort of an incentive or some form of a challenge, then, to the other facilities to meet the same standards. They can all do a good job.

I know that some are run by community boards. Some of them have voluntary boards. Some of them have municipal councillors sitting on the boards. Again, those boards are, generally speaking, very good people. A lot of them, I know, have COOs, chief operating officers: well-trained, good people who are definitely willing to listen.

The other point I have to make, Mr. Speaker, is the one that the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul mentioned, and that is waiting lists. I don't know. They think sometimes that we have a magic wand and that they can just come in and, you know, get moved up on the waiting list if they visit their MLA. People are literally trying anything to get into these facilities. There are long waiting lists to get in because people want to live there. Trust me: in rural communities people talk. If things were bad, if the facilities were not good, if the care was not adequate, then there would not be any waiting lists. In fact, there would be vacancies because the word would be out. That's certainly not the case. They have great recreation facilities, as I've mentioned, beautiful landscapes.

Mr. Speaker, as I read the Auditor General's report yesterday, I wished the Auditor General would have come out to my area. We would be standing here today saying: "Here's the benchmark. Here's the thing we're going to use to praise these facilities." But what did the Auditor General say? Well, he made some recommendations. Look at the first recommendation there. He talks about developing and maintaining standards. Well, what is management's response to that? It says: "Alberta Health and Wellness: Agreed . . . Alberta Seniors and Community Supports: Agreed."

In the second recommendation we look at the management response. "Alberta Health and Wellness: Agreed . . . Alberta Seniors and Community Supports: Agreed."

In the third recommendation, effectiveness of services and long-term care facilities, what was the management response? "Alberta Health and Wellness: Agreed . . . Alberta Seniors and Community Support: Agreed."

Recommendation 4, and on and on and on. Every single one. I looked through this report, Mr. Speaker, and every place where there's a recommendation by the Auditor General, it says: "Alberta Health and Wellness: Agreed . . . Alberta Seniors and Community Supports: Agreed." So what this is telling me is that the government is responding, that the appropriate departments are doing exactly what the Auditor General has asked them to do. They are looking at these facilities and improving the service, improving the care, improving whatever areas need to be improved.

So, Mr. Speaker, I guess I just want to say in conclusion that I am very, very pleased and happy with the facilities in my area. In fact, I challenge all of the facilities in Alberta to come out and use Drayton Valley-Calmor as a benchmark to see how to run a facility well on a reasonable budget. In fact, I challenge the other facilities that need some help to come out and borrow ideas. I know that there are facilities who would be more than happy to lend their ideas on how to make the residents happy and how to offer good care and how to do more with less.

With that, I will take my seat and let other members participate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, the hon. Member for West Yellowhead, the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, and the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's been proven by the speeches we've had here today why we needed this emergency debate. It's because many of the speakers on the government side, I would say, are in denial. In fact, we had the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation saying that an accountant shouldn't be allowed to go out and investigate because he doesn't know what he's investigating. I found that ironic in view of the fact that there was so much hullabaloo when we were criticizing the Auditor General before. I thought the Government House Leader would rise and defend the Auditor General, and I was surprised that he didn't.

The fact remains that nobody is saying – you can't take one individual institution and say: well, it's bad or it's good. Of course there are some good things going on in some of the long-term care centres. Nobody's saying anything different than that. What the Auditor General has done – and I would say that the Minister of Innovation and Science was correct – is take a representative sample right across the province, and he's saying that there are some serious problems. It should not surprise Members of the Legislative Assembly that he came out with this report. I would think that you would be sleeping or missing what's going on because time and time again seniors' advocates, children of parents in long-term care have been getting ahold of MLAs at least on this side and saying: we have some very serious problems.

That's not to say, again, Mr. Speaker, that we're saying that every institution in the province has problems. Some of them are doing very good work. Generally, the staff are doing very good work across the province. That's precisely the problem, and I think the Auditor General alludes to it: it's patchwork. There are no standards that we can talk about. It varies from one institution to another, and that's what the problem is.

What some of the advocates are worried about is that they've seen this sort of report come forward, and there's some publicity. Everybody's going to do certain things. The ministers are there; they're going to do certain things. And then it goes away, and the people near the end of their life are forgotten. That's a very big concern of theirs. That's why I really appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that we have allowed this debate to occur. I think it's extremely important.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'd point out that even the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation said: well, the Auditor General's an accountant; he couldn't possibly know what was going on. I wonder how many institutions the minister has been to check and see what's going on. If he doesn't believe the Auditor General, let's look at Lynda Jonson, who presented a petition here. Because she has parents and she thought something was wrong, she visited 100 long-term care facilities.

The Speaker: On a point of order, the hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order False Allegations

Mr. Hancock: Yes. Mr. Speaker, a point of order on 23(h) and (i): "makes allegations against another member," and "imputes false or unwarranted motives to another member." The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview indicated that the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation – the concern that was raised is that the hon. member said that the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation said that the Auditor General was wrong. That's not at all what I heard or what other members of the House heard from the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Basically, what he was saying was that – and I'll try and interpret what was being said and paraphrase it – this is a policy issue with respect to the provision of services and that the Auditor General's review was essentially one of process.

So he wasn't calling into account the Auditor General's veracity or ability or any of those things, the things that were being yelled across the floor even when he was making the remarks, but rather commenting on the issue of the report as an auditive process versus an auditive policy.

The Speaker: On this point of order, the hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would argue that this is not, in fact, a violation of those Standing Orders 23(h) and (i) at all. In fact, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview was well within his rights to comment on the minister's comments and to interpret them properly, and he did not in any way attempt to misrepresent the position that the minister took.

The minister, in fact, repeatedly said that he had great problems with the Auditor General's report and specific aspects of the Auditor General's report and gave the very, very strong impression that he thought the Auditor General was not qualified to make some of the recommendations that he did. So the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview is entirely within his rights in pointing that out in his speech.

Mr. Speaker, we'll await your ruling, but I would ask that, of course, this time not be taken from the time of the hon. member's speech.

The Speaker: It's time taken from the Standing Order 30 provision, which the hon. member wanted to have this afternoon, but I'm not letting it stop there. Allegations are going back and forth. I'm going to hear from the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, and I'm going to hear from the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview on this point of order.

The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As became very apparently clear in the comments that I made in the House today, I questioned the process, and I questioned the Auditor General making comments on process. The Auditor General would have been exactly right when he talked about documentation, when he talked about process, when he talked about not necessarily following all the rules and regulations that are out there. What I brought into question was the issue as to whether or not patient care was compromised.

I felt that in this report one of two things occurred. First of all, there was not a comment on patient care in this report and whether patient care had in fact been compromised. Instead, what is explicitly outlined here is that policies and procedures were not followed. Policies and procedures not being followed does not necessarily equate to patient care being compromised, Mr. Speaker. I think that when people make that judgment, when they make that assessment, they are taking a huge leap of faith. Were there policies that were not? Yeah, there probably were some in some of these institutions. But you should not fault the person and the hard work that is involved in working in a long-term care institution.

Mr. Speaker, in direct reference to the point of order, never once did I say that the Auditor General was wrong in what he said. What I did say, though, is that the connection between patient care and the policy involved is not there and that, therefore, the allegations that were being made in this House were not entirely true.

Mr. Martin: Well, the government gets all sensitive. I was . . .

The Speaker: No, we're not talking about the government. [interjection] Sit down. Sit down. We're talking about an individual point of order and allegations under 23(h) and (i), nothing to do with government. This is a simple little debate. All members this afternoon. There's no government. There's no opposition. The members have 10 minutes each to participate on a motion that the hon. member wanted.

Now we've got a point of order. Let's clarify it, please.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, what I was referring to, and it was very clear, is that the minister insinuated, I thought, about the process that an accountant – and he used that term – was not able to follow through on these processes. What he was basically saying, as I understood it, was that an accountant should not be able to do this. That's what I was referring to.

The Speaker: Well, it only goes to point out again and again and again and again that if hon. members stuck with policy and did not mention any other member's name or made comment about them personally, it's amazing how easily this place would just run right along like a well-oiled machine. So let's deal with policy.

I think we clarified this point of order. I did not hear once the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation criticize the Auditor General. That's the conclusion of that point.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, we have now eliminated one additional member from being able to participate this afternoon. Now continue, please. You've got six minutes and 20 seconds.

Debate Continued

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was continuing to say, other people have been bringing this forward long before the Auditor General. As I was pointing out, Lynda Jonson, who visited 100 long-term care facilities in this province and collected signatures from 4,800 people, talked about this and said that this is a problem throughout. Elder advocate groups are saying the same thing, and they've been saying it for many years. So it was not a surprise to most people that the Auditor General came out with what we think is a very tough, hard-hitting report saying that they were right. As I said, it doesn't say every institution.

Mr. Speaker, she talked about it at a news conference this morning, about seniors who are sitting, waiting for a bath right now as we speak. They'll get one bath this week. She talked about seniors who were woken up, that she's aware of, at 3 or 4 in the morning so that staff would have time to get them up and all dressed for breakfast at 8. She also talked about thousands of seniors who will be put to bed at 7 o'clock tonight, many of them who won't be gotten out of bed until 11 o'clock in the morning, again because hard-working staff just can't get to all the residents. That was at a news conference today from somebody that has visited a hundred places.

The point that we're trying to make is that, you know, as well-meaning as some of the MLAs may be – and I have no doubt of that, Mr. Speaker. But the Auditor General on page 33 says that the Health Facilities Review Committee is basically a waste of time, and he goes ahead: they do not "check for compliance with all Basic Standards," they have "no authority," and they have no medical training.

So the idea that we're going to somehow staff through this particular way, through the MLAs, the Auditor General has already said: no, that does not work. We should be looking for a different way to do it. We should be beefing up. I think the Minister of Innovation and Science alluded to that, and I think he's right, Mr. Speaker. It has to be beefed up. It doesn't have to be MLAs on that particular committee.

We have to have inspections. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that last year, as I recollect, something like only 56 of the 176 long-term facilities, or 32 per cent, received an inspection, as inadequate as the inspection process is. So how can the government say that they are absolutely sure that this problem is not occurring?

Now, I know the ministers have said that they will follow the Auditor General's report, but the point is: when do we deal with this issue again? When do we deal with it again, Mr. Speaker?

I would like to make some suggestions on the staffing. There are no standards for staffing, Mr. Speaker. The numbers aren't there. There are absolutely no rules; that's why we have a patchwork from one institution to another. What we would suggest is that there has to be at least four hours of nursing care per day. Alberta's requirement of 1.9 hours of nursing care per resident per day ranks well below the recommended four hours of nursing care. We have to have standard qualifications for staff, and we have to legislate minimum requirements for the number of people on the staff. Now, some have suggested – maybe the minister can tell us different. Some are calling for 1 to 5 during the day, 1 to 8 at night.

Some other suggestions, if I may – and I'm not sure how much time I have left – some other things that they could look at. A suggestion has been that each facility have a family council like a parent council at schools because I think one of the things that the Auditor General did say was that people with parents in long-term care have to be concerned. That's what he said when asked: if he were put in, would he not have concerns? Would he put his parents in? That was the question. He said yes, he would, but he would also check that particular institution on a very rigorous basis. So a facility having a family council like a parent council in schools would make an excellent idea, I think.

The other thing that I would suggest is that it's time we had an independent seniors' advocate. Surely, after the Auditor General's report it should be clear to even the government that some sort of advocate for the seniors has to be there. The government can say that they're going to follow up with these recommendations, but as I've said in the past, some of the advocates show that there were investigations and headlines – I remember one going back to '79 with my former colleague Grant Notley involved at that particular time and others in the '80s, '90s. Here we are with another Auditor General's report. The biggest concern that people have after the Auditor General's work and all the work of elder advocates and the rest of it is that the government will accept this – they will say that everything's okay – and then we'll all go back to sleep, and the problems will be the same, you know, three or four years down the way.

I would suggest that there are some things that should happen, and it's not good enough to wait till the fall, Mr. Speaker. I'd say to the minister that we need action plus. This report has come out. The chances are we won't be in the Assembly beyond next week. I don't know why there couldn't be an action plan there . . . [Mr. Martin's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ensuring that seniors are well cared for and valued members of our society is a very high priority for all of us in this Chamber and not just the members of the opposition. Certainly, best practices in health and personal care and housing are matters that we should strive for as a government, one of the most important priorities, in fact, as a government.

In my riding there is quite a high proportion of seniors. I can certainly say that as I ran for election and came to this Assembly, I expressed my concern for seniors' issues, and I undertook to be a strong voice for seniors' issues in my riding. I want to say that the Alberta government certainly has shown by its record that it holds those priorities of seniors to be very high on its agenda.

Our commitment in Alberta to seniors is second to none in this country. We have the Alberta seniors' benefits, which has the lowest thresholds and the most generous income supports of any program in Canada. Since 2004 there have been a number of enhancements to the programs given to seniors here in Alberta. Hon. members will recall that in 2004 17,000 more seniors were made eligible for the Alberta seniors' benefits, bringing the total to about 117,000. That constituted an increase in budget of about $50 million for the Alberta seniors' benefits. We also have a unique Alberta Aids to Daily Living program, which is an outstanding program for seniors. Our seniors also receive, of course, free basic Blue Cross coverage, and recently, during the budget process, it was announced that dental assistance for seniors up to $5,000 coverage every five years and optical coverage up to $230 every three years would be added to this basket of seniors' benefits. In addition, there have been improvements to the tax regime such that the education component of property taxes has now been shielded from any further increases for seniors here in Alberta.

I've visited a number of long-term care and seniors' lodges in my riding and in the riding of the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, and I can say that without exception my visits to those facilities have shown that they have a caring and compassionate staff. The quality of accommodation and care is very high, and not only that, Mr. Speaker, but there is a feeling of community in those establishments, a real feeling of belonging, that this is a home for those people. I know that that feeling of community and caring and compassion that is shared amongst the staff and the residents of those particular facilities is an extremely important factor to making those places a quality environment for the seniors.

I don't want to minimize the fact that there are certain problems in the care of seniors in the long-term care facilities and in the lodges; however, the sky is not falling. By a long shot it's not falling. There are problems, but I know that the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness and the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports both come to this Assembly with strong backgrounds in the health care professions. They are both extremely qualified and dedicated individuals. They're both extremely capable individuals, and I am very confident that they will act expeditiously upon the recommendations made in the Auditor General's report.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to stand today and talk about this subject. I look in my riding and I sort of review the different aspects, especially with the level of care that we've got in our riding. As I look at Edson, which is going to be 94 this year, they were the first ones to have long-term care. Then, of course, with Jasper being close to their hundred years, they have very good care there.

With some of the other younger communities – I can remember that with Grande Cache we had a situation where there was a gentleman that needed extensive long-term care. They were going to send him off to Hythe, which is in the region of Peace Country health, but then he had no support. We were able to make a deal with the regional health authority to designate a room within the hospital to have him stay there so his family could be looking after him as well as the staff.

Then to go on to the care with the seniors, I mean, Grande Cache is a younger community, one of the most modern, picturesque communities I think in the whole of Alberta. What happened there? They got together because there was more need for a lodge, so now they're going to have a lodge in partnership with Peace Country health, and we're going to work together there. So there's another area that is good. We're working on that.

If you go back to Edson, we've got long-term care. We've got a lodge. As the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports said, a lot of the people are aging a lot more, and they're in lodges when they should be in long-term care, but what do we do? We work with the Minister of Health and Wellness. We bring in the people there to help them so that they're able to stay in the surroundings. I believe we need to have aspects where people are aging in place. That's the biggest thing. When you disrupt their surroundings and move them to another place because they've aged a little bit more, you upset them. They don't like change at that age, so you want to work with them.

Sure, I've had a few complaints about the aspect of seniors in my region, especially when they want to go into the long-term care and there's no room. They'll move to my fellow colleague's riding, in Whitecourt-St. Anne. It makes it a little tougher for the people to go and visit them, but still they're being looked after. In this case that I'm talking about, I worked with the people in the area, and sure they were able to move him back once they got a time, a space for him.

I think the other thing is that the Evergreen Foundation in our region has worked very hard with the seniors. I think the positive thing there is that we have elected officials on there, and the elected officials are the town councillors that come from all the different towns and the municipalities in the West Yellowhead riding. They're there. They're the ground people that talk to them.

I've been into the lodges and into the long-term care. My colleague from Drayton Valley-Calmar just spoke about having a 100th birthday anniversary. Well, I had one gentleman there, and we had the community come out. We had the young people come out and visit him. It was very interesting when we presented him with a medal. I proceeded to give him a scroll. Then the newspaper lady asked me if we could take a picture with his medallion, so I asked the co-ordinator of the unit: where did the medallion go? It was interesting to see. You know, we always say about the older people that they're not really thinking well. Well, as soon as I gave this gentleman the medallion and told him that it was gold, he shoved it in his pocket, and I didn't even realize that. When the co-ordinator asked him where his medallion was, the first thing he said to her was: are they going to give it back to me?

When you look at something like that, the gentleman was very happy. They had a beautiful big cake for him. He loved to fish, so they had a fishing scene on there. I mean, the young people talked with him. He was very happy in there, and then all the other people in the long-term care were with him. You know, I'm not standing to say that we don't have certain issues. Sure, we have issues.

I've got another lady that's in Jasper, and it's interesting to know that she's 103. She's the one that plays the piano for the rest of the group there, and she looks after the older people, as she calls them. So, sure, there are different areas.

With the aspect of Grande Cache looking at bringing a lodge there, we went to a lot of different areas within the riding of Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert to look at some different facilities there. Also, when we developed Hinton for long-term care, we looked at an area for dementia. I just talked to a lady and her husband from Jasper. They had a relation that was in another region. Now they've brought him back to Hinton in that facility, and they're very happy because what happens is that's a unit where everybody works together. They do their own cooking under the supervision of the staff there. If anybody wants to go and look at the Mountain View Centre in Hinton, it's a multimillion dollar view. They've got the best view in the world. I know that when I was there, when we first were looking at it, I had sort of picked out my room where I'd like to be.

The Speaker: I want to thank the hon. member. I'd like to advise all members that there were 20 participations this afternoon. Some of them were duplicates.

Now, I want to draw all members' attention to Standing Order 58(1) and 58(2). When the House leaves us in about 40 seconds from now, it will reconvene in Committee of the Whole tonight for the estimates. Standing Order 58(1) and 58(2), should there be a procedural question in anticipation of such a thing arriving, would be interpreted that there would be absolutely no violation of any of our Standing Orders if two estimates went back to back.

The House stands adjourned until 8 o'clock.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 10, 2005

8:00 p.m.

Date: 05/05/10

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'll call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2005-06

Government Services

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to have this opportunity to present the business plan and the estimates for '05-06.

Before I start, though, I want to introduce the staff that's with us tonight. To start off, we have my deputy minister, Robert Bhatia; Laurie Beveridge, assistant deputy minister of consumer services and land titles; Wilma Haas, assistant deputy minister of Service Alberta and registries; Sue Bohaichuk, senior financial officer; Tom Thackeray, assistant deputy minister of government and program support services; and my executive assistant, Dawn McKay.

In developing our business and financial plan, we prioritized our programs and services to focus resources on the most critical areas. To do so, we considered the following factors: the impacts on Albertans, the legislative mandate, the financial benefits realized, and the partnership supported by the service. Another key influence is our continued commitment to service excellence, as demonstrated through our vision statement: "Albertans served with excellence through innovative leadership."

Goal 1. We are in the business of serving Albertans, and our first goal, "efficient licensing and registration services" demonstrates how we touch the lives of all Albertans. We allocate some $70.8 million in resources to provide services to support Albertans' life events from the time that they are born to when they purchase and drive their motor vehicle, they get married, acquire property and land, and eventually pass away, not necessarily in that order. The robust Alberta economy continues to drive demand for our services, and the ministry's registry system now supports close to 15 million transactions on behalf of Albertans each year. In addition, millions more transactions are completed for law enforcement and other government entities. Funding priorities under the goal of efficient licensing and registry services include responding to the 17 per cent increase in transaction volumes since 2000 and 2001 as well as improving client access and convenience.

Another top priority under goal 1 will be protecting Albertans' personal information held by the ministry. For example, we need to be proactive in addressing the fastest growing crime in North America, identity theft. Our facial recognition technology for drivers' licences is a critical tool for detecting and addressing fraudulent identities. I'd like to point out that this use of facial recognition technology is another example of how Alberta is leading the way for the rest of the country, if not for all of North America. By using this technology, we are able to search the motor vehicle database of images captured since July 2003 for duplicate images of the same person to ensure that individuals do not have more than one driver's licence issued to them or that another individual has not used their name and address. This makes it virtually impossible for anyone to assume, through a counterfeit driver's licence, the identity of an individual who currently holds an Alberta driver's licence or identification card. It's interesting to note that the federal public safety minister, Anne McLellan, has singled out an Alberta driver's licence as being a good substitute for a passport when entering the U.S. because of its highly regarded security standards.

We will also implement fraud awareness programs for our registry agents and for Albertans so we can further mitigate the risk of identity theft. In addition, we will evaluate our current processes and systems to ensure that we are doing our utmost to protect Albertans' personal information.

These measures of our success for licensing and registration include client satisfaction with accessibility, accuracy, affordability, and security of our services. Our commitment to client satisfaction is evidenced by the fact that we have improved turnaround times with land title services and realized a 12 per cent increase in satisfaction over the prior year. This improvement was largely due to process changes that increased efficiencies and the provision of extra staff to address the 30 per cent increase in land title transactions. In 2004 our land titles folks completed a record high million-plus transactions.

We aim to further increase client satisfaction ratings in 2005 and '06 to 80 per cent from the previous rating of 77 per cent. As well, we will continue to ensure that our fees for services are very fair and reasonable. We provide tangible, everyday examples of the Alberta advantage through such things as the low cost of registering a home, which is currently 81 per cent below the national average, or our car registration fee, which is 18 per cent below the average, or our driver's licence fee, which is 31 per cent below the national average.

Registry agents are key components of our service-delivery model, and we want to ensure that their high client satisfaction ratings continue. We have set a satisfaction rate target of 85 per cent. In total, our registry and licence services are estimated to generate revenue in excess of some $350 million.

Our second goal is "informed customers and businesses, and a high standard of marketplace conduct." We allocate about $10.1 million to this important service. Our customer programs contribute to a prosperous economy by promoting ethical business practices and well-informed consumers. An effective and up-to-date legislative framework is key to supporting Alberta's ever-evolving and growing marketplace, and the cornerstone of that framework is the ministry's Fair Trading Act.

The Fair Trading Act allows us to investigate unfair business practices in any market sector if the transaction includes the sale of goods or services to consumers. While traditionally the focus has been on home renovators, collection agencies, door-to-door salesmen, loan brokers, and unlicensed businesses, we have also laid charges against home moving companies, funeral homes, and travel agencies under the act. The Fair Trading Act allows us to impose penalties that can include fines up to $100,000 or three times the amount obtained as a result of the offence or up to two years imprisonment or a combination of both fines and imprisonment.

There are a number of things that we do to ensure that our legislation continues to address the needs of consumers. These activities include monitoring marketplace complaints and assessing the number of consumers affected, dollars at risk, and the ability of consumers to seek remedies through existing processes; distributing discussion papers to stakeholders and seeking input through external panels, advisory committees, and focus groups; working with other jurisdictions and reviewing their legislation to ensure that best practices are adopted in Alberta. We also monitor news events and industry publications to identify emerging trends and issues. In addition, we conduct compliance audits to ensure that legislative requirements are being met. Over the business plan period we will develop amendments to tighten up the Fair Trading Act and address emergent marketplace issues such as credit and collection practices to ensure that customers are dealt with as fairly as possible.

Mortgage fraud is another emerging marketplace issue that we will be addressing under our second goal. Our Real Estate Council of Alberta, which reports to our ministry, administers the Real Estate Act and is leading the country in tracking, investigating, and raising awareness of mortgage fraud. The council provides education programs and a checklist to assist real estate and mortgage brokers in identifying mortgage fraud; for example, by September 2005 all mortgage brokers and agents must complete a mortgage fraud awareness course in order to be eligible for licensing. As well, the council administers an insurance fund to compensate consumers for losses. In addition, a government advisory committee on mortgage fraud was recently established to help deal with this important issue. The committee includes members from the Alberta government, the banking finance industry, the real estate community, and the law enforcement agencies.

Another important issue that we are looking at, in partnership with Alberta Justice, is the establishment of an alternate dispute resolution process to provide an option for handling landlord and tenant disputes without burdening the justice system. Specifically, it will provide landlords and tenants with a faster, less expensive, and more informal resolution of tenancy disputes through a quasi-judicial process. This type of model is already used in other provinces with considerable success. Where possible, best practices from other provinces have been adopted into Alberta's model.

As many consumer issues transcend borders, we will continue to work with our national and international consumer protection initiative and focus on the most serious marketplace violations. To give you an idea of volumes, nearly 77,000 customer inquiries and over 1,500 marketplace investigations were processed last year, with nearly $300,000 being returned to Albertans. The success of our consumers program is measured according to our client satisfaction, for which we have stretched targets from 75 per cent to 80 per cent.

Another important marketplace issue pertains to the growth in the evolving utility market, which is addressed under goal 3. This goal focuses on protecting the interests of Alberta's 1 million residential, farm, and small commercial consumers in this changing market. The office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate, or UCA, has a resource base of some $4.7 million and works with other consumer groups to reduce overall consumer costs by streamlining the regulatory process and influencing improvements in the utility marketplace. In their first 18 months of operation UCA staff, working with other organizations, achieved $85 million in utility rate reductions for consumers. The UCA will also continue to respond to consumer questions and concerns and advocate on their behalf to ensure that they are fairly treated.

We are drawing upon the expertise of a number of government departments, including Alberta Energy and the EUB, Seniors and Community Supports, and Economic Development. In collaboration with other consumer groups and their representatives we are actively involved in the EUB hearings on issues pertaining to rates for small retail customers. Government Services and Alberta Energy staff also meet regularly to discuss a range of issues affecting small consumer issues.

UCA projects under way include a plain language contract initiative, billing practice review, a tariff bill code, and the reviews of wholesale and retail market design. In addition, the UCA will continue to increase its efforts to ensure that customers are informed about the restructured marketplace, their opinions and obligations, and where they can turn to for advice and information.

We recognize that awareness is one of the best forms of consumer protection. We have ways to do it in our efforts regarding the restructured marketplace. We do have a number of activities currently under way. These include distribution of information materials such as our pamphlet on what you should know before you sign a retail energy contract, communications through our website and consumer information contact centre, speaking engagements by the advocate and staff, and public meetings of the Utilities Consumer Advisory Council.

We are also in the process of developing a more comprehensive communications and marketing strategy on consumer awareness, which we plan to begin implementing over the coming months. As of March 31, 2005, the UCA had responded to nearly 3,000 inquiries from Albertans and taken appropriate action on their behalf. Success will be measured by stretch targets for Albertans' awareness of the UCA's services and satisfaction with actual service received.

Our fourth goal is advancing the Service Alberta initiative to provide Albertans with accessible, integrated, and quality government services. Resources of approximately $800,000 are allocated to this initiative with further support received from other champion ministries such as the Ministry of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. Key next steps include encouraging ministries to make more of their services available online and enhancing the functionality and content of the Service Alberta website, which receives over 60,000 hits per month. This is an important initiative since 35 per cent of Albertans' contact with the government of Alberta has been through this Internet.

Website information is also a key resource for staff to use behind the scenes in providing consistent and accurate services regardless of which service delivery channel is used. Currently there are more than 1,200 information-based services and over 70 transactional services available online. Our ongoing objective is to provide more online service transactions so that Albertans can submit applications and forms, track their status, and receive notification of the results. As well, we will develop a long-term plan to enhance access to over-the-counter services, which will build on our existing province-wide network of registry agencies.

Implementing cross-government service standards will be another priority under goal 4. In addition to measuring Albertans' satisfaction with their access to government services and information, which has a 78 per cent target, we will also begin reporting on satisfaction with the timelines of those services. Our target for this is 72 per cent.

Our fifth goal is to provide "effective management of, and access to information, and protection of privacy." These services account for about $3.4 million of our resource base. Our efforts are directed to ensuring that information access and privacy legislation is effective and that the stakeholders who administer the legislation receive support. A major initiative under this goal is preparing for the review of Alberta's private-sector privacy legislation, scheduled to begin in 2006. We will also work with other jurisdictions to harmonize private-sector privacy rules as other corresponding legislation is reviewed and updated.

Albertans' response to the private-sector privacy legislation has been very positive. Both the business community and the public have been making good use of our information resources. For example, we have had 23,000 hits per month on our website and about 140 calls per month to our telephone information line.

Another key responsibility under goal 5 is to promote effective management of the government's information by providing all ministries with advice on standards and best practices as well as delivering specialized training. In addition, we will continue to administer the FOIP program. Our success will be measured by a target of 90 per cent of FOIP requests handled within 60 days and without complaint.

I believe we have put forward before you a fiscally responsible business plan that reflects our continued commitment to excellence in providing services that touch the lives of virtually all Albertans.

With that, I thank you for your attention, and now we'll engage in discussion. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to start by thanking the hon. minister for his introduction. I, too, welcome the staff, if they're still with us.

I will start by asking a question with regard to the full-time equivalent employment staff. I asked this yesterday during the budget debate concerning the Ministry of Innovation and Science, and I'm going to repeat the same question to the hon. Minister of Government Services. In fact, the department of the Alberta Corporate Service Centre and its staff were transferred over to the newly founded Ministry of Restructuring and Government Efficiency, and one would assume that a corresponding reduction in the full-time equivalent staff would ensue. We noticed that instead of that happening, we have an increase from 466 in the previous year's budget to 482 full-time equivalent staff in this year's estimate. That's a change of plus 16, or an increase of 16, and I would appreciate an explanation from the hon. minister as to why this did happen.

Parallel to that, I look at the ministry support services expense in the budget for this department. Again, I'm comparing the previous year's forecast of $5.4 million, which is apparently increasing in this estimate to $5.7 million, which is a $300,000 increase. You know, I'm not really arguing against it, but I just need clarification as to why it's warranted and why it's needed.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the hon. member if he could give me the program numbers? I'll never follow him if we start jumping all over.

Mr. Elsalhy: Sure. The full-time equivalent staff appears in the fiscal plan on page 57, and then the ministry support services budget appears on page 202.

Mr. Lund: Give me the program numbers.

Mr. Elsalhy: Oh, this is just the budget. There is no program number yet. I'm not at that stage yet. So it's on page 202.

The Chair: Please proceed. It might be helpful if you referred to the page you're on or something like that.

Mr. Elsalhy: So just a point of clarification there.

Also, I have just a general question with regard to the registries and the privatization of registries. I just would like to get some explanation briefly from the hon. minister as to how this has proven to be beneficial for Albertans.

With that, I also have a question with regard to what appears to be an expense under program 5 on page 207. That talks about registries renewal, which is program 5.0.3. It looks like we're injecting $1.3 million from last year's forecast into this year's estimate. I guess my question would be: if registries are private-sector companies or private-sector providers, why are we worried about spending more on registries renewal? To me these are private-sector people, and they should look after their own existence and maintenance and upgrading. So, again, a point of clarification there, please.

The ministry explains in I think the introduction to the fiscal plan that its primary external client is the public and the consumer of this province. In keeping with the spirit that, you know, we do everything in consultation and we ask everybody who's involved what they think, is the minister considering surveying or polling the public with regard to issues that affect everybody, like registries? Are they happy with the registries being privatized? Are they happy with the drivers' education and licensing being privatized? Are they happy with, to use the minister's words, the restructured utility marketplace environment, or would they rather stay on the regulated rate option? I would be really interested if the minister is agreeable on this and if he might actually go ahead and start surveying the public on these issues.

I know that his department is efficient in informing and educating the public about the merits of the different programs and why they're wonderful or why they make sense, but I think it's really a two-way highway, where the information goes back and forth. It should not be unidirectional, the government telling the people what's good for them and why deregulation is great and why private-sector registries are wonderful. So like we discuss the pros and cons, I think just open it up to feedback and input. This is basically what the ministry states: the primary external client is the public and the consumer.

On my own, very simplistically, I conducted a survey, and I asked people a yes or no question with regard to driver education, examination, and licensing. I said in my simple survey: "Should the province resume control over driver examination and licensing? Yes or no." Of the people who responded to my simple survey, which is not scientific in any way – you know, it's a yes or no question – 87 and a half per cent said that, yes, the province should resume control over driver examination and licensing. So that's just an example.

Moving on, the ministry states that it is committed to service excellence and can achieve this by keeping an "ongoing dialogue with Albertans about their current and evolving service needs." How will this feedback be solicited? How will they ask for input, and how will this input be used to implement policy or improve current procedures?

Next on my list – and, again, these are general questions – Albertans expect their government to protect their personal and private information, of course. We understand that protection of privacy is one of the main goals of this ministry, but lately we have witnessed many incidents where information was either stolen or misplaced, lost. These are incidents which are alarming and causing us in the opposition and I think even the layman on the street some concern. Computer tapes were lost, microfiche containing pension information were lost, electronic health records were lost, and we also remember that some information on senior government bureaucrats was misplaced as well and then ended up in the hands of potential crooks. Again, how is the ministry planning on improving this practically? You know, having the intention is one thing, but then having the policies is the other thing.

Moving on, the ministry's fiscal plan also states that it must be proactive in responding to emerging marketplace issues. I know that the hon. minister touched on the issue with the mortgage fraud, for example, and I think we also discussed that during question period. Yes, it is good in responding, but then I think we have to also about things before they happen, like thwart would-be crooks and would-be mortgage defrauders from committing the crime. How will the ministry review its practices and implement strategies aimed at prevention, not reaction?

The hon. minister indicated that this ministry will continue to streamline services and, again, will seek input from clients on service delivery. Are there any particular innovative things that this ministry is looking at or considering to streamline services?

8:30

After that, I would move to a question with regard to the Utilities Consumer Advocate, which is goal 3, as the hon. minister indicated. Having a Utilities Consumer Advocate is really not a bad idea. It's a good, sound idea, but I think, like I said during question period and in a previous exchange, this department has to have teeth. It has to be at arm's length from government. It has to have the power to do what it's supposed to do. Educating the public, again, is one component of its role, but I think it's mostly there to protect the consumers and the small commercial users like the residential, farm, and small commercial consumers.

We know that recently the honourable person who was occupying this position resigned, and I'm just going to ask the hon. minister whether a successor, or replacement, has been found and also whether it would be separate from the position of deputy minister so the two are not one and the same. I think it would make sense that we empower this person and allow him to be at arm's length from government to operate independently.

The hon. minister also indicated that the Utilities Consumer Advocate since March 31, if I remember correctly, handled or received 3,000 requests from Albertans, and action has been taken on their behalf. How many of these requests resulted in refunds, for example, from utility companies? Do we have a percentage, or do we have a trend or a pattern that we can say, you know, statistically over the years, this is happening, and this is the percentage that we are able to return every time, which really indicates that this is the percentage by which consumers are overcharged? Can we have a statistic that actually looks at this and studies this? How many of those 3,000 claims were dismissed right off the bat, and why were they dismissed? Were they not realistic in nature? Were they asking too much? We need to know how many of those 3,000 were resolved one way or the other.

In the Auditor General's findings when he reviewed this ministry, I think pretty much they said that not a lot is out of order, and I think they gave it a passing grade. However, the Auditor General noted that several irregularities have been identified, and I can probably point to page 179 of the Auditor General's report. Without really going into great detail, I would notice that it's mostly with contracting practices.

For example, two contracts were found not to be in accordance with the centre, which is the corporate centre that left and went to the ministry of restructuring, but it was under this ministry before. They were not in accordance with the agreements or policies. He also commented that reasons for sole sourcing are not always documented. "No alternatives considered to sole sourcing . . . Contracts signed after work started or after existing contract expired . . . Contract approvals not in accordance with the policies," and so on.

I think if we're really hoping to set the example and show us in the opposition and show the people of Alberta that this ministry is transparent and is doing everything above board and clearly and cleanly, I would urge the hon. minister to really consider rectifying these shortcomings and looking at these recommendations seriously.

Back to the Utilities Consumer Advocate, actually, there is something I would like to ask with respect to its budget, and this appears on page 270 of the business plan, expense by core business. The Utilities Consumer Advocate in the budget for 2004-05 was going to receive $4.5 million and in this estimate is going to apparently receive $4.7 million. My question is: why are we really spending as much when, in fact, the hon. minister indicated during question period that they get their financing from the Balancing Pool? So if they're getting it from the Balancing Pool, what are we spending on under that heading? You know, when it says Utilities Consumer Advocate, is there something I'm missing? Or maybe it's misrepresented. They're getting their finances recovered from the Balancing Pool, so why are we injecting money into it now?

Back to the registries, another point that I forgot was the angle that these registries should be self-sufficient. I heard a lot of talk about registries not only being there for, you know, automobile registries or drivers' licences – you know, take a picture, and we'll mail you your driver's licence – but they are doing other things as well. Then I also remember that when we discussed mortgage fraud and the land titles office, it was described as being merely a registry. So is the word "registry" that large or all-encompassing that it really involves not just the registries? My question is: if they're private sector, why are we spending money on them? Maybe there's something I'm missing, but I would appreciate any clarification I get from the hon. minister.

Lastly, with regard to the departments which report to the hon. minister, I have recently heard of a department called the access and privacy branch, and I had difficulty finding what they do and their mandate. The access and privacy branch, APB: apparently it reports to Government Services. I would be grateful if the hon. minister shared with me even in writing – it doesn't have to be now – their mandate, their structure. You know, why do they exist, and what do they do?

With that, I will retake my seat and encourage other members to participate, or if the hon. minister would like to reply. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I can give you a list of exactly where the FTEs were added. You're right: there were 16 added. We put one in the business and financial services part under Ministry Support Services. There were two under Service Alberta and Registries. There were 2.5 added in program support. We reduced 1.5 in the Service Alberta section, and we added 10 into the registry services area, for a net of 11 under Service Alberta and Registries. Then under government and program support services, under access and privacy we added two people, and under information management we added two people, for a total of four. So that's where the sixteen were added.

Now, under program 1 you were asking about the budget moving from $5.4 million to $5.7 million. The most significant change in the ministry support services arises from an anticipated government of Alberta salary settlement of $200,000, and the budget also incorporates increases to the ministry service agreement from ACSC. We were expecting changes there. Other factors include increases in WCB learning accounts to government-wide standards of $500 per employee. In addition to the leadership provided by the ministry to the deputy minister – oh, those don't give the exact numbers that you're looking for. An increase is largely due to the salaries. There was some $283,000 under human resources. Once again, that was the increase to ACSC. Then, under legal services we had to add $3,000. I guess that covers all the increases in that program from $5.4 million to $5.7 million.

Then if we go to your questions on the registry, you were looking at registries renewal, 5.0.3. Under that program we had an increase of some $5.048 million, and that's to do primarily with a transaction that occurred the year before. Really, two things happened. We transferred to capital in the year before some $3.4 million, which will be reflected in a higher investment in the capital phase of the registry renewal project. This increase was offset by a higher amortization cost of some $2.1 million. New funding to address inflation transaction volume increases, some $0.9 million. The equipment/inventory budget increase also includes new funding, $1.6 million, to meet growing demand transaction volumes as well as a $3.4 million transfer from operating expenses to reflect the progression of registry renewal projects into the capital phase.

Now, you asked some questions later on about the registry system. This expenditure has to do with the central system here in Edmonton. All of the registries feed into it, and we're redoing the whole structure. You have to understand that a simple thing like changing the driver's licence, going to the graduated driver's licence, increases our costs considerably because every time we make a little change anywhere in any of those things, you have to make a major change in the central system here. So all of this renewal is not with the equipment out in the field. That's primarily the responsibility of the registry agent. This has to do with the information here.

Now, you talked about polling or how we get information. Well, with the satisfaction of registries – and, of course, you'll see that in our performance measures – we do surveys; we do phone calls; we ask people to actually fill out forms about satisfaction. We continually do this because we're trying to monitor and make sure that all of the registries are operating as we would like to see them.

The registries also deliver services other than just registration. You asked about some new initiatives. Well, one of the things that we're looking at: do other ministries have some connection with the public that could be handled through the registries? One that comes to mind right off the bat under Sustainable Resource Development: the WIN cards, the licence for hunting, those kinds of things. There are a whole host of things that are in other ministries that might be able to be moved closer to the public through the registry system.

You have to recognize that if you compare when registries used to be under government versus under the private sector, with government you're open from 8:30 to 4:30. As soon as you move it out to the private sector, they're open in the evenings, they're open on Saturdays, and they're providing all those kinds of services. So the public in our surveys is very happy with that private sector there.

You questioned about whether the public is in favour of the RRO, for example. Well, I can tell you that we have an advisory committee to the UCA, and that committee – as a matter of fact, I think it's tonight or the 12th. It's this week, anyway, that they're in Bonnyville. They're holding a public meeting out there to gather input about the whole electrical restructuring and what they're doing.

Driving training. That's not in my department. That's in Transportation. We're not responsible for the driving testers. The satisfaction: I'm not sure because that's not in our department.

You mentioned about the loss of private information. This department has a lot of private information. Fortunately, we haven't lost any, but we are, through the Privacy Commissioner – he's investigated those various problems and has made a number of comments about how they can tighten them up to make sure that these things don't happen. We're working with all of the ministries on the security of private information because it is critical. It is something that we have to make sure that we're doing everything we can to make sure that it's protected. As it pertains to, like, registries, because they often collect a lot of this, we're doing some training. We're putting some new measures out in the field to make sure that there isn't access available to people that shouldn't be getting it.

You mentioned about being proactive. Well, we are being very proactive in all of these areas, with mortgage fraud, with vehicle theft. As a matter of fact, tomorrow with the Solicitor General and the Attorney General – we've had a committee set up looking at vehicle theft. As a matter of fact, the current Solicitor General chaired that committee, and we've continued it, and tomorrow we're making a report of all the proactive things. Some of it is to do with dealers, but the big part is what you as a private individual can do to protect yourself from theft.

You talked about other things we can do, and I think I just touched on it briefly, but you know just think across the government a number of services that we can move out. UCA. My current deputy is the new UCA advocate. You talked about the funding. Yes, that comes from the Balancing Pool, the $3.7 million. It's not coming out of general revenue.

We'll have to get back to you. Of those 3,000 complaints that were handled, I don't know how many – you asked a number of questions about those. I just don't have that information here, so we'll get back to you. You talked about the trends in complaints. We'll get you that specifically, but I can tell you here now that the complaints have dropped off dramatically – dramatically. They're really coming down.

The Auditor General. As you said, those comments were aimed at what actually has been transferred over to RAGE, so the things that were left for us are very, very small, and he was happy with what we're doing.

The access to information. Once again, I think I covered that pretty much as we were talking earlier about the protection of privacy. It's a big issue, and we're going to make sure that we do everything we can to protect it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It gives me pleasure to stand and discuss further the estimates briefing for Government Services. I appreciate the introductory comments and some of the discussion around each of the roles and responsibilities. A lot of this is new for me, and I hope it won't be redundant, but I would appreciate some further clarification about your role, for example, in the electricity deregulation and what role you would play with constituents who feel that this has not served their interests and how you would address some of the government side at the same time as trying to understand the small consumer, small business and the huge increases they've faced in the last while. I didn't realize that you had any role in that until tonight, so it's interesting to hear more about what you see your role to be there.

In relation to some of the guidelines in the Auditor's report on conflict of interest I don't know if you commented on some of the recommendations there in relation to how you're evaluating your conflict of interest guidelines year to year and seeing the extent to which your staff both understand and renew or communicate further new conflicts of interest as they emerge.

I didn't hear you comment as fully as I would like on the Auditor's comments or recommendations, I should say, about disaster recovery programs and the capacity to deal within a day or two of the collapse of business systems both in the community and, perhaps, in the government. Perhaps I missed that in some of your comments, but I'd appreciate knowing just a bit more about how you are addressing that question.

Relating back a little bit to the conflict-of-interest policy, have you considered whistle-blower legislation in the same context that we've discussed it at other times in the House, the question from a public perception point of view, perhaps even with other agencies that are dealing with you on a regular basis, licensing registry authorities? How comfortable can they be in raising concerns about either what's going on in your department or in their own business without whistle-blower legislation? It just seems to me a logical thing for all governments to look at in protecting their due diligence and their public perception of how they deal with dissent and, in a democracy, the free access to speaking about those issues.

So I would appreciate some comments on those specific issues, if you would.

Mr. Lund: Well, the role of the UCA in the electricity restructuring: as you know, the office was set up in 2003, and the role was to assist people in understanding and to give them assistance when it came to doing things like contracts and to assist in the presentations to the EUB because it's only a small portion of the electrical industry that has been deregulated, the generation and the retail. So there are things now that all of the transmission is still a regulated market. As a matter of fact, I know in my own case by the total cost of our bill that it's those areas that are regulated that are costing us much more money than the unregulated side. But, as you know, under the RRO, which is a regulated rate option, there were a number of hearings, and with the help of the advocate and others, like the REAs, there was some $85 million trimmed off what would possibly have been approved. That's what the utilities were asking, and the EUB shaved some $85 million off it. So that was a big win for the advocate.

I guess the big area originally – when the restructuring occurred, there were so many billing errors. It was just unreal the number of billing errors there were out there. I can give you a horror story in my own case because we happen to have four taps, and it was unreal the sloppiness. I know that they were changing their systems, but that transition was a real trying time. That's when the advocate came in and was acting and still does. Through that office we get some big mistakes, so the advocate goes to the utility company and works with them to get a resolution to those problems.

I'm not sure whereabouts you found the conflict of interest because I thought that the Auditor General's comments were more to do with the issues around the government services that were transferred over to RAGE. I know there was a lot of controversy about contracts that were not retendered and this sort of thing, but that's in the section that moved over. That wasn't in our section. We're only left with just a minimal amount of comments.

In the information that I had before me – I can read it to you – there were three things. The department made satisfactory progress on our prior recommendation to have recovery facilities and equipment available to resume business operations. That was one. That was one that all ministries went through. The department made satisfactory progress on a prior recommendation to complete a project management plan for the registry renewal initiative. That one is still with us, and we're still working on it. The department implemented a prior recommendation to implement access standards for the use and disclosure of personal information in the motor vehicle registry. Those were the three that were out of the Auditor General's report that were left with us. The rest were part of the identity that moved over to RAGE.

Well, I'm the same as the Deputy Premier and the Minister of Finance, who has said many times in the House: staff know that they can come to me if they have a problem. There is no penalty. We have an open door. We don't need to have so-called whistle-blower legislation. They have access. The 11 years that I have been a minister, that's been the policy all the time. Any employee of my department can phone me confidentially. Anybody in the department. It's an open door.

Dr. Swann: This is to protect people into the future, any department, any leader.

Mr. Lund: Well, I believe that it's an open door, and we have no problem with staff contacting us. That's something that I make very clear with our staff.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a few comments that are going to be very directed in one area. I would say that it makes some sense what the minister has been talking about in terms of the program spending of $90 million, which is an increase of over $12 million. As I understand it, it's to address the sustained increases in transaction volumes and rising demand for various registries. The minister has alluded to it. Part of that money, I believe, is going to the privacy and security of information, which becomes a very important issue, especially in view of what's happened in some other government areas. So I think that under those circumstances the $12 million increase probably makes good sense.

I'd like to just focus in on the Utilities Consumer Advocate. I probably won't take my full time today, Mr. Chairman. My understanding of the Utilities Consumer Advocate is to help consumers help themselves, to inform and empower them in Alberta's restructured energy markets, and to facilitate the representation of regulatory hearings and other proceedings.

Mr. Speaker, I go back to some of the discussions that we held in the House earlier on. As the minister is well aware, the Utilities Consumer Advocate discussion paper was leaked to the media. This discussion paper stressed that all five options suggested by Alberta Energy for the future residential electrical sales will penalize bill payers and benefit sellers, and then they added: "we are surprised and disappointed . . . Albertans expect and deserve that their Government will protect their interests in this policy, where the individual has little influence or option."

Now, I recollect the question period, Mr. Chairman. I think the minister said at the time – correct me if I'm wrong – that it was just a discussion paper and was not the final paper, but then, oddly, the Utilities Consumer Advocate issued a response to the discussion paper on wholesale and retail market designs. I guess the one question I would ask flowing from that – and I'd be interested in the minister's comments – is: why does the utility market advocate need to respond to its own work? That's what seems to have happened: a response to this paper. You've got the advocate responding to its own work.

The response, if I may so, Mr. Chairman, to its own discussion paper I don't think paints the government deregulation plans in much better light because they say here:

Government's transition to a competitive retail market has the potential . . .

I'll admit that it says "has the potential."

. . . to impose additional costs and risks on small consumers who could face 40% to 45% higher prices based on the current offerings by competitive retailers.

Well, the minister and the government can talk about new energy and electricity coming on and the rest of it, but the reality is that this is what the small producers, the farmers, the small businesspeople, and ordinary individuals are facing.

Both of these discussion papers, the draft, if you like, and the other one, seem to be saying the same thing, and I think that this is where this department and certainly the Utilities Consumer Advocate should be taking a much stronger role. I know that probably the minister will say that it's just a coincidence, but Mr. Jackson resigned after these two reports. He said, as I recollect, that it was probably just coincidence or something along that manner. But the minister and the release from the Premier's office did not mention Mr. Jackson's position; he was both the deputy minister and the Utilities Consumer Advocate.

Now, I noticed that the minister has sent out a release and has a new deputy minister, and I was going to ask the question. I think I heard the minister say in regard to some other questions that the new person is both again, the consumer advocate and the deputy minister. I guess I might say to the minister that I wish they would perhaps rethink this policy. Why? I think that the consumer advocate should not be part of government. He should have some more independent role, at least be at arm's length, if he's going to be the advocate for the consumer because it's not always going to be the case. A government deputy minister has a certain role to play within government that may be somewhat different than an advocate, Mr. Chairman. I think this leaves it suspect.

I'll come to why I think it's a mistake by the minister's own department's business plan. The business plan of this ministry is quite clear. It says that it is the job of this ministry to "use consumer feedback and business intelligence to influence changes to retail utility policy and business practices to protect consumers." It says, too, to "ensure the accountability of utility companies in addressing consumer questions and concerns in a timely, accurate, and fair manner." In short, this ministry is responsible for protecting consumers' interest in the restructured utilities market.

Well, Mr. Chairman, by this minister's own business plan it's not doing very well. I'm looking at the performance measures that the minister I'm sure is aware of. I'm looking at 3.a, 3.b, and 3.c, and the percentages. I'll just do it quickly. I know that there are targets down the way but in 3.a the "percentage of Albertans aware of the role/services provided by the Utilities Consumer Advocate" is 31 per cent. Only 31 per cent of the people are even aware that this person exists. Well, I guess what I'm saying is that it's understandable if he's the deputy minister too. That's who they're going to know this person as. Then there's a slight passing grade for "percentage of contact centre customers 'satisfied overall' with services received," but a very failing figure is the "percentage of interveners expressing satisfaction with the cooperative protocol used in regulatory hearings." Only 20 per cent – only 20 per cent – are satisfied.

I guess I'll come back to the point that I was trying to make, that when you tie in the person that's supposed to protect the consumers and you make them the deputy minister, they're really serving two masters, I believe. I think that if that person was more independent – and I wish the minister would think about this – in speaking out, their performance measures would go up dramatically, perhaps perform more the role that I take it the government intends this person to have. I think that most people would feel that as a deputy minister he's not able to do the job advocating for the consumer that he should.

That would be my major suggestion. These performance ratings, I think the minister would agree, are pretty dismal. If he's not prepared to split that apart and make that consumer advocate more independent, what is the ministry doing, then, to improve these dismal performance ratings?

The only other comment, Mr. Chairman, I might make is in the same area. There's another service that the Utilities Consumer Advocate provides. I have them here, a couple of handouts about door-to-door salespeople and the like. On one of these handouts it says, "Electrical Marketing: What Consumers Should Know." On the door-to-door electricity marketing, it tells consumers – and I suppose it's not a bad thing to say – to "take the time to compare prices of electricity and other services offered by each company." The sad reality, though, is that in the two major cities there are really only two big energy providers. In Edmonton and Calgary there isn't that great a selection to sort of sit back and take the time with.

Under the guise of offering consumers a choice, this is what deregulation has given us: two major providers in the two cities, and they're not that different. There isn't that much choice. While it's probably good advice if you're in a deregulated market, what it's saying, you know – when you've only got two, it's not a monopoly but an oligopoly at best. I guess that when that happens, if you're going to argue deregulation and that there has to be a market there and there has to be competition, and that's not occurring, then I think we have to really think about it.

I guess that I'm saying to the minister – and it's probably not going to change; I've been around this long enough – that if the marketplace cannot be counted on to provide the essential services that people need to survive, then the government has to step in and regulate it. I don't consider deregulation of two, sort of, major players fighting each other in the cities real choice.

Mr. Chairman, I know there are other areas, and I appreciate the minister. As I said, I think the budget increase makes sense in view of what they're attempting to do, especially with the management of government records. With all the registry services, I certainly know why you need that extra money.

Those would be my comments.

9:10

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll just make a few more comments on the UCA. I was disappointed to see Roger Jackson go. I want to make sure that you understand that.

The report, of course, came from the advisory committee who are holding hearings around the province. They're just ordinary people, but they've got a very good understanding of the electrical system, and quite frankly some of the comments that you made about the lack of competition: that's what they are saying. That's what they've been saying to us, the advisory committee. Of course, the response to the discussion paper was just that: it was a response. The situation that you commented about, that the small consumer could, if we just opened up the flood gates, be subject to a fairly large increase: that's not going to happen immediately. That would be over time.

I was very, very pleased that the advisory committee was honest and frank. This is what they heard. This is what they believe. They put it in writing and they sent it to us. I admire committees that we set up that come back and report exactly as they see it. As a matter of fact, I phoned the chair and thanked him for being very frank, very honest, and telling us what to look for.

There has been no decision made. We will be working with the Department of Energy and my colleagues. We will be coming to a decision before the end of June on what's going to happen to the RRO. As you saw in that last report, the advisory committee were talking about three- and five-year contracts or a rolling three. I hope to meet with the chair and, hopefully, the whole committee because I just don't totally understand exactly who the entity is that's going to buy this block of power that would be available for the small consumer. That's all evolving, it's coming out, and we'll see where it goes.

Your comments about a deputy versus a stand-alone and which would have the most impact. There are two schools of thought. One you described. The other is that a deputy within government probably has more impact and more authority and more ability to sway government policy than does someone totally outside. I mean, there are two schools.

Actually, when this was set up, I was pleased to see that it was a deputy position that had that office. I can tell you that because this department is under the Fair Trading Act and other pieces of legislation, we're looked at to protect the consumer not just in utilities. What I'm looking at is even expanding that role so that we wouldn't have just a Utilities Consumer Advocate but, in fact, have a consumers' advocate and have the same advisory committee. I mean, there are other issues that are coming up, these fraudulent situations. Those are very important consumer issues. Automobile theft: another very important consumer issue.

We are expected to be the protector of the consumer, this branch of government, and I take that role very seriously and believe that we need to maybe even expand it and go beyond where we currently are with our advisory committee and our consumer advocate. So that's what we're looking at: even expanding the role. I believe that there is a real function for it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to mention to the minister the goal of the efficient licensing and registration services, which is set out in the strategic plan. I believe that the department is doing an excellent job, and I've noticed that the quality and the efficiency of the registration of motor vehicles is exemplary. I know that there are different ways of achieving that registration, both by mail-in cheque and by appearing at a registry.

I had occasion to appear at a registry very recently in the north part of the city of Edmonton. I was able to present my registration renewal, my pink card, and my credit card to pay the registration on a couple of vehicles, and I was in and out within two minutes. So I compliment the minister on the efficiency of that registry.

I notice also that there's an 86 per cent satisfaction for the registries, and I would compliment the minister on achieving that goal.

I have a question for the minister, however, and that is that I note that there is $280 million in revenue that's forecast from motor vehicle registrations. A casual and anecdotal observation. In the city of Calgary, at least, there seems to be a lot of people that are taking advantage of the Alberta advantage and coming to our province, and they seem to be driving around with licence plates from Saskatchewan and British Columbia and whatnot. It seems to be in all disproportion to those people that may be here for vacations or whatever. They're here in the middle of winter, not the best time for vacations.

It seems to me that we're losing out on a substantial amount of potential revenue there that could be put into servicing our infrastructure and our highways and streets and roads. I wonder whether or not the minister could just perhaps observe whether or not there are any indices or measurements where we could assess what proportion of vehicles would fail to comply with the proper time periods to get their Alberta registrations.

Finally, I just want to finish up with a compliment to the minister and his department with respect to the amendments that are being brought forward to the Business Corporations Act, which I had the pleasure of being involved with as the sponsor. I think that there are some very positive contributions to the economic position of Alberta in that Business Corporations Amendment Act, 2005, particularly with respect to the provisions that provide for unlimited liability corporations. I know that I've been contacted by several law firms and accounting firms that are anxious to put that legislation into use, and there are deals and transactions that are waiting upon the implementation of that.

I just would also ask the minister perhaps if he could comment and tell the Assembly a little bit about where that process is at, whether or not there are some regulations and implementations that need to be completed before users can use the Business Corporations Act for the purposes of incorporating those unlimited liability corporations; in other words, when it will be accessible to the people that are waiting for that legislation to go into force.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you. Thank you very much for those comments. It's always good to hear those experiences about the registries. You know, you think about the way it used to be, when you had to take half a day off, go and take a number, and then go and sit down for however long. I remember hearing one individual talk about going to a government registry here in the city. This is just when the thing was being privatized. There was a private one at Leduc. He saw the big lineup, so he drove out to Leduc and then came back here. He had his licence. Had he stayed here, he still would have been sitting waiting for his number to be called. Yes, we know the service is good, and that's why you see that 86 per cent, good and improving.

9:20

Relative to the unlimited liability, a portion of the corporations act, the regulations, are being drawn up as we speak. It should be out very shortly. We will move it just as quickly as we can once the drafters have completed it. So that will be up and running, and we're very, very pleased. I'm very pleased with the staff and how they're very much in tune with the market and what we need to change to keep our legislation very current.

And thanks for carrying that bill. That was very important.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I'd like to thank the minister for his introductory remarks and his attempts to answer our questions.

With what I have to consider tonight, I'd like to first of all focus on the ministry support activities, specifically "providing expertise and leadership in . . . risk and information/records management, as well as FOIP support to the Ministry."

For years we have used the phrase "information highway" to describe the electronic flow of knowledge and expertise. Let us pause to reflect how much that means. In the last century governments have encouraged economic and social development in the form of railways, then highways, airlines, and pipelines. Today it is an investment in information services that draws in those who are prepared to invest in and contribute to our society in other ways.

Consumer protection and other types of client services are an indispensable part of this equation. Only when people can be assured that their money is well spent will they be prepared to make their homes here. I am pleased to note that it is this sector of freedom of information and privacy protection in which Alberta is among the leaders in the western world. We led in the introduction of FOIP legislation and in the extent of the powers we were prepared to give our Information and Privacy Commissioner.

We lead in the delivery of a course online from the University of Alberta that is developing and deepening the skills of information access and privacy protection professionals across Canada. The U of A's information access and privacy protection program has been successful in attracting as its new manager one of the top figures in the country, Marc-Aurèle Racicot, who wrote the book on access and privacy protection in Canada and who oversees courses in English and French and workshops for governments across this country. This is very commendable.

Albertans expect their government to protect their personal and privacy information. Why have we witnessed several incidents of the failure to protect information by the government, including the loss of computer tapes and microfiches containing pension information and the loss of electronic health records? How will this government increase the protection of private information?

I have some other financial questions I'd like to ask. I notice that there's been a budget increase of $907,000 for strategic information technology services. Why such a drastic increase in budget, and can you explain, please, how the purchases are planned or what purchases are planned? Also, the expense for program support is forecast to rise by 42 per cent, from $456,000 to $650,000. I'm wondering why this increase is needed and what you hope it will accomplish. Another one: how is the increased spending on access and privacy management and compliance, accountability, and risk management going to benefit Albertans?

In conclusion, I'm wondering if you would consider supporting a motion from my colleague from Edmonton-McClung, which hasn't been discussed yet, to turn the Utilities Consumer Advocate into a utilities consumer ombudsman. I'm wondering: would you be able to support that direction?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Chairman, the loss of that information that the hon. member mentions was investigated by the commissioner. What he found was that there was a problem with information being shipped, as I understand it, from Calgary to Edmonton, and then after some process it was supposed to be shipped back for storage. Somewhere along the way in transit the information was lost. He made some recommendations as to how to make sure that those things didn't happen again. It was terribly unfortunate the way the businesses handled it, but with the things that the commissioner has said need to be done and with our department working with the commissioner, we hope that we can eliminate those kinds of things from ever happening.

I appreciate your comments on the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. I don't know if you're aware, but I happen to have taken that act through the Legislature, so I'm very, very familiar with it. It was quite a piece of legislation.

On the specific questions that you asked, I'll get back to you in writing. You asked them so fast that I lost track of where you were at. We can easily get that back to you in writing.

As far as the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung's private member's bill – or is it a motion? I don't know which it is. I haven't had a chance to look at it, so I wouldn't want to comment on it until I've had a chance to look at what's being proposed.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thanks, Mr. Chair. One of the, perhaps, advantages of being one of the last speakers is that there's very little to talk about because they've all said my questions. However, I'll take a different tack on a couple of them if you don't mind.

A personal soapbox of mine, I guess, for lack of a better word, is this business of the lack of protection of personal information. The personal health records I think are a good example of things that can go awry. Actually, in my mind, the Americans certainly have access to all of our personal health information through the fact that they supply the IT support systems and, in fact, created the system to begin with.

I'm not sure exactly if this is your department, but it's under privacy. One of the things about actually creating these health files is that it is assumed that if you use the health system, you are allowing the health system to then put that information, your lab results or whatever, into a database. Nowhere has anyone asked me if I would be willing to share my health records with a database. No one has asked me for that in writing. It is just assumed, and I think that that is a very bold assumption by whoever set this system up. Please correct me if I am wrong, but my understanding is that the last vestige of personal records that I would possibly have control over are the actual ones that are between me and my doctor because it's doctor-client privilege. I'm not sure that even that's protected or that, in fact, I would be able to say: Give it to me, and I will look after it. That is, obviously, a personal little soapbox, but I think it's important. Certainly, other people have talked to me about it.

This is based on a personal experience that I had in Russia. I'm just wondering how much your department actually knows about chop shops. I was in an apartment in Russia just shortly after perestroika – well, it is still fairly lawless, but it was even more lawless at that point – when I actually saw a Mercedes that was painted a different paint job, the serial plates were totally changed, and it was all done within an hour. It went in one door, and it was out the other. Because they weren't afraid of being caught, it was very easy for me to simply walk into that chop shop and watch them. I can't believe that there aren't people in this country capable of doing that. They had high-speed dryers and great big vats of spray paint, et cetera. Needless to say, it was very sophisticated, but six guys were running it. They had a Volkswagen taken apart, boxed up into different parts, in a half an hour. They had a Mercedes sports car crated and onto a truck bound for New York in five minutes.

So I don't know. I know that there are chop shops around here, and rather than me having to buy those things that you put on your steering wheel – you know what I mean – and locking up my garage and being very fearful, I really would like the government to give me better protection and, you know, really go after the bad guys. Don't say that the onus is on me to always be looking after my things. I would hope that as a citizen of Canada and certainly of Alberta I am free to have some kinds of personal freedoms, that I'm not always looking over my shoulder, and that my government is looking after me from that point of view.

Just one more thing: the Utilities Consumer Advocate. I have a lot of complaints from seniors who are totally in the dark about: regulated, not regulated; yes, I can talk to the guy at the door, no, I can't talk to the guy at the door. I have now come to the point where I'll actually physically help them or my office staff will because they get 800 numbers or they get Internet that they can't handle. Anyone over 75 usually has problems with those sorts of things. They'll get the phone, and they'll get 800 numbers. They'll press a bunch of buttons, and if they're lucky enough and patient enough because they hate doing it, they'll actually get a real-live voice. But it's someone that is just repeating something off of a computer screen – there isn't any sort of human touch – and then they'll hang up in frustration.

These are the people that are living in their homes, trying to hang on, to stay in their homes, and their utility bills are just totally discombobulating them, I guess, for lack of a better word. They really don't know what to make out of it. They just keep paying it, and it keeps going up, and I'm sure that you can appreciate the level of frustration.

And one other thing. I believe that the Auditor General's report has already been alluded to, but just bear with me. Again, this may have been transferred to the other department, so please correct me if I'm wrong. It was on page 179 about government contracts and what measures have been implemented to ensure a fair and accountable system. I'm not sure if that's referring to the accounting system, and if it is, I would like to know what accounting system you use. Do you use the Canadian generally accepted accounting principles system?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Your comments about the health records. First of all, that's in the health records. The Minister of Health and Wellness, I believe that was within her department, so you might want to have that discussion with her tomorrow.

You talked about the U.S. having access to some of our information. The B.C. Privacy Commissioner did a study on the PATRIOT Act and how that can affect us and what the possibilities are there. Our commissioner is currently working with them. We will be getting advice as to what steps are going to be necessary because, yes, we don't want and won't accept that information that we gather from people here somehow finds its way into the U.S. and is accessible to U.S. agencies down there. We don't accept that, so we're looking at how we can fix that problem.

You talked about auto theft. As I mentioned in my comments earlier, tomorrow in conjunction with the Solicitor General and the Attorney General we're going to have the folks that did the report for us – Staff Sergeant Derek Curtis from the Calgary city police. He's chairing it now, and he's going to come, and then we'll be having a talk on it. There are a number of things that you can do to protect yourself. Government can't do everything, but we're also going to be doing some things proposed in the report that I think will go quite a long way to helping prevent this movement of stolen vehicles and curbers and other folks that have a way of assembling a vehicle. There's another issue that's out there that's a real big problem, and that's to do with vehicles that have been written off by insurance companies and then finding their way back into the marketplace. We have to put a stop to it.

I think you were probably on a lower level, the smaller stuff, the pawnshops. We're going to have to probably take a closer look at some of that activity. For example, in Quebec they don't allow your money shops, your payday-loan type institutions. They don't allow them, but they do allow pawnshops. Well, probably there's more problem in that area than there is in the payday loan. So we're looking at the activity of pawnshops. Now, there's a place for them. That's the thing that we have to recognize. There's a place for all of these, but we've got to be able to make sure that illegal activity is not occurring in those places.

The power situation and seniors. You just made the argument for maintaining the regulated rate option, and that's a reality. That's what the advisory committee is saying, so that will be part of our discussion when we make a decision on exactly how that's going to be handled. I urge you: if you have seniors that are having a lot of problems, they can certainly contact our office. We can send them information. If there are enough of them and they have enough problems, I would be prepared to ask one of my staff to go and talk to them because there are some basic things. We're trying to get any contract that might be out there in plain language so people can understand it. But I think that if there are a number of seniors in the community that are having the same problem, contact us and we'll see about sending somebody to talk to them.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to add to what the hon. member has just said about vehicle theft. I think I understand that there's something called the Alberta Vehicle Theft Committee that's funded by Government Services.

Mr. Lund: Yes.

Dr. B. Miller: Not in conjunction with the Solicitor General? It's Government Services. Okay. It's a serious issue because statistics seem to indicate that vehicle thefts in Alberta are up 15 per cent in 2003, including, interestingly enough, a 22 per cent increase in Edmonton alone. The person who is coming to give a report tomorrow is from Calgary, and I hope that he will take into consideration the Edmonton situation. I have no way of explaining why the increase should be greater in Edmonton than in Calgary, but certainly new strategies ought to be in place to deal with this, a great concern to the public. So that's my first issue, but others have mentioned it.

Now, land titles. I saw a very frightening program on television not too long ago – I think it was the CTV network – about horrendous stories from across Canada about families suddenly seeing a for sale sign go up on their front lawn because someone had managed to get into the land titles office and just changed the land title from one name to another. I was wondering if the minister could explain the process in Alberta. I haven't heard any stories about Alberta. Hopefully, there's a lot of security in place in terms of the land titles office, that and real estate agents or whoever is dealing in the sale of property have to show identification. Hopefully, it's not an easy thing for people to do. That's a horrendous kind of story, that a person's savings in their home could all of a sudden be put in jeopardy because of some security issue with land titles. I guess mortgage fraud fits in there, but I was especially concerned about what happens at the land titles office.

Vital statistics comes under Government Services. As a former minister in a church I've dealt with marriage licences for some 30 years, and to me I think it was a step backwards when marriage licences moved from vital statistics to private registry offices. Vital statistics still deals with marriage licences, of course, but now we send couples to private registry offices, where you can get a fishing licence and whatever. It seemed to me at the time a kind of dumbing down of the importance of marriage licences. I think that the public had a kind of attachment to vital statistics. That's where they went to get their licence.

I applaud, though, that in that process a lot of the functions that ministers had to perform were taken over by those private registry offices; for example, the receiving of all the information for the forms and the filling out of the forms. That happens in the registry office, and now clergy don't have to engage in that, and that's probably a good thing.

I guess that the only question that lurks in my mind, and maybe I'm just suspicious, although we have perhaps – I hope I'm not wandering into something that's completely hypothetical here. There is legislation before the House of Commons about same-sex marriage. Is the department considering getting out of the marriage business and leaving it to churches and synagogues to register marriages and to exercise their faith, whether they should marry a same-sex couple or heterosexual couples? Then the government would not have to deal with that issue. Is that being considered?

I hope not because the permission to perform civil marriages is laid down in the British North America Act, and it's a federal issue. Provinces are just supposed to carry out the licensing process, but they have to follow what the federal government, what the House of Commons, decides in terms of who should get married. Anyway, I have that question.

Now, to move from marriage to death – and for some people that's a distinction without a difference – I notice that the Cemeteries Act and the Alberta Funeral Services Regulatory Board are under Government Services. It's interesting that in a reference to the Cemeteries Act – of course, I've had some experience with this as a minister in a church over the years. There's a reference to the modernization of the Cemeteries Act, or one of the strategies of the business plan is to "develop and/or modernize consumer legislation (e.g. . . . the Cemeteries Act) to address marketplace issues." I just wondered what that is about.

Does that have something to do with changing trends in terms of moving away from the burial of bodies in the cemetery to cremation? Cremation seems to be more popular now, so maybe funeral homes are not making as much profit in terms of the option of cremation because you don't even need an urn. You don't even need to use cemeteries because you can spread ashes anywhere. In fact, a lot of churches have developed memorial gardens right next to the church, where they place the ashes, not a receptacle – that would be against the Cemeteries Act – but the ashes. I am assuming that the Alberta Funeral Services Regulatory Board oversees the regulations in respect to funeral homes and sets standards for funeral homes and the costs that are associated with funerals.

My last point is just about Service Alberta, and here I'm asking the question as a new MLA. I notice that your goal 4 in the business plan deals with all the different departments and trying to work with ministries to promote their service. I was just wondering how this relates to our constituency offices. As a new MLA I'm conscious of the fact that we have to answer all kinds of questions and enable people to get access to government services. It would be a great idea, I think – and I don't know; maybe this is already happening – if our constituency managers could have some sort of orientation, especially if they're new, in how to access government services. I know, for example, that in WCB there are government liaison people that we can access, that we can call up, but what about all the other departments? I think our role as an MLA is to promote government services and to enable the ordinary person to get in touch with what they really need, whether it's AISH or whether it has to do with WCB or whatever. That would be great if we could have some direction in that respect.

Thank you.

Mr. Lund: You touched on a number of different things, so I'll go over them briefly. The auto theft issue. Yes, the city of Edmonton police are going to be present tomorrow along with the committee. Apparently, they're having some demonstrations. I don't know the full program, but this is an issue that's across the province. While it's currently this ministry that has championed this issue, it will be broken out into sectors and different departments. We won't be handling the legal stuff; that will be handled through different departments.

You talked about somebody breaking into land titles. No, that's not what happened. It isn't what happens. Nobody has broken into land titles, but there are some issues out there. In order for these schemes to work, there have to be a number of things happen. Often what happens in an identity theft is carelessness on the part of a landowner with private information and somebody is able to access that, a different individual, and then through different means – you heard just a couple of months ago about that driving school in Calgary where there were drivers' licences given out that were fraudulent, those kinds of things. Well, you had a number of people that you would consider to be trustworthy, professional people, and it turns out that they weren't.

So in all of this – with mortgage fraud, with identity theft – you get a team working together, and they find ways of doing some of this activity. Through the Real Estate Council, the Insurance Bureau of Canada, and others, we've now got a committee currently working on this whole issue of mortgage fraud and what we need to do to make sure that they can't do it here in Alberta.

Yes, the vital statistics are in this department. You talked about marriage. The fact is that we don't marry people; we just simply register their marriage. Currently, of course, it's between one man and one woman to the exclusion of all others, and they can get a licence from us. You talked about lowering the importance of it by allowing it to be issued through a registry. Well, quite frankly, I think that changing that definition of who can get a licence is degrading it much more than moving it to the private sector ever even came close to doing.

The issue with cemeteries and bringing in that legislation. It has a lot to do with things like salespeople with prearranged funerals and a number of things that are happening there to make sure that our legislation can deal with those kinds of activities because that, once again, is a very active field that is changing almost monthly. What we need to do is make sure that we have enabling legislation that allows us to pass regulations and be able to get at it when we find that there is something going on that is dangerous to the consumer.

Service Alberta, to be able to call. That's exactly what I was talking about earlier, about having more services out. Registries would be one great place to deliver some of those services. Filling out forms, for example, to apply for various programs: well, maybe one of the efficient ways to do it would be through the registries.

Now, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East commented about elderly people not being able to use things like the Internet because a lot of this is available through the Internet. Well, yes, that's absolutely true. It's not only seniors. There are a lot of others that also don't have access. Maybe through registries would be a place. That's the kind of thing. Now, I urge you to get ahold of our office. We have a call centre that covers a whole host of the issues that you likely are facing, like landlord/tenant issues. Those seem to be pretty prevalent. There are a lot of those conflicts. They can get very good information through a phone call to our call centre.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate being able to just take a few minutes this evening to discuss Government Services. I guess I want to talk first a little bit about goal 2, "informed consumers and businesses, and a high standard of marketplace conduct," and the Fair Trading Act. "Marketplace awareness initiatives are targeted to both buyers and sellers, with a focus on educating them on their rights and obligations and empowering them to help themselves."

From there I want to move to deregulated electricity and the problems that it's causing Albertans. In goal 3 you talk about the Utilities Consumer Advocate. It's set up for the interests of residents, farmers, and small commercial businesses. That makes up a very small percentage of the actual electricity used here in the province, I believe between 15 and 20 per cent. Yet we've come up with a shortage of electricity, and as we all understand here, there's a . . . [interjection] Well, that's what there was, Luke. That's what there was and why we had to deregulate, we said, because we needed to spur some activity in the production.

So what we've done here, and the fear that we've heard this ever since NAFTA was signed is that if we start selling water to the States, if we sell electricity – we've opened up our natural gas – we have to compete with those individuals. It has driven up the price, which has been good for big business and for the government and the income that's come in here.

The area that I want to discuss, though, with electricity is that it really is an essential service here in the province, and it seems that for such a small group on the user side, the 15 to 20 per cent of the consumption, there has been a shortage that has come forward because of the demand from industry. There needs to be some way for the advocate to help the small producers, the small businesses, and the residents here in Alberta.

One of the things that has crossed my desk, that people have brought forward and that I'd like to share with you tonight, is to protect those small areas, perhaps, by having a two-tier system where the consumer, as in the residents, doesn't have to compete with big industry, who needs the electricity. It's been a regulated market. There should be some way of going back to regulate and say that this first 15 or 20 per cent needs to look after with the needs of Albertans. Then if industry wants to compete and have that free market after that, it would allow for free-market development, and they could use the electricity that they need.

The other area that I wanted to talk on is the rules and regulations. Ontario tried for a little while having what they call zero-base metering. It would be a market-driven area where producers could get and produce electricity. By setting up two meters – and the technology is there – they could run the meters back and, therefore, feed into the system and not have to pay the extra charges. The purpose of that is to spur more electrical production, especially from such things as we've talked about today and in the last few days: biomass reactors, windmill generation, and other areas that are coming forward with the new technology. The way it's set up now, they can't tie into the grid. It's very prohibitive. We need to open that up. I'd hope that it would be an area that Government Services would look at in being more innovative.

Also – and I've referred to it before – we give huge tax incentives and royalty breaks to those who are producing and working in the tar sands. If we were to give that same break and if people could put capital money into windmills or thermobiomass reactors and the likes of that and be able to write that capital off, that would be a huge incentive for small business to get in and produce. In my area there are school divisions, hospitals, and towns that are wanting to put up windmills, and it would be a great incentive if we would take the same attitude that we have in the oil and gas and mineral exploration and allow those writeoffs in the production of electricity.

I guess that's all I really wanted to share this evening. I appreciate Government Services and what we're trying to do for Albertans, and I hope we'll continue to be mindful that it's the Albertans that we're serving and not big business. Thank you.

Mr. Lund: Just very briefly, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member is right. The small consumer, or identities that consume less than 250,000 kilowatt hours a year, amounts to about 17 per cent of the total load, so that's true.

As far as water export to the U.S., we currently have a Water Act that prohibits any bulk export of water to the U.S. There would have to be a change in that legislation before that can happen, so I'm really not too worried about that one.

Your other comments about zero-base metering and the windmills. Those are interesting comments, and they could be fed into the Department of Energy. I can just tell you some of the work that I've done so far. I know that the idea of zero metering is an interesting one. The problem is that it's very expensive to implement, so unless you're producing quite a lot of energy, the cost of doing it is more than you're going to get out of it. So that's why that just isn't taking place.

Windmills. That's an interesting comment, but one of the things that we have to remember – and you may not be aware of it. When I was Minister of Infrastructure, we purchased – 90 per cent of the government's power is now green. Half of that is windmills. The thing that you have to be aware of when it comes to windmills is that they only generate power about 35 to 40 per cent of the time. So you have to have all of the infrastructure backup for when the wind is not producing power, and that increases the cost. When you do the full life cycle cost, it's quite a bit higher. It's nice to have green, and it looks like it's cheap, but quite frankly it isn't that cheap. As a matter of fact, it turns out to be in the higher end.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for this opportunity to ask yet one more question of the hon. minister. It's in response to your comments to the questions asked by my colleague from Lethbridge-East with regard to the PATRIOT Act. I appreciate your comments. I, too, would share your concerns that we're totally against information being accessible by agents and authorities in the United States or any other jurisdiction, for that matter. What about data and information that is handled by American private service providers or contractors? I would just quote people like IBM or Microsoft, for example. This government relies heavily on partnerships with people like IBM and Microsoft. So what safeguards do we have in place that would prevent these companies or these private-sector partners from accessing this information whether we approve or disapprove? Also, should a leak happen or should a breach happen or should some of the information get funnelled to the U.S. . . .

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(4), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration for a department's proposed estimates, I must now put the question after considering the business plan and the proposed estimates for the Department of Government Services for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006.

Agreed to:

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$99,046,000
---	--------------

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Pursuant to Standing Order 57(2) I move that the committee rise and report the estimates of the Department of Government Services and beg leave to sit again immediately to deal with the estimates of the Solicitor General.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: I'll call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, for the following department.

Government Services: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $99,046,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'll call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2005-06
Solicitor General

The Chair: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to present an overview of the Alberta Solicitor General's estimates and the 2005 to 2008 business plan. With me this evening from my department are Eric McGhan, the Deputy Solicitor General; Brian Skeet, the assistant deputy minister and director of law enforcement; Arnold Galet, the assistant deputy minister of correctional services; Jim Bauer, our new senior financial officer; Annette Bidniak, our new director of communications; and Peter Davis, my executive assistant. Thank you very much for coming this evening. They usually work till 11 o'clock, so we'll try to be done by then, but we'll see.

Mr. Chairman, over the next 15 minutes or so I'll present to you highlights of the services and support the Solicitor General provides Albertans for their hard-earned tax dollars. Following my presentation I'd be happy to answer questions that remain, but should we run out of time, I'd be pleased to provide responses in writing to the hon. members.

The vision of the Solicitor General's department is to "ensure Albertans have safe and secure communities in which to live, work and raise their families." Each and every day we strive to achieve this vision by providing Albertans with a variety of supports and services.

The five goals that lead the programs laid out in the business plan are: one, to "ensure safe communities in Alberta;" two, to "ensure secure and efficient custody, community supervision and transportation of offenders;" three, to "facilitate the rehabilitation of offenders;" four, to "ensure the safety of Albertans by providing government security services and crisis management planning;" and five, to "provide services to victims and ensure they have a more meaningful role in the criminal justice system."

To help achieve these important goals, Mr. Chairman, the Alberta Solicitor General's budget for this year is more than $405 million, an increase of more than $46 million over last year's comparable forecast. Of the total budget $207 million goes to policing services, organized and serious crime response, and crime prevention; $146 million is spent on remand and correctional centres, offender supervision in the community, and rehabilitative opportunities for offenders; $22 million covers courtroom security, prisoner transport, counterterrorism crisis management, and Executive Council security; $15 million goes to victims' programs and services, and $15 million also goes to the ministry support services. All told, this is a significant investment to improve the quality of life in our communities.

When you examine the services we provide the citizens of this province, it's clear that this ministry is inextricably linked to the overarching goal of the Alberta government, which is to make Alberta the best place to live, work, and visit. A safe and secure community is where people want to live and, of course, visit. I'm pleased and proud to tell you that Alberta continues to have the lowest crime rate among the four western provinces, and we intend to keep it that way.

To help maintain this enviable position, with the additional $46 million in the budget this year we will add nearly 200 police officers to Alberta communities. This is the single largest increase of police officers in this province in 20 years. More than 100 of these officers will be new RCMP officers hired for rural Alberta. Up to 30 more RCMP officers will be redeployed from court security and prisoner transport duties to front-line policing duties. Sixty new police officer positions will be created to enhance Alberta's response to organized crime, and these officers will immediately tackle the priority problems of meth production and distribution and marijuana grow operations, which spark other serious crimes or provide seed money for other crime ventures.

The Solicitor General's department is also chairing a cross-ministry working group on the challenges and impacts associated with methamphetamine. The illegal drug business does serious damage to our society, and it also sucks young people into gangs with the lure of excitement and fast money. Gangs do the dirty work for those at the top of the criminal food chain, and organized crime is now extending its reach into smaller centres. It's not just a big-city problem anymore. Young people everywhere are at risk. The only way to disrupt these activities that degrade our communities is to build a plan that targets all levels of the organized crime business. We must go after the roots of the poisoned tree too, not just clip the branches.

The extra 60 positions in this budget more than double the number of police officers already funded by the province who are dedicated to investigating organized crime. The work of these organized crime investigators is supported by the Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta, that is also funded by the province. The role of CISA is to collect, analyze, and distribute criminal intelligence to law enforcement agencies, conduct threat assessments of organized crime in the province, support joint force operations, and provide specialized police training.

Over and above the 200 extra police positions we will dedicate resources to establish an integrated child exploitation investigation team that will focus on Internet-based crimes that target children.

This year we modified the policing grant formula to significantly decrease the financial burden on smaller towns and cities, especially those with populations between 5,000 and 20,000.

To replace the RCMP officers who will be redeployed to the front lines, dozens of provincial protection officers will be hired to provide courtroom security and courthouse perimeter security as well as prisoner transfers, of which there were 47,000 in the province last year.

We will be putting more staff into correction centres and making investments in safety equipment for correctional officers. Correctional officers in this province will be the first in Canada to be equipped with stab-resistant protective vests.

In addition, with equal investment from Infrastructure and Transportation the Solicitor General will implement court video conferencing across the province. This will reduce the potential for security breaches by enabling offenders to make routine court appearances from remand centres rather than being transported to and from courtrooms.

The Solicitor General will continue to ensure that victims are treated with dignity and respect and that they promptly receive information, assistance, and financial benefits. The report of the Alberta victims of crime consultation laid out a 10-year vision and makes a number of recommendations to achieve this vision.

Our department has already initiated several of the recommendations. Among them, the victims' grant program budget has been increased and has more than doubled in the past two years. Plans have been submitted to implement a revised organizational structure within the victim services branch, including the addition of positions for a training officer and aboriginal programs co-ordinator. A proposal will be developed this year to provide funding to pay travel expenses for victims to attend trials and observe sentencing.

Amendments to the Victims of Crime Act have been submitted to the Legislature, and we expect they'll be passed this spring. Once this occurs, victim services providers will be provided with the revised principles and expectations.

Mr. Chairman, in addition to the budget and resource increases there are other key initiatives that our department has undertaken. They include but are not limited to a number of significant changes which have been proposed under Bill 36, the Police Amendment Act, 2005. The key issues centre on more accountability by police through stronger oversight from civilian police commissions and the Solicitor General's director of law enforcement.

Where the decision to request an outside investigation currently rests with a chief of police, an amendment allows the police commission to initiate an external investigation. In addition, the amendment allows an external investigation or monitoring of any complaint or incident where it would be in the public interest to do so. The amendment contains a clause that ensures that police commissions are trained in their roles and responsibilities.

Our department accepted the MLA Policing Review Committee recommendation calling for the establishment of a police training college for recruit training and ongoing professional skills development. This single-site training facility will help ensure consistent recruiting standards and the highest standards of training for all police officers and other law enforcement related personnel.

Mr. Chairman, we are also conducting a special constable review, where Art Johnston, MLA for Calgary-Hays, is leading a review into the province's special constable program, which provides limited peace officer appointment to those who provide a supplementary level of service to our 5,000 sworn police officers. While they provide a variety of important services, they should not be seen as potential replacements for sworn police officers. Once the review is complete, we will have a clearer vision of the roles and responsibilities of special constables in the province and how they best fit into the law enforcement matrix in Alberta.

Aboriginal policing initiatives are another priority for our ministry. We are working with First Nations communities to provide adequate, effective, and culturally sensitive policing throughout the province. Currently there are five tripartite First Nations police services operating in Alberta. First Nations police officers now receive a salary and benefits package comparable to other municipal police services of a similar size. Their patrol equipment has been improved and is either ahead of or similar to other police services. Their uniforms are new and up to date, and soon their patrol units will be equipped with new in-vehicle records management technology. All First Nations police services must now meet the same selection and recruitment standards as all municipal police services.

Other First Nations initiatives include a police officer secondment program, a forensic identification program, and an aboriginal police studies program. The Solicitor General also funds First Nations crime prevention co-ordinator positions through several contract agreements. We also have a number of programs in place for the benefit of First Nations people that support the cross-ministry aboriginal policy initiative.

Mr. Chairman, Alberta is renewing its crime prevention strategy and community justice policy to encourage communities to develop initiatives that deter crime, as well to address the root causes of criminal behaviour, and through the co-ordination of youth justice committees to strengthen community bonds that have been broken by criminal acts.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, the mission of the Solicitor General is to serve Albertans by ensuring safe and secure communities through effective policing, security, and correctional services, and when crime is committed, to assist victims of crime. The overview I have presented of our programs and services clearly shows that we have met this expectation.

This concludes my presentation. I'd be happy to answer questions at this time, but should we run out of time, I'd be pleased to provide my responses in writing.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I guess I have to say at the outset: why are we always talking about policing so late at night? It seemed to be 11:30 when the Police Act came up for discussion – 11:30, quarter to 12, whatever it was – and again tonight. Is this some sort of revenge on the opposition?

An Hon. Member: It's the night shift.

Dr. B. Miller: It's the night shift.

Mr. Stevens: We're here too.

Dr. B. Miller: I know you're here too. Right.

Mr. Mason: Well, that makes it better.

Dr. B. Miller: Right. That makes it better.

I would like to commend the Solicitor General and his departmental staff for their work in producing the 2005-06 estimates and the business plan.

At the very beginning of our legislative session we were faced with the tragedy of four young RCMP officers who were killed, and I know that the Solicitor General felt this loss very deeply. I wrote him a letter conveying my sympathy. It was not easy to just go on and continue with work in a normal manner given that tragedy. It was important for us to set aside partisan politics for a while and unite together to mourn and to remember those fallen officers.

The Solicitor General's department has a huge responsibility, as the Solicitor General has pointed out, in carrying out the vision of ensuring that Albertans have safe and secure communities in which to live, work, and raise their families. Most of us take this safety and security for granted until our lives are interrupted by a break-in or a child who has a drug problem or an identity that has been stolen.

I notice in the performance measures under goal 1 that the public perception of safety is quite high, that the percentage of Albertans who feel not at all worried about their safety from crime is about 71 per cent, and that's quite high. On the other hand, one-quarter, 25 per cent, report that they have been the victim of crime in the past year, and I think that is quite high. That is startling. I think that maybe when you look at statistics like this, it's sort of an averaging out over the whole province. The problem with crime is that there are communities and neighbourhoods where there's a much higher percentage of crime than other places.

This came home to me in a study that I was a part of for the Quality of Life Commission here in Edmonton. We commissioned a person to go into the inner city and interview children about their feelings about their community. The study was quite startling because we thought that the children, especially in poor neighbourhoods, would talk about food and lack of recreation and so on, but the top issue that they talked about was safety, not feeling safe in the community. Children in all of the interviews routinely described experiences with guns and knives, domestic violence, police, theft, fire, drugs, alcohol use. It was clear to us that we have to start looking at particular communities, especially where our youth and our children do not feel safe; in other words, we have to focus on communities and community policing.

I'm encouraged by the fact that the mission statement, the vision of the Solicitor General's department, does mention – I think this is a long-term strategy – that “it will focus on the continued reduction of violent crime by improving its commitment to policing, and community policing programs.” I guess in a few minutes I would like to raise the question whether the additional police that are being added to the department will be focusing on community policing. It seems to me that that is one of the greatest needs.

In line with this, it is encouraging to note that there is an increase in the overall budget of 12.9 per cent and that $24 million in new funding will go to increase provincial policing programs.

The Solicitor General mentioned the adding of police, and I wasn't quite sure about the numbers. At the end of the estimates there's a mention of the FTEs, that there is an increase of 200, to 2,290, which is up from 2,090. I wasn't clear about what these new police are going to do; for example, what the ratio is – I think you stated it – between rural policing and urban, and also how IROC fits into that. I think you mentioned that there are going to be 60 additional positions in IROC, integrated response to organized crime. Are those 60 additional positions a part of the 200, or are they taken from other areas? I think we just need a little bit of clarity on the new policing, how that is in place.

You know, I think that the department has a big challenge. It's different from other departments. There's a tremendous amount of public interest in policing, and it's increasing. Even though, as you mentioned, crime rates are relatively stable – and you expressed some pride in the fact that Alberta's crime rates comparatively with other provinces seem to be quite good – the interest on the part of the public in the functioning of the police and in the performance of the police is increasing. There may be a number of reasons for that. I think that the scientific development in investigative practices like the use of DNA has led to a lot more sophistication, and that is intriguing for the public. The popular TV programs, of course, like CSI and movies and so on that focus on policing lead the public to think that it knows something about policing, but probably in most cases the public is wrong.

The public is more interested, I think, in helping out and getting involved. I found that there was a lot of interest in the Police Amendment Act, 2005, even in my own constituency, where people asked to come and see me because they were concerned about the complaint process.

I think this interest of the public also dovetails with the whole notion of community policing. Community policing involves a partnership between the community and the police. I think that there is a great deal of interest, that there should be more integration of the police with the public, being responsive to the public's wish to be involved. I don't know. Throughout the business plan community policing doesn't get I think the attention that it deserves.

Let me point out a few things here in the business plan that I have questions around. The first one is 1.1 on page 404, where the strategy in terms of ensuring safe communities in Alberta is to “implement changes to the Police Act to ensure accountability and public confidence in law enforcement through citizen and government oversight.” That's a reference to Bill 36, which is making its way through the Legislature.

There are a lot of questions about this whole issue of proper public civilian oversight, and we keep having to deal with issues that occur, events that occur. For example, the recent event – and I think that I can talk about this because it's not before the courts anymore – the Edmonton police officer who used a taser in respect to an individual who was sleeping in a car. I think he used it some five different times. The judge who handled the case of the person being dealt with found the use of the taser to be excessive. What was the expression? Cruel and unusual punishment. Then this was turned over to the Calgary Crown prosecutor's office. In order to not appear that there be any bias, it was turned over to the Calgary office, and then it was sent back to the Edmonton Police Service, to the acting chief of police of the Edmonton Police Service, where there's an internal investigation.

There's where the problem is. How can an internal investigation by the acting chief of police satisfy the public in terms of public, transparent, open accountability? It's still a case of police investigating police. I think that as long as we're going to have all those kinds of incidents occur, then the public will continue to ask questions about the complaint process and about accountability to the public in terms of oversight.

Now, the next point, 1.2: “Develop a model for police funding to ensure that adequate and effective policing is maintained throughout Alberta.” We've already asked questions in the Legislature about, for example, Crowsnest Pass feeling shortchanged by the Solicitor General's department in terms of their policing needs. We've raised questions about: what is the process? What is this model for police funding if it's always a question of, “Well, you have to sign on the dotted line, or you won't get any money”? There's the failure to honour previous agreements in the case of the Crowsnest Pass, the amalgamation of municipalities to form the Crowsnest Pass. They thought that they were going to get the funding that they needed. So are the rules being changed in mid-course?

Also, in terms of the model for police funding I've heard the Solicitor General mention the importance of policing for rural municipalities as extremely important, but what about Edmonton and Calgary? It still is the case that funding for police in urban Alberta at $16 per capita is the lowest in Canada. So it's nice to see the increase in the budget, but still we have to ask the question of whether the funding for policing, especially in a city like Edmonton, is adequate.

Just to mention another point, 1.7, on that same page. This is the issue of the exploitation of children via the Internet, and I think this is extremely important. No one would disagree with the importance of this issue. I'm also wondering about the funding for a provincial ICE team similar to what we have in other provinces, like the Toronto police's child exploitation section or the Ontario project P unit. Manitoba has a program, integrated child exploitation unit. What is Alberta planning to do in terms of fighting child exploitation through the Internet? What kind of strategies are in place, and what kind of funding should be put in place?

Well, there are so many issues here. Let me quickly go on to a couple of other points through this business plan. Under goal 2, the need for training, ensuring that training opportunities are provided to staff raises the whole issue about the staff in respect to courtrooms and so on. The Kyle Young incident I think brought to our attention the whole issue of whether courtroom guards are properly trained. There were two guards involved, and one only had a couple months' training, and here he was working in the courthouse. Is that adequate? So I think the issue of level of training is really important.

Goal 3. I just mention that I think that this is a really important area. We don't have time to go into it fully in terms of the rehabilitation of offenders and all the different programs that are involved and the funding that's necessary for all of those programs. I know that it's so important to enable offenders who have served their time to find their way back into the community, and societies like the John Howard Society, of course, have been working on that for years.

I did have the opportunity recently to sit down with a number of ex-cons who have served their time and who are now in various kinds of programs, and they brought to my attention how difficult it is to find their way back into the community after serving time; for example, coming out of a correctional institute without any ID and not able to even go to a bank and open an account because they have no ID. Some of them it took weeks, months to be able to find an ID. I think that there's so much that needs to be put in place in terms of enabling people to find their way back into the community.

[Dr. Brown in the chair]

Another question I have is about the victims of crime fund. According to the estimates there actually will be a surplus in the victims of crime fund. On page 340, where the victims of crime fund is outlined, in fact, in 2004-05 there was a $6 million surplus, and in the 2005-06 estimates it appears that they're almost at a $4 million surplus. So I was wondering what happens to these surpluses. Do they stay in the fund? Do they disappear into general revenue? Are these surpluses going to be used to help fund various programs for victims, fund various organizations that can assist victims of crime, fund sexual assault centres, for example? What happens to that money?

Also, I think the idea of a one-time payment to victims based on the injuries they receive is, as far as I'm concerned, quite problematic; for example, the example that we dealt with today in question period where a young man was raped in the remand centre and received one-time payment. But the payment only went so far. It didn't enable him to actually have the kind of long-term counselling that he needed. Also, it only provided medication for a short time, and then the money disappeared.

It seems to me that we have to do more. We just passed legislation looking at the basic principles of justice and respect for victims. Certainly, we need more work and more money channelled in the direction of caring for the victims of crime, especially those who are under the care of the government in their remand centre.

If I can make this comment, I didn't appreciate the reference to this young man as being some sort of criminal who deserved somehow not to be treated as a real human being. The remand centre is where people who are awaiting trial go, and they're presumed innocent until they're proven guilty. It's not a correctional institute like some of the others.

Mr. Magnus: How much should he have got for that?

Dr. B. Miller: $11,000.

Mr. Magnus: Yeah, how much?

Dr. B. Miller: That's all he got. Well, that's another issue.

What criteria are used to determine how much money a victim of crime gets?

I think that my time is up, right? Okay.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora raises a number of very good questions and some very good issues that I want to respond to.

He did mention the issue that occurred on March 3 of this year in Mayerthorpe, where four young RCMP officers lost their lives in protecting and serving this country as well as this province as well as the residents of Mayerthorpe-Whitecourt. It was a tremendous loss to all of us but, as well, obviously, a learning experience for all of us as we look at some of the issues that police officers have to deal with on a daily basis, the criticism they receive from both the public and the media on a daily basis, but as well their outpouring of service to the community and the fact that they will put their lives on the line to protect citizens.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to start off with the issue regarding IROC that the hon. member brought forward. I just wanted to provide him with some information regarding IROC. In fact, in 2004 there were significant increases in the amount of marijuana seized by the northern and southern Alberta marijuana investigative teams, known as NAMIT and SAMIT respectively. In 2004 these teams seized marijuana with an estimated street value of $131 million. These large-scale well-organized grow operations are almost exclusively the product of organized crime, and of course other criminal activity associated with marijuana grow problems, such as mortgage frauds, home invasion robberies, health issues from contaminated homes, underscore the increasing collateral damage associated with marijuana grow operations.

The RCMP report on the growth and the number of clandestine methamphetamine laboratories discovered in Alberta over the past several years. Of 23 labs discovered, 11 of these labs were known to have organized crime affiliation. This is a growing and a disturbing trend.

When we talk about organized crime and gang activity, look at the recent statistics that indicate that over 50 per cent of homicides in Calgary and Edmonton can be linked to organized crime and gang activity. Once thought to be a problem associated with major urban centres, organized crime and gangs are now spreading their tentacles to all corners of Alberta.

The Hells Angels have recently doubled their ranks and have begun a high-profile strategy of intimidation in an effort to re-establish their criminal influence throughout Alberta, as was seen in the province of B.C. just recently. Other organized crime groups, in particular Asian, aboriginal, Jamaican-based networks, have also begun to establish themselves in all parts of the province. The growth of aboriginal street gangs, including the Redd Alert, the Indian Posse, Alberta Warriors, has been realized most notably in northern Alberta. Traditional Italian organized crime links have been expanded in the Calgary region.

When we talk about the integrated response to organized crime, Mr. Chairman, that began just two years ago, the response and the work that has been done so far has been tremendous, needless to say, and the funding that is provided to them does provide for 51 officers that work both in Edmonton and in Calgary and with the RCMP in an integrated model. They work together sharing information, sharing resources, sharing intelligence so that intelligence-lead investigation provides the information they need to in fact work together to target major organized crime in the province.

When the hon. member speaks about the 200 officers that were included in this year's budget – some say it was the largest increase of police officers in Alberta since the March West. I don't believe that's so, but it would be close. Budget 2005 included $24 million for the deployment of nearly 200 police officers into Alberta's communities. Over 100 new RCMP provincial police service members will be hired for rural Alberta, and these officers will be in those communities that the province pays for, so they'll be in those communities that are all under 5,000.

The equivalent of an additional 30 RCMP provincial police service members will also be redeployed from the court security prisoner transport duties that they presently have throughout Alberta. Whether it's in northern Alberta transporting prisoners or whether they're sitting in the courts in Grande Prairie, Peace River, or Drumheller, Mr. Chairman, these officers will be redeployed with provincial protection officers that will be replacing them and their duties in the courts to ensure the protection of the judges, the prosecutors, defence counsel, the public in the courtroom as well as the court premise and the security of the court building or provincial building.

The 60 new positions that the hon. member mentioned, Mr. Chairman, will be created to enhance Alberta's response to organized crime. These 60 new positions will be in a combination of provincial and municipal police positions: 20 of them will be allocated to the RCMP, and 40 will be allocated to municipal services; namely, Edmonton and Calgary as well as Medicine Hat and Lethbridge.

An additional $6 million for municipal policing grants should also result in an increase in municipal police resources, although it will be up to the affected municipality to determine exact numbers. These new officers will be brought on stream as soon as possible, recognizing that police services will have to recruit and train individuals to fill the newly created positions. When we talk about these 60 new officer positions, we don't want to take 20 from Edmonton and take them off the street, Mr. Chairman, or from Calgary or from the RCMP. What we want to do is ensure that for the 18 that we're going to be funding here in Edmonton, they're also going to be hiring 18 so that they're not going to lose any manpower on the street.

The hon. member mentioned as well the Police Amendment Act, 2005, that is before this Legislature in third reading, and the need for amendments to the act. The act is almost 20 years old. It was probably drafted in 1985 and proclaimed in 1988, Mr. Chairman, so obviously there's a need. I think many, many of us on this side of the House firmly believe that legislation should be evolving, that it shouldn't remain static. We should always be looking at legislation in the future to see that as society and trends change, we ensure that we're staying on top of how the legislation should be affecting every Albertan.

The draft changes that the hon. member mentioned with regard to the new act will enhance the role of the local police commission in overseeing the complaint process by ensuring that each commission has a public complaint director, allowing the commission to initiate an external investigation, ensuring that commissions are trained in their roles and responsibilities, requiring the chief of police to provide the commission with 45-day progress reports. As well, it will enhance the oversight of complaints at the provincial level by making the director of law enforcement responsible for monitoring the process of complaints, requiring that serious incidents that may require an external investigation or process monitoring system be reported, and allowing for external investigations or monitoring of any complaint or incident where it is in the public's interest.

Obviously, Mr. Chairman, these are extremely important amendments to this Police Act here in Alberta. We are taking the lead with regard to civilian oversight. No other province has four arms of civilian oversight, so obviously we are making changes forward in ensuring that civilian oversight has the ability to ensure transparent investigations with regard to internal investigations.

I want to assure and advise the hon. member, though, as well, that there are two clear and distinct investigations. One is a criminal investigation, and one obviously is a conduct investigation, which is governed by the regulations, which clearly lists all the offences that an officer could be charged with and could be reprimanded for. Again, it provides for discipline from a reprimand to dismissal from the police service. So all of those issues with regard to discipline, with regard to misconduct are all listed in the present regulations.

The act will provide for increased public oversight to ensure that investigations are timely, that they're done appropriately. Our time limit ties in with five of the 10 provinces. We have a one-year time limit. Ontario has six months, and Newfoundland and Labrador has a three-month time period for the laying of complaints, which we feel, obviously, is extremely short.

10:50

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member talked a little bit about the issue with regard to the taser situation and the investigation that took place originally back, I believe, in 2002-2003. An incident occurred, and a criminal investigation by the Edmonton Police Service took place. The file went to the Crown prosecutor's office in Calgary. It was reviewed by two senior Crown prosecutors independently of each other as well as an additional review by the chief Crown prosecutor before the file was sent back to the chief of police here in Edmonton, Chief daCosta, who was advised, obviously, through the chief Crown in Calgary that there was not a reasonable likelihood of conviction; therefore, no charges should be considered laid. That, of course, was released this afternoon to the public.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

I should mention, though, as well, that now that the criminal charge has been dealt with, Mr. Chairman, the process of the internal investigation will just begin. Therefore, that internal investigation will look at the regulations to determine: was there excessive use of force? If there was excessive use of force, obviously the process will have to undertake itself to determine, in fact, what that was. Of course, there is a process in place under the act to provide an internal hearing for the individual.

When we talk about the use of taser or we talk about the use of enforcement where they talk about the use-of-force policy, all police services throughout Alberta have a use-of-force policy. The hon. member mentioned that with regard to use of force, and I just want to bring that up, Mr. Chairman, because there are use-of-force policies throughout the province. Are they consistent? That, in fact, we're going to be working on. First of all is the arrest control techniques; second is the use of a baton; third would be pepper spray; fourth, possibly the taser – I don't know where that fits in, but we are working on that – and fifth, of course, is lethal force, which would be your sidearm. But provincial standards regarding policing initiatives are critical in where we want to go, and standards have been created and forwarded to all police services in Alberta for implementation.

We've begun the process of staffing and auditing, that will be able to assist our police services in addressing the needs outlined by the standards and ensure that the standards have been implemented and are adhered to. These, of course, Mr. Chairman, come in alliance with our Auditor General's recommendation regarding policing standards. So we are responding to those issues. The police services were amongst those calling for provincial leadership in this area and were also key stakeholders in the development of the standards, so we anticipate no issues with compliance by various police services as we move forward this year and into the future with regard to other areas of policing standards to ensure that policies and procedures fall in line with each other and that they are similar throughout our various police services.

The hon. member brought up the issue regarding the new model of policing, and I want to touch on that and the fact that it's a very, very important issue. The town of Crownsnest Pass was mentioned. But I do want to just let the hon. member know that prior to budget 2004 the department consulted with the AUMA and the AAMD and C on a prospective policing funding formula. At that time they agreed to a formula that would come about, but obviously with concerns in the budget last year the numbers weren't the same as what they had hoped for.

This year, last fall, we met with stakeholders regarding our legislation but, as well, regarding funding. We met with the AUMA and the AAMD and C and looked at what we could do with the funding that we had in place but, as well, what Treasury Board was going to be providing to us. We also received numerous letters from towns and cities with populations between 5,000 and 20,000 because of the significant costs of providing funding for policing and the minimal tax base that some of those smaller towns have. That's the issue that we wanted to address. We wanted to address the fact that those smaller communities needed the additional funding. Those smaller communities don't have the tax base that the larger communities do. In total there are eight municipalities between 20,000 and 100,000.

So what we did, obviously, is that we came down with a formula that would determine that those communities between 5,000 and 20,000 each receive a base payment of $200,000 with a per capita of $8 on their population over 5,000. Those communities between 20,000 and 100,000 were given a base rate of $100,000 and a per capita of $14 on their population over 20,000. Calgary and Edmonton continue to receive the same per capita grant as they had the prior year, with a little extra funding going to Calgary with a population increase and the same amount going to Edmonton as their census hasn't come into play yet.

Mr. Chairman, those are some of the issues with relation to the budget.

The Crownsnest Pass issue is a very interesting one that we've had to deal with and work with. Four communities have amalgamated into one with a total population of, I believe, 6,700 people. The Police Act clearly states that municipalities under 5,000 will receive policing provided by the province of Alberta. It doesn't talk about a policing grant. It doesn't talk about a municipal policing grant. There is no mention of a grant in the Police Act. What it does say is that municipalities with a population under 5,000 will receive their policing paid for by the province of Alberta.

So the policing grant program provides for funding to communities over 5,000, and that's where the issue is. I know that the hon. Minister of . . . [Mr. Cenaiko's speaking time expired.]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank the hon. minister for his explanations. The only other issue that I think was not dealt with is the victims of crime fund.

I wanted to focus for a few minutes on correctional services. I notice in the budget on page 335, vote 3.2.1, in relation to adult remand and correctional centres there is an increase in the budget of $6 million. I'm not objecting to the amount. I think that in time as the critic for the Solicitor General I'd like to investigate correctional institutes throughout Alberta and find out what kind of conditions they have and what kind of improvements are being made, but maybe you could help us understand how that increase in money is going to be used.

Of course, the Remand Centre in Edmonton comes up for discussion, it seems, every year. If you're looking back at previous reviews of the budget, there seem to be lengthy discussions about the Remand Centre and often references that it's a kind of Third World situation. Even today we had a discussion in question period about it.

Double-bunking. I know there are statistics about doubling-bunking across Canada, but that doesn't give us the excuse in a very rich province to have overcrowding at the remand centre. The remand centre isn't even a place for people who are sentenced to periods of incarceration. Inmates are sent elsewhere for that. In the remand centre you're waiting for trial, innocent until proven guilty, so why are we putting people into those kinds of situations?

In the past it's been the case where people actually asked for longer sentences so that they could get to go to Fort Saskatchewan or some other correctional centre and not stay in the remand centre. All kinds of studies have proven how detrimental overcrowding is to people in those kinds of situations. So how much of this money, this increase, is going toward the Edmonton Remand Centre? What kind of plans are there in the future to deal with the remand centre? How about building something different, something that is more humanitarian than what we have now?

The other issue, if I could switch completely to another issue, is the reference on page 404 under 1.10 to the youth justice committee program and especially the relationship between youth justice committees and probation officers. Can the minister tell us under what authority, specifically, probation officers have to review decisions of youth justice committees? What is the process of appeal if a young person is unhappy with the decision of a youth justice committee? Can probation officers, then, just reverse what the youth justice committee suggests? There was an example in Stony Plain just recently where a youth justice committee resigned because of a difference of opinion with the probation officer. I was wondering if you could shed some light on the role of youth justice committees in relationship to probation officers.

Two further questions.

The Chair: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much. I'll finish up answering the hon. member's questions as well. The hon. member mentioned with regard to project ICE, the exploitation of children, and obviously how important this project is going to be for us in Alberta. Although it's not mentioned in the report or the term isn't mentioned in the budget, we do address it in the plan that we're working on presently with the police services throughout the province, having just met with, in fact, the chiefs of the RCMP in Edmonton and Calgary yesterday.

The accessibility and anonymity of the Internet has dramatically increased the dangers of child exploitation. The Internet allows pedophiles to make contact with children and youth and exchange illegal pictures of abuse, all under the guise of secrecy. This makes addressing these forms of technological crime very challenging, and it's important that police and other stakeholders are educated about new technologies and methods of interception. RCMP and municipal services are proposing establishing in conjunction with the Solicitor General an integrated child exploitation, or ICE, unit in Alberta to better address these serious crimes by supporting law enforcement and exposing and prosecuting those who use the Internet to sexually exploit children.

Mr. Chairman, we are currently addressing this problem through collaborative partnerships between key players such as government ministries, law enforcement agencies, Internet service providers, and the public. A recently developed strategic plan known as the prevention of child and youth sexual exploitation under the Alberta children and youth initiative outlines five key areas of action: education, awareness, prevention/protection/enforcement, research, and training. Several ministries are involved, and the Alberta Solicitor General is involved in implementing specific strategies for each key area of action. Alberta will effectively investigate and enforce laws specific to the exploitation of children through the use of increased funding provided in Budget 2005.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member spoke briefly about issues related to the training of officers within our corrections system regarding various issues that have happened in the past. It's a very good question, the fact that training is a tremendous issue. Training will ensure that practices are done properly, but as well it ensures that officers don't forget what their role and their responsibility are and what their purpose and what their duties are on a day-to-day basis. As one knows, one can become complacent at times, and therefore ongoing training and lifelong learning are critical in any occupation, whether it's in corrections or whether it's in the provincial protection officer category. So while ensuring that new staff receive training required to successfully perform their basic employment responsibilities, the department also remains focused on ensuring that ongoing training initiatives are available to better prepare staff to meet new priorities and new challenges.

Mr. Chairman, the Solicitor General is committed to ensuring that its staff are provided the skills necessary to fulfill their responsibilities to protect the community and to provide appropriate rehabilitative opportunities to offenders under their supervision. When issues occur, as the hon. member mentioned, this department takes it very seriously, through an internal investigative process, whether or not discipline is required. It takes it very seriously. On the incident that occurred, was it a lack of training, or has a new program come into place where possibly training wasn't provided? These are some things that we're looking at. As I mentioned, lifelong learning is one of the areas that I'm stressing within our department and all the way through all of our various branches for individuals, that ongoing training is essential to providing effective service levels within this ministry.

The hon. member mentioned and spoke briefly about offender rehabilitation, and obviously it's a very important area. As he mentioned, he didn't want to go through a whole bunch of different programs, and I'm not going to either for the sake of time, but I will mention, Mr. Chairman, a few points. The Solicitor General is committed to working with partners to ensure the safety of the community by addressing the mental health and addiction needs of young offenders. We have those programs in our young offender centres now, and we'll continue to provide those services to them, whether they're through nurses, whether they're through psychologists, whether they're through trained personnel that can provide the program needs that these young kids have.

As well, partnerships with other youth services ministries are key to providing youth with the skills, programs, and supports that they need. As cross-ministry initiatives we need to be working together with Children's Services with regard to ensuring that those kids that are in government care that end up in one of our young offender centres are provided with the programs and, as well, with the continuing education that they require to build to their full potential.

Transition support for offenders remains a priority, which includes both successful transition back home to their community from custody and successful transition from adolescence to adulthood. Mr. Chairman, I can mention this as being extremely important as well in the fact that in reviewing the Child Welfare Act and the proclamation of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, we in fact did build into that act the transition funding provided to kids between the ages of 18 to 22 that provides them with funding so that at age 18 they don't stop being a ward of the government just because they're an adult but can continue on in a program funded by the province to ensure that they can continue on in education. As in that program, we also want to ensure that we are providing those supports for our offenders that are transitioning out of a facility back into a community.

Just a couple of other areas here. With regard to the rehabilitation of offenders, Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to bring up the pilot project in Calgary. The Calgary domestic violence court began operation in May 2000, and its outcomes are being evaluated. Although this domestic violence initiative is shared between partnering ministries, specialized courts fall under the jurisdiction of the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

The Alberta government is committed to providing safe communities for all Albertans, and that includes freedom from violence within our homes. Victims of domestic violence do not have to stop the violence on their own. The criminal justice system can and will take the lead role. As I mentioned, the Solicitor General will continue to work with its partners to develop family violence initiatives throughout the province.

The hon. member mentioned the victims of crime fund on page 340. I couldn't turn to it quickly enough, but I believe he was talking about the Victims of Crime Act grant program funds. I can tell you that the surpluses that occurred – well, first of all, the program funds eligible groups and organizations that apply for funding to provide programs and services that benefit victims of crime, and the act establishes the Victims of Crime Programs Committee, appointed by the Solicitor General, to evaluate applications for grants and make funding recommendations. The Victims of Crime Programs Committee meets twice per year to evaluate the grant applications, and the program initiatives that are approved for funding are required to enter into agreements to ensure that the funding they do receive is properly expended.

I'm just looking at the $3.879 million. Is that it, hon. member? That's one area from the previous year to this year. The increase of $3.3 million includes the new funding approved, or $2.9 million, plus an internal transfer. The funding increase will be directed towards consultation implementation, as recommended by the MLA review committee. So the overexpenditure of $3 million in the year 2004-05 represents primarily the $2.9 million funding increase for consultation implementation, which was approved by Treasury Board.

The hon. member mentioned 3.2.1, the adult remand and correctional centres, looking at the increase there. The adult remand and correctional centres provide funding to operate the eight remand and correctional facilities throughout the province. Of the $93 million in 2005-06 approximately $79 million, or 85 per cent, is allocated for manpower costs – that's 85 per cent for manpower costs – and $14 million, or 15 per cent, is allocated for various supplies and services.

I believe this also will include the funding for the new vests that all of our corrections officers will be receiving, which will be the first corrections officers in the country to be provided with the option of having one or not having one versus sharing a vest, which we felt was inappropriate.

As well, under that section, 3.2.1, the adult remand centres include the Edmonton Remand Centre, Calgary Remand Centre, Medicine Hat, Red Deer, primarily centres housing offenders that are awaiting trial. We currently service approximately 1,320 offenders on a daily basis. The adult correctional centres, which are included in this area as well, include Fort Saskatchewan, Calgary, Peace River, and Lethbridge. These centres provide custody and rehabilitative program services for approximately 900 offenders, with programs including counselling and addictions programs, education, and work programs.

Now, the hon. member also mentioned the Edmonton Remand Centre. In reviewing last year's Hansard – the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre was the critic at that time. Obviously, similar questions arise probably every year, but I did read the hon. member's concerns that were raised a year ago. Some are very similar to the questions that you raised today with regard to the centre.

The Edmonton Remand Centre continues to function adequately for its designed purpose. Recent increases in the staffing complement have been made in response to higher inmate populations, and the drug testing programs have also been enhanced to further ensure inmate and staff safety.

A request to replace the aging Edmonton Remand Centre with a new and larger facility is currently under consideration for capital project funding. Once approved, it's expected it'll take some time to design and construct, but in the meantime all the necessary steps will be taken to ensure that this facility remains appropriate to the demands placed upon it.

Now, the hon. member also mentioned with regard to double-bunking in this facility as well as in our corrections facilities. This is basically an issue of population pressures throughout North America, throughout Europe. Population pressures are currently being experienced in remand centres and correctional centres throughout Canada and the United States. This segment of the inmate population is growing beyond forecasted expectations both, as I mentioned, provincially and nationally. In 2003 the corrections services division developed a series of contingencies for managing remand offenders, including plans to relocate remand offenders as population pressures in existing facilities dictate the need to do so. While the current remand facilities are being operated at more than their original designed capacity, they remain viable in providing safe and secure custody for our offenders.

Now, the final question that I have from the hon. member is with regard to youth justice committees, and he wanted a little bit of information regarding the program and the appeal process. Currently we have 116 youth justice committees in Alberta, which have been established under section 69 of the Young Offenders Act and section 18 of the Youth Criminal Justice Act. The committees work with Alberta's justice system to deal with young offenders in their communities. They provide a forum for citizens to work out differences between young offenders, victims, and the community. They also offer an alternative to the formal court process and the possibility of time in custody for offenders. The committees are also concerned about victims and their rights, and the victim's input is encouraged whenever possible.

Some youth justice committees provide sentencing advice to local youth court judges. In 2004 the Alberta Solicitor General provided $325,000 in funding to help the communities recruit volunteers, conduct training, assist co-ordination, and provide administrative supplies. I've signed hundreds of certificates of recognition, which have been presented at annual meetings and volunteer recognition events to recognize the dedication and commitment of the volunteers. Of a special note, Alberta hosted the first national youth justice committee workshop in February of 2002.

The Alberta Solicitor General has utilized the youth justice committees as a tremendous partnership between the community and young offenders, with the ability for the young offender to assimilate back into the community having known that he made a mistake, having known that he may have made two mistakes but that the community itself is not giving up on him. The community itself will deem a punishment, minor though it may be, a punishment that may be suitable for the individual to ensure that he continues, hopefully, on the right track and not on the wrong track.

As I mentioned, Alberta has 116 youth justice committees, and they work with Alberta's justice system to hold young offenders properly accountable for their crimes, and they do offer an alternative to the formal court process.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I've got a few questions here for the minister, and I know that some other members are anxious to get questions requested too in the time limit. I'm not sure if the minister had an opportunity to finish his comments on the youth justice committees, but if he didn't, he could certainly fill us in some more.

I thought I would focus on just a couple of areas. Traffic safety is one I'm particularly interested in. It's in the business plans in various places. I choose to focus on this because I think traffic safety affects the lives of a huge number of Albertans. The department's own business plans mentioned that there were 113,000 traffic collisions in Alberta in 2003, and that works out to basically one every five minutes, every hour, 24 hours a day, 365 days a year. So in the amount of time that we will debate this budget, two hours, there will have been about 25 traffic collisions, and that's far too high. That really doesn't indicate the seriousness of this problem because it makes no mention of the fatalities and the injuries that result, the cost to the health care system.

I know that families are shattered by traffic fatalities. I've seen that too often in my own family and in my extended family, where a number of relatives have died in car accidents with just devastating effects. There's no sense here of the cost of traffic collisions to the health care system either or to the entire economy when productive, healthy, contributing individuals are suddenly injured or paralyzed or killed. It's a terrible cost to our society. If anything, I think it should be a higher priority here because it seems to me that it's one of those areas where prevention would pay off so well.

I wonder, when I look here and see maybe four sentences mentioned in a couple of places, why there isn't greater priority, and I know that other departments are involved: Infrastructure and Transportation, Justice, and maybe some others. But I'm looking for some real leadership on this issue from this government, and I would like to know from this minister what progress is being made, what measures are being used to assess that progress. Are we looking at a comprehensive set of measures that includes the cost to the health care system, injuries, fatalities, the financial cost to society? What kinds of measures are we seeing? Some kind of cost-benefit analysis would be helpful. My guess is that investments in reducing traffic collisions have a tremendous benefit financially and emotionally and otherwise for society. So I'm really left wondering why we aren't seeing more aggressive efforts at traffic safety education, and I'm wondering what leadership role this minister is intending to play on issues around traffic safety.

I noticed that the Member for Edmonton-Glenora and the critic for this department asked some questions on the youth justice committees, and we do have some concerns around those committees and their independence and their legitimacy and authority to act in the way sometimes that they act.

I will just limit my other comment this time, so that others have a chance to get up, to some specific questions on the communications unit of the department. In particular, I am looking at the ministry organizational chart on page 400 of the business plan. There is one whole box here called Communications. Interestingly – and this is typical of departments of this government – the communications branch comes between the deputy minister and everything else in the department. So it seems, at least in the presentation here, to have a certain mediating role and, undoubtedly, substantial influence on the correctional services, the public security, the aboriginal justice initiatives, and presumably strategic services and strategic human resource services. All of those are at one level, and above them is communications, spin.

I would be interested to know from the minister how much is spent on communications, how much is spent by the Public Affairs Bureau in addition to the Solicitor General's own budget on communications, what mandate and role they have, how many staff. What are the categories of staff? Is there a director? Are there communications officers? Ultimately, who does the director of communications there report to? Does that person report to the Deputy Solicitor General, or in reality does that person report to the Public Affairs Bureau and from there through to the chief of staff of the Premier's office?

With those questions, bearing in mind that others have questions to ask, I'll take my seat. But I do look forward to some comments on traffic safety, any completing comments on youth justice committees, and some details on the communications function and unit of this department.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Hon. minister, did you want to take another?

Mr. Cenaiko: No. I'll be happy to answer these, please.

Just regarding the youth justice item that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview brings up as well, as I mentioned earlier, the ministry continues to support and assist all communities that have expressed an interest in establishing a youth justice committee because there are a number of communities out there that aren't involved and haven't been involved yet. We do have individuals, obviously, within our department that have a vast experience and a vast knowledge in working with young people as well as working with communities and the fact that they're developing a committee. The majority of the committees are involved in administering these extrajudicial sanctions programs for first- and second-time offenders who have committed minor offences. The youth justice committees provide sentencing advice to the local youth court judge on occasion.

The department supports the youth justice committees through annual grants, as I mentioned earlier, provincial, regional, and local training opportunities, ongoing case management liaison, office space and supplies, and volunteer recognition, which is extremely important as there are approximately 1,500 volunteers involved in addressing youth crime in our communities throughout the province. Each community is assigned a liaison probation officer, who provides training and ongoing case management advice. Those are provided throughout the province and, of course, vary in degree as to how busy they are, obviously, from community to community.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview as well mentioned and discussed at length issues within our strategy 1.16 and traffic safety. I just wanted to mention that – and, in fact, I have it here, the strategy. This is good reading material for the Legislative Assembly on those nights that it can't get along. The Alberta traffic safety plan, which was provided by the retired assistant commissioner, Don McDermid, provided a very detailed and lengthy report, Saving Lives on Alberta's Roads: Report and Recommendations for Traffic Collision Fatality and Injury Reduction Strategy report.

The traffic safety review is a multiministerial initiative, which is co-chaired by the Solicitor General, Infrastructure and Transportation, and the Minister of Justice, and involves 35 government and nongovernment stakeholder organizations for a made-in-Alberta solution. Now, the recommendations from the McDermid report have been examined by a number of stakeholder committees, strategies have been identified and prioritized, and we expect the final report to be completed very soon, actually; the end of this month, I'm hoping, and that's as the co-chair. I'm hoping it's the end of the month, but it will be very soon.

From an enforcement perspective, though, we've identified a need to increase traffic safety resources and to review existing legislation to determine efficiencies and alternative service delivery methods. The work on this project is moving forward as quickly as we can effectively manage it, and I anticipate we will be able to address the goals of the vision 2010 traffic safety program. Funding requirements associated with these strategies will be identified, and we hope to move forward to Treasury Board with our funding needs as soon as possible.

There are some major funding requirements in this that I have to look at as the Solicitor General, in fact, because of course one of the issues that was identified during the review was the fact of the number of RCMP officers we have in rural Alberta. So part of that strategy has changed because of the fact that we needed to get, now, an additional 200 officers, approximately 130 new RCMP officers in rural Alberta.

The issue is: how do we deploy those officers? We can't deploy all of them to work on highways and look after selective traffic enforcement programs, so not just myself but obviously the assistant commissioner of the RCMP will have to look at those major issues in rural Alberta regarding the high number of collisions. The high number of collisions in rural Alberta leads to a higher number of fatalities as well.

Those are some of the issues that we are going to be discussing, the manpower requirements that may be required. Again, traffic safety is a priority, but so is protecting our communities in rural Alberta, so we'll have to balance the needs of the community versus the needs of traffic enforcement. I'm hopeful that we're going to find a solution or a medium in the middle there that will be able to provide the biggest bang for our buck, so to speak. So we are going to be addressing those issues regarding traffic safety.

The hon. member also spoke somewhat regarding communications and the communications chart, talked about the director of communications. Really, a director of communications is hired by the Public Affairs branch but is the director for the Solicitor General's office.

Dr. Taft: Who pays the bill?

Mr. Cenaiko: The Public Affairs Bureau, I believe, pays the bill. If I'm wrong, I apologize, but to my knowledge the Public Affairs Bureau pays the fees for her salary.

Mr. Stevens: He gave you a thumbs-up.

Mr. Cenaiko: Oh, okay. Good. She does report directly to me. She doesn't report to the deputy Solicitor General; she reports directly to me. We do have communications staff within our office, though, that obviously have to look at incoming mail, letters that are coming in, and, of course, drafting some responses to some of that mail. So there are employees within the department that provide communication support within the ministry, but the staff for, I guess, the strategic portion of the Solicitor General's office is provided by the Public Affairs branch.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Just a couple of points that I wanted to raise with the Solicitor General. First of all, could I get a more thorough breakdown on the plan for deputy constables? In his opening remarks the minister spoke on the special constables and solidifying their role in the process.

The idea of deputy constables was first floated in the draft MLA review of the Police Act in 2000, I'm thinking maybe 2002. It stayed in the final draft, which is one of the few things that survived. The unmanned aerial drone disappeared between version 1 and version 2. I thought that was very entertaining; we could spy on all those anarchist cows out there in rural Alberta. That didn't make the cut to the second one, but the deputy constables did. I'd like the minister to outline very clearly: what exactly will be the role that the deputy constables play? What will be their pay scales, particularly in comparison to what I would call full-fledged police officers?

What will be the policy around arming deputy constables? What level do they have? I know that with police officers they're trained that you one-up the response. If someone's coming at you with fists, the officer is to use something one up from that, a club. If they come at you with a knife, you use a gun, et cetera, et cetera. So where are these deputy constables going to fit, and how are they armed? What role exactly do they see them playing, and how does the department see this fitting if they, for example, do checkstops? Okay. Yes. But when we look at the evidence, Mr. Chairman, that shows us that a number of firearms infractions and, in fact, drug busts are actually discovered during checkstops. So to say, "Oh, checkstops are pretty innocent," well, no, they're not actually, and it escalates very quickly.

I do not understand this government's ongoing desire to put lesser trained people into jobs doing most of the same work but not all of it and pay them a lot less. That's what I see happening with these deputy constables. It's just a way to not have to pay police constables for all of their training. I'm very concerned about this, so I want this outlined in detail. What are the expectations? How much are they going to get paid? How are they going to be armed? Exactly what jobs they're going to do, and evidence-based decision-making on whether that's appropriate for them to be involved in.

Ms Pastoor: Same as LPNs.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. It's exactly the same as the LPN structure. That's what my concern is, that they just get them to do most of the work for a lot less pay. I really hope that's not the case, but I suspect, knowing this government, it is. So I will wait, if necessary, for a detailed response in writing on that one.

I'd like to go on to the next subject now, and that's the definition of victim. I have been campaigning for some time to get full funding for sexual assault centres in Alberta, and nobody's picking up the tab here. It bounces around between the Solicitor General, who sort of picks it up, kind of, sort of, under victims services and under domestic violence. Except sexual assault isn't domestic violence; it's sexual assault and shouldn't be lumped in with that. The way you treat it is different, and the way you detect it is different, and the way it goes to court is different. They keep lumping it in there, but they don't pay for very much of it.

A big part of the problem in being able to get funding for the sexual assault centres was the definition of victim. Now, this came up in the review that was done and stickhandled through by the Member for Calgary-Shaw, and I know that there was a series of recommendations that came out of that review. I know that there's enough in the surplus that that department has been stockpiling to pay for the implementation of the recommendations that came out of the review, but a snagging point was the definition of victim. So has the definition of victim been revisited? Has it been expanded to move forward into the new millennium and be able to deal with some of the issues that have been identified around the old definition of victim?

Next subject. I was listening carefully, and I thought I heard, but I'm not sure. Could the minister please outline exactly what treatment options are available to people who have been convicted of offences and are serving time? What is the array of programs and particularly the treatments that are now available to people that are serving time in provincial jails? Particularly, I'm interested in what kinds of treatment programs are available for drug and alcohol addictions. Do they get a three-day program, a one-month program, no program at all? What exactly is available if you are incarcerated under provincial sentencing for drug and alcohol treatment? Additionally, what programs for work enhancement or education are available to people that are serving time?

The minister didn't seem to quite understand what we were asking about when we talked about the surplus that was last year $13 million. That's the surplus we're talking about, that has been accumulated through the victims of crime fund. The surcharges are collected by the courts and directed back to the victims of crime fund, and that money is to then be flowed through to victims of crime programs.

What the ministry and the previous minister, anyway, had been doing was that if they took in $6.5 million, they only spent $3.5 million or $4 million. Each year they'd been accumulating, oh, $2 million, $3 million, $4 million, and over several years, while I've been watching it – last year we were at a $13 million surplus. This is the money that I was saying could be used to implement the recommendations that came out of the victims of crime fund review led by the Member for Calgary-Shaw.

So that's the surplus we're talking about. How much is it today? How much do you expect it to be by the end of the year and why? If there's still a surplus, why? That money is supposed to be spent on victims' services. Why is the department hoarding it?

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I want to go back again around the youth justice committees. Can the minister tell us under what authority or what act specifically empowers probation officers to not only review but to arbitrarily change the decision of youth justice committees? Can the minister inform us of what the process of appeal is if a youth is unhappy with the decision of a youth justice committee? Are probation officers trained to render sentences to young offenders, or is their role to ensure that they comply with the conditions of their sentences?

Additionally, can the minister explain how a youth justice committee is supported if any decision that they make can be arbitrarily overturned by a probation officer with no consultation with the committee and without informing that committee? This is obviously a very real case I'm referring to, that happened in Stony Plain. I'd like the minister to explain how the legislation allowed that situation to happen and all of the various questions I've asked specifically around it. Under what authority – what act empowers this to happen? How do the monitoring and compliance take place?

Those were the issues that I wanted to raise specifically with the minister. I appreciate the opportunity to do that. Any questions he's not able to answer fully at this time, I'm happy to receive the answers in writing. Although this places some pressure upon him, I would ask to receive the answers before we're expected to vote on the final budget of the appropriation bill. Difficult for me to know whether to support the budget if I don't have the answers to my questions.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to get up and say a few things about the Solicitor General's department and the budget. I want to just start out by acknowledging the tremendous loss that was suffered with the loss of the four officers at Mayerthorpe and the tremendous respect in which all of the peace officers in this province are held.

I do want to say that from our point of view the increase in police as contained in the budget is a positive one. We certainly had tried to make an issue of policing levels in the province and think that 200 additional police is a good start, but it's confined to those municipalities that have RCMP policing. There's a need to increase funding for larger municipalities that have their own police services. In particular, there's a need to provide support for community policing initiatives within the large municipal areas. I think that that is something that I've seen firsthand, in my work as a city councillor, as a tremendous success story. I regret that the police services in Edmonton and Calgary, in particular, have backed off a little bit from that direction. I would like to see that initiative renewed.

I'd certainly like to know from the minister generally what the strategy is around gangs in the province. I know that he's talked about it a little bit already, but I'm particularly interested in the initiatives that are being taken to combat organized crime at the highest level, not talking necessarily about small-scale operations but the very sophisticated and well-organized gang.

I want to talk just briefly, Mr. Chairman, about the need for police to have some civilian oversight. I think we need to strengthen our police commissions, and we need to have some means of making sure that the police are not investigating the police. There are a number of recent examples, including the tasing incident, where police investigating the police have failed to deal adequately, and it's taken a judge to actually point out how serious that situation is. The Randy Fryingpan issue I think was not dealt with appropriately by the police. It did take a judge to point out just how serious that case is. I do believe that there are, in fact, methods that complaints can be dealt with by others other than the police. There can be trained investigators who are not police. I would like to know the minister's reasons for shying away from that.

I think, given the lateness of the hour, Mr. Chairman, I'm just going to leave it there just very briefly. I have a number of other major comments, but I'll have an opportunity, I'm sure, to talk to the minister about some of this stuff later.

The Chair: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre raised a very good question with regard to the special constable program. The recommendation that came out of the MLA policing review did mention the term "deputy constable." As she's aware, I'm sure, the review of the roles and responsibilities of special constables, the MLA review, is being chaired by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, who is a former sergeant with the Calgary Police Service so obviously has a background regarding working with law enforcement officials. The whole idea behind the review is to do just exactly all the questions that she asked.

Ms Blakeman: But you did it twice.

Mr. Cenaiko: No, the special constables were never reviewed. The special constable review is going to be looking at special constables. The police review looked at police. There's a huge difference between – a special constable is not a police officer. They are peace officers under the Police Act. This one is a police officer who has this authority, and a special constable has this authority. That's the issue.

If you're confused by it, I would think that 99 per cent of Albertans are. There are a lot of people confused regarding what roles and responsibilities these individuals have in a community when they're working right next to the RCMP officer or they're working for the city of Edmonton as bylaw officers, or whatever you want to call it. This is the issue, and this is the study that is going to be implemented.

Actually, the first public meeting is going to be held on Friday in Calgary. The whole role and responsibility of these individuals is going to be reviewed to determine: what role can they play? In what area within law enforcement can they actually provide services to the community? Does it need to be very expensive – the RCMP's numbers are $144,000 per officer; Edmonton's are approximately $130,000 per officer – to respond to, possibly, a three-day old garage break-in where there's no evidence? What about a stolen bike? Do you need an emergency responder to attend a call like that?

This is what the questions are that we're going to be asking the public. We're going to be asking municipalities, municipal districts and counties, towns and cities throughout the province to find out what, in fact, these officers provide for them now and what, in fact, they could be providing in the future.

Now, there are two pilots that are going on right now, Mr. Chairman, that are very exciting. In fact, one is in the hon. member's riding, Edmonton-Centre, that the Edmonton Police Service is going to be announcing here, I believe, very shortly. I am actually going to be providing funding for the pilot for four additional officers that are going to be I believe called community support officers or something of that nature, that are actually special constables. They have the special constable designation, but they are actually peace officers that will be providing services within the inner city, within the hon. member's riding. So that's going to be announced here very shortly, and I'm very proud to be able to fund four of those positions.

We have the same program in Calgary, that was announced just two weeks ago with Mayor Bronconnier with regard to providing nine officers in the inner city, regarding the Beltline and the East Village areas, to have peace officers walk the beat in the community.

They'll be problem solving. They'll be meeting with the residents. They'll be meeting with the business owners. They're going to look at: what are the issues in the area? Is there graffiti? Can they work on the graffiti and use the community supports to remove graffiti, use the community supports in the neighbourhood to remove the needles? Issues in some of these areas that have been lacking in some of those resources.

So these are two pilots that are going on, both I believe for six to eight months in length. I'm very proud to say that we're looking at these two pilots, which will help us in our review of the roles and responsibilities of special constables.

Having travelled the province just recently in various areas of the province, I can tell you this, Mr. Chairman, that there are some very good areas in the province that are utilizing special constables or peace officers in their role in the community, hired by, for example, the city of Grande Prairie. It has a tremendous program there. I think it's one that we want to look at as a future template or a future model.

I just use Grande Prairie because I haven't been to all of them, but Grande Prairie's was tremendous in the fact that they work hand-in-hand with the RCMP. They have a clear authority and role of what they can do in the community. They are in radio communication with each other. They provide non-urgent calls in the community, which frees up those police officers to respond to emergencies, to respond to those calls which police officers have been trained for. So, therefore, this program is very good. Obviously, that will be coming out in time, and I'll get the hon. members from Edmonton-Glenora and Edmonton-Centre – the booklet or the questionnaire will be coming out, I believe, within about two weeks. So I'll ensure that I get copies to them because they can definitely, as well, participate in the review.

The hon. member mentioned the issue regarding the definition of victim. She didn't mention the area of victims of a sexual assault. She's aware, I think, that on other occasions I've mentioned that I've investigated over 600 sexual and physical assaults on women, young girls, and children. So this is a very large issue. I'm very supportive of the Alberta sexual assault association and very supportive of the Calgary Sexual Assault Centre because I worked with them hand-in-hand when I worked with the police service. As well, I continue to meet with the staff there on occasion. So we don't have a listed definition of what a victim is, but I'm sure Webster's dictionary does.

As well, though, the victims can apply for funding under the victims of crime fund. There also is an appeal mechanism for them if they feel that the funding that they're receiving isn't appropriate. But there is funding that is available to them. Obviously, there's a need for ongoing assistance regarding psychological assistance for them, but again that funding is made available to them and should be there.

The programs with regard to drugs in jails. Mr. Chairman, I don't have a listing of all the programs that we provide in the prisons, but I can tell you that there are programs, obviously varying from the young offender centres to the corrections centres. There are projects regarding dealing with FAS offenders to ensure that the appropriate treatment is provided. I can tell you that education is provided. In our young offender centres we ensure that kids remain in school, that they're taking their core courses in school, ensuring that when they do leave, they can leave as if they hadn't missed school.

The issues relating to mental health and substance abuse. Programs are available looking at disrupted school experiences, inappropriate sexual behaviour, and involvement in the criminal justice system. Programs regarding these natures are all provided to these young individuals in our young offender centres. At this point in time, right now, even though our young offender centres are approximately 65 per cent full, the programs are extremely important because these offenders are leaning more towards the hard-core offenders versus the softer core with assimilating programs in the community.

In the correctional facilities, Mr. Chairman, we do provide programs with staff that are obviously well trained and through psychologists and through nursing and community support staff. They're there to provide them with programs with regard to sexual behaviour as well as alcohol and drug abuse. That's provided to them as well as education. In some of our correctional facilities we do provide them with an ability to work in the community and train for various functions, whether it's with their hands and/or some of their skills.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood brought up the fact of civilian oversight. I can mention again, Mr. Chairman, that the legislation, Bill 36, is before the Assembly now in third reading. It's there to ensure accountability in law enforcement and to restore public confidence in the police. The drafted changes will enhance the role of the local police commission in overseeing the complaint process by ensuring that each commission has a public complaint director. It allows the commission to initiate an external investigation, it ensures that the commissions are trained in their roles and responsibilities, and it requires the chief of police to provide the commission with 45-day progress reports with the status regarding the investigation of a complaint.

It also enhances the oversight of complaints at the provincial level by making the director of law enforcement responsible for monitoring the process of complaints and requiring that serious incidents that may require an internal investigation or process monitoring system be reported. It also allows for external investigations or monitoring of any complaint or incident where it is in the public interest. As I mentioned earlier: where it is in the public interest. That's why these changes are being made, to ensure that transparency is provided regarding the new legislation in our Police Amendment Act.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 11, 2005 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 05/05/11
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. Grant us daily awareness of the precious gift of life which has been given to us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Shariff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have great pleasure in introducing to you and through you to members of this Assembly our colleague the former Deputy Speaker and hon. Member for Highwood, Mr. Don Tannas. Mr. Tannas was first elected to this august Chamber in 1989 and chose to retire in 2004. He served as our Deputy Speaker for three consecutive terms. Among his many contributions to Alberta is the dedication of the rough fescue grass as Alberta's emblem. Mr. Tannas and his wife, Chris, have just returned from a four-month cruise, which took them around the world. Mr. Tannas is seated in your gallery, and I request him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, it is an honour today to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly four students from the Destiny school located in Red Deer-South constituency. They are accompanied by Rita O'Connor and Mr. Glenn Mullen, and I would ask if they would rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to this Assembly through you a group of 16 students from the Ridgevalley school. They are accompanied by a teacher, Mrs. Penny Rose, parents and helpers Mr. Darrell Willier, Mrs. Marcie Hein, Mrs. Sharlene Zenner, Mrs. Julie Zenner, and Mr. Ben Peters. I would ask them, please, to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It would be my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature my constituency assistant Kathy Holdaway from our lovely constituency of Calgary-Buffalo, right in the heart of the city. As well, Taryn Day is my summer student, that will be helping Kathy throughout the next three and a half months, working in the office and working with constituents. I'd ask that they please rise and receive a warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce two guests that I have visiting in the public gallery.

Heather Holmen is studying at the Mount Royal College in Calgary and Jessica Hawkins is a student at Grant MacEwan. These two ladies will be helping out at the Ministry of Gaming during the summer, and we're very appreciative of their help. I would ask them to rise and receive the welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 30 bright, energetic students from the Sparling elementary school in Camrose. They are accompanied by teachers Pat Findlay and Helen White and parents Karen Vasseberg and Michael Latour. They are sitting in the public gallery, so I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House the members of St. Andrew's quilting group. This group produces their quilts at St. Andrew's United Church. Their group leader is Lillian Jones, and the group members consist of Molly Jenkins, Shirley Davidson, Margaret Chase, Ciss Lukach, Carol Gray, Doreen Cheetham, Bernice Cowan, Mary Johnston, Suzanne Stein. Now, this group has been making quilts for about 50 years and donating them to the Bissell Centre. In fact, they make from 100 to 150 quilts every year for the inner-city Bissell Centre. I invite them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my honour to be able to introduce to you and through you this afternoon to all members of the Assembly 36 bright and inquisitive young minds from the Richard Secord elementary school in my constituency. They are accompanied this afternoon by teacher Mrs. Laurie Johnson and teacher Miss Jody Brenzan and parent helpers Mrs. Tammy Brown and Mrs. Carmen Friesen. I would ask that they please now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's once again my very great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly another fine Alberta artist, who, of course, lives in Edmonton-Centre. Bill Bourne is a multiple Juno award winner. He has either 10 or 20 albums out, and I'm sorry; I'm not sure which one it is. He is one of the artists that has been chosen to perform at the special concert on May 23 at the Coliseum for the Queen. I'm very proud of the contributions he's made to the Alberta music scene. I would ask him to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my greatest pleasure today to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Miss Christel Hyshka, the summer STEP student at the constituency of Edmonton-McClung. Christel is a fourth-year political sciences student at the U of A, and she enjoys many extracurricular activities. One of the most recent ones she participated in was the model UN conference, and she's also an active volunteer in different political groups. She has many plans and aspirations for the future, one of which is to pursue graduate studies and perhaps even be involved in politics herself. She is my youth outreach co-ordinator, and so far she's doing a wonderful job. She's here on a job-shadowing mission. I would ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Gary Hirtz and Gloria Lloyd. Gary and Gloria are both persons living on AISH and are advocates for other AISH recipients. Gloria is also a team captain with the MS association while Gary is an avid volunteer and participant in a number of organizations. I'd ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Little Bow, I'm not sure if your guests are here yet. Would you like to introduce them now or wait until they arrive?

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rather than revert to Introduction of Guests, I would like to acknowledge to the Assembly here special guests who have come for the first time from Providence Christian school down at Monarch. They're 15 students and two of their teachers, Mr. Chris Heikoop and Mr. Joe Kikkert. I know that I'll be meeting with them after very briefly for a picture downstairs, but so that their moms and dads know that they're up here, I wanted you to acknowledge that they're here in the Assembly and give them a warm welcome.

head: 1:40 Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Applewood Park Community Association

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Wild Rose Foundation plays an important role in Alberta, and we must protect its integrity. A confidential e-mail from the auditor of Applewood community association in northeast Calgary states that Wild Rose grants were transferred to the Vietnamese Cao Daist Cultural Society, a group struck from the corporate registry, disqualifying it from Wild Rose funding. Applewood's vice-president is a key supporter of the Member for Calgary-Montrose, who may also have ties with the Vietnamese Cao Daist Cultural Society.

Mr. Pham: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Taft: My questions are to the Minister of Community Development. Why was Applewood allowed to transfer Wild Rose funds to an organization struck from the corporate registry? It clearly breaks the rules.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we don't know what has been done until after we've had an audit of the procedures, and I can assure the hon. Leader of the Opposition that we do have an audit procedure. Most particularly, in Vietnam, where some of these projects relating to water were done, we partner up with CIDA, which, of course, is a Canadian federal government agency, to ensure that the work that was purported to be done was in fact done in the jurisdiction that was to be assisted.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what role, if any, did the Member for Calgary-Montrose have in the prohibited transfer of grant funds?

Mr. Pham: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mar: None that I'm aware of, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: We've got a second point of order there as well. The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the irregularities in this case and that this information is largely publicly available, how, in fact, does this minister know what the Wild Rose money was really spent for?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I've already indicated in my response to his first question that we do have an auditing procedure. In answering the question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie the other day, I indicated to him at that time that this procedure is taken forth for every grant that's given by Wild Rose, that we do in fact ask for an accounting for every dollar that is granted by Wild Rose to agencies that may be doing work in a foreign jurisdiction, and that we do have a way of asking them to account for how that money is spent so that we are satisfied that the money is spent for the purposes for which it was applied. If we are not satisfied that the money is spent in a manner that was appropriate, then we have a procedure for asking for that money back.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Continuing Care Review

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The ministers of the departments of Health and Wellness and Seniors and Community Supports have appointed a continuing care review committee to conduct consultations across the province and develop recommendations. If this committee is going to be truly effective, accountable, and credible, the government must include members from each of the parties. My question would be to the Premier. Will this government commit to making the continuing care review committee an all-party committee and, in fact, appoint me, with my expertise, to this committee?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the Liberals have been on and on about lobbying, and I've never been lobbied this directly before. I'm not making the appointments, but certainly the comments raised by the hon. member will be taken into consideration by the two ministers involved.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, sir. Will the focus of the committee be directed toward improving how the ministries of health, seniors, and infrastructure collaborate and co-operate on the issue of long-term care? Again, it is to the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure of the answer, so I'll defer to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the focus of the committee is to improve continuing care for people who are resident and who require continuing care. That is the primary focus. There will be other focus, no doubt, but it is on the person that's receiving the care.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. How is the continuing care review committee going to be any different or more effective than the Health Facilities Review Committee, that appears to have failed so badly? Again to the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Health Facilities Review Committee, notwithstanding the assertions of the Leader of the Official Opposition, has done a good job of inspecting facilities, including long-term care facilities and other health facilities. I understand that over the past five years they conducted over 400 unannounced visits to health care facilities, including long-term care facilities. They received over that same period of time 226 complaints. Now, many of these complaints were either withdrawn or contained incomplete information, but those that were complete were acted upon.

I can tell the hon. member that where serious problems are found at a facility, the health care review committee will immediately advise the Minister of Health and Wellness – immediately – and all allegations of mistreatment, abuse, neglect are reported directly to the protection of persons in care. There are mechanisms in place to address problems of neglect and abuse.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Capital Region Petrochemical Workers

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The capital region petrochemical industry employs tens of thousands of Edmonton workers in dozens of major plants. The Edmonton Celanese plant is the first closing of one of these plants, throwing 450 skilled petrochemical employees out of work. It is mothballing as we speak. Meanwhile, two companies in Fort McMurray have applied for over a thousand temporary foreign workers for next year. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Why is this government allowing applications for temporary foreign workers to go forward and not intervening while there is an obvious pool of skilled petrochemical workers available in Edmonton?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I've addressed this issue the last three weeks or so. First of all, I'd like to clarify one thing: it's not this government that approves the foreign workers to come work in Alberta and take jobs in Alberta. It's the federal government that does that.

An Hon. Member: Liberal government.

Mr. Cardinal: It's the federal Liberal government, your cousins in Ottawa, that does the approving. We don't do the approving.

Like I've said before, Mr. Speaker, our first priority in Alberta is to hire Albertans first, Canadians, aboriginal people, and of course persons with developmental disabilities and other Albertans that are interested in working here in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A supplementary to the same minister: what specific assistance has been supplied to the Edmonton Celanese workers to get them employment that utilizes their petrochemical skills not just for minimum wage work?

Mr. Cardinal: Of course, Mr. Speaker, like I've said earlier, Alberta is probably the only jurisdiction in North America that doesn't have a welfare office, but we have 56 employment and training offices out there. We are already working with a group that are involved in this process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A supplementary to the Minister of Energy: how and when will the minister assure industry and Edmonton petro workers that there will be an affordable and ready supply of ethane so that the crucial capital region petro industry can continue?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, that's a very important objective of our department, to ensure that gas as it's coming now is available for the petrochemical industry, that they can utilize the liquids. We're also actively working with Alaska and the Western Energy Alliance to ensure that when the gas comes down from the Mackenzie, it ties into the Alberta hub, which is a tremendous economic advantage, to tie it into the infrastructure in the Alberta hub, that that gas would come with the expectation and, surely, by policy that liquids and the petrochemical industry would be very much a part of that value-added, that opportunity for all those that are here in that industry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

1:50 Long-term Care Facility Standards

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have known for years about serious problems in this province's long-term care centres, including staff shortages, failure to meet basic standards, and inadequate inspections. For years these problems were repeatedly brought to the attention of the government by family members, seniors' advocates, and the NDP opposition, yet not only did the government ignore these warnings, but when I raised them in the Assembly as recently as April 18, the Premier called them totally false. My question is to the Premier. Why does the Premier refuse to apologize to Albertans for allowing the situation in long-term care to deteriorate to the state outlined in the Auditor General's report?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't mean to be facetious, but if the hon. member has a specific case of abuse, as I indicated, it will be investigated. I mentioned the care that my mother received in long-term care, and she had no complaints. Now, some people do have complaints, and some people don't have complaints. For those people that have complaints, we will deal with them either through the Department of Health and Wellness or the Department of Seniors and Community Supports. When there are problems, we will deal with those problems. Where there are no problems, there is no need to deal with them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is not a personal question to the Premier; it's a question about his government's performance. What's so hard about saying sorry and apologizing for years of neglect and foot-dragging on the serious problems that the Auditor General identified?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I will not apologize for a statement that is absolutely wrong, inflammatory. The statement "years of neglect" is wrong. It is wrong, and this member should be apologizing for making such an outrageous statement.

Mr. Mason: I hope the Premier has read the report by now, Mr. Speaker. Is he saying that he has nothing to apologize for when the serious concerns identified by this Auditor General were allowed to fester and build during his watch?

The Speaker: Methinks this is part of the debate that started yesterday. This is nothing to do with government policy.
The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Martin: Oh, come on. What are you talking about?

Mr. Mason: Yeah, protect the Premier. [interjections]

The Speaker: What was that? I'm sorry. Was there a statement in there accusing the chair of something? [interjections] Who made the statement? You would retract them?

Mr. Martin: No.

The Speaker: Then you study your Standing Orders . . .

Mr. Martin: Do you know what I said?

The Speaker: No. You stand up when I recognize you, and you be prepared for a point of order. You study the Standing Orders and get prepared, sir.

Now the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Martin: Can I sit down now, sir?

The Speaker: Yes, you can sit down, and you'll stay sitting down.
The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Federal/Provincial Relations

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, Albertans are tired of Ottawa dictating their policies in our province. Our Premier said that one of the most important reasons for our election last fall was that he wanted a mandate to deal with Ottawa. The MLA committee report on Strengthening Alberta's Role in Confederation discussed Kyoto, gun registry, transfer payments, pension plans, Canadian Wheat Board, health care, and tax collection, just to name a few. Recently, we received farm income aid and are currently dealing with gas tax rebates to our cities and federal daycare programs. My question is to the Premier. Given your mandate, how are you seeking autonomy for Albertans on these critical issues?

Mr. Klein: I don't know if it's a matter of seeking autonomy on these particular issues. It's a matter of expressing our concerns politically to the federal authorities that are involved.

Gun registry: certainly, we have registered our concerns relative to the usefulness of the gun registry.

We have taken action relative to Kyoto by passing our own legislation and have constantly referred to the Kyoto protocol, as it's now written, as not really addressing the problem of reducing greenhouse gases but, rather, rewards those nations that are not signatory to the protocol yet produce many greenhouse gases.

Relative to the issue of Senate reform, well, there is no stronger government in the country relative to taking the proper initiatives relative to bringing about elected Senators, anyway.

The other issues, the mad cow disease, we've been extremely aggressive on this particular file, and we've worked hand in glove with members of the cattle industry.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think that we're representing the interests of this province very well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. Again, to the Premier: will the Premier stand for the autonomy of Alberta, like the Premier of Quebec does for his province, by insisting that all agreements and funds from Ottawa are distributed to Albertans where we know and want them to go and better serve Albertans, not where Ottawa wants them?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are doing precisely that. Probably the most recent case in point is the ongoing situation that the hon. Minister of Children's Services is having with her federal counterpart, and that is to make sure that if federal government dollars flow to Alberta for Children's Services, people in this province have choice. The hon. minister is not going to sign the agreement until she receives assurances – well, assurances again – from the federal minister that, indeed, the conditions put forward by Alberta are met.

Mr. Hinman: Excellent. Please don't sign the agreement.

Again to the Premier: will this government protect Alberta's economy from Ottawa by collecting the taxes here in Alberta?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to defer to the hon. Minister of Finance. Certainly, this is a legitimate question, and it has been a question that has been pondered by this government and others. There are some administrative problems related to collecting our own taxes, and I'll have the hon. Minister of Finance speak to it.

The Speaker: Briefly, Minister.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, if we were to collect our own taxes in this province, Albertans would have to file two tax returns. I want to make sure that people understand that collecting our own taxes does not mean that we don't have to file tax returns and the amount of money that the federal government requires in taxation. Under the Constitution the federal government does have the power of taxation, and I would say exercises it far too well.

First Nations Participation in Royal Visit

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, one of the greatest legacies of this government and its leader, the Premier, is harmonious and respectful integration and relations with the First Nation people. I have been disturbed by reports that some of the First Nation people feel that they have been relegated to token Indian status for the upcoming visit by Her Majesty to Alberta. Some have felt that they should be awarded a face-to-face meeting with Her Majesty as part of the centennial visit. My first question is to the Minister of Community Development. Could the minister explain to this Assembly the involvement and role accorded to the First Nation people during Her Majesty's visit to Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mar: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me say at the outset that aboriginal Albertans have made a significant contribution to the life of this province and that they are being respectfully represented in Alberta's celebration for the royal couple.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to face-to-face meetings, the Duke of Edinburgh himself is meeting with First Nations and Métis leaders in Fort McMurray. Throughout the entire royal visit there will be aboriginal groups and individuals who will perform traditional and modern dance and music for the royal couple at several venues, including the events that will be taking place at Commonwealth Stadium as well as the Provincial Museum. Of the guests that will be invited to this Assembly, 1 in 10 guests attending the events here in this Assembly are aboriginal Albertans. They are also being invited to the official dinner that is being hosted by the government of Alberta as well as the luncheon that is being hosted in the city of Calgary at the Roundup Centre.

What I can say about the protocol, Mr. Speaker, is that the protocol for the royal visit is established by Buckingham Palace working with the federal government and the government of Alberta, and performers and guests were invited based on the preferences expressed by Her Majesty.

Some Hon. Members: Two minutes.

The Speaker: Absolutely correct. Way overboard.

Mr. Shariff: My first supplementary is to the minister of aboriginal affairs. What role did you as a minister and your department play in participation of First Nation people during this historic visit?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I have to say that the aboriginal people certainly have an important part in this province, its history and its future. As a matter of fact, they feel that they have a special connection to Her Royal Highness and the Crown. As a result, Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development established an aboriginal festivities committee to be able to celebrate 2005 in representing aboriginal people.

What we did there, Mr. Speaker, was ensure that we would talk to Community Development and Alberta protocol to identify ways for us to be involved in the Queen's visit so that it wouldn't just be tokenism, that we would be looking at ways for us to be able to showcase the cultural activities of the aboriginal community and also showcase individual talent that we do have in the aboriginal community. As a matter of fact . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Child Protection

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The closing of the Nina Courtepatte case by Children's Services was a mistake that may have cost the life of a child. We need to learn from this situation with an inquiry that is thorough, independent, and available to all parties. When the department has closed a case, there is no intake from concerned parties like schools on absenteeism or other community members bringing forward concerns. To the Minister of Children's Services: who was responsible for gathering information and taking action on the status of this child?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, we had a question like this yesterday. Let's be very, very clear first. This is a very, very tragic situation of a death of a child, and our heart goes out to her parents. It's a criminal investigation, so I'm not going to make comments on a specific case. I will say that this is a murder, and sadly it could have happened to any child in this province, just not because it was a child in care. What I will say is that we have unbelievable social workers in this province that do an unbelievable job with very, very difficult challenges coming.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the children's advocate is under Children's Services, with no independent way of investigating this case, will the minister now request that the children's advocate become an officer of the Legislature so that independent reports can be provided to all parties?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, you know what, Mr. Speaker? Again I'm not going to talk specifically about the case of the young child that was murdered. I can tell you that I've met with the children's advocate. He does a fantastic job. His number one priority is to be an advocate for the children and youth in this province, and I imagine he'll continue to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will the minister, instead of waiting for the internal review to be completed, call for a fatality inquiry now so that a review of the causes that led to her death can be studied and tragedies can be prevented in the future and the children remaining in the home are protected?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, again I'm not going to comment specifically on this case because we have a criminal investigation going on. I can tell you, though, that any time we have a child in our care in this province that is seriously hurt or killed, we do a special case review, and we will be doing that, and we were doing that prior. The fatality inquiry comes under the Justice minister, and maybe he would like to comment in regard to the process of that.

Mr. Stevens: Just briefly, Mr. Speaker, the medical examiner has not yet finished his investigation into this case. Of course, once the investigation is complete, we will have better information. At this time there are no factors in this case which would make a fatality inquiry mandatory. Under section 32 of the Fatality Inquiries Act, in any case that has been investigated by the medical examiner, if the family wishes to, they may write to the medical examiner's office and ask to have the file forwarded to the board for review.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Grade Level Achievement Reporting

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some teachers in my constituency are concerned about the implementation of something called grade level achievement reporting. There seems to be a lot of confusion about grade level achievement reporting when it's implemented. My first question is to the Minister of Education. Can the minister explain what that is and why schools across the province are going to be asked to report it?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, simply put, grade level achievement reporting is simply a mechanism via which parents can be informed as to whether or not their child or children is or are performing at grade level expectation. Its purpose is really twofold: first of all, to replace the former management information reporting schedules, or MIRS, as it was called, and secondly, to cater to the recommendation that was included in the Alberta Commission on Learning which, as I recall, talked about parents wanting to be more frequently and better informed as to the progress their children are making in any particular grade in any particular subject.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you. My first supplemental to the same minister: can the minister explain the process and timelines for implementing this initiative?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, replacing the MIRS reporting schedules started, actually, as a pilot back in 2003-04. It was continued in '04-05, and last year we had about seven school boards, including Red Deer and Golden Hills, Edmonton public, Edmonton Catholic, Calgary public, Calgary Catholic, Chinook's Edge, as I recall. All were part of that pilot. We hope by 2006 to have more school boards reporting in this fashion, and by the time 2007-2008 comes in, we hope to have it being accomplished right across the entire province.

Mr. Griffiths: My second supplemental is to the same minister. As a former teacher I have to ask: will reporting this not add more work to an already crowded schedule for hard-working teachers?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, let me respond as a former teacher: no. There will certainly be a little bit of work. But, Mr. Speaker, you would know this and so would others in the Assembly who are former teachers. The people who know student performance or achievement best are really the teachers. We could tell in a matter of seconds at the end of the year in a simple form whether or not the child is performing at grade level expectation. So the question simply would be something like: is this child who is registered in grade 5 performing at the grade 5 level in subject X, Y, or Z? The teacher would probably just put a check mark, yes or no. That's the kind of information that parents would appreciate having.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

School Closures

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last evening at a very emotional meeting the Edmonton public school board rushed through a vote to close Terrace Heights school. Fortunately, parents and other community residents, along with members of the opposition on this side of the House, worked together to stop the closure of valued public schools in established neighbourhoods in central Edmonton. Thankfully, a court granted an injunction to stop the flawed closure process for Strathearn, North Edmonton, and Wellington schools. My question to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: given that the minister has admitted that the school utilization formula is broken and is supposedly being fixed, will the minister finally take responsibility and use this court reprieve to find a long-term, community-based solution to keep these public schools open?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Ultimately, it is up to the school boards as to which schools stay open and which schools stay closed. Yesterday there was a court decision that allowed three schools a reprieve in closing. I have not talked to the Edmonton public school board since that time, but again through the media they're saying that they are going to be sending both the Minister of Education and myself a letter requesting something. I don't know what that request is, so it is much too preliminary to talk about it at this point in time.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question to the Minister of Education: will the minister now do the right thing and deny the school board's demand for a special extension of the flawed closure process so parents and teachers can plan for the coming year? Will you do something about it, sir?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'd be happy to respond to that question once a request such as has been referred to possibly arrives. As at this particular time I have not seen such a request, so I think it's a bit hypothetical and speculative for the member to even be asking it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister guarantee that these parents will not have to go through this closure process for at least five years so they can implement their creative ideas for maintaining schools that are so essential to the communities in which they live?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I won't try to usurp the authority of a local school board to make a local decision. The simple fact is that we have elected trustees, and the key word in that statement is "trust" because that's what we do: we trust them to make the right decisions, and we also trust them to make the right decisions based on a lot of research, a lot of community consultation and contact. In this particular case we have a judge who has said that an injunction will be granted, perhaps to allow more information to flow out. I should conclude by saying that the school year as it applies to this regulation runs through to the end of August of this year. So there is still some time for more meaningful consultations and perhaps some follow-up meetings to be held. We'll just let the process unfold and see where it goes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Electrical Transmission System

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I understand that some regions in North America, including Alberta, have electrical transmission systems that need upgrading, and that's to meet the present demands and future demands. In fact, perhaps billions of dollars will be required to meet those upgrades. My question to the Minister of Energy: who is responsible for ensuring that Alberta's electrical transmission system is adequate?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta independent system operator is first charged with looking at the transmission. They do that. They've put together a 10-year plan and are looking at a 20-year plan. Specific applications are then submitted to the Energy and Utilities Board for approval.

Mr. Lougheed: My second question to the same minister: who pays for the transmission system?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, the consumer has always and will continue to pay for the transmission system. That is under the regulator rate. They see that specifically on their bill.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: if consumers will be paying for new transmission lines which may be built to export electricity in the future, how do the consumers benefit?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, the last one that was approved was the transmission line between Edmonton and Calgary. That will see a greater reliability in the system. It will see a reduction of line loss, in power loss on the system. That would translate immediately into savings of power that's consumed. In addition, import of electricity will add more generation, more supply, and will certainly dampen pressures on upward prices.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, the Conservative government's deeply flawed utilization formula is to blame for a rash of school closures, including four public schools here in Edmonton. Instead of listening to messages being sent by parents who yesterday won a major victory in court, Edmonton public schools still wants to knuckle under the pressure being exerted by this government and close four schools by September. To the Minister of Education: will the minister assure the parents and children attending Wellington, North Edmonton, and Strathearn schools that the government will not agree to do an end run around the closure process and that Edmonton public will either have to abandon the closures or start the process over again next year?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I will ensure those parents is that their children will be provided the best education in this country regardless of which school it's going to be given at. This is the history of our education system for the past several years, and that is also the future of education here. With respect to the closure procedures, those closure procedures are very articulately described in the School Act and in the regulations that accompany it. So long as the school board has done its due diligence, then they are well within their right to make those local decisions. That's the story.

Mr. Eggen: Given that this minister has admitted in this House that current utilization formula rates forcing these closures are in fact flawed and, therefore, under review, why doesn't the minister urge Edmonton public to put any further closures on hold pending the completion of this review?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, what I indicated in this House I believe a week ago during estimates for Alberta Education is that I did not like some parts of the current utilization rate formula – and I believe that echoes the sentiments of the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation and our predecessors as well – and that, as a result, there's a need to review those utilization rates. The primary reason is that when they were brought in, they sufficed a particular purpose and a particular set of circumstances that were at play at that time. Today things are a little bit different. It will take probably the better part of a year before we see those kinds of changes thoroughly discussed and agreed to and contact with stakeholders having been made in the appropriate fashion. That's the plan.

Mr. Eggen: As the Minister of Education and as an Edmonton MLA will this minister then stand up for these students and parents and ensure that these school closures do not go ahead?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I want to explain this one more time just a little bit more slowly, and I'll use up the full 44 seconds I have left. Any discussions or decisions about possible or rumoured school closures are entirely at the behest of the local school board within whose jurisdiction that school happens to be situated. Those are not provincially based or provincially driven decisions.

Now, if a school board has done all of its lead-up work in the proper way in accordance with the regulation and are satisfied that they've communicated with the parents and the students and all the other requirements have been met, then they are within their rights to make those local decisions. I don't think the hon. member sitting just down below the questioner, who is a former trustee, would have appreciated the provincial government interfering when he was on the board, and I don't see any reason why we should be interfering now just because he's not on the board any longer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Canadian Natural Resources Limited Pipeline Leak

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday a Canadian Natural Resources employee discovered a pipeline leaking oil and gas into the Waskahigan and Little Smoky rivers. An EUB spokesman admitted that no one knew how long the pipeline had been leaking before it was discovered upstream of the community of Valleyview. My question is to the Minister of Energy. With thousands of miles of pipelines across this province what monitoring exists in Alberta?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, the Energy and Utilities Board does actually, as he mentioned, take responsibility for these matters of pipelines and any leaks, and this one in particular is being investigated at the present time. Clearly, it will be the responsibility of the companies to ensure any cleanup.

The companies also have very sophisticated techniques of monitoring pipeline integrity and quality as to leaks, a variety of sophisticated electronic methods to determining that, and those kinds of techniques are improving all the time to ensure that Albertans can be protected on all the environmental consequences.

Dr. Swann: Again to the Minister of Energy: what improvements are planned to try and avoid this and prevent future pipeline leaks?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, inspections do occur regularly by companies on their pipelines. It also happens by electronic methods that are continually being approved. Technology is bringing some great answers to these issues. The integrity of those pipelines is very important to the ongoing sustainable development of these resources.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you. To the Minister of Environment: what do we know of the extent and the effects of this leak?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can say that we were notified by the Energy and Utilities Board immediately after the leak was identified, and I want to say that we were on-site immediately, working closely with the EUB. We're continuing to monitor the situation. Also, pertaining to the first objective, being the containment of what has taken place, the ideal situation is that there will never ever be a leak in our province, so containment is not necessary. We're working closely with the EUB, and our investigation is ongoing, but certainly right now we're monitoring the situation and doing samples relative to if, in fact, there was any damage, particularly in the area that was mentioned.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Highway 13

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Highway 13 in Camrose and just east of the city limits underwent improvements last summer. However, many of my constituents and other users of the highway say that the work was substandard. My question is for the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. What will his department do to correct this substandard work?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'd like to say that the constituents were absolutely correct. There have been some severe issues with this particular job that was done in conjunction with the city of Camrose and the department of transportation. It was an unacceptable standard, and the contractor has actually been fined.

The other issue, which is probably more important to the hon. member's constituents, is that the work is still under warranty, and the contractor will have to go back and fix everything that is wrong with the road that was done. It was done to a substandard basis, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you. My first and only supplemental is to the same minister. What is being done to improve highway 13 further east of Camrose?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're certainly looking at highway 13 as it goes east. I will give you my bias, and I fully understand that as minister of transportation you are not supposed to have a bias, but this is a road that I've travelled on all of my life. It's a road that, realistically, has had very little care to it and is a very narrow road that is very well travelled. We are certainly taking a very serious look at ensuring that this road gets done to the east of where it is at the moment. I can assure the hon. member that it will receive a very high priority in jobs as we look at them down the road.

The Speaker: Hon. member, is that fine?

Mr. Johnson: Yes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Teachers' Retirement Fund

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of Alberta's most valuable resources is the people we entrust to educate our children. The government's treatment of Alberta teachers in respect to their pensions, however, is deplorable. In 1992 this government agreed to pay two-thirds of the unfunded liability portion of the Alberta teachers' retirement fund, which currently stands at $6 billion and continues to grow. My question is to the Minister of Finance. Since the financial status of this government is now different than it was in 1992, what plans does the government have to reduce this financial burden on Alberta's taxpayers?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, when we talk about what was discussed in 1992 and subsequently, we pay two-thirds of the cost of that unfunded liability and the teachers pay the remaining one-third. That doesn't seem like a terribly unfair proportion, but I would expect that in the supplementary question I'll understand a little bit more about where the hon. member is coming from.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that Alberta teachers now contribute more than teachers in any other jurisdiction in Canada, when will the government increase its required contribution to the Alberta teachers' retirement fund?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, we equally share the cost of pensions since the 1992 agreement. This is current. I'm not sure. Maybe the hon. member would like to tell us what he would think a more fair sharing of those costs is. Fifty-fifty is what it is today: the government, 50; the teachers, 50. So I look forward to the supplementary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the government's share of the unfunded teachers' pension liability is scheduled to grow to $30 billion by the year 2045, why is this government continuing to tell Albertans that they are debt free?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, we do not in any way hide our liability on pensions. It's very clearly laid out in our financial statements. It is not considered in our operation. In fact, we make every effort to reduce that. We had a very detailed and intense negotiation with teachers to deal with this issue. We're working with the teachers to try and come to terms with this. We do have a workout plan. It is long term, but it is a liability that is not the government's alone. It's important that when that liability is addressed, it's addressed fairly and by those who share that liability.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

West Nile Virus

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we move into spring and into the summer, our thoughts turn to, well, mosquitoes and the public's fear of the dreaded West Nile virus. Funding has been allocated to municipalities to assist in combatting this menace, but it seems that the bulk of this funding has been allocated to areas in the southeast of the province and away from the major population centres along the highway 2 corridor. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. What criteria were used for allocating this funding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, first, I would like to point out to the member and all members that the role of Municipal Affairs with respect to funding for West Nile virus is more of an administrative role. I can share with the member that the criteria that were used were provided to Municipal Affairs through Health and Environment. It's based upon an examination of the records of the previous experience with respect to West Nile virus and the mosquitoes that carry the virus. The determination was made that there were geographic regions within the province that had various degrees of risk associated with them, from low to medium to high. The funding flows through to geographic regions where the risk is determined to be either of medium or high risk.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A supplemental to the minister: can he assure this House that these measures will be adequate to protect the major population centres?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can't assure the hon. member that no one in Alberta is going to contract West Nile virus this season. I can't ensure that they will not be in major population centres, nor I can ensure that they will not be in the areas that are covered by this funding. It's the nature of risk that you do the best that you can to be able to allocate resources where they will do the most good. What I can assure the member is that all care has been taken and will be taken to ensure that the risk analysis is appropriate and that funding flows through based on appropriate risk analysis mechanisms.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister work with his colleague the minister of health to provide funding to other areas not currently funded should the conditions change that may suggest that this funding is warranted?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, it's a subject that is somewhat hypothetical. Obviously, the government is going to be monitoring the situation. The dollars this year were based upon experience from previous years. Should something catastrophic happen and all of a sudden the numbers appear to be in jeopardy, I would certainly be prepared to sit down with the appropriate ministers and discuss them, but frankly the risk analysis, the science seem to be relatively sound. Unless circumstances arise to see otherwise, the funding will proceed as planned.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Leaseholders on Agricultural Public Land

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government seems to have missed the fact that public lands in Alberta belong to Albertans and our lands are not there for the government to do as they please. They are also spending more of our tax dollars to compensate holders of Crown land leases instead of Albertans receiving a benefit from the use of the public lands. My question to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: why does this government insist on compensating leaseholders on Crown land for surface rights instead of Albertans receiving the benefits?

Mr. Coumts: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's be clear about this and make sure that this hon. member understands that the government does not pay compensation to agricultural leaseholders on public lands. Absolutely we do not. Agricultural leaseholders do not have surface rights for oil and gas developments. Where they may get compensation is from the oil and gas industry who wants to have access to their agricultural lease, in which case they are entitled under the Surface Rights Act. They are entitled to forage compensation, compensation for roads that may disturb their grassland, and compensation for the four-acre plot that a well happens to sit on. But those dollars do not come from government. They come from the oil and gas industry themselves to that stakeholder.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next two questions are for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development then. Can the minister explain why this government is promoting a third competitor to our beef industry when our beef industry is already suffering from the border closure? Referring to the buffalo then.

The Speaker: Hon. member, the last question had to do with leases for surface rights. This one has to do with buffalo. I've got to find a connection here. There's got to be a connection. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, if you've got one, you can answer the question.

Mr. Horner: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I can't make that connection.

Mr. Bonko: Can the minister explain, if it's agriculture and rural development, if gas companies are providing these people with compensation that's on Crown land, why does that money not come back to Albertans then?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, on many of these leases the gas companies are those companies that are disturbing the natural agricultural practices on that lease: the fencelines, the roads that come through there. They should be compensated for the loss of forage that they may encounter, the inconvenience of simply having the oil and gas operate on those leases. I don't see anything really wrong to compensate our producers for the inconvenience of what's going on on their lease.

The Clerk: Members' Statements.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we will have six participating today, but prior to that, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

Even before that, I just want to advise that we're going to have at least two points of order, and then there's going to be an issue that the chair is going to have to deal with with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. So let's be prepared.

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise this afternoon and introduce some special guests. Up in the public gallery today we have three people from the Alberta Senior Citizens' Housing Association, or ASCHA, as it is known in this House. First of all, from the village of Breton in my constituency, the president of ASCHA, Darren Aldous; secondly, the vice-president of ASCHA, Dennis King; and finally, the executive director of ASCHA, Irene Martin. I would ask them all to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Motorcycle Exhibition at Reynolds-Alberta Museum

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Saturday, May 14, the grand opening of a unique and exciting exhibition will take place at the Reynolds-Alberta Museum in Wetaskiwin. The Life and Times of the Motorcycle documents 100 years of motorcycle history from 1905 to the present day. Along with the Minister of Community Development I will have the honour of attending the grand opening.

This display chronicles not only the development of the motorbike but also the social impact that this mode of transportation has had on our society. There are 14 topics which are covered by this exhibit, ranging from the fashion associated with motorcycling to the use of motorbikes in work environments. The exhibit will include more than 150 motorbikes displaying the changes motorcycles have gone through from their beginnings to the present day.

This display has been made possible by the staff of the Reynolds-Alberta Museum and by various members of the community and beyond who have agreed to lend their motorcycles, prized possessions, to the RAM for two years. In addition to this, Honda Canada has greatly supported the display in financial terms and in-kind donations.

This exhibit will run in the museum for 16 months, giving Albertans ample opportunity to visit this comprehensive history of the motorbike.

Located in Wetaskiwin, this museum opened in September of 1992 and is owned and operated by the provincial government. The RAM houses more than 8,000 pieces in its collection, which traces the development of and advances made in machines associated with transportation, agriculture, aviation, and industry.

As the summer tourism season approaches, this will be a wonderful opportunity for families across Alberta to view a spectacular display exploring the development of the motorcycle and its impact on our society. I invite all members to visit the Reynolds-Alberta Museum and learn more about motorbikes, the history of mechanization, and the impact that machines have had on our province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mark Heinrichs

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to recognize an outstanding individual from Cypress-Medicine Hat. Mr. Mark Heinrichs, a math teacher at Eagle Butte high school in Dunmore, was one of 52 teachers across Canada to receive the Prime Minister's certificate of achievement for teaching excellence.

Mr. Heinrichs was nominated by the school's parent council because of his successful teaching approach. He makes himself available to his students by arriving at school early in the morning, spending his lunch break in class, and giving his home phone number should students require help in the evenings. He initiated a math club for students who were dropping by his classroom and doing fun math activities on their own. He also initiated Math Night to prepare students for the departmental exam.

Mr. Heinrichs has his students set realistic but challenging goals at the beginning of each semester, and they discuss what it will take to achieve these goals. Each student signs their goals, and Mr. Heinrichs follows up during the semester. His students consistently score above the provincial average for the Math 30 diploma exams.

The purpose of the Prime Minister's award program is to recognize the innovative teaching practices of teachers of all disciplines. The award included $1,000 to the Eagle Butte high school in Mr. Heinrichs' name.

My congratulations to Mr. Heinrichs for winning this prestigious award.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Aboriginal Workforce Participation Initiative

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to bring your attention to a partnership agreement to develop policies and practices to recruit and retain aboriginal faculty and staff at Grande Prairie Regional College. It is known as the aboriginal workforce participation initiative. This agreement between the federal government, the province of Alberta, and the college is aimed at providing more information about employment opportunities to aboriginal communities and organizations by changing how programs and services are delivered.

As the first deal of its kind in Alberta, the parties will create professional development opportunities, facilitate aboriginal community liaison and feedback, identify employment and career development opportunities, and create links between the labour force and educational opportunities.

The aboriginal workforce participation initiative is part of the government's commitment to help aboriginal people build stronger, healthier, and more self-reliant communities by increasing the participation of aboriginal people in the labour market. The end result is effective long-term employment that benefits the workers, the employer, and the entire community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Alberta Venture Most-respected Corporations

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Venture magazine conducts an annual survey to find Alberta's most respected corporations. The responses are in, and they reflect some of Alberta's best-known corporations and highlight leaders who are trailblazers in our province.

For corporate leadership, recognizing a CEO or board director who is acknowledged as providing visionary leadership inside his or her organization and/or within the industry as providing a purposeful voice for the industry: Mr. Hal Kvisle, Don Lowry, and John Ferguson.

For corporate performance, recognizing a company that demonstrates sustainable fiscal success, maintains or builds market share, and performs well on the public markets: EnCana, Brick Warehouse Corporation, Canadian Western Bank, and Canadian Natural Resources.

For culture of innovation, recognizing a company that actively positions itself as a market leader, invests in R and D, has built a program of initiatives to ensure its products, services, or processes are leading edge in quality and has developed an internal environment which fosters creativity: Telus, Stantec, EPCOR, WestJet, and Dow Canada.

For focus on customer relationships, recognizing a company that has placed the customer at the centre of its business strategy: Fairmont Hotels, Bell, ATB Financial, Calgary Co-operative Association, and Shaw Communications.

For human resources practices, recognizing a company that fosters the healthy commitment of its workforce through innovative reward and the implementation of policies that provide for an enlightened, progressive work environment: Suncor, ATB, WestJet, ATCO, and PCL.

For environmental stewardship, recognizing a company that demonstrates an awareness of its impact upon the environment with an active effort to preserve, protect, or enhance the environment: Enmax, Shell, TransCanada Corporation, Suncor, and Syncrude.

On behalf of this House, Mr. Speaker, I congratulate them all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Kindred House

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with pride that I talk about the Boyle McCauley health centre, created in response to a grassroots movement which identified the lack of physician and health services in the inner-city area. It is a unique model in Edmonton in that it is community owned and governed.

The needs of the population that is served by this agency are very complex because there is a high incidence of poverty, homelessness, mental health and addiction issues, and unemployment. Comprehensive, accessible, integrated services are delivered by interdisciplinary teams on-site and throughout the community as the agency responds to the needs of Edmonton's inner-city residents.

Kindred House is a harm-reduction program of the Boyle McCauley health centre and was established 10 years ago. This program is a drop-in and resource centre for women and transgendered people who are working in the sex trade. As an organization that is delivering a harm-reduction program, it is accepted that some people are not ready to give up high-risk behaviour. Making connection by helping them in other ways can reduce harm and open the door to further intervention.

It is hoped that clients at Kindred will ultimately come to eliminate high-risk behaviour completely, but the only way to get many people moving in that direction, of course, is to connect with them where they're at. This is the work done at Kindred House. They ensure that over 3,000 visitors per year are provided with nutritious food, have access to medical attention, and are given opportunities to access free legal services and other community resources as needed. Kindred House is a place that is nonjudgmental and free from the violence these individuals often face daily.

Congratulations to the staff, volunteers, and board of directors who make this help possible. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

All-party Committees

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the recently established continuing care review committee, I would like to again today take the opportunity to draw attention to the importance of all-party committees to the democratic process.

A democratic deficit exists when parties do not have the opportunity to share diverse views and work together. The best governing process is the one with the strongest opposition, but in Alberta it seems that the voice of the opposition is feared and that the possibility of establishing all-party committees simply does not exist. This is not a healthy situation for effective governance or for the citizens who are being governed.

During the last campaign I had many discussions with my constituents and with citizens throughout the province. It became apparent that I wasn't alone in my opinion on this issue. Co-operation among parties is lacking, and it would be a refreshing experience in the politics of this province if all-party committees were re-established. A mantra that I am fond of from my days as a municipal politician is that when everybody plays nicely in the sandbox, everybody wins.

All-party committees not only bring a variety of experiences and perspectives to the table, but they also lend credibility to the entire process. Reports or recommendations by all-party committees wouldn't have a chance to sit on a shelf. They would be supported and promoted by all the members involved. The co-operation and openness that all-party committees demand make the process more open, transparent, and accountable.

The Speaker: Hon. members should also be aware that today is an anniversary, albeit a rather high-numbered anniversary, of the arrival on this planet Earth of the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: By way of a historical memento for the day, on May 11, 1870, the area known as Rupert's Land was purchased by Sir John Rose acting as a Canadian agent in London, England. The purchase price of £300,000, or the equivalent of $11 million, included much of what is now the Canadian prairies and northern territories and, in particular, what is now the province of Alberta.

The purchase of Rupert's Land was motivated historically by both the British desire to secure the area in the face of American interests in the Canadian west and by Confederation, which had occurred three years earlier. In fact, on June 23, 1870, the Rupert's Land and North-West Territories order brought Rupert's Land, mostly Alberta, into the dominion of Canada.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to present a petition of 106 good Albertans from the fine Alberta communities of High Level, Breton, Carvel, Calahoo, Wabamun, and the wonderful City of Champions, Edmonton. It reads:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to prohibit the importation of temporary foreign workers to work on the construction and/or maintenance of oil sands facilities and/or pipelines until the following groups have been accessed and/or trained: Unemployed Albertans and Canadians; Aboriginals; unemployed youth under 25; under-employed landed immigrants; and displaced farmers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I am presenting the first 54 names of a series of signatures to follow with concerns about highway 63: "We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to increase infrastructure development for funding Highway 63."

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table today supplementary responses to questions raised during the Finance main estimates on April 21, 2005. These responses have already been sent to the hon. leader of the ND opposition, to the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, and to the Member for Edmonton-Centre. As I indicated during estimates, I'm pleased to provide those responses.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter I sent this morning to the chair of the Legislative Offices Committee. The letter requests an emergency meeting of the committee to discuss the Auditor General's power to investigate the Alberta Securities Commission.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table here today five copies each of four letters from concerned Albertans requesting action on the use of foreign replacement workers, apprenticeship ratios, and deskilling of the workplace.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose advised the chair twice today about two points of order. First of all, for clarification, would the hon. member like to deal with these points separately?

Mr. Pham: Yes.

The Speaker: Okay. Very good.

The second question, now, is to the Official Opposition House Leader. I have a note from your leader indicating that he would ask that you deal with the matter. You have full authority to deal with this matter?

Ms Blakeman: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I do. It's been delegated to me.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, on the first point of order.

Point of Order

Reflections on Nonmembers

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with grave concern that I rise today to speak to this point of order. This point of order arises from the first question from the Leader of the Official Opposition. In his first question he clearly violated Beauchesne 409(7): "A question must adhere to the proprieties of the House, in terms of inferences, imputing motives or casting aspersions upon persons within the House or out of it." In this case the question has obviously cast aspersion on the Applewood Park Community Association board members and the members of the Cao Dai association in Calgary. Furthermore, that question also violates Beauchesne 493(4) on page 151: ". . . Members to exercise great care in making statements about persons who are outside the House and unable to reply."

2:50

The reason that this question caused me great concern is because on Monday a similar question was raised in this House, and then today the same question is being raised again except that this time the attack became even more vicious. This calls into question the integrity of people who are community leaders whose integrity and honesty are unquestionable. On Monday night I got a phone call from my volunteers, the people of Applewood Park Community Association. They advised me that as far as this project is concerned, they are volunteers working on humanitarian projects providing clean water for poor people and education and shelter for homeless and handicapped people in Vietnam.

For the benefit of the opposition members and for the House, Cao Dai is the fourth largest religion in Vietnam, and it has more or less the same teachings as Buddhism. It encourages people to look out for the people who are less fortunate than themselves, and the standard practice for Cao Dai followers for many, many years is that they try to do as many humanitarian projects as possible to help the poor and underprivileged people.

The members of the board of Applewood Park Community Association – Applewood Park is one community in my riding. Ninety-nine per cent of the board members are second- or third-generation Canadians. They have absolutely no financial benefit or any benefit from helping the poor and less fortunate people in Vietnam. They're just, you know, doing the right thing to help those people. Many of the Cao Dai followers are also living within the Applewood community, and that's why they work together. It is just a co-operative effort from these two groups trying to do the right thing.

For any people to stand in the House and attack them in a vicious way and point to the political aspirations of those people or political connections of these people is wrong, Mr. Speaker. If we have to exclude PC supporters from volunteer positions, we have to exclude 70 per cent of Albertans from serving on any of these boards. If these people were in the House, they would have been able to reply to the attack coming from the other side, but they are not here, and that's why I'll do the standing up anyway. If we attack people who are not in the House, we have to be very, very careful because they don't have the privilege and the right to respond to the attack.

I would like to ask the hon. member from the opposition side to withdraw and make an apology to those people because they absolutely do not deserve this kind of attack.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll respond in the order that the member laid out the citations. So the first citation that he brought forward was 409(7). Now, he does not clarify what wording in particular has most offended him, but I have the Leader of the Official Opposition's questions in front of me, and I will have to make some assumptions here because the member has not laid that out. He did feel, in quoting 409(7), that a motive was imputed here or that aspersions were cast upon persons within the House or out of it. I have to refute this because it's simply not true.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have a situation where government sets criteria for a program. We have closely questioned the government in the past on the criteria for this particular program to make sure that we understood what the rules were, and they have been laid out in this House in response to us by the appropriate minister. So we have a situation where the government set criteria; the criteria were not followed. That is a matter of fact and can be checked in corporate registries and other documents that are publicly available.

So I'm not sure what motive the member felt was imputed because he doesn't lay it out. What the Official Opposition leader did say to the minister was to question why this particular community agency was allowed to transfer Wild Rose funds to an organization that had not met the criteria, in fact had been officially struck from a registry, and this was against the criteria that had been outlined by the minister and criteria that are available elsewhere.

So the question has to be asked, Mr. Speaker. We have the government setting criteria; we find out that criteria have not been followed. It's our job to stand up and ask the government: did they know that this was the situation and that criteria were not met? Were they aware of this situation? What exactly went wrong? The government is in possession of the facts. What exactly went wrong? What will the government do to follow up?

So it's our responsibility as the Official Opposition to ask the questions when we see a situation where a government process has been contravened. It's not imputing a motive to ask the government what happened when criteria were breached. There are no aspersions cast there. The factual statements are supported, as I said, in corporate documents.

"Casting aspersions upon persons within the House or out of it." There's no specific person mentioned in any of the questions that were asked, save the Member for Calgary-Montrose, and the appropriate honorifics were used when that member's title was brought forward in the House. No other specific individuals were named, Mr. Speaker. We're talking about an organization. We don't know who the members of those organizations are. We're talking about the facts on the face of the case.

The second issue that was raised was the issue under 493(4): "to exercise [caution] in making statements about persons who are outside the House and unable to reply." Well, again, Mr. Speaker, the information that we had in here was factual; it's available on the public record. So there's no imputing of motives there, and there's no casting of aspersions. It's factual.

The questions must be asked by the Official Opposition when there's been a contravention of the rules. That is an appropriate role for the opposition to take. The opposition did not name any individuals, save the individual that serves in the House, and the appropriate titles were used. It's incumbent upon the opposition to ask these questions of government when we identify that such a situation exists. No situation is prohibited except those that are already listed in Beauchesne and Standing Orders, and those are things like anticipation and hypothetical situations, and that's not what we're addressing here.

It's our job, when we're trying to state an issue, to avoid insinuation, but, Mr. Speaker, we have to describe enough of the situation for the minister that we're questioning to understand what we're talking about. If we take all identifiers out of the question, the minister won't know what we're trying to get, and it becomes an overly generic question that's not helpful to the minister and does not gather the information that the opposition is seeking nor does it hold the government to account.

So we're trying to do our job and trying to be conscious of not calling down any people that are outside of the House, and I think we were successful in doing that in this particular case, Mr. Speaker. I think it was appropriate to ask the questions to get the answers, and I would argue that there is no point of order here. The criteria that are expressed in both 409(7) and 493(4) were not met in this particular situation. I would ask the Speaker to find that there is no point of order here. [Mr. Pham rose]

The Speaker: This is not a debate back and forth, hon. member.

I'm prepared to hear other speakers on this point of order. The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Very briefly, I hope that on the second point of order the hon. member will raise the personless version.

The Speaker: We're dealing with the first one now.

Mr. Hancock: We're dealing with the first one, so I'll leave that argument to that time.

Clearly, here, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose has raised, rule 409(7) talks about "casting aspersions upon persons within the House or out of it." If the only purpose of the question raised by the hon. Leader of the Opposition was with respect to the giving of a grant from the Wild Rose Foundation to an association which had been deregistered as a society, was not registered as a society or a not-for-profit corporation, that would have been an appropriate question. But going on to raise the association with a Vietnamese group and to cast aspersions around the reasons behind it, without there being further factual context laid, clearly casts doubt on an association and a group of individuals with that association which cannot defend themselves.

Clearly, the question could have been limited, and would appropriately have been limited, to giving a grant to an unregistered corporation and holding the Minister of Community Development responsible for checking into that type of an affair. But the question went further than that, and I would submit, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose has rightly raised, that it did cast aspersions on the groups associated and around it without properly linking them into it. While we normally talk about casting aspersions in the context of the House with respect to an individual member as opposed to, say, the government or a group of members, when you're talking about a not-for-profit organization outside of the House, I think you have to be a lot more careful.

In this case the hon. member has clearly given an implication of some wrongdoing when there might be a very simple explanation to the fact of an association being deregistered. We don't know that. Therefore, I would submit that it is appropriate to raise the point of order and to ask the hon. member once again to be a little bit more careful with the way in which he phrases things so that he doesn't cast aspersions on people either inside or outside the House.

The Speaker: Others?

I will wait in anticipation of the second point of order. I'm not so sure that it's going to be that much dramatically different from the first, but I will await.

In the case of the first question today which motivated the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose to rise, this is what was stated. This is the record. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview:

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Wild Rose Foundation plays an important role in Alberta, and we must protect its integrity. A confidential e-mail from the auditor of Applewood community association in northeast Calgary states that Wild Rose grants were transferred to the Vietnamese Cao Daist Cultural Society, a group struck from the corporate registry, disqualifying it from Wild Rose funding. Applewood's vice-president is a key supporter of the Member for Calgary-Montrose, who may also have ties with the Vietnamese Cao Daist Cultural Society. My questions are to the Minister of Community Development. Why was Applewood allowed to transfer Wild Rose funds to an organization struck from the corporate registry? It clearly breaks the rules.

This question could just as easily have had this version. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview:

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Wild Rose Foundation plays an important role in Alberta, and we must protect its integrity. A confidential e-mail from the auditor of Applewood community association in northeast Calgary states that Wild Rose grants were transferred to the Vietnamese Cao Daist Cultural Society, a group struck from the corporate registry, disqualifying it from Wild Rose funding . . . My questions are to the Minister of Community Development. Why was Applewood allowed to transfer Wild Rose funds to an organization struck from the corporate registry? It clearly breaks the rules.

What a difference of questions, what a difference of interpretation, and what a difference of response. The chair was in the chair the other day when I believe the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie raised similar questions. It led to no interventions, as I recall.

Then this whole business has to be dealt with with the second question, which we're not going to deal with right now. We will. But the second question is a clear tie to somebody else.

The clause which, if I understand the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, caused him to intervene was the following, which was inserted in all of this: "Applewood's vice-president is a key supporter of the Member for Calgary-Montrose" – okay, could be factually correct; I don't know – "who may also have ties with the Vietnamese Cao Daist Cultural Society." I'm sorry. I don't understand what that has to do with the whole question other than to deal with the casting of aspersions, as has, in my view, correctly been pointed out by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose under Beauchesne 409(7). I do believe that this is a very legitimate point of order.

I asked the hon. Opposition House Leader if she had the authority to speak on behalf of her leader. She assured me she did have. I would ask, then, the hon. Opposition House Leader to do the honourable thing.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We did believe that we were acting in all good faith and were trying to be factual. I hear the ruling from the Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, please. The hon. member is participating here. She has the floor.

Ms Blakeman: I respect and honour the ruling of the Speaker. As instructed, I will sincerely withdraw the comments from the Leader of the Official Opposition. On his behalf, as delegated by the Leader of the Official Opposition, I will offer an apology to the Member for Calgary-Montrose and hope that it is accepted with the good faith in which it is offered.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That deals with my first question of order.

The Speaker: Yes. Will you accept the apology?

Mr. Pham: Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for doing that.

The Speaker: So then we will have dealt with the first point amicably, honourably, sincerely, as good parliamentarians. Thank you very much.

Now, the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose on point of order number two.

Point of Order Reflections on a Member

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reason that I separated the two points of order is because I want to make sure that the one issue is dealing with the volunteers and a member of the board of a community association in my riding. The second issue deals with me personally.

The second question from the Leader of the Opposition I believe violated many points of order. The first one is Standing Orders 23(h) and (i): "makes allegations against another member" and "imputes false or unavowed motives to another member." Also, that question violated Beauchesne 409(7) that I cited earlier, "casting aspersions" on myself, and also it violated Beauchesne 411(5), that the question may not "reflect on the character or conduct" of members. In this case it reflected on my character, Mr. Speaker.

As I mentioned earlier, I am neither a member of the Applewood Park Community Association nor a member of the Cao Daist group. However, I do support what they are doing, and I think there is nothing wrong with it. From what I have heard, they have submitted the full report to the Minister of Community Development with receipts and with pictures, and if there is anything wrong with that, the ministry will deal with them.

In this case the Leader of the Official Opposition has absolutely no reason to cast aspersions on me, to give the impression as if I have something to do with this thing. First of all, Mr. Speaker, I am very proud of what I did. But the way the question was presented: as if there was something wrong and somehow I was tied into it. The only reason that it was made in that way was because somehow this project was there in Vietnam and maybe because I am of Vietnamese origin. I have always been proud of my heritage. I have always been proud of the fact that all Canadians are equal.

Mr. Speaker, we have a very tough profession. In this House every one of us – the only thing that we have is our name. The minute that we don't respect each other, the minute that we don't have a good name, we lose the confidence of the public, and it looks badly on all of us. I would respectfully ask the Leader of the Official Opposition to consider these facts very seriously before standing up to make allegations against any member of this House because it will reflect poorly on all of us. The people of Alberta expect a lot more, you know, in their elected people. There is no excuse for that type of language, for that kind of tactic to be used in this House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. House leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, in the previous point of order the member specifically referenced the first question that the leader asked, and I responded to that. In the ruling the Speaker brought into it the preamble and requested the apology, which I was happy to give.

I am going to respond to what he has identified as what he is calling his point of order on, which is the second question. If I am incorrect that this is the part that is offending the member, I would ask him to please stand and clarify that. I tried to respond to exactly what he brought up last time, and other things were brought into the mix. If I'm not correct in responding to exactly what he's referencing, please indicate that.

Okay. So we are responding to the second question that has been asked. The member feels that aspersions were cast under 23(h) and under 409(7). Mr. Speaker, I have to flat-out disagree. It's a question seeking information: what role? That is not casting aspersions. It is asking: what role?

An Hon. Member: The preamble.

Ms Blakeman: No. We are talking about the second question. That is exactly what the member referenced, and that is what I'm responding to. You want to talk about the preamble? That's already been dealt with. Don't call it in again.

So we're talking about the second question: "what role . . ." I don't think there's anything wrong in questioning what role a member had in a particular incident. It goes on to say, "if any." Perhaps the member had no role in this particular question, and that possibility is left open for the minister to respond to. Then the member is noted by the appropriate name: "did the Member for Calgary-Montrose have in the prohibited transfer of grant funds?" "In the prohibited transfer of grant funds." Clearly, we've already shown that the transfer of grant funds was prohibited, so what is inaccurate in that? What is casting the aspersions in that? That's a factual statement. "The prohibited transfer of grant funds." It was prohibited. The grant funds happened. They were transferred, and it was not to have happened, according to the very rules that were outlined previously by the Minister of Community Development.

Where are the aspersions being cast? It's asking: what did the member have to do with this? Perhaps he had nothing to do with it. That's what the clause "if any" is in there for. So there are no aspersions cast here.

The Speaker obviously felt that aspersions were cast in the preamble. He requested an apology, and he got it. We're talking about the second question, and I clarified that with the member here that it was the second question that is the subject of this second point of order, Mr. Speaker.

I would argue that there is no aspersion being cast here. It doesn't say: was the member personally responsible for this? Was the member's own money involved? Did the member benefit from it? None of those questions are in there. It says: what role did they play in this? So there is no aspersion being cast here. It's a straightforward question, Mr. Speaker.

Again, it's the role of the opposition to hold the government accountable. There has been a problem that has been identified in this particular episode with a particular group here. Funds were transferred that were not to have been. Criteria were established that were not followed. There is a problem here. The opposition has identified and asked the minister how the government is going to respond and who was involved in this, what went wrong, what happened. That's our job. We're here to ask those questions when something like this is identified, and ask the questions we did. So I argue that there were no aspersions cast in this second question as it appears.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to respond to this, Mr. Speaker, and I await your ruling.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, there is nothing more reprehensible than calling into account the character of an individual member in this House unless it's delegating the authority to defend it. Clearly, both in the preamble and in the second question the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview raised a question. The second question clearly raised the question: what role did the Member for Calgary-Montrose have?

Now, if the hon. member has any indication that there is wrongdoing by a member of this House, the appropriate way to deal with it is to call the Ethics Commissioner and give any evidence of that to the Ethics Commissioner and ask for an investigation. That's the appropriate way of dealing with issues of character, issues of conflict with respect to members of this House, not to raise a question and throw it out on the floor of the House for the public to hear and cast aspersions on a person's character. That's the most offensive thing you can do.

Mr. Speaker, I think you should call this into account. I'm surprised that the hon. member didn't raise a point of privilege on this matter.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, you want to participate on this point of order?

Mr. Lukaszuk: That's correct.

The Speaker: Then proceed.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, for my comments I'm relying on Standing Orders 23(h) and (i). What's also overlooked here – and I listened carefully to the question and then to you having read the questions again – is the profiling that took place. There was no substantive connection whatsoever between the alleged wrongdoing of the said society in Calgary and the Member for Calgary-Montrose other than the fact that he simply happens to be of the same ethnic background as the society in Calgary.

Mr. Speaker, this is something that you must make a ruling on because if ever any society that happens to be of Polish descent does something that may be conceived to be unbecoming, will the Leader of the Opposition then accuse me and you that somehow we have been accomplices to it simply because of our ethnic background? The only connection between the Member for Calgary-Montrose and the alleged incident is his ethnicity. How reprehensible can we get?

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there additional members who would like to participate?

Well, the statement that was given in the House that led to the second intervention was the following, again from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. The question was very, very short. "Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what role, if any, did the Member for Calgary-Montrose have in the prohibited transfer of grant funds?" Very straightforward. "What role, if any, did the Member for Calgary-Montrose have in the prohibited transfer of grant funds?" Well, first of all, how would the minister know if the hon. member had any role? This has nothing to do with government policy, and the purpose of the question period is to deal with government policy.

Secondly, there are some kinds of questions we can give in life. This is a question period, and skill is always entailed in it. I guess if one wants to make a point, one can make a point. If I were to ask a question, and I were to say to you "Answer yes or no," you would be dead either way with this question. I'm going to give you a question. You have only one choice. You answer yes or you answer no. You know what? I know you're dead either way. Do you still beat your wife? There's an implication involved in this. It has an innuendo involved in it, and all the text on politics will use examples such as this. There are hundreds of books in the libraries dealing with the skill to be used in terms of what it is you want to get.

It's absolutely correct. It's absolutely correct what the Opposition House Leader said, that the purpose of question period and the purpose of questions in question period is to hold the government accountable. The Member for Calgary-Montrose is not a member of the government. The Member for Calgary-Montrose is a Member of the Legislative Assembly. The only members in the government in this Assembly are the Members of Executive Council. So what was the purpose to tie in prohibited transfer of grant funds as well?

I want to point out one other thing. We have an officer of the Legislative Assembly that this Assembly spent a great deal of time finding and appointing. We have a statute in the province of Alberta called the Conflicts of Interest Act, and in the Conflicts of Interest Act there's a preamble. I want to read the preamble.

Whereas the ethical conduct of elected officials is expected in democracies;

Whereas Members of the Legislative Assembly are expected to perform their duties of office and arrange their private affairs in a manner that promotes public confidence and trust in the integrity of each Member, that maintains the Assembly's dignity and that justifies the respect in which society holds the Assembly and its Members; and

Whereas Members of the Legislative Assembly, in reconciling their duties of office and their private interests, are expected to act with integrity and impartiality;

Therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, enacts [an act].

There are actually a lot of pages in the act. But the key thing in the act is that if a Member of the Legislative Assembly believes that a member has breached something in the statutes of the province of Alberta, it is the duty of that member to contact the Ethics Commissioner under the Conflicts of Interest Act and ask for such a review, and such a review would be undertaken. That's the honourable, parliamentary way in which we as Members of this Legislative Assembly deemed in days gone by, in debates gone by: first reading, second reading, committee with amendments, third reading, royal proclamation, and everything else. We even publish this act. All members have a copy of it, were given a copy of it by the Speaker as part of the orientation.

So there is a process. Wiser members than us years ago determined that that was the appropriate way to deal with these things. Should there be a question, and one member has some thoughts about another member, well, you do the honourable thing. You just phone him up, ask him for a cup of coffee, and say, "Hey, did you do that?" That's probably the quickest way. If the answer is no, okay. That's it. The other way, we have this officer of the Legislative Assembly. But, okay, I guess the other option is to come to the Legislative Assembly and raise questions.

I'm pretty sensitive, hon. members. I'm pretty sensitive because of what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs has said. I'm not going to play that card in this Assembly, but I'm not going to let it go either without a caution. We're expected to perform our duties in here with integrity, and we're not expected to provide aspersions and other types of things, whatever it is under 23 (h) or (i) or 409(7) or 411(5).

To the same minister the question again, "What role, if any" – and how would the minister know if there was a role, if he even doubts that there was a role – "did the Member for Calgary-Montrose have" and then "prohibited transfer of grants funds?"

Well. I'm sorry, but I'm concluding again that this is another legitimate point of order, and I'm going to ask the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition to do the honourable thing.

Ms Blakeman: I thank the Speaker for his advice, and on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition I withdraw the question and offer an apology to the Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you very much.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, has the matter been dealt with?

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Because this issue is very important to my name and to my reputation and to my ability to perform my duty in this House, I would ask the Leader of the Official Opposition to stand up tomorrow in the House and make the retraction and apology. If he refuses to do that in person, I would like to consider to move this thing over to become a point of privilege because I don't think that the practice of attacking and running away is good enough.

On the first point of order I accepted it because it doesn't cast a motive on my ability to perform my work, Mr. Speaker. But in the second instance the people at home who read Hansard or who hear the question in QP need to have the remark withdrawn personally by the Leader of the Official Opposition and a full apology made at that time.

The Speaker: I heard the hon member. There's no reconsidering of that?

Then the hon. Opposition House Leader has heard the hon. member too. It will be printed in Hansard, and the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition will be able to get a copy of it later in the day. We'll deal with this matter, then, tomorrow.

The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Under 13(2), for the Speaker to explain. Mr. Speaker, as with the Premier and as with the Executive Council, the Leader of the Official Opposition and indeed the leader of the third party have legitimate reasons to be absent from the House, and we recognize that there is business that calls them from the House. In this case I believe that the leader made every attempt to follow every possible contingency involved here, did send a note to the Speaker. The Speaker on the record confirmed that there was a delegation that had happened and, in fact, brought that up again. I have acted in good faith here as the person to whom this was delegated. If delegation is not accepted, I'm assuming the Speaker, with the powers that he has in this House, would've set that forth at the beginning of this particular episode.

I'm questioning now if the Speaker could provide an explanation for why he appears to me to now be withdrawing his acceptance of that delegation, which seemed to have been set in place. What we're getting now are accusations coming from that side, which I can't argue on a point of order, accusations coming back toward the Leader of the Official Opposition that he's made discriminatory remarks. I'm not allowed to defend that because we're inside a point of order. I'm entirely at the mercy of the Speaker, in fact. So I would ask the Speaker to explain why he is allowing this to go forward when he accepted the delegation previously.

The Speaker: Actually, if the hon. member had listened and heard what the Speaker heard, the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, if I understand this, basically said that he wanted now to take this to a point of privilege, not a point of order. That clearly is a right.

Certainly, it's the chair's hope that this matter would've been dealt with by way of a point of order. The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, as I understood it, accepted the apology, which was a very sincere apology. It was a legitimate apology, and I accept that. That's why I asked the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, after he made that comment, if he would reconsider it. His response to me was no, which is the right of a member.

However, I want to bring this matter to a conclusion today. I'm going to ask the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose if he would consider that we've now dealt with this matter because there was a clear delegation of authority that was given by the Leader of the Official Opposition to the hon. member, who is the House leader of the Official Opposition. This happens all the time with the leader of the government, delegating this authority to one of the House leaders. They deal with the matter, and it's dealt with. No member of the opposition has come forward and said: "Look, that's not good enough. We want the other person in." This concept of delegation is something in there.

So I'm going to ask with a great deal of humility on behalf of the chair for the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose to accept the apology extended by the hon. Official Opposition House Leader so that we can close this matter and go forward.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Above all people in the House I respect this House a lot, I don't believe in wasting time, I don't raise a point of order if it is not important, and I am readily willing to accept the apology from the opposition member. The reason that I refused to accept the delegated apology is because I have noticed a pattern of behaviour from the Leader of the Official Opposition. Day in and day out he keeps attacking people one after another, people in this House and people outside of this House. I, for one, would like to have him come in here to apologize personally to me so that at least he can understand that it is a serious issue, and he wouldn't do it again to another member.

But given what you say today, Mr. Speaker, and given the fact that we have spent enough valuable time of this House on this matter, I will accept your recommendation and accept the apology with the hope that somehow members of his caucus will relate to him that this is the last straw on the back of the camel. One more step, and we are not going to tolerate this kind of behaviour in this House.

The Speaker: Well, hon. member, okay. I'm going to conclude this case with everything but the last comment. I'm going to extend a caution to the hon. member. The hon. member in his concluding remark extended a threat, which is prohibited. Now I'm going to ask him to withdraw that last comment.

Mr. Pham: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw that comment.

Point of Order Challenging the Chair

The Speaker: Okay. Now we have to deal with a whole bunch of notes here that I got about what people heard and everything else, notes including from this person and up and down in the exercise program for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. So, okay.

Sometime in here during this time the Speaker is in the chair. The Assembly is live. We're into the fourth question. The hon. leader of the third party is raising some questions, which I guess – well, we'll see where we go with this. After I had an exchange with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, then I received a note from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood saying: I did it. Well, I got about 25 notes from other members saying: they both did it. So who should I deal with?

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, I have all the text that I need. I have all the citations that I need. We can come to this very quickly if the hon. member wants to be recognized.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When I was asking my second supplemental of the Premier, I asked the question: "Is [the Premier] saying that he has nothing to apologize for when the serious concerns identified by this Auditor General were allowed to fester and build during [the Premier's] watch?" At which point, Mr. Speaker, you got up and ruled that out and said that it really didn't deal with policy. At least, that's the part of the ruling that I recollect.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, I take my responsibility of holding the government accountable very seriously. They make it very difficult from time to time, and I certainly was frustrated.

I did take this opportunity to look up the role of the Speaker in the House of Commons in Beauchesne. If I can just read sections 167 and 168.

167. The essential ingredient of the speakership is found in the status of the Speaker as a servant of the House. The Presiding Officer, while but a servant of the House, is entitled on all occasions to be treated with the greatest attention and respect by the individual Members because the office embodies the power, dignity, and honour of the House itself.

168. (1) The chief characteristics attached to the office of Speaker in the House of Commons are authority and impartiality. . . Confidence in the impartiality of the Speaker is an indispensable condition of the successful working of procedure, and many conventions exist which have as their object, not only to ensure the impartiality of the Speaker but also, to ensure that there is a general recognition of the Speaker's impartiality. The Speaker takes no part in debate in the House, and votes only when the Voices are equal, and then only in accordance with rules which preclude an expression of opinion on the merits of a question.

(2) In order to ensure complete impartiality the Speaker has usually relinquished all affiliation with any parliamentary party. The Speaker does not attend any party caucus nor take part in any outside partisan political activity.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate that the comments that I made clearly violate those rules, and for that, I apologize to you and to the House.

The Speaker: Thank you very much. Before accepting the apology, I'd also draw to the attention of the hon. leader of the third party page 523, House of Commons Procedure & Practice, where it says: the Speaker may sentence hon. members to the gaol. I made that up. Okay? I made that up. It's okay. You're not going to jail.

Okay, hon. members, I take it there's approval of the members, then, to proceed to Orders of the Day, and when we get out of Orders of the Day, we're into the estimates. No difficulty with any of that with anybody?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Speaker: Okay. Thank you.

head: Orders of the Day
head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2005-06

Health and Wellness

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister for Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to introduce first of all members of staff that are in the gallery. They are here to make sure that we take down all the questions and that we provide written responses and clear responses to members of the Assembly: Deputy Minister Paddy Meade; assistant deputy ministers Annette Trimbee, Janet Skinner, and Bruce Perry; CEO of AADAC, Murray Finnerty; Peter Hegholz, the director of finance; Christine Shandro; and then, obviously, from my staff Mark Kastner, Michael DeBolt, and Alyssa Haunholter. Christine Powell is here to observe.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to give a few general messages on the 2005-06 budget, and I'd like to condense some of my remarks, respectful of the fact that the hon. members opposite would obviously like to have an opportunity, a chance, or ask questions.

The budget this year for health is $8.9 billion, an increase of $707 million, or 8.6 per cent, over last year. Our nine regional health authorities and the Cancer Board and Mental Health Board will directly receive over 60 per cent of the total budget increase for enhanced base operating funding to provide accessible care to all Albertans. This will bring funding to the health authorities to over $5.6 billion this year, up $572 million so that they can continue providing health services and expand access. Within this amount is $10 million to increase the number of nursing hours for patients in long-term care facilities.

Over $1.7 billion will be spent on physician services, an increase of $173 million. Of this physician services budget, $30 million has been earmarked for hiring up to 150 new physicians, bringing the total number of physicians in Albertans to 5,775.

Almost $60 million has been assigned to primary care initiatives throughout the province, with a 25 per cent increase in funding for the Cancer Board, which is an increase of almost $48 million, to accommodate the high cost of many cancer drugs and high-quality patient care.

Over the next three years we'll spend $25 million on a mental health innovation fund targeting particularly mental health issues for children and youth. The Mental Health Board will also receive almost $2 million over last year's budget for province-wide services, including forensic psychiatry and tele-mental health.

Five hundred and sixty million dollars in capital financing has been allocated for the first year of a three-year $1.6 billion capital plan for health facilities and equipment. This includes funding for the completion of the Alberta Children's hospital in Calgary and the Alberta Heart Institute in Edmonton.

The government has also committed support for two new capital projects, the Calgary south hospital project and the health sciences ambulatory learning centre project in Edmonton, a joint project with Alberta Advanced Education. The Calgary south hospital project and the health sciences ambulatory learning centre project will each exceed $500 million.

There's an increase of $72 million for ministry-sponsored nongroup health benefits, ensuring that Albertans not covered under a group plan, primarily seniors, continue to have access to supplementary health services, including prescription drug costs.

AADAC will receive $74 million under this year's budget, an increase of $8 million from last year. Four point two million dollars will be used to establish two new youth residential detoxification and treatment programs to help young Albertans break addictions to drugs and alcohol.

While the Health and Wellness budget itself is $8.9 billion, when you include health-related spending by other ministries, the government's total spending on health will exceed $9.5 billion this year.

Mr. Speaker, just an interesting fact is that while we spend over $500 million for drugs in Health and Wellness, the total bill for drugs in the province of Alberta paid for by government exceeds $1 billion, so it's certainly a very significant expense.

Altogether, Health and Wellness spends 37 per cent of the government's total expenses this year.

Recent accomplishments. I'd like to just highlight, Mr. Speaker, that the Health Symposium provided opportunities for all of the health providers throughout the province to attend and to learn together about the fact that there are no single solutions on health care. Improvements must be patient focused, evidence based. Solutions must meet our own society's expectations and values. An attitude of openness is necessary for new possibilities. Change in health care systems should be evolutionary and entrepreneurial. Collaboration among professionals is vital. Quality care is achieved when health teams learn together and act accordingly, and change must be focused on what will work and what will make a positive difference to the health of the population.

Other recent accomplishments which will signal the way for the work that we'll do this year include the Alberta hip and knee replacement pilot project, officially launched April 8. Systems improvements for 2004-05 funding will include a reduction in the time it takes to see an orthopedic specialist and an increased number of hip and knee surgeries.

Funding from last year's budget for the provincial stroke strategy was announced at the beginning of last month and will mean that in all parts of the province Albertans will receive leading-edge stroke mitigation clinical services. It also means that the number of strokes will hopefully be reduced in our province.

We've established an Ambulance Governance Advisory Council to determine a conclusive cost for transfer of services to health regions and to provide recommendations on any future governance or ambulance issues.

The ministry is also developing new continuing care health standards. As we have discussed over the last few days, these standards in draft form were redrafted last December and continue to be amended. We will consider input from all Members of the Legislative Assembly as we evolve and look forward to what the Albertans across Alberta will say in the review. The MLAs from Calgary-Foothills and Lacombe-Ponoka will be conducting that review to end at the end of August.

The priority this year, the target, will be to make sure that Albertans are healthy and that they have the best health and wellness records of anybody in the country. To provide support for this, we'll provide leadership and collaborate with partners on a number of fronts. The ministry will dedicate its efforts towards the three core businesses: advocating and providing education for healthy living, providing quality health and wellness services, and leading and participating in continuous improvement in the health system. In addition to our ongoing activities, we will be looking ahead to strengthening the public health risk management capacities as well as health system innovation.

As we develop Alberta's third way in health, which means improving the care system and making a good system even better, I want to reassure colleagues that publicly funded, basic medicare services will continue to be provided according to all the principles of the Canada Health Act, and no Albertan will be denied services in the province of Alberta based on need.

Our immediate government priorities, reinforced by the symposium, will continue to be: promoting wellness, particularly for children and youth; advancing new standards in long-term care; advancing primary care supports; realizing improvements in mental health service delivery; and making electronic health records a robust reality by 2008. With other ministries, such as the Ministry of Education, the curriculum for physical activity will be introduced over this next year so that we will learn and the learner will learn at the very early stages of life how to maintain good health.

Our primary care initiatives will be established. At least 12 will be operational by this summer, and throughout Alberta where those are located, there will be 24/7 access for people who need health care at any time of the day. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that that will reduce the heavy imposition on emergency departments, who have at times been clogged with many important issues but definitely not always urgent.

Our priorities include promotion and prevention, expanding our community care, improving access, and watching and working on how we manage the growing cost of emerging technologies and pharmaceuticals. We'll work on health workforce recruitment and retention and continue to strengthen cross-ministry initiatives. We will be mindful of growth and the changing demographics and note, Mr. Chairman, that currently 10 per cent of Albertans are 65 years of age or over, and this percentage is expected to increase to 13 per cent by 2016 and 20 per cent by 2030.

Other challenges include the cost of emerging technologies and pharmaceuticals, workforce shortages, expectations for health service quality and increased health spending, public health risks, aboriginal health needs, mental health challenges, and addiction issues.

Mr. Chairman, according to the 2004 Alberta Health survey, 89 per cent of Albertans were satisfied with the way health services are provided; 74 per cent of Albertans indicated satisfaction with the health system in Alberta. While our system continues to receive high marks, we know that we must continue to improve and renew our system. The priorities in the months ahead will include the initiatives that have not been accomplished yet in the Mazankowski report, and we will work to emphasize wellness and strength in our collaboration.

Mr. Chairman, I look forward to answering the questions from the members opposite and from any Member of the Legislative Assembly and look forward, as well, to sending written responses to those that we're not able to answer entirely today.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I think it's been a very opportune time for both the Minister of Health and Wellness and for me as the Official Opposition critic to have the advantage of having not one but two wide-reaching, thoughtful, and sometimes provocative health information symposiums made available to us in the last week. First, the Friends of Medicare alternative conference, the weekend of April 30 and May 1, followed by the minister's own international Health Symposium.

So I just want to make a couple of contextual comments first, Mr. Chairman. I think that, essentially, our health care system is a good system. It has served us very well. By any measurement you choose to look at, we still come out looking very good in comparison to other countries, if that's important to you. I think what's important to most Albertans is that there is health service available to them when they need it and it's based on need, not on ability to pay. That's something very important to Albertans. So it's a system that does work for the most part.

I believe that it is sustainable, but I do believe that it needs updating. We have a number of systems that were put in place in the 1950s and '60s, very good programs, hard-fought-for, lots of debate at the time. Medicare is one of them. Our social safety net is another example, or welfare, or however you want to call it. They were put in place for very specific reasons at the time. We're 50 and 60 years beyond that, and we need to go back and re-examine and update that system.

I would suggest to you that the system that was set up for medicare in the late '50s or early '60s was a system that was directed at the catastrophic costs that they were trying to protect people from at the time. Those were directed towards the doctors' fees, not that doctors charged too much, but still for many people that was a hardship. It was also directed specifically at hospital costs, at acute-care costs. So we have the doctor as gatekeeper to the system and, also, how we pay the doctors and the hospitals, and that's really what medicare was set up for. I think what we have to do now is look at how we can make the acute-care system sustainable, because that's where our biggest costs still are: the hospital and delivery of acute health care.

So how do we make that more sustainable, and how do we deal with the larger context that we know is important today? When we bring in things like opening that funding model to capture and include things like wellness measures, prevention measures, and I'll also add reduction measures in there – if we can reduce the number of motor vehicle accidents, that would save us money in the acute-care wings, if you're following my reasoning here. So wellness, prevention, the social determinants of health: we are coming to see that those increasingly are important parts of how we deliver health care services. We must take into consideration the social determinants of health.

Also, two other things we need to include in that are management of chronic disease and end of life. That's where I will be looking to steer the minister and influence her if I can. That's where I think we need to go, and that's my vision of an updated Alberta health delivery model. So I'm looking to shift the emphasis, in other words.

[Ms Haley in the chair]

I think and I argue very strongly that all innovation that we need can be done inside the public health system. I'll be careful and strictly technical here, Madam Chairman, in that actually a lot of our delivery is, strictly speaking, in what we call the private system because it's not delivered directly by government any more. So in Alberta we have a system where everything, in fact, is delegated to the regional health authorities, and they now own the hospitals and deliver the health care system. So, strictly speaking, yeah, but we know that that's not the case. We view the regional health authorities as creatures of Health and Wellness, of the government itself.

So I continue to talk about public delivery of services. In that I include not-for-profit agencies many times because the purpose of their being is to deliver the service, not to make a profit. I make a very clear distinction between that public service delivery and a private venture, that is to raise money for stakeholders and for owners.

My argument around that is that the for-profit delivery does not make any of our situations better. It does not create or give us any more of the resources that we are finding limited. Having a private system in place does not give us more doctors. It doesn't. What happens is that doctors are taken out of the public system and go and work in the for-profit system. That doesn't give us more doctors, though. A for-profit system does not magically create doctors, unless we're going to go into robotics in a heavy way here, and I haven't seen any sign of that. So it does not give us any more of what we need to actually run the system. It does not increase our capacity, our ability to deliver health care services at all. The arguments about reduced waiting lists are specious. They do not hold water.

I think one of the things that's important for us is to start making decisions based on evidence, and I heard the speaker say that. It's something both of us heard a lot: get the information and make your decisions based on the actual evidence, not on what we think is going on, or ideas, zombies that keep arising and walking around on the earth and really have no validity to them.

I also argue that the private, for-profit delivery of the system has a higher cost, in fact, and, if anything, creates a longer waiting list because it in many cases creates an artificial demand. It does use up the resources that are here, and in using those resources – you know, supply and demand – it drives the costs up. In the end it creates a higher cost system and doesn't contribute anything to make the system more accessible or, in fact, easier to do. You know, there are other things like cherry-picking and creaming and all of those things that we've heard about.

So I would argue for the minister that there are two things to do now. One is long-term care. Actually, since I wrote my notes, we've now had the Auditor General's report come out. I believe that there are a couple of things to do there. I believe the Auditor General has laid out very clearly where the problems are and what we need to address.

What I'm looking to the minister for is decisions and leadership about how we're going to fund this system because I think this system should be funded inside of the public system, and it's not right now. It's mostly outside. People are mostly on their own, and there actually are very definitive moves from the government to make it more on the outside, to reclassify people from a care situation, which has a medical model attached to it, to a housing situation, which has no medical model attached to it. It's a housing situation. Many people would believe that you are still under some kind of care. In fact, you're not. You're in a housing situation.

So we need to decide how we're going to pay for that, and it's possible that we want to look at things like: should we have a voucher system where the money follows the person no matter what kind of facility they're in? Or do we say: "You only get the money if you're in this kind of facility," or "You only get it if you're this kind of person"? That is one of the decisions that has to be made for us to move forward in this particular debate. So we need the information on how we're going to pay, and we need the information to make decisions on how we're going to plan for the future.

One of the zombies that keeps walking around is that the baby boomers, as they age, are going to crash the health care system. Wrong. Wrong. Wrong. Put that zombie back in the ground and drive a stake through its heart. It is wrong. What we know is that these baby boomers are healthier than every generation before them. They're stronger. They've got bigger bones. They've had a better diet their whole lives. They should at this point, given the amount of public knowledge, be able to know that they should lead a healthy lifestyle, they should avoid injury, et cetera, et cetera. So they are going to live longer, and they're going to be healthier as they age.

My grandfather was sick, sick, sick by the time he was 65. A 65 year old today, well, please. They're golfing. They're doing this. They're doing that. They're still working, most of them. I mean, 65 is not old anymore. They are very fit. Seventy-five: well, you're thinking of slowing down a bit more. Eighty-five: okay, now we're talking old. So our whole thought process about what's old and what's infirm and what's elderly has shifted by 20 years already. That's not crashing the system.

So as we get baby boomers that start to move into that retirement age – and I think it's 2011 or 2012 where they really start to hit that boom, that the bump on the screen moves into that age range – they're not going to be using health care resources at an enormous rate. Actually, the people that cost the health care system the most money are people that are so-called middle-aged who have catastrophic diseases that need extreme treatment in acute care. It's people who have cancer. It's people who need high intervention for life-ending diseases. That's what's expensive. It's not expensive to be old. It's expensive to be sick and middle-aged because we're going to get you better, but it's going to cost a lot of money to get you there.

I think one of the other things we need to look at immediately is staffing levels, particularly the long-term care. Now, I heard the minister talk about money going to that, but really the situation we've got right now is that staffing levels are at 1.9 hours per individual, almost two hours per person per day, but not quite. The government has made a commitment to move to 3.1 and then incrementally to move to 3.4, and I keep arguing that the long-term care sector has told us 3.6 to really get the job done. So I keep questioning: why the gap? What's the evidence behind the ministry's decision to go to 3.4 rather than 3.6? I want to know this. Because if that's what everybody in this sector is telling us, that's what the front-line workers are telling us, okay, where's the evidence that says we shouldn't do that? What's the evidence to tell us not to do the extra .2 an hour? I want to know that.

I think that the long-term care sector is a small sector, but it has a much bigger impact on all of our lives. I mean, really, we're not dealing with that many people that are sick and in care. Long-term care right now is 14,000 people, and there's an additional 4,000 and some odd people that are in some sort of associated care, whether we're calling it assisted living or supportive living, and those are some of the categories that are being redefined away from care and towards housing. So we're talking 18,000 people in the province, 18,000 and change, a significant population but not a huge population.

I think we have to be very clear about the standards, which we know are problematic right now. Work has to be done on that very quickly. We have to look at the appropriate medical and nonmedical accommodation. That's my conversation about medical care versus housing. We have to be careful about that because I don't think this should be about off-loading onto individuals, which this government has been very keen on doing: individual responsibility and people really want to look after themselves, so we're going to let them do that. I think that if the public really understood that that was the outcome of the government decision-making process, they would not be in favour of it. But, you know, let's find out. Let's get the decision. Let's get the evidence.

I think we have to be very, very careful. First of all, I think the province should be building the long-term care facilities. I do not think they should be built by private providers, period. End of discussion. If it's long-term care, I think it should be in the public system. I think we have to be very careful with our regulations – and, again, I would prefer to see it in the public system – on what I would call the old-style lodge accommodation, where people actually didn't need medical help. They just didn't want to do the dishes and the cooking and the shoveling and everything. They were happy to live in a room in a communal setting with other people, with meals provided and laundry done, but they had the freedom to come and go as they wished. That is a housing kind of situation.

We have to be very careful to regulate that because when things go wrong, the public looks at us and goes: "You were the only ones that were in a position to look after us here, to make sure we were protected. Why didn't you do that? Why did you abdicate your responsibility?" We have to put those regulations in place, we have to monitor them, and we have to enforce them. We are the only ones that can do that. Expecting the private sector to police themselves or monitor or whatever you want to call it does not happen. That is evidence, and we've got lots of it to show us that it does not happen. So that's another place we fall down. Evidence-based planning and decision-making: gather the information where we don't have it.

Workforce planning, I think, is really important, not only around, you know, how are we going to provide – we're behind on capacity right now for health workforce. Even with the plans that are announced by the minister, that will not get us anywhere close to the number of people that we need.

One of the specific questions I have here is: what is the number of physicians per thousand that we will now be at by what date? The minister announced, "Well, we're going to hire new physicians, and that gets us to 5,000 in the province," I think I heard her say, or something like that. Well, how many is that per thousand, because that's the rate that the rest of the countries go on, and there's a variation there between, like, seven and nine, I think, per thousand. So give us a benchmark where we can compare ourselves to other places and, indeed, look at ourselves and figure out if that's what we want.

So workforce planning, I think, is very important, not only the doctors but also the team profession. This is where I go back to arguing about the way we pay doctors and the idea of doctor as gatekeeper. That's part of the 1950s model that we need to move away from and must move away from if we are going to open that system up and add in things like wellness and prevention and chronic care management and social determinants of health and end-of-life care. We're trying to do it now, and we still have that bottleneck – and that's not the word I want to use, but it's the only one on my tongue right now – of going through the doctor as gatekeeper as to who gets services.

We have to open that model up to include nurses, nurse practitioners, LPNs, dietitians, therapists, pharmacists – a much underused health professional resource – technicians, radiologists, counsellors. There's a whole host of people that are trained and trained well to contribute to the health care system, and we don't let them do very much. We spend a lot of money training them, and we have one person where everything sort of has to funnel through them. My argument is: have the doctors do what only doctors can do because you've got all the rest of these people to pull from to do everything else.

We don't have to have doctors doing triage, for example. Nurse practitioners can do it. Why do we have a doctor doing it? Counsellors, for example. There are a lot of possibilities there. So workforce management is very important. I'll come back to that. I'm going to have to get up and speak again. I want to talk about midwifery and its place in this.

I know that we're looking at the local primary care initiatives, and that is the beginning of the idea. Those are the pilot projects that are going to lead us into the future. But that program in itself is still set up with doctor as gatekeeper, and we've got to move away from that. Part of it is the way we pay doctors, and we have to acknowledge that they do more training, they need to be able to pay off their debts, and they need to be paid for their position and their knowledge and their responsibility. Absolutely. We need to acknowledge that. I don't want to take anything away from the doctors on that. But we also need to move to a new model. This is where the old model bottlenecks for us. That's what we've got to work at changing, and it isn't going to be easy. You've got my sympathy, Madam Minister.

I think we need to vigorously pursue pharmacare policies because pharmacare and new technology are the two burgeoning new costs to the health care system. Acute care was our old big cost. It's still there, and we can reduce that or make it sustainable, but pharmaceuticals and technology are the big new costs. We have to work hard at not controlling and not rationing but managing what's happening there. We could be doing things we're not, like we could be negotiating for large bulk buys on pharmaceuticals and negotiating hard.

When you look at the purchase of Cipro, for example, by the federal government a few years back when we were worried about SARS, they managed to work that from, you know, several dollars a pill down to less than a buck. Well, yeah. Because they were buying that much medication, they could argue to negotiate that price down. We're not doing that, and we should be. So it's one area that we've totally left alone that we need to look at.

We need to look very carefully at: how much does it cost really? What are the outcomes that we expect to get? We've been all over the board. I've said before – and it sounds a little odd, but it's true – we have too much money in this province for good health care. We're able to throw a little money here, throw a little money there, and whoever was arguing for whatever is happy, and on we go tootling along. If we were strapped for money, we would make much better decisions based on much better evidence about where we needed to take our health care system, but because we're not strapped for money, we're not forced into the situation where we have to make those calls.

I'll look for another opportunity to speak immediately following the minister's response. Thank you.

Ms Evans: Well, I'll be brief. I am, I think, very privileged to have a critic that spends as much time as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre does both in pursuit of finding out information and doing an analysis of it. We did share a table together in Calgary and shared many of the same experiences and the same perspectives, and I think that's entirely positive.

I will provide in writing the number of positions per thousand, just citing that our current workforce statistics are not broken down that way. Over the past three years a net gain of 600 doctors. We've gained more than 2,000 registered nurses between 2000 and 2003 and, obviously, need to do more there. We also expect to grow by a hundred pharmacists per year. We have currently 3,200 pharmacists practising in Alberta. Our postsecondary seats dedicated to health care are up 20 per cent since 1998-99, and the Alberta provincial nominee program has helped regional health authorities recruit 223 foreign-trained physicians.

Now, I am just given notice that there will be two doctors per thousand people in 2005-06, and I think that along with our primary care centres, hopefully, and the better use of nurse practitioners – and I noted that the hon. Minister of Finance was enthusiastic about that and initiated that program, so we're going to continue to work on that.

I'll just make one other observation. Relative to the high cost of drugs and some of the issues surrounding the drugs, I believe that what we're currently doing to analyze the clinical trials and to keep pace with the common drug review extensions will enable us to be more quality- and consistency-focused on what is proper. I'd also comment that we're looking at implementing a new generic price policy so that generics must be 70 per cent or less than the brand price, and subsequent generics must offer a 63 per cent discount from brand price. These kinds of innovative things, including large volume purchasing, may help us in fact curb some of our drug costs.

I look forward to the member's additional questions, and we'll take that from there.

The Acting Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'll just finish off my last sort of overall discussion. The last part of that updating of the health care system is the social determinants of health. The example that I use is, you know, that I can take any woman off the street with a good education and a great job and good health and a wonderful family and supportive community involvement. If I take away her job, if I take away her home – put her on the street and make her homeless – if I diminish the value of her education, if I take away her family or her social supports, that woman will be in need of health care intervention within a year because you cannot keep your health under those circumstances. You cannot stay healthy being homeless. You cannot stay healthy. For example, if you end up with a mental health problem, a mental health disease, you're not healthy, and that causes another series of problems.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

We have to stop looking at health care as a supply challenge but also look at the demand side for health care and reducing demand. A big part of reducing demand on the health care system is looking at those affiliated social determinants of health, and that is about housing, that is about transitional housing, that is about treatment centres for people who have alcohol and drug addictions or who are coming out of a domestic battering situation. That is about looking at education and accessibility. It is about the minimum wage because that drives a lot of other wage functions. It is about your social benefit programs.

So we need to look at that, you know, and I think ultimately it's going to be women that change this system because we're more interested in matrix systems. Oh, look at that. It's even in the name. We understand that those things are connected, and if you want to change a bunch of them, you're going to have to look at that whole system.

In particular, one of the things that we know – and let's talk evidence again – is that a dollar invested in early childhood, before the age of six, which is why you have programs like Success by Six, will save you $7 down the road in your health care system, and some of it is saved in corrections and policing. That's a lot of money, Mr. Chairman.

Now, if we want to reduce having to supply so much, reduce the demand, and that's one of the places that you can do it. It's difficult the way this government is structured right now because increasingly the modern problems we look at are multidisciplinary. You're working with a structure right now that works against the new age, the new day because your departments are siloed, are compartmentalized in a way that does not allow you to work back and forth on this stuff. So if you really want to contain health care, you've got to work with kids, you've got to work with education, you've got to work with housing. You know, I've been trying to get funding for sexual assault centres. It's totally all over the place. It's in four different ministries. No wonder I can't get something happening there, but we'll get that.

Okay. I want to move on and look at midwifery. I know that the minister is interested in this. Again, I think a lot of this has to do with recognizing the midwives as an integral part of the health care delivery team, and that has to do with taking the docs away from being the gatekeeper quite so specifically. I have talked with members of the midwifery promotion sector, if I can call it that, advocates. That's a better way to put it. Their point is – and it's an old point, and it's worth making again – childbirth is not a disease. It's not bad health. It actually is a natural process. And you know what? Women can do it on their own if they really have to.

We tend to medicalize it, and we shouldn't. I've used costs in the House before where it's $2,800 for a midwife-assisted – and you get lots more services in that bundle – and $4,100 for a hospital delivery, and you don't get post- and pre-support with that. That's strictly the hospital and the operating room and the doctor and the scrub nurses and the rest that go along with that. So, again, can we do something? It's not about more supply; it's about decreasing the demand on the system, and there's a way to do it.

A point that I want to raise under this is the local primary care initiatives and full funding. What they're suggesting now is that maybe we shouldn't be paying all of the costs under health care for midwifery. That's something I've advocated for years: I want to see the full costs of midwifery covered under health care. These groups are now going: you know, maybe people will be more willing to move this forward if not all the costs are under that. Well, I'm not buying that argument so much, but I know that it's a consideration this group wants the minister to make. They state that consumers are prepared to have a partial funding model, and maybe this could be incremental. I guess I'd be willing to go there if it was incremental.

I would like to argue that midwives should be the gatekeepers of the maternity care services in order for the government to reap the biggest cost savings, and again this could work into the LPCI model. I do; I think midwives should be the gatekeepers of that particular section. It's not medical; it's not bad; it's not a disease. The system, the process of assistance that's available that thinks that way is the midwifery system. Our health care system regards it as a disease. So let's go to the people that are thinking along a track we want to move.

I think that consumers and midwives should be consulted regarding funding models. One of the other issues we need to look at – and again it ties in with education – is the establishment of the education and training programs necessary to sustain the profession. We had midwives that came into it. They've taken us through until today. Some of them are getting ready to retire. The new ones aren't going into it because they look at where we are in Alberta and go: "Why? For that amount of grief? Forget it." They're out of here, or they never go into it. So we need some kind of program that's available and developed through the universities that people can be accessing. If it's, you know, a nursing degree in midwifery, fine. But we need to set that up as quickly as possible to get that flowing through because, again, it's about capacity and we don't have enough of them.

The IMSEP results should be publicly released, and I had asked the minister that in a question a couple of Thursdays ago. Also, I think I was arguing to have a consumer representative put back on that committee.

4:20

The Midwifery Health Discipline Committee is the regulatory body. The position of a consumer representative representing – oh, that would be the women. That position was cut in 2002. You know, Madam Minister, I think that should go back. That should be restored. Come on. It just seems bizarre to me to have a committee that's deciding on midwifery disciplines and not have a woman, a consumer representative, on the committee. So I'll ask that that go back on.

An Hon. Member: Are you going to want an opposition member?

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. Well, we have an opposition member that is a nurse, so if you want to keep it in the Assembly, there's a sugges-

Availability of GPs. Again, this is a capacity problem. I'll just make a note. You know, my father phoned me up because I sent him to the Capital Health Link. Excellent program. Excellent innovation. Guess what, Mr. Chairman? It's come out of the public system. It's come out of the Capital health authority. So, again, a good example of innovation, something that works, evidence-based innovations coming out of the public system.

I sent him there because I noticed a pamphlet about finding a family physician accepting new patients by going to the website. He did and then phoned me and said: well, you were allowed to put in how many kilometres you were willing to travel in order to find a GP for yourself. They kept getting their search wider and wider and wider, and finally he had said unlimited, which was up to 99 kilometres away from where he lived, and there was still no one accepting new patients. So we have a huge capacity problem.

There are three ways to address that. Get more doctors through the training system and out and working, better foreign qualifications and getting people that are already trained as doctors in other countries up and working here. There are a number of not too difficult ways to be doing that, including the foreign qualifications, but also some local things that we require specifically here, like the Bar Association says that you have to know our rules and our way of doing things and our equipment, and then we'll test you for here and you're good to practise law in Alberta. We need this same kind of situation for foreign qualification. The last thing is reducing the need for doctors. I keep saying that we're making doctors do stuff that somebody else could be doing. So, again, we do want more supply in that case but less demand on the doctors where they could be doing other things.

Home care. This is another area, and I would be very interested in what information we have on that and where the gaps are. Identify where the gaps are and get the evidence we can make good decisions on. I have always believed in the idea that good home care delivered will help people stay healthy in their homes, and that's where they really want to be. We're delivering home-care services, and they don't seem to be working to keep people at home, and there are a lot of complaints about the system. I think there's confusion sometimes between home care and housekeeping, and we need to understand that and understand what people really need to stay at home and stay healthy.

Frankly, I can tell you that if my grandmother was in her own home but there was a dirty floor, that woman was not going to stay healthy and stay off her hip the way she'd been told by her doctor. She's going to get on her hands and knees and clean the g-d floor. So why are we saying to her, "I'm sorry, ma'am, but you can't get housekeeping services; no one will come and clean your floor?" Well, think. You know, we've got to start tracking this through in a logical manner rather than just saying: no, we've decided that as long as you've got two legs, you don't get housekeeping services unless you pay for it. We need to start looking at what's actually affecting people's lives. Again I'm talking about evidence-based decision-making.

You know, I had an e-mail from someone – and I know that she's contacted both the minister and the minister of seniors – talking about a neighbour who ended up with a fractured wrist and went into the hospital, was sent home even though she wasn't feeling well. Nobody to help her, and home care wasn't even suggested to her. I think that was just an anomaly and they didn't question her enough to establish home-care needs, but I've found out a lot of time that home care has been rationed. We need to be careful about the allocation of this. If we want to cut acute-care demand, then we're going to have to reallocate for home care, which is a lot cheaper than acute care. There's an example from Nellie Samek.

The issue around the ambulances. I'm wondering if we can get an update on that and find out where we are and how that's all going to be resolved. It frightens people. It's an integral part of what most people consider delivery of health service. I mean, honestly, if you're in a car accident on the side of the road, what are you going to do? You know, teletransport to get to the hospital? No. You expect that there will be ambulance service available to you, and people do regard it as part of our health service delivery. So I'd like to hear what the specific plans are and what the timelines are on that.

One e-mail I've got here – and it looks like it was sent to every single member in the House – is that, you know, we were told clearly how much ambulance services would cost. With the amount of the surplus that we've got, why are we not funding this? He points out: it's a mere 3.587 per cent of the surplus; keep your promise.

Just a couple of questions around long-term care again. The Broda report is coming back into our consciousness now that we're relooking at long-term care, and that Broda report was in '99. I'd like to know since the Broda report in '99 how many spaces have been created in long-term care in general, and can I get specifics from the minister on if they're privately built and owned and then how they're managed, which is a separate question. Are they managed by a private, for-profit management organization, or are they operated by not-for-profit agencies?

I've talked about this move away from medical care to a housing model, towards supportive housing and assisted living. How many additional spaces were added in facilities that are not governed by the Nursing Homes Act? How many more, basically housing, do we have? I'm sorry; the minister is going to have to talk to her colleague on this one I think, but I imagine that they were probably applied for or may have had money under the umbrella of the Nursing Homes Act. We just need to know where we are with that.

I had a specific question about podiatry. I keep wondering, Madam Minister, if you can help me to understand why that was privatized. To me, if there is a medical reason why someone needs either prosthetics or assistance there or, in fact, operations or adjustments physically, why is that not covered? Now, it might be as simple as it's not in the Canada Health Act, and therefore we're not required to do it, but we can make choices here about what kind of service delivery we give.

Part of my concern about this is that I'm hearing from people, podiatrists in fact. We particularly end up with foot problems in people with diabetes. I guess this is falling under the heading I laid out in the beginning about chronic disease management. I'm wondering how we get further ahead by not making sure that diabetics are managed in such a way that their feet stay healthy. If we get to the point where there are operations and then those operations may or may not be covered – you know, the doctors that specialize in this area seem to be, from some of the things I've heard, delivering the service anyway and they're not being paid for it, and I think we need to be a bit more careful about what's happening here. I'd like the minister to have a look at that area and be able to report back to us on whether that's being considered in the future. What is being done especially around the diabetes chronic management?

Physiotherapy is another area that gets captured under that, I think, because again it's something that reduces the demand on the system if we can address it there rather than increasing the supply of the more expensive care further down the road.

Okay. Pharmacare: I raised it earlier, and the minister had responded to it somewhat about what was being considered. I know that there are a couple of agreements that the FPT ministers are working on for a sort of national program. If we could get some details on how that's all going to work out and what the timeline is.

I also have some questions about mental health. The mental health innovation fund is receiving $25 million a year for each of the three years. How will this money be used to ensure that appropriate supports and mechanisms are in place to allow the transfers of patients from hospitals into the community? What's the specific plan there? What are the outcomes that are being sought? What steps are involved in integrating mental health services into the overall health care system? Of course, for me: what reports, standards, or best practices are the regional health authorities using to develop local initiatives with funding from this particular innovation fund?

Dr. Swann: Early intervention for prevention of mental health conditions.

Ms Blakeman: For mental health, early intervention? Ah, child mental health.

The minister and I both heard that children have mental health, and if it's not treated and they're not assisted, they just end up as adults with mental health problems. If we're talking early intervention, there's an excellent way to do it. I know that the minister heard that one loud and clear, so I'm interested in her outlining those specifics as well.

This is an oddball one. Can the minister explain why the nongroup health benefits are increasing by such a substantial amount this year?

That's my time. I know that there are others that are anxious to add questions. Thank you.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Chairman, I want to just make a very few comments. I usually do not comment or get too involved in the health debate, but I did want to. I've listened to the debate with interest. It's hard to keep your mind away from this debate because it's paramount to all of us, even though some of us have been more closely connected. I'm also very encouraged by the quality of the debate this afternoon. Interestingly enough, we agree on many things.

We agree on the need to ensure that practitioners and medical personnel can practise to the level of their education and expertise, and of course a lot of work has been done in that area. Nurse practitioners were mentioned, and I think that is a proud moment in our health history, where nurses who were called upon to deliver services in difficult situations now have not only the training and education but the necessary protection from liability for performing those services.

Because there's been a lot of discussion on long-term care and supportive living, I wanted to just share with members a couple of perspectives. I've had the opportunity in the last two weeks, Mr. Chairman, to visit a number of those facilities because we have a number of people who have reached the wonderful age of 100, and what an experience. I have to say that the first one that I visited . . .

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. McClellan: Yes. It's okay.

The Deputy Chair: No, it's not okay. The "not okay" part is that we are considering estimates for the Department of Health and Wellness, and the debate that occurs at this stage is between the minister and members of the Assembly but does not include members of Executive Council as per the Standing Orders.

Mrs. McClellan: Oh, I didn't know that.

The Deputy Chair: Yes. That correction has been made for me, and therefore I'm sorry. I regret to interrupt. However, if you were speaking on behalf of the Minister for Health and Wellness, that would have been different. But that's not the case, so I have to revert to the minister of health.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, I stand corrected, Mr. Chairman. I apologize. It's not the first time I've spoken in estimates, but it probably will be the last.

The Deputy Chair: Well, there have been very eager people reading the Standing Orders and coming back to me.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you very much for that. I'll have the opportunity to share those comments with people during appropriations debate because I think they'll be most interested.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Ms Evans: Mr. Chairman, I think the enthusiasm of my predecessor here was that there were so many common areas of agreement that could continue.

Could I just briefly say a couple of things? I'm going to get more written comments provided on the issue of midwives. I should indicate to the hon. members that two of my five grandchildren were born with the use of midwives, and after hearing the hon. member opposite discuss that, my son reminded me of their valued service. So we have to say more.

I'm also engaged in a review of eldercare in Canada from my own private literature review. On home care there are not always the same statistics of success. For example, in Saskatchewan they found that many families were not able to assume the responsibility of home care. What I really like is when people use a navigator in the system to find out what people's needs are and we integrate that service delivery not only, for example in Calgary, with family and community support services or community development services at the municipal level, but we really work hard to make sure that home care services delivered by Health and Wellness are filling the gaps.

I think that the issues we've had, for example with congestive heart failure, where many return to the hospital because they haven't had that extra support, and the issue that the hon. member has described with her grandmother, who would work hard and should have that extra support, are issues that I, too, share. So we're going to have to do better. I'm hoping in this review of the continuing care standards that we assess what those needs are in home care as well as those care options in long-term care because it's got to be in some respects one and the same thing. You can't separate the two.

On ambulance: just a brief update. The governance review is going along very well, but my suggestion is that we will hear from them by the end of August about what they are recommending for governance. I would suspect that we will be continuing to maintain the same supports this year, looking forward to their recommendations next year given the results of the pilots. I've had no formal notification since their last meeting, but I will provide that to this Assembly very soon.

We'll also provide the number of new spaces that have been either provided through the private sector or in any capacity in terms of housing, those that are covered under the Nursing Homes Act.

Relative to podiatrists and the allied services that are provided and funded in Alberta Health, from time to time people remind me that we spend almost $2 billion in terms of serving people that are not strictly mandated under the Canada Health Act, and we do that because we know that in many respects we improve their health so that they are less likely to need the system. So I will endeavour to provide a little bit more relative to physiotherapy.

Mr. Speaker, I could wax on about mental health, but I'll just say that my own reason for putting in this innovative fund was exactly so that people like Fraser Mustard who have some wonderful ideas about how the ministries of learning and Children's Services, those that are engaged in the social determinants of health, should be putting things forward.

One of the reasons it wasn't left with the integrated service delivery at the regional health authorities is that I wanted to keep a grip on it, take a look at what was being done, see if we're getting the outcomes because my frustrations when I was in the previous ministry were that frequently we couldn't connect the people that needed the service. Only the wealthy were able to get service delivery. Those that were really floundering either in schools or in community agencies were never able to access the service. Unless they came in as child welfare, little ones, sometimes then they would get them, but they wouldn't always. We've got to improve that, and that's the very reason for having it still monitored through the ministry.

The nongroup health benefits. I could talk about that, but I'd really rather get your questions, so we will send you those answers. I promise.

Chair's Ruling Speaking Order

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, just for clarification purposes, on the previous interruption that I had with the Deputy Premier, Standing Order 58(3)(a) allows the first hour of debate to occur between the minister and members of the opposition or if somebody else is acting on behalf of the minister; 58(3)(b) says that in the next hour "any member may speak thereafter." So if there were no other private members wishing to participate, the chair would be willing to recognize the Deputy Premier, should she choose to speak.

We have now just passed that one-hour timeline, so I will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, following which, after the minister, if the Deputy Premier wishes to participate, I will recognize her.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Debate Continued

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate that, and I'm pleased to rise to speak to the estimates for the Department of Health and Wellness.

I guess I want to start with the Health Symposium that took place in Calgary last weekend. I have to say that I was pleasantly surprised that there was a mix of views and experts at the symposium. I have to admit that I thought the government would stack it with a bunch of privatizers, but they didn't. It was interesting, and I learned a great deal, and I think the minister probably did too.

There were a number of assumptions that, I think, were refuted by different speakers there. One of them was that health care costs are driven by the behaviour of health consumers. One of the people there made quite a compelling case that, in fact, it's the behaviour of the people in the health care system itself and their consumers' response to them that really is driving a lot of the increase in health care costs. That would seem to undermine the argument that we need to try and restrict health care consumer behaviour, access to services, or to provide some sort of a charge to them in one way or another that would deter them from using it.

It's really things like the pharmaceutical companies advertising to doctors and doctors, you know, prescribing or recommending medication where it's not necessarily needed or more expensive kinds, and so on. I thought that was very interesting. I came away with a clear conclusion that the general consensus, not the universal but the general consensus of the people there was that increased privatization, increased private delivery in the health care system will drive your costs up. I was also quite gratified that the minister in her closing news conference reflected that view and confirmed that that was what she heard as well.

Which sort of brings me to the government's plans for the third way. You know, I am very curious if the government is taking into account the actual experience with private versus public delivery within Alberta. The government has already been playing with this, particularly in Calgary. The health authority in Calgary has provided a lot more in the way of private delivery. I'd like to know the minister's observations on the results that we've seen.

We've seen, for example, longer waiting lists in private delivery in Calgary for things like hip replacements. We've seen higher costs in private delivery for things like eye surgery, and so on. I think this information – I'm sure the minister is familiar with it. We're using government information on some of these things. Is the government then going to say, you know, that based on the experience we have here in this province with higher costs and longer waiting times with private delivery, it's not the way forward for Alberta?

Certainly, I'm very interested in how that can be reconciled with the Deputy Premier's speech at the beginning of the conference that the Mazankowski report still represented the best blueprint for health care reform in the future. There are many positive things in the Mazankowski report, but there are certain elements that are core to the Mazankowski report, including increased health care premiums, delisting of services, and increased private delivery. Those are things that are clearly in the Mazankowski report, and I would like to hear the minister's views on whether that is actually the way forward for Alberta or whether that represents, in her view, the best way forward for Alberta in health care reform.

I want to ask a little bit about drug costs. One of the biggest drivers of costs in health care in all systems is drug costs. One of the proposals that we have made and I think has been fairly well received – and we heard a little bit about it at the symposium as well – is not necessarily a big expensive pharmacare program where all drugs are covered under medicare but, as a first step, trying to get control of the high cost of drugs. You know, the pharmaceutical corporations are the most profitable corporations on earth. They're more profitable than arms manufacturers; they're more profitable than any other kind of corporation. They spend more on marketing and advertising than they do on research, so there are huge overhead costs.

In New Zealand they introduced a program where they bulk buy all of the drugs, and they use generics wherever possible. We already do that in some cases – I'm aware of that – but, also, if the government could use their marketing power to get deals for lower prices by bulk buying as well as using generic. In New Zealand I think they've been able to shave 7 or 8 per cent off their total health care costs by doing this. I know there are some proposals for doing that nationally, and maybe the minister can update us on that. Certainly, if there's not enough progress nationally, it's something that Alberta could do and really get control of costs.

Another thing that I heard has to do with the social determinants of health, and there was quite a bit of discussion about that. We started off by saying, you know, if we all quit smoking, if we all go to clubs, and then maybe the government would subsidize people going to clubs – that's going to affect a certain strata of society that already has fairly good health. The real question and the real determinant of health is being poor, and I think there's general knowledge about that. So some social approaches to improving health overall has to involve the kinds of social programs and building some equity in the province. Basically, fighting for good health also involves a fight against poverty. I wonder if the minister could comment on some of those things.

Before I sit down I want to at least do a commercial for the NDP opposition's public hearings on health care. We held public health care hearings in Lethbridge, Calgary, Edmonton, and Grande Prairie, and we heard from a large number of people, including organizations, but many people who were just ordinary citizens. We had over 150 people. We heard from native health organizations, people doing drug education, and so on. Certainly, what we heard is that the public wants to be more involved in health care, and they want it to be properly funded, but they're very, very leery of things like increases in health care premiums, more private delivery, and so on. So maybe we're just talking to the converted – and that's been a criticism – but we did hear from many people we had never seen before, and they came and talked about it.

They also talked about changes to physiotherapy – that was a big theme – and the cuts to physiotherapy being a very, very difficult change. It's certainly a preventative type of therapy, and if we invested in that, we could bring down our costs and ensure greater health.

I guess, in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I've come to the conclusion that there's a great convergence between building a public health care system with a strong emphasis on prevention and social determinants and saving costs. To try and save costs in the health care system by increasing the amount of private delivery is a bit like, you know, going on a diet of ice cream. You're not going to get the results you want. I'd like to know if the minister agrees with that, quite frankly, because the direction under the third way is still fairly obscure, and certainly inquiring minds want to know what the minister and the government have in mind.

Thank you.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Member for Calgary-Varsity perhaps might want to table his questions, and then I can take them all together if you wish.

The Deputy Chair: Okay.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Did you wish to respond first or respond later? It doesn't matter to me.

The Deputy Chair: The minister is indicating that she wouldn't mind having all the questions on record, and if time permits, she'll deal with them at the end.

Mr. Chase: Oh. My understanding is that there's still time within the discussion, and therefore I'd like to use whatever time remains for me to do that.

The Deputy Chair: You've got your 20 minutes.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. To clarify: what time do I have?

The Deputy Chair: You'll have the full 20 minutes, sir.

Mr. Chase: Oh. Okay. Thank you very much.

I want to begin by basically recognizing that the hon. minister not only has a good heart, but she's a person of demonstrated conviction. I very much applaud and appreciate your stance on the smoking ban bill. To me, it was a brave action that you took along with the hon. former minister of health, and that gives me hope that you're taking on this role in a very strong manner.

Very quickly. History, 1994. This government decided that the ultimate thing that had to be done was to pay down the debt. As a result, the government unfortunately took on Sir Roger Douglas's recommendations to cut quick, cut dirty, and basically damn the consequences. Calgary was particularly badly hit, but it wasn't Calgary alone. As the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul mentioned yesterday, rural areas were affected by decisions that were made back in 1994.

What happened then and by 1996 – well, 1994 to start with. We had Minister Dinning and Minister West at that time. They were in charge of the cuts, and 10,000 people were cut out of the civil service or the provincial employees service. Among those employees were a number that were in regulatory positions: people who were in charge of meat inspections, who were in charge of construction, monitoring job sites, and so on. And I would suggest that partly because we got into this mode of self-regulation rather than external government regulation, the regulation was not being handled satisfactorily. I do believe that a lot of the accidents that have happened on construction sites are because there hasn't been sufficient external government monitoring. So we've had an increase in injuries.

By 1996 in Calgary we saw half of our hospitals taken off-line. The General was blown up, the Holy Cross was sold for a fraction of its worth, and following the Holy Cross sale, we also, unfortunately, sold off the Grace hospital. In the Grace hospital's place, in the same facility, we now have private hip operations taking place at a premium of 10 per cent. [interjections] I'm not sure why we're cheering an increase of 10 per cent in a private facility that we're paying for publicly.

An Hon. Member: Reduce the waiting list.

Mr. Chase: Well, actually, it doesn't decrease the waiting list. It has had no effect on the reduction of the waiting list.

What has happened, unfortunately, is that waiting lists have increased because we lost the operating facilities in three of our hospitals. Not only did we lose that space, but in so doing, we lost the professionals that operated in those spaces. No operating room, no doctor. That was the result. We lost pharmacists; we lost lab technicians. We lost a number of health providers.

Another problem that we faced with these closures of the hospitals was ambulance delivery times. The ambulance response times were basically doubled because we had only one-half as many places to bring patients to. It slowed down the system.

We have attempted to address the problem through funding. What happened was that we increased health care premiums/taxes by 35 per cent. There was no proportional increase in efficiency. Up until this last breakdown of allowing seniors off the hook, we were basically collecting almost a billion dollars' worth of health care premiums. We're one of the very few provinces that charge citizens for these premiums. Given our wealth of resources, I'm not sure why we have that need. We seem to think that simply by charging people, we're going to make them more accountable and responsible. I think there are better ways of initiating responsibility.

Not only did we increase premiums for the regular crowd, but as mentioned in yesterday's discussions, we upped the cost of long-term care facilities for seniors by 50 per cent, and again there was no appreciable improvement in services. In fact, what we're seeing in that delivery of health care for seniors is RNs being laid off in a desperate attempt to maintain a financial balance and LPNs taking their place. What we don't have is the right combination.

We heard yesterday about how we're having trouble attracting physicians rurally. We're still facing a physician shortage in the urban areas as well. An example most important to me is trying to find a pediatrician for my grandson. That was very difficult to do.

One of the areas where the government has experimented, that again has its shortcomings, is P3s. I am very relieved that the Sheldon Chumir health centre, or the Health on 12th, is no longer being considered as a P3. I very much appreciate that fact. A question for the minister would be: could she please let us know if money has been allotted for that facility and if there's been a time commitment for that facility? I would very much appreciate knowing that.

One of the areas that I had a chance to tour with the CHR was the SouthLink health centre, and I want to say that it's an amazing centre. The unfortunate part is that we don't own it. We're just simply leasing space. The provincial government gave the Calgary health region $20 million and said, "Build an urgent care centre in the north and the south," and the CHR replied, "That's not enough." So they made the decision to have a single facility built. They purchased the land for just slightly under 3 and a half million dollars, but then they made an arrangement with Bentall Real Estate to build the facility in a P3 format. Bentall Real Estate, basically, turned over about 3 and a half million dollars to the health region for the purchase of that land. The reason I keep mentioning this 3 and a half million dollars: Bentall's requirement was that they would just build a generic building because they were thinking about what do they do 10 years from now. Does it have to be strictly a health care delivery building?

So what happened was in order for the Calgary health region to use that private space and deliver the needed health care services, they put in 3 and a half million dollars of renovations. In other words, they gave Bentall back the money that Bentall had given them to buy the building to renovate this private space so that it could serve the purpose. So we use public money to renovate a private space.

That SouthLink health centre is top of the line. It's wonderful. It's a great facility. For the money we are spending in terms of $10 million to lease it for the next 10 years and that 3 and a half million dollars to convert it to a health care facility from a generic office building, we could have owned that building, and we could have continued to use it in partnership with the southeast hospital. Again, I credit this government for finally coming to the realization that that southeast hospital was crucial, and I credit the government for doing it in a publicly transparent fashion rather than a P3.

So let's get to some of the good stories. Some of the good stories that we're seeing are electronic health records. Another good story that we're seeing is the initiative – I think it's health care for the 21st century – that's happening in the Foothills hospital. We have learned a lot from some of the misfortunes that Ontario experienced. We are starting to build rooms that are single rooms. We're building windows into those rooms. We're bringing the nursing stations closer to the patients. These are good news stories. We can seal off rooms and keep the potential of contamination either coming in or coming out of the rooms. So these are some of the good things that we're starting to realize.

One of the things we haven't seemed to have funded to the greatest extent we could or should be doing is the notion of preventative health care. As has been brought up by previous speakers, we know that it's a whole lot cheaper to keep a person in a seniors home or, better still, in their own home than it is to put them into a hospital. In fact, the term that's used for seniors in hospitals – it's kind of a disparaging term, but it's a reality – is bed blockers. When we put a senior into an acute care bed, we're just backing up the whole lineup in emergency. If we could keep that senior or any other person in their home or in their seniors' home, we're going to save the system a tremendous amount of money.

We talked about the idea of preventative health care, the $200 million from the $650 million tax. Unfortunately, that didn't go very far, but we got the idea out there. Hopefully, it's something that the government members will consider.

Another positive step is that we're slowly moving back to our bed-per-patient ratio. In 1996, prior to the closures, we had a ratio of 2.2 beds per thousand patients. Right now in Calgary our ratio is 1.7, and the Calgary health region is appealing to the province for funding to bring it to the 1.9 level, which is basically the average level throughout Canada.

Another good news story is dial-a-health. Instead of having to race to emergency, which you may have to do, you get to have that calming experience of talking to a health care expert over the phone. You describe the symptoms, and then they give you advice as to whether you need to follow up and go to the hospital. That is a very good system.

Another good system that's happening is the idea that we're hiring more paramedics, so we're eliminating some of the tie-ups with the ambulances. Now, basically what's happening is when the ambulance arrives, the paramedics discharge the patient to waiting paramedics who are there in the hospital. The ambulance gets back out on the road. That is a major improvement in efficiency.

Something else that is positive – it wasn't a government initiative, but it is helping the health system – are philanthropists like Dr. Allan Markin. He donated $18 million to the University of Calgary's Markin Institute for Public Health. That is helping tremendously.

One of the things I hope the government will continue to do and maybe up is provide the seats for the various medical professionals – I brought this up yesterday when we were talking about rural – and also bring in, to whatever extent we can, foreign-trained individuals, increase their accreditation.

The last thing I would like to bring up started out as a controversy. It still has controversy in terms of its placement. But last Friday I had the great pleasure of joining Lynn Redford of the Calgary health region and touring the Children's hospital. The project manager for the Children's hospital, Mr. Art Froese, is an unbelievable man. How he was chosen, I do not know, but a wonderful choice.

What Art told me about was how the Children's hospital came to be constructed, how shareholders, interests groups, and so on, parents of sick children, said: "Do this. Whatever you do, don't do that." First Nations people were contacted: "How can we make this environment better for children?" That's why you see in that wonderful facility that I'm grateful to have in my Calgary-Varsity constituency the colours. We have the colours of the medicine wheel. We have these large windows. It's like a large dollhouse. The whole point of it is to make it a child-friendly environment.

Within the hospital are these amazing systems whereby we can bring fresh air into operating rooms in literally seconds, and we can exhaust foul air.

In those hospital rooms, instead of the old children's hospital where we had three children to a room, there is now the possibility of each child having a room. Not only does each child have a room, but there is room for parents. So it's a child-friendly place. It's a parent-friendly place. These are the types of initiatives that we have the wealth and the intelligence within this province to move toward.

In summation, if we can get a handle on the drug part of things, possibly get a system going with the federal government, not one that they totally have to pay for because we know that's not going to happen, but maybe partner with the other western provinces, maybe do some deal with our local southern states, but buy in bulk, save us some money there, and if we can deal with the preventative health care that keeps people in their homes longer where it's cheaper, I think we'll have gone a long way.

We're into a new hundred years. We're all facing a challenge. Let's work collaboratively together to bring our system to the best point it can be.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to stand and give my comments on this important ministry, and I will be brief. I think there's much good news that needs to be expressed about our health care system, the privilege that we have in this province, in this country, and the tremendous things that are going on, exemplary, excellent services.

I want to say that I appreciate the minister and have a sense of a vision for health rather than an obsession with treatment and service. I think that has to be maintained if we're going to get through to a sustainable health system. As long as we keep focusing on demand – and there are lots of professionals that want us to focus on demand – we will not be a sustainable health care system. So I'm encouraged by your commitment to prevention and health promotion and some of the social determinants of health.

I'm also encouraged by your evidence-based approach. I saw that evidenced in both conferences, both the Friends of Medicare conference and in the government-sponsored conference, with the important research evidence that was brought to bear and the very appropriate responses to that evidence that I heard from the minister in the public interest. Again, distinguishing the public interest from the business interest and the professional interest, that's often a very tough call. I saw it evidenced, too, in the smoking bill and your willingness to stand up in the interests of public health as opposed to other interests.

I continue to ask the question: how are we in this particular area reducing demand? Every professional group, every institution needs to be asked the question: how are you going to put yourself out of business? If you're really committed to health, that is really what they need to be doing, looking at ways to reduce the demand on their services. In that context, I believe your primary care initiatives are starting to explore some of that with team approaches, with shared responsibility, not totally focused on the medical model and on the physician. And in that area, the community health centre: we already have three in the province; we could expand that, I think, with great benefit.

Also, I am encouraged by your desire to expand the scope of other practitioners. Some things that physicians are doing now could be done by other practitioners. Some things nurses are doing could be done by other practitioners. We need to look at what is the best efficient use of all these and try and cut through the turf protection that goes at all levels if we're going to get to a sustainable health system.

I would have one caution, and that is the area of mental health, mental illness particularly, the growing distress I have perceived in the mental health system and the growing stress in our population. I looked at the mental health statistics last year. There has been a 5 per cent increase every year in the last five years for counselling and mental health services by physicians. Where is that coming from? We need to get a handle on why there is increased distress in our young populations, increasing threats of suicide, increasing anxiety and depression in the young people. We need to get a handle on that and address it before it ends up, again, adding more demand on the system.

Looking at the conditions for health, early intervention and community support. Again, I am encouraged by your leadership – I want to say that – and I believe that your caring and your commitment to health and to the social determinants of health will see us move towards a sustainable health system.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. In order to save time I won't reiterate many of the good points that have been brought up, and I appreciate the moves that we are making here in the province of Alberta.

I want to address a few problems, though, with the Chinook health region in the fact that heart patients are one of the biggest problems that we have here in the province, and the facility down there would be very pleased if the province was to take on, I guess, the desire to have the funding follow the service. They'd like to have a chest pain unit down there, an angioplasty. There's a physician in the States that would be happy to move back and would head that up, but because the funding only goes to the two big regions, they're basically out of luck.

I'd sure appreciate it if the province would look at it because I think it would really up the health care in southern Alberta. I believe the number is that they have is about 600 patients a year that get flown up to Calgary. It's a two-hour time frame with angioplasty, so often many people don't get the service. It would reduce the waiting time in Calgary if, in fact, that service was available in Lethbridge.

The other point that I guess that southern Alberta would like to look at is to have a STARS base out of Lethbridge. You've closed places like Milk River, and it's an hour and a half from the furthest area to Lethbridge. If there was an actual base there, they'd be able to get out and really service those distant rural areas that now are outside the STARS reach. I know that with the new helicopters coming on that will improve, but to have a helicopter based out of Lethbridge would be a huge asset and would help revitalize, I guess, the rural areas because now it's too far to get to the regional hospital.

Maybe it's no longer a concern because of the downsizing of the hospitals, but general physicians have had an onerous task of being on call and no doctors coming in to give them time off, to cover for them. That would be a real help in those areas.

Also, cancer treatment is a concern for many people in Lethbridge that have to travel up to Calgary for radiation. My understanding is that there's already a bunker in place in Medicine Hat. It's fairly costly, but there are a lot of cancer patients in southern Alberta, and I wonder if we couldn't get a third treatment unit down there in southern Alberta.

Those are my main concerns that I hope the ministry will look at. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. Since I've got the opportunity, I'd just like to put a few more pointed questions on the record for the minister to be able to follow up with, and at this point I understand that she will do it in writing.

Under what category does funding for long-term care fall? How will the new funding that's been put in there be directed toward improving long-term care standards and facilities? I'd like to see that in connection with where the money is going now. I think that's not clear, how much money goes in and where it's going: what's facilities, what's staff, what's food? It's very difficult to get that kind of information based on the way the government presents figures now, so I'd like a breakdown of where the funding that's going into long-term care gets spent and where the new money is going to be specifically directed.

Again, I've asked the minister to explain why they have chosen not to go to the 3.6 hours of care, and I just want to make sure that that's still a question that the minister will be answering for the staffing levels. That's direct care. That's not including charting and things like that. That's just hands-on care, interaction between either an RN, a LPN, or a PCA directly in contact with someone in a long-term care facility.

I'd like to know what additional plans or programs are in place to improve facility quality and ensure that standards are met. We have a number of older buildings that in some cases used to be something else and were renovated to become a long-term care facility, so they weren't built for that. They were built sometime ago, and I have real concerns that we don't know what we actually have there. The big bogey person or big bogey item that's always raised is asbestos, insulation for example. We don't know. Has the minister done a scan or done an inventory of exactly how old the buildings are in the long-term care delivery system? Were they renovated from something else? Has someone gone through there and looked for environmental testing? I'll bring a series of questions forward on this. We had some buildings where work has been done, but because of what the building was, you know, and the old plumbing pipes and how the building is actually constructed, there actually are unsafe things that are there, but they're behind walls and we can't see them. I'm really concerned that we've got people in buildings where we should be looking to update them, and we don't even know we need to do that. So, again, what's the scan? Let's check that out and get the information that we need to make good concrete decisions.

I'm wondering if the frequency of facility inspections will be increased to ensure that the facilities that were built decades ago measure up to the same standards as the new facilities. That's a cleaner way of putting that same issue.

What are the government's plans for licensing and regulating long-term care facilities?

Can the minister table a list of any reports and studies that were used as backup for that decision about the 3.4 hours of care? Can I also get the details, please, of when that's going to kick in? We're at 1.9. We're going to 3.1. When exactly? Then we're going to 3.4. When exactly? We don't have that information right now.

Under primary care or acute care I notice that the primary care line item received an increase of $59.5 million. Other than the LPCIs is the ministry considering any other options for primary care reform; for example, increasing the number of community health centres? I know that we've got three health centres right now. I believe there was one being talked about for sort of north-central, around the coliseum, to deal specifically with a very high-needs population there. I'm wondering what the horizon is on some of this planning and exactly what's being contemplated there.

I'm wondering if the ministry is in fact considering alternatives to paying physicians on a fee-for-service.

Could I get the location, please, of the 12 LPCIs that are in operation or expected to be in operation this year? What criteria were used in evaluating the applications for each of these LPCIs? Were any applications or declarations of intent declined, or did you only get 12 applications and you took all 12 of them? I'm wondering if any of them were declined or whether they were sent back for changes or revisions, et cetera.

What performance measures are being used specifically to measure the effectiveness of the LPCIs? What are the outcomes that are expected in a short-, medium-, and long-term? What are you looking for this year, two years from now, five years from now? How are you going to measure those outcomes? Could we get some idea of when or if a report detailing the progress of LPCI projects will be available?

How does the $50 per patient cover the cost of administration, staff, and equipment? What's the breakdown on that? Were there criteria provided on how they would use that or if it was left up to them? How do the LPCIs work in the rural areas where the doctors are more isolated? Or maybe none of the 12 are in rural areas.

What has been done around e-health? That was the last thing that came up at the conference, and to me there seemed to be a real possibility there for a provision of rural health delivery. Hard for me to grasp because I'm at an age where I didn't grow up with computers. The people that we're dealing with, telehealth or e-health, as they call it, were very comfortable and seemed to be very happy with the health provision. So I guess it's something that we should look at.

That seems very weird to me, and I'm struggling to accept it, but I need to look at the evidence, and I need to look at the outcomes that they're getting from other places. Maybe part of our solution is that people stay in their rural communities, and we can deliver good e-health or telehealth to them. If they need acute care, then we transport them to the major centres and treat them in the hospitals, but we try and reduce the demand for that acute-care hospitalization. I'd like to know what plans or what's being considered there.

The other possibility is: are we looking at e-health as part of the LPCIs? What is the cost of maintaining the LPCIs on an annual basis, and for both physicians and patients participating in the LPCI, who's responsible for what?

I'm moving into the health workforce here, so I'm going back on my original list and running through it again with specific questions. What programs are in place for recruitment of health professionals? What targets has the minister developed in conjunction with her colleague the Minister of Advanced Education to produce specific outcomes of how many more doctors and how many more nurses and how many more health care professionals in a variety of areas we would get for investment of dollars? We keep hearing the same numbers over and over again from the Minister of Advanced Education, but he's using it in conjunction with every ministry we've debated. So how much of it's health care? How much of it is targeted toward doctors? How much toward nurses? How much toward other health care professionals, pharmacists, dentists? Sorry; that's the one I've been forgetting.

Why was the decision made not to increase the rural physician action plan? It may be because we don't actually know that we're getting outcomes from that, but I'm interested to hear why that decision. [interjection] Okay. The Minister of Finance is saying that there are outcomes, but I'm wondering why the decision not to increase it. Is it so successful that it's becoming sustainable or that it's decreasing demand? What specifically is happening there?

What program specifically is the government pursuing to retain their health care workforce and to ensure that they remain in the public sector is the second thing?

Wait times. I'm not terribly keen on the focus on that, but it's one that the public grabs onto, and it certainly gets a lot of money directed toward it. I wish we could move away from that, but it is one of the ways that people measure success at this point in time. So I'd like to get very detailed plans about how the money that has been put into the system – I'm referencing page 288 of the business plan, $125 million dedicated to reducing waiting times. Exactly what sector is it going to? Which hospitals is it going to end up at? How exactly does the minister plan to see an increase here? Because, again, we can collect evidence all the way along on this one, and we may find out that that's not the way to do it. I think we also all know that if we reduce waiting times to zero, we are not running an efficient health care system because it means that there is lag in the system and that there are people standing around with nothing to do if you can walk in, basically.

I'm wondering why the increase was not more substantial for the promotion and prevention line on page 216 of the estimates. There's an increase from $103 million to $117 million, not a lot considering the work that needs to be done there. I notice that promotion and prevention is listed in the business plan as one of the ministry's strategic priorities, and that seems to be a fairly minor increase. So what was expected to be achieved by that level of increase? Would you have achieved more if you put in more or this was the amount you could afford or why was that choice made, more specifically?

Under pharmaceuticals I'm wondering if the government is co-operating with the federal government and other provinces and the medical profession and universities to test and evaluate new drugs. We always hear that argument about R and D, and that's why we have to support the brand name drugs, but that's for private production of those pharmaceuticals. So what are we doing in the public system, in the universities to develop these new drugs? That's a different way for us to be approaching that rather than leaving it to the private sector to do it, so I'm interested in whether the government has done anything on that area.

I think we're nearing the end of our time, so I will thank the minister in advance for her co-operation in providing us written responses to the questions that myself and my colleagues have asked today. I do look forward to a new approach to health service delivery. I think we've solved the problem of who funds, and that should be public funding. The issue we are struggling with currently is: who delivers? I would argue that public delivery and nonprofit delivery, or not-for-profit delivery, of health care has been proven to be the best way to contain costs in the health care system. I think the most innovation is coming out of the public system, and I would encourage the minister to continue in that direction.

Thank you.

Mr. Chase: I will be very quick. Just for the Hansard record I wanted to recognize that as a portion of GDP we are still spending less than 10 per cent on health care.

I would like as a question to know about the timeline and the funding for the additional beds for the Foothills, Rockyview, and Lougheed.

The other question is: is the ambulance system governance now being decided at the local level but provincially funded?

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but we have arrived at that hour of 5:30. I will adjourn the committee shortly. When we reconvene at 8 p.m., we will have the balance of nine minutes that are left allocated for the estimates on Health and Wellness, and we'll proceed with the other matters that are before us.

The House stands adjourned until 8 p.m.

[The committee adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 11, 2005 8:00 p.m.

Date: 05/05/11

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order. When we adjourned, there were eight minutes left for Health and Wellness. Just for your information we will finish those eight minutes and then rise and report and then reconvene in committee for the next business.

head: Main Estimates 2005-06

Health and Wellness

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Finance is representing the Minister of Health and Wellness tonight. The hon. minister.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm tempted to go on with my story about the long-term care and assisted-living facility where there is a couple that is over 100 residing, but I will do that during our debate in the appropriations and leave the eight minutes that are left for some more questions to be put on the table.

I did want to answer, on behalf of the minister of health, just two questions. It was asked why the '05-06 budget for the rural physician action plan was not increased, and indeed it wasn't increased. It is currently meeting demands, and it will be assessed again this year, and if necessary, a request for more funding will be there.

On telehealth the minister advised that she will advise you in writing. There were two pilots done on telehealth. The first one was actually in Drumheller with Calgary, and the second one was in the Two Hills area, but she felt it would be most helpful to you if she were to give you that information in a more complete form, in writing.

With that, I have given the minister the assurance that I will write down your questions, and she'll review Hansard and give the information in writing.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much for the responses from the minister of health through the Minister of Finance.

There were a couple of other issues that I wanted to raise. Earlier I kept looking for an e-mail on podiatry that I couldn't find, which I did locate. It's from Dr. Ken Unger, who is the head of the hospital section, Peter Lougheed centre, and a clinical lecturer in the department of surgery at the University of Calgary Faculty of Medicine. We had a conversation, in fact, at the innovations Health Symposium about podiatry and the coverage of services. As I put it to him: are you medically necessary, and if you are, why are you not covered?

He sent me an e-mail, and I'm just going to quote a paragraph from the centre of it. He was called to the emergency room of a Calgary hospital . . . to see a diabetic with a foot ulcer with exposed bone and infection requiring admission and surgical treatment [in particular] (amputation). This patient has already had a below knee amputation of the other limb, amputation of two toes on the remaining infected foot and is known to have peripheral vascular disease and neuropathy. His diabetic control is questionable.

He goes on to describe how he was treated and in fact that the individual was not charged for the services that he received and that he felt that was demonstrating podiatry's commitment to hospital and emergency patients.

He raises the issue that coming out of this "symposium discussions were [on] prevention, appropriate care performed by appropriate providers [for] (efficiency) and quality." He raises the questions, you know: were any of these achieved for this at-risk diabetic patient, and is the above scenario preventable? I think he raises a good point there. Would we be better off investing in those kinds of prevention in tandem with chronic disease management to save us from having that kind of an individual, who for whatever reason will not manage his own disease, turning up in acute care. So that was the issue I was trying to locate and raise, and I'm glad I was able to do that.

Just to finish on e-health again, I'm glad to hear that there is information available from the two pilots, one in Drumheller and one in Two Hills, I think I heard the minister saying. The issue that came up was around being very careful that we have the suitable technology and programming for electronic health delivery and that it is compatible. What we were warned about at this symposium was developing a system helter-skelter that, in fact, was not capable of talking to one another. We need to have a larger plan coming, laying that plan and everybody fitting into it.

I think that point is well made, and it's a point that's been raised by the Leader of the Official Opposition in the past. Are we spending an awful lot of money and ending up with a system that doesn't work and doesn't do what we want it to do? It cannot work on both of those levels. It doesn't give us what we were expecting it to give us by way of health service delivery, and it's incompatible. The system itself doesn't work. So two things to watch for there.

The final issue is around electronic health records. This is both an incredible opportunity and a real place of caution. Incredible opportunity because it should be allowing us to get rid of some of the duplication and inefficiency and flat-out frustration that we experience as health providers try and figure out how to help a patient who presents in front of them – to not be able to access all the information that's available on this person's medical condition can prevent appropriate timely treatment of the individual – and, I would hope, be able to save us some money around moving test results back and forth, for example, and that sort of thing.

The balancing side of that is around people's personal privacy, and part of what is not quite in the loop on this – and I think we need to be particularly careful – is around the electronic medical records. Think of them as the file that's in the doctor's office, which actually has, you know, a lot of personal notes and a lot of personal information on you. What's supposed to come out of that is that the strictly diagnostic and laboratory testing information is supposed to be lifted off the electronic medical records up into the electronic health record. That's the information that's available to those who are allowed access to that system.

We had stage 1 of the Health Information Act review. We started on it at this time last year, and it reported by the fall – in a rush, I must say – prior to the election being called. The committee did not complete most of what it was charged to do. A lot of it was put off to a second committee, which has yet to be called, and I think we need to get on that as quickly as possible. There are a lot of questions that are undecided and in some cases undefined around both of those areas, and we need to proceed carefully and with a plan on those electronic health records. Again, great opportunity for both exciting changes in delivery of health but also great opportunity for breaching people's personal privacy.

With those closing words, I look forward to the information from the minister. In particular I'm looking for compatibility and suitability of the technology as well. Thank you very much.

Mrs. McClellan: Certainly, on the suitable technology I actually have witnessed this technology, and it's quite amazing. But you're absolutely right: you want to make sure that the providers are educated or well versed in it.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Finance, who is speaking on behalf of the Minister for Health and Wellness, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(4), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration for a department's proposed estimates, I must now put the question after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Health and Wellness for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006.

Agreed to:

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$8,973,425,000
Capital Investment	$33,500,000

Community Development

The Deputy Chair: As per our standing order the first hour is dedicated between the minister and members of the opposition, following which any other member, including members of the executive, if they so choose to participate, will be allowed to do so.

The hon. Minister for Community Development.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, I have learned from my friend and colleague the Minister of Health and Wellness, who presented her estimates this afternoon and has provided a good precedent, I believe. I will make my comments reasonably short and give ample opportunity for members of the Assembly to ask questions; after which, my undertaking will be to review Hansard and provide a written response to those questions.

I'm pleased, Mr. Chairman, to present the estimates for Community Development for the year 2005-2006. The operating budget of $247 million is $41 million or 20 per cent higher than the previous year, but with Alberta celebrating our centennial this year, much of this increase, $23 million, is one-time funding for the centennial legacy projects and celebrations.

Community Development has three core businesses: support community development, protect and include all Albertans, and protect our human and natural history and culture. These three core businesses add up to one purpose: achieving a high quality of life in the province of Alberta.

Within our annual budget this ministry leverages billions of dollars for our economy through tourism, the arts, volunteerism, sports, recreation, and more. It supports lifelong learning through our public libraries, museums, and historic sites; manages our park areas that help keep people healthy and rural economies strong; protects human rights through education and adjudication; provides community volunteers with support that make the most of every donated hour. All of these factors, Mr. Chairman, add up to a quality of life environment that builds pride in our province and its people and that makes Alberta a better place to live, work, and visit.

Our foundations and agencies support 260 community-based museums, more than 600 arts groups, and 107 provincial sport and recreation organizations that have a total of 1.2 million members and tens of thousands of volunteers, who donate 449 million hours a year to their communities. We provide support to 310 library service points in the province that loan over 30 million items a year to Albertans, and we pay for their monthly SuperNet fees that connect Albertans to a world of information.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, to this ministry's operating needs this budget also details a capital investment of $45 million this year alone, four times more than the forecast, primarily to improve facilities in our parks.

This budget supports the celebrations and legacy projects that celebrate our centennial year. However, our centennial commitments are in addition to and not at the cost of the quality of life programs that Albertans rely upon. Those quality of life programs are maintained, and some services are even improved.

In short, maintain, improve, and celebrate sums up the focus for this Community Development budget.

With this year's increase we are maintaining the ministry's core programs to ensure access to quality of life resources, improve park facilities and museum exhibits for better visitor experiences, and celebrate Alberta's centennial with legacy construction and provincial festivities.

The first theme in my ministry's budget this year is maintain. An $8 million increase in core funding maintains the ministry's essential core services: supporting the arts and our heritage, sport and recreation, human rights and citizenship, libraries and volunteerism, and parks and our protected areas.

Within this budget more than $1 million of that increase goes to our libraries to match population growth and pay for monthly SuperNet connection costs. Libraries will receive a total just under $20 million this year, the exact sum being some $19.9 million.

Provincial museums and historic sites get $3 million more to support operations and exhibit redevelopment.

Parks receive an increase of $4 million for ongoing maintenance, educational and outdoor recreation programs.

We are maintaining the $2.5 million in one-time funding to the Alberta film development program last year by annualizing this amount. However, despite the $2.5 million increase over last year's budget, this amount does not appear as an increase compared to the forecast.

In this budget my ministry assumes responsibility for reporting on the operations of the Jubilee auditoria in Calgary and Edmonton as recommended by the Auditor General. This may result in the province recording additional revenues and expenses of $3 million.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, $3 million is added to the final year of the Alberta NHL teams initiative. The funding to support the two Alberta-based franchises comes from taxes on NHL players' salaries for games played in the province of Alberta. This budget anticipates that there will be an NHL season this year.

Funding for the arts and for sport and recreation remains stable, which means that they did not get a direct budget increase this year. That does not mean that these important quality of life sectors are forgotten because both benefit significantly from spending in other areas.

Centennial initiatives like Alberta Scene in Ottawa, the Queen's visit and the celebration performance at Commonwealth Stadium, the cultural celebrations around the province's birthday party in September, and especially the renewed Jubilee auditoria are all major boosts to the arts. Sport and recreation benefit directly from investment in the Canmore Nordic Centre, centennial legacy funding for community recreation centres, and increases for parks. This is where Albertans work, live, and play. This is our evenings, our weekends, our family times, and our sporting events. Centennial sporting events like the World Masters Games and the centennial World Cup in cross-country skiing put Alberta and Alberta talent on the world sporting stage.

Sport and recreation brings me to the second theme of this budget, which is to improve. The Alberta government and my ministry are determined to improve the infrastructure for our parks, museums, and historic sites. Alberta's parks are in the backyard of every constituency in this province. There is a provincial park or protected area within 100 kilometres of every Alberta resident, and Albertans use them, making 7.5 million visits to their provincial parks. Another 1 million visits come from outside of the province.

This budget quadruples our capital investment in parks from about $11 million to $45 million. Of this, $25 million pays for previous commitments: $13 million continues the upgrades to the Canmore Nordic Centre for the centennial World Cup in cross-country skiing and as a legacy resource for future winter athletics, $10 million continues the upgrading of water and sewage treatment facilities as part of the government's Water for Life strategy, and $2 million is in the existing budget for ongoing parks maintenance.

Twenty million dollars in new funding will be used to build four new parks interpretive centres as centennial legacy projects in Writing-on-Stone, Lesser Slave Lake, Dinosaur provincial park, Cypress Hills interprovincial park, and for ongoing and deferred parks maintenance. Included in that money is almost $8 million as the first instalment in a three-year plan worth $47 million to repair and rebuild aging parks facilities. In addition to enhancing the parks experience, this investment protects facilities with an estimated replacement value of $437 million.

Another area for improvement is updating exhibits in our museum and heritage attractions. These exhibits keep us in touch with who we are and what we are as a people and as a province. They celebrate our past and contribute to our future by supporting education and tourism. Renewing what will soon be the Royal Alberta Museum is a flagship project to honour our centennial. The Alberta government's $150 million commitment will be funded through Infrastructure and Transportation over the next five years.

The four park interpretive centres and the Royal Alberta Museum bring me to the third budget theme: celebrate. The province's inauguration in 1905 was a one-day event. However, we are marking our centennial with seven years of legacy construction and a year of celebration. Recognition programs, like the centennial medal and the sport and recreation centennial scroll, honour our past. Special centennial birth and marriage certificates, a centennial medallion, a royal visit, and special festivities will mark our present. The centennial education savings plan and legacy construction will build for our future.

To the end of the current 2005-2008 business plan the Alberta government's total commitment to centennial legacy projects and celebrations is $343 million since 2000-2001. This year the commitment is $40 million in legacy and celebratory initiatives. That is an increase of $23 million over forecast. Thirty million dollars will honour approved grants for community-owned and -operated legacy projects like halls, recreation centres, libraries, and parks. Ten million dollars is for provincial festivities like the Queen's visit, the spectacular Commonwealth Stadium show to kick off the 100-day countdown to the province's birthday, and the official birthday celebrations actually on September 1.

The September 1 party is expected to include gala concerts, a re-enactment of the province's inauguration, and the grandest fireworks display in 100 years. Government is leading provincial events and recognition programs, while communities, municipalities, and institutions are leading local and special-interest celebration events.

Among the last centennial celebrations of the year, this December Alberta welcomes international athletes and fans to the centennial World Cup in cross-country skiing at the rebuilt Canmore Nordic Centre.

Mr. Chairman, rural Alberta is a major beneficiary in this budget. More than half of the province's public libraries are in communities with fewer than 1,200 people. Parks tourism adds $1.3 billion a year to our economy, much of it spent in rural centres on gas, food, and lodging, not counting secondary spending on camping, fishing, and outdoor recreation goods and services. Rural communities like Lac La Biche actively promote themselves as gateways to Alberta's parks.

Centennial legacy funding is building libraries, recreation centres, community halls, and parks in small municipalities across the province. Support for our quality of life is inclusive across municipal and county boundaries.

Members of the Legislature, I ask you to approve the estimates for Community Development for 2005-2006. I ask for your support for this budget and its vision to maintain our core businesses, improve our parks and museum infrastructure, and celebrate our centennial. This budget helps us end our first century with a strong foundation for quality of life and a celebration of the past. It also lets us start our second century with confidence and from a position of strength.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It gives me great pleasure tonight to be able to introduce to you and through you a gentleman and a good friend of this Legislature, a nonpartisan good friend of this Legislature. He is, indeed, the Clerk of the Legislature. It was a little bit of a surprise tonight to see him in the members' gallery, but I would ask that David McNeil and his two friends stand so that we can give them the warm recognition that we honour our guests with.

Thank you so much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Community Development (continued)

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my great pleasure to rise and participate in the budget estimates this evening for the Ministry of Community Development and to discuss a range of issues. I want to thank the hon. minister for presenting a good overview of Budget 2005 in regard to the Ministry of Community Development, and I also thank all your staff for their great effort and hard work.

Mr. Minister, you already answered some of my questions which I had written, but there are still some more to go. I know that it's not easy to answer all of them and address them all in 20 minutes or so, but I would really appreciate it if you'd provide me with details in writing as soon as possible, as you always do. I commend you for that.

Allow me to start with the business plan. Under Core Business One on page 165 it states that the department will work "with organizations and communities to strengthen their capacity to enhance and further develop the areas of arts and culture, sport and recreation . . . by providing financial support." Why, then, has the Liberal opposition heard from many stakeholders in the arts, the film community, and from organizations like the Edmonton Sport Council that they are in dire need of increased funding in order to stay afloat? If the minister is working with these organizations, then why are so many of them begging this government for more support, like the film industry and the artistic community?

For years and years these organizations have been asking for a substantial increase in funding to support them. In fact, it has been estimated that the arts contribute approximately $150 million annually to the economy of this province. These contributions are not in question, but they are still massively underfunded by this government. When will this government place a priority on increasing funding for the Alberta Foundation for the Arts much more substantially?

The next is under Core Business One on page 165. The government states that it is "participating in the Active Living Strategy and affirming the actions of the Alberta Sport Plan." Also, strategy 1.7 of the business plan on the same page, 165, states that the ministry will "collaborate with communities to promote healthy recreational and active living activities and to encourage the preservation and public use of . . . community recreation areas." Why, then, are stakeholders involved in sports and recreation saying that they are waiting in vain for the implementation and funding of the Alberta sport plan?

Questions from a major stakeholder group. The Edmonton Sport Council's spring newsletter 2005 states:

Are the Minister and the government of Alberta willing to go further and make active living a priority for the province? . . . Will they make it a priority by recognizing that we must go beyond social marketing campaigns to significantly . . . expand the grant programs for [community recreational programs and] community recreational facility (re)development across the province?

These are direct questions from the affected stakeholders. How will the minister implement strategy 1.7?

The next one that I'm looking at in the business plan is on page 165 again. Strategy 1.9 speaks to showcasing Alberta talent and recognizing "the contribution of Albertans at special events held to mark Alberta's Centennial." Can the minister inform us if there are any plans to hold an Alberta celebration of the arts similar to the Alberta Scene celebration currently being held in Ottawa? If not, why?

What other major events are being planned to showcase the contributions of Alberta artists this year? Can the minister tell us how much funding is being directed at showcasing Alberta's artists in this centennial year?

Next, on page 166 of the business plan strategy 2.1 states very clearly that the ministry will "continue protecting human rights by resolving and adjudicating complaints of alleged discrimination." There are some serious questions concerning this. The opposition has talked to many individuals who have had to endure four to five years' wait to have their complaints dealt with. One particular individual stated that he was extremely concerned that it took nearly four years to resolve his case. He stated to us that there are long waiting times for each stage of the complaint process, which is assumed to be because of underfunding at the commission, and long delays as the respondents failed time and again to meet deadlines set by the commission's staff, who were apparently powerless to force action by respondents.

Will the minister explain if he's planning to take action to reduce waiting times and increase the ability of the Human Rights Commission to quickly resolve complaints? Are there any plans to increase the number of staff at the Human Rights Commission to achieve the objectives of a quicker and more efficient resolution of complaints? Will the minister be looking at a way of empowering the Human Rights Commission, perhaps in consultation with the Ministry of Justice, to compel respondents to meet deadlines set by the commission?

I'm sure the hon. minister would agree that making this system more efficient would provide an important signal that human rights complaints are indeed serious and that stronger human rights protection against discrimination is in the best interest of all Albertans.

My next question. Page 168 speaks to providing "financial support to community owned and operated Centennial Legacy Projects across Alberta" to leave a legacy for future generations. As well, strategy 3.9 speaks to the centennial legacy projects providing educational opportunities and increasing tourism. Reference is made specifically to the Provincial Museum of Alberta and renovation of the Jubilee auditoria in Edmonton and Calgary.

There need to be some questions asked around these projects. Many concerns have been raised that most of the funding for the centennial year has gone into building projects and rehabilitating existing facilities and not enough into actual celebration events like the Alberta Scene in Ottawa. Can the minister inform us if most of the funding has gone into bricks-and-mortar projects such as building recreational facilities and providing funding for already needed infrastructure projects? Can the minister provide us with a breakdown of how much of the funding has gone into infrastructure projects and how much has been spent on activities, festivals, and celebrations of Alberta's centennial?

I have a financial question. I start from page 94. It's about the Alberta Foundation for the Arts. Page 94 of the estimates for 2005-2006 states that the budget for the Alberta Foundation for the Arts has increased to $32.5 million, an increase of $2.5 million from last year. Stakeholders have indicated that funding for the arts from government is lacking and fails to provide the support for the arts that is truly needed to have a flourishing community. Other stakeholders, the Works, have indicated that funding from the provincial government through the Alberta Foundation for the Arts is one-third less than funding received from the city of Edmonton and the federal government. The point here – and it's agreed upon by so many stakeholders – is: why does the Alberta provincial government consistently fail to support the arts when municipal and federal governments recognize the importance of the arts? Can the minister explain to these artists why they are always underfunded?

Page 94 of the expenses shows an increase in expenditure for the film development of $2.5 million. While the increase is welcomed by the producers and stakeholders, Blue Sky Communication Inc. are wondering why there can't be more of an increase. The Alberta producers have indicated that unless there is a serious infusion of cash, such as $10 million, producers will be leaving the province and taking their experience and other jobs with them. Does the minister have any plans to increase the funding for film development in the near future?

Page 94 of the estimates shows that funding for arts promotion has stayed the same as last year, as the minister indicated just now, at $12.7 million. Can the minister tell us why there was not an increase here similar to the increase that film developers received?

The next question is on human rights and citizenship. On page 85 of the estimates reference line 3.0.1 shows a slight increase of just over $200,000 to the budget for human rights and citizenship. Can the minister explain why more of a priority was not given to increasing funding here given the importance of protecting human rights in Alberta? Can the minister tell us if he plans on increasing the budget or the staff of the Human Rights Commission in the near future? Can the minister explain how this mechanism can be effective in resolving disputes if more money is not allocated to this important resource?

Next comes library funding. Line 2.2.2 of the estimates on page 84 shows an increase in library funding grants to $19.9 million, up $1.2 million from last year. Stakeholders for the library funding have some serious concerns about the grants received from the government. Library grants are calculated at a rate of $4.29 per capita right now. Stakeholders want to see this figure doubled. This funding formula is insufficient to meet the increased demands on the library services and budgets that exist in 2005.

Municipalities tend to shoulder the increased cost of library services. For example, Edmonton contributed $20.9 million last year, while the province contributed $2.8 million. There should be a more equitable distribution of funding for library services that does not place such an undue burden on municipalities. Mr. Chairman, what will this minister do to take the financial burden of libraries from municipalities? Will there be more of a commitment from the ministry to provide additional funding for library services? Remember, these are the questions that stakeholders are asking and want answers to.

A question on the Wild Rose Foundation. Line 2.2.7 indicates $7.7 million to the Wild Rose Foundation. This is the same as last year. Can the minister provide a breakdown of where this money is being distributed? Can he provide us with a detailed financial audit? Can the minister explain what the process is to receive funding through the Wild Rose Foundation? Also, please tell us if there were any investigations or irregularities in the distribution of funds through the Wild Rose Foundation.

A question on full-time employment, page 101 of the estimates. Under full-time employment it indicates that there will be an increase of 36 people, from 881 last year to 917 this year. Can the minister explain what these new employees are assigned to? Are any of them going to be working for the Human Rights Commission?

I have a few questions on the Auditor General's report, which points out that the reports on the financial statements of the Ministry and the Historic Resources Fund contain a reservation of opinion because the financial statements depart from Canadian generally accepted accounting principles.

The Ministry has not included the net revenues and surpluses for the cultural facilities that are operated with the assistance of volunteer societies in its financial statements.

The AG estimates that for the year ended March 31, 2004, the Ministry's net revenues and net assets are understated by $0.9 and $10.0 million respectively . . .

At present, the Ministry does not include revenues, expenses, and surpluses for the operation of the [two Jubilee auditoria].

The Auditor General reports that the ministry is developing an action plan to deal with this. Where is the ministry at in implementing this action plan?

The Historic Resources Fund has not properly recorded the revenues, expenses and surpluses generated by the operation of government-owned facilities in its financial statements. As a result, [the Auditor General estimates] that for 2004, the Fund's liabilities are overstated by $216,000, assets are understated by $109,000 and fund balance is understated by $325,000.

What is the ministry doing to correct these accounting problems as indicated by the Auditor General's report? Why is the ministry not following Canadian generally accepted accounting principles?

These are the questions. I would request the hon. minister to answer today, or maybe he can give them to me in writing when it's convenient for him. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will, as I indicated at the outset, review Hansard and provide a more detailed set of answers to all the questions asked by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, which I listened to very carefully.

First of all, let me say thank you for giving credit to the staff of the department, some of whom are in the gallery with us this evening. They do fine work. I've had the benefit now of being the Minister of Community Development twice. There are many, many fine people that worked with me some 12 years ago who are working with me again, and I can tell you that this is a group of people that are very committed to their jobs, very committed to all the elements of the programs that are set out in the business plan and the budget of the Department of Community Development.

Let me say as an overall response to the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie that I appreciated the passion with which he spoke on the subject of things like support for the arts, for culture, for recreation – he mentioned the provincial sport plan – libraries. He also mentioned funding for the Wild Rose Foundation and Human Rights Commission.

I will answer in a very broad way by saying first of all that there has been a significant increase in the budget to the Department of Community Development, and we could have allocated money to each and every one of those areas, but that would be like saying that we don't have any priorities. The reality is, Mr. Chairman, that to have 50 priorities is to have none at all. In looking at many of the things that this department is responsible for, we need to be able to allocate our resources to those areas that have the greatest needs.

Mr. Chairman, we did, for example, put significant monies into the areas of parks, and when the hon. member asked about the active living strategy, part and parcel with the active living strategy is that you actually do have parks and recreational facilities in communities throughout this province that are up to code and up to date and are funded in such a way that allows them to be restored to the kind of condition that they need to be in. I did indicate that over a significant number of years we have allocated some almost $350 million in monies to upgrade facilities and libraries and parks and recreational facilities throughout Alberta, and this is all part and parcel with making an active living strategy work.

I acknowledge that there are people from the arts community or perhaps the film community who would suggest that we should be doing more, and I can assure this House and this hon. member that there would be nothing that would make me feel more joyous than to be able to say to all of them, "All of you are an important part of the province of Alberta whether you represent the communities of human rights, or the sports community, the recreation community, the library community, the arts community," all of which were mentioned by the hon. member. Nothing would make me more joyous than to be able to say, "We will double all of your funding."

But that is not our reality. Our reality is that we do pick priorities and that we support them as best we can. That's not to say that this government doesn't acknowledge the importance of, for example, the arts. The hon. member himself cited numbers about the kind of economic development and economic activity that comes to this province as a result of a fantastic arts community that we have in this province, one that we should be very, very proud of.

So I'm well aware of those issues. They've certainly been brought to my attention, and perhaps all I can say to the hon. member and members of this Assembly is that I will continue to be an advocate for these groups and that now that we've dealt with much of the concern established in the parks area, we're able to restore these important signatures of our province back to the kind of condition that they should be in, that in future budget cycles we might be able to deal more specifically with some of the priorities that the hon. member mentioned.

Mr. Chairman, I'll just conclude with two last comments that were much more specific questions asked by the hon. member, and that is with respect to the increase of 36 FTEs to the department. I can advise the hon. member that they are all direct service delivery positions that will be noticed by the public. Twelve of them deal specifically with positions as it relates to centennial festivities that will be going on in the province, and the balance will be to the best of my recollection employed in areas of parks and historical resources. So these will provide direct services to the public, that they should notice.

We have, as I indicated, Mr. Chairman, in the outset of my comments, taken the Auditor General's comments and acted upon them as it relates to the Jubilee auditoria, and they will be a part of the consolidated financial statements of the Department of Community Development.

Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I'll finish with this last piece, and that is Alberta Scene. For those who have been in Ottawa in the last two weeks and for those that have seen the media reports coming back from that city, you will all know that Alberta Scene was a tremendous success in Ottawa, with some 600 Alberta artists participating in about 20 different venues and participating in almost 100 different performances in Ottawa. This is a great credit to the strength of the arts community in the province of Alberta.

I can advise the hon. member that a number of the artists who were part of Alberta Scene will be participating in the celebration events at Commonwealth Stadium later on in the month of May in celebration of the arrival and the visit of Her Majesty the Queen. So there are elements of Alberta Scene that will be brought back to Alberta at that venue, and there are ongoing discussions with the National Arts Centre as to whether or not we might be able to tour some of the Alberta Scene artists throughout the province of Alberta at some later juncture in the centennial year.

Mr. Chairman, again, any omissions or errors that I've made I will correct by way of a written response to the hon. member, and I thank him for his thoughtful questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. A couple of topics that I'd like to cover here, but the first is to ask the minister if it's possible that in the – how's it being titled now? – off-budget spending . . . It's like off-track betting. It's already happening. The budget isn't passed, and we're already getting announcements from various ministers saying: just wait until we've got some extra money there, and we'll throw it your way. All kinds of nice promises are coming.

So I'm hoping that we're going to get a nice promise out of this minister around the Edmonton Art Gallery. The minister is no doubt aware that there has now been a commitment from the federal government. There has been a significant commitment from a private donor – that is, the local philanthropists John and Barbara Poole – to launch the individual fundraising campaign in support of a new Edmonton Art Gallery. I was at the art gallery last night, and I looked at the poster. There we're talking about the competition to choose the new architects, and it's listing, you know, who's on board for the money. Nothing from the province. Totally blank where it says: provincial government.

You know, this is really our Alberta art gallery because the Glenbow art gallery is a very, very fine facility, but it has not chosen to collect work in the same way. Actually, in my head it's more of a museum, and that may not be fair. But, really, when we're looking at developing a collection and displaying a collection, the largest institution that we have in Alberta is the Edmonton Art Gallery. I think it could easily be renamed the Alberta art gallery, actually, for the work that it does to showcase to Albertans work of quality and interest both from across the world but also our own Alberta artists.

I would really like to see the province do something befitting our centennial in supporting the Edmonton Art Gallery, and I'm encouraging the minister to engage in – I can't believe I'm saying this. It's not in the budget, or if it is, it's not detailed in the budget, so the minister will have to tell me. If it's in the budget, then where is it, and how much money is being committed? I'm assuming that there would have been a big showy announcement about it, so I suspect it's not in there. What plans, exactly, does the province have to support the Edmonton Art Gallery? You know, I think that's really important, and I would like to see a sincere commitment from the provincial government.

You know, we hear a lot of fine talk from the government and, frankly, a lot of credit taken on behalf of the arts community, and I'm just not seeing the reality of it. I'm kind of choking back my outrage, to be honest with you, Mr. Chairman, when I hear things like the minister touting Alberta Scene. What happened there is that 600 of our best artists and really interesting work and a variety of work from emerging artists to experienced artists – this government didn't even put up enough money for return airfare to Ottawa. Our artists went off to Ottawa, and we hardly even paid for their return airfare. Yet all kinds of credit has been taken. To listen to the minister and the previous minister, they were responsible for the whole idea. That's not true at all. The National Arts Centre: it was their idea. They'd done one featuring the Maritimes the previous year. Alberta's number came up. It was, happily, in conjunction with our anniversary.

I just have a hard time buying this. We're now hearing from this minister, "Well, you know, we had to prioritize where we're giving increases," and we keep hearing from this government, "Yeah, we believe in the arts." I even get it quoted back at me, the amount of money that can be leveraged for investment in the arts, and we are still sitting at more or less the same budget as when I was elected here nine years ago. That was a $16.1 million budget. We've had a whole $5 million more go into that fund.

Now, overall, bottom line on this budget: absolutely, we've had more money come in; we've had more money go out. But you know what? We've had more programs come in and more programs go out, and with that the overall bottom line on this ministry has gone up and down. But how much money is going to the arts? Wow: $20.21 million. We need that budget to go to $40 million without delay. This province is awash in money, and choices are made, and priorities are made. Absolutely right, Mr. Minister. But I don't see them being made in support of this particular sector. I see the government taking a lot of credit for it, but I don't see the actual support coming.

So, yeah, I'm choking it back right now, and especially when I hear that kind of thing happen. I mean, at the 75th anniversary of this province we had an investment in fun for people and engagement of activity that has given us 25 years later all of those things that turn up on the big murals at the airports and in the kiosks for Alberta tourism that everybody likes to look at. That's things like the folk festival and the Fringe festival and the street performers' festival and the heritage days festival, even Jazz City, poor thing. From that, we've also had festivals that came as a result of and flowed from the investment 25 years ago. Things like the Works and the comedy festival, which also came and went, and some of the other great opportunities that we see in this city.

That's why we're looking at 25-year anniversaries of those festivals, because there was actually incentive. There was actually attention paid and money put into that sector 25 years ago, and, boy, did it pay off. It pays off so much that this provincial government likes to splash it all over billboards and use it in their advertising without actually supporting the sector from whence it came.

So, yes, I'm frustrated. You know, I look at the list of centennial projects that the minister was kind enough to supply me with, and I say: are you honestly telling me that those projects would not have happened? You would not have put money into the Jubilee Auditorium, when it needed this fixing, had it not been – you know, you had to wait for the centennial to do it. Is the minister actually telling me that the Londonderry Fitness and Leisure Centre would not have received the necessary funds?

So, I mean, this whole thing about, "Oh, haven't we done a wonderful thing here with the centennial projects?" I'm finding it kind of hard to choke down. I mean, you used money from the centennial as a way of doing regular, scheduled maintenance here. You know, yes, the Louise McKinney riverfront . . . [some applause] Oh, I got support here.

A few new things have happened, and I'll give you credit for that. The Louise McKinney riverfront park: there's money going into that. But upgrading the programming space and reconfiguring the main entrance and reception area of the Muttart Conservatory: that's a centennial project? Public multi-use facilities at the Northgate Lions Senior Citizens' Recreation Centre: that's much needed. I'm in that centre on a regular basis, and I can tell you that it's much needed. But a centennial project? This is regular maintenance. So, you know, dressing it up with a feather boa and a few sparkles and calling it a centennial project is insulting, frankly. You've got to come through with this money at some point.

You know, I've heard every minister here for nine years get up and go: "Oh, yes. Boy, do we ever love the arts. We support the arts, absolutely." Well, where's the support? Where's the money? When is the priority going to be the arts and cultural sector? When? Nine years I've listened to this, and I've listened to the same story. When is it going to be a priority?

Let me just ask a question to the minister. Is the government paying better than scale for the performers and the artist participants who are coming to the Queen's visit? I'm just interested in that. I'm assuming that they're paying them because they're respecting the fact that they're artists, and the artists are actually doing what they make a living doing. I'd be interested in knowing from the minister if they're paying better than scale for the performers and the artists. That's an official question on the record that I would like to get an answer from the minister on.

I'm just so frustrated by this. I guess what I really want to know from the minister is: why is this government unable to fund the arts? Is there an ideological block that you stub your toe on every year that you just cannot bring yourself to fund the arts? Or do you really not believe all the examples that are brought to you of leveraging the money and how much it leverages into that sector and into other sectors, how much that investment pays off? What is the stumbling block that year after year I hear the same speech and I don't see the money. So, why? Just let us know. Just tell us what it is. If you really don't mean to do this, just tell us, and tell us why. If it's ideology – I'm interested to know at this point why you won't increase this.

This government had a $6 billion – with a "b" – surplus last year. Now, some of it they have already invested, and there were laws that it would get cut off, and it ends up coming out in the books at $4.7 billion – $4.7 billion – and we can't get $19 million – with an "m" – for arts funding in this province. So tell me why. Help me understand why year after year after year we get the same platitudes and no movement.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, did you want to respond?

Mr. Mar: I'll review Hansard, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise with some interest to speak on the Community Development budget here this evening. It's a very wide-ranging ministry. Sometimes I find sort of difficulty in seeing how things are tied together. I think it's a place where perhaps several services that the government does indeed need to provide somehow are thrown into a rather loose basket. However, certainly there are a number of very interesting and hot-button issues here that I would like to speak on this evening. You know, I've done a number of these budget estimates now, and I must say that . . . [interjection] Yeah, I know what I'm doing, right? I'm earning my money.

What I find is a discrepancy between what the intention is, I think, and what actually happens. I think that this ministry is by far the most confusing or oblique and a little bit bizarre, perhaps. I'm just going to pass through sort of a passel of questions, and the minister can respond as he sees fit. You know, I do find it a bit disturbing that we don't have active responses here in the House, though. I mean, I hope that this isn't a trend where we just exchange e-mails and get written responses because, of course, part of the integrity of this House is that we do interact with each other in some small way across this green broadloom.

Talking about the arts, I think a couple of members have already spoken about the arts celebration in regard to the centennial. You know, myself, personally, I was surprised that there wasn't an organized means by which the National Arts Centre program was being moved en masse back here to the province of Alberta where we could see it. I'm glad to hear that there is some ad hoc movement in that way, but I find it a little bit disturbing that we didn't have that as an organized plan ahead of time.

You know, we're a number of months into our centennial, and for planning arts gigs, you need to have time. You need to sell tickets. Even if you're going to give them away, the time is running out. So I hope that some of those very interesting productions that the people in Ottawa got to see come back so that the people in Alberta can see them too and that they are affordable so that the average person can go and see them.

I remember vividly the 75th anniversary celebrations that we had in this province and a number of very lovely legacies that came from the 75th anniversary. You know, a lot of those things, or some of them anyway, are no longer with us. Jazz City is a very good example of that here in Edmonton. I think that without hesitation I can say that Jazz City died a slow death because of underfunding from this provincial government. When we started Jazz City in 1980 and through the first 10 or 15 years, it was just a remarkable jewel in the cultural crown of this province. Without any increases to meet inflation, in time some of these arts festivals have been slowly starved to death.

I know that the Edmonton Folk Festival, say, for example, is a very successful festival here in the city, but they are still receiving the same money from this province that they received 15 years ago. I don't know how much it cost per kilometre to pave a road in 1990 or so, but certainly it's a lot more today. It's the same thing with the Folk Festival. It's successful because people work very hard on it with legions of volunteers, but we're underfunding these festivals, and we do so at our peril. I know that the managing director of the Folk Festival said that it's not written in stone, that what we have here today can easily be gone tomorrow. He said that this provincial government giving him a very paltry sum makes it much more difficult for him to continue to put on a world-class festival here in this city. I find that very disturbing, and I think that we could do a lot better as a provincial culture supporter.

Just going through the budget, one that sort of stuck out for me here because, of course, we don't have it this year at all is the NHL team initiative. This initiative is a subsidy that apparently is paid through lottery sales, the Sport Select tickets. As far as I know – and maybe it's a special provision written in. Perhaps it's not entirely with the spirit of Gaming revenues going to private sports teams. I think that the lottery fund disbursements are meant to be, and I quote, used to support specific charitable, not-for-profit, public and community-based initiatives and projects. I don't think that professional hockey teams fit into that category. We don't have professional hockey this year, and I've seen plenty of good hockey from the University of Alberta and the junior teams. I don't know. This government likes to talk about getting out of the business of being in business, but my question is: how does that fit into the overall strategy of this department?

Now the centennial celebration. Certainly, I'm looking forward to a number of things that are going to happen. I just would like to see a real focus on getting a maximum bang for the buck here with the centennial celebrations, and that means having the maximum contact with the most people getting some benefit from the money. You know, some of the initiatives that I've seen thus far are sort of sputtering along in that regard. We're only spending about five bucks per head, right? Certainly, there must have been more spent on the 75th anniversary. Really, I think that people are waiting with bated breath for what big events are going to happen, but at five bucks per pop I don't know if we're going to be able to meet those expectations or not.

Now, the Alberta Foundation for the Arts is the same as it was last year, at about $32 million and change. The money is coming from lottery funding, I believe, almost entirely. When we make these distinctions, when we talk about how we're supporting the arts and whatnot, you know, tying so closely to lottery funding, I think that it's a bit of a dispersement of the responsibility towards arts funding. Lottery funding is not the same as tax funding, and as well some people don't like that, the fact that the money is coming from gambling revenues.

A report from Statistics Canada in January showed that Alberta ranks last of the provinces and the territories when it comes to per capita public funding for the arts. This is ironic because in Alberta people spend more on cultural goods and services per capita than anyone else. So it's like, you know, we're sort of out of sync with the strong public support that we have for the arts in this province, and indeed we do have a vibrant arts community. But, you know, everywhere else in North America, I hate to tell you, and certainly in Europe the arts are subsidized because it's a cultural institution which is vital to the integrity and to the quality of life of the people. Really, you get the best bang for your buck by putting money into arts funding. I find it to be somewhat embarrassing that our province is last in this per capita funding. Certainly, with the overall economy that we're enjoying here now in this province, we could create a great cultural renaissance in Alberta and do much better than we are doing now, in fact.

In regard to parks I guess we're seeing quite a substantial boost in the operating budgets. But let's try to remember what we saw happen to our provincial parks infrastructure and development over the last few years. Quite frankly, I think it's generally agreed upon that, you know, a lot of these things have been falling apart for so long that it's a good thing that we are in fact putting a couple of bucks back into these places, right? A number of the provincial parks that are around Edmonton are heavily used. People love to recreate through camping and by taking the kids out to the beach or whatever. So many of these places have deteriorated over the years that I think this money is going to perhaps just bring things back to some level instead of expanding the facilities themselves.

Just in regard to the parks, as well, of the $247 million Community Development budget, the parks and protected areas only get $36 million in operating money for refurbishing and maintenance, 35 per cent more than they did receive last year. So I do give some credit to that change in the funding, but as I say, it's long overdue, and we could certainly do better.

So my overall conclusion, then, as I said before, is that I think there's a lack of focus in Community Development, and the lack of focus comes from, I guess, a discrepancy between what appears to be happening and what is actually needed. You know, so often I see the Community Development department announcing their new things for this and that and putting a great deal of effort into that, announcing what new things are coming, but a lot of those things are things you need anyway. They're things that, actually, are just part of the core of what this ministry should be funding in the first place, so really it's confusing at best.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mar: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder can express himself passionately without frustration. I can answer a couple of questions for him, but first let me say thank you for the credit that was given to reinvestment in the area of parks. This was a significant priority for the department and one that we're very proud of.

I appreciate the comments that he made with respect to the arts in general and the passion with which he spoke on that subject. Let me make one correction on the issue that he said struck him in reviewing this. That was the $3 million that went to supporting the NHL franchises. This portion of the budget is not related to lottery dollars; this is a tax on the players, for those players that play in the province of Alberta, that goes back to supporting Alberta's two NHL teams.

He did ask: how can Albertans see the artists that performed in Ottawa at the Alberta Scene? Of course, they're from Alberta, so he can certainly watch the Edmonton Symphony Orchestra, or he can watch Decidedly Jazz Danceworks in Calgary. Ian Tyson performs in many different venues throughout the province. So these, of course, are things that Albertans have enjoyed for many, many years that now we can say that many Canadians have had the opportunity to see that they would not otherwise have seen.

I can also tell the hon. member that a number of booking agents or impresarios were in attendance, almost 100 of them. They each got a description of all of the artists that were performing at Alberta Scene. I'm advised that a number of them are planning on booking Alberta artists in jurisdictions that will be outside of the country, in Europe and in North America and in other places. So this has been a tremendous success.

With respect to centennial celebrations, I agree with his perspective that we should get the most bang for the buck. I think that when he attends the celebration of Her Majesty the Queen's visit and the September 1 centennial celebration that will be throughout the entire province – I think that people will be very impressed with what we've done. Of course, there will be local and municipal and community events throughout the entire year. I would invite him to go to the centennial website to see a list of several hundred events that are happening all over the province of Alberta that all are related to the centennial. If I've made any errors or omissions, I will review Hansard and reply in writing.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Chairman, I just want to make a few comments, particularly in a couple of areas. I want to express appreciation on behalf of my constituents to the minister for a number of the programs that are in place for the arts in this province, and I'll speak from a rural perspective, where we don't have the symphony or the philharmonic or many things. I want to express appreciation that the Foundation for the Arts provides for the travelling program that's enjoyed in Consort, Alberta, where they show at least five performances in a year, in Stettler, in others.

I want to express appreciation for our theatre groups. I can tell you that there's a theatre group in my community that almost annually for the last 25 or 26 years has put on a musical production. My community has a residency of about 10 people in the immediate town of New Brigid, where this is shown, but the talent comes from far around. They've produced Oliver, Fiddler on the Roof, The Fantasticks. I could name them. In fact, I did the makeup for this group in my earlier years. I couldn't find enough talent to perform.

They put on seven productions about a month ago. Each one sold out in the community hall, each one having a brunch or a dinner which allowed a fundraising opportunity for community groups like the drama club, like the curling club, like the community club, like the early childhood services. If you had gone to each one of those, you'd have seen the same workers because everybody belongs to all of those organizations. It's an amazing opportunity.

I could mention the play that the Consort players put on each year or the Hanna players and so on. That's only allowed by the support that we get, one, in bringing directors out to help with the direction and management of these plays, where expertise comes from Calgary or Edmonton, supported by the foundation to assist these communities to put on these outstanding productions.

I want to also mention that from a student point of view, Mr. Minister, I can't tell you how many letters I get from students thanking us for our support for the writers' workshops. I think it's writers in residence. I know that most of the students in my area go to Red Deer to the college for a week program. These students enjoy that. It develops their opportunity to develop talent.

I have attended a number of music festivals in the last few weeks, mainly because my granddaughters were performing in them. I look at the Coronation music festival, which is in the constituency of the Member for Battle River-Wainwright, and that music festival has gone on for years and years and years. It is a weeklong festival that celebrates voice, drama, dance, all forms, and it's an amazing festival. The Hanna music festival, the Stettler music festival, just to name a few in my constituency: if you want to talk about the opportunities for young people to develop culturally and develop their talent, those are some opportunities. I was asked specifically to, and I do try to, pass on to you the letters from these students of their appreciation.

I want to express appreciation for another program that I think is absolutely amazing. It's where a group of usually two people come into the school and spend three or four days, and the school puts on an entire production. It might be a takeoff on one of the nursery rhymes or something. There's a couple from Tilley that have been doing it recently. Missoula theatre was another that came in. It involves the whole school, and they do an amazing production. Talk about an opportunity for young people to develop their talent, where we don't have it at our doorstep here. What it does is really encourage these young people to have an appreciation for the arts. When they come to the city, they like to go to productions at the Winspear or at our Jubilee auditoria or Catalyst Theatre or many of the others that we have. That appreciation I really wanted to express.

Our parks. I have some of the parks in my area. I'm always pleased that we can further improve them. Mr. Minister, our parks are much appreciated. They're not rundown. They're not an embarrassment in the area that I live in. We were very supportive of seeing some dollars go to help keep that quality up.

I wanted to just mention one other thing. I'm very proud of what we're doing in our centennial celebrations this year. There's been some talk that we don't have enough cake, we don't have enough streamers, and we don't have enough parties. I've said: you know, when the last piece of icing is licked off the fingers, when the last balloon has popped, and when the last streamer has gone away, Alberta will have legacies that will be here for us to celebrate for many years. Many of the projects in my community, indeed, began as 75th anniversary projects, and we've been able to enhance those projects and keep them viable in our communities on into the future with dollars from the legacy projects.

I want to speak in particular about the ATCO learning centre at the Royal Tyrrell Museum, which was one of the first public legacy projects that was open and, in fact, where ATCO gave $1 million. I think it was the highest amount for a single project that was ever donated by a corporation. What an amazing addition to something that nobody else has in the world, the Royal Tyrrell Museum, and it is used extensively. I've actually – I think I've said this in the Legislature before – participated in a sleepover at the Royal Tyrrell Museum. If you haven't done it, you should, and you should go with a group of grade 1s, 2s, and 3s because they're really the most fun. You sleep under the dinosaurs. Your classroom is the new learning centre. Those young people know more about science through that, and it's an amazing thing. That's the kind of legacy I want to see for our province.

Yes, we're going to have the community parties and occasions. Our communities are very supportive of the dollars that have been given to them to help with those celebrations. More importantly, I am excited, and I am looking forward to the refurbished Jubilee auditoria. I haven't seen them – everybody that has tells me they'll knock your socks off – but I love the Jubilee auditoria. What a legacy, and what a worthwhile legacy for a hundredth anniversary.

Alberta is celebrating a hundred years, and we will build a foundation for the next 100 years by wisely investing in legacy projects the width and breadth of this province. For that, Mr. Minister, I thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. We have some great discussions in the Chase family with regard to support for the environment and parks. Hon. minister, my father was one of your biggest fans when you were Minister of Environment. My father has received awards from this government and other conservation groups like the Order of the Bighorn for restoration and habitat work that he's done. He's a past president of the Sarcee Fish & Game, worked with Ducks Unlimited, and he was very appreciative of the work you did as an Environment minister. As I say, he's one of your biggest fans. I'm hoping to be your second biggest when it comes to parks and protected areas.

I want to do a little bit of a historical look at my particular reason for having this parks and protected areas critique portfolio. In 2002 I started working with my wife as a campground attendant – maintenance, basically jack and jill of all trades – in Cataract Creek wilderness protected area. We started on the May long weekend in 2002, and the difference between 2002 and 2004 was just unbelievable. In 2002, thanks to the federal government and the G-8 and the fact that a lot of the G-8 activities were happening in the Kananaskis, we had, I'd say, almost hot and cold running conservation officers. We could count on at least one daily visit from conservation officers. There were a number of seasonal officers that summer, and it was great.

We had a system whereby, especially on weekends, we were responsible for doing our last rounds between 11 o'clock and 12 o'clock. At that point we would record in a book for the conservation officers, who we knew would be coming through at night, any particular campers who were causing difficulties, any things that we wanted the conservation officers to potentially check out to support the program.

After the G-8 ended, fortunately the contract of the seasonals continued throughout the summer; 2002 was a very good year. It was a learning year for both my wife and I, trying to carry out all the duties to spruce up the campground and try and keep it at the level that it once was when it was under provincial jurisdiction, and we did our best to do that.

When we came out in 2002 in the spring, in May, there was still a powdering of snow on the forestry road, and obviously we had to drive very carefully. When we got to I would say kilometre 9, we looked ahead down the road and saw this magnificent view of a tree-clad mountain, three peaks, and as we got to about kilometre 12 and we were just going down the bend by Cataract Creek, we looked out on to this meadow and again because of the newness of the spring and the high level of the water – the creek was full. It was rushing.

We got to our camp spot, set up. Incidentally, at that point, there were banks of 10 feet of snow where the area had been graded out so we could get our fifth wheel in. We looked back, we looked to the north and to the west, and we saw this beautiful three-peak panoramic mountain view. Absolutely breathtaking.

As the snow melted, we had our first taste of the wildflowers and the whole atmosphere. On one side we'd look at the three peaks. On the other side we'd look up at Mount Burke majestically commanding the area. We could see over to Strawberry Ridge, which was a very popular hiking destination: Mount Burke and Strawberry Ridge. Then the other big attraction was the number of fishermen and hikers that would go along Cataract Creek to the falls. This was a major hiking destination, extremely popular, as I say, with both fishermen and hikers. Daily picnickers would enjoy the day-use area at Cataract Creek.

When we came back in the spring of 2003, we could not believe what had taken place over the winter. When we hit that kilometre 9, all of a sudden we're looking at what would be almost Sudbury-like devastation. The area that we used to look at with the three mountains was now that much easier to see because it had been clear-cut.

That clear-cutting continued unabated throughout the summer of 2003, and when the Lost Creek fire was raging down in the Crowsnest area and a fire ban was put throughout the areas, we still had the clear-cutting taking place throughout the night. It was amazing to me that campers weren't allowed to even have mosquito coils for fear of starting a potential forest fire, yet heavy-duty machinery was allowed to go through the forest and clear-cut at random, throughout the night I might add. So our campers were confined to the campground. They couldn't leave the campground. They couldn't go out into the backcountry because of the ban, but for the commercial operators, the foresters there were no restrictions with the exception of one week in August.

Also, one of the things that made communication very difficult for about two weeks was the water bombers that were fighting the Lost Creek fire. We're on the same radio frequency as the conservation officers, so when we had an emergency – and we had a variety of emergencies – we couldn't get through because of being on the same radio channel. After a week and a half and several complaints later we finally got our channels working so that we had access.

One of the problems in terms of communication that we experienced was the repeater stations. Fortunately, in most cases we could be heard, but we never knew when we called for backup if there was going to be anybody coming. Because we were over 80 kilometres away from the nearest RCMP and about 60 kilometres away from the Sheep station, we weren't sure if we were going to get the support.

In the summer of 2003 I think there was one seasonal, and the frequency of visits was considerably reduced, particularly on weekends because we were that much farther into the areas. My wife and I did our best to maintain the discipline, welcome the campers, and so on, but there just was not enough conservation officer support.

In 2002 Highwood House was still a conservation office. Some of the wonderful people like Pat Ronald worked out of that conservation office. He was there, and we could contact him, and 13 kilometres away we could get some support. In 2003 the office is completely shut down. In 2004 the office is not only shut down; it's closed and all the tourist information, all the maps, all the support for visitors is gone. It wasn't just Highwood House that was closed; it was a whole series of conservation offices that were closed. My hope for the minister is that now that there's more money, we can see people getting beyond that seasonal situation in conservation officers and have more full-time people hired. I hope that is within the budget.

The other area that was frequently discussed – I would talk to people, Ray Andrews for example, from Canmore and Community Development, and I'd talk with conservation officers, forestry officials, sustainable resources – was the multi-use aspects. It concerned me that not only did they clear-cut on the outside edges right up to the park boundaries, within 30 metres of Cataract Creek, which had a reputation of being a wonderful trout stream – and it drew visitors all the way from Europe – but then in the summer of 2004 we had a group basically cutting what was left after the outside areas had been cleaned.

Now, the latest effort was using the park's road itself, punching out the most scenic camping spot in the campground, which was site 71-72, which no longer exists, so they could make a road, use the camp road to pull out the trees. Those are the trees that are on the side of Mount Burke. They're the trees that go down to the second falls. This area, as I say, was cut. So in terms of multi-use you start wondering: who's going to come to see this campground? Who's going to go to the top of Mount Burke or the top of Strawberry Ridge? Why are they going to want to go to these destinations when they look out and all around them they see what used to be forest?

I question the jeopardizing of the creek. I personally don't believe that 30 metres is sufficient, especially when we're talking about lodgepole pine to keep the silt from going into the rivers. Of course, in each succeeding year whenever there was any melt or runoff, those creeks were a whole lot muddier than they had been in previous years, when the trees were there to serve as almost like a toothbrush and strain. Now, I'm hoping, as I say, that some of these errors will be corrected.

The other error that I want to talk about in multi-use – I'm assuming that it falls under Community Development to maintain the fences. Not only did we have to listen to the wonderful chimes of clear-cutting in the evening, but we also had free-range cattle. Because the fences weren't maintained or because they were knocked down by the forest companies and there was nobody to put them back up, the cattle would come into the campgrounds. They would rub against the trailers. They would run into the tents. Try dealing with – I don't know – a half-ton Angus bull first thing in the morning. You know, campers sort of racing for their trailers and this big bull marching down the campground roadway. Well, I got out my golf pencil, and I threatened it. It didn't have much effect, but I did my best.

I'm hoping that part of this will be the restoration of the fences so at least we can keep the cattle out of the parks. It worries me greatly when we talk about now turning loose buffalo. In Sustainable Resources this morning they said: well, if the buffalo are going to be on leased grazing land, then there have to be appropriate fences built. Thank heavens for that. It's bad enough greeting a black Angus bull. I wouldn't want to be greeting a buffalo in that same circumstance.

Now, I'll move on to the arts programming. What I see with this government is a little bit of what I would call doublespeak. The Member for Calgary-Egmont proposed a bill that would make some type of arts course compulsory at the high school level. That's great. However, in turn, what's happening is the first programs to be shut down by lack of funding are the fine arts programs at the junior high schools. In 2002 we lost our drama program at my junior high school, F.E. Osborne. In 2003 the band program was basically cut in half. Bring it to 2005: Simon Fraser junior high in Calgary-Varsity constituency won't be having a band program next year because of lack of funding and lack of support.

If we're going to talk about supporting arts and culture, let's start at the school level, as the Member for Calgary-Egmont suggested, but don't just make the course compulsory. Provide the support so that arts and culture can be a viable, ongoing entity. Encourage children, junior high and senior high, to appreciate the arts, and then once they graduate, support the arts so that they can go and enjoy the programming.

I would like to know from the minister if what I've heard is true, that the Department of Community Development has only paid for half of the bills for the two Jubilees. My understanding is – correct me if I'm wrong; that's why I'm asking the question – that the government paid half the bill and arts groups were left for the other half, trying to find matching funds.

Mrs. McClellan: What?

Mr. Chase: I hope that's not the case. I said: correct me if I'm wrong. That's the question I'm asking. I stand ready and willing to be corrected. I hope they received the whole funding.

With regard to centennial celebrations we've got ambassadors who have jackets and very little funding to go to events where those jackets could be worn. I've heard from a number of centennial ambassadors that they don't have the money necessary to carry out the celebrations.

It's great to hear about some of the arts activities that are happening in the rural areas. I'm glad to hear that there is a degree of support from the government. That's necessary, but I have a feeling that the majority of the money that is raised is as a result of local initiatives as opposed to government support.

I also wonder – and it has been brought out before – why Alberta's 75th anniversary had more pizzazz and celebration than our 100th anniversary. It concerns me – and this was an article that was brought out in the Edmonton Journal – that it seems our poor eastern 100th celebratory sister is spending more money celebrating and recognizing their province than we are. Again, if either the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Community Development wishes to correct my assumption, I would welcome it.

I'm proud to be an Albertan, even though it's only been since 1966. I think we have lots to celebrate. My background is in the arts. I had classical training in Latin for five years. I majored in art at university, a double major in art and French. I want to see the arts celebrated, preserved, and sustained, and I would like to see more funding evidence that that's going to happen. We have a number of talented musicians who I thoroughly enjoy at a variety of jams. I mentioned going to the East Coulee Spring Festival. We have some wonderful events happening like the Canmore music festival, but they're basically sponsored by communities. I'd ask the Community Development minister: does Canmore receive any funding for putting on that festival? Or does Edmonton receive arts support funding for the Fringe or Calgary for the folk festival? To what extent does the government fund and recognize these wonderful events? I'd like to hear that the government funded these to a great extent, and I'll sit down and listen for those answers.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to congratulate the minister on his budget and in particular on the dedication of $150 million to the Provincial Museum, soon to be the Royal Alberta Museum.

I find it a little bit hard to fathom the outrage, feigned or otherwise, of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre when she said: there's no special funding for the arts in this centennial year. A hundred and fifty million dollars is certainly a considerable amount of money, even in Liberal opposition terms. Compared to the sum of $30 million, which the federal Liberals are pumping into the project, it certainly is a considerable . . .

Ms Blakeman: Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I would ask under 23(i), for imputing false or unavowed motives to myself. The statement that the member is attributing to me was not in fact uttered, and he needs to be able to check the Blues and be a bit more accurate when he quotes me. I'd appreciate it if he did that because he has misquoted me and taken me out of context. My comments were very carefully made, and what he's quoted me as saying is not accurate.

Dr. Brown: I believe the comments were to the effect that the member could hardly contain herself. It seemed to me that she was expressing some sentiment of outrage at the funding, and certainly her disposition displayed that demeanour. So I don't think that the fact there was some sort of outrage displayed is in any way demeaning to the member. I think that's what was expressed.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else on the point of order?

Hon. members, the point of order is being raised under Standing Order 23(h), which says that "A member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that member makes allegations against another member." The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre stood up and indicated that she had not uttered those words that are being attributed to her. The chair does not have the copy of Hansard at his disposal, so the chair is going to use the words that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has just indicated to be factual, unless the records indicate otherwise. We will accept that no such comments were made by the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

I hope that the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill will consider this as a clarification from her and hopefully will do the honourable thing.

Dr. Brown: If I mistook the sense of outrage, then I certainly withdraw those remarks with respect to the outrage that I seemed to detect coming from the member.

Debate Continued

Dr. Brown: As I was saying, the sum of $150 million being allocated to the Provincial Museum is certainly far in excess of what the federal government has allocated to that project. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre did give a compliment to the Glenbow Museum, stating that it was deserving of some recognition, but she also implied that the Edmonton Art Gallery was also deserving of some sort of special recognition and was the pre-eminent art museum in the province.

I would like to say that the Glenbow Museum in Calgary is certainly an outstanding institution and is an outstanding asset to southern Alberta. Under the leadership of Michael Robinson it has displayed an admirable job of being entrepreneurial. Unlike the Provincial Museum it is an independent institution, and as such it faces special challenges. They've done a tremendous job of being entrepreneurial, as I've said, in attracting outside money, outside philanthropy. They are now undergoing an extensive project to modernize the institution and to make it more user friendly and more informative and educational. I'm sure that the Glenbow Museum would love to have the type of funding that's been allocated to the Provincial Museum.

I would like to just ask the minister if he could perhaps share with us what plans he might have with respect to the Glenbow Museum as the major artistic and cultural institution in the city of Calgary with respect to static arts and, also, whether or not he might share with us some of the possible solutions to the special challenges that the Glenbow faces with respect to its status as an independent institution. I'm thinking particularly of the challenges that they face with respect to benefits for the employees and the pensions, which are nowhere comparable to those that are allocated to their counterparts here at the Provincial Museum.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to take this opportunity to put a few comments on the record in regard to thanks from the residents of Bonnyville-Cold Lake for the Ministry of Community Development's grants when it pertains to the centennial legacy. The town of Bonnyville was the beneficiary of $1.7 million for their centennial project, as was the city of Cold Lake, which received the same amount.

I'd like to share a little bit about how this money makes a big difference in a rural community. The project in Bonnyville was pegged at $13.5 million. It's going to be the addition of a second arena, indoor soccer field, an education centre, a fitness centre for seniors and youth alike. We had the official sod-turning ceremony last Friday, and it was attended – I didn't have the official count, but I would say that there were probably 1,500 people that turned out for this event. Seniors, people of middle age, lots of youth were there to recognize how instrumental this project was going to be in making their quality of life that much better in a small rural community.

But the part that's inspiring, Mr. Chairman, is the fact that the local groups got together – of course, the two municipalities got together, and they pledged to put in $5 million towards this project – but the rest of it had to be raised. We received $1 million from Canadian Natural Resources Limited; half a million dollars from EnCana resources; a local company, Denmar Energy Services, pledged $300,000. They would go to the local shoe store, that would donate $5,000, and on and on. The committee had set a target of $1 million. They are close to reaching $1.5 million from the local community. It's a feat, I'm sure, that is the envy of many other communities across Alberta because the people there – with the driving force that the municipality had and the $1.7 million that came from the province, it gave them the desire to be able to say: hey, it is attainable.

In Cold Lake they're going to be starting their fundraising campaign. They're building themselves a new ice arena. They have two older ice arenas that have basically done their time. They've had a junior B hockey team that have just finished off their second year there. The community is behind them, and they know that they need a new ice rink. I'm sure that they will be as successful as they go forward.

So on behalf of my constituents I just want to say: thank you for those $1.7 million because we are grateful. We appreciate what it's going to do. It's going to change our quality of life and provide entertainment for our youth for many years to come.

I'd also like to thank my centennial ambassador, Mr. Vic Sadlowski. He's been involved with the various schools. He's been involved with the seniors. He's a retired schoolteacher, but he's always had a great knack in terms of being a great master of ceremonies, so as we go through with any special events in our community, he's there with his coat that describes him as a centennial ambassador. He's working with the schools. They're planting trees. They're having all types of events. He attends all the different functions that I attend, where I go and give the gold medallions to our centenarians.

So it's great to show that we are celebrating. We're showing that Alberta, basically, over the past hundred years has been about building community, and we're continuing on with that type of legacy as we work together and continue to build community as we go into our second century.

Going to the Francophone Secretariat, if I may, Mr. Minister, I'd just like to ask a couple of questions. In the past budget there used to be a separate line item for the budget for the Francophone Secretariat, and I haven't been able to find it, so I'd really appreciate to see if you could tell me what the budget is for this year. As you are aware, we met with the francophone community a few months back, where they were asking to have an expanded mandate of the secretariat. The secretariat's been in place since 1999, and they've asked in terms of being able to see the mandate expanded. I would certainly like to hear your comments on that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to add a few more. There's a confusion. The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Community Development both are saying that the ministry is doing really well, but I have some documents showing – I mean, somebody, I remember, wrote a letter from Calgary, and he's from the hon. minister's riding, and I want to mention what he thinks about libraries in this province after the motion was defeated. He said that we are a province without deficit, and we are a province that calculates its surpluses not in the hundreds of thousands nor in the millions but in the billions, and we cannot afford the $4 million that it would take to eliminate library fees. The motion was defeated, but he was really frustrated.

The hon. minister, if he remembers, knows what I'm talking about. He said he was a Conservative all his life, but in the end he said keep up the good work, and the Liberal Party may have just found a new supporter.

So the people are saying different than what I hear in this Assembly. I don't know whom I should trust.

Another thing I want to add is that I think no other speaker has spoken so far on per capita public funding for arts on an annual basis. I was reading one article that Alberta is the lowest. Alberta pays $160 per person and Manitoba $210, Saskatchewan $199, British Columbia $183. Nationally it's $236. I mean, Alberta is the richest province, and we . . .

Mr. Bonko: Are the cheapest.

Mr. Agnihotri: I don't say that we are the cheapest, but we can afford. I know the hon. minister says that he is trying his best. I can request him to please do something for the arts in this province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of quick points that I would like to make in regard to the budget for Community Development.

10:00

As I was leafing through the Order Paper this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, I noticed a couple of private members' motions that are way down the list and not likely to be debated this sitting. I think that's unfortunate because I notice, as an example, one that's proposed by the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar that talks about urging the government to "consider increasing the per capita grant given to Alberta libraries by 50 per cent in recognition of the late the Honourable Dr. Lois E. Hole to encourage library enhancement and increased participation in our public libraries." I just think it's really unfortunate that we're not going to have the opportunity to debate that motion.

Hon. members will recall that earlier this session, unfortunately, a motion from this side of the House was defeated that would have seen free library cards distributed to all Albertans in honour of the late the Honourable Lois E. Hole. I think, as well, that that's unfortunate. So I'd just like to I suppose remind the hon. minister that certainly there are members of his own government caucus that feel strongly about supplying an awful lot more funding to public libraries.

In fact, two weeks ago now, I guess it might have been, I was at an AUMA seminar – I believe the hon. minister was in attendance as well – and at least twice I heard members, councillors or reeves from various communities across the province, get up and refer to the fact that library funding was a concern for them, and they really felt as if they had been shortchanged somewhat. I would certainly like to echo the sentiments expressed in this private member's motion and hope that at some point the minister might take that into consideration. If it can't be accommodated through this year's budget, then hopefully during next year's budgetary considerations we could take a serious look at providing much stronger support for libraries in this province.

Another one, Mr. Chairman, that caught my eye was a motion that was on the list to be debated at some point by the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose. It, again, is not likely to see debate during this sitting, but it would have asked the Legislative Assembly to encourage the government to "provide assistance for youth cultural sports exchange programs to increase awareness of and interaction with other cultures around the world."

I think that this is a wonderful initiative that would have likely received a tremendous amount of support from all sides of the House, and I'm sorry to see that it's not going to be debated in the Legislature this time around. Again, I would hope that the minister would have a close look at that resolution and understand that there are members of his own caucus that feel passionately about this, that perhaps we're not providing enough funding to these groups and that we could certainly be doing more.

It's been pointed out several times tonight that we are a very fortunate province at this point in time, with an unbelievable excess of revenues coming in thanks to the good grace of God and the fact that we have oil and gas in the ground and record high prices that are providing us with revenues beyond most of our wildest dreams. Given that that is the case, I think certainly one way that we could be sharing that wealth with the citizens of Alberta and making sure that there is a greater legacy for all would be to be investing in libraries and also in youth cultural sports exchange programs. I think those are two excellent initiatives, and I wanted to have the opportunity to be on the record as supporting those since the minister will be aware of the fact that we will most likely not have the opportunity to debate them at any other point in this sitting.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Any others?

Hon. minister, did you want to have any concluding remarks?

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Many questions have been asked, and as I have said many times this evening, I will review Hansard and reply in writing.

There were a couple of things that I did want to comment on. I appreciated the comments by the Member for Calgary-Varsity. I don't think there's ever been a vacation slide show presented in this Assembly, but that was pretty close to it, and I appreciated the description of what he saw in 2002 in Cataract Creek versus 2003. Notwithstanding the lack of vacation slides I have a pretty good picture in my own head of what he was describing. While I cannot answer questions about what may have happened in that year or why the cutting was taking place, the germane point that I take from all of what he said was: if there were errors, can we learn from them and correct them in the future? I'm committed to doing that.

I appreciated his comments about supporting the arts right at the school level. That, of course, does not fall directly within my portfolio responsibilities, but I know that as a former Minister of Community Development the current Minister of Education takes this quite seriously. He understands the need to not only mandate programs but for funding to follow accordingly.

With respect to the Jubilee auditoria, I can correct the member. There is no truth to the idea that we would ask arts groups to find matching money for the province's contribution. There was, however, a foundation that was set up. Friends of the Jubilee both in Calgary and in Edmonton created a foundation where they were trying to raise some money. They have expressed some success in being able to do that but certainly not to the magnitude of going half-way on the capital costs, which to my recollection are in the magnitude of some $60 million. They might have raised a few hundred thousand or perhaps a million dollars, as an example, to put new pianos in the facilities, but it's certainly not something that we are mandating that they do. The province, to be clear, will pick up the tab for the construction work that's being done at the Jubilee auditoria.

The Member for Calgary-Varsity talked about some of the centennial events that are happening on a local scale. It's true that many are being organized locally. We are trying our best through our centennial ambassadors to become aware of them so that we might co-ordinate them provincially and bring attention to what a local community might be doing and, of course, invite other Albertans or perhaps even people from outside of Alberta to participate in that.

I can't comment specifically on how much is being spent by Saskatchewan on centennial celebrations, but I give them much credit. They have worked on a very, very sublime program for celebrating that province's centennial. They have spent money in some areas that exceeds, perhaps, what we're spending here, but one must appreciate that their objectives may be completely different.

For example, some of the money that is not within the budget of Community Development but, in fact, resides in the Department of Economic Development in tourism is being spent on a program in Alberta Tourism to market the centennial through Alberta Tourism. So while that doesn't appear in the budget of Community Development, certainly money is being spent in this area.

I can't tell you how Saskatchewan is doing it, but I might suggest that some of the money that they're spending on their marketing of tourism is actually being spent under the rubric of the centennial. So I can say that overall it's quite likely, if you include the centennial legacy projects that we've funded, that we're spending significantly more than the provincial government of Saskatchewan, but we may be spending it in different areas with different priorities than they may have established themselves.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill asked me about the Glenbow Museum. It is a tremendous treasure. I agree that Mike Robinson has done a remarkable job of running that facility. The nature of the relationship between the provincial government and Glenbow is an interesting one. Some number of years ago there was a constating statute that created the Glenbow Foundation. This is unusual in the nature of museums, I believe. That relationship, which was a statutory one between the province and the Glenbow, ended, and a contractual one was created whereby materials that are the province's but are looked after by the Glenbow – in fact, their care is paid for by the province through a contract to the Glenbow, and certainly Mike Robinson has provided me with much information about the nature of the cost of the care of this collection. So this is an ongoing discussion with the Glenbow, but I again say that the Glenbow is a tremendous resource to the province of Alberta.

I see that my time is drawing close to an end, so I will just say thank you to the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. I will respond to his questions on the Francophone Secretariat and its budget. My expectation is that the mandate will be expanded for the secretariat by the end of the month.

I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for his second round of questions. I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford and will review his comments on library funding and sport and recreation.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will draw my comments to a close. Thank you, sir.

The Deputy Chair: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Community Development for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:
Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$235,249,000
Capital Investment	$41,192,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report the estimates of the Department of Community Development. I will not be asking for leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2006, for the following department.

Community Development: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $235,249,000; capital investment, $41,192,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As is the tradition, I would ask for unanimous consent of the House to revert to Introduction of Bills for the purpose of introducing the Appropriation Act.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Bill 40
Alberta Personal Income Tax
Amendment Act, 2005 (No. 2)

[Adjourned debate May 3: Mr. Ducharme]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise tonight and open debate on behalf of the Official Opposition on Bill 40, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2005 (No. 2). I understand that this is actually the second amendment we've had to the Personal Income Tax Act in this session. I have to admit that on first blush that was a surprise to me, but I understand that it's not necessarily unusual. I can say at the outset that I will be recommending to my caucus colleagues that we support this bill. I really can't find anything terribly wrong about it. A couple of little comments that I will make, however.

Certainly, the idea that we're changing the amount of the credit for the first dependant and going up for all dependants up to four, the fact that it sort of levels the playing field for larger families compared to small families, these are things that I would speak in support of. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I've been on record for some time as suggesting that we have to help out lower income families in this province. The fact that we have a flat tax, which the Official Opposition is well on record as having opposed because it definitely disadvantages lower income families, is something that, as I say, we're on the record as having opposed in the past, certainly not in favour of.

Given that we do have a flat tax – again, Mr. Speaker, I'll refer to a motion that is not likely to see the light of day in this sitting, but a motion that I had hoped to have the opportunity to bring forward that would have urged the government to improve the quality of life for Alberta families earning less than $29,000 annually by reducing the personal income tax from 10 per cent down to 9 per cent. At least, if we're going to have a flat tax, I think there should be greater consideration given to individuals and families that are in the lower income brackets.

Nevertheless, this bill, as I say, does go some way towards doing that. Section 3 of the bill would lower the limit from $6,500 – this is the threshold at which the credit kicks in – down to $2,760. I'm certainly not going to oppose that, but I would wonder at some point: if we're going to lower the limit to $2,760, why even bother having a threshold at all at that point, especially since we're going to index this credit against inflation. Presumably, the upper threshold is going to grow. At some point the $2,760 lower entry level threshold is basically meaningless. I would suggest that we might just as well drop it to zero and allow anybody and everybody to benefit from the credit as opposed to stipulating that they have to make that minimum amount of money before they benefit from the provisions of this act.

One other comment that I would like to make. The member who introduced the bill in second reading for the government, Mr. Speaker, was the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, and in his comments he referred to the fact that the tax credit aims to support low- and middle-income families and to encourage work effort. While I'm not suggesting that we don't like to see work effort, I have to admit that whenever this government talks about encouraging work effort, it always causes me to think that there is a second meaning or a hidden meaning behind that.

We've seen examples of this over the years, Mr. Speaker, when in fact what it really means is that we're trying to lessen the government's load in terms of the assistance that they might provide to those people that are most in need. I'm not suggesting that that's necessarily what the member meant in this particular case because I really can't see necessarily that that's what this bill does. But the choosing of those particular words does cause me some concern because it just seems to have been a pattern, unfortunately, with this government over the years, where we say one thing, and in fact there's a hidden meaning or a double meaning. As I say, I can't see that in this bill. I don't believe it's the case in this bill. I would certainly hope that it isn't the case in this bill.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, as I suggested, I am going to suggest that my caucus colleagues support Bill 40. I do believe that it is a good thing for Alberta families and, in particular, Alberta families that are in what we would consider to be a low-income bracket. Certainly, anything we can do to help those families is something that I would support and I would hope that all members of this House would be supporting as well.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 40 read a second time]

Bill 38
Pharmacy and Drug Amendment Act, 2005

[Adjourned debate April 12: Mr. Elsalhy]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, would you like to close debate on behalf of the minister?

Third Reading

Bill 8
Personal Information Protection
Amendment Act, 2005

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Personal Information Protection Amendment Act, 2005, is mostly a housekeeping bill, as you may recall. It's been a while since we did the Committee of the Whole, but there were a couple of questions that the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods brought up, and I would like to answer those questions so that she has them for her record.

In response to her questions that were raised in Committee of the Whole, let me clarify that the amendment to the powers of the Alberta commissioner expressly states that the commissioner may exercise the powers set out in this section "where the Commissioner considers it appropriate to do so." This means the commissioner must make a determination as to whether the person with whom he proposes to co-ordinate his activities has duties, powers, and functions under a federal/provincial statute similar to the Personal Information Protection Act. If a person believes that the commissioner has either made an error in law or has not exercised his discretion properly, that person can request a judicial review.

In regard to the second question, the powers that the Alberta commissioner and the commissioners outside the province exercise are narrowly defined in the privacy legislation under which they operate. Under this amendment the Alberta commissioner will be able to disclose information only for the purpose of co-ordinating activities with other commissioners. The intent of this amendment is to allow a small arena in which commissioners can exchange information for the effective exercise of their clearly defined powers.

I would hope that that clarifies the questions that were raised by the hon. member, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to get the opportunity to speak to Bill 8. I wasn't able to speak to it in second reading or in Committee of the Whole. In third reading we're essentially speaking to the anticipated effect of the bill once passed.

There is something that is causing me some concern in this bill. Maybe we'll be able to get the hon. member to speak to this in closing of debate for Bill 8 and give me some answers.

Here's the issue that I see. What appears to be happening here is that section 2 of the bill, which is amending section 4(3) of the Personal Information Protection Act itself, is changing health services and accessed information about that in the private sector and in the public sector. It's creating a difference. I think what in effect is going to happen here is that PIPA will be the act that comes into play if the information is generated from a private source or is privately held, and it would come under HIA, the Health Information Act, if it is generated in the public sector or held by the public sector. I would argue that when we're talking health information for individuals, the same rules should apply.

In essence, what we have happening here is that the old section 4(3) states that PIPA "does not apply to the following" and then goes on:

Health information as defined in the Health Information Act where that information is collected, used or disclosed by an organization for health care purposes including health research and management of the health care system, but for the purposes of this clause health information does not include personal employee information, which is dealt with elsewhere in the Health Information Act.

What we're going to get instead and what's being proposed here is that the Personal Information Protection Act does not apply to health information as defined in the Health Information Act to which that act applies. I think what we're doing is in essence expanding the scope of PIPA and separating it from the scope of the Health Information Act, and I think that's where the problem is.

If we go back and look at exactly what is in the Health Information Act – bear with me. I'm sorry. This ends up going back and forth through a lot of details, but we're looking specifically for health information.

On page 8 of the Health Information Act, health information is defined as meaning any or all of the following:

(i) diagnostic, treatment and care information.

Okay. So we look up the definition for that, and we get:

(i) the physical and mental health of an individual;

(ii) a health service provided to an individual;

(iii) the donation by an individual of a body part or bodily substance, including information derived from the testing or examination of a body part or bodily substance;

(iv) a drug as defined in the Pharmaceutical Profession Act provided to an individual;

(v) a health care aid, device, product, equipment or other item provided to an individual pursuant to a prescription or other authorization;

(vi) the amount of any benefit paid or payable under the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act or any other amount paid or payable in respect of a health service provided to an individual, and includes any other information about an individual that is collected when a health service is provided to the individual, but does not include information that is not written, photographed, recorded or stored in some manner in a record.

So that's the first piece that's covered as health information. That's the diagnostic, treatment, and care information.

The second piece is health service provider information. Okay. The definition of that is "an individual who provides health services." This was of some contention when the Health Information Act Review Committee met. Essentially, that's giving a lot of information about the health care provider. That includes things like their name, their business and home mailing addresses and electronic addresses, business and home telephone numbers and fax numbers, gender, date of birth, unique identification number, the licensing, the date on which the provider became authorized to provide health services, education completed, continuing competencies, skills and accreditations, restrictions that are applying to the health services provider's right to provide health services.

There's a very long list. It actually goes over three pages in the Health Information Act. I'll just refer the member to it but not read all of that into the record. That's the second piece, which is the health service provider information, and all of this is falling under health information.

The last piece is registration information. Registration information is another list. It's information relating to an individual that falls within the following general categories:

(i) demographic information, including the . . . personal health number;

(ii) location information;

(iii) telecommunications information;

(iv) residency information;

(v) health service eligibility information;

(vi) billing information, but does not include information that is not written, photographed, recorded or stored in some manner in a record.

So that is what health information is, and therefore this bill does not cover that. That is all talking about delivery, I would say, through the public system for the most part.

I'd like commentary back or perhaps a legal opinion, if it's possible to deliver that. That's my concern, that we would be creating two different sets of rules based on health information: PIPA if it's private; HIA if it's public. Essentially, what I see is that PIPA is being expanded to cover information held on the private sector, and I don't think we should be in a situation where we've got different rules applying. For one, now you get into long, involved debates about: how was the information generated and who holds it and who is ultimately responsible if something goes wrong? I hope this has happened inadvertently. But this is a government bill, and the government has quite a bit of legal resource at their disposal to be able to double-check this kind of thing. I guess what I'm left with is that the government intended to separate the way this works, and if that's the case, I would like to hear why the government was intending this to have that effect.

I'm sorry; that was a very technical go-round. I know that it's late at night, and people are wondering why we should care. But the truth of the matter is that I think we have to be very careful when we're talking about personal health information, and that is what we're talking about here. I've raised this issue a number of times in the Assembly, that we are trying to seek that balance. There's great resistance from the public to giving information that they believe will be available as personal health information to other sources. If we can't get buy-in from the public, we are never going to get those electronic health records to work.

Right now in Alberta we're already behind. We were the leaders in this. We were out ahead of the pack in starting to develop processes and systems for it, and we have bogged down and snagged badly on this one. Actually, that's not fair to say that we snagged badly. We are definitely not out ahead and leading, and we seem to be developing some problems in implementing that. I think that's cause for concern, especially in light of the discussion between myself and the minister of health this afternoon about the possibilities for e-health. If we can't get the electronic health records working, we've got a problem. That's part of the realm that is being captured by this legislation.

That's why I'm trying to determine exactly what the government thought they were doing. If they did want separate rules applying here, why did they want that to happen? They have created a situation that I don't think we had in place before, and I'd like to know why the government did that.

Thank you for the opportunity to raise this issue in third reading. I know I'm interested, and I know that others are watching this. In fact, this issue was raised to me during the health innovation symposium in Calgary by someone approaching me and asking if I was aware that this is what was happening in this act and asking me to raise it, and I'm happy to do so because I share their concerns. I look forward to the response. If the member is not able to give it to me before it passes third reading, I would appreciate receiving a written response if there needs to be consultation with counsel to give a legal response for this.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood to close debate.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, I believe the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre said that she was not here for Committee of the Whole. We did try and address the part of what she was asking about on the health act, and I would just like to run this little bit past her and see if this would suffice. If not, we certainly will get back to you on the rest.

The answer at that time was that in Alberta we have a comprehensive framework of privacy protection that applies to personal information in both the public and private sectors. Because of the special character of health information Alberta also has a separate Health Information Act that applies to health information in both the public sector, for example hospitals, and the private sector, for example physicians. What this amendment does is carve out a body of information, health information that is covered by the Health Information Act, and make it clear that PIPA does not apply to that information.

At the same time, the amendment makes it clear that PIPA does apply to any health-related information that is not covered by the Health Information Act. For example, PIPA covers health-related information in an organization's personnel files, medical information requested by an insurance company in Alberta to issue a policy, and records of a psychologist providing privately paid services. The Minister of Health and Wellness agrees with this amendment, and the amendment ensures that there are no gaps in privacy protection and that there are clear rules to which the act applies. I hope that answers the questions.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would move passage of this bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a third time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Bill 39
Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Would it be appropriate to start the circulation of the amendment at this time?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the amendment that is being circulated to you will be referred to as amendment A1.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, you may proceed.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The original amendment is on the table as we speak, and I'll just give a very quick preamble. The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill has most certainly done his homework. I am very pleased that he has pretty much everyone onside with this bill. His government members have seen its importance as have members of the opposition.

This bill is wide ranging, but it's primarily about saving lives. I would love to include a cellphone ban while driving within its clauses, but that debate will have to come at some later date, possibly during the fall sitting. I support the majority of the intent of this bill. The key to the bill's success will be strict enforcement.

I mentioned a concern earlier, which needs to be addressed, on the double-whammy effect on the family of having a john's vehicle seized and the potential of driving prostitution underground, where there is the threat of increased violence.

I have a second concern again, which I've previously discussed with the member, but I would look forward to his answer. That has to do with implied consent and the nature of liability when a vehicle is lent by its owner to another driver. What I don't want to see happen or what needs to be addressed is when the owner says, "Okay; you can have my vehicle," and for whatever reason the person gets a speeding ticket, gets involved in an accident, gets pulled over for dangerous driving. Then there's a degree of question of who's responsible in that event. In the case of an accident and somebody's injured, does the driver who lent the vehicle – is it their insurance that covers it? I would hate to think that somebody would get away simply by saying, "You gave consent to me," and they say, "No, I didn't." It's to avoid that argument. So I'm going to sit down and if the hon. member could address that.

The Deputy Chair: You have to move the amendment for us to even consider it.

Mr. Chase: Sorry. The amendment is on the second portion. That was a question. But I will move the amendment so that we can get it there and it can be part of the ongoing discussion.

I move that Bill 39, Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2005, be amended in section 15(b) in the proposed section 54(4)(a) by striking out "$2500" and substituting "$5000."

Now, should I then speak to the amendment, as to the reasoning behind it?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we are at committee stage. You can rise as many times as you want to speak. It's your choice.

Mr. Chase: Okay. Would you like to address my two questions, and then I'll deal with the amendment?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Chairman. I understand what the amendment is talking about, and I have had conversation with the Member for Calgary-Varsity about this. I find myself in a bit of a strange position as a Conservative wanting to not raise a fine, because I frankly feel that the fines are related to all the other fines within the Traffic Safety Act. When we set these fine amounts, they're set in conjunction with other parallel, if you like, offences that are of a similar nature or similar gravity.

To increase this from $2,500 to $5,000 is not a big step, but on the other hand I'm not sure where you'd go with the second offence. Right now the way the bill actually reads is that for a first offence the fine would be between $2,500 and $10,000. That's a minimum to a maximum. The second offence would be $5,000 to $20,000. So, again, we'd have to not only move the one; we'd have to move the second part of that.

It's my belief, with the increase in the timetable, that is allowed now to be multiple offences being moved to three years; in other words, if you have two offences within three years as opposed to two offences within a longer period of time, an undisclosed period of time, it would just confuse the issue. So I guess where I am on this one is I would suggest that we not in fact raise this because it's already very steep.

The thought occurs to me that most people who drive without insurance – and that's estimated between 5 and 10 per cent of all drivers on the road. The reason that they're driving without insurance is very straightforward. They can't afford it. Because of that, when you start looking at these fines and the gravity and the amounts of fines, up to $20,000 depending on the discretion of the judge, it is indeed a very, very serious fine.

I appreciate what the hon. member is trying to do here. As I say, it's a little incongruous when a Liberal is trying to raise a penalty on a fine as opposed to a Conservative trying to keep it down, but I simply feel, looking at all the other fines that are similar in nature to this, that it's going a bit too far because, again, we're dealing with people who can't afford insurance; ergo, they can't afford a fine, and we're going to throw a lot of people in jail over this.

As far as the implied consent, now, I'm not sure where you were in the bill on the implied consent. Was that in event of a prostitution-related offence or otherwise? I'll take my place and let him clarify that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Just with regard to the amendment the point of the amendment was to send a very clear message. While I do have concerns about poverty and homelessness and so on, and in the case of a John and their family carless, I feel that there has to be an important message sent. By raising the fine from $2,500 to $5,000, we discourage people from playing that game where they think, poverty or otherwise, it's worth the risk.

For young people who are just beginning to drive and all the other requirements, they might be tempted to gamble and say: "Well, it's worth my while, knowing that the fine starts at $2,500. I'm poor. I'm young. I'll throw myself on the mercy of the court," whereas I believe that if you put it at $5,000, it's cheaper for a person to seek out that insurance than to potentially play the road roulette game.

With regard to – what was I talking about? – implied consent, it was about lending your vehicle. Not the John circumstance, but you lend your vehicle to somebody. They drive down the highway. They get into trouble. Where's the liability? Who's responsible?

Mr. Magnus: The second part first. If you lend your vehicle to somebody, and they drive down the highway and get into an accident, then the insurance that was on that vehicle still applies.

As far as the amount of the offences, I will add that we're now going from 30 days to 45 days for a first offence and on a second offence from 60 days to six months. That's pretty severe for what is a noncriminal offence.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I appreciate the explanation.

I gather, Mr. Chairman, that the next step in this stage is to vote on the amendment, and if we're prepared to do that, I am prepared as well.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

[The clauses of Bill 39 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 26

Corporate Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. During second reading several questions were asked. The comment was made that the penalties for not complying with the requirement to file a notice of objection seem particularly harsh. Some form of penalty was needed to encourage compliance with this new requirement. The interest penalty for failure to file a notice of objection is 5 per cent of the interest otherwise payable. The interest penalty is capped at $10,000, but for that amount to apply, the interest otherwise owing by Alberta would have to be at least $200,000. In some cases we have paid interest in excess of a million dollars, in which case the $10,000 penalty would represent only 1 per cent of the interest amount. As was noted earlier, the penalty will not apply if the corporation takes the simple step of filing the notice of objection with Alberta.

There was also a question as to what exactly constitutes an arm's-length corporation versus a non arm's-length corporation. The determination of an arm's-length relationship is a question of fact and is governed by provisions of the federal Income Tax Act, which Alberta parallels. The provision in Alberta's act already parallels the corresponding federal provision.

Regarding the question of what is fair market value and how that is determined, assessments of fair market value are based on comparable assets recently transferred on open markets. If a piece of property is transferred, for example, other comparable property transactions would be used to help determine if the transfer was indeed at fair market value.

Questions were also raised, Mr. Chairman, by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview about item 5 – and I see he's not here tonight – with respect to this amendment.

Ms Blakeman: Point of order.

The Deputy Chair: Is somebody rising on a point of order?

Ms Blakeman: Yes. I did rise on a point of order.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

10:50

Point of Order

Referring to the Absence of Members

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's the tradition of the House that we do not mention whether someone is present or absent in the Chamber.

The Deputy Chair: There was no citation, but you are correct. By convention we do not mention a person's presence or absence.

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: My apologies for my ignorance, Mr. Chairman, and I do apologize to the House and for any mention that was inappropriate.

Debate Continued

Mr. Rogers: With respect to the amendment, we require corporations to inform us when they are reassessed by another jurisdiction if this reassessment means a change to taxable income or taxes payable in Alberta. However, when it is the Canada Revenue Agency that does the reassessment, that agency also sends us a notice of the change. Many companies are aware of this and do not send the information on their reassessment that they are technically required to send in. With this amendment there would be no penalty for not sending in this information when we get the notice from Canada Revenue and reassess within our one-year window of opportunity for making such a reassessment.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that this addresses the questions that hon. members have raised up to this point, and I would encourage all hon. members to support the bill.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to thank the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for answering the questions that I raised during second reading. I believe that he managed to capture them all, and I do appreciate that very much.

The one thing that he referred to is the income tax refunds. I had asked the Finance minister during the budget debate on Finance about the fact that last year we spent about $30 million in interest on income tax refunds, and this year it's going to be $20 million, or at least that's what's forecast in the budget. Mr. Chairman, I'm pleased to say that I did receive a written response back from the Finance minister in regard to that particular question. The Finance minister has always been very prompt in getting back with written responses as she promises to, and I appreciate that.

Her response left me a little puzzled because it talked about the fact that these refunds are unpredictable and that in the past number of years they have totalled as much as $80 million. It really does cause me to question whether or not we're missing the boat here in some way, that we're allowing ourselves to be in a situation where these refunds on income tax prepayments end up being so terribly high. I know that there are an awful lot of companies in Alberta, and I know that when you spread it out across the companies – in the letter from the minister she refers to the fact that often it's very large corporations involved in the oil and gas industry, and the hon. member a few minutes ago mentioned the fact that in some cases these refunds are very big. I can appreciate that, but it just really causes me to question whether or not there isn't a better way.

I guess the other thing that it does cause me to question as well is: if we're holding, you know, many millions, sometimes up to $80 million according to the Finance minister – if we're holding that much money that doesn't actually belong to us and has to be refunded at some point, then I am curious as to how that income from that money gets reported and where that goes to. Obviously, we're making income on the money that we're holding while it's in our hands, and we're paying out some interest on that money, you know, when it becomes apparent that the money was overpaid or owed back to the corporation or the taxpayer in some form. So, certainly, I would be interested to hear some response to that, and I'm not sure that I can get it tonight but perhaps when we get to third reading. I'm just curious, as I say, to know where that goes.

As I said in my opening remarks, I do appreciate the efforts on behalf of the hon. member to address the concerns that I raised in second reading. I had indicated back then that I would be supporting this bill. Our stakeholder group was certainly quite in favour of it, and I think I had applauded the ministry back in second reading for the fact that they had done their due diligence in terms of consulting with stakeholders as well.

So with that, Mr. Chairman, I will recommend to my caucus colleagues that we support this bill. I appreciate again the efforts of both the ministry and the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon to provide that information tonight. Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 26 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 35

Employment Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2005

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? Hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, did you want to rise?

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just stand to make a couple of brief remarks with respect to Bill 35. I understand that the Clerk has a set of amendments. There are two amendments that I would like to move with respect to Bill 35, and these changes address two quite minor drafting errors. I'll just wait a moment until the amendments are circulated.

The Deputy Chair: The amendment that is being circulated before you shall be referred to as amendment A1.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, you may proceed.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As I was mentioning, these changes address two drafting errors. The first of them is an unintentional duplication of two definitions. The definitions were moved from part 4 of the act to part 1, which contains most of the act's definitions. But inadvertently they were not deleted from part 4, and therefore they appear in both parts. So there's a mere duplication.

The second amendment contains a reference error in the proposed section 77.1. It simply refers to the incorrect subsection.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. My only comment would be that I appreciate the fact that the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill actually brought these amendments to my attention last week sometime. So we have had plenty of opportunity to verify that, in fact, the amendments do as he has suggested tonight, and I have no problem with the amendments going forward.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Any further debate on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Chairman, I have a few brief remarks with respect to Bill 35. As I stated during the introduction of the legislation, this bill and the amendments contained therein will allow the private-sector pension plan members better access to information and more transparency of the plan's financial status. The legislation also gives the superintendent of pensions more effective ways of ensuring that the pension plans are properly funded. The legislation will provide the superintendent of pensions with more effective ways of monitoring the funding of the private pension plans and strengthen the enforcement powers if problems do arise.

As I said, it focuses on giving plan members better information so that they can see for themselves that the plan is being run properly. It will therefore put them in a better position to monitor their pensions long before any problems may arise. So, Mr. Chairman, these amendments update the act to reflect the changes that are in the pension community.

I would like to address several questions that were raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford in the April 25 evening sitting. He had questioned why some of the legislation appeared to be moving to regulations. As a matter of fact, I can verify that there were no provisions that are in the current act that are being moved to regulation. In fact, there are certain items, namely some definitions, which are actually being moved from the regulations into the act itself. There are, of course, some details that are to be found in regulation, and this is being done in order to allow better flexibility and also to allow for amendments more frequently than could be expected to be handled in terms of amendments to the act itself. I can assure the hon. member, however, that when the regulations are drafted, the stakeholders are going to be consulted.

The hon. member had also questioned how the superintendent would enforce the requirements that documents would comply with the legislation. The superintendent does require that documents that establish the plan and its arrangements – for example, with the fundholder – are filed with the office of the superintendent. The office of the superintendent reviews these documents and can issue directions for compliance or can obtain a court order if the administrator refuses to amend the documents to comply with the provisions of the act, and it is an offence to contravene the act.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford also had asked why it was important to have the documents comply with the act, what sort of documentation it was, how would it not comply with the act, and who might have access to particular documents. Besides the documents that are set out in the terms of the pension plan, there are a number of documents, such as the trust agreement, that assign the responsibility of administration of the plan to a trustee or some company or person or an insurance contract in some cases. In a multi-employer plan there may be a participation agreement that sets out employers' rights and responsibilities, and these documents can deal with the issues for which the Employment Pension Plans Act has standards. They should all be written so as not to cause conflicts.

Of course, there is a statutory provision in the act which would override any term of a trust agreement or any other contract, but the plan administrators and the fundholders and the employers usually use their own plan documents to guide their administrative practices. An example of an illegal provision of a document would be if a trust agreement purported to limit the fundholder's responsibilities and expressly excluded or assigned to someone else the requirement for the fundholder to inform the superintendent if the contributions were not being remitted as required due to the new provisions under section 50. Those documents are filed with the superintendent's office.

The fourth question that the hon. member had asked was: what assurance is there that the employees will be given access to documents, and what remedies might be available to employees? Most administrators do comply with the legislation without any requirement for enforcement, but the superintendent can issue directions for compliance or, alternatively, in an extreme case could apply for a court order. They can also charge a person with an offence under the act if they don't comply with the disclosure provisions, and the superintendent's office produces materials to educate plan administrators about their responsibilities in that regard.

Another question that was asked: with the requirement that employers have access to pension documents held by a plan administrator, what protection is there against personal information being disclosed? I can answer that the only documents listed in section 15(8.1) are accessible to the employers, and those documents do not include any personal information about plan members.

The hon. member had asked: if there are additional tests, such as stress tests, which were prescribed by the superintendent, would those be applied to all pension plans, and who would decide? The clause is an enabling feature in nature, and the actuarial community has suggested stress tests recently as appropriate measures of pension plan stability. But they're only one example of a type of test that could be done.

Finally, the hon. member had asked how privacy is protected when the superintendent investigates a plan and interviews personnel. If the issue is personal information, the superintendent's office would be subject to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

I hope that responds to some of the questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much again, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill for managing to make his voice heard over some of the heckling from his own members, quite frankly, that was taking place from across the floor. I have to say on the record that I'm quite frankly appalled that in a Legislature where debate is not only expected but, in fact, mandated some members opposite just seem to be in so much of a hurry to get out of here this evening that they won't even allow their own members to speak. In fact, the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill was answering questions that were reasonably asked in debate during second reading, and it was very kind of him to come forward in committee with those questions in an effort to limit the amount of debate that might have to take place tonight.

Mr. Chairman, if the hon. members across the way would like to extend debate tonight, I've been fond of saying since this session began that I'm quite willing to stand here and debate Bill 35 tonight for as long as it takes. If it means bringing in my pyjamas and a pillow and calling some of my hon. colleagues to come back, I'm more than willing to do that. So I would ask for some consideration from the members opposite while both their member responds to my questions and I bring forward my one remaining question on this bill. If we can have that co-operation, perhaps we can all go home a little earlier tonight.

Mr. Chairman, there must not have been an awful lot of heckling on the evening of April 25 because I managed to lose my train of thought when I was asking questions during second reading. Given the fact that we've had approximately three weeks in the interim, I have managed to regain my train of thought, and I'm finding myself with one more question that I would like to ask during the committee stage of this bill.

In section 33 . . .

Mr. Bonko: It's getting late.

Mr. R. Miller: It is getting late, and I might have to get that whip out yet, which was the other thing that we were talking about on the night of April 25, and that's kind of what set me off. Somebody did talk about focusing that night too.

Mr. Chairman, section 33 talks about: if a pension fund is not receiving the appropriate amount of funding, then the trustee must inform the superintendent. As I had mentioned that evening during second reading, in many cases the reason for a fund not receiving appropriate funding might well be justified. Perhaps there's been a layoff of employees, so there's less money going into the pension plan.

The question that I would have is that while the law is supposed to make the pension more transparent for employees, as near as I understand when I read the bill, the superintendent would not have to notify employees that the pension fund is not being contributed to by the employer. I would look for some clarification on that because if, in fact, that were the case, that would cause me great concern. If the bill does say that the superintendent does have to notify the employee, then I'm comfortable with it.

Really, that was the one question, Mr. Chairman, that I did not have a chance to ask during second reading and I would like addressed now. Beyond that, I'm comfortable to take my seat.

Thank you.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Chairman, section 33 amends section 50 in the act. It might in fact be argued by some that we're putting too much of a burden on fundholders to be whistle-blowers if the employers don't pay their contributions. The fact is that the superintendent really has no other way of finding out if the employer is being delinquent in making the proper contributions to the fund. Fundholders are already used to performing that particular function of monitoring. I note that in Ontario, which has a greater number of pension funds than we have registered here in Alberta, they already require those types of monitoring functions to be carried out by the fundholders.

11:10

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I haven't had the opportunity to speak to this bill before. It is a very dense and complicated bill about something that is tremendously meaningful to a lot of people; that is, their pension plan. I have to say that our feedback from interested stakeholder groups has overall been quite positive for what is anticipated in the bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill has really made an effort to answer the questions that my colleague had put on the record. I was going to sort of go through clause by clause and outline what was happening in the bill, but I'm satisfied enough that the objectives are being met, and I believe that it is to enhance what is happening in private-sector pension plans.

We have a ways to go in public-sector pension plans, but I think this has been a good effort to try and do a lot of tidying up and alignment and updating. From what I've seen, I'm particularly happy with the stronger monitoring and the stronger enforcement provisions that are provided here because, again, ultimately, that's what the public expects of us. We are the only ones that are in a position to be able to protect them and to make sure that there are regulations in place, that their best interests are being put forward and that everything possible to protect them is in fact available to them.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The only section that does not sit quite right with me is the one that's allowing a spouse to claim the pension if someone dies with pension left over, section 26. The act provides a waiver if the dead person wants the money to go to a child from a previous marriage. The spouse must seek independent advice to demonstrate they understand what they're doing. I know that the previous member representing Calgary-Lougheed had brought in an amendment – I think it was the Member for Calgary-Lougheed – very similar to this, and I'm always uneasy when we allow this sort of thing to happen.

I mean, we spent a lot of time trying to make sure that these provisions were in there to protect spouses, usually women and usually women that hadn't worked for an entire career outside of the home, so they had less pension contributions. That's why we contemplated and worked into law that they would be and are in fact entitled to a share of the working spouse's pension. I'm always uneasy when I see that being dismantled or an out clause being given.

I know that there's been an attempt here to try and make sure that no coercion has taken place, but this is a section that I want to put on record we need to be particularly vigilant about. It's an area that took us a long time to recognize and to get in place, and I'm very uneasy when I see an easing of the requirements being allowed to take place.

As I said, we have consulted with our stakeholders, and they are for the most part supportive of what is in the bill. At this point under the guidance of the critic for the Official Opposition, I am willing to support this bill in Committee of the Whole.

Thank you.

Dr. Brown: I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre for her comments. The pension, obviously, is a huge asset. It's often the largest asset that a family has, and giving up the survivor's pension would certainly have serious consequences. That's why it's absolutely necessary to make sure that there's some sort of independent legal advice given there before waiving that pension right, recognizing that there is a small price to pay for that service and that it does add a little bit to the complexity. It certainly protects people, especially women, given the fact that they more often than not would outlive their spouses.

I thank you for your comments.

[The clauses of Bill 35 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Acting Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Chair: Opposed? It's carried.

Bill 40
Alberta Personal Income Tax
Amendment Act, 2005 (No. 2)

The Acting Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was just wondering if the minister might like to comment on the question that I raised in second reading regarding the lowering of the threshold to $2,760 and what the rationale might have been for having any entry threshold at all once it becomes that low.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, I'm assuming, then, from the hon. member's comments that he doesn't disagree with lowering the threshold. I think it was a good move. Should we have a threshold at all? Worthy of thought. We'll certainly look at that. We have considered it important to have some threshold because it really is an employment benefit. It's to assist people that seek employment, encourage them to seek employment, and I would think that would be a helpful thing.

It was done to add more working families. I think, if I remember correctly, it has the ability to increase the numbers by some 15,000, and when we look at this in the future, because I wholeheartedly support the intent of this – I think it's worked well. It's been a great benefit to our low- and middle-income working families, and if we have another look at it, we would look at it. But I think we would always keep some threshold because it is an employment tax credit. As I said, it's to encourage employment to be meaningful to people who can gain employment albeit maybe at a lower level. [A beeper sounded]

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: That little buzzer didn't mean that you had to sit down, hon. minister. Nevertheless, you sat down.

Mr. Chairman, thank you. One other comment, I guess, I would like to make. I agree with the hon. minister. I am pretty much in wholehearted agreement with the intention of this act and what it does. The one comment I would like to make. The government press release or in the act – I can't remember which – trumpets the fact that Alberta families do not have to apply for the credit; rather, it's done automatically through their federal tax returns.

I would like to point out that we just debated Bill 26, where we mandated that Alberta companies have to take an act in terms of notifying the Alberta government of something instead of that information coming back from the federal government. Here, in this case, we're relying on the federal government to get us information back. I like it this way. I said that when we debated Bill 26.

I would just encourage us in the future to co-operate however we can with the federal government to take the onus off, in this case, Alberta families but also small Alberta businesses rather than us, being the Alberta taxpayer, having to do that work, to rely on the federal government and some of the hard-earned tax dollars that we give them, to get them to do some of the work and get that information back to us.

I'm appreciative of the fact that we're not asking families to do it in this case, and I certainly would hope that in future instances we don't ask Alberta businesses to have that responsibility either.

Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 40 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Acting Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

I recognize the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Given the excellent work that's been accomplished this evening and today and given the record-breaking motion moved by yourself earlier as we approved the estimates of the Department of Health and Wellness this evening, the largest motion ever moved for supply I think in the history of this House, I would move that we rise and report bills 39, 26, 35, and 40.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 39, Bill 26, Bill 40. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 35. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the hour I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 11:24 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, May 12, 2005

1:30 p.m.

Date: 05/05/12

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. From our forests and parklands to our prairies and mountains comes the call of our land. From our farmsteads, towns, and cities comes the call of our people that as legislators of this province we act with responsibility and sensitivity. Grant us the wisdom to meet such challenges. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not certain if my group are in the Legislature at this point, but I will introduce them. I have a very large grade 6 class attending the Legislature today from Greentree school. Greentree school is in Drumheller, the home of the world-famous Royal Tyrrell Museum. There are a number of parents, helpers, and teachers accompanying these students, too many to individually name. I would say that I've had a visit with the students, very brief because they had a little bus trouble getting here, and had a chance to tour them very quickly through my office. I've made a commitment that when their photographs arrive, I will come to Greentree school and spend a couple of hours with them in their class and talk about local government. If the students and parents, helpers, and teachers from Greentree school are in the gallery, I'd ask that they now rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: I think, hon. minister, that they haven't quite arrived yet. They're out there because I passed them in the hall. We'll do it again later.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the pleasures that members of this Assembly have is introducing school groups. Unfortunately, when you live as far away from the Legislature as the Deputy Premier and I, that's a rare occasion. So I'm doubly pleased, actually triply pleased to introduce today three classes of grade 6 students from Crestwood school in Medicine Hat. Members may or may not recollect that I have this opportunity to introduce this school each and every year. Every year since I've been elected, this school has brought their grade 6 students up. I think they probably hold the record for the most consecutive visits by a school to the Legislature. The tour guides today were telling me that they know they've been here at least 16 times because that's how long one of the tour guides has had the opportunity to provide the tour.

I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the grade 6 students from Crestwood school in Medicine Hat. They are accompanied by principal David George; vice-principal Al Tisnic; teachers Karen Irwin, Maria Thompson, Wade Lawson, Gary Ziel, and Kathy Western; also parents/helpers Tracy Klein, Janice Bonogofski, Cheryl Noble, Tracy Lawson, and Evelyn Walter. I would ask that they rise – they're in both galleries, I understand – and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a group of human resource interns who recently began their term with the government of Alberta. They will be working in Justice, Health, Sustainable Resource Development, Restructuring and Government Efficiency, and the personnel administration of my department. They are seated in the members' gallery. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Mar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my great privilege and honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly five young Albertans who are recipients of the Queen's Golden Jubilee Citizenship Medals. These medals and the scholarships that come with them recognize the recipients' outstanding contributions to their communities. They are Mallory Becker of Spruce Grove, Maria Chen of Edmonton, Bethan Jeffreys of Sangudo, Rae Varughese of Edmonton, Charles Voon of Edmonton. Each of these young Albertans exemplifies qualities that are synonymous with Alberta's strong heritage. I also recognize the parents and family members and friends who have been an inspiration and support for each of these recipients and who are with us today. I'd like to invite these young leaders of tomorrow and their parents to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you today and to members of the Assembly four wise women. They are here representing WISEST, women in scholarship, engineering, science, and technology, which is an organization that encourages young women to consider careers in science and technology through workshops, conferences, support groups, and research programs. One of their key activities is a six-week summer program for grade 11 students, providing them an opportunity to work with a research group at the U of A. They have an enviable success rate as 85 per cent of their alumni go on to pursue studies in the faculties of science and engineering.

With us today is Dr. Margaret-Ann Armour, the WISEST vice-chair and assistant chair of the Department of Chemistry at the University of Alberta; Grace Ennis, who is a WISEST co-ordinator; and two summer research program alumni, Cleo Espiritu from the summer of 1999 – and Cleo is currently pursuing a master's of computing science at the University of Alberta – and Eva Cheung, who is from the summer of 1998. Eva graduated last year with a degree in civil engineering, currently working as a transport engineer for the city of Edmonton while pursuing a master's in construction engineering and management.

These women are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a gentleman by the name of Adrian Bohach. Adrian is the CEO of the Ability Society of Alberta. They have offices in Calgary and Edmonton and soon to be in Red Deer.

The Ability Society provides province-wide services for children, adults, and seniors with special needs in the area of assistive technology for employment, education, and quality of life. I invite Adrian to please stand – he's in the members' gallery – and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's also my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly the chair for the Grande Prairie Catholic school board. My constituency is a very large area, but this person also is responsible for a very large area, including Peace-Wapiti, Grande Prairie-Smoky, and my area, Dunvegan-Central Peace. It's my pleasure to have her rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. It's Morag Mochan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had the very good fortune to attend the Premier's prayer breakfast this morning. The wonderful and uplifting event was made even more memorable by the presence of the two lovely ladies I was fortunate to be seated with. They have joined us this afternoon to observe the proceedings in the House and are seated in the public gallery. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature Mayor Judy Dahl from the town of Olds and Lorna Gresham from Innisfail. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House the parents of one of our pages. I'm speaking of our page Leslie Day, who is seated to your right. She has been with us for two years, and, unfortunately for us, she will be leaving after this session. She will in the fall enter the University of British Columbia, where she will major in physical education and minor in business. We congratulate her on her new venture and wish her all the best. Today her parents are here in the House. They are seated in the Speaker's gallery. I'd like to introduce her parents, Joan Copps and Sean Day, and I invite them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a school introduction of my own, as it were, this afternoon. It is my pleasure, in fact my very extreme pleasure, to be able to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House today some very, very good family friends, Jeff and Patty Marler and their four children, Justin, Bailey, Brianna, and Qiu. Qiu is the latest addition. She's almost three years old, and she joined the family two years ago from China. The Marlers are home-schooled. They're here today to educate the children about the good works of this Assembly, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the warmest, traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly two women from Lethbridge, Dorothy McKenna and Lisa Lambert. Dorothy is the long-serving heart and soul of Womanspace, a place for women to meet and work for social justice. Lisa, who is studying for her master's, has taken that concept to the Internet and has founded an unbelievably fast-growing and successful Internet site newsletter. This newsletter has now gone national. The name has been borrowed from the Premier. It's called Martha's Monthly. Lisa researches timely issues that affect women's and children's lives, shares that information, and encourages letter-writing campaigns to the politicians who make the decisions that do affect their lives. I would ask them now to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Georgina Szoke. Georgina is a cow-calf producer in Little Smoky. She is concerned with the government's position on BSE and other agricultural issues. She is here today to watch the proceedings of the Legislature, and I'd now ask that Georgina rise and receive the very traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. East/west relations play a very strong role in our national unity. East/west relations also play a strong role in our family clan unity. Today to you and through you I would like to introduce our cousin Thai Pham and her husband, Hai Huynh. Montrealers for a long time, this is the first time that they have ever visited the western part of Canada. I would like them to stand up and receive the warm welcome from the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a constituent of mine David Kolbuc. David is currently a guidance counsellor at Hilltop high school in Whitecourt and has been an educator and an active member of our community for almost 30 years. David and his wife, Sandra, raised four children in Whitecourt, and he is joined today in the members' gallery by his daughter Zoë. Zoë is another one of those bright Whitecourt-Ste. Anne homegrown residents that have such a positive impact on this province. She is presently serving as the executive assistant to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. I would ask them to please rise and accept the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to other members of the Assembly Charan Khehra, director of special projects for the NDP opposition caucus. Charan received his education in India, England, and Scotland. He joined the NDP caucus in 1997 as a research and outreach associate and then served as leader Dr. Raj Pannu's executive assistant. He is retiring after eight years of outstanding service to our caucus. Charan is seated in the public gallery, and I now would ask him to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great honour and privilege to introduce to you and through you to the Legislative Assembly a constituent of mine from the Strathmore-Brooks constituency. It's nice to see him here. The last time I saw him he was in full kilt regalia. I don't believe he is wearing that today, but I would ask Martin Shields to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Applewood Park Community Association

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in response to a question I raised regarding the prohibited transfer of Wild Rose grant funds from the Applewood Park Community Association, the Minister of Community Development stated, "We don't know what has been done until after we've had an audit of the procedures." But this transfer of funds has slipped through the audit procedures of the Wild Rose Foundation, the Department of Community Development, and the Auditor General's office itself not once but two years in a row. My questions are to the Minister of Community Development. Can the minister explain why his department's accountability functions failed to catch this transfer of funds?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, if the Leader of the Opposition has any evidence to suggest that what I am about to say is incorrect, then he should table it and provide it. What we have found in the documentation that we have reviewed is that the Vietnamese Cao Daist Cultural Society in fact raised $20,000 and gave it to Applewood. Applewood was then a properly constated entity that was eligible for funds from the Wild Rose Foundation's international development fund. We have evidence of the bank transfers, that the money was then transferred from Applewood to the entities that were working in Vietnam to do these development projects.*

So, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has got the evidence all backwards. Applewood did not transfer the money to an unregistered corporation or society. The unregistered corporation or society in fact raised money, gave it to Applewood, which then was sent to Vietnam. If the Leader of the Opposition, as an example, wished to raise money for a good project in Vietnam, he would not have to be an incorporated society registered in this province. He could go out and raise the money and then transfer the money to an entity that was eligible for Wild Rose funding, and then that money could be sent to the place that he wished for those development projects to take place.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not so simple. The money was transferred back to the struck organization.

Again to the same minister: has this minister confirmed that the Canadian International Development Agency was actually involved in this project as he indicated yesterday?

Mr. Mar: In the past, Mr. Speaker, we have used CIDA as a third-party entity to in fact confirm that work which was to be done in another jurisdiction has in fact been done. In this particular case that has not yet been done. We do however have, in the submission of documents by Applewood, a complete accounting for how all the money has been spent. We believe that it was done in complete order.

Again I challenge the Leader of the Opposition: if he has evidence to the contrary, then he should table it rather than leave insinuations in the minds of those who may be listening.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister then request the Canadian International Development Agency to go ahead and confirm how this money was spent?

1:50

Mr. Mar: I would be pleased to do that, Mr. Speaker. But again I remind the hon. member that if he has evidence to the contrary, he should be tabling it.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Long-term Care Facility Standards

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The issue of appropriate use of medication for seniors is one that I brought to the attention of this House as recently as March. The Auditor General revealed that most facilities inspected did not meet the basic standards for medication administration, indicating specifically that there is inconsistent documentation surrounding the use of chemical restraints, and a gross lack of staffing may be the cause. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: I would like to know specifically what systems the government would put in place to guarantee complete documentation of the use of chemical or physical restraints.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've indicated before in the Assembly, the area of the Auditor General's report that refers to my ministry of seniors is through accommodation, which would include laundry, meals, utilities, et cetera. One of the areas, though, is not the issuance of medication, so I would refer that to the Minister of Health and Wellness.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Then my questions will be to the minister of health. Perhaps it's a good argument for getting this stuff together.

Given that medications are used as a chemical restraint, will the minister immediately increase the number of staff in long-term care facilities?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Ministry of Seniors and Community Supports and the Ministry of Health and Wellness are working together and are quite clear on what they should do. Moreover, the report itself does delineate the responses and how we partner in some areas. In terms of actual care given to residents in the facilities – nursing care, the human service, the medication delivery – that is the responsibility of Health.

One of things that we have done is review our continuing care standards. Those standards in draft form will be released to Albertans through the members that I announced, Calgary-Lougheed and Lacombe-Ponoka. We will be moving through the province to the regional authorities, speaking to the providers of service. It will address everything from how medication is stored, how medication is administered. Over and above that, if we need more efforts relative to the clinical management of psychotropics, that will come under a different form and standard.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. When that report is released in September or thereabouts, would the minister adjust staffing to achieve a proper ratio?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we will be looking at staffing among the many other issues. Although the regulation today says 1.9 hours per person within long-term care, we had moved from last year's 3.1 to 3.4 hours on average for every resident in a long-term care facility. I recognize that the hon. member has been asking about increasing over and above that average. We have to get a clearer picture on what some of the issues are, and we will be not only talking and listening to Albertans on this subject; we will be listening to all of the MLAs in this Assembly to hear what their particular issues and comments might be. It's gratifying to know that many of the responses we've received from the community have been positive about the level of care in their place. So we need to do more work to find out what it is.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Often standards in care facilities are not treated as minimums but as ceilings. For example, in some cases, like baths, residents are limited to having one bath per week. Long-term care facilities working their staff at maximum capacity are only able to provide baths based on facility resources rather than resident dignity and need. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will the minister immediately establish a standard for personal hygiene of a minimum of two baths per week provided to residents?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker. I really appreciate the hon. member's question because it gives me a chance to respond this way: if somebody is incontinent, a standard of two baths per week would not be sufficient. The absolute must be that the patient's care plan must be deliberately structured to make sure that they have adequate and appropriate care to their needs. Particularly where they are incapacitated, there well may be a standard that would say that we would improve or increase from one to two baths a week, but there may be even more necessity to increase beyond that. I think it has to be a care plan focused on the patient and then delivered in a manner which is in their best interest.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that advocates tell us that in some long-term facilities when a resident can't supply shampoo, they don't get their hair washed, will the minister include hygiene supplies as a basic standard of care?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think that the Auditor General's report has illuminated a number of things about the systems and administration of long-term care centres. Some of the issues that are being raised by the hon. member opposite relate exactly to quality of care, how care is actually delivered from a nursing capacity. I am not familiar with whether or not it is a standard in some facilities not to provide supplies and in others that supplies are provided. It is not clear in this report whether or not we're talking about private, nonprofit, public facilities, and there's no differentiation there. One of my obligations will be to do the evaluation about what is appropriate and determine clearly that if people are not being provided with resources that they need, they are provided with those resources to ensure their basic hygiene. I totally agree.

Ms Blakeman: To the same minister: why did the government choose to relinquish its responsibility to ensure that people in care have at least the dignity of personal hygiene? We need minimum standards that are reasonable for personal hygiene.

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me phrase it a different way. I'm not sure that I would ever want to place my mother in a long-term care that had just a minimum standard. I want a standard of care that is particular to the needs that that person has, and every standard shall be modelled on that basis.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Beef Marketing

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last year the Auditor General found that while Alberta cattle producers faced financial disaster, the profit margins of American packing companies had nearly quadrupled. Unfortunately, history seems to be repeating itself. Since early March when a Montana judge ruled that the border had to stay closed, packer margins have jumped to levels in some cases even higher than those found by the Auditor General in his report. My questions are to the minister of agriculture: what actions will the minister take to address the excessive profiteering of the two big American packing companies?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe that a report was recently released by the federal investigators into whether or not unreasonable profits have been taken, and the findings were quite clear that that was not the case.

Certainly, the packing industry and the feeding industry and the primary production industry are an integrated industry in our province. Today they are working together to work our way through this situation until that border opens. We're of course waiting on the court case and working with the Alberta Beef Producers and the Canadian Cattlemen's Association on the amicus briefs that are being prepared for those court cases as we speak. We are also working very, very closely with the industry on the set-aside program, and that includes the processing industry, Mr. Speaker. Based on the regulated environment in which we live today, because of that set-aside program we are in fact controlling the market.

Mr. Mason: Producers are suffering, Mr. Speaker. When will the minister take action – take action – to protect Alberta producers from the dysfunctional market which is caused by the near monopoly of two large packing companies?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate that the hon. member is a little bit behind the times here. The set-aside program that we are operating right now is doing exactly what he's asking us to do. The industry had requested us to extend that set-aside program and to work together with the producers on alternate plans.

We are doing that. We'll continue to do that. We're asking for the other provinces to actually join in our particular part of the plan, and that's the national basis program. We've requested that from the other provinces. We're very hopeful that they will join with us because the packers, the processors, and the producers agree that this is how we've been able to stabilize the price above what anyone would have thought it would be.

Mr. Mason: Given the extremely low prices that cattle producers are receiving for their beef, can the minister explain why beef at the supermarket remains at traditionally high levels?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we seem to be going over questions that I recall being in this House some time ago with regard to how the carcass of an animal is distributed and distributed by way of what used to have value in a carcass and what no longer has value in that carcass. We have also, as I said, talked about the set-aside program. We've talked about stabilizing the prices. Today they're in the 80- to 82-cent range. Those price ranges are fairly stable at this point in time, and we're going to continue to work with the industry because they know what is good for their industry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Softwood Lumber Trade Dispute

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been numerous reports in the media about a meeting between Canada's International Trade minister and the new U.S. Trade Representative. One of the items discussed, apparently, was the U.S. administration's opposition to the Byrd amendment, which allows U.S. companies to profit from penalties levied on Canadian imports. My questions are for the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Can the minister confirm that this is the government of Alberta's understanding?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the U.S. administration continues to work opposing the Byrd amendment. Notwithstanding the fact that all evidence, even from the World Trade Organization, indicates that the Byrd amendment violates all international trade rules, the U.S. administration still has some difficulty convincing Congress to change its position.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Can the minister inform the House: has the federal government consulted with the government of Alberta on this issue?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the one federal minister that calls on a regular basis, Mr. Peterson, has contacted Alberta on a number of occasions, and we are working toward a pan-Canadian approach to this issue. We are working with the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development and the Alberta industry in trying to reach consensus on a position paper that was presented to the Americans about a week and a half to two weeks ago.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again thank you to the minister. To the same minister: can he inform this House as to Alberta's position on the Byrd amendment and the resolution of the softwood lumber dispute?

Mr. Stelmach: Alberta's position, Mr. Speaker, is simply that we oppose it. It violates trade rules, and it is grossly unfair that the money we deposited in terms of a tariff can then be spent by the industry on the other side of the border working in direct conflict and in opposition to the industry north of the border. One of the reasons we're also opposing it is that the industry has told us that if we don't get back any of the $4.3 billion that is rested with the American industry, then there's no basis for an agreement, and again we'll be back to the same position we were for the last 12, 14 years.

The Speaker: Now the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Allen Gray Continuing Care Centre

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have received an overwhelming amount of complaints regarding the care received at the Allen Gray long-term care facility. I personally witnessed the grief and tears from the residents and their families at a recent meeting, and these complaints are too numerous to state. The facility has even taken the extreme measure of banning the daughter of a resident since she had encouraged others to come forward with their complaints. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is this minister prepared to do to address the ongoing deficit of proper care received by the residents of this facility?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I'll state it again in this House. If our Members of the Legislative Assembly or any other Albertan for that matter have a complaint about the level of care in any publicly funded facility in this province, then I believe they have a duty to let our office know so that we can do a proper follow-up. I can assure the hon. member that if there is some concern that a follow-up or inspection that's been done in the past has not been adequate, then all they have to do is provide that for the ministry of health, either to the deputy's office or to the regional health authority, clearly to my office. I would be very pleased, in fact privileged, to follow up in full detail on the issues that are raised.

Mr. Agnihotri: In that the CEO of Capital health has indicated to me in a letter that a detailed review of the facility is under way, can the minister tell this House when we can expect the results of this review?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, it would appear that the hon. member has had some response to his question from the regional health authority. I have a great deal of confidence in the regional health authority and the CEO. I look forward to hearing the response. I don't know, obviously, as much about the background on this issue, but if there has been some investigation done, perhaps the hon. member would like to table the letter so that we can regard it as well and take a look at it. I can only assume that if a timeline wasn't suggested by the CEO, we could ask for that timeline and it would be provided.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Minister. In that the daughter of one of the residents has been banned from the facility for voicing her concerns, will the minister intervene to restore her access to her own father?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, at this point in this Legislative Assembly there are allegations being tabled about a family matter within one of our facilities. I will do the necessary inquiries to determine whether or not there is accuracy in the report that's being provided here in this very public Assembly.

I would also state this from my own experience in looking after people who are critically ill. Frequently the care plan that is provided for that resident might not make sense to other family members, but it is the duty of that person that signs that care plan along with the member that is housed in a long-term care facility to be fully prepared to meet the commitments of that care plan.

I would welcome the opportunity to do further follow-up or even speak to the member in private about these matters that seem to be of a personal family nature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Trade Mission to United States

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Economic Development. At the end of April the minister announced that he was going to Texas and Colorado. According to a news release the trip focus was on Alberta's oil industry: its capacity, its investment opportunities, and its abilities to develop new technologies for use in extreme environments. The cost of the minister's trip was about $5,900. What value did Alberta taxpayers get out of this expenditure?

Mr. Dunford: Well, Mr. Speaker, we know that travel is a cost of doing business. I might say to the members of the House that ministers travel I think primarily to achieve three objectives. The first one, of course, would be to gather information that can help us with the policy concerns that we have as a government here in Alberta, certainly to raise awareness of the world-class goods and services that Albertans can provide to the world, and also, of course, then to attract investment to create jobs.

Now, the focus of the trip to Texas, of course, was the Houston Offshore Technology Conference, about 50,000 delegates, if I remember that correctly. While I was there, a news conference. The Premier of Newfoundland, the Minister of Energy from Nova Scotia, and myself talked about the tremendous opportunities that were available to us. I was also able to speak to investors at a lunch.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. To the same minister: when you're meeting with American investors, what do you tell them about our province?

The Speaker: We have approximately 45 seconds.

Mr. Dunford: Okay. Great place to live. Great place to work. Great place to do business. Great place to visit. We've got the technology. We've got the product. We've got the people. A debt-free province gives us a whole new reason for investing in this province. People can be assured of low tax levels. So there we have it: security of supply, security of energy, security of the people. What a great place to represent.

Ms DeLong: I'm not done yet. Attracting investment will create opportunities for new companies. What about your responsibility for ensuring that Albertans and Alberta businesses are the main beneficiaries of the Alberta advantage?

Mr. Dunford: Well, there we have it. We get both ends of the tunnel on this situation. We're out there doing good things to bring investment to this province, and we're out there doing great things to take Alberta out to the rest of the world. There were components of the mission that dealt with Alberta suppliers. Why are you yawning? This is Alberta. This is the western tiger – the western tiger – and they are yawning. Mr. Speaker, a little more respect, please, for the business environment in Alberta.

Speaker's Ruling Clarification

The Speaker: Methinks the hon. minister would want to correct something. As it is the tradition for the hon. member, when acknowledged, to speak through the chair, the suggestion might be that it was the chair that was yawning and, secondly, that the chair would have no respect. So let's clarify that. Okay?

Mr. Dunford: I'll be glad to clarify for all of the TV listeners and radio listeners, if that still happens, that it was not the Speaker of this House that was yawning. The Speaker of this House is a previous Minister of Economic Development. He knows the importance of Alberta.

The Speaker: So I take it now that it's my fault.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Children's Services Special Case Review

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Liberals have the highest regard for social workers who deal with very tough situations trying to aid Alberta's children. What makes their work even more difficult are huge caseloads, blocking opportunity to build relationships with the families they are serving. This problem was illustrated by the Nina Courtepatte case, where there have been suggestions that the case would have been better handled if just one worker was in charge of the whole case. To the Minister of Children's Services: is there any plan in place to improve the continuity social workers have in their work to allow them to maintain the same file as long as possible?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, three days in a row and three days of very similar questions. Again I'm not going to comment specifically on the tragic death of the 13-year-old that was murdered other than to say that our hearts go out to her family.

Mr. Speaker, the opposition member has indicated the hard work that the social workers do in this province. I think it's important that the Assembly understands the difficult cases that these social workers face on a daily basis. I can tell the opposition member that the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, that was brought forward in November of last year, was exciting to all of the social workers in this province and well received. We're excited about the act and what it's doing for the families and children in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given the inconsistent qualifications across the province, will the minister commit to creating one set of qualifications for family enhancement workers in all regions so that all families receive the same standard of help and all workers are qualified to do that job?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, the social workers in this province do an unbelievable job. I think, again, what is important for the opposition member to understand is that after we proclaimed the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, those social workers are doing what they should be doing, and that's providing compassionate care to all the families in this province, and they all do an unbelievable, fantastic job.

Mrs. Mather: Well, to the same minister: will the results and recommendations of the internal investigation into the Nina Courtepatte case be revealed to the public?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I can say yes to that. After all of the things that have gone through the criminal case, and if need be, if it goes to a fatality inquiry, we'd be pleased to provide our special case review recommendations on this particular file. Let's be honest here: what comes out of the special case will only make our department better and provide better care to all the families in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Calgary Catholic School Board Funding

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Parents and teachers in my constituency are getting nervous after hearing reports that the Calgary Catholic board is anticipating a budget shortfall of about $4 million. They fear that if a shortfall is imminent for the '05-06 school year, teachers or other employees may be let go. My questions are for the Minister of Education. Is it true that you are underfunding the Calgary Catholic school board?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I certainly hope not because all school boards have been given some significant increases not only this year but for the past couple of years. I think one of the key points here is that budget discussions that are going on right now are very much of a preliminary nature. Final budgets, as we all know here, come in to us around the last week of June. So any proposed numbers that are being talked about now or any proposed budget shortfalls are just that: they're speculative in nature. I would hope that money can be found from within the existing budget to cover any of those anticipated troubles.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you. To the same minister: how much of an increase was provided to the Calgary Catholic school board, and why does it appear to not be enough?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, funding for general and basic instruction went up by about 9.5 per cent overall, and that includes everything from the per-student grant rate to the health rates to our ESL rates to the severe special-needs rate and so on. That accounted for about $234 million new dollars.

Now, specific to Calgary Catholic, which I believe is the question, their grant rate would have gone up probably from about $260 million to about $270 million this year alone, and that's a pretty significant increase. Those deliberations will take that increase into account, I'm sure.

Mrs. Ady: My final supplementary to the same minister: what are you prepared to do to help the Calgary Catholic school board with their anticipated budget difficulties?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, if in fact the final budget that comes in at the end of June or thereabouts shows that there are some difficulties, obviously we would need to have my officials meet with their officials and find out where the miscalculations, perhaps, occurred or if there were some other anomalies such as a sudden jump in student population. I know that Calgary Catholic has experienced something like a jump in the rate of 5 to 10 per cent or whatever it was. I met with them in June, and I can't recall the exact number. If anomalies like that were to be there and were to be presented, then surely we would be able to take a look and see what could be done about them, and I would undertake to do that. But right now we're talking about a preliminary set of numbers, so let's wait and see what happens.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Technology Funding

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In today's competitive, fast-paced economy timing can be everything. It's vital that emerging technologies and companies get the support they need to flourish, particularly when they're part of strategically important industrial clusters like biomedicine and biotechnology. Timely support from this government is too often lacking. My questions are all to the Minister of Innovation and Science. Given that this area has been identified as an emerging industrial cluster for the city of Edmonton, when will this government commit its share of the necessary funding for the proposed wet lab so desperately needed by these emerging companies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, part of Innovation and Science is clearly focused on key strategic thrusts for innovation and science in the province of Alberta. We have picked the area of energy, life sciences, and ICT. The wet lab the hon. member is referring to fits in the category, I think, of the life sciences area and is one that we are currently considering.

2:20

Mr. Elsalhy: Given that the feasibility study was completed almost two years ago and the funding from the city and the federal government has been in place for months, can the hon. minister explain the delay in the approval process, please?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, there are many factors involved in a decision of this nature. Now, one is to develop partnerships and support from industry, to develop support and partnerships with municipalities, with the federal government as we're all interested in developing these kinds of vital industries in our province. As I've indicated, we are seriously looking at this matter right at the moment.

Mr. Elsalhy: Mr. Speaker, given that further delays could lead to the redirection or removal of funding previously committed by our federal and municipal partners, will this minister commit to releasing the necessary provincial funding share now?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, what I will commit to is the fact that we are taking a very serious look at this particular proposal and many others. It will get the consideration and the examination that it requires, and if it fits our strategic priorities and fits within the framework of getting the best development of innovation and technology in this province, we will follow through with the funding.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Sale of Social Housing Corporation Land

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The sale last fall by the Alberta Social Housing Corporation of two lots of land totalling 927 acres in the Timberlea area of Fort McMurray seems irregular, to say the least. Instead of a public tender, open-bid process that treats all developers equally, the two parcels were apparently sold in a private deal to a company called Timberlea Consortium Incorporated. A caveat referencing the agreement for sale was filed with land titles on December 15, 2004. I've alerted the minister of seniors that these questions were coming, so my question is to the minister of seniors. Is it true that the two parcels were sold through an agreement for sale without a public tender or open-bid process, and if so, why?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate that the member did let me know that this question would be in the House today because I want to clarify that under legislation through the Alberta Housing Act, section 18(b) states that we do have the authority to transfer land to the Alberta Social Housing Corporation and that that transfer of lands can be done in a number of ways. It's very clear in the legislation. That is through a nominal sum process or through direct sale or through tender. As the member did mention, this was through a direct sale. In the case that the member is referring to, my understanding is that that land was a direct sale, and the appraised value of the land was what was taken into consideration. It was through consultation with the municipality of Wood Buffalo as well as house builders in the area.

You know, Mr. Speaker, it seems that that has assisted in meeting the needs of Fort McMurray for housing as there is construction occurring on the land currently, and there will be more lots brought on in the fall.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, there could be a debate about the market value of this, but my question, then, to go at it in a different way: why would these properties have been sold by way of an agreement for sale rather than by requiring Timberlea Consortium Incorporated to arrange its own financing and pay the entire purchase price in cash for the two lots, as seems to be the case in all the other properties?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can't comment on the full sale and the way in which it occurred except to say that it was a direct sale; it was at the appraised value; it did meet the legislation requirements that are in the Alberta Housing Act. Also, it did ensure that the needs of Fort McMurray, through the municipality and as well through the Home Builders' Association, are being met.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, to clear the air, then, will the minister commit to tabling in this Assembly the agreement for sale with Timberlea Consortium Incorporated for these properties, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't know if that's the usual practice, to table agreements for the sale of land. We, you know, sell land through – I know in the communities of Banff, Canmore, high-needs communities, we do it in the ways that have the legal process in place through legislation, which as I indicated, hon. member, is through a nominal sum process or through direct sale or through tender.

Mr. Speaker, it should be known as well that we have assisted Fort McMurray in other ways through this legislation process. For example, with the nominal sum that's in place, the transfer of lands, we've put in place with the Wood Buffalo municipality a site for a school, a site for a fire hall, a police site. There are processes, and this is one that the member has mentioned.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Interpretation Services in Courts

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The service of language interpreters in Alberta's courts has become very important not only as a provision of equal access to fair trial but, more importantly, as a deterrent and prevention factor through understanding the laws of our land. A group of court interpreters presented to me their concern about the very low rate of pay for the important work and special qualifications, particularly compared with other jurisdictions such as the RCMP or the WCB. So reflecting their concerns, my question is to the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Can the minister advise the members of the Assembly what the current fee structure is for the court interpreters?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This hon. member should be congratulated for tenacity. I believe for the last several years he has pursued this matter in question period, and I'm very pleased to say that in this particular budget year we were able to increase the hourly rate threefold for the interpreter fees in our courts, from $15 to $45 per hour.

Under the Constitution the province is responsible for the administration of justice, and in this particular case what we're talking about are interpreter fees with respect to criminal matters prosecuted by the province. It is important that people who have difficulty with language or, basically, impairment of language have the interpretive skills available in court so that the court can understand and so that they can understand what is going on. It's all part of fairness of justice, and I'm pleased to say that the increase in the hourly rate will allow us to ensure that we have appropriate interpreters in our courts going forward.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Minister, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. That answer clears all the matters. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Highwood.

First Nations Land Claims

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government's obligation and ability to manage the affairs of the province is compromised when outstanding land claims issues like those of the Lubicon are not dealt with. The issues surrounding outstanding land claims need to be resolved, so that orderly development of Alberta's economic potential can take place. Until outstanding land claims are resolved, Alberta will continue to have upheaval in northern aboriginal communities. These questions are for the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. Given that development on disputed territory is occurring without proper approval from the EUB, will the minister now commit to stopping all unapproved developments on disputed land?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, that's the reason why we've been working on a consultation policy, to be able to look at how we can begin to work with the First Nations and how they can also benefit from what's happening on an economic basis with anything to do with resource development. That policy will be able to outline how they can be involved not only from an economic side but also how the resource development may impact their treaty and aboriginal rights. That's the reason why we have to be able to place that policy and look at the guidelines that will be able to address those very issues that you're bringing to the table.

Mr. Tougas: Well, with $6.8 million set aside for the consultation process, is this government any closer to settling those land claim disputes for the benefit of First Nations, industry, and the province in general?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, on the land claim issue we have been very successful. Since 1986 I think we've done about 11 different land claims, and those land claims have been very helpful for First Nations. What it does is that we have now provided dollars not only from the federal government but also the provincial government to be able to pay for some of the areas of concern that they have as if no one has ever been on that land. So what we've done are the negotiations with 11, actually, of the different First Nations. With those land claims what we've been able to do is encourage a lot of economic development to happen.

We continue to work on the land claims so that we can also deal with the issue of land claims that are outstanding but also be able to look at the economic side for the First Nations.

Mr. Tougas: Well, given that the province holds all disputed lands in trust, will the minister commit to ensuring that the millions of dollars in royalties from oil and gas extracted from disputed territory is also held in trust?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me, first of all, talk about the land claim process. The First Nations have to first of all be recognized by the federal government that they do have a land claim. When that land claim has been recognized by the federal government, the province then gets invited into the negotiations. At that point, then, we begin to look at everything that's brought forward, whether it's any kind of activity that could happen and impact the First Nations. We'd then deal with that in a negotiated process. With that comes the information as to how, then, we address the very concerns from an economic base with the First Nations but also with Canada so that we're all together in this negotiation so that we can begin to address those very concerns that have been outstanding for a long time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Federal Transfer Payments

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Tuesday the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations informed this Assembly that Albertans contribute nearly $9 billion more in taxes to Ottawa than we receive in services, pensions, and transfers. This is much more than the residents of Ontario contribute on a per capita basis. My question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. My constituents want to know what the Alberta government is doing to narrow the gap with these sudden Santos in Ottawa.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the rush by the Prime Minister to make these special deals indicates that we do have a federal government that's in crisis. Just looking at the latest agreement with Ontario, and not having all of the specifics as yet, we know that in one area – that is, the settlement with respect to immigrants – Ontario got a substantial increase to about $3,400 per immigrant. Presently Alberta receives about $918 per immigrant. We're going to be asking Ottawa for the difference, which to Alberta will be about $40 million.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister indicate if there are specific programs where Alberta is not treated fairly that contribute to the Alberta gap?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there's no doubt that Albertans are proud to contribute to and help other Canadians through the equalization program. That's a given. But there are a couple of programs where we are not treated fairly. One of them is the CST/CHT transfer, and that in itself is somewhere in the area of $300 million to $400 million more that should come to Alberta given this last agreement with Ontario.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: are there any good reasons that Alberta would refuse federal transfers even if it perpetuates the gap?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the agreement does not respect the values and priorities of Albertans, we won't sign it. One example is the current negotiations going on between the Minister of Children's Services and the federal minister with respect to the child care agreement. Again, I assume that if at the end of the day Albertans don't see value in the agreement and don't receive parental choice, why would we sign an agreement just for a few pennies to come to Alberta? We want to see benefit and also parental choice in that particular agreement. That's just one example.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Edmonton Police Service Investigation

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 5, 2002, Randy Fryingpan was tasered six times in the back seat of a car by a member of the Edmonton Police Service. Judge Easton commented on these police actions that, quote, they were an abuse of force and cruel and unusual treatment. However, the Calgary prosecutors' office has now decided not to proceed with charges and has sent the matter back to the Edmonton Police Service to deal with. Justice has been denied for Randy Fryingpan. My question is to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Can the minister explain to the public and to this House how, despite clear physical evidence of Randy Fryingpan being tasered six times in 66 seconds, the Crown decided there was insufficient evidence to proceed with charges?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the outset this matter became public two days ago in the sense that it was at that point in time that the Crown's advice to the Edmonton Police Service with respect to potential charges regarding the incident that the hon. member has referred to was made public. At that point in time an information bulletin from Alberta Justice was provided. It was put on the website. One hour following that a media availability and press conference was held with the chief Crown prosecutor from Calgary, who was the individual responsible for rendering this opinion. So the material with respect to this matter is on the website. It was produced two days ago. For those who wish to follow up and obtain the full particulars, that is how they can do it.

Now, with respect to this matter, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that the Crown takes their obligation of providing opinions with respect to potential charges very seriously, and when it involves a situation of charges against the police, it is understood that the public will be providing additional scrutiny with respect to the matter.

There were in this particular case three Crown prosecutors, all senior, including the chief Crown in Calgary who reviewed this particular matter. They reviewed it independently, and each of them came up with the same conclusion based on a standard test which is applied to proceeding with charges, that test being a reasonable likelihood of conviction. In other words, there must be a reasonable likelihood of conviction. Each of them came up with the conclusion in this particular case that there was no reasonable likelihood of conviction. That is a fundamental test that must be applied. As a result, the recommendation to the Edmonton Police Service was that charges should not be laid.

Dr. B. Miller: Given the dissatisfaction of Randy Fryingpan's family and his lawyer and the public with this decision, will the minister initiate a review of the inconsistencies in the Crown's interpretation of the evidence?

Mr. Stevens: I'm very surprised that the Justice critic with the Official Opposition, Mr. Speaker, would decide that justice should be determined on the basis of the dissatisfaction of someone. The fact of the matter is that we have fundamental tests; we have rule of law. Those are the things that ensure that there is not rough justice in this province, in this country. This particular member ought to understand that.

In this particular case, once again, Mr. Speaker, it was a fundamental test, that being the reasonable likelihood of conviction, that was applied. It was applied to the particular case by three senior Crown prosecutors in Calgary, and in each case they came to the same conclusion, that there could not be a reasonable likelihood of conviction and that charges should not be laid.

Dr. B. Miller: My final supplemental is to the Solicitor General. This file has gone back to the Edmonton Police Service. How can the Solicitor General satisfy the public's desire for a credible, independent, and impartial review of the evidence when the police are just going to continue to have internal investigations of police?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, as there are no charges laid, the internal investigation regarding the actions or the allegations of actions under the Police Act regulations, if they were contravened, will be going ahead and moving forward by the internal affairs section of the Edmonton Police Service. That's why we have Bill 36 before this Assembly in third reading. In fact, we will be providing new opportunities, new civilian oversight, regarding serious incidents related to police issues or police complaints regarding more serious issues than what we can afford right now in the present Police Act. So the amendments have come forward, the bill is in third reading, and I would hope that the hon. members from the opposition support it in third reading.

2:40

The Clerk: Members' Statements.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I'll call on one of six to participate, but might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In my first introduction I neglected to introduce to you and through you another gentleman who came with Martin Shields. This gentleman is George Berg. They have driven a bus up full of students who will be attending the Legislature tomorrow. I would ask George Berg to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, parliamentary junkies may find today's historical vignette rather interesting. It takes us back to Alberta's golden jubilee year. On May 12, 1955, the Third Session of the 12th Legislature was prorogued. At that point in time, meaning in the first 50 years of the service of this Assembly, the Legislative Assembly of Alberta had seen itself sit for 1,873 sitting days for a total of 402,673 minutes, and it passed 3,874 bills.

We are now here, 50 years later to the day, sitting in the First Session of Alberta's 26th Legislature. Over the past 50 years, current as of 11:34 last night, this Assembly had passed 4,220 bills during 2,833 sitting days, with a total of 722,946 sitting minutes.

Hon. members, in the last 100 years, the first 100 years of this Assembly in the province, this Assembly has sat for 4,706 days. Now, in the 100 years there were 36,500 days, and this Assembly sat for 4,706 days for a total of 1,125,619 minutes and has passed 8,094 bills.

Please, don't anybody say that I must be really bored to have time to figure this out. This is pure historical science.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Positive Influence of Teachers

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to be able to rise today and speak about the excellence in teaching awards. As these awards are meant to recognize the best teachers in this province, I thought it might be a nice opportunity to recognize some of the teachers who had a profound impact on my life. Please consider these my excellence in teaching awards.

As a child I had both the opportunity and the challenge of moving frequently around the province. Growing up in the oil patch meant that there were many times when we would move to a new well site every six weeks. I was very fortunate over the years to meet many dedicated teachers who would take the time to find out what my brother and I had learned in our last three or four schools that year. This allowed them to adjust their programs to our specific needs.

I had three favourite teachers, Mr. Speaker. The first of them was Mrs. Dench in Crossfield. The second was Mrs. Hahn in Blackfalds, who single-handedly made it possible for me to add numbers quickly and accurately. Her trick was that every student that finished first Monday through Thursday and got the answers right would win a dime. Thus, my profit motivation appeared to me right in grade 5. The third teacher was Mr. Woodard in Slave Lake, just a great guy, who was my homeroom teacher. He also took the time to coach basketball, curling, and volleyball as well as drive the team bus all over northern Alberta and let us sing on all of the trips.

These individuals and many more had a profound impact on my life, Mr. Speaker. Notable mentions on my list of teacher excellence, because every child has a bad day from time to time – I know that I did – were two very special ladies, Mother Mary and Sister Etienne, both of the Daughters of Wisdom convent in Slave Lake. These two wonderful women always had time for me when I just needed a place to hang out. Sister Etienne taught French, and Mother Mary was the home ec teacher. While she was never successful in teaching me how to measure ingredients, she would always encourage us to just try new things.

Just like today teachers all over our province are helping, guiding, and educating our children.

I would like to congratulate the winners of the excellence awards as well as acknowledge the nominees and all of those unsung heroes in our schools who make a difference in the lives of our children yesterday, today, and tomorrow.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Grant MacEwan College Learning Centre

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning Grant MacEwan College unveiled plans for its new health care learning centre. I had the pleasure of joining the hon. ministers of Infrastructure and Transportation, Advanced Education, Health and Wellness, and Education and the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon at the college's city centre campus to announce that the Alberta government will contribute $46.1 million towards the $58 million project.

Grant MacEwan College should be commended and congratulated for their vision and perseverance in bringing this project to life and for working closely with the Alberta government to make this centre the place to go for innovative health care learning. MacEwan's health care learning centre will reinforce Alberta as a leader in health care learning and delivery, and it's exciting to see the innovation take flight.

Mr. Speaker, the centre will provide expanded classroom and laboratory space for the college's nursing and health sciences programs. Construction of the facility will soon commence, and once it is up and running, the new 240,000 square foot facility will be able to accommodate an additional 2,000 full- and part-time students. These students will have access to the latest technology, including state-of-the-art simulation tools and Alberta's SuperNet, which will help provide enhanced distance delivery programs. These students will benefit from learning technologies that will foster innovative teaching and curriculum that will help them become talented and skilled professionals ready to join Alberta's booming workforce.

Mr. Speaker, the demand for health care providers in Alberta is growing, a trend that is not expected to slow down any time soon. The centre will help the province meet the demand of health care providers and ensure that Albertans continue to receive outstanding care from outstanding professionals.

I applaud both Grant MacEwan College and the government for forming a partnership that will benefit not only the postsecondary and health care systems but all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Royal Alberta Museum

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Provincial Museum of Alberta will become the Royal Alberta Museum when Her Majesty visits later this month. I rise today to recognize that the renewal accompanying the royal designation is moving forward from a vision to reality. This week our government committed $150 million to the project. I cannot think of a more fitting centennial legacy gift to all Albertans that honours our first 100 years as a province.

The museum will be renewed in its current location. It is a beautiful site that has served the museum well for almost 40 years and has more than enough room for it to become an architectural icon. The renewal will be a huge step forward in the museum's ability to tell the story of Alberta. The plans will double the space available for exhibits, create an interactive children's museum, allow Alberta's story to go outside the capital city through travelling exhibits and outreach programs, include a feature exhibit hall that will draw the best travelling exhibits in the world, and move parking underground and replace existing parking with an urban park.

Mr. Speaker, the Provincial Museum of Alberta belongs to each and every Albertan. The renewal and redesignation of it to the Royal Alberta Museum will make us all proud.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Canada Health Day

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today, May 12, is Canada Health Day. This is a very special and important day, which is celebrated each year on the anniversary of the birth of Florence Nightingale, a pioneer of nursing and a reformer of hospital sanitation methods.

We all know how many people spend their health for wealth and are then forced to spend their wealth for health. People do live longer nowadays, but morbidity is a growing concern. Obesity, smoking, sedentary lifestyles, chronic disease, and infectious outbreaks like SARS and avian flu are issues which we all think about.

This year's theme, The Public's Health, reflects a focus on communities and individuals to prevent disease and promote healthier living. While this day is dedicated to recognizing new developments in public health care fields, showing our appreciation for the wonderful people who deliver public health services, and reflecting upon ways we can improve our health care system, it is also an opportunity to evaluate our role in shaping the type of health care system we want and that best serves the needs of all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, may I suggest today a different P3 model for this government to consider? I am proposing a philosophy or direction which emphasizes preparation, prevention, and protection. It is important that while we look for ways to reform our health care system, we must also recognize that it is an essential service that cannot and must not be commoditized. To implement any kind of change to our health care system without an adequate plan undermines the public support that is required if we're going to achieve any lasting improvement to our health care system. Public input and support is needed at every stage of the decision-making process to ensure that our health care system remains sustainable, universally accessible, and affordable.

Mr. Speaker, I would encourage all Albertans to celebrate Canada Health Day by thinking about their own health as well as that of their neighbours, communities, and the environment. I also invite my hon. colleagues in the Legislature to join me in recognizing this important day.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Public Education Stressors

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Despite the government's gradual implementation of the Learning Commission's recommendations, May and June continue to be highly stressful months for parents, teachers, pupils, school secretaries, support staff, and school trustees.

Parents have a variety of concerns. Will they finally get their kids off the bus with a new school built in their no longer outlying suburban community, or will their now-considered inner-city school be spared closure? Parents of English as a Second Language and special-needs children wonder whether the program support their children received, no matter how small, due to the ever-present budget cuts will continue next year. Parents of students in grades 3, 6, and 9, especially if their children fall into the previously mentioned needs categories, are concerned about how their children will do on the government-forced achievement tests, knowing that their school's results will be plastered in the press with Fraser Institute rankings the following year.

Teacher administrators along with their staffs, despite glowing government budget announcements to the contrary, are forced to play the school survivor game of eliminating people and programs. The people and programs that are the most vulnerable to cutbacks, especially at the junior high level, are guidance, teacher-librarians, resource teachers, second language and fine arts programs. Despite the government's claim to support arts and culture, it is these programs together with the learning-support provisions that are the first to go.

In 2002 the drama program was cut at my previous junior high school, F.E. Osborne, in Calgary-Varsity. The following year the music program was severely cut. This year at another junior high school in Calgary-Varsity, Simon Fraser, the band program has been cut completely. At the junior high level, especially for students at risk, it is the option programs and the extracurricular staff support that keep the students coming to school.

Given this province's resource wealth, public education must become a higher priority for this government. The continuing cycle of government-imposed year-end education stress needs to be eliminated through long-term vision and funding.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Charan Khehra

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to recognize Charan Khehra for his contributions to the Alberta NDP opposition caucus as executive assistant to Dr. Pannu and the director of special projects.

Charan came to us with considerable experience as an educator, public administrator, researcher, and community builder. He was an assistant professor of political science in India, an executive officer with the British civil service, and then for 13 years was with the Alberta department of labour as a senior economist, providing research support to the department of labour, the Alberta Human Rights Commission, and the Alberta Labour Relations Board.

Charan has deep-rooted interests in labour management relations and human rights. He held various elected positions in the Whitley Council and civil service unions in England and community relations organizations. He was actively involved with the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees and was elected a life member.

As an NDP caucus staff member Charan has shared his enthusiasm and passion for public service, considering politics to be the highest calling and privilege of a person. He was our provincial candidate in 1997. He is a founding member of the Sahaara, a community service organization in Edmonton, and was the chair of the Mill Woods Community Health Council.

Charan has a lovely family, Mr. Speaker. He's married to Surender and has two daughters, Mona Bhullar and Nina Khehra. He's also a proud grandfather to Jordan and Alex.

Charan Khehra is a person of vision and compassion and supports various nonprofit organizations and other causes promoting multiculturalism, human rights, social justice, and peace. He is our making-it-happen person. Although Charan Khehra is retiring shortly, I'm sure Charan will continue to make things happen wherever he goes.

On behalf of the caucus I wish Charan and his family the best of everything. We are indeed grateful for his outstanding contribution to our caucus, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Referring to Members by Name

The Speaker: Now I have to ask the leader of the third party a question.

Mr. Mason: What did I do now, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Twice today you violated the rule about naming members. You did it twice today. Now, was it because the hon. leader doesn't know the rule, has forgotten the rule, or has been lazy with the rule?

Mr. Mason: Or just reading, Mr. Speaker. I apologize.

The Speaker: Thank you very much, because we know it's a no-no.
